Mr. Speaker: I do not think I need trouble the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on motion No. 2. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I were saying the same thing, I think, in different words. After consideration, it is the opinion of the Chair that what is set forth in specific terms in motion No. 2 is already possible under clause 12 of the bill. If it is an unwarranted delegation of authority to have the Anti-Inflation Board comment publicly on the failure of the government to take advantage of whatever policies it has—such as control on government spending certainly would be—then it seems to me that power already exists in clause 12(1)(e) on page 12. Simply to go on and say the board ought not only to have the right, but ought to have an obligation, within a certain period, to address itself to the question of government spending as contained in the estimates, seems to me to be an amendment that is procedurally in order.

The fact is, however, there is one other point that was made by the parliamentary secretary that would turn around the word "monitoring". If, in fact, monitoring by this board meant the kind of legislative control that exists in the standing committees of the House and, in turn, in the casting of votes in this chamber, that would certainly be a valid argument. It would seem to me, however, that "monitoring" in the terms of this legislation would simply mean that the board had to address itself to the contents of the estimates before making a public comment on them. In any case, it seems to me that the motion ought to be put and considered, and therefore, I would call motion No. 2 for discussion.

It being 3.30 p.m., I wonder if it would be appropriate to address ourselves to argument on the procedural acceptability of motion No. 1 at five o'clock? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling motion No. 2 and proceeding at this time, may I indicate that it would appear that motions Nos. 4 and 5 can usefully be grouped for debate. I think, therefore, that all motions except No. 1 are procedurally acceptable. Motion Nos. 4 and 5 might be discussed together, while motion No. 2 is being discussed, hon. members may want to comment on and consider what I am about to suggest, but it would appear to the Chair that motions Nos. 4 and 5 might be discussed together. An affirmative vote on No. 4 would be taken, I think, to be an expression of opinion on motion No. 5, but I would be prepared to hear comments on that matter.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree that we should consider motions Nos. 4 and 5 together. I wonder, however, whether motion No. 3 should not be included since it is, in a sense, consequential and relates to a particular aspect of the limitation of the duration of the bill.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, we would be agreeable to having Nos. 3, 4 and 5 debated together. I share your view, Mr. Speaker, that Nos. 4 and 5 are one subject matter for the purpose of debate, but it seems to me that No. 3 should be put in with them. To bring Nos. 3, 4 and 5 together would, I suggest, facilitate debate in the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have been persuaded while I have been listening. It was to have been my suggestion to put Nos. 3 and 4 together and let No. 5 go by itself, but if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) does not mind No. 5 being put with the other two, we will not object but that grouping is for debate only.

Mr. Speaker: Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5 will be grouped together for debate. Motion No. 3 will be voted upon separately. Hon. members might consider whether an affirmative vote on motion No. 4 might constitute an expression of opinion, obviating the necessity for a vote on motion No. 5. Perhaps this can be left for later, if necessary. Certainly, votes can be taken on each motion.

● (1530)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a vote on motion No. 4 is necessary. If the vote is carried, we should need to vote on motion No. 3. If it is defeated, there is no point in voting on motion No. 3. The vote on motion No. 5 might be separate.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps after the motions have been discussed there might be agreement on the manner in which the votes shall be taken. The House will now consider motion No. 2 standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved:

That Bill C-73, an act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be amended in paragraph 12(1)(e) by striking out line 28 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"ting inflation and, in particular, shall make explicit such implications of the failure of the federal government to co-operate in combating inflation by monitoring the respective main and supplementary estimates of expenditures for each fiscal year of such government and publicly commenting, within 21 days after any such estimates are made public, upon any failure, disclosed in such estimates, by such government to combat inflation."

He said: Mr. Speaker, much of what I wish to say on motion No. 2 was said in the debate on the form of the motion and whether it is suitable for debate at this time. We feel that an essential ingredient in the federal government's proposed anti-inflation program is restraint in government spending at all levels, particularly the federal government level. We think that the government during the last eight years has demonstrated a surprising lack of restraint over its own spending. The federal budget in the year before this government took power stood at about $10 billion. The current budget calls for federal spending of about $30 billion, or $20 billion more than the government spent in the 1968 fiscal year.

It took 100 years for federal government budgets to rise to $10 billion, yet the present government, in only eight years, has tripled its budget. In the last two years the federal budget has shot up from $20 billion to $30 billion. The government has been on a spending spree, increasing its spending during the last eight years by 25 per cent per year. This is alarming. Most economists in the country agree that government, particularly federal government, spending has contributed to inflation. Another consequential cause is the deficits which have been incurred. The net result has been an excessive increase in this country's money supply.

No controls program will work effectively unless there is restraint in government spending and a more responsible approach taken to the printing of money and expansion of the money supply. That is why we bring forward the present motion for consideration. If the government is sincere, if its anti-inflation program is to be credible, surely it will not object to the Anti-Inflation Board commenting on federal government spending programs. We suggest that within 21 days of the tabling of the main or supplementary estimates in this House, the Anti-Inflation Board should be asked to comment on whether it feels the government is adhering to its own anti-inflation program.

[Mr. Speaker.]

We think this provision is justified in view of some alarming information which came to our attention in committee. We learned that in the 1976 fiscal year government spending will increase by slightly less than 16 per cent over last year's figure. When we attempted to learn how much the government will spend in the 1977 fiscal year, we were given an estimate. Apparently the increase is to be slightly less than 15 per cent. The position is ludicrous. The federal government asks wage earners to restrain their wage demands to 8 per cent, businessmen to restrain their profits and prices, and shareholders to accept lower dividends. But the government will not adhere to its own guidelines when increasing its own spending. Government spending will increase by as much as 14 per cent, although possibly less than 15 per cent.

Figures to be produced later this week will indicate that in the first six months of this year all governments took for themselves an amazing 44 per cent of our gross national product. Contrary to what the government says, the evidence shows that federal government spending has been rising more rapidly than the spending of any other level of government in Canada. That is why we think that a public body like the Anti-Inflation Board should "call it the way it is," especially if the government persists in its spending spree.

Surely the very board charged with monitoring the anti-inflation program should comment on the government's own record? That is all this motion says. I hope that motion No. 1 is procedurally admissible, as its passage would put a cap on government spending. The government claims it will spend $30 billion this year. If the motion passes, government spending will be contained to an 8 per cent increase, or to $2.4 billion more, compared with $4.5 billion more which the government apparently envisages spending in the 1977 fiscal year.

Motion No. 2 simply asks the Anti-Inflation Board to comment on the main or supplementary estimates within 21 days of their tabling. In no way does it detract from the rights of parliament. It simply asks the board to comment on government spending. This is to be a public process which will help the public and hon. members when they consider estimates and the government's spending programs. Surely the government is not alarmed at what the Anti-Inflation Board may find with respect to proposed spending increases. After all, governments now take 44 per cent of the gross national product, an alarming percentage. Other nations have followed the same course, to their detriment. It is time for the government to restrain its own spending and forgo a spending spree that except for wartime has had no precedent in Canada since confederation.

In short, the government must be less secretive and more open with the public concerning its spending. Such frankness on the part of the government now in power would be of wholesome benefit to all Canadians.

● (1540)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Madam Speaker, I have some difficulty following the logic of hon. friends on my right. As I recall their participation over the years, they have been against boards and against anything being taken out of the jurisdiction of parliament and turned over to those faceless, irresponsible creatures who do not have to answer to anyone. Now they want a board.

I listened very closely to see if I could understand the argument for the board. I do not know on what basis the Conservative party has more confidence in this particular board than in parliament. I do not know whether Jean-Luc Pepin has acquired more wisdom now that he is being paid twice as much as he was as a member of the House of Commons. I do not remember the opposition being particularly enamoured of him at that time, listening to everything he had to say and agreeing with it. He is a fine man and I have no reservations in saying that; however, I cannot understand this new-found total confidence in Mr. Pepin's wisdom and competence, something the conservatives did not accord him when he was a member of this House.

Is Mrs. Plumptre to become all-prescient now that she has been appointed to the board? Does she have a prescience she did not have when she was chairman of the Food Prices Review Board? In other words, does the waving of this magic wand of the government over their heads, and telling them they are now appointed to this mighty board which the government are going to put in place, give them all-wisdom, a kind of superknowledge they did not possess before, more than that of the 264 men and women sent here by the people of Canada? I have been looking for those kinds of geniuses all my life and I have had some difficulty identifying them. I am pleased that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) has finally found two people in whom he can place absolute trust and confidence. It is a delight to see that this has happened.

The difference between the Conservative party and the New Democratic Party is very fundamental. It comes out in this kind of debate. We agree that inflation is a serious problem and important measures have to be taken to contain it. In contrast with the position of the Conservative party, we do not believe that inflation is the only problem facing our society and that it has to be handled without regard to any other problem. In our view, there are two problems equally as serious, if not more serious, and equally as damaging, if not more damaging, to our society. Those two problems are the unjust distribution of income and our abysmal record of unemployment.

This board is being set up for the sole purpose of dealing with inflation. It has no other responsibility. It was not elected by the people. Its mandate is not broad. It is not to do anything except look at inflation. If the board takes its responsibility seriously, which I presume it will, what kind of judgment will it make on these other matters? For example, will everything that is referred to the board be looked at in only one narrow way? Is this country going to be guided just by that?

When you say you want some measure of control over a federal budget, you cannot give the power to a board to decide what kind of social and national priorities are going to be set. This is what a budget is all about. Are we going to turn over to a board with a narrow term of reference a power that is the right of parliament? I ask hon. members in all seriousness if that is what they want.

Let us take a hypothetical problem which may not be hypothetical. The government, for argument's sake, has seen the light; it has listened to the NDP and has lowered the pensionable age from 65 to 60. In other words, the blandishments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) have got through to the government; the government has seen the intelligence of the proposal and agree with it. The consequence is that more taxes would have to be raised and the budget would have to be increased. What would the board say to that? If this amendment is passed, the board will say that goes beyond the guidelines, there will be no change in the social programs of this country, regardless of the merits, and there will be no income redistribution. We have enough reservations about the legislation as it now stands, without taking additional power away from parliament and giving it to the board. This is essentially a political question. Income distribution is not a technical problem, it is political: who pays the taxes and who gets the benefits? Surely we are not going to turn over that power to a board. Furthermore, I do not think a board would want that kind of power.

The hon. member reminds me that we have had some difficulty with auditors general in the past because they have tended to assume political rather than auditory functions. There was some criticism about that. We would go beyond anything ever contemplated when parliament was set up to take what is the prime responsibility of parliament, the setting of social priorities and dealing with the multitudinous problems in our society, and turn it over to a board. My leader, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), said he is aghast that the great Conservative party would even countenance such an idea. They pride themselves on their respect for and duty to parliament, yet this motion would emasculate this great institution of which we are so proud. I am not surprised that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby feels so strongly about this measure.

Because of the vast cost and the great contribution that unemployment is making to inflation, the government may decide, or be persuaded to bring in measures to do something about it. After all, the costs of unemployment are severe; they are a major contributor to inflation and loss of productivity in this country. For every 1 per cent of unemployment above the 2 per cent or 3 per cent that is acceptable, it costs this country $2 billion or $3 billion in GNP, by various estimates. We are talking of a loss of $20 billion over-all. Suppose the government becomes wise, or something persuades them into a form of wisdom and they want to do something about unemployment. The only way to handle that is to increase expenditures and stimulate the economy. Are we going to leave it to a board to say that that kind of parliamentary decision is not acceptable because it exceeds the 8 per cent guideline? The board may decide it is for them to make those kinds of policies, not parliament.

I could go on and multiply the examples. I have given but a few to illustrate the inherent difficulty and the impossibility of the kind of concept being put forward in this amendment. I can appreciate one thing about the amendment: I am sure it is put forward in good faith. On the surface, the argument is very beguiling. If everyone else is to be restrained, why not the government? However, everyone else is not charged with the same responsibility as the government. Those of us who are being restrained are making essentially private decisions. The government is making what amounts to a public decision.

It is important to note that the government is answerable and the board is not. The board is set up; it does not fall; it does not get defeated. You cannot even filibuster or talk against the board. But the government is here and it can fall. At the moment it looks unlikely, but it could fall. Governments have fallen and found themselves obliged to secure a mandate from the people. It is the right of the public to judge the conduct of the government, not of Jean-Luc Pepin or Mrs. Plumptre. That is the greatest danger in the incomes policy. We agree that an incomes policy is important, and we do not oppose it in principle. We oppose the kind of legislation before us and we oppose the type of amendments which are being tacked on to it because we are not dealing here with the type of legislation which is capable of being improved by such amendments. We oppose it because what we are looking at is a technical arrangement. The government looks upon this legislation as relating to a technical issue. It uses devices such as a 10 per cent cut-off. It does not care what happens to the other things, or if it does care, it says; "We really haven't got the mechanism for handling them."

In fact, income distribution is a political question. That is what politics is all about. That is what we are fighting for in this party. We are fighting for people at the lower end of the scale. How can members opposite say we have solved our political or our technical questions when one-fifth of our people are getting 5 per cent or 6 per cent of the income and another fifth is getting 42 per cent of the income? That is what politics is all about—resolving these differences in income distribution by the arguments we present to the people and then by the degree of support they accord to various political parties. It would be a grave mistake and a terrible disservice to the country and to this institution to turn decision-making over to a body with narrow terms of reference and without any mandate from the Canadian public.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): In speaking to this motion, I think a word from this side of the House, in clarification, would be in order. I have never seen such a twisty, writhing individual as I do at this moment in the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). I think he would be well advised to stay with his crossword puzzles because he cannot even seem to listen to an intelligent speech and comprehend what was said.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) expressed in simple terms exactly what we on this side wanted in this amendment, which was that an outside body should not have wadding placed in its mouth and be limited in what it has to say. It is of fundamental importance to the Canadian people that an outside voice should portray to them exactly what is happening in the field of government spending. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge expresses the opinion that maybe politics does enter into it. Certainly, when the Canadian people hear a message from the House of Commons they do on occasion have misgivings about what is being said in case this political aspect is entering into what is being said. Therefore, if the government believes this review board is to serve a useful purpose in the Canadian scheme of things, it should surely be subject to the board's observations and criticisms in the same way as the rest of the economy.

Maybe members of the NDP are prepared to elevate government above all the other sectors, business and so on, but I certainly am not of that opinion and I am sure my colleagues do not agree with it, because of the fundamental importance of the proposition that government should serve the people. Never should we allow government to be a dictator to the ordinary people. When the day comes that a government cannot accept criticism from a body set up by itself, we are getting ourselves into a deplorable situation.

I hope the Canadian people recognize the danger of the message given by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. We on this side feel the review board, with all the integrity it has, and with all the responsibility it has been given, should at least feel free to criticize the government if, in its opinion, the government is wrongfully spending the taxpayers' money. Certainly, if this program is to work it will need the co-operation of all sectors of the economy—business, labour and government included. If anyone wants to exclude the government from the criticism the review board will be handing out to labour and to other people, there is no way in which the program can work; the government is signing the death warrant of the whole scheme before it even gets off the ground.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Looking at the amendment before us, Madam Speaker, I can feel some sympathy with the underlying principle of putting forward that kind of amendment by the Conservatives on my right. Certainly it is a concern, and it ought to be the concern not only of the government but of opposition members and, indeed, of the Canadian people with respect to the manner in which the government is spending the taxpayers' money. Surely that is the function of parliament. We have set up a structure. There is an Auditor General who is supposed to look at the way in which the government operates its various departments and how it spends the taxpayers' money in those departments, and then to make recommendations to the appropriate committee of parliament with respect to what he has discovered in his review of a budget or the estimates.

We on this side of the House have taken the position that that kind of board is not necessary and that the kind of program the government is bringing in is misplaced at this time. It seems to me that here they go again, starting to build a bureaucratic mulberry bush. It seems to me now you have them looking at prices, you have them looking at food, you have them monitoring prices, so-called, and now you are handing them the budget and the estimates to look at. Soon they will be saying they do not need 200 people, but 500 people, to work for the board. When they started out they were going to monitor 1,500 corporations; now it is up to 2,700. They now talk about monitoring 10,000 contracting firms or 5,000 contracting firms. I see this thing growing like a great big monster, like any other department.

Anyway, it seems to me that is an expenditure the taxpayers can do without. Certainly the government has a responsibility to spend the taxpayers' dollars wisely, and the points have been well documented in this House that they certainly can be castigated for some of the exotic expenditures they have embarked upon, expenditures which make very little sense with respect to improving the lot of the Canadian people. Indeed, it only goes to improve their own lot. We have seen, for example, such expenditures as the opening of Mirabel airport. It cost the taxpayers of this country and the Quebec government—the same taxpayers—$500,000, and $20,000 of that was for booze. Visitors did not pay anything at all for it. We have seen other kinds of expenditures by this government which the taxpayers of this country would be very upset about. This is the same government that asks the Canadian people to tighten their belts and to live within their means.

Whether we like it or not, the fact remains that the government has the responsibility for setting a budget and the estimates. I do not know whether this monitoring board is going to examine the budget and the estimates and make public its comments on them, but it is not going to change anything at all. Since I have been a member of the House I have been a member of committees dealing with estimates, and the committee system is so structured that no one can block the passage of the estimates. As a matter of fact, if the estimates do not pass committee by a certain date, they are deemed to have been reported and spent anyway.

There has been no effective control by parliament, through the parliamentary committee system, over the expenditures of government. It seems to me that parliament has had very little effect in terms of braking government expenditure. Therefore, I hold out very little hope that this monitoring board or Anti-Inflation Board, having pontificated upon the government's estimates and budget, will be able to apply the brake. The government is going to go ahead and spend drunkenly what is not theirs, without regard for the people who earn them the money.

An hon. Member: That is always the socialist approach.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is not always the socialist approach, may I say to my hon. friend on my right. We respect the way that a dollar is earned. This has always been the very core of socialist thinking. The gentleman on my right has always been one of those who are loth to have the government interfere in the marketplace. They say that government should keep out of the marketplace. They are prepared to support the Liberals in pushing through this wage and price control bureaucracy that we are creating with an Anti-Inflation Board that has powers exceeding those of the Almighty. These are the guardians of the so-called free enterprise system which, incidentally, has failed miserably, so much so that the government is now rushing in to prop it up with wage and price controls. That is a miserable admission, Madam Speaker, to hear from these great defenders of the mythical free enterprise system and its attendant capitalist approach to the economy.

Be that as it may, we in this party cannot support this motion. As a matter of fact, there is no way we can support the bill or any part of it as it presently stands. We intend to oppose this motion as vigorously as we can.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, the recorded division stands deferred. In accordance with the decision reached today, motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5 will be grouped together.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-73, an act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be amended in subclause 26(2) by

(a) striking out line 38 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"behaviour for a term not to extend beyond April 30, 1977"

(b) striking out line 42 at page 23 and substituting the following therefor:

"term not to extend beyond April 30, 1977.".

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-73, an act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be amended in clause 46 by striking out subclauses (2), (3), (4) and (5) at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) This act expires on April 30, 1977, or on such earlier date as may be fixed by proclamation."

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-73, an act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be amended in clause 46 by (a) striking out lines 9 to 11 at page 33 and substituting the following therefor:

"proclamation or a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons that is approved by the House pursuant to subsections (6) and (7) unless, before December 31, 1978 or any earlier date fixed by proclamation or any such motion for the consideration of the House that is so approved by the House, an order in council is made to the effect"

(b) adding the following subclauses immediately after line 40 at page 33:

Procedure where motion filed with Speaker

"(6) Where, at any time after March 31, 1977 and before July 1, 1977, a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons, signed by not less than 50 members of the House, is filed with the Speaker to the effect that this act shall expire on a date before December 31, 1978 that is specified in the motion, the House of Commons shall, within the first fifteen days next after the motion is filed that the House is sitting, in accordance with the rules of the House, take up and consider the motion, and if the motion, with or without amendments, is approved by the House, this act expires on the date that is specified in the motion.

Time for deciding questions

(7) All questions in connection with any motion taken up and considered by the House of Commons pursuant to subsection (6) shall be debated without interruption and decided not later than the end of the third sitting day next after the day the motion is first so taken up and considered."

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) briefed opposition party leaders about the anti-inflation program on the evening of October 13, I expressed my concern about the duration of the program that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance said they were bringing in. That was not, of course, the place to present a detailed argument or even specific proposals, but I did express my concern as an initial reaction when I was first told about the program. Later in the evening when I was invited to make a public comment, it was the duration of the program to which I principally devoted my attention and expressed my concerns. The following day, October 14, when the government presented its white paper for discussion in the House, I dealt with these concerns at some length, as recorded at page 8199 of Hansard. At that time no bill had been presented. We were discussing the white paper before presentation of the bill and therefore we did not know precisely what the bill would contain.

During discussion of the white paper on October 14, I said we supported the general intentions of the white paper. I also said that further support for the actions of the government would be a matter of judgment based on the government's response to our concerns and observations. In the meantime, having expressed our concerns about the program we said we would wait to see the bill. Bill C-73 was presented for first reading on October 16. On Friday, October 17, debate on second reading commenced and my party's House leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), led off our participation in the second reading debate.

Again he dealt with the duration of the government's program as well as the duration of the bill. The hon. member for Peace River put the argument in very strong terms. He did so because, having then seen the bill, we realized that we were not just dealing with a longer term program than we felt proper, but that we were in fact dealing with an open-ended program. It was clear from the bill that the government was not limiting itself to 3¼ years, but was setting up a mechanism that would enable it to extend the bill almost indefinitely, or certainly for a substantial period of time, simply by presenting to the House and having carried after very limited debate a resolution extending the term of the bill. So in that sense, as I say, we discovered that the term of the bill was virtually open-ended.

In this regard, the hon. member for Peace River, as recorded at page 8314 of Hansard, said:

The hon. member for Peace River served notice that we would present an amendment at the appropriate stage of the committee hearings and later to deal with this concern. I ask members of the House to bear in mind just how easy it would be for a government to extend the length of this program by a simple resolution. My remarks of the same nature, expressing concern about the duration of the bill, were subsequently carried on network radio and television. I stressed that while we in the official opposition continued to support the necessity for a program to deal with inflation and to break the inflationary situation which exists, we simply could not support on third and final reading a bill incorporating the time-frame the government proposes.

I ask members of the House to bear in mind that the government's wage and price control program and Bill C-73 are not the same thing. Bill C-73 does not define or describe even the government's wage and price control program. It does not set out a wage and price control program. Bill C-73 simply delegates sweeping powers to the government, the administrator and the Anti-Inflation Board. The government itself, through the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and other ministers have outlined in the House and to the people of Canada in a somewhat uncertain way, perhaps, a price and wage control program. But with the powers in this bill, if it becomes an act of parliament, the governor in council can change that whole wage and price control program any time they choose to do so.

They are seeking these powers for a period of 3¼ years, plus. Spokesmen for the government say they hope to terminate the program before 3¼ years run out. They may or may nor terminate this particular program which they put before the people. They may terminate the program, but even if they terminate it they will keep the enormous powers they are asking to have delegated to them through this bill. We are not being asked to consider in the House, and we certainly are not being asked to vote upon, a specific price and wage control program. We are being asked to vote upon a bill which would give the government enormous delegated powers for a period of 3¼ or more, years. If one needs an example, the history of the Defence Production Act shows how loth governments are to give up powers that have been granted to them.

It is important to distinguish between a wage and price control program such as has been outlined by the government, such as it is, on one hand, and the bill before us because they are not the same. We are not being asked to vote into effect a wage and price control program for a period of six months, a year, a year and a half, three years, 3¼ years, or longer; we are being asked to give the government the authority to write its own wage and price control program, an anti-inflationary program, or to exercise these powers in any way it may see fit. If the bill should pass, there is nothing to prevent this government changing the program beyond recognition without any further reference back to this parliament. That in itself is sufficient reason for limiting the life of this bill to a period not in excess of 18 months.

The last time prior I spoke in the House on the duration or life of this bill was during the debate on the NDP supply motion of November 14. I shall read some of the comments I made at that time to remind the minister and members opposite that I am not raising these objections this afternoon for the first time. I expressed my concern the first time the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance described this program to me and the leaders of the other opposition parties. I have expressed these concerns many times since. On the afternoon of November 14, if I may be forgiven for quoting myself—even if I am not forgiven I shall do so—I said:

I say this parliament ought not to be asked to grant to the government the extraordinary powers it is seeking for virtually an undefined or very ill-defined period of time, subject only to a relatively ineffectual period of review involving a debate in the House for three days—

In my view, the bill should be amended so it will terminate in 18 months. Just before the expiry of the 18 months, if the government felt it could make a case for the extension of the program, it could bring in a bill for that purpose.

Later I said:

How could we willingly grant such powers for so long to any government, let alone a government which has such a record for opportunism as this one?

When the Minister of Finance spoke later in the debate on the afternoon of Friday, November 14, he did not even acknowledge he had heard what I had said in this regard. He did not even acknowledge it, let alone respond to it in any way. We stated our position clearly and unequivocally in the House committee. I stated it again in a letter to the Prime Minister last week, and we are stating it again in the House today.

The belated response which the government finally brings in is embodied in the review amendment put forward by the Minister of Finance which is reflected in motion No. 5. My first encounter with the proposal for a review of this kind, as a government initiative, was when I read it in the Prime Minister's reply to my letter of November 20. I wrote back to the Prime Minister to say that the government's proposal did not meet our concerns. At the finance committee meeting of November 3, the Minister of Finance suggested that my party might wish to put forward an amendment along the lines of the one which now stands in his name. At that point we realized the government was up to its old game of speaking out of both sides of its mouth at the same time. Only minutes before the minister made his remarks in committee about the possibility of a review amendment, he attempted to defend in logic the need for the program to run over three years. This is what he said:

The program is posited on the guideline proposals of looking at three successive years, by which one would hope that the basic protection factor could in effect go from 8 per cent to 6 per cent to 4 per cent, so we are talking in a three-year time framework and therefore it seemed to have some logic.

In the next breath, having said that, he outlined how we in the official opposition "might consider formulating an amendment" if what was desired was "a parliamentary occasion to discuss the issue." We have been seeking something beyond a future occasion to discuss the issue, and the minister knows that. I submit that all he engaged in on November 3, and all that the government has engaged in since, on this matter can be summed up under the general headings of flank-covering and bone-throwing.

The minister says that the government, in its own logic, is convinced of the necessity of a program running at least 3¼ years. Again I remind the House that we are not being asked to vote on a program. When the bill is passed and becomes law, the government can change the program beyond any recognition without any reference back to parliament. The minister, having said that he was convinced that they needed the program for 3¼ years, then said, in effect, that if we wanted to discuss it after the passage of 18 months the government could entertain provision for that.

It is a sham for the minister to suggest that this represents any kind of meaningful review, with no outside witnesses, no representations, no means of forcing information from the government, none of the other procedural arrangements involved in the procedure of a bill passing through the House, and no possibility of amending the act. The only question before the House on that review procedure is a yes or no. The only question for the House, and for a very limited time, is whether the government's program should end as defined, if it were defined in the present bill, or should terminate earlier. Such a debate, when the government sits in majority, would represent nothing more than a progress report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: That is the bone he throws on a "take it or leave it" basis. Bear in mind that once the government has passed the review period which is under this proposal—the question of review could be raised only at some time, I think, between March 31, 1977, and July 1, 1977—there is no further provision for any parliamentary review. The government could do anything it liked with the program, without any possibility of a discussion of what it is doing unless the government graciously provided it, or unless we have the sort of discussion we are able to have on opposition days in parliament.

When it became clear to the minister that the official opposition was not of a mind to grab the bone in committee, he retrieved it himself as something to throw our way again at report stage. He said he would present "an amendment with regard to an interim debate on the measure". That is what he has done now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is no meat on this bone now.

Mr. Stanfield: No meat, no bone, so far as I am concerned. I refer the House to two other statements made by the minister during consideration by the finance committee. These serve to illustrate the tangled web which the government has woven regarding the duration of the Anti-Inflation Act. On October 13, the minister was asked to comment on the Prime Minister's speculation that the period might be shorter. He donned his optimistic cap and said:

Really, if after a period of 18 months, and I would be happy to see such a result, there was a significant reduction in the rate of inflation in Canada, it is quite possible that we could end these inflationary controls, in view of such an improvement in the economic situation.

They might end the program they have launched in recent days, but that is a very different thing from surrendering powers which, I venture to suggest, they would reserve unto themselves and exercise from time to time in any manner that suited their purposes. On November 20, the minister took quite a different tone as he attempted to make an argument regarding the rough justice inherent in the bill. On this occasion he said:

—we have set out the guidelines and they could be much tougher, you know. If you were seeking to carry the reduction through guidelines of the inflation rate in 18 months instead of taking a longer period of time they would have to be very much tougher than this.

I remind the House that they are not set out in the bill, of course; they are in the program which the government can change any time it sees fit. One has to wonder in how many ways the minister and the Prime Minister want to have this thing. The Prime Minister toured the country running both hot and cold. One day there were threats of heavier intervention, and the next speculation that we might be finished with a very easy exercise at the end of 18 months. Sometimes he says, as he did at the outset, that the primary purpose of the exercise is to break inflationary expectations and change attitudes. He implies that when this is done, the control will be lifted, and if it does not happen the controls will get larger in scope and longer in duration, with stiffer and stiffer penalties. At other times the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance talk of reducing the rate of inflation over a defined period of time.

I submit that a short-term exercise aimed at breaking inflationary expectations is quite different from a longer term incomes policy which attempts to contain the rate of inflation through an institutionalized process of government intervention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I do not like to see these two concepts mixed as they are in this program and as they have become in the government explanation of the purpose of this bill. In regard to the originally stated purpose of breaking the inflationary psychology, there can be no question that my party and I endorse a short-term program with this aim. We have said so in the context of an election campaign. I will not ask the House to remember what my friends opposite were saying at that time.

An hon. Member: They don't want to remember, either.

Mr. Stanfield: I have enough respect for my friends opposite to think they would like to forget what they said then. We are now discussing the bill in the context of 1975, almost into 1976. We said, in the context of an election campaign, what we would do. We would favour a short-term program with the aim of breaking the inflationary expectation. We continue to say so today. We suggest a bill with that stated aim for a period of 18 months. We would support such a bill and be prepared to accept the many imperfections in it, and we would accept our share of responsibility for the rough justice involved in it.

We believe the government should be focusing its attention on this objective. We believe that a bill and a program of this nature limited to 18 months would be less divisive in the country and less susceptible to dogmatic, negative reaction and rejection. We believe these considerations are important. We even believe that the government is smart enough to know this, and smart enough to know that if we do not break the psychological aspect of inflation in 18 months we are not likely to make much headway under price and wage controls after that in a further 21-month period, when all the imperfections and problems inherent in controls programs are really coming home to roost and really reinforcing resentments.

In accepting that the government is smart enough to know these things, we get very nervous about the other purpose which the government has been flirting with in its pronouncements—long-term controls to institutionalize a process of ongoing intervention in the Canadian economy. If this form of controls is intended to stay on until it is successful in relation to a stated aim for the rate of inflation, I am afraid we will be into some form of controls as a permanent feature of our country. I know there are members of this House who would like to see this happen, but I also believe there are many hon. members, even on the government side of the House who, like me, do not want to see this happen. I hope they will give this matter serious thought before the vote comes on our amendment.

We are saying that the government approaches the House with two clearly different purposes expressed in relation to this bill. One we buy—the purpose of deflating inflationary expectations through a program of price and income controls for a short term—and we say that our amendment would clarify that this is indeed the sole purpose, and this would be the sole effect of the act. The other aim which the government has in mind we do not buy, that of longer term controls. We cannot support that aim. We do not like wolves in sheep's clothing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: We want to make this point of differentiation and emphasize how important it is to the future of our country. We are prepared to vote against the bill on third reading if our amendment is not accepted to demonstrate how important we believe it to be. The Minister of Finance is reported to have stated that terminating the controls program in 18 months would mean unacceptable rates of unemployment because termination of the program in 18 months would involve harsh use of monetary and fiscal policy and harsh use of monetary and fiscal restraints to control inflation.

I agree with the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) who expressed concern and stressed the importance of the problem of unemployment in our country, but I say, with respect to the Minister of Finance that his statement that the termination of this control program in 18 months would mean unacceptable rates of unemployment is nonsense. First, as of now he does not know what the inflationary pressures in Canada are going to be in 18 months' time. He does not know what the inflationary situation is going to be in 18 months' time. Second, I do not say for a moment that the war against inflation will be over in 18 months. I do say that we have no reason to believe that general price and wage controls would be effective or desirable in our economy beyond an 18-month period.

Third, I say that if the government is going to continue a controls program beyond the point of 18 months, but change substantially the scope and nature of controls from the program put before us in recent weeks, this government should have to come to parliament to get parliament's permission to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: What right has the government to ask this parliament for a blank cheque?

An hon. Member: It's only three years instead of 18 months.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, and any program you want to write in the meantime. You can fool the people some of the time, but the government is going to find out that it cannot keep shifting positions all the time. I also want to emphasize that there is nothing in what I am proposing—that is, the termination of this program in 18 months—which would put the government in a strait-jacket. If the government wants to continue controls beyond 18 months, it could introduce a bill in this House for that purpose—for example, after the expiration of 15 months—in which a specific controls program could be discussed in light of conditions which exist at that time, and not conditions which we guess about now which might exist.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Much can change in 15 or 18 months. If the government is concerned a fixed expiry date of April 30, 1977, and if it is concerned that unions might just hold back until the controls are off, or that business people might hold back until they are off, I would have no objection to a provision extending the bill for a further period of three months, for example, upon the government presenting to the House a resolution to that effect with a limited time for debate of three days in order to provide some degree of flexibility about the termination of the program. However, the government has not seen fit to discuss any such proposal, or any proposals at all. It has known for weeks of our concern about this. If the government thinks our support of its bill is important in terms of public acceptance, why has it not responded at all to any initiatives we have taken to try to produce a bill we could accept and support in this House?

We have tried to be constructive in dealing with both the white paper and the bill. We have not hidden anything. We tried to show our good faith by our vote on second reading of the bill and our vote on the November 14 supply day motion put forward by the New Democratic Party. We indicated that we were open to be consulted by the government on this matter. No consultation was sought. My invitation for consultation was not acted upon. If our support of the bill is important, why has the government not responded to our concern and to our overtures? I want to say very clearly that if, despite our objections and despite our concern, this bill becomes law in its present form, without our amendment having been adopted, we will certainly urge the Canadian people as forcefully as we can to co-operate with the government and to comply with the law adopted in this House.

Even before the program was announced, the Minister of Finance described the program as frightening. I therefore do not apologize for expressing my very grave concern about the powers parliament is being asked to delegate to the government and to the creatures of government for such an open-ended period of time. Without acceptance of our amendment, I must say that the minister's first impression was correct, as far as I am concerned. The implications of a bill with these powers and of this duration are frightening and they are unnecessary, Madam Speaker. These implications are unacceptable to me and to my colleagues.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has what one would have to concede is a difficult task in this situation. We are debating a program which earlier in this debate, on second reading of the bill, he said was virtually his program. We are debating a concept which he said basically was his idea, namely, the imposition of mandatory controls on wages and prices in Canada. We are dealing with the bill which he voted for at second reading stage and in respect of which he also voted on an opposition day.

Now he finds himself in the situation where he undoubtedly has decided that in the future he will want to oppose the government's initiative in imposing wage and price controls at this particular time. He will now want to define a position for himself to be able to repeat to the public that he was against this program, a program which it is conceded will be difficult in the years and months to come in terms of the impact it will have on individual groups in Canada. Therefore, he has had to construct, for the record and for the House, a rather indignant declamation of the government and myself for having failed to respond to the initiatives which he had put forward in this regard.

Let me just deal with that one point right away, because I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition has perhaps been badly served by his research staff. He made the assertion that it was not until late in the game, well on into the committee sittings, that I gave any response whatsoever as to my willingness to respond to amendments with regard to having a parliamentary review of the bill. Perhaps I could quote to him—I will take the same stand about quoting myself that he took about himself—and refer him to my remarks on reply in the second reading debate, as reported at page 8545 of Hansard. On October 24, in closing debate, I said:

> The question was raised at several points by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and by the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) as to whether it would be proper at some interval before the termination date of the bill to provide for a fresh parliamentary opportunity, perhaps by way of an affirmative resolution, to debate the matter. For my part I would have no difficulty in accepting an amendment of that kind.

I would just remind the House that we were then at the sixth day of the second reading debate. After my speech in introduction on second reading, I had had no further opportunity to participate in debate, but in reply at the first opportunity after hearing the hon. gentleman opposite, and in particular the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who had seen the bill and responded to it, I indicated my willingness to provide the kind of amendment which I referred to in committee. I repeated the offer again in committee, and when nothing further was forthcoming I put it forward at report stage, at this time. I hope the Leader of the Opposition will go back and read the record again. He will realize that perhaps he has been less than just in the assertion he made that there had been no early attempt on my part to respond to what the official opposition had said in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What had they said in this regard in the debates that had taken place? The Leader of the Opposition has referred to his own participation on October 14 in the special debate. I would quote from page 8199 of Hansard when he said that the government should——be prepared to make provision for a parliamentary review of the controls and how they are working, providing an opportunity of parliamentary recall, say at the end of 18 months or two years.

The Leader of the Opposition said that he had not seen the bill at that time. He had not been able to formulate a judgment from the white paper, which he had seen at that time, as to what was the appropriate course of action, and it was for that reason that he used those terms on that particular day. Several days later, the hon. member for Peace River had seen the bill, he had been able to study its provisions and to look at the white paper. At that time he spoke in words which were virtually a paraphrase of what his leader had said a few days before. I would refer him to page 8314 of Hansard on October 17, where he said:

We will propose an amendment, which will provide that at an earlier date during the life of this legislation, this House will have, as it must, the right to decide whether under the circumstances which then exist the extension of the legislation is warranted.

In the debate which occurred at that time, Madam Speaker, in full knowledge of the bill, full knowledge of the provisions that we have here, and in full knowledge of the white paper, the number two member of the official opposition, undoubtedly speaking on behalf of his party, said they would be coming forward with an amendment; an amendment, may I say, substantially in the terms of the one that I have put forward. He said that they would be proposing an amendment for the purpose of having this kind of consideration. May I remind the House that in response to that particular speech and the passage which I have just read, I said, and I quote myself again at page 8545 of Hansard:

For my part I would have no difficulty in accepting an amendment of that kind.

There are going to be some difficulties about this program. There are going to be some difficulties about the impact it will have on the economy and individual groups of Canadians. Let us talk about it in terms of the real problems, however, and not try to create little parliamentary games of quoting here and there and neglecting to quote oneself earlier on or explaining what he really meant at the time he said it, and so on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the Leader of the Opposition wants to change his stance with regard to mandatory controls in Canada, he is entitled to do so. He can dream up phrases—this is undoubtedly the new catch phrase that is going to be used—like "institutionalized process of government intervention". He can dream up that kind of phrase if he likes, but let us face the fact that whether it will be of value to him politically or not, he is now proposing to change the stance that he took before, and I think the house should recognize that.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The Leader of the Opposition made some reference to the fact of the 18-month period being a matter of principle for them, something that they were absolutely dead set on. I have just read a passage where the Leader of the Opposition spoke about the program ending after 18 months or two years, so there does not seem to have been any magic or principle involved there. Nor earlier did there seem to be any magic or principle involved when the Leader of the Opposition was stumping the country referring to the kind of program that, if elected as prime minister, he would put forward, and the timing of that kind of program.

Mr. Muir: You said it would not work for 90 days.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Thank you for mentioning the 90 days. The Leader of the Opposition proposed to launch an initial freeze for 90 days, followed by the imposition of the mandatory and comprehensive controls for a period of up to 24 months. At that time, Madam Speaker, it seemed to be sound to be talking about 27 months. Where is the great principle involved? Do I detect a kind of quibble, or is this another parliamentary game that is involved here as well? What is now a matter of principle, termination after 18 months, is really at odds with the positions that the Leader of the Opposition had previously taken, which seemed to regard a period of 27 months as the optimum for the operation of the program. To do him justice, shorter if it could be achieved, just as we have said, but to try to set out a substantially longer period under which time the program could be carried into effect.

Mr. Whiteway: Was he right that it would work?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it would be of greater service to Canadians who are interested in this matter if I were to talk about the merits of the program put forward, the kinds of problems we shall face in dealing with it and the kinds of responsibilities which will devolve on the Leader of the Opposition, his followers, and others, in the time the program is outstanding. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) accurately described parliament's responsibilities for scrutinizing and, indeed, dealing with the program. As I indicated and as is indicated by the record, there will be full opportunity for parliament to debate and make a decision on whether the program, in the words of the hon. member for Peace River, should be extended for a further period of time. We have provided for that kind of extension which, I remind the House, was suggested first by the hon. member for Peace River.

The bill itself requires the Anti-Inflation Board and administrator to report to the minister and for those reports to be tabled in the House. As time goes on and the administration does its work, the detailed operation of the program will come before parliament in the way of information. As I responded to the hon. member for Peace River, who asked a question today, in the statutory instruments committee there will be substantial opportunity to review the regulations as made under this program and bill, and to review the statutory instruments by which this law will be carried into effect.

An hon. Member: What about the guidelines?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member will read the bill, he will find that the regulations put the guidelines into effect. Under the provisions of the rules of this House governing consideration of the spending estimates of government bodies, the House will have full opportunity to scrutinize the work of this federal body being established, and of every other government body, and to examine members of the Anti-Inflation Board. There will be full opportunity, as the Leader of the Opposition admitted, under the provisions of the rules governing supply procedures in this House, to debate on opposition days questions which may arise and be of interest as disclosed by reports made available to the House.

Therefore, an alert, able and responsible opposition will have no shortage of information. There will be full opportunity to bring into this House for debate the operations of this particular program, and to subject to scrutiny both myself and the appointed officers who will be charged with carrying it out. The cries concerning difficulties and suggestions that for the first time we are establishing some new kind of tyranny in Canada must be considered in light of the very substantial parliamentary opportunities which will be available even before the end of the 18-month period for the purpose of screening the operation of this program.

Let me turn to the merits of the question. What is the appropriate period for which one should design a program like this? The program we set out in the white paper, together with the proposals we brought forward, is designed to end the deep seated inflationary psychology which had seized all aspects of the Canadian community. Yet we recognize at the same time that Canadians inevitably will need to bear certain costs, no matter how successful the program may be in restricting other costs and other claims in other parts of our community. I mentioned these costs previously.

We shall have to pay higher prices for energy and sustain higher prices for the many thousands of commodities we import every day and which contribute to our standard of living. Indeed, there are at present substantial increases which have been built into the Canadian compensation system which will be passed on and make themselves felt in the form of higher prices for the goods and services we consume. We pointedly set out to make the system flexible in this regard. We wanted to avoid the injustice which would be occasioned by putting the brakes on too sharply, so that those who have not had the opportunity to catch up would not be treated unjustly and so that Canadians who have borne real cost may be recompensed. We wanted to avoid the situation in which the American program found itself. In that program, these kinds of increases were dammed back for a period of time; after that they had the explosion of wage claims and price increases which occurred at the end of the program.

Mr. Stanfield: What about conversion?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have set out to elaborate a means for slowing the impact of inflation on Canada by deliberate steps, setting as our basic protection factor 8 per cent, hopefully to be achieved at the end of the first year, 6 per cent at the end of the second year, and 4 per cent at the end of the third.

An hon. Member: Dreamer.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There will be a slow decline in the rise of the consumer price index for which Canadians, I think, can legitimately look. An hon. member opposite called me a dreamer. Perhaps I am. If achieving this end will be difficult in 36 months, I suggest it would be even more difficult in 18 months, without the heaviest cost. It could not be done in that time without at the same time imposing very great injustices on those who have not had the opportunity to catch up, and without imposing restrictive fiscal and monetary policies which could have no effect but increase to a substantial degree the rate of unemployment in Canada.

I suggest to the hon. member that it is possible, with the application of very strict measures under this program, together with supporting economic policies, to bring about a drastic reduction in the rate of inflation in the country. Yet to do so would not only impose hardship and unfairness on those who have not had the opportunity to catch up, but would bring the risk of very much higher rates of unemployment in Canada. Then, instead of facing an unacceptably high rate of inflation we should face an absolutely intolerable rate of unemployment.

It is for that reason that the program, by design, has been set for a period of three years, with the expectation that although prices may go up, we shall not persist in our present rate of inflation and that we shall bring the rate of increase down slowly. As I said in committee, if after 18 months we find that inflation in Canada has been dramatically reduced, no one would be more delighted than I. But I say that for the sake of justice and to avoid increasing unemployment in this country, we must embark on an elaborately slowed program, one which will bring inflation down by stages over a period of time. We suggest that any other program would bring far more hardship to Canadians and far greater difficulties for the Canadian economy, which is what would happen under the program of the Leader of the Opposition who would try to beat inflation in an 18-month period.

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): But that period, after all, is involved in his proposition.

Mr. Stanfield: But I did not say that.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The Leader of the Opposition can argue as he likes; but does he, or does he not, mean to beat inflation in 18 months?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): He does not mean to beat inflation in 18 months. He would have the program continue for 18 months and then let it go—

Mr. Stanfield: I did not say that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The House heard what was said. I think it is entitled to have a little more responsibility from the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You have twisted his meaning.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If he has some distinct proposal different from that which he put forward in the election campaign with regard to the inflation problem, I think the House is entitled to hear it. Until such time, I think the House is entitled to support the carefully articulated program I have laid before the House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise)—Trade—Request for reduction in cheese import quotas; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay—Mirabel—Request for tabling of data on which Sky Shops awarded franchise; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Finance—Suggested withdrawal of tax concessions to Falconbridge Nickel on operations in Namibia.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I said earlier that I would come to the House at five o'clock to hear further argument about the procedural regularity of motion No. 1. Do hon. members wish to make any submissions?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, we have nothing further to say at this time about motion No. 1 as all the arguments were made in the debate on motion No. 2.

Mr. Speaker: If there is no further discussion on motion No. 1, let me say that the opinion of the Chair remains the same, namely, that motion No. 1 would propose to include in the legislation an entirely new concept, outside the scope of the bill, and is therefore procedurally unacceptable; particularly, I might say, in relation to the particular clause it seeks to amend. It is out of order, therefore, on two procedural grounds.

In so far as motion No. 2 is concerned, I previously indicated that it is in order. It has already been discussed. That, I would think, settles those procedural points. However, today a much broader point was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I indicated that I would allow some time to elapse in order to see whether there might be a resolution. I understand that this measure will not be called tomorrow. If there is agreement or an understanding in the House that, in any circumstances, all votes on the report stage amendments will be deferred until the next day that this measure is called, that will allow discussion to continue. It will perhaps allow time for further discussion to resolve the point raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is only one difficulty that might arise out of that. That is the existence of Standing Order 75(6) which would have to be waived by unanimous consent. It states that if there is to be a recommendation referring to an amendment in a bill—in other words, an amendment to the recommendation—24 hours' clear notice must be given in writing.

Therefore, if you, Mr. Speaker, were to defer your ruling until Thursday, and if it were to be favourable to my proposition, the government would then be forced to put in the amending recommendation. There would be a 24-hour wait, which would carry into Friday. I rather suspect that proceedings would effectively be stopped. On the other hand, if Your Honour were able to give a ruling today, we could possibly get together and work out a satisfactory amendment to the recommendation. This would allow the proceedings to go forward on Thursday.

Mr. Speaker: I prefer not to give a definitive ruling because the ruling I come down with may be as a result of some discussion. I thought I made it clear that I fail to see much of a defect in the argument put forward by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I do not want to go into details that might necessarily tie the hands of the parties in attempting to come to a resolution. I thought I had made my sentiments clear. Let us hope that the matter may be resolved in some way.

Is it agreed and so ordered that at whatever point the discussion might terminate tonight, the votes on the motions will be deferred until the next day that this measure is called on government orders, which under no circumstances will be tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say at the outset that I was a little surprised at the rather discourteous response of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to the central thrust of the argument of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in favour of his amendment. The minister suggested the Conservative party had done an about-face on its attitude with regard to the question of controls. For some reason, he found that inappropriate. I do not like to use the metaphor, but it is a little like the pot calling the kettle black. What is fair for the goose is fair for the gander. The Liberals seem to have done an about-face on the question of controls. Therefore, it would have at least been courteous for the Minister of Finance to recognize the right of the official opposition to take a similar somersault in regard to its position.

In terms of the logic of the argument, I am inclined to agree with the Minister of Finance. I refer to the logic of his case against that of the Leader of the Opposition. I am not questioning the purpose or motives behind the motion presented, namely, motion No. 3. However, it seems that the whole case of the official opposition ought to be concerned with whether this program is acceptable. That is the fundamental question. Do we, or do we not, have a just approach to dealing with inflation, or an incomes policy? Instead, a rather spurious argument has been raised by the official opposition. They say that the longevity of the program is at question here.

I listened with care to the Leader of the Opposition. His entire speech was devoted to whether this program would be good for 18 months or should go beyond 18 months. He stated that a period of 18 months would make it acceptable, but beyond that time it would not be acceptable. Frankly, that type of logic escapes me and my party. Rather than seeing this bill as the official opposition does and as the Minister of Finance described it, namely, as constituting rough justice, the NDP sees it as one that constitutes no justice at all. From our point of view, that is fundamental to the question of whether we can accept the program for 18 months, 3 years or 30 years. The issue, surely, has to be faced. It has not been debated in parliament either by the official opposition or in the response of the Minister of Finance. The issue is whether the program we are being asked to accept for 18 months or beyond is fair and workable.

As we said on Thanksgiving Day after the meeting with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and after having had a chance to look for some hours at the white paper, this program is, first of all, unfair and unworkable. Second, it fails to present a broad approach to the economic problems facing this country. From the point of view of the New Democratic Party, both these issues constitute reasons for voting against it.

I wish to deal, in passing, with the latter point, the lack of breadth or lack of scope of the economic policy. I refer the Minister of Finance and the House to an article by two York University economists that appeared in the business section of today's Globe and Mail. They pointed out—and we said this some weeks ago and last spring at the time of the budget—that there will be record levels of unemployment in this country. This article was not written by two socialists, but two orthodox, competent economists. They made forecasts in conjunction with an analysis of this program that the government has presented. They pointed out that it is a possibility that in 1976 there will be a rate of unemployment of 9.5 per cent. That is something that should cause chagrin to any Minister of Finance. It should cause concern to the official opposition.

We are debating the most comprehensive economic policy that any government has brought in since World War II. However, it is a policy that neglects in any detail to take a positive approach in dealing with unemployment and inflation. In terms of its implicit message and its restrictive approach to monetary and fiscal policy, it will positively contribute to unemployment. As I said on the day we first learned of the program, it is unfair and unworkable within its own terms, that is, in terms of dealing with inflation. It is unacceptable to the New Democratic Party because it wrongly restricts itself to dealing with inflation, totally ignoring the fact that within a year or so we are going to have the highest number of unemployed Canadians since the depression.

Our spokesmen in the committee played their full part. I was not there, but I read the reports. All the points we made on second reading, the effects of the bill on the poor and on the non-unionized workers, its unfairness in terms of permitting professionals to escape the controls, the loopholes which exist in the area of price control, the loopholes which exist in favour of multinational corporations, were raised by members of my party. I might add that the points raised by members of all parties in the committee met with totally unsatisfactory answers from the Minister of Finance. Every skeptical question we raised was answered in committee by Mr. Pepin or Madam Plumptre in a way which confirmed our worst apprehensions.

What we have in this proposal is a bill which will control salary and wage earnings but will not control prices at all. At the time it was announced, Mr. Pepin said it contained 111 loopholes. He did not use the word "loopholes"; he said there were 111 ways of getting round these proposals. What he did not say was that these loopholes were for the benefit of the banks, the food chains, industry and professional people. There are no loopholes for the average income earner. To our minds, this does not constitute rough justice; it constitutes no justice at all. Therefore, we cannot accept it even as an anti-inflation measure, lacking as it does an equitable approach.

I was dismayed to find that in the debate on second reading no minister made any real attempt to justify the program embodied in the bill before us. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in speeches made by the Prime Minister beginning about a year ago now, the right hon. gentleman was talking about the need for an approach which would deal with wage and salary increases. The then minister of finance and the then minister of industry, trade and commerce were taking a similar line. Wages, according to their argument, were the principal source of inflation in the economy.

We have not heard, either in committee or in the debate on second reading, any evidence to support that general claim. Indeed, any evidence which the general public has is on the other side of the argument. The Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Bouey, said in a speech at Saskatoon that it was not the case that wage and salary increases had caused inflation. He pointed out that such increases had followed increases in the cost of living; they had not caused those increases. The moral is that one should deal with the more direct causes of inflation after which a fall-off in wage and salary demands could be expected; and that is precisely what has been happening in terms of wage demands.

The second argument advanced by the government was that we were pricing ourselves out of our trading markets. This, if true, could be serious, particularly in view of the unemployment which looms ahead. Here again, though, the evidence was not presented in committee. The most recent evidence to come to hand was provided by Statistics Canada yesterday in the trade figures. If those figures supported the government's opinion that we were pricing ourselves out of trading markets, we in this party would be bound to look at the argument very seriously. But they do not. The information provided yesterday by the government's own agency shows that in the first ten months of this year Canadian export over all increased by 1 per cent but our exports of finished goods, goods with a high labour component, rose by 9 per cent. This is, surely, of fundamental relevance to the government's argument.

Members opposite were saying a year ago that export markets in 1975 and 1976 would be affected because of disproportionate Canadian wage increases. Well, the figures are in and for the first ten months of 1975, rather than experiencing a decline in our exports we have seen an increase, particularly in those in which there is a high labour content. However, the government does not seem to be concerned about this argument. It is not troubled by the facts. I would draw it to the attention of the House that with one exception wage rates in the countries with whom we trade are running well ahead of those in Canada. The exception is the United States, but as we all know, our trade with the United States consists basically of raw materials, where there is little labour content. Therefore, the labour component in relation to total cost is really negligible. In light of what I have just said, the two principal arguments used by the government to justify its present approach to inflation fall to the ground.

What about the price loopholes? I should like to have heard the official opposition express some concern about the lack of an effective mechanism to control prices.

Mr. Stanfield: I did.

Mr. Broadbent: The Leader of the Opposition says he did, and I will take his word for it. I did not hear him do so in the debate in the House. I assume, then, that other members have said something about it. I should have thought that the Conservative Party, had it favoured an approach which was fair to all, would have zeroed in on the loopholes which the government has specifically provided in the legislation for the benefit of corporations and others. For instance, just in case a corporation should have a problem in getting accountants to disguise its profits, just in case there should be some loss of ingenuity by the corporation in devising ways of getting around the price control mechanism, the government has provided substantial loopholes to work with. If a corporation can show that its productivity has increased, it is exempt. If it experiences favourable cost developments which had not been anticipated, it is exempt. If it cleverly transfers the profits of its operation back to a parent firm in the United States it will, in effect, be exempt.

● (1720)

I remind the House that two weeks ago the chief accountant in the Department of National Revenue estimated that at the present time we are losing revenue amounting to $2.75 billion annually because branch plants in Canada are transferring their real profits to the United States disguised as costs. That Mr. Speaker—$2.75 billion—ain't chicken feed. This was before the present program was brought in.

Now imagine the pressure put on branch plants in Canada. As I have said, some 60 per cent of Canadian industry is foreign-owned, which largely means United States-owned. If the government is supposedly going to have some control over profits in Canada, the incentive for these branch plants to disguise their profits will be there as never before. They will be using every loophole to avoid paying tax in Canada as a result of intercorporate transfer pricing. I suspect that the annual loss of $2.75 billion will rise in excess of $3 billion, if I may give a conservative estimate of the revenue we are going to lose under this program.

This is why our party cannot accept the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition to terminate the bill after 18 months. As I say, we cannot accept the bill beyond 18 months, and because we find the bill unjust beyond the period of 18 months we find it equally unjust for any period up to 18 months.

Mr. Stanfield: What logic.

Mr. Broadbent: The Leader of the Opposition says "What logic." I say to him, what logic is there in his decision to vote against a government bill that takes over his program holus-bolus, but because it does not restrict the program to 18 months they will not support it? I ask the Canadian people to judge who is being logical about this, the New Democratic Party which has consistently opposed this bill whether for 18 months or three years, or the Conservative position which says it is all right if the bill lasts for 18 months but not if it goes beyond that.

Mr. Stanfield: That is not what we say.

Mr. Broadbent: That is the logic of your position. The fundamental fault in the bill is this lack of control over the price sector, this lack of any serious attempt to keep down prices. The government could have imposed a freeze. It could have accepted the proposition that the New Democratic Party has been advocating for some years now, namely, dealing with inflation in the non-competitive sector by freezing prices and requiring corporations to justify any increase. Instead, the government has turned that idea upside down and permitted corporations to increase prices, putting the onus of proving unjust price increases upon the public.

The government's program is riddled with loopholes. It does not control prices and therefore is one we cannot accept. The government is not controlling professional incomes, either. The only effective way to hold down the incomes of professionals such as doctors, lawyers and accountants is to apply a 100 per cent tax on all income exceeding the $2,400 increase. I know that a number of New Democratic Party governments have made this proposal to the federal government. They maintain it should be a national policy. But the Liberals have rejected it. In short, the Liberals have a program that will control only the average person's income, whether he be salaried or a wage earner. It does not control the income of professionals and it does not control prices.

My time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, and therefore I shall have to ask a colleague of mine to deal with a matter I had hoped to raise concerning a specific and major loophole in the program, in a sector that has a major impact on inflation, namely, the oil industry. There have been questions and answers in the last two days in the House which clearly demonstrate that the government has no interest in putting effective controls on the oil industry, but my colleague will be dealing with this shortly.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Take more time, if you want. I am sure the House will agree.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not want to abuse the privilege of the House. I conclude by saying that the amendment proposed by the official opposition is unacceptable to us, because what is not acceptable and just in the long run is certainly not acceptable for 18 months. We intend to vote against the motion, as we intend to vote against the bill as a whole. This program is unfair. It does not deal directly with inflation, with housing, energy prices, food costs. It does not deal with the kind of specific instruments that are needed to fight inflation in those sectors outlined by members of my party in a special debate a week ago Friday.

I regret to see that the reason the official opposition is going to vote against this bill is simply that it did not get an amendment passed within their time framework. I should have liked to see them join with us in voting against the bill because it is the unjust package that it is.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested to hear the minister this afternoon reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who moved this motion, which in its narrow terms merely seeks to bring this program to an end by April 30, 1977, rather than giving the government the powers it seeks until December 31, 1978. That is the sum and total of the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition and it is entirely in keeping with what he has been proposing. It is consistent, as he has pointed out, with his comments made at the time of the white paper and also when the government introduced the legislation on October 14.

I must say I was rather amused to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) dream on, trying to put some sort of coloration upon the stand taken by the opposition on this bill. With regard to the question of controls, in February of 1973 the Conservative party proposed an incomes policy as one of the tools for fighting inflation and an election was fought over that issue. As any member of this chamber knows, the Liberal party and the New Democratic Party, each for its own particular reason, opposed controls as a tool to fight inflation. That was their stand in 1974. The former leader of the New Democratic Party spent the first three or four weeks of the election campaign attacking the conservative proposal as though it were the only proposal in the armoury of this party for dealing with inflation. Up to that point a good part of the press just ignored inflation. They just carried on as though everything was the best of all possible worlds, at least according to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Benjamin: They were wrestling inflation to the ground.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No mention was made of wrestling inflation to the ground; that came later. They scared the voters in Ontario and in Quebec, as though controls were the only tool to be used to fight inflation, but the voters in the rest of Canada thought otherwise. What happened in Ontario with the New Democrats? They had controls as well. They had a prices review board with powers of roll-back. It only takes seconds of consideration to know that is a full, mandatory price control of wages, rents and everything in the armoury.

● (1730)

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) says "just prices". What holds up prices? What is one of the chief constituents of any price—wages. Wages come in heavily in any element of price, as do rents and profit. In any consideration of price one must consider all the elements. The net result, we know, is that the former leader of the New Democratic Party did such a good job of hoodwinking the Ontario voters that when it came about that there would be a prices and review board, the voters saw what it was. What did they do? They said they would not have either. They took the position that the Liberals had told them everything was going fine and that they would just be fed dollars, that the program would be upped; there would not be too much indexing, but the government would give so that the people would be compensated for inflation.

We know what they did with the money supply. Be that as it may, I want to deal with the point the Minister of Finance was trying to make, I think quite wrongly, namely, that the purpose of this amendment is somehow to cut back the program of controls, that the 90-day freeze, plus up to two years of controls was 27 months, and how far is that from 42 months as is now proposed; therefore it is really not very much different. That is not the purpose. The minister should have quoted fully what was said by the House leader of the official opposition the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I underline that sometimes it is very dangerous to quote out of context. Let us look at what the hon. member for Peace River said on October 17. I shall put it all on the record so there will be no ambiguity about it. I shall quote from the first column on page 8314 of Hansard for October 17. The hon. member said:

> To begin with, I am simply appalled at the effrontery of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the government in asking this House to grant to it the unique, extraordinary and terrifying powers, to use the minister's words, which are asked for for an open-ended period of time. I would protest if my own party asked for those powers. Despite the respect and admiration I have for my leader, I would oppose him if he introduced legislation of this kind, although I could never see him seeking to do so in these terms. Let me put it simply in this way: the legislation as it presently stands would permit this government, some time in the late fall of 1978, to put forward and ram through motions which could extend for another two, three or four years the kind of legislation which we are considering. I am not prepared to entrust this power to any group of people, and certainly not to this government.

I repeat, that as far as we are concerned, this aspect is totally unacceptable and simply will not wash. We will be proposing an amendment at the appropriate stages of committee and later to deal with this, and in our view failure to provide something to cover this problem, so that we will not be in a position—

Here it is, Mr. Speaker:

—where we sit here until 1978 waiting for the government to decide whether to extend the legislation, is unacceptable. We will propose an amendment which will provide that at an earlier date during the life of this legislation, this House will have, as it must, the right to decide whether under the circumstances which then exist the extension of the legislation is warranted.

We are not attempting to shorten the program. We say the government is asking this House to wait a long time to decide on extending the program, and we say this cannot happen in light of the powers and the circumstances of this legislation. The minister himself said this legislation was most terrifying.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Frightening.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, frightening. I quite agree with him. This afternoon I had occasion to reread the proceedings in 1955 dealing with the Defence Production Act. I do not know whether the father of the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) was then a minister of the Crown. He had been shortly before. But we all know about the Defence Production Act debate in 1955, when this House refused to give consent and the government acceded to the opposition in the House in respect of granting absolute powers to the governor in council and giving the government a completely blank cheque.

What is the House asked to do in Bill C-73? Under clause 20 (8) there is granted to the administrator the power to make any order which can contravene any and all acts that this parliament has passed or is likely to pass during the duration of this legislation. Someone in the New Democratic Party said that they were rather disappointed that the official opposition opposed this bill only for the reason of its duration. Somehow or other—and I am surprised at this—they have missed the implications of clause 20 (8). I recall the absolute indignation, in fact the violent protest, of the former leader of the New Democratic Party when he saw the provisions and what was meant by the War Measures Act in October, 1970, and how civil rights were forgotten. Let me read what appears on pages 21 and 22 of Bill C-73:

An order of the Administrator made pursuant to subsection (1), paragraph (2)(a), (4)(a) or (5)(a) is binding on the person against whom it is made notwithstanding any agreement that was entered into after October 13, 1975 (whether before or after the order was made), notwithstanding any other Act or law enacted or made before or after the coming into force of this act, and notwithstanding that the order conflicts with anything that was established in accordance with or approved pursuant to any such other act or law.

Is that not the biggest blank cheque that this House had been asked to write in favour of an official named under this legislation? It is not a blank cheque to the governor in council, the governor in council being responsible in theory, at least, to this House. But we being asked to approve a provision stating that an appointed official, whose acts are barely reviewable except perhaps in law, can make an order that is contrary to all acts that have been passed, save one.

Mr. Benjamin: Then why would you want him for 18 months?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That shows how slow the hon. member is because an amendment was put in committee to eliminate that section and to provide for the protection of civil liberties. Unfortunately, when the vote came, there was no representative for the NDP there to support that amendment.

The only exception is the Canadian Bill of Rights which states in clear and unequivocal terms that for it to be set aside there must be a specific provision in a subsequent act which says that the Canadian Bill of Rights is set aside. That is not done in this bill and therefore the Canadian Bill of Rights will stand. But that is all that stands. Strangely enough Bill C-72, the Canadian Human Rights Act, which is on the order paper, is excluded because I am sure government members hope that the House will pass that bill. But why pass it? They will have passed Bill C-73 which sets it aside.

We are asked also why we oppose this bill. We accepted in principle the question of controls, but our leader has indicated the conditions on which we accepted the government proposals. We do not write a blank cheque from the very beginning and say that we will accept government proposals and explanations sight unseen. I agree that we also have some reservations with regard to some of the loopholes and difficulties we see in the bill, but we admit also that a system of controls is difficult and, as our leader has said, there are some elements of rough justice. But, my goodness, surely the cancer of inflation which has moved on to the Canadian scene has been growing over these past many years with no intervention from the government.

Inflation is continuing notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in 1970 that they had licked inflation, and on a subsequent occasion said they would wrestle it to the ground. The only way in which they have done any wrestling with inflation is to take something partly from somebody else's program and to show that it is imperfect and creates more rough justice than it should—and I put the emphasis on the word "rough". There were other statements by the chairman and vice-chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board that if they had had their preference they would have preferred a 90 day freeze.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbot) made that statement in a partisan manner because, after all, I am sure he has great respect for the chairman and the vice-chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board. The transcript will show that both the chairman and the vice-chairman said that if they had had their preference they would have preferred a freeze on prices and incomes because, as the chairman said, he now has nightmares thinking about the problems that are growing with prices creeping up and wage demands continuing.

It will take some time to get everything into position. I would have expected it, and personally I would have felt that the minister would have had a great deal more acceptance of this program from the public. After all, we do not hear too many howls from British Columbia where another opponent of price controls, one of the arch disciples of the NDP, has seized upon full controls to deal with food prices, rents, and some other aspects of inflation, although not all of them.

I will not talk about fiscal and monetary policy, and I will not talk about the control of government expenditures within the framework of this bill. We are merely talking here about a system of wage and price controls. I will emphasize again that we find it impossible, notwithstanding that there is sympathy for controls, to accept the request of the government for a blank cheque until December 31, 1978. If after 18 months, on April 30, 1977, we fully understand the motive for these controls, which are to nullify, to affect somehow the inflation psychology which has been rampant in this country for years but which the government stubbornly refused to recognize—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their indulgence. I will not abuse it.

As I was saying, the government steadfastly refused to recognize that this inflation psychology existed in the country. I do not know where the Prime Minister read his book on present day economics, but at least now he has come up with the idea of controls. Certainly we agree that something has to be done, and that the inflation psychology has to be operated on within 18 months. Surely to goodness if the program is working, then the government can come back to parliament with a bill to continue or to modify the program. If the government is accomplishing what it has set out to do with regard to inflation—not licking inflation, because this program alone cannot do it—then I am sure the government will find the members of my party fully in support.

However, on the other hand, if the program is failing to accomplish its job, the country should not be saddled with a monster until December, 1978, and potentially beyond. After all, under this program there will be a massive intrusion by government into the economy. There is the potential of forever, shall we say, putting government into all aspects of the business of the country, particularly if it is there for a period of almost four years, and certainly if it is continued beyond that. That is what the minister should have said is frightening. He should have said that clause 20 (8) is frightening.

It is for those additional reasons, among others, that the Leader of the Opposition, consistent with the views he expressed right at the very beginning and all the way through, and the members of this party insist that with regard to this proposal dealing with income controls it should be for 18 months, and 18 months alone.

That is the amendment we are now considering, but we could have had additional amendments. I did propose one, which I am concerned about, in addition to that which particularly bothers the Leader of the Opposition. I put my amendment in committee. We were faced with some zero amendments, nondescript amendments dealing with marketing boards and runaway amendments from government members who took up the balance of the time, under the guillotine, and of course the net result was that there was no opportunity to debate either the amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), or the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition, or mine.

I thank hon. members for these additional minutes, and I hope the arguments we have made with regard to this bill will commend themselves to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asks that this program not last longer than April 30, 1977. I fail to understand the logic behind a motion of this sort after listening to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the Leader of the Opposition, and other members of the Conservative party because they have now taken the position that they are condemning the program.

It seems to me that if they condemn the program so strongly they should be interested in making sure the program does not come into effect, using whatever parliamentary power and muscle they have unless of course the government is willing to amend the program to make it more acceptable to them. It strikes me as very strange that they would move a motion which would accept the program for 18 months while still condemning it loudly from the other side of their mouths.

All along our party has taken a very clear and consistent approach in the debate on this bill. We have been saying that this legislation is not fair, not equitable, and will not work in Canada at this time. It will not have any real impact on making a more equitable and just society or economy than we have today. We said at the outset that this program is essentially a wage control program. It will not be concerned with controlling prices or profits in a serious way. When it comes to controlling prices, there are many loopholes.

The government says that it wants to control profits at the end of the year, but it will control profits at 95 per cent of their level over the last five years. This strikes me as rather strange, particularly when wages will be controlled at a level whereby the rate of increase will go progressively down from 10 per cent to 8 per cent to 6 per cent, if workers receive their 2 per cent productivity increase. At the same time the profit level which is to be controlled will actually go up because it will be 95 per cent of the last five year average, and in the last five years profits have been very high.

However, if we go back five years, profits were at a lower level as they went through the regular business cycle. As we move along, the profit average for the last five years will be higher next year and the year after than it will be this year, which means that prices will be allowed to increase, according to the government's own guidelines.

Then, to make it even more difficult for us to buy this bill, in terms of its being equitable, corporations will have exemptions for non anticipated costs. What does that mean, and how is that defined? We will not know that until the regulations come in. There will be an exception for an unusual productivity gain. Again what is meant by that? We will not know the answer to that question until the regulations are brought before the House.

This leads me to another point which is objectionable about this bill, and that is the immense power we will be giving the Anti-Inflation Board, the administrator of the board, the chairman and the vice chairman to draft regulations, to interpret them, to make judgment on various cases, be they cases of wages or salaries, or be they anything which comes under the general purview of the Anti-Inflation Board.

I have been here only seven years, and with the exception of the War Measures Act I have never seen such an immense amount of power go to one agency or board without any direct input from parliament itself. It seems to me that parliamentarians in this House should demand to look at the regulations before we allow this bill to pass. The Conservative party is beginning to talk about these things, but at the same time it is willing to accept the bill if there is an 18 month time limit placed on it. If the bill is so bad, how the devil can they possibly accept it for 18 months?

This amendment is just one of the devices the Conservative party is using, in terms of its strategy, to work on an excuse to oppose the type of legislation that we have before us today. For that reason and others I cannot support the amendment before us, and I urge hon. members of the House to vote against the amendments which have been introduced by the Conservative party.

As we in this party have said, we have opposed this bill consistently from the beginning because we do not think it is fair. We think it is a wage control bill. It is easy to control the wages of working people. They are out in the open and under contracts, and they can be controlled very effectively. However, on the price side, we have said many times that there are so many possible loopholes that we do not think the government is going to be serious about controlling prices.

As a matter of fact, I believe the other day the vice chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, Beryl Plumptre, along with some other members of the board said that the government should not be too tough when it comes to controlling profits and prices. After all, both Mrs. Plumptre and Mr. Pepin believe in the so-called corporate enterprise system. They believe that there should be profits and competition in our economy if it is to be healthy. If there are people with that type of bias drafting the regulations, interpreting them, and applying the law, I am sure they are not going to apply the law in a way which really restricts corporations, their price mechanisms, and the way they make profits. That is the kind of background from which those people come.

Mr. Pepin comes to the job after resigning directorships in seven corporations. He comes to the job with a record which is clearly biased on the side of business and big corporations. That is his business and I am not complaining about Mr. Pepin. But I am saying that he is going to have a clear bias when he makes decisions concerning profits and prices that come before the Anti-Inflation Board, and when he makes decisions concerning workers' salaries and wages that come before the Anti-Inflation Board.

Another reason why our party is not supporting this amendment is that we do not see any control of professional salaries like the controls that have been imposed on the lives of working people. The only way that there is going to be any serious control over professional salaries is to have them controlled on a national level and taxed back at a rate of 100 per cent of any increases above the $2,400 level. That is the only way to do it, but as far as I know the government has rejected that proposal which was made by many people, including several provincial governments.

Another question that was referred to by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was that the government is not going to put controls on the price of energy or oil at the wellhead. It seems to me that if you want to control the price of gas and oil, that is where the controls should be applied. If the price increases at the wellhead, the cost is going to be felt right through to the retail level. Anyone who purchases gasoline, for an automobile or farm machinery, is going to have to bear the increase.

We have said consistently in this party that gas and oil should be publicly owned and treated as a public utility. I am sure the minister is aware of the latest Canadian public opinion poll issued a few days ago which showed that 51 per cent of the people in this country want gas and oil under public ownership. That industry should be developed as the government of Saskatchewan is going to develop to potash industry, as a resource that belongs to the people, with the profits to be shared by the people and not the multinational corporations. We have consistently taken that position. If the industry were under public ownership it would be possible to keep prices down. It could be developed in a way that is good for Canada, or the resource could be conserved for all Canadians.

There is no guarantee that if the wellhead price increases any of the money will be used for exploration and development in Canada. If the government is not going to nationalize the oil industry surely it should make sure that any increase in the price of oil will be used for exploration and development. Any increase in the price of oil is inflationary and should come under the purview of the Anti-Inflation Board.

I have here some statistics from Statistics Canada which prove the point that, as the profits of gas and oil companies increase, they do not necessarily spend more on exploration. In 1972, for example, the book profits of petroleum corporations in Canada were $393 million and in that year they spent $512 million on exploring for gas and oil in Canada. In 1975 the profits of oil companies had gone up to $845 million and the amount they spent on exploration was $577 million. They spent very little more on exploration when their profits increased by well over 100 per cent. There is no direct relationship between spending more on exploration and development and what their gross production revenues may be. I appeal to the government to control the price of oil at the wellhead.

These are things that are not going to be done under the bill as it is constituted. These are reasons why we cannot accept the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition that the bill be limited to 18 months. If it is going to be a bad bill for 30 months or 40 months, then surely it is a bad bill for 18 months. If it is bad bill for three years it is a bad bill for a year and a half. If the Conservative party is going to complain about it for three or 3½ years, I do not see how it can justify using the same powers for a year and a half. I do not see the logic of its position.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) stated earlier, in the election campaign of 1974 the Conservative party was talking about legislation which, if you combine the freeze part of its proposal with the controls part of its proposal, would last as long as 27 months.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Possibly.

Mr. Nystrom: That's what I said, it would possibly last as long as 27 months. I think they are just trying to jostle a bit, politically. I think they are a little bit embarrassed by what has happened.

We have had one of the greatest turn-arounds in Canadian politics over this issue. In the 1974 campaign people were going around this country saying that controls were bad—they were of the Liberal party. A few months later all of a sudden the Liberal party made a complete somersault. It has promoted the idea and has brought legislation into the House that is essentially the same—with the exception of the 90 day freeze—as what the Conservative party was offering in that campaign. Again all of a sudden, then the official opposition is doing the same kind of somersault.

It is our party that has been consistent throughout the whole debate. When we talked about inflation, when we talked about a controlled program, and when we voted in the House. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, under no circumstances can I consider the amendment put forward by the Leader of the Opposition as one that warrants my support and my attention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to speak in opposition to motion No. 3 and I will have something to say on motion No. 5 put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald).

It is possible that the NDP might owe some apology to the Progressive Conservative party because during the 1974 election we did such a good job in shooting down their wage and price controls that no doubt a lot of people were scared into voting Liberal in order to protect their incomes. This hurt us as well as the Conservatives. We may owe them a bit of an apology, but that does not mean we were wrong in the position we took then, which is the same position we take now on the legislation that the government proposes.

I want to repeat what I have said before. The question is not whether we should have a program to contain the rate of increase of inflation or lessen it. The question is not what the government is proposing to do, but how it is proposing to do it.

I say the official opposition is in the same boat as the New Democratic Party—its members are also unhappy about how the government proposes to fight inflation. I would feel more comfortable if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) were prime minister and implementing a program to fight inflation. I would be more inclined to trust him than the government across the way. A government that can make the switch that it has made in the last 15 or 16 months is just not to be trusted in carrying out a program to fight inflation.

There is an additional reason why it is not to be trusted. In its fight against inflation in 1969 and 1970 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in his Christmas broadcast that we had inflation licked, we all remember that that fight against inflation was carried out as this one will be, on the backs of the wage and salary earners. There was some lessening in the rate of inflation and the government of that day had some modest success, but at the cost of a much greater rate of unemployment. I submit that was a higher cost than the cost of the rate of inflation that we were suffering at that time. This legislation proposes to do exactly the same thing but on a more extensive scale and in a much harsher way.

It has been said many times by the spokesmen for the NDP that the legislation is unfair and inequitable. Shortening the program to 18 months from 36 months will not lessen the injustice. The program is still unjust and unfair, still unworkable in a fair manner.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) spoke about fighting the inflation psychology. If this legislation were to fight inflation on the backs of those who cause it, my party might be inclined to support it. But it chooses to fight inflation on the backs of those on fixed incomes, pensioners, those earning minimum wages, and the unorganized who earn low incomes and lack protection. For the benefit of that hon. member, there is no inflationary psychology in the minds of old age pensioners, those earning minimum wages, the unorganized, those who cannot protect themselves, and those who earn $7,000, $8,000 or $9,000 a year. They are the majority of our population and there is no inflationary psychology in their minds. They make desperate attempts to catch up, to avoid being even worse off because of inflation.

This legislation will not affect those who cause inflation, the finance institutions which, even as this bill was being discussed in committee, were allowed to raise interest rates and further sweeten their profits from money lending. I thought the money lenders were chased from the Temple 2,000 years ago; but they have since "snuck" in the back door. They are partly responsible for inflation.

And what about those who are to escape the provisions of this legislation, those whose increased earnings come from so-called increased productivity, the doctors who see more patients in less time, the architects who design a greater number of office buildings, and other professionals. They will be able to claim their productivity has increased and evade this legislation; but they contribute to inflation. Those with incomes as large as we earn as members, and larger, are imbued with inflation psychology. Such people take more from the economy than they put into it.

Do members of the official opposition think for a moment that people on minimum wages, on pensions, and on fixed incomes are taking more from the economy than they put in? If they think so, let them work a few days for the minimum wage and see how they feel.

Further, we feel we cannot support the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition as we do not think prices and incomes legislation can effectively combat inflation by itself. You cannot do it in isolation from other things. By itself such legislation will not work, as you must consider all the other factors contributing to inflation. A program of income and price controls should be an essential part of an over-all economic plan. You cannot have one without the other, as the song says. If you are to control or restrain prices you must, it seems to me, control production. In other words, you need mandatory production controls, as C. D. Howe realized during World War II. He knew that without adequate production controls some companies would hold production back for better prices. Therefore we need measures to control production.

I suggest that the proposed regulations for controlling prices will, in many areas, be ineffective. How will they work in transportation? In short, we must arrive at a consensus or, in the words of Harold Wilson, a social contract which includes all segments of society, workers, businessmen, farmers, consumers, and federal, provincial, and municipal governments. We must arrive at a consensus. There must be an overwhelming desire on the part of the majority of the population to be involved in the program. That is not the case at present. This consensus is not an element in this legislation.

There is a third reason for our not supporting the amendment. Although I am not an economist or expert it seems to me that deadlines have their limitations, as the shorter the period to the deadline the greater is the likelihood that those who can afford to wait for the expiration of the program will do just that, sit back and wait for it to end. The Minister of Finance mentioned the experience in Britain and the United States where there was an explosion of price increases immediately after the expiration of price and income control programs.

An hon. Member: Both countries were under Conservative governments.

Mr. Benjamin: Those governments were headed by Mr. Heath and Mr. Nixon, both Conservatives as the hon. member says. Those governments served notice on those whose prices and incomes were to be controlled. Those who could afford to, sat back and waited for the controls to end. I suggest to the Leader of the Opposition, with all respect, that his 18-month proposal would suit ideally every major corporation which could adjust its production and inventory and wait for the arrival of April 30, 1977, after which there would be a price explosion. But the ordinary person cannot do that, if the experience of the United Kingdom and United States is any guide.

It seems to me that a lesser evil would be no deadline at all. Why should not the government be required to come to parliament every 12 or 18 months with a report, which parliament could debate? If the government were to feel at any time it no longer needs the program, it could say to parliament, "We want to repeal part or all of the program." There would be no need for any deadline. Then those who want to evade the controls, particularly on profits, professional fees, interest income, and so on, would not know how long they must wait before exploding upward their prices or profits. It seems to me for that reason that the Conservatives' amendment to reduce the period to 18 months will merely increase the likelihood of evasion.

Let me refer to something that happened not long ago to show why this program is misconceived and why the fight against inflation cannot be isolated to one program. Last week the "Big Six" met in France, and Canada cried like a child refused an invitation to a birthday party because our government was not invited to attend. I am glad it was not invited because, judging from the attitude of our government, it would have contributed nothing to that conference. One of the main items discussed at the conference was the fight against unemployment. It was held that the industrialized nations of the western world should put a higher priority on the fight against unemployment than on the fight against inflation.

Since the government has no program to fight unemployment with an equal priority to inflation, its representatives would have had no contribution to make had they been invited to sit in with the "Big Six". Instead of being one of the "Big Six," they would have been the little seventh. That is all they could have done. They would have had something to say about inflation, but nothing about unemployment.

The concern has to be more about recession, unemployment, and other ancillary problems such as housing, as much and more as it is about inflation. From what I have been reading the last few weeks I understand that the trend around the world, without this phony program of the government, is deflationary. The problem that we had a few months ago is not as severe now, and will not be as severe in the coming months.

I want to say a few words about what the spokesmen for the Anti-Inflation Board and the government have been saying with regard to marketing boards. I remind the members of the official opposition of the position they took and with which we agreed, the protection of the primary producer at the farm gate and of the fishermen at the dock. I ask hon. members in the official opposition whether they do not find it passing strange that, at the very first press conference of Mr. Pepin and Mrs. Plumptre, of all the areas of the economy there are to be looked at with regard to inflation, such as financial institutions, professional fees, wages and salaries, and so on, the one they chose to zero in on and attack was marketing boards.

I remind the members of the official opposition that marketing boards are right beside the farm gate and on the dock beside the fisherman's boat. Controlling the ability of marketing boards to provide stable and reasonable incomes, having some relationship to cost of production to primary producers, negates entirely the principle held by the official opposition about protecting the primary producer at the farm gate.

This morning's Globe and Mail adds further to my fears about how this program will be operated under the tender mercies of Jean-Luc Pepin and old Ma Plumptre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: That should be sufficient for members of the official opposition to agree with us that not only is 36 months no good, but neither is 18 months. The program designed by the government will not work. It is unfair and unjust. For that reason, it is worthy of opposition.

I appreciated and admired the stance taken by the Leader of the Opposition at the outset, during the debate on the white paper, and at second reading when his party was prepared to support in principle a program to combat inflation, a program of prices and incomes control. However, he left the door open and reserved the position that, if the government did not bring in sufficient improvements in committee and at report stage, his party would not support the legislation. Lord knows the government needs all the support it can get from all sectors and all political parties if it is going to have any success in fighting inflation.

Surely reducing the length of the program from 36 to 18 months is in no way sufficient to satisfy the leaders and members of the official opposition. Surely it cannot be sufficient. Surely there is more than that which they wanted at report stage. Surely they cannot have decided that cutting the length of the program in half is sufficient. If so, I state quite frankly that that is a sell-out of the principles they stuck to very firmly in the 1974 election campaign, something that I admired. If they now believe that 18 months is sufficient, I say that is a sell-out.

I notice my time has almost expired. I will use my remaining few minutes to say a few words about motion No. 5 moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). It provides, and I quote:

> Where, at any time after March 31, 1977 and before July 1, 1977, a motion for the consideration of the House of Commons, signed by not less than 50 members of the House, is filed with the Speaker to the effect that this Act shall expire on a date before December 31, 1978—

My quarrel with the minister's amendment is the 50 members provision. I remind the minister that we have argued this before with regard to other items of legislation. On some occasions we persuaded the government, and on others we did not, with regard to setting a much more fair and reasonable figure as to how many members of parliament are required to bring such a motion into effect.

I submit that the number 50 was either thoughtlessly arrived at by the government, or deliberately arrived at to prevent at least two political parties in the House of Commons from bringing such a motion into play. I choose to believe the former, that the figure of 50 was thoughtlessly arrived at. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

> That Motion No. 5 be amended by deleting therefrom the phrase "50 members" and by substituting therefor the phrase "20 members".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being 6:30 p.m., I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At 6:30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at 6.30 p.m. we were considering the report stage of Bill C-73 and, in particular, motions 3, 4 and 5, together with an amendment to motion No. 5 which had just been moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). The debate is open on those three motions and also on the amendment.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the purpose of our putting forward our amendment to the motion is to impress further upon the House our opinion that the soomer we can bring these so-called wage and price controls to an end, the better. In other words, the sooner we can rip away this sham anti-inflation program the better the Canadian people will be served.

I say this as I rise to speak upon the sub-amendment because I feel the control program is nothing more than a wage control program. We in this party have no objection to an incomes policy, no objection to an anti-inflation policy which is universal and which contains elements of justice. But the program which has been placed before us is, as I say, nothing more than a plan for wage controls.

I might point out that whenever similar plans have been put into operation in countries abroad they have almost always resulted in high unemployment. It is no accident, I feel, that concurrent with the program we are considering today the government should be promoting a bill entitled Bill C-69, amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, a measure which in a very real sense redefines the acceptable rate of unemployment in this country. Whereas in the past 4 per cent was said to be acceptable, after the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act have been passed the acceptable rate is to be 5.6 per cent, liable to upward adjustment.

Let us consider what has been happening in relation to collective industrial power in the hands of the workers in this country. It seemed to me we were just about to turn the corner as far as the redistribution of profits in the direction of wages and salaries was concerned. In 1969 the government set up the Prices and Incomes Commission. I have been looking recently at a statement by one George Haythorne, a member of that ill-fated Commission in which he explained why they were attempting to set up a commission to inquire into prices and incomes:

> From 1957 to 1963 the share of Canada's national income going to profits and capital had risen steadily. That situation was reversed in 1964 when labour's share began to rise. The trend continued until 1970.

Given these conditions, action to stabilize the economy was clearly required.

That statement is to be found in Prices and Incomes Policy—The Canadian Experience 1969-72—International Labour Review, Volume 108 No. 6, December 6, 1973.

There we have it. There was a reason at that time for the government to try to bring in an incomes policy based on the fact that labour was finally succeeding in using its organized power to get a bigger share of the national income pie. However, shortly after that policy was embarked upon unemployment began to rise and the share of the national income which went to the working classes fell from 72.8 per cent in 1970 to 67 per cent in the first half of 1974. From mid-1974, labour's share increased to 69.4 per cent and by the end of 1974 it had risen to 70.8 per cent. Big business profits and interest fell to 21.1 per cent by the end of 1974 and to 20.1 per cent in mid-1975. So it is fairly obvious that the lines were drawn, that what was happening was that finally labour was starting to get a share of the national income pie. This was due largely to the better organization of the trade union movement and to the militancy they were exhibiting in terms of getting a better share of the pie.

The corporations convinced the government that there would have to be a turn around, and that if the corporations could maintain their high profit this would somehow ensure there would be jobs and a very buoyant economy. Largely to protect their own profit margins they convinced the government that it ought to apply some form of wage controls. This was evident when the former minister of finance tried to get a consensus on wage controls.

During the election campaign of 1974 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to my neck of the woods and made a speech near Timmins on June 28. During the course of his speech he said this:

You can't freeze executive salaries and dividends because there are too many loopholes to squeeze through.

Then he went on to say that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) had already said he would not freeze prices of farm produce and fish, that he could not freeze the prices of U.S. imports and Arab oil, and that he admitted that he would exempt housing prices. So the Prime Minister shouted:

So what's he going to freeze? Your wages. He's going to freeze your wages.

Nothing has changed, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister correctly identified the problems with wage controls, or an incomes policy, call it what you will. It is very easy to control wages. As a matter of fact yesterday the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) castigated the unions, saying they were unpatriotic in not supporting the government's wage controls. Are we suddenly to assume that International Nickel, Falconbridge Nickel Mines, and a host of other large corporations in Canada have become very patriotic when they are telling their workers they will give them 10 per cent but not to ask for more? I think it was Samuel Johnson who, in speaking about patriotism, said it is the last refuge of a scoundrel.

Mr. Benjamin: That was Lyndon Johnson.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Rodriguez: In any event, when Falconbridge and International Nickel begin to be patriotic, I begin to worry.

Mr. Darling: You would worry a lot more if they were not in your riding.

Mr. Rodriguez: Falconbridge have just laid off a thousand. They only stay in my riding for what they can get out of it. It is obvious that these controls will very effectively apply to wages. Wages will be limited to 10 per cent—8 per cent plus a further 2 per cent for productivity—but prices will rise under the cover of increased costs, whetever that means. Rather than hold down prices and let wages adjust, the government has found it convenient to hold down wages and hope that prices will adjust.

It is clear that the government has assured the corporations that their real profits will not decline under this policy. The workers will have to buy a pig in a poke. They have to accept a ceiling on their wage increases, hoping and praying that the 8 per cent will be enough to cover any increased costs in their living expenses. In addition, the government is exempting from the controls energy prices, food prices, interest rates, and the cost of land.

Yesterday the Toronto-Dominion Bank, I think it was, said that its profits after taxes were something like 27 per cent. Having heard that report, keep in mind that they hanged Dick Turpin. The banks will just walk away from these controls, yet bank interest rates touch the lives of every Canadian. That is free enterprise.

Mr. Benjamin: The banks never lose.

Mr. Rodriguez: The banks never lose. It seems to me the ability of the government to make even those prices that are to be controlled relate themselves to costs is limited. Wherever workers are engaged in collective bargaining, the negotiations are open. Everyone knows what the collective bargaining process involves. Everybody knows what the postal workers are after; it is open and on the table. They know what the negotiations are going to result in. That strike is all above board. But the pricing decisions and the profit structure of corporations are not open to public scrutiny. The reason for this is, they say, that they do not want their competition to know what their pricing and profit structures are. This is why these negotiations take place behind the closed doors of the boardrooms.

To illustrate how involved is the process upon which the government has embarked, at first the controls were to apply to 1,500 large corporations. I understand this figure has now risen to over 6,000. The government is going to hire 200 bureaucrats to monitor these 6,000 corporations. Regional offices are going to be set up to monitor prices. It is frightening to think that we are now setting up a new bureaucracy, a kind of bureaucracy where corporations which can afford to hire high priced accountants will certainly find ways to escape.

Another avenue of escape, of course, lies with the multinationals. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) was in the committee I asked him about a matter that some of my consumers were reporting to me, namely, that Canadian clams and salmon caught off Canadian coasts were being shipped to Japan for packing and then brought back to the Canadian market for sale. Under the guidelines these products would be exempt from price control. These clams and salmon were packed for George Weston Limited, and in effect we have a price transferral system which can only result in the multinational corporations escaping from these controls. Yet the government asks the people to accept its program as fair.

The people have reason to be skeptical of the government's proposal. The government has said that a limited number of price increases will be submitted to the government before they take effect. How can the Anti-Inflation Board which will consist of 200 persons be able adequately to determine the intentions of the corporations in this regard?

The British experience shows that a similar system was in operation there between July, 1967, and June, 1970. Despite the British government's own estimate of three million price changes being made a year in Britain, only 2,162 notifications were received by that government over the whole three-year period. Of these, 1,807 were accepted as notified. This meant that out of 3 million price changes the government price control machinery either modified or rejected a grand total of 345, or .0004 per cent. If the British labour government's price control was as empty as this, it is easy to imagine how our government's price control will be under its program when we consider the close financial, personal, and idealogical ties it has with big business.

One reason why this party has rejected either an 18 month, a three-year or whatever it may be period for the program is highlighted by the policy in respect of wages. So-called price controls have grievous implications for workers who are subjected to the policy's wage guidelines. As we said, the maximum allowable will be 10 per cent, 8 per cent plus 2 per cent for productivity.

It seems to me there are two particular problems. The first is that the 2 per cent growth rate figure is a low estimate and runs the risk that actually the economy will grow faster and that the excess growth will go to profit, which the guidelines specifically allow.

Secondly, and even more important, the present rate of inflation is 11.3 per cent, not 8 per cent. If there is no change under the weak price controls, the real income of the workers, even including the 2 per cent for productivity, will fall by 1.3 per cent and they will get no share of the growth in output of the economy.

Who benefits in this program? The way the government has made it look it is as if the worst off will benefit, and that if you can put the cap on the top somehow or other, by some means of osmosis, those who are the worst off will benefit. That is the kind of impression they have tried to leave. This policy our party has said, and says again, is not designed to redistribute income but is designed to freeze the present distribution of income. Since everyone is to get the same percentage increase, whether their income is high or low, this means we will create a situation in which the top 20 per cent of the income recipients will get 50 per cent of the total income while the bottom 50 per cent will get 30 per cent of the total income, and the lowest 20 per cent will get 2 per cent.

In effect it is not only a freeze but, as my leader points out, it evens widens the gap between the top and the bottom. So we are not talking about a program of redistribution of wealth which this party for years has told the government and the Canadian people is needed.

The government permits a pitiable, minor amendment allowing low income Canadians to get $750, while the top group is limited to $2,400. It seems to me that if it were really serious about this kind of proposal it ought swing it around so that the top would get the $750 and the bottom would get the $2,400. Even with the proposals it makes there is no power for the low income earners. They have no opportunity to obtain even that $750. They have to have some process through which to approach their employers in order to get the $750. They have to have some structure which they do not presently have. In effect they depend on the largesse of the companies for which they work to give them even the $750. As we know, there are people—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak, this evening, to Bill C-73, and more specifically to the motions now before the House, which motions stem from the work done in committee. Through the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the government put before the country a program to fight inflation. About that program: the Prime Minister turned it down during the last election campaign because, he claimed, the time was not yet ripe to fight inflation. At that time, whatever we may say, the government, as repository of the truth, claimed that the time had not yet come for it and that, consequently, the market should be allowed to work freely. Now, this year, early in the current session, the government, in dramatic fashion, announces an all-out fight against inflation, saying salaries will be controlled, unacceptable price increases will be prevented, and suddenly, the government centres that fight on a voluntary basis, which means that according to the government members the program will be efficient only to the extent where Canadians are willing to co-operate in the fight against inflation.

Some fine day, the government decided to launch an attack against inflation after having—it will be recalled—consulted businessmen, labour leaders, and asked their participation, even before passage of the bill. It will be remembered that at the time, the reiterated appeals for voluntary co-operation went to no avail. That means that the government was aware, that it knew, when it introduced the bill, that voluntary co-operation had, if any, very little chance of success, since the predecessor of the present Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and other ministers had already strongly urged the business community and labour to co-operate. Before this famous fight against inflation was announced by the government, the latter had been assured there would be no co-operation on a voluntary program, if not been told so categorically and almost unanimously.

Therefore, Bill C-73, intended to launch a fight against inflation is based essentially, and here I refer to the statements of the members of the Anti-Inflation Board—on the willingness of the people, big and small business to co-operate.

This bill is meant for companies with 500 employees or more, but it asks all other small businesses to abide by it voluntarily. This legislation does not control imports nor exports. It does not deal either with collective agreements signed before October 14 or during the last fiscal year. This legislation indeed is voluntary.

There is much confusion about this bill, Mr. Speaker, and now we see it. Judging by the reaction of unions, without approving that reaction, it remains that we can take for granted that the main unions are not willing to co-operate with the government.

Mr. Speaker, I wished to point out tonight that if a voluntary anti-inflation program is to succeed it must obtain the approval of a majority of Canadians. Now under the present economic and social circumstances, inflation has already claimed its victims. Mr. Speaker, the government is simply too late. Like many others, I wonder if Canada will be the fourteenth country to fail in its fight against inflation. First, the government does not deal at all with the banking or monetary system. Not at all. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) even admitted several times in the House that he has no control over interest rates.

I refer here to a document published by the government and entitled "Highlights of the Anti-inflation Program of the Canadian Government". On page 17, we can read the following:

Even though it is impossible to control interest rates set on financial markets.

Mr. Speaker, who then controls the economic blood of the country? Who controls the purchasing power of the citizens if the Minister of Finance himself, in his official documentation, admits that he has no control over interest rates? In that case, Mr. Speaker, whether the anti-inflation legislation of the government lasts two months, ten months, eighteen months or thirty-six months, in its fight against inflation to protect individuals and businesses from this monster that we call inflation, the government must strike at the root of this evil, namely our economic system. Someone laughed. Some believe that the Social Credit solutions are not valid, that they are only for show, but the present situation has made thousands of victims, and the government is establishing a restriction program which applies precisely to the less-favored people. People who earn $24,000 a year will be entitled this year to a $2,400 salary increase thanks to the anti-inflation program of the government. People who earn $7,000 will be entitled to a paltry $700 increase. That is the justice, or the fair treatment of the government as concerns certain citizens. It allows those who are highest paid to obtain more and those who earn less to obtain less, while inflation affects everyone, whatever their financial situation, their job, the area or the country where they live.

Mr. Speaker, this fight against inflation is a joke because it does not attack the real problem which is the economic system. The minister said in his speech of October 14, and I quote:

If we do not succeed in working together in a firm spirit of national determination, our situation will only get worse.

[Mr. Fortin.]

Mr. Speaker, if the minister is really serious in inviting Canadians to support the anti-inflation program, he himself and the government will have to take measures or introduce proposals to the House with a view to dealing fairly with all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Dominion and Steinberg, two very big food chains in Canada, have been conducting a colossal advertising campaign in the newspapers in the last few days, saying that all their prices are frozen except those of perishable products. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was boasting yesterday that that meant a first step towards the success of his program, which is entirely false. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not know that Dominion and Steinberg find it an advantage to refuse to negotiate now with the leaders of their employees' union, under the pretext that Bill C-73 has not yet been passed and thus setting the atmosphere of negotiation or intimidation to their employees. I know people who work for Dominion and Steinberg, two giant food products chains that practically control food marketing in Canada, one of the vital sectors of our economy. I once showed in a speech I made in the House all the ramifications of the Dominion and Steinberg empire, shopping centres, real estate and so on. Dominion and Steinberg refuse to negotiate with their employees, preferring to hide behind the government's legislation to force them to accept a 10 per cent hike. Mr. Speaker, there are threats of strikes in both these chain stores now, and the government wants us to believe it is serious. In its fight against inflation, the government is siding with the minority in Canada and wilfully turns its back on the majority of the poeple by supporting the banking establishment, the major chains of food supply and marketing. That is the government's scheme. It is based on voluntary restraint, but it does not rely on the good will of all Canadians which make up the larger part of the Canadian population. It merely calls upon the richer to set the example, which is easy for them, after having been the main beneficiaries of inflation for the past three, four or five years. But it is the small-wage earners working in plants who are imposed a maximum hike ceiling of 10 per cent today. In my city of Victoriaville, where the average salary is between $7,000 and $8,000, the average worker will be entitled to an $800 hike this year.

But they have been the first victims of inflation for the past five years. The government always refused to act, and it will be remembered on this side of the House that the government always replied that inflation in Canada was beyond control because it was imported by foreigners. This government kept repeating that there was nothing it could do about inflation since it had no control over it. They said it was imported from England and any other country, particularly Europe and the eastern bloc. Well, Mr. Speaker, lo and behold all of a sudden Canada can fight, calls on the working force, and to convince them, does not touch the banking system of the minimum wage and gives no measure of protection to small wage earners. It is going after big corporations. But, Mr. Speaker, we see the result of that. Dominion and Steinberg used that to continue to oppress their own employees. That is what I call intimidation. That is what I call rubbish. And then the minister tells us in his motions that it is very important to know how long those measures will last. Mr. Speaker, I think they should have never been adopted for the simple reason that it is a joke in the sense that they have no effectiveness whatsoever. The main victims of that fight are small businesses which in the game of competition can no longer face big businesses and wage earners.

Mr. Speaker, I would have several things to add but since we are at the report stage I will restrict my remarks to this point. I want to say in concluding, Mr. Speaker, that I think it is not so much a matter of dates, of knowing when it begins and when it ends. A legislation is passed because it is good, or it is rejected because there is no faith in it. And in my mind that fight is not serious because the government admits it is powerless in front of the banking and monetary system.

I know what the members on the government side will say. They will say that we must be reasonnable in our demands. Did the government dare ask Canadian banks to be reasonable in raising their interest rate? Did the government authorize, or was it consulted about the latest rise in the interest rate by the Bank of Canada? Was the minister consulted about that?

The government tells us that it wants to encourage building during this fight against inflation and that it is going to eliminate unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, in Victoriaville a textile plant has just been closed, which means about 150 layoffs. I remember hearing the minister say in this House that the Textile and Clothing Board would protect these jobs. A hundred and fifty employees have just been laid off in Victoriaville. We are fighting inflation, so what are we going to do to protect these workers.

Mr. Speaker, the banking system continues to "gnaw", since it has the power in fact.

In the House of Commons we do nothing but speak, we adopt words. Real power in Canada lies first in the banking system which does not need Parliament; it only needs tentacles. The second power is bureaucracy. In both cases, the main inflation sources, and I conclude on this, Mr. Speaker, are the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal, which are the main employers in Canada, and we have no control over their expenditures. Then, there is the banking system, and the government itself recognizes they cannot control it.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that with Bill C-73 the government is politicking and the sooner this legislation will be abolished, the less the government will be able to play with the goodwill of the Canadian people.

I would not be so surprised to discover that Canadians do not respect this act, since the struggle against inflation is being waged on the backs of workers and low income people.

Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to see the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) explain those things to workers who are working in Victoriaville for salaries averaging $7,000, ask them to tighten their belts further, be reasonable and be satisfied with a $700 yearly salary increase, whereas a board has been created to fight inflation and, as a matter of example, its chairman, Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin is paid $54,000 a year. Mr. Speaker, I think it is disgraceful to tolerate such a scandal in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Laval is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that if I were to be issued with such an invitation, I would be delighted to visit those people and explain the government's policies to them.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The liberals are waiting to be invited before meeting the public, but the Social Crediters as well as the opposition members meet the people directly.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on Thanksgiving Day when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the policies which supposedly would be included in these wage and price controls, or this anti-inflation program, members of this party rejected the proposals, not because we are opposed to an incomes policy which would treat all the people of Canada equitably but because we realized from the beginning that what the Prime Minister was proposing was a policy of freezing wages with no intention of freezing prices, profits, or the incomes of self-employed people.

However, the people of Canada are concerned about the problem of inflation and about the rapid increase in the cost of living. People from all the various sectors of the economy and from all parties expressed general support for an incomes policy. The NDP premier of my province, Mr. Schreyer, expressed general support for an incomes policy. We have had close to six weeks of twisting, turning, and evading the most simple questions on the part of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), so much so that when he held his press conference on Friday the premier of Manitoba was no longer saying he supported the government's program, or even an amended program which might be proposed by the government. The premier of Manitoba said on Friday that he was coming here tomorrow with 150 questions he wanted answered before he could say whether he would support this program.

We have said that we know this program and these proposals will not work. It is obvious that the government is really saying to the people of Canada, "Do as the government says and not as it does." If we consider the policies and the actions of the government in the last three, four or five months, there is not the slightest indication that it has any intention of showing restraint for itself, its civil servants, its friends, or its supporters at all. Let me remind hon. members that as of September 4 of this year, just five weeks before the Prime Minister announced his program, the government approved increases for the top 1,100 senior public servants of between $2,000 and $6,000 per year retroactive to April 1 of this year, including 350 at level 2, and 140 the next highest group who will get an increase of anywhere from $2,000 to $6,500. So we can see that there is certainly no restraint for senior civil servants working for the Government of Canada.

The Finance Committee had the honour and the privilege of hearing the Governor of the Bank of Canada, and he gave us a lecture about the need for restraint. One can take a five minute walk from here and see a brand new, large and very fancy office building going up.

Mr. Rodriguez: $35 million.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), says $35 million. Who is going to use that building? The Bank of Canada. There is not very much restraint there. I would bet that the Governor of the Bank of Canada has an office almost as large as this chamber. There is no restraint for him. One can go across the river and see the beginnings of another government complex. Let me read from an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune yesterday. The Tribune is certainly no friend of the NDP.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Just listen a few minutes, and then get up and speak. The editorial reads in part:

> Some time ago, the federal government had its eye on a one-block area in downtown Hull, but was outbid for the property when a private development firm offered more than the government thought the land was worth. The successful bidder, the Campeau Corporation, plans to start construction next year on a complex containing two or three office towers of between 18 and 27 stories.
> One of the several curious aspects of this project is that the office space is to be used by the federal government and will provide room for 5,000 civil servants . . . The government will lease space for $14 million a year on a 35-year contract, after which it will have an option to buy the building for between $50 and $60 million. That's $490 million in rent, topped off by the purchase price.

Who is Campeau Corporation? I think it is not without some significance that one of the directors who just resigned about two weeks ago was the same Senator Giguère who was involved in that somewhat shady deal at the airport in Montreal.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: It may just be a coincidence, but these coincidences happen too often to be accepted as coincidence when we have a Liberal government.

Just yesterday that so-called friend of the working man, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), was lecturing the working people of Canada and saying that they were unpatriotic and un-Canadian—shades of Senator McCarthy of the United States. Why? Is it because workers were saying that with this type of inflation they are entitled to a decent increase in their wages? It may be that they are asking too much. If they are, they deserve to be chastised, but where was that so-called friend of labour, the Postmaster General, during the last few years?

In 1972 corporate profits increased by 21 per cent over 1971. In 1973 corporate profits increased by 35.7 per cent over the same period in 1972. In 1974 they increased by 33 per cent over 1973. I challenge the Postmaster General or anyone else opposite to show me a single group of workers in this country which was able to obtain wage increases in those ranges, or even half those ranges. Where was the Postmaster General? He was conspicuously silent in those years.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

An hon. member of the Conservative party criticized the hon. member for Nickel Belt for saying certain things about International Nickel and Falconbridge. The former Liberal cabinet minister, Mr. Eric Kierans, published an article in the Regina Leader Post of August 9, 1974, in which he said:

> Inco's profits after taxes in 1972 were $110 million and in 1973, $227 million. This year—

Meaning 1974.

> —they will exceed $300 million after taxes. Is this being taxed to death?
> Noranda's profits after taxes in 1972 were $64 million; in 1973, $121 million. This year, they will approach $200 million after taxes. Is this being taxed to death?

In light of these profits, is it any wonder Canadian workers are now asking for large wage increases, increases the Prime Minister and others say are too high?

Experience tells us one thing: those whose income consists entirely of wages or salaries cannot avoid paying the government every cent of income tax they owe. Revenue Canada insists on collecting. Can we say the same about corporations? Not likely, Mr. Speaker. According to the Globe and Mail of October 31, 1975, James Gourley, Director General of Audit for Revenue Canada said:

> . . . some of the multinationals use their intricate corporate structures to minimize the taxes they pay.

The Globe and Mail reported that:

> He said he had no idea how much Revenue Canada is losing through tax avoidance by multinational corporations. He guessed that missing revenue from all sources—including multinationals—might be 10 per cent of total revenue.

I note the former minister of national revenue sitting in the House. I continue quoting:

> . . . it is difficult for Canadian tax officials to decide whether the costs being charged by subsidiary companies in Canada are fair or are being inflated to boost costs and lower taxes.
> A subsidiary in Canada may be supplied with products or services by its parent in another country. The subsidiary would write off those costs against its profit.
> But, Mr. Basford said, when tax officials try to find out whether the parent is charging a fair price they may be told that the subsidiary has 'no access to pricing information concerning sales of their foreign sister corporation.'

Is it any wonder ordinary people cannot accept the government's program which attempts to control wages and salaries but not prices and profits?

Any who wonder what the program will do should read the report of the speech made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) in Calgary. The Globe and Mail of October 30 carried the following report:

> Federal guidelines on corporate profits may contain provisions to ignore excess profits if they are re-invested in capital facilities to increase production within a company, Industry, Trade and Commerce minister Donald Jamieson has indicated.
> Alternatively, a company could be given assurances that current excess profits may be used to offset future losses . . .

I have never heard it suggested that if working men received lower increases than they anticipated, or increases limited to 10 per cent or less, they can make up their losses at a later time. It is not surprising that ordinary citizens are questioning this program. Their doubts must be reinforced when they note the makeup of the Anti-Inflation Board, that so-called quasi-judicial, impartial board which is supposed to protect the interests of all Canadians. What are people to think when they see the sort of speech made by Mr. L. J. Biddell, as reported in the Globe and Mail of November 19, 1975? He said:

> The regulations are likely to be too restrictive and inflexible . . .

On whose behalf was he speaking? Certainly he did not speak for ordinary workers. The report continues:

> The white paper guidelines will require the businessman to suppress almost every one of his natural entrepreneurial drives . . .
> The program's effect on wage and salary earners will not be severe, he said. 'I think they will get along quite well.'

Naturally he would say that. If he ever was a wage or salary earner, it was a long time ago. Today he is part of the corporate set-up which runs the country. Naturally he will not worry about the ordinary working man. He worries about the corporations. Neither will the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board worry about the working man. He really has a tough time, with a salary of over $1,000 a week. When he leaves the board he can go back to what he has done so successfully, that is, looking after his big business corporate clients. In the circumstances I suggest that our fears about the effectiveness of this program are well founded. Our fears began on October 14, and all that has happened since then has merely reinforced our fears.

We have repeatedly asked the Minister of Finance what are the reasons for this proposal, as never before in the last 100 years, with the exclusion of wartime, has the government attempted this kind of interference in the lives of ordinary Canadians. We know that the inflation rate last year was 10.5 per cent, but what do government economists or experts predict for next year? We have asked such questions repeatedly. What will be the inflation rate? Will it be 25 per cent, as in Great Britain, or 200 per cent, as in Argentina? The question affects all Canadians. The people are ready to make sacrifices and restrain their demands, if the situation is really bad. But we want to know how bad the situation is. What do the minister's experts say? To our questions the minister has repeatedly answered that he is not in the business of forecasting and guessing, and cannot tell us.

Mr. Benjamin: He is in the business of governing.

Mr. Orlikow: We live in a democratic society and, fortunately, some experts and economists work for organizations other than the government. We were able to get forecasts from a reliable source. This evening I want to put on record forecasts made by a group of experts who are part of a non-political, academic organization with an extremely high standing among economists in this country, the University of Toronto Institute of Quantitative Analysis. We asked some people who have worked with that organization to ask its members, "What are your estimates? You have a model of the economy and access to computers. What do you estimate will be the rate of inflation next year? What would inflation have been if the government had not implemented this wage and price control program? What would inflation be next year without the program, and what would it be with the program?"

This past year the inflation rate was 10½ per cent. What would it have been without the controls? It would not have been the 25 per cent about which I speculated or the 200 per cent which they had in the Argentine. Without controls, according to the Institute of Quantitative Analysis, it would have been 11.3 per cent. In other words, it would not have gone up even 1 per cent more than it was this past year.

What will the rate be with the controls? Will inflation be cut by 3 per cent or 5 per cent? In other words, will it be worth all the effort? There is bad news again. The University of Toronto Institute of Quantitative Analysis estimates that in 1976 with the controls, and this is assuming full compliance even though they say there is only a 50/50 chance, the rate of inflation would only be cut to 9.6 per cent. In other words there will be a reduction in inflation of less than 1 per cent.

We know from the late but not lamented days of John Young that the government's programs of restraint usually bring more unemployment. We asked about unemployment. What did the Institute of Quantitative Analysis say? We know that we have had a rate of unemployment of around 7 per cent for the past six months. They say that without controls the unemployment rate for 1976 would be 6.9 per cent and, with controls, 7.1 per cent. Another group predicts over 9 per cent.

Russell Bell, who is a good enough economist to have held a senior position with the Economic Council of Canada before he went to work with the Canadian Labour Congress, estimates that unemployment will increase by at least a full percentage point over what it has been this year. And we are going to have a very little decrease in the rate of inflation. There will probably be another 100,000 unemployed.

By the time the Prime Minister completes his ten years in office in 1978, the rate of unemployment in this country will have increased by about 150 per cent. That is not a record of which any Prime Minister can be proud. It is a record which the members of this party have no intention of supporting. We intend to oppose this bill as we have from the beginning. I say to the Minister of Finance that our opposition to this bill will be very much strengthened, and our questions much more pointed, after he completes his meetings with the provincial ministers of finance in the next couple of days.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the country is watching with great interest the positions being taken with regard to this bill. People are probably confused, but hopeful. Most people were pleased to hear the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) state over television that something was going to be done, because there is nothing worse than inactivity. The activity suggested that at least there would be some interest.

Mr. Woolliams: Not all the time.

Mr. Peters: There was some desire for this kind of activity. This has been the result.

Mr. Nystrom: You woke up Eldon.

Mr. Peters: I never like to do that. When that happens, it produces all kinds of results.

Whether the anti-inflation legislation before us is successful will to a large extent depend on two major factors. The first is the ability of the average person to maintain his position with the increasing cost of living. Second will be the quality that will be established by those who have to participate.

In comparison to 20 years ago, the number of people supporting the government in making it possible to provide benefits to all Canadians through government assistance and direction is becoming less and less. The amount they have to pay is increasing proportionately with the demands that society is making.

One segment of our population is in the organized labour field, the salary field and allied fields. They pay the bulk of the income tax. There are two other segments that are dependent upon the government to a great extent for their ability to exist in relation to and in conjunction with that group that pays the taxes, those who are fully employed. These people are the poor of this nation. In many cases they work at the minimum wage.

We often hear complaints about those who are working and paying the largest share of taxes in this country. They are always accused of not pulling their load. But those who are fully employed often earn less than those receiving unemployment insurance. When the minimum wage across the country is less than that paid in unemployment insurance benefits, obviously some change must be made. This is one field the government will have to consider if the anti-inflation legislation is going to work.

The government has said that the minimum increase will be $840 and the maximum $2,400. Those receiving the minimum wage will not receive the $840. They will need it, but they will not get it. Controls are being put on those who previously made it possible to pay for the cost of living increases made necessary by inflation. We are now curtailing that by saying they cannot work.

My colleagues have to a large extent documented the ways and means to escape for the top segment of our economy, the corporations, persons in industry, and others who will not be subject to the controls. They will be able to cook the books and will not really be penalized in any way by this legislation. I feel sorry for some of them. I understand that last year International Nickel paid less income tax than I did. They have a multi-billion dollar enterprise so it is stretching a point to think that they can be hurt.

One large segment of our economy is closed down 60 per cent in a strike which they precipitated. Sixty per cent of the pulp and paper industry is closed, but there is a year's supply of pulp sitting in yards in Canada because the price went down and the companies decided to hold out. They did not need their workers so they did not negotiate with them. In answer to a question today the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) indicated that this is one of the factors that has had a secondary effect on the unemployment level in the forest industry which is not directly related to the problem.

We are not doing anything about the bottom level. We are not raising it to the minimum that we said would be allowed, because we really do not control that. We would have to get an agreement with the provinces in order to do that, and I understand there is very little agreement with them on the anti-inflation legislation. We are not doing anything about the top either—all we have done anything about is the middle.

In the last few years organized labour has been able to play a role quite successfully in the so-called free enterprise system. People in organized labour have been able to maintain their position, and have received a COLA clause in many cases. There is no doubt that this has cost money, but they have been able to maintain their standard of living despite the fact that food costs, energy, rent and housing have gone up rapidly. Now they are told they will not be able to get a raise beyond the guidelines of 8 per cent and 2 per cent, and that is below the cost of living increase last year. Their COLA clauses will give them that much. I guess we are saying that they are no longer going to have the money to pay the taxes, so there is going to be increased unemployment.

The government has done absolutely nothing about getting into the tax structure at the top level, where companies are not making any contribution to our economy and, without a doubt, are the biggest welfare bums the world has ever known. We noticed this last night in a statement submitted by the oil companies on their expectations and what they would need if they were going to participate in the development of new oil reserves. They indicated their profit structure on their gross had to be 8 per cent to 20 per cent to allow them enough profit to convince their shareholders that they should plough some of the money back into exploration. We are not doing anything to get that kind of money out of the top structure in the nation, nor are we doing anything to provide equality in our structure, which is what this party has always been in favour of, Madam Speaker.

One of my colleagues has presented an amusing amendment asking for a reduction in the government's proposition of 50 opposition members being required to ask for a review during the months of April, May or June in 1977. He proposed the number should be reduced to 20. I find this amusing because this party does not have 20 members. If we were going to do it on the basis of simple politics it would be logical to reduce it to 15 or 10. But we are a very broadminded and generous party, Madam Speaker. The motion says 20, and I hope members will see fit to support that rather than the 50. I will vote against it anyway even if the change is made, Madam Speaker. I will vote against the bill, so it is really of no consequence.

But the review might serve some purpose and it behooves the minister to provide for that review in 1977, without these games. By then the government will either be able to curtail labour costs to a point where it will have balanced the cost of living on the backs of the organized workers, or it will have caused so much unemployment that we will be embarked on a totally different operation. I think if the minister made an effort to provide this mechanism he would probably get more kudos than he would out of offering it to the official opposition or, if the amendment were carried, offering it to 20 members of the House.

The necessary motion could not be moved by either party at this end of the House, of course; it would take a combination of this party and my friend to the left, or a number of others.

If you ask the average Canadian today what caused inflation I think he would tell you—credit. Credit is really a major problem. It is much too easy to get credit. In the past when governments wanted to slow down the economy they made an effort to do something about credit. But we have built into this nation the credit card syndrome and it has been accepted as a way of life.

It does not matter how much interest is involved. It does not matter how much a car costs, whether we need it or not. As our folk singer says on the consumer program, we run out and buy bargains with "money we ain't got". That is one of the problems we have in this country. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) should look at the way we handle credit. I am pleased to see that some government economists are saying stores should not go into the food business selling on credit. If consumers did I think we would eat our way to death rather than driving into it.

The minister should also look at interest rates. If you buy an automobile on credit with the lowest down payment possible, you will probably find when you pay the car off in 48 months that you have paid as much interest on the car as the actual cost of the car. And the car was over priced in the first place—probably inflated to double its worth. Yet that is doubled again with the interest, and the minister has not done much about that.

There are certain fundamental things that must be done, and no one in this House disagrees that we should do something about inflation. We have said so on previous occasions, but we are well aware of the previous occasion when the Liberal government tried to do something about inflation; it created an immense amount of unemployment and then it came out and said that inflation was licked. It did not take very long for everyone to find out that inflation had not been touched and that we had better do something about employment or we would find ourselves in a position where we could not support our people.

I suggest the government, might have done better to accept holus bolus the Conservative idea. If it had taken off the limit and put on price and wage controls, I think people might have supported that. I think we might have been able to live with that. But when it only controls wages and salaries and does nothing about prices in the store, the prices people are interested in, the price of a can of beans, the price of milk, the price of eggs, the prices of other commodities, we must be very naive if we think the working man is not going to continue to fight for his way of handling inflation, the same way as free enterprise and big business use—they raise their price and somebody has to pay.

There are two classes which are particularly heavy consumers. They are the farmers, the highest consumers per capita and, second, the working people. The wage-earner is the highest taxpayer in the nation. Every time we ask the government to raise the personal exemption we are told what a terrific blow it would be to the tax structure even if the exemption were raised by only $100 or $200. Yet we give away millions of dollars at the top end.

To the class which has been making such a large tax contribution, we have said. "Far from being able to keep up with the cost of living, you cannot expect more than a set amount". This has meant, because of the confusion, that with respect to most of the strikes that have taken place prior to the introduction of this legislation very few of them have been settled. The board is not willing to give permits saying "You have the historical right to a larger wage increase than the board recommends as general." The board has not been willing to do this, so most of the unions and most of the companies will not bring these strikes to a conclusion and the responsibility, in my opinion, rests squarely upon the government.

I know that in my own area a number of strikes would have been settled had this been done. The individual company agrees it should settle, knowing the terms have to be in keeping with wages paid to its competitors or it would not have any employees. It is willing to make a settlement. The union is willing to settle. But the company and the union agree they can only do so if they have permission.

I would like the government to accept the "20" amendment, and then I would like the opportunity to vote against the whole structure.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Madam Speaker, Bill C-73 is another example of arbitrary and dictatorial types of legislation interfering with the rights and freedoms of Canadians. Although the guidelines purport to be on a selective basis, the legislation is broad enough to extend to each and every citizen, either directly or indirectly.

The proposals set out in the legislation and the guidelines are in no way likely to halt inflation or even to alleviate inflation. They will cause greater inflation. It is another attempt to grind the middle class worker and small businessmen between excessively high taxes and inflation, and along with increased unemployment it will bring about greater bureaucracy and a greater dictatorship.

There are palatable alternatives to wage controls and price controls. One is to reduce government waste and unnecessary spending programs. Industry is successful when it is productive and efficient. The same philosophy should be followed in the business of government operations.

I have already suggested in previous debates ways in which the government can show restraint and thus reduce inflation, and I do not intend to list them again tonight. There are other items which could legitimately be used to halt inflation. They were not used. The government seems instead to be bent on obtaining absolute control of all fields of endeavour. This is dangerous, and I fear that if this legislation goes through our children will suffer for many, many years to come.

If the government is not prepared to clean house here in Ottawa and reduce ridiculous and wasteful programs, duplication, and overlapping, it is absurd to enforce controls of any kind on any Canadian.

The question of wage and price controls was one of the issues in the 1974 election. No member of parliament, no party in this House, has any right or any mandate from the nation to support the type of legislation contained in Bill C-73, and in the guidelines and controls contained therein. The people wanted alternatives, a reduction of government waste, not an increase in government controls.

The legislation before us, Madam Speaker, really commits a grave offence against the democratic system and traditions of this nation the consequences of which will be eternal. The legislation and the guidelines were announced and ordered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), not by approval of parliament, not by a vote of the people but by television edict. This type of order is in itself dangerous, and if it continues our nation is headed in a very dangerous direction, a collision course with the political death of democracy, the death of government of the people, for the people and by the people.

In no way can I support this legislation because it interferes with the rights and the liberties of individuals. I do not favour controls over prices or wages. There are alternatives, and the government ought to get off its backside and follow decent suggestions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question on motion No. 3?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75 the recorded division stands deferred.

All those in favour of motion No. 4 will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75 the recorded division stands deferred.

All those in favour of the amendment to motion No. 5 will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it. The amendment is negatived.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There were not five members who rose from their seats, so the amendment has been negatived.

Mr. Nystrom: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, and with respect, I believe there were well over five of us standing.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): When I called for the members to rise I saw only three, perhaps four.

Mr. Rodriguez: There were many more than that.

Mr. Blais: On the point of order, Madam Speaker, I distinctly saw more than five members of that party get up on the amendment. Could the question be put once more?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): That can only be done with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75 the recorded division stands deferred.

The question is now on motion No. 5. All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried.

An hon. Member: How can you do that?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Bill C-73, an act to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be amended by adding immediately after Clause 46 at page 33, the following Clause:

Transitional "47. The expiration of this Act pursuant to section 46 does not affect any inquiry, investigation, examination, audit, search or proceeding, whether before the Appeal Tribunal or any court of law, that was instituted before the expiration of this Act or that arises out of any other such inquiry, investigation, examination, audit, search or proceeding that was instituted before the expiration of this Act and for the purpose of carrying out or completing all such inquiries, investigations, examinations, audits, searches and proceedings, the Chairman and other members of the Anti-Inflation Board, the Administrator and the Chairman and other members of the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal who hold office on the day immediately preceding the day on which this Act expires continue in office and may exercise the powers and perform the duties and functions of the Anti-Inflation Board, the Administrator and the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal respectively.".

He said: Madam Speaker, the purpose of the amendment for which a royal recommendation has been sought, and which is included at page 10 of the order paper for today, is to make certain that if there be investigations under way, or indeed further action by way of prosecution which has been carried on pursuant to the statute when it becomes law, it will then be possible for those investigations, proceedings or acts of litigation to be carried through to a finish, notwithstanding the fact that the proceedings may themselves have been brought to an end. If there is some prospect toward the end of the period of the law being brought to an end that some persons would decide not to comply in the hope of being able to evade legal sanction, this motion is to make certain that, notwithstanding a proclamation by the governor in council that it ceased to be in effect for general application, any outstanding proceedings may be carried through to a conclusion.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I find this type of recommendation to be a real limper. In saying that I do not want to be overly critical, but may I point out that Mr. Speaker has ruled that clause 46 is deficient. When a proposed clause is contained within the terms of a recommendation, and therefore forms part of that recommendation, what sort of limper have we? Section 46, referred to in the recommendation, has already been ruled by the Chair to be deficient. Frankly, this motion is leaning on a broken crutch. Section 46 is dead until we make a change. Yet this motion is providing that when the act comes to an end, pursuant to a clause that does not exist certain things will flow.

With great respect, the government House leader and others who are concerned with this matter must look into the methods of drafting recommendations and the question of who is making them. Who is making them? Are there really conflicts of interest between those people who prepare these motions without the advice of the law officers of the Crown? I must say I was surprised earlier today when I found that it seemed the legislation came forward straight from the department somehow and bypassed the government House leader.

What worries me is to think that within the last 12 months there have been four occasions on which I have raised these points. I have been correct on three of them. I must say that the first motion was not as strong a case as the other three, but I think a 75 per cent batting average within a year in calling the attention of the House to these deficiencies is not bad. I do not particularly care to be on my feet making this type of, shall we say, criticism. It is much like quibbling. However, the House must operate on the basis of its rules. We must be legal and do what we should do. It seems to me on the note I have raised I should make this proposition.

First we should look into the matter of the proposals with regard to recommendations on major bills. Years ago when I came here the recommendation was a very general one. There were never any problems. Then somewhere along the line someone decided it was necessary to dot the i's and cross the t's, so that if there was a little inconsistency in the complicated wording out would go the recommendation. The minister at that time was placed in an embarrassing position. I remember the affair in respect of the income tax changes in 1971. It does not make sense for parliament to operate in that way. I realize what they are trying to do.

I think I will draw the line here and just say that we should not proceed with further debate on this particular motion until it is regularized. On that basis I suggest that the House call it ten o'clock, and retire to repair the damage.

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, may I make a rather different suggestion? First, may I say I find myself somewhat in sympathy with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). We have been having some discussions among the House leaders which I think will resolve the particular difficulty we face at the moment.

I do not think we should proceed with the discussion on this particular motion until we have clarified the position in respect of the bill by an amended recommendation. It is my understanding there would be unanimous agreement for the substitution to be made of a recommendation that would be in order, and upon which the bill could be firmly based. May I suggest that we adjourn this debate, and proceed to Bill C-61 which was previously under discussion?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we adjourn the discussion on this legislation and proceed to Bill C-61?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On a point of order, Madam Speaker, may I say that having had the floor on Bill C-61, and having been interrupted once already, I would prefer to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, I thought the hon. gentleman might welcome the opportunity to have the floor at the moment. I was very much interested in the comments of his colleague and thought the hon. gentleman might like to conclude his remarks this evening. However, I have no objection, Madam Speaker, if you see the clock at ten o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDING ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRADE—REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN CHEESE IMPORT QUOTAS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, in view of the fact that it is ten minutes to ten o'clock I hope I might be allowed a minute or two if I exceed the allotted time.

An hon. Member: No way!

Mr. Wise: In view of the very limited time at my disposal tonight I want to re-emphasize the need for a reduction in Canada's present import quotas on cheese. On November 18, as recorded at page 9189 of Hansard, I directed a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) on this matter. I think it is fair and accurate tonight to state that it gained considerable support among many hon. members, particularly from this side of the House. The minister's reply provided a slight glimmer of hope, but in view of the recent concerns expressed by the dairy industry people, which I share, I felt a sincere desire to explore this issue and raise a couple of other rather interesting matters tonight particularly relating to the ever-increasing difficulties being experienced by Canadian dairy producers and the government inaction in reducing the quotas for imported cheese.

Indeed, we have heard reports from the Department of Agriculture that it at least is considering an increase in respect of this particular quota. I should like to draw attention to page three of the statement by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on November 4 in which he indicated that imports will be allowed to increase gradually over the next several years until they reach not less than the equivalent of 10 per cent of manufactured products. The current import quota of 50 million pounds represents 5 per cent of the total Canadian consumption of manufactured dairy products. The size of next year's dairy quota will be established shortly.

Let me make it abundantly clear at the outset that such an action on the part of the government would be intolerable. Not only would it severely hamper the cheese production industry but it would serve an extremely severe blow to the dairy industry as a whole.

I want to note that the dairy industry can be found in every province. In fact 70 per cent of the farms reporting as commercial farms in the province of Quebec are commercial dairy farms. About 30 per cent in the province of Ontario, and about 22 per cent of all farms registered in Canada are commercial dairy farms.

What kind of a case can the government make for its own inaction with regard to this most serious problem? Clearly the only responsible response is a reduction of the present 50 million pound quota, a quota which was arrived at after some fancy government arithmetic that failed to take into account the relevant facts and figures that were and are available.

Importation of cheese has risen drastically from 31 million pounds in 1970 to 50 million pounds in 1975. In arriving at the present quota the department has ignored the traditional method of calculation that is based on a five-year average. Calculated in this manner we would have a quota of 38 million pounds, a limit much more in tune with the needs of Canadian producers.

To compound the difficulties further, we are faced with accepting a quota that is based on import statistics which are uncharacteristically high due to the fact, I have been advised, that the authorities concerned failed to prevent a substantial amount of illegal cheese from entering this country. An example of this is "Podolski", a Polish cheese somewhat similar to our own cheddar. This cheese has, in effect, been dumped into Canada, most of it being processed illegally, during 1974, because it became impossible for the authorities to police. The processing rule has since been dropped and this cheese is now legal. This does not alter the fact that the 1974 totals for cheese imports still take this cheese into account despite the fact it was illegal at the time. Had this cheese been kept out of Canada at the time, as it should have been, the 1974 quota would not have been so high. It is nothing short of ridiculous to set quotas arrived at in this manner.

The abnormalities, however, do not end here, Mr. Speaker. Another case in point involves cheese believed to be East German which is being trans-shipped via West Germany, and is once again being effectively dumped into Canada. It has not been proven, I admit, that the source of this cheese is East German, although it is highly suspected. We do know that it is not from West Germany though, so something is undoubtedly amiss. There is no way that West Germany could sell cheap cheese at 56 cents a pound when Common Market support prices are close to $1.

Yet another factor which discredits the use of 1974 levels as standard is the fact that more cheese than would have usually been considered normal was imported that year due to a shortage of Canadian milk in that particular year.

We are told from an excellent authority, by George McLaughlin, chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, that we will have sufficient production in Canada next year to satisfy Canada's requirement for dairy products including most of that portion of the cheese market which the government has already given away to other countries. If the cheese import quota is increased rather than decreased, it will throw milk from Canadian producers into powder and butter at a very high cost to producers in export levies, instead of allowing that milk to go to cheese production at no increased cost to anyone. Also, it will be a portion of the domestic market that will be forever lost to Canadian milk producers.

If, on the other hand, the cheese quota could be reduced to 40 million pounds from 50 million pounds per year, which would be more in line with traditional imports in the 1970-1974 period, skim milk production in the next dairy year would be reduced by approximately 9 million pounds. This would represent a saving to milk producers of close to $3.6 million at current world market prices. More simply stated, every million pounds of cheese imports results in a loss to Canadian producers of approximately $360,000.

An increase in the quota on cheese imports, indeed the lact of a decrease may well result in what some sources describe as a riot within the dairy industry with many producers simply shutting up shop altogether. The inevitable result of this, of course, would be an increase in the amount of imported milk, butter, cheese, etc., to a level from which we could never return.

The very future of the Canadian dairy industry may well rest on the broad shoulders of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, for his decision as to cheese import quotas is going to have far reaching effects within the whole industry, and should he fail to move in the right direction, he will no doubt pay a price for which he will certainly be sorry. The minister is aware of the fact that the dairy industry is to undergo a re-adjustment in April. Milk production in the first half of the year at least increased 11 per cent—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Madam Speaker, I would like first of all to congratulate the hon. member for raising this very important question, even though I do not agree with all the statistics he quoted. Let me quote some other official statistics.

In the ten year period, 1963 to 1972, Canada's exports of cheddar cheese to the United Kingdom averaged about 28 million pounds per year. With the entry of Britain into the European Economic Community, exports of cheddar cheese have steadily declined due to the high EEC import levy, and only amounted to about 6 million pounds in 1973 and 3 million pounds in 1974.

In March of this year special access arrangements were concluded with the EEC which provide for a fixed levy on Canadian aged cheddar cheese of only 15 units of account per 100 kilograms, or about 8½ cents per pound. No levy applies to our aged cheddar cheese in the United Kingdom at present, and the full levy of 15 UA does not come into effect until January 1, 1978.

Under the new terms of access, only cheddar cheese that has been aged for nine months qualifies for these special access terms. Exports of cheddar cheese have been slow due to the requirements that the cheese must be aged for nine months in Canada prior to export.

The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce recently sponsored a study team to the United Kingdom and EEC countries in order to determine the most sound and appropriate manner to re-introduce Canadian aged cheddar cheese to these markets. This five member team consisted of a representative from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Canadian Dairy Commission, and three industry representatives. The members have just returned and their report should be available in early 1976.

During the same period, imports of various cheeses have increased from 15 million pounds in 1963 to 48 million pounds in 1974.

On June 6, 1975, a global importation quota has been set on all kinds of cheese. This quota has been set at 50 million pounds for 1975, an increase of 2 million pounds over 1974.

This quota has been established—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The time allotted to the hon. member is now expired.

AIRPORTS—MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DATA ON WHICH SKY SHOPS AWARDED FRANCHISE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, in pursuing this adjournment debate I would like to say I am sure the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is aware that there are serious flaws in the way that tenders are being arranged and contracts being met within his department. The question is, how did Sky Shops win the bid at Mirabel, and we must look into the background.

I would assume that the minister is trying, if only for the sake of intellectual stimulation, to ascertain what prompted Mr. Peter Thomson to take such an extraordinary interest in purchasing Sky Shops. Either Thomson, through one of his subsidiary companies, P. Lawson Travel Limited, had some truly personal reason for wanting to obtain Sky Shops, much in the same way as a collector of antique automobiles will pay an outrageous price for a vehicle simply to complete his collection, or Mr. Thomson knew very well that Sky Shops had an enormous potential over and above its apparent operational value or worth at the time he purchased it. The question is, was part of the potential, or consideration, a franchise at Mirabel?

Late in December of 1971 when Peter Thomson, in a hand delivered letter, wrote to Gordon Brown, one of the executives of Sky Shops, and outlined his offer, it is obvious that the price per share of Sky Shops at that time worked out to less than $17. A few months later Mr. Thomson was prepared to pay several dollars per share more, despite the fact that in the interim the treasury of the company had been pretty well depleted by the payment of nearly $4 per share in dividends.

Whether one decides to measure the value of a company by share earnings as a ratio to price, or calculate the net worth of the company by subtracting the liabilities from the assets and dividing by the number of shares, one surely does not come up with a figure of $20 per share a few months after one offer of approximately $16.75 per share—taking into account the dividend payment which I already mentioned.

In addition, the renegotiation of the lease of Sky Shops substantially reduced the income available to the company and, as Mr. Thomson noted, his calculations as set out in his offer were optimistic due to the scheduled removal of all international flights in 1975 and the probable winding up of the operations at Dorval before the end of 1979. These are documented in his offer.

Therefore we have a situation where Mr. Thomson personally took the time to work on the acquisition of Sky Shops although he said in his letter "I have not done anything like this personally in a long time". He did this extraordinary thing, to buy what would appear to be a lame duck company in a lame duck airport at a highly inflated price, a company whose directors have forced out the man who had expertise and experience and who built the company, Mr. Andy Anton.

I want the Minister of Transport to find out why bidding procedures for the duty free shop at Mirabel were so manifestly irregular. I should like to know, for example, why Host International was dismissed so peremptorily because it was, among other things, a U.S. controlled company, while other American controlled companies have been and are welcome in similar circumstances, as well they should be, if they can do a better job. If Host had a liquor licence problem it should have been advised immediately and its deposit returned or never accepted. General Aviation, a subsidiary of Hudson General Corporation of Great Neck, New York, is active at Mirabel, and a subsidiary of Allied Corporation was acceptable as a cleaning contractor at Mirabel, although it is controlled from New York. So much for the Canada first argument of Sky Shops or in favour of Sky Shops.

There is no way the Sky Shops bid, on the basis of logic, can be the best for revenue purposes, and I ask the minister to table the entire basis on which the bids were awarded, the calculations and so on. I also ask the minister not to forget about bids like Commercial Caterers Limited and K. S. Kohli who, I understand, sent a telegram to the minister to correct some errors he felt the minister made in assessing his position in a recent speech in this House. I shall quote from an executive of one of the bidders, and if the minister or one of his assistants is interested, I can supply a copy of the document from which I am quoting:

> If you wish to use the enclosed material without using our name, in view of possibility of further business connections with the present government, please do so. But if you find it absolutely necessary to divulge the source of your information I will not object.

Why are people so afraid to talk? We need an inquiry so they can testify freely. I hope the minister will co-operate in improving the way his department is being administered.

In the meantime I hope he will check carefully on another real problem, the de-icing capability at Mirabel. The tendering procedures there are very current and very irregular, and Air Canada and the Ministry of Transport are, as usual, involved in another weird scenario at taxpayers' expense.

In closing I should also like to suggest to the minister that bright and early tomorrow he read his copy of the Montreal Gazette, one of Canada's great newspapers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to my friend, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), this evening. As I begin, let me say that I cannot and do not accept a great portion of the preamble in his remarks this evening. I do not deny that there have been issues raised of importance and of public interest, and I assure the hon. member that the government is clearly aware of its continuing responsibility in public administration, to use an old and somewhat hackneyed adage, to ensure that justice is done and is manifestly seen to be done.

[Mr. MacKay.]

I should like to remind the hon. member of the admonition offered in this House and elsewhere by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and others about certain concurrent responsibilities which clearly bear upon the opposition when it comes forward with allegations and accusations, and that is the responsibility which hon. members opposite must discharge, to be fair, precise and well-founded in what they say, and to be well researched and judicious in matters of this kind.

It is not good enough to deal in a speculative manner with suspicions, accusations and innuendos. It may be politically sensational, but it is not fair and responsible public conduct in the pursuit of justice. In my brief experience in this House I have generally been favourably impressed with the thoughtful approach of the hon. member for Central Nova. I share the disappointment of many of my colleagues in this chamber with respect to certain comments lately which I believe have been somewhat below his normal standards. I hope this is not an established trend for the future but merely an abberration which soon will be corrected.

To deal specifically and directly with his request in this discussion this evening, I shall refer to the comment addressed in this House by the minister in reply to the hon. member, recorded in Hansard at page 8947 on November 7, where the minister said that he would examine what material is available on this subject and determine whether the most suitable approach would be to table the requested documents or open a discussion in the standing committee.

I am pleased to be able to report to the hon. member tonight that the relevant data are presently being assembled, and the minister hopes to be in a position to table the information before the end of this week.

FINANCE—SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF TAX CONCESSIONS TO FALCONBRIDGE NICKEL ON OPERATIONS IN NAMIBIA

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, on Friday, November 7, Falconbridge Nickel Mines announced that approximately 1,000 workers would be laid off by January 1, 1976. This does not include 1,000-odd workers employed by contractors at the Falconbridge properties in the Sudbury basin.

The reason given by the company for the lay-offs and for a cut of $50 million from its capital spending program was "the current greatly reduced demand for nickel in world markets and increased operating costs". It should be noted that a large chunk of the cut in spending came from the company's smelter environmental program, a program designed to increase the occupational health of the company's workers and residents of the Sudbury basin.

But since Falconbridge is finding it necessary to cut its capital spending and lay off hundreds of Canadian workers, someone might assume that the other major nickel company in the area would be having similar difficulties. But if you assumed that you would be wrong. The International Nickel Company of Canada has stated it has "no plans to cut production" in spite of any softness in the market.

The president of INCO, a Mr. J. E. Carter, said in New York that while this year's production by the company would be about 10 per cent below last year's, "on the long term basis, we continue to expect that over-all world growth in nickel production will continue to be about 6 per cent a year." He also pointed out that INCO was planning to increase its production in Canada. And even at this time, while Falconbridge is laying off those hundreds of workers, INCO in my constituency is offering its workers considerable amounts of overtime. Mr. Carter is even more optimistic about the prospect of nickel sales in the coming year when he notes that many of the customers for nickel will be making significant capital investments next year.

But even if INCO is not having difficulties, it is perhaps possible that Falconbridge is having difficulties. This might show up if we were to see that total nickel exports from Canada were down significantly, or perhaps if production in Falconbridge's plants in other countries is also down. But instead we discover that both nickel production and exports have decreased very little in Canada over the last year. And we also discover that production in Falconbridge's plants in Norway and the Dominican Republic is proceeding with no cutbacks.

The real reason for these cutbacks is, I suspect, not a soft world market. The reason instead is that the government of Ontario last year decided to remove tax provisions which permitted Falconbridge to write off any processing costs it encountered in overseas plants. So, faced with significant tax increases, which would have been used for the betterment of the host country, in this case Canada, the company decided to reduce production instead. This has two effects. First it permits the company simply to switch whatever production it can to cheaper locations. Business analysts have pointed out that Falconbridge is purchasing nickel from foreign sources for its refinery in Norway at rates cheaper than it can produce in Canada.

But aside from any savings in cost, the company has another reason to cut production here. The lay-off of hundreds of people is a form of blackmail against the Ontario government to force it to reduce taxes to the multinational corporation. Even business analysts admit that production cutbacks are an attempt to convince the Ontario government of "the severity of the Ontario tax climate".

So here we have a company that is trying to force a provincial government in Canada to reduce its taxes, and using Canadian workers as pawns to do it. Perhaps it would be useful to have a look at what Canadian taxes have done for this company.

Over the last 15 years Falconbridge and its subsidiaries have received millions of dollars from the Canadian taxpayers in the form of DREE grants, accelerated capital cost allowance programs, plus various other manpower and corporate assistance programs.

But as I have said before in this House, Falconbridge also receives another kind of tax assistance. Under section 126 of the Income Tax Act Falconbridge is permitted to claim a foreign tax credit for its operations in the illegal and racist administration of South Africa over Namibia. Falconbridge owns 75 per cent of Oamites Mining Company, Ltd. which extracts copper and silver from Namibia in Southwest Africa, using all the rotten racist labour conditions allowed by South African law, and for the taxes paid to the South African government Falconbridge gets a tax credit in Canada, a tax credit paid for by the working people of Canada who are being forced in this way to help support both the exploitation of the people of Namibia and the profit-taking of Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. The other 25 per cent of that mining operation is owned by the Government of South Africa.

Falconbridge must have found it appealing to work under the kind of government in South Africa which is prepared to condone a vicious industrial system to increase corporate profits. Now it has found another country that is prepared to go far to make corporations happy. Falconbridge is considering a major investment in Chile, a country which is prepared to torture, murder, and take any other steps necessary to ensure a less severe climate for foreign investment.

When I raised the question of Falconbridge's actions in Namibia last spring and pointed out that its actions there were illegal under many decisions of the United Nations, the government had many platitudes about why it could do nothing not even to the extent of stopping the tax credits of money paid to the South African government.

The government spokesman said that it is a principle of the government not to interfere with Canadian companies abroad. The government said Falconbridge was operating in Namibia at its own risk, if high profits made from those kinds of labour practices can be said to be a risk. But now, when the provincial government has tried to get a fair tax return from the company, the company is showing just how Canadian it is by shifting its operations elsewhere. It is now taking steps in Canada which prove it is a multinational company far more concerned with profits than any loyalty it may have to Canada.

I call on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the Canadian government to amend section 126 of the Income Tax Act of Canada to ensure that Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. does not use that loophole to enrich itself from its Namibian operation at Canada's expense and that of the working class people of the Sudbury Basin.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not know exactly to what tax provisions the hon. member alluded when he spoke of "tax concessions" with regard to operations in Namibia. I should like to point out to him that our Income Tax Act provides nothing pertaining specifically to Namibia, nor have we signed any tax treaty with that country. The hon. member may have been alluding to the tax allowances provided in the case where income tax is paid to foreign governments, or again to the tax treatment granted by Canada to dividends paid to companies residing in Canada.

When a Canadian resident has commercial operations abroad, through a branch office, for instance, the income derived from that source may be taxed by the foreign government concerned. Such income would also be subject to Canadian income tax. When the income is thus made liable to both foreign and Canadian income taxes, our legislation provides an allowance on the basis of the income tax paid a foreign government. This allowance is intended to minimize the possibility of double taxation. Those provisions on tax deductions apply to all income earned in foreign countries.

When operations are carried out abroad through a foreign affiliate instead of a sudsidiary the income they produce would normally come back to Canada in the form of dividends from the foreign affiliate.

At present, as has been the case for a long time indeed, the Canadian tax scheme provides that dividends received by a resident corporation of Canada from a foreign company in which it held a substantial percentage of votes—over 25 per cent—were exempt from Canadian income tax. That provision actually allowed the repatriation of gains made abroad without submitting them to Canadian income tax in addition to foreign income tax.

The tax reform included a major revision of the tax treatment of dividends from foreign corporations but until the new provisions become entirely applicable in 1976, dividends representing gains made abroad before 1976 may be earned by a Canadian corporation without being subject to Canadian income tax.

As of 1976 the tax-free repatriation of gains considered to be dividends from foreign corporations will be subject to a number of restrictions. One of the determining factors concerning the application of those restrictions will be the position of the particular country where the dividends come from, that is whether that country is one of those with which Canada signed an overall tax agreement. As I said already, Canada did not sign any agreement of this kind with Namibia. So, whatever might be the Canadian tax benefits to be drawn from dividends of another country that signed an agreement with Canada, those benefits will not be applicable to dividends coming from that country unless the agreement in question becomes effective.

The provision dealing with abatements for foreign taxes paid on income from a foreign source is not deemed, generally speaking, to be a tax concession in its nature. Abatements for foreign taxes are not unusual at all in the area of international taxation. In Canada, they have been an integral part of our tax system for many years.

The various modes of taxation provided under international tax agreements are not usely considered to be tax concessions either. Those agreements are the result of separate negotiations undertaken with each particular country with which an agreement is concluded, and they include what both countries arrived at under common agreement in the form of a compromise.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

MULTICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PLANS FOR FUTURE PROGRAMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises from the revelation today that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) plans a drastic change in the government's multicultural program, which follows upon the elimination, following the 1974 general election, of a minister who was exclusively responsible for multicultural programs in the country.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House reject the program proposed by the Minister of Labour as reported in today's press and urge the minister to make a statement at the earliest possible time on the government's future plans for multicultural programming.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF PAROLE SYSTEM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important and urgent issue.

Since within the framework of our present judicial system the policemen are the first to carry the can as the result of paroles among which are noted many relapses and offences of all kinds and considering that we must protect those who maintain order and protect honest citizens and that they must have a say in the matter of parole, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the House should consider the matter immediately to enable the federal government to set up a committee responsible for paroles, whose membership would include in addition to the usual members, the police director of each provincial police force as well as representatives of the municipal and federal police forces, so that they may take part in the decisions to that effect.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN FINANCING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of vital importance.

Considering that, according to a study conducted by a McGill University economist, Mr. Ithon, $1 out of every $5 spent on the Olympic Games finds its way to the federal treasury under the guise of fiscal revenues;

Considering that all Canadians benefit from the publicity and international prestige afforded these games, that a deficit is now estimated at about $600 million which will be borne only by Montrealers and Quebecers in general, all of which will involve disastrous consequences for other projects that will have to be delayed, in particular public transport and the fight against pollution;

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the Canadian government take a direct part in financing these games other than by the known means, such as the Olympic Lottery and the sale of Olympic stamps and coins.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

AIR CANADA

ALLEGATION CHAIRMAN MAY RESIGN—DATE OF TABLING OF ESTEY REPORT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I was hoping to direct my questions to the Minister of Transport. I am sorry he is not in the House today but I shall direct my questions to the Prime Minister instead. Is the Prime Minister in a position to confirm to the House persistent reports that the chairman of Air Canada is about to resign in the light of the most recent recurrences of travel agency difficulties?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question still concerning the controversy surrounding Air Canada. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether the honourable Judge Estey submitted more than one report on the Air Canada inquiry to the government and if so, when will both reports be tabled in the House?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, my only knowledge is that Mr. Estey has finished his report and that it is in the process of being translated.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF 1976 ANNUAL REPORT AND 1975 CAPITAL BUDGET TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I certainly hope that the government, and the Prime Minister especially, feel some of the frustration that opposition members feel with the very indefinite kind of answers we get because the report has been in the hands of the government for some time. Will the Prime Minister consult with his colleague the President of the Privy Council to put forward a government motion to refer the 1974 annual report and the 1975 capital budget of Air Canada to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications? Will he do this immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question, I believe that the Minister of Transport received Judge Estey's report about 15 days ago. I understand that it was going to be several weeks in the translation and that the minister asked that this period be cut down. I am sure the hon. member is not arguing that we should break the law and regulations and table it only in one language. The report will therefore be tabled as soon as it is translated.

On the second part of the question, that has to do with committee business: if the committee makes a request I am sure it will be considered by all House leaders.

[Mr. Speaker.]

REASON FOR RECOMMENDATION OF ALOUETTE TRAVEL AGENCY BY COMPANY AND FAILURE TO CHECK BILLINGS BY TRAVEL AGENTS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Minister of Transport. Can the acting minister say how it was possible for Air Canada to continue, responsibly, to approve or recommend to IATA the Alouette Travel Agency in Montreal associated, incidentally, with Captain Hill's company, when Alouette is owned by one Daniel A. Scott whose convictions for fraud, and other corporate disabilities, probably presently preclude him from having a licence to do business under the relevant Quebec statute?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the question put by the hon. member and refer it to the minister who I am sure will reply to the hon. member tomorrow if he cares to raise it at that time.

Mr. MacKay: A further supplementary question. Can the acting minister also explain why Air Canada has not corrected a practice that appears to be causing the loss of vast amounts of money, because of a strange reluctance to check vigorously and conscientiously, billings from the company's appointed travel agents which claim inappropriate commission over-ride charges, despite the fact that group vice-president, Maurice D'Amours sent out a joint memo with his CP Air Counterpart last March indicating awareness of this fraudulent practice?

Mr. Goodale: Once again, Mr. Speaker, I will draw that matter to the attention of the Minister.

MULTICULTURALISM

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN PROGRAM AND ELIMINATION OF FUNDING FOR THIRD LANGUAGE TRAINING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether statements attributed to the Minister of Labour in today's press to the effect that the government's multiculturalism program is going to shift from what it has been in the past, the positive encouragement of folkloric activities, to one of fostering good understanding which, if this is the direction of the new program, will constitute a retraction from the proposals made by the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism to the government? I ask the Prime Minister if this means that there is to be a major change in policy, or is this simply a proposal being advocated at this time by the Minister of Labour?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have not had time to read the speech of the Minister of Labour who is responsible for multiculturalism. But I propose to read and discuss it. I repeat: the government is very much committed still to its policy on multiculturalism. That does not mean that we do everything the multicultural advisory committee recommends, although we put considerable importance on the weight of its recommendations. The minister will certainly be prepared to make a statement at the proper time on the government's orientation in applying its policy on multiculturalism.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Labour having indicated that, among other proposals, the government plans to eliminate federal funding for third language training in schools, may I ask the Prime Minister if that specific idea is government policy and, if so, if it was arrived at after consultation with provincial governments and the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know from what the hon. member is quoting. I will have to see what the minister said and only then will I be able to say if he expressed government policy. I repeat, the government does not intend to lend any less emphasis to its strong belief in the policy on multiculturalism. The government, in many areas, is trying to bring in new programs which will implement the government's policy even better in all fields. This, in some cases, may mean switching funds from one area to another but will not mean reneging in any way on that important program.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT'S PLANS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the views reportedly attributed to the Minister of Labour in quotation marks will, if implemented, constitute a major redirection of government policy in this area and a rejection of the proposals of the Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, will the Prime Minister make the commitment to the House that the Minister of Labour will make a statement in the House at an early date on precisely what are the government's plans in this important area?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of my answer, and in view of the question, this, it seems to me, is clearly hypothetical at this stage.

ALLEGED DISINTEREST OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT IN PROJECT

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the Canadian government advised the International Olympic Committee in 1969 that Canada was eager to host the Olympic Games, and that a few months ago it introduced and had adopted legislation to authorize the holding of an Olympic Lottery and the sale of Olympic coins and stamps, could the right hon. Prime Minister explain to the House the apparent lack of interest his government is now showing for these games?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must indeed make an effort to reply dispassionately to this question. In my opinion, it proceeds from most complete ignorance, which astonishes me on the part of an hon. member who speaks of federal government disinterest. I hope the hon. member will seek information. He need only consider the acts which this government has introduced in the House over the past few years and which are responsible for the greater part of the Olympic Games financing. That is why I feel it is somewhat foolish to speak of federal government lack of interest in the Olympic Games.

POSSIBLE ELIMINATION OF TRANSPORTATION SUBSIDY ON FEED GRAIN

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

As a Quebec City daily claims that federal officials hesitate to publish an order in council announcing the refusal of the government to grant a subsidy to the transport of feed grain, can the minister tell the House whether the federal government really intends to do away with the subsidy on the transport of feed grain towards eastern Canada and more particularly towards Quebec?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made on that.

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO INDUSTRIAL MILK SUBSIDY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

I wish to ask the minister whether, in view of the worries of the Dairy Producers Association, he can tell the House if the government intends to encourage a decrease in the subsidies now granted industrial milk producers, or even eventually cancel those subsidies?

● (1420)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we announced how much money we were going to pay on milk subsidies last April. We are paying that much for the current dairy year. We told them to live within their quota, production and so on of one million hundredweight of milk. They are in overproduction at the present time. They are creating surpluses of skim milk powder and other dairy products. We do not intend to increase the subsidy to them. We announced at that time that the subsidy would be decreased as of April 1, 1976.

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY ON REGIONAL CARRIERS—ALLOCATION OF CHARTER FLIGHTS TO TRANSAIR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In light of the fact that Transair Limited, one of the largest regional airlines in Canada, will be facing a deficit for the first time in recent years and the statement by its president that one of the contributing factors is attributed to the federal government, may I ask where is the long overdue policy on regional airlines announced in 1966, and more recently promised by the former Minister of Transport in June, 1975 during debate on the new transportation policy?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will know that the Minister of Transport, coming from the part of the country from which he does, shares the hon. member's concern about the matter of regional air carriers. I am sure the minister will want to respond to the hon. member in some considerable detail at the first opportunity.

Mr. McKenzie: It is action we are interested in, not concern. As Quebecair and Nordair are allowed to have a larger volume of charter flights than Transair and other regional airlines, therefore making an excellent profit, will the minister investigate and see if more charter flights can be allocated to Transair?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly see that that particular point is drawn to the attention of the minister.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—POSSIBLE LOSS OF JOBS BY SKYCAPS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not see the Minister of Transport. I will direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. It deals with a question posed by the right hon. member regarding skycaps in Toronto who are on the verge of losing their jobs, some 26 this month. I know that representations have been made to the minister. Can the parliamentary secretary bring us up to date as to whether these jobs have been saved or not?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member that information at the moment. I will see if I can make it available to him later in the day.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whom I know will be interested in this matter. There is the possibility that by the end of this month some 26 skycaps at terminal two will lose their jobs as a result of an American subsidiary taking over this type of service. Will the minister use his good offices to investigate this matter in order to determine whether these jobs can be saved or, in the alternative, that other employment can be offered to them?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member's suggestion and will act on it.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the statement made by the Minister of Labour about the future of multiculturalism in Canada. The Prime Minister has stated that he and the government maintain an interest in multiculturalism. In the interest of multiculturalism, will he give consideration to raising the status of this interest to portfolio level and having a minister in charge of that portfolio, not as an adjunct to an existing portfolio as in the case of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be aware that that question, although it was quite some time ago, shortly after the beginning of this session, was asked and answered.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF PEACE AND SECURITY PLAN

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice? It has to do with reports today that we shall now be expected to wait until some time in the New Year before given details of the government's so-called peace and security plan, supposed to be available on October 14. May I ask whether these reports are true and whether it is the intention of the government to introduce the program before Christmas? Or has some snag developed?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Those reports came neither from myself nor from the Solicitor General, which are the two reports which would matter in the matter. We have not run into a snag. We are working as a matter of priority to prepare legislation for presentation to the House. When it is presented will depend upon when it is ready and when the schedule of sittings of the House is determined.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In view of the importance of this package of legislation in the minds of Canadians, can the minister give the House any undertaking as to time, or is the foot dragging which has been going on for three years with respect to this kind of legislation to be continued?

Mr. Basford: I am delighted that the hon. member should be so anxious to see the legislation and, hopefully, to support it. I assure the hon. member that there is no foot dragging with regard to it. It is being prepared as fast as the draftsmen can prepare it. However, as the hon. member knows, we have been consulting with provincial attorneys general and others as to details of the measures we are proposing to introduce, and this takes time. I repeat that I regard this as a matter of priority, and so does the government. We will introduce the legislation when it is ready and when parliament can deal with it expeditiously.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

CHURCHILL RIVER DIVERSION—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO LEGAL ACTION AND FUNDING OF FLOOD COMMITTEE

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It has to do with his statement several months ago which was interpreted by the Province of Manitoba as a threat. The statement related to the Churchill River diversion in that province. Does the minister intend to proceed with legal action, as trustee of Indian lands in that province? Why does he continue to fund a northern flood committee which has no status to take legal action on its own behalf?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The question of an injunction was an option which was being examined. However, because of engineering difficulties, the diversion was delayed for a year and the urgency was taken out of the matter. The situation now is that the northern flood committee has, by band council resolution, authority to act on behalf of the bands involved. We are, therefore, working with them. We expect we shall shortly be appointing a mediator who will be working with the provincial government, the northern flood committee and ourselves to resolve the problem.

URBAN AFFAIRS

HABITAT 76—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONFERENCE WILL BE HELD

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): A question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the ten to one vote by the Vancouver City Council last night not to host Habitat 76, can the minister assure the House that the Government of Canada will proceed with the conference and will assist the City of Vancouver in taking the security measures required to ensure a positive atmosphere for this most important UN conference?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The government intends to continue the momentum of preparations to carry out the Habitat Conference and make it one of the most successful conferences ever held under the auspices of the United Nations. We are now making adequate security arrangements and discussions are under way with the City of Vancouver. I have spoken personally to the Mayor, and the Secretary-General is now in touch with the Council to determine the parameters of any concerns they may have and give whatever support he can to make sure the event is held in a proper atmosphere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MARKETING BOARDS—POSITION OF MINISTER ON APPLICABILITY OF ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES—CRITERIA TO BE USED IN SETTING PRICES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to, I suspect, the only friend of the farmers and marketing boards in the whole cabinet, the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the government's policy that farmers and fishermen are exempt from the guidelines under the anti-inflation program, and in view of the fact that a government document says that these boards will have to be reviewed before reaching firm decisions on which ones should be subject to the guidelines and which of their costs should be allowable, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he can tell the House if it is still the position of the government that they are exempt from the guidelines; can the minister explain how that statement is compatible with the willingness of the Anti-Inflation Board to make scapegoats of the marketing boards, ignoring wholesalers, processors and packagers; and does the minister intend to see that the farmers and fishermen remain exempt under the guidelines?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, let me say again that some editorial writers have been grossly inaccurate about how marketing boards operate. For example, today's Globe and Mail editorial is just a bunch of trash as far as I am concerned. It could not do more to inflame the public. There is nothing that a well run marketing board has to fear from the Anti-Inflation Board, or from anyone else, as far as I am concerned. They are under strict guidelines, just as strict as the guidelines that are going to apply to industry and labour.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the Minister of Agriculture's statement about the Globe and Mail and others that have made stupid statements about marketing boards, but in view of the fact that his own government officials have said that they are exempt, and then in another paragraph they say it is to be decided which of the marketing boards will be included under the guidelines, and that this proposal is being put forward to the provinces today, I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he can tell the House if the criteria for the pass through of the costs of production presently being used by CEMA or by marketing boards operated by the provinces will be used by the Anti-Inflation Board or the Farm Products Marketing Council, or will the criteria of the Minister of Transport under the grain stabilization bill or the criteria of Mrs. Plumptre be used?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the form of pricing used by marketing boards is public information available for scrutiny by anyone who wants to study it realistically. We have nothing to fear from any marketing board. They are under really strict guidelines now, stricter than those for industry, and we do not have to worry about their being under the Anti-Inflation Board. The vast majority of ministers that we have talked to about this have said the same thing of provincial marketing boards that have anything to do with price setting.

Oral Questions

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—PROVINCIAL COMMITMENT TO GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister who I am sure is kept fully informed on this subject. It concerns the attitude of the provincial representatives to the government's anti-inflation program and the indications for support or commitment that those representatives have made today. Can the Prime Minister tell the House that all of the provinces are now committed either to allowing the federal government to implement the guidelines in their province in the area of provincial jurisdiction, or that they have given the assurance that they themselves will enforce the federal guidelines within their jurisdiction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition realizes that the meetings began this morning and they are still going on. They may last until late today, and until they are finished I cannot, of course, give the conclusions reached by the meeting.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I did not ask for the conclusions of the meeting. Since reports were going out over the news on the attitude of the provinces, I thought that the information might have reached the Prime Minister.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF DR. HOPPER TO BE ELECTED HEAD OF THE FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANIZATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. I am glad to see him back from the Food and Agriculture Organization conference in Rome. Can he enlighten the House on the reason that Canada's candidate, Dr. Hopper, was not elected head of the Food and Agriculture Organization having regard to the fact that Dr. Hopper visited 30 countries to enlist support and that all over the world Canadian embassies and ministers endeavoured to secure support for him for this position?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that he visited 30 countries, and I wish we could all do as well politically; he received 28 votes out of the 30 countries he visited. I would say he entered the campaign to be director of FAO late. I think he was highly qualified and would have done a good job if elected. I think that had FAO followed the true democratic form of elections to which the right honourable gentleman and I are used in Canada, where we vote down to the finishing line and that sort of thing, the result might have been different.

I suggested that Dr. Hopper stay right to the finish line, but he withdrew on his own after the result of the first ballot was known, when the man who is now director of FAO, whom we wish the very best and offer him our utmost co-operation, polled 62 votes. I think that FAO has become very politicized, and I also expressed concern about this at the conference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to have the minister's views on elections, but I am wondering whether the Canadian Press also produced a trashy article when it said that the reason that Canada was turned down was that it is difficult to defeat an Arab, and that anyway Canada was too inexperienced in this kind of lobbying. Is that the reason, and would the minister at the same time inform the House whether the various countries that apparently worked for support of the resolution concerning Israel and racism also ganged up on Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to say that they did that, but I will say once again that if we had been running the election I am sure we would have run it in a different form. As far as I am concerned, the people running the election for the Canadian candidate were not experienced politicians; they were mostly civil servants.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister is an experienced politician and I should like to know what was wrong with the electioneering that was done which did not meet the approbation of the minister, who is so qualified on the subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGATION THAT STRAIN OF PEACEKEEPING ON PERSONNEL WILL BE MET BY CLOSING BASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In light of the fact that the chief of the defence staff said yesterday before a committee of the House that peacekeeping obligations of defence forces cause a strain that can only be removed by the addition of 1,500 men, and since the Globe and Mail has reported that it has been suggested that this problem might be met by the closing of some bases in Canada, can the minister confirm that, under the present situation surrounding the base at Summerside, that base will be immune from any such program at the present time?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen a transcript of the statement of the chief of the defence staff before the standing committee, but I am quite certain that our peacekeeping obligations are such that they do not involve our having to close bases in Canada, whether Summerside or any other base. If there is any infrastructure consolidation it will result from other causes than our peacekeeping obligations.

TRADE

ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES FOR EXPORTERS—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as a usually reliable source tells me that the guidelines for exporters have now been drawn up and are ready for use, would the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce advise the House when the export industry will be advised of the nature of these guidelines?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether the guidelines are being discussed today with the provincial finance ministers, but that is quite possible. I have the view that the Minister of Finance will be disclosing them here in the course of the debate over the next, however long it takes. In the meantime, I have met with a number of exporter groups and will be meeting with the Canadian Export Association this afternoon. I will be discussing generally with them, not the regulations themselves, but how they think this levy ought to be imposed or dealt with, and I think it is fair to say that the business community with whom I have been talking are satisfied with the nature of the negotiations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DETENTION OF MRS. PSARSKI IN POLAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON EFFORTS TO OBTAIN RELEASE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is further to my question of several days ago on the subject of Mrs. Joanna Psarski of Georgetown, Ontario, a Canadian landed immigrant who returned to Poland on the death of her father in September 1973, and who has since been unable to obtain an exit visa from that country. I understand the minister is now in a position to advise the House on the up to date status of the situation, and I know this would be greatly appreciated by her family and all others connected with the case. I hope that he can do so.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Ambassador to Poland presented a list of cases to the Polish authorities on Friday last, on which list was included the name of Mrs. Psarski. I may mention that I raised the same case along with others during my visit to Poland. No decision has yet been made, and until a decision has been made one way or another we can only expect that the Polish authorities will give careful consideration to the desire of Mrs. Psarski to return to Canada. I am also seeing the Polish Ambassador here in Ottawa this afternoon and I intend to raise the case with him.

Oral Questions

AIR CANADA

USE OF IMPORTED WINES ON DOMESTIC FLIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. As a result of many complaints and phone calls, it has been ascertained that the only wine available on a domestic flight in Canada happens to be an imported wine.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Flynn: There are many excellent Canadian wines produced in the Niagara and west coast areas, as well as in parts of Quebec. Will the parliamentary secretary ask the minister whether he can give us a full report on this spirited situation?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the usage of food and beverages by airlines is, of course, something for them to determine. I might say that I share some of the hon. member's sentiment in connection with the beef which is sometimes served on aircraft, in that it is often Australian as opposed to Canadian. I will convey the representation to the minister in order that he may reply.

SUGGESTION CANADA WITHDRAW FROM INTERPOL

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General who, I suppose, was paroled by the Cabinet, I direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Considering that the U.S. Congress is seriously considering severing connections with Interpol, is the Canadian government prepared to suggest the same attitude of disengagement towards this organization, because of the content of the records which has been under study by the Solicitor General since March 1975?

[English]

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I might say that the present President of Interpol is a former Commissioner of the RCMP and these matters are constantly under consideration. I will bring this specific matter to the attention of the minister, however, so that he can give a more complete answer.

HOUSING

CENTENNIAL DEVELOPMENTS, HALIFAX—REASON FOR FAILURE OF DEVELOPER TO COMPLETE PROJECT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, on May 30 of this year I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to look into problems in respect of construction of senior citizens' housing in the city of Halifax, and in particular the projects of Centennial Developments in the Quinpool area, which is owned by a developer by the name of Mr. Medjuk. The minister promised to look into this matter six months ago. Today I am advised that the senior citizens' buildings are still not completed and the developer is still in financial difficulty. Will the minister advise the House as to the reasons for non-completion, and undertake to have CMHC assume the responsibility for completion, financing and administering of these senior citizens' buildings?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, after the hon. member's previous question I went into this rather exhaustively and found that one building was 90 per cent completed and the other 95 per cent completed, and they were to be ready for occupancy within a month. I am disturbed to hear that is not the case, so I will look into it immediately and report back.

CENTENNIAL DEVELOPMENTS, HALIFAX—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ACTIVITIES OF MR. CALDER HART

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, will the minister also investigate the actions of the CMHC regional director, Mr. Calder Hart, concerning his opposition to alternative proposals for social housing in the Quinpool Development?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not look into the conduct of Mr. Calder Hart. He is absolutely a first-rate public servant and an excellent regional director for CMHC. I am sure he has given his best judgment in every way possible. I have complete and utter confidence in him as an excellent representative of the corporation.

MARSHALL CROWE REFERENCE TO FEDERAL COURT—DATE OF DECISION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the Federal Court has now made a decision in respect of a challenge regarding the possible prejudice of the Chairman of the National Energy Board, Mr. Marshall Crowe, and whether the hearings will now continue?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): As I recall it, Mr. Speaker, the reference from the National Energy Board has been set down for hearing on December 8. I have instructed counsel to appear on my behalf to argue that, on the basis of the material before the court there is no reason to believe there is either real bias or any reasonable apprehension of bias on the part of the chairman.

REASON FOR DELAY IN ANNOUNCING STABILIZATION PROGRAM FOR COW-CALF PRODUCERS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the recent beef stabilization program on October 23 will do absolutely nothing to alleviate the hardships of the hard-pressed cow-calf producers of our country, I would ask the Minister of Agriculture whether this represents the totality of the beef support program, and whether arising from that announcement there will be no program specifically designed to assist the cow-calf producers? If that is so, will the minister explain to the House why he has taken this position in light of the fact that on September 19 of this year, I believe, he stated in the city of Edmonton that the cow-calf stabilization program was less than two weeks away?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered these questions in the House sometime ago. I said the main reason was that is was impossible and impractical for us to try to initiate a national plan when about six provinces have different plans of their own to look after cow-calf operators. For instance, the province of Ontario has a program, as does the province of Quebec and the province of British Columbia. These are all different programs. How am I going to make a national program work? Most of the provincial ministers have written me and the deputy ministers have met with our officials here to try to work out a proper program to start, I think, in January 1976.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am appalled by the minister's answer. It is obvious he has lost control of this very important industry. Let me ask the minister whether he is continuing discussions with his provincial counterparts to see if a realistic stabilization program can be brought forth to assist the hard-pressed cow-calf producers, using the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, which this party supports.

● (1450)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I should say to the hon. member, and I am sure he is aware of it, that he should express his views to the Canadian Cattlemen's Association which has asked us to do nothing at all. The Saskatchewan Stock Growers Association have said to us, "Do not go any further than you have gone; quit interfering with the bill". I hope the hon. member will talk to some of his colleagues who raise hell with marketing boards so we can develop a proper program.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Answer my question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR HOLDING HABITAT 76 CONFERENCE IN VIEW OF CANCELLATION OF CRIME CONFERENCE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When he announced to the House on July 21 that Canada was seeking a postponement of the crime conference scheduled to be held in Toronto, he explained:

> As host country, we felt that Canada had assumed a major responsibility for the success of this congress, and in such an unfavourable political climate we did not see how we would possibly carry out our responsibility.

May I ask the minister, in light of the fact that since the infamous anti-Zionist resolution in the United Nations a couple of weeks ago political support in Canada for the Habitat conference has declined drastically culminating in the vote last night by Vancouver city council to ask the government to postpone the Habitat conference, how he can explain the decision to go ahead with the Habitat conference in Vancouver in light of the explanation he gave to the House regarding the crime conference in Toronto that at that time the climate was not suitable for it when in fact it has deteriorated since that time? In other words, what is the difference between the crime conference in Toronto and the Habitat conference in Vancouver which made it desirable to cancel the crime conference—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The circumstances which I described in July as pertaining to the crime conference were the factors that I applied for the postponement of that conference. This is an entirely different situation than the one which existed at the conference some months ago. I believe the hon. member would not find it difficult to find considerable differences between the two situations.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO SIGN AGREEMENT WITH UNITED NATIONS TO HOST HABITAT 76 CONFERENCE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In light of the fact that the minister and his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, have stated that Canada is firmly committed to the holding of the Habitat conference, why has the government not yet signed the commitment which it was asked to sign in August by the United Nations to host the conference, and when does the minister expect this commitment to be signed by Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it is worth pointing out to the House that following the request by the Canadian government to postpone the UN conference on crime, a preparatory meeting was held in New York in August for the UN Habitat conference. At that time the members of the preparatory meeting asked Canada explicitly whether it intended to go ahead with the conference in Vancouver. At that time assurances were given by our representative and by myself at the preparatory meeting to the secretary general of the conference itself.

Mr. Beatty: Will you sign the commitment?

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member refers to an agreement. There is under consideration an agreement which is normally signed between the host country and the UN secretariat. At present that agreement is under negotiation and it will be signed as soon as the negotiations are completed.

URBAN AFFAIRS

HABITAT 76 CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO PLO DELEGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I should like to direct to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the concern in Canada about the attendance of the PLO at the Habitat conference, would the minister say what financial assistance is being made available to the PLO by the government of Canada so that they can attend and cover their costs?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): None, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON NEED OF CANADIAN SUPPORT BY UNITED NATIONS IN VIEW OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL AID PROGRAMS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because of the tarnished image of the United Nations following the anti-Zionist resolution and the continued confusion about the value of the UN, would the minister make a statement on motions soon outlining the vast amount of economic and social aid programs conducted by UN agencies throughout the world which provide proof of why the UN needs continued strong support by Canada and other western countries despite lack of money and unfortunate resolutions pushed through by members of the UN?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I certainly agree with the conclusions the hon. member has drawn to the attention of the House. It may not be possible for me to make a statement on motions, but I intend to appear before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence next week, and, if possible, I will take that opportunity to elaborate upon the points the hon. member has mentioned.

OPPORTUNITY OF EXECUTIVES TO OBTAIN SUGAR OPTIONS—TERMS OF EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT

Mr. Ron. Huntington (Capilano): I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. Can he advise the House whether the acknowledged opportunity available to certain Air Canada executives and their colleagues to option $100 million worth of sugar at a time of a world shortage and rising prices was made available to them during Air Canada technical aviation negotiations with Haiti, Martinique, Guadaloupe and Jamaica?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I do not entirely accept the background information which the hon. member has presented in the preamble to his question, but I will draw the question to the attention of the minister who will want to make further explanations to the hon. member.

Mr. Huntington: Can the parliamentary secretary advise the House whether the terms and conditions of employment contracts with Air Canada executives permitted Air Canada's executives setting up companies for the purpose of using profit opportunities available to them during the performance of Air Canada duties?

Mr. Goodale: Once again I will make that question known to the minister.

SOCIAL SECURITY

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO ALTERATION OF CANADA PENSION PLAN

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the recent critical report by the advisory group of the investment record of the Canada Pension Plan, is the government considering introducing legislation which will alter the investment aspects of the plan, particularly as regards the rate of interest charged to the provinces?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has pointed out, this has to do with the rate of interest being paid by the provinces for their borrowings from the Canada pension fund. Under the present legislation, any amendment can be brought forth only with the consent of two thirds of the provinces with two thirds of the population. My colleague, the Minister of Finance, and I will certainly be raising this with our provincial colleagues. I have already made this document available to the provincial governments and I have asked them to study it, but this is a subject which should be discussed with the Minister of Finance because of its substantial implications for the provinces.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—DATE OF DECISION ON AWARDS IN VANCOUVER QUADRA CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration of which he has received notice. In view of the fact that November 3, the date for the awarding of LIP grants passed into history over three weeks ago and that the awards for Vancouver Quadra have not yet been announced, can the minister say if this delay has been caused by the lack of alternate funding for the Habitat forum projects? If so, what success have the minister and his cabinet colleagues had to find alternate funds for this international conference and, if not, when will the minister announce the successful Vancouver Quadra LIP projects?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I can wrap up my answer by applying my comments to the last part and telling the hon. member that I will make my decision this afternoon or tomorrow.

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN PERSONNEL OF ARMED FORCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): I have a question which I should like to direct to the Minister of National Defence and it has to do with comments of General Dextraze on supplementary estimates during the meeting of the standing committee yesterday afternoon when he spoke of the need of an additional 1,500 men which would mean a payroll addition of as much as $22 million. Can the minister clarify what his intentions are, whether or not the 1,500 men might, for example, be required to supplement the effort we are going to put forth in support of the Olympic Games next summer, or whether this is a general requirement so that the minister and his professional staff may not have to consider base closures?

● (1500)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again I must say I have not seen the statement of the chief of staff. I know that he understandably requires additional personnel, as many of our men are double tasked and triple tasked, and he would be only doing his duty to suggest that he could use additional personnel, but presently there are no plans to increase the 78,000 in the regular force and the 22,000 in the reserve. Despite the fact that it would be simpler for all if we could increase, the decision is to stay at our present level.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder then if the minister could consult with the chief of the defence staff, and if he is prepared to make either some form of press statement or respond to a question later in the week or make a statement later in the week as to the specific requirement which General Dextraze has for these 1,500 men, and whether in the absence of these 1,500 men it would be necessary for the Minister of National Defence to have to consider closing bases in order to free 1,500 men for the specific task or requirement of the chief of the defence staff.

Mr. Richardson: I expect to be making a statement in the House in the very near future which will cover the question raised.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). This goes back to over a month ago on October 17 when, on a similar type of question from the hon. member for Vegreville, the minister said that the official opposition should explain its attitude toward the Cattlemen's Association's view on cow-calf operations. On the next day, as Your Honour will remember, I rose in the House and put a question in the following way:

> Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I would address my question to the acting minister. Will he please inform the minister that the official opposition to Her Majesty's government in this House is in favour of the Agricultural Stabilization Act terms being carried out in connection with the cow-calf floor price? The government promised this in the middle of September, and I am simply responding to the minister's challenge in his reply to the hon. member for Vegreville yesterday, by stating that the official opposition wants to see the terms of the act carried out, including the cost of production formula added in.

My question of privilege is simple. This is the second occasion on which the minister has replied to the hon. member for Vegreville by sliding away from the question and his responsibilities under an act which parliament passed, with the support of all parties, and he is not carrying out the formula as laid down in the act which should be applied to cow-calf producers.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we are carrying out the act, as it has been carried out in past years, and we are actually using 100 per cent of cost of production for beef in Canada at the present time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of your disallowing my question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with respect to the appointment of a minister responsible for multiculturalism. I fully appreciate the fact that a similar question was asked some time ago, but I ask for clarification with respect to the propriety of asking such a question under changed circumstances, circumstances which now are of concern to approximately one third of the people in our country who are neither of French nor English origin.

The situation is very simple. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), who is responsible for multiculturalism, has made a statement, which was brought to our attention also by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), with respect to a very fundamental change in the multiculturalism program. As a result it seemed to me an appropriate question to ask the Prime Minister under these changed circumstances whether he would reconsider his position with respect to the appointment of a minister responsible for multiculturalism rather than having it as an adjunct to another portfolio.

With the greatest deference, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that is a very legitimate and proper question under the circumstances, which have changed rather dramatically over the course of the last 24 hours, and I would ask for guidance from Your Honour with respect to the allowance of that line of questioning in a subsequent question period. I realize that the time has now expired with respect to this question period, but I can assure Your Honour, from my own point of view and from what I have heard, that this matter is of grave concern to a great number of people in Canada, and I should like the opportunity of pursuing that line of questioning with the Prime Minister subsequently.

Multiculturalism

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The fact of the matter is that the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) raises a very serious point of order. Although I have no choice in the matter at the moment, upon reflection I am aware that a question in exactly that form had been put not once, but on more than one occasion earlier in the session when it was first announced that responsibility for the multiculturalism program would be in the hands of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I recall specifically the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) answering, and indicating he was satisfied it was in good hands. However, I must say on reflection that I have some sympathy with the point of order raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar because changing circumstances do give rise to the valid re-introduction of the same question.

The Prime Minister is still in the House, and he seems to be willing to make some comments at this time. Perhaps that might be the most appropriate resolution.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I share your opinion on this point of order, and if I am allowed, I will attempt to deal with the question, although perhaps not very differently than I did in previous circumstances.

The matter of organizing the cabinet so that we do not have more ministers than we have is a constant problem. The House will recall a time some years ago when we had a special minister for dealing with multiculturalism, but before that there was a minister without portfolio dealing with certain problems of citizenship attached to the Secretary of State. At another time there was a minister without portfolio dealing with certain sectors of the Department of Transport. At another time there was a minister without portfolio dealing with the Wheat Board, and one dealing with—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: At specific times in the life of government as certain problems become pre-eminent it is sometimes necessary to designate ministers without portfolio to deal with them. For instance, now I have a minister with a portfolio who is dealing with the problem of the status of women. I am sure that in the mind of the hon. member the status of women is just as important as the question of multiculturalism. I have not chosen to name a special minister for that, nor indeed a special minister for youth or for bilingualism. I understand and share the concern of the hon. member—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —but I understand from his representation, and I suppose from the rather incomprehensible heckling from the other side, that it is being suggested that I enlarge the cabinet.

An hon. Member: Put Jean Marchand to work.

Mr. Nielsen: Jean Marchand for multiculturalism.

Some hon. Members: We want Jean.

Mr. Trudeau: I also have a minister without portfolio who very recently has been dealing very competently with the problem of La Francophonie, and I could go on and recite the special areas which call for special ministers. However, I repeat that if the House is adamant and wants the cabinet to be enlarged, I can undertake to do so with the support of the House, not only in the area of multiculturalism, but probably in the area of the status of women and other areas.

I wish the opposition would make its point clear on this matter and not ask the government to cut its expenditures while asking at the same time for the enlargement of the cabinet.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[English]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 2,273, 3,102, 3,108, 3,112, 3,150 (revised) and 3,182.

[Text]

MINISTERIAL PERMITS

Question No. 2,273—Mr. Schumacher:

1. Since January 1, 1960, by year, how many people have been granted ministerial permits by the Department of Manpower and Immigration and, what was their country of origin?

2. For the same period, by year, how many were (a) employed in professional positions (b) employed in non-professional classed positions (c) employed in unskilled positions (d) unemployed, and what was the breakdown of ethnic origin in each group?

3. For the same period, by year, how many obtained landed immigrant status in Canada?

4. For the same period, by year, how many of such permits granted were (a) new applications (b) special extensions and, what period of time was applied?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. 1960, 1,992; 1961, 2,272; 1962, 1,268; 1963, 1,386; 1964, 1,307; 1965, 1,565; 1966, 1,011; 1967, 1,371; 1968, 782; 1968, 779; 1970, 485; 1971, 642; 1972, 723; 1973, 4,392; 1974, 17,445. To determine the country of origin of each person issued a Minister's Permit would require a manual examination of Departmental records and would require additional staff resources.

2. The data required to respond to these parts of the question are not maintained.

3. To determine the number of persons issued Minister's Permits who subsequently became landed immigrants would require a manual examination of Departmental records and would require additional staff resources. Approximately 75 per cent of Minister's Permits are issued to close dependants of permanent residents of Canada who while under some temporary prohibition were allowed to join or accompany their family through the use of this procedure. When the temporary prohibition (e.g. lack of immigrant visa) has been overcome by Order-in-Council and all immigration requirements met, the persons concerned are landed.

4. The number of Minister's Permits shown in part 1 are all original issues. To provide a record of extensions would require a manual examination of Departmental records and would require additional staff resources.

1971 CENSUS

Question No. 3,102—Mr. Jones:

1. Did an "editing instruction" result in inflation of the number of French-speaking citizens outside Quebec in the processing of the 1971 census results and, if so, on what date was it discovered?

2. What sanctions, if any, have been taken against the employee who was responsible for this editing instruction?

3. Will corrected figures be available for the number of persons outside Quebec who reported "English only" and "French and English" at the 1971 census and, if so, on what date?

4. Has CBC been warned that the original figures supplied to it exaggerate the number of French-speaking persons outside Quebec?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The 1971 Census of Canada was a self-enumeration Census and the following language questions were asked: 1. Mother tongue—Language first spoken and still understood: English, French, German, Italian, Other. 2. What language do you most often speak at home now? English, French, German, Indian, Italian, Magyar, Netherlands, Polish, Ukrainian, Yiddish, Other. 3. Can you speak English or French well enough to conduct a conversation? English only, French only, Both English and French, Neither English nor French. In the processing of the 1971 Census data a series of procedures was implemented to eliminate all the inconsistencies in the data being produced. The editing instruction referred to was one of these procedures. It ensured that if a respondent reported one of the official languages as mother tongue and the other official language as language most often spoken at home, then the response to the third question (Can you speak English or French well enough to conduct a conversation?), was changed to both English and French. This editing procedure produced the following results: 97,500 persons who originally reported English only for the third question changed to both English and French. 32,400 persons who originally reported French only to the third question were changed to both English and French. 2,450 persons who originally reported neither English nor French to the third question were changed to both English and French. In total 132,350 persons or 4.6 per cent of the bilingual population were added to the population claiming ability to carry on a conversation in both English and French. In addition, if the responses to the question on mother tongue, and to the question on language most often spoken at home were both English, or both French, and the response to the third question was neither English nor French, the following ensued: 113,480 persons reporting neither English nor French to the third question were changed to English only. This was 0.8 per cent of the English only population. 36,130 persons reporting neither English nor French to the third question were changed to French only. This was 0.9 per cent of the French only population. There was no inflation of the number of French speaking only citizens due to these procedures. Editing procedures were finalized on January 11, 1971 and all processing and publication of data have taken these edits into account. The data given above are available at the national level only.

2. Because the above procedure is an authorized and statistically accepted procedure, the question of sanctions against an employee does not become relevant.

3. The results of the edit were incorporated into the official published figures and the question of corrected figures does not arise.

4. The CBC and other knowledgeable users of census data are aware of the edit procedures as a standard practice and additional information regarding this specific procedure was not therefore passed to our users including the CBC.

BUREAU OF CLASSIFICATION REVISION COMMITTEE—DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS REPRESENTATIVE

Question No. 3,108—Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton):

1. What was the name, title, classification and salary of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics representative on the Bureau of Classification Revision Committee (BCR Conversion Committee or Team) which evaluated Position DBS-FIN-2178 at the time of conversion of the position from Statistician 5 to SI 7?

2. What were the names and titles of the members of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Review Committee (DBS Management Review) which reviewed the allocation of Position DBS-FIN-2178 in 1968 for eventual consideration by the BCR?

3. What was the pre-conversion (1966) classification and classification level of the Chief of each of the following sections which comprised the Financial Statistics Branch of Statistics Canada (DBS) on April 1, 1972 (a) CALURA Administration (i) analysis and integration (ii) corporations (iii) labour unions (b) Business Finance Division (i) financial institutions (ii) industrial corporations (iii) research and integration (iv) housing and building permits (v) construction (vi) capital expenditures (vii) national wealth and capital stock (c) Governments Division (i) consolidation and co-ordination (ii) federal government (iii) provincial government (iv) local government?

4. What classification standards, if any, were used to evaluate Position DBS-FIN-2178?

5. Was a job description ever submitted for the position based on the SI standards?

6. Was there an 11-month default in processing the grievance filed, challenging the group classification and level of Position DBS-FIN-2178 and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following: 1. Mr. E. G. Porter, Assistant to the Director of Personnel, a PE-4, was the then Dominion Bureau of Statistics representative on the Bureau of Classification Revision Committee referred to.

2. The members of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics management review committee created to review the results of conversion to the Social Science Support Group were: Mr. N. L. McKellar, Director, Central Classification Staff. Mr. G. R. Labossière, Director, Organization and Personnel Services. Mr. G. W. Andrews, Director, Manufacturing and Primary Industries.

3. The classification levels of the Section Chief positions in the Financial Statistics Branch of Statistics Canada were as follows in 1967:

Order Paper Questions

		Position	Level
(a) CALURA	i.	Chief, Analysis & Integration	STAT-5
	ii.	Chief, Corporation	STAT-5
	iii.	Chief, Labour Unions	STAT-5
(b) Business Finance Division	i.	Chief, Financial Institutions	STAT-3
	ii.	Chief, Industrial Corporations	STAT-3
	ii.	Chief, Research & Integration	STAT-3
	iv.	Chief, Housing and Building Permits	STAT-3
	v.	Chief, Construction	STAT-3
	vi.	Chief, Capital Expenditures	STAT-3
	vii.	Chief, National Wealth & Capital Stock	STAT-3
(c) Governments Division	i.	Chief, Consolidation & Coordination	CH-STAT-1
	ii.	Chief, Federal Governments	STAT-5
	iii.	Chief, Provincial Governments	STAT-5
	iv.	Chief, Local Governments	STAT-5

4. Once the occupational category and group allocation was made, the position was evaluated against the Social Science Support (SI) Standard.

5. No, since a submission in such a format was not required.

6. Because of management expectations that program changes could arise that would affect Position DBS-FIN-2178 the grievance filed by the incumbent W. Taylor, against the classification conversion of his position was held back by management for some months and was subsequently actioned without prejudice to the rights of the incumbent. He withdrew his grievance before it could be reviewed. The circumstances of the delay were explained to the incumbent of the position in a letter sent to him on February 8, 1970.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 2,833 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, question No. 2,833 was placed on the order paper as long ago as June 20. It deals with a fairly simple matter asking how many consultants had been hired by the Fisheries and Marine Service of the Department of the Environment in the past two years, their names, salaries, and duties, as well as their terms of employment, and whether public tenders were called before they were hired. In the normal course of events that question should have been answered and the answer appear in Hansard. That is the procedure I wish the government to follow.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we sought to have the matter made an order for return—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In fairness to the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) he was on his feet but I misinterpreted his stance as indicating that he wished to raise an objection to questions that remain unanswered. However, it is quite clear that he ought to have been heard on that question. If the hon. member does not give his consent the answer will have to be treated as an ordinary answer.

[Editor's Note: The answer to question 2,833 is as follows:]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I should like to draw the attention of the parliamentary secretary to question No. 3111. That question was transmitted to the appropriate office for the order paper prior to October 14 and it appeared on the order paper on October 14. I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would look at that question specifically. The information required is factual and should not be difficult to obtain.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the answer is expected next week.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MARITIME CODE ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE A MARITIME CODE FOR CANADA

The House resumed from Friday, November 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-61, to provide a maritime code for Canada, to amend the Canada Shipping Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential or related provisions, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a long, deep and abiding commitment to this issue because of my background in Vancouver, my service during the war in Coastal Command in the air force, my living abroad representing Canada, not to mention, of course, my having been born in Saskatchewan. I am sorry that the other members of the Saskatchewan contingent are not here.

Mr. Goodale: They are here.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): From my present residence I look out over one of the great shipping lanes of the world. I deny there is a conflict of interest here. I would suggest instead there is a confluence of interests — everything comes together from my background to give me an interest, a real true interest in the Darling report.

We have waited at least five years for this legislation. The Darling report was issued in October, 1970, and here we are in November, 1975, five long years later. For years many of us have been advocating what this legislation imperfectly proposes — basically reserving the coastal trade for Canadian vessels and a code covering certain aspects of maritime matters.

Our delight at getting a final look at positive legislation therefore is tempered as soon as we read the bill, by a growing realization that the provisions are no more than a partial answer to our long felt needs — the long felt needs of Canada.

I suggest, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this is no more than a promise that "there will be ships on the slips by and by". Unfortunately, we are now dealing with only one of the matters related to our merchant marine.

Let us start by looking at some of the recommendations in the Darling report to see how they are matched in the legislation. I suggest that recommendations Nos. 2, 3, 4, 10, 12, 13 and 15 are dealt with in one way or another in the legislation.

No. 1 deals with the coasting trade; No. 2 with the coasting trade extended to something beyond the normal commercial operation; No. 3 with the continental shelf and territorial seas, bringing us up to date in terms of marine multilateral negotiations; No. 4 with a very dangerous area and one we have been putting up with long enough and one that I thought we were going to get rid of, that is, issuing permits to non-Canadian flag bearers — I shall be returning to this; No. 10 is related in many respects to No. 2, exploitation and exploration around our shores; No. 12 to government operated marine insurance which unfortunately we do not see much of in this bill, and No. 13 dealing with steamship inspection which I understand we are promised in another edition of this bill.

Judging from the performance of the government in fulfilling its promises, I wonder if we are going to have to wait another five years for two more "books" as they are being called. I hope I am wrong in my suspicions, but I will continue to hold them until I am proved wrong.

Recommendation No. 15 in the Darling report relates to the Alaska Panhandle and is of particular interest. That is not being dealt with in the legislation, and I would hope the parliamentary secretary would be able to nudge the other member of the Saskatchewan triumvirate dealing with the merchant marine in order to let us know whether there are any conversations going on relating to this recommendation, in which it is suggested that Canada should have some special privileges of access through the Alaska Panhandle.

I mentioned that I am distressed the minister is not here but I hope the parliamentary secretary will take note of the matters that are going to be raised, because we have very real concerns. There are gaps in this legislation that we want to draw to the attention of the government. But we are not going to delay the bill unduly because we think it should get to committee where we will be able to explore matters more fully.

Time will permit me to deal with only one or two important matters raised in the legislation, or excluded from it. I shall concern myself with the matters of crewing, and cabotage. The code, included as a schedule at the end of the bill, cannot be considered as complete. I wonder of what use an incomplete maritime code can be? What is such a code if it is not complete and does not deal with certain important matters?

Conspicuous by their absence are provisions dealing with inspection services, standards of shipbuilding, requirements for icebreaking in various areas, and requirements for crewing. If my memory serves me right, the parliamentary secretary suggested that bills we can expect later will deal with crewing and shipbuilding standards. I wonder if these will come under new paragraph Bill-74, or under some completely different code. Frankly I think a maritime code should be just that: There should be just one maritime code, not several, for the sake of simplicity, so that it is available to masters and shore workers, who may know exactly what is involved.

It has been suggested on a number of occasions that we should not be talking of a Canadian merchant marine because of past difficulties we experienced. When a Canadian merchant service existed there was a good deal of trouble with crewing. I draw to the attention of the House that the major crewing union which would be involved with the merchant service has undertaken not to engage in strike action for ten years. According to The Canadian Sailor of July 28, 1975:

> The Seafarers International Union (SIU) is willing to sign a 10 year, no-strike agreement with Canadian flag operators for ships in high seas service.

It follows, I think, that the union will extend the ten year no-strike agreement to operators of Canadian flag ships sailing in coastal waters. This brings me to my next point.

Not long ago the attorney of the SIU sent the former minister of transport a letter protesting against the appearance in our coastal trade of a ship bearing a name well known in Russian literature, Alexandr Puskin, which planned to operate summer cruises wholly within the territorial limits of Canada. Departures were scheduled from Montreal on August 10 and 17. And they happened.

This, of course, raises the problem of cabotage. I looked for the meaning of cabotage in the dictionary on the Table, but found that the origin is unknown. I then consulted another dictionary in the library, and found that cabotage is derived from the old French term "cabo", which comes from the Spanish cabo meaning cape. If we go back, we find that it means from cape to cape along the shore line; hence, cabotage. That is how sailors sailed in days of old, from cape to cape. That is the meaning of cabotage. But cabotage has come to mean more than this. It applies to the transport of passengers and freight by sea and air. The rule in the air is rigorously defended.

A foreign air carrier cannot embark a passenger in Toronto and drop him in Winnipeg. That privilege is open to the Canadian flag carrier only. That is cabotage. The foreign air carrier can pick up a passenger in a foreign country and drop him in Winnipeg or Toronto, but cannot carry a passenger between two Canadian points. The principle of cabotage is involved.

I say that our rights to our own maritime cabotage are being invaded by foreign flag vessels. Ministerial permits may be granted to foreign flag carriers who wish to indulge in this trade. I say we ought to encourage the construction of Canadian vessels, and let them engage in the cabotage business. They alone should carry freight and passengers in our waters.

Some foreign flag vessels try to circumvent the problem by calling, during their travels in our waters, at non-Canadian ports. Let us say, if they try to respect the principles of cabotage, that they go from Montreal to St. Pierre and Miquelon, down the south shore, then back to St. Pierre and Miquelon, and then to another Canadian port. They can claim that they interrupted their journey by calling at non-Canadian ports. This is how it is being done.

Let me put on record the route the Alexandr Puskin followed last summer. The ship engaged in cabotage within our waters. The route was: Montreal, Quebec, Bagotville, Percé, St. Pierre and Miquelon (weather permitting), and back to Montreal. The Alexandr Puskin was not the only ship to operate in our waters last summer. The Danish vessel M/V Discoverer did the same on our Great Lakes. Its route was: Montreal, Toronto, Welland, Windsor, Parry Sound, Mackinac, Chicago, and back. This is an affront, a denial of cabotage which ought to belong to the coastal state.

This particular legislation does not deal with cabotage, in the sense of reserving such rights for Canadian flag vessels, and therein lies one of the great defects of the bill.

Clause 8(3) defines our coasting trade. It says:

> . . . 'coasting trade of Canada' includes
> (a) the carriage of goods by water or by land and water, the carriage of passengers by water land towage,
> (i) from one port or place in Canada to the same or another port or place in Canada.

That is a perfectly good definition. On the other hand, clause 8 subclause (5) reads:

> Where the Governor in Council by order issued under the authority of this subsection, so declares, the coasting trade of Canada does not, during such period of time as is specified in the order, include such of the following as are specified in the order,
> (a) the carriage by water of goods or of such classes of goods as are specified in the order,
> (b) the carriage by water of passengers, and
> (c) towage . . .

Therefor we know what the coasting trade is, and is not. Clause 11 really puts the cap on it. It says:

> (1) Upon application made to it by a person resident in Canada who wishes to utilize the services of a particular ship, other than a Canadian ship, in the coasting trade of Canada, the Canadian Transport Commission may issue a licence . . .

I take it that the "person" referred to means a legal person or entity. Under the provisions of clause 11 the issuance of a licence is to be related to "the public interest". The question is, who will define "the public interest"? Obviously it is in the interest of the operator of a foreign flag vessel who wishes to capture our cabotage trade to urge that it is in Canada's public interest for him to be allowed to do so. Where is there encouragement for Canadian flag vessels to operate in this fashion? The Stella Maris, under Greek flag, also operated in the Great Lakes last summer.

We encounter the same difficulty on the west coast. We have only one Canadian flag vessel on the west coast. We have a Norwegian flag vessel The Royal Viking on the west coast doing the Victoria, Juneau, Skagway, Sitka, Prince Rupert and Vancouver route. The Prinzendam, under the Dutch flag and with an Indonesian crew, is doing Vancouver, Prince Rupert, Tracey-Arm, Juneau, Skagway, Glacier Bay, Ketchikan, Alert Bay and Vancouver. The only vessel that is of Canadian registry is the Princess Patricia which does this same route. Surely there is some way of dealing with this problem. It has to be tightened up. I am afraid that clause 8, subclause (5) and clause (11) do not deal with it very satisfactorily. Surely the public interest as mentioned in clause (11) is that these cruise passengers in particular be carried on Canadian ships, built in Canada and crewed by Canadian crews! That is "the public interest" in any law that I want to have anything to do with here.

It has often been said, and it has been said to me privately and in letters I have received from some of my constituents, that it would be too costly to build and man our own ships. However, what are the real costs in Canadian terms? I quote very reliable figures. Last year Canada spent $2.7 billion, paying it to foreign shippers, in shipping charges for all categories of Canada's exports and imports. That is the real cost in Canadian terms, $2.7 billion. These funds should have remained in Canada. They should have been paid to Canadian carriers to carry our goods abroad and to bring to this country at least some of the goods we want to consume.

I am not alone in advocating this form of activity for Canada which, after all, is part of Canada's tradition. Not only can I lay claim to having been born in Saskatchewan, but I can trace my origin through my mother to Nova Scotia.

Mr. Forrestall: Even better.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have great faith in the breadth of this dominion from coast to coast. In Nova Scotia we used to build some of the great traders of the world for the tea trade and the grain trade. Great racers were built in Nova Scotian yards. We built great ships on the west coast as well.

I suggest that the minister get in touch with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson). On February 25 of this year the National Council of the Navy League of Canada submitted a brief to the Minister of National Defence in which they made a great point of this matter. I quote from the submission:

> Recent developments are dictating a change in this attitude (towards Canadian registered shipping) because of our extensive offshore continental shelf areas, rich in mineral, oil and fishery resource potential, areas totalling a third the size of the land mass. With the depletion of the land based resources throughout the world these offshore resources become not only more valuable to Canada but increasingly more attractive to other nations and multi-national corporations. We must be alert to the fact that conflicts in the future, as in the past, will tend to generate around the needs for, and control of, essential resources; food and raw materials for industry.
> It is the Navy League's contention that the value and importance of this offshore resource wealth has not been adequately recognized by the Canadian public or the government. The interests are fragmented and dispersed through a number of organizations . . .
> No longer simply a capability to defend one's country from attack from across the oceans, seapower is now recognized as the capability to use the oceans in any way required to further the national aims of the country, through military, economic or political strength. It calls for strong, effective maritime forces; a modern, efficient merchant marine not subject to foreign control; a healthy fishing industry,—"

That is a submission made to the government. I do not know whether a copy went to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). If not, I have at least had an opportunity to draw it to his attention.

We can only regret that there has been such a long delay in bringing forth this measure. Our merchant marine has virtually disappeared through a lack of nutrients. I would like once again to put something on record. I find in this House that unfortunately you have to put on the record every four or five months facts which somehow or other come to be neglected.

In 1948 Canada had 203 dry cargo merchant vessels of 10,000 tons or more. In 1958 this was down to five and some of them, I can assure you, were nowhere near 10,000 tons. In the period 1968 to 1972, when this government was in power, we lost even those three. We lost the fleet we had in 1968. All that remains are three vessels of the 5,000 ton class.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We lost more than that in 1968.

An hon. Member: Yes, you lost the election.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): As my colleague says, we lost a great deal in 1968. We hope that all is not lost, especially now that the 200 mile-continental shelf concept is coming more and more to the fore in our thinking. It is most important that we act now in this area, with the widening area over which we expect to exercise jurisdiction, not just in fishing terms, but in terms of our trading practices.

As a major trading nation, a position we hold even if we were rejected as a participant in the Rambouillet conference, we need our own merchant fleet. Here is a strange thing. Your Honour will be interested to hear this as well as the members of this House. We Canadians are offering Algeria technical assistance through CIDA to create a merchant marine. That is what CIDA is up to. It has the gall, I guess that is the right word—

An hon. Member: Temerity.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): —the temerity to offer technical assistance in the construction of a merchant marine to Algeria. When I first heard that I just did not believe it. I wanted to visit this school of merchant marine which was half way down the coast between Algiers and the Moroccan border, but unfortunately I did not have the time to get there. We seem to pretend that we know something about the merchant marine. However, it has to be said that this government that has decided to help the Algerians does not want to help Canadians.

As to our ability to design and build our own ships, I have already referred to the shipbuilding tradition on both coasts. I have not mentioned the need of protecting and ensuring our sovereignty in the Arctic which shipbuilders on both coasts are prepared, ready, and able to do. I suggest that we have a great number of imaginative ship designers. One of the companies in my constituency has been working for some time to have organized at the University of British Columbia a school of naval architecture and marine engineering. They have been working on this for two or three years because of the belief that technology in this area, as in all others, cannot be bought economically. It has to be developed at home to prove really worthwhile. If you import, you are going to pay through the nose for it. We do have the native genius here. I mentioned the other night something we have in the way of car design. But we also have native genius in ship design also just by virtue of the fact that we are a maritime nation with extended coast lines. This project to create at the University of British Columbia a school of naval architecture lacks some $50,000 to get it going.

An hon. Member: Get it from the Algerians.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We might go to the Algerians. They, after all, as I understand it, are one of the OPEC nations. I will collect a few members of the House and perhaps we will set off as a delegation at Easter time, or at Christmas time, and see if we can raise this $50,000 from the Algerians for this school of naval architecture in British Columbia.

To those who doubt the imaginative ability of our shipbuilding firms I suggest that the next time they are in the library they should take a look at a copy of Canadian Shipping and Marine Engineering, which I receive regularly. I enjoy looking through it. There are some extraordinarily imaginative designs for ships and maritime structures to be found in its pages. One of the designs which was prepared recently brought a ferry called the Chi-Cheemaun into being. My hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) may well have been aboard this particular ferry vessel. It was designed in my riding and built in Georgian Bay, I believe in his riding. Chi-Cheemaun, is the Ojibway word for "big canoe". In its modern form it is a ferry incorporating advanced first class technology and imaginative design. I am delighted that the opportunity should occur to pay tribute to the firm concerned.

There are many other things to be said about navigation and tanker routes. Time will not permit me to go much further or I might deal with the new products which are necessary to clean up polluted waters and preserve our maritime heritage.

Much has yet to be said about other aspects of the bill, for example about the centralization of the registry and the difficulty this is likely to cause to those living in the outports. One of my hon. friends may be addressing himself to that aspect. However, having talked principally about cabotage, which really offends me as a Canadian, my suggestion is that we terminate our comments quickly and get the bill to committee where hon. members can call witnesses and examine it in detail. We certainly do not plan to hold it up.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) would mind repeating his remarks regarding Alert Bay. I heard the name mentioned but I did not get the import of his comments.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I would be happy to oblige the hon. member. The vessel to which I referred was the Prinzendam, a Dutch registered vessel of the Holland-America line, with an Indonesian crew. It carried out a couple of cruises last summer from Vancouver to Prince Rupert, Tracey Arm, Juneau, Skagway, Glacier Bay, Ketchikan, Alert Bay and Vancouver on the way back. It was simply cabotage. You can see that from Ketchikan to Alert Bay is one thing. That is not cabotage in the sense we have been talking about because that is from a foreign port to a Canadian port, but if they picked up passengers in Alert Bay to deliver them in Vancouver they were engaging in cabotage, an enterprise which, as defined in this bill, should be carried out by a Canadian flag carrier.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): I thank the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) for the information he has given me, Mr. Speaker. Alert Bay harbour has been used quite extensively by ships plying between California and Alaska. They drop anchor in Alert Bay since there is a large community of native people there. It has become quite a tourist attraction for American ships travelling along the coast line. The practice also supplies much needed revenue to that community.

I do not wish to take up very much time this afternoon, but I do wish to say I favour the replacement of the myriads of directions which the Maritime Code is intended to supplant. The proposal to incorporate some of the recommendations of the Darling Report is, I believe, progressive. The provisions defining Canadian ships and relating to the plying of Canadian waters by Canadian ships except where special licences have been granted, constitute a step in the right direction. I hope, however, that we do not get into the situation in which the United States found itself some time ago following the requirement that ships plying between United States ports must carry United States cargo.

An hon. Member: The other way round.

Mr. Anderson: In other words, lumber, for example, sent from one coast to the other has to be carried in American ships, which is very expensive. I hope we do not get into that kind of situation.

Mr. Forrestall: What's wrong with that?

Mr. Anderson: The cost of shipping in the U.S. is one reason why we are able to compete with American lumber on American markets. It is because we are able to ship more cheaply than they are.

I should like to discuss clause 15 on page 56 where the following item is to be found, numbered B11-15:

> Every ship that exceeds 10 metres in length and is owned by a person or persons each of whom is qualified to own a Canadian registered ship shall be registered in accordance with this code.

The succeeding provision covers vessels which do not exceed 10 metres in length and provides for their registration as small craft.

I thought that perhaps some of the hon. members from the east coast, or possibly some members of the opposition parties who come from the west coast would object very strongly to the proposition put forward in clause 24 on page 59 which states:

> A central office for the filing of documents relating to ships owned by persons qualified to own Canadian ships shall be established in the national capital region described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.

I am not sure what will be the reaction to that provision of hon. members who come from the east coast or the west coast, but I would point out that already we have in Vancouver, Victoria, and Prince Rupert three registry offices and, honestly, I do not see the necessity of shutting down those three local regional offices and replacing them by one office in Ottawa. It is rather like deciding that all British Columbia motor vehicles should be registered in Ottawa. If hon. members would check the registry in British Columbia, for example, they would find out that the number of craft registered there exceeds several thousand.

It appears it would be necessary under this proposal to send the relevant information to Ottawa by telegraph or mail, or some other means, where presumably it will be available for use at points which are some 3,000 miles away. If someone could explain to me how this would create a better system than the regional system we already have, I would appreciate it. I have seen many situations of a similar nature where regional matters have been shifted to Ottawa when they could have been handled very well locally, and I think this is a perfect example.

I thank the House for having had the opportunity of putting this matter in front of the House prior to this bill going to committee and becoming law. I honestly think that if at some time in the future a central registry is established we will have to consider legislation to turn matters over once again to regional offices. I am sure that the three regional offices in British Columbia are much more capable of handling registrations for the province of British Columbia than Ottawa.

I trust I shall have the support in committee of members of the opposition in either amending or deleting this particular section of the bill. It is not the most important section, but it is a necessity that the regional area offices are kept open. Surely it should not be a case of meeting the convenience of the government. We are not living in a state that does things only for the convenience of government; I hope we are living in a country where things are done for the convenience of citizens. With that, Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members of the opposition for their support and I trust we will be able either to amend or delete the section to which I have referred.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We will now hear from a good inland sailor.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, members from the east and west coasts sometimes forget that Ontario has a salt water coast as well.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So has Manitoba.

Mr. Peters: The use we have made of this salt water coast has been indicative of the interest other members from the maritimes have shown toward the utilization of that coast. Now that they have come to appreciate some advantages in their own areas they may be more willing to give some assistance to Manitoba and Ontario which share a common salt water coast.

Coming from an inland area I should like to say I am pleased to support this legislation. We have been developing our sea coast for some 20 or 25 years, and I hope we are now in for a number of changes, this legislation being one of the first and necessary steps that have to be taken.

During the war, and in the period leading up to the war, Canada had a large number of vessels in service for interport trade. It also had Liberty ships, as well as a number of other ships of a similar nature engaged in international service and flying the Canadian flag. As a matter of fact Canada was starting to give credence to the desire to be a third power nation, a nation aware of its trading destiny and of the necessity for a merchant fleet to handle its trade.

Canada has the largest, or certainly one of the largest coast lines in the world. We also are one of the biggest trading nations. We import and export about $15 billion worth of trade a year. To the best of my knowledge there are only three ships of Canadian registry sailing in international waters. For a country with the longest coast line in the world and with one of the largest trading patterns in the world to have three miserable ships flying the Canadian flag must be a disgrace even to this government.

Only recently has it become possible for us to look at this situation in an impassionate way. It was C. D. Howe who, in large degree, was responsible for building up the Canadian Liberty ship fleet. It was also necessary for financial reasons to get rid of that fleet. He was well aware that all through the history of merchant navies they had to be subsidized, from the Phoenicians, the Egyptians, the Romans on. Since these fleets reflected the image of these people to others, they also became part of their development. In the same way, Mr. Speaker, these ships were subsidized when they were needed during the war. However, after the war we were not willing to continue the subsidies so our shipping fleet was dispersed.

Interest in the development of a Canadian merchant marine has been highlighted by an organization that has received a lot of comment in this House, most of it unfavourable. However, these comments were seldom backed up and there has been much hysteria about this organization. I am referring to the SIU. Some years ago a member of the House who was then the member for a riding in Montreal, the honourable member for Skeena, and myself were asked to attend a conference on safety on the Great Lakes. Since that time the Montreal member become a member of the cabinet, and he is now the member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner). At that time, however, he was parliamentary secretary to the minister of transport, and he invited the then honourable member for Skeena and I to go with him to this conference.

The conference was called by the SIU and was attended by marine workers, the pilots association, a number of employee agencies, as well as all shipping companies operating on the Great Lakes. Safety conditions on the lakes were so bad that these bodies got together and agreed at the meeting to establish a ship-to-shore radio safety protection system. But who opposed that, Mr. Speaker? The Department of Transport. Shortly after the parliamentary secretary of that day came back to Ottawa, the deputy minister of transport was moved to another portfolio. That has been my experience of civil servants attached to the Department of Transport, and it has also been my experience that most government members were not really interested in taking action to deal with shipping problems; they merely discussed them.

Over the years representatives of the SIU came to Ottawa on a regular basis. They talked of the Darling report and of the need to control coastal trade in Canada, of having Canadian goods carried in Canadian bottoms that flew the Canadian flag and were manned by Canadian crews. They were very interested in this for a very selfish reason, if for none other. If these were Canadian crews operating under the Canadian flag, they would be able to organize them.

I think there was a much greater interest than that which involves something we really have not thought about very much. If we are to have a coastal trade we must build ships somewhere, and we are not building ships at this time.

These people were joined on a number of occasions by other organizations which wanted to implement the Darling report. They came to us regularly. Finally, Leonard McLaughlin, who was the president of the SIU, established an office in Ottawa. He was one of the few people that openly lobbied the government strongly on the basis of building more Canadian ships, and having more Canadian seamen operating our ships under the Canadian flag.

I am surprised to learn that the Canadian Pacific operates under the Liberian flag, the Panamanian flag, or the flag of some other country. It does not operate under the Canadian flag.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Not passenger vessels.

Mr. Peters: How many passenger boats do they have? They have a few ferries kicking around and one or two passenger ships, but they operate a lot of ships and not under the Canadian flag. The Canadian National Railways operates ships through subsidiary organizations in this country, but not under the Canadian flag, and this is really the Canadian government which does not in fact support the idea of having our own Canadian merchant navy.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Merchant marine.

Mr. Peters: There has not been much support in this regard from the government. There has been some incidental and continuous support, sometimes vigorous, from some members of this House, but we as representatives of the Canadian public generally have not really been in favour of the idea of establishing a merchant navy.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Peters: There have been some people dedicated to this and I would include among them Leonard McLaughlin, a former president of the SIU, and Mr. Gralewicz, the president at the present time. They have carried on this type of lobby for the development of a Canadian merchant navy.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A Canadian merchant marine.

Mr. Peters: Coming from inland waters I mix up navy with marine, but it seems to me they are the same thing. I suppose there is a difference. This reminds me of an occasion when I negotiated a contract for a plywood company. I kept talking about veneer and they kept talking about plywood. They were always upset when I talked about veneer, and it took me some time to find out that veneer was not necessarily plywood, but plywood was always veneer. I learned it the hard way, and I hope perhaps I will learn something about this idea of a Canadian merchant navy.

In this bill we are providing a grandfather clause to the Commonwealth agreement for a period of five years. We will not be able to move into Canadian registry unless we have some ships, and we had better start building those ships right now. If we do not I can foresee what the government will do. It will offer permits to anybody anywhere who has got a ship to come into our waters, and it will not demand any money for the permits. It will not demand that Canadian crews man those ships, and it will not demand that the Canadian flag be flown. The Government will not demand that our labour standards be upheld on those ships.

These ships will still be operating under the Liberian or Panamanian flags, or any other runaway flags of the world, because then they can hire crews without paying the required wages, and if they kill somebody because of unsafe conditions they can just dump him overboard and nobody will ask any questions. We will still be operating under those conditions unless we implement another part of the Darling report which recommends that we establish a merchant shipbuilding facility.

As the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has mentioned, Canadians have done good design work. Canadians will always be remembered for their ability in respect of marine shipbuilding. We have done some excellent shipbuilding in Midland, as the member has suggested, and I am sure there are some ships being built on the west coast and on the east coast. Unfortunately it is not the Canadian government or the Canadian industry that is building them.

No matter how much members of this House may desire it, I suggest these ships will not be built or operated by private industry alone. This requires a combination of private industry and government. A considerable amount of money will have to be put into the shipbuilding industry by the government, and I suggest this would be worth while.

In concluding, let me say that we have not mentioned containerization or our inability to get into that field. We need private facilities operated under government auspices in order that we can provide a merchant marine with the shore facilities. I have not referred to northern services, but if we are not to lose our Arctic potential or, in fact, our sovereignty, we will have to put ships into that area.

Let us remember what has happened to our fishing fleets. We cannot protect them. We do not have enough ships for surveillance or to stop foreign fleets from fishing offshore without our consent. We are not able to supervise this because we do not have the ships. We will not be able to maintain our sovereignty in the north until we establish a shipbuilding industry that will provide the ships we need under the Canadian flag.

As a Canadian I certainly hope I will live long enough to see a Canadian merchant marine flying the Canadian flag, or whatever the flag is that ships fly at sea. It is a little different because it is a seagoing flag. I hope they will fly the flag that will carry across the world, along with our goods, the reputation of Canada as a trading and a seagoing nation. We have large coastal areas in Canada, and three ships will never provide the required merchant marine services of the Canadian people.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the introduction of the Maritime Code, Bill C-61, which I believe was initially introduced on July 23, 1973, and on which the government has been stalling ever since. I welcome the bill because of my background and as a former ship owner in my native town of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia.

I can remember growing up in that area and watching the original Bluenose, the Haligonian and some 100 other deep-sea bankers, as we called our sailing schooners, as they raced out of Lunenburg Harbour to our continental shelf in search of the cod and other species which were utilized in the area. Later on I spent some time on my own ships, and I say to you, Sir, that anyone who has ever smelled the tar and oakum on the deck of a ship, or felt the ship creaking and rolling under his feet, will never quite forget that particular experience.

This bill is basically an overhaul of the regulations covering Canadian shipping, the first I believe since the 1930's. It is really the first overhaul since that time, because then we largely adopted the United Kingdom statute. This housekeeping bill is really not complete, and we on this side of the House are still awaiting the additional shipbuilding assistance legislation that has been promised us now for several years.

There are few members in the House who can speak with authority on this bill, a bill which contains a total of 84 pages and which covers not only the Canada Shipping Act but other acts as well. For this reason we on this side of the House want to be assured of the fullest participation and involvement of Canadian shipping interests when the bill goes to committee. Such groups as the Dominion Marine Association, the Canadian Shipbuilding Association, the Canadian ship repair group, as well as representatives of the unions concerned with shipbuilding should be invited to appear before the committee and give the members the benefit of their views and their knowledge on this particular subject.

As I said a moment ago, this bill is a rewrite of the Canada Shipping Act, and in clauses 1 to 8 are the technical explanations. Clause 8 states:

(1) Except in accordance with a permit issued pursuant to section 10 or a licence issued pursuant to section 11, no ship other than a Canadian ship shall engage in the coasting trade of Canada.

In other words, this section preserves the coasting trade for Canadian ships in accordance with the declaration of the former minister of transport on September 24, 1973. He gave the British Commonwealth Shipping Agreement one year's notice that he would give notice of withdrawal at a later date. In the spring of 1974 he finally gave that notice, so in the spring of 1975 we were finally on our own. The former act, as hon. members are aware, gave so-called Canadian recognition to any ship of any country in the British Commonwealth Shipping Agreement, such as Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia, etc. So in this respect the legislation is finally being brought up to date.

Clause 8 goes on to state:

(2) For the purposes of this section and sections 11, 12, and 14, a "Canadian ship" means

(a) a ship built and registered in Canada, or

(b) a foreign built Canadian registered ship upon which full custom duty has been paid.

The term "the coasting trade of Canada" includes:

(a) the carriage of goods by water or by land and water, the carriage of passengers by water, and towage,

(i) from one port or place in Canada to the same or another port or place in Canada,

[Mr. Crouse.]

(ii) between a port or place in Canada and any marine structure that is engaged in exploration for or exploitation of natural resources in accordance with a permit or licence issued pursuant to an act of parliament or of the legislature of a province,

This clause appears to me to protect the trade which may exist for Canadians between the mainland and any offshore drilling rigs operating off our coast on our continental shelf. Unfortunately, however, the conflict of jurisdiction over these resources between the provincial and the federal governments, as well as the conflict in the grey area called Georges Bank between the government of the United States, the governments of Maine and Massachusetts, and the Canadian government, have seriously cooled the initiative previously shown by the major oil companies in developing any resources of oil or gas which may exist in this area.

When we learn, as we did recently, that our supplies of oil and gas are drying up and that shipments to the United States must be curtailed by one third, it seems to me that the government should takes steps immediately to resolve the ownership problem on offshore resources. Every effort should be made to determine the proper authority which should receive royalty payments from oil and gas discoveries. The heads of the oil companies have stated publicly that they are willing to pay royalties to someone, but they are not willing to become involved in a legislative hassle between the provincial governments in Atlantic Canada and the federal government in Ottawa, or in a dispute between Washington and Ottawa over ownership of offshore resources.

In my opinion this dispute must be resolved quickly, or otherwise subclause 8(2)(a) and clause 9 are meaningless for we will have no marine structures engaged in the resource development off our coast which will require the services of a Canadian ship. It is as simple as that. We believe from tests made that there are resources there, but the oil companies are mute and have withdrawn their oil drilling rigs from the area. They are obviously waiting for a sign, and the onus is on the government to provide that sign of encouragement which means we will proceed to examine, study, and develop any possible resource we may have in that area.

Clause 10 deals with those whom we exempt. It reads:

1. Upon application made to it by the owner of a ship, the Canadian Transport Commission may issue, without charge, a permit authorizing the ship to engage in the coasting trade of Canada for a period specified in the permit not exceeding twelve months from the day on which the permit is issued.

However, no permit shall be issued unless the applicant establishes to the satisfaction of the commission that on September 24, 1973, and at all times between that date and the day on which the application was filed, the ship to which the application relates was registered in a Commonwealth country, and in the twelve month period immediately preceding September 24, 1973, the ship was lawfully engaged in the coasting trade of Canada. However, there shall be no permit renewals for a date later than April 26, 1980.

Currently we exempt hundreds of ships a year from the provisions of the present act. We had been dishing out exemptions at a greater rate since this spring. However, the former minister of transport said in 1973 that there would be a five year-phase-in period, and in this period so-called grandfather rights would be recognized. In my opinion this pledge should have been accepted when this legislation was drawn up, and in the period between now and 1978 the government should have laid down the guidelines which would lead to the construction of sufficient Canadian ships to look after the requirements of Canadian industry.

According to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) last year Canada spent $2.7 billion on shipping charges for all categories of exports and imports. More than $1.5 billion of that amount is reliably estimated to have been directed to the agents and operators of foreign ocean shipping lines which serve our ocean shipping needs. Unfortunately—and I say this with deep sincerity—the vast bulk of this trade is carried in ships owned, operated, crewed by and paying taxes to and earning profits for non-Canadian entrepreneurs and foreign national governments. More to the point, there is no lasting employment, investment or increased manufacturing activity flowing to Canada from this vast expenditure of our currency. It is surely worth while considering the scale of the operation to examine why Canadian firms and Canadian ships do not participate in this trade.

I believe it is necessary for us to look at the arguments for as well as those against the establishment of a Canadian flag fleet capable of participating in the international seaborn trade. There are many arguments which can be put forward on behalf of establishing a Canadian merchant marine. After all, a ship is like a small city. As I said at the beginning of my speech, I grew up in an area where shipbuilding is of primary importance. A ship requires heat, light, and water, and the installation of these facilities alone provides employment to many different trades.

Ship construction provides jobs in the shipyards, and once completed a ship is constantly providing employment to the ship repair industries, to the crews employed to man her, plus taxes to provincial governments and to federal authorities for the supplies that are required to keep a ship operational. In fact, I know of few endeavours which would stimulate our economy in a manner comparable to shipbuilding.

● (1620)

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): And it's pollution free.

Mr. Crouse: As my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), states, it is a stimulation to the economy which is pollution free.

We saw this happen in Atlantic Canada when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) was prime minister of this country. At that time the Conservative administration of the day decided as a national policy to stimulate the shipbuilding industry by the payment of subsidies on fishing trawlers.

The shipyards are still there in Atlantic Canada, still in central Canada, and still on the west coast of this country. All that is needed is a viable policy by the government which will encourage entrepreneurs and shipping minded individuals once again to invest in the construction of deep sea ships. If this action is not soon taken, we will lose the skills which we have to build ships, and then our later stage will be much worse than our present one.

Opponents of the Canadian flag fleet claim there is no requirement for a Canadian flag fleet. They state that all is well, and that we have no need to be apprehensive. Needless to say, those who most vigorously oppose such a fleet are the agents in Canada of those very foreign fleets now serving us. Being business minded they quite naturally look with a jaundiced eye upon the prospect of competition from any quarter. However, apart from the facts of commerce, everyone involved in the shipbuilding community knows that in creating a Canadian fleet not a job would be lost. I say that a considerable number would be gained, a fact of vital importance to this nation today, which has something like 8 per cent of its work force unemployed.

In his report tabled on October 19, 1970, entitled "The Elements of an International Shipping Policy for Canada", Howard Darling paints a gloomy picture of the situation facing the nation. He outlines the increasingly nationalistic character of the world fleets, upon which we depend almost entirely. He describes the increasing participation in and direction of these fleets by foreign governments.

Every major shipping nation in the world today is subsidizing its merchant shipping, and they are all insisting on the right to use subsidized fleets as an arm of their foreign policy. Darling's message is that the increasing capital cost of shipbuilding has driven ownership into fewer and fewer hands, hands which are increasingly controlled by foreign governments, and which are therefore no longer to be trusted with the reliable shipment of the $15 billion worth of goods which Canada annually imports and exports. I might add that these exports are vitally necessary if our economy is to survive. For example, Canada relies totally for the over water trans-shipment of manufactured goods and for the importation of oil from Arab and Venezuelan interests on these uncontrollable and fickle foreign carriers. We must ask ourselves what happens if there is a sustained shipping crisis and these carriers fail to show up.

I believe Canada must get on with the job of creating a national flag fleet while there is still time, before we are stranded without a fleet to carry our goods for international distribution. When we were faced with a real crisis at the beginning of the second world war the nation went ahead and established a fleet which was the envy of the world. We took people from Atlantic Canada, who naturally had salt water in their veins, and mixed them up with people from Saskatchewan and from the central provinces of this country, some of whom had never seen salt water, and we made sailors of the lot. They too established records, and were rewarded for their heroism by the amount of tonnage they carried to Great Britain in the cause of the allies during the second world war.

We can still do that today, but we must get on with the job. The changing situation is best illustrated by the recent United Nations trade and development committee proposal for a code of conduct for liner conferences. The self-proclaimed experts within the government point out that only a few countries have formally ratified this proposal. They conveniently ignore the fact that the proposal was supported by West Germany, Liberia, France, Panama, Russia, China, Japan, and 56 other nations with 55 per cent of the world's total general cargo shipping tonnage. Even if that specific United Nations proposal is not adopted, the message it contains is quite clear: developing nations want their goods carried in their own bottoms and are prepared to pay the price to rid themselves of their dependence upon foreign fleets. This is the point we must start considering in Canada, a most vitally important point.

Canada, typically, abstained at the United Nations, and today it is still unclear whether the government supports the UN resolution. The United Nations proposed that exporting or importing nations served by these liner conferences have the right to carry up to 40 per cent of their trade in their national vessels. Nationalism on the high seas was clearly asserted by that UN resolution.

To Canada, with 452 foreign registered ships serving in the liner conferences last year alone, the implications of the 40 per cent Canadian content would be a fleet of more than 175 ships.

Mr. Forrestall: That is what we want.

Mr. Crouse: And at some 40 men per ship the possibility exists for an additional 7,000 jobs at sea, not to mention staunching the flow of hard dollars from Canada to Athens, New York, and Tokyo. More important, our own fleet would guarantee us safe, reliable carriers under the direction of the Canadian government and operating under Canadian government policy.

What do we have at present? According to the latest figures available from the water committee of the Canadian Transport Commission, as of December 31, 1974, there were three dry cargo vessels registered in Canada engaged in the international seaborne trade. Two were constructed in 1961, while the third was built in 1958. Not one of these three ships was built in Canada. It is almost unbelievable, yet it is only too true.

Put in another way, not a single container ship, not a single tanker, not a single bulk carrier, and only three merchant ships fly the Canadian flag on the oceans of the world. Our oil, bauxite, and our general cargoes are all imported in foreign vessels for a fee. Our wheat, coal, aluminum, steel and general manufactured goods are exported in foreign flag fleets, also for a fee, and as previously noted last year that fee came to an estimated $1.5 billion. The current estimated cost of a 14,000 ton dry cargo carrier is $10 million, and I point out to the House that this is an approximate figure depending upon the manner in which that ship is outfitted. If it contains much sophisticated equipment, the cost would be higher but it is roughly $10 million for a 14,000 ton dry cargo carrier. At that cost we could build or buy a fleet of 150 ships from last year's payments to foreign cartels alone, not an inconsequential figure. Yet the agents in Canada for the foreign fleets tell us we would be foolish to build our own fleet. That is their privilege, but I submit we do not have to agree with their viewpoint.

Where in this controversy does our government stand? To be sure, that is a very difficult question to answer. The operative parts of Canada's shipbuilding acts were lifted wholesale from the 1947 legislation. The planners in Ottawa who drafted the 1966 National Transportation Act apparently were unaware, when they slavishly copied the old act, that in 1947 we had a fleet of over 300 ships, while in 1966 we had less than 10. Obviously the planners did not know this fact. It is equally obvious that if they did know it they did not care.

As a matter of fact any decision on shipping policy must still be made by the entire cabinet, and everyone familiar with the cabinet and the changes that have been made within it in the past year will quickly realize why no decisions have been made—why it was not until 1975 that the government even moved to set up the otherwise ubiquitous interdepartmental treaty despite years of public protestations.

The former minister of transport did nothing toward building a national flag fleet. He found himself unable or unwilling to overcome the resistance of the foreign lobby which perpetuates the status quo. He followed, if I may say so, the usual Liberal policy—do nothing and maybe everything will turn out all right. I submit that is not good enough at the present time.

In my opinion the world climate is definitely threatening our continued reliance upon foreign fleets. We can no longer assume that the foreign fleets will always be there—always ready to serve—always following the dictates of the dollar. This is not always true. The dollar sometimes takes second place to politics. Take oil, for example. Clearly the dollar is no longer supreme. When some countries wish to affect foreign policy they do so by withholding or diverting oil shipments. We must act to ensure that we will never be immobilized by instabilities in the world shipping community. Only a Canadian owned, Canadian manned and Canadian operated merchant fleet is capable of providing this type of guarantee.

In order to bring this about, in my view there should have been companion legislation introduced with Bill C-61—legislation which would serve to encourage Canadian entrepreneurs to invest in a new Canadian deep sea fleet. At present we have ship construction subsidy regulations whose objective is to assist the shipbuilding industry by subsidizing construction at a level comparable to the tariff protection given to other industries.

All builders of commercial and fishing vessels are eligible for assistance, and a subsidy of 17 per cent is paid on commercial vessels, while a subsidy of 35 per cent is paid on the approved cost of fishing vessels. The seaweed in the propeller of this plan, however, is that the government has not made available sufficient subsidies to cover even the cost for those who would be desirous of building fishing vessels to say nothing about those who may wish to build a ship to expand the Canadian merchant marine.

This House and the Canadian people need an assurance, by example, that the government means business when it plans to expand Canada's merchant fleet. A suitable amount of money must be set aside to cover the existing subsidy legislation. In addition I believe there should be a schedule of concessions to assist shipbuilders and owners in order to re-activate the industry.

I am not proposing an increase in the present subsidy but I am proposing some concessions which should be established, and which would be applicable to ship owners desirous of building new ships in Canada. In view of the large amount of capital required to build a new ship at the present time, the concessions to which I refer should be in the nature of capital loans and interest. For example, the interest on loans should be the prime rate of interest as charged by our chartered banks, less a suitable percentage point over a ten year period.

If a ship is built in Atlantic Canada, for example, the owner should receive a loan at the prime rate less 4 per cent for building in Atlantic Canada, or 3 per cent for building in central Canada. This would stimulate the industry in Atlantic Canada where the present unemployment rate is higher than elsewhere. In addition, if the loan is repaid in less than ten years, or within a five year period, there would be an additional 1 per cent concession on the interest rate applicable to the loan, thereby using the carrot and the stick approach to encourage entrepreneurs to develop a viable shipbuilding industry in Canada.

There would be some cost to the treasury in a program of this type, but a lowering of the unemployment rate from 8 per cent to 4 per cent or less would more than wipe out the cost of the program to the central administration. It would also provide untold employment opportunities ashore and afloat for thousands of presently unemployed Canadians.

This afternoon we heard the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) speak on this bill. He referred to proposed clause B11-24 (1) and (2) which reads:

(1) A central office for the filing of documents relating to ships owned by persons qualified to own Canadian ships shall be established in the National Capital Region described in the schedule to the National Capital Act.

(2) The minister shall provide, within the National Capital Region, a suitable place for the proper functioning of the office of the registrar, together with such furnishings and equipment as are necessary for the performance of the duties allocated to him.

That clause shows better than any words I could use the centralistic spirit of the government. Here we are talking about a maritime code. We are talking about establishing new opportunities for Canadians expanding a maritime fleet. Obviously this type of expansion would have to take part either on the Atlantic coast or the Pacific coast. Certainly if we were to have an office anywhere to deal with this problem it should be a regional office located in Atlantic Canada to serve that area, and I dare say a regional office in central Canada, likely in Montreal, where the bulk of shipping is concentrated, plus another one in the west to serve the Pacific.

Instead of that we read about establishing an office in Ottawa. Of all the things in Ottawa I submit this one is not required. The government should give serious consideration to amending that clause of the bill. I agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni who first raised the point, and I hope the clause will be deleted or amended to read that the national office will be in the areas affected.

In closing I think it is fitting to place a few of the recommendations of the Darling report on the record. After all, the report was commissioned by the marine transport division of the Department of Transport. No doubt it cost Canadians a considerable amount of money, so I think some of the recommendations should be on the record for consideration when thinking about the requirements of a new marine fleet.

The summary of the contents of the report is quite lengthy so I shall only place a few recommendations on the record. In the summary dated October, 1970, Mr. Darling stated:

(1) The negative attitude to international shipping policy in Canada has been due, on the one hand, to unrealistic demands for Canadian flagships having no solid basis in concrete Canadian interests, and on the other hand, to an indifference based on a confidence in the workings of a highly competitive international shipping industry . . .

(3) The varied conditions applying throughout international shipping furnish the context for decisions on Canadian shipping policy. International shipping remains competitive, but its competitive nature is changing. Competition in a free market is diminishing, but competition between large shipping consortia backed in many cases by their states is increasing as it is also direct competition from national fleets that define economic decisions differently. Canada, with its hands-off policy is close to becoming a unique case among the world's main trading nations.

That, I submit, is an honour we can well do without. Paragraph 7 of the report states:

The UNCTAD convention on a code of conduct for liner conferences is in reality a high-level endorsation of completely nationalistic shipping policies. Regardless of whether it ever comes into force it is a clear warning to all nations to protect their own interests with regard to the policies it endorses and which are already being practised by some countries on a scale greater than would be justified by the terms of the convention.

Paragraph 9 reads:

In Canada shipping policy is fragmented between different departments and agencies, each having its own priorities and terms of reference. There exists neither a definition of objectives, a unified administration, an authorization of powers for dealing with the subject matter nor any continuity of purpose or effort. Interventions, where possible at all, require a cumbersome procedure, and are necessarily limited to the vague generalities that are all that can safely be deduced from the equally vague guidelines that are available which for the most part must themselves be thought up.

Paragraph 13 reads as follows:

The principal interest situations that would call for attention include:

(a) The movement of Canadian resources in the bulk trades, such as ore, coal, etc.

(b) The role of Canadian ships in the development of the Arctic.

(c) The examination of Canadian interests with respect to the container consortia that have taken over the greater part of the general cargo trade; this would involve the competitive position of Canadian ports as against American ports.

(d) The consequences of the bilateral shipping policies of other countries.

(e) The position of Canadian ports as a result of modern shipping trends.

Finally, paragraph 15 reads:

The basic prerequisites of an effective shipping policy include the following:

(a) A definition of objectives which will make clear the importance of shipping problems in themselves, rather than to regard them as adjuncts and afterthoughts to other policies.

(b) A unification or a co-ordination of responsibilities.

(c) The equipping of the authority with powers commensurate with the stated objectives of that policy.

(d) A flexible and aggressive administration, able to take initiatives in short term situations and to sustain drives for longer term objectives.

(e) Apart from whatever steps might be taken in particular interest situations, there should also be a general shipping assistance program available on prescribed terms to any Canadian operator which would permit him to take his own initiative in deep sea shipping but would not involve any government responsibility for maintaining the operation. Such a program should therefore not include direct capital subsidies beyond the shipbuilding subsidies already available, nor operating subsidies.

That is exactly what I say, Mr. Speaker. I am not advocating, when asking for an improved and expanded Canadian merchant marine, increased subsidies. I made a concrete suggestion, that we utilize the interest rate structure to encourage entrepreneurs to establish new fleets in this country. Basically, my real purpose for making this proposal is this: I wish to strengthen the security of the state. We must strengthen the security of our nation, and the modest cost to the treasury of this proposal can be justified on that basis. I therefore hope the cabinet will give careful thought to my proposal, indeed, to this whole matter, so that the establishment of a Canadian merchant marine will not be unduly delayed.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, those in politics have long contended that the government is the servant of the people. We are prone to make such statements in elections. We say that we want to serve the people, that the government itself is their servant. The term "civil servant" expresses the same philosophy. It means that those engaged in civil work are the servants of the people.

Bill C-61 contains some exemplary features and is long overdue, but denies everything which has been said about governments being the servants of the people. If the government is to serve the people its services should be as available to most people as readily and as efficiently as possible. As I say, Bill C-61, which is to provide a maritime code of sorts for Canada, contains some redeeming and long overdue features. Yet I am advised that one part deals with the transfer of the west coast shipping registry to Ottawa. Obviously that proposal was designed in the interests of bureaucratic efficiency. It will please those in bureaucratic circles interested in bureaucratic efficiency. It will not please those on the west coast who need the services of the bureau, fishermen, tugboat operators, and other ship owners operating on the west coast. What kind of nonsense is this?

Why is the government to move, almost as far as geographically possible, from the west coast the very service which the people on that coast need? The ship's registry in Vancouver is an active office, and the heavy use made of it shows that it should stay there. Obviously the provision referred to ignores needs on the west coast, and overlooks the efficient and effortless registration of ships in the Vancouver area.

Vancouver is the busiest port in the country and its registry office the largest in Canada, with more than 10,000 ships on file. Some 400 new registrations were added this year. The work is done by a staff of four, headed by the registrar, Stan Baker, and the operation of the office is noted for its smooth efficiency. One can rest assured that if the registration is moved to Ottawa the number of office workers engaged in registering will mushroom upward dramatically; that will happen if the office is moved from Vancouver to the breaucratic catacombs of Ottawa. If you want efficiency, how you can make the operation more efficient by removing it from the area it serves is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. Goodale: You can use telex.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Friesen: The parliamentary secretary suggests that the office can use telex. He must have shares in the company.

An hon. Member: He can't even type.

Mr. Friesen: The existing operation is efficient, yet Bill C-61 proposes closing the office and transferring it to Ottawa, several thousand miles from west coast salt water. A bureaucratic efficiency expert must have thought of this.

It reminds me of the story of the efficiency expert who checked a certain office. He came to the first person, whose feet were on the desk, and asked, "What are you doing?" The guy said, "Nothing." The expert went to the second desk, and found another man with his feet on the desk. He asked, "What are you doing"? The second man said, "Nothing." The efficiency expert said, "Ah, this is duplication." That about sums up the bureaucratic thinking behind the proposed transfer.

I do not support the proposed transfer as the resulting red tape and bureaucratic entanglement will create immense complications for owners of boats, large and small. Right now, owners who want bills of sale, mortgages, or other papers processed can usually count on obtaining service the same day in the Vancouver registry office. No one can tell me that if the operation is centralized in Ottawa for the sake of bureaucratic efficiency that owners and others will be given the same service, especially in these days of postal strikes when telex and other communications services are clogged with heavy use.

Mr. Goodale: Give it a chance.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there is a member from Saskatchewan telling us how to operate the Vancouver boat registry. That is typical of Liberal party suggestions.

● (1650)

Further to this, every boat over 30 feet in length in British Columbia waters is on file in the Vancouver office. It is ludicrous to ship those files to Ottawa, far from where their usefulness can be appreciated and, above all, utilized. Surely it would be safe to assume that the existence of any system relies on the premise that it is to be efficient, economical, and utilized. The present registry office in Vancouver satisfies all of these criteria.

In the Vancouver office the closing of a contract is simplified immensely. That is hard to believe in a government office. However, physical delivery of the vessel to the purchaser, payment of purchase money to the vendor, and the guarantee of a clear title as transferred can all be done concurrently. If this system is centralized in Ottawa, we can expect confusion, not simplification; expense, not savings; disfunction, not efficiency.

It is common knowledge that correspondence with Ottawa from either coast is notorious for its inefficiencies. I am not prepared to believe that should the ships' office be moved to Ottawa, west coast vessel owners can expect any change in this pattern regardless of how sincere the bureaucrats might be.

I submit that the bill be given careful and diligent consideration by hon. members. I might add that change for the sake of change more often than not provides a disservice and not a service, as it surely will if this bill is passed in its present form. I invite members of the committee, both of the government and opposition parties, to entertain an amendment that will upgrade the value of this bill. I can guarantee that we can anticipate intervention with this kind of amendment by the Canadian Bar Association. They are certainly concerned with regard to the commercial law section and the maritime section.

I encourage the members of the committee to entertain an amendment that will take into consideration the fact that the government ought to be committed to serve the people in a way that is best and gives the most efficient help to them, not to try to remove the services as far as possible from those who need them the most.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay the passage of this bill. However, I want to call the attention of the House to a matter that was alluded to by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) and the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). I refer to the question of whether it is sensible, having regard to the nature of these registry offices, to compile everything in a central registry.

With the greatest respect to the minister from Saskatchewan and his parliamentary secretary, I think the government is making a mistake in doing that. I understand the necessity for the control of ownership of ships, the matter of derelicts, and a number of other reasons for the argument. However, when you consider the location of the registry offices in terms of service to the public, it does not make sense on one hand to move this kind of office to Ottawa when, on the other hand, the government is talking about distributing various offices of the public service across the country. It does not make sense at all. It seems to work against a policy which was announced or discussed on another occasion.

They are wrong, just as they were wrong in terms of convenience to the operation of a particular department, having regard to its function, by moving the cheque processing unit of the Department of Supply and Services out of the central region to Matane, Quebec. I do not say that that will not benefit Matane. Of course it will. However, having regard to the function and the requirement of what the office is supposed to perform in so far as the public service is concerned, this cheque processing operation move from Ottawa to Quebec is a nonsensical decision, equalled only by the decision set forth in this bill to move a service or operation from the west coast and other places. It means they are going to close a great number of offices and centralize them. I see the parliamentary secretary is nodding his head no. This may be a matter we should consider in committee.

I hope that in committee we will consider the question of decentralization of any office of the public service, not in accordance with economic convenience but in accordance with the function and the requirement of that office. When I hear members such as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni or the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, I cannot help but think that this provision in this bill really requires examination. I hope that we will consider it in committee.

There is a difference between decentralization of the public service, which I believe is supposed to be done in accordance with certain principles having regard to the function and need of the offices in various parts of Canada, and dispersal of the public service.

Having regard to the function of the public service, the move to Matane was pure dispersal. The government wanted to put something in Matane. It may have had other overtones as well, having regard to the secret documents I produced, really the core documents with regard to implementation of bilingualism in the public service. But I will not deal with that today. However, the question of decentralization is dealt with in those documents. Those reasons are perhaps not the best in terms of the operation of the public service, just as this move to a central registry in Ottawa from the coast and elsewhere has to be explained in committee. There may well be an explanation. However, at the moment it is on questionable grounds.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Kaplan: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions on all sides of the House about Bill C-76. I believe Your Honour will find there is agreement, hopefully unanimous, that the bill be dealt with on second reading now, that it be referred at once to the committee of the whole for consideration clause by clause and, if the bill is disposed of at that stage, that it be referred back by the committee and read a third time today.

● (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This can only be done by unanimous consent. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

KING GEORGE V CANCER FUND WINDING-UP ACT

MEASURE TO WIND UP FUND

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-76, to wind up The King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund for Canada and to authorize the sale of the assets and securities of the fund and to transfer the sale proceeds and the balance of moneys to the National Cancer Institute of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are happy to expedite the passage of this bill but I think it is worth a brief explanation from the parliamentary secretary. He surely wants to make one.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity of taking part in this debate, partly because it is the first opportunity I have had to pilot a public bill through the House. I hope it is significant that in doing so I am acting in response to a request made by an august assembly of distinguished Canadians who are presently the trustees of the fund, namely, the Right Hon. Bora Laskin, the Chief Justice of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the Hon. Robert L. Stanfield, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, Dr. W. A. MacLean, Chairman of the Canadian Medical Association Committee on Cancer, the late Dr. J. J. Lussier, representative of the teaching faculty of the French-Canadian Medical College, and Mr. J. W. Westaway, Chairman of the Committee on Medical Scholarships of the Canadian Life Insurance Association. Their request was unanimous.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the trustees to sell, under the supervision of the deputy minister of finance, as honorary treasurer of the fund, all securities and other assets of the fund and to pay the proceeds of the sale, together with all other moneys held in trust in the fund, to the National Cancer Institute of Canada.

The present book value of the fund, and its approximate market value, is about $62,000. Over its life the fund has disbursed an amount of about half a million dollars. The bill provides for the termination of the trust forthwith thereafter and further provides that, upon payment and termination, the fund and the trustees of the fund, their heirs, executors and administrators, as well as officers and acting officers of the trust, be released and forever discharged from all obligations arising under the fund.

It will be of some interest to Canadians, I am sure, to know that the King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund for Canada was the first effort of our national crusade to raise funds to promote cancer research in this country. The fund was the inspiration of the Countess of Bessborough, wife of the then Governor General, in 1934, and a public campaign for funds was launched.

In June, 1935, the fund was placed by Her Excellency in the hands of the distinguished predecessors in office of the present trustees.

The fund was to be used "in search of relief from the high mortality rate of cancer in Canada" including, without limitation, research, diagnosis or treatment, education, and the provision of scholarships or training. The fund was tremendously successful in the initial years in raising money for its purposes. By December 31, 1938, the public, the federal and provincial governments, and Canadian insurance companies had contributed a total of nearly half a million dollars. The trustees began to make annual grants to the Canadian Medical Association.

In 1946 the National Cancer Institute of Canada was incorporated to be the recognized agency in Canada concerned with cancer research. It is representative of universities, agencies, and organizations which are concerned with cancer. It acts as the co-ordinating agency in connection with cancer research and sponsors and supports research activities throughout Canada.

As early as 1937 there were indications that the fund should not be the means by which public charitable support of cancer research should be funded. In February, 1937, the then Chief Justice of Canada, the late Sir Lyman Duff, as chairman of the trustees, stated that he intended to refuse to continue as chairman if the fund was to be associated with the collection of additional moneys. He believed that such action was impossible because of his position, being incompatible with his responsibilities as Chief Justice. The situation thus arose that the Canadian Cancer Society was recognized as the public charitable organization through which appeals for funds would be made and the Society, in turn, financed the National Cancer Institute. This development left the fund, in effect, in an inactive role.

Over the years the trustees have made contributions to the National Cancer Institute of Canada so that by January 3, 1974, the fund stood at approximately $65,000. Since 1935 the trustees have endeavoured to use the fund to its greatest advantage to promote cancer research in this country. Nonetheless, the purchasing power of the proceeds of investments of trust moneys now represents a relatively small fraction of that originally anticipated. In the past decade it has become necessary for the fund to liquidate capital assests from time to time in order to release sufficient cash for annual payments to the National Cancer Institute of Canada.

Accordingly, when the trustees met in March of this year, all concerned were of the view that the fund should be wound up and the assets of the fund paid over to the National Cancer Institute of Canada. Since, however, the trust deed provides that the fund is to be continued until the trustees are satisfied that mortality from cancer in Canada has been sufficiently reduced, and since the fund is one of national character and importance, the trustees resolved to make the facts concerning the fund known to parliament with the request that parliament be asked to enact appropriate legislation.

I would like to look upon this event, Mr. Speaker, not so much as marking the end of a gallant effort on the part of all Canadians who have participated in the work of the fund since its inception—for the effort continues apace through others who have followed its lead—but as an acknowledgment of the progress that has been made in this country and throughout the world, including the development of other fund-raising bodies in Canada for cancer research much have largely supplanted the leadership that once undoubtedly belonged to the King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund for Canada.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, before commenting on the bill, one which we all wish to see pressed forward quickly, I should like to extend my congratulations and the congratulations of my hon. friends to the parliamentary secretary who has just spoken. He has indicated this is the first bill he has piloted through the House on behalf of his minister. I should like to extend congratulations to him, not only on that fact but on his appointment as well, and wish him every success in his new office.

The parliamentary secretary mentioned the leadership which has been given by distinguished Canadians who have acted as trustees of the fund, and who now feel the time has come to wind it up. I am satisfied that Canadians as distinguished as those who occupied the office of trustees of the fund could do nothing but give us a proper recommendation with respect to the operation of the fund and its place in the fight against cancer. What they have really said is that its funds might be better utilized in another way, basically for research into the ongoing battle to eradicate or bring under control a disease that has brought death to many Canadians, and sickness and sorrow to many families.

In saying that we favour the principle of this bill, we might take this occasion to pay tribute to the men and women of Canada in all parts of the country who have volunteered their work in cancer societies throughout the land. They have contributed hours and hours of their time, walking the streets collecting pledges from those kind enough to give. We ought as well to have emanate from this House an expression of thanks to these people, and to those very generous Canadians who have contributed to this ongoing fight against a dread disease.

There is no fooling about the matter, Madam Speaker; there is still a long way to go, and great dedication on the part of many Canadians for many years will be required. There are a lot of unsung heroes on the road to the eradication of this disease and of other illnesses in society. Some of these people are members and officers of cancer societies, national, provincial and municipal, people in constituencies represented by all members of the House. I would not want this opportunity to pass without saying to them, through you, Madam Speaker, that we are grateful for their work. We hope that as a result of their work we will take some giant steps on the road to the eradication of this killer disease of cancer.

As I said at the outset, Madam Speaker, we are prepared to expedite this matter through the House today, and I close by once again congratulating the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I believe it is an appropriate act on the part of the government to bring in this bill to wind up the King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund for Canada. I am sure we are all grateful to the parliamentary secretary for putting on the record a brief history of the fund and an indication of the amount of money that has been contributed by it to cancer research.

I think it is also appropriate at this time to pay tribute to the work over the years of the Canadian Cancer Society and of the National Cancer Institute of Canada, set up under the auspices of that society. I believe that the parliamentary secretary is quite correct in drawing attention to the research that has been done and to the progress that has been made, and both he and the previous speaker said what should be said when they pointed to the fact that funds are still needed to enable research to be carried out in order to conquer this dreaded killer, the disease of cancer.

I may be getting out on a limb again, but the introduction of this bill does bring something to mind. When I first saw the title I recalled that in the year 1935, when I was minister of a downtown church in the city of Winnipeg, I preached a sermon on the King George V Silver Jubilee Cancer Fund and took some part in encouraging the members of my congregation to contribute to the fund. Little did I think that 40 years later I would be taking part in a debate to wind up that fund. I also recall a death in my own family that year that prompted a particular interest in the question of cancer, and in saying that I am sure I am expressing the interest of a great many people in this country. We hope that research into this disease will not suffer for want of the necessary funds.

We pay our tribute to those who have worked under the aegis of this fund these many years, and we extend our best wishes for continuing success to the Canadian Cancer Society and to the National Cancer Institute of Canada.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Madam Speaker, first I would like to associate myself with the words spoken by those who rose before me about the parliamentary secretary who made such a good case of presenting this bill and gave a brief history of the fund dealt with in this bill.

I would like also to point out that it is interesting when a member or a minister asks the House for co-operation in giving quick approval to a bill, that those requests should be made in the sense and the spirit shown earlier. One cannot but respond favourably to that request. I suggest that is the way to work in the House if our country is really to have an efficient administration.

With respect to the bill proper I support it wholeheartedly because the fund being wound up under the bill rendered enormous services to the people of Canada. And since the assets are being transferred to the National Cancer Institute it means that all records and whatever research may have been done will also be transferred to it, and that the institute will continue to work in search of means to fight that terrible disease.

I agree all the more with this bill that I was invited on many occasions to co-operate with the Canadian Cancer Society in my province, and as an hon. member suggested quite properly earlier, when I was a little younger I knocked on doors to ask for donations to the Canadian Cancer Society.

I have not forgotten those moments of service to that cause, and I am still very much willing to do everything I can to help the Canadian Cancer Society in its fight against that disease, all the more so that members of my family have been victims of that dreadful sickness.

I therefore support the bill wholeheartedly and trust that the National Cancer Institute of Canada can achieve even more with the support it is given by this bill, so that we may, in the future, hope to discover even more efficient means of fighting cancer.

FEEDS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN DEFINITIONS AND CONTROL OVER MANUFACTURE, SALE OR IMPORTATION

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill S-10, to amend the Feeds Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, it is nice—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. There cannot be any debate at this time.

An hon. Member: We are on third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This is a motion for concurrence so there can be no debate at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, you can put third reading later, by consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This is a motion for concurrence, not for third reading. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, it is nice to see that the minister is back in the House because the remarks I wish to make are for his benefit. He has been travelling all over Canada from the east to the west coast saying he is the protector of the farmers' rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: Yet the bill before this House restricts farmers in what they can do.

Mr. Whelan: Oh, be nice.

Mr. Towers: It is not a realistic approach to the farmers' problems. One of the misfortunes we as members of parliament have to deal with is the fact that a majority of the agriculture committee do not understand the implications of the problems farmers must face.

This bill in its initial stages appeared to be an innocuous piece of legislation. After we got into it, however, we found it could create a great many problems for farmers in Canada if a bureaucracy in the department decided to make things difficult. I have great respect for the members of the department and what they are trying to do, but we have no guarantee that the people who now represent the Department of Agriculture will always be there, in the positions they now hold. It might well be that some bureaucrat who wants to throw his weight around sometime in the future could create problems for the farmers.

Mr. Whelan: Oh, come on; be nice.

Mr. Towers: I am sure the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would be the first to say he is not always going to be the minister, yet he is the minister responsible for sponsoring this bill.

Let me put our objections on the record for the benefit of those on this side of the House and all Canadian farmers, so that at sometime down the road, when problems arise, we can look back and show the Canadian people that we tried to protect their rights.

Since coming to the House of Commons I have tried on a number of occasions to get the government to adopt amendments I felt would be beneficial not only to the people concerned but to the government as well. Apparently the government does not accept this type of philosophy. Members of the government apparently feel it is a sign of weakness to accept amendments from the opposition. If this House of Commons is to work in an adequate manner the government must realize that people outside the cabinet and the committee have a certain amount of background knowledge which can be used to the benefit of the Canadian people. In this regard I am speaking of the Canadian livestock producer.

Let me put some comments on the record made by Dr. Black of the Canadian Veterinary Medical Association. I am speaking at this time primarily so that not only the members of the House are conscious of the situation, but in order that I can refer to these comments at a future time, if need be. Dr. Black stated before the committee:

> First, let me indicate that neither Dr. Barker nor I is in veterinary practice and we have not been for some years, and that we have no monetary interest in this bill.
> Our first concern when we read Bill S-10 was with the definition of a feed. We thought the definition as proposed in Bill S-10 was excessively broad.

Later he stated:

> The part of Bill S-10, though, that concerns us most is proposed Section 4, and perhaps I could paraphrase proposed Section 4 in a different way from that in which it is written. It means to us that the bill does not apply to a feed that is manufactured by a livestock producer if it has not incorporated into it any drug or other substance that may adversely affect human health.

That is a big "if", Madam Speaker. Let me state now that we on this side of the House, as well as the farmers and the public, are concerned about the health and well being of the consumer. Let us not put that out of proper perspective. Dr. Black states:

Now, we assume that since drugs can be construed by most people to have some influence on human health, we assume then that the inclusion of a drug into a feed by a livestock producer would then bring it under the provisions of the act, and herein lies our concern.

This concern was exemplified recently in a meeting we had with people from the Plant Products Division of the Department of Agriculture when we came away with the understanding that in the future the farmer would only be able to put drugs in the feed in accordance with the medicating ingredient brochures, better known as the MIB's, at present put out by the Department of Agriculture. I think most of us realize that feed manufacturers themselves are limited by the MIB's as to what types of medication they can put in a feed, with the only exception that they can put another drug or a different level of drug or drugs for a different usage in a feed if they do so on the basis of a veterinarians prescription. Now we feel this is excessively limiting if the farmers can only put medication in the feed on the basis of the MIB's. The reason for this is that veterinarians and farmers often consider the feed as a vehicle for the administration of a drug to an animal. The drug has to be approved for oral use, it has to be available for that purpose. Under these circumstances, a veterinarian or a farmer may choose to put a drug in the feed, using the feed as the vehicle, if he has to medicate a large group of animals.

Goodness knows, in this land in which we are living we find that the herds, regardless of whether it is hogs, beef, or flocks of chicken or turkeys, are all becoming larger and it is becoming more difficult to treat them in larger numbers. Certainly it is almost impossible to give them individual treatment. This is why it is of utmost importance that farmers be allowed to treat these animals collectively. Dr. Black went on to say:

He may have to medicate hundreds or even thousands of animals in one treatment, therefore, it is unreasonable to expect him to handle each animal individually and to treat them all orally if this indeed is the route necessary in the case. Therefore, we feel that feed should be kept as the vehicle for the administration of medication to animals.

Just this afternoon we came away from a committee meeting at which we learned that there is a shortage of veterinarians in Canada. The Department of Agriculture is making what I believe to be a noble attempt at training a sufficient number of people to become veterinarians.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The way to start is to send McIsaac back to Saskatchewan.

Mr. Towers: That is probably a good solution to some of the problems because I imagine he is a very good veterinarian. I am sure he would be one of the first to realize that there is a shortage of veterinarians, and I am sure he would agree with me also that in a great many cases there is a re-occurrence of disease in herds, while there is a possibility that there may not be a veterinarian available to the farmer to have a drug prescribed for his animals.

I think we must be concerned about limiting the farmer in what he can do because of the fact that there is no veterinarian there to prescribe the medicine. I feel also that we must think about the care and well being of the individual animal. I mentioned this before, and I repeat it, because we are all concerned about it. But—and this is the big but—the farmer can put the medicine through the watering system and thus give it orally, or he can inject it into the animal. I am sure that those who have had experience with this method of treatment realize that there is a far greater danger of residue being left in the animal by injection, either intravenous or intermuscular, but this is legal. That is why I feel that this bill is poor legislation which certainly will not protect the consumer and it limits the farmer in the treatment of his herds.

I should like to continue reading what Dr. Black said. It reads:

Now, limiting the farmer or preventing him from doing this does not seem to us to be reasonable because, as I indicated before, the drug has to be approved for use in that class of livestock by the people in the Health Protection Branch. It has to also be available in a form that is suitable for livestock. The withdrawal periods and the dosages must be worked out and approved. So, basically, this drug has to have been approved ahead of time for this type of use in livestock.

Also we feel it is unreasonable to restrict the farmer from mixing it in his feed from another standpoint. The farmer can obtain this drug from an outlet, a feed mill or some other place, and he can administer it to the animals, he can administer it individually or he can inject it perhaps parenterally by intermuscular administration or some other means. Often the route of administration, other than administering it in the feed, will result in a greater likelihood of a residue occurring than if the drug is administered in the feed. On top of that, it is a custom or it is an established tradition in Canadian agriculture that a relatively large portion of medicating farm animals is carried out by the farmer and not directly by the veterinarian. Again we feel that this would tend to limit his scope in this area.

I know, Madam Speaker, that perhaps veterinarians would like to have control over this, and we all know that they receive a fee for their services. This adds to the cost of production. Today we heard the Minister of Agriculture discussing the cost of production as it relates to marketing boards.

The more hindrance we put in the way of agricultural production, the more we will increase the cost to the producer. I think we must look at this realistically and we must approach it intelligently. We must realize that the more restrictions we place on the producer, the more difficulties he will have. Ultimately it will either put him out of business or it will increase his cost of production. Therefore we should be reasonable about this.

One of my great concerns is that we are opening up every farm gate in Canada to a health inspector. There is nothing in the act to suggest that the inspector must have a reasonable assurance that some misdemeanour is taking place in the operation. I take exception to that. I feel there should be some provision in the bill which would require the inspector to submit to the farmer his qualifications and whatever other identification he may have and to tell him what he is doing on the property. We know what happened when we were dealing with the right to privacy by individuals in connection with electronic bugging. Surely while this may not come under the same act, the privacy of the agricultural producer is being sacrificed to a degree. Goodness only knows we are losing our freedom fast enough without enacting legislation which would take more away from us.

I feel that this is poor legislation, and I wish to put that on record and to make it abundantly clear. I am not going to try to change this legislation because I have tried too hard on other occasions; in fact we tried to change this legislation in committee. We realize that perhaps there are misdemeanours which should be investigated, and I have no quarrel with the Minister of Agriculture or the Department of National Health and Welfare for enacting legislation which would provide for inspectors to go on any of these properties if they can justify their action and feel that they should investigate, but I do not think the assurance of representatives of the Department of Agriculture is adequate when they say that they do not have enough inspectors to go to all the farms in Canada.

Who knows what is going to happen down the road? We are opening up the gate to every farm in Canada for inspectors to walk through, and they do not have to submit any identification to the farm operator in any way, shape or form.

I think this is bad legislation, and that the government is doing a disservice by bringing it in in this manner. Nevertheless the government has a majority; it pushed this legislation through committee and I presume it will push it through the House of Commons. I am not happy with it, and that is one of the reasons why I am pleased at this time to have an opportunity of expressing my concern in this House of Commons.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few brief comments on third reading of Bill S-10. I was and still am a member of the Agriculture Committee, and I was there for discussions on this bill and indeed for some of the evidence which was referred to by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

I reject the opening remarks of the hon. member. He said that a majority of the government members on the committee are not experienced or knowledgeable in the field of agriculture generally. That certainly is not borne out by the facts, especially when we examine the membership of that committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McIsaac: This bill is not really a major agricultural bill, but it is a very good example of how a committee can work. We called in several groups which wanted to appear before the committee, the veterinary association, the feed dealers' people, and another group of people interested in both animal science and nutrition.

We heard evidence from those people and sat down and discussed that evidence with officials from the Department of Agriculture. We discussed another provision with officials from the Department of Justice, and had a good deal of across the table, non partisan discussion in going through this bill, which is really a small bill with about four clauses in it. At this moment I believe it is coming back into the House with three of those four clauses changed.

As I said, this bill is not a major one, but it is an important and an excellent example of how a good committee can function. In this case the Agriculture Committee did a good job in dealing with this bill. We discussed very thoroughly the amendments and their implications.

Clause 1, dealing with the definition of a feed, was changed and narrowed in its scope, as a result of our discussions and the hearings we held. I believe the final clause dealing with penalties was modified, again as a result of discussion. Another one, which I know the hon. member for Red Deer was concerned about and spoke about, and about which I was personally concerned, was not changed. However, in my estimation it was explained and spelled out by the officials a good deal more clearly than a casual reading of the bill a layman would have done.

Clause 4 deals with exemptions. Where a farmer or producer manufactures his own feed, under certain conditions he is exempt from the provisions of this bill. I think the hon. member for Red Deer is well aware that the old business of a farmer manufacturing his own feed was a fairly simple matter of putting some grain through a hammer mill or a plate grinder, and perhaps combining a few bags of supplement for a few cattle, a few hogs, or a few chickens. That was, perhaps, 90 per cent the case, but the situation today in the livestock industry is a good deal different. We are certainly now in a different era of livestock production in Canada. There are many very large operations with their own facilities not only for making feed, but for manufacturing and developing the same kind of feed. Indeed, there are larger operations than commercial feed mills which are subject to the provisions of this bill.

I do not quarrel with the objective of bringing some of those operating under the auspices of this bill. Many of these operations are vertically integrated, to the degree that perhaps the poultry or other livestock are slaughtered right on those same premises. I interpret the bill quite differently than does the hon. member for Red Deer. Veterinary prescribed drugs can be added to feeds manufactured or put together on a farmer's own premises. By regulation the bill provides for that exemption. That has been done in the past, and this bill does not change that practice, which has gone on through the years.

The bill expands the definition of what constitutes a feed to meet better today's needs. I certainly would not be supporting this bill if I thought it interfered with the rights of farmers to the extent the hon. member for Red Deer suggested. I would not be supporting it if I thought it was that kind of bill, but indeed I do support it, and I believe it contains a couple of changes which bring the bill up to date, and it is more realistic in terms of feed in agriculture today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, at the outset I wish to say that this is a relatively small housekeeping bill. If that had not been so, the government would not have entrusted it to the Senate to introduce. In the main the changes which have been made in this bill have been housekeeping changes. Over the years there have been changes in the feed patterns of agriculture, particularly in vertically integrated operations with automatic feeding programs, where it is absolutely necessary to do the miximg either in concert with the feeding arrangements or at least on the farm rather than in mills, as was previously the case.

During the committee discussions considerable evidence was requested and obtained with regard to drugs which are added to feed. There is a fear on the part of consumers and producers that additions to feed may leave a residue in the end product which may affect the health of the nation. No one suggested that the protection afforded in this bill should be extended only to feed mills. It is agreed that it should also be extended to farm feed mixing mills.

It was generally agreed that there are very few farmers who would do anything on their farms which would be detrimental to the end product. It has been said that drugs have to be added to the production cycle of almost all our agricultural products, and that is so. It is also true that there are instructions in the bill about how the drugs will be administered, but departmental officials have not asked for full control of the mixing which may involve adding some drugs. Our acts are sufficiently tight that those drugs can legitimately be administered by following the directions provided.

● (1750)

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) reminds me of the person who says we should eliminate the controls simply because they may be abused. There is not very much wrong with most of the prescriptions issued in this country for people who have difficulty sleeping, or who are nervous or suffer from hypertension, but almost all the suicides are as a result of prescribed drugs. So it is not the drugs that are at fault but the way they are administered. If someone is going to administer them in a dangerous manner it is difficult to protect people from that.

I am concerned that in one part of the bill we have added a number of new things to food that are not actually food at all but work in the feed process and biological function of the animal. I do not think the government has ascertained the long range effect of some of these materials such as nitrogen, enzymes, and some of the other things that provide biological function rather than food value. We have not set up long term testing facilities and I think this is a weakness in our agricultural program. Some of these products have been brought about by changes in protein prices throughout the world, but when they are added as a substitute I think our veterinary services should have a testing program, rather than the producing company, to assess the long range effects of them. In some cases those companies have done the necessary research before the department can put on the label the way a product is to be used.

I believe that if someone comes to my farm with a mixing plant they should be subject to the same restrictions as if I take my produce to the feed mill where the mixing will be done under government supervision. I should be protected when it is done by the operator on my farm. As the Minister of Agriculture said, the operator should at least be able to read the label and know how the machine operates, and I should be assured that the mix is of the proper proportions and done under sanitary conditions.

This bill goes back to the Senate, and of course we would improve on anything they can do. We have done so with a couple of small amendments, but of course the Senate may not agree and the bill may come back to this House. I feel, however, that the department has brought the Feed Grains Act up to today's standards by the introduction of these changes. I sincerely hope it will give serious consideration to long term testing as I believe difficulties are developing from new materials being used without enough research being done by the government, independent of the company selling a particular commodity.

I am quite pleased that we were able to make a number of changes in the bill, and I appreciate the efforts of those who appeared before the committee. I think their advice was to the point and enabled the committee to make worth-while changes in the bill.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I want to say a few words and to present a very persuasive argument that I am sure all progressive members of the House will agree with—including the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

I want to object to the way this bill was brought in, through the Senate. It is a government bill introduced in the Senate, and I think the time has come when we as parliamentarians should be responsible for bills in this House and the other place. Senators are not elected; they are not responsible to anyone; they do not have to face re-election. Many of them are appointed because of political I.O.U.s, and in the Senate they represent their party and lobby for corporations.

In principle I object to any government bill being introduced in the other place. All legislation should be dealt with by the elected representatives of the people and not by those who have no responsibility to meet the people in an election campaign. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would probably agree. He has been outspoken on this subject and it is a pity he is not here today. It is ironic that one of the bills that goes that route comes under his purview. I think my point is valid not just because I think the other place should be abolished—and I think it should—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but he must speak on the content of the bill, which is a bill to amend the Feeds Act.

Mr. Nystrom: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I have made my point. You have just heard one of the briefest speeches ever made in this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I should like to call it 6.30.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to the order made on Wednesday, November 5, it being 6.02 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.02 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

SUGGESTION MEMBERS SHOULD GIVE INFORMATION RELATED TO INVESTIGATIONS TO FORCE PRIVATELY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) as follows:

That the Prime Minister advise the House with reference to a public statement quoting the Solicitor General as saying that opposition members should deal privately with the RCMP with information pertaining to investigations, such as the present Olympic games investigation or the Senator Giguère investigation, rather than raising these matters publicly in parliament whether this represents government policy and if so, that the Prime Minister advise the House further whether it is now government policy that members of parliament should not raise matters of grave concern and make recommendations thereon in this chamber, including situations that obviously require judicial inquiries.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED STUDY OF SOCIAL CREDIT MONETARY SYSTEM TO COMBAT INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

As the anti-inflation measures of the government are running into vigorous opposition on the part of workers, who are proving thereby that they have no confidence in the proposals of the government, and as the confidence of the people is an essential condition of the success of any measure intended to contain and check inflation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the House study, as soon as possible, the monetary measures suggested by hon. members of the Social Credit Party of Canada with a view to putting an end to the ravages of inflation through the implementation of an annual guaranteed income paid to all, and the application of a retail discount to the purchase of all essential goods.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO SAUNDERS AIRCRAFT CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the announcement by the Saunders Aircraft Corporation of Gimli, Manitoba, that on December 31 of this year the remaining 200 employees will be laid off. In light of the company's assurance that the ST28 aircraft is very near completion and certification, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce act immediately to review Saunders' PAIT application with the view to a positive response and in addition to explore every and all avenues of assistance that will prevent the economic collapse and related human hardship, and that, the minister adopt the same positive attitude toward Saunders as the government has taken toward eastern companies such as the de Havilland Aircraft of Canada, Limited.

Mr. Speaker: A motion under Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REASON PRIME MINISTER TOLD MR. MARCHAND NOT TO SPEAK TO MEMBERS OF FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister confirm that he told the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Lange-lier, not to talk to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If so can the Prime Minister tell the House on what basis he adopted this, to put it mildly, unusual position?

● (1410)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Very simply, Mr. Speaker, I told the Minister without Portfolio yesterday, when he told me the police had asked him if he would help them in an investigation, that he should see the police; but, this morning, when the Minister without Portfolio arrived at his office, the press already knew he was going to see the police, and this is something of a distressing situation. I told him that, in the circumstances, I should like to talk to the commissioner of the police before he agreed to go ahead with—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Are you the head of the RCMP?

Mr. Trudeau: Before he agreed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —before he went along with the meeting, which he had previously agreed to do. I think hon. members of this House should be rather surprised and indignant, if this is the fact, that the press should know about the police's visitation.

An hon. Member: Marchand told them!

Mr. Trudeau: I want to know how this happened and I am going to discuss with the commissioner how it did happen.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it, from what the Prime Minister said, that he has not yet been in touch with the RCM Police Commissioner and has not given the Commissioner of the RCM Police instructions with regard to this investigation. I ask this for clarification, although I suggest that the Prime Minister's action in intervening lends itself to the interpretation of trying to create some kind of distraction—

Mr. Trudeau: As some kind of what?

Mr. Stanfield: Distraction.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Leader of the Opposition implies by this word "distraction." I know that the police raided the office last year of the hon. member from Kingston. I know if the press had been there before the police arrived, hon. members opposite would have been pretty indignant.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister one more supplementary question?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It had better be good.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON PUBLIC, JUDICIAL INQUIRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): It will be good, Joe. The government having indicated it would take appropriate action in connection with the Sky Shops affair and all related matters by having the RCMP investigate the matter and the Prime Minister, for reasons he has given the House, having interfered personally with the investigation, may I ask if the Prime Minister does not think the time has come for a full public, judicial inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear to the House that on all previous occasions when the police or the Solicitor General—this one or the previous one—informed me that they were going to carry out an investigation of some well known member of the Canadian public, whether Liberal, Tory, NDP or somebody outside, I always told them, "Look, do your duty; I do not want to interfere in any way."

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Why interfere on this occasion?

Mr. Trudeau: Yesterday, when the minister told me that the police wanted to see him, I said exactly the same thing to him: co-operate with them in every way. It happened that when the minister arrived this morning and saw the press outside his office, he was somewhat indignant and wanted to know how the press had known this.

An hon. Member: Because he had told them.

Mr. Trudeau: He alluded to an article in the Gazette yesterday, which suggested the police were leaking things. I, personally, do not believe this, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: We have a free press.

Mr. Trudeau: I have been closely associated with the police for many years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: This began when I was minister of justice. As Prime Minister I am, as the House knows, in constant contact with the police. But the fact remains: when the minister was prepared to receive the police, he found the press there first. He telephoned me and I said, "Look, you tell them that before they proceed with their interrogation I want to talk with the commissioner, to try to find out whether the press was guessing, whether it knew and, if so, how did it know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What a story!

Mr. Horner: What about moral suasion?

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL OF CONDITIONS FOR MEETING WITH MR. MARCHAND—POSSIBILITY OF MEETINGS WITH OTHER MEMBERS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Solicitor General. Did the minister discuss with either the Prime Minister or his colleague, the Minister without Portfolio, in advance of this morning's meeting the terms and conditions upon which representatives of the RCMP would be given voluntary access to certain members of the government? Can the Solicitor General tell the House whether, to his knowledge, the RCMP have already met with or are planning to seek meetings with any other members of the government with regard to this investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. I did not know the Minister without Portfolio was going to meet with the RCMP. They had not advised me, nor had the minister. No instructions were given to the RCMP other than that they should follow the policy that was laid down and made clear, namely that whenever they wish to make a seizure or search, they go through the Speaker of this House and follow all laws, regulations and the policy laid down within the force. They did tell me they were going to be visiting, on a co-operative basis certain members of this House of different political parties on this question.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED LEAKING OF INFORMATION BY THE FORCE TO THE PRESS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Now that the Solicitor General is aware of the comments and question raised by certain of his colleagues, including the Prime Minister, in respect of alleged leaking of information to the press by the RCMP, has he made an inquiry into this matter and what has he to tell us is defence of the RCMP for whom he is the responsible minister?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what was said by the Prime Minister. I did contact the Commissioner of the RCMP when I heard the press was at the office of the Minister without Portfolio. I was shocked to learn this. It appears somebody must have told them that a private meeting had been arranged between the minister and the RCMP. The Commissioner stated that he, too, was shocked because he felt that nobody in the police would do that. He has promised to investigate it. He said he would meet with the Prime Minister, as the Prime Minister said, to discuss the results of his investigation.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—ATTITUDE OF PROVINCES TOWARDS CONTROLLING PROFESSIONAL INCOMES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the concern of many people that under the government's wage, income and price control program, professional incomes are not likely to be effectively controlled, did the government put forward specific proposals before the provincial finance ministers yesterday in this area? Also, can he inform the House whether some form of agreement was reached by which professional incomes will be brought within the controls program?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the meeting had before it the proposal in the white paper with regard to the control of professional income. I can say that there was general agreement with the concept that the pricing of professional services should be controlled with the co-operation of the provinces through the control of billing practices by each of the professions. In that sense, there was general agreement in that regard.

With respect to the incomes of professionals as opposed to the pricing of their services, there was not an agreement among the provinces. Some favoured a surtax, either on the whole or over a certain level of an individual's income. Some favoured none at all. There was a spectrum of opinion among the provinces but a conclusion to the effect that the federal government would have to make the final determination on any action that might be taken against incomes above and beyond that provided for by the guidelines.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REASON FOR REJECTION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OF SURTAX ON PROFESSIONAL INCOMES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): On the latter point, can the minister inform the House why the federal government did not agree either to some form of surtax on incomes at a certain level or with the idea proposed by at least one province, namely that at a certain level there be a capping of incomes under the program? Why did the federal government reject both of these approaches? Also, what kind of specific program is the federal government going to adopt?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): With regard to the pricing of professional services, the federal government will certainly adopt the program put forward in the white paper, which was agreed to by the provinces. No final determination has been made by the government on the question of surtax. One of the purposes of putting that issue before the meeting was to get a definitive reading from ministers of their positions. As I say, opinion was almost equally divided among three different positions.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS CONTROLLING PROFESSIONAL INCOMES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Can the minister inform the House when we and the provinces can expect to learn the precise nature of the program the federal government will act upon in terms of controlling professional incomes?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): That is a matter which will have to be considered by my colleagues on my recommendation and I would expect the results of that consideration will be known within a matter of weeks. I could not, however, give an exact date.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF STRICTER PRICE CONTROL IN VIEW OF OPPOSITION BY LABOUR

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Prime Minister.

In light of the demonstrations of tens of thousands of Canadians who are against the government anti-inflation measures because they do not feel that the government will be able to control prices, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to propose stricter price and wage controls, in order to win the confidence of the people in the fight against inflation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is very broad. The Minister of Finance has just answered a previous question by saying that there would certainly be further particulars to announce about the program and, in that sense, the answer to the hon. member's question is yes. But if the hon. member wants to know if we are going to change the whole structure of our program, the answer is no.

AIR CANADA

RESIGNATION OF MR. PRATTE—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTER OF RESIGNATION AND REPLY—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUCCESSOR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Despite the Prime Minister's obvious lack of familiarity with the subject matter yesterday, I should like to direct a question to him once again: it has to do with Air Canada and its Chief Executive Officer. In the light of the answer he gave the House yesterday, will he confirm today whether Mr. Yves Pratte has resigned effective December 1, 1975?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Minister of Transport conveyed some information to me this morning with regard to this resignation. Perhaps he could answer the question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can confirm that a letter of resignation from Mr. Pratte, effective December 1, has been received. A reply is going out to him this afternoon.

An hon. Member: Who's next?

Mr. Murta: Will the minister table Mr. Pratte's letter of resignation, and will he also table the reply he is sending? Can he confirm that none of the candidates for either of the senior positions in Air Canada currently under consideration by the government is from within existing management of the airline? I ask this because of reports that Mr. Vaughan also intends to resign.

Mr. Lang: I am certainly prepared to make the correspondence available to the House, although I will only do so after my letter has arrived in Mr. Pratte's hands. There is no truth to any suggestion that there will be any limitation set on the consideration of the best possible management of Air Canada and appointments to those posts in future.

Mr. Murta: Can the minister tell the House when the government will be prepared to announce a successor to Mr. Pratte and also a successor to Mr. Vaughan, in the event that Mr. Vaughan also resigns, as has been reported?

Mr. Lang: First, I should say that the board, in accepting Mr. Pratte's resignation effective December 1, did name Mr. Taschereau to be acting chairman of the company. The decision with regard to a successor will be taken as soon as possible and will be announced at that time. I would not want to speculate further upon that matter.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES TO PROVINCIAL MARKETING BOARDS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My question is to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister whether in the course of his discussions with the provincial finance ministers agreement has been reached on the treatment of provincial marketing boards within the guidelines contained in the white paper?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is general acceptance by the provincial ministers that provincial marketing agencies which have responsibility for setting prices of commodities should be included within the guidelines. The provincial governments, either directly or through over-all monitoring agencies of a kind similar to the National Farm Products Marketing Council, would assume responsibility for controlling the provincial boards and for making certain that they stayed within the guidelines.

It was also generally agreed by provincial ministers that the marketing agencies within the provinces would be instructed to give full co-operation to the Anti-Inflation Board in any inquiries that the board would want to make in the course of monitoring prices.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED IN VIEW OF FAILURE OF PROVINCES TO AGREE ON CONTROLLING PROFESSIONAL INCOMES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there was no consensus reached on professional incomes, commissions, salaries and so on, what is going to be the next step in view of the fact that the bill now before the House will soon become law? Is another follow-up meeting going to take place, or what procedure is going to be followed in view of the failure to arrive at a consensus on professional incomes?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I can correct the hon. gentleman, there was agreement that the price restraint aspect of professional incomes as proposed in the white paper would be carried out by the federal and provincial governments in co-operation. Bill C-73 proposes that the restraining of professional incomes be carried out in co-operation.

What was not agreed on was whether professionals should be selected out, as others in the economy have not been selected out, for special and additional taxation treatment. This would, of course, be a matter for a taxation bill which would have to be introduced. There was agreement in the meeting that on that question the federal government would have to assume responsibility if a surtax were to be imposed. That is a question to which my colleagues and I will have to give some attention.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ACTION TO ENABLE RUMANIAN CITIZENS TO JOIN RELATIVES IN CANADA

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I was pleased to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs' statement yesterday that the Polish government is going to adopt a more flexible policy of permitting exit visas to Polish citizens who wish to join their relatives in Canada. Would the Prime Minister use his persuasive powers during the visit of President Ceausescu of Rumania to make it possible for Rumanian citizens to join their relatives in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already raised this matter with the president when I met him in Helsinki. I pressed upon him the importance of good relations with Canada by facilitating family reunions, as I have with other leaders in eastern Europe. I should correct the hon. member; there is no impending visit of the president. I did see him in Helsinki. For the past year various dates have been looked at, but I do not know of any specific date having been agreed on at this time.

TAKEOVER OF WESTINGHOUSE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Inasmuch as the minister is leaving for France on Saturday—and I might say we wish him well in his endeavours to stimulate our trade with France—will the minister make a statement in the House on the Westinghouse matter before he leaves?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much whether it will be possible to make a statement, but I can assure the hon. member that I do not propose to leave without having some activity take place that will at least stabilize the situation. In other words, my talks with the parties are still continuing, as I believe the hon. member is aware, and I am hopeful that today or tomorrow something will occur that will at least be reassuring to the company concerned and its employees.

FINDINGS OF DR. BARBEAU ON MERCURY POISONING—SUGGESTED RE-EXAMINATION OF INDIANS AT WHITE DOG AND GRASSY NARROWS RESERVES

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns public statements made by Dr. Andre Barbeau, director of the neurobiology department of the Montreal Institute of Clinical Research and also member of the committee of study and intervention on the danger of mercury in the Quebec environment. In view of Dr. Barbeau's statement that there is some mercury disease affecting five Cree Indians in northern Quebec, and that Dr. Barbeau has come up with some different interpretations of existing clinical studies, would the minister undertake to ensure that Indian residents of the White Dog and Grassy Narrows reserves have their documents forwarded to Dr. Barbeau and his associates for further investigation and, if necessary, that these people themselves be re-examined and the situation investigated further?

● (1430)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to take the hon. member's suggestion into consideration and to discuss it with my officials. I would nonetheless remind the hon. member that we already have in the area he mentioned a world-known specialist, Dr. Clarkson I believe, who is already working with the Indians. Dr. Clarkson is an expert of international renown. I will certainly consider with great interest the hon. member's suggestion and if it can bring about some progress in that field, I shall certainly take the necessary steps to implement it, with the agreement of the Indian people, of course.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSED INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSION AND STUDY OF RETIREMENT POLICIES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Canadian Council on Social Development has recently published a report entitled "How Much Choice—Retirement Policies in Canada" in which it is declared that more than half of the senior citizens of this country exist on incomes at or below the poverty level, may I ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare if consideration will be given to an immediate catch-up increase in old age pensions, and will the government also institute a study of retirement policies in this country?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows quite well, there are many discussions as to what constitutes the poverty level. The Canadian Council on Social Development has set its own level, as well as the Economic Council and Statistics Canada. Therefore, I think that it is difficult to hold a useful general debate on the poverty level. As for the member's suggestion for an immediate increase in the basic pension, the matter is not being considered at the present time but, as I said to the hon. member, it will be increased according to the rise in the cost of living as of January 1 next.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the minister what we can do to get the government to face up to the reality of poverty as it is experienced by our senior citizens?

KNOWLEDGE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL OF MEETING BETWEEN MEMBERS OF FORCE AND MR. MARCHAND AND DIRECTIONS OF PRIME MINISTER Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Solicitor General in connection with the mysterious events that have taken place in the last few hours, in particular with regard to the dangerous course to justice that was indulged in by the Prime Minister. I want to ask the minister this question so he can remove some of the veil of mystery about this matter. When did he first become aware of the fact that the Mounted Police were going to interview the Minister without Portfolio, and whenever he received that information, did he communicate it to the Prime Minister and, if so, when? My final question, all in the one parcel, is this: Was he aware of the fact that the Prime Minister had informed the Minister without Portfolio that he should not talk with the police until it was revealed from what source the press was able to know in advance of the course that was going to be followed by the Mounted Police? There is something very mysterious about this and we would like to hear a little more.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no mystery about it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh no!

Mr. Allmand: As I mentioned in answer to an earlier question, I only found out that the RCMP were paying a visit to the Minister without Portfolio late this morning.

An hon. Member: Everybody knew but you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: It was long after the meeting was to have taken place. I did know, however, that the RCMP intended to discuss this matter with some ministers and members of parliament, as I said, in both the opposition and the government parties.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary answer; the right hon. Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Trudeau: I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not want me to deceive the House, Mr. Speaker. I did not tell the minister not to talk to the police.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: I told him, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: This morning?

Mr. Trudeau: This morning, yes, when he phoned me. I did tell him yesterday that he should see the police. I told him this morning that he should see the police but he should tell them he would co-operate with their investigation after I had cleared with the commissioner—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Interference with the law; that is all it is.

Mr. Trudeau: —after I had cleared with the commissioner the question of the publicity to be given to the interview.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That makes the mystery even more difficult to understand.

Mr. Trudeau: In what way?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister should not be so aroused. Obviously, we have touched a sore point with him.

Mr. Trudeau: What sore point?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister what justification there was for anyone to advise the Solicitor General that the Mounted Police should not be talked to until he had ascertained where the leak to the press had occurred. What is the basis for this and what was the reason for such concern that the Minister without Portfolio should not talk until you found out how the press got the information?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member is not repeating the facts correctly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All right, you give them to us.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, when I reported to the Commissioner of the RCMP that members of the press were present when the RCMP officers went to visit Mr. Marchand's office this morning—

An hon. Member: At what time?

Mr. Allmand: —at the agreed visit with co-operation, the commissioner himself was shocked, and he agreed he should look into this. He thought it was a shocking thing that publicity should be given to that kind of interview.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was there something to cover up?

ALLEGATION MR. MARCHAND TOLD PRESS OF IMPENDING VISIT BY FORCE—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF OTHER MEMBERS BEING INTERVIEWED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is not a fact that the Minister without Portfolio informed a member of the media prior to the RCMP visit that the RCMP would visit his office on the a.m. of November 27, and that is how the press knew of the impending visit, and that is why the cameras were there? Is that correct?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How does the Prime Minister know?

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General, since he has made some serious charges about other members opposite, that other members were under investigation, who are those members?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this hon. member is also distorting what has been said.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I did not say that members of the cabinet or members of parliament in all parties were under investigation.

An hon. Member: Just some of them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: I said that they had agreed to meet with the police in order to help the police with this investigation. They were helping the police, but not being investigated.

An hon. Member: Another semantical gyration.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. MARCHAND REQUESTED TO PRODUCE DOCUMENTS

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister without Portfolio regarding the meeting this morning. Will the minister tell us whether the RCMP asked him to voluntarily provide them with any documentation and, if so, has he agreed to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not so dramatic. I have been coming to Ottawa for more than 10 years. I usually arrive on Parliament Hill between 8 and 8.30 a.m. and it is the first time that there was a camera direct on me. I had agreed to give an interview to the RCMP. I had been asked to see them. I am quite willing to do so; they were welcome and I told them that I would extend to them all the co-operation that can be expected from a minister. The only thing that I do not accept is that the RCMP should directly or indirectly notify the press. That individual who was at the foot of the stairs when I arrived was not—

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why not? Why shouldn't there?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Why not? Oh, come on!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You won't talk.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): You are supposed to be there to defend human rights. If this is your position, keep it, please.

INQUIRY WHETHER MR. MARCHAND TOLD PRESS OF IMPENDING VISIT BY FORCE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have just one supplementary for the minister. Since he was interrupted by the Prime Minister a few moments ago when he was about to answer a question by the hon. member for Calgary North, can the minister now tell us whether he, himself, may have told any member of the parliamentary press gallery that such a meeting was taking place this morning.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, after I met the television crew in the gallery, I went to the cafeteria on the fifth floor, and it is probable that about a hundred persons noticed that. A newspaperman, a Mr. Drewery I was told—I did not know his name—came to me and asked: Is it true that your house was—

[English]

—I think was raided in Quebec City or here in Ottawa. I said there was no foundation for that. Actually, I phoned my wife and asked whether there were any RCMP in my house in Quebec and she said no that she never heard about that. I knew nothing happened here in Ottawa. He said it was a rumour in Toronto. I said: "How come it is a rumour in Toronto". I am ready. I am going to receive the RCMP at nine o'clock this morning. I have nothing to hide. I am ready to receive them but I have an objection that the RCMP, if it is responsible for that and maybe it is not, used any kind of media to make an inquiry of any member of this House or cabinet member.

Mr. Nielsen: It could have been one of your staff.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am just answering the question. This is what I said to the police. I said that if they wanted to meet me in a regular fashion and say, "Do you have anything you can give to the police that can help the police in this investigation", I am ready to meet them any time but not with the press gathered around.

Oral Questions

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister without Portfolio telling the House that he said the discussion with the members of the press gallery took place this morning and did not take place last night. Is that what he is saying?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): What I am saying, and it is the only important thing, is not that the press gallery should not be interested in that. They are interested in it and rightly so. But what I do not understand is that the first thing this morning when I arrived I learned that some newspaper man knew that I was going to have a meeting with the RCMP. This is the only thing I am complaining about.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Forrestall: Might I rise on a question of privilege.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ALLEGED FAILURE OF STEEL-BELTED RADIAL TIRES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It deals with the high rate of failure of steel-belted radial automobile tires, many of which have resulted in automobile crashes involving fatalities. In view of the seriousness of this matter, will the minister say whether his department is monitoring this situation and whether he is planning any measures to protect the motoring public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is virtually the first I have heard of this matter and if there is a responsibility within my department I will be glad to look into it. My recollection is that automobile safety is a matter for the Department of Transport, but I will make sure that the matter is called to the attention of the appropriate parties.

DATE OF TABLING OF ESTEY REPORT—POSSIBILITY OF TWO REPORTS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of the transpiration of events concerning the resignation of the chief executive officer of Air Canada and the prospect of more resignations, can the minister now say how many more weeks it will be before the Estey report is circulated and tabled in the House and could he inform us whether Judge Estey has submitted more than one report on his investigation into Air Canada. If so, will both reports be tabled in the House.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a precise date about the completion of the work on the report but it still will be some considerable time. The report by Chief Justice Estey was in two parts, the main portion of which was a report dealing with the broad ranging matters of the inquiry; a second, very small report, was a confidential report dealing with certain internal financial and control matters which Chief Justice Estey, as the commissioner, dealt with in a confidential way.

Mr. Mazankowski: In view of the transpiration of events and the circumstances surrounding the Air Canada fiasco, I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the minister is now prepared to say whether both reports will be tabled in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lang: No, Mr. Speaker. The commissioner in going in a confidential way into certain aspects of financial matters had determined at that time that those matters and his consideration of them would be confidential and that will remain the case.

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN FINANCING OF GAMES

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Prime Minister for returning to the same question concerning the financing of the Montreal Olympic Games.

Since the Quebec government has taken upon itself the responsibility for the Olympic Games, can the Prime Minister inform this House whether representations have been made by the Quebec government requesting a greater federal participation in financing the development of this project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as far as I know, the Quebec government has not made any such representations. All I know is that Premier Bourassa told me about a year ago that he knew there would be a deficit but he assured me that he would keep his word, that he would not ask the federal government to make up that deficit.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. We on this side of the House as well as, I think, all hon. members representing Quebec ridings in the House are surprised to note that there is a party which does not talk about the Olympics, namely the Progressive Conservative party.

Has the Prime Minister or any other minister had any report from the Progressive Conservative party outside the House that they will ask the government to grant some additional funds to the province of Quebec to help to finance the Olympics, or is the Progressive Conservative party still denying that they are concerned by this project, thus playing into the separatists' hands?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will be precise: no, I did not hear of any request from the Progressive Conservative party that we should intervene in any way in the Olympics deficit. I would think that they will as usual try to stand on both sides of the question.

PROPOSED AID TO ATHLETES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, by a curious coincidence I have been waiting for an opportunity to ask the right hon. gentleman whether it would not be a good idea if Canada, the country or the nation spent more time worrying about helping our Canadian athletes and seeing that they are properly financed rather than building monuments.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has expressed views on that.

Mr. Fairweather: Many of the athletes are on welfare.

● (1450)

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of National Health and Welfare has a program for assistance to athletes at the Canada games, the PanAmerican games and various games in which Canadian athletes participate. We think this is indeed a very important question. The question of the Olympics itself, which does require buildings, was raised in a completely different fashion, and I point out to the hon. member that his party supported the government when it proposed certain legislation to permit the self-financing of the Olympics.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT LAY-OFFS AND JOB TRANSFERS FROM CAPE BRETON BE DELAYED

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In light of the tragically high unemployment rate on Cape Breton Island and, indeed, in all the rest of Nova Scotia, would the minister contact the President of Canadian National Railways and ascertain if a moratorium could be declared on all job transfers out of the area and all lay-offs, including members of the police staff of Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will treat those remarks as a representation and act upon them accordingly.

MARKETING BOARDS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON METHOD OF OPERATION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Because of the interest shown lately in marketing boards in the country, would the minister make a statement on motions about the procedures used by marketing boards, making a particular distinction between selling agencies and supply-management boards?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if there is anything I have been accused of, it is of making too many statements on marketing boards. I am sure the records show there has been much said. It is too bad people do not read them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MULTICULTURALISM

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF PROPOSED POLICY CHANGES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. It relates to the proposed changes in the present multiculturalism program which have been suggested to cabinet by the Minister of Labour, who is in charge of multiculturalism. In view of the bombardment of information relating to bilingualism, including a recently announced bilingual districts recommendation, would the Prime Minister review the proposed changes in the multiculturalism program in order that those Canadians who are not members of Canada's two majority language groups will not be made to feel that they are second class citizens?

Right hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that seems to me to be a somewhat rhetorical question. Nobody on this side feels that the group of Canadians who are non-English and non-French are second class citizens. I hope the hon. member in his question is not implying that he does.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSITION OF PROVINCES ON APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES IN AREAS OF PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance regarding the meeting with representatives of the provinces yesterday and the subject of the government's anti-inflationary program. On Tuesday last the minister said, and I quote: "I hope to be able to report more fully to the House after that meeting as to the final position of the various provinces." With regard to areas peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the provinces, such as public officials, teachers and so on, is the minister able to say that all the provinces have now agreed either to allow this area of jurisdiction to be handled by the Anti-Inflationary Board or to establish their own machinery for this purpose for the life of the government's bill?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was not possible to obtain agreement on that point. There was agreement that the question should be addressed when the bill has received Royal Assent and when the regulations have been made available for scrutiny. With respect to those provinces which have not yet declared themselves—that is to say, all of those except for Ontario, Quebec and Alberta—I think a fair summary of their position is that they have made no commitments as to whether they would participate under clause 4(3) or clause 4(4). They are leaving that option open, with the possible exception of Saskatchewan, which left open the possibility that it would not participate in the anti-inflation program at all.

Mr. Stanfield: While the minister told the House on November 14 that the provinces had been provided with a full background in order to make a decision, that is not the view of a significant number of provinces, and I ask the Minister of Finance whether a number of provinces have already made it clear that they will not make a commitment beyond a period of time substantially shorter than three and a quarter years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As the hon. gentleman knows, with regard to the second part of the question, that certainly has been the position of the province of Alberta. We have put out to the provinces in turn the desirability of having a national program to cover all Canada, one which should be of general national application, so far as that can be achieved.

With regard to the question on information, we had, of course, not only given the provinces the information in the white paper, but there was further consultation at a finance ministers' meeting and at officials' meetings. The decision most of the provinces declared yesterday was that they would make their final decision on clause 4(3) or clause 4(4) after they had had an opportunity of seeing the bill in its final form and examining the proposed draft agreement which, in the case of clause 4(3), had been set before them, and also after they had an opportunity of examining the regulations, so this does represent an evolution from the previous position.

Mr. Stanfield: In other words, the Minister of Finance is asking the Parliament of Canada to make a final decision on the bill without the Parliament of Canada having any definitive knowledge as to what the position of the provinces will be with respect to the bill?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Not quite, Mr. Speaker. The provinces yesterday indicated that while there were questions of detail, with the possible exception of Saskatchewan, the other provinces indicated that except for those questions of detail they would support the program.

Mr. Stanfield: For how long?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The manner in which they will support either clause 4(3) or clause 4(4) is a matter on which they have chosen to reserve judgment until the legislation is definitive in its final form and until the regulations are before them. This, of course, is their option. Somebody has to make a decision in this regard, and I think the first decision should be made by the Parliament of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFER OF WHEATLAND GRAIN LIMITED TO PURCHASE ELEVATOR AT LETHBRIDGE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In August of this year I wrote to the minister informing him of the desire of a Lethbridge firm to purchase the terminal grain elevator in Lethbridge. In light of the fact that a story appeared in the Lethbridge Herald this week stating that two foreign-owned firms were negotiating with the Canadian Grain Commission, would the minister inform the House if this means he has ignored my representation made on behalf on Wheatland Grain Limited of Lethbridge, which is an all Canadian-owned firm?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the elevator has been one which has not made very much money for the Government of Canada and has cost taxpayers a great deal of money. I do not think there is any way I should give it away, and if the hon. member knows someone who wants to make a reasonable offer for it, that offer will be considered, the same as any other offer made for that elevator.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—FORMULA TO BE USED BY MARKETING BOARDS IN COMPUTING COST OF PRODUCTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Minister of Finance on the matter of marketing boards, and while doing so to protest the horrible mistake in this morning's Globe and Mail in listing me as a Progressive Conservative.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: We don't need you.

Mr. Muir: What an insult to the Conservatives.

Mr. Benjamin: I know they need help, but I do not want to be the one to give it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): We don't need it from you.

Mr. Benjamin: In the negotiations yesterday regarding the position of marketing boards under the anti-inflation program was agreement reached with the provinces on the criteria for costs of production in order to follow the cost pass through formula? Was agreement reached on a formula of cost of production, or will the formula under federal legislation, which is totally inadequate, be relied upon in computing cost of production on which basis marketing boards set their prices? Secondly, can he tell us who will have the authority to require marketing boards to live up to the restraint program? Will it be the Anti-Inflation Board or will it be the Farm Products Marketing Council and the provincial natural products marketing councils who will have the authority?

● (1500)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question as posed by the hon. member for St. John's East. With regard to the first part of the question, it was agreed the cost pass through method would be applied.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the first opportunity available to me to bring to the attention of the House a matter that I am sure the Minister without Portfolio would not want to leave without having corrected. As an individual who witnessed the events this morning at nine o'clock, I have some concern with the sequence which the minister has left with the House.

The minister might want to refresh his memory and recall the exact sequence of the conversation he had with Mr. John Drewery of the CBC, a rather distinguished war hero and a man of some integrity. Mr. Drewery conveyed to me the essence of certain conversations that he had with the minister shortly after nine o'clock this morning, not around ten o'clock. The minister might want to correct the sequence of events so that there is no misunderstanding as to when he had his conversations with Mr. Drewery.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I am less precise in English than in French, but then I may not be precise in either of the official languages. Anyway, let us say that I am more at ease in French. I said nothing to any newpaperman yesterday. The interview was set up. My secretary told me: the RCMP want to see you. I said: Yes. She asked: When? I said: As soon as possible; whenever you can find a moment, I am willing to meet the RCMP to discuss these matters. I talked to a newspaperman for the first time in the cafeteria after—

Mr. Forrestall: After ten.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No, not after ten, but after I arrived at my office and found a photographer, a cameraman. I know because I was there.

Mr. Forrestall: I was there too.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Perhaps the hon. member was still asleep, but I was not. I merely say that, when I entered the Parliament Buildings, there was a cameraman. Yet, I have done a number of things, here, in Ottawa. For the first time in my life in Ottawa, there was a cameraman who, at 8.30 a.m., was taking pictures of me going up the stairs. Later, around 8.45, 8.50 or 8.55 a.m., I went to the cafeteria. A newspaperman came to talk to me. I told him: I am meeting the RCMP at 9 a.m. The RCMP were not there at 9 a.m.; they came at 9.15. I was there at 9. I am not the RCMP, I have not all the rights they may have. I merely say that those who are appointed to defend the civil rights of citizens should defend the civil rights not only of ordinary citizens, but also of Members of Parliament and public officials.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Prime Minister on the same question of privilege.

Mr. Trudeau: On a different question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, relating to the same general question. Because of the peculiar nature of the questions asked by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), I want to make it perfectly clear in the House, on a question of personal privilege, that there are no orders, no theory and no practice under which the police must ask my permission to talk to any minister, any member of the House of Commons or any member of the Canadian public.

I happened to know of this particular visit because the minister informed me yesterday that he was going to respond to their request. I know of other ministers who in the same series of investigations have been visited by the police. They did not tell me nor, do they have to tell me. Therefore, there is no practice, nor do I wish to establish one, of the police letting me know when they are going to carry out any particular investigation. The reason I interrupted this one in its course is that I think it important to follow up on the question of publicity, as has been stated by the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. MacLean: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the government House leader the usual question with regard to the business the government intends to place before parliament in the next week.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to proceed with Bill C-73 today and complete the report stage. If there is unanimous agreement, which I hope there will be, we shall proceed today to third reading. We shall continue to debate this bill until third reading has been disposed of. I have been having some conversations with my colleague, the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, about the possibility that we might then proceed to Bill C-41. If we can reach some agreement with respect to that debate, we shall proceed on that basis; if not, we will take any bills that have been reported from standing committees so they can be sent to the Senate as quickly as possible.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, in the event that unanimous consent to go immediately to third reading of Bill C-73 is not obtained, would the government House leader tell us what he intends to substitute?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we would then proceed with Bill C-41.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the government House leader knows, I have been asking every Thursday, for four or five weeks, about the progress of a bill recommended by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs concerning Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war. In view of the fact that the Minister of Veterans Affairs found it difficult to assure the standing committee this morning when this legislation might come in, and in view of the desire of the committee to have the legislation during the present session, can the government House leader give us the hope that this will happen?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I really cannot commit my colleagues. The matter is still on the agenda of cabinet, but no final decision has been taken.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON DEFENCE STRUCTURE REVIEW

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that a tabling of documents will be accompanied by a statement on motions.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, decisions of far reaching importance for the future of the Canadian Armed Forces have been made by the government, and I wish at this time to inform the House of the conclusions the government has reached at this stage of the defence structure review.

The government has confirmed the four priority roles of the Department of National Defence, which are: first of all, a commitment to the defence, security and sovereignty of Canada; secondly, a commitment to the defence of North America; thirdly, a commitment to collective security within the NATO alliance; and fourthly, a commitment to our country's unique and important contribution to international peacekeeping.

The conclusions of the defence structure review confirm that Canada will continue to have a combined regular and reserve force of more than 100,000 personnel, made up of 78,000 regular personnel and 22,000 reserve personnel. This combined regular and reserve force of 100,000 will ensure that the Canadian Armed Forces will continue to be able to protect Canadian sovereignty, to contribute to national security, and to provide the timely reaction to any civil emergency tasks to which only the forces can respond.

The government recognizes that substantial modernization and replacement of major items of military equipment must be started immediately in order to ensure that the Canadian Armed Forces maintain their capability to carry out effectively their four priority roles.

● (1510)

Other major decisions that I wish to announce are: first, Canada will continue to maintain in Europe a land force and an air force designed and equipped to contribute a strong combat capability to NATO's collective defence of the central region. Second, modern and effective main battle tanks will be provided, either by retrofit or acquisition of new tanks, in order to ensure that our army contingent in Europe possesses the necessary up to date equipment to fulfil its assigned tasks beside our NATO partners. Negotiations for the acquisition of new tanks, or the complete modernization of our present tank force, are to be initiated immediately.

Mr. Stanfield: Which of those two things are you going to do?

Mr. Richardson: Third, to replace our Argus aircraft the government has decided to purchase a fleet of 18 Lockheed P3 long-range patrol aircraft, at a cost of $642 million in 1975 dollars. Other related costs, including spare parts, ground data centres, federal sales tax, contingencies and an allowance for inflation between now and final delivery, will bring the total expenditure to approximately $950 million. Some additional costs may be encountered in order to accommodate the payments on this program within the capital growth provisions to which I will refer later. The new aircraft will be designed primarily to carry out military tasks essential to North America and NATO defence, as well as providing us with a much improved capability to carry out the long-range surveillance needed to protect our growing sovereignty interests in the waters off our coasts and in the Arctic.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are four years late.

Mr. Richardson: Fourth, the air combat capability of the air force squadrons in Europe is to be maintained at its present level. Air defence forces in Canada are to be maintained at a level of capability to meet sovereignty requirements for identification and control of intrusions into Canadian air space.

Fifth, the structure of the Canadian Armed Forces will provide for up to 2,000 personnel to be available for United Nations peacekeeping purposes at any one time.

These decisions cover those matters of the defence structure review concerning the posture and equipping of the Canadian Armed Forces on which immediate action will be taken. The review will continue on questions concerning the replacement of fighter aircraft and ships.

Particularly significant to the future of national defence is the fact that the government has recognized the need to compensate for inflation in the department's personnel, operations and maintenance budgets for next year and in subsequent years.

To conform with the government's policy of economic restraint, the Department of National Defence will find from within its currently planned budget the funds required next year for the start of the tank and the long-range patrol aircraft programs. In following years, the government has agreed that capital expenditures for defence are to be increased, in real terms, by 12 per cent each year for the next five years until capital expenditures reach at least 20 per cent of the total defence budget.

As part of the defence structure review, there has been an assessment of the infrastructure required to support the operational components of the forces. Infrastructure includes headquarters, bases, training and educational facilities and logistics. In aggregate, this infrastructure support requires a large part of the total personnel and financial commitment of the defence program. Over the years there has been some consolidation in these areas, but I believe that our present infrastructure is still larger than is needed to support our operational forces, and for that reason some further consolidation of these support facilities could achieve cost savings without impairing our operational capability. For that reason, I intend to make recommendations to cabinet within the next few months concerning a better balance of support capability to operational capability, which will increase proportionately our combat capability relative to our infrastructure and support facilities.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, hon. members will agree that these decisions are of far reaching significance for the Canadian Armed Forces and for Canada and, in fact, for the NATO alliance. Our national commitment to the protection of Canadian sovereignty and to the preservation of freedom has been reinforced once again by the decisions taken by the Canadian government. There is every reason to believe that these decisions will boost the morale of the Canadian Armed Forces and will increase still further the pride which Canadians have in the dedicated and capable men and women who serve Canada in our armed forces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is not clear whether the minister was to make a statement, or make a statement and table documents. I take it to be the wish of the minister to make a statement and not to table documents.

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is correct.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for providing me with an advance copy of his statement. First may I say that we in this party welcome this belated indication showing that the government may finally have turned a corner in their treatment of Canada's forces. The scales seem finally to have dropped from the Prime Minister's eyes.

It is interesting to note the timing of the announcement. Last spring the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), went to Europe seeking his personal Holy Grail, a contractual link with western Europe. It is common knowledge that our European allies, particularly West Germany, were refreshingly blunt: the contractual link was to be tied with a NATO knot. It will be one of the delicious ironies of history that the Canadian forces are indebted as much to the German Chancellor for their equipment as to their own government. An assist goes to the Secretary General of NATO, Mr. Luns, who found the situation so serious that he broke all the rules of protocol for his position by speaking out in public about Canada's inadequacy in equipment.

As for the equipment, one's immediate reaction to the selection of the Lockheed aircraft with an American avionics package is to ask, whatever became of the Canadian input into the electronics business? The minister's flatulent press release of December, 1973, said in part:

The contract definition phase will include the employment opportunities and industrial benefits which will accrue to Canada.

Then further:

Proposals from all four contractors indicated a substantial involvement by Canadian companies in the construction of the proposed LRPA, as well as the manufacture of the necessary electronic and surveillance systems.

The question is, will the commitment made by the minister be carried out; will Canadian firms receive some of these contracts? The government seems confused about its defence needs, still not having made up its mind whether to buy new tanks or to refit older ones. I hope the government will seriously consider the Leopard II, which is a superior tank. Also, we should consider the question of a retrofitted, 30-year old Centurion tank which, according to CDS, will cost $750,000 to refit. I believe that new tanks can be purchased for about the same cost. I hope the minister will provide a firmer answer as soon as possible with regard to the tanks.

The minister's message obviously misses two large and important aspects of defence. Firstly, there is no mention of future shipbuilding for our navy, which will likely be requiring patrol vessels in the foreseeable future. Given the length of time required between the decision to build, and delivery—some six years—now is the time for decision if we are to be in any way prepared to patrol a 200-mile fishing or commercial zone.

Finally, the minister's remarks say little about the changing mode of warfare. Now is the time when we should be hearing the minister's thoughts on cruise missiles. Are we considering airborne warning and control systems? On page 4 of the minister's statement he said: "In following years, the government has agreed that capital expenditures for defence are to be increased, in real terms, by 12 per cent each year". With military inflation running at 28 per cent to 30 per cent, I do not know how we can possibly keep our head above water and find the money to purchase all this new equipment. Fortunately, the opposition have an opposition day coming soon, and these and other omitted matters can be discussed at that time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister based his statement on the defence program upon four major priorities: the defence of Canadian sovereignty, the defence of the North American continent, support of the NATO alliance, and assisting in peacekeeping operations around the world. It is almost impossible to deal with these bits and pieces of announcements by the Department of National Defence without recognizing that all of them have been based on a major fallacy. We are not a great military power. Since the end of World War II we have been trying to ape the great military powers, with the result that we do a little bit of everything but do not do anything particularly well.

A country of 23 million people has to recognize that it must set one or two priorities for things it can do properly, without trying to do other things which are beyond its financial capacity. There can be no doubt about the top priority: there must be greater emphasis and greater expenditure of money—whatever it may require—for the defence of our sovereignty and for the patrolling of our coastal waters and our northern areas, so that Canada may let the world know it is in a position not only to defend itself but to see that its waters and air space are not violated.

I think that North American defence is the number two priority, although I would not necessarily want to see it carried on in the form it is at present. I doubt that NORAD has given us value for the amount of money we have been investing in it, nor do I think we should be tied up in a North American air defence program to the extent that we are today.

I would place the third priority on Canada's peacekeeping role on which we spend a relatively small amount of money compared to our total expenditure. This is the kind of contribution which Canada is uniquely fitted to make. The great superpowers, and even many of the major powers, because of their imperialist background and their days of colonial possessions are not acceptable in regard to supplying peacekeeping forces in some areas of the world. This is a service for which Canada is particularly suited and able to fill, because Canadians generally are recognized as not having any territorial ambitions. Our troops have been well disciplined and well accepted wherever they have been used. This is the kind of role which Canada can play in an increasing measure.

I would put at the bottom of the priorities the support of the NATO alliance. First, this is going to be a very expensive role for us to fill. Already, as the minister has indicated, something must be done about the battle tanks which we have in our NATO forces in Europe. Apparently the government has not made up its mind, but it will have to decide whether to refit the Centurion tanks, which I understand can be done for about 50 per cent of the cost of buying new tanks but will have only half the life expectancy. What their comparison is in fire-power, I do not know. I hope the minister will tell us in the question period. However, this is a decision which will have to be made.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Whether the Centurions are refitted, or new tanks are purchased, it will mean a very large capital investment. If we are going to keep troops in Europe, they ought to be equipped with the very best military equipment that can be procured. However, such an expenditure, on top of the expenditure for new interceptors which will have to be purchased if we are going to keep forces in Europe, will place a very heavy burden upon the Canadian defence budget.

The time has come when we ought to be phasing out our NATO responsibilities. I know the government made a move to reduce the number of troops. When we entered into the NATO alliance surely we did not commit ourselves to staying in Europe forever. I know that snide remarks have been made by some European statesmen. The suggestion has been made that if we do not put more troops and capital equipment into NATO, we may have some difficulty realizing the fond hope of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), namely, a contractual link in Europe. I hope the government is not going to be intimidated by a suggestion like that. The Republic of France, which is a member of the European Economic Community, has withdrawn its military forces from the control of NATO. No one has suggested they should get out of the European Economic Committee or even the NATO Alliance. I doubt very much whether the four roles outlined by the minister can be fulfilled within the financial capability of the people of Canada. If we are to carry out the other roles effectively and efficiently, the NATO role will have to be substantially and steadily reduced.

The main announcement made by the minister was the fact that the government proposes to purchase, at a cost of $950 million, the Lockheed P3 long-range patrol aircraft, which I understand is the Orion with some modifications. This plane has been used by the United States navy and, I understand, has proven to be very serviceable.

There can be no argument as to the need at this time for an effective, new, long-range aircraft and there can be no argument about the fact that the Argus has now outlived its usefulness. Whether or not the Lockheed Orion is the best plane to replace the Argus, I for one—and I am sure this applies to most of my colleagues in the chamber—am not competent to judge. I think we must leave that to the minister, in consultation with his advisers.

The question I wish to raise is, what part of the $950 million for the Lockheed is to be spent in Canada to provide jobs for Canadians and to put some muscle into the Canadian aircraft industry? Ministers have been singularly evasive when answering questions about the Canadian aircraft industry. The situation is that the government has already acquired de Havilland and has an option to purchase Canadair. I understand the option expires in December, but it is quite possible it might be extended. I am informed that MacDonnell-Douglas have suggested that if de Havilland and Canadair could be merged, they would be prepared to take a small equity position in the new organization. If the F-15 were to be purchased by the Department of National Defence, they would be prepared to put 20 per cent of the total cost of the package into contracts with the merged corporation of Canadair and de Havilland. I do not know whether the press reports are accurate in this respect. As I say, we have been unable to get any direct information from the government. I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) some questions about this the other day. He was most evasive, to say the least, though, of course, in a most pleasant way.

We ought to know these things. Is there a package arrangement by which a certain proportion of this $950 million will be spent in Canada or does the government intend to allow the Canadian aircraft industry to go down the drain? What will the government do with Canadair? Is there a role for Canadair either in the building of long-range planes or reconnaissance planes in the future?

Other matters beside the question of national defence are at stake here. There is the question whether or not this large sum of money which parliament is being asked to vote is to be used to help develop an aircraft industry in Canada and provide jobs for Canadians. If we fail to take such a course, we shall become increasingly dependent upon United States or other foreign manufacturers of aircraft for our supplies.

To me, it is inconceivable that in this modern age, a highly industrialized nation like Canada should allow its small aircraft industry to wither away. I hope that when the minister is answering questions, this is one of the questions he will deal with so we may know what the government intends to do about de Havilland and Canadair, and whether these firms, either separately or together, will have anything to expect from this sum of nearly a billion dollars which the government is spending on long-range aircraft.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that when he made his statement we had received only the English copy of the statement. I wonder whether the minister has not at his service some bilingual French Canadians who could translate his statements so that we get both the French and the English copy at the same time.

I had the pleasure of visiting Lahr in Germany and hearing the very interesting conferences on defence in Europe and on the group of Canadians stationed in Europe. According to the conferences I heard, since Canada has always provided the best soldiers, the best aircrew as it were, I think it is normal that we give them the tools which are necessary to be ready for the defence of Europe or to meet the commitments of Canada towards NATO.

I agree with the Minister about the purchase of this long range patrol aircraft. There is however one thing which worries me about the repair of tanks. I think repairing old vehicles is money spent ineffectively. As the minister said earlier, I think we should ensure that our forces are well equipped with tanks to be always in the forefront of development as far as our defence in Europe is concerned.

[English]

Mr. McKenzie: I have one or two questions to ask the minister, Mr. Speaker. Will he tell us the exact date on which the first Lockheed LRP aircraft will be delivered to Canada?

Mr. Richardson: We expect delivery of the first aircraft in April, 1979. The others will be following quickly during that year. Most will be delivered during 1979, perhaps the last four or five in early 1980.

Mr. McKenzie: Can the minister tell us whether any of the work will be done in Canada, as he promised in his statement in December, 1973? Then, perhaps, he could tell us when the first new tanks, or the first repaired tanks, will be made available.

Mr. Richardson: The industrial benefit for the aircraft industry of the Lockheed purchase is very substantial for Canada. We have negotiated some $283 million which has been confirmed, but there is an almost equivalent amount, some $285 million, unconfirmed, which would make a total of more than $560 million worth of work in Canada. This aspect is primarily the responsibility of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I believe that in the days and weeks ahead he will be speaking in more detail about the individual industries which will benefit and how the work will be placed in Canada. However, as I say, there is very substantial industrial benefit to Canada, and this follows and confirms the statement I made earlier to this effect.

Mr. McKenzie: I hope the minister will use his influence to have some of this work done by CAE in Winnipeg. I should like to ask him about the 12 per cent increase each year in capital expenditures. Does he not realize that military inflation is running around 28 per cent to 30 per cent. Would the hon. gentleman give us an explanation?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, I would be glad to. The figure of 12 per cent is real growth. The hon. member perhaps missed those words in the statement. It is real growth above whatever inflation does to our capital budget. For example, if inflation is 5 per cent, the increase will be 17 per cent; if inflation is 10 per cent, we would be increasing capital expenditure by 22 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister about not having yet made a decision regarding reinforcing or making over our old tanks, which are 30 years old in Europe today, as opposed to buying a new, modern, up to date, battleworthy tank.

● (1540)

I am sure the minister is familiar with the condition of these old tanks. I saw them three years ago when, as military critic, I inspected the base there. The minister knows that our present tanks can hardly make it out on to the road. They are held together with baling wire, and they find it very difficult to go even a few miles without breaking down. The minister knows that is the fact. If he is not aware of it, he should talk to the serving officers over there and they will confirm what I say.

Can the minister now advise the House the reason for the delay in making the decision to buy a new, battleworthy tank like the German Leopard, which is a first-class tank, and is the minister seriously considering reconstructing these worn out, 30-year old tanks which literally are falling apart at the present time?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, there are at least two reasons for keeping open the option to refit the Centurion. One is cost. As was said by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the refit could be done at about half the cost of purchase and we must consider that. We must also maintain our negotiating position. I do not want to be committed to only one tank and one country at this time. We still have to negotiate the purchase, and the result of this negotiation will have an effect on what we finally recommend to cabinet.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister about the amount that will be spent in Canada for the manufacture of these 18 Lockheed Orions. Do I understand him to say that some $560 million out of the $950 million will be spent in Canada to make parts, or to manufacture spare parts under the contract? If so, does the government have a contract or agreement with Lockheed to that effect, and does the contract spell out those companies to which these subcontracts will be granted?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, this is an area that more properly belongs to my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. He will be commenting in detail on the industrial benefits. The figures I gave are correct, but I should point out that there is only $283 million that has been absolutely identified and confirmed with the Lockheed company. They have indicated that an equivalent amount, some $285 million, which is under what is called a best-effort arrangement, may be spent. In other words, I cannot say that they will achieve all of this amount, and neither can they. This depends partly on what other aircraft they sell to others. This total of $560 million is not all work on our 18 aircraft; it includes offset work which we will be doing in Canada. We will be doing this work for other Lockheed aircraft. We may be working on parts for 100 or more aircraft even though we have purchased only 18. This is why the figure is as large as it is, and obviously it is very beneficial to Canada.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister who carried on the negotiations with Lockheed? Was it the Department of National Defence, and has an agreement been signed which, as I understand the minister's figures, is a commital to $283 million being spent in Canada, with another $285 million which they will put forth their best efforts to spend? I do not know how much that is worth in an agreement, but they will put forth their best efforts in Canada. Are the two figures that I have quoted contained in the agreement, and is there anything further in the agreement respecting Canadair, or was there any arrangement with Canadair and de Havilland?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the negotiations were carried on by the project office which had interdepartmental representation including Industry, Trade and Commerce. The project office is headed by General Allen of National Defence. The $283 million was confirmed in those negotiations.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister says the $283 million is confirmed in the agreement. Is there a letter of intent concerning the $285 million, is there any reference to it in the agreement, or is it worth anything except a way of putting off criticism in a debate?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, it is exactly what it says. It is best-efforts. It is not confirmed. It is not signed in the agreement but it is work that has been identified. As I said a moment ago, it depends on factors that are now beyond the control of the Lockheed company itself. It depends on how many aircraft of this type may be built for the United States navy or for others. Therefore, it is put forth as a best-efforts proposition, but I think it will be further defined in the weeks ahead by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see three other members who are anxious to ask questions, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre, and the hon. member for Richmond. I hope that will be sufficient to tie down any outstanding points that are left. Perhaps the hon. member's colleagues in the corner might be able to collaborate on questions that might be put by whichever member of the two is going to survive, but I think we should bring this debate to a conclusion.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, can the minister tell the House what will become of the aircraft which are now used for training our airmen?

[English]

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the Argus aircraft will be continuing in operation until the delivery of the Lockheed, and that is more than three years away. As I have said, April, 1979, is the date we expect to take delivery of the first Lockheed. At that time the Arguses will have completed their operational life. They will, of course, become available for sale through Crown Assets if there are buyers, but I cannot predict at this time whether there will be buyers.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House whether the decision he has referred to cabinet concerning the LRPA recommends one type of plane only, and is this one type of plane the one that was considered throughout the final definition stage? Secondly, would the minister advise the House whether the recommended plane will have a Canadian or foreign, avionics package; and is this, too, part of the original offer that qualified for the final definition phase?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, there is only one type of plane; that is, we are only purchasing one type. All 18 aircraft are of the one type. There was another Lockheed considered, called the P3C, which was an "off the shelf" aircraft used by the United States navy. The one we are buying, the Lockheed long-range patrol aircraft, has special avionics equipment, some of which comes from the S3A carrier-borne aircraft of the United States navy. It also contains other equipment, some of which is Canadian, some American. But it is an entirely modern aircraft with new generation avionic, navigational and radar equipment.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, given the government's financial interest in Canadair and its outright ownership of de Havilland, what work has been done by, presumably, his department and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in terms of coming to grips with the issue of the rationalization of the existing Canadian aircraft industry?

● (1550)

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, that is a question that strictly belongs in the area of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who I know intends to address himself to it in a very few days.

Mr. Broadbent: Just one last supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, on the general statement made by the minister. Given his announcement that the costs for re-equipping or rebuilding the Centurions would be about half what it would cost to purchase new tanks, would the minister inform the House what would be the best purchase, in terms of financial outlay, if we consider the over-all longevity of the new tanks versus the refitted Centurions?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I am certain that this consideration will go into the final recommendation to be made. We will be putting the options before cabinet. What we have really done today is establish in principle that our ground forces in Europe will be equipped with a main battle tank. We now must go back and study not only the current costs but, as the hon. member has pointed out, the lifetime costs of the tanks, and this will be part of the recommendation to be made very shortly.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[English]

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,167, 3,181, 3,185, 3,230, 3,264, 3,289, 3,478 and 3,505.

ASSURED MAIL SERVICE IN DELTA

Question No. 3,167—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 234 which stated that assured mail service would be going into Delta by the spring of 1975, has such a programme been instituted and, if not, on what date is the latest expectation on the starting of such service?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): While it was our intention to extend the assured mail programme to Delta, our detailed study of the situation there revealed that the application of the normal criteria for assured mail would not improve service to customers of the Delta Post Office and it would increase costs. For example, should a morning collection be made the volume would be small and, with the exception of mail for Delta itself, would have to be sent to Vancouver for inclusion with mail originating there. This additional handling would tend to negate the advantage gained by earlier collection. On the other hand, by maintaining the later collection time presently in effect, sufficient volume is mailed to make up direct bags to several centres in western Canada and the service accorded these mails is the best that can be achieved considering all the factors. At the same time it is possible to provide next day delivery for mails destined to Vancouver, Victoria, New Westminster, Surrey and White Rock. Considering all the factors we have concluded that extension of the assured mail programme to Delta would not result in any appreciable improvement in service, consequently we have cancelled our plans for extending the programme at this time. You can be assured, however, that our officers in the Delta area will maintain a continuing review of the situation and introduce changes which will benefit the customers of the Delta Post Office.

CANADA-NEWFOUNDLAND ACCORD

Question No. 3,181—Mr. Marshall:

Are negotiations taking place with the Province of Newfoundland to develop complementary programmes for the protection and enhancement of environmental quality and, if so, on what date is it expected that an agreement will be signed?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Yes, we are confident that the Canada-Newfoundland Accord for the Protection and Enhancement of Environmental Quality will be signed soon, although no date has yet been determined.

AD REFERENDUM AGREEMENT, CANADA-USSR

Question No. 3,185—Mr. Marshall:

1. Was the ad referendum agreement on fisheries referred to the USSR for their consideration and approval and, if so, has it been approved and on what date?

2. Has the Canada, USSR Joint Fisheries Consultation Commission been established to strengthen bilateral fisheries cooperation between the two countries in the Northwest Atlantic?

3. Has the USSR appointed a soviet fisheries official in Halifax and, if so (a) on what date (b) what is his name?

4. In accordance with the Record of Understanding issued after the Canada, USSR fisheries talks of August 25 to 27, 1975, has a date been set to consider the elaboration of a further bilateral agreement on fisheries cooperation and, if not, what are Canada's intentions with regard to holding such a meeting at the earliest opportunity?

5. Has the agreement between the USSR and Canada referred to by the two governments been approved?

6. Has the Canada, USSR Joint Fisheries Consultation Commission been established?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes, the ad referendum agreement on fisheries has been approved by the U.S.S.R. Arrangements for formal approval by the government of Canada are under way, and if this approval is granted, the agreement can be signed and come into force shortly afterwards.

2. No, it will be set up when the agreement has been signed and comes into force.

3. No, this cannot take place until the agreement has been signed and has come into force.

4. No date has yet been set. Both countries are eager to have early discussions, and hope to sit down early in the new year.

Order Paper Questions

5. Please refer to answer to part 1.

6. Please refer to answer to part 2.

CONTRACTS AWARDED TO ROGER GAGNON

Question No. 3,230—Mr. Coates:

1. For the period 1968 to 1974, has the (a) Department of Public Works (b) Ministry of State for Urban Affairs (c) Department of Regional Economic Expansion (d) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation (e) National Capital Commission awarded any contracts to Roger Gagnon and, if so, in each case, were tenders called for the awarding of such contracts?

2. What, if any, recommendations were made on behalf of Roger Gagnon by any Member of Parliament in regard to the awarding of such contracts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): 1. (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) No.

2. Not applicable.

CANADA PENSION PLAN

Question No. 3,264—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. How much money has been (a) collected in premiums (b) paid in benefits since the inception of the Canada Pension Plan?

2. (a) How much money has been made available to the provinces from the Canada Pension Plan fund, since it's inception (b) what are the interest terms for repayment (c) what monies have been returned by the provinces to date?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) $8,363,645,402 as of September 30, 1975. (b) $1,442,133,000 as of September 30, 1975.

2. (a) $8,866,925,000 as of October 1, 1975. (b) The Canada Pension Plan legislation provides that excess moneys in the Canada Pension Plan account be invested in provincial securities with a term to maturity of 20 years, or such lesser term as is deemed appropriate by the Minister of Finance, and are redeemable, in whole or in part, only at the option of the Minister of Finance after six months' notice in writing. All securities currently outstanding have a term of 20 years and bear interest at the market yield of 20-year Canada bonds. The applicable interest rate currently is the weighted average of market yields of Canada bonds having terms of 20 years or more. Used in the calculation are the market yields quoted in the first three days of that month in which the contributions are received, some part of which is made available to the provinces within the ten-day period immediately following the end of that month. The interest terms have fluctuated from 5.29 per cent in March, 1966 to 9.34 per cent in October, 1975. (c) $2,307,088,433 in interest has been received as of September, 1975.

COSTS OF EXISTING MEDICARE PLAN

Question No. 3,289—Mr. Brisco:

What were the costs of the existing medicare plan for each of the past five years?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Total shared-costs under the Medical Care Program: 1970-71, $848,410 million; 1971-72, $1,172,336 million; 1972-73, $1,280,364 million; 1973-74, $1,372,942 million; 1974-75, $1,461,920 million (Not yet finalized).

[Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate).]

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—RIMOUSKI

Question No. 3,478—Mr. Allard:

1. Since the inception of the Opportunities for Youth Programme, has money been allocated to the Constituency of Rimouski and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each approved project in the Constituency what (a) is the title (b) is the allocated sum (c) is the year of acceptance (d) is the name of the municipality concerned (e) are the number of jobs which have been created?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Statistics for the Opportunities for Youth Program prior to 1975 were not maintained on a constituency basis and thus the total amount of funding to the constituency since the inception of the program cannot be determined. Under the 1975 program, however, a total of $231,240 was contracted to projects in Rimouski.

2. (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) See Statement below. (This information is available for the 1975 OFY Program only).

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA—POLICY ON BILINGUALISM

Question No. 3,505—Mr. Fortin:

1. Among the 120 persons earning $17,000 or more at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, do some have French as their mother tongue and, if not, does the Corporation intend to correct this situation and, if so, in what way?

2. What is the policy of the Corporation respecting (a) bilingualism (b) the recruiting of French Canadians?

3. What are the total assets of the Corporation in (a) Ontario (b) Quebec?

4. How many employees are working in (a) Ontario (b) Quebec?

5. Does the Corporation intend to establish research laboratories in Quebec and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: 1. Yes.

2. (a) AECL applies in its internal administrative procedures the federal government's official languages policy as set out in the resolution adopted by parliament in June, 1973. (b) AECL has no specific policy for recruiting French Canadians. Vacancies are filled with the best-qualified Canadians available. Advertisements are carried in Quebec newspapers and visits to major Quebec universities are part of AECL's annual recruiting campaign for new graduates. AECL has not in the past attracted as many French Canadians as it would have liked, due largely it is believed to the reluctance of many to work at AECL locations in Ontario and Manitoba. However, more are now joining AECL with the establishment of a large Montreal office and the La Prade heavy water plant.

3. (a) $88,947,234; (b) $120,548,748.

4. (a) 4,312; (b) 77.

5. AECL has no plans at present to establish additional research laboratories in Quebec or in any other province. There has been no expansion of the AECL research and development staff for several years and existing sites are considered adequate for present programs.

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 3,524?

[Text]

*NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

Question No. 3,524—Mr. Stanbury:

What response, if any, has the Prime Minister received to his invitation to the leaders of opposition parties to discuss the desirability of legislation to deal with national emergencies without the necessity of recourse to the War Measures Act?

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No response has been received from the leaders of opposition parties.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, no response has been received to what invitation from the Prime Minister?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I was replying to question No. 3,524 which reads as follows:

What response, if any, has the Prime Minister received to his invitation to the leaders of opposition parties to discuss the desirability of legislation to deal with national emergencies without the necessity of recourse to the War Measures Act?

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I have received no invitation from the Prime Minister to have any discussion since the days when the War Measures Act was invoked, at which time I had many discussions with the then minister of justice regarding a temporary bill which was introduced and proceeded a certain distance. I insist, as a matter of privilege, that I received no invitation from the Prime Minister to have any discussions with him or with any member of his cabinet about the desirability of the measure referred to in this question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. Since the question referred to opposition parties, in the plural, I should like to make it clear, also, that I have not received any such invitation.

An hon. Member: Give us the right answer.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This matter has been raised as a question of privilege by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, with some supporting comment by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby who is, of course, also an opposition House leader in that sense. Both hon. members have raised objections about the content of the answer, for the reason given, in that since the answer indicates that no response has been received to an invitation, an invitation in fact is implied. Both hon. members indicated that no such invitation had been forthcoming. In any case, both hon. members have made comments that would indicate some criticism of the content of the answer given, and a criticism in that form may be extremely valid.

An hon. Member: Yes, it certainly is.

Mr. Speaker: However, as is well known, this does not constitute a question of privilege.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I had a number of questions on the order paper last session regarding CIDA. As a result of conversations with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I deleted the approximately 80 questions in order that I might have answered some ten of my own choosing. It was agreed that if I put those questions back on the order paper, they would be answered in due course. With regard to "due course", this was on October 20 and I am sure we can expect better treatment than this in the way of answers from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If he has any problems, he can bring the files over to my office and I will be able to dig out the material.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, November 25, consideration of Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs; and motion No. 6 (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)).

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised a question about the recommendation which preceded this bill, in that he found some difference between the bill and the recommendation upon which it was founded. As I recall, sir, you indicated that to some extent at least you shared his views. I have now obtained a revised recommendation from His Excellency the Governor General for Bill C-73.

There has been discussion among representatives of the parties and I understand there would be agreement to the procedure that this revised recommendation should be substituted for the original recommendation and printed in today's Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The proposal put by the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) has been heard. There is an indication that there may be agreement to it. Is that the case?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Generally there is agreement, Mr. Speaker, although I still have some very grave complaints as to the form as a whole. Without wanting to begin taking it apart, and I am not going to insist upon any change at this time which might block our progress and require a ruling, there is one last point that does concern me. With all due respect to the government House leader, I do not think the final phrase "or as provided in the said measure" covers the difficulty I raised in respect of section 26(2).

Mr. Speaker was to look at this matter to determine whether the change proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) had met my original objection, in respect of which His Honour had indicated some agreement. On a contingency basis there could be grave difficulty. However, in order to set aside, or to put at rest this unhappy interlude regarding these recommendations, I am quite prepared to say, on behalf of this party, that this is all right for now, but we surely must have some discussions and arrive at a much better formula for the resolution stage of a bill.

I might also say that I, personally, have some hesitation about the present practice of obtaining revised recommendations. It has become a purely clerical function, and it seems to me these recommendations should have a little more authenticity than that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think an accommodation has been reached in so far as this piece of legislation is concerned, but I should also like to support the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), that there might be further discussions about the form of Governor General's recommendations. At this point the hon. member for Edmonton West and I may part. I gather he would like to have the recommendation couched in language that is full of all the details in the bill. I would like to see it go the other way. Maybe that is because I remember the days decades ago when cabinet ministers would stand over there and say, "His Excellency the Governor General, having been made aware of the subject matter of this bill, is pleased to approve the same and recommends it to the consideration of the House."

I wonder what value there is to an exercise of having some clerical operation produce a long Governor General's recommendation which is changed every time we change the bill. I think a little reading of the history of this device going back 300 or 400 years to how money bills came from the Crown, and so on, would produce the solution I suggest, namely, a much shorter and more generalized recommendation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The discussions, of course, about the relationship between the recommendation and the bill and subsequent powers or restrictions to amending powers is a most interesting one. Indeed, frankly it is not altogether clear in the relationship between the recommendation and the bill. There is, of course, the countervailing difficulty that the more general the recommendation becomes, the more it is possible to argue that it then becomes applicable to every provision of the bill and not just to the financial provisions of the bill, and therefore every amendment would have to carry in it the direct recommendation. In any case, it is an interesting discussion which could carry us away, I am sure, all afternoon, and this is not the desire of hon. members.

It appears at the moment that an accommodation has been reached. The amended recommendation, if I understand it correctly without reading it in every detail, is the same as it was except for the addition of the wording at the end, "or as provided in the said measure", which relates to the expiry date of the bill. That would seem to me, at first reading in any case, to cover the specific instances that have already been argued and discussed and to which the House has already directed its attention. Is there unanimous consent to receive the recommendation?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It would appear, that having been done, that the bill can proceed. We were in the process of resuming debate on motion No. 6. However, before doing so may I simply clear up two areas of discussion. The first is that as a package it was agreed that motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5 would be discussed. When the discussion on those three motions had finished, evidently the vote on motion No. 5 was put without there first having been put an amendment which was moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

In order to clarify the situation, before going on to a recorded vote in that circumstance, obviously the amendment of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, never really having been put to the House, will have to be put. Perhaps the preferable arrangement would be to put that question forthwith.

There is another problem, which is the grouping of those three amendments for the vote. It may be recalled that it was suggested initially by the Chairman that a vote on motion No. 4 ought to be taken first. In respect of motion No. 5, it now appears, after discussion, that a vote on No. 4 ought to be taken and, depending on the outcome, it may have an effect on the necessity for a vote on motions No. 3 and No. 5. Hon. members having considered that matter, are we now able to agree that we should first call the deferred vote on motion No. 2, then follow with a vote on motion No. 4 and, depending on the outcome of that, see whether a vote is necessary on either No. 3 or No. 5? In any case, may I have the agreement of the House at this time that after the vote on motion No. 2 we can take a vote on motion No. 4 and see where that leaves us? Is that agreed?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear that there is to be a vote on motion No. 2, that there will be a vote on motion No. 4 and, depending on the result, it might eliminate a vote on No. 3. If No. 4 does not pass, obviously No. 3 falls to the ground. In any event, No. 5, which is a proposal of the government, must be voted on separately as it does not depend on the result of the vote on No. 3 or No. 4 in any way.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the only part of this discussion which concerns me is the suggestion that a vote had not been ordered on the amendment to motion No. 5. My understanding is that that question was put, and in fact was put twice, that five or six members stood one time and that eight or nine members stood the other time, and that a deferred vote on the amendment to motion No. 5 has been ordered. What, of course, has not been ordered is a deferred vote on motion No. 5 itself, nor could there be until the amendment had been disposed of.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed and understood?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Debate is resumed on motion No. 6.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, it may come as a great shock to the minister, but we have decided to support motion No. 6.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): What have I done wrong?

Mr. Nystrom: We are not back in bed again, as an hon. member suggests—far from it. We support it for one reason. If, after the expiry of the act, any investigation or prosecution is under way, it would naturally continue and the administrator, chairmen, and so on, would continue in their various positions until the particular investigation came to an end. Because we feel there might be one chance out of a hundred that they will prosecute one of the corporations, we will agree to this motion. We do not feel very enthusiastic about it, because we do not feel they are really very serious about tackling anything when it comes to price controls or dividends. We feel that the people in charge of the board, Jean-Luc Pepin, Mrs. Plumptre and others, are as unlikely to take a tough line on corporate profits, and so on, as it would be for the Happy Hooker to be in charge of the vice squad.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, all the backbenchers in the Liberal party have awakened, including a Conservative who has defected to that side. As soon as I mention the name of a famous person, they wake up. I want to make sure that we are on record as being in support of this motion. If any investigation should be under way against any "poor little" corporation such as the CPR, Safeways, and so on, then that investigation could continue until completed. For that reason, we support this motion and will be fighting to make sure that any investigation under way is carried out to its final fulfilment and prosecution, so that if there is any possibility that such people could be found guilty then the penalties will be applied with the full force of the law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) rather jumped the gun, because the other night when we adjourned the debate I had the floor and moved to adjourn the debate. At that time there was a procedural defect in respect of the recommendation. Motion No. 6 depended on clause 46(2) which was then deficient. That now having been cleared up, there is no difficulty and we, too, support in principle motion No. 6.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The question is on motion No. 6. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The matter having been previously discussed, this result would appear to obviate the necessity of taking a further vote on motion No. 3, where the same result will be recorded.

The question, therefore, is on the amendment to motion No. 5 standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

The House divided on the amendment to motion No. 5 (Mr. Benjamin) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The question, therefore, is on motion No. 5 in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale)) agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? The bill can only be read the third time, of course, with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There not being unanimous consent, the bill cannot be read the third time at this sitting.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There being two motions, No. 1 and No. 2, at this point of the report stage of Bill C-41, both standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), is it agreed that they be grouped for the purpose of debate?

● (1710)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 33 to 35 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"comes a full participant may, by".

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 14 and 15 at page 5 thereof and renumbering the following subsections accordingly.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased there is so much interest in the grain stabilization bill. I hope the House will remain full and that I will have everyone's undivided attention.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An hon. Member: You just lost it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are lucky to have a quorum.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: This is ridiculous.

Mr. Benjamin: The purpose of amendments Nos. 1 and 2—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Perhaps hon. members would have their conversations behind the curtains.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, now that you can hear me, I hope, I should like to say that I and my colleagues have taken the position that this legislation is still totally inadequate for the protection of farm income in respect of the production of grain. We feel the legislation is inadequate and its effect is uncertain, particularly the provision which automatically includes all grain producers and the one which allows them to opt out once and come back in, but then to remain in. The purpose of these two amendments is to allow grain producers to opt out of the program at any time and for any number of times. It will allow them to opt out and to opt back in again at their choosing.

This is an unusual amendment to be coming from a member of a socialist party which stands for universal programs in order to maximize the benefits of those programs. They might be called free enterprise amendments, but that is not why I am proud of them. I am convinced this program would prove to be inadequate. Even if it turns out that I am wrong, because of the many uncertainties it would seem to me that for at least the first few years of the program grain producers should have maximum flexibility, being able to opt in and opt out any number of times.

I suspect that the minister will say that this would create a great many administrative difficulties. However, if this grain stabilization measure is as good as the minister thinks and says it is, then I imagine he would have very little fear of any significant number of farmers frequently opting in and out of the program. If the program is going to be as good as he claims, then I do not understand why he should worry about accepting these amendments.

I hope my friends in the official opposition will take the position that because of the uncertainties and inadequacies of the bill, this kind of freedom and flexibility should be available to every grain producer. The minister claims this program is good. I disagree with him. But if he is right, he should have no qualms about accepting these amendments.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). We discussed this matter at great length in committee and I agree with the hon. member when he suggests this legislation is inadequate and is not what the farmers want. We spent a week travelling throughout the prairie provinces, receiving briefs from farm organizations, wheat pools, farmers' unions, the Palliser Grain Growers and others. All the indications were that they were not happy with the bill and, because of its complexities, could not understand it.

As a matter of fact, because of the complexities of the legislation a number of those who presented briefs did not have the opportunity of discussing the measure in detail. Almost without exception, these organizations and individuals indicated that if the legislation worked on an individual pay-out basis, rather than on the basis of a five-year average with a pay-out to the whole Wheat Board area, it might be satisfactory. I hope to have an opportunity of discussing that matter in greater detail at third reading.

In considering the amendments of the hon. member, it would seem at first blush that the individual producers should have the opportunity of opting in and out of the plan as and when they wish. If we consider this opting in and out on the basis suggested by the hon. member we can visualize a difficult situation. When there is a substantial deficit in the fund, the government is required to lend money in order to make a pay-out. If we adopted such a flexible provision, we could have a situation in which farmers, in the initial years of the plan's operation, could obtain substantial pay-outs and then opt out of the plan in good crop years.

We must remember that the fund provides for a $2 to $1 ratio. It would be fairly simple for a producer to remain in the plan for two years, for example, and receive a substantial payment. During this time the fund might get into a deficit position and would have to be replenished by the government. The interest on that money would continue to build up. A producer might be able to obtain four, five or six times the amount he had paid in and then opt out of the plan for a considerable time during good crop years. He might do this knowing that he would have to put money into the plan to help pay off the indebtedness incurred by loans from the federal government, and the interest. Under the circumstances if he were a smart businessman—and I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers of the prairie provinces are vey smart and shrewd businessmen—I am certain he would opt out and say, "That is it, fellows".

Under the conditions of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre he could opt out of the plan for a long enough period that the indebtedness to the government would be paid off, and then he would simply opt into the plan and take advantage of it. So under these circumstances, personally I cannot support the amendment of the hon. member.

Mr. Towers: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the government always has difficulty administering the business of the House especially in respect of agriculture. Yesterday afternoon we had the Department of Agriculture estimates before the committee, and then the government brought on the feed bill, Bill S-10. The committee proceedings had to be cut short in order that the minister could return to the House, and some of us from this side of the House had to be leave the committee prior to its adjournment in order to participate in the debate that was taking place in the House. The same thing has occurred this afternoon.

I do not think we should continue to forgive the government for not being able to administer the business of the House in a better manner. This afternoon we were asked to participate in the discussion on Bill C-41. This evening the agricultural committee will be meeting. In the estimates that are to be studied by the committee we find there are estimates pertaining to the bill we are discussing at the present time. It would seem to me that this is grossly unfair. It is not fair to those participating in this debate, or to those who are involved in the committee proceedings.

Either the discussion on this bill should be adjourned at 5.30 or the committee meeting that is scheduled to take place should be adjourned. We cannot deal with these matters adequately when we are separated. Those of us who remain in this House to debate this bill will not know what is taking place in the committee, and vice-versa those members who will be attending the committee to study the estimates will not know what is taking place in the House. I would hope the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board would have enough influence on the House leader to differentiate between these two so that the two proceedings could be separated.

Mr. Benjamin: I, too, rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to protest to the minister, the government whip, and anybody else who might be listening. We are dealing with supply estimates in the agricultural committee. All the members of the committee are involved in that. We are in midst of asking the minister questions on a number of items in respect of the supplementary estimates, while at the same time many of us are also involved with Bill C-41. I agree completely with the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and would hope that some arrangement could be made either to adjourn the meeting this evening of the agricultural committee or to adjourn the debate on this bill in the House.

Mr. Blais: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I agree that there is some inconvenience, but the fact is that a number of agricultural bills have been pending during this session and we are proceeding with these bills as expeditiously as we can. The question of dealing with Bill C-41 this evening rose from the fact that there had to be an amendment to the royal recommendation in respect of Bill C-73, and therefore the members of the New Democratic Party did not give consent to deal with third reading at this particular stage, as is their right.

Mr. Benjamin: If you are looking for co-operation you should be careful.

Mr. Blais: The government House leader through the usual channels made arrangements with the other House leaders for the House to deal with Bill C-41 at this time. I realize that this creates an inconvenience because of the conflict between the agricultural committee and Bill C-41, but I merely call to the attention of the hon. gentlemen that all committees are sitting at this time dealing with estimates and other legislation referred to them by the House. Unfortunately most of the matters we might be dealing with in the House would conflict with the business being carried on in the committees. I thought the hon. member who is interested in agriculture would be interested as well in disposing of the legislation before the House.

Air Canada

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, those of us who have been around here for a little while think it is almost mandatory first that we do not allow committee meetings to continue at the same time the House is in session, and second, that a bill should never be brought in dealing with a subject on which the committee is sitting so that two meetings would be held simultaneously.

I am simply saying to the House leader and the representatives of the government that if it was considered that high priority had to be given to Bill C-41 in the House, then it would only be courtesy to go to the chairman of the agricultural committee and say that under the circumstances, being caught in this type of situation, the agricultural committee meetings should be postponed.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the agricultural committee, as well as the steering committee, are completely free to do what they wish. It is their prerogative to have sittings as they wish or not. I suggest that the recommendation of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) should be made to the chairman and the members of that committee.

Mr. McGrath: You are in charge of the business of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Five thirty.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the parliamentary secretary realizes that the estimates that are before the agricultural committee contain a specific sum of, I believe, $300,000 of $350,000 pertaining to this particular bill. It is important that we be here in the House in order to speak on the bill at the same time when the estimates are before the committee. It is a little different situation than if the estimates were not before the committee. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to make some arrangements with the chairman of the agricultural committee to cancel tonight's meeting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. Pursuant to order made on Wednesday, November 5, it being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN SUNSET CREST LTD. AND EMPLOYEES OF AIR CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, November 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of correspondence and agreements between Sunset Crest Ltd., now a subsidiary of the Barbados Shipping and Trading Co., and any employee of Air Canada or its subsidiaries.

[Mr. Blais.]

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, on November 13, I was speaking on the motion for the production of papers presented by the hon. member for Vegreville, and in particular the correspondence and agreements between Sunset Crest Ltd. and any employee of Air Canada or its subsidiaries. I had not quite finished my remarks and would like to continue.

● (1730)

I had pointed out, among other things, that Air Canada is a large corporation which, over the years, has been a credit to Canada, and for over 20 years has required no subsidies from the public purse. The company is not asking the government for a penny of financial assistance, quite unlike larger national airlines of some other countries. Its deficit last year was very much smaller than many of its competitors, and the government has not been asked to pay this loss. In 1975, a year of falling traffic due to general economic depression and rising costs due to fuel prices, et cetera, the employees of the company are, I believe, trying to achieve a break even position for the company, against great odds. I do not know whether their objective will be achieved, but I am satisfied that they are cutting costs and developing sales with a view to improving the financial position of the company.

There are staff problems in all companies, private and public, in Canada and other parts of the world. These are solved by the companies' management as they arise, and Air Canada cannot be expected to act differently. There are resignations, dismissals and disciplinary actions in all companies, including Air Canada, and to single out Air Canada for ridicule when these things happen at any level—blue collar, management or executive—is unfair to all those dedicated and hardworking employees who have built their airline to a level of prosperity and service to the nation of which all Canadians can well be proud.

Whatever may come out of the Air Canada inquiry on financial controls and other areas of concern, I want to make one point crystal clear, and that is that the great majority of the employees of Air Canada at all levels—management, executive and other classes—are operating an airline with efficiency, integrity and loyalty and have thereby developed Air Canada to a point where it can earn its place as one of the great airlines of the world, with an operating efficiency which has proved to be comparable with the better run airlines of any nation.

The government has come to realize that the characteristics of the airline business have changed significantly since 1937 when the present Air Canada Act was first brought before this House, and that Air Canada has grown to a level which requires some changes in the present Air Canada Act. I think the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will be presenting to this House for consideration his proposals to permit Air Canada more flexibility to deal with new business trends, and allow the company to compete more effectively, especially in the international airline market.

Hon. members should be provided with ample opportunity to discuss in some detail the matters involving Air Canada, including ventures such as the Sunset Crest Limited transaction, both when the Minister of Transport puts forward his proposal for amendment to the Air Canada Act and when the Air Canada inquiry report is presented to the House.

I should again like to stress a point I made when taking part in a similar debate on a motion for production of papers earlier in the session. That point is that all hon. members would like to see as much information made available as could be made available. In this regard we on this side of the House are faced with the same limitation as those across the way, and as our duties and obligations to those we represent are similar, we share the same frustration when unable to obtain a certain document or piece of information which we may deem pertinent in carrying out these duties.

During this session I have had the opportunity of serving on the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. This experience has left me with an appreciation of both the importance and the complexity of the issue of accessibility to government information.

While I am sympathetic to the objective of greater accessibility to information and less secrecy in government, at the same time I recognize that free and unlimited access to all information and documents is impossible, or certainly unwise. Similarly, I find the guidelines which indicate several categories of restrictions for the production of government papers and documents too general and far reaching, but at the same time I concede that their introduction was a very considerable step forward in that they underline the acceptance of the principle that the government has to justify its withholding of facts, and they also provide a focus for constructive criticism and suggestions for a greater flow of information.

I thank the hon. member for presenting his motion, which provided an opportunity to discuss the subject of availability of government information in general, and in particular information pertaining to Air Canada transactions. However, I am unable to agree with his motion.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to take part in this debate on production of papers and to follow the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson). I can assure the hon. member that my view is quite polarized from his, and I hope that my contribution in this debate will change his mind. Unlike his, it is my belief that Air Canada can be expected to act differently. It has to act differently as a national airline if we are to set conditions, a pace, and a standard of behaviour for other corporate activities in Canada.

I remind this House that this Crown corporation, Air Canada, and its subsidiaries have advantages which are a businessman's dream. Air Canada has the highest occupancy rate in the airline business, which is literally a licence to print money in that industry. It has a monopoly position with its choice of routes, and it has access to all government boards and agencies. It has unlimited money available at the government's cost of money, and the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore in his address in this debate last November 13 proudly pointed out that it has not been necessary for over two decades for public money to subsidize Air Canada. However, that money is available and has been available pretty well on an unlimited basis at a cost of money available to no other organization in Canada.

Air Canada has an insider track on other government agencies' activities which allows it to eliminate or control its Canadian and offshore competition.

However, to be completely fair, one must acknowledge that Air Canada also faces certain disadvantages. It has inherited the disease of its present owner in that for each $100 of revenue the CNR has to spend between $100 and $101 to earn it, whereas its major competitor, which has an incentive factor built in and which has to answer to taxpaying shareholders, spends $90 to earn $100 of revenue.

This apathy for want of an incentive and a need to be accountable to taxpaying shareholders has obviously spilled over into Air Canada attitudes and management. Air Canada does not pay its taxes; it only accrues them. It currently owes an amount in excess of $29 million, which is down from the $34 million it owed, according to last year's estimate, as a result of last year's loss.

Air Canada does not pay the interest due on the moneys which have been lent to it by the government. It accrues this interest, and has accrued some $55 million in interest. It does not return or retire its borrowings, as normal corporations have to do in a free enterprise economy. Along with these unfortunate business practices, it is overstaffed with 25 per cent too many people.

The situation in Air Canada is now an acknowledged disgrace, and if the government will allow the opposition to assist in cleaning out the rot and questionable practices which exist within its corporate structure, perhaps we can then get our national airline flying with the measure of pride its employees and the people of Canada once held for it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: This now leads me to the secrecy and cover up attitude which exists in all things around Air Canada, new airport construction, and the management involved. In a review of this debate I note that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) stated the following: "There is always danger of secrecy overcoming governments when there is very little to be secret about". He goes on to suggest that we should wait for the Estey report to be tabled in this House.

If there is very little to be secret about on a matter surrounding this request for papers, all I can say is that either the hon. member for Fort William has been sleeping through the events disclosed in this House and by the press over the last few months, or he sits in an environment which separates his view of right and wrong from hon. members on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Huntington: In regard to the comments of the hon. member about the Estey report, I remind him that the French version of the report could have been turned in with the English version if the government had given the nod to Mr. Justice Estey. I can only conclude that the weeks we have been waiting for the French version of the Estey report are nothing more than stonewalling tactics and desperate attempts to delay the truth. I noted in the Globe and Mail of July 25, 1975, that Mr. Gordon Henderson, the lawyer representing Air Canada before the Estey inquiry, stated that not one iota of evidence was brought forward as to personal dishonesty of airline officials. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, by producing the papers requested by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) a lot of House time can be saved, and we in the opposition can get on with other matters needing examination, like events surrounding the design and building of Mirabel.

My problem is the series of continuing disclosures that have been made since that lofty and proud statement of defence at the Estey inquiry. For example, consider the interference of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) in the selection of the L-1011, and the surrounding suspicions of pay-offs.

Second, there is the matter of an option of $100 million worth of sugar, apparently acquired by Air Canada employees and associates when technical aviation negotiations were going on with Haiti, Martinique, Guadeloupe and Jamaica, all, by coincidence, sugar-producing countries.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Who has the sweet tooth?

Mr. Huntington: We now have information from an informed source to suspect that the profits on this sugar option are sizable, approximating this year's Air Canada loss, and that this money is now being moved into Canada for a seven way split. If this information is accurate, then this matter should be investigated carefully and thoroughly. If the minister has information on this transaction and money, he ought to bring it forward.

I hope hon. members opposite will pardon our continued interest if the company set up for this sugar deal just happens to have the same address as that of the lawyer for Sunset Crest Ltd., the subject company of this motion to produce papers.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He must have a sweet tooth.

Mr. Huntington: Is it just an accident, or coincidence, that the Air Canada vice-president who resigned over the $100,000 McGregor travel agency matter that triggered the Estey inquiry just happened to find a job with J. W. Lawson Travel Ltd., which is a subsidiary of Thomcor, a related company of Warnock Hersey Ltd., the chairman of which is Peter N. Thomson, a well known Liberal fund raiser and friend of the government?

As if this is not enough, this organization purchased Sky Shops Ltd. from its former owners, making available sizable capital gains to other friends, particularly a Liberal senator who also is a well known Liberal contact and fund raiser.

An hon. Member: Prove it.

[Mr. Huntington.]

An hon. Member: This is beginning to smell.

Mr. Huntington: Then we should consider another subsidiary of Air Canada known as Venturex. The company is involved in a $1 million deal with Sunset Crest properties in Barbados from which the company rented accommodation for tourists using Air Canada. Apparently Venturex had more power to spend money than did the airline itself. The airline issued its authority for expenditure on the Sunset Crest deal only after several $80,000 payments had been made.

This company affiliated with Air Canada, Venturex, about which the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) suggested we should not ask questions as the secrecy is justified, has been accused of Mickey Mouse accounting practices in order to cover up a $1,134,000 Air Canada loss on charters. Apparently those on the government side think the opposition is not supposed to question such matters.

These few examples in my opinion clearly illustrate the need for the production of the Sunset Crest papers but, more than that, lead us to the whole question of ministerial behaviour and performance in the management and care of taxpayers' money in all matters pertaining to the operation of our national airline and the construction and operation of our nation's airports. One can only conclude that the secrecy surrounding matters pertaining to the Ministry of Transport and its air transportation responsibilities are a cover-up. As long as this stonewalling operation continues the government will be suspect, and can rest assured that the opposition, with the help of concerned Canadians, will work tirelessly to expose abuses within the ministry and higher echelons of Air Canada.

If we are to have a new Air Canada chairman, I urge the minister to get all this crud out into the open so that the new Air Canada board can get on with a new and proud future for the airline of which we were once so proud.

May I also request consideration for a complete overhaul of the format of Air Canada's annual report which, when compared with the annual reports of other airlines, is in itself a sort of secret document, the secrecy arising by way of omission. I urge hon. members to examine the Air Canada report. It is full of coloured pictures, a few graphs, looks big because it is in two languages, but contains few facts. Actually it contains little or nothing of interest to hon. members of the House or to members of the public who wish to study the airline's performance.

One cannot help thinking that the airline's performance will not stand scrutiny, that the airline cannot stand competition, that it needs the government's protection for survival and cannot compete in a normal way in the hard hitting market place. As I read this, I weep. Look at the reports of other airlines, private or nationally owned, and you will find page after page of solid, analytical matter which anyone in the world, any competitor, can study and compare as a key to performance. But it is not so with Air Canada.

An hon. Member: To which airline are you referring?

Mr. Huntington: Take almost any other airline in the world, Lufthansa, or KLM, the Royal Dutch national airline. You will find their reports contain page after page of solid, analytical documentation. If you really want to see how a state-owned airline is run, look at the annual report of British Airways. It contains 134 pages of analytical data, which any other airline or competitor in the world can study, compare, analyse. The report shows where the airline is performing well, and where it is not performing so well. There is an addendum of 34 pages which gives you all the meat you want. But you will not learn anything about Air Canada's performance if you read its glossy annual report, this secret document which omits so much.

I plead with the minister to be concerned and to show some interest in Air Canada's annual statement. I urge all members of the House on both sides to support this important motion asking for the production of papers and so remove the stigma arising from secrecy surrounding the department's air transport responsibilities.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I represent the constituency of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe and represent, I suggest, more Air Canada pilots and operating personnel than any other member of this House. While it is good to debate the affairs of Crown corporations, make hard hitting statements, and to analyse carefully the operations of organizations like Air Canada, I do not want it to be thought, and I put this on record, that criticism should be directed toward either Air Canada pilots or operational crews.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is not.

Mr. Huntington: Except when they take off with fires in the cabin.

Mr. Milne: I associate with people who travel a great deal and use a number of airlines. I challenge any member of the House to say that any other airline is as competent or has the confidence of the people who travel with it more than Air Canada has. This is hard earned respect; they have worked for it. It has come to them through good training facilities and good personnel discipline. I am proud of those of my constituents who work for Air Canada, and I am proud of Air Canada.

I want to take issue with a previous speaker who, when talking about the airline business in Canada, made comparisons between Air Canada and some private carriers. Perhaps he forgets that when Air Canada was formed in the thirties, the original purpose of the company was to establish a basic air service across Canada even where there was not a substantial amount of profit. It was not just designed to serve the lucrative routes. I suggest that those private airlines that are doing so well would have to spread their services thinly if they were asked to compete on all the routes that Air Canada serves. This is not to say that there are not perhaps problems within Air Canada, or no deep seated concerns expressed by some of their own employees. The report that will be tabled in the House in the near future will bring some of those problems to light. I hope the government will move quickly to deal with them, and I am confident that it will.

I have toured many of Air Canada's facilities for training pilots, and maintenance facilities across Canada. I doubt that any airline in the country has a better operating record.

The financial aspect has been mentioned. I understand that Mr. Estey's report will deal with that. That inquiry was set up primarily to look into that area.

From my reading of Canada's airline industry I would say that Air Canada has gone through the generation change of aircraft perhaps better than many other airlines. Some United States airlines are mothballing planes, or selling planes at fire sale prices just to get them off their books. Even though Air Canada has incurred a loss during the last year the company still compares well with the United States airlines.

Many of the airlines that hon. members claimed were managed efficiently went over to wide-bodied planes, and then found that they had completely misjudged the market. As a result they had a tremendous over-capacity in their fleets and some nearly went bankrupt. Furthermore, there was a severe cutback in service—a cutback that we would not want Air Canada to introduce in our remote areas—or through mergers where some companies were simply put out of business.

I would ask some members who are critical of Air Canada to remember that many of the routes are not profitable. However, Air Canada provides a service to all parts of the country, and this is not the case with the private carriers. If the performance of Air Canada is compared to many United States airlines, I think Air Canada shows up rather well in terms of competent management.

A few years ago when Air Canada was hiring employees, it was regarded as a privileged occupation. Stewardesses, for instance, had to be graduate nurses and there was great restriction on who could compete for the job vacancies. Today, many more people are flying; perhaps the mystique has decreased and that has not helped the morale problems to which reference has been made.

I do not intend to go on and extol the virtues of Air Canada. I just want to say I have some very close friends and good constituents who work for Air Canada. Those people are proud of Air Canada and do their best to give Canada good air service.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should inform the House that if I recognize the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) at this time he will be closing the debate. The hon. member is aware that, according to the Standing Order, he is allowed five minutes to close the debate.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes available to me to wrap up this debate I should like to thank hon. members for participating. The contributions from the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) were particularly distinguished, and provided food for thought for hon. members across the way. I am disappointed in a general way by the response from the government side. I would have thought that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale) would have offered a better explanation for the refusal to provide this information than simply to re-echo the words "a proprietary nature", or "this is a subject which may be dealt with in the Estey inquiry".

This motion was placed on the order paper long before the Estey inquiry was called into being. There is sufficient reason to believe that its subject matter was not dealt with to any great extent in that inquiry, but how would one know? The government seems very satisfied, and is studying the report which has been in the hands of the minister for a month or so. It must either be a long report or there is a shortage of French translators. It seems to me this is a weak excuse.

We were told by the former minister of transport that there would be an internal inquiry into the subject matter of this motion. We are not sure, however, if that was carried out, or whether we will see the results if it was carried out. If it was an internal inquiry co-ordinated by the chief executive officer, who has resigned, perhaps we will never learn the background of this important matter.

The answers given in response to the request for this information are unsatisfactory and only cloud the issue. We are now told that the Estey inquiry produced two reports, one of which will be made public and one of which will remain private. I find that unusual and irregular, Mr. Speaker. It would be interesting to know at whose instigation the report was made confidential. Is it at the minister's request or Judge Estey's request? We do not have that information. What is the point of a public inquiry if the pertinent matters are not going to be made public? If the recommendations are not made public it really means that this has been nothing but a cover-up.

The events that have taken place in the last 24 hours demand that more information be provided. In the final analysis these events may have led to the resignation of the chief executive officer, and perhaps of some other people.

In this whole business of Air Canada, as with other Crown corporations, we have found the government party to the veil of secrecy. There has been far too much secrecy in the analysis of the operations of this Crown corporation, Mr. Speaker. In my view parliamentary committees have become an ineffective mechanism to review the operations of a corporation such as Air Canada. We should be reminded that the last annual report of Air Canada considered by a parliamentary committee was the 1970 annual report. That certainly is not satisfactory.

The last time officials of Air Canada appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications was in November, 1973. We have seen all these shady deals and questionable actions taking place, but to this point in time we have not had the Air Canada people before a parliamentary committee to justify their actions or answer the allegations that have been levelled against them.

One has to be shocked at the government's continuing efforts to cover up information which parliament deserves, and which the public rightly deserves. In this final minute I again urge that the government heed one of the recommendations of its task force on government information, entitled "To Know and Be Known", where it is stated on page 49 that the cornerstone of a new information policy should be, and I quote:

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

—the government has an obligation to provide full, objective and timely information; and that the citizens have a right to such information.

This would be a perfect opportunity to show that the government is inclined to abide by that spirit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 48(2), the question is on the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion lost. It being 6.30 p.m., pursuant to special order of the House I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING THE STABILIZATION OF NET PROCEEDS FROM THE PRODUCTION AND SALE OF WESTERN GRAIN

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motion No. 1 in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it. The motion is negatived on division.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the nays have it. The motion is negatived on division.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

● (2010)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the House agree to group together motions Nos. 3, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17, in the name of the minister, for debate and vote?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I should like to have an explanation on the record of the reason for these amendments.

An hon. Member: Where is the minister?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the particular motions which you have just mentioned all relate very specifically and very simply to the changing of one particular date in the legislation. When the bill was first presented to the House on December 4, 1974, it had been our hope and intention that the legislation could have been dealt with in an expeditious fashion so that we might see the bill in place and operative beginning in this particular calendar year, that is, 1975.

However, the discussion in the House and at committee stage did take longer than anticipated, and the amendments which are presented at this particular moment all relate to a rather technical change in the statute in that we substitute a date in 1976 in the places in the statute where the date referred to was 1975. It is simply a correction in that sense so that the bill will be realistic and rational in terms of the time in which we adopt it.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, the explanation by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale) is correct to a point. But he made the mistake of using the word expeditious, and he also made the mistake of saying that it took longer than anticipated when it was up for debate in the House on second reading and in the committee.

We are not going to oppose these amendments because they have to be included. The bill cannot be effective for 1975, and would have to be effective for 1976 if it does pass.

These amendments have to go with the bill, but I should like to remind the House that this legislation was an urgent matter in 1971, and even more urgent in 1974 because the minister had seen the light and made some changes. The government House leader and the minister in December of 1974 said that this was a bill which had priority. I would like to add a further explanation to that of the parliamentary secretary so that the House has a full explanation of these amendments.

This urgent bill was introduced on December 4, 1974, but would you believe it was not called for second reading until April 28, 1975? That was four months after it was introduced for first reading. At the committee stage the committee spent some eight or nine days on a trip out west to hold hearings in five locations in western Canada. Even if we allow three or four weeks for the Easter recess, that eliminates one month.

Mr. Goodale: You didn't even read the bill, Les, when we gave you three months to read it.

Mr. Benjamin: It was not on the priority list, so we did not get to the bill for second reading until April 28. That was through on May 6 after a total of 28 speeches—five Liberal, six NDP, and 19 Progressive Conservatives. That could not be called a prolonged and protracted debate, because the 19 Conservatives did not have very much to say anyway.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Would you believe the committee finally got the bill to consider on June 5? According to the minister and the parliamentary secretary, this was the greatest piece of legislation since sliced bread. The committee had the bill until July 15, and that included the tour by the agricultural committee in five centres in western Canada holding hearings, which we never really did completely finish. The committee reported to the House on July 17. The House sat until July 30, as we were wrestling with the gasoline tax. We returned on October 14, and the minister has not called the bill again until today. There is September, October, and November. What is it today, the 24th?

An hon. Member: The 27th.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Is the hon. member speaking on a point of order, or is he speaking on motion No. 3? Just now we are on a point of order with regard to whether we accept for purposes of debate the grouping together of motions Nos. 3, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, yes. He has been speaking on that.

Mr. Benjamin: We all agreed to that before I got up.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it agreed that we group together those motions for debate and vote?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blais: Start over again, Les.

Mr. Goodale: Don't start over again, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, by unanimous consent hon. members opposite want me to start all over again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please.

Hon. Jack Cullen (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 33 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"December 31, 1976, the participant shall".

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 37 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor;

"year after 1976,"

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 49 by striking out line 30 at page 43 and substituting the following therefor:

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 49 by striking out line 24 at page 44 and substituting the following therefor:

"levy has been deducted for 1976 and no".

Mr. Benjamin: When we all shouted "Agreed" to the grouping of these motions, I presumed that was the end of the matter of grouping, but it is not the end of what I have to say.

The purport of my remarks is to the effect that the purpose of the amendments, motion No. 3 and those subsequent, is that in spite of the high priority the government has placed on this bill since December 4 of last year, and because of a lack of sympathy and co-operation from the rest of the cabinet and the House leader, the greater portion of that time since last December 4 has been taken up by the failure of the government to call the bill. I just want to make sure we have everything on the record.

What the parliamentary secretary had to say was perfectly accurate, but not quite complete or up to date, so I wanted to be helpful to him and to complete the record to show why we have these amendments which are grouped, which is in order that the bill can be effective if not useful in 1976 as it could not be in 1975.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks with respect to the comments made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale). I want to make it perfectly clear that there was no attempt on the part of members on this side of the House to delay passage of the bill.

This is a very complicated piece of legislation. It required considerable study, and considerable questioning of the minister and his officials to determine the nature of the bill and the nature of the clauses. We travelled around western Canada for one week and heard presentations of briefs by a great many organizations. They said they did not understand it. I think it was important to spend a fair amount of time on the bill and we did so, trying to understand its complexities and getting the information out to our constituents.

In response to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) who said that the 19 Progressive Conservatives did not have too much to say, I should like to stress to him that what we did say made a lot of sense.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It did not take very long, either.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motions Nos. 3, 10, 13, 14, 15, 16 and 17.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt these said motions. All those in favour of the motions please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Carried on division.

Motions Nos. 3, 10, and 13 to 17 inclusive (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The House will now consider motion No. 4.

Hon. Jack Cullen (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 6 by adding immediately after line 2 at page 7, the following subclause:

> "(2.1) Subsection (2) ceases to apply to a participant who, pursuant to that subsection, is deemed to continue to be a participant, when that participant again elects to participate under this act by filing a notice in writing under subsection 5(2)."

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, I just want to ask a question of the parliamentary secretary. From my reading of the bill and the motion this appears to be strictly a technical motion. I should like to know if I read it correctly.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the hon. member's interpretation is correct. This particular addition to clause 6 of the bill is a technical measure.

Subclause 2 of clause 6 provides for the eventuality where a producer, in one of his three optional years, has decided to opt out of the legislation, and what in consequence of that happens to his levies in the stabilization fund. The clause, of course, provides that the levies paid in during the year he opted out are returned to him, and that he retains an interest in the fund for levies paid in previous years. If there is a payout from the stabilization fund in a relevant year then he may qualify to the extent that he still has an interest in the stabilization fund.

There was a bit of an anomalous situation where the producer at some later stage exercises his option to re-enter the program. Despite the fact that he made the election to come in as a full time participant again in the plan, on this particular subclause technically still applied to him. It was really redundant to have that kind of provision in the bill.

All the amendment does is say that where the producer has exercised the option to re-enter the plan, then subclause 2 of clause 6 no longer applies to him in those circumstances.

Mr. Nystrom: It is my understanding that a producer cannot be treated as both a deemed participant and a conditional participant at the same time—you have three classifications of participants—depending on whether or not he just opted in or opted out, or whether or not he had been in all along. Am I correct in saying he cannot be a deemed participant at the same time as being a conditional participant?

Mr. Goodale: That was the intention of this particular amendment, Madam Speaker, so that a producer would not be in a confused situation at one particular moment. The bill provides in an orderly way for him to work his way back into the plan once he has decided to make that election. This particular clause prevents him from being in two rather inconsistent roles at the same time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

Carried on division.

Motion No. 4 (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): With respect to motion No. 5 there seems to be some difficulty as to the acceptability of this motion. Would the House agree to defer motion No. 5 until all the others have been dealt with? Is it agreed?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, your suggestion creates a slight difficulty. We had an unofficial huddle at 6.30 as to what we would do tonight. We hoped to finish debate tonight on motions Nos. 5, 6, and 9, even to the point of taking votes on them before the evening was over. You are asking us now to defer No. 5. This upsets the plan that had been made. Perhaps your Honour could tell the House what the problem is with motion No. 5.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It appears that motion No. 5 seems to extend the scope of deduction admissible under the bill. The Chair would like to hear arguments pro and con on this motion.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I am not an expert on the rules—I leave that to my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). This motion only intends to enshrine in the bill what is already there, namely, the criteria for cost of production. All the motion intends to do is make sure that items in the criteria for the cost of production are included in this legislation as they are in other federal and provincial legislation. That is all it does. I submit, Madam Speaker, that neither you nor I may construe that to mean a charge on the public purse, which an opposition member—not of the cabinet—cannot move.

You will notice that the motion calls for including in the cost of production criteria, depreciation on farm machinery, equipment and buildings, and interest charges on those items, and payments made by farmers for their stabilization levies. That may not make the slightest bit of difference in the total net grain income for the entire region over which the bill has jurisdiction, in which case there would be no payout. For the years in which there is to be a payout which is contributed to by farmers as well as the treasury, however, the cost of production criteria will be the same as under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and as under several provincial marketing acts, and as under some marketing boards. That is all the amendment requests. If there is any way in which one can connect this with a direct charge on the public purse I have yet to hear it explained.

The amendment was moved in committee, accepted by the chairman, debated, voted on, and never was it suggested that it was out of order. It has been on the order paper since July 23, and no one has suggested it is out of order. I conclude that since this item was not ruled out of order in committee, either by the chairman or others, and was not challenged, it is in order. I choose to believe that all committee members, including the chairman, felt the motion to be perfectly in order. I submit that it still is in order.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I looked at the bill and I understand that you object to the amendment on grounds that it increases the charge on the public purse. The point is important. Yet subclause (3) of clause 8 says:

> For the purpose of paragraph (1)(a), the area gross expenses attributable to the commercial production and sale of grain by all producers for a year under review shall comprise such costs for the year as may be prescribed for the designated area in respect of . . .

The areas to be covered are then delineated. Therefore I do not see how the hon. member's proposal would tend to increase the charge on the public purse. Perhaps my hon. friend's point is well taken.

Mr. Neil: Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Although I am not expert on rules of parliamentary procedure I know that a private member cannot bring a motion which will place a charge on the public purse. The bill provides for fixed contributions to be made by the producer and the government. The government may, from time to time, pay additional amounts of money by way of loan, on which interest is to be charged. Ultimately additional funds loaned are to be repaid to the government, as well as interest levied against the producer. Consequently nothing in the amendment would impose a charge on the public purse. Therefore I submit the amendment is in order.

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): Madam Speaker, if the hon. member introducing this amendment does not think his proposal will increase the charge on the public purse, or the amount of money which can be received in a pay-out year, why has he introduced it?

Mr. Schellenberger: Madam Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I submit that his proposed amendment to clause 8 defines the formula which will trigger a payment. Consequently it has nothing to do with cost to the public purse. It is, after all, only a formula. That being so, I submit the amendment ought to be allowed.

Mr. McIsaac: Madam Speaker, it is difficult to debate this point of order without considering the point raised by the hon. member from Newfoundland.

Mr. Benjamin: What! You wouldn't know a bushel of wheat if one hit you in the face.

Mr. McIsaac: It is suggested that the motion has to do with a formula for triggering payments, of which $2,000 would come from the treasury and $1,000 from the producer. The proposal would therefore affect the formula governing payouts and amounts forthcoming from the treasury. I submit it would tend to increase the amount paid, or change the pattern or formula under which the payout is made.

I do not quarrel with attempts to debate the motion, but I do admit that it would entail extra charges on the public purse.

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, may I speak to this point of order? It is most unfortunate that people who do not understand the bill should raise questions about it.

An hon. Member: Were you on the committee?

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, he was there.

Mr. Towers: Madam Speaker, if hon. members opposite were as experienced at growing grain as I am, and had grown as much as I have, I would be prepared to listen to them and take notice of what they say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: I agree, in this instance, with the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Sometimes I don't; this time I do. His motion, which I hope you will allow, would merely define the manner in which payouts are to be made. I agree with the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) who says this will not be a drain on the public purse. The contributor, in this case the producer, can put up to $500 per year into the fund, and the government in turn will be obligated under this bill to put in $1,000. Payments will be made out of the fund. Therefore the proposal does not involve a drain on the public purse. It merely establishes the formula on which the payment will be made, and nothing else.

It will mean that the minister and the department must include certain costs as costs of production. The minister has already agreed to this. Therefore this merely involves certain guidelines. Any person suggesting this would involve an extra drain on the public purse does not know what he is talking about. I hope you will allow this motion which deals with an important aspect of this bill.

We already feel that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) shortchanged the farming community when he brought in another farm stabilization bill. We do not want that to happen again. That is why we want to see certain safeguards included in governing payouts. It should be done under an established formula. I hope you will allow the motion to be put.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, an hon. member opposite asked me a question. I think the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) put his finger on the matter much better than I did. He mentioned a formula relating to cost of production. If the farmer is to put in $500, and the government's contribution to the fund is to be $1,000, the payout, in this context, will be $1,500. I do not see how that changes anything. Whatever changes parliament may decide to make, I submit that any decision regarding cost of production criteria will have no bearing on the total amount of money the treasury is to put into the grain stabilization fund. Even if you were to include the cost of keeping the wife and kids in your cost of production, that would not affect the total amount the treasury is to put into the grain stabilization fund. It will put in 4 per cent of the grain sales proceeds, and the farmers 2 per cent. I do not see how the amendment can impose a charge on the public purse.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, may I offer a word? I recognize that part of what I will say is not a good procedural argument; I offer it in any case.

Mr. Broadbent: That sounds like Mitchell Sharp.

Mr. Nystrom: This is an historic day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I said earlier, certain discussions were held this evening about what would take place and without it being iron clad, there was general agreement among representatives of the parties that we try to get past motion No. 9 tonight, and have votes on Nos. 5, 6 and 9.

It does throw things out a bit if No. 5 is not even accepted. I couple that with the fact, as has been reported to Your Honour, that motion No. 5 was presented to the committee, debated, and voted on. There was no challenge there to its procedural admissibility. I therefore suggest that, if Your Honour finds it is a borderline case, you might consider the fact that it had been planned to have this motion brought to a conclusion tonight, along with a couple of others.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Madam Speaker, the arguments you have heard on motion No. 5 point out one of the basic faults with the bill in that it is complicated beyond the understanding of most farmers and most members of parliament. Motion No. 5 tends to change the very complicated formula in a very realistic way. That formula is only used in the act to trigger a payment. It in no way affects the size of the payment.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, I know the difficulties you are under, but I think the point made by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) was correct. This amendment in no way affects what is in the statute as the maximum contributions for the farmers are set out, and the maximums for the government are set out. This is simply a device to trigger off the payment on a different set of criteria. In no way can it be said that this affects the balance of ways and means of the Queen's money in this instance.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I thank hon. members for their contribution. Maybe the best solution would be to let the House decide. I will put the motion to the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 8 by

"(i) depreciation on farm machinery and equipment used for grain production or used in the farm business in respect of grain production and transportation;

(j) interest charges incurred in respect of the production or sale of grain; and

(k) producer levies in respect of this Act."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I would hope to kiss a bow-legged bumblebee if we are ready to adopt this motion.

An hon. Member: We are ready to vote on it.

Mr. Benjamin: We are, as soon as I and several others get through persuading the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) of the justice of this amendment. The amendment covers items that I have heard the minister himself say are legitimate costs of production for farm producers. If the minister reads the motion I know he will get to his feet and agree that it coincides exactly with his views on proper costs of production for agricultural producers.

The motion adds to the criteria in the bill. The new subparagraphs read:

(i) depreciation on farm machinery and equipment used for grain production or used in the farm business in respect of grain production and transportation.

(j) interest charges incurred in respect of the production or sale of grain; and

(k) producer levies in respect of this Act.

I agree with the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and it is very rare that happens, but interest payments on land is not a cost of production because land has appreciated in all years except the dirty thirties. As a rule, land appreciates in value. Interest payments on land are really part of a capital investment which will be recovered, and then some, when the land is sold. However, surely the Minister of Agriculture will agree that interest payments on farm buildings and equipment required for the production of grain is a legitimate cost of production. Those items all depreciate, and depreciate rapidly.

The Government of Canada, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), and their predecessors, for many years have allowed interest charges on machinery, buildings and equipment as a legitimate expense. If such an expense is not a cost of production, I have never seen one. This is already allowed in the taxation laws of Canada. Interest on machinery, equipment and buildings is allowed as an expense by several marketing boards. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will agree that it is a legitimate cost of production. That is why I asked the Minister of Agriculture a couple of questions the other day about marketing boards and the anti-inflation bill.

If the criteria for cost of production that are enclosed in Bill C-41 are applied by the Anti-Inflation Board, farmers in the minister's area and mine will get it in the neck when it comes to restraint. There are farmers in my constituency and in that of the minister's whose payments annually for interest charges on loans for farm machinery, equipment and buildings go anywhere from several hundred dollars to $2,000 to $3,000.

The Professional Association of Accountants, federal income tax laws, several marketing boards, universities, farm management groups, and farm organizations all recognize that this is a legitimate cost of production. Why then does the minister in charge of the wheat board exclude it from this bill?

As I said earlier, I agree that interest payments on land can be excluded, but how can you exclude interest payments on machinery, equipment and buildings? The interest on a frame granary and machine shed is only about 5 per cent a year. That is not a big deal to the government. It is not a big deal to the grain stabilization board; However, it is big to the farmer making the payments.

There is a further point, the matter of depreciation. Again the income tax laws permit depreciation on machinery, equipment and buildings as a legitimate expense of production, a legitimate part of the cost of producing a bushel of grain for the six grains under this bill. That has been the law of the land since World War I. However, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board says it cannot be allowed under this bill.

I am sure that depreciation is computed as a legitimate part of the cost of production by CEMA. Egg producers who make loans to buy equipment and put up buildings can include depreciation as a part of their production. That is legitimate, regardless of what Mrs. Plumptre might say.

Costs of production computed by the Saskatchewan Hog Marketing Commission include the cost of loans made by farmers to erect small barns and the ancillary equipment needed for them. Depreciation on buildings and equipment is a legitimate expense and legitimate part of the cost of production. However, for grain producers the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board says it is not part of the cost of production formula. Surely the Minister of Agriculture cannot agree with that. I cannot. I know that a number of farmers sitting on the opposite side of the House cannot agree with it. Why cannot we have a cost of production formula which is relatively uniform across the country? Why is there the exception for producers under this so-called grain income stabilization plan?

I wish to say a word now about the stabilization fee, the 2 per cent premium to be paid under the plan. That is the same as a crop insurance premium, the same as other insurance premiums, sickness and accident insurance premiums, car insurance and truck insurance premiums, all of which farmers are allowed to deduct as an expense under the income tax laws, all of which are included as a legitimate cost of production under CEMA and 20 or 30 other marketing boards across Canada. It is deductible. But in the bill before us it suddenly ceases to be a cost of production.

A farmer who delivers, say, $25,000 worth of grain pays 2 per cent into the fund, that is, $500. That is his premium. If he comes under a marketing board, that is considered part of his cost of production. I have yet to hear any argument from the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), or the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) as to why this should not be a legitimate deduction, as it is under the Income Tax Act or under marketing boards for other commodities.

Mr. Goodale: It is deductible.

Mr. Benjamin: It does not say so in the bill, unless I have misread it. Well, if I am wrong, and the hon. member for Assiniboia is right, all I am trying to do is make doubly sure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: In any case it is in my amendment, so passing it will not make any difference. If it is already in the bill, we shall only have added some syrup to the pie. If I am wrong, I do not mind admitting it. I just want to be extra cautious and make sure the bill is the best possible one for grain producers.

As to the other matters, it is incomprehensible to me that interest payments on machinery and buildings should suddenly cease to be an accepted cost of production under the terms of the bill before us. In particular I cannot understand why depreciation of machinery should not be a cost of production for the purpose of this bill, as it is everywhere else.

I put these questions to the hon. member for Assiniboia who is trying to pinch hit, although I understand he is not a good batter. As an old country pitcher I like to put these questions to him. I hope he will rise on behalf of the government and tell us this amendment is eminently fair, that it is not out of place, and that it will mean no extra cost to the treasury. I hope he will recognize that the amendment makes the bill conform to the accepted practice in business circles, financial circles generally, and the income tax laws, and agree to accept it without troubling the House by calling for a vote.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in favour of this amendment. I will speak in support of it because of the way the payment is triggered. The formula to which the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) referred has been prepared by bureaucrats in the Department of Agriculture and I can only describe it as a statistical wonder. It will keep Statistics Canada hiring people to go around the country and gather all the information required by the formula, one which comprises sections from (a) to (o). At the moment we are discussing section (b) relating to gross expenses.

As I look at the situation I see interest rates incurred by agriculture increasing dramatically in the years to come. I play with statistics a little myself from time to time, and I have examined the amount of credit outstanding in the agricultural sector today. It was difficult to come up with these figures because Statistics Canada does not collect them. However, various credit agencies gave me figures; I do not claim they are totally accurate but they are the best I could come up with.

The figures show that between 1968-72 long term credit in Canada amounted to some $2,132,000,000, intermediate credit to some $1,808,000,000, and short-term credit to around $1,933,000,000. That is a lot of money. Let us put it in terms we can understand, that is, the average debt per farmer. In 1971 it came to $12,911. It has increased substantially since that time. In 1972 it was $14,433, in 1973 it was $17,295, and in 1974 it was $18,021. That amounts to some $6,000 increase per farmer in the debt carried.

Interest charges have grown heavier not because of the increase of the debt but because interest rates have risen. Interest payments on indebtedness in Canadian agriculture in 1971 amounted to $918 per year per farmer. In a matter of three years this has risen to $1,500. It seems to me that as the cost of land and machinery increases, the loan and interest charges carried by the farmer will rise substantially.

To my mind, in order to make this formula realistic—and if anyone can understand it, statisticians should be able to—it is absolutely necessary that in future years interest charges and depreciation on farm machinery be included in the cost of production formula that will be put into the calculation of the aggregate stabilization payment to determine whether a payment to western farmers is triggered or not triggered. These are the reasons why I feel that this amendment should be supported.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with the many points raised by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre suggested that three items should be included in the cost of production formula. To take the last point first, the producer levies, his argument can be disposed of rather quickly by my confirming to him formally that just as producer levies are tax deductible they are also one of the costs included in the calculation of the cost of production in this plan. Clearly under clause 8(3)(f), insurance premiums, such things as producer contributions to a crop insurance plan are included. That is clearly the intention of the legislation, so that particular concern of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre can be laid to rest rather quickly.

The second point that he mentioned, and which was alluded to by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin in more detail, was the matter of interest. As both hon. members pointed out, long-term interest, which is really investment of money in land or other things, is something that should not be included as a cash cost for operating expenses under the plan because it is something of quite a different nature and would not properly be included in the definition of "cost of production" in this bill.

I think the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre conceded that point; his more basic question had to do with short and medium term interest. Again I suggest to him that that particular matter is covered in the legislation in that the cost of production formula includes the cash costs associated with the production of the grains that are covered by the plan. Any of the items enumerated from paragraph (a) to (h) which involve an expenditure of money at medium or short term interest are therefore included.

If the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre wants to argue the point it may be by implication, but it is very definitely a factor that is included in the survey material that Statistics Canada will be gathering later next spring and the following year. Again medium and long-term interest, where they relate to expenditures for grain production as enumerated in paragraphs (a) to (h), are clearly covered by the bill.

The third point that the hon. member raised in speaking to the amendment is a more complicated one, and I should like to take a few moments to deal with this question of depreciation. As hon. members know, or at least as those who were on our committee in western Canada know, a great many producers raised questions concerning depreciation. There can be no doubt that if you were to ask a producer a very blunt and straightforward question about what he views to be one of this most important cost items, he will probably reply that it is depreciation. It was not very long ago that western Canadian grain producers were literally living off their depreciation. It is an item that is first and foremost on their minds. When one looks at the particular provision in the context of the grain stabilization bill, one can see that the inclusion of depreciation is not something that would enhance the protection that this bill offers western Canadian grain producers.

The first argument that I would offer in support of that is one that may be regarded as economic theory but which is valid in the sense that an expenditure made on machinery or major equipment is not so much a cash expenditure, such as an expenditure on seed, fertilizer, gas or oil—an expenditure that a farmer makes every year in the course of production—but is really a longer term investment. Granted, it is not an investment in a sense of investing in land, which is more or less permanent, but is an investment expenditure.

As I have said, and as other hon. members have indicated, the costs enumerated in this bill are cash costs associated with production in each year. So there is a theoretical difficulty in including an expenditure which, granted, farmers make, but make over the longer term; they do not make it year by year.

The question is: how do you arrive at a fair, reasonable and actuarially sound basis for taking that factor into consideration? A great deal of work has been done in investigating two questions. The first is whether it may legitimately be included in the plan; the second is that, if it is not, what are the methods whereby you can accommodate the suggestion that it should?

[Mr. Goodale.]

The first approach, I suppose, is simply to calculate a standard average figure for depreciation across the board for the prairie region and to plug that figure into the legislation at the appropriate point. The problem there is that it does not change the calculation one bit, because you would add that standard average figure year by year to the moving five year average as well as to the sixth year's specific figure. When you subtract the one figure from the other you end up with exactly the same figure as if you had not added the same factor to both sides. Put simply, five minus three is two, just as four minus two is two. The net result is the same if you add the same figure to both sides and then subtract them one from the other. You have not changed the dollar value at all. Doing this with an across the board average figure would not change the result, and thus you have not improved the protection available to producers under the bill.

The second approach, I suppose, would be to try to come up with the actual figure. Instead of finding an average that you plug in arbitrarily, you come up with the actual figure representing the expenditures made by farmers on major equipment. The difficulty there leads me back to the original theoretical point that I was making about depreciation, and that is that it is an investment expenditure, not so much a cash expenditure year by year.

When you look at the expenditures made by producers over time, they make major expenditures of this kind in their good years. For the purposes of this plan, this would be in the years when the net cash flow is the broadest. They refrain from making major investment expenditures in years when the net cash flow is narrowest. If you were to include the actual figures, you would add the additional or broader expense in the year when the net cash flow is broadest, and therefore the year when you do not need the expense; you would not add it in the year when the net cash flow is narrowest, in the year when the greater expense would justify a payment from the fund.

The real dilemma with this concept is that you add this expense in the wrong years, and you do not add it in the right years, with the net result that the flow of the plan over time is distorted, and the net protection that is available to producers may very well be reduced, not improved, by including depreciation.

For these reasons, both theoretical and practical, I would be opposed to this particular amendment which includes depreciation, which I think takes away from the actuarial soundness of the plan and makes mention of other things such as interest and producer levies which I suggest are already in the bill with the other points enumerated.

I should also like to deal with the argument raised by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin about the alleged great bureaucracy that will be involved in the grain stabilization plan, an army of bureaucrats who will be tramping across the prairies to make the plan effective. I think that is a common allegation, but it is a misconception. The fact of the matter is that it simply is not so.

There will not be a great siege by government employees descending upon the prairies to make this plan work. The Western Grain Stabilization Administration will be located in a rather small office in the city of Winnipeg. I am told the number of permanent employees will be perhaps 12 or 15. During the start-up stages there may be some additional expense involved, but in the longer term I believe the cost of the plan will be something in the order of $300,000.

It is interesting also to look at the cost of the plan in terms of administration compared to the cost of administering provincial crop insurance plans, which some members suggest would be a better plan than this. If you take the cost of the crop insurance plans in the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Alberta you will find that this particular plan costs at the very most one-fifth as much as the least expensive of those plans. This plan will not be a burden upon the public treasury. It will not be a burden on the producer in terms of the administrative cost because this cost will not be borne from the fund but entirely by the federal treasury and the Government of Canada. So, in no way can it in fairness be alleged that this plan will create a bureaucratic jungle. Those suggestions simply are not true. I think the proof of the pudding will be in the eating when we see the plan in place, it is to be hoped by January 1, 1976.

I would invite hon. members to think very seriously about the arguments I have put forward particularly in respect of depreciation. I suggest the other points are also included, and I would urge that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I sat in on much of the discussion in the committee. I think one of the great weaknesses in this type of a plan has become apparent tonight.

I have listened over a long period to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board indicate that we were talking about stabilization of income, that it was the income that was to be stabilized, and that this would be accomplished through this levy over a period of time. In other words the money would be collected in the good years and the payout would come in the bad years.

The parliamentary secretary tonight changes all that and says that we are operating on an income insurance program rather than income stabilization, that we are using the net cash flow as against net income. He indicates that while it is always made very clear by the minister responsible for the Wheat Board that we are talking about levies and are not talking about insurance, in no way is any percentage of the level of income insured. In other words you do not get poor too fast nor do you get rich too fast.

There is nothing to say you would be insured against becoming poor in a bad year, or that you would be insured against being rich in a good year. If the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) is confused, so am I. Either he is right or the minister responsible for the bill is right.

Mr. Goodale: We are both right.

Mr. Peters: I would agree with him if he really had responsibility for this bill. I think we have come a long way forward from that period of three or four years ago when it was totally a stabilization bill and where there was no cost of production included in it. If he is now saying that we are to put in the levies, that this will be part of the cost of production, and that some of the other things like the interest charges on short-term investment for farm machinery and other short-term investments will be part of the cost of production under this legislation, then I think we have come a long way forward. But I do not think that is in the bill.

I have never seen the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who is responsible for the wheat board, at any time change his mind. In fact once he makes up his mind, whether he is right or wrong, he never changes it. There is absolutely no flexibility in his mind. I have seen him on occasion lose a bill in this House rather than make any kind of amendment to that bill, no matter how small. He does not change his mind. However, the hon. member for Assiniboia in changing the interpretation of what we are doing really in effect has gone a long way, in my opinion, in making this a much more acceptable bill.

The problem we are having in all sectors of agriculture today is in finding out and spelling out the factors which go into making up the cost of production. We had this difficulty in respect of CEMA. There are the arguments which take place concerning the actual rise in the cost of production which goes into the product. There has been a considerable difference of opinion concerning what constitutes those particular items. In this bill a number of those cost of production items have been delineated.

In addition to that it has been suggested we include such things as the stabilization levy under this bill. If this is called an insurance premium I assume it is covered, but I am not sure what we are talking about in respect of insurance premiums. There are the premiums payable under the provincial insurance programs which also may affect parts of the grain industry that are being covered by this bill. Those are insurance premiums and will be allowed as a cost expense.

The depreciation, in my opinion, was handled very loosely by the hon. member for Assiniboia. He indicated that if income should be high the farmer would spend money on new machinery, and then following a great number of bad years, the farmer would find in another couple of good years that it would be absolutely necessary to replace all the machinery. The farmer would be replacing machinery that had run out of depreciation from an income tax point of view a number of years previously.

Farmers could not buy new machinery because they did not have any money. It was a very simple process. And when they did have some money one of the things they had to do was make an expenditure for modernizing the equipment necessary in their operations.

Hon. members should know that when a farmer runs out of depreciation, it usually indicates there were a number of bad years when he was not able to replace his machinery, no matter how bad it was. He could not replace it, and he could not take advantage of any deduction he might have had with regard to income tax for the simple reason that he had no income. Therefore, he had no depreciation, he could not use any depreciation, and there was also no income tax. There were many years when many farmers found themselves in that position. There are many of us who have been concerned for some time about this problem, and we would like to have the formula established in a way in which it could be applied not only to this piece of legislation but also to the income tax legislation, and to all the other legislation which uses these same criteria or similar criteria in establishing cost of production for a given commodity.

Our legislation has always been pretty sloppy in many ways. I can think of at least five or six different acts where a person is considered to be disabled, and the criteria for establishing disability under the Canada Pension Plan, veterans allowance, workmen's compensation in Ontario, and family benefits legislation are different in each case.

It seems to me that in setting up our cost of production and the items which go into making up cost of production we should be working very hard at getting uniform cost of production criteria which will apply to all legislation farmers may use so that they will not have great difficulty in deciding what is allowed and in which piece of legislation it may be.

The parliamentary secretary continued to talk about net cash flow versus net income, and it seems to me that in this legislation there is no relationship to net cash flow; that that was not the criterion. It also is a fact that this did not start out as a net income insurance program. This was supposed to be a stabilization of farm incomes to take out the highs and lows of fluctuation in farm income. Originally it was not at all concerned with cost of production. Now that it is changed so that the parliamentary secretary can indicate that we are interested in net cash flow, and we must also be interested in what the cost of that production might be.

The amendment before us adds one or two things which the parliamentary secretary is not sure are necessary. He indicates that others are already in the legislation. It seems to me that we are clarifying for the farmer the method of calculating net costs, and if we are able to do that I think we will be providing a service.

Much of this is already embodied in the thinking of the government, and will eventually end up as regulations, so that there should certainly be no objection to passing this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) because it only amounts to clarification.

If the parliamentary secretary is right, and we are now deciding what the net cash flow will be to provide a net cash income, and that this is an insurance toward that end, then there will not be any difficulty with this amendment as regards the regulations.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). We in our party support this amendment. Anyone in the farming business will certainly agree that depreciation and interest charges are major expenses when it comes to carrying on the business of farming. The question of depreciation was raised in committee on one or two occasions, and the minister went into a rather detailed and complicated explanation, almost as complicated as the bill itself. Now I find that the parliamentary secretary has given an explanation which is more complicated than that given by the minister.

Mr. Towers: He does not even understand it.

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Neil: It almost makes me think that perhaps the parliamentary secretary had a hand in drafting the legislation, although perhaps if he had he would have done a better job because when it comes to interpreting some of these clauses one needs a computer mind.

I was interested in the comment made by the parliamentary secretary that this operation could be carried on by a very small number of people and would not require a large build up of bureaucrats. But if we look at the supplementary estimates which were tabled in the House as recently as November 12 we find that there is an item of some $300,000, and this does not make any provision for the levy the government would be matching. I assume this is to pay for the setting up of offices and to cover the salaries of the staff from now until March 31.

An interesting aspect arose in the committee hearings, and that was that Statistics Canada would be the body which would determine the various expenses listed under clause 8, which we are considering amending at the present time. As I recall, we were told by officials of the department that some 1,300 to 1,500 typical farmers would be visited in a very short period of time after the end of the year, and these people from Statistics Canada would take a form and gain certain information from the farmers themselves. They would be asking these farmers for details about their expenses at a time when they had not had an opportunity of preparing their income tax returns, and I suspect that they would be rather reluctant to supply these figures.

In addition, it is my understanding from the committee, and from reading the bill, that there has to be a year end inventory taken of grain on farms. I assume it would be a sampling, but if these people from Statistic Canada are going to be the people trying to determine the amount of grain in storage on the farms, I am afraid they will have a difficult time.

In committee we suggested that if the government wanted to save money, the figures it is attempting to get from the farmers with respect to expenses are already included in the farmers' annual income tax return. It would be a very simple matter to pick out the 1300 or 1500 farmers who are typical and have their income tax returns colour coded, or perhaps ask them to file earlier in the year. The figures could be extracted from the returns, plugged into a computer and then the government would have a very accurate answer, one based on the actual expenses of the farmer rather than on estimates obtained from people in Statistics Canada travelling to those 13,000 or 15,000 farmers in mid-winter.

We in this party support the amendment of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. We agree that the items he has included are real expenses as far as the farmer is concerned.

The parliamentary secretary has said that subparagraph (k) of the motion which reads "producer levies in respect of this act" comes within paragraph 8.(3) (f) "insurance premiums." The hon. parliamentary secretary is a lawyer like myself, and I think he would agree that we would have a difficult time explaining to a judge that these levies under a grain stabilization bill are considered insurance premiums. There seems some doubt about it to me. I would suggest there should be an amendment to include these levies in the expense section if this is the intention. The parliamentary secretary has put it on the record, and I would assume that perhaps without an amendment the officials in the department will include this particular item as an expense.

Reference has been made to interest charges being included in the bill but I have not been able to find this. As I mentioned, the bill is very complicated. You would need a computer mind to understand it. It is possible that interest charges are included somewhere, but up to this time I have not been able to find them.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put one or two questions to the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope the hon. member does not expect that the parliamentary secretary will be allowed to answer the questions now. We are not in committee of the whole. The hon. parliamentary secretary having spoken, cannot reply to questions.

Mr. Nystrom: Then I will put questions to someone on the other side who could respond, whether it is the government House leader or the parliamentary secretary. If I remember correctly, the minister in charge of the Wheat Board, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said several times during committee hearings, and has said elsewhere publicly, that he does not consider this western farm stabilization plan to be an insurance scheme.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) in his amendment has proposed premiums or levies or fees being deducted as a legitimate expense. When the parliamentary secretary was responding he said that was already covered in the bill at page 11 under clause 8. (3) (f) "insurance premiums." After listening to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board it would be my interpretation that insurance premiums would refer to fire insurance, crop insurance, insurance on buildings, and any insurance premiums of that sort.

Now we have the parliamentary secretary saying that these levies or premiums from the stabilization bill are covered by that clause. I think that is a discrepancy and I should like someone from the other side, be it a cabinet minister or the parliamentary secretary, to respond before we move from this clause.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of this motion. Representing as I do a riding in Saskatchewan, the largest grain growing province in the country, I would hope that we would receive the co-operation of the government of Saskatchewan.

It has been said that the motion would include depreciation on farm machinery, interest charges, producer levies, etc. as a legitimate expense. Speaking for the government of Saskatchewan the minister of agriculture for that province said:

> The present bill does not give adequate recognition to the need for all inflationary factors to be taken into account. It is stated that it encompasses a principle which would be difficult to defend with other sectors of the economy. This statement is patently absurd. Every other sector of the Canadian economy which has any bargaining power has developed some form of defence against rising cost.

He recommended:

> The costs incorporated in the calculation of net cash flow do not include depreciation and interest costs. If a stabilization program is to be meaningful, the method of costing should reflect the true cost situation of producers. In order to reflect actual costs of production an allowance should be made for depreciation, interest, and labour costs.

These are the feelings of the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan. I think they support motion No. 5

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I was quite interested in the dissertation of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). He said that some years ago agricultural producers or grain farmers were literally living on depreciation. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, this Liberal government certainly looked after that with its capital gains tax. This is not happening at the present time because of the taxation policy.

He asked how we would arrive at an actuarially sound and equitable base for the figure on cost of production. I do not think you need to be a mathematician to figure that one out, with our present income tax system. It is easy to calculate the actual cost of production on the average grain farm today. All the government would have to do is consider all those parts of the expense that are deductible for tax purposes. That would be equitable and fair, but perhaps it is too simple.

The hon. member for Assiniboia said that depreciation was included in the cost of operations, but I do not see that mentioned anywhere in the bill. In that part of the legislation which refers to the cost of production, everything that is mentioned is something that is purchased. For instance, subclause (3)(b) on page 11 reads:

> items purchased by producers to operate and maintain farm machinery used for grain production or used in the farm business in respect of grain production and transportation;

Subparagraph (d) of subclause (3) reads:

> items purchased by producers to maintain farm buildings used for grain production, but not including items purchased to maintain a home;

Depreciation is not taken into account. It is grossly unfair not to include depreciation as a cost of production, especially as under our tag system we take into account capital gains. Clearly the drafters of this legislation are guilty of omission and gross error. It's a correction that should be given consideration.

We should also consider interest rates. The hon. member for Assiniboia suggested that capital costs for farm machinery are incurred in good years. I agree to some extent, although when the equipment breaks down through no fault of the operator, he must buy new equipment, no matter when it happens. At one time a new tractor would cost several hundred dollars more than the old one, but now, in this day and age of inflation, costs rise by thousands, not hundreds of dollars.

At one time you could buy a fair-sized tractor for $15,000; now it will cost you anywhere from $35,000 to $40,000 or $45,000. Few operators have that kind of cash floating around. This means they must borrow. Goodness only knows, anyone producing anything considers the cost of money as sizable input cost. Inevitably the minister will need to consider the question of interest costs.

In addition, we must look at labour costs which rise each consecutive year. Anyone who wants to keep his operation efficient must consider labour costs. As time goes on, more and more producers must hire labour. Agricultural producers must compete with other segments of industry for labour. Therefore costs of labour must be taken into consideration in computing costs of production. I think the minister has overlooked this. Labour costs are increasing rapidly; therefore provision should be included in the bill, along lines suggested by us for protecting the producer.

If I may digress, let me refer hon. members to a discussion which took place in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs the other day. We were discussing commodity groups and farm marketing boards, a subject of concern to many hon. members as is evident from questions they ask in the House. Hon. members want to know how the Anti-Inflation Board, to be established under Bill C-73, will affect farm marketing boards.

Members of the committee asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) how Bill C-73 would affect the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. He answered by saying that the minister in charge of the Wheat Board had been involved in the establishment of policy but that, otherwise, he could not answer our questions. Unfortunately the minister in charge of the Wheat Board is not present. Hopefully on third reading he will answer certain questions concerning this bill. It is important legislation, as the Canadian Wheat Board is the largest marketing board in Canada, administering more money than any other board. It is important for us to know how Bill C-73 will affect marketing boards. That question must be answered.

We must also consider payments. What bearing will Bill C-73 have on the $500.00 to be paid in as a premium, deposit,—call it what you will—to the fund? How will payouts be affected by Bill C-73? These questions must be answered before we pass this legislation. I raise this matter because in committee, when we asked the minister if premiums and payments connected with crop insurance would have any effect on the stabilization bill, he said no; then, after being corrected by a member of the department, he made an about face and said yes. Therefore before the bill passes we must hear the answers on certain aspects of the bill which concern Canadian producers.

Many producers are indifferent to this legislation as they plan to retire in five or six years and will not become involved. Nevertheless, our concerns are legitimate and should be answered. On third reading I hope the minister will deal with these matters and, hopefully, answer questions which are of utmost concern to grain producers of western Canada.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in the debate on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), but was prompted to speak by the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), and the peculiar position taken by the Chair with regard to the point of order.

[Mr. Towers.]

Basically, the situation is that for several decades farmers engaged in the volatile grain growing business in the west wanted stability of price and income. This particular bill was supposed to be the Liberal government's answer in stabilizing their income, yet we hear this type of argument that there is no difference between five minus three equals two, and four minus two equals two.

My question to the government is very simple. We are going to support this amendment because we would like to see as many farmers as possible come into this type of legislation to try to stabilize incomes. We do not think this type of legislation will bring in many farmers, but because we know the need for the stabilization of income we would like to see as many farmers as possible come in, no matter how poor the legislation.

I would like to ask the government why it is trying to stop farmers from wanting to join this program? A farmer certainly considers the costs listed in motion No. 5, the question of interest, depreciation, and the other things listed, in addition to what is in clause 8, as legitimate costs. It is easy to get these costs because we have the most efficient collector of costs in the world in the income tax branch of the Department of National Revenue.

Therefore when I hear government members stand up and say we should not accept this amendment on the ground that it is only the difference between five minus three equals two and four minus two equals two, and what you add on here you take off there, and the type of argument made by one member of our party who said it was making it more complicated than the original bill, I cannot see what the government is trying to do. Is it trying to keep farmers out of this?

I do not know who is responsible for the point of order on acceptability raised by the Chair, but if any person read the legislation, even without understanding all the complicated computerized formulas you have to understand thoroughly, it would be obvious and clear that the government's contribution was set by statute in this bill and that the farmers' contribution was set by statute in this bill. There could not be any extra charge on the government, yet we have this point of order that was raised being supported by members of the government.

Here I am, as one member of this parliament, trying to get some form of legislation on the books that gives some chance for continuous stability of income for the farmer, yet I see the actions of the government and of the members of the government party in every way that they know, trying to discourage farmers from getting into this particular type of program.

If the minister had listened to the representations we made on second reading, namely, that the bill should not be put into the standing committee but taken to the farmers to get their view before we voted on the principle, we would not be in the mess we are in today. When the minister insisted with his usual rigidity and inflexibility that we first vote on the principle and then ask the farmers, we knew that he would not change.

As I shall be pointing out, as will others on third reading, farmers do not like this type of legislation and have said so. However, we are being forced to go through this routine we are in now of trying to amend that legislation. We are supporting this motion by the NDP on the grounds that it will add to the weight of the arguments of the government when presenting this poor bill so that more farmers will join in the program. I cannot understand why the government is opposing it at this particular time.

In conclusion I wish to suggest to the House leader that, as far as the official opposition is concerned, we would be glad to have a vote on this right away so that we can get on with it. I do not know what is coming up for tomorrow. Does the House leader have any answer? What is the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there had been some hope and I think reasonable expectation that we would be able to advance this particular piece of legislation and to have votes tonight on three of these motions. That would have given an opportunity for the House to declare itself on some of the points that have been raised here today. However, that does not seem possible unless it is agreed that we have the votes right now. I am not quite sure whether the hon. member is inviting us to have the votes now.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I asked for clarification of the plans for tomorrow so that we would know what to do tonight.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this puts me in a rather awkward position. I had been given to understand that before we rose at ten o'clock tonight we would have been able to dispose of three of the motions upon which a vote is likely. That not having happened, it is not quite clear to me whether it would be reasonable for me to have those votes tomorrow. I doubt it very much. However, as far as the government side is concerned, we would be very happy to continue with this debate if we could dispose of this matter tomorrow. I have had some discussions with the other House leaders. So far I have not got agreement on that proposition. However, if the House leader of the Progressive Conservative party will say that we can tomorrow finish the report stage and third reading, we will be very happy to have this bill tomorrow.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Just to be completely clear, Mr. Speaker, there is no way that I can undertake with the government House leader that we can have third reading tomorrow with respect to this bill. He has asked for an undertaking or feeling with respect to it. I think I am bound to say that to him. The question has been put by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) asking for the business of the House tomorrow. I would like to know as well.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to call this particular business again tomorrow if we can get unanimous consent to continue with third reading tomorrow. That would be one thing. If we do not, we will call Bill C-20. Therefore we will first call a continuation of the debate on the report stage of Bill C-41, followed by Bill C-20.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION—SUGGESTION CORPORATION NOT SELECT LAWYERS FOR MORTGAGORS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my point in rising at this hour is to make the best attempt that I can to divorce an ancient and honourable provision of the law from a disgusting form of the political pork barrel.

● (2200)

I raised the question the other day with the Minister of State, that urbane gentleman for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), and his reply was indistinguishable from the replies given by ministers holding his position or reporting to the House for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation ever since CMHC was formed.

The point is simple, Mr. Speaker. If you wish, or anybody else wishes to go to CMHC to use its mortgage facilities to help buy a house, you will find that the lawyer is selected for you by CMHC or that your choice is limited to a list of lawyers presented to you by the corporation. I am not enveighing against all political patronage in the political field. I think lawyers are a large and necessary part of the forces by which any one of us is elected, and most of us realize that there is a political reality—that other things being equal you go to your friends, not to your foes. So if, for example, the Department of Fisheries needs a lawyer to prosecute a case, the present stripe of the government being Liberal I would expect that the stripe of the lawyer prosecuting for the department would be Liberal. I have no quarrel with that, because government is the client and the lawyer is the choice of that client. But I would object, and I think Canadians, if they knew the practice, should object to the government choosing our lawyers when we go to get a CMHC mortgage.

I called it a disgusting form of political patronage when I asked the minister that question and received a ho-hum answer from him, though reading his heart rather than the words he put on paper I got the impression he agrees 100 per cent with me that it is a most unenviable job he has, trying to defend the practice of government appointments, Liberal government appointments in this case, though a few years ago it was Conservative appointments; I know how these things work so I can tell Your Honour exactly what happens. I say it is morally wrong, that it should not be defended by anybody and that it should be changed.

I say again that if government appoints lawyers for its own purposes, that is one thing. But if it appoints CMHC-approved lawyers—and they will be Liberal lawyers throughout the length and breadth of Canada—and somebody goes in and says, "I have my own lawyer who does all my work for me," then CMHC will say, "No, you have to use one of these lawyers." This, to my mind, may hurt the lawyer the client proposes, because the client might perhaps say to himself, "My lawyer is not recognized somehow by the government." That is bad. It is demeaning to the profession and I do not know why the bar associations have not hollered more about it.

I do not know why more lawyers who are members of parliament are not screaming about this dirty, filthy practice. In any event I am bringing it out, and I intend to continue doing so. I will say this, in case we get some facetious, half-baked reply to the effect that the government has to be sure of the quality of the lawyers concerned—I know the lawyers chosen by the government are good ones. The people who draw up a political patronage list of lawyers make sure of that, as far as possible, because they do not wish to approve lawyers who are likely to get them into difficulties. I know they may be good lawyers, but they are not the lawyers of my choice when I go to CMHC. The private lending institutions now generally allow you to use your own lawyer.

In closing, I point out that there is a policy of insurance in most, if not all, provinces for members of the bar. If you are stuck with a bad lemon, as once in a while you will be, some protection is given either by the bar itself or its insurance. So there is no reason whatever why this ancient, very unhappy and dirty practice that has been carried on for many decades should exist any longer in this decade. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Gauthier) will have the guts and gumption to stand up, acknowledge it is wrong, and to say that "we are putting an end to it now, go to CMHC and take along your own lawyer to do your business with that Crown corporation".

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been going over material dating as far back as June 18, 1959, to try to find some solution to the problem raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). I should like to quote from a letter signed by the executive secretary to the then minister of justice, Mr. Fulton:

> The policy of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and indeed, of all government departments, is that no lawyer may act both for his client and the C.M.H.C. or the department at the same time. I am sure you will readily understand the reason for this rule when you consider the conflicts of interest that could arise.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), in accordance with the responsibilities imposed upon him by his position, recommends from time to time names of legal agents across Canada who are best able to perform legal work for the Government of Canada or certain of its agencies as may be required from time to time. The present practice with respect to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is that, with the approval of the Minister of Justice, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) from time to time provides Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with the names of legal agents who might be employed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in various municipalities throughout Canada.

I appreciate the hon. member's point of view regarding choice of lawyer for both client and CMHC and I will bring it to the attention of my minister, who I am sure will be able to reply in much better terms than I.

AIR CANADA—LACK OF SUPPORT FOR FIVE EMPLOYEES CHARGED WITH CRIMINAL OFFENCE—BONDING OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, on November 24 I questioned the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) on Air Canada's refusal to give any moral or financial support to five of its employees in New York who faced charges of gold theft. The minister answered that once the employees had been found innocent of the charges they had been reinstated without loss of pay. From the minister's answer one can see that he had failed to understand the whole point of my question.

I would like to take this opportunity to clarify the background of my question on November 24. Five Air Canada employees in New York had been charged with gold theft. The five employees involved accused Air Canada of not raising a hand to help them but had suspended them until the outcome of the trial. The five employees incurred high legal expenses totalling $18,000 in trying to prove their innocence. It was only then that they were reinstated in their jobs, with their back pay. I would like to make one very important point here; they were not compensated for their legal expenses even though they were falsely accused.

A similar incident occurred in Ottawa last year. On April 18, 1974, two armed men, wearing Air Canada uniforms, forced their way into the Air Canada freight terminal at the Ottawa International airport and stole five gold bars with an estimated worth of $165,000. The Gloucester police who were investigating the robbery had warned Air Canada officials several times that security was lax and invited robberies. It was Air Canada's procedure that any time that valuable cargo came in on a plane, it was taken by baggage carts to the freight terminal where it was kept in a wire cage, protected only by an ordinary padlock. After closing time at 11 p.m. only one security guard was left at the building.

In reference to the gold theft of April 18, 1974, Air Canada had said that it was correct to assume that the parties responsible for the robbery were familiar with Air Canada practices. To date this case still has not been solved, and Air Canada employees are still vulnerable to arrest in connection with this theft.

My contention is that if Air Canada employees are expected to guard such valuables, the airline should make it its responsibility to protect its employees from similar occurrences. Security measures should be stepped up in order to minimize the chances of such a situation repeating itself.

Not only had these employees been laid off indefinitely but, as their legal fees soared, their savings diminished. To make matters worse their chances of finding part-time jobs to try to make ends meet were minimal. As one employee said in an interview in the Toronto Sun, "I couldn't even get a job to work part-time at a service station because I was facing charges—I had to borrow to live". Another contributing factor to the employee's dilemma is that the judicial system is a slow moving machine. If any appeals are to be made the process can drag on for months, with legal fees soaring and the employee not receiving any kind of moral or financial support from his employer, Air Canada.

I am not recounting a few isolated incidents. During question period I have repeatedly brought up the problems of morale in the finance department of Air Canada in Winnipeg. Last April, Air Canada employees went on strike at the Charles de Gaulle Airport in Paris. What we have here is a breakdown of employer-employee communication.

I think it is time that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) should recognize the seriousness of this problem and try to rectify the matter. I would suggest that the minister sit down with Air Canada and union officials and discuss the immediate improvement of security at all Air Canada terminals in the world. Such a move would take away some of the onus placed on Air Canada's employees when dealing with the shipment and storage of valuables. I would suggest that some sort of insurance or bonding be made available to those employees who may find themselves in the same situation as those charged with gold theft in New York. It would be to the benefit of Air Canada management to make it possible for its employees to air their views and subsequently make Air Canada a more receptive employer.

There have also been a number of robberies. On January 27, 1975, it is reported that gold and silver bars worth more than $88,000 were stolen from mailbags at Toronto International Airport. The report also stated that police said post office investigators told them on the previous Friday that $15,877 worth of gold and silver bars were stolen from the mail January 14. The report further stated that police said investigations also revealed that some time since November 14, 1974, a $72,130 gold bar weighing 399 ounces was stolen from the mail. So, Mr. Speaker, you can see that these gold thefts at Air Canada terminals represent a very serious problem. I suggest the minister should launch an immediate investigation into the whole procedure in respect of security of such valuables at airports.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, following the questions put to the minister in the House by the hon. member on November 24 the Ministry of Transport has made an inquiry of Air Canada to determine the circumstances surrounding the particular situation to which the hon. member has referred at Kennedy International Airport in New York. We have received the assurance from Air Canada that the security arrangement at the Kennedy International Airport, and indeed at all other airports, continues to be entirely satisfactory and that Air Canada has no apparent reason to make alterations to a system which is and has been working effectively.

I must say that the comment raised by my hon. friend in respect of a theft at the Ottawa airport a year or so ago, or at least in 1974, is a particular situation I should like to check into further. However, the item of concern this evening especially relates to the situation at Kennedy International Airport.

With respect to the employees who were recently acquitted of a charge of theft on the ramp at Kennedy International airport, they were all reinstated to their former positions and paid in full for the time during which they were under suspension while awaiting a hearing of their case. As the hon. member will understand, these employees were charged under normal legal procedures by the New York port authority police. They obtained legal council, and in due course were acquitted. In no way can Air Canada be held responsible for payment of their legal fees. This was, and is, in all ordinary practice a private concern of each individual employee.

On the final point raised by the hon. member in his supplementary question to the minister on the same day, November 24, with respect to the matter of bonding, Air Canada is satisfied that all its employees are properly bonded under a blanket fidelity bond which insures Air Canada against the dishonest or fraudulent act of any employee acting alone or in collusion with others.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION—SUGGESTED STUDY OF STRUCTURE AND EXPENDITURES TO PROMOTE EFFICIENCY AND REDUCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, on October 31 I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to consider a Glassco Commission type study of government organization, and he responded that he thought it was a constructive suggestion which he would take up with his colleagues, so tonight I have a few suggestions in support of my proposition for the consideration of the minister.

Any administrative organization needs to be examined periodically to see how it is working compared with how it is intended to work; to test the suitability of the organization adapted to changed circumstances because any organization, instead of adapting in time, tends to lag behind changing needs; and to force those involved to examine their role and test their suitability, and be self-conscious about how it really works.

In the case of the federal government it is now 15 years since the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) set up the Royal Commission on Government Organization, which was called the Glassco Commission, and 13 years since that commission made its first major report. That means, I think it is safe to say, that we are probably three to five years overdue in having another look at the whole system and how it is working. Also in that time the size and the complexity of the federal public service have both multiplied, and a tremendous amount of delegated authority has been given to public servants and extended in variety and scope.

We know that at this time there is much evidence that the government proceeds like a whole series of separate empires. These empires often compete with each other. Sometimes they even conflict with each other.

These are all reasons why it is timely to consider a new look through a new appropriately guided royal commission. What are some of the things at which we could look? I suggest the following: first, we could look at the cost of particular operations in relation to the cost of similar functions in the private sector.

Second, we could look at new approaches to accountability. The Glassco Commission tried to establish some in both the financial and personnel management fields, but the ways in which these have been adopted certainly are not working perfectly, and the demands are greater today.

Third, we should look at some important aspects of personnel function. There is a good deal of evidence that labour relations in the public service are bad.

Fourth, we need to identify obsolete and outdated functions. Unless we look at something like the government every so often, things go on for ever even if the need for them disappears.

Fifth, we need to identify functions which could be done as well or better in the private sector. The Glassco Commission tried to identify some of these, but not very much action resulted. It is worth another try.

Sixth, we need to look at the whole organization from the standpoint of the function it is supposed to perform and its performance in fact.

With so much change in growth in the public service, and so much change in the role of government and the character of the world around the government—the external environment—there are bound to be inadequacies and things which deserve another look so that we can feel our taxes are well spent.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just spoke did make his suggestion on October 31 of this year to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). The minister at that time indicated that the suggestion was a constructive one which he would investigate and discuss with his colleagues.

At the present time extensive reviews are being undertaken by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) of all aspects of government operations with the objective of eliminating expenses which can be eliminated or reduced. The utmost economy is being exercised, and no doubt hon. members in this House will hear a good deal more of the consequences of that review.

The Auditor General, Mr. J. J. Macdonnell, with the full co-operation of the government, has undertaken several studies, including the report of the Independent Review Committee on the Office of the Auditor General of Canada, which was tabled in the House on April 14 of this year. In addition, the Auditor General has undertaken an extensive study in the general area of financial management and control. The government will take this opportunity to make these necessary changes in its over-all structure so as to rectify any weakness in the system which these studies may reveal.

The nature and scope of the study undertaken by the so-called Glassco commission was much broader and more extensive, and covered a substantial period of time. The government is continuing to take these matters under investigation and will undertake measures to lead to short term economies. It is reviewing the entire operation of the Auditor General, and at the end of this the government will take stock and note what further measures are required.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

PROPOSED FEDERAL CONTROL OF FUNDS GENERATED BY FEDERAL LEGISLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the suspicion of fraud and other irregularities in the letting of Olympic contracts, resulting in police raids on the builders of the Olympic Village, and continuing exorbitant and irregular expenditures by Montreal and COJO of funds generated by federally backed legislation. I move, for the sake of the helpless taxpayer, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House instruct the President of the Treasury Board to oversee and control any and all Olympic expenditures relating to funds generated as a result of federal legislation as well as direct and indirect federal financial commitments, and report back to parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE PRACTICE OF APPOINTING COMMISSIONER FROM THE RANKS WILL BE MAINTAINED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I wish to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since our outstanding national police force faces complex and demanding tasks at a time when the influence of activities of government is permeating every aspect of our lives, since the commissioner and all other officers of the RCMP are appointed by the government and since criminal investigations by the RCMP, now touching certain political and physical perimeters, must remain unstained by suspicions of political partisanship, with consent, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That the right hon. Prime Minister assure the House that the practice of appointing the commissioner from among members of the force who have risen through the ranks will continue.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON LEAK TO PRESS CONCERNING INTERVIEW WITH MR. MARCHAND

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Pursuing my natural racist tendencies—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he is now satisfied that the RCM Police, or an officer of the RCM Police, did not leak in advance the fact that the police would be seeking the assistance of the Minister without Portfolio in an interview yesterday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I met with the commissioner yesterday and he was very distressed at the situation, as I had been. We both agreed that we would try to find out if there was any possibility that the leak had come from the RCMP itself. He was confident that the answer would be no. I must confess that that is my information also. However, I think it is something sufficiently serious to look into. As to the hon. member's racism remark, I do not know why he found it necessary to preface his question with that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: If the Prime Minister wants to known why I prefaced my remark, he might ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare, not to mention the President of the Treasury Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The Minister of National Health and Welfare, as I understood him, said something was below me. I heard him on television last night and I thought it was well below him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

PERMISSION OF PRIME MINISTER FOR MR. MARCHAND TO SPEAK TO FORCE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I assume this to be the case, but I would like to make certain. Following the interview with the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police yesterday, does the Minister without Portfolio now have the Prime Minister's permission to meet with representatives of the police and to co-operate with them if he wishes?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, nobody in this country needs my permission to answer to the police.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REASON FOR FAILURE OF SOLICITOR GENERAL TO ATTEND MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND COMMISSIONER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have one final question. I understand that the Solicitor General, through whom the Royal Canadian Mounted Police report to parliament, was not present yesterday at the meeting which the Prime Minister and the Minister without Portfolio had with the Commissioner of the RCMP. Was there any reason for this? In view of the sort of comment being made these days by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, I hope this does not show any racist tendency on the part of the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty cheap shot, I must say. I do not know what kind of a fishing expedition the Leader of the Opposition is on, but I would tell him that he is very sadly misinformed.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF MEMBERS FORCE SEEKS TO INTERVIEW

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. It arises out of answers given by the Solicitor General in the House yesterday, particularly his statement that the RCMP planned to seek meetings with ministers and members on both sides of the House. Can the Prime Minister tell us if he has received from the RCMP a list of the specific members they intend to interview and the basis for seeking an interview with each of them and can he explain to us, in particular, the basis for the interest of the RCMP in talking to members on this side of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have no such knowledge nor have I seen such a list, but I can predict that if they ever ask a question over there, the attitude of the opposition will change dramatically from what it was yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Has the Prime Minister not read the record of the proceedings of the House of Commons about this whole unfortunate business? Is he now saying that the opposition is being irresponsible for raising matters which have since come to light?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONTRACT TO LOCKHEED FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—OTHER OPTIONS OPEN TO GOVERNMENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister arising from the $950 purchase which the Department of National Defence is making from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation for the replacement of the Argus. In view of the fact that there have been reports that other companies such as Boeing Aircraft, and the Douglas Corporation have placed before the government various package deals which would result in a larger percentage of the money spent going to Canadian aircraft companies, I want to ask the Prime Minister what options were open to the government when they made the decision to grant the contract to Lockheed Corporation.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As far as details are concerned I would urge the hon. member to address his question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce when my colleague is here because it was principally his department which had the responsibility of studying the various options from the point of view of the industrial fall-outs for Canada, the offsets, the value of them, and so on. I am sure that within the bounds of whatever secrecy is involved in the bids by the companies, the minister would be more helpful than I. But I can correct the impression the hon. member has when he says that the offsets from one corporation would be considerably higher than from the other. I think that was the intimation in what he said. Both the main options put to us were extremely interesting; that is why it took a great deal of study to make a choice between them. The decisive factor was the figure of several hundred million dollars which it would have cost us more for the Boeing option than for the Lockheed option, and in times of reasonable restraint when we are trying to prevent our budget from going up, this was the decisive factor in our decision.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH LOCKHEED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Dary Childs, the Regional Director of Export Sales for Lockheed, is quoted as saying that of the $950 million contract some $686 million will be spent in Canada, whereas the Minister of National Defence said yesterday that $283 million was committed in the agreement and that $285 million was to be a best effort, but there was no guarantee. This is nearly $120 million less than is being stated by the Lockheed Corporation. I want to ask the Prime Minister this question: in view of the disparity in the figures, will he undertake to see that the agreement between the Department of National Defence and Lockheed Aircraft Corporation is tabled in the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will not give such an undertaking. I said earlier that the minister would, within the normal security provisions of commercial corporations, be as helpful as he can. I do not know what the figures are. I know cabinet had these documents and spent a good deal of time on them. I know there are guaranteed offsets and that others are to be best efforts. There may be another category the minister might wish to talk to the House about.

CANADAIR—DATE OF DECISION ON OPTION TO PURCHASE—POSSIBLE PARTICIPATION IN LOCKHEED CONTRACT FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I see the genial Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has just entered the chamber. May I ask him whether the government has yet made a decision with respect to exercising its option to purchase Canadair and whether Canadair will get any part of the $950 million contract which was let to Lockheed Aircraft Corporation by the Department of National Defence?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The answer to the second part of the question is yes. There is a substantial amount of work for Canadair as well as for other Canadian sub-contractors. I am a few minutes late because I was hoping to put the final touches on the other aspect of the hon. member's question, namely that concerning the acquisition of Canadair. I find it will not be possible for me to do so in time to make an announcement today but perhaps I shall not be exceeding the restraints under which I am placed at the moment if I say to him that I think the answer I shall be able to give to him will be satisfactory to the hon. member with regard to Canadair.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED LEASING OF LEOPARD TANKS FROM WEST GERMANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In the interests of providing the best battle tank at the lowest cost to the Canadian taxpayer, would the government give consideration to leasing the tanks that our forces in Europe need from the West German government, the Leopard tank, which is by far the best battle tank available to us, particularly since at the present time there are quite a number of Leopard tanks in western Canada which can be used without any further delay for training Canadian troops in the use of these very excellent tanks.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite right. As he saw from the statement of the minister yesterday, leasing is one option, as well as the retrofitting of the present Centurion. But he is quite right in suggesting there is this advantage of training possibilities, since some of those tanks are in Canada, and this will be very much a part of our decision. I repeat that we will be guided by considerations of economy such as this, as well as considerations of a purely military and strategic nature.

LOCKHEED CONTRACT FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—EFFECT ON COMPANIES DOING MAINTENANCE ON PRESENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the genial minister who has just arrived. Now that the basic contract has been awarded, my question has to do with the protection of allied industries, such as IMP in Dartmouth and its predecessor Fairey Aviation, which have for a number of years been responsible for maintenance and certain basic aspects of the overhaul of the existing LRPA. What built-in protections for firms such as IMP have been considered in the awarding of the contract to Lockheed?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very familiar with the plant in question. I believe that there is some subcontract work related to the LRPA for IMP and for some other maritime companies as well. The larger question, of course, will be what will happen at the repair and overhaul stage after the phase out of one type of aircraft and the introduction of another. That is a bit down the road, but I have already given assurances to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who has an interest in this matter, that we will look into it in terms of seeing what kind of protection can be offered once the repair and overhaul operation switch is made as the result of getting the new aircraft.

EFFECT OF ACQUISITION OF NEW TANK ON ROLE OF NATO FORCES—CONTINUANCE OF STATION AT LAHR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Will the acquisition of a new tank imply a change of role for Canadian forces in Europe, which are now in the central region reserve role, and will the forces continue to be stationed at Lahr?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there will not be a change of role since the present forces are using Centurion tanks. The reason that this decision had to be taken was that they are coming to the end of their normal life span unless they are retrofitted at considerable expense. There is no intention of changing the role; it will be pursued but with better equipment. As far as the station at Lahr is concerned, there is no implication in what was stated yesterday by the minister that we will in any way move from Lahr.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POLAND—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CASES INVOLVING REUNIFICATION OF FAMILIES

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Acknowledging with thanks his efforts to arrange a meeting with the ambassador of Poland last Wednesday, may I ask the minister whether during this meeting he raised the matter of the list of 20 cases concerning reunification of families which I gave him before his trip to Poland in September, and in particular the case of Mrs. Psarska?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did refer to the list of family reunification cases which had been presented by the ambassador in Warsaw last Friday. That list was compiled as a result of, and after consideration of, the list which the hon. member had presented to me prior to my visit to Poland. I want to tell the hon. member that during that visit I raised the question of family reunification, including his list and Mrs. Psarska. That is a continuing process that is now being followed up by our ambassador. I followed that up last Wednesday. Quite specifically, I discussed in detail the case of Mrs. Psarska.

RUSSIA—POSSIBILITY OF INTERVENTION TO OBTAIN PERMISSION FOR MR. SAKHAROV TO RECEIVE NOBEL PRIZE IN OSLO

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the Helsinki Accord in which European communist countries promised to allow freer travel for their citizens is the Prime Minister going to intervene, along with other world leaders, with Secretary Brezhnev to allow Andrei Sakharov, the Soviet physicist, to travel to Oslo to receive his Nobel Peace Prize.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not considered making such an intervention.

RUMANIA—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE IN HAVING FAMILIES REUNITED

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. At the present time in front of these parliament buildings there are three former Rumanian citizens, David Pompiliu, Julian Hertescu and Dimitri Moldovan. I apologize to my friend the hon. member for Edmonton Centre for my pronunciation of these names. They are pleading in front of these buildings for help. Mr. Pompiliu states that in 1973 he wrote to—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Crouse: They are pleading for assistance in bringing their families to Canada. My question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs is, will he contact the Rumanian Embassy and ask them to uphold the universal declaration on human rights which states that every family has the right to live together in the country of their choice, and will he make a plea on behalf of these three citizens.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not familiar with these particular cases.

An hon. Member: You can see them outside the door.

Mr. MacEachen: I am still not familiar with these cases. I will undertake to look at them and follow up in the way we customarily do in an effort to secure the reunification of families. That has been one of the major undertakings of the Government of Canada in the long meetings prior to the Helsinki Conference which resulted in the inclusion in that document of the text which makes it now possible to ask the signatories to that text to deliver on their commitment at the conference to accelerate the human contacts and reunification of families.

HELSINKI AGREEMENT—INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW PROCEDURE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, these cases bring up the whole matter of the review procedure. I would like to know what steps are being taken within the minister's department to have an on-going review of cases that are clearly in breach of the Helsinki Agreement, including the failure of the Soviet Union to allow the distinguished scientist Sakharov to go to Oslo. What review procedure is in place so that when Helsinki is tested we will not find that it is really only a piece of paper.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope that when the review process is undertaken in Yugoslavia it will not become a piece of paper. In the interim, progress will have to be made which up to the present has not been marked. I agree with my hon. friend to that extent. In so far as Canada is concerned, we have established within the Department of External Affairs, first of all a procedure to ensure that Canada is fully living up to the principles which it accepted at Helsinki. Of course, we intend to review all of these cases so that at the appropriate time we will be able to confront the other signatories with performance or lack of performance on these points.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

ALLEGED RETENTION OF FUNDS FOR OUTAOUAIS HIGHWAYS PENDING INSTALLATION OF SEWER SYSTEM

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs responsible for the National Capital Commission, or to his spokesman.

Is the minister aware of the announcement made yesterday by the National Capital Commission that the funds for highway network in the Outaouais area will be frozen, if the Ottawa Regional Board does not build a sewer system? If so, do the minutes agree with that policy which will prevent western Quebec residents from enjoying a modern and adequate road network?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand the interest of the hon. member and I appreciate the fact that he draws it to the attention of the House. I will make my minister aware of the problem as soon as possible so that he may give a definite answer to the hon. member.

INDUSTRIAL MILK—REDUCTION IN SUBSIDY—INQUIRY IF LEVY MADE ON TOTAL PRODUCTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the producers of industrial milk have not yet received the subsidy on 75 per cent of their September production, could the minister tell the House whether the deductions for export expenditures have been made on the entire production for that month?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my answer to the hon. gentleman is that we are only living within the agreement which we have. We said we had enough money for a hundred million hundredweight of milk. Producers are being paid for much more milk than they were supposed to deliver, they were above the quota. We do not have that much money to pay for the whole amount. If they want to produce it and take less money for it, that is up to them.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

May I ask the minister if this means that the subsidy for the month of October will be paid at a lower percentage than that for the month of September?

Mr. Whelan: What did he say?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I apologize to the minister. He probably did not think I had a supplementary question. I therefore repeat it.

In terms of the answer he has just given, does it mean that, for the month of October, the percentage of the subsidy will apply to fewer pounds than for the month of September?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: It means that we have enough money to pay for a hundred million hundredweight of milk and not 10 per cent or 20 per cent more than that. The money has to be distributed in that way. If farmers cut back their quota, they can still get paid for 95 per cent of their production by the end of the dairy year, at the end of March, 1976.

REASON FOR CUT BACK IN SUBSIDY ON CREAM PRODUCTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In the cut back which the minister announced will take place in the September cheques for the subsidy to the dairy producers, why did we find it necessary to cut back also on the subsidy paid on 75 per cent of the production of cream producers? The cream producers are not responsible for any surpluses in the country. Butter is produced from cream and butter is not in a surplus position.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): They are all under the market quota system.

TRADE

DATE OF DECISION ON ALLOWANCE OF INCREASE IN DAIRY PRODUCTS IMPORTS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. A few days ago the minister said that he was going to assess the decision of the government to allow increased imports of dairy products into Canada in view of the large production of dairy products in this country. Has he reassessed that yet, and what is the decision? It is a very important matter.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I agree it is very important, and that is why it is taking quite a bit of time to do a thorough assessment. Work is underway, but I am not in a position at the moment to say when I can inform the public on the question.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—ASSESSMENT OF DAMAGE INFLICTED BY STRIKE

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as we enter the 40th day of the postal shutdown, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the hundreds of reports of hardship and economic damage received in response to a country wide appeal by this party, is the government able to report that it has made any attempts to assess the real damage inflicted on Canadians by the post office shutdown and, if so, would this information be made available?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know of no way in which an exact assessment could be made. I think the government is keeping very well informed on what is happening, but I would guess it is impossible to make an exact assessment. Even if it were, the cost of it would be prohibitive. I think the hon. member should realize what the attitude of the government is, that it is not going to make any further offers and it is hoping the strike will be settled on the basis of the generous offer that has already been made by the Postmaster General.

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—ABILITY OF GOVERNMENT TO RESUME NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): In view of the absence for five days of the Postmaster General and in view of union executive meetings now taking place, is the government willing and able to resume negotiations immediately if requested by the union?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the Postmaster General has been present in the House two of the last three days. He is available at any time and is on call.

MULTICULTURALISM

EFFECT OF ALLEGED CHANGE IN POLICY—DISCUSSION WITH CONSULTATIVE COUNCIL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Are the reports on Wednesday that he is considering a very sharp change in the government's program of support for multiculturalism true, and will the new programs mean a downgrading of the grants which have been given to the ethnic communities which they already consider to be too little too late, and does it include a rejection of federal support for the teaching of languages other than English or French?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the hon. member has asked that question because it affords me the opportunity to clarify the situation. No, it is not a downgrading of the concept of multiculturalism, nor is it a downgrading of the grants to various ethno-cultural groups in Canada. What it is, what we are thinking about and what I have discussed with various ethno-cultural groups, including the Ukrainian community in Montreal, is whether it would not be worth considering shifting the emphasis in terms of combatting discrimination and breaking down some barriers which some of the minority groups and ethno-cultural groups are experiencing without withdrawing assistance to all ethno-cultural groups. The reaction I have been receiving has been positive, and it was in that context that I have been discussing this change of emphasis. I think, as the previous minister of multiculturalism will attest, it has always been an element of the multicultural policy to promote understanding and combat discrimination.

Mr. Orlikow: Due to the fact that the combatting of discrimination has been traditionally part of the work done by other departments of the federal government, such as the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Labour and the provincial governments, and in view of fact that the minister's change in policy or change in emphasis does not seem to have been discussed at least with the chairman of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism, Mr. Koteles, who expressed shock when he heard of the minister's changed policy, can the minister explain whether his new approach has been discussed with the organization which the government itself set up to advise it on the kind of work which the government should be supporting?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I would advise the hon. member that I have been attending various meetings of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism and regional meetings. We have been discussing the various elements of the whole policy in terms of a review that I wanted to take forward to the government fairly soon. These discussions have been public in nature; there is no question about that. In terms of asking questions with respect to the direction of policy, I have already mentioned to you that I have done it with various groups. It seemed to have been well received by various groups. I cannot accept responsibility for Mr. Koteles, he will have to accept that on his own responsibility.

As far as teaching of third languages or, if you like, retention of languages, that has always been an element of the policy. We will continue to offer grants in that connection on the assumption and hope that it will be an instrument in itself to combat discrimination and to attain any understanding between ethno-cultural groups as well as to assist all Canadians in appreciating the contribution these cultural groups make to Canada.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGOLA—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST OF RUSSIAN INTERFERENCE IN CIVIL STRIFE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns that section of the Helsinki accord which was referred to earlier today, in particular section VIII which reads as follows:

> ... all peoples always have the right, in full freedom, to determine, when and as they wish, their internal and external political status, without external interference,—

I bring to his attention the situation dangerous to world peace in Angola in which the U.S.S.R. flagrantly is breaking this section of the accord, either directly or indirectly, by puppets operating under its tutelage. Has the Canadian government protested to the government of the U.S.S.R. that this is wrong or does it intend to bring it before the United Nations? There is nothing more dangerous to world peace than what is occurring at the present time over there.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that this matter was brought to the attention of the United Nations by the Canadian representative in his statement in which the attitude of the Canadian government was expressed in total opposition to outside interference, and armed forces from outside participation in events in Angola. We have not made the direct approach of protest to the Soviet government at this point but we have made our position quite clear at the United Nations where all countries know where we stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I realize it may have been done but it was not very effective the first time. I suggest again that action be taken and in particular that the ambassador of the U.S.S.R. in Ottawa be made aware of the strong feelings of Canadians as a whole who begin to believe, as Senator Forsey stated yesterday in the other place, that the Helsinki accord was a succession of amiable platitudes.

STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—REACTION TO MEETING WITH MINISTER

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

With reference to the question I directed to him on Wednesday, November 19, and following the interventions of a number of my colleagues from this side of the House concerning the dispute in the pulp and paper industry, the many meetings we have had with the minister and above all the urgent appeal he has made to the industry to return to the bargaining table, could the minister advise the House whether he has received a positive response from the companies?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I would advise the hon. member, however, that I was talking to two particular labour ministers, those from Ontario and Quebec. I am advised certainly by the minister from Ontario that she has called the presidents of the companies together in Toronto and urged them to try to resolve this dispute as quickly as possible. I have publicly urged them to get back to the bargaining table in an effort to resolve this particular dispute. I am hopeful they will do so in the very near future. That is as far as I can go.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

ATTEMPTED TAKEOVER OF WESTINGHOUSE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SITUATION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Yesterday he indicated to my colleague the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth that he might be able to make a statement with respect to the problems with Westinghouse Canada in the House today. In light of the fact that some 200 jobs are on the line in Orangeville as well as 2,000 in Hamilton, I wonder whether the minister could make a statement on this today.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, at ten o'clock this morning I met with representatives from the unions. I believe most of them, if not all, were from Hamilton but I am not aware if any were from the smaller operation. The Minister of Labour was with me at that meeting. I advised the representatives of the union that we were primarily concerned now with assuring the stability of the jobs in question and that we would make every effort within our power and jurisdiction to see what could be done along those lines. I also indicated that I had certain ideas which were being conveyed to the negotiating companies concerned. I hope over the next couple of weeks that these overtures which I was making would indicate whether there was ground for a negotiated end to the current situation. If there is not, at the end of the two weeks' period we would then obviously have to reassess the situation. I continue to be hopeful, however, that within the next two weeks if not before, a solution will have been found through the negotiating route.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ATTENDANCE OF FIVE OFFICIALS AT CONFERENCE IN BARBADOS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Sources within Statistics Canada have indicated that five senior officials of the department left last week for a government paid trip to a conference in the Barbados. Will the minister explain the purpose of the trip by these senior officials?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will have to make inquiries, Mr. Speaker. I will go down and check on them if the hon. member wishes.

EFFECT OF OLYMPIC DEBT ON INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL DEBT POSITION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in view of the projected deficit of upwards of $1 billion to finance the Olympics, has the minister had any discussion with the governments concerned as to what the deficit might be and how it might be covered and what effect this might have on our internal and external debt position?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, sir.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

EFFECT OF QUEBEC'S OLYMPIC DEBT ON TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): A supplementary question for the President of the Treasury

Board, Mr. Speaker. Earlier this week the minister indicated that he would check whether additional expense incurred by the province of Quebec as a result of assuming Olympic financing responsibilities will be considered when transfer payments from other provinces are considered. Could the minister advise the House of the government's position in this regard?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, transfer payments are based on the income level of a province, not on its expense level.

EXTENT TO WHICH GOVERNMENT WILL HELP QUEBEC FINANCE GAMES

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): One supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Some time ago the Prime Minister stated in this House that there would be no special assistance, no special financial aid, from the federal government to Montreal or to COJO for the holding of the Olympics. Since then, of course, he has somewhat altered his position in this regard. I should therefore like to ask the Prime Minister, since we cannot take his original statement as ongoing government policy just how far is his government prepared to go and in what roundabout way is it planning to bail out the province of Quebec as it inevitably will?

FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN FINANCING OF GAMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

As the Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Garneau, replying to a question about the financial contribution of the federal government to the Olympic Games, said that it amounted to $100 million, at which point another member of the National Assembly called the minister a liar, can the President of the Treasury Board clarify the situation and tell the House to how much the direct financial contribution of the federal government amounts?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the federal responsibilities towards the Olympic games with regard to security, radio-broadcasting of the games and various related activities, will cost the federal government in the vicinity of $130 million. In addition, the federal government, thanks to the co-operation of all hon. members, was able to allow the setting up of self-financing programs such as the lottery, and the olympic coins and stamps. Such is the federal participation to the games to this day. As usual, the hon. member concerned, Mr. Charron, proved his great ignorance.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHILE—SUPPRESSION OF COMMITTEE FOR PEACE OF INTERCHURCH COUNCIL—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROTEST ACTION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I understand that representations have been made to the minister, or his department, by the Interchurch Council for Chile, asking the government to protest to the government of Chile the suppression of the Committee for Peace, which was created by Roman Catholics, Protestants and orthodox Jews to provide legal aid and moral support for political prisoners, their families and the families of those who have disappeared. Will the minister give favourable consideration to this request?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not, to my knowledge, received those representations from the church leaders. If and when they arrive I shall certainly give consideration to what useful steps Canada can take to help the situation in Chile. At present, as my hon. friend knows, the leader of that particular committee, Cardinal de Silva, is in Rome, but will return to Chile to resume discussing with government leaders the question of the dissolution of that particular committee.

RAMBOUILLET CONFERENCE—NATURE OF AGREEMENTS AND CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN GATT CONFERENCE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Has the government inquired officially on the results of the summit in Rambouillet and would the minister tell the House, first, when and how he will express his views on each point on which an agreement was reached and, second, whether this meeting produced guidelines which will influence the Conférence Nord-Sud sur les matières premières in France in mid-December and which will have an impact on Canada's position at the 31st session of GATT as well as on the participation of Canada in this conference?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been informed of the results of the summit conference in France. The matter of the implementation of any of the conclusions, particularly with respect to the accord that apparently has been reached between France and the United States, will, of course, have to be submitted to the appropriate agencies, particularly within the International Monetary Fund. On the question of fluctuating versus fixed exchange rates, I suggest that there will be opportunity for Canada to take a position on these questions when they arise in these international agencies.

With respect to the north-south conference, we expect it to go ahead in the second week of December. The situation at present is this: no formal invitations have been extended, certainly not to the eight industrialized countries which will attend the conference, but we expect to be present and are preparing our position on the various important subjects which will be discussed there, which include energy, development, raw materials and international financial questions.

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—POSSIBILITY OF REDUCTION OF IMPORTS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the restrictions proposed by the European Community and the United States during the current GATT session in Geneva, is the Canadian delegation maintaining a firm and unconditional stand towards the objective of international trade liberalization or is our country associating this position with the principle of some sound protectionism particularly with regard to our textile and footwear industry upon which, as it is known, many jobs in Canada are dependent?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the Canadian attitude with regard to the so-called Tokyo round and subsequent discussions in Geneva. I will be meeting with the delegation there within the next week or so, to obtain a report on developments and the likely events which may flow from the incident to which the hon. member referred. Our policies on international trade and protectionism are well known and have not changed, and my only qualification is one with which the hon. member is familiar. We have a policy with regard to footwear, and the restructuring of the industry, which has some bearing on tariffs. That is, I suppose, the only real answer I can give the hon. member. If he will look at the footwear and leather goods strategy, he will see what is our tariff policy in this regard.

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY OF NET COST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Will the minister advise whether the government has ever established a basis of net cost to itself for any contributions it may make to the financing of the Olympic Games? By net cost I mean taking into account the revenues which accrue to the government through sales tax, income tax, customs, and so on, arising out of the additional economic activity, regardless of whether it provided the money. If so, was it done with regard to Expo? My assessment is that the government was a clear winner with Expo. Has this been done with the Olympic Games and, if so, what may be the net cost to the government of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any information about that and we are not doing any particular study in that area at this time. I do not know if the study has already been done about Expo 67, but I shall inquire and give the hon. member an answer as soon as possible.

SMALL BUSINESS LOANS—REQUEST FOR CHANGES IN REGULATIONS TO ALLEVIATE DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING LOANS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns the difficulty businessmen in Ontario experience in obtaining small business loans under the government's guaranteed loan administration. In view of the wide spread now prevailing between existing interest rates and the 8 per cent ceiling on guaranteed loans, will the minister consider making changes in the regulations to ensure that businessmen can obtain loans under this program?

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NECESSITY OF OBTAINING AGREEMENT OF ALL PROVINCES TO PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance is based on the fact that the province of Saskatchewan has now opted out of the government's anti-inflation program, which means that there is now no national consensus involving the ten provinces and the federal government. Does he still hold that such national consensus of the ten provinces and the federal government is necessary? If so, is there any intention to call another first ministers' conference, in an attempt, again, to achieve consensus?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to be fair to the province of Saskatchewan, the Minister of Finance of that province said that Saskatchewan was reserving its right not to participate in the program, but would not take that decision at this time. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's question is premature. I share the emphasis underlying this question. It is necessary to take the kind of national action against inflation about which provincial premiers were talking at the meeting of last September.

Pursuant to the requirements of this Standing Order, these letters are being tabled in both official languages.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister in charge of multiculturalism made several statements during today's question period which many members from both sides of the House would like to see him make on motions. This type of thing takes up a great deal of time in the question period. Because we really do not have an opportunity to ask extra questions of the minister, I feel that the only time he should be making such statements is on motions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,242—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What length of time has the CF-104 Starfighter been operational?

2. How many CF-104's does the government own?

3. What is the annual average cost of maintenance and repairs for the aircraft?

4. Is it expected that the aircraft will be soon phased out and, if so (a) on what date (b) with what aircraft?

5. Of the 24 aircraft types that the Department of National Defence has operational, are there any of these aircraft in the process of being phased out and, if so, what types?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Since, December 17, 1962.

2. 105 CF-104 aircraft (83 CF-104 single seat; 22 CF-104 dual seat). Of these 83 are in service.

3. The cost of spare parts, repair and overhaul for 1975-76 for the aircraft in service is epxected to be $12,352,000.

4. (a) The operational life of the CF-104 extends into the 1980's and no date has yet been set for phasing out this aircraft. (b) Replacement studies are underway but no replacement aircraft has been selected.

5. No.

CHEESE IMPORTS

Question No. 3,271—Mr. Herbert:

1. On what basis was the import quota for cheese established in each of the past five years?

2. Is the supply of Canadian cheese adequate to satisfy the domestic market?

3. What percentage of imported cheese retails at prices competitive with or below popular brands of Canadian cheeses?

4. From which countries do we import cheese?

5. To which countries do we export milk powder?

6. Are there any agreements which tie cheese import quotas to the import or export of other farm products?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Cheese of all types have been on the import control list of the Export and Import Permits Act for the past five years. During this period, import permits were freely issued for all cheese imported for direct consumption except cheddar and colby. On June 6, 1975, a global import quota for all types of cheese was established. The quota amounts to 50 million pounds for 1975 and represents an increase of 2 million pounds over 1974 imports. The size of the quota was determined by taking into account the requirements of the Canadian market, recent performance of imports and the relationship of imports to the domestic dairy situation.

2. Canadian cheeses supply 84 per cent of the domestic market. Cheese imports provide a wider selection of cheese to consumers as many of the cheeses imported are not manufactured in Canada. It is recognized by the cheese industry that the wide variety of imported cheese has stimulated consumer interest in cheese. This has been a major factor for increasing the consumption of all types of cheese.

3. The retail prices of imported and domestic cheese are not monitored and statistics on comparative prices are not available. However, it is estimated that 50 per cent of imported cheeses retail at prices above domestic cheese and 50 per cent of cheese imports retail at prices competitive with Canadian cheeses.

4. See below for a list of countries from which we import cheese.

5. See below for a list of countries to which we export mills powder.

6. Canada does not have any agreements which tie cheese import quotas to the import or export of other farm products. Countries from which Canada imports cheese: United Kingdom, Ireland, Austria, Belgium-Luxembourg, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany West, Greece, Italy, Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Sweden, Switzerland, Poland, Romania, Philippines, Australia, Argentina, Jamaica, United States. Countries to which Canada exports milk powder: United Kingdom, Belgium-Luxembourg, France, Sudan, Uar, Malawi, Mauritius Dep., South Africa, Zambia, Bangladesh, Hong Kong, India, Pakistan, Singapore, Afghanistan, Japan, Viet-Nam, Guyana, Brazil, Colombia, Venezuela, Bahamas, Bermuda, British Honduras, Barbados, Jamaica, Leew-Wind Island, Trinidad-Tobago, Costa Rica, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Netherlands Antilles, Nicaragua, U.S. Virgin Island, St. Pierre-Miquelon, United States.

[English]

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. 1. During the years 1973, 1974 or 1975, Belgium, Bermuda, Guyana, Italy, Jamaica, Malta, Norway, the United Kingdom and the United States of America respectively have expressed an interest in concluding a reciprocal agreement with Canada with respect to one or more of the following branches of social security: Old Age, Invalidity, Survivors and Death; Sickness and Maternity; Work Injury; Unemployment; and Family Allowances.

2. Although technical discussions have been held with the United Kingdom, the United States of America and Italy, no formal negotiations have taken place with any of the countries interested in concluding such an agreement. Informal contacts, however, have been maintained. For example, this subject was discussed in general terms in a most cordial and welcome visit this morning among the minister, myself and the new Italian ambassador, His Excellency, Giorgio Smoquina.

*CUSTOMS CLEARANCE FEES

Question No. 3,513—Mr. Lachance:

Is it normal that a postal parcel without any market value, sent by air cargo from New York to Montreal, be subject, in addition to transportation fees, to custom clearance fees when it is taken in charge by the addressee and, if so (a) for what reason (b) does the government intend to apply the same rule with respect to travellers entering Canada and taking possession of their luggage at Canadian customs?

[English]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: (a) Canada Customs does not levy a fee for clearance of postal parcels into Canada during authorized hours of customs business, other than duties and taxes. In instances where a written entry is required by customs, the importer is responsible for its preparation. However, he may have these formalities carried out on his behalf by a customs broker who will charge a fee for that service. (b) The entry of traveller's baggage is not normally documented at Customs and there is no clearance fee levied by Customs.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

The House resumed, from Thursday, November 27, consideration of Bill C-41, respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture; and motion No. 5 (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Speaker: Before resuming debate on motion No. 5, it appears that as a result of yesterday's discussion, in addition to motion No. 5, motions Nos. 6, 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 remain to be discussed. We will now continue the discussion on motion No. 5. Motion No. 6 will have to be discussed and voted on separately. Motions Nos. 7 and 8 will be discussed and voted on together. Motions Nos. 9, 11 and 12 will be discussed and voted on separately. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on motion No. 5 to Bill C-41 respecting the stabilization of western grains. I am going to support this motion, which adds the following provisions to the bill.

(i) depreciation on farm machinery and equipment used for grain production or used in the farm business in respect of grain production and transportation;

(j) interest charges incurred in respect of the production or sale of grain; and

(k) producer levies in respect of this act.

These are to be added to the cost of production for the purpose of the Western Grain Stabilization Act. I am sure almost every member of this House will agree that interest and depreciation can be one of the larger costs of production. If we were going through this type of exercise of stabilization in business and in industry they would be very much in favour of including interest charges and depreciation in their costs. Interest is, of course, a real cost. In my opinion it must be included in any cost of production, whether it be farm, business or industry.

I want to speak about interest for a short while, and farm loans, especially those made to young farmers. The government has taken a good step forward in increasing the amount of these loans so that young farmers can more easily get into the business of farming. This is what we need in Canada—more young farmers. It has been shown that the average age of farmers is high. Therefore, as I say, more young farmers are needed. When a farmer goes to the farm loan people to get a loan, I am sure one of the main things they look at is the interest cost: how much interest he is paying on the farm machinery which he needs to operate his business properly.

When we look at stabilization bills we find the government does not believe interest rates should be counted as part of the costs of production. We went through all this in connection whith the stabilization bill which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) presented to us. Hon. members may recall that the Federation of Agriculture along with other farm organizations, made strong representations to the minister pointing out that interest charges represented a real cost and one which should be taken into consideration.

Consider what is happening to farming in Canada. Farming has become highly mechanized. The Minister of Agriculture himself pointed out that as a result of mechanization, farmers produce more than any other workers in Canada. This was made possible because of moving from a highly labour-intensive industry to a highly mechanized industry. In order to do this, of course, farmers had to borrow money, thus incurring interest charges which have been running at increasingly high rates. It is true that machines are labour-saving, but they represent a serious investment for the farmer concerned, and if we turn our backs on costs of this type when we consider any kind of stabilization bill, we are acting incorrectly.

If we follow this argument through, we find that depreciation becomes a more important factor than ever because of the high initial cost of farm machinery. Possession of one machine creates the need for another to complement the one you already have; the farmer immediately finds himself dependent on a series of costly machines and his concern about their depreciation is increased accordingly. While we are on the subject of depreciation, allow me to quote what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale) said yesterday in response to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). Speaking on motion No. 5, he said:

There can be no doubt that if you were to ask a producer a very blunt and straightforward question about what he views as being one of his most important cost items he would probably reply that it was depreciation. It was not very long ago that western grain producers were literally living off their depreciation. It is an item which is first and foremost on their minds. When one looks at the particular provision in the context of the grains stabilization bill, one can see that the inclusion of depreciation is not one that will enhance the protection this bill offers western grain producers.

That is quite a statement. Ask any farmer whether he agrees with it. The only part I agree with is that farmers have sometimes had to live off the depreciation on their machinery. They did not want to do so because it is not a good position to be in. However, farmers in Canada were sometimes obliged to do it because they were not getting their cost of production, or enough money to live on, out of the market. It did not enhance their operation, because what they were doing was taking out the money they should have been using to replace their machinery.

What happens when farmers do not have the money to buy new machinery? They borrow more money for that purpose, thus increasing their debt and incurring further interest costs, which in turn means a higher cost of production. They are not using their depreciation allowance in the manner in which it is supposed to be used. The statement the parliamentary secretary made shows he knows very little, or nothing, about farming or about what farmers have to go through. The depreciation provisions are there to enable a farmer to replace his machines. They are a legitimate cost for which provision is made by the Department of National Revenue. This applies to farmers, to businessmen and to everyone else. The commercial world could not operate properly without it.

It would, of course, be very nice to be able to buy a machine and to write off its cost in the first year. But that is not the way in which the system is set up. As it is, the purchase becomes a legitimate cost of production in the total operation of the farm. Today, as I have explained, it is even more important than it was in the past. The parliamentary secretary was saying, in effect, the farmers are buying machinery so they can live off the depreciation, or else that farmers are overmechanized. Let me tell him that no farmer who buys more machinery than he needs, just to live off the depreciation will last very long. He should be using his depreciation allowance correctly so that he can replace his machinery as it wears out.

There is also the argument that farm machinery is in the nature of a long-term investment. A farmer uses his machines as long as he can; he does not dispose of them until they are worn out or have been superseded by other types which are much more efficient and cut down his costs of production. Anyone experienced in farming knows that many of the machines farmers buy do not last very long; they do not have a long life. Every hon. member knows about the life of a car and how long it can be kept before being traded in. Farm machinery suffers more abuse than cars, and as a result its life is short.

1974, a period of 20 years. Not too many machines last for 20 years. They are more likely to wear out or have to be replaced within five years. It is not very often that you can fully depreciate a machine under the Income Tax Act before it is worn out.

I very much support the amendment which seeks to include depreciation in the cost of production. In addition, the amendment seeks to have producer levies included in the act. Once again, this is a very real cost of production for farmers. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport in his speech yesterday said they were going to be included, but if I heard correctly in committee I got an entirely different interpretation; I understood they were not going to be included in the cost of production. Even though it has been said that producer levies are to be included, this has yet to be determined. Certainly it is something that should be included in the motion.

When the agriculture committee toured the three prairie provinces to hear briefs on the stabilization bill and to talk to farmers, I did not talk to one farmer who told me that depreciation, interest and levies should not be included in the cost of production. Quite frankly, we did not find too many farmers hotly in favour of the stabilization bill, but nevertheless they said that if parliament imposed it upon them, they wanted everything included that it was proper to include. This is the reason I have taken a few minutes of the time of the House to speak to this motion.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I have very few comments to summarize the arguments on the government side of the House against motion No. 5 which has been debated rather extensively. As well, perhaps, I make the request for understanding on the part of the non-agricultural members of the House. This is a comprehensive bill which is of great import to western Canada. The measure has taken a good deal of time.

I should like to correct a misunderstanding that has been left—I say a misunderstanding rather than a misstatement—by my colleague, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), who discussed this amendment in the House last night. Hon. members will find his speech reported at page 9527 of Hansard. Essentially, the remarks of my colleague from Assiniboia were correct with respect to paragraph (c)(i) of the motion we are debating, namely, whether or not to include depreciation. The hon. member for Assiniboia was also correct so far as paragraph (c)(j) was concerned respecting interest charges. Where the misunderstanding came about was in the hon. member's remarks that dealt with the inclusion of producer levies in this legislation.

I suppose that clause 8(3)(f), insurance premiums, at page 11 of the bill could be interpreted to include producer levies, and that was the understanding of the hon. member for Assiniboia. However, both he and I checked with the minister and his departmental officials, and that is not the interpretation to be made of that provision. In other words, producer levies are not now included within the term "insurance premiums". Part of the logic here makes sense, in that if producer levies were added as part of the cost, you would then have to consider any pay-outs that may be triggered by the bill as income, on the other side of the coin. While producer levies are not included as an expense under this provision in the act so far as area gross expenses are concerned, it is a deductible expense for income tax purposes for any individual farmer making payment.

I could spend some time responding to the remarks of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) about depreciation. Certainly he does not have to convince any member on this side that it is indeed a very real cost. The idea of including depreciation in some way in the bill has been explored and examined pretty thoroughly. To come back to the point made by my hon. friends opposite, at the moment this bill is fairly complicated and it was felt that it would be complicated further by including depreciation, without bringing about the desired kind of action or response in terms of the plan itself. I can only inform hon. members that the officials were able to convince me that it was wise to leave it out. We are not saying that it is not an expense, but from the point of view of the bill it was felt it was better to leave it out. With these few words, I hope I have been able to clarify one misunderstanding that was left in the debate last night regarding producer levies being included as an expense.

Mr. Benjamin: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, before the parliamentary secretary resumes his seat I wonder whether he would permit me a question or two.

Mr. McIsaac: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: In light of the parliamentary secretary's remarks, may I ask him whether the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) was correct, as he just now confirmed, on the question of interest charges incurred in respect of the production and sale of grain being eligible as an expense in computing costs of production under the bill? Could he tell me in which paragraph this is covered under clause 8(3) of the bill? Which of those paragraphs would allow interest charges to be calculated as an expense in arriving at the cost of production in respect of this bill?

● (1230)

Mr. McIsaac: I understand it is included by implication, but I would rather not go too much further. Perhaps I could discuss this further with my hon. friend.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, since you allowed a question by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), I wonder whether I might ask a question. When I heard the parliamentary secretary's statement about depreciation, I gathered he approved of the idea that depreciation is a legitimate farm expense but that the civil servants persuaded him it was better to leave it out of the bill. I should like further explanation on that matter.

Mr. McIsaac: I am sorry if the hon. member misunderstood what I said. I said I recognized that depreciation is very important as a farm expense, but that for the purpose of the calculation in this particular legislation, and the manner in which it could affect the plan by triggering payments when payments were needed, it was just as well to leave it out of this bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, when the parliamentary secretary says that by implication interest charges are there, I presume he means that by implication the interest on farm machinery, machinery parts, and equipment would be part of the cost of operation. I am not a lawyer. I know the parliamentary secretary is and that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) tries to be. As I understand it, the courts and those who administer the law do not accept—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member has already spoken on this motion. If he has a question to ask, perhaps he would put it now.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Madam Speaker. Since the courts and those who administer the law do not accept what has been given as an understanding, I ask the parliamentary secretary whether he and the hon. member for Assiniboia would give the nod to the government House leader to accept that portion of my motion, namely, paragraph (j). While I do not like it, I would accept the elimination of the matter of depreciation, but I would ask that they at least accept paragraph (j) which relates specifically to interest charges.

I agree that interest charges would exclude any interest paid on land and would apply only to machinery, equipment and buildings. If the parliamentary secretary would give the nod to the government House leader, it would only take a moment to amend my motion to delete the first and third paragraphs if the government would accept paragraph (j) in respect of interest charges and make it specific in the bill. In that way there would be no doubt as to whether interest charges could be included.

Mr. McIsaac: Madam Speaker, I would like to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend, but I am afraid at the moment I cannot do so without further consideration.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I should like to add some words in general agreement of the suggestion that some parts of this amendment are worthy of acceptance, particularly as it concerns depreciation of farm machinery. In the case of any farmer in western Canada, particularly a new producer or one who intends to farm for a number of years, most of his expenses are in farm machinery. I think it is significant that the value of his land is quite a bit less than the value of his farm machinery, compared to the situation 25 years ago. This means that the cost of farming has increased rapidly because of rapid increases in the price of farm machinery.

I think it should be realized that the market for farm machinery is continent-wide in North America and that the guidelines in respect of control may well have an effect, but the price of farm machinery will continue to rise. We have seen rapid increases in the price of farm machinery. We have seen the price of a tractor increase from $10,000 to $20,000 in a period of two or three years. If we take any fairly recent farm operation, say in the last five or six years, we may find that the cost of the land is less than the cost of the machinery.

In this bill, apparently, repairs will be counted as an expense but depreciation will not be so counted. It is said this is because it would be difficult to administer. However, income tax returns could be used in a general way. Statistics regarding the sale of new farm machinery are compiled by Statistics Canada. With regard to practically every aspect of farm input there is general knowledge through the reporting by firms, and so on. If fertilizer and oil, for instance, may be computed in the cost of producing grain, surely depreciation on farm machinery on a global basis would be easy to arrive at. Therefore, in respect of depreciation I do not think there should be any greater error in a global assessment of the total cost of machinery than there would be in a global assessment of the total cost of fertilizer, oil, gas, repairs to buildings and repairs to machines.

I might add that interest charges certainly represent a very great cost of doing business. This is recognized by the income tax department. When one receives a loan from a bank the banker, in looking at the viability of the farm operation or any other operation, recognizes the cost of interest as a cost of doing business.

This act is something of an experiment. It is an attempt to change the various programs that have grown up over the years in order to stabilize the western grain industry. If this legislation is to be meaningful in the future and of any value in the establishment of guidelines, it will have to be changed. About 10 per cent or 20 per cent of the farmers already established will avail themselves of this legislation. If we leave out depreciation on farm machinery, we will be leaving out perhaps 25 per cent of the total cost of a farming operation in any one year. If we include the interest, we are probably looking at another 10 per cent or 15 per cent.

In fact, without the inclusion of these items the plan will be grossly deficient in respect of assessing the actual cost of growing grain, particularly for the individual farmer. In the future, obviously, if this is to come directly to the individual farmer the cost of depreciation and interest will be very important matters to him.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. It being after one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.15 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 6 appearing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Regina Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) as follows:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 10 by striking out lines 1 to 29 at page 15.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are putting forward this motion on the ground that payments from the fund ought not to be reduced after three successive years in which net income from grain was so bad that pay-outs were required. Obviously, that is not the time to reduce the amount of the pay-outs from 100 per cent to 90 per cent, because participants in the plan will be in pretty bad financial shape. There might be some logic in reducing payments when times are good.

The purpose of our amendment is to keep the level of support always at 100 per cent. It would strike out the provision which would reduce the level of payment to 90 per cent over the last five-year average when the fund has been in a deficit position for three years. This would serve to enhance the stabilization effect of the plan. I thought the government wished to do everything they could to ensure the very purpose of the legislation, namely, the stabilization of net grain income. Our amendment would have that effect. We believe payments should not be reduced when they are most needed. That is surely not the time to start picking on people who have already been kicked in the face by declining world markets, transportation problems or poor world prices. It is not the time to be reducing the stabilization effect of the program. Surely the pay-outs should be left at 100 per cent.

No doubt you could get into a situation where the fund would be in a deficit position, or have a slightly larger deficit than would be the case after three successive years of pay-outs, but there will be the good years so far as loans to the fund are concerned, and there will be a recovery in future years as a result of contributions by producers and government. We do not think it is fitting, fair or proper to start reducing the stabilizing effects of the plan after three successive bad years; we would like to see 100 per cent pay-outs.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): I should like to make a few comments in connection with the motion moved by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). We have examined it in detail, as well as the clause in the bill. What concerns the members of our party is this: we feel the bill should be as actuarially sound as possible. I can see the reason for inclusion in the bill of a clause that reduces the pay-out to farmers when the amount of interest owing exceeds one-third of the aggregate of the annual levies. If we examine the statistics given to us in committee by representatives of the government, we note that for the period 1954 to 1974 this clause would take effect in 13 years. It is also interesting to note that in that 20-year period, for seven of the years there was additional money required to be put into the fund by the government, which led to interest of some $210 million, being charged to the fund, all of which had to be repaid by the producers.

I do not think it is fair to the producer to burden him with high interest costs. It is not fair to the taxpayers of Canada to be called upon to lend this money to the fund. I think it proves the fallacy of the actual program, which is supposed to be an over-all program. The plan is triggered when the net income over a five-year period is less than the amount of income in the year. This is the reason we proposed in the committee hearings an individual program that would provide for the producer to pay into an individual fund $2 for every $1 put in by the government. This type of individual program would never require any loan by the federal government and would mean that the producer would never have to pay interest. He would have complete control of the plan and be able to adjust his income annually. If he did not need the money, he would not withdraw it; if he did need the money, he could. Ultimately, he could use it as a form of retirement pension if he chose, in the years that he was farming, not to draw from the plan.

These are the basic reasons we are opposing the amendment of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. While we do not like this bill, we would like to see it kept as good a bill as possible and as actuarially sound as possible. To adopt the motion before the House at the present time would create problems which would deplete the plan and cause the individual producer to be faced with high interest charges, particularly if the historic figures between the years 1954 and 1974 were used.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a few words to this particular amendment. I completely concur with the comments made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) about the actuarial soundness of the plan. There are two provisions in the bill to ensure that the legislation is always kept reasonable and logical from that point of view.

The particular section of the bill to which this amendment pertains is one that affects the size of the potential payment out of the plan. The other provision in the bill to safeguard the soundness of the legislation is the one that is dealt with in motion No. 9 standing in the name of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I think the comments of the hon. member for Moose Jaw relate very much to that motion as well; it is very much on the same theme. I thank him for making the points he did; I think they were completely sound and reasonable. It is important that the legislation be kept as actuarially sound as possible. The provisions written into the bill in the first place are designed to do this. Unfortunately, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre would tend to take away from that and make the plan less sound.

I might point out in passing that if my reading of the past 20 years' experience is accurate—I think the hon. member for Moose Jaw referred to this indirectly—if the plan had been in place for the past 20 years, although we would have gone through some bad years and some bad times which would have necessitated adjustment of the levy rates, I do not think we would ever have got to the point where there was an actual reduction in the payments. There may have been one year, but no more than one. I think this demonstrates the reasonableness of this kind of provision. To delete or negate it, as the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre has moved, would make the plan somewhat artificial and tend, in a distorting sort of way, to insulate the plan, indeed to insulate the prairies region from real and practical factors in the world of grain production that simply cannot be ignored. With those few remarks, I thank the hon. member for Moose Jaw for his comments and urge the House to defeat this amendment.

Before I sit down, may I refer briefly to the comments made this morning by my hon. friend and colleague from Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) having to do with the matter we were discussing yesterday, producer levies, and whether or not they could be classified as insurance premiums within the wording of the legislation. I thank the hon. member for clarifying that matter on my behalf. I should also like to apologize to hon. members if I in any way misled them in the comments I made in the House yesterday evening. If there was a misinterpretation on my part, it was certainly unintentional.

May I also, at this time, thank the hon. member for Moose Jaw and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre for drawing this item to my attention and for accepting so graciously the explanation given earlier today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of motion No. 6 will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 6 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

● (1420)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members are aware that I have put the motion. I waited a due time. If members, on reflection, wish me to call the vote again, I hope they will stand and make a formal request, otherwise I have declared the motion lost on division.

I wish to bring to the attention of hon. members that Mr. Speaker suggested this morning that motion No. 8 be grouped with motion No. 7. I now call motion No. 7 and motion No. 8.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Transport) moved:

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 11 by

(a) striking out line 41 at page 15 and substituting the following therefor:

"all participants for those three years; and";

(b) striking out lines 1 to 4 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) in respect of each participant, multiply the aggregrate amount that"; and

(c) striking out lines 9 to 43 at page 16 and substituting the following therefor:

Grain Stabilization

"this subsection.".

Standing Order 75(6)

Recommendation

His Excellency the Governor General recommends to the House of Commons that Bill C-41, An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, now before the House, be amended

(a) by striking out line 41 on page 15 and substituting the following:

"all participants for those three years; and";

(b) by striking out lines 1 to 4 on page 16 and substituting the following:

"(b) in respect of each participant, multiply the aggregate amount that"; and

(c) by striking out lines 9 to 43 on page 16 and substituting the following:

"this subsection.".

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 11 by striking out line 10 at page 17 and substituting the following therefor:

"culated pursuant to paragraph (1)(b) in".

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, at this stage, before I speak, does the government representative have any explanation for these two motions?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Motions Nos. 7 and 8, in the name of the minister, have to do with a clause that was placed in the bill in the first place in response to the recommendations and suggestion of various farm organizations and spokesmen from western Canada. They have to do with a situation where a producer decides to opt out of the stabilization plan in other words, to exercise his option—and then at a later stage changes his mind, as is his right under the legislation, and decides to come back in.

The original draft of the legislation suggested that a producer could simply exercise his option in that way and immediately return to the plan as a full-time participant. Some producer organizations and others said that this was not fair. It was suggested that if a producer decided, in his own good judgment, that he wanted to opt out of the plan and then changed his mind, he should be free to do so but should not be able to re-enter the plan on a full-time basis the same as a farmer who had been in from the beginning and had toughed it out, if you like, through thick and thin, in good years and in bad.

That suggestion seemed to have merit, so we produced a clause which provides that a farmer re-entering the plan comes in, not as a full participant but as a conditional participant, meaning that if there is to be a payment made from the stabilization fund in the first three years after he has changed his mind, he will receive only 90 per cent of the payment which he received in the first three years. When the three years have expired, he will become a full-time participant as if he had been in from the beginning.

The amendments the minister is putting forward do nothing more than simplify the calculation of that 10 per cent value that is to be taken off the potential payment to a producer in that conditional category. The calculation, as hon. members opposite have taken some pains to point out, is rather complicated. The provisions proposed in these amendments make it a very straight-forward and rather direct deduction of 10 per cent, which is much simpler than the original calculation set out in the legislation. The royal recommendation which hon. members see printed with the motion is required because this payment has the potential of increasing the amount of money that would be paid by the treasury.

I suppose it is a matter of mathematics in comparing the calculation as originally proposed with the one we are proposing by way of this amendment to see where the additional dollars might come from; but in simplifying the formula, as we are doing in these two motions, there might be a chance that the payment out to a conditional participant would be slightly higher than under the more complicated formula. That is all these amendments do. They do not affect the actuarial soundness of the plan. The amendments, clearly, are very much in favour of the western grain producer.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) for his explanation. I support the view he has put forward. I think it points out what the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) mentioned earlier today, namely, that by placing this legislation in the area of a pay-out bill, whereby everyone knows what he pays in but does not know what he will receive in the form of a pay-out, we will run into the problems just described by the parliamentary secretary.

If we had a plan whereby each man put in his money and the federal government put its money into an individual plan, there would be no necessity for all these definitions and rules, we would have something much simpler to explain to the farmers, and it would be easier to get the farmers into the plan. But no matter how hard one works on this type of legislation, it is so complicated that I am certain the selling job required to get the farmers to see the merit of the plan will be difficult.

These two amendments are a little fairer and, I would suggest, will add a burden to the treasury in that it may be paying out more than under the original statute. But in essence these amendments will make it easier to sell farmers the idea that they should get into the plan. We will support the government's amendments because they improve slightly what is very bad legislation.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a little ironic that when dealing with this bill, first of all the minister made some erroneous statements and then the parliamentary secretary made the same type of erroneous statements. Thank goodness we have the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) who can try to clarify those comments, but if the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley should make an erroneous statement, I wonder who would correct him.

This is a simple bill. I should like to read a portion of the clause so as to put on the record what we are dealing with here. It is very simple and I am sure the House leader will be very happy to agree that it is simple. Clause 12(b) reads as follows:

● (1430)

(b) in respect of each full participant, determine the amount of the stabilization payment that may be paid to him by multiplying the aggregate amount that may be paid as stabilization payments for the stabilization year determined pursuant to section 11, by the ratio determined pursuant to paragraph (a) of this subsection; and

(c) in respect of each conditional participant, multiply the aggregate amount of levy paid under this act, prior to and for the stabilization year by the participant since he became a conditional participant, by the lesser of

(i) the ratio of the aggregate of all amounts determined pursuant to paragraph (b) to be payable to full participants as stabilization payments in the stabilization year to the levy paid by but not refunded to all full participants for the two years immediately preceding the stabilization year and the stabilization year, and

(ii) the ratio of

It is perfectly straightforward, understandable English. Is it any wonder that we find the minister is misinterpreting the provision, as is his parliamentary secretary? The ironical part of it is that, as a member of the House and formerly a grain producer in western Canada, I am very much aware of the fact that in order to stabilize the grain industry it is not necessary to bring in a complicated formula.

The parliamentary secretary to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Goodale) told us that the operation will only cost $300,000 a year. Why, then, do we have $300,000 in the present supplementary estimates with which we have to deal in the Standing Committee on Agriculture to cover the period from now until March 31? Also, we were told that probably other supplementary estimates would be coming before the committee prior to that time, so why is the whole amount included in the supplementary estimates if it is to apply to the whole period of 12 months? It seems to me that part of these estimates could be included in next year's estimates. I see the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley agrees with me on this, and it makes common sense.

One of our great concerns with this bill is that now another bureaucracy will have to be set up. We all know that the greater the bureaucracy, the more costly the operation for which eventually the taxpayers have to pay, which includes each and every one of us in the House. We are only trying to help the government to cut down their expenditures, but it is very difficult to get through to the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) and make him understand it is difficult for the taxpayer to have continually to increase the amount he is paying to the Department of National Revenue.

We have just been through the exercise, in western Canada, known as the PFAA which was primarily set up to achieve the same objectives as those for which the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act was set up. I believe that this whole program could be run from Ottawa. If you want to find exactly what the cost of the operation of any farm in western Canada is, all you have to do is accumulate the total cost to the Department of National Revenue. Certainly, in this age of computers, it should not be difficult to do. Then average out the cost and, using figures from Statistics Canada on whatever increase there may be in production, you will arrive at a figure which will give you the cost factor acceptable to the producer and which will be of benefit to the government.

It seems to me that this is a simple method of finding out the cost. If we cut down the cost, we will increase the return to the producer. I feel that there has been an oversight on the part of the minister and of his supporting staff in that they did not bring out a simple formula whereby the producers would know what they will receive in certain years when their income is lower.

The parliamentary secretary mentioned that those who opt out of the program and later come back in will be penalized. This is why we have the amendments that are before us at present. I agree that certain penalties should be established for opting out and then coming back in, as the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) suggested, but if the program is acceptable and benefits the producers, they will want to stay in it.

The value of this program is being questioned by western producers. Many of them feel they can take it or leave it; they couldn't care less. When you talk to people out there, you find they are not very interested in the program, primarily because they do not think it will be of much value to them. One of the great shortcomings of the program is that it brings no return to the individual who, after making premium payments for several years, decides to leave farming. That is one of the reasons older farmers do not wish to participate in the program. They cannot afford to take a chance on not getting any return on the premiums they have paid. Why should they pay into a program for three, four or five years, then leave farming and have no return whatsoever? There are other people who do not want to take a chance on participating in the program because they fear because they will not get any return on the money they pay in.

This is not an acceptable program, and what I regret is that it will probably take the place of what could be an acceptable program some time in the future. It is always very difficult to change these schemes once they are put in place. After a producer pays into a program for five, six or even ten years, if a new one is brought in surely he should not lose the money he paid under the first program. Farmers should not be penalized because new programs are introduced. Once a producer participates in a program, it becomes very difficult to bring in another sound, acceptable one. Provision must be made in any new program which will make it acceptable to the producers.

That is why I believe the minister and his parliamentary secretary have short-changed the western prairie grain producers in this bill, although they had a golden opportunity — probably there will never be a similar opportunity for years—to bring in an acceptable program which would be of benefit to producers, one that they would want. As I said earlier, if you speak to the producers you will find that many of them couldn't care less. What can we in the opposition do? We have to support this bill because there is no better program to support at this time. Surely somewhere down the road we will have the opportunity of establishing a program for the grain producers which will be of benefit to them and, ultimately, to Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and pleased that he took the time to read one of the sections of the bill to put on the public record its complicated nature. It is all very well to have statute books, but not too many people, except lawyers, read the statutes. When something like this is recorded in Hansard, however, it gets very wide public coverage.

On two or three occasions I have asked friends of mine in the legal profession to look over certain sections of the bill and, like me, they found many of them almost incomprehensible. Our committee travelled for one week last summer in western Canada. We went to the three prairie provinces, to the major cities, accepted briefs and heard presentations by various farm organizations, such as the wheat pools and the Palliser group and others. Almost every organization that presented a brief spoke of the complexity of the legislation. It had been placed in their hands a considerable time before, and I understand that a briefing team from the Department of Agriculture travelled to western Canada to meet with executives of the farm organizations. Those executives told us that despite the briefing they still thought the bill was so difficult and complex that they were not able to cummunicate with their grass roots people in order to get an expression of opinion from them.

I think it is important that producers in Canadian Wheat Board regions understand what the legislation is about. If they do not understand it, they are certainly not going to participate.

It is important that the government put out a brochure on this bill, explaining it in layman's terms so that farmers will know what their contributions will be as well as the government's contributions, and they will know the penalties if they decide to opt out of the program and then opt into it. If that is not done, I am afraid a great many producers in western Canada will not participate in the plan, and unless the majority participate it will not work. Despite what I have just said, I am afraid that even with explanations the producers of western Canada will not accept the plan as satisfactory.

I mentioned earlier today, and I want to repeat it, that we on this side believe in a program of individual participation. We submitted a fairly comprehensive paper to the committee setting out in detail what our program was. The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board did not see fit to accept our proposals. He said that perhaps some time in the future such an individual plan could be worked out, but in the meantime he was going to proceed with the complicated piece of legislation that we have before us. We suggested that perhaps the legislation could be delayed and, after further consultation with representatives of the producers in western Canada, a satisfactory plan could be worked out. He did not see fit to do that; consequently, we are faced with this legislation which will shortly become law.

As far as the amendment is concerned, it is to a very complicated clause and I accept the explanation of the hon. member for Assiniboia as to its intent. I shall leave it at that.

[Mr. Towers.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on motion No. 7 and the decision on that motion will, at the same time, dispose of motion No. 8, as suggested by Mr. Speaker this morning. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: At the same time, motion No. 8 is adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Lang) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to the discussion of motions Nos. 9, 11 and 12, but the vote will be taken separately, I gather from the remarks of Mr. Speaker this morning, unless the House has any disagreement? Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I want to indicate clearly that there will be a separate vote on each of these three motions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understood that Mr. Speaker provided for those three motions to be dealt with separately both as to discussion and as to vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I believe I misunderstood. We will proceed with one motion at a time and will now take motion No. 9.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) moved:

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in clause 16 by

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment and another one we submitted were an effort to reverse some of the backward provisions of the legislation. The legislation rewards fortune and penalizes misfortune. Those who have the highest income in the year of the pay-out get the highest pay-out: those with the lowest income in the year of the pay-out get the lowest pay-out. That has to be a backward principle.

Similarly, years of a deficit positions for the fund will obviously be years when grain producers are in the worst possible circumstances, or there would not be pay-outs to cause deficits in the fund. Obviously, they are not in a financial position then to be assessed extra charges for expenses or anything else. What the government proposes to do in years of financial difficulty when the grain and income stabilization fund is in deficit is to increase the levy. That is the worst possible time for them to be paying out more money, so the purpose of the amendment is to make the levy a constant 2 per cent.

Variability based on the fund's surplus or deficit position could have a destabilizing effect contrary to the intention and purpose of the legislation, which is to stabilize. To reduce the levy when the fund is in surplus means the grain producers are in good financial shape, but that is when they can afford to pay a higher levy. When the fund is in deficit and farmers cannot afford the extra cost, the government proposes to raise the levy. Really, that is when farmers cannot afford to pay extra money for anything. That is when farmers will be in the worst position. This proposal is therefore backward.

Would it not be more logical to increase the levy when the fund is in surplus, thereby making the surplus even larger, so that when farmers draw on the fund in adverse years it will not go into deficit? Farmers, I am sure, would be willing to pay higher levies in good years and build up big reserves which will earn interest and further swell the fund, so that in bad years payments out can be made from the fund without incurring any deficit. The farmers could draw on the reserves which had increased in good years and to which both the producer and the government has contributed. You should not call on the producer to pay more into the fund at the worst possible time, when the fund is in deficit. If a fellow has been kicked in the face, why add to his troubles?

Why can we not turn this proposal around? Let the government accept half a dozen amendments which would make certain that a good principle is not applied backwards; I will put it that way. I would much rather the bill provided for levies to be higher in good years so that surpluses could be increased. It is time we built up our reserves so that when the fund is drawn on in bad years it will not be necessary to increase levies.

If I cannot persuade my colleagues on all sides to support my suggestion, I hope at least they will agree to allow the 2 per cent levy to remain constant. Two per cent should be the constant rate, at least until we have had several years' experience with the collection of levies and the government's contributions. After we gain experience with the workings of the fund and know whether the level of contributions is sufficient or insufficient, it will be possible for the government to come before the House and say, "We must make the following changes, based on experience." The present proposal calls on producers to make larger contributions to the fund when they can least afford to do so. I hope this motion commends itself to colleagues on all sides. I hope the minister likes what I propose and accepts the amendment, as that will save time, to the great relief of the government House leader.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). He said, I think, that his amendment would not turn around the provisions of the clause being discussed, although that is what he would like to do. Perhaps if he had introduced an amendment of that kind, my party could have taken a hard look at it and considered supporting it.

Basically, the clause as it now reads provides for a levy of 2 per cent on grain sales up to $25,000 under normal circumstances. The balance of the clause, which the hon. member proposes to amend with a deletion, would reduce the levy from 2 per cent to 1.5 per cent in any year when the interest to the credit of the producer exceeds one-third of that annual levy. Later there is provision for reducing the levy to 1 per cent. The final portion of the clause would increase the levy to 2.5 per cent in years when the interest charged to the fund by the government for moneys lent to the plan exceeds one-third of the annual levy. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre proposes to fix the rate at 2 per cent, without variation. He suggests this will not create hardship for producers, as in years when the crop is good they should pay a higher levy, and in years when the crop is bad, a lower levy.

Possibly his suggestion has merit. On the other hand, he proposes a reduction of one-half of 1 per cent which, in concrete terms, involves at most the sum of $125 in a year in which the producer sells $25,000 worth of grain. In these circumstances, I feel members of my party cannot support this motion. I hope the government will take a hard look at the bill in the immediate future. Let it glean from the various representatives of the farm organizations who may appear before the Standing Committee on Agriculture their ideas on how the program is working. After it has gained one or two years' experience of the program, let it tell parliamentarians what amendments it thinks ought to be made to the act, in order to make it more equitable for producers.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the misgivings of many grain producers at the government bringing in a bill of this kind when grain sales are at an all-time high at all-time high prices. There is no guarantee that these sales will continue. The reason is drought in many other parts of the world which has created a shortage of grain supplies and driven up the price of grain.

It seems ironic that the very minister bringing in this bill wants to keep his fingers in the pockets of grain producers and acquire some of the dollars coming their way. He is doing exactly that under this bill. For that reason, we cannot support the amendment moved by our friend from Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) even though he is a good fellow. I cannct agree with his philosophy, that the government, or an agency of the government, knows a better way to spend money than the producers. He was putting forward one of the fundamental principles which divide political parties. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is advocating a socialist policy. That is fine and dandy. But we on my side, who believe in the free enterprise system, do not want to take the cream off the top and thereby destroy the initiative of producers, to the detriment of the economy, the agricultural industry and the whole of Canada.

I do not believe that it is in our best interest to tell the prairie grain producers that any agency of government, or any government bureaucrat, is in a better position to spend the money. Actually this program put forward by the government would have been more acceptable had it been brought in at a time when grain was not selling at an all-time high.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this amendment put forward by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) bears very heavily on some of the evidence we received from the farmers when we met with them over the week of meetings held in the west by the standing committee.

As I read the farm evidence and heard the farmers speak, they were putting forward a philosophy that when things were going well for the farmers they wanted to put more into the fund, and when things were going badly for them, they hoped they could put less into the fund. This is what I think the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is trying to put forward. However, in amending the government's legislation the best he could come up with was a 2 per cent constant levy.

In support of what the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) said earlier, I suggest very strongly that if the government had the wits that it should have had when it saw what the farmers were saying, it should have changed this variable levy from the way it has it, and reversed it.

At the present time under the government legislation, whenever the fund is doing well—in plain language there is a lot of money in the fund—and collecting too much interest from the government, it reduces the levy. Whenever the fund is doing poorly and there is not enough money to meet the interest requirement that the federal government loans to it, it raises the levy.

What the government has done in this legislation is the exact opposite of what the farmer wants. The farmer would not mind paying more money into the fund when he has the money, in the hope that he would not have to pay as much in when he does not have it. This is the philosophy of the motion of the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre that we support. However, the way it comes out in his amendment, he wants a fixed levy year in and year out. This makes the proposal of the hon. member for Moose Jaw very practical and acceptable. He is proposing that as soon as possible after you put this bill in you see if you can work out a proposal to make it a variable levy, and reverse it to the variable type of levy you now have.

I agree that that approach is better than what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is proposing. However, I come back to the basic criticism that this proposal made by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, which is acceptable to the farmers much more than what the government is proposing and what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is proposing, will only work if it is an individual plan. An individual farmer then knows that if he puts more money in, he individually, some time in the future, will get more money than he needs. This buttresses the feeling of the Progressive Conservative party on this legislation. If this legislation is going to work and do any good, it must eventually be wiped off the books and replaced by the type of stabilization income legislation which is based on the individual farmer.

I would like to emphasize this to the government members even though we cannot do too much about it at this particular stage of the bill's procedure through the House. In this debate they have heard it clearly debated by the hon. member for Moose Jaw and the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre. On the basis of philosophy the government's position is the worst position of all.

We are supporting the government position because at least in the mathematics of the scheme it is closer to what we want, which is a variable type of levy. However, the variation should be in reverse. It does not do much good to propose this at this stage, but at least any person who reads this debate will know the difference.

In essence, we will support the government position because it is a variable. On the basis of the mentality that they use in the civil service to judge these plans, it is more actuarially sound. However, it does not meet what the farmer wants. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre is trying to get what the farmer wants, but does not know how to do it. We have proposed ways in which it can be done. However, to make it work, I suggest it will have to be made into an individual plan.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on this. The Conservatives have said that they will support the government. The government position is not to have this on an individual basis. If there is to be an increase in the levy obviously it should be in a good year when the farmer is capable of making the payment, and not the reverse. It is stupid to say that because the farmer is having difficulty we will raise the levy. The members of the Conservative party see some merit in making it equal, so that it will at least not work in reverse.

I may have failed to realize something in the same way as did the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). It is my opinion that the way it works is that where the expenses are the highest, you have the highest levy, and where your income is the highest you have the lowest levy. That seems to be a complete reversal of stabilization. You make the highest payment when you have the least money and the lowest payment when you have a lot of money. That seems to be backwards. I cannot see any reason why the Conservatives are not in favour of stabilizing it so that we understand what happens from year to year, and we can look at the over-all payout.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) referred to the individual farmer. If the government were not so pigheaded, that is the way it would be operated.

We heard from the Manitoba deputy minister of agriculture, Mr. Janssen, a very astute economist and very practical person in terms of agriculture. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain may be interested in knowing that he suggested this should be on an individual basis. He said that in Manitoba all they had to do was add another three columns to their crop insurance program because they had already worked out the inputs into the cost of production. They were also aware of the inputs to the income side. This is all worked out. All they need to do is add another three columns and they will be able to keep the books for the federal government at absolutely no administrative cost. This would mean that the more you put into the program, the higher your withdrawals could be. It would in effect change this to an income stabilization insurance rather than the net income that we are trying to stabilize for all agriculture.

If we were really interested in individualization we would be concerned about the individual pay-in, the levy. This could be varied. I am sure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain would agree that in that case the higher a person's income the more he would be paid—it would be a cash flow related to the situation of the individual farmer rather than one affecting the whole of western Canada, or at least that part which is covered by the legislation before us. I am sure most members would agree that this would be a more logical type of stabilization program upon which to embark.

I should not be surprised if the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) agrees with me that we are not likely to accomplish much with this bill. There is not much merit either in defeating it or in passing it. It is not really important one way or the other. It really affects the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) most because, being of German descent, he had the idea a long time ago that he would do something about stabilization and now he intends to do it, even if it is only to give a title to a bill. I have no doubt he is aware that if it is the intention to stabilize farm income in any effective way it would be necessary to call for heavy deductions when income is high and reduce the levy as income falls. Then, when income reached a certain level we would begin making a payout. Thus, over a ten year period, we would have stabilized income at a certain level. But this is not what is being done.

My hon. friend, through trying to make the best of a bad arrangement, said we would stabilize the levy so that at least the same amount is paid all the time. This is an accepted practice. We have always done this in the past. A farmer who insures his barn pays the same amount whether he is expecting it to burn down or not. If we are to operate on this basis let us at least keep the levy stable so that farmers know what it is. To make the levy highest just when the farmer is reaching the point of a payout is an odd way of bringing about stabilization. It seems to me there must be a break-even point at which the payout would equal the premium.

The amendment is a good one though, because it equalizes the premiums as between good years and bad years. Anyone familiar with farming is aware that when the net cash flow decreases to a point at which costs are higher than receipts, farmers go to the government and to all government agencies asking for moratoria on the payments due on their land, machinery, and so on. Parliament has provided such a moratorium on a number of occasions, and we asked the farmers to make two payments on their land, machinery, and other debts when their cash flow was sufficiently high to enable them to do so.

The farmer is likely to think we are more foolish than we are if we believe that when we give him a moratorium on everything else we can continue to charge him an insurance premium higher than that levied in the years when he can afford to pay it. At least it would be better to adopt a neutral position by maintaining the premium at 2 per cent in good and bad years alike.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to make three points briefly in response to the comments made on this motion. First the point raised by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) and others about the provisions in the bill to ensure the actuarial soundness of the plan. Actuarial soundness is very much adhered to here, and that is why the provisions to which he and others referred have been included.

I have been asked to predict what the rate is likely to be in the future, say, five, 10 or 15 years down the road. Let me point out that the bill does provide for the establishment of an advisory committee of producers with a mandate to look at anything in the legislation, or in the regulations and their administration, to ensure the plan is functioning well and in the best interests of the grain producers. That advisory committee could well look into the level of levy rates applicable. Indeed, I hope they could take this matter under early advisement. At any rate, provision has been made for the consideration of this question of fees paid by producers.

I wish to make one comment about the individualization of the plan. It seemed to me that in the course of our discussions in the committee stage two different concepts of individualization were advanced. One of them was put forward on behalf of the New Democratic Party, and observations of a similar vein were made by the National Farmers Union. What they were talking about boiled down to a plea for a kind of guaranteed income provision. Such a proposal is really quite different from a plan to stabilize proceeds from grain production. A guaranteed income scheme may be something that is a very laudable objective for the future, but it does not particularly or peculiarly relate to the grain industry. It is a concept which, I suggest, embraces broad social policy; it is not one of narrow economic import having to do with one particular economic activity, namely, the grain industry.

● (1520)

On the other hand we have a proposal for individualization, which is the complete reverse. I think the hon. member for Moose Jaw as well as one of the witnesses before the committee, if I am not mistaken the Manitoba Farm Business Association, referred to the keeping of individual accounts, and this is something quite different from a guaranteed income program. If I may paraphrase the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), it boils down to a situation where each individual farmer bets against himself and his own abilities. This is quite different, I suggest, from the proposal that some of the New Democrats and others who appeared before the committee made.

My only comment about this final approach of keeping individual accounts is that, from the best investigation that we have been able to make in calculating what this means in terms of government payments in and payments back to producers, the level of payment provided under the plan would be considerably less than that which is presently proposed in the legislation. This is why that approach has not been adopted.

To return to the major point, this amendment would take away from the actuarial soundness of the plan, and for that reason alone I would thank hon. members of the opposition for agreeing with us that this particular proposal should be defeated.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the parliamentary secretary a question before he sits down. He says that the actuarial soundness of the plan will be destroyed by stabilizing the levy at 2 per cent. Is he indicating that there are more lows than highs in the cash flow of western farmers, or that there are more years when the cash flow is below the cost of production than there are when it is above it? If they were even, 2 per cent is what we would come up with, because there would be stabilization. Is he indicating that there are more years when the farmer is in difficulty than there are years when he is in an advantageous position, or is he saying that the dips are more extensive than the rises in farm income? I am curious to know which of these two created the actuarial difficulty.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, to respond briefly to that question, it seems to me that in putting in this particular provision we are not pre-judging the operation of the plan one way or another. We are simply adding a safeguard provision preventing the fund from becoming unreasonably large, and therefore being a burden on producers because their money is tied up in it for no good reason. At the same time we are preventing an inordinately high deficit so that the producer is not burdened with high interest payments; it is as simple as that. In putting in the safeguard provision we are not attempting to pre-judge how the plan operates.

Mr. Peters: Have we in fact carried out an actuarial study? This raises another point. The hon. gentleman indicated that the 2 per cent, which I gather is the mean, does not necessarily, spread over the last 20 years, cover either the highs or the lows. It seems to me we are not going to have too much, that we may have too little, which would mean we would have to change the amount being paid in. The hon. member says that the mean will not produce the kind of fund we need either for covering the deficits or for creating surpluses. I think the actuarial work could be done in order to indicate whether or not we have arrived at the mean.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, we have in fact done some very careful actuarial studies, and this is why we have a provision in the bill that deals with the situation in that way. This whole discussion was carried on at some considerable length in committee. At that time we covered the point to the satisfaction of most members there.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of motion No. 9 will please say yea.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost on division.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Benjamin) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to consideration of motion No. 11, in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

Mr. Benjamin: I will move it on his behalf, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) (for Mr. Nystrom) moved:

Motion No. 11

That Bill C-41, an act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended in Clause 17 by striking out lines 42 and 43 at page 24 and substituting the following therefor:

"maximum amount prescribed by subsection (6), with a view to including 90 per cent of eligible grain sale proceeds within the plan and, in such case, the maximum".

He said: Mr. Speaker, according to my understanding—which may be insufficient, but to the extent that I do understand this part of the bill—I believe it was the stated intention of the government with respect to coverage of the plan that the consequent maximum eligible grain sale proceeds for each producer was to be 90 per cent of the grain sold up to a ceiling of $25,000. I believe that was the stated intention of the minister in committee.

I am certain the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) and other hon. members opposite will appreciate how helpful we are in making sure that what the government says it intends should be in the bill is in the bill. Thus I assume that this amendment will be accepted by the government, and that hon. members opposite will welcome all the aid and comfort that we have given them in this particular instance.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to what the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) said he thought was the intent of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). It is very unfortunate that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville is not in the House to explain his motion, just as it is unfortunate that the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is not here to explain some of his amendments.

I have looked at this amendment, as have other members of our party, but for the life of me I cannot understand what its effect is. The clause that it attempts to amend provides for the governor in council to increase the maximum beyond $25,000 if the governor in council thinks, under the circumstances, that it would be in the interest of the producers to do so. This amendment, as I read it, limits subparagraph (7) to 90 per cent of $25,000. Unless we can have a further explanation from someone, I cannot see for the life of me that this amendment makes sense, and we certainly cannot support it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, is there going to be a statement from the government side on this, because we are a little in the dark about the meaning of this amendment?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) has properly dealt with this amendment in a reasonable fashion. He explained that over the long haul we would like to see this bill cover something in the range of 90 per cent of the grain sale proceeds in western Canada at any particular moment in time. That would be a worth-while objective. Of course if there should be 100 per cent participation I suppose to some extent that would be absolute perfection, but our initial and, as the hon. member said, our publicly stated target for the legislation is that it will include something in the range of 90 per cent.

If hon. members would look back at the legislation they will see, if they study sub-clause 7 of clause 17, that the particular sub-clause with which we are dealing relates to consultations between the governor in council and the advisory committee of producers, and really I suppose this particular amendment does nothing more than give some guidance to the advisory committee. It certainly also gives some guidance to the governor in council in terms of the adjustment in this level of $25,000 referred to in sub-clause 6 of clause 17. It is really nothing more than an attempt to make explicit in the legislation what had been our previously stated objective. There is there, I submit, some guidance and instruction for those who later on may come to the conclusion that the level of $25,000 is too low.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the parliamentary secretary? I assume his statement means that the amendment therefore is acceptable to the government.

Mr. Goodale: Yes; we can support this type of amendment, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question? The question is on motion No. 11. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I declare the motion carried.

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Nystrom) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): We will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 12.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre) (for Mr. Nystrom) moved:

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-41, An Act respecting the stabilization of net proceeds from the production and sale of western grain and to amend certain statutes in consequence thereof, be amended by adding the following new Clause immediately after line 9 at page 42:

"45.1 The Minister shall, within three years after the coming into force of this Act, undertake a comprehensive review of the operation of the Act and its effects on western grain producers, and shall forthwith submit a report to Parliament thereon."

He said: Again, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to be very helpful to the government and to assist the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board to make certain that this legislation, if and when it becomes law, is reviewed and examined carefully and as often as possible. Therefore we are adding a new clause to the effect that the minister shall, within three years after the coming into force of the act, undertake a comprehensive review of the operation of the act and its effects on western grain producers, and shall forthwith submit a report to parliament thereon.

Personally I would have preferred something a little more specific in the amendment which would provide that parliament shall debate that report for a period of two or three days. However, I suspect that had we gone that far the minister would have become balky and would not have looked with pleasure upon the amendment. Therefore we have worded it in this manner so that the requirement on the minister will be to submit a report to parliament. Since the reports of many boards and commissions are submitted to parliament annually, this should not be a problem for the government.

I hope my confidence is not misplaced in that the government will see to it that the report not only is submitted to parliament but that it will ask for a reference of the report to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that the committee can review the report and make an assessment with regard to the efficacy of the program, reporting back to parliament in respect of any changes which should be made to the program. This amendment would provide the avenue by which to do this. We must leave it to what we hope are the good intentions of the government in respect of this legislation.

We hope the government will do more than just submit a report to parliament. We hope it will ask the committee to comment on the report after giving it a thorough study. This is undoubtedly one of the most complicated pieces of legislation that has ever been brought forward. I find the income tax law even more understandable than this bill, and that is saying quite a bit because my comprehension of the income tax law is not too good. For that reason, if nothing else, the experience gained in the first three years both by the farmers and the government will need to be examined and assessed very carefully.

I predict that the minister himself after that experience, and the report he makes to parliament, will be anxious to make some pretty fundamental changes to the legislation because, unless I miss my guess, a large number of grain producers after being in the program for two or three years will decide it is not really accomplishing what all of us desire, namely, the stabilization of the net farm income from grain sales. It will not accomplish this for those who need it the most, the small and the middle sized farmer. It will not make too much difference to the well-to-do large farmer. Our concern must be for the small and middle-sized farmer who has the most difficult row to hoe when his net income drops drastically in two or three years out of every five or six years. So I commend this motion to the House, and I hope the parliamentary secretary to the minister will be good enough to respond and say that this motion is acceptable to the government.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any question about the government's willingness to accept this amendment because I believe when the three years are up the amendment will be redundant. There will be a new government sitting on the right of Mr. Speaker, which will bring in a proper income stabilization bill based on the right of the individual farmer to have an income stabilization fund into which both he and the government can contribute.

This bill is primarily and almost completely designed in the interests of the Department of Finance. If it brings any benefits to any farmer, they are only accidental. Therefore if we review it in three years we will probably find that the bill is bad.

I honestly hope that the viewpoint of the prairie farmers who are affected by this legislation will be accepted by people in all of Canada, in the rural areas as well as in the cities, and that we will get rid of this government which has been cluttering up the landscape for the last 12 years and not doing a single thing to help agriculture. All its members have given us is promises, roaring and bellowing, pawing of the ground, twisting and shaking of tails, but no record of performance.

This bill is a classical example. The rigidity and inflexibility of the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board is so clearly apparent in this bill that it is a wonder his colleagues let him bring it back to the House. When we took this bill to farmers in western Canada, every group of farmers spoke in favour of an individual approach to this type of legislation, not this area payout concept under which you pay in a known amount but you do not know what your return will be. The kind of program that farmers accept today is one in which they know what they will pay in and what the return will be.

This bill is based on a complicated formula which the farmer will not be able to understand, and I doubt if there is a single person sitting in the House today who understands it. The only person who seems to understand the bill clearly is the minister himself, but when he says he understands it I really become worried.

So the first point I want to make is that we should accept the motion which calls for a review of the legislation in three years to try to improve it. But I hope and trust that three years from now a new government will be sitting on the other side which will get rid of all this complicated stuff and simply put forward a bill under which farmers will pay in their dollar, the government will pay in its contribution, and farmers will know what they will get when they need it because they themselves will decide what they want, and they will not be able to take out any more than they have put in. Under this type of individual approach the farmer will accept the program, and the government will benefit from it. Because farmers will get their money during periods when the economy is poor, it will do a lot to stabilize farm incomes in this country.

[Mr. Benjamin.]

Farming is no longer a small item in the economics of our country. Today farming is a large item in the total income, and 10 or 15 years from now it will play an even larger part than it does today. Certainly by the end of the century the great resource industries of Canada will be many times greater than they are today.

If the government does not move now to stabilize incomes, not only of grain farmers but of all producers whose income goes up and down in wide fluctuations, the country will suffer. This bill was supposed to be an effort on the part of the government to try to stabilize this volatile grain activity. I will suggest right now that we must do our best to try to improve the program to make it acceptable to farmers so that they know what return they will get on the money they paid in. When they buy crop insurance, which is an insurance against weather, they know on an actuarial basis that is sound what they must pay in, and they know what they will get out of it.

According to this bill, farmers will get paid under a formula. Some year when they need the money desperately, they will not get it because the formula will say they are well off, and in other years when farmers have all the money they need, they will receive a payment because the formula will say they are broke.

This formula is just academic nonsense put into legislation which we in the House have to swallow. I certainly support the idea of reviewing it in three years, but it would be simpler to throw it out in three years' time when we form a new government and put something better in its place.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I think it is of fundamental importance that we have an opportunity to review this legislation in three years, but it is unfortunate that the government should bring in legislation which needs to be reviewed in three years. This demonstrates its weakness.

One of the shortcomings of the plan is that the $300,000 to which I referred earlier today will be used in large part on inspectors travelling to western Canada to assess the income and expenses of prairie grain producers.

We tried to tell the minister that he should bring in a program that would be closely integrated with crop insurance, because we all know that in the three prairie provinces and in British Columbia inspectors are ready and available to go out into the field to make an assessment of whatever damages have occurred in farming.

I suggested to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) that there is irony in the fact that the legislation before us is being proposed by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, but that it comes under the administration of the Minister of Agriculture.

I also suggested to the Minister of Agriculture that he will have to exercise a great deal of care in the administration of this legislation primarily because of the fact that western Canadian producers guard their privacy jealously. As I said, there are inspectors going on farm premises from the Prairie Crop Insurance Commission, and now other inspectors will be going there under the new stabilization program. I fear that farmers will become very irate at that.

I also suggested that unless the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) takes all the guns away from prairie producers, they will start shooting and, since the Minister of Agriculture is somewhat bigger than the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, he might make a better target and might be the first one to be shot. It is not because we on this side are particularly benevolent people that we would hate to see the Minister of Agriculture get shot, but because the next minister might be worse.

It would be a great advantage if the government would accept this motion and allow the survey or a reasonable debate to take place in three years' time, so that a proper assessment of the program could be made. By then farmers and producers would have an opportunity to make their views known in a firmer manner than they have to date. I hope the government sees fit to accept this motion.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, the motion we are now debating is one that I can support despite the fact that it is rather unnecessary. I think it is superfluous; I think it is irrelevant and redundant. The entire clause 45 states clearly:

> The minister shall, on or before the 31st day of August next following the end of each year . . . submit to parliament a report on the administration of this act including a report on the state of the stabilization account as of the end of that year.

The provision is in there now; there is no question about that. Clause 37 of the bill deals with the advisory committee. This is made up of producers, and it will be their responsibility to examine the operation of this plan as it gets under way.

I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who used the word redundant. The rest of his speech was a rehash of the debate on second reading. Certainly by the end of three years we will have debated this bill and will have subjected it to a thorough review in terms of the next federal election. I am sure by that time some of our friends in the official opposition will regret the negativism that they displayed in dealing with this bill and the whole concept of stabilization of farm income.

I was surprised and disappointed to hear the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain say that financing is a small item in the economy of our country. I am sure he misstated what he knows to be a fact about western Canada. This bill is aimed at bringing stability to the entire western economy, but the whole problem starts in the west with the agricultural economy. His plan as far as an individual insurance plan is concerned is another alternative and it may be a good one, but it is totally different from the plan before us in this bill.

If my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party want to debate this very small motion which really adds nothing, if it will make them feel any better for having gone around Saskatchewan four or five years ago condemning this bill or anything along these lines, if it will salve their conscience by debating this motion, I will be pleased to support it.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rather enjoyed the debate we had today. I was disappointed at the last minute when the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) had to bring politics into it. Until then it was a good and comprehensive debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Neil: He used some pretty strong adjectives and spoke of the amendment as being superfluous, irrelevant, and redundant. Then he want on to say that he and his party were prepared to support it.

Certainly we on this side of the House are prepared to support the amendment because it refers to the review of a bill that is very complicated and is almost incomprehensible to the farmers and producers of western Canada. I think it is important that some time in the next three years the various farm organizations have an opportunity to appear before the committee and review what has taken place and whether the bill is serving its purpose or not. I am pleased that the government is prepared to support this, notwithstanding the hon. member's remarks. I see it is two minutes to four o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and in these last moments I would suggest that we proceed with the voting, dispose of the bill at report stage, and speak on it later at third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) made the remark that we have talked against the bill and the idea of stabilization across the country, I would have been quite happy to have stayed in my seat and let this go to a vote. Now I have no intention of letting it go to a vote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Peters: I do not care if it ever passes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Goodale: You never did.

Mr. Peters: That is perfectly true, I never did. The remarks that were made about this particular amendment are probably true, that it is a minor amendment, that farmers would have an opportunity of looking at the legislation again, and that in the light of that examination there would be a change. But the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley indicated that we have been opposed to the idea of stabilization.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has the floor. If other hon. members want to talk they should get behind the curtains.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member indicated that we were opposed to the idea of stabilization of incomes and I think that has to be answered. I agree that this bill does not do that. The statement was made that we were opposed to subsequent bills, which is true, but we had a very good reason for being opposed to them. We eliminated one bill which the courts found to be unconstitutional. It had something to do with PFAA funds. For that reason I think there should be more discussion of this bill. I am sure there is going to be opposition to this bill in western Canada.

Items Stood

It would take me more than a few minutes to indicate the differences between this bill and the actual stabilization or equalization of income over a given period of time, Mr. Speaker, so I would therefore call it four o'clock.

● (1600)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the House would give its unanimous consent for dealing with and disposing of the clause previously being discussed, as that would save lots of time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's point of order is constructive, and the official opposition is prepared to prolong this debate for the period necessary for dealing with that particular clause.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is this agreed?

Mr. Peters: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give consent to completing the bill at report stage without further debate, but want the right to speak on third reading as I am surprised at some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac).

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. Nystrom) agreed to.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Justice) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): At the next sitting of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S PUBLIC BILLS

NON-SMOKERS RELIEF ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE RELIEF TO TRAVELLING NON-SMOKERS

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore) moved that Bill C-242, respecting relief to non-smokers in transit, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that Bill C-242 has finally come before the House of Commons for debate. We are to discuss a measure respecting relief to non-smokers in transit.

The purpose of this bill, as set out in the short and long title, is to give relief to travelling non-smokers by stipulating that railways, planes and buses under federal jurisdiction be required to provide them with separate seating accommodation, since there is medical evidence to the effect that secondary smoke inhalation not only causes distress to the non-smoker but could jeopardize his health, particularly if he suffers from heart disease or a respiratory ailment.

The purpose of this bill is simply to insist that non-smokers actually have rights, that they are not second-class citizens and that they should not be forced to breathe in somebody else's tobacco smoke. Obviously my bill, which specifically seeks to protect non-smokers by requiring that all air, marine, rail and road carriers under federal jurisdiction be required to provide non-smokers with separate seating accommodation, will not by itself guarantee the rights of non-smokers, for we again come up against the old problem of jurisdiction, and I think it is generally agreed that most of the legislative efforts on behalf of non-smokers must come at the provincial or municipal level. Nevertheless, this bill does strike at an area which is within federal jurisdiction and should, hopefully, set an example as a step in the right direction.

I would like at the outset to pay tribute to the former member from Surrey-White Rock, Barry Mather, who introduced a similar bill during the last parliament. I had the pleasure of serving with the former member on the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs committee during the twenty-eighth parliament and I came to know his deep concern for the subject. I am sure he would be extremely pleased by any action this House may deem to take with regard to providing relief to non-smokers.

This bill should not be interpreted as an anti-smoker or anti-smoking bill. It is not designed to try to prevent those people who wish to smoke from smoking, nor is it an attempt even to warn those who do smoke about the dangers of smoking. The Department of National Health and Welfare has for the last several years been conducting a program in this area. Bill C-242 is concerned solely with the non-smoker and the effects tobacco smoke has on him. For years almost no attention was paid to the plight of non-smokers and, indeed, the non-smoker himself did little or nothing in his own defence.

In the past few years we have seen a drastic change in attitude. No longer are non-smokers suffering in silence. The numerous non-smoking groups and their spin-offs which are now peppered across Canada and in the United States are testaments to this fact. These groups such as ASH, action on smoking and health; FANS, fresh air for non-smokers; GASP, group against smokers pollution; and the Non-Smokers' Rights Association were not even in existence before 1970; but now every province has at least one such group actively operating.

Undoubtedly one of the main reasons for this tremendous growth of militancy among non-smokers has been recent scientific studies which have shown tobacco smoke to be injurious to the health and a source of distress and illness not only to smokers but also to non-smokers. The effects of tobacco smoke and of the pollutants it contains on non-smokers can be influenced by many factors, such as the amount of pollutants found in the air; the ventillation available for the removal or dispersion of smoke; the proximity of an individual to the source of pollution; the length of exposure to the pollutants; or the health of the person so exposed. It is therefore impossible to say what the effect of tobacco smoke will be with regard to a particular individual. However, broad generalizations are possible.

Besides the general discomfort suffered by many individuals exposed to an atmosphere contaminated with tobacco smoke, diminished vision, short breath upon exertion, psychologic stress on patients with heart diseases, and allergic and irritative reactions may result.

Perhaps one of the most important sources of information on the effects of tobacco smoke on non-smokers has been a yearly report of the United States department of health, education and welfare on "The Health Consequences of Smoking", commonly referred to as the Surgeon General's report. The 1975 report which has been just released devotes an entire section to what the report refers to as "Involuntary Smoking."

Although the report discusses the subject using the most technical medical terminology, one point was made which I feel is very pertinent to this debate today, that is, that a survey conducted on symptoms experienced by travellers on both military and commcercial aircraft showed that over 60 per cent of the non-smoking passengers and between 15 per cent and 22 per cent of the smokers reported being annoyed by other passengers smoking, even though the aircraft were well ventillated and the level of measurable pollution low. This really confirms something which I long suspected, that is, that tobacco smoke in many cases is found to be annoying even by those who smoke. For this reason I believe that most smokers are themselves sympathetic to the kind of legislation this bill proposes.

I know that a number of hon. members, including the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), wish to speak this afternoon on this subject, so I will conclude my remarks not wishing to be accused of talking out my own bill. However, I would like to add that if members should decide to send my bill to committee, this would provide the opportunity for both members and ordinary citizens who have expressed a keen interest on this subject to make their contribution.

Finally I want to mention my intention of putting forward a couple of amendments to the bill as it now reads. These would cover responsibility for enforcement and penalties, and also a provision to ensure a reasonable minimum size for the non-smoking area. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would again like to stress my belief that this type of legislation is not only wanted, indeed demanded, by many non-smokers today, but is also completely acceptable by most of those who do smoke. Finally, Mr. Speaker, I happen to be a non-smoker, and will therefore be affected as much as any by this legislation.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity today to take part in the debate on this very important bill that has been presented by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson). I have known the hon. member for many years prior to the time that both of us came to this House. It is interesting to note that the concept of the bill provides some balance in terms of recognizing rights, using that word in the broad sense.

The bill, and I think the hon. member put it very forcibly, recognizes that non-smokers are not second class citizens. They have a right to comfort in terms of travel and in the use of accommodation. The bill implicity recognizes the fact that there are some in the community who use tobacco and who, by legislative enactment in terms of the areas within which this bill is designed to operate, might have that right, again using that word in a broad sense, taken from them.

It is very interesting that this bill should have the balance it does. I commend the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore for displaying this sense of balance and justice.

The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore is a very distinguished member of the bar of the province of Ontario. For approximately two years I had the very distinct privilege of living in the same house as the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore. I found him at all times concerned about the rights of his neighbours. His habits were sometimes strange. He was somewhat nocturnal. He used to come in at varying hours of the day and night and would awaken all of us when he came in. However, he recognized that those of us who did not have the same habits should indulge ourselves in awakening him the next morning. He never chastised us. On all occasions he was a very balanced, hard-working individual. He has carried that into the House of Commons. I particularly commend him today with regard to the balance in terms of rights which this bill represents.

There are members of the House of Commons who adversly feel the effects of tobacco. We who smoke, and I have to identify myself as one who smokes, have to recognize this among our colleagues. The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) is known far and wide for his delicate nasal passages. I am always prepared not only to recognize his right to speak but his right to breath in comfort, and to participate in the work of the committees of this House in comfort. That is a right we should recognize.

We cannot legislate good manners. We cannot legislate consideration for others. However, the way in which this bill has been presented goes some way in the public sense of indicating the concern of this, the highest court in the country, in recognizing certain basic rights.

It is interesting to note that Air Canada and CP Air have in relatively recent times adopted the practice of recognizing the right to comfort of non-smokers. This bill, balanced as it is, will further that cause.

I have received a large number of letters from my constituency expressing interest in this kind of legislation. I do not want to gainsay the efforts of the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore, but enforcement will be a problem. I am glad that amendments will be considered.

Many of my constituents have expressed great concern about this problem of recognizing one's right to comfort in a public place. I have brought this interest to the attention of the minister. I have a large number of letters. I do not intend to read all of them. However, I wish to refer to a letter from the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) replying to some earlier correspondence with regard to support of this kind of legislation.

Referring to my constituent, the executive assistant to the minister commended my constituent for her interest in the creation of non-smoking areas in air terminal buildings, and indicated that this has been recognized by the Minister of Transport. My constituent was further advised that the Director of Administration and Research had indicated that the matter was being studied by the department. However, there was a certain amount of hesitancy expressed in the letter as follows:

It should be emphasized that there is no quick or easy solution to this problem.

I suggest that all hon. members, whether they smoke or not, and whether they accept or do not accept the hon. member's statement about the injurious quality of tobacco both to the user and those in close proximity it really makes no difference. I suggest that all hon. members should support this legislation. This is a step in the right direction because it considers certain basic rights, the right to comfort, and the right to enjoy a public place without inconvenience or danger to health, if there is a danger in terms of a person being in close proximity to a smoker.

Having a firm knowledge of the backgroud of the hon. member who proposed this piece of legislation, his concern for the rights of others in terms of his work at the bar, his work as a trained and highly qualified social worker, his work as a municipal politician before coming to this place, and now knowing him as I know him here, I commend him for the foresight he has had and the great public spirit of concern he has exhibited in bringing forth this piece of legislation. I am happy to support it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as another of a rapidly growing majority of non-smokers I am reluctant to make remarks that might sound like a lecture to smokers. However, I am happy to endorse the views that have been expressed by both the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

This bill, as the previous speaker said, contains in it a commendable element of balance and fair play. I am pleased to understand that the government is willing that the bill go to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I hope it will be the bill itself that is sent and not just the subject matter of it.

I appreciate the reference that the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore made to our former colleague, Mr. Barry Mather, who represented the constituency of Surrey-White Rock in this House. I know he will be pleased to learn that he has been extended this compliment by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore in presenting his bill. He will be even more pleased if it receives the approval of this House this afternoon.

It is interesting that despite all the money spent in advertising smoking as though it were helpful and pleasant—and we do live in a society in which advertising appears to have many unfortunate effects—there should be a growing consciousness with respect to the other side of the coin. I hope a piece of legislation such as this will not only provide both smokers and non-smokers with cleaner air to breathe when they are travelling, but that it will increase the realization that one does not have to smoke in order to be a part of twentieth century society. To avoid any risk of talking this out and preventing the bill getting to the committee, I shall keep my remarks very short.

However, may I say that it puzzles me when getting on an Air Canada plane to discover there are non-smoking areas in the economy class but not up front where the wealthy sit.

Mr. McGrath: Now we know you travel first class.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Usually I know what the first class section is like because I have to move through it, but there have been occasions when Air Canada has oversold its economy class seats and I have been put up front, as have other hon. members. But if you travel in the economy section you drink only what you can pay for and, in certain seats, you cannot smoke. But if you are wealthy enough to ride first class you can have all the free drink you want and there is no restriction on smoking.

Mr. McGrath: How would you know?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am being asked how I would know. Well, I have eyes. I can see. I can also smell the air when it goes bad. In any event, this is one anomaly I hope will be straightened out.

I can see some difficulty respecting this legislation because of the overlapping of federal and provincial jurisdictions, but that sort of thing can be resolved. Once again, I am glad this measure has been brought up on a Friday afternoon when the House is in a mood to pass things, and I congratulate the hon. member on getting his bill through this afternoon.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in joining hon. members who have already spoken in congratulating the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) on introducing this bill I should like to give a clear indication that the government will support it. I hope the House will find it agreeable to let the measure go to committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: This is one of several bills the government has indicated its intention to support in the course of the present session. Some are from opposition members. Others are from supporters of the government. This is an indication that the government will, increasingly often I hope, encourage private members to put forward bills in the expectation that those bills will find their way into legislation eventually.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Barry Mather left about ten other good ones behind.

Mr. Lalonde: I should like to put a few facts on record for the benefit of the House and of the public generally, though I want to be sure I do not talk out the hon. member's bill. For more than a decade the Department of National Health and Welfare, in co-operation with other groups, has conducted a nation-wide program aimed at warning the smoker and those considering picking up the habit about the effects of smoking. In fact, I wrote to hon. members a couple of days ago telling them that we have a few of these buttons available for them to wear, or for others to wear. You will note that I am wearing one today. However, until recently little attention was paid to the effect of smoke on others in a room or area. Now these people have begun to draw public attention to their predicament and it is evident they should be protected in some manner.

At first the public tendency was to shrug off the non-smoker as a nuisance minority. Some 70 per cent of the people in Canada are non-smokers. That estimate, of course, includes children, who can also be harmed by inhaling tobacco smoke produced by others. Based on the 1967 U.S. National Health Survey there are probably at least three million Canadians suffering from a pre-existing susceptibility to cigarette smoke.

Non-smokers have formed a number of local groups in Canadian centres to promote the control of tobacco smoke. I understand there are some representatives of such groups in the gallery today. They suggest designating smoking and non-smoking spaces, smoke breaks during long meetings, and placing smokers nearest ventilation exhausts and non-smokers nearest ventillating air outlets, among other such techniques. The Department of National Health and Welfare together with various interested organizations and voluntary groups is also calling public attention to the plight of the non-smoker. Last spring the deputy ministers of my department sent a memo to each employee urging voluntary tobacco smoke control techniques in confined or crowded spaces. We hope there will soon be general acceptance of such practices.

Scientific testing has provided evidence of problems connected with the inhalation of smoke by non-smokers, so the people concerned have a legitimate complaint. The evidence indicates that individuals with asthma, allergies, advanced emphysema or advanced coronary arterial disease can be seriously troubled by inhaling cigarette smoke, especially in closed environments over a period of time.

As well, a smoke-filled room can often cause short term eye irritations to contact lens wearers. Moreover, preliminary studies indicate that respiratory ailments are more common among children whose parents smoke than among those whose parents do not. Another study has reported that infants in their first year of life are more prone to bronchitis and pneumonia when parents smoke.

Let me pose this question. If any hon. member was about to enter into a confined space—room, plane, bus, car or boat—where he would have to remain for some length of time—and was told in advance that the space contained nicotine, tar, carbon monoxide and other toxic gases, would he feel up to staying there? Would he enjoy a meal in such an environment? Yet time after time people are compelled to do something very similar, whether they smoke or not.

I should also like to call attention to studies of the chemical composition of tobacco smoke which have shown the presence of numerous toxic compounds, among them many irritants and cancer-producing substances. These compounds are sent into the air wherever tobacco is smoked. Their most objectionable emissions occur when the lighted tobacco is left to smoulder between puffs. The irritating, harmful substances in this sidestream smoke hover in the air and the non-smoker cannot help but inhale them. The non-smoker does not produce any of the pollutants, yet he must live with them, or try to.

There is one fact which bears further attention. The closer a non-smoker sits to a smoker, the greater the amounts of such pollutants as carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen he is exposed to. To a person who is allergic to the elements of tobacco smoke and to persons suffering from such ailments as asthma or emphysema, this concentration of smoke substances may be not only uncomfortable but agonizing. Even to healthy individuals, tobacco smoke hovering around their faces can be more than annoying. It can produce eye and nose discomfort, coughing, nausea or headache, or interfere with breathing. For the non-smoker sitting next to a smoker in an aircraft, train or bus, there may be no escape.

● (1630)

With transportation facilities more and more catering to family travel, we must also consider the small children. They should be protected from the chemicals in tobacco smoke, particularly when they are subjected to them in hours of travel.

How can all this be dealt with? Substantial ventilation can reduce the levels of irritants and noxious elements in confined areas. But ventilation costs money because of the added heating or cooling required, and it does not remove the damaging chemicals rapidly enough to relieve all sensitive non-smokers.

Some smokers are considerate and will curb their habit when they know they are in the company of non-smokers, and in particular in the company of those who indicate that tobacco smoke disturbs them, or brings them harm. There are smokers who will abstain when they are in a room or on a public vehicle because they themselves cannot tolerate the discomfort of sitting in a pall of tobacco smoke. But not enough can be accomplished by a simple appeal to the smoker. Unfortunately many of them are unresponsive to the need of the non-smoker to breathe uncontaminated air. Therefore there is a definite need for regulation of smoking in public places.

Some air carriers already designate areas for non-smokers. Early in the summer of 1974 Air Canada increased the number of "no smoking" seats on its aircraft. Depending on the number of seats and type of aircraft, the seats devoted to non-smokers were increased from 43 to 50 per cent. Air Canada said this increase came as a result of passenger demands.

At the present time "no smoking" areas are set up and policed by the carriers themselves. Recently the Civil Aeronautics Board of the United States expressed the belief that such self-imposed rules of the carriers were not an adequate remedy and that the voluntary efforts to segregate non-smokers and smokers were not effective. They reported receiving many letters in which passengers objected to being told that the non-smoking section of a plane was full, or being seated in a non-smoking section only to find no effort was made to prevent smoking by any of its occupants. On top of that, a joint survey by federal bodies in the United States reported more than 60 per cent of non-smokers who used air travel said they were bothered by tobacco smoke and urged either a ban on smoking or segregation of non-smokers and smokers on commercial flights.

Considerable correspondence received by non-government and government agencies in Canada and the United States has urged the complete banning of smoking on carriers. This correspondence did not come from cranks. The writers are genuinely concerned with their own comfort and health, as well as with the comfort and health of all who may be adversely affected by smoke. None the less, the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board observed that, just as the attitudes of many smokers appeared to be insensitive to the rights of others to be relieved of the annoyance and discomfort caused by smoking, so does the attitude of many non-smokers appear to be insensitive to the rights of the smokers.

After all, smoking is a lawful activity and to deprive smokers of this right could cause them severe discomfort. The U.S. board did not believe that the discomfort caused by smoking aboard aircraft could be reasonably dealt with by an absolute ban. The board believed that the segregation of smokers and non-smokers could establish an equitable balance. Consequently, on May 7, 1973, the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board adopted a regulation requiring certificated air carriers to provide designated no smoking areas aboard their aircraft.

The U.S. Interstate Commerce Commission subsequently enacted a similar regulation respecting smoking on interstate passenger carrier vehicles. That arrangement appears to be the purpose of the hon. member's bill, Bill C-242.

I might add that some problems that could arise from such legislation should be considered in committee. For example, the bill calls for separate accommodation where smoking will be prohibited. It must be clearly indicated that this should not be interpreted as requiring any operator to permit smoking of cigarettes, cigars or pipes aboard the vehicle. Another problem could occur when the plane, train, bus or ship is faced with peak travel periods. At times like this it is quite possible that the number of seats available to either the smokers or non-smokers in the vehicle will not be enough to meet the demands. When such shortages occur there must be nothing to prevent the attendant—steward, stewardess, conductor or driver—setting up a temporary exchange of seats to achieve the correct balance.

A passenger must be given every opportunity to know of the existence of areas where smoking will not be permitted. For example, a passenger planning to travel by commercial aircraft must be advised when he makes his reservation that a non-smoking area is available in the aircraft. When he reaches the airport and checks in, his preference should be made known to the attendant. Then, when the attendant makes the customary announcements before take-off, specific reference should be made to regulations that exist regarding smoking and to the specified areas for non-smokers, what the regulations mean, and how they operate.

The procedure outlined here could be expanded by a variety of other means and be made known to the travelling public. In the 1969 report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on tobacco and cigarette smoking, it is observed:

> Your committee recommends that, out of consideration for the majority of Canadians who do not smoke, a gradually increasing number of no smoking areas or sections be provided in places or facilities used by the general public.

The committee noted there was increasing public recognition of the rights of non-smokers.

Attention should also be paid in legislation of this kind to the situation in smaller commercial vehicles, and I am glad that the hon. member has said he will entertain amendments on this particular subject.

The advantage for smokers of separate accommodations are twofold. The first is freedom from the increasing number of objections from non-smokers. In other words, they would be assured of hassle-free smoking areas. Secondly, a smoker who is trying to quit the habit would be able to obtain social support for his changed lifestyle by using no smoking areas wherever they are available.

My department believes that there is a need for legislation in this area. While it cannot speak for other ministries which may be concerned with or even involved in this matter, there has been no objection to date to such legislation raised from those contacted. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we have confidence that extensive benefits will result from legislation such as is outlined in Bill C-242.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to congratulate the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) on his courage in bringing forward this bill. I do not know whether he polled his constituents to find out the proportion of non-smokers to smokers; one would hope that he had not and that it was purely on the principle involved and his interest in the subject that he has introduced this bill.

I join him in his recollection of the former hon. member for Surrey-White Rock and his long campaign. I note that when that constituency changed its politics it held firm to the non-smoking principle in sending the present member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) to this House.

There are many aspects to a bill such as this. It is easier to present the matter in the form of a bill, and one feels that it might have tremendous public acceptance, but one cannot always tell. I recall the moves made by the former premier of the province of British Columbia to ban the advertising of cigarettes and alcohol in publications in that province, and the great outcry that arose as a result of a move that I suspect he felt was going to meet with tremendous public acclaim. Once in effect, the reaction was other than what he expected.

I am a little concerned about this question of separate accommodations. It would seem simpler and more economic to ban smoking altogether, particular on air flights that are of fairly brief duration these days. The existing situation on Air Canada, for example, leaves something to be desired because there is no partition separating the eighth row from the ninth row, so the cut-off point between smoking accommodation and non-smoking is rather arbitrary.

Having listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I think we might end up by dividing accommodation in aircraft of necessity into four separate compartments—first class smoking and non-smoking, and economy class smoking and non-smoking. This might add considerably to the expense of altering the aircraft. One would have to be reassured in this regard and perhaps an amendment could indicate just what would be acceptable to the mover of this bill as separate accommodation.

It is essential that we know what penalties are envisioned here because certainly enforcement is the key. I know it cannot be left up to the non-smoker to defend himself because very often a situation arises where the smoker is a very powerful and burly person while the non-smoker is not, and therefore there is a hesitancy to object vigorously to the presence of the smoker. I find that far too often the staff of the vehicle or the plane will evade the responsibility and fail to be firm with some rather flagrant breaker of the rules.

I have heard a person in the non-smoking section ask the attendant if he could smoke, and the attendant has said to him that he may do so if no one objects. In that case the person proceeds to light up and the non-smokers are faced with the onus of preventing something that has already been allowed by the staff of the mode of transportation. So it is essential that there be enforcement, and that penalties are provided and are seen to be imposed and carried out.

I do not wish to be accused of talking out this bill. I think the categories covered here generally are satisfactory. There might be some difficulty in the case of a shared taxi to Hull because this would involve a very small vehicle. Again some passenger aircraft are very small.

There is one serious omission. I think the mode of transportation that can impose perhaps the severest penalty on the non-smoker is the elevator. In this institution, the House of Commons, I find that a vigorously puffed cigar in one of our elevators is about as extensive a hazard to one's health as one can be subjected to. I suggest the hon. member might give some thought to that very small but terribly confined form of transportation which is such as essential part of our life these days.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, there is no danger of my talking out the bill because I wish to go on record in support of it. However, I have one qualification. The bill does not go far enough. It is about time the House of Commons started to give a little leadership in respect of what I consider to be a very serious health hazard in this country.

The statistics given this afternoon point out the dangers in respect of smoking and the necessity for education of our young people in respect of the repercussions of smoking. In looking at the bill, and having thought about it for the past few days, I would say that the phrase "separate seating accommodation" gives me some cause for concern as to whether or not any realistic form of separation can be developed, especially on airplanes.

As the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) pointed out a moment ago, the fact that smoking is permitted in row number nine but not in row number eight does very little for the person sitting in row number eight, or whatever the arbitrary line is, because of the very nature of smoking. If we do not put up a physical separation I have some doubt, speaking as one of many members of the House of Commons who have experienced the long suffering of air travel, about there really being sufficient help given to non-smokers.

As I think about the whole question, as I often do in my worst moments while being trapped in a seat beside, or even in, a smoking section, I have to consider which is the greater right—and I hope the committee will give a little thought to this—the freedom from smoke or the freedom to smoke. It seems to me that in modes of transportation the rights are irreconcilable because of the very nature of the beast.

I would say that if I were to give an opinion on this in the committee I think the freedom from smoke is a greater right. Therefore when I said a moment ago that the bill does not go far enough what I have in mind is that I should like to see some experiment in which no smoking at all would be permitted. I have seen far too many examples of children becoming sick, and non-smokers and people with allergies being inconvenienced because they could not get into the non-smoking section of a plane since it is too small. Even having in mind what the minister just said about the non-smoking arrangements being enlarged, nonetheless they are too small.

I can assure you from bitter experience, Mr. Speaker, that very often the non-smoking section is filled up first. Even if one boarded the plane at a reasonable time one often ends up sitting in the smoking section. So I have some reservations about separate accommodation unless there is a physical separation involved. I doubt that this will happen, that is, that there will be consideration given to flights with no smoking permitted. This brings back the question of the greater right. There are some great questions at stake here. I hope the committee will give these serious consideration.

Finally, one of the things that will happen is that the public will become concerned about the effects of smoking as the committee begins its hearings. I believe some consideration should be given to the accommodation of patrons of a restaurant, people in theatre lobbies and, as the hon. member who just spoke mentioned, elevators. There is also the matter of smoking in hospitals. There are numerous cases in which members of the public are more or less forced to accommodate themselves to a given situation.

There is also the educational aspect of what we are discussing here. I think we must help more Canadians realize not only the dangers of smoking but also how the rights of non-smokers have been trampled on for far too long. It is about time we took some positive action in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I see we are running out of time and I would certainly not want to be accused of talking out this bill. However, I would simply want to add to what has been said, being myself an addicted smoker—up to two or three packs of cigarettes a day—that I can now say that it is quite true that smoke—I will be older Sunday so I feel I must make a small confession today—is really damageable, that it is really unpleasant to go in public vehicles, by plane or train, and have to smell the smoke that people just blow in your face.

I share the opinion of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) about the efforts that his department is undertaking to carry out a greater education campaign to prove to people that it is really damageable to smoke. I share the reserves of my hon. friend and colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) when he says that the bill perhaps does not go far enough but I think it is a step in the right direction and I join all my hon. colleagues on this Friday afternoon to congratulate our colleague from Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) for having had the wisdom to introduce this legislation. I think we will agree to vote this bill this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it agreed to call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED DELAY IN ESTABLISHING FRANCOPHONE UNITS AT CFB GREENWOOD PENDING INVESTIGATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 43 I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity in view of the Department of National Defence's proposal to establish a French language operational Argus squadron at CFB Greenwood. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall):

That the government forthwith arrange for an investigation of the Department of National Defence's policies with respect to the posting of Francophone units in wholly Anglophone communities, and vice versa, and immediately suspend all measures and steps which might lead to the establishment of a French language operational squadron at CFB Greenwood until such investigation has been completed, and until the views of the communities and personnel affected have been ascertained and taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE BOARD WILL NOT INTERFERE IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a case of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that ministers of the government have repeatedly stated that the anti-inflation legislation before us is not intended to take the place of collective bargaining, and in view of the fact that the Anti-Inflation Board itself in a statement November 7 stated that it did not intend to replace normal bargaining processes, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House condemn the Anti-Inflation Board for its attempt to set itself up as a labour court in its dealings with striking Toronto secondary school teachers, and that the Prime Minister assure this House that the board will no longer be permitted to interfere in the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may not be aware that the order of business for today is the third reading of the very bill to which he refers in his motion. It seems it would be an abuse of our procedures to ask the House to set aside a third reading debate for another debate on the subject.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTION WORKERS BE ALLOWED TO BUY SHARES AND PARTICIPATE IN PROFITS OF COMPANIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an important and urgent matter.

In view of the increasing number of problems arising in the field of labour-management, and as it has become essential, in the face of many strikes in all sectors, to try to orient our legislation with a view to attenuating the evil effects of numerous work stoppages which are always disadvantageous for the workers and, in addition, create a climate of provocation which dislocates the whole Canadian economy, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House urge the government to take serious measures to interest the workers in Canadian undertakings through benefit sharing and share buying so as to ensure peace and a greater measure of co-operation between capital and labour.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As consent is not unanimous, the motion cannot be put.

IMMIGRATION

PROPOSED GRANTING OF LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS TO NEHEMIAH RICHARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity concerning 19 year old Nehemiah Richards, son of Lloyd Richards, of the city of Toronto, a student at Bloor Street Collegiate, who is scheduled to be forcibly and inhumanely separated from his father, mother, seven brothers and sisters this weekend and deported to Jamaica by a senseless, cruel, unnecessary application of regulations by Canadian immigration. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

It is the opinion of the House that the disgraceful deportation of Nehemiah Richards be forthwith halted, that none of the circumstances involved warrant such ruthless treatment, that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration immediately issue a ministerial order granting him landed immigrant status, that the House deplores the heartless written refusal of the Prime Minister to assist in the case and, finally, the House requests the Prime Minister and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to show at least the same sense of compassion and understanding which they so willingly extended to undesirables like General Quang.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE APPLIED IN MORE HUMANE WAY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important and urgent issue.

Since some officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission disgracefully take advantage of the honest people, making them sign statements which force them afterwards to refund the amounts received over a long period of time, which is inhumane, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the minister responsible for unemployment insurance take steps to give more humane directions for implementing unemployment insurance regulations.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

REQUEST THAT CONTROL OF IMPORT LICENCES BE GIVEN TO MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important and urgent issue.

Since the federal Minister of Agriculture is responsible for foodstuff supplies to meet the needs of the population; since this responsibility concerns the quantity and quality of food produced in Canada as well as imports; since also to enable him to discharge his duties more effectively an efficient control of imports and exports must be made in accordance with the above-mentioned responsibilities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House consider the advantages of giving the Minister of Agriculture the responsibility of issuing import permits and licences for farm products.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST FORCE BY MR. MARCHAND—EVIDENCE PROVIDED TO SUPPORT ALLEGATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of the very serious charges made against the RCMP on Friday by the Minister without Portfolio, has the Solicitor General asked the Minister without Portfolio to turn over to him all the evidence one must assume he has to support such allegations? I further wish to ask the Solicitor General what action he has taken to investigate such evidence.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I have been absent from Ottawa since Thursday afternoon; I only heard about the allegations after I returned from Winnipeg on Friday night. Prior to my leaving I met with the Minister without Portfolio and asked him to give us any evidence he had with respect to his allegation. So far, we have received none from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. MacKay: Is it the position of the Solicitor General that the RCMP, to use the words of the Minister without Portfolio, are trying to use public opinion to get a strength they would not otherwise have and also—another quotation—"some of them think they are above everything; I don't want another CIA in this country" is not a serious matter? Does he feel his colleagues over there have free vein to cast apparently unsubstantiated slurs upon the force for which he is the responsible minister?

Mr. Allmand: I have never found any evidence to support the allegations made by the Minister without Portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I gather the minister is saying he does not agree with the inference that the RCMP are appealing to public opinion through the media to clothe them with power they need to carry out investigations.

Mr. Allmand: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INVESTIGATION PROCEEDING AND LIST OF MEMBERS TO BE INTERVIEWED

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Bearing in mind the grave concern and unrest which exists among the public, can the Solicitor General assure the House that the RCMP investigation into Sky Shops and related matters is proceeding fully and freely despite the obvious attempts of certain members opposite to intimidate the force?

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): As the minister responsible for the RCMP I can say we are proceeding in these investigations with all due haste.

Mr. Baldwin: Last week the Solicitor General told the House that the RCMP intended to interview certain other members of this chamber on all sides of the House, as the Solicitor General put it. Can the minister tell the House whether he has been given a list of the members the RCMP intends to approach, and can he tell us the basis upon which members, especially members on this side of the House, have been chosen for interviews into what is, after all, an investigation into what appears to be Liberal party fund raising practices?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I want completely to reject that last allegation. There is no investigation of Liberal party fund-raising practices; there is an investigation into matters relating to the Sky Shops and related incidents. With respect to the other matters raised by the hon. member, when I said that the RCMP would be interviewing people on all sides of the House, I meant to say in political parties other than the government party. They did not give me any list. Again, I want to make very clear that when the RCMP visit ministers or members of parliament on this matter, it is not as suspects but as people willing to help with the investigation.

SUGGESTION INCREASES IN OIL PRICES BE CONDITIONAL ON COMPANIES DOING FURTHER EXPLORATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. At the first ministers' conference of last April both the Prime Minister and the minister, then in his capacity as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, argued for higher oil and gas prices on the grounds that they would be necessary to stimulate exploration for higher priced reserves. Given the fact that figures from the Canadian Petroleum Association now show that although revenues for the last three years running have been increasing at unprecedented rates in the oil and gas industry, money spent on exploration has actually been falling at a rather drastic rate as a percentage of revenue. May I now ask the minister whether the government is prepared to make it an absolute condition that any increase in the price of oil at the wellhead level will be conditional upon the companies doing further exploration?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have approached the matter in a rather different way, in the sense that we have so arranged the income tax system by the budget of June 23 that a company which does engage in exploration could receive up to 71 cents of the $1.50 increase for the purpose of exploration in Canada. If it fails to do so, its net will be down to 28 cents. In other words, we have provided a taxation disincentive for those firms which fail to carry out exploration in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Instead of using the usual approach of the government, which has been to provide some kind of incentive and which goes back over the past decade, why would the government not make it mandatory that all such increases beyond cost increases be put into future exploration?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we think the incentive will be effective and it has been effective since the budget bill was enacted in late July for the purpose I set out.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS ESTIMATE OF JOBS LOST AS RESULT OF OIL PRICE INCREASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question. Given the estimate over the week end by an Ontario government economist that the Ontario economy alone would have lost some 37,000 jobs because of the most recent price increase permitted by the federal government to the oil companies, can the minister inform the House whether the federal government has done an estimate in terms of lost jobs in the economy as a whole as a result of that decision apart from that done by the province of Ontario, and if so is the minister prepared to table in the House such estimate?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to examine the precise Ontario analysis, checking its accuracy, to see if we have done exactly the same thing at the federal level. However, the analysis seems to me to escape the basic truth that we are faced with in Canada. With a dwindling resource base from conventional producing areas we will have to pay more for petroleum in Canada, and it is in the interest of all provinces, including Ontario, to develop a higher capacity to meet our own needs from our own supplies.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Postmaster General.

In view of the quite controversial information given on the radio about the postal conflict, can the minister tell the House whether the negotiations held during the weekend gave any results and whether the conflict is or will be over shortly?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, a collective agreement was signed Saturday. Naturally, it is the right of the union to ask its members to vote on it tonight or tomorrow. I hope it will be a secret vote, as provided in the collective agreement. We will wait to see if they support the agreement; if not the strike will go on.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Postmaster General a supplementary question.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

According to his statement, a document which confirms the conclusion of an agreement between the federal government and the postal workers' union has been signed. Does the Postmaster General happen to know if the leaders who have signed on behalf of the union are the same people who are now recommending that the Montreal postal employees vote against the agreement which has been reached last weekend by the Postmaster General and the union?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, this inconsistency coming from the president of the Montreal local is not unusual. On the contrary this is just what we have been expecting from Mr. Parrot for quite a while.

CRITERIA USED IN APPOINTING NEW CHAIRMAN—SUGGESTION APPOINTMENT SHOULD BE MADE FROM WITHIN RANKS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the disappointing results which the last appointment produced, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government this time to make a knowledge of airline operations and a proven ability to direct large corporate operations the criteria on which the appointment of the new Chairman of Air Canada will be based?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will continue as in the past, seeking out the best person available for any job which is open.

An hon. Member: You will have to look outside the Liberal party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: What about you, George?

Mr. Hees: You couldn't make a better choice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Ask him about the anti-inflation rules.

Mr. Hees: As morale within the airlines has suffered very materially during the past seven years, is it the intention of the government to give serious consideration to the appointment of a replacement for Mr. Pratte from among employees of the airlines, in an attempt to restore that very important ingredient to corporate success, namely, morale?

Mr. Trudeau: We will certainly consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker. We will look at any person within the airlines, and consider that very seriously. I think there may be a contradiction between the two parts of the question of the hon. member, in that he first said a better choice than himself could not be made, which leads me to say that he does believe in certain cases we could get a better choice outside the airline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Well, that is your opinion, and what is yours' against thousands of others?

Mr. Trudeau: I must say that I think the hon. member would probably be a very good choice, indeed. What I think is a bit suspicious is that the backbenchers applauded that suggestion, so it would appear that they want to get rid of him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: It would be a nice way to go through, wouldn't it?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED ADOPTION OF SELF-FINANCING FORMULA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering the tremendous increase in the costs of the Olympic facilities, and considering that Canadians want to be sure of the costs of those games, can the minister tell the House today whether he is willing to consider, along with all concerned parties, a new formula to help the self-financing of the Olympic Games, a formula which would comply with the assurances already given and which would not be an additional burden on public funds?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member would table such magic formula immediately. Obviously, in the House I am the person most willing to promote such ideas. But, I think the hon. member's suggestion flows from a great dream.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I thank the President of the Treasury Board for his broadmindedness, which is to his credit. If, for instance, this new formula, which is to be announced within the next few hours, were sent to the Minister officially by the authorities in Montreal and Quebec City, are we to understand that he would at least agree to consider it?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have not received any new formula. However, if such a formula were received, I hope that the opposition would consider it and would make unanimous recommendations. Then, this attitude may facilitate our work. Anyway, the formula for financing the Olympic Games was accepted by the three levels of government, several years ago, and we do not intend to change it. But if amendments are put forward which do not change the principles on which it is based, we are evidently prepared to consider them.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—PROPOSAL THAT RETROACTIVE PAY BE MADE AVAILABLE BEFORE CHRISTMAS IF SETTLEMENT RATIFIED

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. It relates to the reply he gave to the hon. member for Témiscamingue. In the event that the most recent offer made to the postal workers is ratified, would the minister consider making at least a portion of the retroactive pay of these workers available to them as soon as possible before Christmas.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I would be more than happy to recommend this to the minister responsible for Supply and Services. I think we could provide each and every postal worker affected by this unnecessary strike with at least $500 as soon as possible so that he or she could enjoy Christmas which, at the present moment, would be very difficult in light of the fact that they have now been without any income for 41 days. However, I must stress that this will depend on the speed of the ratification since every day they are denied the opportunity to return to work they are losing $1 million in income.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—RESULTS OF DISCUSSIONS WITH COMPANIES—SUGGESTION ANTI-INFLATION BOARD BE FLEXIBLE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the complete pulp and paper industry is in a state of jeopardy with 45 mills on down time and others on strike almost daily, would the minister advise the House what answer he received from the pulp and paper industry to the demand that they sit down with the unions and come to a successful conclusion to prevent the total collapse of this important part of our economy.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any notification directly from the paper companies. It is the provinces of course, and the labour ministers in the provinces involved, which have been talking to the representatives of the paper companies. I think it is their hope that the parties will get to the bargaining table to resolve this dispute as quickly as possible. I might say that there are some who believe the Irving settlement in New Brunswick the other day may prompt early settlement. That is the hope.

Mr. Marshall: In view of the fact that the Irving settlement has been used as a benchmark, I wonder if the minister could discuss with the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board some flexibility in negotiations so that this very important part of our Canadian economy will not be drastically affected?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it would be my proper function to tell the Anti-Inflation Board what they should do with any individual settlements. Certainly, it would help in this situation if the Anti-Inflation Board looked at the Irving settlement and indicated as quickly as possible whether or not it approves it.

FEED GRAIN—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the widespread concern among feed grain users in British Columbia about the future of the feed freight assistance program, can the minister advise the House if the government has yet decided to carry on with the program in its present form or to replace it with something else?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made on this.

HOUSING

LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CONTROL RENTS AND PREVENT EVICTIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and it is about the fact that CMHC, as he well knows, makes loans and grants to limited dividend housing projects or rental projects under the National Housing Act under agreements to control rents. It now appears that rent increases are being made on these projects of up to between 20 per cent and 30 per cent and evictions are taking place. What steps will the minister take to prevent the rise in the rents of federally subsidized housing and to prevent evictions, as this seems to be a matter falling within federal jurisdiction?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member might know, I met with some 40 representatives of the Tenants' Association from the limited dividend housing projects in Toronto on Saturday. I am taking immediate steps to check those evictions which are as the result of leaders organizing into tenant groups. I think it is unacceptable. If they wish to organize, there should be absolutely no coercion or pressure on them, and I have taken immediate steps to see that that does not take place. There are occasions, as the hon. member knows, as one learned in the law as I am not, when eviction is quite an appropriate procedure, but we certainly want to see this minimized.

In so far as rents are concerned, we are investigating this. I think the 20 per cent to 30 per cent figure which the hon. member indicated is higher than those which the tenants themselves have indicated of around 17 per cent to 20 per cent, but I am investigating even that at this time. The distinction in control here is whether the provincial legislation will cover this type of accommodation or whether we will continue to control it ourselves. We are trying to work this out in relation to the provincial legislation. I am certainly looking into these cases individually to make certain that there are no undue increases and that people are not evicted because they are being coerced or because they want to organize to make representations.

Mr. Brewin: In view of the fact that, for example, the Ontario legislation restricts increases to 8 per cent and, as I understand it, CMHC officials themselves have said that increases in some of these projects are between 20 per cent and 30 per cent, will the minister endeavour to persuade the Ontario government to include in its legislation these federally financed projects so that there can be some degree of uniformity?

Mr. Danson: Yes, this is a matter of some discussion between the provincial ministers and myself. We are not anxious to see public housing where rent is geared to income come under rent control schemes. That creates another level of bureaucracy which is not responsive and sensitive to individual needs which are usually way below market rents. But this is an area at which we are looking in so far as the specific types of projects are concerned, and we will be discussing these with the provinces.

LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF RENT INCREASES IN OTTAWA AREA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. In view of the fact that in the national capital area in this kind of housing there are reports of increases of not only between 20 per cent and 30 per cent but specifically increases of $27.00 per month which have been described as totally warranted by an officer of CMHC, has the minister personally investigated the cases in Ottawa—and I refer to Minto construction—and is he prepared to substantiate the assertion that has been made by the officer of that corporation?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had not looked at the Ottawa situation specifically. Now that it has been drawn to my attention, of course I will. What has happened in some of these projects is that in an effort to keep the costs and rents down we have found that some of the projects themselves have been kept down so far that they went into bankruptcy. We must adjust the rents to allow them at least to remain solvent and we must look at incomes to see if income support is necessary.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY RENT CONTROLS ENFORCED BY CMHC RATHER THAN PROVINCES IN CERTAIN CASES

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Is it the policy of the government that rent controls will only be enforced by provincial bodies and not by CMHC in instances of this nature?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I will be glad to make a more precise examination of this. As the hon. member pointed out, generally speaking rent control will fall under provincial bodies.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ENSURE BUILDING OF APARTMENTS—ACTIONS OF SOME GROUPS BLOCKING BUILDING OF APARTMENTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In light of the statistics published by CMHC this weekend with regard to vacancy rates in apartments, will the minister come to Edmonton to explain to the people there why apartments are not being built, and will he visit other centres to give the same explanation? What actual steps will the government take to see that these apartments are built? The government itself is not doing it, and that is one of the explanations he has not given with regard to rental increases.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): We are certainly well aware of the problem which the hon. member pointed out. The reason that apartments are not being built, or starts are down so substantially, is that they cannot be built at today's costs and rent levels without showing a significant loss. The legislative policies of the government are to lend the money so that it is economically feasible for those buildings to be built and rented at market rents, so that owners do not suffer a loss. Indeed, we are increasing our activities in this field. We were tremendously successful this year but still not as successful as we would like to be, and that is why we are requiring an additional three quarters of a billion dollars from the private sector directed to this type of housing. Indeed even in the private sector, before it became mandatory, 60 per cent of private funds was going into rental accommodation which was subsidized by the government of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister comment on the low vacancy rate and the absence of apartment construction as the result of the some of the actions of the so-called reform groups and city councils who have deliberately blocked the building of apartment buildings?

Mr. Danson: This is a matter of grave concern and that is why, in addition to all other things the federal government is doing to enrich the housing program, we are providing municipalities with $1,000 per unit for every one approved under our new National Housing Act program, which should have a significant effect. There are other factors involved in the municipal councils blocking of building which I discussed with the limited dividend tenants association, which the hon. member for Greenwood mentioned, which is a concern about tenant groups which may make unreasonable demands. I do not think those demands are unreasonable and my intention is to have a forum where they can discuss these demands rationally. I found the tenants groups rational and I am sure the landlords will be rational.

PENITENTIARIES

INJURIES TO CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMPENSATION—POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Solicitor General to answer a question regarding several correctional officers and what the stand of the government is in respect of injuries sustained by these correctional officers in the penitentiaries, regard being had to the numbers of these events. I asked a question about this the other day and the minister said he would look into it.

● (1440)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, persons who are employed with the Canadian penitentiary service are eligible for benefits under the Government Employees Compensation Act. However, with respect to their families, if the employees are on duty or if they die as a result of injuries, at the present time their families are not covered by the said act, but up until now we have been getting permission from the Treasury Board to make compensation payments to those families. After a certain amount of study, the penitentiary service has now seen fit to try to have this put into statute form so it will not have to continually go to Treasury Board for approval. A proposal will be put forward in this respect in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the Solicitor General for his very sympathetic consideration of the claims, particularly of the families of those who die in service. I ask him whether it is the intention to bring in that legislation in the present session, and will it apply in respect of those families whose breadwinners suffered fatalities during the past year or so?

Mr. Allmand: I do not know if the legislation will be ready for this session, but if it is not, we will continue to grant compensation to the families through special Treasury Board rulings, as we have done in the past.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the long range plan of the department calls for continued improvements for technical facilities as well as a

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

It seems the city of Montreal will face a deficit of about $600 million in the organization of the Olympics. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the municipal authorities have asked for a long term interest-free loan from the federal government to tide them over?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of such an application and I am told that neither did the President of Treasury Board get any such request.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. If Mr. Drapeau were to state tonight on the Parle parle, jase jase television program that he is about to ask the federal government for a $600 long term interest-free loan—without any indication as to the number of years—would the Prime Minister consider such an application from Mayor Drapeau?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did not know that Mayor Drapeau was to appear on the Parle parle, jase jase program. Having had a fine experience myself when I appeared not such a long time ago, I can say that if he does he will certainly be quite welcome. However, after some consideration, the hon. member will certainly realize that his question is purely hypothetical and that I am therefore under no obligation to reply to it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GREENWOOD—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF VIEWS OF COMMUNITY BEFORE ESTABLISHING FRANCOPHONE UNIT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In considering the proposal to convert an Argus squadron at CFB Greenwood into a French language unit, which is obviously not a military decision but one which is more political, is the government prepared to consider the views of the community and the personnel affected before a final decision is made?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given to increasing the number of French language units in the Canadian armed forces, but there has been no final decision with regard to the unit at Greenwood.

BILINGUALISM

EFFECT ON UNITY OF ESTABLISHING FRANCOPHONE OR ANGLOPHONE UNITS IN UNILINGUAL TERRITORY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My supplementary question is to the Prime Minister. In the consideration of establishing Francophone units and/or Anglophone units in Francophone unilingual parts of Canada, does the Prime Minister think that the artificial creation of linguistic ghettoes in unilingual areas of Canada is a positive way to promote bilingualism and to help bring unity to this land?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I always feel that any form of creating ghettoes is a retrograde step. I must indicate to the hon. member that it seems to be in his mind that ghettoes are being created; the government is not creating them.

Mr. Nowlan: I know what is in my mind.

Some hon. Members: Tell us.

Mr. Nowlan: I have difficulty trying to define what is in the mind of the Prime Minister. Assuming the facts as they are, that in areas of Canada which are 100 per cent unilingual, be they Anglophone or Francophone, and that the artificial creation and ordering of another unilingual group is not creating a ghetto—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Don Valley.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF POSITION OF TORONTO TEACHERS IN RELATION TO GUIDELINES

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Leader.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: My question is for the Minister of Finance. Since there seems to be some misapprehension or some misunderstanding on the part of the negotiators for the teachers in Toronto—they were informed by the minister or someone in the minister's office that they would not come under the guidelines, and since that time the statement has been made by the minister that they do come under the guidelines—I wonder if the minister could set the record straight. Was there any communication between the minister and the teachers in Toronto and their negotiators to the effect that they would come under the guidelines? Perhaps that whole issue could be clarified.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity. We made clear to the teachers and to all others by telegram and by statements in the House, in the committee and elsewhere throughout the country, that any particular settlement would have to be judged by the Anti-Inflation Board in its current form under the Inquiries Act or in the form in which it is proposed under Bill C-73 when it becomes law, so we are not in a position to give an assurance to any group that they would not be covered by the guidelines. We have indicated in the white paper that there are exceptional circumstances. It would be incumbent upon any particular group to establish its own entitlement to exemption.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Just so that I am absolutely clear and the record is absolutely clear, was there at any time any communication with the negotiators for the teachers that the teachers would not be covered by the guidelines? Was that commitment made to the teachers at any time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there was a communication by telegram in effect confirming what has been said in this House and elsewhere, that of course they would have to meet the provisions of the guidelines like any other group, but bringing to their attention that the white paper did contain these exceptional provisions which they might attempt to meet.

FEED GRAIN—SUGGESTED DELAY OF REDUCTION OF FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PENDING INTRODUCTION OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Donald W. In view of the fact that freight rate increases are also in prospect, will the minister delay any reductions in the feed grain freight assistance program until a more equitable program can be worked out? I gather the matter is under consideration. The net effect of a reduction on the assistance program—

Mr. Andre: Can the minister confirm or deny reports in today's Citizen that the cabinet is considering disbanding the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, or one half of the ministries falling under the jurisdiction of the minister?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the cabinet is not considering disbanding the ministry.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering the performance of this ministry, a decision to disband it may be in order. As any comparison of Canada's performance in science and technology with that of any other western industrialized nation shows us to be last, will the minister tell the House when those few policy announcements proposed in both the last two throne speeches will be implemented by the government, and by which department?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I emphatically deny the slight on Canadian scientific and technological work. I do not think it helps the hon. member to make that kind of statement, which is manifestly untrue nor does it help Canada. To answer the second part of his question, I should be interested to know what specific policy aspect he has in mind.

REQUEST THAT BOARD REFRAIN FROM MAKING STATEMENTS ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING UNTIL SETTLEMENT NEGOTIATED

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the repeated statements made by the government, that its anti-inflation program is not intended to take the place of collective bargaining; as the Anti-Inflation Board itself, in a statement on November 7, stated that it did not intend to replace normal bargaining processes, and since Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin's latest statement regarding Toronto secondary school teachers' bargaining constitutes not only a prejudgment of collective bargaining but also an undue interference in collective bargaining, has the minister made it clear to Mr. Pepin and the Anti-Inflation Board that the board is not to make statements which can only prejudge collective bargaining, and will the minister instruct Mr. Pepin, and the board, to refrain from making statements on collective bargaining which may take place in future until a package is put before it?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the hon. member's question, and therefore I will not comment further.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

ALLEGED RETENTION OF FUNDS FOR OUTAOUAIS HIGHWAYS PENDING INSTALLATION OF SEWER SYSTEM

Mr. T. Lefebvre (Pontiac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to repeat my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for the National Capital Commission. Can he answer the question I directed to him on Friday through his parliamentary secretary?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I recall correctly, the hon. member asked a question relating to the National Capital Commission not proceeding with the roads program until the sewer program is resolved. I understand that there is a program involving the province of Quebec, the regional government of the Outaouais region and the National Capital Commission, under which work is to proceed. The cost was to be some $45 million, of which each government was to share one third. In the interim that amount has escalated to some $120 million. The National Capital Commission is prepared to carry its third; I understand that the government of Quebec is prepared to carry the balance of two thirds, leaving the original $20 million which was to be absorbed by the regional municipality. Until the sewage network is in place it is not possible, I understand, to proceed with the road network. Meetings are going on, in order that this may be resolved, but the time frames have been changed and I understand that the program, under present conditions, will not be completed until 1978.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—REASON UNION RECOMMENDING REJECTION OF SETTLEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF SECRET BALLOT

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Can the minister offer this House an explanation as to how a collective agreement could have been signed on Saturday with the same CUPW executive now urging its rejection; perhaps, what is more important, can the minister assure the House that voting this time will really be by secret ballot?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the memorandum of settlement I have in front of me indicates that the collective agreement was signed on Saturday, subject to ratification. It was signed by myself, as representing my colleague who played a great part in helping us negotiate the clause on automation, and representatives of CUPW. Fortunately, it was signed in the presence of the executive vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress, and the former deputy minister of labour, so that there is no doubt in my mind that a collective agreement was signed.

As to the change of heart in 48 hours by the negotiating team, which is now recommending rejection of their own judgment of Saturday, that can only cast some reflection on their judgment. Under Article 6 of their constitution, I think they are obliged to present for ratification this collective agreement through the process of a secret ballot. There are indications that at some locals this feature of the present collective agreement will not be honoured, unfairly casting once again some reflection on the integrity of the labour movement as a result of the actions of this particular union.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROVISION OF OFFICE SPACE AND SECRETARIAT SERVICES TO CONSULTANT ROY MACLAREN—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In light of the treasury board circular issued last year questioning the legality of providing tools and facilities to outside consultants, will the minister investigate the provisions of both office space and secretarial services to Roy MacLaren for consultant's work with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and report to the House his findings?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall investigate this matter and report to the hon. member.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS COVERING EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the answer given by the minister to a question put to him on November 21, when he indicated that he hoped to bring forward oil and gas regulations before December 21, and in view of the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, made before the resources committee on Wednesday, November 26, to the effect that he hoped the regulations would be ready early in the spring of next year, can the minister say if he is still considering December 21 as the deadline, or was the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources more realistic?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I shall meet later this week with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and still hope to make the deadline by December 21.

AIR CANADA

POSSIBLE CONTINUANCE OF MR. VAUGHAN AS PRESIDENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REORGANIZATION OF COMPANY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the present president of Air Canada, Mr. Ralph Vaughan, continue to retain his position for 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had a number of discussions with Mr. Vaughan and have every reason to believe he will continue with Air Canada. The question of responsibilities within Air Canada, and its over-all structure, is under review, and therefore there may be a change in his actual role.

Mr. Murta: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say if Air Canada is to be reorganized substantially, if, as part of the reorganization, the airline is to be compelled to compete equally for routes with other airlines, and if, as reported in a newspaper this morning, the government intends to offer Air Canada shares for sale to the public? Is the government thinking of introducing a major reorganization when it brings down the Estey report and proposed legislation?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that particular newspaper reporter should recheck his cabinet sources, because the cabinet has not made any decision on these important questions. Consideration is being given to the whole role of Air Canada and its structure, and I hope, in due course, to put the results of these deliberations before the House.

DATE OF PRESENTATION OF ESTEY REPORT AND LEGISLATION TO REORGANIZE COMPANY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the presentation to the House of the Estey report being withheld, or to be withheld, pending the completion of new Air Canada legislation? Further, can the minister assure the House that we shall see the Estey report before legislation pertaining to Air Canada is introduced in the House?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Estey report will be made available as soon as physically possible. I certainly expect the legislation to be introduced only after that.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LALONDE—PRESS MISREPORTING OF STATEMENT MADE DURING INTERVIEW

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege. I would have liked the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to be present in the House today, but unfortunately he is held back in his riding. I had the opportunity to speak to him last Friday and this morning. I trust he will be back tomorrow and surely will have the opportunity to make comments if he has any.

Last Friday, the Leader of the Opposition linked a statement I allegedly made the night before on television to racism. As a Canadian who has spent his adult life promoting understanding between the two major language groups in Canada as well as solidarity between all the ethnic groups which make up our country, I consider very serious this allegation made by the Leader of the Opposition. I attach importance to it, all the more because I consider the Leader of the Opposition as a man of honour who, in spite of many difficulties known to all, has proved many times his attachment to the same objectives.

I already had the opportunity to tell him personally how I felt about this last Friday. To avoid any misunderstanding about what I may have said last Thursday, I want to table, with leave of the House, a transcript of the interview between Mr. Eric Malling of CTV News and myself. The text speaks for itself and in my opinion justifies in no way the allegations of the Leader of the Opposition.

On the contrary, the interview rather appears to me like a defence of the most fundamental rights of every citizen and a call to avoid global judgments on the various ethnic groups which are Canada's wealth.

In fact, the only references to racism that may be found in the transcript are in the words of the reporter who interviewed me. I must add that the text does not justify either the introductory comments made by CTV that night.

I would like to raise another point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, concerning a report presented by CBC on the English channel during the 11 o'clock news last Friday.

Mr. Brian Stewart said on that occasion:

[English]

A furious Lalonde told reporters in the lobby that the Wasps are out to get the French. He said all Quebec was being smeared by the English media.

The attribution to me of such a statement is a total fabrication and a complete, unadulterated lie. I never said any such thing in any way, shape or form.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: I have had this matter checked with some reporters who were present in the lobby on Friday morning and none of them can remember such a statement. Moreover, nobody remembers having seen Mr. Stewart around at that time. In fact, Mr. Stewart himself has admitted he was not present. At best, Mr. Stewart has been reporting on hearsay, and at worst he invented what he said.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I can only express the deepest disgust and contempt for that type of journalism. I am asking the CBC to retract fully and immediately the statement falsely attributed to me, and of course, I reserve all my rights in every other way.

I trust, in addition, that the other journalists who based themselves on the comments made either on CTV News last Thursday evening, or on CBC News last Friday evening, will show the same zeal in denouncing those who misled them as they showed themselves in commenting the statements I was falsely accused of having made.

Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the House, I should like to table copy of the transcript of the interview between myself and Mr. Malling.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In so far as the question of privilege raised by the hon. minister is concerned, perhaps the easiest solution for the Chair is to point out that the minister has not followed his question of privilege with a motion seeking action on the part of the Chair. No action being sought, accordingly there is none the Chair proposes to take.

The minister has put forward for tabling, with the consent of the House, a transcript of the interview that was referred to extensively in his remarks. Ministers of the Crown, of course, exercise some rights in respect of tabling documents in the House, but under the Standing Orders this is not with respect to documents which fall outside their administration and responsibility. In other words, it would require the unanimous consent of the House for the minister to table this document. I presume this consent is forthcoming. In any event, I must ask whether there is unanimous consent for the minister to table the transcript. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in this matter. I was not in the House on Thursday and Friday when these events were alleged to have taken place. With regard to the first matter raised, having in mind the fact that the minister has tabled the transcript of the proceedings and has mentioned the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), I wish to reserve the right of the Leader of the Opposition to raise this matter when he is here, if he wishes.

With regard to the second matter, we have enough problems in this country. I was glad to hear the minister say in this House that he categorically denied using those expressions. I accept his statement because it was made in this House: we are obliged to accept it. However, I must say that I am glad to accept it because we do not want to have the proceedings of this House and the political life of this country disturbed and marred by allegations and accusations of this kind. As to the rest, I would ask that the matter be reserved for the Leader of the Opposition to raise any issue arising therefrom when he returns to the House, if he chooses.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege raised by the Minister of Nationsl Health and Welfare, I listened personally to the accusations of racism against the minister on television and on the radio. I think that all parties in this House must admit that if there is one hon. member who is not racist, it is the minister involved here. For instance, he never used his position to make racial discrimination against anyone, whereas I saw this in western Canada, among my good friends of the Progressive Conservative party who say in this House that if the situation is so bad in Canada, it is because of the "French Power" in Ottawa, because of the French Canadians.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker, I think it is not serving Canadian national unity, it is not promoting cooperation either to make charges left and right against anyone, whether a minister, a member of the opposition, or some of my colleagues. I think we must look upon Canada as a country which is ours and in that country rather than devour one another we should at least try to understand one another and serve the best interests of the people of this country. In that respect, the minister is quite right in blaming CBC because it is nearly always shooting under par and in a mess. It is about time I think that the government as well as opposition members saw in those people, people who are interested—I do not know whether it is out of envy or jealousy—but who are interested in creating discord in the House of Commons instead of reporting accurately and honestly subject matters under consideration and the debates that take place here.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO GUARANTEE REPRESENTATION RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES OF ALL PARTIES IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-418, entitled "An Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (party status)."

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to recognize that 12 members are needed to be recognized as a genuine party but once it has had 12 members elected that party will continue to be recognized as long as there is representation in the House of Commons. If at a certain moment all members of that party should disappear then it will have to have another 12 members at least reelected at another election for the party to be recognized but once it is recognized as long as there remains one member that party will continue to be recognized officially.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in the interest of expediting the debate on Bill C-73, I have a suggestion to make. First, may I point out that it is now December 1 and it is our hope and expectation that we shall be able to adjourn on December 19. I have been working with the House leaders in an effort to organize our time in such a way as to enable us to deal with all the important legislation which remains.

The debate today will be on Bill C-73. In the event that this debate concludes before the end of the day, I would suggest that the vote be postponed until tomorrow after orders of the day are called. I say this because there might otherwise be a disposition to prolong the debate in order to avoid a vote tonight.

Mr. Baldwin: We have no objection, Mr. Speaker. We have stated our position on the bill. Our views will be presented today by a number of speakers, beginning with the right hon. member for Prince Albert, but we recognize that the government has the brute force to put the bill through, so we see no reason for delaying it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The suggestion is, of course, based on a hypothetical situation and we know what is usually said about hypothetical questions. However, if it should work out that the debate ends today, we would be willing to have the vote deferred until tomorrow. Maybe if the debate does not finish today but does finish tomorrow, we would agree to having the vote put off until the next day.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, at noon today we came to an agreement with the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais). I would like to point out to the Chair that our leader (Mr. Caouette) wishes to speak on Bill C-73. We would not like this to stand in the way of hon. members of the opposition or of the government who might wish to discuss this bill. Incidentally, I think December 19 would be a most suitable adjournment date.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

(d) Data not available pending completion of "Census of Projects" currently underway.

[Mr. Sharp.]

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on November 7 last an incorrect reply was given to question No. 3,359. I would now seek permission of the House to have that particular question reinstated.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be a more important bill before the House than the one we are now considering, at least not this session. I think it is interesting that as far as the government benches are concerned, there are very few members present. It appears they have concluded that no matter whatever arguments may be advanced, when it comes to a vote they will put an end to discussion in connection with this important matter.

My first words must be of congratulation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) for the manner in which he has carried out his ministerial responsibilities. I have always had a very warm regard for his parliamentary capacity and the manner in which he answers questions that are asked of him. The minister smiles at this moment. However, it is difficult for me to understand how a minister with his experience could have introduced legislation of this kind, legislation which has the effect of nullifying the legislative power of parliament and the interpretive and judicial powers of the courts. The bill will go through because it will be forced through by a government which, regardless of the inconsistency of its stand in connection with inflation, has brought about a situation in our country dangerous both to the economy and to society itself.

The minister is sometimes known as the "thumper". I decided to look at the dictionary meaning of that word. I find that a thumper is a person who uses banging and thumping. In other words, it says, to thump is to strike or beat heavily with a blunt instrument such as a club. If that definition were applied legislatively, it would describe what is happening in connection with this matter.

I have to say at once that if the vote comes tomorrow, I shall not be here. However, by the time I have finished what I have to say I think the House will be able to conclude how I would have voted had I been here. To make my position abundantly clear, it is not one of politics as such. This is a matter that requires the fullest consideration by parliament. In order to ensure the non-political nature of what I am about to say, I can do no better than to point out that in the other place a speech was delivered on November 24 by a senator who belongs to the Liberal party and is from the city of Toronto, Senator Daniel Lang. As reported at page 1447 of the Senate Debates, he said:

> The significance of Canada's absence from the Economic Summit Conference recently held in France should not be overlooked. I suggest it marks a new low point in how Canada is regarded by other nations, and a new low for Canada in the economic world order. From the end of World War II up until recent years, Canada would almost automatically have been included in such a conference.
> It is not difficult for senators to remember that in the 1950s our per capita income was the second highest in the world, exceeded only by that of the United States. Today, our per capita income is fifth ranking in the world, behind that of the United States, West Germany, Sweden and Denmark.
> It is not difficult to remember that during that same period, Canada enjoyed an international prestige and a small but real military presence, both of which ranked in the world second only to that of the great powers. Now, however, in the eyes of Dr. Luns, the NATO Secretary General, we rank scarcely ahead of Luxembourg, at least so far as our military significance is concerned.
> While Canada is still one of the few countries on earth combining natural resources of an immeasurable quantity and a high degree of modern industrialization, our development has now almost come to a stop, and strikes of national significance are paralysing our economy. Last year, only Italy exceeded Canada in time lost as a result of strike actions. It would not be surprising to any of us if we succeeded Italy this year to that dubious distinction.

He then goes on to deal with expenditures:

> Canadian governments at all levels have increased their spending by 300 per cent in the last decade; that is, from $14.9 billion in 1964 to $60 billion last year. In terms of the gross national product, that represents an increase from 31 per cent to 39.3 per cent. In other words, Canadian governments today at all levels control close to $40 of every $100 spent on goods and services in the country.
> Statistics for 1973, being the latest available, show that such percentage government spending is only exceeded by Sweden and Holland, and statistics for 1975 will, in all likehood, show Canada to be among the highest government spenders in the western world.

Further on in his speech he said:

> At the federal level, last June's budget forecast a deficit of $4.3 billion for our next fiscal year. Indeed, it looks like $6 billion, and many economists are predicting that we will reach $7 billion. Canada's federal spending in the first half of the 1975-76 fiscal year is up a whopping 30 per cent over last year. Our net public debt has risen from $18 billion in 1975 to $25 billion in 1976.

Sir, that view from an outstanding Liberal epitomizes the dangerous situation in which Canada finds itself today. I approach this matter by saying that it is the first time I have spoken on the bill. I have studied the legislation in detail and I have come to certain conclusions that I intend to place before this House.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), after two years of "all is well", said in Winnipeg on September 13 that "the Canadian economy is not in very good shape right now" and he warned that "Canada could go down the drain if the economic picture does not improve". Nothing could be more definite than that. Canada's rate of inflation today greatly exceeds that of the United States, where the rate is almost 6 per cent. Trade is down. Productivity is down. Over and over again mention has been made of productivity. For some reason that I do not understand, the productivity council set up under my administration and which did such effective work was abolished as soon as the Liberal party came into power.

Canada's real gross national product is declining. Our growth is almost nil while, according to the lastest report from the statistical branch in the United States, that country's growth has risen 11.2 per cent. Food prices in the United States—along the boundary, at any rate, where many Canadians today do their shopping—are very much lower than they are in Canada.

Why has the government not acted? I will deal with this question in some detail. We are in a very frightening position. For three years the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and the party as a whole have been pointing out the danger to Canada of the government's failure to take action. The answer was that it was of no consequence. So serious did the matter become by 1975, however, that finally the Prime Minister did speak up. I remember so well the ridicule heaped on this party and on its leader, yet it won the Liberals an election.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has taken properly, strong objection to anything being said that is not justified by the facts. I point out that the Prime Minister is one of the major wrongdoers in this regard. All through the election he said, "There is nothing to it; it is a matter that does not deserve consideration by Canadians". I remember his speaking in North Battleford, where he read from a speech that was apparently prepared by one of that company or battalion of extra officials who today clutter the offices of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council.

How frightening, Mr. Speaker, it was when he said: "Do you realize how serious the situation is in our country?" Yet he said there was nothing to it. The Conservatives say that there was. "What about the United States?", the Prime Minister asked. "How much worse off are they than we are? They had controls". I point out that their cost of living today is much lower than ours. The Prime Minister then went on to use these immortal words:

> Do you realize that in the United States they are gassing their children and killing off their hogs?

I wondered whether we had a modern edition of Herod, but it turned out afterwards that that was in his speech material and he had to point out that he did not really mean children but he meant chickens. That is the sort of thing that went on, Mr. Speaker.

We have endeavoured to be of every assistance to the government, disagreeing as we do with many of the terms of this legislation, by asking that it be restricted to 18 months and not continued through the life of this parliament, because the present plan means that it will be continued until the next election and this will emasculate the economy of Canada and we will be controlled and dominated by bureaucracy.

We also realize, and it is realized by Canadians today, that if action had been taken earlier we would not be in the position in which we are. The Leader of the Opposition asked that the term be restricted to 18 months, but the Prime Minister refused to accede. Why did he do that, having stated he would be willing to accept recommendations and suggestions from the opposition? The only one that was of any consequence he turned down abruptly and cavalierly, substituting a system whereby we might consider the matter at the end of 18 months but not through parliamentary examination.

The Prime Minister asked for co-operation but he denied it through his attitude and his determination to push this legislation through and actually placed the economy of Canada in a strait-jacket dominated by bureaucrats, without regard to any other consideration than their decision that this was the proper course to take through this legislation, intending to have it carried out regardless of any objection raised. The Prime Minister's statements during the election campaign regarding inflation were not true and he could not but have known that they were not true.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: His statements were in keeping with the three charges he made against me, all of which were the product of false information given him by some bureaucrats. Instead of following the parliamentary system of rising when a mistake takes place—all of us make mistakes—and saying he was sorry, but he was wrong, he stayed pat. All over this country the reaction to that attitude was one of general condemnation. I am one of those who want to believe the Prime Minister and expect to believe anyone holding that position, perhaps not in the conclusions the Prime Minister arrives at but, surely, in the truth of the factual situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I say without fear of contradiction that the Prime Minister deceived the Canadian people at the last election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Furthermore, since that date, when the Prime Minister speaks on any controversial matters one does not ask whether what he said is true or false but whether it is true or "Trudeau".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a serious situation for a country to find itself in. I am going to show the way in which the Prime Minister turned from condemning the opposition for asking for qualified controls over a period of three months to bring about quietude to inflation. He said it was all wrong and it would not work, from the time of the election in 1975, and then when Pierre Juneau was brought into the cabinet—

An hon. Member: Who is he?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I can say is that the only attractive thing about him is the fact that his first name is Pierre. I would have thought that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), who is in charge of bilingualism, if he could do it would change the name of the constituency of Peterborough to "Pierreborough". That is how highly the name Pierre is regarded.

An hon. Member: Perhaps Hochelaga.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The suggestion is that it might be called Hochelaga, or perhaps even Stadaconna.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let us see how the Prime Minister turned around. At the time they held a press conference for him when Mr. Juneau became a minister, these were the words of the Prime Minister of Canada. This article reads:

> Trudeau stated more emphatically than he ever has before that controls are not the answer to the problem.
> "The technique—the statutory technique—of freezing and controls does not solve the underlying problem".

He said a freeze would bring only "temporary relief" and that "no form of controls will keep the prices down for any period of time". The Prime Minister in fact said that under no circumstances would we have controls because as soon as controls went on, up would go prices. Strangely enough, there was a complete about-turn in the middle of October. Suddenly that thing which was regarded as the most dangerous economic nonsense was attractive. Suddenly he embraced that which he had always condemned.

What happened during those three weeks which brought about that change in viewpoint? It was not the fact that inflation had become worse, because the latest statistics from Statistics Canada indicate that in September the rate of inflation was 10.2 per cent and in October it was 10.3 per cent. There was no great increase and no change to speak of, yet suddenly he proceeded to disavow everything he had brought before the Canadian people. That is the reason why today across this country whatever he advances is regarded with suspicion by the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have read this bill with care and I spoke about it, giving my own personal views, four days after it came into effect, when speaking to the Canadian Club in Toronto. I said that this bill simply places Canada in a trap. It makes a group of bureaucrats almighty masters in this country. In earlier days they used to sign letters "Your obedient servant". From now on that will be "Your all powerful master". I have never seen in any statute such a conglomeration of despotic bureaucratic powers given to anyone. The Prime Minister was in the cabinet of the late Lester B. Pearson and in one of his books he says, in effect, "I fear the control of bureaucrats who build up little empires around themselves".

The bill in its present form will dethrone freedom far beyond what is necessary in the public interest. It will build up an all-powerful bureaucracy virtually above the law; there is no right of appeal, except in the most limited sense, that in any way will protect Canadians whose rights have been interfered with. No power-hungry person or bureaucrat could ask for greater powers for three years, which will be to the next election. The economy of Canada will be strangled by the political philosophies carried out by bureaucrats virtually above the law.

I do not trust this government. What kind of justice can be expected from a government when, on an appeal now before the Supreme Court of Canada launched by an alleged Mafia group, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) and the Government of Canada have joined with these individuals in arguing before that court that the crime probe in the province of Quebec is unlawful. Why did the Government of Canada become involved in that? Are the Government of Canada and the Department of Justice afraid that justice will not be done to the underworld? Why add the advice of the Canadian government? At a time when crime is rampant as never before, why should the government argue that what is being done is not within the legislative authority of the Government of Quebec? The court could have found that out without the assistance of counsel for the federal government.

I intend to discuss this legislation very briefly, because if I were to take the time to analyse all the clauses it would involve a great deal of time. First of all, I suggest the question is whether this legislation is constitutional. It could easily be made constitutional by a simple provision in the preamble that an emergency exists, but the government did not dare admit that because it had contended for several years that there was no emergency. The government follows this tenuous trickery that can be found in clause 20. Of all the evasiness I have ever seen, clause 20 is in a class by itself. The Bill of Rights is swept aside, or at least an endeavour is made to sweep it aside, by a declaration under that clause which is not effective, as I see it, because it does not provide specifically, as the Bill of Rights demands, that the Parliament of Canada will in this case abridge the rights providing fundamental freedom under the Bill of Rights. Section 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights reads as follows:

> Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized—

Just imagine the field day for the bureaucrats! We do not know what will be in the bill. We do not know what the guidelines will be. We are simply being given a pig in a poke, a skeleton on which there is no flesh and they will flesh it up after the legislation is passed. Under this bill the government will have unlimited right to change the guidelines. The bill provides for the setting up of an anti-inflation board which has the power to punish an individual for what he has done that contravenes the guidelines either in fact or in spirit. What greater power can there be than for a board to be able to punish a person for doing something in the spirit and not in actuality?

An administrator is to be appointed who will perform whatever duties are assigned him by the minister. Where the administrator is satisfied that there has been a contravention of the guidelines, or is likely to be, he may proceed to prosecute. If one's rights are trampled on, what appeal does he have? He has an appeal to the hired man of the government, the anti-inflation appeal tribunal. The appeal may be disposed of by a single member or by a panel of three.

Looking at this legislation as a whole, this nation will be under the dictatorship of the Prime Minister or the cabinet to a vritually limitless extent. They do not have to be concerned about any existing laws; they are set aside unless they come within the ambit of the provisions of this skeleton bill. What about appeals? I wish I could go into the detail of the appeals. They are meaningless. They grant no individual the right to protect his rights. The appeal is to the tribunal. There can be an appeal beyond the tribunal only to the Federal Court within such a limited area as to be almost without effectiveness.

If this bill should pass in its present form, the denial of individual rights can well be imagined. Individual rights will be at an end, because whenever the cabinet thinks there ought to be a few more guidelines, changes made in the guidelines or any laws made, it has the power to do so. That power is dangerous to freedom at any time. It can be changed every hour on the hour. What is lawful today under the guidelines can be changed tomorrow and made unlawful.

I shall say a personal word now. As I approach the setting sun of my life I can do no other than stand against the provisions of a bill that will destroy parliament. I stood against the Defence Production Act and Foreign Exchange Act which denied any right to the individual. Finally, after pressure over and over again, a change was made. Mr. Howe said that he would give them the right to sue in the courts, but that that would be restricted so that if they sued and were successful they would receive $1, without costs, because that would uphold the principle.

This legislation will be law; it will be put through. The ranks of the Liberal party are pretty thin today, with 15 or 16 members present in a majority government. They do not want to hear any criticism. This legislation will be passed. I do not want anyone to say I suggested that we in this country should break the law. If it is passed, it will have to be upheld. I have nothing but condemnation for the powerful heads of two or three of the big unions who have threatened to defy the law. That is anarchy. That would be dangerous to the future of Canada. But I would be less than honest if I did not oppose this bill which asks parliament to give the cabinet the power to pass unnamed laws. That is a denial of justice.

I have always been a reader of history, and I know of no example that is contrary to the principle which I now enunciate. My reading of history reveals to me how dangerous it will be, for it is filled with examples which show that when conditions are allowed to worsen to a point when in desperation people will accept arbitrary and authoritarian solutions, democracy ends. The powers that are asked for in this bill made a sham of parliamentary government and deny the rights of all Canadians.

The Prime Minister tried to sell this legislation when he went across the country. I have already mentioned that his credibility is at about zero, whether you consider it in Fahrenheit or in Celsius. He went everywhere across this country. The people sat on their hands. They charged them $20—they must be well off in Nova Scotia—to attend a dinner to hear how good this legislation is. Then they sent out the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). The audience slept, or they did not stick around. Then they sent out the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). The audience just laughed when he spoke because the people knew that they had been deceived.

The Prime Minister said, "Pull in your belts; restrain your expenditures". The words of the Scripture come back: Physician, heal thyself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me give a few examples. Consider the Mirabel frolics. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) brought them out.

An hon. Member: He attended the frolic.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He also brought out a number of these individuals who are parading around, experts who advise all these multitudes in the Prime Minister's office. Last year we spent thousands of dollars for these counsellors and advisers. Mirabel was opened. The frolics cost the people of Canada $214,000. I will not go into particulars because my time is limited, but let me give as an example the attitude of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey). He is one who does not get involved in things like that. He just takes a stand and tells them all to go where they will. As to the rest of the government, they multiply the number of civil servants.

When we were in office, the largest number of civil servants was 200,000. Last year it was 290,000 and I think it has gone up another 10,000 since then. I have already mentioned the consultants. The Prime Minister gives a lead to this country. Never have we had such a spendthrift government with the Prime Minister leading. Harrington Lake was furnished for $32,000. The residence at 24 Sussex Drive, which all visitors from abroad who were there said was a wonderful place, has cost us so far $297,000. The centre office was redecorated at a cost of $61,000. They have stone animals out in front sitting on very deep, thick carpets because the Prime Minister says, "I like nice things". There are Eskimo carvings there.

This government, under the leadership of the Prime Minister, has been on an orgy of extravagance. When I was prime minister it cost $50,000 a year to operate the PMO. Under Mr. Pearson it cost $75,000: that was understandable. In 1968, when the present Prime Minister came in, he spent $406,000. In 1972 he spent $1,384,000, and the expenditure this year is expected to be approximately $2 million.

Then there is the swimming pool. Nobody knows who gave the money for its construction. I have never before seen philanthropists and individuals who conceal their help to the Government of Canada in this way. You pay for it and I pay for it, because in permitting them to deduct whatever expenditures they had from their income tax, they took it from our pockets. The swimming pool is so large that the 200-mile limit at sea, some say, will be taken advantage of by the Prime Minister.

I have dealt with the Prime Minister's residence, but let me mention a few facts about the cost of operating it. When he came in, it cost $37,000 and now it is $94,000. He goes politicking at the expense of the Canadian people. They blame Mr. Nixon for losing the election in Ontario. They should blame the $20,000 which was spent on helicopters. It has been an amazing performance. The government says to the people of Canada, "Don't spend, retrench; be careful. After all, your country needs restraint on your part". But the government itself, as an example, spends as never before on waste and extravagance in order to gratify those who benefit therefrom.

If you really want to find out what wonderful improvements were made at 24 Sussex Drive, let me tell you, but do not show this to your wives. In 1968-69, the cost was $27,000. Then we come to 1969-70. There are several pages of the wonderful things that were done there. For example, we see here easy chairs, carpeting and fixtures at $3,000. It cost $584 to repair the lights after they were put in. There is the purchase of a nest of tables and antiques. There are some minor items, but they look pretty well. Then we come to 1972-73: installation of Christmas tree, $2,100.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: But to the people of Canada they say, "Retrench; watch yourselves; do not overextend". Then we see crystal arms, whatever they are, at $881, and electric brooms. I know what they could be used for there. We see page after page of this.

An hon. Member: Give us some more.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then we see a chandelier at $3,000, antique bronze cubes, whatever they are, for $436. This is a government with a Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) asking Canadians to retrench, a government which by its own action has contributed to the frightening situation in which we find ourselves today. Our national debt has increased by billions since the Prime Minister took over. The deficit this year will be $5 billion, $6 billion or $7 billion. The Minister of Finance made a statement one day and I think he said it will be $5 billion or $6 billion; then the next day he said he did not have all the facts.

● (1600)

Where are we going? When this bill is carried into effect it will throttle the economy of Canada and in three years it will change our whole social fabric. While powers are needed in order to bring about controls, those who denied that they would ever be effective now embrace principles which are a denial of every principle of democracy; and parliament is asked to say that they are bad, they could be worse, and we will support them. I, for one, will not support this legislation until the government shows in its own expenditures that it is going to follow its own admonitions of retrenching. Taxes are up to heights never before equalled. Every time the government has a large deficit, it hits the cost of living and raises it. None of these things are to be faced. The minister says there are plans to reduce expenditures. They have not been brought before parliament. Until they have, it is simply a vocal exercise in acuity for him to say so.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I carefully listened while the right hon. member for Prince Albert was upbraiding the government, more especially for its excessive expenditures. On that point, he is perfectly right, but it does not solve the problem stated in Bill C-73. The government had to resort to a rather special propaganda, despatching its ministers throughout the country to tell Canadians, boards of trade, unions, labour and management organizations all about the advantages of Bill C-73 for the Canadian people and the provisions in the bill to control inflation or to avoid its unbearable ravages in the Canadian economy.

We hear many of those ministers depict the world situation and say, for instance, that inflation in Canada is not as serious as in Spain, Vietnam, France and England, as if this were a remedy to the inflation now affecting Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, of course some people are against the bill, oppose it very strongly for various reasons. We are against it because it does not solve anything; it tends to worsen the situation rather than improve it and make consumers still less able to afford current prices. While the Progressive Conservatives fought an electoral campaign calling for the imposition of wage and price controls, today they turn back. They would like the controls to apply for not more than eighteen months. However, their whole campaign was in favour of controls. An objective look at the situation leads one to wonder what the government could do in eighteen months with the present structures of the economic system to arrive at a solution to correct it. In five years from now nothing will be solved. That is the way it will be with Bill C-73. The Progressive Conservatives for their part might have titled it Bill C-74, without solving anything more than the others.

According to NDP members, the controls are not severe enough; they are too flexible. They ought to be made still stronger and all-pervasive, similar to those which nationalization would imply. The government would become the employer, the boss of all economic activities in Canada. The partisans of socialism would be delighted with them. Well, we have examples of a number of socialist states where the cost of living has not been going down, but up like in many non socialist states. I feel that the cost of living in British Columbia is higher than anywhere else in Canada. And yet, a socialist government has been in power in British Columbia for three years already. There has been for many years a socialist government in Saskatchewan, as well as in Manitoba. Although in power at the provincial level, these socialist governments have been unable to prevent inflation from ravaging their provinces, as it does ravage Ontario, Quebec and the remaining provinces.

It is fine always to blame the federal government for everything that happens in Canada. Last night, I was listening to a lecture given on television by Mr. René Lévesque, the leader of the Quebec separatist party, who was again blaming Ottawa for inflation, for everything that goes wrong, for undeveloped natural resources. And Lévesque goes on saying again and again that in a normal country, a normal province, a normal state as the state of Quebec, this and that should be controlled, natural resources should be developed, mines should be nationalized, most of the production and consumption should be nationalized, and then the federalist system would be done for.

Mr. Speaker, René Lévesque was once the Minister of Economic Affairs or Natural Resources in the province of Quebec. What he advocates today, why did he not do it when he was a Quebec minister? When Quebec Hydro was nationalized in 1962, Mr. Lévesque then said: We want to be masters in our own house. That was back in 1962, thirteen years ago. Are we more masters in our own province, Quebec, than we were in 1962? It is worse than ever today. Mr. Lévesque, who nationalized electricity, said: We are going to become masters through electric power. Mr. Speaker, they were supposed to standardize electricity rates in the province of Quebec so that consumers would pay less. Today the rates are 10 times higher than they were before the companies were nationalized. That is René Lévesque's "baby". It is the same Lévesque who wants to nationalize the rest of the Quebec economy and who impresses the "suckers" in the province by making them believe that he would do better than those who are in power. What did he do anyway?

Moreover, when he was Minister of Social Affairs, what prevented him from raising pensions? Who prevented him from raising family allowances? Who prevented him from giving assistance to the poor at that time? Mr. Lévesque did not say that in 1962 or in 1965, but since he was defeated, now that he is no longer in power, he is capable of everything, whereas while he was a minister, he was incapable and helpless. People who are quite capable when they do not have to give any instructions, but who become quite incapable once in power, we have known some in the past, and René Lévesque is no exception.

Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the Progressive Conservatives now blame the Liberals for trying to apply restrictions for three years. They would prefer 18 months. Yet, they know full well that within 18 months they would not do any better. That is clear. The system implemented, tolerated and generated is the same for both parties.

Also, objections are raised by the unions. What about Mr. Pépin, of the CNTU, Mr. Laberge, of the QFL, and Charbonneau, with his goatee, calling for a 24-hour strike, which would bring the workers back to work 24 hours later still suffering from the hardships of Bill C-73? Do those people, i.e. Laberge, Pépin, Charbonneau and Chartrand, explain to their members what would happen if they were in power instead of the present government? What would they do? Some union members are stupid enough to believe that if Pépin, Laberge and Charbonneau were to take power forcibly tomorrow, the worker would be freed. It would be called "power in the hands of the workers", that is precisely when the workers would get kicked, you know where, by guys like Pépin, Laberge and Charbonneau.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen what happened in some European countries because of stirrers of trouble and strike organizers. What happened in Russia as a result of repeated 24-hour general strikes? They led to authoritarian communism. The same thing happened in all socialist countries throughout the world. It happened in Cuba, closer to us. When Castro fought against Batista, he wanted to overthrow exploiters, yes, but in the name of Christianity, of civilization. But once in power, what did Castro do? He became a notorious communist. Today, when we hear he has built small houses for the workers, we should go and see the police system that exists in Cuba. Go and see the small socialist countries: do the workers hold the power and or is it not rather the union leaders who have become the government? In those countries, no one is free today. That is why the Social Crediters have been saying for a long time now that the day we lose our freedom, we will have put it in the hands of guys like Pépin, Laberge and Charbonneau. When that day comes, our freedoms will have gone forever, and we will never manage to get them back. What do those people want who fight for freedom? They only want to take the liberty of citizens, our own liberties, to seize upon them and then impose on us the dictatorship they have been dreaming of for many years. This is the danger with union leaders. Another has been keeping postal workers on strike for 41 days; a Mr. Parrot said to the workers: Vote against the settlement of the strike. Is Mr. Parrot going to refund the money lost by postal workers in Canada? Some postal workers have lost $2,000 in salary over 41 days. When will they make up for these $2,000? Never. They will not make up for this loss over a hundred years. But Parrot did not lose his salary during the strike. The other union leaders did not lose their salaries. But the head of a family, the postal worker, his wife and his children had only $40 a week for several weeks.

Is this the way to settle the labour problem? Mr. Speaker, and I say it again and again: Just prove to me that a strike is going to settle the labour problem and I shall be the first on the front line with the strikers. But since I know strikes, the end of a strike has always meant the beginning of another. When the contract expires, they still must strike to cancel or renegotiate a contract. Strikes have been known for 30, 40, 50 years. Is the workman better off now than in those days? In my view he is a hundred times worse off than 25 or 30 years ago! That does not mean the government program should be endorsed, far from it. The government program is a kind of law which promotes economic, social and political unrest throughout Canada. In what may? Let me tell you.

I recently asked the right hon. Prime Minister about the notorious Bill C-73. I asked him how he proposed, when the implementation of the program comes to an end, to balance the consumer's purchasing power with the increased production. I read over the clause of the act which provides for an 8 per cent salary increase to take care of the rising cost of living and which allows 2 per cent indexation and 2 per cent for miscellaneous, making up a total possible increase of 12 per cent. Therefore I told the Prime Minister: The 8 per cent increase is directly included in the cost of production of goods. Surely everybody can see that. The Prime Minister then replied: I have asked him. I then said: Since the worker who will obtain an 8 per cent increase will have to pay taxes on this increase, how will he be able to cope with higher prices, which will not be taxable since the producer or manufacturer or businessman will only have to raise his prices according to what he paid, to what it is costing him, and not a penny more. Therefore, the $800 salary increase will be translated by the retailer and the businessman into an $800 price increase because salaries are a factor of prices. There is no profit for the businessman. It is simply the additional amount that he must pay for salaries. The Prime Minister says: The worker will have 8 per cent, plus 2 per cent, plus 2 per cent, which means 12 per cent, when prices will only increase by 8 per cent. I am very surprised to learn that the Prime Minister cannot add better than that.

Mr. Speaker, let us consider the example of a citizen whose annual income is $10,000 and let us set present prices at $10,000. This is false because prices are much higher than salaries. Prices are at least 40 per cent higher at the present time, and I am being conservative, not of the Conservative party, but conservative in my figures.

So, what happens? Let us say that this figure of $10,000 is equal to the worker's income, but prices now certainly represent $14,000 whereas the worker only makes $10,000. He is already lagging behind. This government tolerates such a situation. Usually, private enterprise is recognized the right of making profits, but we must fight inflation. We are going to ask manufacturers, businessmen, contractors not to raise their prices more than the increase in real costs. Take the example of the worker who earns $10,000 a year and gets the maximum to which he is entitled. He will get a raise of 8 per cent plus 2 per cent, plus 2 per cent, a total of 12 per cent. This is a $1,200 yearly increase, which means that he will get $11,200. Not only the 8 per cent is included in the prices, but also the 2 per cent. If the government paid the 2 per cent and also the other 2 per cent, I would agree because prices would only go up by 8 per cent. But the government does not pay anything.

The government says: You are entitled to this, but to nothing more. Then the 8 per cent, the 2 per cent, plus the other 2 per cent, are included in the prices, and it adds up to 12 per cent. And 12 per cent of the $10,000 figure I quoted earlier means a price increase to $11,200. So, prices reach $11,200 and the income exactly the same amount. The difference between the two figures is that when a businessman increases his prices by $1,200 according to the increase allowed, it is only a cost increase. It is not an increase in profits, because under Bill C-73, he is not allowed to make a profit on the $1,200 price increase since it is the cost price. On the other hand, the worker who earns $11,200 must pay taxes on his $1,200 increase under the Income Tax Act. He will pay at least $300 in taxes. Let us say 25 per cent. I think that $10,000 a year represents more than 25 per cent. But let us be conservative. When his $300 in taxes are paid, he has only a $900 salary increase left to pay a $1,200 price increase. The consumer has then $300 less than before.

The prime minister did not understand that. He said no: With 12 per cent, he will be able to buy 8 per cent. In fact, it is exactly the opposite. With 9 per cent, he will have to buy 12 per cent. It is impossible for consumers—

Mr. Roy (Laval): Do you have the income tax table? Who will pay the $250 in income tax?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): The consumer.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, the consumer is the one who will have to pay his income tax. The wage earner will pay his income tax, but the total increase brings no profit. The employer has to pay the $1,200, not the government. It is not the Bank of Canada, but the employer who pays 100 per cent of those $1,200, and he will pay no income tax on that since there will not be any profit. He cannot pay income tax on something which brings no profit. The government therefore tells us in its bill that the businessman or contractor will pledge not to raise his prices more than the real increase in costs. So, the $1,200 are a real increase in costs, not with a profit, but without a profit. But the person who earns the $1,200 has to pay $300 in income tax because it is an income for him, it is not a cost, but a purchasing power. He will therefore get $900 for a price increase of $1,200. There is your Bill C-73, and that is why it will solve nothing. Year after year, the gap will become wider and deeper than it is now.

We advocate price controls, but if they are applied for three years, businessmen, small tradespeople, small manufacturers will have to close down. They will say: "We are not interested in working without a profit, and only apply a cost pass through method to our prices, and anyway we shall not be able to survive very long". That is exactly what will happen.

Consumers are now protesting everywhere. The other day, Jean-Luc Pepin, the new chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, was right in saying about this act that the government is trying to do something, but the people do not agree. When you talk with a group of employers, they are glad to see that the wages will be frozen; they say it is a good idea. As for the wage earners, they object. The proof is that Pépin and his gang, Laberge in particular, and the good gardian angels who are in those unions, the QFL in particular, are not even able to get along; I learned with much satisfaction at noon that the steel workers strongly object to the 24-hour general strike plan. Gérin-Lajoie said so, then I think that he is the most reasonable and responsible person in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, Jean-Luc Pepin said: the employers are happy to see the wages frozen, but they object to the price freeze. Then, the wage earners of the unions are happy to see the prices frozen but they object to the wage freeze. So, Jean-Luc Pepin told them: Please try to decide what you want. If you want to help us help you we are going to do it but if you are there one against the other all the time, you do not mind if the other guy is squeezed but you do mind if you are squeezed. Everyone is going to have to be squeezed, or nobody will. He was right. If it freezes it must freeze but what will that give? That will give frost. What do you want? We will not know where we are going anymore nor would we have known where to go with the Progressive Conservatives and absolute controls of more than two, three or four years. Not at all. Not with socialization or nationalization.

We say that the gap between prices and the purchasing power is too wide. Here is a specific case. Suppose that prices are $10,000 and income is $10,000. At a certain moment prices increase by $12,000. If you tax the increase in salaries to go and get that amount or distribute that amount the consumer is not better off than he was. A retail discount at the retail price level would have cost a lot less than what the Anti-Inflation Board is now going to cost. It would cost a lot less in bureaucracy across Canada because we could have used the services of Statistics Canada, for example, which is practically useless, or the services of the governor of the Bank of Canada who sits around all day and does not know whether he must increase interest rates or bring them down who comes to us to try and make us believe that we are better off when the interest rate is higher because that prevents us from having recourse to new credits when everyone is caught at the throat, still being forced to go to banks, credit unions, financial institutions to pay interest rates of 12, 15 per cent.

We say, order a retail discount at the retail price level across Canada after agreement with retailers and the federal government. This would be a 20 per cent discount on prices of $10,000—which would reduce the price to $8,000. The purchasing power is then increased by $2,000 without taking a nickel out of the pocket of the consumer, the small wage earner or the average worker. The balance between products and consumers would then be restored. The other way would be, for example, to increase prices by 8 per cent. That adds to the cost price, you do not make a profit, nothing like that. Instead of saying that if we said to the worker that instead of paying taxes on his income we are going to give in a national dividend to fill the difference that exists between prices and his income. You would have some balance then. But in the present context, far from promoting balance we are increasingly promoting economic imbalance. This is why everyone, all social classes throughout the country, are revolting one against the other or against the government. Reference is made to division and separation. Quebec would be better if separated. In Saskatchewan, they feel their lot would be improved if they were separated. In British Columbia, they think they would be better with the United States than with Canada and while slowly but surely the foundations of a very rich country, one of the greatest in the world, Canada, are eroded, our figures and our accountancy system are not adjusted to our great opportunities.

Instead of a reflected kind of accounting permitted by our physical possibilities, our producing potential, our productivity potential, they try to reduce, to shrink down physical possibilities to figure possibilities, to the financial possibilities the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Banking Association of Canada want to force on us. But labour unions do not tackle that problem. Liberals, Progressive Conservatives totally ignore the existence of such a control. The New Democrats pass judgment on about everything there is, but they propose nothing to put the axe into the current financial system.

This is not the first time, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I repeat this in this House. As long as we do nothing to put our national accounts system in order, so that figures may be brought to serve the individual, as long as we do nothing in that direction we will have numerous bills such as this one. Because Bill C-73 will be enacted. It will definitely pass, whether we vote for or against it. The government has the majority so the bill will go through this House. It already went through the committee stage. Almost no amendments were accepted.

It will go through the Senate, where the government is also in a majority position. Bill C-73 will be enacted and forced upon the people. The right hon. Prime Minister said so the other night when he announced: "If the present measures are not rigid enough, we will strengthen them."

We will use the army if we have to, but the bill will go through, whatever the cost. The fight against inflation is a must. So in order to fight figure-inflation, we are going to fight the Canadian citizens at the same time. Let us crush them! Let us make them suffer as much as we can, in order to pay tribute to a monetary system that someday or other will have to be replaced by something more sensible. The most sensible—those who have been the laughing stock for years—and I mean the Social Credit Party, whether people laugh or not, I say this in earnest: Social Credit is not garbage, it is not a whim thrown the public, it is something reasoned, something serious and well analyzed. A lot of people do not understand it. I referred to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the media, the stations, radio, those people that are always crying: Freedom of the press. People clamour for freedom of the press when that suits them, when their own freedom is at stake, but there is never enough time for reporting what is going on in the House. I noticed in the last few months that when statements are made in the House, CBC and Le Journal de Montréal, Péladeau's baby—I think his name is Péladeau—report that there would be three parties in the House: the Liberal party, the Progressive Conservative party, and the New Democratic party.

Social Crediters take part in all the debates; they are overlooked, ignored and that is what is called freedom of the press. That is the freedom of the press that was kicked out in some socialist countries and when socialism will be established here, all of you, press people, will applaud, you will have won your case and reaped your laurels, but until then and as long as I shall breathe, the dressing-down you will get will be a good one.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)—External Affairs; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Labour Conditions; the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston)—External Affairs.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, for the past three years it has been clear that government action is necessary to curb inflation and stop the cost of living from rising at a steadily accelerating rate. In February, 1973, the official opposition in parliament urged the government to introduce a policy of price and income restraints as a means of curbing inflation. As you know, the government refused to follow this suggestion and price and income restraints became the main issue in the general election a year ago. Now the government has finally come to realize that price and income restraints are necessary if inflation is to be brought under control, and has presented its restraint program in the bill we have before us.

Already, many weaknesses in the program have been pointed out by members of the official opposition and others at the meetings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Some of these weaknesses have been corrected. Many remain to be corrected before the plan can work effectively to curb inflation. Two things which the government must do are the following: first, reduce the increase in the money supply to a range between 5 per cent and 7½ per cent per year. That is the range of increase which has made it possible to reduce inflation in the United States to around 6 per cent per year, half of what it is in this country today; second, keep the increase in government spending to no more than 8 per cent per year during the coming year, thus limiting the increase in government spending to the percentage the government will allow the people of Canada.

As old age pensioners, war veterans and others in need must receive increases equal to the increase in the cost of living, it will be necessary for the government to reduce other increases in expenditure to less than the 8 per cent a year in order to make an over-all limit of 8 per cent possible. Mr. Speaker, I intend to do everything I can to persuade the government to take these necessary steps.

Turning, now, to the situation which confronts us at this moment, I believe the important thing for us to remember is that however imperfect this program is—and we can only hope the government will soon have the good sense to correct its imperfections—it is the only program for controlling inflation which will be presented to this parliament. If the bill is defeated on third reading, the program will cease to exist. The result would be a continuation of the inflationary spiral, our products would continue to be increasingly less competitive with foreign products in both the Canadian and the export markets, and unemployment would rise until we found ourselves in an all-out depression.

It is for this reason I intend to vote for the bill and, if it passes, to do everything I can to persuade the people of this country to get behind the program and work in the national interest toward reducing inflation to around 3 per cent per year, the average for the past 65 years during which we have measured inflation in Canada.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, on many occasions in the past few weeks we have registered opposition to the bill which is before us for third reading. This afternoon I intend to do so once again on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Our party has long been concerned about the effects of inflation in this country and throughout the world. Spokesmen for this group have at various times made many suggestions as to the steps we should be taking domestically to help bring down the rate of inflation. We have pointed out, too, that it is desirable to seek international agreement on measures to govern inflation since a large part of our own inflation is, as we know, imported. As a trading nation, this is an aspect of the issue we cannot ignore.

As has been stated earlier, we think the bill before us is inequitable since its primary effect will be to control the wages of working people. From this point of view it is a frightening bill and its effect in limiting raises in wages for the working people is likely to be very powerful. Contracts are negotiated in the open. It is easy to control the salaries of, say, teachers in Toronto or potash workers in Saskatchewan. I predict that the wage control aspect of the program will be firmly carried out.

I am concerned about the danger the bill poses to the collective bargaining system. In effect, many trade unions will have to negotiate with the anti-inflation board. I draw the attention of the House to a statement which was made, apparently, by Mr. Pepin over the weekend implying that the offer made by the Toronto school board was higher than the anti-inflation board is prepared to permit. Here is the chairman of the anti-inflation board making a judgment before the collective bargaining process has reached a conclusion. He is intervening in a dispute. These are matters that are of concern to the salaried workers of this country.

This bill is one that will quite adequately control the wages and salaries of workers. On the other hand, it will have very little effect in controlling prices, profits, dividends, professional fees and incomes of people derived from investments and corporate profits. To my mind, one of the prime reasons for bringing in this bill is that the government wanted to dampen down increased wage demands.

During the past year, wage demands have been rising. In 1970, wage and salary increases in this country, as a percentage of national income, stood at 72.8 per cent. In the first half of 1974, wage and salary increases, as a percentage of national income, had dropped to 67 per cent. By the end of 1974, there has been a reversal of that trend and wages and salaries started to go up, representing, as a percentage of national income, 69.4 per cent. By mid-1975, wages and salaries represented 70.8 per cent of national income. In other words, wage and salary earners in this country were starting to get more than their fair share of the national economic pie.

At the same time, business profits and interest fell from 21.1 per cent of national income in 1974 to 20.1 per cent by the middle of 1975. That is why I wonder whether this trend in the economy finally prodded the government into bringing in this bill. A spokesman in the 1974 election campaign said that a bill such as this would be very effective in controlling wages and salaries.

Let me go back to the first attempt of the government to bring in an incomes policy. One saw a similar economic pattern developing in Canada between 1969 and 1970. Wage increases were getting progressively higher and higher. Then suddenly an incomes policy was brought in which affected the wage earners more than prices and profits. I should like to quote a statement made in the "International Labour Review" of December, 1973, by one of the commissioners of the former prices and incomes commission of this country in 1969 and 1970, a fellow named George Haythorne, who explained why the first attempt to control incomes in this country was made. He said:

> From 1957 to 1963 the share of Canada's national income going to profits and capital had risen steadily. The situation was reversed in 1964 when labour's share began to rise, a trend which continued until 1970. Given these conditions ... action to stabilize the economy was clearly required.

Here is a commissioner on the prices and incomes commission in 1969 and 1970 saying that because labour's share of the national income was going up, the government had to do something about it. I suggest we are now in the same situation as we were a few years ago. In fact, in the 1974 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), when talking about the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to bring in a 90-day freeze followed by some kind of controls, time and again said that that type of program in essence would be a wage control policy. At this third reading stage I want to put on record a quotation from the Toronto Star which reported a meeting that the Prime Minister had in Timmins on June 28 as follows:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau maintained his onslaught on Conservative prices and incomes restraint policies before a large noon hour crowd here yesterday.
> Mr. Trudeau said the proposed 90-day freeze, followed by up to two years of controls, would take vast numbers of bureaucrats to administer. Even then, it wouldn't work. He said: "You can't freeze executive salaries and dividends because there are too many loopholes to squeeze through".
> Mr. Trudeau said Conservative leader Robert Stanfield had already said he would not freeze the prices of farm produce and fish. He could not freeze the prices of U.S. imports or Arab oil, and he admitted he would exempt housing prices.
> "So what's he going to freeze?", Mr. Trudeau shouted. "Your wages. He's going to freeze your wages."

So here the Prime Minister is talking about a program that is very similar to the program that he announced to the nation on Thanksgiving evening, a program that in essence will freeze the wages of working people. As I have said, it is very difficult to control professional fees and salaries, or profits and prices, or dividends and other forms of investment income. Suddenly there has been a turnabout. A government that was elected primarily because it was fighting against this type of program has now brought in a program of wage controls and so-called controls on prices in Canada. I do not think it is the sort of program that we on this side of the House should let the government get away with.

Experience of this type of program in other parts of the world shows almost every time that wages have been controlled much more effectively than prices. Take the United States, for example. In August, 1971, wage increases in the United States averaged 13.5 per cent across the board. At the end of 1972, wage increases had fallen to 6.4 per cent. There was very effective wage control in the United States. In 1971, wages as a percentage of national income in the United States were 74.5 per cent. In 1975, they had dropped to 72.5 per cent. Once again this illustrates that the controls program brought in by President Nixon was very effective in controlling salaries, the wages of railway workers and other workers in the United States. At the same time, the percentage of national income going to big business went up from 14.6 per cent to 16.2 per cent, once again illustrating that controls on professional incomes and the incomes of the wealthy from dividends, profits, and so on, are by no means so effective as controls on the wages of ordinary people.

There is no rigidly defined method of controlling prices set out in this bill. The regulations will not be published until the bill passes parliament, so we do not know whether the government is really serious about controlling prices. Even if we had prior notification of price increases, once again there are all kinds of problems that are very difficult to solve. For example, in Britain there was a controls program in effect from 1968, to 1970 which required prior notification to their prices board of any price increases. But this did not work. It was terribly impractical.

In Britain the government estimated there were some some three million price changes per year in the period when these price controls were in effect, and over this three-year period there were only 2,162 prior notifications. Out of that number, only 345 were rejected. In percentage terms, only 0.0004 per cent of the price changes in Great Britain were actually held back by the board or changed by the board. This demonstrates it is very difficult to control prices in Canada, whereas it is very easy to control salaries and wages. The real victims of legislation of this sort will not be people who are unionized, but those who do not have a trade union to speak and fight for them when it comes to bargaining for a salary increase.

We have already seen examples in Canada of employers in certain corporations using the guidelines as an excuse for not raising the salaries of the people who work for them above the 8 per cent or 10 per cent level outlined by the guidelines, in spite of the fact that there are exceptions in the guidelines for some working people. I think that is one of the very unfortunate aspects of the bill before us. If I were an employer, I suppose my natural tendency would be the same; that is to say, this is a good reason for not giving my workers an increase in pay. I do not think this is fair and I think it will aggravate even more the disparity in wages and salaries in this country.

Another thing that really concerns me about this bill is the immense power it gives to the anti-inflation board. It gives the members of that board the power to interpret whether a certain cost that goes into the increased price is legitimate. It gives the members of that board the power to make decisions as to whether prices can be held back and what a fair profit is going to be. In other words, it gives the board a tremendous amount of subjective power interpretive in making judgments as to whether to be tough on certain corporations. When that type of power is given to any board, I automatically look to see who makes up the board, what type of people are to hold this power. I ask myself if they are likely to be fair, and is the membership a good balance of the Canadian people, the business community, the senior citizens, farmers and all Canadians? Is it a good cross-section of the people?

In this regard I find that the people on the board, as the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) has suggested, are really "poor" Canadians. They are people who have been involved in the business community as directors of huge corporations. They are people who do not really have any understanding of what it is like to live on a low salary in this country. These people will, naturally, have a certain bias in their approach and they will interpret these guidelines to reflect this bias.

I think the board would be much more effective, and fairer, if its membership reflected more what Canada is really all about. I want to spend a few minutes this afternoon putting on the record some of the background of the people sitting on the anti-inflation board. This is only a very brief sketch or summary of the background of some of them, but these people will have a tremendous impact on the people of my riding and on Canadians right across this country so I think it is only fair to examine the background from which they come.

First there is Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the board. If you examine the background of Mr. Pepin, you will find he has recently been the director of six companies in this country. He has been a director of the Power Corporation of Canada, Limited.

An hon. Member: And a university professor.

Mr. Nystrom: He has been a director of the Canada Steamship Line, Celanese Canada Ltd., Collins Radio Co. of Canada Ltd., Westinghouse Canada Ltd., and Bombardier Ltd. These are corporations in which Mr. Pépin, the chairman of the anti-inflation board, has served as director.

Incidentally, the Power Corporation, which is the largest Canadian corporate conglomerate, seems to have certain ties with the Liberal party. I notice that between 1968 and 1972, for example—it is probably just coincidental that Mr. Pepin was minister of industry, trade and commerce at the time—this powerful corporation received $10 million in federal grants. Here we have Mr. Pepin, with this kind of business contact in his background, as chairman of the board, expected to make decisions that will provide a balance between contolling profits on one hand and the wages and salaries of workers on the other. I noticed the other day that Mr. Pepin's salary will be $54,000.

An hon. Member: No, $40,000.

Mr. Nystrom: Mrs. Plumptre will be getting $40,000, but Mr. Pepin will be getting $54,000 to head up this anti-inflation board. He will be the person telling many people earning $7,000, $8,000, $9,000, $10,000, $11,000, $12,000 and $13,000 to tighten their belts and restrain themselves. After all, Mr. Pepin took a great cut in salary as well. In order to take over the chairmanship of this board, he had to resign his corporate directorships and give up any revenue or income he might get from them. He had to give up his pension as a federal MP and cabinet minister. He can no longer make speeches and charge a fee or stipend for that. He himself said he had to make a sacrifice in only getting $54,000, and it is only fair that the people do the same thing. What hypocrisy!

Things like this make it difficult for the ordinary Canadian, the little guy, to accept seriously the idea that the government wants them to tighten their belts and restrain their attempts to obtain larger incomes for themselves. Mr. Pepin is not the only one on the board who has very strong background connections with the business community. Let us consider the so-called labour representative on this anti-inflation board. That is William Ladyman, a former vice-president of the CLC and also a retired member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. This is the man the government has put on as the representative of labour, the working people of this country.

I find when I look into this man's background that he has had a couple of feet going in opposite directions. For example, in 1966 he became a director of the Polymer Corporation, thus putting one foot in the corporate door. Since then he has put his other foot in by becoming a consultant to the Great West Life Assurance Company. He has also been involved in several other endeavours that are clearly on the side of the corporate or business community. This is a man who does not in any way represent the labour interests of this country.

Then there is Jack Biddell and Harold Renouf. Renouf is a past governor of the Canadian Tax Foundation as well as a director of Associated Accounting Films International, based in New York. Mr. Biddell is president of Clarkson Gordon Ltd., an accounting firm. Earlier this year he made the statement that the government should encourage company and regional unions. Again, I think we have someone here who has a clear bias on the side of corporations and business.

As the remaining members of the board we have Claude Castonguay who has been a very prominent member of Mr. Bourassa's cabinet in Quebec. After he left provincial politics he, too, re-entered the business community as a corporate consultant and picked up a directorship in IMASCO Ltd. Then we have dear old Beryl Plumptre, the former chairman of the Food Prices Review Board. Again, her bias is very clear. She was chairman of the Food Prices Review Board in this country for a long while, but failed to find any excessive profiteering in the food industry. She was able to state that increases in the wages of the working people were primarily responsible for inflation in this country. She also said that marketing boards and government agencies which represent farmers were responsible for inflation.

These people have a clear bias. This board is not balanced at all. It has a clear bias on the side of big business and corporations and I would be very surprised, indeed shocked, if the people on the board in any way tried seriously to control profits and prices in this country. They believe in the free enterprise method. They believe that the making of big profits is a really good thing. They believe that the bigger the profits, the bigger the reinvestment in the economy and the better the economy; that somehow the benefits will trickle down to the people at the bottom. This is the bias they have and I do not blame them for it. If you are to set up an anti-inflation program in this country and have a board to administer the program, surely the membership of that board should reflect all aspects of the Canadian economy. If that were the case, you would not have a single member now on the board representing the same point of view and probably supported by the Liberal party in this country.

Let us look at some of the loopholes in this bill on the price side. There are many loopholes to which no answers have been supplied by members on the opposite side. First of all, price increases will be accepted in general if the cost of producing the product goes up. How do you determine whether these are legitimate costs that are pushing up the prices of products to new levels? How do you police the transactions which go on within a corporation? How do you police what one arm of a corporation may sell to another arm of the same corporation? How do you police Bell Telephone when it deals with some of its subsidiaries?

These are questions which were not adequately answered in the committee. The only answer was that the board will have to make decisions, that it will have to use its best judgment. That is the reason I am concerned about the people on the board. If the board were more reflective of different thoughts, different people and different groups in this country, perhaps we could have a balanced interpretation of the law in respect of this program regarding which we have asked questions. But when all the people have a bias toward corporations, when between them they share many corporate directorships, I am certain the board will reflect that bias when making decisions of this sort.

How will they, for example, deal with the question of foreign ownership? How will they know whether or not a Canadian subsidiary is paying a fair price for something it purchases from its parent in the United States or some other country? How will they do that? Once again they will have to make a decision on the best information they have. I am sure their decision will reflect their bias. Once again may I say that if we had better representation on the board, I would be much more confident concerning the decisions made.

As if that is not enough, there are two exclusions written into the bill. A corporation will be exempt if it has an unusual productivity gain. What is an unusual productivity gain? How does one define that? I am sure the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would define it in a different way than the chairman of the anti-inflation board, Jean-Luc Pepin. There is another exemption for an unanticipated cost development or cost benefit. What the devil is that? What is an unanticipated cost benefit or cost development? Maybe we should hire a psychiatrist or a psychologist to sit on the board so that he can go to all these companies, such as the Power Corporation, Safeways, Loblaws, General Motors or any similar company to determine whether or not their cost benefit was unanticipated. We could have a lot of fun with that.

Once again, we have a board with the people on it now making that decision, and I am sure their definition of unanticipated cost benefit would be different from that of someone representing the working people, the farmers, or someone with a different point of view concerning how the economy should be run. These loopholes in the bill cause me to have a sense of lack of confidence in the government and in the program which has been brought before the House.

Then there are other inequities. We have the half-hearted attempt to control the fees of professional people. It seems to me the only way we can control the incomes of professional people is to tax back at a rate of 100 per cent anything over the maximum increase of $2,400. Many people in this House—including the minister, I believe—have stated that when you control the fees of professional people such as lawyers and doctors, they can get around that by seeing more clients or patients or, in the case of lawyers, by seeing more expensive clients. Even though their fees are frozen, their incomes can still go up by well over $2,400.

There are many dangers involved. In the case of medicine, for instance, the doctor could see his patients for a shorter period of time than usual and therefore perhaps see more patients a day. There is the possibility that the quality of health care in this country could decrease. There is also the hypocrisy and irony of allowing professional people to go above the so-called ceiling of $2,400 a year while working people and ordinary people must remain within the guidelines. If this program is to work, that part of it must be enforced. The government must be prepared to tax back at the 100 per cent rate any income above $2,400. If it is not prepared to do that, why in the devil is there this ceiling of $2,400 in the first place? Either the government is serious about this or it is not. If that is not done, this will be another part of the program which will turn out to be a farce.

Another thing which concerns me is that this year—we have heard very little debate about this—we are holding International Women's Year. Supposedly, as a country, we are trying to remove some of the inequities between men and women when it comes to salaries, working conditions and general treatment right across the country. Any bill that in essence will freeze or control salaries at a certain percentage will widen the inequity. If there is to be a salary increase of 10 per cent, this really means there will be more for someone making a bit more than there would be for someone at the lower end of the salary range.

We know that in general women receive less wages and are paid lower salaries than men. This type of program will freeze that inequity into the law for more years than might have been necessary. Indeed, it will widen the gap in salaries between men and women in Canada. I think in the past year or so there has been an attempt by some employers in this country to narrow the gap between women and men in terms of salaries. If we look at the guidelines which have been brought down, this type of attempt may not be justified or allowed by the anti-inflation board if the increase in the salary of women happens to be above the guidelines laid down.

Another thing that concerns me in the guidelines, because the bill does not really say anything at all except mention the power to control salaries, prices and so on, is that dividends probably will not, in effect, be controlled as rigidly as salaries. Many people have pointed out that dividends will be frozen and have asked what the poor investor will do. I do not think that argument has much credibility. Dividends can be withheld by companies; they can be held back until after the program expires. Also, dividends could be plowed back into the corporation, thus increasing the value of the stocks, bonds or shares of the corporation. Once this program has been terminated, someone could cash in the bonds, stocks or shares and reap a capital gain. That is one way to get around it. Again, that is not fair. It is the person who has the money to invest who will not be affected as greatly as the janitor in your constituency, Mr. Speaker, or the CPR worker in my constituency.

Another thing in respect of this bill which I believe to be hypocritical is that before the bill was brought in, before the Prime Minister's announcement to the cabinet and immediately prior to the Thanksgiving night announcement, senior civil servants, senior executives and deputy ministers in this country received very large salary increases. Some of those increases were over $6,000 a year, on the very eve of the government saying to ordinary Canadians that they should tighten their belts and we must all make sacrifices and restrain ourselves, otherwise there will be real problems in respect of the economy.

Some of the civil servants who were involved in drafting these regulations and the bill received very large salary increases. When that happens, I believe it is very difficult for the ordinary Canadian to take the government very seriously. I think the goal of the government should be to redistribute income in this country and redistribute wealth. The bill before us today will not do that. In essence it will freeze some of the inequities we already have in the economy.

Another concern I have, which I should like to mention briefly, is in respect of government spending. I think all of us in this House would agree there is waste in government, that the government's spending in many areas could be cut back. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) today mentioned that the Prime Minister's office had paid for a very expensive Christmas tree. Then there was the example of the swimming pool and other such waste. Surely many, if not all, of these things could be cut out. There are extravagant contracts which could be cut back. Information Canada and such agencies certainly could be cut back.

I want to say, however, that there are many social programs which should not be cut back. Many of them in Canada should be expanded. These are things the government will have to be very careful about in controlling inflation. Our party has said a number of time that the best way to control inflation in this country is to control the prices of the commodities we produce. Commodities such as oil are already controlled. Let us expand the two-price system to other commodities such as iron ore, nickel and timber. This would be one way of bringing down the inflation rate in Canada.

Another way would be to control interest rates, control financial institutions and control mortgages in Canada. Another thing that could be done would be to control the price of energy. Also, we could do certain things in the area of food, that commodity being one of the greatest targets of inflation. If you had orderly marketing and price guarantees for farmers, there would not be the constant pressure on the price of food in Canada. These are things that could be done and our party has spoken about them often.

I want to say, in closing, that the government will not see its program succeed unless it makes radical changes to it, because in order to succeed the program must have the co-operation of all Canadians. In fact, most Canadians are probably very skeptical of the program. Two of the major parties have spoken against it and the labour movement is opposed to the program, as are many provinces who are asking questions about it. Unless changes are made, the program will not work. Certainly our party cannot support it on third reading.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize for a certain change. The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) was scheduled to speak at this time. Unfortunately, he felt that the inexorable advance of time precluded his waiting long enough to make his speech; he was due to catch a plane in less than an hour's time. He apologizes to the House for not being able to make his speech.

I am also conscious of the fact that this has upset the hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers) who has yielded his place to the hon. member for Don Valley. I was to speak afterwards. It will be possible for the hon. member to follow me, because I do not want to lose my place, having appeared on the roster at this time. I am sure the hon. member for Don Valley would have been interested in participating in the debate at this time. After all, 46 people spoke on second reading, ten of whom were on the government side. The hon. member for Don Valley was precluded from speaking. We will have the benefit of his views at some other time on this subject, because he will be out in western Canada tomorrow.

We have reached the stage where the public has been heard, the minister has defended his bill, and the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has had extensive hearings and discussions with the minister and outsiders who made representations with regard to this part of the anti-inflation program. Where do we turn from here? The government proposed certain amendments. The minister did not clarify the position of the government with regard to certain matters. The chairman and vice-chairman of the anti-inflation board appeared before the committee but, frankly, they left us puzzled for the simple reason that they were asked questions about problems for which they have no solutions yet. There will be some very rough justice in certain areas, but undoubtedly with experience they will be able to fashion certain rules and regulations which will make it easier for the people to accept the program or, conversely, will scuttle the program if too many exceptions are made.

The problem here lies, I would say, in the total policy of the government. Let me try to put the story together. The government's absolute opposition to controls as one means of attempting to curb inflation back in 1974, and even in 1972 when inflation was much less rampant than it is now, is incomprehensible. My colleagues, particularly the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), indicated that there had been palpable dishonesty with the Canadian public in 1974—and that is true.

I could underline the great crime that was committed by the Liberal party in 1974 with regard to inflation and trying to blacken the program of controls. They did a masterful job in Ontario when the NDP aided and abetted them to the point of almost annihilating themselves because they came up with the Prices Review Board with the power of roll-back which obviously applied to wages as well. It could not do anything else but that, and therefore it was wiped out. Then a mere 13 months later we saw the government in a panic with regard to inflation, deciding to warm up the idea of controls. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said many times, this was always the ultimate weapon, the ultimate defence. While attacking it as being unworkable, it was still to be the ultimate defence.

How the Canadian public was bamboozled into accepting the program, I fail to understand. In my part of the world there was never any hesitation as to what the controls were to be, but the people feared inflation more and they were prepared to accept controls. Certainly they were not a hidden factor in the election. Now, having reached this point, why has the Prime Minister not been present at this debate to defend his complete change?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He was so free with his ridicule, not only of the program but of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and his economic program. All those on the other side ridiculed the idea. Now we have their version of income, rent and wages controls, but who do we hear at this stage, after the examination? Undoubtedly we will hear from the minister, but what about his parliamentary secretary? He is a genial character, well liked by federal members on the committee. I would like to hear the hon. member from Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel) defend this program.

Where is the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray)? Where is the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik)? Will they be here to defend this bill on third reading, or will they be part of a mute majority—

Mr. Béchard: Why are you so mad, Marcel?

● (1720)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): —who are going to emphasize the type of, shall we say, mulish conduct which we saw at the beginning of the committee hearings? There was an absolute refusal to consider opposition amendments. There are some good lawyers among hon. members opposite, and I know the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) knows what clause 20(8) means—that in the full analysis the powers in clause 20(8) are as great as even those contained in the War Measures Act of five years ago.

What happened to the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner)? Where is the former minister of finance in the total picture? Incidentally, he is not out of town or on some government mission. In representing his constituency, this is a program with which he should deal. I should like to hear from the man who is the resident member of the constituency of the district in which I live in Ottawa. My neighbours would also like to know what he has to say about the government's proposals to deal with economic consequences, over which he presided.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He is the man who was responsible for the economic policy of this country for three years. What has he to say, and why is he not here helping and advising his colleagues? He has a tremendous amount of knowledge. He knows more facts about the economic situation in this country than any other man in this House with the possible exception of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). Why is he not here to advise the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) or the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Cyr)?

[Translation]

The member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine because he might benefit from the advice of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) in that regard. But there is as always a conspiracy of silence.

[English]

I am told that when the word went out to take down from the shelf the plan for the ultimate defence, government officials, particularly those in the Department of Finance, soon realized that if they were going to implement a system of controls the first step would have to be a freeze, but on hearing the word "freeze" the Prime Minister—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): "Froze."

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, froze in consternation because within a year he would be adopting the economic program of the Leader of the Opposition which he had so ridiculed the year before. That was too strong even for the elastic, shall we say, conscience of the Prime Minister; therefore we did not have a freeze. That word was banned; that aspect was cut out of the program.

Then, however, we had the spectacle of the chairman of the anti-inflation board and the vice chairman, and hon. members of the House who are members of the finance committee, including the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa, will readily remember how Mr. Pepin and Mrs. Plumptre said that of course it would have been preferable by far to have had a freeze, because everything is now running away from them; they are under pressure and they do not know how to bring the situation under control. That is the story behind this program. I believe that a properly instituted program of controls is one thing that should have been instituted long ago to deal with inflation.

I am not going to go into the other aspects of inflation. This is not a debate on dealing with total inflation in this country; it is a debate on Bill C-73 dealing with the government's proposals with regard to controls. I also assert, because it was part of the proposition I put forward in 1974, that in addition to a freeze there should be a period of 18 months to two years for the establishment of appropriate controls in the various aspects of the economy. There would then be no feature which could really escape, because a study of the problem indicates that if you touch rents or those things which go into determining rents such as taxes, utilities and labour costs for maintenance have to be frozen; otherwise the whole thing becomes nonsense. The effect spreads all through the total economy, and the sooner it does, the better for the country.

There would have been some rough edges. But, after all, the malady is so serious that the remedy which must be taken must be Draconian. Also, it must be seen that the government means what it says and that everyone is included. There must be a mobilization of every individual in the country in order to achieve the desired end. I did not want to talk about inflation, but people on limited and lower incomes should be the first to endorse this type of program because it would serve to protect their rapidly diminishing incomes and holdings, whatever they may be, through double-digit inflation. Yet we hear people trying to encourage them to knock such a program on the head, telling them that this is only good for those people who have economic power.

Mr. Blackburn: Right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is totally wrong. The people who will be helped by these controls are those who are otherwise helpless. Those who wield an economic crunch will be contained. People who belong to strong unions are in the same category as a strong, shall we say, industrial association.

Mr. Blackburn: Strong law societies?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, absolutely.

Mr. Blackburn: They are going to suffer?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, they are.

Mr. Blackburn: Oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member knows so much about this legislation, he should get to his feet later and debate this point.

Mr. Blackburn: I will.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): All right. We have another person who will participate. I wish to discuss some other difficulties with regard to these proposals, certainly the interpretation by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) with regard to professional salaries and incomes, that they can be contained merely by a figure of $2,400. However, the professional going from an articled student to a practising lawyer is not just producing that many more bricks. What about a doctor going from residency into practice, or from a salaried position to that of a partner in a group practice, or an architect who does the same, or a consulting engineer? I invite hon. members to read the brief of the association of consulting engineers. They point out some problems. It may be very nice to kick at their incomes, but they are the doers. They are the people who put the packages together to make it a certainty that down the line people will be working.

Mr. Blackburn: How do you make combines without workers?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Consulting engineers are the ones who have to be encouraged to make the economy turn. It is not the man with the shovel who makes the economy move; it is the man who makes the proposal, who puts the package together and who undertakes the risk, whether he is assisted by government or otherwise, to produce goods and services.

● (1730)

How does the construction industry work? All the thousands of people working in the construction industry are not all working on Olympic Games sites, or Mirabels. How many are working on apartment buildings? Today the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) told us that the building of apartments in this country is coming to a stop. At the same time, in places like Regina there is a zero vacancy rate. That prompts the question, why do rents go up? Obviously, because there is a shortage of apartments. Why is there a shortage of apartments? We are given a multiplicity of reasons, including some shallow ideas with regard to the environment, the quality of living and the influence of people who belong to certain little reform groups, made up mostly of tenants with no stake in the area in which they live because they are transients. However, no apartments are going up.

Then people start to wonder why key money must be paid; why all sorts of prices go up. Naturally they go up; there is a scarcity. It is the same with the workman who is in great demand. Will he not say, "Sure, I can get along on $5.50 an hour, but if they offer $7.50 an hour across the street, that's where I will go." He maximizes his return. It is good for him that he does that, but is also good for the other fellow.

The anti-inflation board realize there are difficulties. Mr. Pepin has said, even before the board has held any hearings, that he is having nightmares about some of these problems. Yes, he can see the difficulty. The settlement with regard to the Post Office presumably will be at 39 per cent. On the other hand, the day before that settlement the anti-inflation board told the Toronto secondary school teachers to go home, as the school board's offer of 39 per cent—I am putting the matter purely in percentage figures—was too great for the school board to pay and well beyond the guidelines.

It is the percentages that stick in the craw, no matter whether the settlement is for one, two or three years. People see the figure being offered by way of increase. They see that the 39 per cent offered by the metro Toronto school board to its teachers was insufficient for the teachers and led to a strike. If 39 per cent in the case of the teachers is beyond the guidelines, what can one say about the settlement with regard to the Post Office workers? What can one say about it, if it is 39 per cent? With regard to this matter, I think many editorial writers and commentators both inside and outside this House are engaging in demagogic appeals to baser instincts when making such comparisons in percentages.

There is also the question of marketing boards. Are they, or are they not, covered by the guidelines? The hon. member for Windsor West, a copy of whose speech of November 17, delivered in Calgary, I have in my possession, said something about marketing boards. I quote part of his speech as follows:

> At the recent national Liberal convention, the Prime Minister said, in part—

He quoted the Prime Minister as follows:

> We are coming in with . . . guidelines applicable to everyone, because we are asking everyone to show this sense of co-operation on which our society is built . . . and even those we hope we don't have to control by the force of law, we are asking them to co-operate with us voluntarily.

That is the end of the quotation attributable to the Prime Minister. The hon. member went on to say:

> These words like those of the Minister of Agriculture in St. Jacobs, Ontario, could imply to some at least that the guidelines—that is, the rules for acceptable price and salary increases—would apply to farmers but would not be enforced against them by the compulsory selective controls provided for in Bill C-73. However, what does the government's own policy statement—the white paper—actually say about this? On page 18 it says "prices received by farmers and fishermen are exempt from the guidelines."
> And at a meeting of the finance committee on October 30, the Minister of Finance referring to that white paper which he, himself, had tabled in the House, said "That is the one I go with."

The speech continues:

> You can see why I say some clarification by the government would be helpful so that we would know whether the words of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture reflect current policy or whether the words I have quoted from the white paper still apply.
> The Minister of Agriculture appeared to say in the House that marketing boards are covered by the guidelines. He also said at that time that "they cannot inflate prices beyond a fair level because the National Farm Product Marketing Council is the watchdog over national marketing boards and there are representatives of consumers, producers and business on the present council which demands that prices paid to producers be based on the cost of production and the reasonable return for their investment."

I quoted extensively from the speech simply to show the complexity of the problem. When ordinary citizens, farmers and other producers ask whether marketing boards are going to be caught by the guidelines, one minister says yes and another no. But the anti-inflation board representatives think marketing boards should be included.

I have raised certain problems. If a marketing board is caught by the guidelines with regard to the prices it is going to charge at the next level, say to the wholesaler or retailer, that marketing board will make felt the controlled price at the stage ahead. In other words, the producer will then find the marketing board saying, "Look, prices are fixed; that is all we have to pay you, all we can pay you, and it is what we are going to pay you." The farm gate has always been open. I could never understand that you could not get behind the farm gate or into the fisherman's dory. Certainly, the marketing board will do that.

I raise another question. Does this government want to allow the anti-inflation board to monitor food prices to the same extent as was being done by the Food Prices Review Board? As former minister of consumer and corporate affairs, the hon. member for Windsor West said in the speech referred to:

> If so, it should say so clearly and make any necessary changes in the guidelines and legislation now under study without delay. If it does not want the new board to have this kind of authority it should explain why such authority was considered necessary and desirable prior to October 14, but is no longer necessary and desirable since that date, although food prices continue to be an area of concern for Canadians generally.

As I say, the author of those words was the hon. member for Windsor West. I have alluded to some problems and I now raise the question of requests for exemptions. The government has received requests for exemptions from teachers' federations, from the Canadian Teachers' Federation, the Ontario Teachers' Federations, this group and that, professionals and others. I hold in my hand a brief from the Association of Consulting Engineers. They ask for certain exemptions. This is happening all the way through the economy, and herein lies one of the problems which we must recognize.

Having said that, I say that certain features of this legislation I cannot find acceptable, one being the blank cheque parliament is being asked to write. The government wants this program to continue to December 31, 1978, or after the date of the next election which would be the time of accounting to the public. It could end on a date fixed earlier, but I do not think that will happen. There is a provision whereby the government, with a majority, could pass an order in council extending the program for one, two or three years. There could be a debate, but with a government majority it could pass.

In addition, as indicated by some of my colleagues previously, there is the question of the government's entry into or interference with all lines of business. At one time the Prime Minister said that the government has no place in the bedrooms of the nation. However, with this bill and other proposals the government will have the right to live in and share every boardroom in the country, every manager's office, the office of every business. It has the right of access and to share in the offices of any union.

Look at the powers that are incorporated in this bill. Are they subject to review by this House? No. Orders in council will have to be passed and, when passed, will be subject to examination by the committee on statutory instruments. However, that committee cannot reject any order in council that is passed according to the terms of legislation. No matter how outrageous it might be, provided there is no legal contravention, no order in council can be rejected. That is a pretty safe wicket.

Looking at the powers given to the administrator, there is a limited appeal. Ultimately, although I am not sure of this, perhaps on a point of law there might be an appeal to the Federal Court, but only on a point of law. It is all made to order for a very, very tight system.

I again quote the Minister of Finance who said that the system being set up was frightening. Of course it is. It is one of the most frightening things we could have under peacetime conditions. I am astounded at the equanimity with which it is being accepted. That is point number two to which I object strongly in the bill. I object even more to clause 20 than to the terminal date.

One other reason why I do not think this should get our support is that the government has been preaching and laying down guidelines for everybody. There is an eight plus two plus two limit on salaries. There are freezes on prices. With the co-operation of the provinces there will be controls on rent. However, there is not a thing that says the Government of Canada must impose or follow any guidelines on its own. It imposes guidelines on municipalities, crown corporations and otherwise, but not for the Government of Canada.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

My colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), introduced an amendment to limit the government to its own stated guidelines and the declarations of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien). The government of course defeated that. It said it was unacceptable, impossible to follow or even accept.

Basically a program of controls is a very useful tool for fighting inflation as we know it today. However, having said that, it depends upon the type of controls, the types of problems that are left unanswered, the period of control that is being sought, and the powers that are being sought from parliament.

The more I sit in this House the more I am amazed at the cabinet coming before this House asking for more and more powers. If they are not powers for the cabinet, they are powers for a bureaucracy. In many instances it has reached the point where this House is nothing but a pale and weak rubber stamp. Somehow or other, such is the feeling.

Government members feel they must support government. They feel they must support cabinet. Their reaction is supine. They act like jellyfish. They are wet noodles. But in private, some have very serious objection to and concern about some of these things. I am talking very seriously to government members as well as to my own colleagues who often are quite prepared to accept this—the motto may be efficiency. However, in the name of efficiency more than one bootheel has been put on the neck of the citizenry. There is administrative efficiency, a close cousin to convenience.

The other day there was a $1 item before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates to validate a whole program to set aside some requirement of one of the basic acts. The financial administration of this country was being numbed by a $1 item in the Appropriation Act. No one outside government circles understands where and how this can be done, but for the initiates the minister said this was a very useful shorthand. However, that is the danger. Sometimes those in the press gallery, the editorial boards, and the academics feel that this House is slow. It does not move as fast as they would like. They feel that once having made up their minds, it is not necessary for anyone else to speak. The preservation of parliament, this House and the other, and its rights and powers, and the curtailment of executive power will continue to be the main guarantee for Canadians over the years.

We are dribbling out our birthright. Sometimes this is by handfuls. At other times, it is as thin as a slice of salami. But forever it is going out. Over the years, and I have been here for more than 18, I have seen the control over financial expenditure go away from this chamber. Parliament no longer has control over the purse strings of government. It is an absolute farce to say that parliament controls the purse strings. It does not.

The charade of studying estimates is a good example of how to keep government and opposition backbenchers busy. The public does not know what is going on because the press representatives do not attend committee meetings. Therefore they do not write about them. However, when we are studying estimates, members scurry about like frantic ants, attending 18 or 19 meetings on a Tuesday or Thursday. That is not worth one iota in so far as control of the purse strings by parliament is concerned because, under the guise of efficiency, of administrative convenience, we have accepted a guillotine not only with regard to the main estimates but the supplementary estimates. The powers of the House are gone.

This bill is in keeping with the demand for the handing over of power to the executive, and to the bureaucracy that stands behind the executive. It is for this reason my colleagues and I, in addition to the provisions in clause 20(8), in addition to the government being unwilling to conform with the guidelines it lays down for others, in addition to the date proposed for its termination, are opposed to this bill.

We voted for the bill on second reading to see what would happen in committee, to see what the public would say, to see whether the government would listen to reason. But our conditions have not been met, and even though I am a great supporter of the idea of economic controls to deal with inflation, though only as part of a total program, I regretfully must vote against this measure on third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to you for allowing me to address this honourable assembly on such an important issue as Bill C-73.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, this legislation deals with the controls of prices and wages. It was introduced after due consideration because of the risks the Canadian economy would be running if no immediate remedy were found for this situation. This policy affects everybody: workers, employers, small businessmen and consumers alike. As a rule, a government policy affects only a very limited sector of our people; on the contrary, a legislation such as this affects most everybody. The decision of this government is the logical conclusion to a great many investigations and studies on the possible and likely consequences of this long and short term spiralling inflation on Canada.

The government is aware that such a price and wage control legislation will leave nobody indifferent. Yet, in spite of everything, the government had to take action and is taking action. Its action is centered on a policy called price and wage control, not price and wage freeze but price and wage control. As far as I am concerned, I admit that I have another expression in mind, namely the wage control and price freeze policy. Later on I will tell hon. members why I prefer and even recommend this expression. For the moment, let me single out some of the reasons which have forced the government to put such a legislation before the House. During last year, inflationary thrusts have scored in the vicinity of 11 per cent, and the forecasts were probably ranging between 15 to 18 per cent.

Those forecasts were rather accurate when referring to the 71 per cent wage increase claimed by the postal worker union, the 45 per cent wage increase claimed by the Ontario teachers, and the same could be said for each one of the next collective agreements. Are those workers to blame who were claiming such high wage increases? I do not think so. Workers were trying to protect themselves against the unknown rate at which inflation could have got. Thus began the inflationary psychosis era. Indeed, the union leader were trying to get wage increases which would make up for very high inflationary thrusts. At the same time, companies drew up new price lists with the worst in mind, and raised prices accordingly. The eternal wheel which was spinning its way towards disaster and the inflationary expectations which had got hold of everybody appeared to be one of the major causes of inflation. I remember two or two and a half years ago, when prices were just beginning to rise more sharply, people were very much affected by each rise. Let us take for example the price of milk which rose by about 5 cents a quart. There was a wave of protest among consumers at that time. And the newspapers seized the opportunity to denounce the increase and predict a national disaster. At the same time, the price of a loaf of bread rose by 3 or 4 cents. Again people were indignant. Since then, the wheel of price increases has spun a great deal, because the problem is now worldwide.

There is a strange phenomenon which arises from this worldwide problem. People are so used to hear about wage increases and price increases all the time that they have resigned themselves to inflationary increases, and I would even say that they accept them. And it is precisely this acceptance which I call inflationary expectations. As proof of this for about six months, prices have risen staggeringly, but people no longer argue; they know what the cause is: inflation. And it is precisely this attitude that makes the lack of price controls extremely dangerous because businesses can raise their prices even inconsistently without any objection from the consumers who are paying.

In analysing those statistics, one also notes another very serious factor. Last year, indeed, wage increases in Canada reached 18 per cent. For the same period, they reached 9 per cent in the United States, and 8 per cent in Germany.

● (1800)

It must also be kept in mind that the United States make up 70 per cent of our import and export trade. Was it known that Canada won a silver medal last year? And, mind you, it was not at the Olympics. Indeed, Canada run second for the largest number of strikes to its credit. That world competition was won by Italy by the way. I think those facts are extremely important, all the more as we, Canadians, believe that we are among the best workers in the world, particularly among the most productive. Yet, when one considers the fantastic number of man-hours lost in this country, one realizes that the time has come to ask serious questions. Besides, one of the main causes of inflation in Canada is precisely the lack of productivity.

Several unions are now trying to demonstrate that salary increases are not a cause of inflation. They should indeed be more responsible than that and understand that salary increases are an integral part of the causes of such inflation. They are certainly not the only ones, of course.

The increased cost of raw materials, increased administrative costs, the lack of productivity and many other factors are also part of it. However, the responsibility or the role of salary increases should not be minimized. When it is known that in service industries 70 per cent of the expenditures incurred represent salaries, this means that every 10 per cent salary increase results in a 7 per cent increase in service costs. So, one must really be blind to suggest that salary increases in Canada are in no way a cause of the inflation facing this country.

I will now deal with the matter I raised at the outset, the reason of my preference for the title "Wage control and profit freeze" rather than "Price and wage controls". I mentioned "wage control" because the government allows salary increases up to 12 per cent, or a maximum of $2,400 a year. Which is not a freeze but a control that I find reasonable. As to companies with 500 employees or more, or 20 employees or more in the case of building industries, we are dealing not with profit control but actually with a profit freeze. In fact, the anti-inflation act allows no increase in profits for those companies. The only thing they are allowed to do is to raise their prices by an amount equal to their cost increases, which is to say that they are not allowed to increase their benefits.

I shall explain the consequences of the measure by giving you a simple example. A manufacturer produces shoes at a cost of $10 a pair, and sells them at a 20 per cent profit, that is to say for $12. Let us exaggerate a bit, to make the example that much more striking, and assume that production costs increase from $10 to $12. Without the anti-inflation act, the company, keeping a 20 per cent profit margin, would then sell those shoes for $24. However, because of the new act, the company will be entitled to a gross profit, not of $4 per unit but of $2, as was the case when its shoes cost $10 to produce. You will note, through that example, that profits are in fact being frozen and not controlled. On the other hand, the fact must be accepted that all companies will not come under this act.

As a matter of fact, as I said earlier, only the firms which have more than 500 employees on their payroll are included in this legislation. Therefore a certain number of firms could increase their prices beyond the standards set by Bill C-73. However, it should be noted that in this legislation there is one clause which gives the Anti-Inflation Board the power to order that some firms with fewer than 500 employees can become subject to this legislation. Why then did the government specify in the legislation that it included only the firms with more than 500 employees? The fact is that 60 per cent of Canadian productivity derives directly from these firms. Moreover, it is extremely easy for the board to control these companies, and this with a minimum staff because these large corporations have a very efficient accounting system.

This system is adequate, not to meet the needs of the government or of the Minister of National Revenue but to protect the shareholders. In these companies headed by a board of directors, the directors are elected for one year. If they did not have very adequate control or accounting systems, it would become easy for these directors to defraud the real owners, namely the shareholders. Most of those companies also have cost price systems. The executives know the exact cost of each item they produce or the total cost for a group of items. These are the reasons for my saying that the Anti-Inflation Board will be able to control corporate prices in a very efficient manner and with a small staff. That is why I am not afraid to tell those who try to imply that such measures will be inefficient that they deceive people for egoistical purposes. It is precisely to allow the government to make an efficient control that the companies with fewer than 500 employees were excluded.

Several union leaders say that the import prices, which represent 30 per cent of the expenditures of Canadians, will not go down. On that point, I agree with them to some extent. Indeed, if U.S. inflation goes on eroding their economy, certainly the price of their products will go up proportionally and Canada will feel that increase. Yet, let us not forget that last year, wage increases in the United States were only 9 per cent, while in Canada they amounted to 18 per cent, as I said earlier. This means that the price of products imported from our neighbours will be lower. And even if the increases were higher than expected, Canadian industries and labour will benefit, because those products will be manufactured right here in Canada, instead of our having to import them and I am sure this would substantially contribute to the elimination of unemployment.

Last fall, I was delegated to the NATO economic commission. The representatives from the Federal Republic of Germany told us that one of the reason they had a low inflation rate was their labour union system. Indeed Germany has only one union per industry. If we had the same system here, there would be only one postal workers' union, one for Air Canada and so forth. This would result in an overall improvement of our economy, I am sure of that. Let me elaborate a little. Let us consider the mess due to our labour unions. When the letter carriers are on strike, mail sorters cannot work and moreover all Canadians must contribute to paying them unemployment benefits. The postmen's strike is over and now the inside workers are settling their collective agreement. They are also on strike and what is more ridiculous, as the postmen are unable to work, they are entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. This is why a single union in each economic sector would probably eliminate from 50 to 60 per cent of our strikes.

I will make a second suggestion, Mr. Speaker. When a strike is considered in any kind of private or public undertaking, a secret vote should be compulsory. I think that we are well aware of the unorthodox procedures used to compel people to vote according to the whim of union leaders.

In addition, the Department of Labour should control the counting of the secret vote, to make sure that the results are true by appointing employees to see that every operation is carried out according to law and order. I think that such procedure would liberalize the union movement, because I feel that a vote by a show of hands is anti-democratic and often removes individual freedom.

The government should also prescribe standard forms of financial reports to Canadian labour organizations. Indeed, acts passed by Parliament gave unions some taxation power, which means that all employees of one company, whether they are willing or not, are imposed union dues which are levied at the source, from their pay, in exactly the same way provincial or federal taxes are collected.

When municipalities were given the power to tax, many requirements were included allowing constituents to be informed of how much was spent and where their money went. On the other hand, unions were invested with taxation power without any obligation to account in detail for their expenditure. Consequently, we can see under the heading "other", expenses of $2 million, $3 million or even $4 million in financial reports of Canadian unions. Do you not think that unions members who mandatorily pay their dues are entitled to ask for clear and precise financial reports and judge whether those expenditure are allowed for their own needs? In brief, how do union leaders administer these funds?

To conclude, I would like to draw the attention of all to a very important point. Even though this anti-inflation law is about to be passed and the majority of the business concerns will comply with it, yet we must not delude ourselves. Some concerns will try to get around it, in addition to all those with fewer than 500 employees which do not come under this law. For this reason, it is our responsibility to see that these concerns control their profits in a reasonable way.

Therefore, I ask people not to buy the products whose price is exorbitant, and to inform the Anti-Inflation Board. We may be sure that those who manufacture those products will get the message quickly.

Let us all work together and the results will be positive for the greatest benefit of all.

[English]

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to intervene in this debate in the House on Bill C-73 which, in my opinion and the opinion of my party, is one of the most powerful pieces of legislation that has ever been introduced. Perhaps second only to the Emergency Measures Act introduced, I believe, during World War I.

At the outset let me say I feel at this time in the debate, as we are drawing to the close of third reading, it is rather unfair, to say the least, of the government to expect us in opposition to, shall I say, buy a pig in a poke. We have a bill which in one respect gives the Anti-Inflation Board extreme powers in a democracy. There are no regulations as yet. Nothing has been firmed up, but the government is saying we should pass the bill and then it will give us the regulations.

My party wishes to continue this debate as long as we can to show the people of Canada that we as a democratic party, and I think I speak for many members on this side, are not prepared to give the government carte blanche without having some assurance that the board itself will be restrained in its use of the dictatorial powers being given in this bill. I think this is one of the most important aspects of this debate.

Government members for obvious reasons are attempting to play down the tremendous power given in this bill. Another reason why we oppose the bill, and there are several, is not an opposition to the fight against inflation, but an opposition to the unfairness of this piece of legislation. It is unfair because the axe does not fall evenly on all sectors of the economy or the working force.

No one is going to convince me that a lawyer, and I am not blaming all lawyers, cannot increase his income next year by 20 per cent or 25 per cent as a result of this bill. The bill includes a productivity clause, and if a lawyer wants to take on more clients or wealthier clients, or gets involved in a $400,000 or $500,000 real estate deal, his income will go up by more than $2,400, without even considering the fee schedule.

I am not saying all lawyers are going to take advantage of this clause, or that all doctors are going to do likewise. I am saying that these people can increase their incomes above the stated amount. Certainly lawyers can in the way I have mentioned, instead of piddling around with $30,000 mortgages. As far as I can determine most doctors are over-worked now. Supposing a doctor does have five patient consulations an hour instead of three, that represents a very significant increase in income.

This is the kind of thing that those on fixed incomes, or those who belong to the trade union movement, or teachers' associations resent. The teachers were here on the Hill today and I spoke to them out front, as did the minister. I congratulate him for having the courage to go out there and face them. They were very militant, and I do not think he had very much to say. But this is the kind of thing that really galls these people because they know any increase they will get will specifically be 8 per cent, plus 2 per cent, plus another possible 2 per cent. What they do not know is how this board, with no regulations so far, is going to govern prices and profits. As long as this doubt remains these people will become more infuriated as the months go by and as we see that prices are not kept in line with wages and salaries.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) may think he has seen some opposition to this bill so far. If it does not work I suggest that he will see a great deal more opposition. I suggest that the bill is not going to work in its entirety, and not even in part. The real trouble will come next spring or summer when people have been required to hold back on wages and salaries but they see prices continuing to rise.

A perfect example of this is the increase in food prices since October 14. Let no one be fooled by this tremendous generosity on the part of four, five, or six major food chains in the country, and I would put "tremendous generosity" in quotation marks. These major food chains have already raised their prices in the last six weeks, and they have already bargained with the processors and distributors so they know they can go easy for 60 days. They are not going to lose any money, and the average consumer is not going to be taken in. Consumers see through this.

Average people are not angry enough yet as the full effects of this powerful, authoritarian piece of legislation have not been felt. But when that occurs, probably in six to eight months, we will see tremendous social discord. We will have groups fighting other groups. This bill will be divisive rather than a bill to bring people together.

Members opposite suggest it is unpatriotic to oppose the bill or not go along with the legislation. I suggest at this time it is the government that is being unpatriotic by forcing various groups to fight other groups. Just this afternoon in the Citizen one newspaperman wrote about planned economic changes. I am not suggesting these have been endorsed by the cabinet, but this is the kind of government restraint we are to see. Governments are among the biggest spenders. What are the cuts they intend to make? Apparently we are going to see three day a week mail delivery. That is one suggestion. There is the elimination of LIP, OFY, CYC, and the phase-out of the science department as well as the end of Information Canada. I do not think that would be a bad move, although it would eliminate some jobs. Then there is the freeze on research spending.

I have heard members from other parties say that the government should trim the fat. People have said it is the fault of the government, and that we must cut down on government spending. This is very dangerous because when we wipe out OFY, LIP, CYC, the science department and so on, this means we are cutting out jobs. If we cut out these jobs what will happen? Is it better to see that these people are employed at a meaningful job so that they will pay taxes, or is it better to lay them off? If they are laid off the chances are that they will not go to private industry, because when there are already 720,000 people out of work the only route they have to follow is through the UIC or through welfare when the unemployment insurance runs out.

If the government is to trim its costs obviously it cannot trim its transfer payments and socially-oriented programs. It must create jobs and good social services. Are we to negate all the best legislation that has been passed in the last ten years and wipe it out because we must trim federal spending? As other members of my party have already stated, the fundamental question concerning this program is whether we have a just approach to dealing with inflation, or an incomes policy. I suggest the two are separated here. Having studied the white paper and the bill, the answer is that the approach the government has adopted is unfair and unworkable. We in this party cannot accept it in any way, shape or form. A few moments ago I alluded to the teachers from Toronto who were demonstrating on the Hill this afternoon.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You spoke to them.

Mr. Blackburn: Yes, I spoke to them. Did you have the guts to speak to them? I did not hear you speak, Joe. To give an idea of how this bill is dividing the country, already when it has not even become law—we have in the city of Toronto elementary school teachers teaching in the junior high school who settled for higher wages than the secondary school teachers teaching in the same junior high school. One might make the argument: what is a degree if one is not a good teacher? All right; I shall not go into that aspect. However, this is dividing the groups of teachers in the city of Toronto.

Also when the teachers in the city of Toronto compare what they have been offered by their board, which the Anti-Inflation Board has knocked down, with what the same teachers make in the city of Ottawa or in Windsor, they say they are all teachers and that they have all put in at least four years at university. In fact this is one of the most highly educated professions in the country as a whole. What is the difference? They are doing the same job, and yet in Ottawa they found that teachers are making $3,000 or $4,000 a year more than they do. It is this kind of unfairness or lack of justice that will badly divide this country. How do I know? It has already happened. I just gave an example. It has brought bitterness to one group of teachers, the teachers in the city of Toronto, because it is unfair. I think we have already proven before the first regulation is brought in that this legislation is unworkable.

It is becoming increasingly evident as time passes that the government in its attempt to secure a lower rate of price inflation has adopted a policy of wage restraint to deal with the matter. In other words, the burden of this program is being placed on the wage earners of the country, particularly the low wage earners. There is no doubt about that. I do not know how anyone who has finished high school, has gone through university, and is now earning $7,800 in the city of Toronto—I admit this is the low end of the scale—can live. I do not know how they can live on $7,800 in the city of Brantford, from where I come.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Pepin seems to think they can, but he gets $50,000.

Mr. Blackburn: Yes, he is a lot more comfortable. He is getting $1,000 a week in the form of a handout from the government.

It now turns out that the Quebec minimum wage was increased 20 cents instead of 32 cents as had been promised a couple of months ago. This is another example of the adverse affect this is having on unity in the country. Again this is very important. They were promised 32 cents and now must settle for 20 cents in respect of the minimum wage in Quebec. Granted the government can argue it is not responsible for Quebec's actions; nevertheless this action in one province is an example of the reason why so many individuals are becoming thoroughly convinced that most wage earners, organized and unorganized, will be the biggest losers once this program becomes law.

This reminds me of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, and this has been mentioned by other members. When he was desperately fighting the 1974 election campaign against wage and price controls he said that the little guy is hurt with wage controls. Now what does he say? So far the Prime Minister has refused to take part in this debate. I would like to suggest he is ashamed and that is the reason he will not take part in the debate. There are not very many hours left, so perhaps someone over there would pass on the word that he should defend this policy before we have a vote on it.

At the outset I stated that we in this party reject this bill in its entirety. To date we have not had satisfactory answers concerning the reason why this particular approach was introduced. If anything has become clear it is that the government adamantly believes that labour is the culprit in the inflationary troubles of today. What are the facts? Mr. Speaker, I think at this point I should call it 6.30.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 6.30 p.m., pursuant to the order made on Wednesday, November 5, 1975, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Blackburn: Madam Speaker, before I called it 6.30 p.m. I was concentrating on the divisive aspects of this bill which pits groups against groups, unions against unions, organizations against organizations, and businessmen against businessmen.

I could give you the example of a small company settling a wage contract of, say, 18 per cent or 20 per cent a week before the anti-inflation bill becomes law, and a similar corporation making the same product being held to the 10 per cent guideline. You can rest assured that the small companies particularly will be fighting it out with the Anti-Inflation Board because one company might have to pay higher labour costs while competing in the same market with another company which does not have to pay those higher costs. As I said earlier, this is an infamous, authoritarian bill which gives the government powers that should not be given to any government in a democracy such as ours.

I would like now to dwell for a few moments on our export situation. I think this is one of the major thrusts of the government's arguments in favour of Bill C-73. I would like to begin by simply asking: are we to accept the statements of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) that Canada's international competitive position and ability to pay its own way in the world are being set back because of our current wage trends?

Statistics Canada reported that on a year to year basis the rate of increase for imported goods was 14.5 per cent and only 7.5 per cent for exported goods. Furthermore, just a few days ago, some five weeks after the introduction of wage and price guidelines, trade figures issued by Statistics Canada showed that sales of finished goods rose 9 per cent in the first ten months of 1975. Thus, despite gloomy warnings that Canada is losing its edge in world markets, the best performance this year is coming from manufacturers. Statistics Canada reported also that exporters of finished goods are now doing better business and making greater inroads into foreign markets than they were last year when economic conditions were far more buoyant.

Based on the above it is no wonder that various groups have been less than exuberant over the ramifications of this program. As I have already said, this package of controls is nothing but wage restraints predicated on the phony assumption that wages have led the way in the inflation spiral.

As I said earlier this afternoon, it is always the low income earners who are blamed for overspending and for inflating the economy. But I wonder how often those in power on the treasury benches—I do not see many of them present—sit back and reflect on two points: one, if you are making $7,500 a year, how in heaven's name can you overspend? I do not know what the national average income is today; it is probably about $10,500 or $11,000. Even then, how can you overspend and create inflation on that? The other point is that these people are bombarded day in day out through the electronic media to buy, buy, and buy. It does not matter what the quality of the article is, what its workmanship is and whether or not you need the damn article—you are told to go out and buy it.

If there is anyone causing inflation in this country, or who has caused it in the last ten years, it is those people who have told everybody to go out and buy. They have psyched them to the point where they are almost reacting like Pavlov's dogs so that they have to go out and buy. But who is reaping the benefits from it? It creates employment, but we get back to the same point again that as it creates employment there are more people to spend money, and we are back in the vicious circle of inflation.

If the infamous Bill C-73 becomes law, who will get it on the head? The guy who has been told to buy, buy, buy. This is the ridiculous aspect of the economy of this country today. I deplore it and I deplore the fact, as I said earlier, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) refuses to take part in this debate, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) said earlier today. He should take part in this debate and give us on this side of the House good reasons for voting for this bill, the regulations pertaining to which have not even been drawn up yet. We do not even know what we are voting for.

In the early stages of this debate some Canadians expressed a degree of satisfaction with the anti-inflation program. I suggest that the reason for this is that the major attraction of any income policy is that it promises—I stress the word promises—price controls as part of the package. But if the promise is a hollow promise and there is no real, effective legislation to back up that promise and to make sure that prices and profits are in fact controlled, then we descend into the area of cynicism, and if there is one thing this country can do without today it is cynicism. That is why I am opposed to this bill. It will create more cynicism. It will not reduce it.

This promise of price controls had to be introduced because the government realizes that wage earners will readily ease off from demanding higher incomes if they are assured that prices will be kept stable. This is a point we have stressed for years. Yet how does this policy operate with respect to prices? We now all know that the guidelines explicitly say that wages cannot rise beyond specific percentage points each year. There are no such specifics in regard to prices, and that, again is what creates cynicism and the divisiveness which will develop from this authoritarian piece of legislation.

Other members of my caucus have gone to great lengths to point out that price increases are taking place in three principal areas: food, shelter, and energy. In fact, of all the inflation we have in this country approximately 65 per cent is in the area of food, shelter, and energy, and it is in these three areas that the controls policy will have little or no effect. I think that is a very important point.

All hon. members of this House no doubt were inundated with calls to their homes and constituency offices regarding the dramatic rise in the cost of food following the introduction of this program. After all, prices can increase to cover increased costs, whatever they might include. We still do not know what increased costs are all about. Only Jean-Luc Pepin knows. He claims he knows for sure. In terms of food costs, people just have to pray that their frozen wages will be enough to cover their increased costs. The advantage is clearly on the side of the corporations which know exactly what their wage costs will be. They can plan now. They know the limits. The limits are there, thanks to the Liberals, and thanks to the government.

I wish to make one last point regarding food costs. All of us have noticed the full page ads which major food chains have taken out since their announced 60 day price freeze on November 21. I alluded to this earlier in my address late this afternoon. One such ad reads, and I quote, "Loblaws freezes prices." William Sherman, president of Loblaws, says in the ad that this action is being taken in, and I quote "recognition of the consumers' growing concern over food price inflation." I love that.

Before consumers embrace the Christmas good will of all the food chains, they should keep this in mind: as reported a few nights ago food chain spokesmen stated that, and I quote, "There is a standard industry practice involving private agreements between the stores and their suppliers." In other words, chains such as Loblaws will not have to absorb price increases until mid January because pre-bargaining with their suppliers will cost the food chains virtually nothing. William Sherman said, and I quote, "many suppliers have already taken their increases, and we requested that there be no increases during December." Big deal—60 days!

Mr. Nystrom: That is the Christmas spirit.

Mr. Blackburn: Therefore the risk to chains such as Loblaws, Steinberg's and other major chains is minimal. What happens after 60 days? Can we count on good corporate gestures come January or February? I doubt it very much.

As I said this policy, and this program, do not apply to the key elements in the cost of living. Since wage bargaining takes place in the open, and since any increase is subject to stringent regulations, the government can make wage restraints stick. It is a very simple thing. We have heard that many times before in this House, and I do not hesitate for a moment to repeat it tonight. As long as we have the democratic right to keep talking against this bill, we on this side of the House will keep talking against it.

Price decisions, on the other hand, are not as easily identifiable. Here again my colleagues have cited numerous examples of the inability to pin down what constitutes increased costs. Thus far we have had no comprehensive statements on how costs will be monitored. The Federation of Independent Businessmen cited several examples of how large corporations can hide their profits. For example, General Motors in Canada sees that profits for the coming year will increase appreciably. The head office in the United States then proceeds to charge the Canadian subsidiary higher management fees. In effect, G.M. of Canada faces higher costs, and the consumer is left with having to pay those costs—not General Motors, but the people who buy G.M. cars.

The only impression with which consumers are left is that price controls are merely a symbolic gesture in the incomes policy. It is not extraordinary then that groups such as the CLC, QFL, the National Council of Welfare, and the anti-poverty organization, to name a few, have condemned this national belt tightening campaign. Prices in key elements of the economy will not even be touched, and this the government admits and has admitted.

Aside from food costs, which I have already mentioned, energy costs to the average consumer will be up this year. In fact they are going up right now. Because of the government's excise tax, it will cost more to drive. Because of the government's changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act, those on lower incomes will have to pay higher premiums proportionately. Because of the government's inaction in the housing industry, houses will not be available to most Canadians who are looking for housing this year.

In this program the average consumer is being told that it is he and his wages which have to be restrained. Workers are becoming increasingly disenchanted with what they see happening. The current rate of inflation in Canada is 11.3 per cent and, if this situation does not change, workers' real incomes will fall by about 1.3 per cent. Again, keep in mind that inflation in 65 per cent of a family's costs will not be controlled. I am talking about food, shelter, and those other basic commodities such as clothing and so on.

The Minister of Finance has made much of the fact that this policy is designed to benefit those worst off in society. Nothing, in my opinion, could be further from the truth. What this program does, by means of everyone being entitled to receive the same percentage increase, is to freeze the present situation. Granted, those on lower incomes are being given a measly $750, if they can get it. There is no guarantee. The folly of this was exemplified, as I said earlier this afternoon, by Quebec's actions, to which I referred earlier. The power to obtain any sizable increase—that is, to those on low or fixed incomes—rests with the provincial governments, and if one is treated in the fashion with which Quebec has treated its people, I suppose that is tough. I think this is an important point. I have not raised it before.

The Government of Canada could use this bill in a very effective way to begin to narrow the gap between the rich and the poor. If it wanted to use this bill, it could say, for example, that anyone earning less than $11,000 or $12,000 per year would be exempt from the guidelines. From there on the percentage increase in income would decline, so that by the time a person reaches $24,000 per year he receives no increase, regardless of productivity. However, the government will not use the bill in this way, and I suggest that the reason it will not is that it is still tied in with the old Manchester school, the old nineteenth century school. Economists of the nineteenth century thought there was no ceiling to an income one can earn, provided you scratched your way up over people's backs, even your mother's back. They thought the sky was the limit to incomes.

Where does that philosophy lead us? Look at the major cities of the United States, that great land of free enterprise, and their skyscrapers. My God, what has bigness brought that country—nothing but misery, social distress, crime, hatred, bitterness, class against class, people against people, organization against organization. I suggest that this bill will help to contribute to that kind of social psychology in this country, and for that reason I oppose it.

There is no doubt in my mind that low-paid workers will not be better off under this program. On the other hand those on the other end of the scale will do very well. Dividends will not be controlled because companies will be able to increase dividend payments to obtain capital on the stock market. Furthermore, dividends will be paid out to the owners of corporations after this policy ends. In other words, dividend payments may be deferred. This suggests, Madam Speaker, that we shall witness in the next few years a redistribution of wealth, not from the rich to the poor, but in favour of the rich and powerful.

Probably the strongest condemnation of this type of program came from the Prime Minister himself, when he said about 18 months ago that you can't freeze executive salaries and dividends because there are too many loopholes to squeeze through. Meanwhile the Prime Minister has turned 180 degrees. Now he says we must have controls, although 18 months ago he was desperately courting votes with exactly the opposite policy. No wonder he will not enter the debate. He has not the nerve to come to this House and explain why he changed his mind. During the election the Prime Minister said that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), for whom I personally, and my party have a great deal of respect, would not freeze prices of farm produce. But this 1975 program will not do this either. The Prime Minister went on to say that prices of United States imports and of Arab oil would not be affected. I ask, what is left to control?

Mr. Rodriguez: Wages.

Mr. Blackburn: Yes, wages and salaries are left. They are the only component which can be controlled effectively. The Prime Minister and cabinet realized this a year ago, and I suggest, Madam Speaker, the same is true today.

The government had to do something to prove that only it could provide the leadership this country needed, indeed has demanded for 18 months but has not received. Madam Speaker, this is not the kind of leadership Canadians expected. The government ought to have known that the program it introduced would not be accepted by the majority of workers. As my colleague from Regina-Lake Centre said in a speech last week, many workers, union people included, voted for the government on the assumption they were voting against controls as advocated by the official opposition, those very same types of controls we face today.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There is a difference, you know.

Mr. Blackburn: This program is somewhat different, I admit. But how does the government explain its introduction now, considering it was totally opposed to any controls?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is the point.

Mr. Blackburn: And the government is asking us to buy its program, even though the regulations have not been written. I wonder if any democracy is left in this House. We, on this side of the House, represent more voters who voted in the 1974 election than the Liberals do. Yes, we represent more Canadian voters; but what is happening in this House? An unacceptable bill is being forced down our throats, and we can do nothing about it. Do you call that democracy? I am beginning to wonder what this game is all about.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn: I recall the Prime Minister saying about four and a half years ago that, 500 feet off the Hill, we are all a bunch of nobodies.

An hon. Member: That includes you.

Mr. Blackburn: Let me tell hon. members opposite that the people who are more than 500 feet away from this House are somebodies, and they are fed up with the way this country is being run. I want to say many more things, but I see that my time is nearly up.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Keep going.

Mr. Blackburn: I am tired of listening to rhetoric from the other side couched in technical terms, rhetoric which merely hides a lack of knowledge, lack of understanding, and lack of concern for our people. Yes, we are concerned about inflation. NDP members in this House are concerned about inflation. We do not oppose the fight against inflation, but we do oppose the unfairness of the bill.

As I suggested earlier, the government could make this legislation more fair if only it would listen. But it only listens when it is in a minority, not when it has a majority. When the government was in a minority and was scared, it listened very well. If only the government would listen it could make this bill more equitable. We could distribute wealth more fairly. But the bill will not be used for that—no, that is not the purpose of the bill. It is easy to control incomes, but virtually impossible to control year-end profits. One need not talk in terms of increases in unit costs. Corporations need not worry about that. They only need to average out their profits at year end, and dividends can be paid in one year, or 18 months, etc.

For the people of this country, this bill does not represent equity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member may continue only if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Benjamin: Joe Guay said no. We will remember that, Joe.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, as I rise to participate in this debate I wonder where the government is leading the Canadian people. We realize that parliament must attempt to control inflation. After all, it is the country's governing body. Eighteen months ago my party had the foresight to recognize problems we should encounter, and we put a program of action before the Canadian people. Hon. members opposite put forward a different policy; I suggest that any who did not agree with their leader's position at that time should stand up now and say so.

My party told the Canadian people that we were facing serious economic problems; but hon. members opposite said that was not so, that there was no danger. Actually the Liberal candidate who ran against me said in the election campaign, "If this is inflation, give me more of it." Madam Speaker, unfortunately we have more of it, much more.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Where is he now, in the Privy Council office?

Mr. Towers: Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, we are all suffering from the negative attitude the government showed in the election. If government members would have had Canada's well-being at heart, they would have gone along with us. They should have had the foresight. If not, they should not be governing this country. It is as simple as that.

● (2030)

We must now ask ourselves why we are in this condition. Why the about-face of the government? As stated this afternoon by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), just two weeks prior to the announcement of October 13 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated that he had no intention of embarking on price controls. He said they were not necessary. Why the change in two weeks? I wish the Prime Minister were here to give us that answer. He is the only one who knows. I do not criticize members opposite on this because I am sure they do not know.

The Prime Minister made this decision on his own. I certainly have some misgivings about why he made it. Was it because of the resignation of his Minister of Finance? Why else did that minister depart in the middle of the Ontario election? It certainly was not planned that way. Only two days later that minister was seen over national television in the company of the leader of the Ontario Liberal party.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member is straying from the motion.

Mr. Towers: I am sorry, Madam Speaker. I apologize. What I am trying to do is to analyse why we are in this position at this time. The Prime Minister is not here to answer our questions. That is why I wonder why we are dealing with this bill.

There was also to be a Liberal convention. The former minister of finance stood in the place the present minister occupies and said that he would have no part of wage and price controls. Now that the Prime Minister received a vote of confidence at the Liberal convention, he is away for a while. Nevertheless I fear that the Canadian people are going to suffer as a result of the decisions that have been made.

Inflation is a very destructive force. Nothing will destroy society as will the inflationary factor. It causes a breakdown in moral values, increased greed, a rejection of the work ethic, and creates a confused society. That is the position the Canadian people are in today.

There is a breakdown in moral values. Every day in this House the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) answers questions about why we are in this position. What action is the Canadian government taking to counteract that? Why are we in this position where our moral values are breaking down?

Quite a few years ago, after the second world war, a friend of mine returned from Italy. He said that the Italian children were not attending school. They were hungry, and there was no use in sending them to school without first feeding them. This is not the problem with the Canadian people. We are well fed. However, there is no guarantee this will continue in the future. Actually we are destroying ourselves. We are destroying the work ethic. We are destroying the incentive that built this country; It is a sorry day when we destroy the very spirit that built it.

I have a terrible fear of a government controlled or state controlled economy. There is nothing worse. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) said that these powers should not be given any government. I agree. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) then said, "unless it is an NDP government".

Mr. Benjamin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: The problem with that is simple. If they came to power we know the type of economy we would drift into. They would take over the control. We have to realize that members opposite are drifting into the same type of state economy.

On a recent visit to the United Nations I was told by a representative from Russia that that country had 1½ per cent inflation in ten years. However, is there anyone in Canada today who would want to limit himself and be under the control and jurisdiction of a state government such as that in Russia? I would think not. I do not like inflation. However, I am satisfied that it can be licked. It is not, however, going to be licked in the manner specified by the government.

You cannot have a healthy body while there is pain or suffering in any of its members. Unfortunately that is what happens with restricitve controls. That is why we in this party stated that prices should only be frozen for 90 days and then guidelines should be set up under which we could work, operate, develop, and live.

There is a great danger with this bill. The government wants it, and it is going to have it. There is no doubt about it. The government is going to shove it through. I do not want to be part of a program that will last 13 times longer than the one we suggested. That is the vast difference. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said there could be a parliamentary review after 18 months. Actually he was just trying to get our support. However, our support is worth more than that.

We submitted an amendment. Our leader sent a letter to the Prime Minister stating that if the government valued our support, it could agree to an 18 month freeze. We were willing to go part way. In fact we went from three months to 18 months, but the government would not move at all. All we were told was that there would be a parliamentary review. Your Honour and I came to this House at the same time. We both know that parliamentary reviews are all right. You can put certain issues on the table and thereby bring them before the Canadian people. However, with something as important as this, they do not work that well.

I have something to say about the Minister of Finance. It is he who caused the problem with the province of Alberta two years ago over natural resources. Because the Middle East decided they would cut back 5 per cent on oil reports, he immediately created a problem for the Canadian people, stating that there was an oil crisis. I am sure everyone will agree now that we did not have an oil crisis at that time. Six or eight months later there was more oil in the pipe lines that they knew what to do with. They were at that time slowing ships down on the ocean because they did not have storage facilities for landing oil. So I say that he just reached up in the air and grabbed it out, and at the same time he caused a confrontation with the Province of Alberta and the Province of Saskatchewan which set the oil industry back two years at least, maybe three years.

We are just now recovering the rate of production we had at the time the minister embarked on that atrocious plan he had connived in his own brain. And that has been the history of this government, unfortunately—it has been going from crisis to crisis. I do not know whether it manufactures them or not, but first it had a political crisis, which it reconciled by the War Measures Act. Then of course, as I mentioned, it had the energy crisis. Now it has found an economic crisis. It would seem to me that during the political crisis, when it embarked on the War Measures Act, it over-reacted. Time and circumstances have proven, Madam Speaker, that the government did over-react at that time because of the fact that it had been warned previously there were political problems, and it did nothing. When it did break, the government over-reacted. And it caused problems for people. I remember that in western Canada we sat up all night watching national television because we were concerned; we did not realize it was a sort of over-reaction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I fail to see the link with the motion to provide restraint on profit margins, prices and dividends. Perhaps the hon. member could deal with the motion.

Mr. Towers: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was just mentioning the relationship between the present problem and the history of the government. I mentioned the over-reaction in the political crisis, the over-reaction in the energy crisis, and now I am mentioning the over-reaction to the economic crisis.

Unfortunately, Madam Speaker, the problem before us is, I think, the most serious of all because of the fact that with the oil, the oil was there and it kept coming; with the political crisis, it resolved itself; but the economic crisis is much different because of the fact that the government is taking over control for 39 months. That is a long time for a government to take over economic control of a country. Just think of those people who have perhaps only ten years left in order to make their livelihood and provide for their retirement. It is taking a third of that time out and it means they are going to suffer. This is why our leader said it was rough justice. It is rough justice.

I do not think it is necessary for the controls to last that long because we saw what happened in the United States. They had shorter term controls and they worked. The hon. member for Duvernay (Mr. Demers) said this afternoon that their inflationary factor is much less than ours simply because they moved to control it when it was of fundamental importance to do so.

Our inflationary factor today would be much worse if it were not for the fact that Canadians are a resourceful people. They are a great people. They are a strong people. And they are living in a strong land blessed with a great amount of natural resources. So you couple the three together and this is the only reason we have survived.

It was suggested today, I believe by the right hon. member for Prince Albert, that we are second worst in the world so far as our destruction of our work ethic is concerned. This means there is dissatisfaction—a great deal of dissatisfaction—and we are therefore destroying the spirit that has built this country.

I have a great fear that this is what is going to happen unless there is a turn around, and it has to be in the very near future. I am not prepared to sell my birthright for a bowl of porridge, but unfortunately I am caught up in this process. Many people have said we should go along with this program because of the fact that the government hasn't got anything else. Well, that's a pretty lame excuse for supporting a program which you do not think is going to be in the best interest of a country, when there could be a better one put in its place. But if it is the only thing it has got, then what do you do? Either vote for it or vote against it, and my conscience, Madam Speaker, tells me we would be much better off if we voted against it.

I want now to read just a few statements made by a gentleman who I think is going to become very well known to a great many Canadians, including the Minister of Finance. This is what he says: I read from the report before me.

> Regulations to implement Ottawa's anti-inflation program will be "too restrictive and inflexible" for business, according to Toronto accountant J. L. Biddell.
> In a speech to a construction industry seminar in Toronto, Mr. Biddell, who was recently appointed to the Anti-Inflation Board, called the proposed program "a good one" but said it could pose a serious economic threat to the country.

The report went on to say:

> Mr. Biddell, who resigned as president of Clarkson Co. Ltd. after accepting his new appointment, predicted gloom for business because of the program's regulations.
>
> "The white paper guidelines will require the businessman to suppress almost every one of his natural entrepreneurial drives".
> Mr. Biddell said the controls are so strict that Canadian business "can expect to live with them for only a short time." . . .
> If the controls are not removed quickly, there is a distinct possibility that "stagnation" will set into the economy and "create a climate where it will be impossible for new business to get off the ground."

Anti-Inflation Act

Wage and price controls are necessary as a short term solution to the country's inflation ills, he said. "The measures will simply not do in the long term. It is a treatment of symptoms and not a cure."

The country must reach a consensus on the causes of inflation during the control period to prevent a return to an unacceptable period of rapid price escalation, he said.

Mr. Biddell said Canada has been overspending in recent years, living off earnings from its natural resource base.

That must change, he said. Canada must develop an industrial complex "to take the place of its depleting natural resources."

There we have, Madam Speaker, a member of the Anti-Inflation Board, and he was muzzled by the members of government not allowing an amendment that we put forward in this House to allow him, as a member of that board, to criticize them in the area where he felt he had such a right. They don't want to allow that. It would be an embarrassment to them, and therefore he was muzzled. This is why I feel the government does not have the Canadian people at heart. I am satisfied that the Prime Minister and the cabinet are only interested in survival—power seems to be the main thing in their mind—so we have to be very, very careful. We have to warn the Canadian people what they are about.

While approving the general intent of the government's program, my leader and other members of our party made it clear from the outset that we had grave reservations about some of the major features of Bill C-73, and that we would not commit ourselves as to our ultimate position on third and final reading until we saw what kind of amendments emerged from committee examination of the bill. We put forth our amendment, and I have explained the difference between our position and their position, and why this amendment was not passed.

It is of fundamental importance that Canadians should realize that what could be accomplished in 18 months should be all that is required in the best interests of the country. We are not taking anything away from the bill by this 18 months period. If at the end of that time it is found there have to be other controls put into place, I am sure members of the opposition would be ready to go along. If the government would like to bring in a different program we might be ready to agree to that also. However, as I say, we would like to restrict the program to 18 months, and we would like also to give the Anti-Inflation Board an opportunity to criticize the government for any failure on its part to follow the guidelines, just as it is able to criticize business and labour.

We said the period should be 18 months. The minister said no. For the life of me I cannot understand why there should be this refusal to co-operate if he wants our support.

● (2050)

Developments since second reading have done little, if anything to assuage our concerns over the program. Committee hearings have produced wide-ranging criticism of the bill by spokesmen from major industry, labour, and other groups. While we may not have agreed with all of their particular criticisms, the comments and statements of these groups have reinforced the view that the government program is, at very best, pretty rough justice, with a number of built-in inequities and distortions.

[Mr. Towers.]

Government statements inside and outside the House of Commons, be they by the Prime Minister, various members of cabinet, or the chief officers of the Anti-Inflation Review Board, have offered little reassurance either. Rather, they indicate that the government is still very much feeling its way, unclear even in its own mind on many important aspects of the program, including the all important question of relationships with provincial governments. That is very important, Madam Speaker.

How in the world can a program work without the support of the provincial governments? Why was not support of all provinces asked for prior to embarking upon the program? The answer is simply that there was not time. The Prime Minister announced the program without communicating with the provincial premiers in advance. The provinces themselves, while supporting, as we have, the principle of a direct action program, have filed a number of significant reservations of their own. The province of Alberta has announced it will go along with the program for a short period of time but may opt out later.

It should be noted too that all of this uncertainty and concern has been generated over the basic framework and direction of the program. As yet we have not even seen the precise regulations in which the government will set forth the details of its policies and which will form, in many respects, the real guts of its program. One can only believe that these will cause even more confusion, uncertainty, and feelings of inequity.

People will put up with this program for a short period of time, and we thought 90 days was the right period. But the minister says the period will be 39 months. This is why we have reservations about this bill. It is also causing concern among various business groups. In fact, I have a great fear that we are going to revert to the law of the jungle, where only the strong survive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Start swinging from the trees.

Mr. Towers: It is a great misfortune, Madam Speaker, that our friends to our left are so far left that they cannot even understand the fact that the economy is better in private hands than in government control.

I have been contacted by some professional people who are concerned about the outcome of this legislation and what it will mean to them. This is why I say we are now getting to the stage where it is a matter of survival for certain segments of our economy. One of these groups has this to say:

We would like to take this opportunity of expressing our concerns in these matters in the hope that our representatives can make the government aware of them, before the regulations are finalized, as it will be difficult if not impossible to change the regulations after they become law.

Fundamental to applying price control regulations to auditing and accounting practices is an understanding of the good will factor inherent in many professional accounting practices in Canada today. Good will represents the intangible value of having an established clientele who continue to deal with the same firm. The value of good will however becomes tangible when an incoming partner pays hard cash for it. The purchaser has in effect purchased the right to a share of the income of the accounting practice. In an established practice the older partner anticipates that he will be able to sell his good will on retirement. Thus many practising professional accountants have spent many years of their lives investing their time and ability in establishing a practice that will be saleable when they retire. This investment is analogous to the employer's contribution to a pension plan on behalf of an employee in that both have planned and look forward to these funds as part of their retirement income.

It is therefore imperative that the wage and price controls be administered fairly and great care must be taken to ensure that the value of good will is not impaired or destroyed. The impairment or destruction of good will would cause economic chaos to the accounting profession and would be the equivalent to imposing a 100 per cent capital tax.

They go on to say this:

We are aware of an accounting practice which has a July year end. At July 31, 1974 this was a four man practice and the practice income was shared four ways. On August 1, 1974 one of the partners retired and the three remaining partners purchased his partnership interest including good will and have contracted to pay him a capital payment for good will over a period of years. On July 31, 1975 the practice was a three man practice who now share the retired partner's income. Thus the remaining partners' incomes materially increased in 1975 and if the difference in incomes from 1974 to 1975 were confiscated by way of a tax the remaining partners would be unable to complete their obligations.

I am sure the minister gives cognizance to the fact that a lot of business people are caught up in this program. With the continued invasion of government into private affairs we have to rely more upon specialized professions to protect our personal well being. This group goes on to say:

When one considers the strenuous effort required to build and maintain a professional practice; the liability of the professions to the public and the fact that a professional has to provide for his own retirement are factors that should be considered before making hasty adjustments to the very roots of this type of business.

In conclusion, with respect to the effect on good will, we are concerned that there may be an unfair, and perhaps unintended, side effect of the legislation and regulation: it appears probable that they may result not only in a limitation on income but also have the effect of confiscating capital. This, we suggest, must be avoided if equity in the efforts to control inflation is to prevail.

So it is obvious there is great concern in the country about where we are going. After all, it takes all kinds of people to make our economy work, such as the professions, labour, and all segments of society. We must work together if our economy is to get ahead; we must get away from the kind of misunderstanding that has occurred under the present administration.

Given the degree of rough justice involved, given the economic distortions which are virtually inevitable in this kind of program, and given the well founded mistrust that we have for the government's motives and willingness to deal openly and frankly with the people of Canada, we are not prepared to hand the Prime Minister and his ministers these extraordinary powers without any effective time limit on their use.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Benjamin: They are all rallying to the cause.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Madam Speaker, the peanut gallery to our left is in fine form this evening. This is third reading of a bill which euphemistically is known as the Anti-Inflation Act, Bill C-73. It is a bill to deal with inflation.

This is an incredible development, coming about a year and a half after the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in co-operation with his cohorts to my left, stumped up and down the country saying that price and incomes controls are absolutely the worst thing that could ever be undertaken by a government in an attempt to fight inflation. Every possible adjective of condemnation was used to decry price and incomes controls to fight inflation. Yet 18 months later, on Thanksgiving Day last October 13, the Prime Minister sat down to a meal of crow and announced to the nation price and incomes controls.

This new example of leadership, it is said, will take us out of the economic morass in which we find ourselves. One wonders what occurred, what caused this transformation. What caused this proud government and its Prime Minister to eat crow on Thanksgiving Day? What caused it to do an 180 degree flip and advocate policies that it wasted no energy in condemning over a year previously? Was it a change in the economic situation? Was it the sudden realization that the economy was in bad shape, and suddenly inflation was perceived to be a serious problem? That is some change, but that is the essence of what the Prime Minister tried to convince the country. Yet an examination of the figures, the numbers, the indices, the measures of economic performance, inflation, and the consumer price index now indicate there was no dramatic change. They indicate there was no disastrous trend in the last two years, and no dramatic change suddenly before Thanksgiving Day to bring on this turn-around.

The second theory proposed by some political observers is that this was really a Machiavellian plot. The suggestion is that in fact the leading indicators showed that inflation was on the way down now and that the economy was due to improve, and the Machiavellian devil that he is, the Prime Minister, felt by introducing this program he could then claim credit for leadership. This has been proposed by a few media observers of the political scene in Canada. I tend to dismiss that because if that was the motivation behind the Thanksgiving announcement surely there would have been better preparation and a more complete program offered. Surely we would not have the uncertainty and the wishy-washy change in opinion and direction the government has demonstrated since.

The third reason proffered by some observers of the political scene for this about-face by the government has to do more with the state of the Liberal party than the state of the economy. The rationale behind this reasoning is that there has been a considerable amount of discontent since July, 1974. The energy, the new direction, and leadership expected by the Liberals after their victory were just not there, and by the summer of 1975 that discontent was starting to manifest itself in audible grumbling. The Prime Minister then chose to appoint an old friend to the communications portfolio rather than a sitting member, which gave rise to even more grumbling and discontent. Then the former minister of finance resigned, and the public outpouring of discontent became nearly deafening.

At this point it is suggested that Senator Keith Davey was able to convince the Prime Minister that prices and incomes controls would let the Prime Minister seize the reins of leadership again, demonstrating vigour and vitality in attacking problems of the economy, and this would in fact allow him to turn the situation around and pass the upcoming vote of confidence at the Liberal convention.

Quite frankly, that theory has a lot of credence, and is substantiated by a lot of observations for those who want to look at them. It is really tragic that the economic initiatives taken by the government should be dictated by considerations such as that rather than by the state of the economy. It is tragic that the Prime Minister would play games with the economic lives of millions of Canadians because he had to face that vote of confidence at the Liberal party convention.

Whatever reasons there were, on October 13, Thanksgiving Day, the Prime Minister said we were going to have a system of prices and incomes control. That was an infamous October 13. Fans of the now defunct comic strip character Pogo will recall that when Friday 13 fell on Monday one had great reason for concern. We now understand and see some wisdom in that comic book character's philosophy.

Flowing from that October 13 statement is the bill that is before us tonight, C-73, called in clause 1 the "Anti-Inflation Act". That in itself is reason enough to vote against the bill because there is nothing anti-inflationary about it. This is not an anti-inflation act. It is not an act to impose a system of wage and price controls. This act is nothing more than a means of giving sweeping and extraordinary powers to a so-called Anti-Inflation Board and an administrator still unnamed. That is all this bill does.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) spoke in general terms about the scope of the wage and price control program they had in mind for the country, but we do not know what it is. This House does not know what it is, and the country does not know what it is. I suspect that those on the other side, including the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, do not know what it is. I suspect they are still working on it.

This bill is not an anti-inflation program and not a wage and price controls program. We will not be voting on either of those things. A realistic anti-inflation program that addressed itself truly to the root causes of inflation would combine prices and incomes controls with other features. Prices and incomes controls by themselves without the other features in the program are worse than nothing at all. In a sense the Prime Minister was absolutely right last year during the election campaign when he said that price and income controls were bad. They are bad if that is the sum total of the anti-inflation program because by themselves they can do more harm than good. It is the steps the government must take during an anti-inflation program, while price and income controls are in place, that would constitute an anti-inflation program.

What are those opportunities or steps? One of them quite clearly has been referred to repeatedly, but apparently the lesson still remains to be learned by those on the other side. This step has to do with government spending and the money supply. I should like to quote from a report by Dr. Philip Cramm of Texas A & I University, reported in the February, 1975, issue of World Oil. Dr. Philip Cramm, to put this in context, is a consultant who has worked for the International Monetary Fund, the U.S. and the Canadian governments. He states:

> —there has never been a prolonged general price inflation in recorded history that was not preceded by and directly related to a growth in money supply. In our economy a growth in money supply occurs principally when the government spends more than it taxes and prints money to make up part of the deficit.

That is precisely what has been happening in Canada. Since 1968 when this administration took over spending has gone wild, up by some 300 per cent, with deficit followed by deficit. These deficits have been financed by the printing of money, that is, by the selling of bonds to the Bank of Canada which in turn prints the money to pay for the bonds.

In spite of the claims repeated so many times in the past that we are the victim of world circumstances and that world inflation is at the root of our problems, a fact echoed just recently this evening by members of the NDP, the bulk of inflation in this country is domestic, and one of the main causes is that our money supply has gone berserk to finance government spending, which has also gone berserk.

In addition to the question of money supply and proper management is the matter of the discipline the government exercises in respect of the money it spends. For the record I should like to quote from a policy review report in 1975 by the C. D. Howe Research Institute. This report states among other things:

● (2110)

> It is clear that governments will have to impose a new form of spending discipline on themselves, because there are not sufficient natural restraints forcing them to assess the productivity of their spending. As a first step in this process of self-discipline, the public should be given more and better information on the spending process.

That is a polite non-partisan way of saying the government is spending our money in an unwise and inefficient fashion. In addition to the magnitude of the spending, this inefficient spending is one of the root causes of inflation.

This afternoon the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) gave numerous examples of the wasteful extravagance of government spending such as on the Prime Minister's residence, frills, tapestry, and all the accoutrements of power—spending which certainly the average Canadian can hardly appreciate makes his life better.

I do not intend to dwell on this at any great length, but I want to refer to an article in this morning's Montreal Gazette by Don Sellar. He says that the contract given Mr. Roy MacLaren, a consultant whose Liberal party connections are well established and who was chairman of a 1974 fund-raising dinner for the Liberals, was that he would receive up to $158,000 in government money in return for his services in two years. This includes up to $20,000 a year in expense money, a daily allowance of up to $35 a day for food and accommodation while in Ottawa, and a special allowance of up to $4,000 a year for transportation to and from Toronto to visit his family. This gentleman was to get $158,000 of our money.

When the government spends its citizens' money in this fashion how can this have any effect other than to debase our currency and debase our taxes? The citizen does not consider, in this type of example, that taxes are his way of contributing to the financing of the operation of a government which performs services on his behalf. He looks at this sort of thing and says that the government is wasting his money. To him taxes represent something extracted from him by law so that when he sends in a dollar from his salary he does not consider that 20 cents from it will go for housing, 30 cents for food, and so much for the salary of his member of parliament. He says that the government is ripping him off to satisfy its friends. So he will not be satisfied with an increase of $1 but will want an increase of $1.50. It is that sort of attitude toward government which is one of the root causes of inflation. This is the example this sort of thing sets for public servants and those in the private sector.

There was a time when public servants and members of the government viewed themselves as trustees of our money and acted accordingly. The example was set by government in that it had an obligation and responsibility to be frugal and efficient in the spending of our money. Frills were to be avoided in the way they would be avoided by any trustee if he is to have the respect of the individual whose funds he administers. That, however, seems to have gone by the board. Frills and wasteful spending are the norms for this government, and represent one of the root causes of inflation.

A third cause of inflation which must be addressed in any discussion of an anti-inflationary program is the matter of the position of the power groups in our society. This is a position about which John Crispo of Toronto has written and spoken. There exists in our society numerous groups which have grown up in the last few years which have the power to overcome the restraints which exist in a free enterprise system. These groups which we know as big business, big labour, and big government are immune to normal restraints. When there is an increase in wages they pass on the increase. When there is inflation they receive a larger share of the pie. An increase in taxes means nothing. Ironically the Minister of Finance alluded to that when he spoke on second reading on the bill when he said:

> The goal of narrowing the gap in income distribution can be thwarted if those in higher brackets are successful in maintaining or increasing their own real, after tax, share of take-home pay by pushing up their income levels.

If instead of talking about those higher brackets he had in fact generalized about those in positions of power he would have been right on. But I do not see any evidence that the government appreciates that these power groups are able to misdirect the economy or that there is any willingness on their part to find some solution. With the powerful looking after themselves, it is the weak, the unorganized, who in fact are paying the price. That is what is happening.

Mr. Benjamin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I find I am being applauded by the New Democratic Party. If in fact the hon. member would applaud equally as loud when I say it is important to attack those power groups which are able to exert their influence over the weak and the non-influential then I would be assured that his thought processes are straightened out.

We need evidence that the government is attacking the real causes of inflation before we or the Canadian public will be convinced that the government has a true anti-inflation program. This bill is not an anti-inflation program. It is not even a price and income control program. It is nothing more than a bill to give some extra-ordinarily vast powers to an administrator and an anti-inflation board. Even if it were considered as part of an anti-inflation program it would still be subject to very serious criticism. For that reason it is impossible for us to support it.

The main benefits of price and income controls are the psychological benefits. They provide an example of the seriousness of the problem as viewed by the government. After the government spent many months condemning such a program it is small wonder the public is very skeptical about this program. They say the government tells them one thing and then turns around and does the opposite the next year.

Even as a psychological tool or as a strong medicine, as a few people have described it, it must be responsible. We must be very careful in terms of the powers granted by this bill. It is indeed strong medicine. Price and income controls represent strong medicine. When I refer to medicine we must remember that when we have strong medicine it should be administered in limited dosage. You do not call for the open ended, unlimited administration of strong medicine, which is essentially what this bill does. One observer likened controls to a narcotic. He said that your head tells you it is not good, but it seems almost irresistible and once on it, it is tough to get off. A narcotic is not a cure, it is simply a way to kill pain temporarily, but if you get on it and take it for too long, it becomes addictive and very difficult to get off it.

My friends to the left are wondering if we advocated narcotics. Let me continue with the medical analogy and tell you that there is a role for pain killers in medicine, and in fact as part of our anti-inflationary program with which we faced the Canadian people we stated in all honesty that price and income controls were part of an over-all package, necessary pain killing medicine at a time when the country was suffering from a serious malady indeed.

Let me say again that this bill is not a price and income control scheme, it is not an anti-inflationary scheme. The fact of the matter is that the economy is sick, there is no question about that, and the measures of that sickness are multiple. One measure is in terms of our trade imbalance.

Earlier a member of the NDP indicated that our trade situation was fine. Obviously he has not examined the figures because, if he did, he would see that in 1975 Canada's trade imbalance in high technology products will be $9 billion as compared to $2 billion five years ago. There has been a steady deterioration over the last five years in our trade imbalance in high technology products. We are partially paying for the $9 billion by selling off capital, selling off part of the farm, and selling our raw materials. That is irresponsible. We simply must become more competitive in high technology production, and anyone who chooses not to see these figures, as does the NDP, is being totally irresponsible.

Another measure of the performance of our economy and the sickness from which it is evidently suffering was provided in this morning's Montreal Gazette in an article written by Mr. Peter Cook. The article is headed "Canadian Economy Headed for Worst Year Since 1954". The graph which accompanies the article shows it graphically.

No one in this party discounts the seriousness of the malady from which the Canadian economy is suffering. Our economy requires a medicine, but not this kind of medicine.

Mr. Benjamin: Do you want more free enterprise?

Mr. Andre: Yes, indeed. The sickness from which our economy is suffering comes from excessive socialism since 1968, and if you had been listening earlier you might have learned that lesson. We have indicated that because of the seriousness of the problem the Leader of the Opposition adopted a responsible position, he could not operate from any other position, it is an inherent part of his character to act responsibly at all times. He proposed that if the government would restrict the use of these excessive powers to 18 months, our party would go along with this legislation. The government chose not to accept this offer by the Leader of the Opposition and proposed in return a half baked measure of parliamentary review. For that reason we have no choice but to vote against the bill on third reading.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: But we express the hope and indeed the plea—and if it would help to get on our knees and beg, we would do so—that the government take the other remedial action that is necessary in the other areas I have mentioned to mount a truly anti-inflationary program so that the poor and unorganized workers, the elderly, and those in our society who do not possess the power to look after themselves can stop being buffeted about by inflation and the concomitant problems that flow from it.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-73 may I say that judging from the status of the bill and the present response of the public to it, we can see it will receive only grudging support. The large group of organized labour, the Canadian Labour Congress, is telling us what they find distasteful in this bill and what they believe is unfair in the controls as they are proposed to be applied, that is, mostly to wage earners. I think they are making very valid points about the impossibility of applying the whole program fairly. On the other hand, profits are to be curtailed severely to 95 per cent of the previous year's average, which raises the question about our need for large capital expenditures in coming years and whether or not we will be worse off than ever. It has been indicated that in many industries profits were low. The stock market will bear this out.

It will give me great pleasure to vote against this bill as I am sure it will accomplish very little and only set the stage for reduced growth in the years ahead. The imposition of controls on the Canadian economy will slow down the economy's recovery without appreciably reducing inflation for at least a year or more.

Speaking to the Conference Board, Mr. Arthur Smith had this to say, as reported in the Globe and Mail of November 20:

> Next year's improvement in productivity . . . may be one of the lowest in the past 50 years . . .

> In addition, "the underlying trend rate of productivity may continue to be among the lowest of all the industrially advanced nations in the world," he told a conference on trade competitiveness sponsored by the board.
>
> Next year, "domestic productivity inhibiting factors, including those likely to arise from the anti-inflation program, are likely to make it extremely difficult to achieve quick and substantial domestic productivity gains".
>
> What may make the situation more difficult for Canada is that it may occur at the same time as the exceptionally large current account deficit, which has been shrinking for the past several quarters, starts to widen again. If the latter happens, as historical experience suggests is likely, it could begin before the end of 1976, Dr. Smith said.

● (2130)

> What makes the outlook for late 1976 even less promising is the expected high unemployment level and considerable under-utilized capacity that will be present. Also, Canada may at that time be on the verge of an "enormous" buildup in net import requirements for oil.
>
> Behind the recent deterioration in trade competitiveness for Canada are several factors, failure to increase real new investment spending to any significant extent from 1967 to 1972, the long lagged effect of the appreciation of the Canadian dollar in 1970 and the ending of the special advances in productivity under the auto pact.
> "A powerful array of depressing Canadian federal and provincial policies (especially regarding taxation and royalty matters) have curbed strong and efficient growth generally in Canadian resource industries."

No one is more to blame than the government for the problems of our resource industries.

> Only during the past year with weakened markets, corporate profits that declined, a more competitive import competition and the perception that inflation was producing intolerable distortions, have Canadians begun to raise the issue of job security and the risks of inadequate new job creation in decisive ways.
> Even then, "instead of trying to make labour markets and collective bargaining procedures work much more effectively, we have now acted to introduce a control program which even its most ardent supporters can hardly claim will help to make labour markets work better."

Surely this is an indication of what we are up against with these controls. Let us consider what is happening in the United States where there are no controls. Their third quarter growth reached 13 per cent, the strongest rise since 1960. Almost certainly the U.S. recovery will be superior in performance to that of Canada if for no other reason than the extent to which Canadian controls and their application to profits actively discourage the capital investment essential to establish any prolonged recovery.

The effect of limiting profits will be felt further down the road. The effect of controls is to limit any increase in profit and the process discourages investment. The control program takes the income redistribution process a little further at the expense of real corporate growth. For example, a person told me that he had been in business with a partner and liquidated the business, which had considerable capital, and they were waiting to divide it so that they could start a new business. However, under this legislation they will be prevented from doing so and probably will be for a long time if they are ever allowed at some time in the future to take their money out and get going again in another business. This only goes to show that two small individuals in private enterprise are going to be shackled by this legislation for some time to come.

Almost certainly unemployment will increase in the next few years. A study of the possibility of unemployment in the next few years raises certain disturbing questions. A sharp rise from the rate of 5 per cent in June, 1974, to 7.2 per cent in October of this year has been the result of the North American economic slowdown.

It is clear that the combined effect of income controls, debilitating monetary and fiscal policies, and the low utilization rates in U.S. industry provide little optimism for improvement in our unemployment position. All studies indicate that the restrictive fiscal and monetary policies accompanying the income control plan will only stretch out Canada's high unemployment rate problem.

One of the obvious doubts being expressed is whether the controls will be accepted or will work. From the recent meeting with the federal-provincial ministers it seems obvious that provincial spokesmen are critical of the failure of the government to get the program working and to provide some ruling or benchmark. Mr. Darcy McKeough said, "Let's get it cracking." As to whether we shall have provincial boards to monitor prices, we will have to wait until December. The Anti-Inflation Board chairman now says the board will need to employ 300 people instead of the 200 originally planned. The Saskatchewan finance minister suggested that the meeting was not the most productive and called for a surtax on private incomes of more than $30,000 per year, and by doing so has introduced a new form of control.

How is each province going to react to this? Well, according to the Globe and Mail:

> The federal legislation provides that the private sector of the economy will come under the federal Anti-Inflation Board. A province may, according to Ottawa, place its public sector—civil servants, municipal workers, teachers and so on—under the control of the same board. Or it may decide to set up its own board to handle them.

As Quebec has done.

> Last week Premier Peter Lougheed told the Alberta legislature, "We concur with the Government of Quebec". He believes that the federal legislation, unsupported by provincial legislation, could constitute an intrusion into the provincial jurisdiction. He fears this on economic as well as constitutional grounds.
> Once the federal controls are in place, he fears that they might be kept in place too long, permitting Ottawa to interfere with business to the detriment of economic health.
> What Alberta proposes to do, therefore, is to pass legislation that is identical to the federal legislation, with its own additions. The legislation would authorize the lieutenant-governor in council to delegate administration of the act, for both private and public sectors, to Ottawa on a trial basis. Alberta would retain the power to opt out if it found the federal program unsatisfactory, or if Ottawa were to make significant unilateral changes to the program. The unilateral changes which would concern Mr. Lougheed would be anything that put controls on prices of products at the farm gate or further controls on petroleum products.

They put on a time limit of 18 months, which I think is in line with what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has suggested, that controls should be re-examined at the end of 18 months. All this indicates that the public is becoming unhappy with the program and is seeing that it is in fact Swiss cheese, with so many holes that in effect it is not a program at all.

The growing confusion in the five weeks since the time of the announcement on October 13 is overwhelming, and the Leader of the Opposition has had this to say:

> The government can bring in whatever kind of controls program it chooses within the ranges of these wide powers; it can vary any program virtually beyond recognition while the law remains in effect.—It asked us to accept instead a complicated review process which, in effect, represents nothing more than a progress report to be followed by a vote which would be meaningless considering the government's majority strength in the Commons.

This is the great problem with this program at a time when confederation is indicating to all that there is too much centralization in the economy and in the political process. We are going to centralize further with an army of civil servants.

It is obvious that Mrs. Plumptre, as a member of the Anti-Inflation Board and being critical of the action of the Egg Marketing Agency in raising the price of eggs at a time when feed costs were dropping, touched a very sensitive nerve with consumers. It is obvious that the board can do nothing about farm gate prices. I do not see it being able to do so unless it wants to have shortages develop very quickly. It is estimated that 60 per cent to 70 per cent of the change in food prices is related to farm gate prices for food consumed within our own country. That merely leaves the Anti-Inflation Board with the possibility of doing something about food from the time it leaves the farm gate until it ends up in the housewife's basket, and that would be precious little. Indeed, a substantial amount of foods is imported.

Labour is unhappy with the program; what about management? Mr. J. L. Biddell has expressed the view that the proposed guidelines are too tough on business. There is a comment by Mr. R. W. Billingsley, president of the Reed Paper company, who said in Toronto last week:

> "Perhaps the best thing I can say about the policy as now proposed is that it probably won't work, which means that it will have little detrimental effect on the economy."
> Billingsley's comments about the program point to one fallacy—that the control program is supported by business but opposed by labor.

● (2140)

I suggest that many businessmen are concerned about the long-term effects of the program on business. These effects can only be endured for a short time, if there are not to be serious consequences to productivity and investment. And nobody believes that the government is seriously concerned about cutting public expenditures. Indeed, the setting up of the bilingual districts, announced a few days ago, can be cited as an example of the government's intentions.

The government's campaign has lost support for the control program, rather than rallying support. Canadians are not willing to support this sort of program. They do not want to hear the Prime Minister talking about a wartime atmosphere; neither do they like Premier Regan's reference to the Dunkirk spirit. We are not ready for it. Even the Prime Minister has said that the program is primarily psychological, not economic. Canadians really do not believe that controls will work in peacetime. Organized labour has been portrayed as being against this program, while business has been portrayed as supporting it. But there are many misgivings in the business community about the value of the plan. Businessmen believe that, in the long run, it will do considerably more harm than good.

This controls plan is really a ploy in that the federal government is trying to shift the problem to the private sector from the public sector where most of it belongs. Without doubt, if inflation is to be curtailed there must be a drastic reduction, at least in the rate of government spending, and a corresponding contraction in the money supply. The number of claims for exemption from the guidelines which will qualify for special treatment within the incomes policy will be much greater than we can expect.

I cannot help but agree with much that was said in the Canadian Labour Congress brief to the finance committee. The congress maintains that the federal government has been largely responsible, through the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada which has been developed in a most erratic fashion, for it swings from one extreme to the other. Monetary policy has never been stable, and this has created economic instability of serious proportions. All kinds of cost pressures were built into the economy from the blatant mismanagement of our monetary policy. The congress went on to say that the mismanagement of fiscal policy has been almost as bad.

The Federal Reserve Board of the United States has tried to hold the expansion of the United States money supply to some 5 per cent. In Canada the position is somewhat different. Governor Bouey has gone to great lengths to explain that the chief problem with monetary policy lies in making sure it is the right policy. He suggests that we need a moderate rate of monetary expansion, sufficient to support rising levels of economic activity, together with a gradual decline in the rate of inflation. He asked what constitutes a moderate and sufficient rate of monetary growth, and suggested that the Central Bank has been too vague in defining its goals. Others, while applauding objectives underlying the control of the money supply, are unhappy about the effect of monetary restrictions on interest rates.

Mr. Bouey has pointed out that in the past two years our money supply has expanded at an annual rate of 15 per cent, although at the end of the second quarter in 1975 the rate of expansion had been brought down to 10 per cent. Weekly statistics published by the Bank of Canada show that the money supply, as defined by Mr. Bouey, rose by 17.5 per cent, from October, 1974 to October 1975; in the past six months, from the end of April, the money supply increased by 15.8 per cent, while in the last three months the rate of increase was at 15.6 per cent. This indicates that the expansion of our money supply is proceeding apace, with no indication that it is coming down to the sort of figure the Americans have in mind.

In their brief the Canadian Labour Congress set out what the program is not able to do, namely, come to grips with the weight of external factors which produce inflationary pressures on our open economy. The government has conceded that the prices of imported products will not be controlled and that this will continue to be a major inflationary influence on Canadian costs and prices. As the world around us slowly recovers from recession, it really means that the price of foreign goods will rise. This will constitute a large element in the increase of prices in Canada. I believe that this will be the single most important factor which will prevent this program from having an over-all effect on the rate of inflation in this country.

We are now attempting, Mr. Speaker, to apply a form of wage and price control which proved wanting when applied in the United States and the United Kingdom. Shortages are bound to occur. When they do, people hoard. Scarce goods are stockpiled and the shortage is compounded.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Various countries, even provinces and cities in Canada, have tried rent controls on residential housing. Always such controls have brought the people close to disaster and created shortages. The government has tossed this knotty problem to the provinces. When rents are controlled for any length, investment is discouraged. Continuous acrimonious debates go on between landlord and tenant, and nobody is happy. One of the great problems in controlled rents is arriving at a reasonable rent increase. The tenants, naturally, ask for reduced rents, and landlords for increased rents. As there are many more tenants than landlords there is a marked tendency for boards to keep rents below economic levels. We tend to become penny wise and pound foolish and, eventually, shortages develop.

This bill will not cure inflation, and may even compound it. It will almost certainly increase unemployment in the 18 months or so it will operate, by stifling productivity. Obviously, professionals will have to pare and reduce their workload in order not to breach the guidelines because, if they do, even with increased productivity, they will find themselves penalized. The large number of employees working for the 1,500 firms covered by the guidelines will feel aggrieved when comparing their lot with that of workers in firms not covered. Clearly, their fellow workers will have greater advantages when seeking wage increases. This can only accentuate the harmful effects which changing inflationary conditions can exert on the Canadian economy.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is no substitute for good control of the money supply, reasonable fiscal measures and, above all, prudent government spending. Unless we wish to have a completely controlled economy, these standard and traditional methods are still the best means for controlling an economy in a free society.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to register my opposition to this bill on third reading I begin by saying that we have opposed this bill from the beginning because we argue, and our arguments are supported by virtually all economists except those bought by the government, that this so-called anti-inflation program cannot work.

The government calls this a bill "to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada." All available evidence, reports of discussions of provincial governments with the minister and the buffoon chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, as well as statements of the Anti-Inflation Board, reinforce our view that this program could not have worked from its conception, which was illegitimate, one might say. In addition, if one considers the composition of the board, what it has accomplished, said, and refused to say until now, one thing becomes apparent—this board will not deal with the problems suggested by the title of the bill; at least it will not deal with them equitably. It will not restrain profit margins, freeze prices, hold back dividends, etc. It will do one job only—restrain wages and salaries.

Look at the board's membership. Its chairman, just a dozen or so years ago, was a professor in a Canadian university, probably making not more than $10,000 a year.

He was elected as a member of parliament, became a minister, and was defeated in 1972. He immediately became a lobbyist for multi-national and large national corporations. He has now been appointed as chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board at a salary of more than $50,000 a year. By his own admission he is taking a cut in income. We can see on what side his bread is buttered.

● (2150)

The vice-chairman, Mrs. Plumptre, receives $40,000 a year. As Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board she received a lot of press coverage. However, very few in the press gallery seemed to do much other than read the headlines. They did not read the reports that were made. They did not read the fine print.

Let us look at Mrs. Plumptre's record. After looking at price increases for butter, eggs, meat, and everything else, what did she tell the Canadian public? She said the farmers are receiving too much for their products. Workers in British Columbia's supermarkets asked for wage increases which she said are too high. She said they are responsible for high prices.

Every time Mrs. Plumptre looked at food processors such as Canada Packers, Burns or Swift, she assured the public that they were not making too much money and that everything was fine. Even though their profits have gone up every year, she says they are legitimate profits.

Then there are the supermarkets which are growing in number, dollar volume, and profits every year. After looking at them she said that Loblaws, Safeway and Dominion Stores were not making too much money. She said it was the farmer and the supermarket worker who were getting too much. They are the villains.

We then come to the former vice-president of Clarkson Company. I thought the board would have at least given the appearance of being impartial. I thought the board would at least seem to be fair and look at all the questions before giving a judgment. I quote from the November 19, 1975, issue of the Globe and Mail where Mr. Biddell, the former vice-president of Clarkson Company said, and I quote:

"The regulations are likely to be too restrictive and inflexible and I would expect an early need for adjustment."

The regulations have not even been tabled. They may have been drafted, but they are being kept secret. Mr. Biddell, however, knows that they are too restrictive. I again quote from the article:

He envisages a system where a company's auditors, as part of their normal function of verifying financial statements, would also take on the additional responsibility of ensuring obedience to the wage and price guidelines.

The auditors for Eaton's, Hudson Bay Mining, Swift and Company, who receive their salaries from those companies, will work for the government, at no cost to the government, protecting the interests of the ordinary people! I know whose interests Mr. Biddell has, and they are not the interests of the Canadian people. It is the interests of his former corporate clients. I again quote:

"The white paper guidelines will require the businessman to suppress almost every one of his natural entrepreneurial drives." . . .

The program's effect on wage and salary earners will not be severe, he said. "I think they will get along quite well."

I am sure the teachers in Toronto agree with Mr. Biddell today.

We then have a man who took a job that no other labour leader would look at. Not a single labour union has given its approval to the program. The CBC tried to tell the public that the CBRT and the Public Service Alliance had endorsed the guidelines. What they said was that they would support some kind of wage restraint if there were price controls which, of course, the minister has rejected from the beginning.

The former vice-president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Ladyman, has gone from being vice-president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, a union which has been very successful in getting high wages for its members, and I give it credit for that, to being a consultant for the great friend of the working people, Great West Life Insurance, an affiliate of that poor powerless corporation, Power Corporation. No other labour person would go anywhere near the program, but Mr. Ladyman did. I suggest he had good reason.

Let us look at what this board has done in its short existence. The board issued a statement in November saying that it was not the intention of the board to replace the collective bargaining process. It said it was expected that the parties would negotiate in good faith with a view to concluding an agreement under the guidelines. After they had reached an agreement, the board said it would then look at the agreement to see if in fact it was too high.

It was only a couple of weeks ago that that policy was laid down. The board has already violated its own statement. In the case of the Toronto teachers the board acted before there was an agreement. The board acted at the request of one of the contestants. I say that the chairman and the board showed their bias. They showed it further this week by saying not one word about the exorbitant, fantastic profits which the large Canadian banks have reported this year.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock—

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the adjournment debate proceeds, may I announce that following the disposition of Bill C-73, we will call the housing bill, Bill C-77.

Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SUGGESTION THAT MINISTERS BE PRESENT AT NATIONAL CONFERENCES RELATED TO THE ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, on July 22, as recorded at page 7803 of Hansard, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a question with regard to the level of representation which the government would make at all future meetings in which we would negotiate our position in respect to the Law of the Sea, ICNAF and so on. The answer I received when I asked that the ministerial level be the level at which we should be represented was, and I quote:

Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's representation.

I suppose the day of debate for this could not have been more timely than this evening. Today I received a call from a fisherman. He advises me that in one of the areas off the Atlantic coast the Russian fleet has a quota of 19,000 tons. The Russian fleet appeared in that zone in May, 1975. It is present still, and it is still fishing. As to the 19,000 ton quota, I might say to you, Mr. Speaker, that two good-sized boats operating off the Atlantic Coast would be quite adequate to catch that quota of fish in a much shorter period than that between May and December.

● (2200)

There is, on the Atlantic coast, absolutely no trust that the foreign fleets are observing the quotas. Negotiations have taken place on an international basis, as we know, and we must compliment Mr. Beasley who has headed these negotiations on many occasions and who is, unquestionably, a very able and dedicated Canadian. The trouble is that whether or not he is scared of the minister, as has just been suggested by one of my hon. friends, or whether or not the minister gives him proper authority, the negotiations have not been as productive as they should have been. Attending these meetings, one finds that able people are sent by other governments-representatives who are capable of making decisions on the spot.

The only way in which Canada can hope to be represented by someone authorized to make decisions on the spot with respect to the welfare of our offshore fleet is by the minister responsible for the fisheries being a member of the negotiating team at all times. First, this would give us decision-making ability. Second, and at least as important, the presence of the minister would confer a prestige upon the delegation which it would not otherwise possess. Thus far, we have given an indication to all the foreign countries concerned with which we have been negotiating that these are items of secondary importance at best because the minister has never been present to negotiate.

This matter has been brought up on a number of occasions. If we look at page 7804 of Hansard we find the Prime Minister in reply to the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) saying, in effect, that it is difficult to withdraw historic fishing rights from European nations which have fished off our coasts for hundreds of years. I want to point out that until we entered upon this complex of international negotiations and treaties we encountered no problem as far as nations with historic fishing rights, such as Portugal and Britain, were concerned. However when we began to carve the pie up among a multitude of international fishing fleets, when we started to extend the use of these waters to Germany, East Germany, Russia, Poland, Japan, etc., the depradation of the seas began.

The Prime Minister also suggested in one of his answers on this subject—these are his words—"Of course we trust them; that was why we would not let the Russian ships come into the ports." That is a strange statement for a prime minister to make. We trust them, so we won't let them enter our ports. We are in a serious position.

The fishermen in the herring industry find that they are constrained by international agreement to the point where they can no longer make a living. The halibut and haddock fishermen are dumping their fish at sea because they dare not come ashore with them.

It is high time that the government took its stand strongly and clearly and that we, as a country, assert our historic rights; that we as a coastal state have jurisdiction over these resources; that we have our minister or the Prime Minister himself so express ourselves in the international meetings in order to bring back to this country the opportunity for making a livelihood for our fishermen off our shores, as well as for the processors and workers on shore. Let us exercise our historic rights in the fishing industry and supply the world with the food it so badly needs.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the comments of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) basically because, as he pointed out in his initial remarks, his original question was put on July 22, which by some strange coincidence was immediately after the ICNAF meeting in Edinburgh, Scotland, in June of 1975.

I suggest that at the time he put his question the hon. member did not expect the eventual success that was reached by the negotiators, including the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc), at the meeting completed in September of 1975 in Montreal. It is of interest to note that during the subsequent negotiations the minister was successful in reaching most of the aims that he had set himself in June. He succeeded in having the foreign fishing fleets of nations belonging to ICNAF, including the Russians, Spaniards, Portuguese, Germans, French and so on, limit their fishing efforts by 40 per cent. In that he achieved aims that members opposite did not think would be possible.

I think the compliments that the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte paid to the negotiator should have been directed to the Minister of State (Fisheries), who has manifested in his portfolio imagination and persuasiveness, and has sought to protect the interests of the very fishermen in whom the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte has displayed interest.

With reference to the herring fishery, I suggest that there has to be a recognition on the part of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we are to study the fishing stocks and the quality and condition of those fish stocks through ICNAF, there has to be as well on the part of Canadians a conscientiousness and an awareness of the necessity for preservation and building up of fish stocks. If we do enter into international relations whereby foreign fishing fleets limit their catch, Canadians must also be mindful of conservation and the development of fish stocks.

I thank the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte for communicating to the House the information he has received from one fisherman in his riding. I suggest we all communicate that information to the Minister of State (Fisheries), who in the past has shown a great deal of dispatch in dealing with such matters and investigating and taking appropriate action. The hon. member's reference to the action relating to the Russian fishing fleet is a case in point.

LABOUR CONDITIONS—STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—RESULTS OF DISCUSSION WITH COMPANIES—SUGGESTION ANTI-INFLATION BOARD BE FLEXIBLE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could elaborate on the last question, but I am pleased that I can elaborate on a question that I put to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in this House today having to do with the pulp and paper industry.

For some reason or other, I will never understand in a million years why we do not take up in the House of Commons matters of concern to Canadians, rather than items that are newsworthy in the eyes of the press gallery. We should deal with situations of concern to the Canadian economy. I wonder why the Canadian Press has someone in the press gallery even at this time to bother making notes, because they do not pay any bloody attention to what goes on in the House of Commons. They are concerned with what might be sensational and what that can do to some newspapers.

The pulp and paper industry stands second in manufacturing capacity in the world with a total of 1,290,000 workers. I got these figures from Statistics Canada today. In Canada the industry supports 61,873 production workers, or 5 per cent of the total in the pulp and paper industry.

The industry is the second largest in Canada. There are 41 pulp and paper mills on downtime and many more are being added each day as a result of strikes. This pulp and paper industry which is so vital to our economy is going to drive our economy into disaster and drive Canadian exports into oblivion.

Of total world exports of pulp and paper, Canada's exports are responsible for 7 million, or the greatest percentage of the pulp and paper industry exports of some 11 million. The main thrust of my question tonight is related to the effect of strike action in the Atlantic region, particularly in the province of Newfoundland, where the pulp and paper industry, apart from the fishing industry, is the basis of our economy.

Already two paper mills in Corner Brook and Grand Falls, and a linerboard mill in Stephenville are on strike. This is the whole basis of the economy of Newfoundland, and these strikes affect some 3,525 employees, not taking into account ancillary employment in resulting services. If we were to take into account the two and a half times factor that results we would be talking about the jobs of some 9,000 employees in a province where the unemployment rate is over 19.6 per cent. If we add the 28,000 unemployed, this would bring the percentage much higher.

In 1973 the total number of workers in production capacity was just over 11,000, and of this number some 2,590, or one-quarter of that force, were in the pulp and paper industry. This figure has now reached 3,525 in three mills, which is approaching the one-third level. When taking into account our total work force it is obvious that this situation is more than disastrous.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) indicated today in his answer to me that the responsibility in so far as coming to terms between industries and unions is concerned was of provincial nature. I quarrel with the minister's determination in this regard. When any breakdown is in such a vital industry that it is of national priority in its influence, surely it has to be treated as a national responsibility, not only from a labour point of view but from the point of view of a declaration of responsibility by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie).

I feel that a responsibility exists in relation to the Anti-Inflation Board, particularly when it is difficult to determine responsibility from the point of view of the guidelines laid down and negotiations between management and labour as related to the October 14 deadline.

It should be obvious that, as both the minister and I projected today, in the Atlantic region which is so dependent on the pulp and paper industry, the embarrassing unemployment rate should demand some concern, particularly when there appears to be a total collapse of the industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

It is, therefore, most glaringly obvious that when the difficulties exist in an industry with that basis in the Atlantic region, in light of the effect as declared by the Irving settlement, the situation must be examined on the basis of a uniform agreement throughout the region regarding all aspects of pulp and paper mills in Atlantic Canada.

Alternately, Madam Speaker, we can look at the facts as they reflect the situation in the whole of the Atlantic region where not only is the unemployment rate the highest in Canada, but where the New Brunswick and the Irving situation are prevalent and where the entire pulp and paper industry in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia is in a state of complete collapse. If in fact this situation is recognized then it is incumbent not only on the Minister of Labour, who I am sure is most sympathetic, but also on the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), and the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, to exercise the necessary flexibility in determining the guidelines dictated by the anti-inflation memoranda so that a state of justice can be recognized in order to determine justice for all.

I hope that the representative of the minister in replying tonight will recognize that the pulp and paper industry has an influence on the Canadian export trade, and that therefore the Government of Canada should take steps to resolve this problem which affects so many people in our work force.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) for raising a question which is so important to more than 60,000 Canadian employees, as he said himself.

[English]

The government fully understands and shares the concern voiced by members of this House on the gravity of the work stoppages facing the pulp and paper industry. As members will appreciate, while this industry is one of national importance it nevertheless is one which falls for labour relations purposes under the provinces in which it is located. Members will be aware that several provincial ministers of labour are faced with work stoppages within their respective jurisdiction in this important industry. These ministers and their officials are, of course, working to encourage settlements in the disputes, and remain in close touch with developments in each of the particular cases.

As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) pointed out in the house earlier, he has not received any notification directly from the companies following request for them to review negotiations. However, as he also pointed out, a settlement has been reached in the Saint John area relatively recently. According to reports, about 500 members of the Canadian Paper Workers' Union employed by Irving Pulp and Paper Limited of Saint John, New Brunswick, have ratified a two-year contract which would renew one expiring last April.

Questions have been asked by members of this House concerning the need for the Anti-Inflation Board to indicate whether or not the settlement reached in this case might be used as a benchmark in other cases. As the Minister of Labour pointed out, it is not his function to tell the board what it should be doing which individual settlements. Indeed, it would be quite contrary and prejudicial to the board's independent status for him to do so. However, he has indicated that the workers may be entitled to more money because unions which entered negotiation for new contracts before the guidelines were proclaimed October 14, and whose previous collective agreement was signed before January 1, 1974, could get special consideration.

It cannot be stressed too strongly that parties to disputes in the pulp and paper industry, and indeed parties to collective bargaining disputes generally, should not pass the responsibility to the Anti-Inflation Board or the Minister of Labour. They have a responsibility to bargain together in good faith to secure settlements. Labour departments in all jurisdictions have experienced personnel available to assist them should the need arise. The Anti-Inflation Board, in spite of its relatively brief existence, is gearing up to answer technical questions for the application of the guidelines, and has guaranteed an answer within 30 days.

Hon. members may be assured that the government will continue to watch developments in this important industry very closely. It must be remembered, however, that we live in a free society, and among the freedoms valued very highly are the freedom of association and the right to bargain collectively.

It seems that at the present time some employers abuse the guidelines and refuse to sit down at the negotiation table, obviously failing to meet their responsibilities towards their employees. We want to correct this situation as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—ANGOLA—POSSIBILITY OF GOVERNMENT ACTION AT UNITED NATIONS TO PREVENT FOREIGN INTERVENTION IN CONFLICT

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, on November 17 I raised a question with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) regarding representations that might be made by Canada concerning the situation developing in Angola. At that time the minister said that no initiatives had been taken. In the reply tonight I will probably be told that subsequent to my question representations have been made at the UN. But that is not really sufficient. I would appreciate the opportunity to enlarge somewhat on my question.

I know the Secretary of State for External Affairs has taken an extraordinary interest in Angola for some time. On February 19, 1975, addressing the fifth annual conference of the Canadian Association of African Studies in Toronto he said:

> Developments in Southern Africa during the last year give some hope that the situation may significantly improve. Events in the Portuguese territories have been so rapid and so dramatic that they emphasize how unwise it is to be dogmatic. We are gratified and encouraged by the decolonization process undertaken by the Portuguese government. Very few people foresaw such changes as have occurred in Guinea Bissau, Angola and Mozambique during the past year.

Then he went on to point out the pressures that have been placed on South Africa to change its policies.

On April 11 the minister announced that Canada would be sending a special diplomatic mission to Angola and Mozambique, two Portuguese African territories which were scheduled to become independent later this year. The mission, which was to take place from May 5 to 26, was intended primarily to make a first contact with the provisional governments and future leaders of these countries. One may wonder why a mission was being sent so early and prior to their actual independence, but if we read the announcement of April 24 we learn why. Speaking in Accra the minister said:

> ... and we are sending in the next few weeks a special mission to Angola and Mozambique to lay the ground for good relations with these countries, as well as the smaller Portuguese territories of Africa, which will stand as free and sovereign members of the United Nations and the OAU.

We learn there was a reason for that special mission. Then, on November 13, we had a somewhat belated and wan announcement which reads:

> Canada has consistently supported the rights of colonized peoples to self-determination and independence, and we have accordingly taken note and welcomed Angola's independence from Portugal which took place on November 11. However, the political and security situations there are extremely confused, and we are not at present in a position to recognize or enter into relations with any group which may claim to govern the country.

One may wonder just what report the special mission brought back. It seems to me, now we are hearing disquieting stories about Soviet and Cuban interventions, and about intervention from Zaire and intervention from South Africa, there should be a flurry of diplomatic activity to match the flurry that has gone on, and the minister's interest now should continue and not suddenly fade, when surely this is the time for Canada to be interested in a situation which very seriously threatens the peace of the world.

I would inquire what representations, not only in the UN but directly to the nations involved, the minister has made, or whether any pressure was put on Cuba. It seems to me that through our long ties with that country this is the place where some influence should have been built up over recent years. What representations have been made to the Soviet Union or to Zaire? Surely with our interest in western Africa through many years a certain influence should have been built up. If we have been pressuring South Africa, what questions have been asked there about the situation developing in Angola?

Surely if the minister has been so interested I cannot believe that the special mission did not come back without some very serious warnings to him. I cannot believe that he was not in a position months ago to have voiced the fear that there would be foreign interventions in Angola, and that a very explosive situation would develop there.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for drawing the attention of the House to such an important matter. Evidently, it is an extremely difficult question, especially in an underdeveloped continent such as Africa where most countries have been independent only since 1960. The experience of almost all countries, especially in South Africa, not the country itself but the southern area of that continent, leaves much room for improvement. They obviously need much sympathy and understanding from all countries. This sympathy and understanding were apparent from the beginning in the minister's statement.

[English]

As the hon. member indicated at the outset, when Angola contemplated independence the minister indicated the government's position that there was a hope that upon the granting of independence there could be a recognition within a short period of time. That is always hoped for. Unfortunately, as the political situation developed, it became evident that there were conflicting positions taken by various groups within Angola itself. The minister indicated that because of that political uncertainty, upon the declaration of independence if there was any possibility on the part of Canada to make any decision on a de jure or de facto recognition—Canada recognizing that Africa is not an area with which Canada is overly familiar—Canada could not play any helpful role by direct intervention or even in direct intervention in any of the affairs of the countries involved in this particular dispute.

However, Canada has always offered its assistance in the ways it felt it would be helpful to the nations concerned. Canada has repeatedly contributed to the International Red Cross and answered its appeals for the victims of the strife, and has indicated its preparedness to continue doing so.

I note from the remarks of the hon. member that he has been very interested in the pronouncements made by the minister relating to Angola. However, in listening to the minister's words being repeated in this House I find that there is nothing there which is contradictory, or anything which could be held to be negative or which would indicate that Canada is not ready to accept its international responsibilities. I suggest that before Canada can take bilateral steps, unilateral steps, or any steps through the United Nations, it has to think very seriously of the consequences. I think that to date the position Canada has adopted is one which ought to be commended.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

REASON FOR DESIGNATING AS BILINGUAL POSITION OF CHIEF STEWARD AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pertaining to the apparent serious mistreatment of the chief steward, a government employee for ten years under two Prime Ministers, at the Prime Minister's official residence, 24 Sussex Drive.

I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Marquette:

That the Prime Minister make a statement as to why the position held by Mr. Tom MacDonald, Chief Steward at 24 Sussex Drive for ten years, has been suddenly declared bilingual when all those in the household speak English; whether Mr. MacDonald is being forced to terminate his employment in the spring and what specific part, if any, was played by the Prime Minister's wife in this regrettable and unnecessary designation of a bilingual position.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED STUDY OF WAYS TO SETTLE STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

Given the important strike now affecting the pulp and paper industry across the country, which may cause prejudice to all parties involved, and since the general policy of the federal government for this industry urgently needs to be revamped and updated, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House of Commons proceed forthwith to a review of the general situation of the pulp and paper industry in the country in order to take specific measures which would facilitate the settlement of conflicts, like for example the control of imports and exports.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

COST OF OPERATING DE-ICING FACILITIES AT MIRABEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, having to do with the very expensive de-icing system at Mirabel constructed with public funds. In view of the reluctance of the Ministry of Transport to proceed with tenders to determine the most efficient and economical way to operate this expensive system, evidenced by their abrupt cancellation of the tenders which were scheduled to be opened on November 21 at eleven o'clock, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar:

That the Minister of Transport proceed forthwith to settle the question of who, or which company or organization, shall operate the de-icing facilities at Mirabel, and provide this House and the international airlines as well with cost data so that we may be aware of the efficiency and overhead factors together with the additional charges to the airlines which use Mirabel.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY OF COMMENCING NEGOTIATIONS FOR NEW CONTRACT AS METHOD OF IMPROVING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General perhaps I could address my question to the Prime Minister or to the Acting Postmaster General. In a statement this morning the postal union executive said that there are profound and continuing problems in postal labour relations, and that the union will be fighting every day during this contract for the things that are missing. In order to moderate the bitter relations that this long strike has done nothing to resolve, would the government tell the House whether it intends to take any initiative, possibly early initiation of negotiations for the new contract, to improve industrial relations in the post office?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Postmaster General will be in the House a little later on and I am sure that he can deal with any questions, but I cannot take seriously the suggestion of the hon. member opposite that we start now to talk about a new contract.

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—SUBMISSION OF SETTLEMENT TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): A supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister tell the House whether it is the intention of the government to refer the settlement reached in the postal strike to the Anti-Inflation Board for approval and, if so, will it have to take its place in the long line of cases waiting to be heard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as to the long line of cases, I do not know to what extent the hon. member is informed, but this, like every other contract, will be subject to the judgment of the Anti-Inflation Board.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF DECISION OF BOARD IN CASE OF TORONTO TEACHERS IN VIEW OF HISTORICAL RELATIONSHIP PROVISION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Since the white paper on inflation maintains that exceptions to the 10 per cent wage and salary increase guidelines will be permitted where an historical relationship has been established, and since the Anti-Inflation Board acknowledges that such relationship does in fact exist between metro Toronto high school teachers and metro Toronto elementary school teachers, would the minister explain how the board can possibly reach a decision that would leave the secondary school teachers in a position inferior to that of the elementary school teachers?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board now has, and will have after the bill is passed, responsibility for making judgments on the facts of each particular case. I do not think it is particularly useful for me, as Minister of Finance, to try to give an explanation of every judgment reached by the Anti-Inflation Board. Those decisions speak for themselves.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is precisely because they do that a lot of people, including negotiators on both sides, are much concerned. Since on page 23 of the white paper brought in by the government it is categorically asserted that where an exception is acknowledged, as it has been by the Anti-Inflation Board in this case, the purpose will be, to quote the white paper, "to maintain along established historical relationships", and since the two teacher groups in question have had salary parity for the past 21 years, does the decision by the board not flatly contradict what is categorically stated in the white paper?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the board gave a decision clarifying both this case and the Hamilton teachers case, and I think the two of them are to be read together in order to get a full understanding of their thinking on these matters. It seems to me, as I say, that nothing useful is accomplished by my trying to add my own interpretation of what the Anti-Inflation Board is saying.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister and indeed the Prime Minister have said that the collective bargaining process is not being interfered with in any way by these guidelines, may I ask the minister, following this decision by the Anti-Inflation Board, whether the decision does not mean that the phrase "historical relationships" in the white paper now no longer has any meaning, and that instead of bargaining with employers, employee groups should submit proposals directly to the Anti-Inflation Board, which would mean, in effect, acknowledging that the collective bargaining process in Canada is dead under this legislation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman makes some sweeping allegations, but I think the general response is no.

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON SETTLEMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

We have just learned that 53 per cent of the postal workers voted to return to work, accepting the employer's offers, while we were told last night that 70 per cent of the union members in Montreal voted to continue the strike. Does the minister see in that situation a play on the part of people like Parrot and company and the union, in that they would have the people believe that the postal workers are forced back to work by the Ontario vote as opposed to the Quebec vote in Montreal; and does the minister intend to unmask those hypocrites, once and for all, who try to mislead the people and save face by saying: Montreal did not want to put an end to the strike, while Toronto imposed a settlement; does the minister intend to make a statement to dot the "i"s with regard to those people?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I believe not. I feel the hon. member has done so much better than I could.

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REPLACE WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in view of the Solicitor General's statement yesterday that the Department of Justice is preparing legislation to be used instead of the War Measures Act for security purposes at the 1976 Olympics, would the Minister of Justice indicate to this House whether this legislation is in fact being prepared, when the government intends to introduce it, and will it, indeed, be drafted for the purpose of giving the government the opportunity to revert to the War Measures Act using another name?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: In view of the fact that Mr. Norton Cooper's involvement surrounding the prosecution of two DREE officials sometime ago in connection with substantial federal grants to his company, Silver Shield Mines of Toronto, could the Postmaster General advise this House what criteria led the post office to award this Olympic stamp medallion contract to Mr. Cooper's other company, Jacques Cartier Mint?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am testing new chutes to make sure this doesn't happen again.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That is good news, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the Prime Minister whether the real reason for this very long delay is not the fact that what has now become known as the "Sky Shops test" for all candidates is taking a little longer than expected?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—ACCEPTANCE OF GUIDELINES BY PROVINCES OR ADOPTION OF DIFFERENT GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who last week indicated that, with the possible exception of Saskatchewan, the provinces are only undecided on the administrative formula under which provincial jurisdiction will be covered by this program. Would the minister tell the House whether the other nine provinces specifically accept in principle the economic guidelines outlined in the white paper and their application to provincial jurisdictions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the very broadest sense I think one could say yes. In more specific terms, in reference particularly to the pricing for provincial goods and services, at the meeting last week there was what I think can be said to be rather diverse but general dissent to the notion of applying the guidelines to all elements of pricing, for example to the pricing of liquor in Ontario liquor stores and to Ontario Hydro. In that sense, as I indicated after the meeting, there will have to be further discussions to determine if the province is to go under section 4(4) or section 4(3) and the extent to which it will apply the guidelines to the services and goods which it is responsible for making available to the market.

● (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister having said, and I shall quote briefly from a press interview of last Wednesday, "Our preference in that regard would be to try and get as much national uniformity as we can, but we have set out in the bill the option for the provinces and we have to accept the fact that some may choose that option", do I take it that it is the minister's position that this option permits a province to administer guidelines that may differ from those administered by the Anti-Inflation Board, that is that it may bring in further different guidelines within the spirit of provincial jurisdiction being maintained by the province.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the matters that will be the subject of agreements to be entered into between the provinces and the federal government in respect of which there will be a further meeting at the official level this week. In general terms our preference would be that even in relation to the 4(4) option the national guidelines be applied. Naturally, when they are being applied by different bodies there is some scope for difference in application.

Mr. Stanfield: To be precise about it, Mr. Speaker, then the minister has not yet received an assurance that any province which wishes to retain administration within its own jurisdiction will in fact follow the federal guidelines and a province could comply with the Act we are being asked to pass and yet follow different guidelines from those pursued by the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, of course the matter has not been concluded. The effort the officials will be making at the meeting on Thursday will be to try to get a commitment to achieve as broad uniformity as possible. The agreement itself will be the subject matter of negotiations, so I cannot be firm for the hon. member in that regard.

FEED GRAIN—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF SUPPLY

Mr. Yves Caron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who is also the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Two weeks before closing the seaway, it is obvious that feed grain supplies in the ports along the St. Lawrence are insufficient and that cattle producers are concerned about this situation; they will also have to pay higher prices for feed grains and additional premiums in winter to feed their cattle. Can the minister assure this House and the producers of eastern Canada that enough feed grain will be stored for the current year at prices which will not reflect the present difference between the prices on the open market and the prices of the Canadian Wheat Board?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, of course prices do depend upon a variety of market conditions and can change. The supply situation is one in which the various buyers must look to the need and see that supplies are available. I can give the House this assurance, that a recent examination of supplies has indicated that there is in fact as much or more western grain in position in eastern Canada at this time, and that some significant movement of grain is continuing down the seaway before the closing of navigation. There is, of course, this year also a larger supply of Ontario corn, as well I believe, as additional corn in the province of Quebec, so the supply situation is basically a sound one.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED DESIRE TO EXCLUDE NATIVES FROM LAND CLAIM NEGOTIATIONS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and it has to do with press reports that the minister wrote a letter dated September 23 to the premier of British Columbia which is reported as having said that in the matter of negotiations regarding Indian land claims Indians should not be involved. He said "... would not be appropriate and some other way of carrying out negotiations would have to be explored". I want to ask the minister what possible reason there could be for excluding the Indian people's representatives from these negotiations unless, as one Indian chief has suggested, it is because the federal government wanted to work out a sweetheart deal with the province before sitting down at the table with the Indian representatives?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It would be a very strange day when we could work out a sweetheart deal with the government of British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Buchanan: The quotation very carefully left out the preceding part of the letter which expressed my concern that the two levels of government might be accused of ganging up on the Indian people, and I suggested that we should sit down, discuss the matter, and reach a common ground. We have not moved from the position that it is the federal government's responsibility to deal with and extinguish the claim. The point with which we have had no success until now is to bring the provincial government to accept that they have a responsibility so far as land and resources are concerned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the minister acknowledges that it would not be possible to work out this sweetheart deal but I want to ask the minister this question: In view of the fact that the government of B.C. has already acknowledged and conceded that it has responsibilities in this field, may I ask him now why the federal government is not prepared to sit down with the Indian people's representatives and the provincial government since the Indian people have a vital interest in the matter? Will the minister assure the House now that in the preliminary negotiations which take place the representatives of the Indian people will be present along with the representatives of the two senior governments?

● (1430)

Mr. Buchanan: I should point out that the acceptance of the responsibility to which the hon. member makes reference is a very recent conversion just embodied in a telegram which I received a couple of days ago from Mr. Norman Levi. I have replied to that telegram suggesting a date, a place and a time for the meeting with Nishga Indian representatives on January 12 in the Nass valley, and I just hope he will accept.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION PROVIDING FOR SUPERVISED SECRET STRIKE BALLOT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. In view of the very ample precedents which already exist in Canada's labour laws respecting government supervised secret ballots, I wonder if the minister would inform us if the government would endorse the bill already before the House in respect of a government supervised secret strike ballot. If not, would the government consider substituting one of its own?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think, as a general principle, the government enunciating whether it would be advisable in all circumstances to require an amendment to the Labour Code in matters of this kind should at least first be discussed with the tripartite body which we have set up, or the Canada Labour Relations Council, because as the hon. member knows, that has been heartily endorsed by his own party as a means of trying to have management, labour and government come together on a better technique to resolve labour disputes and to encourage a greater degree of industrial peace in this country. Having set up the body, and everyone wanting it to have a reasonable chance to attain this objective, it seems that to preempt it and to move without prior discussion would not be advisable.

Mr. Lawrence: I wonder then, if the minister would indicate if at this initiative he is going to put this before the tripartite body.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Certainly, the terms of reference of the tripartite body are to go into any and all techniques which would reduce the adversary element within labour relations, and I think that would include discussion on this particular point. I am certainly prepared to ask the labour body at what time it wishes to get around to discussing this. It is discussing consolidated bargaining units and other matters at the present time, as the hon. member knows.

INCREASE IN INTERNATIONAL RATES—APPLICABILITY TO WEEKLY NEWSPAPERS SHIPPED TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In his statement covering the rate of increase for international postal rates the minister stated:

> Excluded from the increase, however, are the rates and fees to the United States, its territories and possessions, with the exception of certain publishers' rates.

Four weekly newspapers in my constituency have contended that the cost of mailing their newspapers to the United States after January 1 will increase by some $3,000 or more. Therefore, my question to the Postmaster General is, will this stated increase be applicable to the shipment of weekly newspapers to the United States, or are they excluded?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice a few minutes ago. The press release is definitely ambiguous. We have special rates for the United States which are not considered part of the international rate, and I would want to check that information this afternoon and get it to the hon. gentleman.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTION PERSON OUTSIDE CIVIL SERVICE BE CONSIDERED FOR POSITION OF ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that Bill C-73 seems to be on its last legs in this House—

An hon. Member: You want to bet?

Mr. Baldwin: —can the minister advise if he now has a suitable candidate for the position of administrator under the legislation?

Mr. Chrétien: Are you looking for the job?

Mr. Baldwin: In addition, in light of the fact that the administrator will be both in an adversary and possibly quasi-judicial position vis-à-vis the government, will the government consider going outside the civil service for the appointment in question?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to consider that suggestion.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—NUMBER OF COMPANIES TO WHICH GUIDELINES APPLICABLE—SIZE OF STAFF NECESSARY TO MONITOR COMPANIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I clarify a problem which has just been brought to my attention with respect to the number of companies involved with employees over 500 and which are subject to the anti-inflation legislation? It has been stated there are something like 3,000 companies involved rather than 1,500 and that there can be up to something like 50,000 companies involved in the construction industry. Does the minister agree with that statement, and if not, what are the new figures which he has to present to the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take this question as notice.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that it has been pointed out that something like 3,000 companies with over 500 employees are involved and some 50,000 involved with the construction industry, does the minister still feel that a staff of about 200 is adequate to realistically monitor the actions of these companies?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think the first thing to do is to find out if the hon. member's figures are accurate.

AIR TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON IMPLEMENTATION OF REGULATIONS FOR BILINGUAL GROUND TO AIR COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

About ten days ago, the minister received a telegram from the inspecting pilots of the airlines, Quebec section, in which they stated the use of French would not in any way jeopardize air security. Can the minister tell the House if he still intends to implement the guidelines which were proposed by Mr. McLish or if the matter is at present being discussed?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the study of the question of safety in air travel and the use of languages is an ongoing matter, and I have no further indication of change at this moment. My officials are meeting with a variety of people, including the inspectors to whom the hon. member referred, to pursue the question of safety further.

BILINGUAL GROUND TO AIR COMMUNICATIONS— CONSULTATIONS WITH QUEBEC SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Considering that the Solicitor General of the province of Quebec fully supports the view of the pilots' association, did the minister discuss with him or does he intend to do so?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I do intend to have such a discussion. The question of safety is one which we must leave in the hands of those who are expert in the analysis of this question.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

POSSIBILITY OF TRANSFERENCE OF STAFF AND REPORTS TO ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that Mrs. Plumptre is now in a new position, has the entire staff of the Food Prices Review Board been discharged or transferred, or are there still employees on that board's payroll?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, most of the members of the Food Prices Review Board, I would say 95 per cent, have been transferred to the new Anti-Inflation Board.

[English]

Mr. Towers: Are all reports, price lists and all the material which has been available to the Food Prices Review Board going to be made available to the Anti-Inflation Board?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the new board must take over the work done under the former board.

INDUSTRY

PULP AND PAPER—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES TO AID IN REFORESTATION AND INVENTORY CONTROL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Has the cabinet considered the very serious economic trends which are currently plaguing the pulp and wood fibre industries in Canada, and has it considered re-instigating or re-instituting a number of agreements with the provinces which existed in the mid 1960's? These would help the industry with regard to such things as forced access, reforestation and inventory control.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly consider these, but I wonder if the hon. member has considered that he is really asking for a serious rise in government spending.

THE MINISTRY

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF MINISTRY OF FORESTRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): A supplementary question. In light of the difficulties the forest industry is experiencing—which is incidentally, the second largest in Canada—I wonder if the Prime Minister is considering re-establishing a ministry directly responsible for this particular industry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can consider this, too, but as I answered a member on the other side the other day when he asked me a question about multiculturalism, I have to take note that the opposition has asked for the enlargement of the ministry which, of course, would mean spending more money. But I will consider this.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES TO PRICE OF NATURAL GAS

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. Further to his earlier comments, would the minister be good enough to indicate whether in his opinion the anti-inflation guidelines will apply to any increases to the consumer subsequent to October 14, 1975 in the price of natural gas in the Scarborough area?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the price increases would be made up of agreed price increases at the well head between the provincial governments and the federal government, the gathering charges in Alberta, the charges for transmission by TransCanada PipeLines and the costs of distribution within Ontario. The TransCanada PipeLines' charges will, of course, be governed by the guidelines as applied by the National Energy Board.

The distribution costs within Ontario will be governed by the public sector agreement to be made between the province of Ontario and the federal government and made either by the Ontario Energy Board or perhaps by the Anti-Inflation Board. We feel it would be desirable in both these cases to achieve that kind of control. The basic price of natural gas itself would not be governed by the guidelines and would have to be submitted for agreement between the federal government and the provinces from time to time.

FINANCE

PROPOSED MANDATORY PROVISION THAT BANKS ALLOCATE MORE MONEY FOR MORTGAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement today that the chartered banks have made huge increases in profits this year over last year and the fact that they put only an additional $300 million into mortgages despite the call by the minister of state for housing for one billion dollars, would the minister agree that the moral suasion is not enough and instead make it mandatory that the banks allocated a greater portion of their investment portfolio for mortgages at a fixed low interest rate?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the hon. member's conclusion does not flow from his premise.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could rephrase the question. In view of the fact that the chartered banks have made huge increases in profits, much larger increases than other businesses in Canada this year over last year, and in light of the fact that they have only put an additional $300 million into housing despite the call of the minister of state for housing for one billion dollars, would the minister now agree to bring in legislation amending the Bank Act, making it mandatory that they allocate a greater portion of their investment portfolio for housing at a low, fixed interest rate?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will be putting before the House before next summer legislation for amending the Bank Act as a result of the decennial revision. I suggest it probably makes more sense to have a considered amendment of the Bank Act rather than try to do it on the ad hoc basis that the hon. member may decide from week to week from reading the newspapers.

Mr. Nystrom: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement made by the former minister of finance when he brought down his budget last year to the effect that the housing sector was contributing to unemployment and not playing its full role in providing jobs for Canadians, I should like to ask the present Minister of Finance whether he can now say how much unemployment can actually be attributed to the fact that the banks are not playing their full role in helping build houses in this country?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, I cannot say that, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON MISUSE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION—INSTRUCTIONS TO LAW OFFICERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice arising out of the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of Canada written by the Chief Justice and involving the former chairman of the anti-dumping tribunal. Has the minister had an opportunity to review this excellent decision? Also, in view of the harsh criticism by Chief Justice Laskin of the government's misuse of investigative powers and information obtained under the Combines Investigation Act and the Income Tax Act, and assuming that the minister has had time to review the judgment, what instructions has he given to the law officers of the Crown on the misuse of information which by statute is confidential?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I read the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada with a good deal of concern and I appreciate the hon. member raising the question. I have asked for a full report of the circumstances surrounding the case, which occurred some years ago. I have not received a report because of the absence of one of my counsel in Toronto. I want to assure the hon. member however, and the House, that I do not condone, and have so indicated to my officers, the use of either the Income Tax Act or the Combines Investigation Act except for the purposes spelled out in those acts. I want to make it very clear that I have put this position to my officials. I am determining the factors surrounding that case and I feel fairly sure that neither of my two immediate predecessors have condoned the use of material obtained under those Acts for purposes not provided for in the Acts.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE INFORMATION GIVEN STATISTICS CANADA WILL REMAIN CONFIDENTIAL

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As is mandatory under the statute that governs Statistics Canada and similar Acts, when people are asked to fill out certain forms with information about their business and personal affairs, will the minister assure the House that this information will be confidential and not used by officials of the Crown or any other officials in any other department of government?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that to the best of my ability the information gained under those Acts will be used in accordance with the provisions of those Acts which contain very strict measures relating to confidentiality of information. I want to assure the hon. member of that. An incident was raised in this House some two years ago about Statistics Canada divulging information under the Income Tax Act. That was stopped and since then an interdepartmental committee has been examining the situation to assure that the confidentiality sections of all those Acts are protected.

ALLEGED INADEQUATE INSPECTION OF FOOD STORAGE AND MANUFACTURING PLANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the objective of the health protection branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare is to protect Canadians from health hazards in the food supply, which includes nutritional and microbiological quality, environmental contaminants, food additives and food standards as well as sanitary requirements, I should like to ask the minister how he ever hopes to assure the people of Canada that they are protected when more than 7,000 of the 10,500 food manufacturing and storage plants in Canada are inspected on an average of only once in every seven years for violations of the Food and Drugs Act as reported by the advisory committee on food safety assessment?

PROVISION OF TWO AIRCRAFT FOR SKYWEST—IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Does the minister intend to honour the commitment of his predecessor, the present minister without portfolio that two aircraft would be provided or lent to Skywest to institute the air service to Dauphin, Brandon, and other points which had been promised to the Manitoba government?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the intention of the government has been to purchase the two craft but to be sure, in the first instance, there would be a way of operating them. In that case, we are waiting for the necessary procedures to be gone through. We obviously will have to review our position at this point.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question. Has the minister indicated whether he is in favour of tendering by private and public airlines in awarding contracts for such service as this?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that has only arisen incidentally since I have been Minister of Transport.

POST OFFICE

STRIKE OF INSIDE WORKERS—PROVISION FOR DISCIPLINARY ACTION FOLLOWING RETURN TO WORK

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. In view of the marginal vote by the postal union to return to work, and in view of the six weeks duration of the strike, will the government be signing the normal return-to-work agreement which might allow 72 hours for the men to be on the job and provide that any disciplinary action will be taken through the courts and not on the job?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there is no need for any disciplinary action. The unions announced that they are ready to go back to work at five o'clock. As a matter of fact, many have already gone back.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON FIRE IN TORONTO OFFICE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I assume that the normal Christmas mail and parcel delivery will be resumed immediately. Will the minister comment on the report that there has been a fire in the Toronto post office? Apparently some of the dissidents would rather burn the mail than sort it.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I must say I am lucky that at the all-night session the ratification vote was not announced as 50.001. I do mind the fire in Toronto. I deplore the bombing of one of our depots during the night by molotov cocktails and some damage done in Quebec city. I cannot say if it is connected with the union or not.

Mr. Mackasey: It may be funny to some members, but I do not feel it should go on in this country.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED CONTINUANCE OF NEGOTIATIONS TO SETTLE LABOUR PROBLEMS

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, before the Postmaster General arrived today, the Prime Minister indicated that it would not be appropriate at this time to negotiate further with the CUPW. In view of statements by the Minister of Labour that continuing negotiations should be carried on during the term of a contract, and in view of the fact that the postal agreement just reached has only 19 months to run, will the Postmaster General continue negotiations in an attempt to solve some of the profound and continuing problems in postal labour relations arising out of the reluctant acceptance by the union rank and file of the government's offer?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the collective agreement contains provision for labour and management consultation on a weekly basis. I think that in the past this has solved most of the problems. In most of our post offices, which are manned by decent, law abiding Canadians, hopefully that will be the continued method. If there are some who cannot live within the post office and abide by the rules, they must get out of the post office.

TRANSPORT

DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN RATES ON RAPESEED AND RAPESEED PRODUCTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the protracted controversy over rail freight rates for rapeseed as against rapeseed products shipped from western Canada to Montreal, Toronto and other areas, and in view of the commitment given by the government last summer in the policy paper on transportation that it would order the CTC to establish rates on rapeseed products at minimum compensatory levels and the increase in railway cost figures, what action has the minister taken or when will he be taking action? Also, what effect, if any, will this have on reducing the existing differential between freight rates for rapeseed and rapeseed products?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport had extensive discussions with the western ministers in particular to arrive at appropriate positions following the CTC decision. There was a general agreement reached about the approach that might be used. Unfortunately, certain steps to arrive at that result require either the consent of a variety of parties or legislation. We have been attempting to obtain that consent. We do not yet have all of it in place in order to implement the understanding about what the rates ought to be and what their relationship ought to be.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, contact has been had with Dr. Hall. The answer still is that it will be soon. His hearings were more protracted than he anticipated.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

RESTORATION OF SERVICE TO GLENWOOD AND HILL SPRING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. On November 21 the minister received a telegram from Harold Boucher, the president of the Magrath and District Chamber of Commerce which read, and I quote:

Advise what arrangements made to move grain from Glenwood and Hill Spring elevator. Situation desperate. Grain piled on ground.

Deteriorating daily. Surely you can order CP Rail to move grain either by rail or truck.

Will the minister inform the House what has been done in this regard? Has he instructed CPR to restore service to Hill Spring and Glenwood?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, any such instructions would have to originate from the CTC. The problem with rail movement is there is difficulty with a bridge that cannot handle ordinary service. There is real doubt about the ability of anyone to order a movement by truck. However, we have been negotiating toward a specific truck movement of grain. We are attempting to put the final details of that movement in place. I hope to be able to tell these communities in short order about that plan.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, because of the unique position of the post office, casuals will always be needed for emergency purposes, including Christmas. We have not in any way restricted their use in this context. The answer, therefore, is yes, we will be using casuals when necessary.

was due to the heavy administrative burdens of the President of France.

PRIVILEGE

MR. STANFIELD—STATEMENT MADE ON TELEVISION BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to comment on the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare about the CBC, CTV and myself. The opinions I expressed last Friday were based on the CTV interview of the minister of last Thursday evening.

[English]

I must say that some others got that impression from the interview, as I did. The minister indicated, in the course of the total interview, that he is somewhat sensitive regarding attitudes toward Quebec and Quebeckers. I am perhaps somewhat sensitive about attitudes attributed to my party in connection with Quebec and Quebeckers.

Following the exchange on Friday, later in the day the minister and I had a chat. He has since made available to me a full transcript of the CTV interview of which I heard an excerpt presented on Thursday evening. I am happy to say that the transcript fully supports the minister's assertion that he in no way implied any racist behaviour on the part of my party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I might say, in closing, that I do not make a practice of watching the television news at eleven o'clock, and perhaps in view of my hot blood—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —I should elevate that practice into an invariable rule.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Since the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to me were based, as he put it in his own phrase, on the opinions of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and on the erroneous impression that he had seen the commissioner of the RCMP without the presence of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), he might wish to say he regrets using the words: "I hope this doesn't show any racist tendency on the part of the Prime Minister." Surely that was meant in fun, but it wasn't very funny in my view.

Mr. Stanfield: I had intended to raise this matter with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) privately if not publicly. I am happy to have an opportunity to clarify it. I say, in all frankness, that my reaction Friday morning was to attempt to deal lightly with the situation. There seemed to me to be a charge by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) which I could not entirely ignore. I thought a reference to a meeting involving the Prime Minister, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Marchand) and the commissioner, in the absence of the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand), would be so obviously absurd—

Mr. Trudeau: He was there.

Mr. Stanfield: I said it was reported to me. I thought the question would be so obviously absurd that the Prime Minister would treat it in the way I intended it to be treated—as a joke. It simply illustrated the absurd lengths to which charges of racism can be pushed. I regret that my sense of humour did not appear to be entirely appropriate to the occasion. Even the finest instrument sometimes goes out of tune.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I simply wish to assure the Prime Minister—I am sure he will accept my assurance—that I had no intention, on Friday morning, to insert any note of ugliness into our discussions and I regret the fact that the Prime Minister—I am not suggesting he is to blame for this—should have misunderstood. I put it this way: I regret that the light touch with which I had intended to handle a delicate situation turned out to be a trifle heavy-handed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT ENTITLED "THE FINAL ACT OF THE CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies, in English and French, of a document entitled "The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe."

STATEMENT ON "THE FINAL ACT OF THE CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE"

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the document I have just tabled, "The Final Act of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe"—called from the outset by its initials CSCE—was signed at Helsinki on August 1 by the heads of government of the states of Europe and of Canada and the United States. It is intended to establish the basis for the development of future relations between their countries and peoples. It is, therefore, an entirely forward-looking document; it does not look back to the past.

Many Canadians have been erroneously led to believe that by signing the Final Act of the CSCE Canada and its allies did something that sanctified the status quo in Europe. It is true that the Soviet Union for the last thirty years and during the course of the CSCE itself sought to gain acceptance of the political and geographical situation in Europe. But throughout the conference the NATO allies worked to avoid a document that could be pointed to in years to come as a surrogate peace treaty for World War II. Not one word of the Final Act justifies the claim that it constitutes recognition of Soviet hegemony in eastern Europe or of the post-war de facto borders.

Canada entered the negotiations with a specific set of concerns. We wanted to play a part in the conference commensurate with our interests in Europe. In this we succeeded. We wanted to see incorporated in the Final Act measures to assist the freer movement of people and ideas. This goal has been achieved. Worthy of special note in this regard is the strong text on the reunification of families, sponsored by Canada.

We sought the development of a confidence-building measure involving advance notification of military manoeuvres, and after difficult negotiations such a measure was worked out. Finally, Canada had important economic and environmental interests to safeguard and advance, and the appropriate texts in the Final Act meet our requirements in this respect.

The Final Act provides for a meeting at senior official level in Belgrade in 1977 to review progress in implementation and possibly to organize a resumed conference. It is the policy of the government to ensure that, for its part, the Final Act is implemented as soon and as completely as possible. Copies are being sent to all federal government departments and agencies concerned, to provincial governments and to non-governmental organizations whose co-operation is essential to the carrying out of Canada's responsibilities under the Final Act. Copies are now available to the public through the outlets of Information Canada.

Domestically, we are examining what changes should be made in our present practices to meet the moral commitments we have accepted. In our bilateral relations we are using the document to provide guidance in communiqués, agreements and treaties. Multilaterally, consideration is already being given to the matter of implementation in two United Nations bodies, the Economic Commission for Europe, and UNESCO.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, one would never accuse the Department of External Affairs of acting in haste. The document tabled in the House today, the Final Act signed in Helsinki on August 1, 1975, was published in the September issue of "International Legal Materials" and has been reposing since then in the Library of Parliament, where I first read it. This raises the interesting question of what other documentation the government has consigned to the library shelves rather than bringing it into the House for the inspection of parliament. One thinks immediately of the "New International Economic Order," a document that has occupied the attention of two special sessions of the United Nations General Assembly, which has yet to receive the official notice or attention of parliament.

In the case of the Final Act of Helsinki, the reason for the delay may be found in the distinct discomfiture evidenced in the minister's statement; for however much the minister may claim that the Final Act does not justify Soviet control over eastern Europe, this is precisely the effect. We are to go forward, the minister says, not dwell on the past. Are we to forget the millions of east Europeans trampled on in the Soviet Union's unprincipled expansion? Are we to forget the dead, the tortured, the prison camps, the ceaseless violations of human rights by a totalitarian regime that seeks to legitimize its actions through the floss of détente?

What in fact has happened—the Canadian people should be aware of this—is that the Final Act gives the Kremlin its long-sought symbolic hegemony over eastern Europe in trade for unenforceable, limp pledges for an increased east-west flow of information, ideas and people. Brezhnev himself claimed that Helsinki was "a necessary summing-up of the political outcome of the Second World War". In effect, the signatures of 35 nations have recognized the status quo in eastern and central Europe established by Russian arms in the interest of Russian power. Let us not hide the fact that Helsinki was a betrayal of the victims of oppression.

The question we must now ask is: Are we betraying ourselves in putting hope in this document which has no legally binding effect? The Helsinki principles oblige the signatories to support liberty of thought, conscience and faith, the exercise of civil and political rights, a freer flow of information, ideas and people, in addition to basic principles of relations between states: non-intervention, sovereign equality, self-determination, territorial integrity, inviolability of frontiers. All of this is the stuff of security and co-operation, but not one of these principles is being honoured today by the Soviet Union.

It takes heroic willpower to read the Final Act without giving in to cynicism. What could better demonstrate the bad faith of the Soviet Union than the refusal to allow Soviet physicist Andrei Sakharov to go to Oslo to receive his Nobel Peace Prize on December 10?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: This refusal is an affront to world public opinion; and Sakharov is right when he says that this refusal confirms the continued Soviet violation of human rights which imperils the future of all mankind. Our party will begin to believe Helsinki when we see Sakharov in Oslo, when we see unrestricted movement of Soviet Jews, when we see the Polish people, the Czechoslovaks, the Ukrainians and other subjugated east Europeans living the life of their choice. Only then talk to us about reducing Canada's military commitments in Europe—not before.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, our party is pleased to see the sections on the reunification of families that Canada insisted be in the Final Act. The Act states that "participating states will deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family". Why, then, are four former Rumanian citizens, David Pompiliu of Toronto, Dimitrie Moldovan of Edmonton, Julian Hirtescu of Toronto, and Alexandre Sandu of Quebec City, ignored by the government as they stand outside the parliament buildings day by day in peaceful pleading that Canada help to reunite their families detained in Rumania? I have brought these four men into the House today as my guests—and we are asking for action from the government.

Helsinki could open the way to a really serious western commitment to economic and social justice for the developing nations of the Third World. That would be the greatest of all foundations for the global peace we desire. But in the meantime, let us not delude ourselves. The more we study Helsinki's Final Act, the more we understand the minister's reluctance to bring it into the House.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the House knows that the purpose of the conference was to promote security in Europe through détente. The Final Act of the conference deals with some military matters, such as notification of manoeuvres, but recognizes the truth that security does not depend upon the piling up of armaments but on the good will, the understanding and the co-operation of the peoples concerned. Indeed, the piling up of armaments to existing levels, not least by the two superpowers, is a perpetual source of insecurity.

This Final Act expresses many highly desirable aspirations in a variety of fields and throughout 132 pages. But the proof of the pudding will be in the eating. The real question will be the implementation of all these noble words. The Act speaks of sovereignty and equality of states, of the territorial integrity of states, the inviolability of frontiers, the peaceful settlement of disputes, and refraining from the threat or use of force. In his statement, the minister was at pains to say that there is nothing in the document that sanctifies the status quo in Europe. That may be technically correct, but in reality there can be little doubt that the document clearly rejects the use of force to alter presently existing boundaries. I do not complain of that. In what he said, I do not know whether the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) was suggesting that we should not accept this treaty because we had some other alternative to changing the boundaries of eastern Europe. As far as we are concerned, we think that in the nuclear age talk of using force to alter the boundaries of eastern Europe makes no sense at all.

● (1520)

Mr. Fairweather: He didn't say that.

Mr. Brewin: The document goes on to make promises in respect of human rights and freedom. These high-sounding sentiments have been used frequently in this era in many parts of the world, not only in eastern Europe, but the abuse of human rights and fundamental freedom in many parts of the world remains a grim reality. There are provisions for co-operation in very many fields. If these proposals for co-operation in fact are taken up and implemented, perhaps we will have a different atmosphere.

As has been pointed out, there is provision for the reunification of families and of regular meetings on the basis of family ties. Once again, it is the implementation, not the announcement of these humanitarian measures, that is required. The good intentions of the European nations on both sides of the iron curtain are clearly and, indeed, eloquently expressed in the document. I think that is to the good, but it will take a lot of hard work and good will on both sides to remove the fears and suspicions that years of hostility have built up.

Canada should be glad to be associated in this important task, even if we may be skeptical about some of the phases through which this treaty is bound to go before it is fully implemented. We can be skeptical, but let us not reject the means made available, through the treaty, to the peoples of Europe, with the co-operation of North America, of building a sounder, more stable world.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in principle everybody favours peace and co-operation between nations, but we must come to see, through the show given by heads in Helsinki, the realities and consequences. In my opinion, a treaty such as this offers no real safeguard. Mere signatures at the bottom of a formal document are not enough to guarantee peace and security. Past experiences bearing this, the 1939 pact between Molotov and von Ribbentrop, as well as the treaty between Hitler and Chamberlain, are bitter mementos which warn us never to forget this reality. Western countries, led by the United States, have renounced their true roles to concentrate their efforts on the search for gains and profits, even to the point of providing all components for nuclear world war.

On one hand, peace is advocated in very many speeches, as Mr. Ford was doing in China yesterday and on the other hand we make and sell as many weapons as we can while believing that they will never be used! Meanwhile, the U.S.S.R. is acting along the same line in its own way: they are advocating détente, making believe it is peace, while continuing just as before to extend their hold country by country, continent by continent. Just see what is going on in Portugal at the very moment I am speaking. Nobody has spoken about the bursting in Portugal where the "Russian détente" is becoming apparent nor about the divisions in Cyprus, nor about the arms race, nor about the West Berlin status.

The Helsinki Act, signed by more than 35 countries—including the United States with Canada "in their pocket"—represents the official recognition of the U.S.S.R. right to absolute property over the lands conquered during World War II and over the countries which, thereafter, have been maintained by force within the soviet system.

It represents the doom of the East European countries without any hope of freedom for the future. It is an alarm for China, confronted by the increasing Soviet threat, as the Chinese authorities emphasized again yesterday in Peking. The Helsinki pact gives Russia absolute liberty to do what she wants and to extend her hegemony without anybody saying a word, for fear of being called an enemy of détente.

The Helsinki agreement is an acknowledgement of the weakening of western countries and America, through the multiplication of compromises and concessions. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) pointed out, at the beginning of his speech, that the countries had "not to look back to the past" to reach this agreement. If we look at what this agreement really brought to us, our countries must have really forgotten everything that has happened to reach it. I hope nonetheless that they will not awake too late or too suddenly. We also hope that the next meeting of ministers of external affairs, which is to be held, according to the minister, in 1977, will be a source of more optimism about the future of the whole world for all nations.

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the minister as a result of the statement he made today. On Friday, November 28, I mentioned that Rumanian citizens who now have landed immigrant status in Canada were parading in front of the parliament buildings seeking Canadian government assistance in bringing their families to Canada. The minister promised to follow up my request in order to obtain the reunification of these families in accordance with the agreement reached at the Helsinki conference. I ask the minister what steps have been taken by him and his officials with regard to this request, and what response, if any, has been received from the Rumanian embassy?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of course we are constantly in touch with the embassies and officials of governments such as Rumania to accelerate the process of reunification of families from eastern Europe under the terms of the Helsinki agreement. I have not at the present time a specific report on each of these cases, but I will be in touch with my hon. friend later. While I am on the subject of family reunification, may I say that Canada regards the implementation of the final act, particularly in respect of family reunification, as a measure of the true attitude of participants in the conference. Because the deputy minister of the foreign office of Hungary is in the gallery, I should mention that we are pleased to note that all the active family reunification cases which were included on the list given to Hungarian officials earlier this year appear to have been successfully resolved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a couple of questions to the minister. He has said, on one hand, that this is not a binding treaty and, therefore, there is no legal recognition of the boundaries that came into force following World War II—obtained, of course, by force. He has said, on the other hand, that there is a moral commitment in respect of family reunification. It seems to me the minister is trying to have it both ways in regard to this treaty. Either it has a legal and binding effect, or it does not. Either it offers real hope for family reunification, or it does not. I should like the minister to explain the effect of the treaty other than to give respectability to détente.

Mr. MacEachen: On the first point, Mr. Speaker, I think it has to be made clear that the results of the conference do not, notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman has stated, endorse the territorial status quo in Europe. That was not the result of the conference and we worked very hard to avoid that outcome. The text recognizes that while existing boundaries in Europe are inviolable, and indeed they continue to be, they can be changed in accordance with international law by peaceful means or agreement. I believe the more we repeat the erroneous statement that the status quo was sanctified by this conference, the easier we will make it for certain people to draw that conclusion—a conclusion that is not supported and is contrary to the words of the text. My hon. friend ought to be conscious of that possibility which would be very damaging to the cause that he is ostensibly supporting.

● (1530)

The document is not a legal document. It is a statement of principle. It is not a treaty. It does not have legal effect. All the countries have come together in accepting these principles, one of which is the principle of the acceleration of family reunification. Of course, we intend to insist—as this House is insisting today—that all signatories live up to and implement these principles. When we come to the monitoring conference in Belgrade in 1977 we will know to what extent the signatories have lived up to the principles to which they put their signature at Helsinki. That is the significance of the document: it is a standard against which the performance of the signatories can be measured. That is a very important result.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because the Helsinki Final Act is a statement of principle that we wish to have clarified the whole question of the family reunification clause. I ask the minister now, how can we expect people to believe in the Helsinki Final Act if we do not see very quick action on the reunification of families?

In addition to the question of Hungary that he has volunteered, we are bringing to this country representatives of Rumania, people who have left that country and have had two or three years without their families and whose case has been brought to the attention of the Canadian government. The Canadian government granted entrance visas for their families, but it is the exit visas from Rumania which are not being issued and which the Canadian government has not yet protested.

I ask the minister now if he will assure the House this afternoon, in the presence of the four Rumanians I have mentioned that a personal protest will be carried by the Department of External Affairs to the government of Rumania on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest respect, the question bears great similarity to that put by the hon. members colleague, the member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), which was answered by the minister in a manner which would indicate that he does not have the details of those cases in front of him, but that he will deal with them later. Therefore, I do not think I can permit the second question.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister. I have to agree with my colleagues here, but there is one specific question. In order to maintain a more speedy flow of visas for the reunification of families between Russia and Canada according to the Helsinki accords, will the minister ask his department to set up consular offices in Leningrad and Kiev and ask the Russians to do the same? There are those other than Muscovites who want to be reunited with their families; for example, there are many Ukrainian families in Kiev and Leningrad.

Mr. MacEachen: The purpose of the text on family reunification was to alter and to improve the existing practice. It is my view that it is too early to condemn the Helsinki document on non-performance at this stage. Maybe we must do that later on, but I believe we must now insist that all signatories live up to the principle which states that participating states will deal in a positive and humanitarian way with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their family. That is the principle, and we will insist on its implementation in the course of our discussions with representatives of other countries. In my discussion with Mr. Gromyko just recently, this was one of the points I made with him.

With regard to opening up new posts in parts of the Soviet Union for purposes which are entirely commendable, I am afraid I cannot hold out any hope that in this period of restraint it will be possible for my department to increase its posts in any country.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, all it would require would be one individual in each of these cities in order to expedite the visas. According to the Helsinki principles, would the minister advise the Russian government to stop charging excess duty—this is part and parcel of the Helsinki accord and the Helsinki principles—on parcels which are sent from Canada to families in the Soviet Union, including items such as foodstuffs and clothing. I think this is wrong according to the Helsinki principles.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this particular question is a new one for me. I must say there are other principles in the document, but one, of course, is the principle of sovereignty. All these principles have to operate together. While each country has undertaken to live up to these principles, they all have to be taken in their total context. However, I should like to examine the details of the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would propose, in the circumstances, to conclude the questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), and the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reiterate, again, my thanks for the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), especially in the field of family reunification. However, on the question of peace I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he is prepared this afternoon to inform the House whether any progress has been made at the conference in Geneva, at which Canada is a participant, relating to the Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions in central and eastern Europe.

Mr. MacEachen: Regretfully, Mr. Speaker, I must inform the House and my hon. friend that no progress has been made up to the present time in the discussions on the MBFR. I have made clear, I believe all hon. members will agree, that if the process of détente is to be meaningful it must be accompanied by progress in respect of the reduction of arms in Europe. That has not yet taken place. At the NATO meeting which I will be attending next week that subject will be a matter for discussion by the members of the alliance.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to have great confidence in the document he tabled this afternoon, which is, after a fashion, a statement of principle.

How can he explain, for instance, with regard to the free exchange of information between the countries mentioned in the document, that at the time of the conference Mr. Brezhnev indicated that exchanges would be free provided there was an agreement on their extent, which really means, to all practical purposes, that the Russians reserve the right to do what they have always done in that regard?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I find no ready answer to the statement which the hon. member has made, except to repeat that now the principles have been accepted, we have to continue to insist that they be implemented and, at the time we are all together at a meeting in Belgrade, tell each other what we think of the performance or lack of performance. That will likely be the test of the words and principles which have been adopted.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

[Mr. Paproski.]

The minister tells us we must wait for the meeting to be held at Belgrade to see whether there will be good results, if any at all? Can he tell us frankly what Canada won after that statement of principle? Did we win anything, are we now better off than before the statement?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think we are better off. I think we have made a positive gain in securing a very strong statement of principle on the question of family reunification and on the movement of peoples and ideas—a statement of principle which can be used in our bilateral and multilateral negotiations which are beginning now. That is an important gain.

● (1540)

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I will ask one brief question of the minister, keeping in mind that I support wholeheartedly the other matters which my colleagues have raised in this regard, and also keeping in mind the minister's general good faith. I should like to ask the minister whether he or his officials would be willing, for humanitarian reasons, to meet with the representatives of the Committee of the Rumanian Societies of the League of Canada who are very anxious to discuss in detail some problems relating to the reunification of their families and other families in Rumania and elsewhere.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am ready to meet with such representatives. Certainly my officials would be prepared to meet to discuss details. We have placed a high priority on these cases: we raise them at every opportunity and we follow them up. A meeting of the kind suggested would be possible and desirable from my point of view.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order may I just take a brief moment to make a correction to yesterday's Hansard which conveys the wrong impression. On page 9588, while the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), in his inimitable fashion, was holding forth on government expenditures, which he referred to as the frolics at Mirabel, an hon. member—I do not know who it was, but perhaps it was an hon. member opposite—said, "He attended the frolic", meaning that I did. I want to point out that although perhaps I would like to have gone, I was not able to go. I understand that it was a very entertaining affair, but I did not go and I wanted that fact to be on the record.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,278, 3,284, 3,320, 3,343 and 3,346. I ask the that other questions be allowed to stand.

SALARY INCREASES FOR TREASURY BOARD EMPLOYEES WITHIN LAST MONTH

Question No. 3,278—Mr. Coates:

1. How many employees of the Treasury Board have received salary increases within the last month?

2. In each category, what was the salary range of the employee (a) before the increase (b) after the increase and, in each case, what was the percentage of the increase?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. Ninety-four.

2. Administrative and foreign service:

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA (1970)

Question No. 3,284—Mr. Lachance:

1. Does the government intend to give one of its agencies the responsibility of updating from time-to-time the index of the discretionary powers mentioned in the Revised Statutes of Canada (1970) recently published by the Law Reform Commission of Canada and, if so, which agency will be responsible for the (a) annual compiling (b) publication and distribution?

2. Does the government intend to complement the index with an index of discretionary powers included in the statutes of the ten provincial administrations?

Hon. Ron. Basford (Minister of Justice): 1. the Department of Justice is examining the possibility of updating and distributing the index of the discretionary powers published by the Law Reform Commission. However, at the present time no decision in this respect has been taken.

2. No.

CBC ACCELERATED COVERAGE CHARGE

Question No. 3,320—Mr. Marshall:

1. With reference to the five year accelerated coverage plan announced by CBC in 1974, what are the communities, with a population of approximately 500 in the Province of Newfoundland which will receive extended service?

2. Of the technical studies started on some 200 projects (a) what projects have been started in the Province of Newfoundland (b) what are the 75 projects completed and how many are in Newfoundland?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC Accelerated Coverage Plan is a large, complex and highly integrated five-year undertaking involving 300 locations and 600 engineering projects. Names of the locations and the nature of the service to be provided are made public step by step, as applications for licences are made to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

2. The technical studies which have been started on some 200 ACP projects involve the indentification of the area or community requiring service or improvement of an existing service and the setting of broad parameters for the project. (a) In Newfoundland, studies are at various stages of development for 20 projects. (b) As of November 14, 1975, applications had been completed and submitted for 105 ACP projects across Canada, of which nine are in Newfoundland. The nine projects are: New stations—Clarenville, English TV; New stations—Elliston, English TV; New stations—Little Hearts Ease, English TV; New stations—North West Brook, English TV; New stations—St. Jones Within, English TV; New stations—Wesleyville, English TV; Service Improvement—Labrador City/Wabush, English and French Radio; Gander, English Radio.

PUBLIC SERVICE—BILINGUAL BONUS

Question No. 3,343—Mr. Coates:

How many public servants presently qualify for the bilingual bonus in the Public Service?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): In reply to your question concerning the number of Public Service employees who presently qualify for the bilingual bonus, the answer is 4,464.

PUBLIC SERVICE—PERSONNEL IN RECEIPT OF SALARIES OF $30,000 A YEAR OR MORE

Question No. 3,346—Mr. Coates:

1. How many employees of the Public Service are presently in receipt of a salary of $30,000 per year or more?

2. How many were in receipt of a salary of $30,000 per year or more in (a) 1960 (b) 1965 (c) 1970?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): 1. As of June 1975, 3,549 public servants were in receipt of a salary of $30,000 per year or more.

2. (a) In 1960, none. (b) In 1965, none. (c) In 1970, eight public servants were in receipt of a salary of $30,000 per year or more.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed, from Monday, December 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, when I began my remarks yesterday in connection with this bill I indicated, as I have on other occasions, that members of this party in parliament have said from the beginning that a program of wage and price controls, as it has been recently called, would inevitably be doomed to failure because we are faced with an international problem which cannot be dealt with by one country alone.

I indicated, also, that it was obvious to us from everything that has happened since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) gave notice of the introduction of this policy on Thanksgiving day, from the statements made by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) publicly, from the statements made by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, and from the discussions which have been held between representatives of the provinces and the federal government, that even if we had believed, as the Premier of Manitoba believed, that an incomes policy that was fair and equitable to all people of Canada was necessary and workable to dampen the ill effects of inflation, in fact we are not going to get that.

After I have discussed some of the statements, and the failure to make statements, by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, I want to put on the record some of the detailed questions put to the Minister of Finance and to the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board a week ago, at a meeting of the ministers of finance, by the Premier of Manitoba—questions which, I am told by senior members of the Manitoba delegation, were not answered at all by the Minister of Finance or by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board. Such was the situation that the Premier of Manitoba, who was a proponent of an incomes policy when the Prime Minister was still opposing wage and price controls, indicated pretty clearly that he has no expectation that the program proposed by the federal government has any hope of success. I will come back to that point shortly, but first I want to deal with the actions and inactions of the so called Anti-Inflation Board.

In the guidelines issued by the Minister of Finance on October 14, 1975, entitled "Attack on Inflation", on page 23—where compensation and exceptions to the 10 per cent limit in the increase which will be permitted in wages and salaries are dealt with—the minister said:

There may also be other grounds for exceptions, such as increases necessary to maintain long-established historical relationships between wages in closely related groups and other special cases of equity.

Today, the postal workers represented by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers have agreed to go back to work after a seven weeks' strike. They have agreed to go back on the basis of an offer by the federal government which is substantially more than the 10 per cent which is supposedly the limit which any group of workers earning wages or salaries can get. Why will they be permitted to get an increase of more than 10 per cent? According to the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), who certainly is no friend of the postal workers or of their union, they will get an increase of more than 10 per cent because there has been a historical relationship; there has been parity for years between the inside postal workers represented by CUPW and the outside workers represented by the Letter Carriers Union.

Let us look at what is happening to the teachers in Toronto. I have already indicated what the minister supposedly thought and meant when he issued his guidelines. The chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board said on November 8 that it was not the intention of the board to replace the collective bargaining process. He said it was expected that the parties would negotiate in good faith with a view to concluding agreements under the guidelines. Then he indicated that after agreement had been reached, if the agreement was for more than the 10 per cent indicated as a limit under the guidelines, the employer and the union could come to the Anti-Inflation Board and argue that they should be permitted to get more than 10 per cent. But the Anti-Inflation Board, supposedly, was not going to interfere in the regular process of free, collective bargaining.

Now what do we find? We find that under the provisions of the legislation enacted by the Ontario government, a fact-finder was appointed to look into the dispute between the Toronto secondary school teachers and their employer, the board of education. That fact-finder made a series of recommendations substantially higher than the guidelines would permit. Those recommendations were accepted by the Toronto teachers' organization. The board of education rejected them. It was willing to settle for the same amount as it had already settled for with the elementary school teachers, a settlement reached before the Prime Minister announced his policy, agreed to by both sides and implemented. The board of education wanted to settle with the secondary school teachers for the same amount and the same conditions they had reached with the elementary school teachers. That has been the pattern in the city of Toronto for 21 years.

● (1550)

However, we have an anti-inflation policy. We have supposed guidelines, so the Toronto board of education did what the Anti-Inflation Board had said it would not permit. It appealed to the Anti-Inflation Board, unilaterally, to look at the problem and to issue a directive. What do we find? Just a few weeks after the chairman said that the board would not disturb the traditional ways of collective bargaining and would not deal with one side of an argument, the Anti-Inflation Board issues a directive. I quote from the Globe and Mail of Saturday, November 29, as follows:

"The latest offer of the metro Toronto school board to its secondary teachers is in excess of the amount which the Anti-Inflation Board would consider appropriate", Jean-Luc Pepin, chairman of the federal agency, told reporters. Teachers and school trustees should "return to the bargaining table in an effort to reach an agreement that more properly reflects the anti-inflation policy of restraint"—

How many times will they have to return to the bargaining table? If the offer is reduced by 5 per cent, will that be acceptable to the chairman?

Mr. Rodriguez: We don't know.

Mr. Orlikow: The chairman is now God; he does not have to account to anyone but himself. The school board made its offer to keep secondary school salaries in line with the increase accepted by elementary school teachers before the guidelines were brought in, but obviously the historical and traditional patterns are going to be ignored. So we have a situation where elementary school teachers are to be paid more than secondary school teachers. Metro public school teachers received a raise of 39.2 per cent, the same percentage offered to the high school teachers, but the metro school board seems now to be barred by the federal guidelines.

The minister refuses to do anything about it, although the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation has supplied to the Anti-Inflation Board and to the minister a list of 12 regions which are already paying higher salaries than the Toronto board of education has offered: these are Windsor, Ottawa, Carleton, Halton, Nipissing, York region, Simcoe, Manitoulin, Huron, North Shore, Grey and Thunder Bay. Is it any wonder that the Toronto schools teachers said the Minister of Finance had lied to them? I am not surprised. What we have is a board which has violated and ignored the guidelines laid down by the minister, and it is being aided and abetted by the minister in ignoring them.

I said that I would put on the record some of the questions the province of Manitoba asked the minister and the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board last week. I wish to begin with one set of questions which are very pertinent. Today's Globe and Mail has a story which is headed—I will go into some detail on this—"Bank balances of revenue show impressive increases." The chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, who was so quick to ignore the salary guidelines and so quick to reject what he said two weeks ago namely, that he would not intervene on one side or the other and would only make a ruling after both sides in a dispute had come to an agreement, has been conspicuous by his silence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: It is not as if he did not know about this until today. Here are some of the questions asked a week ago of the Minister of Finance and the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board by the Premier of Manitoba who, as I indicated earlier, was and is a strong proponent of a real incomes policy:

Bank profits have continued to increase rapidly this year—the Financial Times is predicting industry-wide gains of 30 per cent for the current year—with further increases in sight. Yet the federal government seems to suggest that banks should continue operating exactly as they are. Two questions:

(a) Has the federal government given any thought to requiring banks to reduce the margin between the interest rates they charge on loans and the interest rates they pay on deposits?

(b) Has the federal government given any consideration to requiring banks and other financial institutions to set aside more substantial funds for housing and other socially desirable activity?

The Minister of Finance is here and he can correct me if I am misrepresenting what happened, but I am told by senior members of the Manitoba delegation that they asked questions and received no answers from the minister, and just the usual, silly grin which we have seen almost every day on television from the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Orlikow: I will be surprised if within six months of ending his tenure as chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, the "honourable"—I put that in quotation marks—Jean-Luc Pepin is not a director of one of the largest banks in Canada.

Why was the government of Manitoba so concerned? Let us look at the figures released today by the banks themselves and reported in the Globe and Mail. Let us look at the operating profit, after tax, for the year 1975 over the year 1974. For the Royal Bank of Canada, 126.6 per cent; for the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 58.4 per cent; for the Bank of Montreal, 148.6 per cent; for the Bank of Nova Scotia, 80.5 per cent; for the Toronto-Dominion Bank, 58.6 per cent; for the Provincial Bank, 71 per cent; for the Mercantile Bank, 149.3 per cent.

It is not my job as a Member of Parliament to defend or to criticize, for example, the postal workers, but the Postmaster General and the Government of Canada forced them into a seven-week strike because they asked for more than 29 per cent over 30 months. Yet here are the banks making a 40 per cent to 150 per cent higher profit, and not a word from the Minister of Finance.

Does this minister expect that when it is so obvious there is to be no equity in this program, workers will accept it quietly? Does he expect that there will be peace in this country? Does he expect that what has happened to productivity—that is, a lowering of productivity, which all the economists and business leaders have been bemoaning—will not continue and will not accelerate? Does he expect that workers will really work when they feel, and correctly so, that they are being hard done by and discriminated against? There is no question in my mind that some postal workers will not feel like working very hard. Teachers in Toronto have already announced that they will work to rule. That means there will be virtually no athletic programs, virtually no dramatic programs, and that exam papers will not be marked on weekends; and if people have to wait for the reports, that will just be too bad.

● (1600)

The railway unions are about to negotiate. If the companies, on the suggestion or the direction of the government, insist on a 10 per cent limit on wage increases, despite the sound principles laid down by Mr. Justice Hall two or three years ago on how demands for wage increases should be dealt with, there is no doubt that a large number of railway workers will decide to work to rule if they cannot have what they think they are entitled to. The resultant slowdown in the day to day operations of the railways will be brought about by the thinking of the minister and the government.

Let us look at some important questions asked by the government of Manitoba which the minister has refused to answer. Of course, he cannot answer them because he never intended to do anything about incomes, except on wages and salaries. He never intended to do anything about prices, he never intended to do anything about dividends, and he never intended to do anything about self-employed people. Here are some of the questions put to the federal government by the government of Manitoba in the paper entitled "Manitoba questions on the federal government's 'Attack on Inflation' Program." I know some of the answers, so I will put them on the record in view of the minister's hesitancy to do so. The Premier of Manitoba asked:

In light of the difficulty of limiting income increases—particularly for professionals—is the federal government prepared

(1) to make available information obtained through the income tax system to the Anti-Inflation Board?

There was no answer to that question. He continued:

(2) to institute a special surtax through the income tax system to ensure that abuse of the guidelines by these higher income groups is kept to a minimum?

The answer to that was "No." Let me stray for a moment to read another question and to give the answer of the minister. The province of Manitoba said to the minister:

We know that a surtax put on professionals by one province is very difficult to collect. If we put a surtax on the incomes of doctors and the provinces of Alberta and Ontario do not, doctors may move from Saskatchewan to one of those provinces. We are prepared to think about that, but if we want to impose a surtax on doctors operating in the province of Saskatchewan, will you collect that surtax? We do not collect the income tax, as we have made an agreement under which you collect income taxes payable in Saskatchewan.

What was the answer of the Minister of Finance? It was "No," Mr. Speaker. We have said from the beginning that this minister has not the slightest intention of implementing an income tax policy which is fair and equitable; that this minister is bent to all the special interest groups and is prepared to let self-employed, professional people collect all they can. Let me read some of the other questions referring to professional fees. Here is one:

Are the increases in income allowed to professionals under the guidelines based on net professional income only or are professionals permitted to reduce their income for purposes of the guidelines by taking advantage of tax loopholes such as excessive capital cost allowances, interest costs, etc., on investments?

No answer from the minister. Here is another question:

Is the federal government prepared to recommend any action to curb income increases generated by current fee schedules? Examples include architects who often charge a percentage of the finished project, real estate agents and lawyers who often charge a percentage of the value on the consideration passing.

Let us take a hypothetical case. Suppose the architect in charge of that tremendous fiasco, the Olympic Games site, was a Canadian instead of a Frenchman from France. It has been reported that he is to receive a fee in the neighbourhood of $16 million. The minister would have no intention of charging surtax on that exorbitant fee. The next question was:

[Mr. Orlikow.]

In light of the practical problems of having the Anti-Inflation Board deal with professional income increases is the federal government prepared to have this section of the guidelines administered by national revenue?

No answer—which of course means "No". The next question:

Will the federal government be prepared to respond to complaints re professionals who have allegedly violated the guidelines?

Mr. Speaker, from the questions we asked the minister in committee it is obvious the government will not be doing anything about most professions, like doctors, until some time in 1977 when they file their returns for their 1976 incomes. The next question was:

Will the guidelines apply the same maximum increases of $2,400 to professionals as applies to the normal wage earner?

Of course not, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not say so. If all the minister wants to do is put the guidelines on the fee schedule, obviously any relationship between the fee schedule and the actual income of the doctor, lawyer or architect is purely coincidental. For professionals the program is a farce.

Now let us look at pricing in the private sector. The province of Manitoba asked some cogent questions but received no answers from the government or from the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board. The Manitoba government spoke about the cost flowthrough rule in calculating price increases and asked:

Does this mean that the Anti-Inflation Board and the administrator can order a rollback in prices only if they can prove that the guidelines have been breached and that the breach was intentional—not due to the favourable cost developments or unusual productivity increases referred to above?

Another question on timing:

On timing, will the board be in a position to examine proposed price increases before they occur? To forestall increases which do not appear to be justifiable? Alternatively, will the only "effective enforcement" result from the examination of the firm's records two or three or four years after the fact as is the case under income taxation?

Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely what is going to happen because the government has not required approval of price increases before they are imposed. Some members have been sending to the Anti-Inflation Board the examples of price increases they have received in the hundreds, and to date have not received a single reply. At the rate they are going, I suggest that will take three or four years. The government of Manitoba asked:

Is there any provision in the guidelines to prevent firms currently reaping excess profits from passing on the full brunt of any cost increases in higher prices?

Mr. Speaker, it is a very good question. The banks have just had these tremendous profits, and next year, if their costs go up, they can increase their service costs again. Let me go back to the report of the Globe and Mail in today's issue. They indicate some of the reasons the banks' profits are so high. Let me read a couple of paragraphs from the article as follows:

Other factors that helped bank profits during the year were increases in bank service charges, most of them made in the spring, and the slowing of the rapid growth in salaries and benefits costs over the year.

Later, it continues:

> Another factor that helped bank profits in the latter part of the year was the ending of the 10 per cent surcharge on profits, which had lasted from May 1, 1974, to April 30, 1975.

● (1610)

There is no reason why the banks will not be able to again increase their service charges. Again, the minister has given no indication that he will do anything about it. As I have only a few more minutes, I will just place one more quotation on the record:

> Revenue Canada has estimated that Canada is losing about $1.6 billion per year under what is called transfer pricing. Under transfer pricing, multinational firms operating in Canada purchase commodities from foreign sister corporations at a price in excess of the "market place price". The reverse also occurs—the Canadian corporation sells to its foreign sister at a price less than the "marketplace price". In both cases, the result is that the profits are diverted from Canada to a sister corporation operating elsewhere. As mentioned earlier this practice costs the Canadian treasury about $1.6 billion per year. How will the Anti-Inflation Board with its staff of 200 deal with this problem which National Revenue and its staff of thousands have not been able to resolve?

In case members opposite think that that last quotation and the statement contained in it is an exaggeration by an irresponsible socialist NDP government, let me put on the record some comments by Mr. James Gourley, the director-general of audit for Revenue Canada, in a recent speech reported in the October 31, 1975, Globe and Mail:

> Canada is losing hundreds of millions of dollars a year to people and companies that avoid taxes, and a lot of it is being lost to multinational corporations using their international status to shuffle their profits out of the taxman's reach . . . some of the multinationals use their intricate corporate structures to minimize the taxes they pay . . .
> He said he had no idea how much revenue Canada is losing through tax avoidance by multinational corporations. He guessed that missing revenue from all sources—including multinationals—might be 10 per cent of total revenue.
> Estimated revenue for the current fiscal year is $27.75 billion.

Mr. Gourley has estimated the loss at more than twice the figure given by the government of Manitoba. The former minister of national revenue, now Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), said at the same meeting:

> It is difficult for Canadian tax officials to decide whether the costs being charged by subsidiary companies in Canada are fair or are being inflated to boost costs and lower taxes.
> A subsidiary in Canada may be supplied with products or services by its parent in another country. The subsidiary would write off those costs against its profits.

One need only look at the large multinational farm implement companies which are busier and making more money than ever before. If they are forced to observe the so-called guidelines, they will find, as Mr. Gourley and the minister said in their speeches, that it is very easy to adjust the financial transactions between the Canadian and American corporations so that the profits in Canada will not breach the guidelines.

What we are dealing with today, and will be voting on in the next few days, is a bill which interfere very drastically with the right of ordinary citizens to continue to bargain freely and collectively with their employers on their own behalf.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: Could I have just one more minute, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may only continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: What is being proposed by this government are wage controls but not price controls. There will be no controls or restrictions on incomes earned through dividends, profits or any other form of income except wages and salaries. Therefore, we cannot, and will not, support such a proposal.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on second reading of Bill C-73, I already called attention to the discredit drawn by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when, on October 13 last, he announced price and income controls, the very idea of which he condemned during the 1974 election. And this he did without a word of excuse for his remarks at that time. The Prime Minister spoke as the man capable of curing Canada of that terrible illness—inflation—that ruins the economy and reduces millions of Canadians to utmost abject poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any public figure in all Canada's history discrediting himself to such a degree, without a blink, without even accepting his government's responsibility in the increasing rate of the inflationary spiral. The Prime Minister preached austerity, but taking good care to force upon others what he will not do when his own administration is involved, that is cutting right now non-essential government spending. In so doing, he could expect nothing but hostile reactions from the people he himself had warned against controls. Better still then the Leader of Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), better than anyone else in the country, the head of the government knew that a control policy was required, because he had better means and more precise instruments for economic surveying. History will never forgive him for deceiving Canadians.

[English]

The fundamental issue that this House must address itself to on third reading is an issue that runs to the very heart of our democratic system. The principle of this bill and its purpose are in line with broad public opinion at this time. Indeed, while the government is by no means providing leadership, they can at least be said to be following the leadership provided by public opinion. Just for the purpose of setting the record straight, we should note that when it came to providing leadership on the issue of price and income restraint, it was the members of this party who were prepared to level with the country a year ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: What the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is asking for now is a blank cheque. The duration allotted for the powers in the bill is, by far, an example of over playing government, and the refusal of the government to make long-term commitments relative to the control of its own spending is an example of weakening the government's hand. What the government has said and what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has said, through refusal to allow a meaningful parliamentary review of the program within a reasonable period of time, is that they do not believe the program will stand the test of time; they do not believe it will gain sufficient support in an 18-month period. It is not surprising that such lack of confidence is contributing to hesitancy on the part of certain provinces when it comes to participating as fully as the government would like. It is, therefore, with regret and with sorrow that we shall have to vote against this bill. We do so because, clearly, it is the only option left open to this party if we are to keep faith with the principle we advanced to the nation on this issue.

● (1620)

There is a significant demand in the country today for sound economic leadership. It has to be leadership that is based on trust, moulded through consistency and founded upon compassion. It must be leadership which is exercised in close relation to the anxieties and economic aspirations of the people. It can be firm, but when necessary it can be flexible, too. In that respect the bill now before us, the government which drafted it, and the program which has been presented to us are a sad failure.

[Translation]

I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, to revive the 1974 election campaign, and God knows I have excellent recollections of it. But I cannot help pointing out that if the Prime Minister had had any decency, he would either have asked for a new mandate from the Canadian people he deliberately deceived a year ago, or he would have urged the Governor General to designate another head of government. As far as fighting inflation is concerned, the Prime Minister has fallen into total discredit, and he knows it. I will not endorse here extravagant reactions by labour leaders, nor justify them for speaking of general protest strikes.

I hope before it is too late those labour leaders will come to their senses and ask their membership to abide by the law. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that does not prevent me from sympathizing with the humble workers ruined by inflation who for purely electoral reasons were made to believe and even promised that there would be no control. If Canadian voters cannot trust the word of the Prime Minister of the country, and they can no longer do that since October 13, to whom will they turn? I wonder, Mr. Speaker.

Only one party leader in this Parliament can talk of price and income control with increased and undeniable moral authority, and that is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who was not afraid to tell the truth to Canadians. History will do him justice for not sacrificing his convictions to power and not taking advantage of the credulity of the people of this country for purely electoral reasons. The respect the Leader of the Opposition now commands shows that Canadians recognize in him the true leader of this country. The other leader—the one who exercises power or looks as if he exercises it—is nothing but a poor puppet lost in his own contradictions. A discredited Prime Minister, a discredited government, a discredited program, that is what the country is down to at the time when Bill C-73 is about to be passed by the Parliament of Canada. But, as the Leader of the Opposition stated, the Conservative Progressive party does not want to become an accomplice to a sham legislation aimed at imposing genuine economic dictatorship over all sectors of activity for three years and putting in the hands of bureacrats without any popular mandate the administration of a legislation whose faults are so obvious.

[English]

The government is as rigid and unbending as ever. It is a government which has performed a total about-turn on the issue of controls. They scoffed at our temporary freeze proposal, yet now they bring in a three-year program which makes our temporary freeze look restrictive indeed. I do not know that it is fair to say the government is totally inconsistent. While it may be inconsistent in its economic policy, it remains consistent in its authoritarianism, rigidity and insensitivity. It is these very qualities which have weakened the economy of our nation, attacked the private sector and contributed to the alienation of organized and unorganized labour.

Only this government could take a program calling for short-term controls and turn it into a long-term emasculation of the free market and the collective bargaining process. Only this government could combine insensitivity to a problem, on one hand, with alienation and extremism on the other. Only this government could turn the private sector, labour and other jurisdictions against it so quickly and so conclusively. While some seek to build a national anti-inflation front, the government appears to be fragmenting what front there is, day by day.

I once observed, in a speech in this House, that the former minister of finance had done for economic stability what Jack the Ripper did for door-to-door canvassing. I say today that this new program may do for controls what Eddie Shack did for the gentlemanly game of hockey. There is no need to radicalize our nation's economy into warring and distrustful segments. There is no need to create new fears and new suspicions for the working man and woman. What must be done is very simple: an example of restraint, self-denial, compassion and decisiveness must serve as the values around which an embattered economy can rally. To date, this government has not given Canadians anything around which they can rally, or anything in which they can believe.

Part of tackling inflation is changing people's beliefs about how bad inflation is and how bad it will become in the future. The three-year limit on this program is a very sad commentary of the incapacity of this government to hold out real, immediate hope for the people of this country. What the three-year limit means is that a substantial element of this program might only be changed through a change in the government of Canada. That, Mr. Speaker, is a corner that this government should not paint itself into. If it insists on wielding the brush, then those who are opposed to economic injustice might well be prepared to open a can or two in 1978 to help finish the job. Today in this House, at this stage of the bill, the choice is the government's, and they are laughing about it. In three years' time, the choice will be the people's.

● (1630)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the first mistake of this government was to refuse, probably because of its self-sufficiency, to impose the price and wage freeze for a 60-to-80-day period. It is something that every economist recommended. The chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, a man highly respected in Liberal circles, this chairman, the Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin himself, said a few days ago before the Standing Committee on Finances, Trade and Economic Affairs that a temporary price freeze would have allowed him to see better where he was going and to organize the board with no concern other than making it as efficient as possible and without having to decide readily on more than 140 cases submitted to him without knowing formally under which regulations the board will have to function. Mr. Pepin, could not grant this government a better certificate of incompetence.

Canadians are paying a high price for the self-sufficiency of their Prime Minister a Prime Minister who neither accepts the advice of anyone nor admits that he could be wrong.

Since this bill was passed on second reading, the opposition tried without success to convince the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to limit the implementation of Bill C-73 to 18 months. This request was not aimed at harrassing this government because the Progressive Conservative Party was the first to recommend controls as a measure against inflation. It was made, as so well put by the hon. member for Joliette, in a spirit of wisdom and equity for the Canadian consumers, so that after that period their representatives might undertake a total review of conditions to determine to what extent inflation control was a failure.

In spite of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said, the opposition did not ask that inflation be checked within 18 months. With this government, we all know that it would be impossible. We are ready, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) confirmed it to extend the government mandate for another 18-month period, if necessary, but we do not wish to give the government full power, when it even denies us the smallest indication on the nature of the regulations governing the Anti-Inflation Board. Why should we be less demanding than the provinces themselves which have deferred their approval of the government plan because they do not want to make blind commitments?

If the government had the least democratic sense—but God knows it lost it a long time ago—it would have accepted the proposal of the Leader of the Opposition and would have associated all parliamentarians to a legislation which, in spite of its deficiencies, would have had the merit on being unanimously approved. Not only does the government refuse to confide in Parliament with regard to the regulations, not only does it refuse to submit its economic policy to a review after 18 months, but it creates extremely disturbing dislocations in a sector that is vital to social peace and economic security, because one thing has become obvious: free collective bargaining, working conditions are terribly restricted by Bill C-73. Not only are salary increases rigorously controlled, arbitration decisions subject to the approval of the Anti-Inflation Board, but even the other working conditions of collective agreements are not exempt from its control: the work week, social benefits, overtime pay; all those fall within the scope of the act. What else is there to negotiate?

A while ago, Mr. Speaker, I spoke of the provinces' refusal to accept the cabinet policy without knowing what the regulations will be for Bill C-73. Last week's federal-provincial conference proved the incompetence and lack of preparation of the government in its fight against inflation. Bill C-73 has hit the Canadian people like a ton of bricks: the provinces were not consulted sufficiently, neither the leaders of industry nor those of labour unions had the opportunity of expressing their views on what policy could be accepted by all sectors of the economy.

The Prime Minister, in his wisdom, in his almightiness, deemed it sufficient to say "I want" for everyone to obey implicity. The leader of the government merely forgot that we live in a democracy, that the democracy freedoms were too dearly paid by Canadians for them to sacrifice them lightly on the order of a man who as recently as a year ago managed to mislead them about the dangers our economy was exposed to.

Mr. Speaker, as the leader of the opposition reminded us, by adopting Bill C-73 in its present form, we grant the government powers the nature and extent of which we do not even know. Overnight, the government can change the way Canadians live—

● (1640)

An hon. Member: Come, now!

Mr. Wagner: —give rein to inflation and, through an ill-advised policy, plunge the whole country in worse unemployment than the one we deplore. Mr. Speaker, that is something a responsible opposition cannot accept. The government wants to regulate everything all by itself. It rejects any advice or amendment. Let it then face alone the risks of its legislation failing, because there are many given the inefficiency of those who govern us.

While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) exercises his wits distorting the nature and scope of the amendments we introduced, his colleague responsible for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) busies himself to get his views share by the provinces which are visibly not interested in his credit legislation. Mr. Speaker, the provinces had enough of one day to let the minister know that his bill did not please them and that if he wanted to get their approval, he would have to review his bill and not be satisfied with window-dressing.

I mentioned credit but what does the government do to regulate consumer credit, to prevent people from going into debt at indecent interest terms? According to the latest figures from Statistics Canada, Canadians owe to consumer finance companies alone the enormous amount of $22 billion, close to $1,000 per capita. That is also part of the economic policy of a country but the government could not care less. It is no more concerned about the indebtedness of consumers than it is about its own indebtedness because otherwise it would surely have accepted the reasonable conditions submitted by the Progressive Conservative party as regards government expenditures.

In short, Mr. Speaker, here we are again with a bill to which the government refused to make real amendments. The government throws us as a lure this review of the legislation after 18 months. But a review of what, I ask you, a review what if not a legislation that is confused, a legislation that is obscure, troublesome, autocratic, fashioned after the very size of this government whose incompetence has become both the laughing stock and the desolation of our country?

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish that because I care too much for the well being of my fellow citizens but it is easy to predict that the government program will be a vast and dramatic failure because in too many quarters Canadians still do not accept it and because, for electoral considerations, the government destroyed its credibility in advance. You need more than just propaganda to bring people to believe in something and especially a price and income control policy. You need more than propaganda. You need competence, and the government did not show it had any. You need a minimum of moral authority, and the government does not have any at all.

On October 14 had it not been for the well-known inertia of Liberal members this government would have blown up under the indignation of all those it had misled. Mr. Speaker, to assuage his conscience the Prime Minister is now touring the country saying he is quite prepared to give up power at the next election to save the country from inflation. What generosity on his part!

What belated generosity from a man who has plunged the country into a chaotic situation, who does not even offer an apology for it and who has discredited in advance the very means by which attempts to make us believe he will rescue the Canadian economy, Mr. Speaker, let the Prime Minister spare us his rhetoric.

His defeat will come much faster than he expects. One day, even the Liberals, and I see several opposite, will be tired of such a Prime Minister and I can see they have difficulty restraining their applause at this thought. This government is facing the death sentence on deferment and is totally discredited. Only fear prevents it from appearing in front of the people and submitting itself to their judgment, a fear so deeply engrained that it brings a most significant grin on the faces of the few Liberal members who are present in the House.

[English]

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words about Bill C-73. It has been discussed at great length. As we look over this bill, we see it has some very serious defects. No one disagreees with the suggestion that we have to control inflation. We recognize that inflation is bearing more heavily on those with low incomes, such as the pensioners and others. They are the ones who are paying the price of inflation.

As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has said, we all know that inflation will end in disaster if it continues at the present rate. I am sure all members are also aware of the fact that in 1974 the Conservative party put forward the necessary requisites for a bill that would give full consideration to the wishes of the people who make up Canada, including industry, labour, professional people, farmers and others right across the board. As a result, the representatives of those people would have reached a consensus with regard to the problem. At that time the Prime Minister said such a plan was unnecessary because he had inflation under control or was bringing it under control. I believe his exact words were that he was "wrestling it to the ground". The leader of the Conservative party travelled across the country informing people about the proposals of this party to control inflation. I am sure that plan would have brought about a consensus without forcing this type of legislation on the public, and could have been accomplished by agreement across Canada. This would have been something acceptable in that it had a time limit.

We now find the Prime Minister saying we must have controls. In September he said it was economic nonsense, but suddenly, one night in October, he said they were required. The sad point about all this is that the situation has deteriorated during this time to the point where no one in government now knows what they should do. Businessmen do not know how to plan, just as people in agriculture cannot plan ahead. Commerce and trade have been involved in serious strangleholds because they do not know what costs will be.

At a meeting of a committee the other day which was considering supplementary estimates, I was shocked to find out that the estimates have gone up over $1 billion in just a few months, and rising costs will be written in as a result of the inflation factor. In other words, fixed costs have gone up tremendously, in the order of 53 per cent. When that is considered in light of the inflation factor, it is alarming. As the Prime Minister has suggested, we will be going down the drain if we do not look out. How long did it take him to come to that conclusion?

We must find the answers to many questions. When is serious consideration to be given to this matter? What kind of an economy do we want? What kind of a bill must we have in order to avoid the obvious dangers? How is the bill going to work over a period of 12 months?

I could support such a measure, as members of this party have plainly stated, if we were to review the measure within a few months do determine how it is working out. But there is no way I can support a bill which contains the powers that will allow the establishment of a dictatorship and an indefinite loss of freedom. That is what could happen. We have seen it happen in other countries.

Let me make my position clear. In no way can I support a measure that could end up with the creation of a dictatorship. I will not support this bill. I do not take that position because I object to any measure of this kind, but such a measure should incorporate a review of the bill within a limited time as advocated by the Conservative party, and assist, in the end, freedom of the people.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles)—Storms—Request for federal assistance to those suffering damage in Lake Erie region; the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Transport—Federal-provincial study of another transportation link between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—Government action; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—National Film Board—Proposal that open competition with board be permitted—Government position.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I know many adjectives have been used to describe Bill C-73 and the government's anti-inflation program. This afternoon I propose to use two adjectives and to concentrate on those in respect of this particular bill and the government's program. The first adjective I could think of, which I am sure will occur to many Canadians, is "confusing". It is confusing. This is the most confusing program ever announced in this House of Commons since I came here in 1972.

I say it is confusing, first because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced there would be 1,500 corporations with 500 or more employees which would be covered in terms of wages. Now we have heard that 2,500 corporations will be covered, and there is a promise of more. It started out in the construction industry with companies which employ 20 people or more. These companies were to be covered. Perhaps the government forgot that there are over 100,000 construction companies in this country which have 20 or more employees. The board estimates there are about 5,000 of these companies which will be covered by the controls. I say that with the industry-wide wage bargaining, which the government says will be included in the guidelines and regulations, there will be up to 50,000 construction companies involved. Another point of confusion is that mortgage interest rates are not to be covered. Will real estate and stockbrokers be exempt? Some will be covered, but not all. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) says it depends on their size and whether they are engaged in the construction industry.

Repeatedly the government has said that its anti-inflation program is not intended to interfere with free collective bargaining. As a matter of fact, on November 7, 1975, there was a statement by the Anti-Inflation Board that it did not intend to interfere with collective bargaining. But lo and behold, last Friday, Jean-Luc Pepin, the Chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, made a statement about the metro school board's latest offer to its teachers. This certainly destroyed meaningful collective bargaining for those parties. We have had the case of Steinberg's hiding behind the anti-inflation guideline of 10 per cent. That has ended the collective bargaining between itself and its employees. As a matter of fact, I strongly suspect the voluntary price freeze by the supermarkets which, incidentally, was started by Steinberg's, was a deliberate move to encourage customers into Steinberg's stores after they had embarked on this kind of confrontation with their employees, all the time hiding behind the government's anti-inflation program.

We have also had the case of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway and Transport Workers Union. This union approached the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and appealed to him to investigate Voyageur Colonial Limited for hiding behind the anti-inflation guidelines and refusing to negotiate meaningfully with its employees. We have heard the Minister of Labour stand up in this House and say that the paper companies are hiding behind the guidelines and refusing to negotiate in a meaningful way with their workers. It is not surprising that the trade union movement has the impression that this government is out to interfere with free collective bargaining in this country.

In respect of prices, the confusion reigns even more supreme. Apparently there are no controls on interest rates, particularly mortgage interest rates. One of my colleagues has already mentioned in the House that we might look at the latest figures with regard to the banks, reported in today's Globe and Mail in the business section. The article reads in part:

> The ten chartered banks showed an after-tax balance of revenue (the equivalent of after-tax operating profit for other companies) of $182.9 million in the latest quarter, up 87.5 per cent from the corresponding quarter a year earlier.

That is what creates a credibility problem for the workers of this country whose wages are effectively controlled by this so-called anti-inflation program. But even more surprising are the factors which apparently helped the banks enjoy such a healthy profit figure. The article points out the following:

> Another factor that helped bank profits in the latter part of the year was the ending of the 10 per cent surcharge on profits, which had lasted from May 1, 1974, to April 30, 1975.

The government could have extended that surcharge. It has the power to do so because it now has a majority. No longer can the government say it is shackled by a minority parliament; because it has a majority, it has the power. The government, in effect, has condoned this kind of profit-taking by a large powerful group in the Canadian economic picture. There are some other factors which contribute to this very healthy profit figure. The article states that "other factors which helped bank profits were increases in bank service charges and the slowing of the rapid growth in salaries and benefits costs over the year to its employees.

It is very obvious that the government cannot say wages have been responsible for taking some of the profits of the banks. This is obvious because the banks have been very capable of controlling any increase in benefits or wages of its employees. This is an example of the kind of thing which indeed creates confusion. It is difficult for the Canadian people to understand what the government is doing. Lo and behold, after it was discovered that certain supermarkets were indeed using loopholes to skin the public, the government belatedly announced that it will monitor food prices and that in order to do so it will set up five regional offices. So far it has been admitted that over 1,000 phone calls have been received complaining of price increases.

What is also confusing is that the government has announced it will be having 200 employees in that particular department to do all the things which this program entails. How naive do they think that not only parliamentarians, but the people of Canada are to believe that a bureaucracy of 200 will do all the things it is said the program will cover.

The other confusion which prevails in respect of this program is a very important one because it deals with the cost of operating the anti-inflation program. Just the other day we had the supplementary estimates before the committee. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) was being questioned about the supplementary estimates for the Anti-Inflation Board: it is estimated that the government will require $4,863,000 up to March 31, 1976. The supplementary estimates also indicated that the number of persons employed would be 191.

I want to read into the record an excerpt from the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs dealing with the supplementary estimate for the Anti-Inflation Board. The meeting was held on November 28, 1975, and the proceedings read as follows:

MR. HNATYSHYN: A point of clarification, do you mean the number of people represented in these estimates then, in fact, do not disclose the total number of people to be employed in the Anti-Inflation Review Board process—

MR. OUELLET: They do.

MR. HNATYSHYN: You indicated there were people on loan from your department. I take it they would be taken out of their existing jobs and would be directing their attention towards Anti-Inflation Board review activities.

MR. OUELLET: What are the numbers here—

MR. RODRIGUEZ: One hundred and ninety-one.

MR. HNATYSHYN: Mr. Chairman, the figure 200 is always cast about as being a sufficient number to monitor this whole business but they would have to work as hard as members of parliament to keep up that pace, I will say.

MR. OUELLET: No, the figures that you have there are for people who are hired and paid by the Anti-Inflation Board.

MR. HNATYSHYN: So there are in fact, as I understand you, a number of people who are on loan from Finance, National Revenue and your own department.

MR. OUELLET: Yes, and they are there for a short period of time to help launch the board, establish and get on.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Basically the board will become bigger if people do not voluntarily follow the guidelines. The more people try to evade the guidelines, the more people the Board will need to look at it, and hopefully the people of Canada will follow the guidelines and the board will not have to be involved as much and become too big. If the board becomes too big, that would be a clearcut indication that the program is not working.

Obviously, that is what the government is preparing us for, the fact that there is going to be a very large bureaucracy which the taxpayers of this country will be asked to support in an attempt to break the back of what the government calls skyrocketing inflation. In the minutes of that meeting we find it stated that the administrator of the Anti-Inflation Board is not a member of the government and his wages and expenses are not included in the supplementary estimates. That portion of the proceedings reads as follows:

MR. RODRIGUEZ: I notice the wage of the administrator for the Anti-Inflation Board is not included here in the estimates.

MR. OUELLET: No, because the administrator is a separate entity of the Anti-Inflation Board.

MR. RODRIGUEZ: He will come under National Revenue, I presume.

MR. OUELLET: I suspect, yes.

MR. RODRIGUEZ: I was looking in National Revenue and I did not see any estimate there to cover his wages.

MR. OUELLET: Hopefully, he is already paid.

We certainly have a clear indication that all the amounts of money which will be required to run this program have not yet surfaced or are being hidden very well in other departments. Obviously, it will cost a lot more than $1 million a month to operate the Anti-Inflation Board. It seems to me that the government has failed to provide accurate information as to what the actual cost of running its anti-inflation policy will be. The only accurate information made public has been through the supplementary estimates regarding the costs of the Anti-Inflation Board, and I have already referred to that figure as being $4,800,000.

As the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs pointed out, this figure does not cover the salary of support staffs of either the administrator of the program or the appeal tribunal. The administrator, under Bill C-73, along with one or more persons appointed as deputy administrators, will be covered under the Public Service Staff Relations Act and under the Public Service Employment Act. Provision is also made in this act for the appointment of staffs for the administrator and deputy administrators under the Public Service Employment Act. All of this will obviously cost a significant amount of money which has not yet been made public. The chairman of the appeal tribunal shall be paid such salary as is fixed by the governor in council, and each other member shall be paid such fees or other remuneration for his services as shall be fixed by the governor in council, according to clause 28(1) of this bill. The government has produced no figures as to what the whole cost will be. The staff for the tribunal will be handled in the same way as that of the administrator, making it another hidden cost which has not yet been disclosed to the Canadian people.

I said that I could describe this bill with two adjectives. The first is "confusing" and the second is "inappropriate". This party has said that the bill is inappropriate at the moment in Canada. On close analysis of the current economic situation one finds little evidence that inflation is getting worse. As a matter of fact, there are signs that the economy is improving. This is borne out by a global economic survey done by Newsweek in conjunction with the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton Econometrics Forecasting Association in September. I want to quote from their survey as reported in the Citizen issue of November 24, 1975, which reads as follows:

It predicts that the United States would lead the recovery and continue in an upward movement through 1976 and into 1977... includes an over-all look at the world economy as well as individual forecasts for 14 of the world's most industrialized, non-communist countries as of the third quarter of 1975.

It says world trade, which declined probably more than 6 per cent so far this year, "should pick up more than 5 per cent in 1976 and by almost 10 per cent in 1977".

It says world production, measured by the growth of the gross domestic product—the gross national product less payments of wages, interest, rent, profits and other income items paid abroad—"should be on a 4 per cent growth path or better in 1976—and this rate ought to accelerate to 6 per cent in 1977".

Inflation, the survey says should drop to "a mere 6 per cent or less in 1977".

So why did the government bring in this grotesque piece of legislation? Because the government, at the urgings of their boardroom friends, want to protect their high profit-taking, and to do this wage costs must be cut down. The percentage of the national income accounted for by wages and salaries fell from 72.8 per cent in 1970 to 67 per cent in the first half of 1974. Since the middle of last year, however, the picture has changed. Labour's share increased to 69.4 per cent by the end of 1974, and by the middle of this year rose to 70.8 per cent. Big business, on the other hand, had its profits and interest fall to 21.1 per cent by the end of 1974, and to 20.1 per cent by the middle of this year.

This shift, which has by no means yet carried labour up to the share it had achieved in 1970 and which, incidentally, is quite comparable to the U.S. experience, has taken place because of an increase in the militancy of workers expressed in high wage demands and increased strikes. It has taken place in a context, however, where due to the worldwide capitalist recession, and especially the recession in the United States, Canadian corporations have convinced the government, despite a higher rate of inflation in other countries, that they cannot raise their prices to protect their profit margins if they are to remain competitive in the international markets. They have obviously convinced the government of a squeeze in profits, which is not yet particularly marked but which the government is apparently determined to prevent occurring, hence its wage restraint policy.

If we have any illusions about Jean-Luc Pepin's desire to control profits, listen to Mr. Arthur Donner, an economist with Research Securities, speaking at a meeting of Institutional Investors on October 23, 1975.

Donner told a meeting that the controls on profits and dividends seem to be much stricter than they originally appeared.

However, he doubts they will be applied very strictly since he would be surprised to see Jean-Luc Pepin come down hard on business.

● (1710)

He certainly would be very surprised, and I think we all would be very surprised, if Mr. Pepin came down very hard on corporate profits. We all know where he stands in that regard.

In that speech he also noted that the major influence on Canada's lower inflation rate next year will be the lower rate of inflation in the United States, not controls. It seems only logical that when the inflation rate in the United States goes up, it affects our economy; and in a similar fashion, if the rate there goes down, it will obviously go down here. If we have any doubt about the loyalties of Beryl Plumptre and where her heart lies, we ought to have no difficulty in that matter because this is what she told a group of Canadians recently:

The board will have to show restraint with the companies and their profits. After all, we need profits to provide jobs and investment for more growth and more jobs.

Obviously, the biases of the two most important people on the Anti-Inflation Board have become known before they have even started operating the program. High rates of inflation are being experienced in only very specific areas such as food, energy and shelter. In most other areas inflation is moderate. Yet we find many of these specific areas are totally, or in large measure, exempt from the controls announced by the government.

Let us consider energy for a moment. It is interesting to note a speech made by Mr. Clifford Jutlah. He is an economist who works for the Ontario ministry of treasury, economics and intergovernmental affairs. Speaking to the founding meeting of the Canadian Petroleum Association of Canada, he said:

Higher oil and gas prices cost Ontario 22,000 jobs last year, 16,000 jobs this year, and an expected 19,000 jobs next year... higher oil and gas prices can be blamed for one-third of the inflation of the past two years, and triggered the current recession in Canada... the increases over the past couple of years, which have seen wellhead prices for oil triple and those for natural gas more than quadruple, have increased the country's fuel bill by $3 billion a year... rising fuel prices pushed the consumer price index up 3.5 per cent in 1974, about one-third of the year's inflation.

Yet we find that particular aspect of the Canadian way of life—energy—exempt from the provisions of the guidelines. So there we have an expert economist in the Ontario government pinpointing an area where inflation has been most rampant. But we are going to leave that alone in the guidelines; we are not going to touch it. The Minister of Finance admitted in this House that controls on food prices would be difficult. The question of being able to control the pricing activities of multinational corporations has also been concededly him. There are no possible means available to monitor those prices. The minister admitted that fact in committee when we discussed the matter of transfer pricing. As for housing, the government did not move in on land speculators, nor did it touch mortgage interest rates. I have already referred to the profits the banks have recently declared. Just imagine, we hung Dick Turpin for that kind of thing! Even though housing costs have contributed much to the level of inflation in Canada, we continue to exempt interest rates, specifically mortgage interest rates, from any kind of controls.

As a matter of fact, talking to some of the teachers who were up on the Hill today, one comment came back again and again, and that is that if the government is prepared to control escalating costs such as housing and fuel, they would be very prepared to accept controls on their wages; they would not take any increases at all if the government could assure them that there would be effective controls and no skyrocketing increases in those particular items.

However, the government has chosen not to interfere with that sector at all.

Where else is inflation in Canada being fuelled? No less a person than Mrs. Sylvia Ostry, deputy minister of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, pinpointed it. She was speaking to the Empire Club in Toronto on October 30, 1975. She is one of the government's own, and the government does not even listen to what she says. By the way, she was the chief statistician in Statistics Canada. This is what she said to the Empire Club in Toronto:

> Business concentrations in Canada have undermined efficiency and fuelled inflation.

She went on to say:

> As well, there is considerable evidence that prices in concentrated industries are less responsive to changes in the general level of business activity.

She also said that there is a "disturbing level of concentration in the Canadian economy." She pointed out the following:

> A 1965 government study showed that the 50 largest companies in Canada accounted for 36 per cent of total manufacturing value-added. By comparison, the 50 largest companies in the United States accounted for 25 per cent.

She also said:

> Despite the highly concentrated structure of Canadian industry, production units in this country tend to be excessively diversified, are often undersized, and typically unable to exploit potential economies that are available from longer production runs.

All these remarks I have read into the record have not referred to wages fuelling inflation; they have referred to such items as housing, fuel costs and monopolies—and these are the particular areas the government has not touched at all. The government has said it will deal with monopolies in part two of the anti-combines legislation, which is off somewhere in the future, probably at the end of this so-called three year run of the program; but it is not going to touch that baby because when it starts doing that it touches its friends in the corporate boardrooms. It is easier to control little people who may or may not be organized in unions. However, we will talk about that later.

The Minister of Finance and government economists, as well as others knowledgeable in these matters, have said that higher productivity is the key to beating inflation. Now we have to work our way out of inflation. When we look at plant capacity in Canada, we see that it has been declining over the past year to the point where it is now less than 85 per cent. I think it is around 80 per cent. Obviously, people are not trying to take more from the economy than it is capable of producing. The argument is that people are greedy, but that is a common denominator: it is a common human element, and this program will not alter that. That argument is to divert attention from the real problems.

Obviously, this economy is not operating at full capacity. There are 700,000 people in this country who are unemployed. Did 700,000 people make themselves unemployed? It was the direct action of this government between 1968 and 1972 which created the present level of unemployment. The unemployed did not ask to be put on unemployment insurance benefits. The government did this, and it will do so again with this program. It is not an accident that the government is now redefining the unemployment rate which is acceptable in Canada under the unemployment insurance bill which is before a committee at the moment.

When the government starts talking about productivity, it ought to be talking about creating employment in Canada, raising the capacity and using our productive plants to their full capacity. Imagine, if we could put 100,000 of those 700,000 people back to work, the impact that would have on the economy. It seems to me that the government has not come forward with a strategy to activate this 15 or 20 per cent of plant capacity which is idle at the moment, with the view of getting the economy moving in that area. It is clear that the government is attempting to place the blame on labour, as they have done time and again in the past. We have seen ministers running around the country saying that labour costs are fuelling inflation.

● (1720)

In this latest speech, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) became the hatchetman for the Liberal party. He tried to paint the postal workers as villains for wanting a wage settlement which would at least allow them to catch up with the past several years of inflation. He has the gall to say that the 38 per cent or 42 per cent demanded by them is inflationary. When we see the kind of profits the banks have declared, going from 65 per cent to 149 per cent—

Mr. Darling: They were asking for 72 per cent.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is collective bargaining. You sit down and bargain collectively. That is the process.

Mr. Darling: It is blackmail.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Postmaster General has gone so far as to accuse labour of fighting the nation to which they owe allegiance. He has called public service unions the "lead dogs of labour". He has accused them of increasing their wages while unemployment was rising, recession was developing and producticity was falling. He conveniently ignores the fact that during the last few years profits rose much faster than wages or profits to small business. We did not hear anything from the Postmaster General then about big business being at war with the country. Now he says those who oppose wage and price controls are not patriotic. He probably means Steinberg's is patriotic. When Inco and Falconbridge become patriotic, then I start to worry. We recently saw how patriotic Falconbridge was in Sudbury. As soon as profits began to shrink, they laid off 1,000 workers.

It seems to me that members of this House who voted themselves a 33 per cent increase in wages have a great deal of gall to support the Postmaster General when he stands up—

Mr. Paproski: That was over seven years.

Mr. Rodriguez: The postal workers are asking for—

Mr. Paproski: Will they accept—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, you can tell when you hit something.

Mr. Paproski: That is a cheap shot.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are so sensitive, I say to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski).

An hon. Member: Then why don't you be sensible?

Mr. Rodriguez: This House recently passed a nice pension plan. I do not know of anybody in the work force who gets that kind of pension. Six years in this House, and you walk away with a pension: you do not have to be any particular age to collect it.

Mr. Darling: Don't say "you"; say "we".

Mr. Rodriguez: I will be back after the next election; I can tell you that, Stan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to address the Chair.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not addressing the Chair, but if you would keep these yahoos in line—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: The official opposition has been most confusing and ambivalent with respect to this bill. First they voted for it on second reading and now they come beating their breasts saying they are opposed to it. They cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker, but still they try. A control is a control is a control, whether it lasts three years, 18 months or is a 90-day freeze. It is a control system and they are for controls, so I do not see that they have any quarrel with the party on the other side.

As I was saying, the Postmaster General is the first hatchetman for the Liberal party and they are starting their programs now. In the first speech he made signalling the opening of the battle, he stated that if organized workers get decent wages it will subtract from the money available to unorganized workers. That is nonsense. The wages of organized workers serve as examples to drive up the wages of the unorganized. It can be said, in all honesty and fairness and with history on my side, that the trade union movement has done more for this country and has improved the standard of living of workers across the land more than any government that ever sat across the way.

This is what the Postmaster General wants to put across. Because the unionized workers are going after improved wages and want a bigger share of the pie they helped to create, he is saying they are taking it away from those who are not organized. The government has always been backward in bringing in labour legislation in this country. In some provinces labour legislation is archaic, and in this House we have a government which refuses to improve the federal minimum wage. They are discussing it and there are promises that an announcement will be made shortly.

The government said that this bill would break the inflation psychology. That is what its premise is. Obviously, it will not break the inflation psychology when we have so many groups who feel alienated by the legislation and are not prepared to co-operate with the program. Every day we see a different group here on the Hill demonstrating against the program which is obviously very prejudicial in its application. The time is long past when Canadians would sit passively by and accept this grossly misplaced piece of legislation. It is contrary to the Postmaster General's patriotic appeal that to support it is to be patriotic. I say to the workers of this country that it would be patriotic to oppose it. My party cannot support this bill.

Mr. Boulanger: We have known that for two weeks.

Mr. Rodriguez: We ran a campaign in 1974 opposing wage and price controls.

Mr. Orlikow: That is how Prosper got re-elected.

Mr. Rodriguez: He could not even hold on to his Deputy Speaker's position; he got lost in the shuffle. Maybe he will get lost in the next election.

This party has been on record as opposing this kind of misanthrope legislation. We have opposed it in elections. We have nothing against an incomes policy, but this is not an incomes policy from a socialist's point of view. It is fairly obvious that this government has not attempted to identify those areas where inflation is highest. Why do we need this intrusion into the lives of the people? It is a dangerous trend. This kind of power is given to an anti-inflation tribunal where Jean-Luc Pepin, a Liberal party flunkie, can interfere in legislation. For example, through Bill 100 the government of Ontario set up a new program of teacher wage bargaining with school boards. Today we see governments interfering in the lives of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, a system which we spent years developing to provide freedom, justice and democracy for our people, namely, the collective bargaining process, is being eroded with this bill. Indeed, one of my constituents, a very mild person, became incensed with what was happening with supermarket prices. She said that prices are so high that she is becoming frustrated to the point where, when she goes into a supermarket, she will take a gun with her, take what she needs from the store, and if anyone tries to stop her she will shoot them. That is the way this kind of government legislation affects people: it pushes them to the point where they must take drastic action.

● (1730)

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may only continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is well known to the House that I did not vote for this legislation on second reading. I think the House has a right to know why I took that position. This is the first opportunity that I have been given to express these views. First, I wish to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who spoke yesterday put his finger on what will eventually become the key issue in this whole discussion. The question of taking away the freedom of people must always be the number one issue before any parliamentary government.

I would not suggest for a moment that there are not times when you have to take away the freedom of the people for necessary public purposes. I recall the last war, when the nation, generally speaking, enthusiastically supported the loss of our freedom so that we could better fight that war. I vividly recall that near the end of the war, when the tide was turning in our favour, it was very difficult to keep the morale of the people high and to maintain the self-imposed disciplines that they had to impose on themselves to carry out this loss of freedom. I saw a great nation like the British become demoralized at the end of the war. The black market spread all through the economy and the respect for law declined in that once great nation.

I am not going to develop the theme of freedom after what the right hon. member for Prince Albert said yesterday, but I am sure that over the years to come this will be quoted as one of the examples of where a government, without legitimate cause, moved in the direction of restricting the freedom of our people in the economic field.

I suggest you can learn a lot by watching the method of operation of a leader or a government. My mind goes back to the election of 1968. With deliberate planning, the election was called on a Tuesday, instead of the usual Monday, so that the election could be held the day after the St. Jean Baptiste celebrations in the city of Montreal. In those celebrations, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) deliberately provoked the animosity of the people and had bottles and cans thrown at him. This had the effect, on the eve of the election, of polarizing the people on an issue that was really not involved in the election. I recall with deep sadness watching that demonstration over television which I could not help believing was not accidental.

I saw that technique used in 1968. I saw it repeated in 1970. I was not a member of this chamber at that time. I joined a group of people over at St. John's cathedral to protest the War Measures Act on the grounds that there was not sufficient challenge to the safety of the state to bring on the military to control a few social drop-outs in the city of Montreal. When the evidence is brought out, it will indicate conclusively that, because of a few frightened politicians, we put the whole majesty of the forces of this nation to corralling a few lawbreakers that you would ordinarily send a junior sergeant over to settle. That method of operation used in 1970 rallied the whole nation behind the Prime Minister because the people are taught to believe that you must always respect the leader of your country. They are taught that when he says the country is in danger, you rally behind him.

There was a third occasion. When the election was called in 1974, it was the government, aided and abetted by the New Democratic Party, that went on the attack and labelled the leader of the Conservative party as the devil to be aware of because he was going to bring in wage and price controls. In nearly six weeks of that compaign, in both official languages of this country we heard the phrase "there is going to be a freeze on your wages." So successful was that indoctrination of the minds of people listening to the media that the labour vote of our big cities, particularly Vancouver and Toronto, voted Liberal to save themselves from this desperate freeze for 90 days. The leader of the NDP who supported that type of strategy paid a heavy price for his mistake, as did our leader.

Our leader, who had taken the stand which he did, announced that stand in this House many months before the election. After the election he stood up before his party and accepted all the blame. He is retiring from public life, not honoured by success in the field of electoral victory but honoured by this nation because he tried to paint the picture of truth in the hope of getting a national decision. At this moment in Canada's history, if a general election were being held today and this man was the leader of our party, he would be the prime minister after the election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): However, such is not the case. What we are faced with here is another of the techniques of confrontation. There is no question in the minds of most of us who know what goes on here that there has been a strong movement, for many years, in a select group within our civil service which holds to the view that individuals in Canada are not competent to make decisions for themselves. They do not believe that the farmers should be allowed free decision-making. We saw that in a raft of legislation in the session of 1970. They do not believe that business knows how to make decisions. There is continual interference in that sector.

However, with this particular move at this time, knowing the pressure of the civil service for its planned system of society, the government acquiesced to them. The Prime Minister immediately reverted to his traditional method of operation, namely, confrontation. In this announcement the Prime Minister deliberately went out to confront the big labour unions of this country and to pose as the defender of the great majority against the great barons of labour. Listening to the speeches of the NDP, I can sympathize entirely with the philosophy of what they are trying to say. It is wrong in a nation like Canada to try to make any segment of the economy or any minority group the target of a government's animosity. I do not necessarily agree with all I have heard from the New Democratic Party in this debate, but on this question of the fairness of it, and what is being done to the democratic system, whether you are attacking the St Jean Baptiste Society, whether you are appealing to the fears of the nation about law and order in Montreal in 1970, whether you are frightening the labour votes in 1974 and then turning around and attacking the labour leaders in 1974, the method of operation is consistent, and that is not good for democracy. That is the number one key issue. You do not take away freedom lightly; you do not apply a system of controls lightly. It is only when a nation is in desperate straits.

I spoke in the House on this subject two years ago. We were allowed by the Chair to have an all night debate and I put forward a series of proposals I thought the government could adopt to attack inflation. There were five proposals. I am not going to quote the whole thing tonight. I would just like to quote a concluding paragraph which can be found on page 6538 of Hansard of September 13, 1973. These are my own words:

It is not an accident that the Conservative party, surely the last party that would ever go for controls, should come out and say we see no recourse but for a 90-day freeze, then one and a half or two years for controls to ensure stability so we can move forward with our long and short range policies. Whenever the Conservative party accepts that position, great is the danger to the nation because in the long run controls are inflationary. You have to get out of them as fast as you can. However, you cannot put in these policies and make these changes unless there is that economic stability. That is what I am asking the House to consider.

That was the anguished conclusion I reached over two years ago at a time when we were in a demand-pull type of inflation added on top of the cost-push. We had to put in that freeze to give us time to bring in a budget attacking the fundamental causes of inflation on several fronts simultaneously.

The reason for selective controls is obvious. You might find corporations, big business, big unions not willing to follow too quickly some of the directions laid down in the budget, which had to offer tax incentives and positive inducements, not restrictive controls. We needed those selective controls with the authority of the provinces, since only the provinces have constitutional authority to interfere with property and civil rights. That view I put on the record in the House, Mr. Speaker, over two years ago.

The bill before us now makes no effort to get after the fundamental causes of inflation. In addition to being a direct attack on a group, the working people, it is also a direct attack on the constitution of this nation. I have read the speeches given in this debate from the very beginning up to last night, and I attended here today. Three or four speakers have mentioned the constitutional aspects, but I say with deep feeling that this country has not been done right by. No member on either side has made any real effort to put before the people of Canada the seriousness of the constitutional attack on the provinces this bill represents.

Mr. Broadbent: Andy did.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I am simply referring to the speeches I have read. I think members much better qualified than I should be the ones to lay before the people the dangers which are inherent in this bill in terms of our constitutional rights and privileges.

Forgetting party for the moment, when you restrict or control the citizen there must be a good reason, and the question I ask is this: does Bill C-73 attack inflation and is the inflation so great that the nation is in mortal peril? That is the question I put before all of us as Canadians. My first answer to that question, from my own point of view, is that the bill does not fight inflation. This bill in every one of its terms legislates inflation. For example, it legislates that the working man can get no more than 8, 10 or 12 per cent increase per year on his income. Let us call it 10 per cent. In fact we all know that this is the amount which will be forthcoming. We have, by the very nature of human nature, legislated that the increase in the cost to society of working people's wages will be 10 per cent.

Still on the question of legislating inflation, we have said in the legislation that as far as prices are concerned they will be based on cost. If costs go up 10 per cent or 20 per cent to compensate for the increased costs built into the system in the last two or three years, then the businessman is allowed to take his profit on the basis of that cost. So we have a cost-plus situation. This was what hurt us so badly during the control system during and after the war.

The story is told that businessmen used to come down to the hotel here regularly and after a hard day of sitting around government offices trying to meet somebody, they would go down and have a good meal at night. They would eat well and drink well. And when a large bill would be presented by the waiter at the end of the meal they all fought for the bill. One man would say, "Let me have that bill, my company is in the 50 per cent bracket and it only costs us half the bill." Another fellow would say, "Give me that bill. I am on an individual tax rate. I will get 90 per cent back if I pay the bill." But the guy who always won the right to pay the bill was the guy who said, "I am on a cost-plus contract and I will make 10 per cent."

This is exactly what has been legislated in the bill as far as prices are concerned. You have legislated cost-plus, which means you have legislated inflation in prices, all in the hope that prices and wages will not go above the level of 10 per cent which is the objective.

A year or so from now hon. members will find my statements to be true—that inflation has maintained its level around 10 to 20 per cent. So the first thing I have to say about Bill C-73 is that it legislates inflation, it does not fight inflation.

● (1750)

My second point, which I have touched on already, is that I suspect that this bill in the normal sense has to be considered unconstitutional. It has been mentioned that there is no preamble appealing to the good order clause in the constitution. What has not been mentioned sufficiently, in my judgment, is that most wages and prices are completely within the field of the provinces. This bill says that it is not binding upon Her Majesty in the right of the provinces or upon Her Majesty in right of the municipalities, yet the government is systematically sitting down with one province after another and conniving together to get around the constitution of the country. As some provinces are now indicating, the legislation will not work because of its unconstitutional nature.

My third point is that the bill is pure public relations. Even before the announcement was made to the nation we discovered from reading the insider accounts, in the magazine that reports for the government to the people of Canada, that it wanted, first of all, a public relations man. Only later did it go for the other people to head up the program. When you see a government heading for the top public relations man it could find, over whom it had a hold, and it brings him back, and then later it figures out who will head up the program, then you can understand why I say this is a pure public relations operation.

We know the senior mandarins of the civil service wanted some planned controls on a permanent basis for many years. We also know there are individuals in the government who are opposed, and have been opposed, to controls, and who know that they will not work. Therefore what we have here is an effort to go out on a public relations war, using as the first target the big labour barons, so as to try to unite the country against this particular group. There are lots of reasons that the government could put forward for uniting against them, and in this way they hope to get the support of the country for this unworkable program.

I think every member of the House knows that this past year the government had no intention of employing wage and price controls, but what triggered it off was the departure of the former minister of finance. With his departure panic set in, and both the caucus and cabinet joined in pressing for action that would carry out what the civil service had wanted all along. I put this point before you, Mr. Speaker, in the hope that we will know the real enemy here. There are some people in this country who want a planned, controlled system to work all of the time.

My fourth point about what I do not like in Bill C-73 is that its economics are so brutal. Many studies are available from people much more learned than I, written in very involved English, showing that when there is, say, 5 per cent inflation in prices, governments get a lot more money than the 5 per cent. One study shows that 13 per cent accumulates to government whenever prices rise by 5 per cent. Transposing that to 12 per cent inflation, about 30 per cent goes to government. If one looks at the income of the government these past three or four years, without there being any serious change in the tax level, one finds a tremendous flood of money flowing into government coffers. It is easy to see why governments have a vested interest in inflation; they like it because they get more money to bring in more programs.

Even though the government has accepted the principle of indexing and has applied it partially, some of the studies that have been published indicate that it is government that is the big winner in inflation. We should think seriously not only of the civil servant who believes sincerely in a planned economy; we should also think of the fact that governments, mortal as they are want to get all the money they can. The main reason that they do not want to fight inflation is that they are the biggest beneficiaries. That is the point I want to make.

I do not think it is right just to condemn this legislation for what it is, bad legislation, without putting forward some form of alternative that is credible and reasonable. I have done this before, but I will do it again. A real anti-inflation plan can be put forward, and it is not new. I would think that the great majority of rational minded people, if they had to list the causes of modern day inflation, would put government spending or costs as number one. I have read the speeches of three or four or more speakers, and the Leader of the Opposition pointed that fact out over and over again.

When I speak of government costs I do not want to leave the impression that the only thing you can do to cut costs is to cut down on things like the Prime Minister's swimming pool. That is pure nibbling at the problem. I am talking about the fact that 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the costs of the federal government are locked-in costs; I think they call them statutory costs. No one has been making any effort to find out how we are going to cope with these open-ended policies that bring increasing tax burdens on the shoulders of the people in order to fuel these funds that grow and grow.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

When I speak of a real anti-inflation plan to meet rising government costs, I am not talking about the 20 per cent to 30 per cent that you nibble off here and there. I am referring to the basic problem. I am not talking about negative deterrents in these programs; I am saying that enough knowledge has been collected over the last 30 years to turn the philosophy of these programs around and, through positive, dynamic approaches, cut the programs down compared with what they are today, and without taking away one single service that the people want.

I happen to know that one of these proposals was made in 1948, which is a long time ago, but no government has acted on it. I say it is about time we began to reassess the fundamental philosophy of the statutory programs that we have and which the people want. I am prepared at any time to put these programs forward in detail, with the quantitative evidence behind them, to show that they can and will work. In other words, government costs are the number one target.

When this party put forward an amendment in committee to the effect that the government should restrict itself to some 10 per cent in the matter of increased government spending, as it is so restricting the individuals of this country, the amendment was refused by the government. That is conclusive proof that the government has no intention of applying the same kind of controls to itself as it is applying to the working man. The refusal of this amendment convinced the Conservative opposition that there was no intention on the government's part of being sincere about reducing inflation. Since the government is the chief culprit in this rising tide of inflation, unless it takes some action inflation will continue.

I should have liked the amendment to go further and limit the government's income to 10 per cent. That would be the largest guarantee that expenses would be cut down.

● (1800)

The second point in a real anti-inflation plan has to be the question of getting at interest rates, and this again was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition in his speeches. Once more, let me assure the House that there are positive ways of getting at this. These figures are not original and they are not precise, but they are accurate. If you buy a house or a new home today, and take out a $50,000 mortgage, and that is not unusual in our big cities, at 12 per cent for 30 years, before you finish paying for that home you will have paid out over $200,000. You will have paid $150,000 interest on a $50,000 home.

I have already said in this House that in the way we are presently financing the oil sands development in Alberta, with the federal government, the Ontario government, and the Alberta government participating with private industry, it is costing $11 a barrel to produce the oil. If we adopted the old fashioned method of financing, going back thousands of years, we could reduce that cost of oil to $3 a barrel. About $8 per barrel goes in interest, adding to the cost of the consumer and forcing the workingman to go out on strike for higher wages in order to meet all these costs.

If we want lower interest rates surely there is someone on the government side who can figure out a way of speeding up the payment for a house mortgage. If a person were to pay that $50,000 mortgage in ten years his interest would not be $150,000, but would be $27,000. Surely there must be somebody on the government benches who has the muscle and the will to talk with civil servants and say he wants a housing program that cuts these costs to the people who want to buy homes. Surely there is a way of cutting these interest costs.

If we can cut these costs down to the point where a person is given an incentive to pay off the mortgage quickly, then he will get his house for $77,000 in ten years and would be saving himself $123,000. You would have a double advantage because the money would be turning over faster and faster and the velocity of capital flow would be improved, thus in turn decreasing interest rates.

If we are short of capital for all these things we want today we can get it in two ways—one is to save more money, and the other is to speed up capital flow. If you speed up capital flow three times this is the same as tripling the money supply, and if you triple your money supply you decrease interest rates. If the government does not have anyone on its side who knows how to do this I can tell you that there are plenty on this side who do. We regret that we have to sit here in the opposition another four years waiting for those unscrupulous people, who will adopt any issue to win an election, to come up with these ideas to help the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The third point in this battle against inflation is money supply, and this has been dealt with by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I will not bother once again with decimal point accuracy, but will just give the rough figures.

During the years when Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister the money supply increased from $13 billion under the previous administration to $18 billion. We had inflation rising from 1½ per cent to 3 per cent. During the years of the present administration the money supply has reached $65 billion, and has been held there for the last few months. Surely with all the evidence of the co-relation between increasing money supply and rising inflation there must be some awareness on the part of the treasury benches that there must be a responsibility on those people elected by the people of Canada to give directions to the Bank of Canada.

Obviously we need a formula based on the gross national product to make sure there is no shortage of money for legitimate growth, but we also need a formula that includes a factor to cover the velocity of money flow, something which is missing from any type of formula the Bank of Canada has used in the last 30 years.

This is not the type of thing that you discuss in detail in the House of Commons, but it is the type of thing a responsible government should be directing the bank of Canada to carry out, and that is, stopping this business of flooding the country with money and raising interest rates at the same time. There has to be a positive policy in respect of money supply. It does not have as much effect as people think, but it is a requirement.

The fourth point in this positive program is the matter of land costs. I do not think the people in cities have to look any further than areas within 20 or 30 miles of those cities to see what the basic inflationary force has been. If you go back to the year 1955 you will see that the value of land around Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver was not too different from what it was 20 years before, but in the last 20 years that land value has escalated beyond all comprehension. This land value escalation has added to the cost of homes, even before inflation hit building costs.

Say that in the Toronto area the average worker's small home cost $19,000 in 1964, just at the beginning of land cost increases. In 1974 the average cost was $57,000, approximately a 300 per cent increase in a decade in the cost of purchasing a home in the Toronto area. Since then other cities have risen to challenge Toronto in this regard.

If the government wants to do anything to reduce the most oppressive costs to city people it should first take these programs which it has now under the CMHC Act, the National Housing Act, and other statutes, and hit these programs on the nose interestwise, not tomorrow but now. What has happened in the last ten or 15 years I think will continue to be the cost-push plight of our economy for many years to come. This has to be stopped and corrected, and the provinces have to be participants in this. If we are going to help city people get their basic costs down, that must be one of the main thrusts.

The fifth point in this program is a sensitive one, and one in which the NDP will be interested. At this point in time it is popular in Canada to say that the number one person who should be blamed for inflation is the labouring man. I do not accept that. With rising land costs the labouring man is forced to get more money, and has had no choice but to go to his union leaders and say, "Now, look, we do not want 30-cents an hour increase, we want $1.30 an hour to catch up". Generally speaking, the labouring man is not the primary cause of inflation. He is fifth in the line.

The labouring man in trying to catch up was doing what every other group was trying to do. What went wrong, of course, was that when the labouring man caught up on a 2-year contract he got behind again, so the smart labour leaders began to say, "Back me and I will get you ahead". So we have, in addition to the catch-up procedures by labour, the get-ahead concept, and to that degree I agree with the general public that labour leaders have to be held responsible.

These leaders were doing this because of increased government costs, higher taxes, increased land costs, rising interest rates and everything else. Labour is not the only partner to inflation. We all know that, and I object very strongly to any attempt to single out one single group as being at fault. We cannot fault any single group, big business or big labour, for trying to get ahead of the game rather than just trying to catch up. I point out also that I do not believe we will solve this problem of inflation by confrontation with any group, business or labour.

We must face the fact that our technique of collective bargaining which ends up as a confrontation technique is costing labour, management, and the consumer dearly. We all suffer.

We had a debate here in the fall of 1974 concerning strikes on the west coast. Why has there not been any noise about the west coast this year? It seemed that there had been one strike after another on the west coast, and then it was very quiet. I know the reason, and I hope the whole country knows the reason. The men who work and the men who administer business out there have become sick and tired of their both losing money because of these constant confrontations and strikes. They are trying to find a way out of it. The key way is through productivity in which labour shares the advantage with management, productivity in respect of which the consumer does not suffer. Productivity is one of the main ways to attack inflation.

If we were to chart the productivity of our country and the country to our south, the United States, we would find that our productivity has fallen off in the last two years in a steady downward curve while the Americans are fighting their way out of inflation not with controls but by an upward productivity trend in the economy. They are coming out of their situation. There is some hesitation involved in the process, but they are coming out of it. I say so far as this party is concerned we do not believe in confrontation between labour and management. We believe in the common-sense approach of finding out what the situation is in each particular case, and by using the device of productivity with security of tenure for the working man, portability of his pension so that he may move around, portability of insurance rights, and more particularly participation in the decisions, we are prepared to put forward a positive program to achieve non-confrontation in the labour field.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am glad even at this late stage in the debate to have an opportunity to speak against the third reading of this so-called anti-inflation bill. I do not want to repeat the reasons already advanced. My colleagues and others in this House have made very clear in their views, which I share, that the provisions of this bill are unfair and inequitable.

The government can send squads of ministers across Canada asking for consensus, but until they are able to show in detail that the control over prices is as firm and as effective as control over wages and salaries, there is no way in which they can secure support. I do not at all mean to suggest that inflation is not an extremely serious evil. Nor do I wish to imply that the government ought to have taken no action. The fact of the matter is that the action which it has taken is ineffective and unjust, and is therefore worse than useless.

I wish to concentrate on some of the questions which have not been developed very much during this debate. First, in my view this bill is a negation of parliamentary democracy. It signals the abdication of parliament. I know of course that in many modern democracies the handing over of power to the executive by the elected parliament has proceeded apace, but I venture to say that never before has this process reached such an overwhelming and absolute degree.

What does the legislation say? In effect it says that the cabinet or the governor in council has unlimited power to make, reverse, or revoke the guidelines affecting wages, salaries, incomes, profits, prices both public and private, and affecting individuals and corporate business. I say that such a power handed over to the cabinet in effect means that parliament will not have and does not have any effective control over the legislative process.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

I have re-read the bill very carefully and it would seem that there is no attempt to limit or circumscribe in any way the content of the guidelines. Indeed machinery is set up for the Anti-Inflation Board, the administrator, and the appeal tribunal—and I shall want to speak some more about this later—including penalties of $10,000 or two years, or both on summary conviction, and not less than $10,000 or five years' imprisonment when the offence is tried as an indictable offence.

What are the offences? No one knows. Largely they are put forward in the vague form of failure to comply with the act and, presumably, the controls. What are the offences under the guidelines? Who knows? We have never been told. We are to provide penalties, but basically they are for offences which are indefinite, the content of which we have never been advised.

I appreciate that government supporters have little option but to support this legislation. I appreciate also that this amorphous piece of legislation is such that it cannot be rationally amended by parliament, although I always thought it was the duty of parliament to amend something that cannot be gotten hold of in any other way. I know the private members on the government side have no power, authority, or position other than just to go ahead and kindly support the bill. We say all the more blame falls on the government for placing these members in the position of emasculating if not destroying parliament. I say that feature alone would be enough reason to oppose this bill vigorously.

The next point I want to make has to do with the constitution. That was referred to by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), and also earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). This matter has received very little discussion. I want to protest that a bill of such importance in dealing with our fundamental law and constitution, which in effect provides for widespread invasion of provincial rights, should be brought forward here and brushed aside so far as the constitutional argument is concerned.

What are we told? I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) in answer to a question said that someone in the Department of Justice gave an opinion. We do not know who the person was, or his reasons. We have one of the greatest constitutional issues ever to come before parliament and the courts which is brushed aside because some anonymous official has said it is all right and that we should not ask questions about it. I think that is a shameful failure to pay any attention to the constitution which, after all, is the very basis for our existence as a country.

Let no one say it is clear or obvious that parliament has the right to step in and regulate prices, wages, salaries, profits, and all these things without any relation whatever to those things which normally have been regarded as within provincial constitutional power. I know this House does not appreciate a lecture on the subject of the constitution. It would probably be very good for some members to have such a lecture, but I do not intend to give it at this time.

I will tell the House, and perhaps it is immodest for me to do so, that I argued two cases in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council which involved constitutional issues. I argued dozens of cases in the Supreme Court of Canada on constitutional issues, and many cases in the Ontario Court of Appeal, and during that process I learned a little bit about the constitution. Now I want to say that this particular issue is one that is not clear one way or the other. Many authorities dealing with this matter could argue that legislation of this sort comes under trade and commerce, section 91(2) of the British North America Act. I do believe this legislation goes far beyond any normal regulation of trade and commerce.

It is suggested that it may be justified as an emergency. I am far from saying that inflation might not reach a state of emergency which would justify emergency action, but what do we have? We have the government itself, in the preamble—which is always looked at by the courts to determine the real basis and substance of the legislation—making no reference to an emergency, either in precise terms or in its content. It is merely stated in a mild way that inflation is contrary to the interests of all Canadians, and that containment and reduction of inflation have become a matter of serious national concern. I say to the House that this sort of preamble has been treated in the courts as not justifying emergency action whereby the normal rights of the provinces are disregarded and set aside.

If the government really thought this was an emergency or anything like that, why did it not say so instead of using this language? I do not know whether it is ignorance, indifference, or contempt for the constitution—probably all three of them rolled into one.

I do not think it is a joke when parliament is invited by the government to evade the division of powers contained in sections 91 and 92 of the BNA Act, and then is told that some official in the Department of Justice says, "It is all right; we do not want you to bother about it." So much for the constitution, but I prophesy that this issue will rise up to smite the government eventually, probably after a long period of confusion.

Certainly if any client came to me very upset about the application of some of the powers under the act and wanted to go to the courts, I would be bound to tell him that I thought he had a real chance of winning the case and disrupting the whole administration of the act.

I want to deal with one other reason why I think this bill is most unsatisfactory and should not be accepted. I believe that it will provide for absolutely chaotic administration. What do we have? We have a whole series of boards under this bill. For example, the Anti-Inflation Board is not given the power to do anything very much except to monitor, to report, and to refer. It does not seem to want to confine itself to that. Certainly it has been issuing edicts, as it were, the authority for which is extremely dubious.

If we look at clause 12 of the bill we find little in there that gives any real power to the Anti-Inflation Board other than to make inquiries, monitor changes, and so on. After that inquiry has been gone through by the Anti-Inflation Board, we come to the administrator who is given full authority to enforce the act. However, he can only act when the Anti-Inflation Board or the governor in council advises him that there are reasonable grounds for believing that a supplier has contravened, or is likely to contravene the guidelines. Then the administrator has to make all the necessary inquiries and carry out hearings to determine what action, if any, could be taken. When he is through, there is an appeal to the Anti-Inflation Appeal Tribunal, and as if that were not enough, there is a further appeal to the federal court of appeal, a hierarchy of appeals which will lead to delay, confusion and, I prophesy, absolute chaos in the administration of this legislation.

We have heard enough about it already to know that chaos and confusion are growing. People are puzzled, to put it mildly, about the complexity of the guidelines. We do not know what legislation we are really passing, but we do know that almost absolute powers are conveyed to the governor in council, and that the government has not seen fit to refer the constitutionality of the legislation to the courts; and we know that on the face of it the administration, as I said, is likely to be chaotic.

For these reasons, as well as many others about the inequity and unfairness of this piece of legislation, I must declare myself to be against the bill. It is so framed as to invite the abdication of parliament, an invitation which of course will be accepted on the government side. No attempt has been made by the government to deal with the constitutional difficulties, and a chaotic administration is in prospect. For these reasons I think the right thing for us to do is to throw this bill out.

Some hon. Members: Six-thirty, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being 6.30 p.m., pursuant to the order made on Wednesday, November 5, 1975, I do now leave the chair until eight this evening.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

● (2010)

ROYAL ASSENT

[Translation]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honorable House in the chamber of the honorable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

Anti-Inflation Act

● (2020)

[English]

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-65, an act to amend the statute law relating to income tax, (No. 2)—Chapter No. 71.

Bill C-25, an act to protect human health and the environment from substances that contaminate the environment—Chapter No. 72

Bill C-23, an act to provide for the payment of superannuation benefits to Lieutenant Governors— Chapter No. 73.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the government is in the process of trying to get Bill C-73 through third reading. I cannot say that I wish the government well or good luck with it. As we have said before, and I repeat again tonight, the bill is unfair, inequitable, and unjust. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has heard the words so often they must haunt him at night. I hope they do.

I look at this as not only an economic War Measures Act but as a sort of ledger. On the debit side of the ledger are those who will be hurt most by this program. That is the majority of people in Canada. They are the ones who will be affected and the ones who will be ignored.

On the debit side of the ledger will be the pensioners and others on fixed income. Several times government spokesmen have said that the escalator will look after them. It will not. Even if it did, the basic pension is still insufficient.

On the debit side there are also those on minimum wages. Already one provincial government has tried to chisel, in the name of following the government's guidelines, on how much of an increase there is going to be in the minimum wage. Then there are the unorganized workers. At least two thirds, or 70 per cent, of the work force in Canada do not belong to a union. They do not have anyone to bargain for them. The government says that they can stay within the guidelines and get an increase of 10 per cent. This could be $600. If they happen to be highly paid, unorganized workers, they could get $2,400. I have not heard the government say that the Anti-Inflation Board will order employers of unorganized workers to guarantee them the $600. What they get will be that, or somewhat less.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)).]

The Anti-Inflation Board and the government's guidelines will discriminate against wage and salary earners, including unorganized workers and those who have been on a contract for the past one, two, or three years and are now negotiating a new one. These people have fallen behind. The board will only go through the motions of examining their case.

● (2030)

On the debit side of the ledger we find some 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the population who will be asked to carry the burden of this program on their shoulders.

On the credit side, we in our party, and I take it now those in the official opposition are waiting to hear what the government intends to do regarding profits, professional fees, and interest rates, measures which will affect those who are in the higher income brackets and represent only about 20 per cent of the population. But we have yet to hear anything from the government to illustrate that it can and will devise means to impose restraint on the people who occupy the credit side of the ledger. It has presented nothing to the House to illustrate the way in which it intends to enforce controls on the people who really cause inflation.

I listened with a feeling of nausea to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and others in the government complaining about people who insist on extracting more from the economy than they put into it. I should like anyone in this chamber to tell me or anyone else that a person who is on the minimum wage is taking more out of the economy than he is putting into it. Are we really expected to believe that such people as these are causing inflation? If the government was genuine about this program it would take steps immediately to raise the minimum wage to $3.50 an hour and would be asking the provinces to do the same.

The people on minimum wages are not the ones who cause inflation; I am sure the Minister of Finance would not suggest that they are for one minute. People in receipt of pensions are not the ones who cause inflation. People earning wages or salaries of less than $12,000 a year are not the ones who cause inflation.

When will the government learn that if you are going to fight inflation you must begin with the ones who cause inflation? You start at the top. You start with the high salaries, you start with dividends and professional fees which flow to the 20 per cent of the population who not only possess economic powers but seem to exercise political power altogether out of proportion to their numbers.

I would be one of the first to support a government of any political stripe in a fight against inflation if it attacked those who do in fact cause inflation. I cannot countenance a program which instead attacks only those who have no part in the cause of inflation, those who are its first victims, that is to say, people on low wages, pensioners, the majority of our citizens. I question the sincerity of a government which brings in a guidelines program requiring people who are on the lowest income scales to be in the forefront of the battle against inflation, to be the ones who man the barricades and go over the top in the charge against the spiral of rising prices.

What about the privileged, those who derive the benefit of dividends, high interest rates, corporate profits and professional fees? They are encouraging the government to do something about inflation. Of course the government brings in a program which does not particularly affect those who cause inflation.

Various voices were raised reminding the government that these are difficult times, that there was a rapid increase in the price of many products. Double-digit inflation, and so forth, led to demands that the government should do something about the situation—that it should take control over the economy, intervene in the economic field, and so on. I find this very interesting because, by and large, almost without exception those who have been most vocal and persistent in demanding that the government step in and impose controls are those who traditionally have been opposed to government intervention, namely, the business people, the free enterprisers, the capitalists.

Judging by press reports of the Prime Minister's speech in Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, the controls now being introduced by the government have been well received by the farmers, people who are often said to be the most independent in the country. I shall have more to say about that aspect in a few minutes.

What I find interesting is the fact that controls should have been advocated by the Conservatives and are being imposed by the Liberals, the two free-enterprise parties which have traditionally warned Canadians not to vote for the New Democratic Party because the NDP-ers would impose socialist controls. Mr. Speaker, if these controls resembled socialist controls there would be little or no work for me or anybody else in our group. Nevertheless, they are controls, and here are the free enterprise parties imposing them after screaming about socialists threatening to do so. One of those parties came out in 1974 in favour of a price freeze and certain controls. The other party said such a program would not work, that it couldn't be done. Now, in December, 1975, we find the Liberals and Conservatives have both made a 180 degree turn. I suppose that is to avoid a collision in the middle of the road.

I have a great deal of respect and regard for the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). He is one who has been consistent, honest, and straightforward. In fact I would be more comfortable living under some kind of control and restraint program if he were the prime minister. But he failed to make it. The fellow who told the Canadian people that controls would not work and couldn't be put into effect is the fellow who is now Prime Minister and pushing this bill through parliament.

As the premier of British Columbia said, these free enterprise parties get me all mixed up. These are the ones who said, "Don't vote for the NDP because they will bring in socialist controls; they will intervene in the sphere of private enterprise." Yet who are the ones who are demanding controls today—the Liberals and Conservatives!

An hon. Member: They are in British Columbia.

Mr. Benjamin: When socialists do it à la British Columbia cries of outrage go up from free enterprisers and the business community. But they are the ones who are supporting the Conservative Party, whatever that means, and demanding that the Government of Canada, which is Liberal, should do something about inflation. That is how I get all mixed up.

An hon. Member: You were born mixed up.

Mr. Benjamin: I can get mixed up all by myself, without any help.

• (2040)

While the government is instituting controls, the Liberals keep saying that they do not like controls but they see no other way out of present difficulties. I remind my hon. friends in the Liberal and Conservative parties that it is this so-called free enterprise system of theirs that got us into these difficulties.

Both of the free enterprise parties say that the controls should only be temporary, the Conservatives preferring a 90 day freeze with limited controls for 18 months, the Liberals saying that the controls should last for two or three years. This raises certain questions. In the first place, what kind of controls can you expect from a government of either party which does not believe in controls? They have both said they do not believe in them, that they do not like them, that they do not want them. How much reliance and trust can the working people of this country, the pensioners, the unorganized workers and so on, place on a government that puts in controls when it does not believe in them?

That is the main reason for skepticism among the Canadian body politic, and particularly among working people, about the so-called anti-inflation program. In my opinion this skepticism is fully warranted. The program proposed is fairly tight and restrictive on wages and salaries but very loose and undefined with respect to everyone else. The program demonstrates more than adequately that the Liberals do not believe in controlling the economy. They are willing to control salaries and wages, but little else.

In fact I have even heard of inquiries made of the Department of National Revenue and the Anti-Inflation Board by ladies of the night across Canada, who are wondering whether the wage restraints apply to them and, if they do, whether they are O.K. under the productivity guidelines. If those particular ladies are free to increase their productivity but not their fees they will be very relieved, just as the business community and other professionals are relieved under the program.

The second question is: what is to happen after the controls are lifted? I have not heard anything from the Minister of Finance on that. Are we going back to a free-for-all and another round of inflation? If so, what is the purpose of the so-called temporary controls? What grounds are there for believing that the root cause of inflation will have disappeared by 1978 if the control package deals with symptoms only?

When the Prime Minister announced the program at Thanksgiving, which is when the supermarket boys ran around stamping their cans and cartons giving thanks, he said that inflation could not be licked—though he told us it was licked back in 1969 and 1970—unless and until there was a basic change in the attitude of the Canadian people. He blamed inflation on the psychology of rising expectations, among many other causes, and indicated that this psychology somehow had to be broken.

Who is responsible for these rising expectations? How can the attitude of the Canadian people be changed? The Prime Minister did not illustrate how that could be done. Some have suggested—particularly business people like to say this—that governments are to blame for rising expectations, and that government spending is to blame for inflation. I listen to my hon. friends in the official opposition raving and ranting about government expenditure, but other than list a few picayune items I have yet to hear how they would reduce government spending by any significant amount. I would be very interested to hear what government spending they would reduce, where, and by how much. I will accept their argument with a great deal more credulity if one of that party gets up as soon as I am through and gives me a list, chapter and verse, of what, where, and how much government spending they would reduce. Until I hear that from the official opposition, all their so-called talk of cutting down government expenditure is so much fluff and window dressing.

Let me make reference to one of the provinces of this country. I would be interested to hear how much the Conservatives would reduce spending in the province of Manitoba, which has a $1 billion budget. Some $600 million of that $1 billion budget is taken up with colleges, universities, education, health and social development. Another $100 million is taken care of by the property tax credit plan, and cost of living tax credits, and municipal grants.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I hope the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) is making some notes and that his speech will follow right after mine as I said, another $100 million is taken care of by three items—the property tax credits, the cost of living tax credits, and grants to municipalities. That leaves $300 million to run all the other departments and programs in the province.

It is obvious that if the government is to effect big savings in one province, these savings have to come out of expensive services like education and health care. Are my hon. friends in the Conservative party suggesting that we cut expenditure on social services, hospitals, medical care, old age pensioners, veteran pensioners and so on? If so, I wish they would say so. Or if they want to make drastic reductions in government spending out of the remaining one quarter to one third of the total budgets of each province, I should like them to be explicit and tell me. If they are correct and if I could agree with where they will chop these savings off, I could even be persuaded to support their ideas about fighting inflation. It is equally obvious, Madam Speaker, that this cannot be done.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) rising to ask a question?

Mr. Epp: If the hon. member will allow.

Mr. Broadbent: Another candidate for the leadership.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Sure.

Mr. Epp: I wonder whether the hon. member could indicate, with all these great things that are being given to the residents of this socialist paradise, formerly known as the province of Manitoba, why we are also fortunate in paying the highest personal income tax in Canada?

Mr. Benjamin: I do not want to argue with my hon. friend. I have not looked at the figures lately but I thought that Saskatchewan and Newfoundland had the highest figures. If Manitoba has moved ahead of Saskatchewan, we will have to try to catch up. In order to do a civilized, decent job of redistributing income in an equitable and fair manner, which my hon. friends in the Conservative party know little or nothing about, I would invite the hon. member for Provencher to tell the House how they would reduce government expenditures by reducing that high personal income tax in Manitoba and also by reducing hospitalization, medical care, car insurance and social services.

Let us examine these rising expectations on which our whole cultural and economic system is built. The theory of competitive economics is based on the assumption that every man, if left to himself, will pursue his self-interest. Expectation of profit is supposed to be the prime motive for free enterprise. North America is supposed to be a land of unlimited opportunity, the bastion of free enterprise where man is supposed to be free to pursue his self-interest, free to pursue profits, where man is free to have the expectation of becoming a millionaire.

The pursuit of profits and the freedom of enterprise are supposed to have made us great technical, organizational, and marketing innovators, and to have given us the highest standard of living in the world. Are we now being told all this is wrong? The Prime Minister has said it is wrong. The Leader of the Opposition has talked about these rising expectations, but we are now told by the free enterprise parties that it is wrong to have rising expectations. These expectations are at the heart of our culture in North America.

If you sit down of an evening to watch television, how many commercials do you see.— 40, 50 or 60? What are you being told? I suggest these commercials are telling us that we can enjoy a sun holiday in Jamaica, the superb services of the Canadian Pacific Airlines, we can grow with the Bank of Nova Scotia, we can buy a new home in one of these high rise engineered home settlement programs, and you do not need cash because all these people will accept Chargex, Mastercharge and American Express.

When we turn on the radio what do we hear? We hear more commercials. If you buy a newspaper you will find that advertising takes up more space than anything else, certainly more space than news, and certainly more than my speech. In short, our radio and television broadcasting system is financed by advertising, just as our newspapers and our magazines depend on advertising.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I feel that the hon. member is turning away from Bill C-73. Perhaps he would relate his remarks to the subject matter.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I am glad you got up because I might have missed you. I am talking about the rising expectations and what the Prime Minister has said about the anti-inflation bill, and if you do not mind, Madam Speaker, I will answer him on that.

An hon. Member: You are reading the wrong speech.

Mr. Benjamin: All this advertising has an overriding purpose. It is designed to instil a desire for more products that people will want in order to meet these rising expectations. Great amounts are spent for advertising in order to make these expectations rise.

What does the government do to curb these rising expectations? The government suggests to the people that they should not listen to the commercials and that they should not want those good things that are being advertised. Is that how the government curbs inflation, or does it attempt to do so by controlling wages so the people cannot afford these things? What will dampen their expectations? Will these measures dampen their expectations, or will they just make the people more rebellious?

I agree with the Prime Minister that we need a basic change in attitude in order to solve our economic problems. The whole exercise is futile in my opinion if we continue on our present course, because the inflation the Prime Minister complains about is promoted and advertised, all of which encourages these rising expectations which the Prime Minister claims ought to be dampened in order to fight inflation.

Let me say something about another aspect of this bill, and that is the so-called exemption for farmers and fishermen at the farm gate and at the dock. This is a charade and a window dressing. This is as phony as a $3 bill. It was bad enough to hear the Liberals say that the Conservative exemption for farmers at the farm gate in 1974 was phony, but to see the Liberal government proving itself to be phony is something else again. It is even worse.

I have a document here which I am sure many other members have now, although it is marked confidential. It was issued by the Department of Finance on November 17, 1975. The minister's own officials put in writing how phony this protection at the farm gate and at the dock is. In the first paragraph the minister's officials say in this confidential document, and you can imagine how confidential it is if I have one:

> Farmers and fishermen are exempt from the guidelines, since, as a rule, they are unorganized and have little power in the market.

That is not what Ma Plumptre says about the egg marketing board. According to the officials of the Minister of Finance they have little power in the market. The document goes on to state:

> —the federal government wants to ensure that they operate within the spirit of the anti-inflation program.

When I turn over two pages of this interesting little document from the minister's officials I find illustrated four kinds of marketing boards that are apparently to be subject to the application of the guidelines. These kinds of marketing boards, or two of them, are concerned with the handling of chicken broilers, turkeys, eggs, industrial milk, fresh fruits and fresh vegetables, as well as hogs, potatoes, soybeans, corn, tobacco, and fruits and vegetables for processing. This is what the minister's officials say about these marketing boards:

> These boards will have to be reviewed before reaching firm decisions on which ones should be subject to the guidelines and which of their costs should be allowable under the cost-pass-through rule.

The first page of this document says they are exempt from the guidelines, and the third page outlines which ones "should be subject to the guidelines".

In respect of the cost-pass-through rule the Minister of Finance attempted to answer a question I asked in the House the other day, yet the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board had already eliminated three costs of production under the grain stabilization bill.

My friends in the official opposition have talked about this exemption at the farm gate for the farmers and at the docks for the fishermen. I would ask them how they feel now about this program that was to exempt the farmers and fishermen when in fact statements of those leaders of the Anti-Inflation Board, Pepin and Plumptre, and statements in writing by officials of the Minister of Finance, have proven that this is a farce. It is as phony as a $3 bill. Marketing boards will in fact be subject to the guidelines and will be treated the same as wage and salary earners.

The farmers and the fishermen, whether or not they belong to a marketing board or agency that can set or negotiate prices for them, will have to appear and prove to the Anti-Inflation Board that the increase is justified. All this talk about exempting the farmers and the fishermen has gone out the window. I suggest it was out the window the day after the Prime Minister presented this program to the people of Canada.

I am not going to support any program such as this which attacks the wage and salary earners and those people on fixed incomes. I do not intend to support a program which makes liars of the government members. I am not going to be a party to a program that helps make liars of the Liberal government, or helps the members of that government make liars of themselves. Obviously this is the case because they say the farmers and fishermen are exempt, and then in this written document outline which of these marketing boards shall be subject to the guidelines.

I hope I have unlimited time as I want to illustrate what will happen to the primary producers, be they farmers or fishermen, who belong to marketing boards under provincial or federal jurisdiction.

Most provinces have marketing boards in respect of broilers, turkeys, eggs, hogs, milk, fresh vegetables and fruit crops. Since there are import controls on eggs and turkeys the national agencies can theoretically set prices arbitrarily. In practice the egg marketing agency until very recently had great difficulty in maintaining a price that would adequately cover the cost of production. In fact the Farm Products Marketing Council wants officials of CEMA to appear monthly in order to justify the price it sets for eggs.

These agencies have always been under guidelines and controls. Ma Plumptre and Jean-Luc Pepin say that the first outfits they want to look into are the marketing boards, specifically CEMA. If as much pressure had been brought to bear on the banks, the oil companies, the supermarket chains, and the railways as has been put on CEMA and other marketing boards, I submit the country would be in better shape.

The price of honey is established on international markets so we do not need to worry about that one. Hogs are sold at auction in Ontario using a teletype system. The Hog Marketing Board does not use its price-setting authority, yet the officials of the Minister of Finance say these products will be subject to the guidelines. Fluid milk prices are set by the Milk Control Board after public hearings at which producers and processors have to prove their costs in respect of price increases. In the case of fluid milk this Milk Control Board has had to justify price increases. Those prices had to be justified before the milk control boards in every province. They have been under controls and guidelines for many years, but Mrs. Plumptre and Jean-Luc Pepin say that they will be subject to these new controls. Where is that price at the farm gate principle of the Liberals and the Tories now? There is a matter of industrial milk and vegetables, but I do not think I have time to go into that. I would be glad to make another speech if someone would move an amendment to this bill.

How long can any government exercise control over wages and salaries and not food prices? What is the government going to do about marketing boards? What about the price of milk; what about the price of bread? I say as a warning to my friends in the official opposition that the longer and the more strictly wages and salaries are controlled, the more insistent the demand will become for stringent controls on food prices. I cannot see any government of any political stripe ingoring those demands.

If the farmers and the businessmen think wages have gone out of sight, let us look at food prices. The prices the farmers are getting are prices they should have been getting years ago. They have been the victims of a cheap food policy in this country for decades. We have lost 300,000 family farm units in this country since the Second World War. Again I will use Manitoba as an example for the benefit of my hon. friend from Provencher.

The average industrial wage in Manitoba from 1972 to 1975 increased by 30 per cent. The price of eggs went up 50 per cent, turkeys 37 per cent, broiler chickens 80 per cent, shoulder roasts 181 per cent, pork chops 63 per cent, and bacon 158 per cent. Is my hon. friend from Provencher, or anyone else in the official opposition, going to say that wages are too high in the face of the food increases? This situation exists in every province in Canada. The price of sirloin steak and prime rib roast went up by 73 per cent and 44 per cent respectively, while industrial wages rose by 30 per cent. As a representative of several thousand farmers and people who live on farms I say it is easy to see why the consumers are becoming upset and downright angry when their wages are to be controlled and the price of food is to be left free.

What has happened? Under this legislation we have the same old dividing game. We have the farmers and workers with controlled wages and salaries and farm prices. The farmers are told they are exempt, but under the way in which they are subject to the guidelines, the marketing boards that they have fought for over decades are in jeopardy and are being investigated, while those who cause inflation, the people who benefit from the difference in price between what the farmers receive and the cost of the products to consumers, are not controlled. I refer to the processors, the transporters, the wholesalers, and the retailers. The controls are not spelled out for these people. They can take all they can get.

The primary producer and the wage and salary earners are being told, and in fact required under this legislation, to fight inflation. Those who may profit whether because of interest rates, corporate profits, dividends, or professional fees can get around the controls. I will not be a party to the support of legislation of this kind. The members of the official opposition have all caved in. I would like to know why they have chickened out.

Earlier the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) talked a good fight, but now they have all caved in. It is no wonder the voters of Canada chose not to put them in power. I hope my hon. friends to the right will get up and take a further part in this debate. However, I suppose they will just sit there. If my time has expired I hope my friends will say I can have some more time. I am very serious about this.

I want members of the official opposition to stand up and help us fight this legislation. I would be interested in hearing their explanation of how they would exempt farm products at the farm gate. I would also be interested in hearing how they would control profits, interest rates, and prices. It might be helpful if the government would reject this legislation and take it back to the drafting board. Obviously the officials wrote it out on the back of an envelope before Thanksgiving. I make no apology if some government members should accuse me of being unpatriotic, but I will encourage all the people in my area not to co-operate in respect of this legislation because it is unfair.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Madam Speaker, I waited in vain for all those who are responsible for the noise on my right to join in the debate and offer a little light to the heat they have been making. I see that none of them are prepared to participate. I find this unfortunate, just marginally more unfortunate than the fact that none of the government members want to participate in this debate on legislation which is without doubt in terms of economic policy the most important legislation that has been before this House since World War II. The Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Stanfield) said something to this effect in the House not long ago.

If you look at the news over the past few days, Madam Speaker, you can see both the importance of this legislation and its inadequacies. On the one hand we have had reports from the banking industry in Canada whose profits for the third quarter of this year are up 87½ per cent compared to last year. That simply builds upon the profits the banking industry has made in Canada each and every year for the past five years, which sets an almost all-time record in the history of this country. There is absolutely nothing in the bill introduced by the government that will affect the profit levels of the banks one iota. That news came today.

An hon. Member: That is untrue.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the hon. member: make your speech and defend it, because the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) neither at the report stage nor in this debate has made any attempt to deal with the criticisms that have been made, in terms of technical detail, of the failure of his legislation to cope in an adequate way with the profit levels of corporations—the point has simply been ignored. I urge the hon. member to rise and deal with that and to tell us in detail how bank profits will be dealt with by the government, and to explain why the government arbitrarily sets interest rates in Canada to be always at least 1½ per cent higher than in the United States so that more investment can be lured into this country.

An hon. Member: Get off it.

Mr. Broadbent: Every economist in the country knows it.

What that means is that given that policy, on the one hand of always wanting interest rates to be set arbitrarily at a higher level in Canada—and it is known as the "dirty float" which no one in this government admits—no matter what the profits of the banks are in terms of the guidelines legislation, and on the other hand the policy of the government to lure foreign investment into the country, the effect of which is to keep the Canadian dollar up, the banks in this country under this legislation will be permitted to maintain their excessive profit levels. I should like the Minister of Finance to deal with that question. Will he allow interest rates to get to their normal market level in Canada? If, so then perhaps some of the loopholes in the legislation might be dealt with and the profit levels held down.

I know, and everyone else knows who is aware of the financial policy of this government, that it will keep the interest rates high, which means it will keep the bank profit rates abnormally high. I say that that is a scandal in Canada when year after year for the past five years we have been unable to get investment in the housing sector of the kind that we require. This cabinet which acts on behalf of the banks sits back with its hands off, and lets the banking industry go on its merry way.

An hon. Member: Oh yeah!

Mr. Broadbent: I hear the usual "yeahs" from the Liberal backbenchers. I would like to see them get up and deal with the argument in substance. It is conceivable that my argument might be wrong, I will concede that, but let them deal with the argument.

We say that the only way you can deal with that kind of situation is to change the Bank Act, to change back to principle on which it was based less than a decade ago when certain interest rates were decided by the political process for certain sectors of the economy, and when it was decided that mortgage rates were not to be considered in principle as the means for trips to Bermuda, for investing in shopping centres or for other kinds of investment, but that housing was a social necessity and there should be a radical distinction between investment in the housing sector and investment in other sectors.

It is the Liberals who changed the Bank Act in the last decade, and they do not intend to make that kind of distinction. As long as they do not, I do not care what the wishes of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) are, and I say we will not get money into housing in this country regardless of the fact that some 20 per cent of people in our country live in substandard housing and in grotesque conditions. I refer to the particular circumstances of the people of Montreal and of the people of the province of Quebec who are involved in expenditures of hundreds of millions of dollars in the Olympic village when a high percentage of the population in that city live in slums. I say that it is a national disgrace, and one of the ways of dealing with it would be to change the Bank Act and to get tough with those who control our investment in that sector to make sure that we get the money we need.

However, we do not propose to do that in this legislation, and that has a direct bearing on inflation. The major failing of the government in terms of its whole approach to inflation has been to treat the symptoms instead of the cause. It has said that these are increasing prices in the economy, that there is inflation, but what it has not done is to produce a program which will increase supply in the crucial sectors to bring down the prices. To act in that way would require government planning of significant proportions to make sure that investment in our economy goes where it should go.

A conventional stupidity argued for by the government and, if I may say so in this context, also by the opposition, is that government spending is somehow bad and inflationary. The west Germans do not agree with that, the Swedes do not agree with that, and certain American economists do not agree with that. Spending in the government sector need not be in principle any more or less inflationary than spending in the private sector. If we allow private investors, as we do now in Canada, to put up unneeded office buildings in Toronto, Vancouver, Halifax and Montreal, that puts an increase on the demand for labour and materials which adds inflation to the economy. The NDP says that such building at this time should be stopped. That would require some direction, some planning in the economy. We would allocate investment priorities to housing. We would say: cool off the economy and the excessive supply in office building and other unneeded investments, and direct investments to where they are needed, both in social terms and in terms of inflation.

If we increase government spending and by government legislation direct banks to put up capital in the housing sector, that would bring down inflation in the housing sector, and by circulating private spending in office buildings, pressure would be eased on the inflation level. I say that that issue is still profoundly misunderstood by the government or, if understood, at least is cynically ignored—that is the view that somehow government spending is bad and any kind of private spending is good.

We in this party say that the way to deal with inflation has not been the route taken by the Liberals in terms of this program, which is a phoney program aimed at symptoms, a program which does not deal with the real causes. The real cause of inflation in the Canadian economy is different from inflation in other economies in the western world.

Each one has been experiencing inflation, and a good part of the reason has been common—I will concede that—namely, the world increase in prices of energy. That has been the common fact that all countries in the west experience. But other factors make Canada different, in terms of our ability to cope with that cause, because we are energy sufficient, if we plan and use that resource in a sensible way.

We say in that respect that we should keep our petroleum prices down to below world price levels. There is no reason why Canadians should pay world price levels for our own energy resource. That way we would deal significantly with inflation in our economy in that sector, in a way that Japan, Great Britain, West Germany or other countries in western Europe have not been able to deal with it because they do not have the petroleum resource we possess. There is that difference, and if the government had the guts or the determination to deal with the oil industry, then we could have had a different effect in terms of inflation in that sector in our country. The New Democratic Party says that the way to deal with the petroleum sector is to take it over.

● (2120)

An hon. Member: Oh!

Mr. Broadbent: An hon. member opposite says oh! Well, that is too bad. Mr. Blakeney, the premier of Saskatchewan, is moving in on asbestos and saying—

Mr. Korchinski: Since when?

Mr. Broadbent: I am sorry. I meant potash. He has recognized that this is a major natural resource which belongs to the people of this province. It has real potential in terms of increasing markets, and therefore profits for the country or the province. He has asked why this should be left to multinational corporations to reap their benefits abroad. He is serving notice that he will take over that industry.

Mr. Korchinski: Eight of the ten companies have lost money. Look up your records.

Mr. Broadbent: I want to assure the hon. member that if he looks at the profits of the potash industry in the next decade, they are going to come to the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Korchinski: Oh, in the next decade?

Mr. Broadbent: The point I want to make is that we should be doing on a national basis what Mr. Blakeney is doing in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We should be taking over the petroleum industry, but the Liberals are far behind. It can be done in Venezuela, Mexico, in the Middle East, and in every other bloody country in the world, but the Liberals will still sell out to multinational corporations. We say that it is time that even the Liberal party should recognize that so-called private enterprise parties in others parts of the world have finally said that the natural resources of their countries belong to the people of their countries.

If we had acted in that respect in this country, not only because of the potential of getting secondary industry in the petroleum sector but in terms of dealing with prices, with which the government is ostensibly concerned in an inflation economy, it would have been a major or practical step, but the government refused to do it.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: I have already mentioned housing. The government could deal with that, but it would have to take tough action with the banks, so we are not going to have anything but the fiddling around which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is going to be doing in the next few weeks with regard to housing. We will not get the capital we need going into housing. The government will not deal with the banks or the petroleum industry, so we have inflation in those sectors and will continue to have inflation regardless of this bill. When the vote comes, as it will come, there will be no effect on those sectors because the government has no program to increase supply.

In some speeches back in the 1974 election campaign the Prime Minister used to talk about increasing supply. That was when the Liberals at least had some kind of intellectual consistency. They recognized that the way to deal with inflation, then as now, was to take major steps to increase supply. However, perhaps they recognize that to do so would entail getting tough with their corporate friends, and they refuse to take the appropriate steps. Instead they have singled out the wage and salary earner as the person who is to bear the burden of this program, and I do not know anyone who has argued against that. There is no question that the wage and salary earner will be affected.

What the government said when it brought in the program in its white paper was that it recognized certain injustices would automatically follow if everyone were bound by the 10 per cent to 12 per cent guideline, so the government agreed to recognize historical relationships. I refer the backbenchers of the Liberal Party to page 31 of the white paper. There the exceptions are listed, and in the white paper the government says that if a historical relationship between two groups can be established and that if the group now bargaining, depending on the dates of its contract expiring, and so on, can establish a case, then the phrase used will be that the wage settlement or salary settlement proposed, and recommended by the anti-inflation board, will be to maintain the historical relationship.

The decision handed down by the Anti-Inflation Board last Friday completely contradicted the white paper. The Minister of Finance refused to answer a question on it in the House today, but that is exactly what it did. The Anti-Inflation Board said that it recognized the historical relationship which exists between elementary and secondary school teachers in Toronto. The fact is that for the past 21 years the two groups have had the same salaries. I assume the Liberals can read. To implement the white paper, which they are responsible for writing, the Anti-Inflation Board should at least as a minimum have said that the high school teachers in Toronto were entitled to the benefits and the salaries the elementary school teachers received.

However, what did the board do? The board said it recognized the relationship, but that the teachers are not going to get the money. What this amounts to is a flat contradiction of the white paper, and I am glad to see that some Liberals are nodding their heads in agreement. I hope they make a speech on that point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Not only does the government bring in an unfair and unworkable program in terms of the white paper, the legislation which followed it and its implementation through the Anti-Inflation Board, but the board also makes decisions which are completely inconsistent with the framework the government itself has established.

The program is bad. I will not repeat arguments I and my colleagues have made about it being unworkable.

An hon. Member: We are tired of it.

Mr. Broadbent: I can see the point. The hon. member says he has heard enough. I am not going to repeat those arguments. I say to the hon. member that just as long as hon. members opposite occupy the other side of the House, unfortunately we will have to continue to repeat the message, and our proposals will not be implemented as long as they are over there.

Mr. Korchinski: He doesn't have a speech. He doesn't know what to say.

Mr. Broadbent: This program is wrong because it is unfair and unworkable for reasons I, and other members of my party, have documented since the bill was first introduced. It is wrong in terms of its own detail, but more important, in terms of the national problem of inflation. It is wrong because it does not address itself in a positive way to bringing forth programs which would deal with housing prices, energy prices, and food prices. It is in these three sectors where inflation has occurred in Canada, and there has been no debate in the House in that regard.

I find it extraordinary that for the whole period of time we have discussed Bill C-73 there has been nothing from the government side to the effect that in the last three years 65 per cent of our inflation has occurred in housing, food costs, and energy. I have not heard hon. members opposite tell us what the government would like to do with regard to those three items. Instead the government brought in a program which is primary in its effects, and every economist says that. It is going to be solely aimed at wage and salary earners. One might say that perhaps wage and salary earners are the problem.

If anything could justify the government's 180 degree about turn since July, 1974, it would be to be able to establish its case that wage and salary increases now are the main culprits in terms of inflation. The fact is that statistics have not been brought forward. The government has produced no evidence to show that wage and salary increases are the cause of inflation. I say it has not because it knows it cannot bring out the evidence. It does not exist.

If you look at the OECD reports or the figures issued by Statistics Canada, wage and salary increases have been running behind the increases in the cost of living. The governor of the Bank of Canada and others have said that, but the minister does not attempt to deal with the argument.

● (2130)

On the other hand in terms of our trade position, that other whipping boy of the government, it says we will price ourselves out of world markets. The evidence does not support the government's case that when compared with other trading nations we are pricing ourselves out of world markets. Our major trading partners have wage and salary increases exceeding those in Canada.

The government cannot justify its program. It bears directly on wage and salary earners, but the evidence in Canada is that wage and salary earners in this country are not having increases disproportionate to those of other trading countries. In terms of domestic inflation, wage and salary earners have been following the increases in the cost of living, principally in food, housing, and energy. They have not caused the increase.

The government brought its program to the people of Canada and I suggest the reason was that just before Thanksgiving Day the former minister of finance decided to pack it all in. God knows his reasons, and I am not going to speculate on them. The people of Canada have been asking for leadership. They have said, "Where is this man who was elected in July, 1974, who said that only the Liberals would provide the leadership?" Even the Liberals, with a majority, began to sense that 99 per cent of the people of Canada were unhappy. It finally got through—from July, 1974, to September, 1975. So the Prime Minister said, "We had better do something. Turner has packed it in and the people are unhappy, so we had better come through with a symbolic act. We cannot do a War Measures Act again because the people of Quebec are not causing the trouble they were five years ago." Even though that was a grotesque injustice then, it had a symbolic flair. So he brought out a program that will not affect corporate decision-making in this country one iota.

He wants the American economy to bail us out. It will take off in the next 12 months and we will get the spin-off effects in employment and inflation. He said, "Let's hook up to a program that will not affect corporate decision-making but will bear directly on wage and salary earners." He made a symbolic appearance on television telling the people it is time to make sacrifices. He thought it really looked as if it had substance to it. In my judgment it is a hoax of a program; it is entirely a political gesture, and apart from the control of wages and salaries it has no economic substance at all. Once again the Liberal party is gambling on the Americans to bail us out.

I want to conclude with one further observation, Mr. Speaker. The major organized opponents of this legislation outside the House of Commons have been the trade union movement. In my view they have been absolutely right in their perspective. The program exempts corporations from any effective control of their prices, and consumers all across the country know this. The unions have been right in saying this. In my opinion they have also been right in pointing out that they were not going to be the principal people to suffer. They are going to get their 10 per cent or 12 per cent but, Mr. Speaker, they comprise only 35 per cent of the workers in Canada.

An hon. Member: Thirty per cent.

Mr. Broadbent: Someone says 30 per cent. I am not going to quibble on statistics—30 per cent or 35 per cent are in the trade union movement. To their immense credit—and to the disgrace of the press—the trade union movement has singled out the non-trade union workers in this country as being the people who will suffer most. This is what we have been saying too.

The government knows that a report came out last week which shows that 50 per cent of Canadians on pensions live in poverty. Mr. Speaker, 50 per cent of the people in this affluent society who live on pensions live in poverty, and 22 per cent of Canadians in general live in poverty.

The government did nothing about increasing the federal minimum wage. It did nothing about encouraging the provinces to increase their minimum wage.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that Hansard cannot record a yawn from Liberal backbenchers. I got the biggest sigh from a Liberal backbencher when I mentioned that most Canadians live in poverty. He knows that the government has a cabinet which is the highest paid in the world. I do not know how many Canadians know that. The Canadian cabinet is the highest paid in the world and its members just gave themselves a very substantial increase. I have not checked this yet, but my guess is that the top 5 per cent of Canadian civil servants are probably the highest paid in the world as well. I have not checked that, but I suspect it is true.

We have a nice little contented elite running this country. It operates on the one hand through the corporate sector and on the other hand through the Liberal Party of Canada. They are so insulated from reality that they can bring in a program like this and have the audacity to say that low income earners in our country can get $600—they raised that. You can now earn $7,500 per year and they will not object. They know full well that there is absolutely no way for unorganized workers in Canada to get that increase.

The Liberals have done nothing for the vast majority of Canadian men and women not in the trade union movement, have done nothing for the pensioners half of whom live in poverty, but have done everything by means of providing loopholes for the corporations, whether they be banks, real estate speculators, food chains, you name it. This is a classic piece of legislation; it favours those who have against those who have not. It is precisely for that reason that we oppose it.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important piece of legislation facing the Canadian people. I have listened with interest to the comments made by the official opposition during the time the bill has been before us, and I have been interested in the comments by Liberal backbenchers at second reading and report stage.

An hon. Member: All two of them.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Peters: The comments indicate the weaknesses and the inequities in this legislation as demonstrated by the fact that we are seeing a great deal of trouble developing in a large segment of the population. They were surprised at the difficulties the bill had created. That sums it up fairly well.

● (2140)

A large segment of the population is violently opposed to this bill. Very few think that it will do anything for them. Those I have talked to are either neutral or violently opposed to it. I have not found any in favour of it.

I have read the conclusions in the white paper. It may be a good idea to put two paragraphs on the record so that hon. members, particularly those on the government side, can decide whether this debate is accomplishing any of the aims stated in the conclusions in the white paper. If we have not accomplished all or a large percentage of them, we have failed the Canadian public.

It is true that almost all Canadians welcomed the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Thanksgiving Day. They did so for one reason. He had finally decided to do something about the problem. Everyone is concerned about inflation. Therefore when the Prime Minister said that something would be done about it, good, bad or indifferent, most Canadians were interested.

Since that time Canadians have been listening to radio, watching television, and reading newspaper reports. They have not heard of the Prime Minister explaining any aspects of the bill in this House. However, he has travelled across the country explaining it. He failed in almost every area, even where the audience was loaded, to convince them that he had come anywhere near reaching the aims set out in the conclusions of the White Paper on inflation. Some of those conclusions are worth considering on third reading. I quote from the conclusion in "Attack on Inflation, a Program of National Action":

> As a first essential, it is imperative that we take determined action as a nation to halt and reverse the spiral of costs and prices that jeopardizes the whole fabric of our economy and of our society.

I am sure almost everyone agrees with that. Only a few were of the opinion that we should allow spiralling costs to go unchecked, something that is detrimental to our economy. The reason they were opposed is that they were on a treadmill. Everyone was looking for more income, no matter what sources, because they were having one hell of a time keeping up with the cost of living; society was affected because it had become disproportionate.

As the leader of the New Democratic Party just stated, the poor were becoming poorer. A large percentage were below the poverty line and in no position to do anything about it. I think everyone will agree that the aim in the conclusion was good. However, they will now have to be convinced that we have done something to solve the problem of spiralling prices. We have done something to curtail the ability of a large segment of the population to cope with spiralling costs. While income has been pegged at 10 per cent, the cost of living increase is estimated at 13 per cent. No matter how you look at it, everyone will be going backwards. If you carry this far enough, we will be reaching the point where everyone will be below the poverty level except those with income other than wages or salaries.

I again refer to the conclusions in the white paper. This bothers me. Obviously it must be the aim of the Prime Minister because this is what he talked about on Thanksgiving evening. I quote:

> This will require the exercise of restraint by every sector and the pursuit of fiscal and monetary policies aimed at ensuring sustained and stable economic growth. Over the longer term we must make our economic system more innovative, dynamic and efficient by reducing existing rigidities and intensifying competition.

That has not been done. Anyone with a new idea, anyone who wants competition or wants to improve their position will be curtailed. That does not apply to companies or those connected with the price structure. It only applies to those receiving wages and salaries. It goes on, and I quote:

> We must deal with major structural problems so as to ensure an adequate supply of energy, food and housing to meet our needs in the years ahead. And finally we must ensure that sufficient physical and financial resources will become available to complete the massive new capital investment that is required over the next decade and more, to increase substantially our productive capacity, employment and our real standard of living.

This bill does not go anywhere near accomplishing that aim. The government is not embarking on any new programs to provide future employment. In fact it is going to curtail some necessary expenditures such as those related to health. The Conservative party, on the other hand, wants to go much further and curtail almost all government expenditures.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) pointed out that one province does not have much left after meeting the basic needs of the community. If there is to be any curtailing it will have to be of services provided to those not able to provide for themselves.

There is not one clause in this bill that gives any indication of increased productivity or increased employment. More taxes will be required, not less. Government expenditures will be greater because more people will be unemployed than ever before. If what we want is more unemployment, we are going about it the right way. Money has not been spent in the Department of Labour although four or five competent people are required to learn the art of negotiation in order that industry in this country can be provided with some assistance in connection with negotiations. Mr. Speaker, you must laugh as you look around the House to hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) answering questions when he is asked what help he is providing to get a resumption of work in the pulp and paper industry.

We are not interested in the constitution as far as the bill before us is concerned. We have probably broken through every possible constitutional barrier. My hon. friend from Greenwood told us tonight he would be quite prepared to take almost any section of this legislation before the Supreme Court and challenge it on constitutional grounds. Yet the Minister of Labour stands up and says he can do nothing about the situation in the pulp and paper industry because it is a provincial matter. It makes no difference that in the bill before us we are asked to give the government power to make decisions which will create serious unemployment in provincial fields.

We are going to see a great deal of unemployment in the educational field, as well as in the civil service in the Province of Ontario, despite the fact the federal government has no jurisdiction, except by permission, over matters affecting education or the public service in Ontario.

I quote again:

> Governments at all levels in Canada can and must provide leadership and direction but they cannot act alone. All sectors of the economy must actively co-operate. This requires the fullest possible discussion and consultation as to how best to achieve our mutual goals.

There is no one in this country who does not agree that this is essential. Yet what co-operation do we find in this House? I am not suggesting that all the wisdom of the country is gathered in this place. Nevertheless I do say that a number of the concrete proposals made to the government in the past few weeks might have been adopted. I was not one who sat on the committee which considered this matter, but I am sure many suggestions were put forward which, had they been adopted, would have made co-operation possible and would have led to more acceptable legislation. As things stand, the bill will likely be passed only after a division; the majority of members on the government side will, no doubt, support it, and the majority of members in the opposition will likely oppose it.

What is the basis for Bill C-73? It is based on the white paper, and the conclusion reached by that white paper was in these terms:

> The attack on inflation . . . was designed to ensure that the recovery of our economy from its present recession leads to healthy and enduring growth in employment and real incomes. These basic objectives are shared by business, labour, governments and indeed by all Canadians. We all have a compelling interest to work together.

There is no one who will disagree with that conclusion either. If we are to be fair, if we are to be reasonable, if we are to act in the interest of the Canadian people, we must provide leadership on two fronts simultaneously: we shall have to reduce the rate at which the cost of living is rising, and, second, we shall have to curtail the rise in unemployment. The bill before us does neither, and if it fails to achieve either of these objectives it seems to me it is not worthy of support and that it will not be supported by the Canadian people.

Where does this show up? It shows up in the reaction of the organized labour movement which has always been proud of the fact that it can look after itself in a free enterprise system. The organized labour movement in Canada is built on the basis of the free enterprise system. It has always been willing to operate within that system. It has done very well, in my opinion, for its membership. Nevertheless a large section of the population is not organized. I refer to those who live on old age pensions, disability pensions, pensions under the Canada Pension Plan and so on. Their incomes must be brought up to a reasonable standard if this legislation is to succeed. Yet nothing has been done in this direction. On the contrary, we heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) proposing to cut off a portion of the assistance made available to the provinces to help these underprivileged persons.

People are asking how they are to know that prices are being curtailed. Not long ago I heard a minister being asked about the price of carrots, whether the price of carrots would be controlled every day. I agree it is not possible to control the price of carrots on a day-to-day basis. If the amount held in storage diminishes, or if it is necessary to import the product from abroad, the price would probably have to go up anyway. But if the price goes up, there has to be some justification for it. The government has said to the householder, "Your wages are to be controlled." But it has failed to assure the housewife that the prices of the products she needs are not going to rise. That is where the bill is defective.

I should like to show the House how little the farmer gets from the commodities the housewife uses, products which are so important to her, and, incidentally, how little the retailer gets out of them. But what a hosing the Canadian people get from the wholesaler, the packers, and the other trades in the middle—people like Kraft who have a monopoly over a large segment of the producing industry. May I call it ten o'clock?

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS—SIXTH REPORT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, would the House be good enough to revert to presenting reports from standing or special committees?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: I thank hon. members for their co-operation. I have the honour to present the sixth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It is my intention to move concurrence in the report tomorrow afternoon, but before doing so I shall consult with the four House leaders, so anybody with questions can find the answers from their own House leader.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Peters.]

STORMS—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO THOSE SUFFERING DAMAGE IN LAKE ERIE REGION

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, my purpose in rising this evening is to follow up a question I put to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Sauvé) on November 17 as reported in Hansard at page 9106. It concerned storm damage on the north of Lake Erie. It reads as follows:

I should like to ask the minister whether the government has taken any initiative in approaching the province of Ontario, which is assessing the damage, with a view to declaring the north shore a disaster area in order that individuals, communities and small businesses which have suffered grievous losses will qualify for federal assistance.

● (2200)

The minister replied rather briefly as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the department has not taken the initiative because that initiative should come from the government of the province of Ontario.

In view of the extent of the damage I thought this was rather a brush-off and I wanted more information; hence my appearance here tonight.

It was early in November that a storm of hurricane proportions struck the area, the like of which has seldom been seen before. As a result of wave action, of proportions not seen before either, property damage was sustained. It is a shallow lake and huge waves were hurled against the shoreline. Erosion of farmland occurred as well as destruction of cottages, some of which were a write-off. Breakwalls and breakwaters were washed away. Cemeteries along the shoreline were eroded until the graves themselves were exposed. Roads were washed out and pavement peeled off as one would peel the skin from a potato.

The high water driven up on to the shore by the force of the wind caused a rise of some four to five feet in the waterline, something never before seen. This of course caused flooding along the shoreline, cottages were flooded as well as even permanent homes. Rugs, furniture and so on were damaged, some beyond repair. Marinas were damaged, fishing tugs were lost, and one man's life was lost through this raging storm.

I later contacted the clerks and/or mayors of each municipality in my riding, which has property along the north shore of Lake Erie, to get an estimate from them of the loss sustained during the storm. This was a week or two later when they had had an opportunity to assess the damage. The town of Dunnville felt that the damage would be in excess of $75,000; the town of Haldimand $236,700; the city of Nanticoke $200,000; the township of Delhi $42,000; the township of Norfolk $100,000. This made a total of $653,000. In addition to that, and since I asked my question, there was another violent storm, though not of the same proportions, and the damage increased again. I now estimate the total damage is in the neighbourhood of $800,000.

This of course has pushed the total damage up to an amount that cannot easily be borne by the individuals concerned and/or the communities in the area. My question referred to the possibility of declaring the north shore a disaster area so that the province and the federal government would alike share the assistance provided to these people.

Since that time I do not think I would go so far as to ask that it be declared a disaster area, even though the damage is extensive, as I have indicated. However, the losses are of such magnitude as to place an undue financial burden on individuals, municipalities, and small businesses, particularly the fishing industry in the area. I talked with the hon. Mr. Bernier, the minister of the environment for the province of Ontario, and his department conducted an aerial survey of the north shore and affirmed that the damage was not quite as extensive as at first thought. The province indicated that it is willing to give some assistance in the form of loans.

What I want to know from the Minister of the Environment or the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who I am pleased to see in the House tonight to answer my representation, is in what specific ways the government can assist municipalities or individuals who have suffered. I know he is going to say that in such cases we share alike with the province of Ontario, or whatever is the province involved, but I want to know whether there are any other ways that the federal government can directly help these people. I wonder whether there is any means under ARDA whereby the federal government can assist in this situation. After all, there has been terrific loss of farm land due to the erosive effect of waves along the north shore of Lake Erie.

I should like to refer to one farm at Port Burwell, in one corner of my riding, owned by a Mr. Balther, where not due to this one storm but over a period of years one third of his farm land has been lost. I want to know what it is the federal government is prepared to do to assist people who find themselves in this situation. That is the question I am asking tonight.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment and Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly sympathize with the hon. gentleman, coming from a province in which we have disasters quite frequently amounting to the approximate magnitude about which the hon. member was speaking.

The Federal Disaster Assistance Program, as the House is probably aware, is administered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). While the program is not embodied in legislation, it provides for discretionary payments by the federal government to assist the provinces in the event of disasters. Such payments are made only when the provincial expenditure eligible for sharing exceeds $1 per capita and, of course, only after the province has made a request for such assistance. So it would be something like $8 million for the province of Ontario. Unfortunately, eligible costs do not include summer cottages.

In the case of the Lake Erie storm on November 10, 1975, to which the hon. gentleman referred, damages to structures according to our department were in the order of $500,000 but, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, this has risen to $653,000 and, as he suggests, perhaps goes up to $800,000. The damages were mainly to cottages, some permanent residences, and some private protective structural devices. The hon. member has already elaborated on other things that were damaged. In addition, there was considerable damage in the form of erosion.

As hon. members can appreciate, this falls below the minimum of $1 per capita for Ontario. No request has been received from the government of that province for assistance, obviously because of the formula that is used.

The hon. member asked about other means by which the people affected can get assistance. I obtained this information from the department today and it is something I did not know about previously, though I wish I had known.

The province of Ontario has its own policies in this regard, and there is also the Canadian Disaster Relief Fund which administers funds left over from the Winnipeg flood of the 1950's. I understand that in case of individual relief, payments can be made up to 50 per cent of the family's losses, to a maximum of $2,250 per family. Application for assistance from the fund is usually made, as I am told, by the province after assessment and consolidation of individual claims.

That appears to be the only recourse the hon. gentleman has, and I appreciate his deep concern for the people in that area.

TRANSPORT—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL STUDY OF ANOTHER TRANSPORTATION LINK BETWEEN NEW BRUNSWICK AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I again wish to raise a question I put to the then minister of transport on July 16 regarding the report of a joint federal-provincial task force concerning another transportation link between New Brunswick and the western part of Prince Edward Island.

This is one of a series of studies that has been received recently. The then minister of transport of course is now the Minister without Portfolio, and we have a new minister who I hope in his zeal to fulfil many of the needs for a transportation policy across Canada will look very seriously at this particular continuing study. Indeed, reviewing the amount of study that has taken place on this subject over the past 30 years, if all studies were laid end to end this would likely be sufficient to bridge the gap between western Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

I think it would be acknowledged by all members that there is a basic federal responsibility to ensure a most adequate and up-to-date means of transportation between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.

It is obvious to me as well that there are a number of benefits that would be gained from the establishment of a further ferry link to the western end of Prince Edward Island. One of those was pointed out very clearly in a study done some 12 years ago by the Maritime Transport Commission, in which it is stated:

> It is therefore clear that the underlying factor supporting the proposed service is the "pioneering" or developmental effect it would have on the economy of the W. Prince area.

I think that is still true today. One of the unfortunate facts that exists at the moment is that one of the reports upon which the government may be basing some of its conclusions is a report that seemed to omit almost entirely that particular aspect which I regard as basic. This is the report of the ADI Consultant Group from Fredericton as presented to the minister in June of this year, which supports the call by the West Prince Chamber of Commerce for an independent study. It is no doubt clear that there are some basic and fundamental studies in respect of Prince Edward Island transportation.

An official connected with provincial and federal parks in Prince Edward Island noted that those in the central part of the province are on the verge of an irreversible deterioration in their physical, asthetic, and social environments as there is need for a very basic program of tourist diversion if the whole industry is not to suffocate. Given the desire of most tourists to go the circle route or to travel end to end in the province, a new ferry on the western end of Prince Edward Island is an integral if not an essential element of the provincial government's policy of balanced tourist development across all of Prince Edward Island. I believe as well that basic industries such as farming and fishing undoubtedly would benefit from the reduced shipping time which is so vital to their interests in terms of moving perishable products during the peak seasons.

Support for a new crossing has come from a variety of sources—the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, the Chambers of Commerce of Prince Edward Island, and in New Brunswick—the Atlantic Truckers Association as well as most recently the joint federal-provincial Kent County tourism study which was partially funded by the federal government, which said very clearly that the establishment of such ferry service would be extremely feasible.

I think the conclusion was also drawn that it would offer a great deal of benefit to the eastern region of the Kent County area of New Brunswick. This is an increasing development which I think indicates the degree with which we are looking at a transportation development not just for one province but ultimately for two.

Quite frankly, I said at the outset I was disturbed by the quality of one of the studies which is before us at the moment, the ADI study. I think if the federal government or the Department of Transport is relying on this study which has been released recently, which purports to do a cost-benefit analysis of a West Prince Kent County water crossing, I find this to be totally unsatisfactory as the report obviously is inadequate. It suffers from the lack of a very real consideration of the basic elements. In the first instance as much as I was able to determine there was actualy little or no consultation with people in the affected areas, those who stand most to gain or presently to lose by the absence of such a ferry service.

I think, too, the very questionable techniques used in forecasting traffic volume and in sufficiently understanding their potential indicate the superficial aspects of the ADI report. It is obvious that the establishment of new highway routes, especially those now under construction in New Brunswick, should have the effect of considerably improving the time-saving for motorists who are tourists and ultimately those who would be using the crossing to move produce to and from Prince Edward Island. There is an over-all lack of a comprehensive analysis of the effect of the new crossing on the tourist industry and on related factors of the economy.

I believe, as does the West Prince Chamber of Commerce, that there needs to be an independent assessment of this ADI study, and of course some of the previous studies. If we are to rely totally on the narrow and isolated base of the ADI study the new crossing may well appear economically unjustified, but taken in the context of an over-all developmental strategy for Prince Edward Island, as it should, then the new crossing would probably represent a healthy net benefit. I think the same would be true in the development of Kent County.

This I believe is another example of a lack of coming to grips with some of the basic elements involved in a developmental policy. We have had many considerations and studies but much of this has been superficial. There is an obvious need for a commitment to a transportation program aimed at development. At the present time such seems to be virtually non-existent. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Goodale) can assure me there is a more comprehensive report now under way which will soon be presented which will recommend a program of action to establish this badly needed ferry link.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much indeed the comments of my hon. friend from Egmont. I appreciate the manner in which he delivered his remarks this evening on a subject which is important to the particular region of the country from which he comes.

I regret my inability this evening to offer a specific answer and to be able to tell him when precisely a more comprehensive report might be forthcoming on the situation which he described. I have before me now the report of which he was critical, that is the West Prince—Kent County ferry study which was jointly funded by the federal Ministry of Transport, the department of industry and commerce of the province of Prince Edward Island, and the department of economic growth in New Brunswick.

As the hon. member pointed out, one of the specific and unequivocal findings of that study was that there was little, if any, economic justification for the kind of ferry service which the hon. member and others no doubt are advocating in the circumstances which he described. The analysis in that report, looking at it in a quick way, is detailed, at least in appearance, but I appreciate the remarks which the hon. member addressed to the House this evening, pointing out what he, and no doubt others, regard as defects in the analysis. I am sure those comments will come to the attention of those who presently have this study under advisement, and I hope they will be guided to a reasonable extent by the remarks the hon. member made this evening.

This report is now a public document and has been made available to interested parties, and I hope others as well who have criticism of this study or any of the other studies will make them known to the minister so their views on the subject can go into the total decision making process. The findings and analysis of this specific study are presently being assessed in the context of the over-all requirements of P.E.I. and mainland transportation planning. Transport Canada is actively engaged in this comprehensive work, and I hope the hon. member will not have to wait an inordinate length of time before the Ministry of Transport will be able to give him a specific indication as to when the results of that over-all effort will be available publicly.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—PROPOSAL THAT OPEN COMPETITION WITH BOARD BE PERMITTED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on November 25 I asked the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) whether he would consider an amendment to the National Film Board Act to delete sections 9 and 11 of that act. The National Film Board is now 30 years old, it is reaching a ripe maturity and, according to the 1974-75 annual report, has 950 employees on its staff. I must say that the statement on page 35 of that report is somewhat misleading. It reads:

In line with the board's policy to support the Canadian film industry, 50 per cent of the dollar volume of government department films and other audio visual materials was contracted out to the private sector.

That may be a very accurate statement as it stands, but the report does not say how much of that 50 per cent is given to audio visual production and how much is given to film production. My understanding is that less than 10 per cent of films for government departments are produced by firms in the private sector. The fact is that sections 9 and 11 stipulate that all contracts for film production for government departments first, must be approved by the Treasury department—that is an understandable regulation—and second, must be approved by the National Film Board. I submit that that is a blatant case of conflict of interest.

Who in the world could imagine anyone in the private sector submitting a tender for a contract if that tender had to be studied and approved by the competition? The immediate question has to be: how safe is any proposal if it can be refused by the National Film Board when it is submitted to the government department and, even more important, how may times have those ideas submitted by the private sector to the government been incorporated in the production of the National Film Board once they knew what that production was all about? The related question is: how objective can we expect the National Film Board to be with projects that are not its own responsibility? However, a corollary to that, I think, is the burden of my remarks tonight.

What is the minister afraid of? Are 30 years of monopoly of government business not enough to establish an industry in a sound competitive position? Are 950 people not enough to compete with the small producers? Is the minister afraid that a company of 10 or 12 people with three or four cameras will be unfair competition, or have an unfair advantage over the National Film Board, with capital equipment assets of over $4 million and unlimited distribution facilities? What is the minister afraid of? Is the problem that the National Film Board, after 30 years of practical monopoly of government business, is afraid to compete with the small, independent film producer?

The minister has said many times that he wants to help establish an independent film industry in Canada. I suggest that here is one great way he can help them. All these people want is the opportunity to compete fairly with the National Film Board for government filming contracts. Is that too much to ask? Ironically one such company has done more work for the United States government than for the Canadian government. Something is rotten in the state of Denmark, and when I asked the question originally the answer was as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I have had these representations made to me by a variety of sources within the industry. I have promised to look into them, but I am not sure that this is the remedy.

I ask the minister, what is the remedy? If after 30 years in a monopoly situation the Film Board is not in a position yet to compete with small, independent producers, we must seriously question the competence of the National Film Board or the seriousness of the minister when he says that he wants to help establish an independent film industry in Canada.

I should like to have a direct answer from the minister or his parliamentary secretary as to what degree we can count on the seriousness of the minister when he says that he would like to support the private film industry, and what opportunities he will take to do that.

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, from its inception in 1939 the National Film Board of Canada was given a mandate to promote the production and distribution of films in the national interest. Section 9 states it is to represent the Government of Canada in its relations with persons engaged in commercial motion picture film activity in connection with motion picture films for the government or any department thereof.

This is a role which the National Film Board has carried out with such effect that it is now recognized around the world as a model which other countries emulate. Numbers of National Film Board productions, many of them made for government departments, have won national and international awards.

The board's success did not, however, prevent it from developing a program of contracting out an increasing volume of sponsored film business, from the point at which the film industry had developed its capability to handle it.

In July, 1972, the cabinet, as a part of the national film policy, recommended the establishment of a special committee on sponsored films. The committee, chaired by the Treasury Board, is looking specifically at the National Film Board mandate in relation to the production of film for government departments and agencies, and has received briefs from various private sector organizations. It is anticipated that the committee's report will be presented to the minister in the next two months. While we cannot speculate on the content of the report, the following information may be useful to the hon. member.

The National Film Board has reduced its own production activities in the sponsored film program over the past five fiscal years, in order to provide an increasing share to the private sector. This shift which has taken place in the private sector's share of sponsored film production is from 8 per cent in 1970-71 to 50 per cent in 1974-75.

It is also important to recognize that support to the private sector from the National Film Board is not limited to the sponsored film program, which in 1974-75 was worth $1.6 million to the private sector. In addition to the $1.6 million, the NFB spent a further $5 million in laboratories for processing, for prints, and other private sector creative and technical services. This support is part of the government's over-all objective to assist in the development of the private sector film industry.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

REQUEST FOR AID TO FRASER VALLEY AREA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask unanimous consent to move a motion respecting a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Having just been advised of serious flood conditions in Fraser Valley East threatening homes and livestock, with predictions of increasing danger within the next 24 hours, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston):

That the government declare this a national emergency qualifying for immediate financial and material assistance.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

PROPOSED STUDY OF URBAN DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important issue of pressing necessity.

Since the development of our Canadian cities is done haphazardly without any planning to maintain the aesthetics of the cities, control pollution, relieve traffic and respect the human factor and since adequate action can be taken to take advantage of the experiences of large American and European cities which, in some cases, have already coped with those conditions and in other cases, have suggested interesting solutions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette):

That the House should now consider the urban development problem to establish as soon as possible a specific and coherent policy so that our urban centres remain functional and livable.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PROPOSED IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS CONCERNING PRISONERS OF WAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity related to the veterans of Canada who were incarcerated in prisoner of war camps during world war II.

For many months the Department of Veterans Affairs has had in its possession a unanimous recommendation from the Standing Committee of Veterans Affairs to pay a disability pension to prisoners of war related to the number of years for which they were incarcerated. The minister has stated that the matter is under discussion in cabinet, but the government House leader has given no indication that he is ready to bring the legislation before this House. Since I am certain that there would be agreement on both sides to pass this legislation through all stages at one sitting of the House, and since the enactment of such legislation would provide benefits to the veterans in keeping with the Christmas spirit, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House direct the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the government House leader to introduce forthwith legislation to implement the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs tabled in this House on Thursday, June 12, 1975.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even with some reservations about the emergency nature of a matter that may be brought before the House in another way, the Chair will still put the question. The motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTION THAT UNION OF POSTAL WORKERS BE PLACED IN TRUSTEESHIP—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I, too, rise to propose a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the longest postal strike in the history of this country has caused untold financial and economic damage from coast to coast, and, while the postal workers are now in the top 15 per cent bracket, its union leaders continue to threaten the disenchanted and bitter Canadian public with yet further slowdowns and unrest within the post office, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the Postmaster General express on behalf of this House to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers executive that if their counterproductive effect continues on union affairs affecting the national interest he will seriously consider having the union placed under trusteeship until more democratic and constructive leadership can be appointed by the rank and file.

Some hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, to accept the current motion as being the subject of a national emergency, just following the settlement of the strike to which reference has been made, would seem to me to indicate approval for every motion under Standing Order 43 which might be a matter of general concern. Surely, there should be at least some element of emergency in the motion.

ENERGY

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—RENEGOTIATION OF COMMERCIAL TERMS OF AGREEMENT—POSITION OF ARGENTINA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who I can see is very anxious to give information this afternoon.

Mr. Fairweather: Is there a crisis in the government, or is there a government?

Mr. Stanfield: The minister will recall that on November 5 he said the government has "served notice officially to the Argentinian agency" that it wants to renegotiate the commercial terms of the CANDU contract, which I understand could otherwise cost Canada in the vicinity of $100 million, plus or minus some millions. Has the minister or his department yet received any official reply from the Argentinian government or the appropriate agency and, if so, has there been any indication that Argentina is prepared to open up the financial aspects of the agreement?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is an indication that Argentina is prepared to sit down and negotiate the terms of the contract. I believe the meeting will take place sometime within the next couple of weeks.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—POSSIBLE SIGNING OF SAFEGUARD AGREEMENT BEFORE CHRISTMAS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Having regard to the safeguard aspects of the agreement, in respect of which the minister said also on November 5 the government is very close to a "successful conclusion of the safeguard agreement", and the minister hoped it would be signed before the end of the year, can the minister give the House any assurance that such an agreement will be made available to the House before the Christmas recess, and whether such an agreement will entail anything more than a promise by Argentinian authorities not to use the materials or technology in the manufacture of explosives?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot go into the details of the agreement. My colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has indicated that when the agreement is signed it will be tabled in the House of Commons. My view as of November 5 still stands. I believe we are close to concluding such an agreement.

SALE OF CANDU REACTORS—PRESENCE OF REPROCESSING PLANT AS A FACTOR IN DECISION TO SELL

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, because a fuel reprocessing plant is vital and necessary to any nation in the manufacture of nuclear weaponry, would the minister be good enough to inform us whether the presence or the intended presence of a reprocessing plant in any nation is or is not a factor which has engaged the government in its deliberations as to whether it should sell a reactor to such nation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the possibility of the presence of a reprocessing plant is, of course, considered by the government. The safeguards are intended to ensure that Canadian materials will be safeguarded.

URANIUM—CANADIAN POSITION AT SUPPLIERS' CONFERENCE ON PRESENCE OF REPROCESSING PLANT WHEN CONSIDERING SALE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, having regard to the supplier nation conferences which have been taking place, and there have been at least two now, will the minister inform us if it has been Canada's position that to be supplied with uranium, either enriched, yellow cake or raw, or in any other form, a nation should not have a reprocessing plant? Has that been Canada's position?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Our safeguards I think are well known to the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Gillespie: I would invite the hon. member if he has not read the statement of my predecessor of about a year ago to re-read it.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—EFFECT OF NEGOTIATIONS FOR REPROCESSING PLANT ON SALE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the government is aware that the Republic of South Korea has already entered into negotiations with France for their reprocessing plant, and if that has been any sort of a factor in respect of the sale of a CANDU reactor to South Korea.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been a factor as I have indicated in the sense that our safeguards are intended to protect the supply of Canadian materials or a Canadian reactor and the use of materials in a Canadian reactor further processed by such a reprocessing plant.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROLS TO COMMERCIAL PREMISES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In view of the decision taken in British Columbia on Monday to extend provincial rent controls from the residential to the commercial area, would the Prime Minister clarify the policy concerning whether the white paper in referring to rent controls was referring to rent controls both residential and commercial and whether the Prime Minister and the program are therefore encouraging the provincial governments to move into commercial rent controls.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not informed myself of what was done in this regard in British Columbia so I answer subject to that ignorance on my part. The white paper talked about rent controls without being specific. I think we mainly had in mind rental for private occupation rather than for commercial enterprise with the feeling that commercial enterprise if it were under the 500 employees rule would be caught by the guidelines in other respects. But there is certainly no prohibition against a province wanting to extend its control, within its area of jurisdiction, to other ways of controlling inflation.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, in view of the many representations which have been made by small businesses such as barbers, beauticians and people who are trying to struggle in the independent business field and are complaining about their rents, would the Prime Minister now give consideration to broadening that anti-inflation policy to the commercial rent field so that we can see investment move into residential as well as commercial because with commercial uncontrolled you are directing investment only into the commercial area rather than the residential area. Would the Prime Minister reconsider the position his government has taken on this?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, without conceding the conclusions drawn by the hon. member, I would point out to him that the little businessmen to whom he refers would not come under the obligatory aspects of enforcement of the guidelines. It would seem rather improper to give them the benefit of the guidelines when they are not obligated by law to compel themselves to follow them.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTION THAT CANADIAN NEWS SUPERSEDE INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State, I wish to put to the right hon. Prime Minister a question that has been on my mind for many weeks.

Today at 1.30 p.m. I listened to the CBC national and international news broadcast in which we were told about a hold up in Paris, the designation by the King of Spain of the president of Parliament, that a number of hostages were being held in the Netherlands, that there had been an Israeli attack in Lebanon, that Russia and the United States had made an agreement regarding disarmament, that the King of Laos has resigned and that President Ford is visiting China; that should be the outline of national news. There was also a brief reference to the postal employees' strike that ended, as well as to the anti-inflation legislation debate. Here is my question: has the government enough authority or influence to ask the CBC to broadcast mostly national news because Canadians are primarily interested in knowing what is happening in their country, while giving some attention to what is going on elsewhere. One would think, however, that the intention is to keep Canadians abreast of all the events in the world, yet Canadian events are forgotten. Can the government make those representations to the CBC?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member expressed his point of view to the House; I shall see to it that it is also conveyed to the president of the CBC. If the hon. member will allow me to give another example of the unfortunate omission of Canadian news: there was, if I go by the hon. members' list, no mention of a very important meeting held last night in Duvernay to choose the delegates of the Progressive Conservative party.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO CHILLIWACK AREA OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—POSSIBLE USE OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he been made aware of the disastrous flooding that is presently taking place in the Chilliwack area in British Columbia and, if so, has he received any request for assistance or indicated his readiness to render any and all assistance possible to meet that serious situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a quick check of my notes indicates that I have not received a request for assistance, but I must admit to the hon. member that I may not have had a sufficiently complete briefing. I was detained at a very important luncheon today, a luncheon for the glorious mass of Liberals who were elected in 1965, and I had to set aside all important matters of state.

Mr. Baldwin: How about the Senators who came in in 1968?

Mr. Patterson: In the absence of the Minister of National Defence would the Prime Minister give the assurance that the personnel and facilities of the Canadian forces base at Chilliwack will be available in meeting the critical situation facing the authorities and the residents of that area?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the question is somewhat hypothetical. As I say, we have not received that type of request, but the hon. member can be assured that the Canadian forces and other instruments of the federal government are always ready when called upon to assist the provinces to meet this type of disaster.

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE CONCERNING PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, the question is for the government House leader. Would he bring forward legislation to implement the recommendations in the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs tabled on June 12 this year? I ask this because I have reason to believe that members on both sides of the House would be agreeable to passing this bill through all stages at one sitting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a bill of this kind has been on the cabinet agenda for some time. It has not yet been approved. As hon. members are aware, the cabinet is engaged in trying to restrain government spending and it has to look at that bill in that light, as I am sure the hon. member would feel is appropriate.

LEGISLATION IMPLEMENTING RECOMMENDATIONS OF COMMITTEE CONCERNING PRISONERS OF WAR—PROGRESS IN CABINET CONSIDERATION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that many questions have been put to the House leader regarding the bill on compensation for incarcerated prisoners of war, and in view of the fact that each answer on successive occasions indicated consideration of the bill by the cabinet, can the House leader advise the House on the state of progress at present? Has there been any progress with regard to that legislation which affects many low income people to whom the anti-inflation guidelines would not apply?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): We have had the report of the committee and the Minister of Veterans Affairs has made recommendations. These have been under consideration but we have not yet reached a final decision.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have had it for six months now.

TRANSPORT

ARRANGEMENTS WITH PANARCTIC FOR TRANSPORTATION OF OIL—REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of the growing urgency facing Panarctic because of the difficulty in raising capital for exploration, has the government given any consideration, or is it giving consideration, to entering into arrangements with Panarctic with respect to a delivery system for the commercial oil deposits in the Arctic down to areas where they might be refined? Similar consideration has been given and similar arrangements are about to be entered into with Federal Navigation, Commerce, Leach and Canadian Steamship Lines. Is the government considering a similar arrangement with respect to Panarctic?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the first venture in relation to an ice-breaking cargo vessel is the one which has recently been announced, and it can be useful to Panarctic as well as others in terms of supply, if not in terms of removal of product. The over-all question of removing the product is, of course, much more complex than that, although this particular technique will certainly be better known by us as a result of having one vessel in place. However, at this point there have not been further specific discussions about a second or additional vessel.

Mr. Forrestall: Panarctic has to start moving the oil out in the next two or three years, or four years at the outside, in order to get some cash flow. I wonder whether the minister might consider referring this matter to one of his appropriate departmental committees for possible review; otherwise, we are going to wind up with foreign-registered vessels removing this oil from the north, and that would again be an unfortunate situation.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member assumes that a vessel will be the technique for movement, and that is certainly one of the alternatives. The question is, of course, under consideration by a number of departments of government at this time.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED COMPENSATION TO BUSINESSES FOR LOSSES RESULTING FROM POSTAL STRIKE—POSSIBLE SERVICE CHARGES ON SALES TAX ACCOUNTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the severe losses, financially and otherwise, which have been suffered by business, and which have been particularly rough on small businesses which have been forced to pay service charges on moneys which should have been available through accounts receivable, will there be any compensation, tax-wise, or does the government contemplate anything for those people?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think this would be covered under the normal provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Rynard: How about the government sales tax accounts? Will there be any service charges on those?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am sorry, I did not hear the hon. member. To what type of accounts is he referring?

Mr. Rynard: The sales tax accounts which were to be mailed out every month. Naturally, because of the postal strike, they could not be received. What is the government doing about this? I believe there has been some harassment in this regard.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will have to take that particular question as notice.

TRANSPORT

DISCONTINUANCE OF SERVICE BY COAST FERRIES LIMITED OF VANCOUVER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister if he has received any appeals from British Columbia regarding the action of Coast Ferries Limited of Vancouver, which has discontinued its coastal ferry freight service to the isolated logging camps and communities on the mainland of British Columbia. What action does the government intend taking to avert the hardship which this action will cause to the people living in those communities, who are dependent upon this freight service for their food and fuel?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have been aware of this problem. The member of parliament for the area brought it to our attention a number of weeks ago, and we have been looking at it. It is a ferry service which simply serves within one province, and ordinarily we would consider that to be the prime responsibility of the province in question. We have been considering whether, in the absence of any action on the part of that province, we could take any steps pending further refinement of our own policy in relation to ferries. I would say, however, that the very pointed remarks about the importance of the service might be taken by the hon. member to the provincial government of British Columbia.

● (1430)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question. In view of the fact that Coast Ferries Limited of Vancouver are licensed by the Department of Transport, may I ask the minister if he has received a request from that company for a government subsidy and if so, what action is the government taking? Will the minister undertake to look into this matter to see whether this service can be resumed?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my previous answer indicated that this matter had been brought to our attention. I referred to the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin but in addition, the ferry service itself had made the request to us. We indicated that while we would look at the question, we did consider it primarily a problem for the province.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONSIDERATIONS ENTERING INTO SALE OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and follows information eventually received, after a year on the order paper to the effect that Canada, in the last decade and currently, has been selling military equipment to 73 countries with no regard to their military activities or political stability. In light of the great and legitimate anxiety over the sale of nuclear equipment, may I ask the minister if his department or any other takes any interest in the sale of conventional military equipment as a foreign policy judgment or if Canada regards the sale of non-nuclear weapons as a purely business transaction where the dollar value is the only value worth considering?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the brief answer to the question is no. We do have regard to sales of military equipment of all kinds in all directions. We have a policy that specifies certain NATO countries to which we supply arms on a reciprocal basis; we have another category of countries to which we will supply arms of a certain class; we have a number of countries to which we do not sell arms of any kind at all and this includes countries in the Middle East. We also have some categories that might be termed military equipment of a rather innocent character and perhaps some of the countries mentioned received equipment of that kind.

POSITION OF CANADA IN RELATION TO OTHER COUNTRIES SELLING MILITARY EQUIPMENT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the minister informed that this interesting list of categories he has just given places Canada No. 6 in the sale of arms in the world?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that statement requires some analysis. There are certain types of arms and equipment for warlike purposes that we do not supply. Many of the things we supply are not intended for the purpose of killing people.

Mr. Hees: They are sort of "soft arms", are they?

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED REVIEW OF APPLICATION OF TRANSAIR FOR SERVICE IN WESTERN PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. This week the CTC turned down the application of Skywest for a prairie air service. This means that central and western Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan are still without east-west service. In view of the fact that we have a new air terminal in Brandon and no air service, would the minister review the application of Transair—which the majority of people want—to supply jet service to Prince Albert, Regina and Brandon to Toronto on a daily basis?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question of such service would ordinarily be determined in the first instance by the Canadian Transport Commission and I presume they could look at a further application in this regard at this time. I should say that, according to my information, the application by Skywest was not turned down but the hearing was adjourned on the ground that there was insufficient information put before the CTC by the government of Manitoba.

SUGGESTION AIR CANADA SUPPLY SERVICE IN WESTERN PROVINCES IF TRANSAIR APPLICATION REJECTED

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): A supplementary question. On the Transair application to supply this service the main opposition at the CTC hearings was from Air Canada. If Transair is not allowed this route, would the minister ask Air Canada to supply this much needed service?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I can at least partly answer the hon. member's question by indicating we may want to look at the position Air Canada takes in a number of these questions when a particular airline is going to supply service.

NATIONAL PARKS

LOSS IN ATLANTIC AREA AS A RESULT OF NEW FEE—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. According to recent reports, the loss in park revenue in Atlantic national parks this year was from 10 per cent to 32 per cent as a result of the new park fee. With the recent projection of the president of the tourist association of Prince Edward Island that there is a likelihood of a $5 million to $6 million loss to the tourist industry with the imposition of this fee, has the minister had an opportunity to review these figures and will action be taken to deal with them in the light of the importance of tourist development to Prince Edward Island?

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in pointing out the diminution of traffic. That does not only apply to the Atlantic provinces, however, but across the country. I think you have to look to other factors than the fee when you look at traffic. Surely, the hon. member is not suggesting the fee is the only consideration. There is the increased cost of gasoline, hotels and food, for instance. That is where the president of the tourist association should be looking for his increased costs.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—COMPARISON OF USE WITH THAT OF OTHER PARKS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question. Has the minister had an opportunity to compare the situation in the Prince Edward Island national park, which did not have a fee this year, with the park situation in neighbouring provinces? Could he indicate whether there was any difference between the situations in these parks which would allow for the additional reasons the minister provided and would focus on the essential problem of the deterrent fee?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to look at the figures. There is a significant variation between all parks in the Atlantic provinces and the rest of Canada.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

EFFECT OF FEE ON USE OF NATIONAL PARKS—CONSULTATION WITH DEPARTMENT CONTROLLING PARKS IN VIEW OF AGREEMENT IN DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A final supplementary question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the recent signing of the second phase of the development plan and the importance of the tourist sector in that plan, has the minister or his officials studied the impact of the deterrent fee and have there been any consultations between the minister or his officials and representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that the negative implications which this decision might have had have been examined as yet, but I can assure the hon. member that I shall see to it that they will be examined. And if some corrections can be made, they will be.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED LAY-OFFS IN CAPE BRETON AND CLOSING OF SERVO-CENTRE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to provide the House with information with regard to the question I posed on Thursday last about lay-offs by Canadian National Railways of personnel, including C.N. police? Further, is it the intention of Canadian National to close out the servo-centre for Sydney which would result in further lay-offs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I will have to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Muir: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his usual congenial reply. May I ask if he will assure the House that he will bring the report back here and allay the fears of those who will be affected?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT OF PROGRAM "VIEWPOINT" BY PROGRAM FEATURING BACKBENCH MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the recent announcement made by Knowlton Nash, vice-president of programming for CBC, regarding the cancellation of the program "Viewpoint", could the minister pass along the suggestion that this program be replaced by a special program of backbench members of parliament selected on a rotation basis from all four corners of this House?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member's suggestion is very worth while and I will be glad to bring it to the attention of the minister and of the CBC.

Mr. Hees: That is a sweetheart question.

IMMIGRATION

DANG VAN QUANG—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It deals with the Dang Van Quang affair which is becoming a notorious farce. What is his present status in this country and what major problems is the minister encountering now? Can the minister give the House an assurance that if no other country will take this person that he will carry out the deportation order issued July 7?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the situation has not changed since I replied to the hon. member a few weeks ago.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO UNION REPRESENTATION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Finance.

Before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions answered to a question he was asked that neither he nor the members of his union would agree to sit on the Anti-Inflation Board. Can the minister tell the House whether direct invitations have been made to unions across Canada so that labour be represented on the Anti-Inflation Board and, if so, what has been the answer?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say that labour is already represented on the Anti-Inflation Board by Mr. Bill Ladyman of Winnipeg.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED RELOCATION OF PROPOSED PIGGYBACK TERMINAL IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. There has been considerable concern and objection to the CNR's locating a new piggyback terminal in southwest Winnipeg on Wilkes Avenue, adjacent to the Tuxedo residential area. Yesterday the Minister of State for Urban Affairs announced a $436,000 loan to the Manitoba Housing and Renewal Corporation for the purchase of land for housing west of the proposed piggyback terminal. Will the minister consult with his colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who is responsible for rail line relocation, then get in touch with the president of the CNR and recommend a new location for the terminal, away from housing developments, existing and proposed?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to engage in consultations, but will do so before deciding on recommendations.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader. The government having announced that it will lease, even before the cornerstone is laid, I believe, space in Hull to accommodate 6,000 new civil servants, can the minister rationalize for this House and veterans in general why veterans are being treated with austerity, and those to be located in Hull with such generosity?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister is disposed to answer the question, he must answer at some time other than the question period.

BANK ACT

PROCEDURE FOR DEALING WITH AMENDMENTS AND BILL C-7

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: —my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the minister's references yesterday to the possibility of introducing revisions to the Bank Act by the middle of next year, will the minister indicate if the government proposes to bring in a green paper or white paper on possible amendments to the Bank Act, in order that there may be public reaction to the government's decision on the proposed recommendations before those amendments are actually brought forward?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the hon. member on the bandwagon which is undoubtedly going for him at the moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Especially in Rosedale.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If I may elaborate further my statement of yesterday, I indicated we intend to give first reading to the bill next year without proceeding further with it, so that there will be full opportunity for the community to study the bill and comment on it.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Minister of Finance say what is to be the fate of Bill C-7, which is still on the order paper, bearing in mind that the proposed bill contemplated the incorporation of banks by letters patent and the possibility of provincial governments having shares in banks in Canada? Is this bill to be brought forward or dropped?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will not proceed with it in the present session.

ENERGY

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—RECONCILIATION OF STATEMENT ON SAFEGUARDS WITH KNOWLEDGE OF NEGOTIATIONS FOR REPROCESSING PLANT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is supplementary to questions asked by my leader and the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. The minister told us that the guidelines on nuclear safeguards were published about a year ago. I want to know how the minister can reconcile these statements, of an immutable nature, with the knowledge that has just come to him recently, of an agreement being worked out between South Korea and France for the acquisition of an enrichment plant.

[Mr. McCain.]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member to await the tabling of the Canadian document.

Mr. Horner: You don't know what's in it, do you, Alastair?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I still think the minister owes us an explanation. How is he to be assured that the safeguards will control the reprocessing plant when it is installed in South Korea? This is preposterous, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Elgin.

AGRICULTURE

SURPLUS OF SKIM MILK POWDER—SUGGESTED USE IN FOOD AID PROGRAMS

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture?

An hon. Member: You will not get an answer.

Mr. Wise: As stocks of skim milk powder on hand this year are three times larger than last year's, being 300 million pounds, compared with approximately 100 million pounds, and as CIDA bought less skim milk this year than last, has the Minister of Agriculture made representations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, or to CIDA directly, in the hope that additional volumes of this product will be purchased for world food aid?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have done this. As I reported earlier to the House, we have asked the head of the Dairy Commission and our trade officers to explore every avenue possible for the sale of skim milk powder. I am sure the hon. member knows that the world surplus of skim milk powder is larger than ever, and the distribution problem is still as great or greater than it has ever been.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSAL TO INCREASE SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. The postal strike now having been resolved, postal officers immediately junior to postmasters will receive some $1,500 a year more than many Canadian postmasters. As postmasters are not in a position to bargain for their salaries, what is to be the position of the government on increasing the salaries of Canadian postmasters?

An hon. Member: Tough luck, that's all.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: I was going to say that the question is particularly relevant. I discussed it this morning with the deputy minister because, naturally, there is an historic relationship between the wages of employees and of supervising officers. I hope this matter will be settled shortly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGOLA—SUGGESTION CUBA WITHDRAW FORCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a brief question to the Prime Minister? When the Prime Minister visits Cuba in January, will he make representations to Premier Fidel Castro, requesting him to remove the 3,000 armed troops he has placed in Angola in support of communist forces endeavouring to take over control of that country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have some doubts as to whether I will be receiving advice from Premier Castro with regard to the placement of Canadian troops, and it is unlikely that I will give such advice to him.

Mr. Crouse: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister, I think, misunderstood my question. I was not referring to Canadian troops. At present it is reported that the Cuban government has placed some 3,000 Cuban troops alongside Communist forces in Angola. I was asking the Prime Minister, since we provide aid to Cuba, if he will consider asking Premier Fidel Castro to withdraw the 3,000 Cuban troops supporting the communist forces which are endeavouring to take over Angola?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all respect, that is precisely the question the Prime Minister just answered. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF PULP AND PAPER WORKERS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO SETTLE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Considering that the minister's attempt at moral suasion failed to get the pulp and paper companies back to the bargaining table to settle a national dispute which has lasted many months, what new initiatives will the minister take to get negotiations under way?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, may I advise the hon. member that some companies are in the process of returning to the bargaining table. As I indicated yesterday, the reaction of the Anti-Inflation Board to the Irving settlement might break the logjam and we may see further settlements shortly.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REASON FOR CHANGE IN ATTITUDE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA TOWARDS USE OF DEPARTMENT'S SERVICES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In the light of an announcement by the government of British Columbia that it intends to embark on a major program of expansion in the field of transportation and industrial development, and since this announcement would involve a large amount of money from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, can the minister tell us whether the election under way in British Columbia at this time removed the stumbling block he has experienced in getting the province to use the services of the department?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, of course I will not comment on the hon. member's last statement concerning the electoral campaign which is now taking place in British Columbia. Instead I shall deal with the project which has been announced by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and which aims at a significant development of the coal industry in that province. This topic has been under discussion with our department for quite a while. It is considered a very important project for the development of that province. There is no doubt that if the B.C. government is interested in going ahead with the project we, ourselves, are interested in discussing with them to explore the possibility of joining in this development project which is, in my view, a very important one.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT

POSSIBLE TAKEOVER OF WESTINGHOUSE—REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I should like to put my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Speaker, as the government must pass judgment on the sale of Westinghouse to a foreign company, as the uncertainty surrounding that decision is creating problems for the dealers of that company, and as they are unable to give the usual guarantees on the merchandise, can the minister tell the House today when the government will announce its decision regarding the possibility of that sale? If he cannot do so today, would he give it special attention in the interest of those who depend directly or indirectly on the company?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the hon. member for Joliette that the transaction is of concern to the government, but that the responsibility involved falls on the shoulders of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When a decision has been reached, I am sure Parliament and the people generally will be advised of it. I could perhaps refer my hon. friend to the statement the minister made last Friday before leaving on a business trip.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—NUMBER OF COMPANIES TO WHICH GUIDELINES APPLICABLE—SIZE OF STAFF NECESSARY TO MONITOR COMPANIES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): One question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Can the hon. gentleman answer the question I put to him yesterday with respect to the number of firms with 500 employees or more, and the number of construction firms, which will be monitored under the anti-inflation program and whether a staff of 200 is sufficient to look after this particular operation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm it is estimated that of firms with 500 or more employees 2,500 or 3,000 will be subject to monitoring control. I cannot give a definite figure at the moment with regard to construction firms. At the present time there are some 265 persons assisting the Commission in its work, of whom all but 28 have been seconded from within the public service.

Mr. Alexander: Am I to infer from reading the first figure which was thrown out in the White Paper, 1,500 firms, that the government rushed into this matter without knowing what it was doing?

AIR TRANSPORT

DATE OF PAYMENT TO SAUNDERS FOR AIRCRAFT PURCHASED BY SKYWEST

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): My question is to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Because of the apparent disposition on the part of the government to go ahead with Skywest in spite of recent difficulties, and understanding the cash flow problems of Saunders Aircraft Corporation of Manitoba, would the minister indicate when Saunders might expect payment for the aircraft involved in order that they might be able to remain open and continue to provide employment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I have been taking the position that the right time to buy the planes was when it was known that they would in fact fly on the routes intended, and this meant I was awaiting the outcome of the CTC deliberations on the question.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FRASER VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL SHARE OF FUNDS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of the Environment arising from the fact that once again the Fraser Valley is experiencing considerable flooding problems. Bearing in mind that several projects are ready to proceed, subject to the commitment of funds by the federal government, and in view of the fact that the British Columbia government has indicated its willingness to go ahead and has money available for its share of Fraser Valley flood control programs, would the minister immediately press the government for its share of funds for projects previously scheduled to start in 1975 and which are ready to proceed?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): The construction of dykes in the Fraser Valley still remains a very high priority in our program of protection works. The plans for the construction of those dykes were made some time ago. Some of the projects are under construction; work on others has had to be delayed pending the approval of supplementary funds by Treasury Board. Between the time the plans were made and the time we were ready to start we encountered inflation problems; construction costs rose considerably, so we had to go to Treasury Board to seek supplementary funds. We have a request before Treasury Board at the present time for the extra funds needed to go ahead with this work.

PROPOSED GRASSLAND PARK IN SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What progress has been made toward the establishment of a national grassland park in western Canada?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): We have reached a tentative agreement with the Province of Saskatchewan with regard to the establishment of this park. Unfortunately, there was recently a change in the pertinent ministry—a new minister was appointed—and there are still some questions to be ironed out. I am still optimistic we shall be able to establish this park.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO JUSTIFICATION FOR PROPOSED INCREASE IN PRICE OF PASSPORTS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It pertains to the reported intention of the government to increase the price of passports issued to Canadian citizens from $10 to $12. Is this the government's intention, or policy, and if so how can the increase be justified?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question is under consideration. Any increase would be justified by the increased cost of supplying passports.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Since the reported increase would amount to 20 per cent, thus exceeding the guidelines laid down by the Minister of Finance, how can such an increase be justified?

Mr. Sharp: The guidelines do not speak about percentages in the case of prices or fees. They talk about prices reflecting increases in costs. That is how we would justify any increase we might make.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, if there is unanimous consent I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), concurrence in the report I presented last night at ten o'clock. I might tell the House, in moving my motion, that I have met the commitment to consult each of the four House leaders and they have given their blessing to it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) seeks the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion of concurrence in a committee report. The motion cannot be put without unanimous consent in view of the fact that the report was tabled only last evening. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I move:

BUDGET FOR "PREMIÈRE BIENNALE DE LA FRANCOPHONIE CANADIENNE"

Question No. 3,106—Mr. Epp:

1. What was the approved budget for Première biennale de la francophonie canadienne?

2. What amount was contributed by the (a) government (b) each department to the budget?

3. What role does the Minister of the Environment have in the Première biennale de la francophonie canadienne?

4. Was promotional material printed at government expense and, if so, in what language?

5. What is the purpose of Première biennale de la francophonie canadienne?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): 1. $170,000.

2. (a) and (b) Department of the Secretary of State (Official Language Minority Groups Directorate): $50,000.

3. The Association canadienne d'éducation de langue française had invited the Honourable Jeanne Sauvé to the first Biennale de la francophonie canadienne as a private individual, and not as the Minister of Environment Canada.

4. No.

5. The purpose of the Biennale was to allow French-speaking Canadians from the ten provinces of our country to come together to determine the present situation of the Canadian Francophone population, with the general theme of "The position of the Canadian Francophone population".

PROPOSED POST OFFICE—STEINBACH, MANITOBA

Question No. 3,107—Mr. Epp:

1. Has the government any plans to build a post office or federal building in Steinbach, Manitoba and, if so, what is the present status of the project?

2. If a building is to be rented, on what date does the government expect to lease space?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. The Department of Public Works has been requested by Post Office officials to schedule expanded postal accommodation in Steinbach, Manitoba tentatively for the summer of 1978. Major considerations in providing this accommodation by that date will be priority allocation within the Post Office National Facilities Plan and availability of funds. Necessary studies are not yet sufficiently advanced to indicate whether the Post Office need will be met by new Crown construction, an addition to the existing building, or by lease.

2. See 1 above.

CNR STAFF REDUCTION IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 3,184—Mr. Marshall:

1. Is it the intention of CNR to reduce staff in Newfoundland and, if so, what are, in details, the reasons for this reduction and the timing?

2. Are discussions being held with the appropriate unions concerned to relieve the economic pressures on the employees affected?

3. What is the breakdown of total employment figures in all areas of CNR in Newfoundland for the years 1968 to 1975 and the projected figures for 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways Company advises as follows: 1. There have been and will be staff reductions to keep our work force in line with the traffic offering and service required. Reductions will depend largely on the traffic and cannot be forecasted accurately at this particular time. Increases have also occurred related to specific traffic needs.

2. When positions are abolished, notice is given to the labour union representing the employees concerned. Benefits (weekly lay-off benefits, severance payments, relocation expenses) are available to employees who are laid off.

3. The following figures are for the month of September: 1968, 4,989; 1969, 4,980; 1970, 4,700; 1971, 4,956; 1972, 5,302; 1973, 5,404; 1974, 5,950; 1975, 5,803. The figures for 1976 will depend upon traffic offering and service requirements.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD PERSONNEL

Question No. 3,218—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What is the (a) salary range (b) expense account of Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin, Chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board?

2. What is the (a) salary range (b) expense account of Mrs. Beryl Plumptre, Vice-chairman of the Inflation Board?

3. What was Mrs. Plumptre's salary range as Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board?

4. (a) What is the salary range of Anti-Inflation Board employees (i) Mr. Ken Prettie (ii) Mr. Al Donnelly (iii) Mr. Richard O'Hagan (b) what was their salary range in their previous jobs in the Public Service (c) on what date was their salary range increased or decreased?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. (a) D.M.-2, $47,500-$60,500. (b) According to Treasury Board Regulations.

2. (a) D.M.-1, $41,000-$54,000—Mrs. Plumptre will accept only $40,000, her salary in her previous position. (b) According to Treasury Board Regulations.

3. $40,000.

4. (a) (i) Mr. Ken Prittie, IS-7, $24,500-$30,600. (ii) Mr. Al Donnelly, $25,500, Governor in Council. (iii) Mr. Richard O'Hagan, SX-2, $31,500-$41,500. (b) No change. (c) Not applicable.

[Mr. Drury.]

ONTARIO-UNITED STATES BORDER IMMIGRATION OFFICERS—BILINGUALISM

Question No. 3,233—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Department of Manpower and Immigration about to institute bilingualism for immigration officers stationed at border points along the Ontario-United States border and, if so, for what reason?

2. How many French-speaking immigrants entered Canada at these ports during the last year for which figures are available.

3. Has the institution of bilingualism already begun and, if so, are arrangements being made for two bilingual immigration officers to be stationed at Niagara Falls, Ontario?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. In 1973 all positions within the Department of Manpower and Immigration including those occupied by immigration officers stationed along the Ontario-United States border were linguistically identified according to the established standards concerning the provision of service in either official language. These positions are reviewed from time to time to ensure that current demands are met.

2. During 1974 there were 30 persons admitted to Canada as landed immigrants at ports of entry along the Ontario-United States border who had a language capability in French but not in English. In addition, there were 258 persons admitted who had a language capability in both French and English. Immigrants admitted to Canada represent only a minute percentage of persons entering Canada at these locations. Approximately 11 million permanent residents of Canada return home via these ports each year and their needs for service in either official language must be taken into consideration.

3. Yes. The study mentioned in part 1 above indicated that there was a significant enough demand at Niagara Falls to warrant the identification of two immigration officers' positions as bilingual.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD—PERSONNEL

Question No. 3,235—Mr. Nystrom:

What is the salary range of (a) Mr. Robert Johnstone, Executive Director (b) Mr. Donald Yeomans, Associate Executive Director of the Anti-Inflation Board (c) what was their salary range in their previous position (d) on what date will their salary increase or decrease become effective?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): (a) SX-3—$35,500-$47,500. (b) SX-3—$35,500-$47,500. (c) No change. (d) Not applicable.

NEW HORIZONS GRANTS—VILLENEUVE CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 3,275—Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve):

1. Since inception of the New Horizons Programme, has money been allocated to the Constituency of Villeneuve and, if so, in what amount?

2. For each project in the Constituency, what (a) is the title (b) is the amount allocated (c) is the year of acceptance (d) is the name of the municipality concerned (e) are the number of jobs which have been created?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. $52,895—approved since 1972.

2. (a)	(b)	(c)	(d)
La Gamme d'Or	$ 950	1972-73	Val d'Or
Club d'Âge d'Or Saint-Martin	$14,460	1973-74	Malartic
Association des Pionniers de Cadillac	$ 5,680	1973-74	Cadillac
Club de l'Âge d'Or Inc.	$ 5,550	1973-74	Val d'Or
Le Conseil Pastoral de Senneterre	$ 4,350	1973-74	Senneterre
Les Résidents du Foyer de Val d'Or	$ 1,900	1974-75	Val d'Or
Les Intrépides de Chibougamau	$10,800	1974-75	Chibougamau

NIL		1975-76

2. (e) None. The New Horizons Program is an activity-oriented program, not a job creating program. It was established to enable retired Canadians to participate in activities beneficial to themselves and the community, and all participants are volunteers.

INCREASE IN CONTAINER RAIL RATES

Question No. 3,297—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the government aware of the pending 10 percent increase in container rail rates through Halifax proposed for January 11, 1976?

2. Is the government aware of the additional five percent hike in such rates proposed for mid-1976?

3. Is the government aware that such rates, if implemented, will bring to seventy-three percent the total increase in the rail rates for containers alone out of the Port of Halifax since 1969?

4. What action does government propose to ameliorate this situation, if any?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. The railways, as corporations operating in Canada, will be subject to the Anti-inflation Legislation. The railways will be required to live within the guidelines as published by the government. The Canadian Transport Commission will be asked to see that the railways respect the guidelines, with the assistance of the Administrator of the Anti-inflation Program, when necessary. The CN and CP railway managements still have the responsibility of making their own pricing decisions and these decisions will be subject to the scrutiny of the CTC and the authority of the Administrator.

RETURNS OF NON-RESIDENT PERSONS

Question No. 3,488—Mr. Wise:

How many non-resident persons deriving rental income from sources in Canada whose income tax return had been submitted to the Department of National Revenue later than two years after the end of each tax year (a) 1972 (b) 1971 (c) 1970 received tax refunds?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Statistical information on this subject is not compiled by the Department of National Revenue at such a level of detail as would permit an answer to be made to this question.

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND THE MAINLAND

Question No. 3,553—Mr. MacLean:

Has any agreement been reached or any arrangement made whereby continuous ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the Mainland can be guaranteed, even when labour contracts are being negotiated?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No agreement has been reached nor has any arrangement been made whereby continuous ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the Mainland can be guaranteed at all times, especially during the ice season and during labour disputes.

GULF FERRY SERVICES

Question No. 3,554—Mr. MacLean:

1. For the peak traffic period of 1976, what ferries will be operating on (a) the Borden-Cape Tormentine Service (b) the Wood Islands-Caribou Service (c) the Souris-Magdalen Islands Service?

2. What will be the rates charged for passengers and passenger automobiles in each case?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The following is the planned vessel utilization for the peak traffic period of 1976: (a) Borden-Cape Tormentine Service: M.V. Vacationland, M.V. Holiday Island, M.V. Abegweit, M.V. John Hamilton Gray, M.V. Confederation. (b) Wood Islands-Caribou Service: M.V. Prince Edward, M.V. Prince Nova, M.V. Lord Selkirk. (c) Souris-Magdalen Islands Service: M.V. Lucy Maud Montgomery.

2. The current tariff structures for passengers and passenger automobiles are as follows: (a) Borden-Cape Tormentine Service: Adults, $0.65; Children (5 to 12 years inclusive), $0.25; Children (under 5 years), N/C; Passenger Automobiles, $2.50. (b) Wood Islands-Caribou Service: Adults, $0.75; Children (5 to 11 years inclusive), $0.35, Children (under 5 years), N/C, Passenger Automobiles, $3.00. (c) Souris-Magdalen Islands Service: Adults, $8.00; Children (5 to 12 years inclusive), $4.00; Children (under 5 years), N/C; Passenger Automobiles, $18.00. All fares quoted are for one way and, at present, there are no plans to alter the tariff structures.

HON. JEAN MARCHAND

Question No. 3,578—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Honourable Jean Marchand, as Minister of Transport, travel to the State of Florida in the United States and, if so (a) on what dates (b) to what places (c) for what purpose (d) what was the means of transportation?

2. In each case, where a government aircraft was used, what is a (a) full description of the aircraft (b) complete list of all persons on board at any time including job designations and addresses?

Motions for Papers

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister without Portfolio): 1. The Hon. Jean Marchand, as Minister of Transport, did not travel to the State of Florida, in the U.S.

2. Not applicable.

HON. JEAN MARCHAND

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESTRAINT OF PROFIT MARGINS, PRICES, DIVIDENDS AND COMPENSATION

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-73, to provide for the restraint of profit margins, prices, dividends and compensation in Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when this debate adjourned I was referring to the white paper and the conclusions reached in the white paper. I indicated that in my opinion most Canadians would agree that something should be done about inflation and the rising cost of most of our commodities, and that they would welcome the intervention of the government in this regard. There has been much discussion of the Conservatives' proposal that there be only temporary intervention, as opposed to the government's proposal for a more or less indefinite intervention. In addition to that there has been considerable input from the general public who are now finding controls extending far beyond what they had envisaged.

I think there is interest now in having this legislation passed, not because the Canadian public is impressed with it but simply because they want to see the regulations to discover how badly they are going to be hurt and how much disruption will be caused in the country. Speculation as to how this legislation is going to work should end. When the regulations are published, the public will then discover how they will affect wages, salaries and other forms of income.

Mention has been made of prices and profits. Everyone knows that there is no control over prices, just as there is no control over profits. We all know that the government is going to do nothing about the fact that the banks increased their profits by 85 per cent in the last year. As far as the government is concerned, that is not inflation. So really, Mr. Speaker, almost everyone agrees that we are talking here about salaries and wages and other forms of income.

Teachers have now been put into a different labour category. Before this legislation was introduced, the teachers considered that they were paid a salary; certainly they did not relate themselves to the labour movement as such. However, they now find that they are being regulated by the pronouncements of the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board even though regulations have not yet been published. The chairman of the board is saying to one group of teachers that their income will be restricted within certain guidelines; to another group of teachers he has made a different pronouncement. Thus, the teachers are totally confused as to what they can look for.

I have also had discussions with the other side in that particular dispute. The trustees and school boards want to know what the guidelines are because they, too, are scared that they will suffer from the very harsh penalties contained in this legislation if they take action that conflicts with the guidelines. I doubt whether that will be the case. I doubt whether any board, union or management in this country will have any difficulty justifying a contract settlement in terms of any penalties under this legislation, because such negotiations will be out in the open and it will be very difficult to prove that these people ganged up just to defeat the objective of the government by coming into conflict with the legislation. In my view, that particular provision in the act will be reserved for very few cases. I was very interested to hear that the board is working very hard, before the legislation is passed, to find a case they can prosecute so as to sort of balance the scales, but they have been unable to find one.

The people who will be hurt by this legislation are not the school boards, producer boards or marketing boards, teachers, workers or any other group that is negotiating in public. They will be able to justify their position and negotiations will take place normally. Already the Anti-Inflation Board has allowed the postal workers a settlement that is considerably above the 10 per cent limit. I think very few negotiations will settle for 10 per cent; the settlement will be at least in the region of the cost of living, which is 13 per cent, and, as I say, I very much doubt whether any penalty will be applied.

So who is it, Mr. Speaker, who is going to get hurt? It will not be the banks, the mortgage companies, the insurance companies or wholesalers. Those who will be hurt are people unable to negotiate for themselves in any way. The government has indicated to the public that the minimum increase within the guidelines will be $600, and in committee this was raised to $750. We suggested that it should be $2,400 and that the minimum and maximum should be reversed, with $2,400 being given to the poor and the smaller increase to the rich. Most members of parliament would have agreed with that in their own case, to set an example. But this is not the case. The old age pensioner, the disabled, those living on the minimum wage or on fixed incomes in this country will not get the $600 or the $750 because the bill provides no method for giving it to them.

You can rest assured that the people who will get the $2,400 will be those who have the power to get such a raise. They will get the increase, but those at the bottom income levels will not. We are creating inequities, by this bill, in terms of the poor people of this nation. It is a disgraceful piece of legislation. This reminds me very much of the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) talking about patriotism. I suggest that the cost of patriotism can be very high; many of our citizens paid very dearly for patriotism during the last war. This government apparently has made a decision not to bring forward any legislation in respect of our veterans to increase their allowances or pensions no matter what their needs may be. These people will have to pay again because of patriotism.

I remember the other side of the coin. During the last world war, farmers were asked to increase production as much as possible as their contribution to the war effort. They did that, and most continued to do so—I suppose on the basis of patriotism—for 20 years following the end of the war. Many of the farmers of this nation are still doing it. I hear members of this Anti-Inflation Board talking about looking at marketing legislation in this country. Let me quote just a few figures in regard to commodity prices and then ask whether marketing legislation is what the board should consider, or should this new board consider the fact that this government is making no attempt to control prices at the wholesale level?

This is a comparison of certain commodity prices in Manitoba from 1972 to 1975. It uses, as one example, a 16-ounce loaf of bread. Apparently, one pound of wheat yields one pound of bread. In 1972, one pound of wheat yielded 3.1 cents to the farmer. The wholesaler sold a pound of wheat in the form of bread for 23.3 cents. The retail price was 28 cents. This meant that the farmer was getting slightly over 3 cents, the wholesaler was getting slightly over 20 cents, and 5 cents was added on at the retail level. The retailer and the farmer were not making very much from a pound of wheat or a pound of bread but the wholesaler was making 20.2 cents.

In 1975, the farmers were getting 5.4 cents, the wholesaler was receiving 32 cents and the retailer was selling the pound of bread for 39 cents. The farmer was receiving about 5½ cents, the wholesaler was receiving about 27 cents, and the retailer was getting about 7 cents. This was still no big deal for the retailer and certainly no big deal for the farmer. The wholesaler was still doing very well.

One could make a similar comparison in respect of milk. The farm price for a quart of milk in 1972 was 18 cents. The wholesale price was 32 cents, with a 2-cent mark-up to 34 cents at the retail level. In 1975, the farm price has been 29 cents a quart, the wholesale price has been 48 cents, and the retail price has been 51 cents. The retailer is still making only 3 cents. So we cannot really blame the retailers for the high cost. The farmer is not making the big money on these commodities, but there is a very large mark-up before the product gets to the consumer and most of it is at the wholesale level. These are the things consumers will be looking at to see if there is any price increase: they will be considering the cost of food, the cost of energy and the increase in the cost of other commodities they have to buy no matter how poor they may be or how little they are getting.

After listening to the arguments I am shocked to find the Conservatives in the main are saying that the government must cut down on spending. What will the government cut down on? I suggest it will have to cut down on benefits to the low income people in this country. That is the segment of our economy that this government can most easily control, specifically in the way of minimum wage controls and assistance to our senior citizens and the disabled. In my opinion, this government will have to increase the income of these people to $740 per month. The government is not prepared to do this. After listening to Conservative members, I think the government will have to reduce these social benefits. It will not be able to pay $600 a month, never mind $740, so these people will receive less than now. But prices will continue to rise.

In the next few months I believe we will see a consolidation of the feelings of those who work for salaries and wages in this country. They will become collectively opposed to government intervention, to government interaction and to government boards and organizations. This bill will act against these people and in favour of their enemies. Their enemies will be those who are exempted from the provisions of this measure.

The government says it will control incomes at the profit level. I suggest there will be no apparent increases in profits but there will be great increases in the capitalization of the multinational corporations in this country. This may not happen in Canada, but these corporations will increase their capitalization as a result of this legislation. This increase will be paid for by the poor and the unorganized, those who are least able to look after themselves in our society.

If this is the government's answer to the free enterprise system, I suggest it should look very carefully at the confrontation it will force upon the people of Canada. It should look very carefully at its philosophy, because I am sure it will find there will be a decision on the part of those who have never supported the socialists in this country to consider seriously the idea of socialism, with equality and justice for all, providing for those who are least able to help themselves.

I look forward in the next few months to seeing many of those who are not supporters of unions joining what, in effect, will be a union of the people. I think they will in this way really become their brother's keeper in order to look after those who cannot look after themselves. I think they will align themselves with the union movement. We will very shortly see the teachers, the civil servants, and all those who have not to date been associated with the labour movement in this country, joining together in a move to fight for those not able to fight for themselves. With this bill, the government may find it has finally accomplished something we have not been able to accomplish for years; it will polarize the people of this country who wish to support the poor and the needy. If that is the result of this bill, then probably we should welcome it.

In the meantime, a great deal of injustice will be done to a large segment of the economy of this nation. Unemployment will increase, and a reduction in unemployment benefits to those out of work is an individual disaster. If we are not to give more money to governments, what we will be doing is cutting down unemployment insurance benefits and other types of assistance to those being hurt by this legislation. I am sure those who will administer this legislation have good intentions. I am sure the people working for the Anti-Inflation Board will have the best intentions and will do the best they can. I also think that generally the people in this country feel this bill will do nothing in their favour and is not a good piece of legislation. This fact is borne out by the poll taken in Quebec the other day which indicated that 72 per cent of the people are against the bill.

I think that when the regulations are published we will find the bill does not outline the contents of the regulations. No matter how bad the bill appears today, I am sure the regulations will indicate that the anti-inflation legislation of this government is not only a farce but is a dangerous, divisive piece of legislation that will establish classes in Canada which previously has not been the case.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up very much time of the House in case those in the hierarchy of our party feel I am unnecessarily delaying the proceedings. I assure them I shall take only a few moments simply to refer to two ideas which I believe deserve consideration in any discussion of inflation. One thing I have in mind is the extensive use of credit cards and their effect on inflation. Credit is a good thing. However, when credit cards are wantonly distributed, it seems to me this is an abuse of a privilege if we wish to control inflation.

When people go to the stores they are more inclined to purchase items without realizing the price they will have to pay in the months ahead. They are inclined to buy impulsively in the knowledge that the bills will not come in for a month or so. I have a pocketful of credit cards. It seems almost as if I am packing a gun when I carry them around. I do not think one should have dozens of credit cards. A person's credit rating should be arrived at according to his ability to pay. Without going into detail, I think a study should be carried out on the effect credit cards have on the rate of inflation in our country and whether they should be distributed in the manner they are today.

I think I have said enough on that subject, although I could speak on it for some time. I shall now discuss my second point. This may involve a change in attitude. I refer to the effect the automotive industry has on our lives in this country. I know the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) would not dare touch a subject like this because the automotive industry is a sacred cow. So far as he is concerned, we must keep on producing cars every year and have a model change every year.

I say that in this country and on the North American continent—probably it is not so evident in Europe—we are living in a wasteful society. When we trade in our automobiles there is immediately a 25 per cent write-off in the first year. Everyone in our society likes to live like the Jones's, and this means they have to make up the 25 per cent they have lost in some other way. I suggest that at this point we should take a careful look at how we are living and decide whether we should continue to promote this planned obsolescence. We should consider whether it is necessary and whether it contributes to inflation. I suggest it does.

There are those who would ask what would happen to the people employed in the automotive industry. I have heard this from members of the House. Then immediately they get up and ask for more money for housing, and so on. Everyone is interested in that kind of policy. We should say "no more" to the automotive industry which is contributing to our being a wasteful society. The automotive industry should limit style changes to every two years instead of every year.

I drive a car. I have seen cars with 15,000 miles on them which the owners thought were good cars, but on which they lost a good deal of money when they traded them in. I do not believe a person should lose so much money on an automobile, because he then demands much more money from his employer. We might consider the effect this has on inflation. I suggest we must reorient our thinking. We all know the kind of "big sell" we get from the automotive industry.

I remember that when the late George Nowlan was in the House it was said that the people of North America did not want the small cars imported from Britain. However, small cars were imported from Britain and Germany and then suddenly it was realized that there was a buck to be made and we became involved in the small car market. I suggest that the automotive industry should be made to toe the line. There is no reason why they should change the design of cars every year.

In my small farm operation we operate old tractors. How classy they look is not important. What is important is how effective they are. I think many people are interested in automobiles simply for conveyance. There are others who are interested in them for other reasons, and when they trade in a car which they thought was a good one, they find they take quite a loss. In such cases they ask for more money from their employers. I think we are perhaps part of a stupid society that will not shift from its old patterns. Why are we tied to the automotive industry. Why are we locked into it?

I think we should reverse our way of thinking and not be as class conscious as we are. We should not feel that we must change our car every year. If there are to be style changes, I suggest they should be made every second year or, better still, every five years. We thought we had an unlimited amount of energy then suddenly we became energy conscious. I think we could do something about inflation, but we would hit those who are big, those in the automotive industry. I cannot fight the whole automotive industry by myself, but I am suggesting that someone in the department could look into this matter and draft legislation making it mandatory to wear safety belts in automobiles. There are ways in which the government could act so as to make automobile manufacturers build smaller cars.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the House for the courtesy of allowing me time to take part in the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Call in the members.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

AUTHORIZATION FOR CMHC TO MAKE INTEREST REDUCTION GRANTS, CASH GRANTS, ETC., TO ENCOURAGE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs) moved that Bill C-77, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my minister wishes to express his regret to the House for not being here to speak to this bill personally. He has spoken with the House leaders of all parties, asking them to excuse him because of the demands of other urgent business, and their understanding is very much appreciated. He will read the transcript of the debate and is anxious to hear the comments of all hon. members, particularly opposition spokesmen. The minister will be back on Thursday night after his trip to Vancouver, where he is dealing with important matters related to Habitat '76 which has a high priority with the government. I am sure all hon. members will understand the urgency of his visit.

I would like to speak for a few minutes about the important principles which are embodied in the legislation now before us. Bill C-77 proposes changes in the National Housing Act which are necessary to give effect to the federal housing action program, one of the most significant initiatives in federal housing legislation in many years. It is a response to the whole range of housing problems facing Canadians in all parts of the country and in all walks of life. It is a broad and comprehensive plan, conceived within the framework of a national strategy which attacks inflation and rising living costs. It does not offer a single, magical device which will solve everyone's housing problem overnight.

I wish all our problems could be made to disappear with one wonderful gimmick, but that kind of solution is just not realistic and there is no point in pursuing it. That kind of solution is unreal because housing problems are many and different for different people, and have many and different causes. The achievement of our objectives, to give every Canadian access to good, affordable housing in a safe and satisfying environment, demands action on many different fronts. The federal housing action program provides that action in a planned and deliberate way.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)).]

There are people in this country who have real and urgent housing problems. Many of them are elderly people, some of them are the poor of our cities, some are mothers struggling to raise their children on their own, some of them are native people who have been alienated from the mainstream of our economic life. These people have the first claim on our help. The federal housing action program, by requiring private lending institutions to invest more money in housing, will free-up more federal funds for investment in the existing and successful housing programs which are designed to reach those people with the greatest needs. The minister met twice in recent weeks with the provincial housing ministers, and each time he confirmed to them that there will be substantially more money in CMHC's 1976 capital budget for those housing programs which we share with them—public housing, non-profit and co-operative housing.

We should remember, Mr. Speaker, while we are discussing new housing measures, that we already have in place an excellent array of programs designed to serve the needs of all Canadians. I should remind the House that for 1975 we allocated almost $390 million in federal funds for public housing projects, and I am happy to report that all of this money will be put to use before the end of the year. In addition, we committed more than $200 million for non-profit and co-operative housing. And we have given our undertaking to the provincial ministers that these funds, which are allocated to people with the most serious housing problems, are to be substantially increased next year because they are our number one priority, and always will be as long as there are people in this country who are inadequately housed.

If the old, the poor and the deprived have the most urgent housing problems, other people have problems too and are entitled to our consideration. These are people who are neither rich nor very poor, a group which carries a heavy share of responsibility and which, in many ways has been neglected in recent years. These are people who are earning between $11,000 or $12,000 and, say, $17,000. There was a time when families like these could reasonably cherish the ambition of owning their own homes. For many of them that ambition, that dream, is fading.

Neither the minister nor I ever contended that every Canadian as a matter of right was entitled to own a ranch bungalow on a 65-foot lot. But we do believe that everyone ought to have some options. If a young couple is prepared to save, to give up or postpone some of the things they want—a cottage, travel, a big car—and if owning their own home is their most important aspiration, they ought to have the chance to make it come true. The Assisted Home Ownership Program was set up to help people, particularly families of low or moderate income, to acquire their own homes. It has been the most popular and successful of any housing program in Canada.

In 1975 we have committed more than $460 million to help some 16,400 families to buy their homes. Now we are building on that success. We are increasing the benefits available to families with children in order to reach lower down into the income scale. At the same time, we are widening the program to make some benefits available to all Canadians, whether they have children or not, who want to buy modestly-priced houses. For these people, help is in the form of a loan that reduces carrying costs during the first few difficult years of getting established in home ownership.

The new AHOP plan will not only help many people make the jump to home ownership; it will be a powerful stimulant for the production of moderately-priced housing. AHOP assistance, as hon. members know, is available only for housing priced within limits established by CMHC in each market area. When we first introduced AHOP, many people said they could not find homes within the price limits. They were right. Many builders said they could not build houses within the price limits. But they were wrong. When mortgage money got tight and AHOP was the only readily available source of financing, they found they could, after all, build good, comfortable houses within the AHOP limits. Many of these houses—the minister and I have seen them ourselves—are of a remarkably high standard of quality and design. The new AHOP program will help us more than ever before to shift housing production in this country away from the high-priced end of the scale toward good, affordable housing that most people need and want.

The bill now before the House would amend the act so as to give CMHC the authority to include existing housing within the terms of the AHOP program. This amendment would be used when funds and the supply of housing seem to warrant this change, but it is not proposed to take advantage of such an extension immediately. We have always maintained that people should have the widest possible choice about the kind of housing they occupy and their form of tenure as owners, tenants or members of co-operative organizations. The recent, very serious decline in housing for rental has restricted that choice for many people who would prefer not to buy a house or who find it convenient, for various reasons, to rent accommodation at certain stages of their lives.

[Translation]

The federal housing action program features additional measures to try and achieve economic workability in the rental accommodation market. Businessmen have been reluctant in the past few years to invest in rental housing, because in their opinion the yield of rents to be paid as compared to the cost of providing accommodation will not be sufficient to justify the necessary capital investments. According to trustworthy statistics, they are probably right.

Our rental housing action program is meant to provide lower income people with good rental facilities and owners with the necessary incentive to build houses. That program is now being improved through an increase in the help available yearly for moderate cost rental housing in the form of recoverable, interest-free loans. That help as a whole will still be provided pursuant to an agreement with the corporation in respect of rents and other conditions. Besides a better program of rental housing help, capital cost allowances under the Income Tax Act will remain in effect for two more years. These provisions will enable investors whose main business is not in rental housing to deduct from other income the losses incurred in rental housing investments. Those measures are an incentive to numerous professionals as well as other people with savings to invest in the rental housing business. Those people have always accounted for the financing of a substantial part of the rental housing stock. Even if that matter does not happen to come under federal jurisdiction, we are highly interested in the matter of rent controls, since it relates to our nationwide efforts to deal with inflation and wage and price increases. Following two meetings with the provincial ministers concerned, I am glad to inform the House that there was unanimous agreement to establish a provincial rent control board where none now exists. When the minister launched this debate, he intended first of all to make sure that systems of rent controls would be established throughout Canada with a view to a full implementation of the anti-inflation program. Secondly, to the extent possible, we wanted those programs to be implemented uniformly throughout Canada. Since a number of systems are already in operation, and all provinces had to cope with their own particular conditions, we think our target was reached.

[English]

While many Canadians have housing problems, we are, generally speaking, among the best housed people in the world. Hon. members who have had the opportunity, as my minister has, to see the quality of housing in Europe and other parts of the world, will, I know, confirm that judgment. The fact is that many Canadians are not only well-housed, they are overhoused. Many people bought their houses years ago, on long-term mortgages, at prices and interest rates which are now well within their means. They have built up a very substantial equity in their home and, when they decide to buy a bigger or a newer house they have the capital to bid house prices almost out of sight. This kind of trading has had a serious effect on the market in terms of inflating prices and creating an unrealistic demand. We do not blame anybody who can make some profit out of selling the family home, but we cannot afford any longer to commit a disproportionate share of our national resources to the expectations of well-housed people who are mainly interested in improving their capital investment.

The federal housing action program will slow down this merry-go-round of rising expectations by requiring that the most favorable credit terms—high ratio, low downpayment mortgages—will be available only for modestly-priced housing that falls within National Housing Act loan limits. People who want large and luxurious houses will have to put up at least 25 per cent of the money themselves.

I have been talking about housing in terms of people's needs because housing is essentially a social commodity. If we are going to serve people's needs properly, however, we have to approach it from a national, economic perspective as well as a personal and social point of view.

If we are going to ensure that there is enough good housing to meet people's needs from now until 1980—taking into account household formations and a number of other factors—we will have to construct a million new houses in the next four years. When this program was announced in the House a few weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, my minister expressed the government's commitment to this goal and we are even more confident today that it will be achieved.

Our immediate target for 1976 is 235,000 starts. Hon. members opposite have had occasion, from time to time, to comment about my minister's optimism and it is a description which he cheerfully accepts. He is an optimist. He was an optimist when he undertook to achieve 210,000 starts in 1975, and he was still an optimist when some of the experts were saying we would not rise above 172,000. It is quite evident now that the pessimists were wrong and we are going to achieve our 1975 target of 210,000 starts—just as we are going to reach 235,000 in 1976 and a million starts by 1980. In fact, hon. members will recall that, seasonally adjusted, housing starts for October, 1975, were 276,000—over 100,000 more than the same month last year. I am pleased to report that the figure for November, 1975, is a high of 258,000 starts, which clearly means that we will achieve our target of 210,000 starts.

It is extremely important to the residential building industry to have this kind of commitment, beyond the annual year-to-year targets. Hon. members who are experienced as businessmen will recognize the advantage of being able to plan production over a reasonable period of time. If one knows what the market is likely to be, one can cut costs significantly and increase efficiency.

Our goal of 235,000 starts in 1976—an increase of some 25,000 over 1975—will mean 32,000 additional jobs in residential construction and in all the businesses and industries affected by housing. It will also mean that private lending institutions will have to significantly increase their investment in housing—at least another $750 million in 1976.

The minister has said, Mr. Speaker, that the government will require lending institutions to make these additional sums available. Some hon. members have expressed skepticism about this undertaking and have suggested the goal could not be achieved without compulsory legislation. Mr. Speaker, the minister has met with some of the most prominent lenders and has heard from many others, and I am pleased to inform the House that their reaction has been most co-operative. We have no doubt that the necessary funds will be forthcoming in the amounts we require. We will be establishing a monitoring committee to review performance by the private lenders and to ensure that funds are adequately distributed among the various regions of the country.

As the Minister has already advised the House, the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation will become active this spring, creating a secondary market for mortgages, making them more attractive as an investment and drawing more private investment into residential construction. In addition to an adequate supply of capital, one of the critical requirements in achieving our objectives will be a supply of serviced land where and when it is needed. One of the obstacles to opening land for residential development, Mr. Speaker, has been the reluctance of municipalities to encourage this kind of growth. For many municipalities, new housing, particularly low-cost housing, has imposed a demand for services that is not matched by new tax revenues. A number of federal housing programs and policies are designed to overcome these problems. Loans and grants under our sewage treatment assistance program have helped finance most of the facilities installed throughout Canada in recent years. This program, as hon. members will recall, was recently revised to make it more generous and more relevant to current problems. In particular, assistance was extended to cover storm trunk sewers when they were required to open up new land for housing. Under the federal housing action program we are going one step further and making loans available, not just for sewage treatment and trunks but for water treatment and mains where they will assist with new residential development.

As a further inducement to planned residential development and the encouragement of low-cost housing, the federal government will make grants of $1,000 to municipalities for each unit of medium-density housing built within local AHOP price limits. The minister has assured the provincial ministers that we will consult with them about criteria and will ensure, as far as possible, that these grants are administered in a way that is consistent with provincial priorities.

During the last federal-provincial housing conference we had a most useful discussion of various measures which provinces are using, or are contemplating, to speed up municipal processes of approving land development. It was generally agreed that, while this was a matter primarily of concern to individual provinces, it has become such a serious problem in many provinces that it assumes national importance. I agree that protracted delays in the approval processes are one of the most significant barriers to the achievement of our national housing goals, and we have offered to be helpful to the provinces in any way we can in sharing information about this problem and developing solutions.

I think these, essentially, are the principles of this legislation and the federal housing action program. It involves, first of all, a commitment by the federal government to a million new homes in the next four years. That means 235,000 starts and 32,000 new jobs in 1976. It will require private lending institutions to increase their share in the lending market, and I have indicated that we already have this assurance. It will mean increased private lending and substantially more mortgage money thereby being available for social housing programs such as public housing, non-profit and co-operative housing. It will make housing generally more affordable.

The AHOP and assisted rental programs are being revised and expanded. The new AHOP and assisted rental programs, along with new requirements restricting high ratio lending, will help shift housing production toward the lower end of the price range. The new assisted rental program and the extension of capital cost allowances will help restore economic viability to the rental market, thereby increasing production and helping to restrain costs. New loans and grants for water treatment and mains and new municipal grants for low-cost, medium-density housing will help speed up the development and servicing of land for housing.

There is one more matter provided for in this bill which is not directly related to the federal housing action program. It proposes certain amendments to the Central Mortgage and Housing Act regarding the appointment of the chairman of the board. This amendment is connected with recent initiatives which are intended to improve the co-ordination and integration of activities undertaken by CMHC and the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs. This amendment would assist this objective by making it possible for a senior officer of the ministry to act as chairman of the board of CMHC, providing the necessary link at the official level between the two agencies within the minister's portfolio.

I would just like to emphasize, before I sit down, that there is some urgency connected with the housing measures provided for in this bill. Many of the clauses provide for increased benefits that cannot be conferred until the bill becomes law. In the meantime, the effect may very well be for people to suspend activity under our existing programs, waiting for the new ones to come into force. I realize that some of these measures are rather complex and that they have important social, economic and financial implications requiring careful and deliberate consideration. Within these constraints, Mr. Speaker, I hope hon. members will deal with this bill as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this very important bill, let me point out that some of the measures contained in Bill C-77 are those which we on this side of the House have advocated for some time. Since the minister's announcement on November 3 we have had time to study his proposals in detail, and we find many failures in the bill. Speaking on the matter of private lending institutions directing an additional $750 million into the financing of new, lower and moderately-priced housing, as both the minister responsible and opposition critics have pointed out, this requirement is not accompanied by legislative sanction; it is simply a suggestion. A committee will be established to monitor the performance of private lending institutions.

This program is designed to increase the supply of mortgage funding made available for residential construction. It will likely fall short of matching housing supply with demand, on four broad fronts. It is interesting to note that in the report of the housing task force, completed in 1969 and presented to the prime minister of the day, it was recommended that the federal government seek to encourage and co-ordinate the efforts of private lending institutions to meet the vast majority of Canadian residential mortgages. It is unfortunate that more action was not taken in 1969, because if it had we would not have the same difficulties that we face today.

In the October "Mortgage Newsletter", issued by the Mortgage Insurance Company of Canada, it was noted that 26 of the 34 cities reporting indicated they were experiencing a shortage of supply of funds for builders. This indicates that there is a drastic supply problem in the availability of mortgage funding for builders interested in home ownership construction. Considering that the realignment of $750 million will only provide mortgage lending for between 20,000 and 25,000 new homes, the policy can be criticized for its basic inadequacy. This is further compounded by the fact that the government's program is encouraging high ratio mortgage lending, thereby further limiting the number of homes this sum can finance.

This program will do very little to encourage lending in multiple-dwelling construction. The same "Mortgage Newsletter" reveals that there is a slow demand among builders for apartment loans in 20 out of 34 Canadian cities. This factor simply reveals the lack of investment confidence in this sector, a lack of confidence undoubtedly caused by a poor annual rate of return during recent years, strengthened by investment concerns over impending rent control.

Because the AHOP program, which has become the crux of the government's housing policy, sets ceilings on both the percentage of income allocated to payments—25 per cent—and on the total cost of the dwelling purchased—approximately $35,000—there is little likelihood that persons qualifying for this program will be able to purchase anything but condominium apartments. Since this $750 million is set aside for middle and low income earners, and since these groups will only qualify for the purchase of multiple dwellings, the criticism becomes additionally germane to the over-all inadequacy of this program.

The encouragement of this redirection of funds may be entirely misdirected. Financial institutions arrive at their asset mix by looking, firstly, at total assets and, secondly, at the demand from builders for different types of loans. Since demands for loans are weak in the apartment condominium sector, there is no guarantee that if new funds are set aside they will be picked up.

On the suggestion that private lending institutions restrict their low down payment, high ratio, lending to newer and moderately-priced homes, let me state that this program will ease entry into the home ownership market by allowing individuals to purchase homes with down payments of as little as 5 per cent. However, while this program may encourage initial home ownership, it has three major shortcomings. First, by setting extremely low down payments, the government may be encouraging premature entry into the housing market at the expense of encouraging personal income savings. This gesture would be highly inflationary. Second, because down payments are so low, it is only natural to assume that the remaining principal on the mortgage will be extremely high. Once this large principal becomes subject to interest rates of 12 per cent and more, the monthly payments become exorbitant.

Even if loans are granted to individuals in order that they may meet the 25 per cent of income requirement, the over-all debt is still incurred. The proposal simply delays the repayment period and in no way guarantees that after five years the repayment will not cause an equal burden on the consumer. In short, this proposal could be making availability of credit too easy, and as such could lull the home owner into a sense of false security whereby he feels he can afford a home when he really cannot. Third, by directing AHOP and high ratio financing exclusively to new homes, the government is implicitly assuming that housing is simply an economic regulator, thereby neglecting the social component of housing policies.

Encouragement of entry into the multiple-dwelling market will have three consequences. First, the commitment to single-family home ownership is being thwarted by legislation rather than choice. The result is that Canada will be going in the direction of a nation of row houses. Second, the filtering down process which has been so integral to price stability and social mobility is being broken down. Traditionally, as houses grew older and their value diminished, they filtered down to families of progressively meagre means. Since the government is placing no legislative premium on occupancy of existing homes, low income earners will be forced into multiple dwellings, risking the possibility of being locked in to an apartment through to the future because of the repayment clauses of AHOP.

Third, emphasis on new home ownership at the expense of existing housing fails totally to take into account that prices on the existing home market set the foundation for prices in the new home market. Because the government is doing nothing to control the prices of existing homes, this program will have little effect on curbing upward price trends in the new home ownership market.

Maximum income restrictions and family size have been removed from the eligibility criteria for AHOP. People with children who are unable to keep their monthly payments under 25 per cent of their income will be eligible for a maximum interest reducing grant of $750. For others, interest-free loans sufficient to cover the difference between market interest rates and interest at 8 per cent will be made to subsidize monthly payments for a five-year period. These subsidies will be recoverable after this period at interest rates parallel to the homeowner's mortgage interest rates.

Furthermore, during this five-year period the subsidies will be reduced each year by one-fifth, or $20 per month—whichever is less—while at the same time ensuring that the borrower never pays more than 25 per cent of his income in PIT payments. These loans will only be made by CMHC when conventional loans are not available. This part of the program has obvious and glaring shortcomings and inequities. First, by floating eligibility irrespective of income or family size, the government is making no allowance for differences in equality of opportunity. In turn, the program does nothing to redress these imbalances. A large family obviously needs a large home, which invariably is more expensive and requires more extensive funding. Under this program, a large family with a fixed income will be treated in exactly the same way as a small family with the same income.

Second, once the five-year interest-free period has expired, families with children will be required to pay back this loan up to a point where their regular PIT payments plus loan payments do not exceed 25 per cet of their income. This means that a family of marginal means who became eligible for home ownership under AHOP will continue to pay 25 per cent of its income for housing even if the income is increasing. This undoubtedly will erode savings and the potential for bettering one's financial position.

For the family without children, the situation is even worse. Each year subsidies will be reduced by up to 20 per cent. If the borrower cannot repay this loan by the end of the five-year period, he is saddled with a totally non-subsidized PIT plus a high-interest debt. Because this measure simply eases credit, it therefore also facilitates debt and causes the erosion of future savings. In short, after five years borrowers may be faced with payments that are totally unreasonable, given their means. Third, private AHOP thus far has not been successful. Only $66 million in mortgage loans has been advanced this year under the program, yet what the government is saying is that it will substitute this failure for public AHOP and use this latter, marginally successful program, only as a last recourse. Fourth, this loan-oriented AHOP will not help those who at present are experiencing the brunt of the government's ineptitude in handling the housing crisis. Current home owners who are faced with an excessive interest rate and mortgage principal will not benefit at all from this program.

Now we come to the subject of interest-reducing loans. Interest-reducing loans under the rental assistance program will be increased from $900 to $1,200 per unit per year. These grants will be recoverable when either the property is sold or refinanced or at the end of the amortization period of the first mortgage. This step could very well increase apartment construction, while a special provision to extend tax exemptions on capital cost allowances could increase the supply of mortgage funds. However, because of the repayment stipulation certain side-effects will undoubtedly occur.

Repayment of loans upon resale or refinancing will undoubtedly keep rents down, in that it will discourage the practice of refinancing a mortgage on the basis of equity in an existing structure. This practice, in turn, has been used to justify rent increases. However, because builders will be reluctant to refinance, the availability of new funds for new structures will likewise be curbed. This will undoubtedly result in decreased construction and vacancy rates, which in themselves will increase rents.

Because the subsidies are repayable upon the termination of the amortization period of the first mortgage, builders will be faced with a massive debt at the end of that period. For example, a builder who owns a 100-unit structure and qualifies for a maximum subsidy will owe $3 million at the end of a 25-year period. Considering the fact that a builder has to keep rental rates very low in order to qualify, thereby minimizing his profits, it is very unlikely that he will be encouraged to build once he finds that in the future he will be faced with a debt that in some instances will be greater than his original mortgage loan. Therefore, while this program may appear to stimulate demand, after investigation it may prove to be very counterproductive and as such inhibit rental construction.

Next we come to the matter of the establishment of the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation on an operational basis by the spring of 1976. The enabling legislation for this corporation has been in existence for over three years. The Progressive Conservative party has pressed for this organization to be made operational for almost that long. Its purpose will be to buy and sell mortgages, thereby enabling the smaller investor to enter the mortgage market. This corporation could do much to increase the liquidity of the second mortgage as an investment vehicle, but its credibility at this point is somewhat lacking. The corporation's operation has been promised for three years. What guarantee is there that this is not another empty promise? The minister responsible has stated that this organization will have an operational budget of $75 million. This is both ironic and petty, when one considers that its budget was cut, when it was not even operative, by more than this sum. That was in the June 23 budget.

I should like to speak, now, on the provision of the $1,000 per unit grant to municipalities which approve minimum-density AHOP and rental assistance price limits, and the inclusion of loans for water facilities and mains under the federal land assembly program. There is no doubt that one of the main factors contributing to the housing crisis is the prohibitive cost and the unavailability of serviced land. The Progressive Conservative party has advocated the injection of $500 million to meet the crisis. Considering the fact that it costs approximately $30,000 to $35,000 to service an acre of land which would accommodate, on average, five single-family dwellings or eight multiple dwellings, it is quite apparent that the government's $1,000 per unit grant will not even come close to solving the problem of opening up serviced land properly. The problem of serviced land also rests on jurisdictional considerations. Municipalities are reluctant to zone property for low-cost housing because they will lose property tax dollars through the diminished property value.

As can be seen, the problem is very complex. The government's program, however, has done nothing to overcome these complexities by recommending consultation or co-operation with the municipalities and provinces. If anything, there is mounting evidence that municipalities are viewing the government's restrictions and stipulations as federal coercion. The result of this could be that little co-operation will be forthcoming from the municipalities on this aspect of the problem.

In introducing this discussion, it was stated that the basic thrust of the housing policy was relatively sound in so far as it attempts to stimulate supply. The encouragement of additional mortgage funding, while basically without clout, is nonetheless a worthy pursuit. The Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation is a much needed organization that is long overdue. At the same time, it is imperative that more serviced land be made available in order that over-all construction costs can be kept down. The problem is that in this package the government has also inflated demand relative to supply.

In summary, many points in the program are counterproductive, cancelling each other out. Similarly, other programs are simply "more of the same". The government has assumed they can solve the housing problem through quantitative means, that is merely by extending or broadening existing programs, rather than looking for qualitative changes which can be exclusively aimed at real problems with long-term goals in mind.

On the subject of construction costs, at the present time, based on experience during the preceding year, construction costs are shown to increase at 2 per cent per month. The upper limit for AHOP assistance in Winnipeg is presently $33,000. The builder accepting an order today at that upper limit, and starting construction immediately, would find himself six months' hence with a completed house that, ready for occupancy, costs $36,960. In other words, he would have lost $3,960 on the sale.

Under the new federal housing program, rental subsidies under ARP are increased to $1,200 per rental unit per year. It is my understanding that such subsidies are interest-free for the period during which they are received. It is my further understanding that these subsidies become repayable to the federal government at such time as the rental building is refinanced at an interest rate and repayment periods still to be determined by the federal government. Receipt of these subsidies enables the owner to ease the financial burden of rent for occupants, charging rents lower than those normally required to maintain the economic viability of the project. By the end of five years, the difference between economic and market rents is estimated to be more than 20 per cent.

By the end of the same five-year period, the mortgage loan on rental projects must be refinanced because of five-year terms on such mortgages. Based on past experience, it would seem inevitable that such refinancing would have to be at considerably increased rates of interest, and this means an immediate increase in debt service costs. Therefore, the owner, at the end of five years, has a higher mortgage debt service cost, a loan of $6,000 per unit—$1,200 per year for five years—that he must repay to the federal government, and a rent structure that, with this added debt load, could be as much as 30 per cent below the economic rent.

These are some other fears expressed by builders in the Winnipeg area. They point out that there is no incentive for private members to co-operate in helping to ease the housing bottleneck. In fact, the government is very punitive in its implied course of action should the private lending institutions not follow the government's dictum. They say there is too much red tape in approving housing construction, and that this causes delays.

This is a point that I have raised numerous times in the House. A couple of years ago some of the developers in the Toronto area pointed out that the cost of housing could be cut in half if all the red tape were removed from the three levels of government. They pointed out that single-family housing could be provided in and around metropolitan Toronto at half the present cost of $40,000 plus, which is the average price, if only developers received co-operation from the government instead of restrictions and outright hostility. I have pointed this out to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) on a number of occasions, but I do not know whether it has been discussed at the trilevel government meetings.

Developers in the Toronto-Montreal area made three main points. They recommended, first, provincial government financing of water and sewer services for privately-held land ready for development, aimed at flooding the market with serviced land so as to drive down the price of a serviced lot, now at a record high of $22,000 on average. Second, relaxation, at least in specified areas, of a long list of restrictions on new subdivisions, such as minimum lot sizes, the requirement of elaborate local servicing, and stipulations as to the type of building materials used. Third, elimination of federal and provincial sales taxes on building materials, some of which have been partially removed.

That is quite a statement for developers to make, that if red tape is removed they will be able to build houses at half the present cost. The largest stock of available housing, reasonably priced, is the older home; but the increase in interest rates pushes them further beyond the means of potential buyers. In Winnipeg it takes up to six weeks to process a loan. By the time it is approved, the interest rate has increased from 10¾ per cent to 11¾ per cent. This adds to the already high cost of shelter.

Builders in the Winnipeg area also pointed out that the government has ignored the urban core erosion problem which exists in all cities. Previous experience has proven, and pilot projects have demonstrated, that a workable and economical solution can be found for these problems. The federal program is committed exclusively to medium-density housing, which means town houses and condominiums. This is the only type of home that has enjoyed marginal acceptance on the prairies.

The program also fails to deal with the necessity for continuity in the housing policy, and instead emphasis has been placed on unilateral housing programs by the federal government. Thus, I can say that there is nothing original about these measures. We have had stepped-up programs, expanded programs and resurrected programs, but no recognition by the government that adequate shelter is a basic right of all Canadians.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-77 is unimpressive and fails to meet the housing needs of Canadians. It fails to meet the serious housing needs in four main areas: first, it fails to increase the supply of homes, more especially with regard to low and moderate income groups; second, it fails to solve the problem of the high cost of land; third, it fails to deal with the high cost of mortgages; and fourth, it does not reduce the high cost of homes.

I believe the minister is merely shadow-boxing with these four main problems facing Canadians today. I feel that the main thrust of the minister's legislation as expressed by the parliamentary secretary this afternoon is that the payment of subsidies to people under AHOP, the interest-free loans to developers for a period of time, and the capital cost allowances to rental entrepreneurs who are not developers, will not solve the housing problems of today. In fact, subsidies have proven to increase the cost of housing: they do not increase the supply and they certainly do not bring down the cost of housing.

In fact, I would say that the legislation as presented by the parliamentary secretary this afternoon is nothing but a sweetheart agreement between the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson), the financial institutions, the developers and the rental entrepreneurs who are not developers, to persuade them to build more houses. The minister hopes that by adjusting the cash flow problems of purchasers, somehow these people will have the money with which to buy homes at very low cost and that will solve the shortage of housing today.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

I said that the minister is really shadow-boxing with the main problems, and in boxing parlance I am sure the financial institutions and the developers could say that he did not lay a glove on them, because he did nothing to direct the financial institutions to allocate a percentage of their investment portfolios. He has done nothing to control interest rates and he has done very little to increase the supply of housing. In fact, if the Minister of State for Urban Affairs were properly called the minister of housing, I would call him the minister of hoaxing and coaxing, because that is all he is doing with regard to the serious problems we face today.

We in the New Democratic Party, people in the Conservative party and those in the Liberal party—I think the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) will agree with me on this—feel that there is a serious housing problem across the country. The minister is excellent at defining the problem of the serious housing crisis, he is overflowing with sympathy, but he is wrong in his solutions with regard to this problem.

It is rather ironic that the parliamentary secretary should lead off the debate today, because on Saturday of last week he made a speech in Montreal before l'association Provinciale des constructeurs d'habitation du Québec, and he agreed with all of us in the House that there is a serious housing problem. I shall read excerpts from his speech just to prove this point. He said that there are serious housing problems among the elderly, the poor, the native people, the sick, and others, and these people must receive priority attention from the federal government. I could not agree more. None of us could agree more with regard to this problem. He also said:

> Another situation that would not have seemed possible even a few years ago is that many people who are reasonably affluent can no longer afford to buy their own homes. I am talking about the middle-income group, people whose incomes today range from about $12,000 to $18,000 annually, and who used to represent perhaps the most active segment of the home-buying public. Up until a few years ago, these middle-income families—whose income then, in non-inflated terms, is about the same as it is today—could usually afford to buy a house. The price of moderate housing was about twice their annual salary, interest rates were much lower, and the monthly pay-out was not excessive in terms of income.

Today it is. How true that is. The speech continued:

> In most urban centres, the inflated cost of housing has far outpaced the concurrent rise in incomes. Families in the middle-income range find it difficult and often impossible to buy a house that costs as much as three times their annual salary and carries a mortgage at a much higher rate than ever before.

This is the parliamentary secretary setting forth the problem. What did he say about people who rent? He said the following:

> Rental accommodation, for example, is all but non-existent in some Canadian cities, and the already serious problem is steadily deteriorating. This situation demands attention.

The parliamentary secretary knows that the vacancy rate, according to CMHC figures published for the month of November, is 1.2. Is it any wonder the parliamentary secretary and all of us are concerned about the serious housing problem? The disappointing feature is the solution which has been set forth by this government. Let me give some figures. These figures were quoted by the parliamentary secretary in his famous speech of Saturday last. They had been earlier quoted by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on, I think, November 12 before the Property Forum in Toronto. I happen to read the speeches of these people, and the more I read them the more I think they realize there are serious problems. But I also realize they cannot solve the problems by the methods they are using. Quoting figures with regard to the supply problem which we have, the parliamentary secretary said:

> It is true that most Canadians have good or at least adequate housing, but recent statistics show beyond doubt that far too many Canadians have serious housing problems. For example, almost 825,000 Canadian families pay more than 25 per cent of their income for housing. In fact, more than 280,000 pay over half their income for housing.

That is over 50 per cent, Mr. Speaker:

> It is hard to believe, yet it is true that in this civilized country some 460,000 households have no sanitary facilities or, if they have, are required to share them with neighbours. Additionally, about 445,000 households are overcrowded even by minimum standards.
> And finally, it is a shocking fact that 120,000 households in this country are both overcrowded and lacking in their own sanitary facilities.

This is the problem we face in Canada today. The problem was ably set out by the parliamentary secretary this afternoon and persuasively set out by the minister before the Property Forum in Toronto on November 12. We have set forth the problem of supply, and it is a serious problem. The problem lies in the supply, in the cost of land, in the high cost of mortgages and in the high cost of houses. With regard to the cost of land, we have a serious shortage of serviced land and the days of the small builder are numbered. Land is controlled by developers and they release it at their own convenience. Their convenience is determined by the profits they can make. They release it when they can obtain the highest possible price. This is not only our finding but it is also the finding, through CMHC, of Peter Spurr who reported in the Globe and Mail a short while ago that the minimum profit developers make from one acre of land is $89,000.

● (1710)

Is it any wonder the developers control the land and release it when it is to their best advantage? Mr. Peter Spurr also pointed out in his report to CMHC that in the Toronto area 40,000 acres of land are controlled by 12 developers. I am sure that is shocking news to the hon. member for Spadina, because I know he is concerned about the high cost of housing. Land in the major cities is controlled by developers across the country—Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Edmonton, Vancouver—

Mr. Hogan: Is Cape Breton in there?

Mr. Gilbert: —and Cape Breton. The developers control it and release it when it is to their best advantage. That is the problem with respect to the cost of land. The parliamentary secretary had no answer today on the high cost of land. He did not say that the federal government would infuse large sums of money into the housing program in order to buy land, so they would have control of it and release it for building purposes, more especially to low and moderate income people. There is no mention of any help to control the high cost of land.

My third point is the high cost of mortgages. In committee a few days ago, I asked Mr. Teron, president of CMHC, what the prevailing interest rate would be in the next six months, and he said 11¾ per cent to 12 per cent. He gave no assurance of a significant downturn in the next few years, and he is probably right. The Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada—HUDAC—stated on November 14, in an article in the Globe and Mail, that the interest rate would probably be 12¾ per cent for the next 18 months. They said:

> This is largely due to the fact that continuing inflation will induce lenders to include this factor in establishing their rates.

Madam Speaker, the president of CMHC agrees with HUDAC that we will have a minimum interest rate of 12 per cent. This is certainly not a very happy situation for most people who buy homes. I get a gut-twitching feeling, Madam Speaker, about this. Surely some of these financial institutions and private lenders must feel they are not bordering on usury but practising usury. The problem of high mortgage rates was set forth in an article in the Toronto Star within the last month. It was stated that in Toronto the average cost of a home was $57,500, and if a person had $17,500 for a down payment—which is most unusual—it would leave a $40,000 mortgage at 12 per cent interest. They would pay $413 a month principal and interest for 25 years, making a total of $141,150—$83,650 of it in interest charges. Can you imagine that, Madam Speaker: a person buys a home for $57,500 and at the end of 25 years he will have paid $141,150, of which $83,650 will be interest? The article says that to carry that mortgage, the family income, by the accepted rule of thumb, should be $19,804. The average family income in Toronto is only $15,742.

The same article set forth solutions to control interest rates. I would underline, again, that the legislation has nothing in it about controlling interest rates, and in fact the Anti-Inflation Board is doing nothing about it. That is one of the reasons so many of us oppose Bill C-73. The writer said we should take a leaf from New Zealand's book, where interest rates are 5.5 per cent on a 30-year term. There is not a country in western Europe with the high interest rates that we have here in Canada, yet the government does little or nothing about it.

I said a moment ago that the cost of a home in Toronto was $57,500 in the month of October; in November it went up to $59,325, and the cost of a condominium town house in Toronto is now $48,609. The parliamentary secretary and his officials in the gallery should note that fact. The hon. member for Spadina realizes that under the AHOP program the regional limit for Toronto is $43,000, and he and other Liberal members must pressure CMHC and the minister to increase regional limits across the country. In Ottawa the limit is $35,000. That is not sufficient to meet the cost of housing today. The spokesman for the Conservative party pointed to the same problem in Winnipeg.

What is this government doing? We have a CMHC capital budget, and in the past few years the government has said, "We are going to attempt to get into social housing fields, and we are going to make sure that people in low and middle income brackets are taken care of." May I point out that in 1970, 24.3 per cent of the CMHC budget was for public housing; in 1972 there was a tremendous thrust and it went up to 37.3 per cent. Then we got the AHOP program in 1973, and public housing in 1974 dropped from 37.3 per cent to 19.2 per cent. That indicates to me that the AHOP program is not helping people on low incomes who should be sheltered by public housing. It is giving subsidies to people on moderate and high incomes, many of whom are not entitled to it. The priority should be given to low income people.

There should be a tremendous thrust in public housing. But what do we find? We find the minister hoaxing and coaxing, trying to persuade the builders by adjusting the AHOP subsidies and making interest-free mortgages on rental housing available to them, and by trying to give rental entrepreneurs tax advantages. In a speech on November 3, the minister, in his eloquence, was persuasive and sympathetic. He said the government would see that the banks and private institutions are required to direct their mortgage financing to new and moderately-priced housing and would require an extra $750 million from them.

● (1720)

We thought he used the word "require" because he wanted to bring in legislation directing the financial institutions to apply part of their investment portfolios to housing. We asked the minister questions about this and he said, "No, we will attempt to persuade them." This afternoon the parliamentary secretary said that the government will set up a review committee to monitor the flow of these moneys. I was happy to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) say, "This very suggestion was in the Hellyer task force report in 1969."

An hon. Member: And many other good recommendations.

Mr. Gilbert: The government wants to persuade financial institutions to apply moneys to housing. I remind you, Madam Speaker, that earlier in 1975 the minister said he would persuade financial institutions to apply an extra $1 billion to housing. How much money was made available? He received an extra $300 million, less than one-third of the amount he hoped to get from our financial institutions. Then he came to this House and said, "I will require them to do this." When it came down to it, he said, "No, I will persuade them and set up a monitoring committee." Even at that, the $750 million extra will provide no more than 20,000 homes. How will that meet the housing crisis? Will that amount overcome the shortage of supply? Not for a minute, Madam Speaker.

Look at the profits the banks have recorded for 1975. They make me sick to the stomach. They have earned many millions of dollars, but the minister has not the drive, enthusiasm or gumption to make financial institutions toe the line. Is it any wonder some say he has entered into a sweetheart agreement with them concerning their financial commitments?

The government says that it will require lenders to restrict the most favourable credit terms, that is, high ratio, low down payment mortgages, to moderately-priced housing within local NHA loan limits. I suggest that subsidies have not increased supply, but merely price. According to our best evidence, regional limits now imposed on the AHOP program will need to be increased substantially, if the program is to work at all. I am sure that only a minuscule amount of help will be forthcoming.

The minister persuaded provincial governments to initiate residential rent controls in line with the federal government's anti-inflation program. The parliamentary secretary told us this afternoon that all provinces have agreed to some form of rent control. If the minister was concerned about residential housing, he should have persuaded the provinces to put restrictions on commercial construction as well. I say this for a good reason. If I know developers, once the provinces impose rent controls on residential construction, they will build commercial buildings as there are far greater profits to be made in that area. We shall see more shopping centres, more commercial construction and developers making high profits. If the minister seriously wanted to tackle this problem he should have persuaded provincial governments to control residential rents and commercial construction. But he did not do so and that is unfortunate.

The talk you hear of the target of one million homes in four years is nothing but a Liberal gimmick. Last time the minister was speaking of one million homes in five years; now we are to see one million homes in four years. How is this target to be met? The government has made some great suggestions concerning mortgages. Apparently the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation is to be in place by April 1, 1976. I remind hon. members that the former minister of national revenue, now the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), piloted this bill through the House in 1973. My party voted against it, thank goodness. Our studies of the program and conversations with the former president and officials of CMHC confirm one thing: it will not bring down interest rates or increase supply. The corporation will help to package CMHC mortages in order to permit their more effective distribution to financial institutions; that is all the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation will do.

The other half of the bill had to do with setting up a mortgage insurance company. I recall it very well. I do not know if many mortgage investment corporations have been established, but I do know that according to a Globe and Mail report the Bank of Nova Scotia lost a great deal of money in the United States. The minister, who then was minister of national revenue, ought to know that the Bank of Nova Scotia lost at least $150 million in the United States under REIT—Real Estate Investment Trust. As I say, the Bank of Nova Scotia lost $150 million. Imagine that. The Bank of Nova Scotia showed no social responsibility. It sent its money to the United States and lost $150 million on REIT because there was a drop in interest rates south of the border. On the other hand, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs says, "Please, fellows, put a certain amount of money into Canadian housing."

An hon. Member: "If you don't, we will force you."

Mr. Gilbert: What a performance! Let me now deal with the legislation which the parliamentary secretary brought forward today. He said that we are to make great changes in the AHOP program. In the past, in order to qualify a couple needed to have at least one child. This will no longer be the case. The government will see to it that the 12 per cent mortgage rate will be lowered to 8 per cent for those who qualify so that they may have a fair chance to buy a house. Further, in the case of a family with two or more children which cannot meet the 25 per cent ratio governing payments, the government will increase its allowance from $600 to $750. This will really be of great help. To those who do not qualify within these limits, the government will say, "We will give you an interest-free loan for five years, after which you will begin repayment at the prevailing rate of interest." The government hopes that this will help the AHOP program to succeed.

What is our position, Madam Speaker? We say that subsidies in themselves will not solve the housing problem as they are given to the purchaser and passed on to the financial institutions. Really, that is all that happens. The government is saying, "We will make sure that your effective interest rate is 8 per cent. We will give you a subsidy of 4 per cent which you will pass on to the financial institutions." Would it not have been far better if the minister had said to this country's financial institutions, "Interest rates shall be 8 per cent"? That is all the minister had to say. I suppose our institutions would have said, "But we cannot lend money at 8 per cent interest." Madam Speaker, is it not Canadian money? Surely, financial institutions are under the social obligation of providing Canadians with mortgages at decent interest rates. Considering their high earnings, such mortgages would make only a slight dent in their profits.

Again, Madam Speaker, the AHOP program, with the subsidies entrenched in it, helps people with moderate and high incomes. To qualify for a mortgage in Toronto under AHOP you have to earn at least $19,000. I am sure there are many in the riding of the hon. member for Spadina who do not earn that amount. A higher income will be necessary if the price increases above $43,000. I have heard it will be at least $48,000 in Toronto. This legislation will not do a great deal with regard to increasing supply and it will not help people with low incomes.

We need public housing. In this respect we had a substantial drop to 19.2 per cent in the 1974 budget. I think the government reached the height of this inadequate program when they suggested special capital cost allowances to persons who are not developers but who invest in rental projects, permitting them to charge investment losses against their incomes and thereby reduce taxes. I am sure the hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Stollery) want to hear just what this capital cost allowance is all about. I did a little work on it. Here is an article which indicates the gouging that goes on. It says Winnipeg-based Richardson Securities of Canada sold an issue in September for private investment in a low-income, multiple-unit housing development. For an investment of 15,000, in the first year someone in the 60 per cent tax bracket could get a reduction in income tax of $15,000 because of the shelter. This is the capital cost allowance provision. If you are in the 60 per cent bracket and you invest in this and get a capital cost allowance, you have a saving of $15,000 on an investment of $15,000. If that is not a rip-off in favour of the rich, I don't know what it is.

What is this going to cost the Canadian people? An official of CMHC says the program will ultimately cost between $50 million and $60 million a year. I do not have the figures—we will get them in committee—but I would wager that $50 million or $60 million far exceeds any of the subsidies under the AHOP program. The minister threw a few tidbits to the municipalities. He said, "We will give a $1,000 grant to municipalities which approve medium-density housing within the reach of AHOP, and assisted rental price limits." This will be of little or no help to the big cities, though it may be of some assistance to the small cities.

This idea was presented before the provincial representatives on housing and they showed little or no enthusiasm for it. We were told, "We are going to give loans and grants to municipalities for water treatment facilities and to municipalities where they are needed to open up land for housing." So what does the parliamentary secretary to the minister do? This could help the development of raw land. He said, "We are going to put a limitation on it to April 30, 1980." Why the limitation? I hoped the parliamentary secretary would have told us how much money they were going to give to it. There was no mention of the amount of money which was to be put into this program. But they put the limitation on.

Hon. members have a right and a duty to ask what we in the New Democratic Party would do. The first thing we would do would be to strike at the fundamental causes of the high cost of housing. We would strike at high interest rates. We would strike at land costs and we would make sure we had an adequate supply of housing, especially public housing, co-operative housing and non-profit housing. We would see to it that the financial institutions were legislated into applying a percentage of their investment portfolios to housing on the simple reasoning that they have a social responsibility to all Canadians to see they are decently housed at reasonable cost.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Gilbert: We would do it not only to the financial institutions but to the pension funds. I have always noticed that the minister has talked about pension funds. The pension funds have money, and if that money can be applied to housing, they should not come under the umbrella. With regard to land costs, we are in the grip of the developers. I have pointed out how necessary it is for the government to get right into the land development business and acquire those lands, control them and release them when they are needed. This would bring down the high cost of land. Then again, we in the New Democratic Party would set up a building corporation. At the moment, we are still at the mercy of the builders. A building corporation could see to it that the main needs of people in the low income group were taken care of.

I heard the minister say he had visited Europe, and so forth, and that we in Canada are very fortunate to be so well housed. Madam Speaker, I have been in England, I have been in France, Germany and Sweden. The main thrust in housing in those countries has been in the direction of public housing. In London, the county councils build public housing for people, at reasonable rates. You get it in France, Germany and Sweden. What do we do here? We give a low priority to public housing and we try to sugarcoat the people who are buying AHOP properties by offering them subsidies. All they are doing is passing on subsidies to financial institutions. We do nothing with regard to controlling interest rates. Really, it makes me sick that we have to debate legislation like this bill presented by the government.

The parliamentary secretary wound up by saying that housing is a social commodity. We could not agree more. So are schools, so are hospitals, and so, probably, are churches. If it is a social commodity, housing at reasonable cost should be a basic right of all Canadians. Yet there is nothing in this legislation which would see to it that housing is a social commodity and a basic right at a reasonable cost for all Canadians. I do not like to vote against things, but this is certainly one piece of legislation I shall vote against.

An hon. Member: Surprise, surprise.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, the government has finally let us look at what it apparently feels is the answer to the long-standing problem of exorbitant housing costs, astronomical rents and the serious lack of housing starts. I have been waiting patiently for a chance to give my enthusiastic support to the government's housing bill, but now that I have seen it I can only say that my long wait was in vain. This is a motherhood bill, pure and simple. In politics, just about everyone hastens to support motherhood issues, with the possible exception of those who beat the drum for abortion on demand. Believe me, this bill is motherhood in capital letters. The large print in this measure says to us, "Pass this bill and everybody will have a beautiful home, complete with picture-window, and a big, fat mortgage at 13 per cent interest." Instant housing, Madam Speaker!

● (1740)

But when we get to the small print we find that this legislation is chock full of pitfalls, angles and ambiguities. It is a cop-out. It is just another example of what this government has proven it does so well. Give this government a problem to solve, and just as in the case of the anti-inflation boondoggle, they appoint a few Liberal faithful to some high-paying jobs with impressive titles, and turn them loose. Among the first things they do then is to try to dazzle us with outrageous budgets of hundreds of millions of dollars, and try to convince us that they will spend us out of the problem if we will just give them enough time and enough money.

Under this bill the government is going to get private lending institutions to divert $750 million into the housing market, specifically into lower and moderately-priced homes. Just how do they propose to do this, Madam Speaker? Well, so far they have not told us how they propose to get financial institutions to alter their operations plans, or how they propose to get these institutions to invest in low-yield ventures. We are just told that this is what the government plans to do and it is left at that.

Does the government think that we are so unsophisticated that we will accept this idle statement as government policy? Does the government think that this country's lending institutions are so vulnerable to this type of veiled threat that they are going to rush headlong into the low and moderately-priced housing market? Of course not, Madam Speaker. To begin with, this is a free enterprise society, or at least it still bears some resemblance to free enterprise. People in our society invest in ventures that are reasonably secure and provide the highest possible yield. There is nothing wrong with that. After all, this is not government money we are talking about, it is private money and it would be a serious mistake for the government to impose restrictions on where this money can be invested.

We are all familiar with the investment pattern of Canadians in the past. In their search for secure investment opportunities, Canadians have invested heavily in ventures and properties in the United States. At the present time some $25 billion has been invested in the United States by Canadian investors, some of it not too wisely as the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) said. What is the government going to do if private lending institutions will not divert large blocks of capital to the low-cost housing market, Madam Speaker? Are we going to have legislation spelling out what these institutions can invest in, under pain of having their funds confiscated?

Madam Speaker, what is $750 million, anyway? As a famous Liberal cabinet minister said a while ago, "What's a million?"—and that was at a time when a million was a hell of a lot more money than it is today. That is about enough to build 20,000 homes, hardly a figure for the government to be shooting at as far as housing starts are concerned. We need hundreds of thousands of starts, not a paltry 20,000. Perhaps the government should have said that private lenders would be asked to divert $7 billion or $8 billion into housing funds. Then the genius at the head of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation could just lean back in his chair and let the housing problem solve itself.

This bill ignores the underlying causes of inflation in housing costs by not attempting to deal with the question of serviced land. It has been known for many years that certain builders across the country, especially in urban centres, have gained control of all of the available serviced land, and if another smaller builder wants to build houses he has to buy land from the developer, or small groups of builders, who control the land. We have a classic case of that practice in the Ottawa area. A good friend of the Liberal party, Robert Campeau, is said to own 9,000 acres of land in the Ottawa-Hull region, and if any other builder wants to buy any of that land he will have to pay Mr. Campeau's price. It is also reported that Mr. Campeau will reap a whopping $14 million a year in rents from the federal government when the latest development complex in Hull is completed. Right now he collects about $9 million per year in federal government rents. It sure helps to be a friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his crowd.

On November 20, my colleague, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle), gave us an insight into the background of another good friend of the Liberal party and its power brokers, the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is the man who decides housing policy for Canada, a man who has made a career of building high-priced luxury home developments. We are now led to believe that he is terribly concerned about the plight of those who can only afford relatively inexpensive housing. This man does, in fact, dictate housing policy. I appreciate Mr. Teron knows what he is talking about and I am not downgrading his ability as a builder of many hundreds, probably thousands, of houses.

Mr. Campeau is quite an operator. His vice-president in charge of residential housing was until recently mayor of Ottawa. Another former mayor of Ottawa was made a director of this corporation, and now he is back on the Ottawa city council. Of course, Campeau has been a major contributor to Liberal party election war chests, and it is not just a coincidence that he is able to borrow from the government to build high-rise office buildings on some of which he draws rent from the government even before the buildings are ready for occupancy. We certainly cannot overlook the close ties that once existed between companies owned by the president of CMHC and Campeau. We are told that the president's companies are now in a blind trust, and so we are expected to have blind trust in his objectivity as Canada's housing czar.

I cannot help wondering how many centres across the country are blessed with having their own Campeaus doling out serviced land to the builders, setting prices that have to be reflected in higher housing costs. I also wonder what part this kind of monopoly ownership has played in the past few years in escalating the cost of housing to the point where a large percentage of wage earners in Canada have been priced out of the housing market.

While the government passed over the big builders and those who hold the bulk of the serviced land, they did tell us who the real culprits are, and it is a typical Liberal ploy. The white paper on housing that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) released on November 3 tells us that it is the people who bought homes several years ago and who now want to move up into something bigger and better who are driving up housing costs. We are told that these people have profited by inflation and that they drive housing prices out of the reach of their less fortunate fellow Canadians, those who are in real need.

It might be true that some people have profited by inflation in housing costs, but it is also true that these home owners did not create inflation in the first place. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs is not doing anyone a service by passing the inflationary buck to a small group of people who discovered that housing costs had become inflated and that they could realize a handsome profit in the sale of their homes.

The plain fact is that the lots on which these homes were built had become inflated in price, and consequently the combined home and lot had increased in value far in excess of the true value of the home. We have seen the cost of serviced building lots increase in the past few years from about $1,500 in some areas to $20,000, and in some cases to $30,000 and more. I am sure my hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) will bear out the fact that good building lots, when available in the city of Toronto today, are in the $35,000 bracket. Just a few years ago this represented the total cost of a pretty nice home, situated on a nice lot. When we consider the ceiling on homes that qualify for AHOP loans as an example, we find that this ceiling represents the cost of only the lot that a prospective home owner proposes to build on. The only way that AHOP can be effective in getting families into low and moderately-priced homes is for the program to be flexible enough to allow the regional bureaucrats to judge each AHOP application on its own merits.

With the variations in both availability and price of homes from one part of the country to another, and with the almost day to day changes in the cost of houses and lots, there is no way that a fixed set of rules can be applied to a program designed to help people break the logjam of inflation and get into decent homes.

As long as Campeau and others in his category are in the driver's seat of the housing market, and as long as they are able to affect housing policy by controlling the market, all the housing policies we approve in this House and all the millions we pour into housing programs will serve only those people who already are being served. We will be serving those who can afford the going price for homes and the interest rates presently being charged on mortgage balances. An example of this was earlier given by the hon. member for Broadview who cited the fact of a $57,000 home, with a $40,000 mortgage for a term of some 30 years, costing $140,000.

It has already been shown that the only low and medium-priced homes available in any quantity today are condominium apartments, and we know by experience that when condominiums become the rage, the price will skyrocket. I believe this was also referred to with respect to the situation in the Toronto area where the price is already in the range of $46,000. This is a vicious cycle and unless we find a way to break that cycle the government's latest dream of one million housing starts in the next four years will be just that—a dream.

Some of us had the privilege of talking with and questioning the minister when his estimates were before the miscellaneous estimates committee. That was on November 27, at which time I had the opportunity of posing a few questions. I will concede that the minister did have a temporary program providing $500 housing grants as a carrot to get the people to buy homes at these high prices. These grants were limited to new homes and the expiry date was November 1, I believe. The minister did extend that program, because of certain circumstances, to the end of this year. As a loss leader possibly this has been successful.

I asked the minister about the possibility of extending this program as it did not create a tremendous burden on government revenues and the government was certainly getting more than its investment back. However, the minister decided against that. The minister is to be commended for the $1,000 grant program per housing unit in high-density areas. This certainly would relate to individual homes on lots that are not too large. Certainly this part of the program will be of tremendous benefit and I give the minister full credit for it.

The program involves $1,000 for each unit in the municipality. It has been downgraded by some speakers, but I feel it is worth while and will be a tremendous shot in the arm for many municipalities which have been dragging their feet or, in plain English, have just not had sufficient funds to provide necessary services to certain lands and have had to say no to any builder or developer wanting to take part in such a construction program. It will also be a special incentive to many small builders, and I think we should assist small builders, starting out, to build one or two homes. This program will enable them to provide the housing which is so necessary in many parts of rural Canada.

The limited development housing plan which will provide grants of up to $900 per apartment or unit will again provide low-rental housing. In my riding of Parry Sound-Muskoka, builders big, medium and small are not interested in building homes for rent because they cannot get sufficient rent from them. This is just not a viable plan for those builders. The only housing of any consequence in small towns in my area is the housing provided through the Ontario government. I concede that the federal government is providing the lion's share of the money.

Great emphasis should be placed on senior citizens' apartments and low-rental housing. In my own area, the council which I had the honour to head for some 26 years was the first in the Parry Sound district to go after these grants for low-rental housing and senior citizens' units. We did make a small accomplishment just prior to my election to the House of Commons. While I was still involved with that municipal council, we obtained a further commitment from the Ontario government, and I believe there will be a senior citizens' apartment unit, with 24 apartments, opening there next month. This is a great boon to an area such as mine, my hometown of Burks Falls.

More important—and I want to point this out to the government—many of the senior citizens who are moving into these new, available units are moving from presently occupied homes which they cannot afford to maintain and heat, or even to pay the taxes on. I understand these units will become available for rent in December, so that by next spring there will be an additional number of older houses available. Of course, this is older type housing but I think this provision will certainly be worth while.

Madam Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p. m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENTS CONNECTED WITH INVESTIGATIONS INTO SKY SHOPS, MIRABEL AND OLYMPIC VILLAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

That the Solicitor General, for the benefit and information of members of parliament, table forthwith copies of all documents which are now public, including warrants obtained by the RCMP in regard to the current investigations in respect of Sky Shops, Mirabel, the Olympic Village and related matters.

Some of these documents have already been exhibited on CTV national news, and some of which are in my possession.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be put without unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OUTLINING DETAILS OF ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from information provided today that the Anti-Inflation Board plans to spend half a million dollars to launch the publication of regulations concerning the government's wage and price control program on or about December 15.

I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House instructs the Minister of Finance to make a statement in the House at the earliest possible date explaining the details as to how this one-half million dollars is to be spent including how much will be allocated to both salaries and advertising, with particular reference to the amounts going to individual advertising agencies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED STUDY OF PROBLEM OF DRINKING WATER AND REQUEST FOR REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

Since the report of the Legendre Commission, which reviewed the legal aspects of water administration in Quebec, has just sounded the alarm by demanding urgent action and by describing the pitiful management of this resource, over which pollution has taken control, since the provincial and federal legislation in this regard is confused and obsolete, since jurisdictions are not clearly defined and since the lack of sound management of clean waters could jeopardize whatever action could be taken to solve that problem, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the House immediately examine the problem of the quality and the use of water and go beyond simply remodelling water legislation, by setting up efficient protective measures, applicable regulations and a serious information campaign among the public and the industry.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

OLYMPIC GAMES

SUGGESTED CONSULTATIONS WITH MONTREAL AND QUEBEC TO SOLVE PROBLEM OF FINANCING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on an urgent and important matter.

Considering the financial difficulties the organizers of the 1976 Olympic Games have; in view of the fact that the initial estimates are largely below reality for all kinds of reasons; that alone thousands of Quebecers will have to foot the bill; finally, that the honour of Canada is at stake and that it would be unfair to leave Quebec alone to hold the bag whereas from the beginning the federal government has been supporting and favouring these games in Montreal, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert):

That the federal government take steps to organize a meeting with Montreal and Quebec officials to find a fair solution to the problem of the financing under conditions the government will find appropriate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore the motion cannot be put.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARDS FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the very serious accusations made recently against one of the world's finest democratic police forces by the Minister without Portfolio, and from the fact that the Prime Minister has not seen fit to dissociate himself from these statements about the RCMP which stand unproven, and therefore slanderous. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Hurlburt):

That the Prime Minister advise the House forthwith whether the statements concerning the RCMP made by the Minister without Portfolio represent the attitude and policy of his government, or whether government policy is more accurately represented by the rebuking words spoken in this regard by the Solicitor General, and if the latter is the case, that the Prime Minister on behalf of the government forthwith apologize publicly to the RCMP and at the same time advise the House what date is already tentatively set for the appointment of the Minister without Portfolio to the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF SALARY OF CHAIRMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a non-controversial motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the government's concern about breaking inflationary psychology in Canada and Anti-Inflation Board Chairman Jean-Luc Pepin's statement yesterday that the "board has deliberately taken a tough initial stand on wage demands" and that "everyone has a bit of suffering to do", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House instruct the Anti-Inflation Board to determine whether or not the $54,000 salary of Mr. Pepin is in line with his own statements about individual suffering and rough justice.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar.

HUMAN RIGHTS

PROPOSED CREATION OF OFFICE OF OMBUDSMAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the passing of Bill C-73, the anti-inflation bill, by the House yesterday and the anticipated royal assent thereof in the very near future, and since this legislation vests unprecedented powers in the hands of the administrator and the Anti-Inflation Board affecting the rights of the ordinary citizen of our country, and having regard to the fact that prior to the introduction of Bill C-73, the size of the government bureaucracy had already attained such dimensions as to pose substantial problems of citizen's rights under government regulations and orders, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather):

That this House, in the interests of the civil rights of citizens of our country, direct this government to immediately introduce legislation creating the office of an ombudsman.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be put without unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF POLICY STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the report this morning that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board said in Toronto that the board has deliberately taken a rough initial stand on wage matters and will later soften its approach. Will the minister explain what the chairman has in mind or is this just an indication, to borrow an eloquent phrase used by the chairman of the board, that it is simply an indication that the board is prematurely dying with its brains on.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has appointed the membership of the Anti-Inflation Board and the House has passed the legislation whereby the board will carry out its mandate. I think the board chairman and members will have to determine the role they are to carry out within the statutes and within the regulations that will be provided for them from time to time. As I said, in response to the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, it does not seem to me it would be useful for me to give interpretations from time to time of decisions or statements the board makes.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Minister of Finance whether he intends to abrogate his responsibility completely in terms of reporting to this House in respect of policies pursued by the board. My question relates not to a decision but to a question of policy. If the minister does not want to answer that question could he tell us whether the regulations to be initially issued under the bill that received third reading yesterday and now goes to the Senate are now ready. If so, why is the government not prepared to issue them in draft form, for example for the provinces to consider and for others to comment upon?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, on the question of reports, the bill provides specifically for reports to the House by the Anti-Inflation Board, and it seems to me that is a sensible course of action. The regulations are not yet complete in a number of respects and depend on the outcome of discussions occurring today with the provinces.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I simply serve notice to the minister that I am sure members of all opposition parties will expect the government, and particularly the minister who reports to the House, to respond to questions in the House with regard to policy being implemented by the Anti-Inflation Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I want to ask the minister whether he is just going round and round in circles, whether the provinces will not agree to commit themselves until they see the regulations and the government will not issue the regulations until the provinces express their views about them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With respect to the turn of phrase about going round and round in circles, if the hon. gentleman is referring to himself and his party, I agree; yes, they are.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the Minister of Finance whether we will get straight answers on whether these regulations will be issued to the public or whether they will continue to be held up on some excuse such as that they must be first presented to the provinces. Is the minister prepared to deal openly with the House and with the country?

An hon. Member: For a change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have dealt openly with the House and with the public on all aspects of the program and I will continue to do so. I would just remind the hon. gentleman, who is a lawyer, that after all we must have royal assent to the bill before the regulations can be promulgated.

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

INQUIRY WHETHER BOARD MONITORING PRICE CHANGES PRIOR TO OCTOBER 14—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday or the day before the Bank of Montreal, in its monthly review of business, suggested that part of the increase in CPI for October was due to some increases or anticipatory increases by some major businesses prior to the announcement on October 14. Can he tell us whether the Anti-Inflation Board has been monitoring these changes and is it prepared to say at an early date whether that is so?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): With regard to changes that occurred before October 14, of course there was no indication of legal control until that time. However, I have had the attention of the board drawn to the suggestion in the bank reports that changes have occurred since October 14 which might require its action.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the minister would remember that the Food Prices Review Board was monitoring a good many prices of commodities, he would have that information. Will he insist to the Anti-Inflation Board that it should be their first priority to monitor these particular prices, and, if so, would he expect to report to the House as requested by the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would remind the hon. gentleman, with regard to his reference to the Food Prices Review Board, that it imposed no legal sanction whatsoever with regard to any price increases that occurred before October 14. With regard to the priorities being exercised by the board, in response, for example, to requests from various provincial ministers, they have been directing themselves both to certain questions of compensation that are outstanding and to price problems.

INQUIRY WHETHER POLICY STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN IN LINE WITH GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance concerning government policy as it affects the Anti-Inflation Board. Since both the minister and the Prime Minister have made statements earlier concerning the early decision of the board with reference to their singling out of particular targets, is government policy in line with the statement attributed to Mr. Pepin "It's their bad luck that they were the first on the list" with reference to any early decision, for example, on the teachers settlement in Toronto? Is it the minister's view that this policy now administered by Mr. Pepin, which seems to contradict everything in the history of Canadian jurisprudence, is in fact the policy of the government?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, certain compensation discussions, for example, the Toronto teachers and the pulp workers, have been submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board at the request, in some cases, of one or both of the parties involved, and it is very appropriate that the cases submitted with a sense of urgency to the board should be decided upon by the board. In that sense, I think Mr. Pepin's comment was perfectly sound. These groups may feel that they are unfortunate in the sense that the decisions in their cases happened to come up first, but it is a fact that this has occurred, and that there has been some considerable pressure both from provincial governments and the general public that there should be an early clarification on this point.

VIEW OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE ON POLICY STATEMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Minister of Justice. Since Mr. Pepin's point was not that the board was simply reaching an early decision on a case which was presented to the board before other cases, but was reaching it in a tougher way than was going to be reached, presumably in subsequent decisions, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if it is his view that such an approach is consistent with the application of Canadian law, which historically has meant that similar situations would be dealt with in a similar way?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is in accordance with the law passed by parliament yesterday, I believe.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is not.

Mr. Baldwin: It has not been passed yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SUGGESTION BY MR. BIDDEL THAT REGULATIONS MIGHT BE CHANGED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I should like to try again with the Minister of Finance on a final supplementary. Since Mr. Jack Biddel, a member of the Anti-Inflation Board, suggested at the same meeting in Toronto yesterday that, to use his phrase, there will be drastic changes in the regulations or the law we have just passed,—this was not clear—and since he is alleged to have said there might be a provision to permit small companies to take a tougher stand with the work force, I should like to ask the minister if Mr. Biddel was reflecting government policy, and if so, when we might expect the further changes he alluded to.

Hon Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The bill is quite precise in that regard. Only under the specific circumstances referred to in the bill, namely, after reference first to the Anti-Inflation Board and then comment by the board in a report to the cabinet that there would be any additions to the list of categories of firms to which reference was made. In that sense, the suggestion that companies could voluntarily opt into the program is not covered by the statute and therefore is not government policy.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY TO ENSURE MAFIA HAS NO INFLUENCE ON JUDGES

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

As Mr. Justice Bronsard of the court of appeal decided to relieve Vic Cotroni of the obligation to appear as a witness before the CIOC, like all the other Mafiosi, thus threatening the seriousness of the work of the commission, could the minister make an in-depth inquiry into our judicial system to make sure that the Mafia has not extended its tentacles even into our courts?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there is no need to do that. The Royal Commission in Quebec is proceeding at the present time, and we are co-operating with that commission.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED LEAKS TO PRESS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the Solicitor General.

With regard to inquiries, can the minister tell the House whether he has completed his inquiry into the RCMP, which was advised ahead of time to go to the office of the Minister of State, the hon. member for Langelier? Has the minister been advised of the results of that inquiry, and does he know whether there was really a leak, attributable to either the RCMP, the press or the CBC?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are still following leads with respect to that matter.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO GUIDELINES GIVEN TO BOARD BY GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I return to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the uncertain reply of the Minister of Finance. May I ask the minister first whether any draft guidelines have been placed before Mr. Pepin and his board indicating what the government believes should in fact be the guidelines? When I have an answer to that I will have a supplementary.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the guidelines are as set out in the white paper which was made public to parliament and to the country and which the chairman has been following in the course of carrying out his mandate. The question of regulations and their content has been discussed within the government of Canada, of course. There has been consultation with regard to some of the problems that can occur with various sectors of the community which would be affected by them and we have had consultation particularly with the board that would have the responsibility of carrying them out. They have not been finalized as yet.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF POLICY STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question. Does the minister want the country to understand that the general regulations are so elastic that Hamletlike, Mr. Pepin, as reported in the press today, can say that the initial stand on wage demands will have "an element of rough justice" and that the board will later soften its approach? Is that the position the government takes? I ask the minister if it be such and if Mr. Pepin spoke for the government, then how does anyone know at any time what the regulations will be? To me, it is a most complex situation and either Mr. Pepin spoke from transcendental meditation or just plain nonsense. I ask the minister, therefore, is it not a fact that as a result of the uncertainties of this statement by Mr. Pepin there can only be confusion more confounded. Nobody will know when and if the law is in force or not. As a matter of fact, the teachers have no more idea today what the results will be. Surely, the minister can be clearer than he has been up to now, particularly in the answer given to the Leader of the Opposition which was totally unjust.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I really should not have to repeat to the right hon. member, who has been a long-standing and distinguished member of the bar, that this parliament has passed a bill which, when it receives royal assent, will become the law of the country. That bill sets out the general framework of the policy of the government with regard to the anti-inflation program. Under that bill there will be authority to make regulations which, as the hon. gentleman knows, cannot be made definitive until the bill has received royal assent. When it is assented to, then there is legal authority to make regulations. It will be under those regulations that the Anti-Inflation Board will have the responsibility of carrying out its role. I suspect that before very long we will be having complaints from the right hon. gentleman that the regulations are too detailed rather than not detailed enough!

Oral Questions

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—RELATIONSHIP TO INVESTIGATIONS OF MIRABEL AND OLYMPIC VILLAGE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Can the minister state definitely, despite any statements that have been made up to this point, whether the current investigations, not only the Sky Shops affair, but those linked as well to Mirabel, the Olympic village and others, through documents obtained in warrants of search and seizure taken from the various premises of Senator Louis Giguère, are all related?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I cannot say that publicly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hees: Out in the woodshed.

SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION—POSSIBILITY OF CHARGES BEING LAID AND TABLING OF DOCUMENTS SEIZED

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Without asking the Solicitor General to specify any individuals at this point, could he at least confirm to the House that several charges are imminent as a result of investigations in progress to this point, and if he decides not to table some of the documents I asked for, would he assist me in gaining unanimous consent of the House so I might table some of them?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the laying of charges, the hon. member should know that this is done by Crown prosecutors under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments and not by myself or by the Minister of Justice for Canada. With respect to his first question, he should also know that by asking questions about police investigations in the House of Commons he is not helping the police but those who are being investigated.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF NEED FOR ACTION IN VIEW OF SKY SHOPS INVESTIGATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister?

Mr. Trudeau: I did not hear the first one.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope he still has his sense of humour.

Mr. Trudeau: I don't know if you are as funny as your leader was.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): At any rate, I see the Prime Minister smiling.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, ignoring for the moment the question of criminal investigation and charges on the issue of public morality and conflict of interest, as laid down in the guidelines brought down from on high by the President of the Privy Council two and a half years ago dealing with members of parliament, is it the Prime Minister's view, in the light of facts disclosed and in his possession, that the time has now come for the government to take action?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about facts in my possession. I assure him I have no more facts than are printed in the newspaper, and considerably less. As to action, I am not certain what the hon. member is implying, but I assure him that as far as I am concerned, and it is the position on this side but apparently not on the other side, in this country a man is innocent until he is proved guilty.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is this, then, the position of the Prime Minister and government on the question of conflict of interest and public morality: that not until criminal charges are laid and a conviction is obtained will this government intend to take any action?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member takes the trouble to look at the guidelines, he will see how they apply to himself.

Mr. Baldwin: I have looked at them.

Mr. Trudeau: Read them. The hon. member will see the position of the government. It is not just a matter of relying on criminal charges. If he wants to make a specific allegation about any particular member of parliament, any member in this House or the other who broke the guidelines, I should like to hear him make the charge.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Where is your sense of humour?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS AND MIRABEL INVESTIGATIONS—DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF INVESTIGATIONS—INQUIRY WHETHER SEPARATE INVESTIGATIONS CONDUCTED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General which arises from the answer the minister gave on October 28, as reported on page 8609 of Hansard. On being asked by the hon. member for Joliette a question concerning an investigation into the alleged $60 million fraud at Mirabel, he answered to the effect that no investigation is going on at the present time. In the hope of clarifying the answer of October 28, I ask the Solicitor General to confirm that five days before the hon. member for Central Nova tabled his petition regarding this matter, no RCMP investigation was being conducted into the Sky Shops affair and related matters, and into the Mirabel matter as well.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there were several incidents and they should not be confused. There was an investigation into the Sky Shops affair and there were also allegations with respect to the construction at Mirabel. But there was no question about Mirabel until that allegation had been made to the RCMP. They were evaluating the allegations, to see if an investigation should proceed. With respect to construction at Mirabel, I will have to check with the RCMP again, to see if that investigation is now under way.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Solicitor General make clear if there is any relationship between the investigations concerning Sky Shops and the Mirabel projects, generally? Is the same investigation being undertaken with reference to the two projects, or interrelated projects?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to an earlier question, we do not make public the details of police investigations in the House of Commons or elsewhere.

Mr. Woolliams: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not asking for details. I merely seek clarification. The minister has already admitted that an investigation is going on. Does the investigation cover the Mirabel projects, as well as Sky Shops? Is this being done under the same investigation? I am not asking for details.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, on that point alone, I will have to check with the RCMP.

Mr. Trudeau: Don't give him the answer.

Mr. Stanfield: Covering up, eh?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REASON FOR BROADCASTING LATE NEWS FROM VANCOUVER TO NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REPETITION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Is any direct attempt being made by the federal government to destroy natural trading links between Alberta and the Northwest Territories, by forcing on the territories television from Vancouver? As well, will the people of the north be given the privilege of listening to the late night news on time, as now it is heard after midnight in the Northwest Territories.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there is no conspiracy, but I will look at the question more carefully.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How can the minister explain the rationale for duplicating in the Northwest Territories three hours of television? The three afternoon programs are shown again in the evening, much to the discontent of the people in the community.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, that particular problem is now under investigation by the CBC.

AGRICULTURE

MARKETING BOARDS—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF CONFLICTING ON APPLICATION OF ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. As the Minister of Finance, the Anti-Inflation Board and officials of the Department of Finance have already said that marketing boards for hogs, potatoes, soy beans, corn, tobacco, fruit and vegetables for processing, industrial milk, fresh fruit, fresh meat, broilers, turkeys and eggs shall be subject to the guidelines, and that costs in each case will be controlled under the cost rules pertaining to prices; and as the Minister of Agriculture said in a speech last night to the County of Holsteins Club at Lindsay, Ontario, when referring to farmers, "That's one of the reasons why the government has not moved to control the prices farmers receive for their products," was he talking through his hat, or was the Minister of Finance wrong in what he was doing?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Because, Mr. Speaker, most products which are under marketing boards are well within the guidelines which are provided for labour and other forms of commercial life in this country. Our farmers are restricted who sell their produce through price fixing boards. Other boards are not touched because they do not have any price fixing powers vested in them, so essentially they can do nothing to them anyhow.

REQUEST MINISTER INFORM ALBERTA COW-CALF OPERATORS ON STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Agriculture to review his speaking schedule, meet the National Farmers' Union in Edmonton next week and tell the Alberta cow-calf operators whether he will have a cow-calf stabilization program ready and in place in January, 1976, as he earlier intimated? What progress has he made with the provinces in this matter, and can he say if such a stabilization program will also be subject to the guidelines?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the NFU and the Unifarm people in Alberta that I will be unable to attend their convention because I have other commitments. I only received notice a couple of months ago and I make commitments nearly one year ahead of time.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INQUIRY WHETHER POLICY STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN IN LINE WITH GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the questions three front bench members asked about the statement which Mr. Pepin, chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board, made yesterday. I shall make it simple. Can the Prime Minister tell the House this afternoon whether the policy enunciated by Mr. Pepin yesterday is or is not government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what Mr. Pepin said. I do not think anybody in this House knows, apart from what has been reported in the newspapers.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What did Mr. Pepin say?

Mr. Trudeau: You don't know.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE MULTIPLEX WILL NOT BE PHASED OUT

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I gave the minister notice this morning. Will he assure members of this House interested in the welfare of New Brunswick that the joint federal-provincial industrial expediter, known as Multiplex and jointly funded by the two governments, will not be phased out for lack of federal government funding?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. When that corporation was set up by the two governments it was created on an experimental and temporary basis. The support it enjoys proves its considerable success. The two governments are now negotiating the formula they could adopt to extend its activities. But the hon. member must recognize, as all of us must, that the corporation, as set up now, is only temporary and that it cannot pursue its activities much longer, as it does at the present time. However, I repeat that the two governments want the corporation to continue its work, probably on another basis; but no decision has yet been reached by the two parties.

● (1440)

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: Will the other mechanism that the minister speaks about include federal government funding?

Mr. Lessard: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a definite answer at this point because, as I just stated, we have not reached a final conclusion in our discussions on that matter.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AS AMBASSADOR TO SCOTLAND

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could have the indulgence of the House for just a moment to point out that we have a very distinguished visitor in Your Honour's gallery in the person of Mrs. Ewing, a Scottish nationalist member of the United Kingdom parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLean: Against that background, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a rather good-natured question. In light of the apparent imminent independence of Scotland, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to appoint the Secretary of State for External Affairs as Canada's first ambassador to Scotland?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think there are many people on this side of the House who would be prepared to volunteer for such a job. We are not suggesting that is the direction events will take. If they do, we have contingency plans, including my wife who is a Scottish nationalist.

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON COMPLETION OF SALE IN VIEW OF NEGOTIATIONS FOR REPROCESSING PLANT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the strong protest made at Tuesday night's meeting of the External Affairs committee concerning the impending sale of a Canadian nuclear reactor to South Korea and precisely because South Korea has recently purchased a reprocessing plant from France which will give Korea the capacity to build a nuclear device, is the government determined to complete that sale without a further review of the wisdom of this policy, as advocated by many people in Canada, including the distinguished Canadian, General E. L. Burns?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State for External Affairs answered questions along similar lines not more than two days ago.

Mr. Roche: Precisely because the issue was raised at the External Affairs committee meeting, I will again put the question to the Prime Minister. With respect to the trustworthiness of South Korea, with whom we will be signing an agreement, has the Prime Minister examined the reports by impartial international observers such as Amnesty International, the International Commission of Jurists, the International League for the Rights of Man and the World Conference of Religion for Peace that are highly critical of the Park regime?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, these are the kinds of representations that could usefully be made when the minister is in attendance before the committee.

[Mr. Lessard.]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR FUNDS FOR FRASER VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the President of the Treasury Board. It follows on an answer given yesterday by the Minister of the Environment to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. She stated that the Fraser River flood control program has been seriously eroded by inflation. I can understand that. She further stated there is a plan to come to Treasury Board for more funds for that program. Will the minister give this high priority in view of the fact that a dyke broke yesterday in the eastern part of Surrey and the South Westminster district is facing imminent flooding? I have a supplementary question to the Minister of the Environment. Will she give this high priority when she receives the funds?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, evidently when we are dealing with emergencies like that one, we take the necessary steps if we have to pay for our share of responsibilities. As far as the total budget of this department is concerned as well as those of other departments, I hope the hon. member will inform the leader of his party that he is pressing us to spend more money.

AIRPORTS

CONCESSION LEASES—REASON FOR RENEWAL OF KEBEC RESTAURANTS' LEASE WITHOUT TENDERS BEING CALLED

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Director of Airport and Field Operations has stated in writing that it has always been departmental policy to invite "general public tenders" on the granting and renewal of lease concessions at airports, can the minister explain how it was possible that Kebec Restaurants was able to have its lease at Dorval renegotiated and renewed on three separate occasions without any such tenders being called?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the statement is accurate as a general rule. Indeed, it was applied in those terms in this case. According to my information, the lease in question, hon. members will be happy to learn, was first granted in 1961. It was a lease for five year terms with subsequent options of two successive five year additional terms. That was the nature of the lease at that time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REPORT OF CONGRESSMAN BEARD ON INTERPOL—POSITION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pose a question to the Solicitor General.

A member of the American Congress, Mr. Edward Beard, declared last week that he is preparing a bill aimed at restricting the power of Interpol, a private international police agency. This decision follows an eight-month study of a report on Interpol, which clearly demonstrates the Nazi history of that agency and points out at cases when it violated the rights of individuals and groups by broadcasting false information. Considering that the same report has been made available to the Solicitor General since March 1975, would he advise the House if he has completed the study of the report and, if so, when will he report to the House? If he has not, why has the study not been completed?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this matter was raised in the Justice committee the other day on my supplementary estimates. We provided certain information to the committee. I might say that we have no information to the effect that Interpol is doing what was suggested by the hon. member. I am willing to investigate this further and report back to him.

ENERGY

NELSON AND CHURCHILL RIVER HYDRO-ELECTRIC PROJECTS—APPLICATION OF MANITOBA HYDRO FOR EXPORT PERMIT

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns the Manitoba Hydro project for exportation of hydro-electric power from the Nelson and Churchill River projects to the midwest United States. Construction of that 230,000 KV line from Ridgeway, Manitoba to Sprague, Manitoba, has begun by Manitoba Hydro. There are survey crews and expropriation and the construction of transmission towers has begun. Has Manitoba Hydro applied for an export permit? If so, has it been approved and if not, why not?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member whether such an application has been made. I can tell him, however, that there will be meetings at the highest level next week to discuss this and related matters.

ALLEGED HALTING OF CONSTRUCTION OF TRANSMISSION LINES BY MANITOBA HYDRO FOR VIOLATION OF NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. As construction has been halted on the transmission lines as it appears on the surface that Section 40 of the National Energy Board Act has been violated by Manitoba Hydro for beginning construction before the export permit was approved by the National Energy Board, has any legal action been taken against Manitoba Hydro?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to examine with my officials the legal implications of that question.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF SIGNING AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA TO PROTECT OKANAGAN REGION

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister report progress on her continuing struggle to protect the environment of the Okanagan Valley, at least to the extent of having signed the implementation agreement setting out the five year program arising out of the three year study of the Okanagan Regional Water Board? There is a growing fear that this modest, long-range, essential and eventually money saving program has been sacrificed because of restraint.

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): No, Mr. Speaker. That agreement has not been sacrificed in the budgetary restrictions. I do have some matters to discuss with the minister in British Columbia and we are trying desperately to get hold of him, but he is out campaigning and does not seem to have any time to discuss the situation in the Okanagan at the present time.

AIR TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN AIR FARES—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON APPEAL OF CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to inform the House today whether cabinet has reached any decision on the appeal from the Canadian Transport Commission May 1975 air fare rate hearings presented by the Consumers Association of Canada, and if not, why not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I cannot identify the specific appeal from that reference. I will check it later in Hansard and examine the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The appeal was with respect to the increased air fares granted by the CTC last May, which incidentally, for the information of the minister, are highly discriminatory so far as people outside of central Canada are concerned. Would the minister also take this fact into consideration?

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING OF NATIVES—PROPOSED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ACTION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In light of the Ontario natural resources minister's statement that the federal and provincial governments will be working together, can the minister tell the House what new action his department is taking to co-ordinate attacks on the mercury problem in northwestern Ontario, and in the rest of the country for that matter?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I met with the two chiefs from the area and during the meeting they expressed concern that the two levels of government were attacking the problem each at its own level in an uncoordinated way. Two of my colleagues accompanied me at a federal-provincial meeting, and we have now set up a working body to try to deal jointly with the problem.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REACTION OF LABOUR GROUPS TO POLICY STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Minister of Finance arising out of earlier answers which he gave in the House today. Does the minister not realize that by refusing to repudiate the extraordinary decision by Mr. Pepin to make harsh decisions in terms of the anti-inflation law now, saying that he will be lenient later on, this will contribute to chaos in collective bargaining in Canada, so that all groups now know that they have a vested interest in not reaching an early settlement and therefore will push for negotiations to drag on for weeks or months down the road?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I do not share the hon. gentleman's conclusion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That is extraordinarily unfortunate in the present circumstances. May I ask the minister a supplementary question. Does the government not realize that this will cause all negotiating groups, whether wage or salary earners, to push for one year contracts instead of two year contracts now?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course, Mr. Speaker, all parties are free to move for whatever contractual rights they prefer. I would remind the hon. gentleman that we have put in place a controls regime for a period of three years, and negotiation decisions will have to be guided by the law that has now been approved by this House.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE INDEXATION OF SOCIAL PROGRAM BENEFITS

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

In his fight against inflation, would the minister consider, now or in view of the next budget, the suggestion that the government's current social programs should be geared to the costs of such necessities as food, housing, public transportation, which are still increasing, rather than to the overall cost of living index which includes the fairly stable prices of commodities which are not at all necessary?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am willing to consider this suggestion as well as others concerning the fight against inflation.

SUGGESTED CONTINUATION OF INDEXING OF INCOME TAX

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Since he is in a good mood, would the Minister of Finance be prepared to retain, in his next budget, the suggestion of a tax deduction for low income earners which would be equal to the monetary value of the annual increase in the cost of daily necessities?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there now exists a form of indexation in the Income Tax Act. The next time I prepare a budget, I shall see whether the system established two years ago now must be changed.

AIR TRANSPORT

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO SUPPLY DOCUMENTS IN SUPPORT OF SKYWEST APPLICATION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As Saskatchewan has threatened to pull out of the Manitoba-Saskatchewan Skywest air service beacuse, as transport minister Gordon MacMurchy indicated, the minister did not provide any documents for the CTC hearing last week, what are these key documents that the minister has failed to provide so that the CTC hearing could have gone forward?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me say that Saskatchewan's reluctance in this program is not really new, so this may be more of an excuse than an explanation. The reference to the absence of any documents is a terrible distortion of what the ATB committee really said in explaining that Skywest had put forward totally inadequate documentation in its application. One of the items included was a reference to the federal contribution of the two aeroplanes. We have not been asked specifically to make clear that these aeroplanes will be available upon the granting of a licence, but of course we would be prepared to do so.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF HALL REPORT

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Time and time again members of the opposition parties have posed questions regarding Dr. Noel Hall's report on the inquiry into the retired CN pensioners, and time and time again the answer has been "soon". I could ask, how soon is soon, but I will ask this. Is it not possible to contact the Justice, either by telephone or telegram, and find out whether it will be three weeks, three months, six months, or 30 days?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is possible to contact the Doctor, and the hon. member will be pleased to know that I am quite prepared to do that, but I must say that he has been contacted on several occasions. The matter is more complex than perhaps anyone had anticipated at first, and this has protracted the hearings. He does not feel that it will be worthy of his efforts or in the interests of the employees if he unduly rushes the matter, and that is the situation at the present time.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER SOUGHT ADVICE ON APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES TO SKY SHOPS SITUATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and arises out of the Prime Minister's answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Peace River. I wonder whether the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as chief law officer of the Crown, has advised the Prime Minister of the significance of the guidelines respecting the conduct of members of parliament, and particularly respecting guidelines No. 2 which provides:

Members of Parliament should make every reasonable effort to avoid even the appearance of those conflicts of interest that are not inherent in a representative democracy.

Has the Prime Minister sought the advice of the Attorney General of Canada, or has the Attorney General of Canada advised the Prime Minister, with respect to these very important guidelines that affect the dignity of parliament, so that indeed justice and right are seen to be done as well as in fact are done?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the initiator of the guidelines and of the guidelines process was the Prime Minister himself. In the course of preparing the guidelines the government had the benefit of the advice of the Attorney General, who of course was a member of the government that produced the guidelines.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the answer by the Attorney General, which indicates his obvious concern about the present situation relating to these guidelines which apply Senator Giguère, will the Attorney General, as chief law officer of the Crown, undertake to the House to refresh the memory of the Prime Minister with respect to the guidelines of which he claims to be the father?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1500)

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is prompted by the importance of this part of our parliamentary day, namely, the question period, especially since the present rules were adopted in 1968 which did away with committee of supply, thus making the question period the only part of the parliamentary day when the government can be held accountable. My point of order is also prompted by my concern over the growing tendency of ministers to be evasive in their answers to questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: For example, the tendency is growing for ministers to take questions as notice and say, "I will look into the question and answer it later", and that is the last we ever hear of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, our predicament is even more compounded by the fact that we are now operating under provisional rules which deny us the right to raise points of order or questions of privilege during the question period. Hence, there is no opportunity given to members on this side of the House—or on any side, for that matter—to hold minister accountable for undertakings they make during the course of the question period to supply answers at a later date.

Today, for example, I endeavoured to direct a question supplementary to one asked by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), asking him to fulfil an undertaking he had made to me in answer to a question I directed to him on November 25 regarding a very important matter, namely, a directive that has been sent to the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency by the Anti-Inflation Board regarding an increase in the price of eggs, which, in the opinion of the Anti-Inflation Board, could not be justified in the face of evidence which indicated that the price of feed grain had gone down.

The minister indicated, on November 25 when I directed the question to him, that he would be meeting with the Farm Products Marketing Council, thereby implying that he would undertake to obtain an answer to my question; that is, whether the Farm Products Marketing Council had endeavoured to determine whether the price increase by CEMA was in fact justified and such communication sent to the Anti-Inflation Board.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, with great deference and respect, that we are constrained and, indeed, impeded in carrying out our responsibilities of holding the government accountable in the face of the growing practice of ministers to be evasive by putting off replies to questions, giving the undertaking that they will look into the matter and reply at a later date, and knowing full well that members of the opposition have no way, under the present rules—especially under the provisional rules—to hold ministers accountable. I submit that the tendency toward this practice is growing, and the point of my raising the matter as a point of order is to bring it as forcibly as possible to Your Honour's direction and to the attention of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization so that it can be considered.

May I say, with great respect to the members of that committee, that it is my view the present provisional rules which restrain us considerably during the question period should be terminated forthwith so we can get on with the question period by holding ministers accountable and by raising points of order and questions or privilege at the time they arise.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could just say a few words with reference to the answer I gave the hon. member. The meeting I referred to is taking place and he will be informed when representations are made to me. I have no intention of withholding information from the hon. member or from anyone else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has had the floor for some time on a point of order which is, frankly, little more than a complaint about the quality of answers that have been given. If the hon. member has representations to make to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, he may do so during the day. The minister has taken ten seconds to give a specific answer to the specific point raised by the hon. member for St. John's East. I think that, with other hon. members seeking the floor on points of order, it would be unfair to recognize again the hon. member for St. John's East. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I am on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East will understand that the floor has been given to the hon. member for Peace River. If the hon. member still seeks the floor for the purpose of another intervention, he will have to wait until this point of order is concluded.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the government House leader about the business for this week and for next week. Also, I want to say publicly what I have already said to him and the other House leaders privately, namely, that we are prepared to defer our use of tomorrow as an allotted day until the next semester or period in order that the government may proceed with the more harmless items of its legislative program.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House leader of the official opposition for the postponement in respect of the allotted day and putting it off until the next semester. I do not think he has given up that day: that kind of generosity would be beyond my comprehension. At any rate, we are happy about the postponement because there is a great deal of urgent business yet to be done.

When Bill C-77 has been read the second time, we shall move on to Bills C-74, C-27 and C-20. I am not sure of the business beyond that, Mr. Speaker, as there are a number of reports being made currently and we may wish to take up some of those which are made to the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the business of the House, may I ask a question which will come as no surprise to the government House leader. For six Thursdays in a row he has told us that the bill to implement the report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs with regard to Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war is still under consideration. Will the minister now tell us whether the government has decided to bring in that bill and, if so, will it be introduced before Christmas?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I specifically raised the matter in cabinet today but I can only say that no decision was reached.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege and I say to you, with the greatest respect, that my understanding of the rules is that a question of privilege has to be heard and takes precedence over all points of order.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on this question of privilege at the time because it had to do with a reply given to my earlier point of order by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who is no longer in the House; as a result, my position is much more difficult. The minister misled me and the House in his reply.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: That is precisely my question of privilege. I do not intend to proceed with it until the minister is in the House, but I shall raise it at the first opportunity when he is here.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY—REQUESTED DEBATE ON STRIKE AND LAY-OFFS

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I ask leave to move a motion for the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration. The specific and important matter is the nationwide strike in the pulp and paper industry, a strike involving some 25,000 members of the Canada Paperworkers Union, and lay-offs of the same order in the bush and allied operations.

Since this industry represents one of the largest single components of our export trade, a significant portion of the increasing unfavourable balance of trade can be attributed to this strike. The federal government's concern must also be with the relationship of this strike to the federal guidelines, since almost all the contracts in the industry are dated before January 1, 1974, and settlements are likely to include catch-up which will require appearances before the Anti-Inflation Board. If acceptable, Mr. Speaker, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have, of course, been a number of applications for an emergency debate, pursuant to Standing Order 26, relating to work stoppages in various industries. In some cases they have presented the Chair with a serious problem in view of the fact that the industry involved is either a federal undertaking or dealt in some direct way with a bargaining agent that was federally-constituted or otherwise related to the jurisdiction of the federal government.

Without going into the details of all the other considerations or similar considerations involved in this work stoppage which would in any case make the Chair reluctant to grant an emergency debate until it was seen that there was no action within the sphere of collective bargaining which might bring it to a resolution, there is the additional difficulty that, except by virtue of the reference to the anti-inflation measures which are, of course, matters of federal jurisdiction, the fact is that it appears to be a work stoppage in the private sector involving private companies and unions which are not in any way subject to federal jurisdiction. Accordingly, there is the additional difficulty the Chair has that this does not seem to be the jurisdiction to which this House should be addressing itself in the way suggested by the hon. member.

There is, of course, as in other work stoppages, nothing to prevent the hon. member making application at another time; but there is, in fact, a jurisdictional problem which I feel, with great respect, the hon. member would have to get around. In the circumstances, I feel we ought not to set aside special time for such a debate.

AVERAGE NUMBER OF PENSION CHEQUES ISSUED

Question No. 3,144—Mr. Whittaker:

What is the average number of pension cheques issued for the various departments where the majority of payments remain static for annual twelve month periods such as superannuation, veterans pensions, Canada Pension Plan and others?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The average number of pension cheques issued per month during 1974 (calendar or fiscal year 74/75 as noted) for the following programs was: Public Service Superannuation, 82,642 (1974/75); RCMP Superannuation, 3,475 (1974/75); Canadian Forces Superannuation, 48,758 (1974/75); Canada Pension Plan, 485,769 (1974); Old Age Security (Guaranteed Income Supplement), 1,807,065 (1974); Canadian Pension Commission, 151,900 (1974). It should be noted that Old Age Security payments are escalated quarterly, in accordance with the Consumer Price Index.

CANADA-USA SALMON NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 3,155—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Who were the persons representing Canada at the Canada-USA Salmon negotiations?

2. What is the status of the negotiations at the present time?

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Fisheries)): 1. The Canadian delegation to the Canada-U.S. Salmon negotiation session, held in February, 1974 comprised: C. R. Levelton (Head of Delegation), Director General, Operations Directorate, Fisheries and Marine Service, Department of the Environment. M. P. Shepard, Director, International Fisheries Policy, International Fisheries and Marine Directorate, Fisheries and Marine Service, Department of the Environment. B. Applebaum, Legal Operation Division, Department of External Affairs. L. H. Legault, Director General, International Fisheries and Marine Directorate, Fisheries and Marine Service, Department of the Environment. W. R. Hourston, Regional Director, Pacific Region, Fisheries and Marine Directorate, Department of the Environment. In addition, advisers and experts from the Federal and Provincial Governments, (Province of B.C.) and the B.C. fishing industry attended the negotiations.

2. No further negotiations have taken place since February 1974, although officials to the two governments have been in contact from time to time to discuss elements of the problems. There have also been a number of meetings with the Canadian industry advisory group to discuss the Canadian position. It is expected that negotiations will resume early in 1976.

COMPLAINTS RECEIVED REGARDING RADIO FREQUENCY INTERFERENCE

Question No. 3,253—Mr. Friesen:

1. By province and territory, how many complaints were received by the Department of Communications regarding radio frequency interference in (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972 (d) 1973 (e) 1974 (f) 1975?

2. How many complaints were registered by (a) licensed radio operators (b) other citizens?

3. How many complaints by licensed operators reported some retaliatory measure taken by other citizens to (a) jam their operations (b) destroy equipment?

4. In what percentage of the complaints was the (a) equipment of the amateur radio operator (b) manufacturer of the receiving equipment found to be at fault?

5. How many persons are employed by the Department to handle such complaints?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned: 1. (a), (b), (c), (d), (e) and (f) See Statement "A".

2. (a) and (b) See Statement "B".

3. (a) and (b) See Statement "C".

4. (a) and (b) See Statement "D".

5. One hundred and twenty-five persons.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

AUTHORIZATION FOR CMHC TO MAKE INTEREST REDUCTION GRANTS, CASH GRANTS, ETC., TO ENCOURAGE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs) that Bill C-77 to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, last evening at six o'clock I was discussing housing and subsidized housing available in rural Canada, specifically in the province of Ontario where I have had some experience as former reeve of a small municipality. I was commending the Ontario government on the money available and the various projects it had completed. I know a great many projects are under construction at the present time.

I checked with the Minister of Housing for Ontario to get his comments on this federal bill. He informed me he did not have too much knowledge of it. He said he met with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) in Ottawa some weeks ago and had received the statement of the minister, but he had some concern that they did not have the exact details. I had hoped to get more information from him this morning, but I understand he has been tied up. I am speaking of Mr. John Rhodes, Minister of Housing for Ontario. He did tell me, however, that the federal program as outlined leaves the Ontario government in a quandary concerning how well its action program will be accepted. He admitted that the federal interest rate for those qualified for the subsidy is lower, at 8 per cent, than the rate in Ontario, which I believe is 10¼ per cent.

A few days ago, when members of the committee were discussing the estimates of the minister, I had the opportunity to question the minister and also the president of CMHC. At that time I was dealing with one program in particular, the limited dividend program in respect of housing and apartments. I commented that this certainly was a good idea. I brought to the attention of the president of CMHC and the minister that a great many experienced builders who ordinarily would have taken advantage of a program such as this were not jumping into it 100 per cent; in other words, it did not sound too good.

I mentioned that several smaller builders thought it was a good idea and that it would be an opportunity for them to diversify. For this reason they had contacted the authorities. Back in May of this year the branch manager of CMHC in the city of North Bay was contacted in this regard. They had been negotiating back and forth in an effort to get a project off the ground. Prior to the opening of this House, I believe in the first or second week of October, I checked into this matter and was informed everything was in order. However, again there were delays for almost another month before the project finally received approval. Now the owner and the builder are faced with winter weather, which in northern Ontario will mean a great deal of additional cost.

I asked Mr. Teron whether he did not feel the department has a responsibility to make this information more available to prospective clients, and whether it would not be a good idea, in the interests of good public relations, to advise them of all the pitfalls and steps which must be taken. In this particular case the owner did not know it was necessary to have a soil test. From May until November 1 nothing was done about it, and then CMHC said a soil test was necessary. A soil test was taken and it was found there was a considerable amount of rock. I understand that blasting is still being carried on.

It seems to me that CMHC should instruct its officials to advise these people that they will have to conduct soil tests on whatever is required. I do not believe this would involve a great deal of expense. I hope CMHC will see that their branch offices are instructed to do this. I checked with one branch office and was told it is not their function to do this; their only function is to check, and if the project does not come up to the requirement, those concerned will be told what they have to do. I do not think that is a very good position for a government agency to take.

There is another matter I should like to raise, for which CMHC should be commended. Persons who qualify for grants for housing have available to them plans that are approved by CMHC. Therefore, they are not faced with the additional expense of hiring an architect. I wonder, in respect of some of the smaller apartment projects, whether CMHC could also make plans available for the types of apartment buildings which meet their specifications. Perhaps they could be used for a building which could be constructed economically? In this way, the proposed owner or entrepreneur would not be put to the additional expense and trouble of hiring an architect, who in many cases does not look too seriously into things and sometimes substantial changes have to be made in the plans, causing additional expense. This matter was brought very forcibly to my attention because of the case to which I referred.

There is another great cost of which I have spoken before, and I suppose I will continue to speak on it, with regard to housing. As hon. members know, we in this party strongly recommended the removal of the sales tax on building materials from 1972 onward when a great many of us entered the House.

In checking on this matter, I find that Walter Gordon was the minister of finance who imposed the 11 per cent federal sales tax on building materials back in 1963, I believe. Its effect was to increase immediately the cost of houses by up to 17 per cent. It also had the effect of slowing down building starts, leading to the present housing shortage. The failure of the government to put a ceiling on interest rates also added greatly to the cost of houses both old and new. The present government created the housing shortage and now they try to solve the problem with a patchwork quilt of half measures, hoping perhaps that the problem will go away of its own accord.

Removing part of the federal sales tax on building materials was too little, too late. As we all know, it was reduced by 5 per cent in the Turner budget of 1974. As I mentioned earlier, all hon. members know that our party advocated the removal of the sales tax on building materials. We were told by the then minister of finance, when it was raised in the House, that this was unthinkable. Then he reversed himself and reduced the tax by 5 per cent. The seriousness of the present situation makes me wonder if the government will now take the final step and remove the tax entirely. This would assist in further reducing building costs.

There is another item which I have endeavoured to put forward time and time again. I would ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs to consider and to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) the problem of double-taxation. I mentioned this question earlier in committee when we were considering the estimates of the department on November 27. For a number of years I served as a vice-president of the Ontario Mayors and Reeves Association. Time and again resolutions were presented requesting that municipal taxes on residences be made tax deductible expenses when filing income tax.

It hardly seems fair and reasonable for a person to have to pay a tax on a tax, which is the case at present. I know there should be a limit in this respect, and in no way would I agree that Canadians living in palatial residences and paying municipal taxes amounting to thousands of dollars—$3,000, $4,000 and even $10,000—should be entitled to deduct all their municipal taxes. However, I believe that a ceiling of $500 would be fair and would help a great many people in the lower income bracket. The minister answered my question by saying that the revenue lost would be between $600 million and $1 billion. This is all very well, but to my mind it would be an excellent and equitable way in which to assist existing home owners and it would also make it more attractive for people who are desirous of purchasing a house at the present time.

The argument was also raised that this would be unfair to many tenants across the country. If my proposal were accepted, tenants would have an additional incentive to buy a house of their own. A home owner has many additional responsibilities, such as the outlay for maintenance and for caring for a house, which a tenant does not.

The parliamentary secretary to the minister, whom I do not see here now, made a very profound statement when he admitted that this bill does not offer a magic solution. Certainly, that was an understatement. In his remarks yesterday, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) commented on the 1969 Hellyer task force on housing. This was the most comprehensive housing study ever made. If the government had implemented those recommendations, or even some of them, we would not have this housing crisis today.

I want to touch briefly on the existing legislation and commend the government for its Neighbourhood Improvement Program, and for one which is even more important to a riding such as mine, that is, the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program which provides financial assistance in the form of a grant of $2,500 plus a loan of $2,500, to people who qualify, to improve their residences. This is a special boon to senior citizens, a great many of whom live in houses that have not been kept up to the standard which one would normally expect. I feel that this is a very worthwhile program. I checked into it further and was informed—possibly so have other hon. members—that in order to qualify for this grant a municipality had to take certain steps and also contribute, not money but the services of a clerk or other official to enter into an agreement for the collection of the mortgage.

I checked with the municipalities on this matter and, to put it mildly, they were not too enthusiastic. I have now been informed by the president of CMHC that this is not necessary. I wish to bring this point to the attention of hon. members, especially those representing areas with small towns, because you cannot designate a whole area in a small town as a slum area because many towns are not built that way; there is the odd house that is in poor condition, and three or four blocks away there is another such house. The president of CMHC gave the undertaking that the corporation would consider this question and that if two or three isolated houses in a village or town were specified, they would qualify. I feel that this is an excellent project which should be brought to the attention of hon. members, and I commend the minister for it.

In introducing this discussion it was stated that the basic thrust of the housing policy was relatively sound and that it was an attempt to stimulate supply. The encouragement of additional mortgage funding, while basically without clout, is nonetheless a very worthy pursuit. The Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation is a much needed organization that is long overdue. At the same time, it is imperative that more serviced land be made available in order that over-all construction costs can be kept down. The problem is that in this package the government has also inflated demand relative to supply.

In summary, many of the points in the program are counterproductive and cancel each other out. Similarly, other programs are simply more of the same. The government has assumed it can solve the housing problem through quantitative means, that is, by merely extending or broadening existing programs, rather than looking for qualitative changes which can be exclusively aimed at real problems, with long-term goals in mind.

Mr. Ross Milne (Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I take the opportunity to enter this debate very briefly this afternoon because in representing the riding of Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe I think I represent one of the fastest growing areas in Canada. It is an area in which housing is extremely important. In the city of Brampton alone there will be 15,000 new homes built over the next three years, which essentially will double the population of the city within that period. I want to enter the debate, also, to congratulate the minister and the government on the new housing action program: I think it is one of the most significant new housing programs ever undertaken by any government anywhere.

It has been said many times that traditionally we have associated government housing programs with very low income people, native people and senior citizens, but I think this is one of the first times we have recognized that a greatly increasing number of people need assistance in respect of housing, particularly to buy housing. Many people who want to buy a house have a cash flow problem. I think these programs go a long way to assist them in that regard.

I think it is important that the focus of this program is on lower and medium-income housing. Many speakers have said this. I am concerned about the things that are happening in some areas which are similar to the one I represent. They are, perhaps, very different things from those which may be happening in some smaller towns such as represented by the previous speaker, or in the heart of the city such as represented by the critic for the New Democratic Party. However, living in a community such as Brampton-Bramalea, I find there is a very dynamic increase in housing, largely to support the city of Toronto. There is the same situation around any large municipality and I think we are fast getting to the point where it is almost impossible for these municipalities to stand on their own from a municipal tax base.

What is happening is that higher income people from the cities are moving out to places like Brampton-Bramalea. Perhaps they are able to afford higher-cost housing than many people. The community then becomes truly a bedroom community for a larger city. The objective, that there should be a good balance between residential and industrial assessment to keep municipal taxes under some kind of control, is very difficult to maintain; the cost of housing becomes so high that industry is not interested in locating in such areas because the workers they wish to attract cannot afford to live in these communities. We find that around most of the larger cities there is quite a belt which is made up of municialities where people who work in the cities live. This housing action program as set out by the government will deal with that problem by forcing or motivating the construction of a great many houses for the lower and medium-income sectors which people can afford.

Another thing which is of very great concern is the tremendous resistance both by municipalities and groups within municipalities to the construction of this type of housing. Municipalities object to it because for most of them it is just a money-losing proposition to build this many new houses. That is why I am glad the housing action program allows the government to pay the municipality on a per unit basis, making it possible for the municipality to break even in this regard. Not given that break, the municipalities would either face a serious tax problem in the years ahead or, more seriously, they might refuse to build this type of house and the needs of many people would not be met.

In my area I am most concerned about the very tight rental situation. We have a housing industry, but many people are forced to rent. Figures for the city of Toronto show that very close to half the people living there are in rental accommodation as opposed to owning their own accommodation. There are real problems in the rental housing industry. In many areas with which I am familiar there is virtually no construction of rental housing accommodation; the economics of it are not very good. Also, there is tremendous resistance from people who own single-family homes to having multiple dwellings built anywhere within the area where they might be affected.

Another matter which is of real concern at the present time—and I think this program will help alleviate it to a degree—is the tremendous rent increases which many people are facing. These rent increases are very hard to absorb and for many people they are very hard to understand, but predominantly they are caused because much of the rental accommodation in Ontario was built five years ago, or a little more, on very short term money, five-year mortgages and ten-year mortgages. I suspect this is true across Canada. At that time interest on mortgages was 6 per cent, 7 per cent and 8 per cent. These buildings have to be refinanced, perhaps at the present time, with money which is much more costly. So in order for owners to survive the refinancing of their buildings, they are forced to pass on very substantial rent increases to their tenants. The response to this has been rent controls, and this works against more building activity. I am sure the rental situation in most municipalities is very critical.

During this debate I think everyone on this side of the House who participates will say that they enthusiastically applaud the assisted rental program, and hon. members opposite will say that it does not go far enough. I think both viewpoints are correct. It is a good program, but I am concerned that there is not enough money anywhere to put into this program so that we can adequately cover it. I do not know how much money should be applied to this program, because the need is very great. One of the significant changes in the program is the loan approach, or the roll-over provision, whereby the money that is lent will be repayable and reusable by other people when the term of the mortgage is up, if the building is sold or if the building should be refinanced in any way.

The Assisted Home Ownership Program has probably been one of the most successful housing programs ever, mainly because it gets people into houses. I said previously I was concerned that in a country like Canada, with so much land and so much potential for housing, a high percentage of Canadians live in rental accommodation. This percentage is increasing all the time, mainly because people cannot accumulate enough money to raise the down payment on a home or cannot early in their marriage afford a home. Of all the benefits the Assisted Home Ownership Program may bring, that would be the greatest. Last year AHOP helped over 16,000 people to get into houses.

I say to the minister and to the government that an assessment of the limits on house prices under the Assisted Home Ownership Program should be very carefully considered. At the present time, the limits are set on a fairly wide basis. They may be based upon a city and that city's area may take in quite a large surrounding area. I urge the government and the minister seriously to consider setting the upper limit of this program on almost a community by community basis. There may be a community within 30 miles or so of a large city. The forces playing on the market in that community are really caused by the dynamics of the housing industry within the city. There may be another community 50 or 60 miles from the same city, which operates independently. The dynamics of the housing market then are very different. So I think that under the present laws, the limits that apply to large areas may be acceptable in one community and in another community close by they may be out of line. There should be a careful analysis of the extent of these limits.

● (1540)

I want to return to the relationship with the municipalities. I wish this housing bill and the program which we are debating had been annouced 15 or 20 years ago. In a country that has so much space, I cannot understand why we have such high-priced land and such a scarcity of it for housing. Provincial governments are now starting to recognize the problem; they will have the benefit of this program and perhaps will start their own, as Ontario has. They will be able to say to the municipalities that debts with respect to housing should be shared by all the people and not just those in the municipality concerned. Without that type of approach and philosophy to this problem we will not get the necessary housing and we will damage the tax base in our larger cities.

I am sure all members of the House share the view that the housing situation in Canada is serious enough that there should be a different relationship between the federal government, the provincial governments, municipalities, developers and builders. Until now there has been an adversary type of relationship, and I think it is time for close and serious co-operation. I am most concerned about the position of the builder. The majority of the builders I have known are no longer in business simply because they cannot buy serviced land on which to build houses. Serviced land is so costly and scarce that the small builder cannot compete in the market, so the whole business is left to a few large, powerful developers and again there is an adversary position within the municipality and very few houses are built. Some large developers have very serious concerns about the problem.

I think that with a united relationship and attitude among all levels of governments, builders and developers, a much better job could be done with respect to providing housing in Canada. This is a very important program for the part of the country that I represent and it is one of the fastest growing areas in Canada. There are probably as many new homes built there as in any municipality in the country. I wish to commend the government for taking this action, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-77, in which we read the following explanatory notes, and I quote:

The purposes of the amendments to the National Housing Act may be summarized as follows:

(1) to authorize the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to make interest reduction grants to cooperative housing bodies and non-profit housing groups and to individuals who borrow for house renovation;

(2) to establish a program of cash grants to municipalities per unit of new medium-density family housing units constructed in the municipality and approved for construction before December 31, 1978;

(3) to authorize the Corporation to make loans and forgive indebtedness to municipalities in respect of municipal water supply projects;

(4) to modify the Assisted Home Ownership Program to authorize loans for the acquisition as well as the construction of homes and to clarify the regulatory powers applying thereto; and

(5) to modify the Assisted Rental Programs to give increased benefits to encourage construction.

Madam Speaker, I believe this bill which deals with almost all areas of housing was eagerly awaited and a quick look at it reveals that it is not exactly what had been expected. Once more the Canadian people are bluffed as only the present government knows how to. There is no doubt that the housing problem is very critical today. That is why the government, very opportunist as always, introduces its famous housing action program.

The legislation will affect municipalities, owners of existing houses, future owners, tenants and even—I was going to say, and mostly—the big builders and lenders, because as the honourable member who preceeded me indicated, we fear that it will still be the big businesses and not only small building businesses which are now in trouble, having difficulties, but the feeling is that the millionaire contractors will be the ones to collect the benefits of the bill.

Under Bill C-77, the government wants to guarantee the construction of at least one million units between 1976 and 1979, but at what cost, Madam Speaker? What will be the long term cost for the one who really needs housing? Is it a new gimmick of the government to encourage the Canadian people to sink deeper into debt and thus give to capitalists an opportunity to double and even triple their income at the expense of needy families? Is it a social legislation first and then a financial one or is it the other way around?

Those are the questions which we are entitled to ask before the bill is deferred to a standing committee of the House, more especially since the government always resorts to subterfuges to have its monstrosities approved. This is why we are driven crazy with phrases such as low cost housing and low cost renting; we hear discussions on them all the time over the radio, and we read about them all the time in the newspapers.

Madam Speaker, they need plenty of cheek to talk about low cost when a couple with one child cannot find a lodging for less than $150 or $200 a month. And they dare talk about low cost housing in the case of a house which will require between $42,000 and $52,000 in investments over a 30 or 40 year period. Have they ever considered that the purchaser of such a house will have to pay over $100,000 to become its owner, if he cannot reimburse his indebtedness and if he does not leave 50 per cent of it to his estate?

The minister talked about assistance to municipalities. Everybody knows that all this assistance, all these grants are in fact a warranty for the interests taxpayers will have to pay to financial institutions. When we consider these grants today, as well as whatever assistance is offered to municipalities, we realize, Madam Speaker, that their purpose is always to serve as warranty for the interests municipalities will have to pay. It is therefore another way of protecting big finance and lending institutions. They must not lose one cent. Recently, to help a city, they lent $30,000 repayable over ten years. That makes $10,000 a year. However, the city will pay $5,200 a year in interest alone, and they say they want to help the city. They just put it into a mess it will not be able to get out of.

Madam Speaker, I say that this assistance, today, is designed only to protect capital, banks, insurance companies, lending pension plans and other private plans. Since I began to sit in this House I observed that all the government is concerned about is for lending companies not to lose one cent in interest. Now is the time to say, and the big financial supporters of the government never forget this principle and they know what I mean: charity begins at home. And the people, they do not matter.

First, if the government were serious, it would allow grants to the municipalities, not to protect the interests the financial institutions will get, but to give grants of 40 or 50 per cent of the required capital. For the balance, it would ensure that the municipalities get an interest-free loan, at the administration rates. So, the municipality which builds sidewalks and sewer systems would not pay for them three, four or five times over 75 years. That is what is wrong about the legislation. It is quite strange that all hon. members know that and do nothing. We will not get out of it, Madam Speaker. We will not get out of it if we keep on acting that way.

For example, Madam Speaker, in this municipality which needs a water system or a sewer project, payments are made on a 30-year period but after 30 years, the capital is still outstanding. I have been mayor of a town and each time we replace, we still have to tax for the old debt. We will never see the end of it unless, once again, we think in terms of the ratepayer.

What is very expensive nowadays is not to provide the services for a municipality but to finance the projects. This is what costs a lot. The ratepayer grows ever more aware that he lives only for banks and other financial authorities that have the right to use the credits of the whole nation to submit the citizens to an endless indebtedness. We see examples of what I have just said every day; just read the bill and you will see what the government proposes to do to promote home ownership.

Having realized that no one dares build a home when interest rates are 13, 14 and even 15 per cent, the government discovered another trick to "take in" the future homeownwer. In fact, we read here that a family man can get assistance in the form of an interest-free loan for the first five years to reduce his interest rate to 8 per cent. In other words, if a finance company lends him money at 13 per cent, the government agrees not to give the individual a grant, but to lend the 5 per cent interest he will have to pay. In this regard, to get information on the mode of payment, I put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) who simply told me that the loan would be payable over a five-year period at the then current rate of interest.

So, he will have to pay the finance company and borrow from it again. If the interest, at the end of five years, amounts to $3,000 or $4,000, he will have to change his mortgage contract or sign a new one, that is, get a second mortgage. Imagine what a second mortgage will cost when everyone knows that it always costs more. The rates of interest are always higher on second mortgages. After five years, a second mortgage will have to be taken to pay for the favour granted today.

Can anyone believe, Madam Speaker, that the new owner who is unable to pay more than 8 per cent today will be in a better position to pay 14, 15 even 16 per cent in five years? The government will surely catch a few more in that trap in the next few months, but I would hate to see those who will have to reimburse the $3,000 or $4,000 that will, of neccessity, be added to their mortgages. If the government sincerely wants to help and encourage home ownership among those who earn 14,000 or less a year, there is only one logical course to take, and that is to reduce the interest rates for the whole duration of the contract. We are being choked by astronomical interest rates today, and that in every sector whether it be public or private. Let us cease making ourselves the buffoons of financiers and let the government bring forth an act which will bring back to their senses those who are trying to take advantage of the people.

Madam Speaker, we found beautiful treasures in this bill. Here is one: amendment to the program of subsidies to builders to help tenants. Listen to this. With a view to encouraging the construction of rental units, the government proposes to increase to $1,200 the maximum yearly subsidies per housing unit per builder, in order to reduce the interest which the builder has to pay. They even go further: they will extend by two years the tax deduction allowance for rental unit depreciation.

Now, Madam Speaker, let us see what this means. A rental housing builder is allowed to deduct from his taxes the interest on the money he has borrowed. He is not paying out, he is borrowing. Yet he is entitled to deduct all the interest on the loan, municipal taxes, school taxes, maintenance, 10 per cent depreciation and will, in addition, receive $1,200 per housing unit, and further he will be entitled to a new tax deduction for amortization while a couple anxious to become owners do not have the right to deduct from their income tax those very interests on the money they need to buy their house, nor can they deduct school and municipal taxes. They do not have the right either to deduct a depreciation of 10 per cent and, even less, maintenance costs.

The social and financial injustice is most flagrant. Only the government does not want to see, only the Cabinet of ministers does not want to see the result of the "just society" that was promised to us a few years ago already.

Mr. Béchard: Christ promised it.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): The ordinary worker earning $6,000 to $10,000 a year cannot be eligible for a mortgage loan because you simply do not measure up these days unless you earn at least $14,000 a year. So the $750 grant for people with one child or more so their monthly payments will stay under 25 per cent of the income of the head of the family is just a drop in the bucket because 90 per cent of that category of people do not have the salaries they need to even consider applying for a mortgage loan.

To the minister, this has to be the most important bill from a financial point of view, especially for financiers. But for the person who wants to become the owner of a single family house I say it is entirely inadequate.

However, I hope the members of the committee will take good note of all the remarks I made in favour of the single family dwelling and will introduce the amendments required to make this bill more social. We also wish the committee would seriously consider reduced interest rates for young households eager to own a house of their own.

These are the reasons for which we accept that this bill be passed on second reading and be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. We ask the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is a public corporation, to set an example for banks and all other private lenders by establishing a minimum interest rate for mortgage loans for all those with an annual income of less than $15,000. Finally, we would like all new owners of single family dwellings to be allowed to deduct from their income tax their interests, their municipal and school taxes, a devaluation of at least 10 per cent and maintenance costs. We are only asking for the same favours that the government has always granted to large builders of apartment buildings.

Also, we would like the assistance granted to municipalities to be a direct grant on the capital invested and we would like the municipalities to be able some day to borrow money from the central bank at administrative rates instead of always doing business with commercial banks which, in reality, are the banks of the private sector. This way the assistance provided to municipalities by the government would not be another way for municipalities to get deeper in debt.

Madam Speaker, it is not sufficient to add a few millions for housing. It is not sufficient to say: Well, we shall vote $100, $200 or $300 million for housing. What is important is to know who will benefit from these millions. This is what we shall probably find out during the third reading debate, once the bill has been studied by the Committee and once the amendments which will make it more acceptable for the population in general and those who truly need a home at the present time have been included.

We are now saying: We will encourage large builders, or even multinational corporations to build rental housing. What people want is not to be tenants, but homeowners. That is the aspiration of a family. It is not with this bill that we shall meet this greatest of all aspirations. This is why I wish the bill will be amended. For the time being, we shall simply allow the bill to be passed on second reading.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time this year that we have had occasion to speak on the important subject of housing. I continue to be amazed by the fact that it is possible to deal with this important issue so many times and yet accomplish so little. If one looks around the chamber this afternoon, one may be able to get an answer to that question. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is not able to be here. I do not know where he is. I understand that the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

Mr. Blais: The minister is in Vancouver.

Mr. Oberle: Oh, he is campaigning in Vancouver. That is a very good pursuit.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is in Vancouver dealing with the matter of Habitat which is one of his ministerial responsibilities.

Mr. Oberle: If anything needs to be dealt with, it is certainly Habitat. I wish the minister a lot of good luck and good fortune in his dealings with the mayor and officials of Vancouver. Perhaps he will inform them of the government's intentions with regard to Habitat, because there exists in Vancouver and in many other areas of western Canada a great deal of confusion about the minister's intentions.

Perhaps it is not fair to refer to the minister's absence this afternoon. However, not only is the minister absent but so are the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the deputy minister of the Department of Urban Affairs. I understand he is in the United States at a place called Key Biscayne checking out the existence and functioning of condominiums. I am sure that will help the housing situation here. Another reason for the housing problem in Canada is that the minister and the deputy minister do not frequently communicate with each other. Even if a message were reported by the minister or his parliamentary secretary, I very much doubt whether it would make it all the way to the powerful office of the president of the corporation.

There was a debate on this matter last February, during which quite a number of interesting and most constructive proposals were put forward which could have been included in the bill now before the House. The only positive thing I have heard said in this debate was by the Liberal backbencher who spoke a short while ago. As I do on every occasion, he identified the real villians in the housing field in Canada, namely, the financial institutions and the large urban developers who get the biggest share of the pie and direct this country's housing programs.

Mr. Nystrom: Friends of the Tory party.

Mr. Oberle: Those kind of people are more readily identified with the New Democratic Party. It is not very long ago that the NDP supported the government in this House. One would have expected the minister and his officials sooner or later to recognize some of these proposals and implement them.

Rather than rehash the proposals made during the last housing debate, I should like to say something about why the housing minister and his department are not geared to finding more positive solutions. I am not saying there are no positive aspects at all to this bill; I want that to be quite clear. There are some good proposals in Bill C-77. Clauses 6 to 11, for example, provide for federal assistance to provinces and municipalities for the installation of sewage and water services. Assistance is provided now, and this is a further extension. This was called for by members of the opposition for years. It will permit municipalities to become eligible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans for the installation of trunk sewers and other facilities which smaller places in rural areas in mid and northern Canada to not have the resources to construct.

Clause 12 provides for the making of loans to provinces or municipalities for up to 50 per cent of the cost of installing sewage and water systems. Clause 14 removes income and family-size stipulations regarding AHOP loans. If I may speak for some parts of the area that I represent, may I say that AHOP loans are not much of an innovation in the housing field because a lot of the considerations which in fact are a hindrance in my area are not addressed by this bill. I refer, of course, to the cost of maintaining and heating a house and the provision of water, sewers and other utilities.

The clause providing for $1,000 grants to municipalities respecting the servicing of land is a very important and most significant innovation and will help smaller communities defray some of the cost of servicing land, particularly in areas of northern Canada where it is very expensive to instal services. Even though this provision is subject to the approval of some provinces, I do not expect it will be difficult for the minister to achieve their co-operation.

Clauses 15 to 19 make no mention of the Governor General's recommendation. They provide for the smooth merger of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and the Department of Urban Affairs. I do not recall the House discussing this subject before. This merger between CMHC and urban affairs is a recent proposal; as I have said, I do not think that the president of CMHC and the acting deputy minister of urban affairs have let anyone in on the secret yet. It will be interesting to see what happens. The actual merger, presumably, will be carried out by order in council.

Clause 15 establishes the position of chairman of the board of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This position must be filled from within the public service, and undoubtedly the deputy minister of urban affairs or the acting deputy minister, our friend Mr. Teron, will assume the title. The title of president will be retained, but the new chairman will take over his voting role on the board of directors. This interests me particularly in light of some of the things that have been said about this particular person, who will now assume this all-powerful position.

The provision in the bill regarding lending institutions directing another $750 million into the financing of new low and moderately-priced houses is, of course, a farce. The barons of the housing industry, and more importantly the barons of the financial institutions who are the approved lenders to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, on whom the government depends for its national housing program, will see to it that the flow of private institutional capital will always be at a time and at a volume that is in the best interests of these institutions, and that interest rates will remain excessively high so that private capital is not attracted to this housing market.

As the minister himself, as well as opposition critics, have pointed out, this requirement is not accompanied by legislative sanction; it is simply a suggestion. A committee will be established to monitor the performance of private lending institutions and the minister has told the House that he is all-confident that this will indeed take place. I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to my colleagues that this is, of course, just a dream of the minister which will not be fulfilled.

The government's centralized power structure is, and will remain, painfully apparent in the field of housing as long as people like the present president of CMHC and the deputy minister of urban affairs are at the controls. The provision of housing in a country like ours is more than just an essential component of an accepted lifestyle; it is an effective tool to stimulate or to retard the economy. It can be a tool to direct the socioeconomic development of the various regions of our country.

On looking at this bill and at legislation that we have discussed previously, it almost seems as if the government is still set on moving 95 per cent of our population into the larger urban centres. In none of these measures is there any sign that the government is going to follow the desire of Canadians and decentralize large centres, populating the rural areas of our land.

We on this side of the House have repeatedly made proposals that would have the effect of attracting small private investors to the housing market. Having lowered down payments and made it possible for Canadians to purchase homes, we must protect young families against the impact of high mortgage rates. This can be done in many different ways and has been effectively applied in many countries. My colleagues and I have spoken about this before and it is something that has been traditionally tried and accomplished in the United States. First, we could allow excessive interest rates to be deducted for the purposes of taxation. This should not upset the lending institution too much since they would continue to enjoy their high levels of interest rates because the subsidy would come from the public purse.

A better solution, however, would be to allow small investors to place money in the domestic housing market and deduct their interest earnings for the purposes of taxation. This would have the effect of giving us 7 per cent or 8 per cent interest rates in the domestic housing market. What difference would it make to small, private investors, who would still be getting 12 per cent on their money invested in stocks and bonds, as between paying interest on that 12 per cent or lending the money for the domestic housing market at an 8 per cent interest rate on which they would pay no income tax? The result would be the same, but the difference would be, of course, that we would have interest rates that would stimulate housing investment in this country. Other countries are offering savings plans to investors who are preparing young families to move into new houses some time in the future. Often, parents in those countries help their young people prepare for this event.

The bill makes reference to the Federal Mortgage Exchange Corporation and I should like to say a few words about that. The establishing legislation for this corporation has been in existence for over three years. The Progressive Conservative party has pressed for this organization to be made operational for almost that long. The purpose of the corporation will be to buy and sell mortgages, thereby enabling smaller investors to enter the mortgage market. This operation could do much to increase the liquidity of second mortgages as an investment vehicle, but their credibility at this point is somewhat lacking.

The corporation's operations has been promised for three years. What, if anything, is there to indicate that this is not just another promise at this time? The minister responsible has stated that this organization will have an operational budget of $75 million. This is both ironic and a pity when one considers its budget was cut when it was not even operative. Its budget was cut, of course, in the June 23 budget.

I would be neglecting my duty if in the last few minutes allotted to me I did not make reference to the native and rural housing program. The House will recall that the last two times I spoke on this subject—in February and last year in the fall—I questioned the minister as to the progress of the program which, in his words, was to acquire or build 50,000 housing units for native people or people living in rural areas over a period of five years, and the same number of housing units were to be rehabilitated. In other words, there was to be an increase in housing inventory in rural areas available to the native citizens amounting to 100,000 homes.

This program was announced some time early in 1974. I asked the minister in November how it was going, and he admitted that 24 of the 50,000 homes had been started. I suppose one has to start somewhere. But in February, when I spoke on this subject, I made inquiries of the information service of CMHC and was told by one of the officials there that such a policy called the native and rural housing policy did not exist. That prompted me to make reference to it in the House of Commons. I have a letter here which the previous minister wrote me on the subject. One paragraph reads as follows:

> We have just given a grant of $219,000 to the BCANSI—

That is the British Columbia Association of Non-Status Indians. The letter continues:

> —to assist them in developing a housing delivery system. Their proposal includes the construction of 3,500 new houses, the upgrading of 1,750 existing houses and the purchase of 1,750 houses for resale or rental to native people over a period of seven years.

This letter is dated April 30, 1974. The paragraph continues:

> For the current year they have set as a goal the construction of 200 new units and the acquisition of another 200 existing units. They also hope to undertake an extensive rehabilitation and renovation program.

There was to be a sum of $219,000, mentioned by the minister, to set up a delivery system for that program in the province of British Columbia. I followed its progress a little bit and it appeared to me it was not just $219,000 that has been spent to set up this delivery system, but in addition there were grants from the Secretary of State to this most illustrious group to do all kinds of other things as well, all of which resulted in the fact that there was not a single house built in the province of British Columbia for that group.

I should be fair and say that 24 units, which the minister made reference to in November of this year, were actually built in British Columbia, and I suppose one might assume that the BCANSI group should take credit for that breakthrough. I discussed the matter with the minister and expressed his concern about this obvious waste of money. I was not too concerned that not very many houses had been built during the first year, but nowhere in the province did it appear to me that there was any aggressive attempt to get the program moving.

As a result of my intervention, this function was eventually taken away from that group and in British Columbia at this time we at least have something that is functional. Under the program there has been set up a delivery system which this year delivered or started close to 400 new homes. I must give credit where credit is due. The province has become involved. Native people are not sitting on the present board, but we have two or three very aggressive people on this new housing board and, in addition, we have regional managers of CMHC who have recognized the need, are supporting this group and are actually out selling the program.

Incidentally, this program is not very popular in Ottawa as yet. At a meeting last night of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I asked the minister and his deputy how the program was working in conjunction with their activities. They were not entirely sure of the program and they did not realize it could be implemented on reservations. In any event, we got that matter straightened out and maybe some of my colleagues and people in the field will eventually look at it a little closer, recognizing the potential of the program if implemented on a broader scale throughout the country.

It frightens me when I look throughout this country and recognize that only in British Columbia is this program working at this time. I cannot, of course, criticize the minister or the government for not bringing in this kind of legislation. I do criticize them—I cannot put it in any other terms—for what appears to be deliberately keeping information from people who could be affected by this program, because the program is important.

While I have handed out some bouquets to some of the people who make the decisions in British Columbia, I should like for a moment to mention a little experiment I carried out in my constituency. I was asked by a person in a rural area adjacent to mine to give him a hand with the construction of his house. Since it is on the road I frequently travel, I decided to make the situation an experiment.

I spent some time with his family. There are ten children. It is a family of status Indians living off the reserve on a piece of land leased from the province. They have no budgeting problems. This is a very respectable family in the area. It occurred to me that this might be an interesting exercise. I told my constituent, of course, that I have 140,000 people in the constituency and that he would have to play along with me in carrying out this exercise. I took the time to visit various offices with him, particularly the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation office in Prince George. I told the officer there, with whom I have a very good relationship, that I intended to test the system with this friend of mine who lives in the Hart highway area of British Columbia.

I told the official I intended to see that this family got a house. Of course, I was offered all possible assistance from this office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. As soon as I returned to Ottawa I received a telephone call from my friend. I had told him that every time something went wrong or the monkey started throwing coconuts, I wanted to know about it. He told me that an official of CMHC had come out to examine the situation, that he had looked at it and had stated that my friend was not eligible because he was a status Indian.

I called the official in Prince George and told him that status Indians may apply under section 40 of the National Housing Act. I told him that this is frowned upon by the Indian Brotherhood, but that so far as the government, CMHC and I are concerned, status Indians are eligible under the program. Of course, this was found out to be the case. Another official went up the highway to see my friend and told him that he and his family had too large an income to qualify for a loan either under the AHOP program or under section 40. He said they did not qualify because they had earned $24,000 in the previous year. It was demonstrated that this particular family did have that much money going through their hands. However, the man to whom I refer carries on a small business in the traditional Indian style of trapping, hunting, fishing and tourism.

Of course, he has some expenses. While all the money going into the bank amounted to $24,000 that year, it was easy to demonstrate that his disposable income was only $6,000. Since this man has a family of ten children, it is not difficult to understand why he would have a desire to build a house. This was sorted out. A third visit was made to my friend. I do not want to take up too much of the time of the House on this long story.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Oberle: All right. I accept the encouragement. On the next visit it was discovered that the land on which the house was to be built was under a lease that would expire in seven years. The minimum term for a lease under the program is 15 years. This officer, instead of simply taking up the telephone and asking the provincial government to extend the lease, told my friend that he could not build the house because the lease was not long enough. A normal person at this point would have thrown up his hands, but Harry, living up to the commitment he had made with me, called his member of parliament again and said that another coconut had been thrown at him to the effect that the lease was not of long enough duration.

This has been going on now for a year and a half. At one point I phoned the assistant manager of the CMHC office in Prince George and asked him what he was going to do. I reminded him that when I and my friend has visited him, I had told him that my friend was going to have a house. I asked him what he was going to do so that my friend could get a house. He is a sincere person; he is one of the more diligent servants of that corporation. As a matter of fact, he phoned the bank and asked if this man could be given a loan so that he could get started on building his house. Then the idea came up that he should go through the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and take advantage of the program that department has, namely, the $10,000 down payment.

So a phone call was made to Indian Affairs and we were advised they would investigate it. That took some time. With the difficulties we have been having, particularly in British Columbia in having Indian Affairs policy made known to the people, it is not surprising that quite a bit of time expired. I did not argue too much because this $10,000 loan would have helped my friend. Finally, Indian Affairs decided that it would be extremely difficult to arrange this because my friend Harry did not live on the reserve. So the story goes on and on.

At this time, Harry and his family of ten children are not in a house. There is now a foot and a half of snow in the area where he lives. The family lives in a shack in which the inside walls are covered with those nice sparkling pieces of frost. In the morning when they get up, the pail of water that they have taken from a hole in the lake is frozen. They light a fire and thaw it out. So on and on it goes. This is just one of many such stories in this country. If this is possible in British Columbia, I shudder to think what would be possible in other parts of the country, particularly the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory where the provincial governments are not involved in providing some of the most essential facilities for our people.

I am attempting to demonstrate that it is not good enough for the government merely to understand the problems involved in providing housing for people who need it most. After some of the regulations and provisions are in place to solve the problem, we must be able to deliver housing to those who need it. This is not happening at the present time. I do not know what the solution is, but unless we address ourselves to this most serious problem we will have a situation in which another generation of Canadians living in rural surroundings in mid-Canada and northern Canada will be deprived of the most essential ingredient in the quality of life that most Canadians consider to be a right in this country.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the very fact that we are debating housing for the third or fourth time this year is proof that the policies announced by the minister in December, 1974, first debated in parliament in January, 1975, have been a failure in that the number of housing starts which the minister set as his objective last January when he first introduced amendments to the National Housing Act has not been obtained. Our party argued then that the minister was proposing to spend the money to meet the needs of the wrong groups of people, namely, people in the upper-income bracket rather than people in the low-income bracket who, regardless of how many subsidies or grants they may receive or how much relief from taxation they may have, simply cannot and never will be able to afford to buy a house of their own. We argued that what was needed was a major program of building rental housing for people in the low and middle-income brackets.

We are debating this proposal in December of 1975 because the minister and the government have failed so miserably to meet the objective which the minister set forth in January of this year. I could put on the record the appeals of the minister to private lending agencies that they be good citizens and put more money into housing voluntarily, which they did not do, and the later threats of the minister that if they did not do it voluntarily, he would introduce legislation which would force them to put money into housing—legislation which he has not brought forward.

So we are dealing again, in December, 1975, with a subject which will not go away. The record is clear, that we will not achieve the objective which the minister set forth at the end of 1974 of building 210,000 units.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Sure.

Mr. Orlikow: There would have to be a fantastic spurt in order to accomplish that.

Mr. Cyr: It is a fantastic government.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, fantastic in the number of mistakes it can make. It is interesting that there are interjections from two government members from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Although I am very pleased to be a Francophone, I was born and raised in Ontario and I am still living in Ontario.

Mr. Orlikow: It is an indication of how seldom the hon. member speaks that I confused him as being a member from Quebec. The point I want to make is still valid, that we have a government which has co-operated with the provincial government of Quebec and the city of Montreal in the expenditure of what will likely be more than $1 billion for a two week extravaganza called the Olympics in a city of 2.5 million people which is still dumping its raw sewage into the St. Lawrence river, a city which, I was told by a member of the city council in Montreal less than a week ago, will have to defer the construction of a sewage disposal system for four to eight years because they have borrowed so much money for the Olympics that they cannot borrow the money required to build a sewage disposal system,

Montreal is a city which every year builds fancy office buildings which are occupied by business tenants who write off 50 per cent of the rental costs as a business expense in the form of tax deductions, a city which each year has demolished several thousand moderately-priced housing units and replaced them with nothing, so that the obtaining of housing at a reasonable rent becomes ever more difficult. This is the kind of government which hon. members on the other side interject to defend. I am glad to see them do it because I think the record speaks for itself, particularly in that province.

It is not surprising that housing starts are not what they should be, because the government has refused to address itself directly to those elements which affect housing prices. Also, under the present anti-inflation program we can be certain that interest rates, which are the largest expense of the house buyer and are not controlled, will continue to stay high, and that land costs, which are the second largest part of the cost of a house, will not be reduced as a result of this bill or anything else that the government is proposing. There is no provision for land assembly. Speculative gains on land sales are not controlled under the anti-inflation program. Therefore, what we are faced with is a constantly increasing cost of housing.

Let us deal with the question of interest rates. My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), speaking in this debate yesterday illustrated the situation in the city of Toronto. You could make the same calculations for my city of Winnipeg or for Montreal or Vancouver. For a house in Toronto, the average cost of which is $57,500—let us suppose that a person can find $17,500 for a down payment—a person would have to carry a $40,000 mortgage. At present, the interest rate is 12 per cent, so he would be paying $413 a month principal and interest for 25 years, making a total for that $57,500 house of $141,150, $83,650 of which would be for interest charges.

There are many people who bought houses five years ago when the interest rate was 9 per cent. They can only get a mortgage at that rate for five years, at the end of which time they, like everybody else, have to renegotiate the mortgage. The present rate is around 12.5 per cent, and on a $40,000 mortgage, amortized over 25 years, people who bought a house five years ago at 9 per cent interest will find that their monthly mortgage payments have been raised by $96, that is, $1,152 a year of what was discretionary income on their part which must be diverted into mortgage payments, not to mention rising property taxes, fire insurance rates, etc.

It is no wonder that people in other businesses, such as food, entertainment, appliances, etc., are wondering where they will be able to get their customers. The housing crisis is just as bad, if not worse, now than it was a year ago when the minister announced his program. In my own city of Winnipeg, which is far from being at the top of the list in terms of rate of growth and therefore a long way away from having houses at prices which are obtainable in cities such as Vancouver, Toronto or Ottawa, there is a tremendous shortage of housing. Last August, the Winnipeg Tribune carried an article headlined "City housing crisis forecast." Let me put on the record a few paragraphs from that article, written by Nick Hunter, a Tribune staff writer. He wrote the following:

● (1650)

> Winnipeg will stumble into a major housing crisis next month when apartment vacancies slide to near zero, private developers and government spokesmen say.
> Winnipeg's apartment vacancy rate was 1.5 per cent during the last CMHC survey in April, a stunning drop from the 2.6 per cent rate of mid-1974 and a high 5.5 per cent in January, 1972.

In another article he wrote:

> Houses in Winnipeg are selling at a record pace despite soaring prices and high mortgage interest rates.
> The average price of a home on the Winnipeg real estate board's multiple listing service was $32,297 at the end of July, compared with $26,054 at the same time last year.

In other words, that is an increase of $6,000 in one year. Later in the same article he says:

> To the end of July this year, construction starts in Winnipeg were made on 1,415 single-family and semi-detached homes, a 30 per cent drop from the same period in 1974. There were 1,242 houses completed, a 26 per cent decline from the first seven months of last year.

As hon. members opposite have said, there has been some improvement, but certainly the number of homes built in Winnipeg will not increase this year and will come nowhere near meeting the needs of the people. I have already indicated that the largest factor in the high price of houses is the cost of mortgages. One would think that this was necessary, when in fact the mortgage rate has been determined by the continued intention of the government, working with the Bank of Canada, to keep interest rates in Canada higher than they are in the United States. One would think that the banks and other lending institutions simply could not afford to lend money for mortgages at a lower rate than the rates which I have already indicated they are charging. One would think that the banks are in bad financial straits. Nothing could be further from the truth. Just last week most of the banks issued their annual financial reports. A few days ago I put on the record the profit margins announced by the banks. They are tremendously high. I will not place them on the record today, because I seem to have misplaced them.

However, the major banks, including the Royal Bank, the Bank of Montreal, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Mercantile Bank, each showed profit increases over 1974 in the range of from 40 per cent to 125 per cent. It is not as if 1974 was a bad year, because in 1974 all the banks showed profit increases of something in the neighbourhood of 30 per cent. So we can see that the people of Canada are paying interest rates far higher than they ought to be paying.

The second reason for the high price of housing is the tremendous profit which is being made and which has been made by the large land development companies of Canada. Studies have been made in most major cities of Canada which indicate clearly that what we have is not a monopoly but a dozen or less companies who between them have purchased most of the land which will be needed in the next ten years. They purchase the land at relatively low cost, hold it until there is a demand, and then make exorbitant profits. Frank Clayton, a Toronto economist, made a study of the way the land development industry operates in Toronto. That study was reported in the Globe and Mail on September 26, 1975. He suggested the following:

—Toronto land developers made "very large" gains during the period from 1961 to 1975 because of rising house prices.

Dr. Clayton's study found that the average increase in the land component in the price of a house was $17,000 between 1971 and 1975. "It is unlikely that development costs including cost of servicing increased by more than $5,000 over this period."

That difference represents a clear and unconscionable rip-off of the Canadian house purchaser by the development companies. Later in the same article, Dr. Clayton is reported as follows:

He estimates that house purchasers in metro Toronto paid an additional $630 million during the last three years because of the lack of sewage treatment facilities.

Dr. Clayton also pointed out that while family incomes jumped sharply in the period between 1961 and 1975, the percentage of the family income which went into home ownership increased by far more than the increase in family income.

In 1961, 28 per cent of a family's income went to home ownership, but by 1975 this figure had risen to 42 per cent.

It has been assumed that people should not be paying more than 30 per cent of their total income for housing. When people are paying 40 per cent to 50 per cent of their total income for housing, they are sacrificing other essentials simply because they have been forced to buy a house, and to pay more than they can afford, because there is no housing available in the rental market.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

[Mr. Orlikow.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz)—External Affairs—Helsinki agreement—Method of determining extent to which commitments fulfilled; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Post Office—Maintenance of right of casual employees not to join union.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PRIVATE BILLS

[Translation]

NORTHLAND BANK ACT

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface) moved that Bill C-1002, to incorporate Northland Bank, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

● (1700)

[English]

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, nearly six months ago I spoke in a similar debate on another bank. At that time I was moved to comment on a bill which has not yet passed first reading stage in this House. I think it is lamentable that we are still at this stage 14 months after Bill C-7 was introduced by the former minister of finance. The bill has not been proceeded with. It had the dual purpose of enabling banks to be incorporated by the ordinary letters patent method, rather than by an act of parliament, and enabling the provincial government to own 10 per cent of the stock in a bank. Without in any way indicating that we on this side support Bill C-7, I would agree that its purposes are commendable. We are reserving our decision until the government decides to bring the bill in. But surely time would be saved if there were not 14-month delays.

Evidence adduced in committee disclosed that ten prairie-based co-operatives will combine their efforts to support the Northland Bank. It is no surprise to me, as a member from British Columbia, that those in what they call the west—although, of course, we do not really consider the prairies as part of the west—would consider that they need a bank to serve their area of commerce. In the west we have often had the feeling that the eastern bankers are not sufficiently concerned with the problems of western businessmen and favourable decisions are hard to come by. I think the eastern banks would do well to reassess their opinions. This is the second time in a few months that a proposal for a western-based bank has come before parliament. A bank in British Columbia was incorporated not too many years ago.

I would recommend that the Northland Bank group be sent on their way with best wishes. The committee study showed that it was a well prepared group and had thoroughly investigated the task ahead. Their head office will be in Winnipeg and they have stated their intention of establishing offices in Calgary, Edmonton, Regina and Winnipeg, so the business interests of the prairies will certainly be represented. It is their stated intention to serve business in the prairies with operating capital and term loans as necessary. These have been hard to come by in the prairies. I do not intend to repeat the list of their purposes here, but I think they are commendable and will provide a viable commercial and banking activity for businesses on the prairies.

If I had any concern about this bank it would be that the capital appears to be extremely low. Initially, the capital will be $10 million, half of it being subscribed by the sponsors. I compared that with recent incorporations and found that the Canadian Commercial and Industrial Bank, for instance, had capital of some $22 million although only half of it was called initially, as is usually the case. The Bank of British Columbia has done nicely with a branch bank operation with $12.5 million capital. The figures compare with those of the six major banks which have equities of at least $100 million; the Toronto Dominion Bank has equity of $334 million. Of course, the larger banks carry a very great branch structure which is costly, as is the servicing of individual deposits.

It was not too difficult to be convinced that this group with the Northland Bank could service their intended type of operation with the capital they have produced. I am sure the skill and expertise of the officers and chief executives of this bank will serve it well. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in giving the approval of this side of the House to Bill C-1002.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to second this motion. I visualize the Northland Bank, in essence, as the first publicly-owned bank in this country. It will be in competition with the chartered banks. As we all know, a number of co-operatives will own about 50 per cent of the shares in the Northland Bank. The bill before parliament would also allow an amendment to the Bank Act which would enable provincial governments to purchase up to 10 per cent of the outstanding shares of one of the existing banks. There is a possibility that Manitoba and Saskatchewan might be interested in going into partnership with the co-operatives and credit unions with a view to owning and controlling the first bank to be publicly directed by the people of this country. For that reason, I second the motion before the House.

The idea originated about four years ago when a number of people discussed the possibility of having the headquarters of a bank in the prairie provinces. As everybody in this House knows, the prairie economy has been growing very rapidly in the last few years through the development of oil in Alberta and the potash industry in Saskatchewan. The latter will be booming in terms of investment and revenue as world demand for fertilizer increases. As a result, I believe there is a place in the prairies for a Canadian bank.

The principal owners of the bank will be the credit unions and the co-operatives. The co-operatives are an indigenous part of the history of the prairie provinces. As well as the credit unions and retail co-operatives, we have the Farmers Union which markets over 70 per cent of the grain. The co-operatives have an impact on the lives of the people of the prairie provinces, particularly Saskatchewan, based on a philosophy of people working together rather than the old philosophy of private enterprise and the profit motive.

The group supporting this bank is made up primarily of different co-operative associations of the prairies. They are as follows: Federated Co-operatives Ltd., Co-operative Fire and Casualty Insurance Company, Co-operative Life Insurance Company, Co-operative Credit Society of Manitoba, Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, Saskatchewan Co-operative Credit Society, Co-operative Trust Company of Canada, Co-operative Superannuation Society, and the Calgary Co-op Ltd. These groups committed themselves to put up approximately 50 per cent of the planned capital of $10 million with which the bank will begin.

Shortly after the October election which brought in a minority government, the western economic opportunities conference was held in western Canada. People attending the conference said that we need a western bank to be based in the prairies. Some governments actually talked of owning such a bank, or investing in chartered banks, as it was felt this would give them greater control of the banks. This, in turn, would be of benefit to the public and enable governments to invest in social programs which we felt were more important than mere money-making schemes. I understand that a bill is to be brought forward in this House which will permit provincial governments to invest in chartered banks. This will be a step in the right direction.

Let me voice a concern. I believe the private, chartered banks of this country are becoming too powerful. Their immense power and wealth enables them to make decisions which can run counter to decisions which parliamentarians, as representatives of the people, make or should make. The time has come for this country to consider the possibility of putting the entire banking and financial system of this country under public ownership. I exclude co-ops and credit unions which are already owned by the people and controlled on the basis of one vote per shareholder, no matter how many shares any shareholder may own. The time has come for the public, collectively, to own our financial institutions so that we can make decisions according to social need, rather than according to the needs of multinational corporations operating here or overseas which are interested in profits. We want to consider this as we approach the decennial review of the Bank Act in 1977.

I saw in the newspaper the other day that the profits of our chartered banks have risen immensely over last year's profits. Their earnings were greater than those of the resource or manufacturing sectors. If I recall correctly, they earned some 41 per cent more last year than in the year before, and 81 per cent more in the third quarter of this year than in the third quarter of last. These are immense profits and we would do well to consider putting such a business enterprise under public ownership.

The establishment of the bank being considered is a step in the right direction as it will mean that a new bank will be based on the prairies. Co-ops, credit unions and, hopefully, western governments will invest in the bank. For these reasons I support its establishment. This is a good move for the people of the prairies and will provide help to ordinary people and small businessmen which is not available today. Our credit unions and co-ops have a good record for helping ordinary people of the kind our chartered banks will not touch. Such ordinary people hold out little prospect of profit. Perhaps this bank will operate differently, be closer to the community and provide many of the social and economic services which the small people, the farmers and others of rural communities on the prairies need.

For these reasons I support the establishment of the bank. I shall watch it closely in years to come, to see if it lives up to expectations as a bank with a difference, with a social conscience, as a bank which will try to work for the benefit of the community instead of working hand in hand with multinational corporations for profits.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing tonight with private bills and more specifically with Bill C-1002, entitled "An Act to incorporate the Northland Bank".

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out in connection with parliamentary procedures that, whenever a private bill is called at 5 o'clock in the House, it seems extremely difficult to have it adopted, while on the contrary, whenever a bill to incorporate a new bank is called, it seems that nobody can object, that everybody must keep quiet, in order to let some hon. members set up a corporation and open a new bank in Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, as you know, we have always been in favour of a monetary reform, and when we realize that some individuals want to set up a new bank in Canada, we have a unique opportunity to tell the House what we think not of banks as such, as private institutions, but of the Canadian monetary system and what ought to be changed.

I have been struck, Mr. Speaker, by the exchange between the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the bank's president, Mr. Wilson. As reported on page 74:28 in Issue No. 74 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) asked Mr. Wilson this question about the bank to be incorporated:

Will this new bank that you hope to set up have the privilege of multiplying its deposits by X per cent, . . .

To which Mr. Wilson gave this answer a bit later:

Northland Bank is not creating money.

A bit later, as reported on page 74:38 of the same issue, Mr. Wilson had this to say:

What you have described is, of course, the path of money as it flows through the economy. In a sense what you say is correct; money is created.

Mr. Speaker, for years we have said that banks are making money from nothing.

● (1720)

We were laughed at. We were not believed. But tonight, for the benefit of my colleagues, I shall quote many bank managers, presidents of the United States or other countries and important men who admitted years ago what Social Crediters have always advocated. I shall therefore tonight make a short history of the international monetary system, or rather of the creation of banks in the world.

In 1694, when King William III found himself in financial difficulties, he called upon a group of London merchants who lent him the sum of 1,200,000 sterling pounds at 8 per cent interest, in addition to a sum of 4,000 pounds for the administration of the loan. In return for that loan, the king gave the merchants the privilege of establishing the Bank of England, along with the right to issue credits or loans for amounts above their liquid assets or reserves.

In 1935, the former Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, said:

[English]

—the government's most conspicuous and sacred responsibility—

[Translation]

—was given, in 1694, by the King of England, to a group of London merchants who later on founded the Bank of England. Seventy years later, England having given over control of its money and credit to the London Merchants Association, by then become the England Bankers Association, which founded the Bank of England, Mr. Benjamin Franklin, then ambassador of the English colonies at London, on being asked why the colonies were so prosperous, answered:

[English]

—because we issue our own money. In 1764, England prohibited this practice.

[Translation]

Because England, at the time, issued its own money without going through the intermediary of the banks, it prevented the colonies from issuing their own money and credit.

[English]

In 1811 Congress voted down the renewal of the charter of the First Bank of the United States, which precipitated the war of 1811.

In 1861 the international bankers well knew that "debt free" money, or "honest money" would cause unlimited prosperity, which they could not control—

[Translation]

And, in 1862,—

[English]

In 1862 Lincoln issued $450 million United States notes, backed by the integrity of the nation and spent into circulation in accordance with this constitutional clause. On May 31, 1878, the amount of these "Lincoln Greenbacks" in circulation totalled $346,691,016. On that date a statute was enacted prohibiting the withdrawal of "Lincoln Greenbacks" from circulation. On March 19, 1963, the Treasury Department advised that this issue is carried in their statement as "Debt Bearing No Interest." If these notes had borne interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, compounded semi-annually, the total interest cost through December 31, 1963 would have amounted to approximately $100 billion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on December 23, 1913, two days before Christmas, Senator Nelson Aldrich of New York, dean of the Rockefeller clan, taking advantage of the absence of the Congress over the Christmas holiday, amended Section 1, Sub-section 8, para. 5 of the American Constitution, which read as follows:

[English]

"Congress shall have power to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures."

The next clause in this same Section 8 of the Constitution says that the Congress has the power to "punish counterfeiters."

[Translation]

On December 23, 1913, the American congress passed the Federal Reserve Act, at the instigation of Mr. Aldrich, Senator for New York, led by the European Rothschilds—

[English]

This Federal Reserve Act gave the power to coin the money to the Federal Reserve Banks, a system owned and operated not by the United States Government, as many have been led to believe, but by a group of private Rothschild and affiliated bankers sent here from Europe, sent here for the express purpose of gaining control of this nation's money system.

[Translation]

This is why Minnesota Congressman Lindberg said after the change in the U.S. constitution, and I quote:

[English]

"This Act establishes the most gigantic trust on earth. When the President signs the Bill, the invisible Government by the Monetary Power will be legalized . . .

[Translation]

And, Mr. Speaker, Mr. MacFadden, former Pennsylvania Bank Association chairman, said to the Congress on June 10, 1930, and I quote:

[English]

"Mr. Chairman we have in this country one of the most corrupt institutions the world has ever known. I refer to the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Banks. This evil institution has impoverished and ruined the people."

[Translation]

And in the debates of September 21, 1964 of the U.S. Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce, we can read the following: As former U.S. President Abraham Lincoln said:

[English]

The power to create money is an inherent power of government. As President Lincoln said·

The privilege of creating money and issuing money is not only the supreme prerogative of the government, it is the government's greatest opportunity.

During the past several centuries, various governments in the Western World have, at various times, delegated the money-creating power to private groups or had this power taken from them by default. In these situations, control of the nation's affairs has been not so much in the hands of the official head of state, but in the hands of the private groups controlling the money system. A famous British banker once summed up the matter this way:

They who control the credit of the nation direct the policy of governments, and hold in their hands the destiny of the people. (Reginald McKenna, Chancellor of the Exchequer in Britain during the World War I period).

[Translation]

And Mr. Henry Ford Sr. had said:

[English]

If the people understood the banking system there would be a revolution before morning.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the control over the monetary policy of a country by banks is exercised through the sale of government bonds to private banking firms, namely the banks, and this is clearly expressed in the following:

[English]

The answer to above question was given by London bankers in their "Hanzard Circular", 1863 to their colleagues in the U.S.A., when the National Bank Act was being drafted. The existence of the banking system depended on the issue of governement bonds which must be used as a banking basis; for whereas they could not control the issue of government money, "we can control the bonds and through them the banking issues."

[Translation]

Mr. Thomas Edison said this about government bonds which are sold to private firms, namely banks, and I quote:

[English]

"If our government can issue a dollar bond it can issue a dollar bill. The element that makes the bond good makes the bill good also. The difference between the bond and the bill is that the bond lets the broker collect twice the amount . . . the currency pays nobody but those who contribute in some useful ways."

[Translation]

—contrary to what Mr. Wilson said at the beginning of his remarks before the committee, Mr. McKenna, Midland Bank of England chairman said, quote:

[English]

The bank can create money out of "nothing" and destroy it just as well, but the debts remain years, centuries, even if the money has disappeared.

Governor Eccles, president of the Reserve Bank of United States:

The banks create and destroy the money.

Graham Tower, governor of the Bank of Canada:

It is very evident that the banks create money out of "nothing".

When a bank lends, it creates money out of "nothing",

"Further, I agree that banks create money and that trade depression arises from faults in the banking system in the discharge of that vital function."

—R. G. Hawtrey: Assistant Secretary to H. M. Treasury, B.B.C. Broadcast, March 22, 1933.

Permit me to issue and control the money of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws . . ."

—Mayer Anselm Rothchild.

Someone has to borrow every dollar we have in circulation, cash or credit. If the banks create ample synthetic credit, we are prosperous; if not, we starve. We are absolutely without a permanent money system. When one gets a complete grasp of the picture, the tragic absurdity of our hopeless position is almost incredible; but there it is. The banking problem is the most important problem intelligent persons can investigate and reflect upon. It is so important that our present civilization may collapse unless it is widely understood and the defects remedied very soon.

—Robert Hemphili, U.S. banker.

● (1730)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I could go on with those quotations for ever. American President Woodrow Wilson used to say, and I quote:

[English]

President Woodrow Wilson had this to say:

"A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the nation and all our activities are in the hands of a few men. We have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the world—no longer a government of free opinion, no longer a government by conviction and vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and duress of small groups of dominant men."

"The great monopoly in this country is the monopoly big credits."

[Translation]

What I find most amazing about all that, Mr. Speaker, is to see the NDP which is on record in the House as an opponent of monopolies, support credit monopoly which is, however, the height of monopoly. I was amazed today to see an NDP member supporting a bill which aims at enlarging credit monopoly. Since we all know that credit monopoly automatically leads to production monopoly, the Neo-democrats think they can control the latter through state socialism in government, without interfering with credit monopoly which always stands above government.

[English]

Senator Louis McFadden had this to say:

The Federal Reserve (privately owned banks) are one of the most corrupt institutions the world has ever seen.

Horace Greeley, founder of the New York Tribune, has said:

While boasting of our noble deeds, we are careful to conceal the ugly fact that by an iniquitous money system we have nationalized a system of oppression, which though more refined, is not less cruel than the old system of chattel slavery.

President Andrew Jackson:

If Congress has the right under the Constitution to issue paper money, it was given them to be used by themselves, not to be delegated to individuals or to corporations.

[Translation]

At the Canadian Banking Committee meeting, as may be seen on page 394 of the minutes, Mr. Grant Howard said in answer to a question, I quote:

[English]

Will you tell me why a government with power to create money should give that power away to a private monopoly, and then borrow that which parliament can create itself, back at interest, to the point of national bankruptcy?

MR. GRAHAM TOWERS: Now, if parliament wants to change the form of operating the banking system, then certainly that is within the power of parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it was before the banking committee as well that Mr. John Adams, President of the United States in 1787—

[English]

All the perplexities, confusion, and distress in America arises, not from the defects of the Constitution or Confederation—not from want of honour or virtue so much as from downright ignorance of the nature of coin, credit and circulation.

Mr. Philip Benson, president of the American Bankers Association:

There is no more direct way to capture control of a nation than through its credit system.

Mr. Mackenzie King, as reported in Hansard for June 27, 1934, said:

As I said the other evening, once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation. Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred RESPONSIBILITY all talk of the sovereignty of Parliament and of democracy is idle and futile.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those were the words of the right hon. Prime Minister, in 1934, when the Alberta Social Crediters were about to take power. In the speech he made in Saskatoon, he repeated the same historical phrase, and in the House, on June 27, he repeated it again to gain the votes of the Social Crediters. At this time, the Social Crediters from the west believed in the Prime Minister's good sentiments but, once in office, in the House, the Bank of Canada was established and became a shadow bank, which does not play its part.

It is used as a mere "blanket" by chartered banks since the Bank of Canada does not have any control over Canada's monetary system. This is why the Social Crediters are not against the establishment of a new bank. The purpose of banks is to achieve profits, not to create money in the form of credit. We have nothing against banks earning profits but we do not want them to coin money in the form of credit in bank accounts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him is over.

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I need only a few minutes more to end my remarks. I might have as many as 40 or 50 quotations from people highly qualified to talk about finance. But when someone dares say in this House—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member wishes to pursue his remarks, he will have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the comments which have just been made by my colleague from Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), I would like to point out that when such a bill is introduced, there is a chance that an agreement will be reached to let it pass.

It must be realized that it is precisely a field where we are ridiculed each time we mention among others the possibility of making the services of the Bank of Canada available to all Canadians. We are almost laughed at, we are accused of ever advocating a fad and some go as far as referring to our money printing-press.

Mr. Speaker, for many years, we have been ridiculed because we have been urging the government to let the Canadian people enjoy the advantages so easily grated to chartered banks, as they want us to do this evening by remaining silent and allowing another bank to create credit.

● (1740)

We are obviously not against the principle of creating credit, but we would like so much that the principle be established to foster the development, the progress of the country and since the serious consideration of the proposals that are made is systematically denied, that strikes us as rather strange at a time when we are examining the possibility of giving another corporation the opportunity of doing exactly what we ask be done by the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more normal than our seizing this opportunity during private members' hour to point out to each member of the House that there should be more logical and serious reactions to our proposals to make credit social for the benefit of Canada as a whole. Mr. Speaker, it is rather odd and strange that that principle be accepted on one condition: that others could benefit from it. People agree with the suggestion to create money, to create credit, on condition that it may serve to enrich some high financiers and increase their assets and capital. Under this condition, it is good.

But when we urge that power be given to issue the credit needed to develop as a nation, apparently it is no good any more. It is fair provided it is given to others so they will grow rich. But if we refer to the same principle and if we are willing to increase the benefits of chartered banks, we should like Parliament to understand that we want to apply it only for the public financing that we need and to use it as a means to fight inflation.

Northland Bank

The House has been dealing for the past few days with an example which I should like to submit to hon. members. Canada is faced with a financing problem which I feel is becoming something of a catastrophe: the Olympic Games in Montreal. Although we are only a few months away from the opening of these games, we know already that there will be a $600 million deficit and that, to date, the federal government is leaving the whole responsibility for this deficit in the hands of the Quebec government. Mr. Speaker, let us consider what is taking place and what will take place tomorrow.

As to the $600 million needed to be able to wipe out the eventual deficit of those games they can be obtained through any chartered bank in Canada and perhaps through this new bank. According to the Prime Minister—that is his answer to date—the City of Montreal and the province of Quebec said they would manage to fill the deficit themselves. So they will resort to loans and they will have to borrow $600 million and repay it at a rate of 9, 10, 11, 12 or 13 per cent which means that generations and generations will have to pay for that gigantic debt.

Mr. Speaker, why authorize high financiers through chartered banks to finance that project to the detriment of the whole population which will have to pay a lot for the profits of the bank owners? Actually, we could loan ourselves the credit required without interest since it must be readily admitted that if we loan ourselves the credit that is needed, we do not have to pay ourselves the interest, because there would be absolutely no point in it. Why? We would certainly like to have an answer to that. Why systematically go into debt by giving high finance permission to lend us to better take away from us a good part of our incomes through interests? And why admit the principle that the Royal Bank, the Bank Canadian National, the Montreal Bank, the Northland Bank should have the permission to issue the credits required, well paid of course, through interest? They are given that permission and we would be too stupid, too innocent, to give it to ourselves. That is where the problem lies. And we are taking this opportunity precisely to point it out.

And if this Parliament can give an authorisation to individuals to create credit—I did say create—and make enormous profits with the permission that is being given to them, how is it that it is very funny when we advocate the election of the Social Credit Party of Canada? How is it that that becomes funny then? Why does our party become a money printing press and why tonight do we have to deal with the incorporation of the Northland Bank? What difference is there? Yet, when we ask that Parliament authorize the Bank of Canada to issue the credits needed for public financing, for the progress of the whole country, how is that we are told: Well, you are going to get your money press going to be able to finance. Your solutions are easy, you are going to print money. And we are ridiculed when we ask that, when we suggest it. But we should not laugh when we are being asked to grant that permission to Messrs. Ronald Thomas Curtis, Henry George Decuypere, Richard Earl Foster, Donald Victor Larson, Philip Duncan Sampson.

Mr. Speaker, let us face things in a logical and realistic way once and for all. Why are our proposals turned down?

When we get a truly logical explanation of that unfair policy, maybe we will be in a position to give the hon. member for Saint-Boniface (Mr. Guay) more satisfaction. However, Mr. Speaker, we cannot miss this opportunity of stressing the lack of logic of a government which is going to accuse us of being one-track minded when we suggest that we should be given the permission to grant ourselves credit. After deriding us for advocating that measure, they come and ask us: Gentlemen, allow this bill to pass, since what you are requesting will be granted to some people.

Mr. Speaker, they just seem to be thinking of us as a bunch of insignificant dummies. Even if only to remind all hon. members that we are not such dummies as that, I will have been quite glad to take part in this debate and insist that we do not object in principle to people setting up bank to try and help people borrow funds. We would just like to stress that if that principle is a good one, it always is. It should be applied especially where it is most needed, that is in financing state ventures. It should be applied anywhere there is a possibility of achieving financially all the physical potentialities we may have, Mr. Speaker, especially in an inflationary situation such as the present one, at a time when we are trying by all means to curb inflation, when no one thinks of attacking the roots of the problem, but when they just try to deal with a dramatic situation through price freezes and wage controls.

Mr. Speaker, we should now more than ever set up banks and provide credit. We agree with that, as stated in the provisions we have to study, Mr. Speaker, we would just have the very same principle implemented in the management of our nation. And since it is an authority which we would confer on ourselves on behalf of the Canadian people, that is why we always say that there should be no interest. Mr. Speaker, if that principle were understood, I am sure we could very easily welcome requests such as the one that is made to us.

I would like to conclude by saying this: through this proposal, the government wants us to admit that credits and money can be issued, provided some people make profits out of them. Well, I deny this. It is not necessary to have people making profits to create credits. That is why I ask that we be consistent and accept the same principle every time public administration is invovlved and that we give the Bank of Canada the same power we give chartered banks as regards public administration and achievements.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this private bill. As usual, this private bill is introduced in extraordinary circumstances. I note that the government members are very surprised to see that we, of the Social Credit party, oppose these bills. In my opinion, my two colleagues have just opened the eyes of several members who are put to sleep and wrapped up in cotton-wool by the terrible finance and trusts that we have today.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we would like to create credits for the Canadians, for the municipalities as well as for Canadian organizations. For this reason, we are called stupid. Today, we want Canadian credit to be created, because it is the credit of Canada. We have asked questions to certain people. They invest $20 million. For what? To produce $200 million. At 12 per cent, they get $24 million in interest a year. This is a nice investment, Mr. Speaker. Twenty million which will produce $24 million of interest a year! This is what will be allowed. This is what chartered banks are now allowed to make. If there is a bill that I want to defend tonight, it is this one, because it concerns only credit unions.

I remember that in Quebec, we fought to have a bank charter for our credit unions. The banks refused; it is not the government but the banks which control the government. They rejected us because we needed a bank to function. The west will finally have all its chartered banks and a charter for the operation of its credit unions. I believe the hon. member to be sincere and I do not want to kill this bill. I want the House to have the opportunity to vote on this. But we are accepting this bill only because it concerns credit unions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have unanimous consent of the House to send the other bill to the committee so that there will be an opportunity to discuss it very fully. I thought I would ask that in view of the fact that the time is up.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

● (1800)

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I discussed the matter with hon. members on all sides of the House and they agreed that though it is six o'clock, Bill S-29 could simply be referred to the committee. It was agreed that if any hon. member wishes to put questions in committee or elsewhere, the officials of the companies concerned would be willing to meet him and answer his questions. I just wish to point out that this bill merely provides for the amalgamation of two companies from the Atlantic provinces into a larger company which could then become more important nationally.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent on the suggestion of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Consent is not unanimous. The time appointed for the consideration of private members' hour having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At 6.30 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

AUTHORIZATION FOR CMHC TO MAKE INTEREST REDUCTION GRANTS, CASH GRANTS, ETC., TO ENCOURAGE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs) that Bill C-77, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, when I was speaking this afternoon I was discussing the tremendous power which land developers have been able to accumulate by their purchase of land at very favourable terms to them, land which they keep until there is a demand and which they then sell at a substantial profit to themselves. I am not critical of land developers—they are part of our free enterprise system and they do what they are permitted. I spoke about the situation in Toronto, and now I want to put on the record the situation in my own city in Winnipeg.

According to a study done in Winnipeg, Winnipeg's four major private developers share a land bank among them of 10,000 acres worth about $35 million. BACM Industries Limited emerges as the giant among the four private developers. This company, which is involved in all facets of the house building industry, has assembled a total of $4,000 acres. Ladco Company Limited holds 2,400 acres. Qualico Developments Ltd, has almost 2,200 acres.

Until recently, says the study done by an officer of the Manitoba Housing and Renewal Corporation, these developers had virtual control of the residential land market and had only to contend with each other in buying land. However, competition among these companies was minimal as each would respect the other's right to assemble properties in certain areas of the city. These holdings put the developers in a very favourable position of being able to supply large quantities of land required for future residential development in Winnipeg.

The study goes on to point out that in one case one company was able to assemble a large parcel of land at about $400 an acre. When one realizes that land is now selling for houses in the neighbourhood of $10,000 to $20,000 per lot, even calculating the cost of putting in the services one can see that land developers have done extremely well and, as I indicated earlier, they have been the big winners in the game of getting as much out of the public as possible.

What has been the response of the present minister and former ministers in Liberal governments to the needs of the people? Instead of reducing housing costs to a level which could be afforded by Canadian families, the government is attempting, in the minister's own words, to help them with their cash flow position—in other words give them a monthly subsidy, and perhaps they will be able to afford the exorbitant charges.

There is no doubt that the Assisted Home Ownership Program is popular among moderate income families living outside metropolitan areas where they can find homes within the price limits the government has set in order to qualify for assistance. However, my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert), said yesderday that the upper limits the government has set are far below the price for which one can buy a home in metropolitan areas of Toronto, Vancouver, or most of the other cities in Canada. Yet what has the government done in pushing its Assisted Home Ownership Program? It has cut back very drastically on the kind of housing which is the most needed in this country, namely, public housing programs.

A former minister of housing in the province of Ontario pointed out that lack of low cost housing is one of Canada's major problems. The minister has said he recognizes this, yet Ottawa this year proposes to spend only 12.5 per cent more on housing than it spent in the last fiscal year. That hardly takes care of inflation, let alone the need. The province and metro Toronto planned to build 8,000 senior citizen units and 2,000 family units in 1975-76, but Ottawa decided that the middle income groups needed the help more, so now Toronto will be lucky if it gets about 2,000 senior citizen units and 500 family units. It is not because the people who can afford to get into AHOP need housing more than the people who should have been accommodated in public housing or in senior citizen housing; it is because they have more political clout, and it is to them the government responds.

Instead of going ahead with more public housing the minister has decided to push the limited dividend housing program and the Assisted Home Ownership Program. This did not meet with the support of Ontario or many of the other provinces because it removed the emphasis from the low income group where the greatest need still exists. AHOP duplicates a program, Home Ownership Made Easy, which Ontario launched long before Ottawa had ever conceived the kind of program we have in AHOP.

What the Ontario government wanted last spring was for the federal government to commit itself to three fundamental principles. The Ontario government wanted the federal government to consult the provinces before setting its housing priorities. I am sure there is not an hon. member of this House who would not agree—particularly if he does not think of how his party, and especially the government party, wants to do things—that the province and the local municipalities know better the needs of their residents than does the bureaucracy in Ottawa, than does that great head of CMHC who made a fortune in building houses, the kind of houses on which he could make a profit, not the kind of houses people really needed.

Surely we should be consulting provincial governments and municipalities more than we have been. The Ontario government wanted the federal government to give a three year forward commitment on funds, in other words, not to have the kind of roller coaster we have now, where for months on end the provinces wait, do nothing, make no plans, buy no land, do not put in sewer or water connections, and do not put in power lines because they do not know how much they will receive from Ottawa. Then suddenly, particularly near the end of the year, Ottawa realizes it has not spent all the money allocated, and the provinces are flooded with money they cannot use. I will come to that in a moment in respect of my own province of Manitoba.

Finally, the provincial government of Ontario wanted the federal government to give the provinces block funding, with the provinces and the local governments using the funds where they saw the need. Surely that makes a great deal more sense than the unilateral, inconsistent decisions made by the present minister, which seem to have two objectives in mind: first, not what are the needs of the people, but what will get us the votes; second, what the builders and developers want, not what the people who need houses want.

Let me discuss for just a couple of minutes the situation in Manitoba. I wish to do that because, as I have already said, the minister's program is conceived and executed with virtually no consultation with the provinces. The province of Manitoba had been willing and had gone into very extensive public housing and elderly persons' housing programs from 1972 to 1973. In the last couple of years it has done a great deal less, to a large extent because it has had so little co-operation from the federal government.

Early in 1975 the federal government cut back the funds allocated to the province of Manitoba for public housing to around $15 million. The province was willing to use at least $25 million more—and it still is—but it did not hear about it for almost the whole of 1975, and only recently has there been any indication from the federal government that there would be money available. Then, of course, if the money is not used before the fiscal year is over, the province will be blamed for inefficiency and for not being ready to use all the money which is available.

The province should have known early in 1975 how much money Ottawa was prepared to give to it for housing projects in Manitoba. The province is ready to go forward with a number of limited dividend housing projects. These are projects funded under a special CMHC program involving fixed limits on rent charges. At least that is what we have always thought. The federal government is supposedly particularly interested in the limited dividend program, and the province of Manitoba is willing to co-operate, although it has some concern about certain aspects of the program, including the possibility that the rental charges for some units may be too high.

The government said, before the most recent announcement in the last few days, that indeed the rental charges in some limited dividend housing projects are to be increased by as much as 30 per cent, and I hope to have a few minutes to talk about that. The province of Manitoba wanted to secure an agreement with Ottawa that if limited dividend housing were constructed by the Manitoba Housing and Renewal Corporation, federal rent regulations would be flexible enough to ensure that those who really need accommodation would not be excluded because they could not afford to pay the prescribed standard rent.

Some Manitoba senior citizens houses were erected by non profit organizations such as the Legion, Kiwanis, and many other organizations which deserve a great deal of credit for the efforts they made. They are now finding it difficult to keep their tenants because there is no program for subsidizing rents for people who are, in the main, old age pensioners and those who are living on very limited incomes. The province of Manitoba has indicated to the tenants and to the federal government that it is prepared jointly to subsidize the rents of those who cannot afford the full rent. As far as I know, until recently the federal government refused to co-operate in that kind of subsidization.

The province of Manitoba is arguing very strongly for the development of a medium term federal housing investment plan designed to ensure, as the province of Ontario was arguing, that adequate funds would be committed to housing for at least the next five years. The province argued that the demand for housing across Canada would remain unfilled even if there were 250,000 starts each year until 1980. They realized that a rational plan was needed to meet this demand, a plan which would recognize that adequate housing is a necessity of life and a legitimate right of every Canadian. Housing investment should be planned in that light and not manipulated as a tool of fiscal policy where the tap gets turned off or turned on, depending on national economic conditions.

When I was speaking earlier I was chastized by members on the other side because I suggested the minister's goal of over 200,000 housing starts would not be met this year. I suppose the interjections were based on the fact that in the last couple of months there has been a sharp increase in the number of starts each month. The figures were published today for the first eleven months of 1975 and, according to CMHC, there were 162,500 housing starts. Madam Speaker, there is no way that we are going to get another 37,500 units started in December, so in fact we are not going to get the 200,000 units the minister promised, let alone the 250,000 that the province of Manitoba has suggested we need.

I know that the minister and members opposite will say that in arguing that we ought to be pressing ahead with public housing, instead of the kind of Mickey Mouse programs of assisted ownership the minister has been pushing, we are being partisan, and so on. In this respect I should like to quote from a statement made by the Canadian Council on Social Development as reported in the Globe and Mail of November 13, 1975, as follows:

> Low income people have been getting a declining portion of federal housing aid in recent years, says Jeffrey Patterson, housing program director for the Canadian Council on Social Development.

Later the article reads:

> CMHC figures show that the share of the corporation's capital budget going to public housing rose to 37.4 per cent in 1972 from 24.3 per cent in 1970.

The minister who was in charge of housing in 1972 deserves commendation, particularly when we find that in 1974 the proportion is not the 24.3 per cent it was in 1970, and is not the 37.4 per cent it was in 1972, but has dropped dramatically to 19.2 per cent. The article continues:

> This program, which provides interest-reducing payments to builders of low-cost and moderate-cost housing, mainly helps moderate income earners, Mr. Patterson said. "To some extent AHOP does benefit low income people. But where it does so, it is primarily because of additional provincial assistance."
>
> In Saskatchewan, for example, 61.3 per cent of those benefitting from AHOP assistance in 1974 had annual incomes of up to $7,999. That province adds money to aid supplied by the federal government.
> But in Ontario and British Columbia, where there is no additional provincial money for AHOP home buyers, only 8 per cent were in this income bracket.
> Nationally, 19.1 per cent were in this income range in 1974.

I think that demonstrates clearly that the federal government and the minister have opted out of helping those people who need help most.

Let me take a couple of minutes to deal with a question which has arisen in the last couple of days, and that is the substantial increases in rent that seem to be in sight for those people who supposedly have been the concern of the present and former Liberal governments, and for whom limited dividend housing programs were designed. Some tenants faced with very sharp increases in rent met the minister last Saturday and presented their case. They had been told they were going to have increases of between 20 per cent and 30 per cent in rent. They insisted that the developers who own the property and built it under very favourable lending rates of interest from the federal government and Central Mortgage and Housing, now claim that their costs have increased so sharply that they need to increase rents 20 per cent to 30 per cent.

The tenants are saying they have no confidence in the landlords and they have no confidence in Central Mortgage and Housing. They told the minister that they want the right to inspect the books of Central Mortgage and Housing so that they can be sure costs have gone up. I can understand their feelings because Central Mortgage and Housing has never given anybody but the builders that they represent any information, not the ordinary people who are in difficutly—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member's time has now expired.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Madam Speaker, one of the major results of the period of inflation we have experienced in the past few years has been skyrocketing prices for housing, whether owned or rented, and an acute shortage, in many areas, of suitable accommodation. The bill we are presently debating aims at alleviating both these problems. It also will have some other very beneficial side effects.

Until now those people who already owned their own homes were in a position immensely more favourable than that of, for instance, young couples attempting to save to buy a house while being faced with rapidly escalating rental payments. This new program will help to reduce the artificially inflationary effect which results from home owners trading up to more expensive homes while already in possession of considerable equity in their present dwellings.

It is widely accepted that a family should spend no more than 25 per cent of its income on housing, but a very significant proportion of Canadians find it impossible to remain within that guideline while still providing their families with decent homes. In order to keep their payments under that 25 per cent level, families with children and in need of assistance will be eligible for annual grants of up to $750. In other cases, interest-free loans will be available for at least five years in order to close the gap between present mortgage interest rates and an 8 per cent mortgage. In other words, all Canadians who wish to purchase moderately priced housing will be assured that their monthly payments will be equal to those on an 8 per cent mortgage.

One of the more significant measures in the bill which will have a beneficial effect in my riding and, specifically in the city of Guelph, is the $1,000 per unit grants to be made available to municipalities approving the construction of medium density homes falling within regional AHOP and assisted rental price limits, and the provision of further assistance for sewer and water treatment facilities.

The city of Guelph presently has a lot levy of up to $1,500 per lot unit, a levy significantly higher than those in other cities in the area. For that reason there has been a serious shortage of housing available in Guelph which falls under the limit for assistance from the Assisted Home Ownership Program. With that $1,000 grant and, hopefully, a higher qualifying price for units purchased in Guelph, which is presently being reviewed, I am hopeful and reassured that the housing situation in my constituency will soon improve markedly. I am also confident that the increase in loans to builders providing rental accommodation at rents controlled by CMHC will bring about significant improvements.

I was happy to learn today that approval was given for the construction of 101 apartment units in Guelph under this program. It is a virtual certainty that had the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) not taken the steps to make improvements in this area which he did, those apartment units would not have been started.

Wellington riding has benefited recently from a $1,112,-027 loan and a grant of $676,523 from CMHC to provide for the construction of sanitary sewers, a pumping station, and a sewage treatment plant in the village of Rockwood. This type of action is illustrative of the progressive policies enacted by the Ministry of State for Urban Affairs.

It is well known that a healthy construction industry contributes greatly to the over-all strength of our economy. This new housing action program will inject an additional three quarters of a billion dollars into housing in Canada in 1976. Our economy has been waiting for several years for this type of monetary infusion. Of immediate impact will be the creation of an estimated 32,000 jobs next year in the construction industry alone. However, of potentially greater benefit to the economy will be the stimulus to our manufacturing industries as production of construction and home furnishing materials increases. Present indications are that our national economic picture is brightening as the world situation also improves. This new and increased activity in the construction and manufacturing industries will help to restore confidence in the economy and make certain that productivity in the country generally improves as we pull out of the present situation.

The new housing program forms an important part of the government's attack on inflation. Canadians will have more housing available of good quality, at a price they can afford. This action will do much to answer critics' statements that the wage and price controls will bring about a decrease in economic growth. On the contrary, we can expect to see inflation brought under control and, at the same time, productivity stimulated by a healthy housing market and construction activity.

By this program the federal government is committed to encouraging the production of one million new housing units during the next four years. Certainly this figure will be and has been attacked by skeptics as an impossible goal but, as the parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)) pointed out yesterday in the House, we are already assured of achieving our target of 210,000 housing starts in 1975. This program is what the Canadian people need and what they have been asking for. Housing has been mentioned as a problem in every election held recently, both federal and provincial. The minister is to be praised for providing this program to Canadians and deserves the full support of this House in seeing it becomes implemented immediately.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Madam Speaker, three years ago I was elected to this chamber, and the passage of each year has been marked by the various housing programs the government has brought forward. It seems that every year a new housing program is brought forward, which will do great things.

Mr. Orlikow: It is done several times a year.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): It's done several times a year, as my hon. friend to my left says.

This evening I want to refer to some remarks the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) made one month ago, when replying to the statement of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson). She expressed the views of this party when she said that we welcome any government initiative to stimulate the residential construction industry, particularly in view of the fact that moves taken by the government in the past 18 months have largely been responsible for the depression experienced by this very important sector of the economy.

She then went on to say that she found several basic shortcomings in the minister's program. She said that, first, the measures will not stimulate the provision of the amount of mortgage funding required even to supply the new housing mentioned by the minister. Second, there was nothing in the statement to deal with the major problem presented by high interest rates. I will deal with this later. Finally, she said the program failed to deal with the necessity for continuity in housing policy. She suggested that there is scarcely any reference made to co-operation with the provinces, and she ended saying there was nothing original about the proposed measures. I agree with my colleague from Kingston and the Islands.

The housing shortage largely is a matter of geography. I tell the House that in many places in Canada there is no shortage of housing. The opposite is true. For example, in Squamish, British Columbia, not far from Vancouver, there is a surfeit of housing, all kinds of housing, single family, rental housing—you name it. The reason is that tenants are mobile and can move. If a tenant's job ends, he can simply move. But you cannot pick up housing and move it. Housing is put in place for a long time and serves over the long haul. It stays where it is built—unless you happen to meet a house on a trailer coming down the highway the other way.

There is surplus housing in places other than Squamish. Recently, in the Public Accounts Committee, in these very parliament buildings, we examined the question of housing in Gimli, Manitoba. There is a surplus of housing in the town, and the Department of National Defence was paying for this surplus housing. The people in Gimli, Manitoba, who faced a housing shortage on the private market, tried to talk the government into sharing the expense for housing. The housing was being wasted, and the government was paying for empty housing. But would the government say, yes, we will let the people of Gimli, Manitoba, share the cost, rent this housing and thereby ease the burden on the taxpayers of Canada?

An hon. Member: No way!

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): No way, Madam Speaker. Those housing units stayed empty for I do not know how many years, to the cost of the taxpayers of this country.

We often hear talk of the housing shortage, and of the government's countless plans to combat it. Anyone who considers the housing situation must realize that there is no housing shortage; there is a money shortage. That is what is wrong. If you have money, you can find housing—you can buy or rent any sort of house pretty nearly anywhere you want. If you have no money, or not enough, then you are out in the cold. I will be showing as these remarks drag on—

● (2040)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Drag on?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): My friends concede that my remarks will not drag. I hope to be able to demonstrate that the government has been the cause of the shortage of money and the high cost of housing in this country. I have to go back. It is nearly three years ago that I first spoke of housing in this House.

Mr. Broadbent: And nothing has changed.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): That is right. At that time I made a statement which caused a lot of mirth on the government side. I advocated that if the government got out of the housing business, the housing industry would provide the housing required by Canadians. They laughed. It is now three years later. How many plans have they put forward? As my friends to my left say, nothing has changed.

I wish to read a sentence or two from what I said on March 22, 1973, in this very chamber. I quote:

> I am going to argue that federal housing policies, current or proposed, do more harm than good, and that the best thing the federal government could do to help us Canadians with our housing problems would be to leave us alone.

Perhaps I should have suggested they resign.

Disband the bureaucracies, cut taxes, and let us solve our own problems, with the interference of our local or provincial governments it we choose, but without federal interference, without federal bureaucrats taking our money from us in taxes and spending it as they want it spent rather than as we want it spent.

Later in the speech I said this, and I think it still applies:

If it is really our desire to raise the material standard of living of poor people, rather than push them around and run their lives, then we should abandon the government policies that impoverish them. In place of the present mess of welfare schemes and housing schemes, we should give the poor people the cash presently spent on these things and let the poor people spend the cash in the ways that give them the greatest satisfaction. To build our preferred type of housing for the poor people and to hire thousands of bureaucrats to oversee them in these ghettos is wasteful.

That last word describes practically all of the housing proposals of the government. The government continually seems to forget another quote from my speech.

—the state is the great fiction by which everyone tries to live at the expense of everyone else;—

I do not know where it thinks it gets the money to buy houses for people it thinks should have the kind of housing it wants to give them.

—government . . . can destroy but not create, can build nothing of itself but can seize only what others have created;

The only resources at the disposal of the government are our resources. That is a lesson that the government seems to have missed all the way along the line.

Earlier this year there was another attempt by the government to solve the housing problems as it saw them. I do not like to quote myself, but I cannot think of anyone else who says it as well. In the debate on Bill C-46 I said this:

Bill C-46 is another example of the band-aid legislation which has become this government's standard attempt to solve serious national problems.

I have been finding some support for some of these ideas I have been giving to the government because it needs them. In that same speech in January of this year I quoted from an editorial in the Vancouver Province. It read:

—our housing difficulties, particularly in the rental field, compose a classic case of problem creation by government.

It continued:

We did not begin to experience real rental shortages in this country until the federal government removed the tax incentives that channelled a lot of private money into rental accommodation.

There are a few rental dwelling units available in this country, but one might be moved to ask why there are so few. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) this week asked a question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson). He invited him to go to Edmonton to explain to the people there why apartments are not being built. He also asked him to visit other centres to give the same explanation. I was astounded at the minister's answer. I of course knew the answer, but I did not think he did. Once he had given the answer, I could not understand how he could carry on with the policies he is proposing. This is what the minister said on Monday of this week, December 1, as recorded at page 9577 of Hansard. I quote:

The reason that apartments are not being built, or starts are down so substantially, is that they cannot be built at today's costs and rent levels without showing a significant loss.

That is what the minister said. He went on to explain how they are planning to overcome the shortage by lending taxpayers' money to other taxpayers so that they will be able to pay less so that somebody will be able to build an apartment at less than market cost and rent it at less than market rent. Any logic that can be had out of that completely escapes me.

My friends to the left think that landlords should be benevolent characters who invest their money in losing propositions. I do not believe that even this government thinks that should be the case. When the minister admits to this House and the country that rental units cannot be built today on a viable economic basis, I say it is time to reassess the basic problems. There is no point putting up these various programs every few months to try to make some band-aid solution work.

When I am asked why there is a shortage of housing in Canada today, I say it is the government's fault. It is not only this government, but it helps. Governments at all levels have to take their responsibility.

I have said this before, but I think it bears repeating. Twenty years ago a builder or homeowner in this country could build a detached house on a single lot with a septic tank, no sewer, on a dirt road with storm ditches. There would be no street lights. Electricity and water, of course, were necessary. As the years went by, the homeowners who were able to get in at a relatively low price were able to put these improvements in their neighbourhoods at a relatively low cost. Because municipal financing was being used, the costs were lower. They were spread over 20 years, or whatever, in the form of local improvement taxes.

● (2050)

The municipal governments then decided they did not want to take all the flak for having high taxes and putting all these services in afterwards, so they found they could convince the developers that all of these wonderful improvements like paved roads, curbs, street lighting, underground wiring, storm and sanitary sewers should be put in by the developers. This solved the problem of the municipal governments whose tax burden was relieved, and before a developer could get approval for a subdivision he had to undertake to put in these services. But who ended up paying for them, Madam Speaker? It was, of course, the purchaser. The developer did not have sufficient credit rating or ability to spread the payments over 20 years, as the municipalities did, so right away the purchaser had to pay, on top of all the other purchase costs, the cost of services.

I should like to say something about rent control, which of course is a provincial matter. I have some information here to which I should like to refer. It is from an article in the Globe and Mail last August, before the federal government freeze was brought in, urging that rent control be instituted by the provincial governments. One observation with which I wholly agree is this:

Rents, like other prices, go up because costs go up. There is no magic umbrella to shelter property owners from inflation. If mill rates rise, if fuel prices rise, if the costs of materials, appliances, mortgages, hydro, water and wages all rise as well, how can the rent that is made up of those things stay the same?

Then the writer asks:

> How long would the activists, or indeed the tenants themselves, sit still for controls on their own wages and salaries?

He must have known about the policies of this party in 1974, because he then writes:

> They gave the answer to that in the 1974 federal election.

It seems there have been a few changes in ideas. In British Columbia we have rent control. Last year the ceiling was realistically set, I suppose, at 10.6 per cent. At least, all the evidence given to the B.C. government indicated that it was not realistic for rents to rise above 10.6 per cent. In British Columbia, until next week in any event, they have a people's government.

Mr. Nystrom: And after next week.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): My hon. friend to the left thinks that there will not be change of government in B.C. One member on the benches across distinctly said today that the next premier would be a fellow named Gibson, but I suppose we will have to wait and see. Naturally there are more tenants than landlords in this country, and tenants are voters, and it is by this that some politicians measure their success. Fortunately, in this party we do not have that problem; we measure our success in principles.

The government of British Columbia has now decided that 10.6 per cent is not a realistic level of rent control and that the new rate for 1976 will be 8 per cent. So there is a change in the rules for 1976. The provincial landlord and tenant act in that province applied only to residential buildings renting at $500 a month or less. It did not take the government of British Columbia more than two years to figure out that if rents of residential buildings were controlled, then capital investors would not seek to build housing but would seek to invest in commercial real estate. Therefore this month the government of British Columbia decided that rent control would also apply to business premises, which will at least mean that businessmen will have as hard a time finding a place to rent as the home tenant.

I think we could find a few faults at the federal government level too, Madam Speaker. Federal action has discouraged, if not prevented, the provision of housing by the private sector. I mentioned earlier removal of the tax incentives for rental housing. There was a time in this country when certain people were encouraged for certain reasons to invest in rental housing, and they did a pretty good job of it. Now the federal government has decided that they were given an unfair advantage, as it saw it, and it has now removed it. As usual, it did not follow through on the result of its action and did not realize it would cut down on the investment in, and creation of, rental units for Canadians.

I lay the blame for general inflation in this country directly on the present government. I think to some degree the government accepts that blame, as evidenced by the introduction this fall of Bill C-73, recently passed by this House.

Much has been said about interest rates. Several hon. members have spoken about the high interest rates that Canadians are forced to pay. I simply ask, what has the government done except to force anyone with money to invest to seek a high interest rate? Statistics Canada tells us that the rate of inflation is ten point something. Or maybe it is 11 or 12; I sometimes lose track of exactly what it is, but in any event it is substantially in excess of 10 per cent. It should be obvious that with the incidence of income tax and the need to keep ahead of the rate of inflation, interest rates cannot possibly be below 12, 13, or 14 per cent.

There were times in this country when there was what some people would call a realistic interest rate, and this was when there was virtually no inflation. I have reminded the House of this before but I think it is worth repeating. In 1936 the Government of Canada issued perpetual bonds bearing a coupon rate of 3 per cent. It was able to sell an adequate supply of these bonds. In those days inflation was zero, and 3 per cent was what a government bond was thought to be worth in the minds of investors. Nowadays, in order to keep ahead of inflation and to pay all the taxes, investors must demand what seems a huge rate of interest.

Another recent move on the part of the government which everyone voted for and thought was a good deal was the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, announced in the last budget. This plan is supposed to encourage Canadians to save up to buy a house. I am sure it will, but it will not do anything for the housing market. Although the idea is to encourage people to buy houses, people are given an incentive not to buy a house because they can save money tax free for ten years. You then withdraw the money and buy the house. Once more displaying insufficient foresight, the government has seemed to overlook the fact that you did not need to use the money for buying a house. The only requirement to qualify for this gift of income tax exemption up to $1,000 a year is that you do not own a house.

● (2100)

If you happened to have a house in the family in the name of one partner or the other, then the spouse was perfectly entitled under this law to save the money under the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan for ten years, tax free, and then go out and buy $10,000 worth of furniture, if that was the inclination of the couple, and put that furniture in the house of the spouse. This is hardly any way to create any kind of incentive for house purchasing, but I am sure the furniture industry thought the government was being very kind.

Of course, if they did not like the thought of having to pay tax in the normal way after the ten years were up they could transfer the house back into the other spouse's name and go through the exercise all over again.

In this capital region there is an area that I saw when I first came here of vacant land, close to the Hill. It is still vacant land. I believe it is called LeBreton Flats. I understand that in the good old days, not so very long ago, LeBreton Flats contained a lot of what I think is called filtered down housing. There is a better expression but I have just forgotten it for the moment. This was older housing suitable for lower income people. The government decided this was not suitable housing in its view for the people who wanted to live there—and we must keep in mind that the people were living there by their own choice. The government tore them all down thinking that would make everybody happy. Then, of course, it could spend more of the taxpayers' dollars building it all up again.

There are other examples of government interference in other countries, and I should like to give one or two of them. I think it is worthwhile looking abroad sometimes, because we tend to think these problems are only Canadian and locked into Canada.

A letter was sent by some Torontonians now living in London, England. These were not just ordinary people. One was working in a housing agency in London, and another was a graduate student in planning cities from the London School of Economics. They were not the average type of person. Their observations on the housing situation in London are interesting. They report that owner-occupancy and council rental housing have increased substantially, not only in absolute figures but in ratio to the housing stock. They go on to explain that this was not the result of market forces alone, but occurred by government design. Obviously, certain types of housing can be increased by government design. This does not mean this is the type of housing wanted or needed by the people who will be living in the houses. This letter goes on to explain about the enormous number of vacancies there are in London today.

Another debate which took place earlier this year in this House, in May, gave us another predictable series of responses. One of the hon. members in the party to my left felt the government should enter the construction business because owning a house is not a privilege but a social right. That was the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). He was not supported by one of the government members who said it would be a dream to believe that all Canadians could own houses. I think predictably my colleagues during that debate remarked about the patch the government was putting on a sinking ship. Of course my colleague, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, indicated that the same minister was not really saying the truth when he suggested we were going to have 210,000 housing units in 1975, and that in reality it would be considerably less than that.

If I can go back to the control aspect of housing, I am reminded in Vancouver that recently a real estate firm that had for many years provided housing units for the people in Vancouver announced it was going out of the rental housing market because renting no longer makes a satisfactory profit. Of course my friends to the left think that all these real estate people are making fortunes. The fact that this company is taking this step should not come as any surprise to anyone in this House if he was listening to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs on Monday when he stated this was the reason for the lack of building in this country today.

Having regard to who owns housing in this country, let me say that the Rental Housing Council of British Columbia observed recently that less than 20 per cent of all rental suites have what they call big owners. The vast majority of people in this housing are small investors who are investing their retirement funds. Even if the biggest companies owned a lot of the rental real estate units, these companies consist mainly of the very working people my friends to the left seem to support.

Other statistics show that in 1969, 1970, and 1971, before the federal tax changes, applications for multiple housing in greater Vancouver averaged 8,400 per year. New rentals outnumbered new condominiums seven to one. By 1972 and 1973, after the federal government had removed the tax shelter incentive for certain investors, the applications were down to 7,000 per year, with rental units only outnumbering condominiums by three to two.

Then we got into rent controls in British Columbia, and the annual rate of multiple applications is still healthy, being 6,200, but new condominiums outnumber rental units by six to one. That is, there is one rental unit for every six condominium units now. The only rental units now being built are subsidized public housing and some private luxury units. Private rental units are no longer being built and no longer being planned, and rent controls are the prime reason.

You may say I am dwelling unnecessarily on rental housing, but I would ask you to examine the effects of a shortage of rental housing. If someone cannot rent an appartment he thinks would be suitable for him to live in he has to go and buy a house. He may buy a condominium or a detached house. There is tremendous pressure being placed upon the housing market in every area as a result.

In Vancouver the city council was finally moved to take action to prevent the conversion of rental housing units to condominiums. Many landlords found they were being hopelessly squeezed by costs and rental control, and the only way out for them was to convert these buildings from rental units to condominium units, sell them, get their money out and go on to something else. If that had been allowed to continue the pressure on rental housing would have been even greater. I do not admire the intrusion by the city council into the housing market.

All levels of government are guilty of allowing an antiquated building code to add substantially to the cost of housing. There is no excuse for any kind of code today that requires the same kind of building in Vancouver as, let us say, in the glorious climate of Ottawa. That is the way it is at the moment. This can do nothing but add to the costs the people must bear. I have one or two other references.

● (2110)

Just six weeks ago the housing industry at a meeting in Toronto anticipated that inflation in construction costs is the primary reason for the jump in housing costs, and said that runaway labour costs continue to be the main culprit. They apparently did not see much help from the government's Bill C-73 which already had been announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at that time. The industry did not foresee any significant increase in new construction to ease the critical shortage of accommodation in many urban centres. They submit that the threat of rental controls in one form or another is a contributing factor to a lack of construction activity. I think it is obvious that Bill C-73 has been used by the federal government to encourage provincial governments to become involved in rent controls.

There is a newly formed outfit in Vancouver called the Fraser Institute. It is a new Canadian research institute meant to give competition to government sponsored research. It was created to re-direct attention to competitive markets as the mechanism for providing for the well being of Canadians. That institute has as one of its first projects a study of rent controls. Their observation is that in the first year of rent controls in British Columbia in 1974 rents in Vancouver inflated at a rate of 75 per cent faster than rents in Toronto. They go on to say that statistics for the previous ten years indicated that until that time the two cities had experienced similar rates of rent inflation.

On the basis of statistics for the first five months of 1975 rents in Vancouver were 11 per cent above the 1974 level, but in Toronto where there are no controls they were only 7 per cent above the 1974 level. It is interesting to observe that in British Columbia the 10.6 per cent or 8 per cent control maximum is now considered to be the main reason why a landlord cannot adjust these rents according to the market. His costs increase because of the controls so he is virtually forced to increase his rents to the limit every time he is allowed to do so, which is once a year. The Fraser Institute observed that rent controls act as a disincentive in respect of the availability of housing units, and that only new construction and redistribution of existing housing could solve the shortage.

I think I am running short of time, Mr. Speaker. I hope that by my remarks I have illustrated some of the basic problems the government faces in trying to overcome the problems, and that the ideas that are being put forth are nothing more than stop-gap measures. We on this side of the House will support this bill because we believe the poor homeowners need every break which we think they might get. We think the government should give the power to the local levels of government so that they could free the people of Canada from the structures of the federal government's interference in the housing market. We have heard the statement that the state should keep out of the bedrooms of the nation. I should like to extend that by saying that the state should keep out of the living rooms of the nation.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) for his contribution. I find myself in a dilemma. I do not feel I can criticize the bill very much because it indeed is an attempt to stimulate housing starts in Canada. Another dilemma I find myself in is that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) is to visit my district on Monday next and I hope he will be making some profound announcements about an increase in the amount of funds allocated to the province of Newfoundland, because indeed the housing crisis there is probably as bad or worse than it is in any other section of Canada.

I must say the government has indicated in respect of Bill C-73 that some new efforts are being made to stimulate housing stocks in Canada. While we all agree that in most cases the bill is directed toward this end, there are still some major shortcomings which affect a great majority of our population. The people I am talking about are the many millions of our citizens who are on low and fixed incomes.

In addition to attempting to provide themselves with decent accommodation they are experiencing difficulty even in keeping themselves fed. True, it is obvious that some effort is being directed toward relieving the public housing stocks, but I do not think there is enough awareness of the emergency that exists in respect of providing shelter and accommodation to the poor and needy.

The latest poverty line figures I have been able to find show that a single Canadian must have $210 per month in order to exist. In this regard I point out two examples to show the discrepancy which exists when we expect all Canadians to be able to provide themselves with shelter or accommodation. For example, the War Veterans Allowance recipient at the single basic rate receives only $207.12 per month. On a means test basis he can have that amount supplemented to bring it to $247.12 which is only $30 above the poverty line figure. I should like to ask the minister or the parliamentary secretary how this citizen after he pays his utility costs, when the price of electricity and heating fuel is increasing beyond control, can afford even to think about accommodation or how much interest he has to pay when he cannot even look after his basic needs.

What about the senior citizen living alone who must exist on the princely sum of $219.96 per month, which is just $10 above the poverty line figure? I mention these cases because I am bitterly disappointed there is no mention of the expansion of what I feel is a most important program. I know the people from CMHC in the gallery and others on the other side will know what I am talking about.

I am talking about the residential rehabilitation program. I have said dozens of times, and repeat in this House that this is a program which could relieve the pressures on our housing needs and at the same time allow these citizens to maintain their present homes, which many thousands own, but which they cannot maintain because they cannot afford to do so. This rehabilitation program, as everyone is aware, is designed to help individuals earning between $6,000 and $11,000 to repair housing structures and upgrade plumbing, electrical and heating systems, if such repairs can ensure a further useful life of the property for another 15 years.

I can only repeat that this is a most worthwhile program that can help hundreds of thousands of Canadians bring their homes up to a reasonable standard of appearance. More important, by the installation of proper heating and electrical systems to ensure safety there would be a reduction in the unfortunate loss of lives and property through faulty construction or faulty wiring, and so on.

● (2120)

The figures are there to prove the need for such a program because Statistics Canada shows that there are over one million homes heated by a stove or a space heater, homes which do not have proper heating systems. At the same time—I was not able to get the figures in this case—it is reasonable to conclude that a like number of homes are without proper wiring, electricity or insulation. Many of these homes are in the rural parts of Canada, many are old and deteriorating because a good proportion of the needy citizens live in their own homes, or homes that have been passed on to them.

I thought that in view of the many times that I have spoken on the subject I had convinced the minister that a concerted thrust should be made on a priority basis to expand those funds to allow for a massive insulation program under residential rehabilitation for people on low incomes, not only to help them conserve home heating fuels but to allow the government to cut down their own use in accordance with their program of conservation of energy. I must repeat that many citizens who are in this predicament who own their own homes are on welfare, and as a result provinces must increase the amount paid to recipients for heating fuel in the winter months for 50 per cent of which the federal government must pay. So it is obvious that the saving for both the government and the public would make this program worth while.

The minister himself when he spoke in June of 1975 to the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities, stated the following:

> Fortunately, I believe it is now well understood that NIP is meant to assist in the development and implementation of a comprehensive plan which will fulfill a wide range of physical, social and recreational needs within the neighbourhood. It is not a hit-and-run, paint-and-patch proposition. CMHC now insists that the NIP investment in a neighbourhood should not be less than $100 per capita ... Closely associated with NIP is the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. Its purpose is to help restore run-down houses to acceptable standards of health and safety and to extend their useful life by another 15 years or so. The federal government will lend up to $5,000 for this purpose, at favourable rates, and the first $2,500 of the loan is forgiveable, depending on income. RRAP is available in NIP areas, for non-profit housing projects, wherever they may be, and in areas specially designed by federal-provincial agreement.

The minister indicated this himself in June, and the program has been in existence for almost two and half or three years. I wonder why the people in CMHC do not realize that more houses could be made available by bringing these homes up to a decent standard which would relieve the pressure on those people who can afford to buy a house.

In another study the following was stated:

> Rehabilitating older housing is another area that has not been pursued to any great degree. Since a major part of our housing problem is one of cost, rehabilitating older housing would be cheaper than tearing them down and building again. This was recommended in the Dennis and Fish study on low income housing in Canada.
> "Even in areas of high growth, the expense of tearing down existing units and rebuilding is out of all proportion to the cost of rehabilitation.
>
> We therefore recommend a large scale rehabilitation program, to bring as much existing housing as possible to a state where the structural and building systems perform adequately."
> There are provisions under the National Housing Act for federal financing (loans and grants) of rehabilitation projects. To date, however, little widespread use has been made of the program. This is due to a slowness in communication between Ottawa, the provinces and the cities in defining program needs. If more use could be made of a rehabilitation program and older, rehabilitated homes kept in the housing stock, it could help to depress spiralling house prices.

Everything points to the advantages of such a program and I am sure, from experience in my own province of Newfoundland, that this is a reflection of conditions in many parts of Canada. I can only hope that the minister will take a harder look at this program and will allocate funding to correct this obvious inequity in our housing programs. I hope that when he concludes this debate he will be able to advise me on the stage of negotiations with the province of Newfoundland on RRAP which they presented to the minister some time ago.

I spoke about the Dennis and Fish report on low income housing. It is also obvious that the Council of Rural Development has made some strong recommendation to the minister on the need to bring existing homes up to a more acceptable level. I realize that the provinces have their problems in designating areas that would qualify under the program, and that municipalities also have their problems when they have to set down occupancy standards, but I wonder why, in our effort to get rid of red tape, we do not take advantage of another program in existence called the Home Improvement Loans Program to expand and introduce forgiveness factors into home improvement loans and to allow any Canadian, regardless of where he lives in Canada, to apply directly to CMHC and to take advantage of this excellent program which, as I indicated many times, can relieve the need for low cost housing in Canada.

There are certain aspects of the program contained in the bill which I feel would be beneficial, and one of the most important ones is the provision of loans for water and sewerage projects. I feel this is long overdue and I compliment the minister and his staff for introducing such a program. It should be obvious that the most important public service required in many thousands of communities across Canada, and particularly in smaller rural areas, is the provision of water and sewerage systems, not only for the comfort it provides but from the point of view of sanitation and health reasons for our citizens and their children.

I am pleased to note that under the Assisted home ownership provision the restriction against one or more children is removed. This, I feel, will benefit many young couples who feel they want to have a house before raising a family. I am sure that no one can quarrel with that right for these young Canadians. However, I am disappointed that the minister has not seen fit to allow benefits under AHOP for the purchase of existing homes, particularly because many older homes could be rehabilitated, thus relieving the pressures on increasing housing starts.

It is obvious that many older citizens whose families have moved away would like to sell their homes and move to an apartment or find a mobile home or smaller house. I hope that the minister will consider this fact before the bill goes to committee, and will introduce appropriate amendments at that stage.

Since AHOP is now related to the special housing assistance for veterans, I feel I am justified in mentioning some points in this program which replace the Veterans Land Act. I was most distressed to learn that as a result of questions I placed on the order paper only two applications were received under the provision for non-profit rental to provide rental housing not exclusively for veterans but for veterans and for senior citizens. But it is more distressing to note, in the answers I received, that the sum of only $50,000 has been allotted to the entire special housing assistance program for veterans. To my mind that is downright ridiculous.

● (2130)

The other answer, indicating that only 50 applications have been received under AHOP, confirms to me that there is a lack of communication between the Department of Veterans Affairs, Urban Affairs, and the veterans who can qualify. While no doubt the Minister of Veterans Affairs

(Mr. MacDonald), if he was here, would quarrel with my assumption, in the several contacts I have had with veterans' organizations over the past months since the program was announced, it was amazing to me what little knowledge there was of the special housing assistance for veterans, which the minister and the government expounded with all the fanfares they thought were required.

An example of the weakness in the special housing assistance program for veterans was brought to my attention today. I received a call from a veteran who wanted to purchase an existing home which is available under the program. One of the answers he received from the people I suggested he call was that he was too old. This gentlemen is a second world war veteran of 60 years of age. That is hard for me to believe, and I dare not mention some of the other answers which were given to him. It seems glaringly obvious that there is not too much sincerity in the government's application of this program in the provision of only $50,000, and when a veteran aged 60 is told that he is too old to qualify. The minister, a veteran himself, should investigate the lack of progress under this special housing assistance program to determine and to improve any weaknesses which evidently exist.

Returning for a moment to the residential rehabilitation program, I feel that I should bring to the attention of the minister a survey of the conditions of veterans' homes, which was carried out by the Newfoundland command of the Royal Canadian Legion, a survey which could set an exemple to relate the need for a more comprehensive effort on the part of the government to expand this program. The minister has this study before him, as does the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I recommend that the experts in both departments use the report as an example of the need for the rehabilitation of homes, not only for veterans, but for all Canadian citizens who are needy.

I am sure many of my colleagues have dealt with the other clauses of the bill and have pointed out the difficulties which are evident and of which note should be taken. I know it is easy to criticize any government program, and it is not my intention to criticize for the sake of criticism, but only to point out in a constructive way how the bill might be improved.

In this regard I hope I can rely on the latest newsletter of the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada, which is known as the watchdog of the housing situation. I sincerely hope that their comment that "although inflation continues to be Canada's greatest concern, housing in 1976 appears headed for a better year" proves true. I am also heartened by their comment on housing in the Atlantic region. They indicate that in the province of Newfoundland housing starts are now up 6.5 per cent after being down by 5 per cent in previous years. They also indicate that in other provinces in the Atlantic region housing starts are up. However, even with this increase, I have to say that there is a lot of catching up to do in my province, and I hope the minister will realize the many needs of my province in regard to housing.

As I indicated, many of my colleagues have brought to the attention of the minister and his staff the many shortcomings in the bill. I wanted to deal with the two important points which I feel affect needy and low income earners in Canada. I hope the minister will take cognizance of the comments I have made, and hopefully before the bill receives third reading we will overcome some of the serious inequities and solve the housing crisis in our nation.

[Mr. Marshall.]

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments at my disposal I am very pleased to make some remarks concerning a bill which might not meet all our needs but which represents an attempt to answer a very serious problem in Canada, the problem of housing.

In April 1968, the federal government also promised that a bill to faciliate the ownership of low priced housing would be presented during the forthcoming session. Since April 1968, that same government created an inquiry commission on housing headed, as everybody knows, by the Hon. Paul Hellyer. The commission sat almost everywhere in Canada and presented a report. This report had smashing results as almost immediately following its release, the chairman, Hon. Paul Hellyer resigned from his position. Since then, many recommendations have been made to the government by several private organizations concerning the many housing problems not only in the province of Quebec but everywhere else in Canada. And we realized since then that housing costs have increased tremendously and particularly the cost of mortgage financing in Canada. I have very interesting data on that subject. Before referring to them I should like to quote from an article published in the Toronto Telegram, on October 17, 1970 and that commented on a part of the Hellyer report as follows:

> The housing situation in Canada is bad and is getting worse at least for many canadians who are looking for housing, young couples, tenants and particularly low income people. Who is responsible for this mess? Charity and common sense require that we recognize the difficulty to face urban problems. We also have to realize that our institutions do not serve us well. This government is certainly to blame because Ottawa is responsible for our banking system and our fiscal and monetary policy. Those two areas deeply affect the housing policy at every level. Unfortunately, there is in the housing field many examples of government action that have failed.

> To name but one, the Hon. Paul Hellyer said the federal government missed an excellent opportunity to make a positive and significant contribution to reducing the cost of housing when they did not accept his recommendation to supply the funds needed to reserve the land for certain municipal projects.
> There was no financial nor constitutional barrier. This could have been a great help to the municipalities concerned, and the people. The housing crisis was therefore mainly due to bureaucratic mismanagement . . .

Nothing has changed! What was true in 1970 is still true today. Another main obstacle was money, or rather the lack of it, and therefore excessive interest rates. What was true in 1970 is truer still in 1975. The unwanted orphan was fathered by the federal government. Ottawa controls the money supply and has the last word about the economic environment across the country. Our monetary mandarins knowingly and deliberatley restricted the money supply to the extent that interest rates are far above the possibilities of most potential owners and many developers. This results in fewer housing starts and brings little hope to the potential buyer.

A larger stock of money and houses would spur competition, and most significantly lower prices and rentals.

Regrettably, we will not even reach the minimum number of housing starts advocated by the Economic Council of Canada and the housing and urban development group. The housing problem is not only quantitative but also qualitative. The fiscal impact greatly favours larger projects.

Those large developments do not fill family needs. They are adequate and may be desirable for adults but children need and deserve better.

A recent study made in Yugoslavia indicates that there is more poor health among children who live on the top floor of high rise apartment buildings. These children lack exercise because their mother does not like to let them play outside.

Another study shows that mothers who live in high rises have a higher suicide rate. In certain cities, it would be impossible to build low rent apartment buildings even if loans could be obtained at reasonable rates. The legislation promotes this. In a free country, people are not free to build a little house in a city like Toronto. Urbanists, officials and politicians do not allow it. Of course, their plans allow the small wage earners and their families to live crowded in an apartment which would be just big enough for a childless couple. Of course, we all know the universal law of the bureaucracy. Civil servants multiply arithmetically while the rules multiply geometrically, but the results do not multiply and are late in coming.

Mr. Speaker, what the former chairman of the inquiry commission on housing wrote in 1970 is even truer in 1975 because the cost of housing and the cost of financing are now also astronomic, to such a point that the majority of Canadians have today lost any hope of being able to own in the near future a property that will be free of debt.

In Bill C-77, the federal government wants to direct a sum of $750 million towards various housing projects in future years, which means that with $750 million, as others have said before me, we could reach a minimum target of 20,000 dwellings, which is clearly insufficient in view of Canadian needs. At the same time, since many Canadians have lost confidence in the value of the dollar, we have exported $25 billion in Canadian money to the United States. Canadians have invested $25 billion in the United States and if these same Canadians who still live in Canada had confidence in their economy and the value of the Canadian dollar, they would be sure of the purchasing power that the Canadian economy can give them sooner or later. These $25 billion could easily be invested in housing as first mortgages, with guarantees by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

But those Canadians have lost faith in the financial yield of the Canadian dollar, and that is why $25 billion of our money were invested in the U.S. economy in the last five or ten years, which means that with those $25 billion invested in the United States we could certainly come through with at least 500,000 housing units in Canada. And, Mr. Speaker, I would like to indulge in a retrospective of the housing cost and make projections based on the figures for 1975. I will begin first by a retrospective of the housing cost in 1938. A modest home in 1938 cost $3,500, and you needed $400 cash to acquire that home. The interest rate in 1938 was 4 per cent and the rental cost to pay a $3,500 home at the rate of 4 per cent was $25 a month. In 1945, that same property cost $6,000; the cash needed to acquire that same property had remained the same—$400—the interest rate had gone up by 0.5 per cent—so 4½ per cent—and the monthly payment for that $6,000 property was $60 a month. No one will dispute that the average cost of houses has risen from $3,500 in 1938 to $33,000 in 1975; the minimum down payment to buy a house is $3,000; interest rates have risen from 4 per cent in 1938 to 11½ per cent in 1975, which means that with mortgage payments of $300 a month required for 35 years to buy a $33,000 home, the individual who makes his final payment after 35 years will have paid a total amount of $126,000 in principal and interest. This individual will therefore have paid $93,000 just for interest, and $33,000 for his actual property. So who takes advantage of the property cost increase system when it means that while house prices may increase by $5,000 or $10,000 within ten years, interest rates have gone up in 25 years by over $85,000? In 1961 also, 28 per cent of all revenues of Canadians were necessary to pay for property expenses, such as principal, interest and municipal taxes. In 1975, the same costs amount to 42 per cent of all revenues of Canadians, which means a 14 per cent increase in the percentage of all revenues since 1961, or in other words that in the past 14 years, 14 per cent of all revenues were used only to make up for the increase in housing costs, and that housing costs have gone up every year by 1 per cent of the gross national income; and that is just accounting for the increase. But if, on top of the cost of properties as I just mentioned, you apply an inflation factor of 10 per cent per year, as suggested by the new Anti-Inflation Board, if you consider the cost of living, the progressive rising of inflation, and if the new Anti-Inflation Board sticks to its 10 per cent rate, a property which in 1975 sells for $34,500, with a yearly 10 per cent increase factor, would cost, in the year 2000, in principal alone, the small amount—those figures seem ridiculous this evening—of $411,177.10. Supposing that the interest rate always remains the same, about 12 per cent, which means that there would be no inflation or increase in interest rates, a $34,500 property in 1975 would cost $411,177 in principal in the year 2000 and $16,851,000 in interest after 35 years, the total cost amounting to $17,262,000, principal and interest included. This means that a monthly rent of $41,000 would have to be paid during 35 years finally to enable the owner to discharge entirely his debt. Those figures, I agree, are sheer madness. However, they are a reflection of our mad system which has unfortunately led us too quickly to the present mad economic conditions.

Mr. Speaker, it is not with bills of $750 million to build 20,000 units in Canada and by avoiding any control over soaring interest rates that we will get low cost housing. It is absolutely fanciful and ridiculous to believe that such a legislation could solve all housing problems in Canada. That is pure fantasy and that is why very soon the government will have to take the bull by the horns, otherwise we can say farewell to home ownership in Canada. We are losing our time thinking that the owner of a small house will hold on to his property because it will be impossible for a low income earner to acquire housing on his own. In other words, Mr. Speaker, it is not through such hardly efficient and progressive legislation that we will get to solve the very delicate and serious housing problem in Canada. Yet, home ownership is a social reality. All individuals must have access to home ownership.

Still, Canada has the necessary economic potential to allow each Canadian to purchase a house. We have everything that is needed in Canada, modern technology, advanced building methods, able builders, manpower with proven competence, the necessary primary products and resources, wood and materials, to give all Canadian families the possibility of owning a modest home. The only lack or want is that of a financial system equal to the physical possibilities, and that is why Social Crediters are asking for a review of our monetary system so that every Canadian family may have access to private property.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot oppose this bill because it represents an effort in the right direction. But I am sure this bill will not bring about any viable solution to a long term problem, and that it will fail to solve once and for all the housing crisis in Canada, in spite of the board of inquiry which has been set up, in spite of the many recommendations, in spite of studies of all sorts, in spite of the committee's recommendations, and in spite of all the speeches in the House; the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation seems to be made up of technocrats who, for the past few years, have lived very far remote from the people and the housing problem. All the regulations originating from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which the House has adopted have made it possible for contractors to become richer, but also for fewer Canadians to become homeowners.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the owner of a small house must pay an average of $100,000 in interest, if the rates remain constant. This is both ridiculous and stupid. They will not have me believe that with such a legislation and such interest rates, they will be able to help the individual, the small investor, and the small wage-earner.

● (2150)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we are debating either the third or the fourth bill, introduced by the Liberal party in the present session, which will do absolutely nothing to solve the problem it is designed to solve. My party has said it will vote against the bill. I want to put on record our reasons for opposing the government's housing program and this amending bill.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation was first established to give emergency help to prospective home owners in Canada. Originally the program was designed to stimulate, in a small way, home building. Now, 20 years after its inception, it is the mainstay of house building in Canada. If, in the first place, we had provided for a revolving fund, moneys paid back to CMHC could be lent again. Meanwhile the amount available for lending would have increased considerably. But we did not do that. Instead, the government, through Central Mortgage and Housing, said it would guarantee housing loans. People went to banks and financial institutions, and borrowed money for their mortgages.

So far the people of this country have not decided that the best housing is apartment housing in a high rise apartment. Perhaps that decision is coming. At present most Canadians want to live in a home they own. But this program will not help. The money the government will lend will go on forcing up the price of housing, and not encourage the supply of new homes. Houses will be more heavily subsidized, but the subsidies will be paid, indirectly, to financial institutions.

I listened to the hon. member who preceded me say that our trouble is not that we lack lumber or know-how for building housing; simply, we lack the will to devote part of our gross national product to housing—housing which should be provided through a government agency at a relatively modest interest rate.

This legislation will merely provide more subsidies for home builders. Until recently the government gave a grant of $500 to first-time home buyers, and the province of Ontario provided an additional $1,500 to buyers in the province. Home buyers used the money for their down payment, but they saved little in the long run as they were forced to deal with real estate agents who knew the workings of the real estate industry, how to obtain mortgages and any other assistance that might be forthcoming.

As I say, the grant money did not reduce the cost of the house to the purchaser; it merely provided the down payment on the home. The net result was that the $2,000 subsidy forced up the value of the home.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, I regret to interrupt the hon. member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As suggested earlier this day by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), may I seek the agreement of the House for the following order: that tomorrow not be an allotted day pursuant to Standing Order 58, and that one allotted day be added to the next supply period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And is it agreed that it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—HELSINKI AGREEMENT—METHOD OF DETERMINING EXTENT TO WHICH COMMITMENTS FULFILLED

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on November 19, 1975, I directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) asking whether his department or any other arm of the federal government has established any plan to follow closely the Final Act of the Conference on European Security and Co-operation signed in Helsinki on August 1, 1975, in order to find out to what extent the commitments of the 35 signatory countries are being fulfilled or violated.

● (2200)

I rise tonight at this late hour to give the minister or his spokesman a greater opportunity to reply fully to my question in which many Canadians are most interested, and a question left substantially unanswered two weeks ago.

If this conference is to be a success, the signatories of the Final Act must live up to their declarations and commitments. To accomplish this, a method of monitoring the fulfillments and violations must be established and carried out carefully on a systematic and regular basis. Otherwise there is the possibility that representatives of ministers of foreign affairs assembling in Belgrade on June 15, 1977, may show up unprepared or negatively disposed, which would be most unfortunate and deplorable.

Interested and concerned citizens of today as well as future generations will judge our governments and our leaders not by words or promises, but by actions performed and by promises kept. Judgment of the value of the lengthy CSCE will depend on the extent to which the responsible government authorities will seriously identify instances of genuine and substantial implementation of the provisions of the Final Act by its signatories, notably the major powers of Europe.

I would like to propose that the federal government demonstrate its serious intentions and genuine concern by establishing without delay methods of monitoring compliance with the CSCE Final Act provisions by instructing our ambassadors in Europe to redouble representations to their host governments concerning implementation activities, for example in the humanitarian matter of unification of families and by instructing our embassies in Europe to report in a systematic and comprehensive fashion on the degree to which provisions of the Final Act have been implemented or violated.

Similar instructions may be given to the appropriate federal ministries and Canadian representatives on international agencies such as the United Nations, UNESCO, NATO and others. Furthermore, special interdepartmental committees, federal and provincial human rights commissions, ombudsmen, a special branch of the federal-provincial secretariat and interested non-governmental organizations should be established, if non-existent, and should be fully informed about the details of the Final Act and asked to forward to the Secretary of State for External Affairs their views and assessment with regard to the implementation or violation of the Final Act provisions. Canada should also consider proposing some amendments to the Final Act such as non-interference of mail and freedom of travel in a country by tourists as well as citizens.

I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs during the forthcoming NATO ministerial meeting will discuss with all members of the alliance the need for consultation and co-operation in following developments in this field. In particular, Canada should take proper initiatives to re-assemble the Geneva Conference on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions in Eastern and Central Europe. As Canada has already unilaterally halved its NATO forces and delayed a modernization of its equipment, it should press the opposing side to demonstrate their commitment to disengagement or else détente becomes just a one-way street or an empty word.

Canada has invested a great deal in the CSCE. Though separated from Europe by the Atlantic Ocean, Canadians are deeply conscious that the fortunes of this continent have moulded our fate through history. Many events in Europe influence Canada and its people who seek peace and justice for all nations. For these reasons, Canadians want the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe to be a success.

Given the quantity of information already available and that could be properly compiled by the methods I have mentioned, there is every hope and reason to believe that we and other countries of good will should be in an excellent position to arrive at a well-informed assessment of the implementation of the Final Act provisions by the time of the review meeting scheduled for June, 1977, in Belgrade.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the minister, who is absent, and the parliamentary secretary, who is out of the country, to compliment the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for once again indicating the importance of the Helsinki conference and for his suggestions about follow up and about where the conference should eventually lead.

Canada considers that effective follow-up to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe will be important and will ultimately be the measure of its success or failure. We are concerned that all parts of the Final Act should be implemented, but are particularly concerned about those which deal with the freer movement of people and ideas and with confidence building measures, such as advance notification of military manoeuvres. Canada is monitoring the implementation of these provisions closely. Positive developments in the area of freer movement of people and ideas will provide us with an indication whether detente is being given a human dimension, and a positive response to the commitments on confidence building measures will provide us with a signal that the spirit of Helsinki also extends to the military sphere.

Parts of the text have already begun to be implemented. The NATO countries have notified the other participating states in accordance with the commitments on confidence building measures. The texts concerning economic, scientific, technological and environmental co-operation have begun to be discussed at meetings this autumn of the Economic Commission for Europe. These texts, as well as those concerning co-operation in humanitarian and other fields, are also being reviewed at UNESCO headquarters in Paris with a view to accelerating implementation. In a slightly different application of the text, the formulation on family reunification allowed agreement to be reached between Canada and the German Democratic Republic on the establishment of diplomatic relations.

Officials in the Department of External Affairs and those from other departments are reviewing the implications for Canadian policy and practice of the terms of the Final Act in the various fields that it covers.

As to follow-up, Canada and its allies are considering methods for monitoring CSCE implementation with the objective of assuring participating states' maximum compliance with the provisions of the Final Act. We recognize, however, that in some areas a period of preparation and analysis is required before implementation can begin and participating states, including Canada, will require several additional months of study before priorities can be established and follow-up measures developed.

Monitoring the implementation of CSCE commitments will assist us in our preparation for the Belgrade review conference in 1977.Consequently, at Belgrade we should be able to evaluate with confidence the degree of adherence to the agreed provisions of the Final Act by the participating states and we will then be in a position to draw the appropriate conclusions, whatever they may be, regarding the success of the CSCE.

POST OFFICE—MAINTENANCE OF RIGHT OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES NOT TO JOIN UNION

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question tonight pertains to the Post Office. I am pleased to see that the reply to my question will be given by my colleague the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General. The reason I say this is that my late grandfather, J.W. Alkenbrack, who many years ago was postmaster at Flinton, Ontario, later moved to Fort William, and some members of our family still live there on Francis Street, in what is now the new united city of Thunder Bay.

In the midst of the mail strike, which I hope has just permanently terminated, I rose in the House, on Tuesday, November 4, and on Friday, November 14, and asked the following questions, recorded in Hansard at page 8834 and 9062 respectively. My November 4 question was:

> My supplementary is to the Postmaster General. Did the minister, in his deliberations with the union, maintain the freedom of Canadian citizens to accept casual employment without joining a union?

The Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) replied:

> I should like to be very frank with the hon. member on this issue but I think I shall have to ask him to show some patience because, traditionally, terms or conditions affecting a collective agreement arrived at through negotiation are the prerogative of the union to announce to its membership at the time of ratification and I would not wish in any way unintentionally to jeopardize or prejudice this undoubted right of unions.

[Mr. McRae.]

● (2210)

Again I asked on December 4 a supplementary question as follows:

> Would the Postmaster General see that the rights of casual non-union employees are maintained in this dispute?

The minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, this is a little different question concerning casuals who are not members of the union. Casuals were always used to provide service when there was a high volume of mail. This right has not been eroded. Management has maintained that particular right, even though it has spelled out certain situations that limit the use of casuals.

The minister then went on to answer another question. I hope we can be assured that the right of these casuals to work under the prerogative of the postmaster in each post office has been maintained.

I did not wish to jeopardize or prejudice the outcome of the negotiations. My concern in this whole matter is that the right of casual employees be maintained in order that they can work in any post office that needs casual help, without having to join a union. That has been the historic right of citizens in all parts of Canada, and in busy periods, especially at Christmas time, casuals are brought in and hired. The prerogative in this regard rests with management and with every postmaster in Canada. His is the decision, and his alone, as to how many casuals he needs and which ones he will hire. That is why this evening, now that the strike is over, I should like the Canadian people to be assured that the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) in his deliberations with these unions has maintained that right. This is what prompted me to ask the questions on the two previous dates I mentioned.

I asked these questions because of the personal rights of the people involved. I have been quite concerned about this because one of the leaders of the union has treated the Canadian public very shabbily and in a very cavalier manner when he said in the heat of attempted negotiations, "To hell with the public." I caution parliament and the Canadian people here tonight not to forget this remark.

Mr. Prud'homme: We won't.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I ask that because the actions and manner of certain union leaders are detrimental to the maintenance of the fabric of our system, and even to our very society itself. No Canadian, no matter what section of our society he moves in, can make such a statement and be judged unaccountable, and get away with complete impunity.

Mr. Prud'homme: Right on.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I congratulate the Postmaster General, who is not here this evening but is unavoidably absent, on his good work throughout the difficult times of this strike. I know that he, in his deliberations with the union leaders, had to withhold certain particulars of settlement from the public, but now that the strike is over this would be a good time to report those particulars to the House. He can do so now without jeopardy to any of the parties involved. In particular I want to be sure that the rights of casual employees in the postal system have come through this strike unimpaired and inviolate, and that the authority and the prerogatives of postmasters and their management remain supreme in each post office, which is their place of duty and rightful jurisdiction.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank my friend, the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack). I appreciate his questions and his support for the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) during very difficult times. I know of his uncle and am sure he was a good postmaster. We have many employees in the Post Office today of the same calibre, many of whom are very concerned about the problems they have had, for which they feel some responsibility, as well as being concerned about the things that are happening in the Post Office and to the country.

There are some parts of the hon. member's question which I am not prepared to answer as they go beyond what I have prepared, and to some extent beyond the questions asked in the House earlier. I regret that I cannot give the hon. member those answers off the top of my head at this time.

I should like to answer the one question asked by the hon. member concerning the maintenance of the right of casual employees not to join a union, and the right of the Post Office to bring in casuals whenever necessary. In actual fact the freedom of Canadians not to join a union remains a provision of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have no agreement whatsoever, nor is there any attempt to restrict the freedom of Canadian citizens to accept casual employment without being forced to join the union. You may rest assured, Mr. Speaker, that as law-abiding citizens we do not intend to contravene the Public Service Staff Relations Act. We will abide by it so long as it remains in play.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.17 p.m.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

INQUIRY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER DISCUSSED SKY SHOPS SITUATION WITH SENATOR GIGUÈRE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, and I am sorry to disturb him. My question is with regard to the answers or non-answers given to me yesterday by the Prime Minister. Even though I accept with some difficulty his statement that he has less knowledge of the facts in connection with Sky Shops and related matters than the average member of the public does, which seems to be the inference he created yesterday, I should like to ask him if he has had any discussions with Senator Giguère with respect to the Senator's interest in and activities on behalf of companies doing business with the government. In saying this I emphasize that I am not dealing with the question of criminal investigation, I am dealing with the question of public morality and ethics. Has the Prime Minister had any discussion with the Senator?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not spoken to the Senator in years, I would say. I did understand that he made an offer to his colleagues in the Senate to answer any questions they might have and to testify before a committee that they might set up on conflict of interest or on any other matters. That satisfied me as being an indication that the Senator would be open on this particular aspect of conflict of interest which the Senate is presently in the midst of studying. As the hon. member knows, the government submitted a report on conflict of interest which, after a very long and agonizing process through the House, has gone to the other place.

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF GUIDELINES BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I sympathize with the Prime Minister in his use of the word "agonizing". I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he has had a chance to read and review the guidelines in question of which the Minister of Justice indicated he was the initiator or the father, and under the circumstances is he considering withdrawing those guidelines and issuing new ones which will have the effect of ratifying, confirming and adopting as a model the facts which have been brought out and made public in connection with the matter of Sky Shops and related incidents.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would be interested in re-reading the guidelines if the hon. member would indicate what particular section he thinks the Senator has infringed.

● (1110)

Mr. Baldwin: I suggest the Prime Minister would do well over the weekend to refresh his memory and read guidelines numbers 1, 2 and 3.

Mr. Trudeau: You don't know the answer?

Mr. Baldwin: He would find them very interesting reading.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—SUGGESTED FUTURE TENDERING ON LEASE HELD BY KEBEC RESTAURANTS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LEASE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Transport in the absence of the minister. It is in regard to the lease currently held at Dorval by Kebec Restaurants. In view of the fact that this company has had a monopoly on this lease for more than ten years at very advantageous rates, could the minister assure the House that when this lease is up for renewal in February it will be put out for open tender, in keeping with stated departmental policy?

Mr. Chrétien: That was approved in 1962.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Central Nova on a supplementary.

Mr. MacKay: If there is no Acting Minister of Transport, I will ask the Prime Minister if he would be prepared to arrange to table in this House a copy of the lease agreement between the Department of Transport and Kebec Restaurants which the minister indicated yesterday assured this company it would continue to enjoy these exclusive rights at Dorval for almost 15 years without any competitive tendering. Perhaps it could also be explained why Kebec Restaurants, whose president says it is now making a handsome profit on its operations at Dorval, currently is paying no higher a percentage to the government than was originally—as the President of the Treasury Board said—set in 1960.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly bring this to the attention of the minister. As the hon. member says, it will mean going back a number of years. This was a lease which originally was granted by the Diefenbaker government, and the terms of it were approved under the Diefenbaker government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well changed since.

Mr. Trudeau: That was the origin of this apparently very sinister giving of a contract.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

POSSIBILITY BOARD HAS POWER TO MAKE DECISIONS CONTRAVENING LEGAL PRINCIPLES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday in reply to a question I put to the Minister of Justice with regard to the inconsistency of principle which has been decided upon by the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board in terms of reaching decisions with severity now and more leniently later, as he stated two days ago in a speech and repeated yesterday, the Minister of Justice said that the law we passed on Wednesday in this chamber, Bill C-73, gave that kind of power to the Anti-Inflation Board. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is his view that the authority given to the Anti-Inflation Board is such that it is possible for it to make decisions which contravene the principle of the rule of law?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I suspected and stated in the House yesterday, Mr. Pepin was misquoted. He was contacted yesterday, and he said that he had been very badly misquoted.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I, too, heard Mr. Pepin's correction, at least as it was reported again in the news last night, and if I remember correctly, his words were to the effect that once again his rulings or the board's rulings, in interpreting the anti-inflation legislation, would be less severe further down the road, as he hoped at that time inflation would ease up. If that is the case, it seems to me that he is simply using different words from those attributed to him earlier, namely that the law as it now exists will be applied less severely to groups which come before the board in two, three or four months hence than it will be to those groups which come before it now. Does the Prime Minister understand that that is the situation?

Mr. Trudeau: I am informed that the Minister of Finance contacted Mr. Pepin, and Mr. Pepin said he had been misquoted. So if the hon. member is now saying that he heard a second quote, it is probably a second misquote.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT VIEW ON CONSISTENCY OF BOARD RULINGS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My final question will not deal with what Mr. Pepin is alleged to have said or not to have said. I should like to ask the Prime Minister to state government policy on this matter. Is it the view of the government that the Anti-Inflation Board must rule in a consistent fashion for the whole period for which that legislation is operative in Canada?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well yes, Mr. Speaker. The board is certainly expected to rule in a very even-handed manner but as the hon. member knows, in matters of administrative law you do have to look at the particular case and it does happen that administrative law is made up of a series of judgments in particular cases. I have no way of predicting what the Anti-Inflation Board will judge in particular cases, but I am confident it will judge within its mandate and within the terms of the law and regulations.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO SAFEGUARD SHOE INDUSTRY

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On October 24, 1975, the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada submitted to the committee an excellent and extremely important brief on trade and custom duties concerning the very serious circumstances of this Canadian industry. My question is this: can the minister advise the House whether, following the submission of this brief, he will soon announce strong and concrete measures to prevent most shoe manufacturers in Canada from going under, as is the case in my own riding where employers have had to lay off 75 per cent of their staff including some with over 30 years' experience in this important industry?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I would be pleased to bring that question to his attention. I know he will be back early next week. At the present time he is leading a very important trade delegation to France.

Mr. Fairweather: Has he seen the President?

ENERGY

SARNIA-MONTREAL PIPELINE—DATE OF COMPLETION AND ESTIMATED COST—ESTIMATED THROUGHPUT AND POSSIBILITY OF MAKING DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I will put my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister inform the House when the interprovincial pipeline extension to Montreal will be completed in light of the recently announced delay, and can he inform the House what this extension is now estimated to cost?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, when I last spoke to the president of the Interprovincial Pipeline Company he told me that he expected oil to be moving through that pipeline by May 1, 1976. I recognize, as does the Leader of the Opposition, that there have been difficulties with respect to construction as a result of weather and other conditions and it is possible there may be a delay. If there is a hard frost, however, I understand that construction will proceed throughout the winter months.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer the second part of my question about the present estimated cost upon completion. Perhaps when he answers that he could indicate how much oil it is now contemplated will be going through that extension on a daily basis when it is completed in light of the revision of our oil reserves and export policies, that sort of thing. Does the government now estimate it will have to begin making deficiency payments with repect to this pipeline right off the bat?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to get the figures the Leader of the Opposition is asking for on the increased costs that may be associated with any delay but I have not got them at present. As to the throughput of the line, I expect there will be 250,000 barrels a day moving through that line before the end of next year.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC CRIME PROBE—REASON FOR FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN JURISDICTIONAL CHALLENGE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Justice. Having regard to the exceptional manner in which the crime probe in the city of Montreal has operated and received national approbation, can the Prime Minister tell the House why, in the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada on the part of certain individuals who did not want to give evidence before that commission, the government of Canada joined with those alleged Mafia and unsavoury characters in arguing that the probe was not within the jurisdiction of the government of Quebec.

● (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple matter of the law. If the hon. member looks at the BNA Act he will find that criminal law comes within federal jurisdiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister not think that the Supreme Court of Canada was aware of that elementary law to which he alluded? Did he not think they possessed the intelligence to understand that? Why, then, did the government of Canada throw its weight behind these alleged thugs in order to set aside the probe so beneficial to the revelation of wrongdoing?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when the jurisdiction of the government of Canada is thought to be infringed by any provincial action or legislation—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Aha!

Mr. Trudeau: Aha!

Mr. Hees: It's Friday morning.

Mr. Trudeau: —it is the current practice of the government of Canada to step in, to defend that aspect of its jurisdiction, and this has nothing to do with who happens to be under suspicion. We are not of that category of people who believe, as the hon. member presumably does, that it is the duty of the police to inform the press of the investigation they are conducting.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, was this done because the government feared that some revelations might bring out certain things the government did not want to have released?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps possible that during the tenure of the right hon. gentleman as Prime Minister something would have been discovered, but we are not afraid.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no. You prevented the court from acting. That was cowardly. You would not find anything during my period to indicate wrongdoing.

TRADE

REASON IMPORTS OF AUTOMATIVE PARTS FROM UNITED STATES GREATER THAN CANADIAN EXPORTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a hard act to follow. My question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In his absence—he is in France on an important mission—may I address the question to the acting minister, who was the minister responsible when these things happened. Why is it that during the first nine months of this year Canada increased its exports of automotive parts to the United States by only 10 per cent, when the economy of that country was recovering rapidly, while, at the same time, the United States was able to increase its exports of the same products to this country by twice that amount when the economy of our country was flat?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. gentleman has not looked at the statistics. If he had been watching the situation he would have realized that the United States automobile market was a lot flatter than the Canadian market.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That is a complete misstatement, because the American economy has been recovering rapidly, particularly the automotive sector, as the minister knows. I ask, as I once headed this distinguished department, what has happened to this once great department which used to pride itself on being the greatest salesman in the world but now seems to have lost its touch.

THE MINISTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER NEW MINISTER OF COMMUNICATIONS WILL SOON BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Is it exact that with his well known charisma he has now succeeded in overcoming the resistance of the Minister of the Environment and bringing her into the labyrinth of communications?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all ministers are very interested in the communications problem and, as I had the opportunity of stating to the press yesterday, several backbenchers could do an excellent job as ministers of communications.

Mr. Wagner: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Can the Prime Minister advise the House today whether the appointment has already been agreed upon by the Cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will understand that until the Governor General has sworn in a new minister, it is not customary to disclose the name of this minister.

PUBLISHING

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO PROTECT CANADIAN SHAREHOLDERS IN "READER'S DIGEST"

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the serious adverse effect present legislation, Bill C-58, will have on the value of stocks held by 600 Canadian citizens in Reader's Digest (Canada), will the government take action to protect their equity which amounts to about 32 per cent of the ownership of the company?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize; the import of the question escaped me. I will take notice of it and try to answer, unless the hon. member wants to ask the question again.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister did not get the import of my question, may I repeat it. In view of the serious adverse effect of his present legislation, Bill C-58, upon the value of stocks held by 600 Canadian citizens in Reader's Digest (Canada), will his government take any action to protect their equity which amounts to about 32 per cent of the ownership? Three years ago, this stock was worth $32.50 on the market. This morning it is worth $7.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, in order to even consider the question, one would have to know to what the serious adverse effect is due. I have no means of knowing what is going to happen to Reader's Digest or to any other magazine in Canada. If I were playing the stock market, I would take my own chances.

COW-CALF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—DATE PROGRAM EFFECTIVE—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the congenial Minister of Agriculture. In view of the continuing difficulties of cow-calf operators, which the minister knows are very serious, can he tell us whether he has the Christmas spirit and can guarantee that he expects the federal cow-calf stabilization program to be in effect in this country after the new year?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: May I ask Scrooge whether he has secured agreement in principle between the provinces and the federal government on the broad details of such a program. If not, can he tell us whether any of the provinces are opposed to such a program?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, we have an ongoing committee of federal and provincial officials discussing this which will be discussed further at the Outlook Conference. There will be a full ministerial meeting on December 17 to discuss all the possibilities of stabilization and what kind of program we should be developing. We hope to develop a program for beef producers for the calendar year January 1 to December 31, 1976, some time in the future.

FINANCE

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION IMPOSING EXPORT TAX

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): My question is addressed to the House leader. A month ago the Minister of Finance indicated to the House that he planned to introduce legislation to impose export taxes on all export companies. He promised to have this in before Christmas. Will this be coming in before Christmas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now under discussion. It is the intention to introduce some resolutions along these lines before the House adjourns for the Christmas break.

ISRAELI ATTACK ON REFUGEE CAMPS IN LEBANON—POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST BY CANADA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the lucid and articulate Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the recent heavy raids by the Israeli air force which resulted in the killing of many women and children in Palestinian refugee camps in the sovereign state of Lebanon. Can the minister advise if the Canadian government shares the concern expressed in Washington and at the Vatican inter alia as to this destructive attack on civilians and, if so, has such concern been expressed to the Israeli ambassador to Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. gentleman, I am sure we all deplore this terrible tragedy, regardless of the circumstances or of the provocation. It has not been necessary for us to express any view on this matter in the United Nations because it has come before the Security Council of which we are not a member. However, I can assure the hon. member that the government deplores actions of this kind, regardless of their origin or of their motivation, and hopes this cycle of violence that has now escalated to these heights will soon be at an end.

SCIENCE

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REPORT OF SCIENCE COUNCIL ON JAMES BAY PROJECT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Some time ago, a Montreal daily confirmed the existence of a report prepared for the Science Council of Canada by Mr. Eric Bourdeau, engineer-economist, on all the circumstances that surrounded the launching of the James Bay project. As this report has now been completed, can the minister tell us whether it will be made public and, if so, when?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I shall look into the matter and ask the Science Council of Canada whether it will publish a report.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. I have, like many others, followed the evolution of the James Bay project, and as I feel that the report can in no way be very flattering for the Quebec government, in view of the lack of preliminary surveys, and also in the interest of all Quebecers, I ask the minister whether he will recommend to the cabinet that the report be published for the information of Quebec residents?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire about the matter.

MANPOWER

MINISTER'S ESTIMATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN 1976—REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Two nights ago the minister, on the Program "Reflection", indicated that his personal estimation of unemployment in the year 1976 is 7 per cent. I wish to ask the minister whether, in reaching that estimation, he took into account the impact of the anti-inflation legislation.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It was a personal observation.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. As I said, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration stated two nights ago it was his personal estimation that the unemployment rate for the year 1976 would be 7 per cent. I now ask the Prime Minister whether he agrees with the minister with regard to this or, if not, whether he will tell us what in his judgment will be the unemployment rate for 1976. I know there is some rapport between those who sit on the front bench.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not make personal estimates. I read the figures from Statistics Canada and statements about the possible trend of the economy from various sources.

Mr. Alexander: The Prime Minister, I think conveniently, neglected to answer the main part of my question, that is, whether he agrees with the estimate given by the Minister of Manpower. I would think the Minister of Manpower has provided some input in this connection.

Mr. Trudeau: When we attempt to remedy such evils as unemployment, we do it in various ways. The budget is the most obvious way in which we act. Of course, when we impose budgetary measures to expand the fiscal and monetary framework we make assumptions as to what unemployment would be had we not acted in certain ways and these assumptions, to the extent they are important in reaching decisions, can usually be assessed from the budget itself.

Mr. Alexander: Do you agree with the minister or not?

An hon. Member: Irrelevant.

COW-CALF STABILIZATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT—CONSIDERATION OF PROGRAM UNDER STABILIZATION ACT

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, primarily for purposes of clarification, arising out of an answer he gave to the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. I think the minister indicated, if I understood him correctly, that there would be no stabilization program aimed at assisting cow-calf producers in January, 1976. Could the minister clarify this answer in the light of his statement of November 26, which can be found on page 9462, of Hansard in which the minister indicated that he and his deputy minister and their provincial counterparts would be meeting to work out a proper program to start, I think, in January, 1976. Has the minister changed his mind? Is anything going on? Or does he intend to allow the situation to deteriorate to the extent that the cow-calf producers will all go broke?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is reading something which I do not have in front of me at the present time. I do not believe I specifically said anything about a cow-calf program on November 26. I said we were working on a program which we were going to develop for the calendar year from January 1 to the end of December, 1976. It doesn't have to start on January 1. The announcement can be made at any time, for example, in the middle of the year. Meetings are still taking place. There are ongoing meetings between provincial deputy ministers, my deputy minister and officials in my department, trying to work out suitable programs. If we can decide on a proper program for beef producers I hope it will be announced as soon as possible.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is the minister saying he is not considering a specific cow-calf program under the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act? Yes or no.

Mr. Whelan: There is nothing in the act that specifically says there has to be a program for cow-calf operators. The reference is to cattle and the hon. member knows that we follow the act and we have not changed it. And we are not going to change it until we can work out a proper program, because there has been too much disunity among beef producers in the country about what they want done and what they do not want done. Not all the provinces are unanimous about what should or should not be done.

Mr. Mazankowski: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I simply ask the minister, is the answer yes or no? From the language he used I take it the answer is no, and that he is not considering a program for the cow-calf producers of this country.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows we have considered a cow-calf program in the hope some kind of program beneficial to cow-calf producers or beef producers in total can be worked out. That is what we want, if it can be a national program. Of course, it must be done with the co-operation of the provinces and the producers.

PERIOD TO BE COVERED BY COW-CALF STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): The minister referred to January, 1976 as the starting date and then said he did not know whether he could make the announcement as soon as that. Regardless of when the announcement is made, can he assure the House that if such a program comes into effect, it will be retroactive to the beginning of the year?

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, some of the programs we have are sometimes not announced until the end of the crop year. I have met with producers, as recently as yesterday, who suggested we do not announce stabilization programs until the crop year ends. But we have a formula already worked out for them. They were of the opinion it might have an effect on their market. I said that if we did have a program it would be for the calendar year, January, 1976 to the end of December, 1976.

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED MEETING WITH QUEBEC TO AVOID FAILURE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Following the wish expressed by International Olympic Committee Chairman Lord Killanin that provincial and federal authorities in Canada join their efforts to ensure that the facilities for the Olympic Games in Montreal be ready in time, could the Prime Minister tell the House whether he would agree to meet the Quebec authorities to determine what joint action could be taken to guarantee the success of the games, because failure to hold them could tarnish the image of our country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not read the international chairman's statement. If he had proposals to put to the government of Canada, I suppose he would know to reach this government. As regards the rest of the question, we have not received from the government of Quebec any request for a meeting on that particular subject.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGATION MANAGEMENT LEAKED TERMS OF SETTLEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. In the light of allegations by CUPW that Post Office officials conspired with local union leaders in Toronto and other places to undermine the collective bargaining process, will the Postmaster General tell the House if the Deputy Postmaster General or anyone else released details of the government's offer to anyone other than the union negotiating team, and if an investigation into the allegation is proposed?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): I think any investigation should be made by CUPW and their own local officials rather than by the Post Office, in connection with any contact we may or may not have had with members of the CUPW other than the negotiating team. I am not aware of any direct contact at all with any president of any local of CUPW.

ENVIRONNENTAL AFFAIRS

FRASER VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL—SUGGESTED EARLY ACTION ON REQUEST FOR FUNDS

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): In view of the statement of the Minister of the Environment in the House that the request for funds for the Fraser Valley flood control program is before Treasury Board, and in view of the urgency of the request because of current and potential further spring flooding in the Fraser Valley, could the President of the Treasury Board assure the House that priority will be given to making a decision on the request before it. Could the minister advise us when a decision might be forthcoming? Has this request been dealt with and, if not, will the minister assure the House that priority will be given in making a decision and will he advise us when such a decision might be forthcoming.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, of course, if we were faced with an urgent problem and the Minister of the Environment asked me to examine a recommendation with my colleagues of the Treasury Board, I would do so as soon as possible. Naturally, I would like the hon. member to note at the same time that he might perhaps inform the leader of the opposition that he calls on the government to spend a little more money.

POSSIBILITY OF MEASURE TO REPLACE WAR MEASURES ACT—DATE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Because of the fact that earlier this week the Minister of Justice was unable or perhaps unwilling to confirm the minister's own statement suggesting that new legislation is being considered for security reasons for the Olympics for the purpose of replacing the War Measures Act, in the absence of the Minister of Justice could the Solicitor General advise this House whether or not such legislation is in fact being drafted and, if so, for what purpose and when can we expect it to be introduced.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that legislation is under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. It is my understanding that some of it is being drafted but I cannot give the hon. member further details.

NATIONAL PARKS

ST. LAWRENCE ISLANDS—MINISTER'S MEETING WITH LOCAL RESIDENTS—POSSIBILITY OF EXPROPRIATION—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question and hopefully a short supplementary for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has he agreed to meet with the residents of the St. Lawrence islands parks region to discuss their many objections to the government's park expansion plan and when and can he guarantee there will be no expropriation of private property.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am looking at the book. Sometime next week, I believe on Thursday or Friday, I will be meeting representatives of the region. The question of expropriation presumably will be discussed. I have already said we hope there will be no expropriation, but if there is it will be in very limited key areas. We hope we will be able to get whatever properties are required on a voluntary basis. To date, some 20 people have come forward and offered their properties.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the House the reason an official of Parks Canada, Mr. Christakus stated publicly to the residents in the area at a public meeting that the minister had conferred with his provincial counterpart before this expansion plan was announced because subsequently at least two provincial cabinet ministers have denied that any such meetings took place. Could the minister tell us if, indeed, he did confer with his provincial counterpart.

Mr. Buchanan: Mr. Speaker, I will have to check back. I do not think I did, but I believe there were discussions at the official level concerning the park.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY SELF-EMPLOYED MAY DEFEAT GUIDELINES BY BORROWING FROM THEIR COMPANY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can he comment on recent reports that self-employed businessmen may be able to get around the pay increase guidelines by lending themselves money out of the company treasury at low interest rates and generous pay-back provisions. Is this something to which the government would object and, if so, can he say whether the government intends to plug this particular loophole?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is the first I have heard of it, Mr. Speaker. I will be glad to draw it to the attention of the Minister of Finance and find out if there are regulations to prevent this happening.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—INCREASED PRODUCTIVITY MAY PERMIT INCREASES IN INCOME GREATER THAN GUIDELINES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is generally acknowledged that as an economy begins to come out of a recession, productivity as we measure it, begins to go up. Mr. Donald Edwards, director general of the compensation branch of the Anti-Inflation Board has indicated that the board might—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member have a supplementary question?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister inquire whether the government's productivity increases would permit increased compensation of up to $5,000 which is more than the guidelines suggest.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, increased compensation to whom and under what circumstances? I am afraid the hon. member would need to ask the question at more length or submit it in writing.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY—SUGGESTED EXAMINATION OF COST OF PRODUCTION FORMULA—REASON FOR REDUCTION IN PRICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency has now reversed the position it took on November 24 in its letter to the Anti-Inflation Board and has in fact rolled back the price of Grade A large eggs on the basis of a decline in the price of feed, I ask the minister if he is now prepared to direct, or as a result of his meeting with the Farm Products Marketing Council he is directing, the council to examine the whole cost of production formula of the agency and is he satisfied that the cost of production formula is in order.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to find out for himself he can do so very easily by talking to any member of the council. We have a full-time officer who just watches the price formula they are using. The fact that eggs have been reduced one cent a dozen is the result of following the formula. They could reduce it further in another month if the cost input warrants that much of a change. I am satisfied that when they increased the price of eggs one cent a dozen for grade A large this was warranted. We are continually watching it. I said to the hon. member the other day I was going to meet with the Farm Products Marketing Council and he tried to say I misled the House. I did meet with them. I told them my concern and the concern of the members of the House of Commons about what was going on and they assured me they were following the formula and that their person was checking. I did not receive a written reply but I received a phone call telling me they were satisfied and also that their price would be rolled back one cent a dozen because of the information they were provided by the feed industry in Canada and as a result of their double checking with the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, and so on, which they do constantly every day of the week.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if we can take from his answer that the price of eggs has been rolled back as a consequence of discernible changes in the price of feed grain or if in fact the price of eggs has been rolled back as a consequence of the protest levelled at CEMA over the recent price increases by the Anti-Inflation Board.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Whelan: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The price was rolled back because they are following the formula as they are supposed to and because we are watching them.

NATIONAL REVENUE

TAX ON GASOLINE—PROVISION TO ELIMINATE COLLECTION OF REFUNDABLE PORTION

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Could the minister advise the House whether or not there will be a certification program in place by December 31 to provide that his department will not have to continue the collection of the ten cents per gallon excise tax on that portion which ultimately has to be refunded to the several eligible groups in Canada.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the regulations are now in the final stage of preparation and would expect to be able to announce them soon. There is an interdepartmental committee working on this. Whether they will reach all the individuals the hon. member would like I do not know at this time.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell us whether this certification program will be in place by the end of this year so that another taxation year will not be involved.

Mr. Cullen: I do not expect by the end of this year, Mr. Speaker.

MANPOWER

PROPORTION OF NON-CANADIANS TEACHING AT UNIVERSITIES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has his department conducted an inquiry into the whole question of the extent and effect of the apparently high proportion of persons teaching in Canadian universities who are not, or are not trying to become, Canadian citizens.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this whole area is under very intensive review now. I do not think it will be long before we will be announcing a federal position. As the hon. member will appreciate this is very much a matter under provincial jurisdiction and we will make our decision after consultation with the provinces.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE MORE HUMANE

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for unemployment insurance.

Considering that several UIC officers act in a disgraceful manner towards claimants, for example by making them sign statements and then forcing them to make payments over a long period, and considering that some people must pay up to $20 a letter to a physician to get their benefits, which is an acquired right, can the minister tell this House whether he intends to establish more humane guidelines for the implementation of this legislation?

● (1150)

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Commission employees, with very few exceptions, have been acting totally under the provisions of the Act and not in an inhumane or shameful fashion. I resent the criticism and allegations about them. With regard to the monitoring of unemployment insurance benefit payments, I believe it is necessary in order to maintain the integrity of the plan. The practice of signing statements through the benefit control process was discontinued three or four months ago and those details have been explained before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. In so far as other activities are concerned, if the hon. member has any specific instances, I would be glad to look into them.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SYDNEY EPIDEMIOLOGICAL STUDY—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOMMENDATIONS OF CITY COUNCIL

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The minister is aware of a report by the Environmental Protection Service stating that effluent from the operations of the Sydney steel plant into the Sydney harbour contains more than 100 times the level of pollutants allowable under U.S. standards. May I ask the minister if she is in receipt of a resolution from the Sydney city council making seven recommendations pertaining to the Sydney epidemiological study and, if so, is she prepared to accede to the request of the city council?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have not received and I do not have before me the resolutions of the Sydney Health Board, but I know that for some time they have been preoccupied by the problem of air pollution in that region. My officials have met with them in order to reassess the situation in Sydney. We have underway an epidemiological study involving the federal Department of National Health and Welfare and my own department, by which we are trying to establish whether there is a health hazard resulting from the air pollution. Once we get that report we will want to act to the extent the present legislation will allow us. We must first prove there is damage to health. However, with the recent passage of the Contaminants Act, and under other pieces of legislation and if I am able to come to grips with the problem of the provincial and federal jurisdictions, all levels of government should try to do something to solve that problem which is a very important one.

HOUSING

LIMITED DIVIDEND PROJECTS—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF RENT INCREASES IN OTTAWA AREA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It has to do with a question I asked him on December 1 to which the minister answered that he would agree to look into the circumstances surrounding rent increases which have been proposed on federally controlled low income housing units in the national capital area. Has he had an opportunity to make that investigation, and could he make a statement to the House in response to my question?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I asked for information on this, Mr. Speaker, but I do not have the answer yet. Regrettably, I have been away in the last few days. It might be in my papers but I would rather give a comprehensive report.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): During the course of that exchange I asked the Minister of Finance whether he would look into the position of CMHC in terms of federally financed low income housing units as an element of the control program, and the minister undertook to give an answer. Would he be kind enough to speak to his colleague to see whether he would be prepared also to give an answer specifically with respect to low income housing?

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will look into both these questions.

HEALTH

GOVERNMENT VIEW OF QUEBEC HYDRO RULING THAT HUSBANDS AND WIVES HAVE SEPARATE QUARTERS ON CAMPSITE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare may I direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the concern which the federal government should have for the general physical and mental wellbeing of Canadians, and in view of the widely accepted desire of Canadians to preserve the integrity of the family unit, does the government condone the action on the Quebec hydro site where husbands and wives are required to sleep in separate dwellings and, if it does not, what action is being taken?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the government has asked all Canadians to exercise restraint.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: In the case of this particular restraint, the Quebec government is going further than the federal government is prepared to do.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF NUMBER OF UNION MEMBERS DENIED RIGHT TO VOTE ON SETTLEMENT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Is he aware that during the recent postal strike a number of post offices did not receive strike ballots and a number of casual workers who were union members did not receive ballots? Does be know what number or what percentage of union people were not given the right to vote in the past strike?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, casuals are not members of the union but part-time workers are; they are in another category. I do not know how many were disenfranchised and frankly, if I may suggest it, I am not particularly interested. What I am interested in is the fact that they are all back at work and that from here on in we can have an active official post office and that the rank and file make certain that the collective agreement is respected by management and vice versa. In this way we will try to get around to delivering mail on time as we should.

POSSIBLE ESTABLISHMENT OF CRITERIA FOR STRIKE VOTES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): I think we all appreciate very much that they are back to work. Since one of the post offices which was not given the right to vote was a fairly large one from a community of about 5,000 people and I believe there were others, are criteria being set down by the government which would establish what constitutes an acceptable strike vote, so that unions cannot have the votes go in their own favour?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): In the short run those union members who were disenfranchised accidentally or intentionally have proper recourse under their constitution to stand up and be counted and to demand that the national executive tell them why they were accidentally or intentionally denied the right to vote. If they learn to exercise their rights under their own constitution, then the whole labour movement will not be tarnished unfairly by the actions of a very irresponsible few.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAELI RAID ON REFUGEE CAMP IN LEBANON—SUGGESTED CONVEYANCE OF GOVERNMENT VIEWS TO ISRAELI AMBASSADOR

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs and it is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Hillsborough. Has the minister or the acting minister conveyed directly to the ambassador of Israel the views that the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs expressed today on the air raid on Lebanon in which many civilians were killed and, if not, will he do so?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to convey these views. The Secretary of State for External Affairs is out of town and I know he has not done so. I shall bring to the attention of the ambassador the statement that I made in the House of Commons today.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MODEL AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Minister of Finance or his parliamentary secretary—if I may interrupt the whip for a minute—remind the Minister of Finance of his assurances to me made a week ago that he would be able, in the House or otherwise, to make available the model agreements which the government of Canada has put before the provinces with respect to the implementation of the anti-inflation bill? This assurance was given by the minister a week ago. I cannot understand why it takes so long to carry out his commitment that these model agreements would be tabled in the House or otherwise made available to us.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister will answer by tabling the documents asked by the leader of the opposition as soon as he is back in this House. CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO LEGALIZE OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-419, entitled "An Act to amend the Criminal Code (off-track betting)".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my main, essential and urgent purpose in introducing this bill for the third time since 1967 is to provide the province of Quebec, without any disbursement on the part of the federal government, therefore from the taxpayers of the ten provinces, a new source of income to finance the deficit of the Olympics. Moreover, the bill would strike a severe blow to the Canadian and international underworld by removing the illegality of off-track betting. Finally, all provinces could benefit, if they so wished, of such an amendment to the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I understand that after I left the House yesterday, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said he intended to raise a question of privilege because he said I had misled the House. I wish to say, as briefly as I can, that in my answer to the hon. member I did not promise to give him any information. However, whenever I have promised hon. members that we would check our records, we have followed it up as quickly as possible. In all instances we have done this. But I cannot report upon something until it has been determined. I did say to the hon. member yesterday that I would inform him, and that anything we were doing was public information, as far as I was concerned.

I did meet with the National Farm Products Marketing Council on Tuesday, November 25, and I did ask the council to report back to me after its consideration of the change in egg prices. Although I have not received a written reply from the council, I am pleased to report to the House that the review officers of the council, who automatically monitor the cost-price factor formula, advised me by telephone that they were satisfied a price increase was justified for some time prior to its actual implementation, but following the pricing formula they use, this price can fluctuate either up or down. As was pointed out earlier today in the House, the price of eggs is down one cent a dozen as of this morning. That is because of input costs, and that formula is being followed properly.

The formula is available for anyone to scrutinize at any time. It is stricter than we are imposing on anybody else under the anti-inflation program, and has been in force since last July. I do not know if the hon. member meant to do what he did, but he has created an incorrect impression by the very fact that he is reported in the press today as saying that "Whelan misled the House". As far as I am concerned, if there is anything I am not guilty of, it is of trying to mislead the House on anything.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: If there is anything going for this minister just a little bit, it is that he is trying to do his damndest to be honest about everything he does.

Some hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, the minister has used the guise of a question of privilege to bootleg a statement into the House which should have been made on motions.

Mr. Blais: What did you do yesterday?

Mr. McGrath: I merely want to say that the record speaks for itself. On November 25 I asked the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) what he was doing about the complaint which had been raised by the Anti-Inflation Board with respect to increases in the price of eggs by CEMA which, in the opinion of the board, could not be justified in light of decreases in the price of feed gain. The minister replied on November 25 as follows:

I am meeting with the Farm Products Marketing Council later this day to discuss that matter.

That was on November 25. Yesterday, in reply to the question I raised, the minister said he was meeting with them and that the meeting was a continuing thing. All I want to show is that the minister made the statement on November 25, that he was meeting with them, and surely it should not have taken him ten days to discuss this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) raised, as has been appropriately put a disagreement, under the guise of a question of privilege. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) indicated yesterday his intention to raise a similar kind of question of privilege. In any case, I am sure both hon. members will recognize at once that the matter is one of dispute and disagreement between them and does not fall within the classic definition of a question of privilege.

CRIMINALS CONVICTED OF CAPITAL MURDER WHO HAVE COMMITTED ANOTHER MURDER

Question No. 3,149—Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve):

1. How many criminals convicted of capital murder have committed another murder during the years (a) 1930-40 (b) 1941-50 (c) 1951-60 (d) 1961-70 (e) 1971-75?

2. In each case was the second offence committed (a) during escape (b) on parole (c) upon completion of sentence (d) others?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. (a) None; (b) one, executed in 1944; (c) None; (d) one, second murder (two counts) committed in U.S.A., commuted; (e) None.

2. (a) None; (b) Yes—1(b); (c) None; (d) Yes—1(d) second murder committed after escape from British Columbia Penitentiary.

STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO PANARCTIC OIL

Question No. 3,303—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion aware of the statements in the press attributed to the President of Panarctic Oil during the week of October 20 to 24, 1975 indicating the possibility that Panarctic Oil will purchase three Scandanavian crude oil tankers for transport of Arctic oil to market should that be feasible?

2. Is the Minister aware of the extent of participation in Panarctic Oil by the government and its agents and, if so, to what extent is this participation?

3. Has the Minister examined the implications of going outside Canada for such vessels in terms of the long-term viability and health of the Canadian ship-building industry and trade balance and (a) if so, what conclusions have been reached (b) if not, for what reason?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Certain Canadian newspapers published, during the week of October 20, 1975 to October 24, 1975, articles referring to discoveries of oil on Cameron Island by Panarctic Oils, Ltd. of Calgary. These articles made cursory mention of the problems of transporting crude oil from this most remote location to refineries in developed areas and included a brief reference to preliminary discussions between Panarctic and Scandinavian shipbuilders for the supply of suitable vessels.

2. The Canadian Government is an equity participant in Panarctic Oils Ltd. holding 45% of the issued and outstanding common shares. No preferred shares are outstanding.

3. The Advisory Committee on Industrial Benefits from Natural Resource Development will meet with executives of Panarctic Oils Ltd. in the very near future to discuss the implications of the oil discovery and related topics including the issues surrounding the transportation of crude oil to refineries. Conclusions have not been reached concerning the implications of purchasing tankers from shipyards not located in Canada because the required process of analysis and consultation, of which the aforementioned meeting will be a part, has not been completed. But, as the work proceeds, the welfare of the Canadian economy will be the basic consideration.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BELL CANADA

Question No. 3,468—Mr. Foster:

1. Does the Canadian Transport Commission monitor the undertakings which telephone utilities, such as Bell Canada, give when they apply for rate increases to ensure that these undertakings are carried out and, if so, how is this monitoring carried out?

2. Can a subscriber or a municipality, on behalf of the ratepayers, cause an enquiry or hearing to be held, or other action taken, where they feel that Bell Canada has not carried out the instructions of the Canadian Transport Commission to improve service in a specific area?

3. Under what circumstances will the Canadian Transport Commission hold hearings in localities outside Ottawa?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. Applications from telephone utilities, such as Bell Canada, for approval of increases in rates and charges are not predicated upon undertakings but upon revenue needs and the justness and reasonableness of rates required to meet them. For example, the construction program forecast by the applicant is one of the elements to be considered in relation to revenue needs, but such forecast does not constitute an undertaking.

2. The Telecommunication Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission does not give instructions with respect to service improvements in specific areas but the Commission uses its good offices to deal with specific problems as they arise.

3. All committees of the Commission hold hearings outside Ottawa from time to time; the matter is within the discretion of the Commission and would depend upon the circumstances of each specific case.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOAN APPLICATIONS—CONSTITUENCY OF SASKATOON

Question No. 3,483—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

How many applications were received from the Constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar for loans under the Farm Credit Act for the year 1974 and the first six months of 1975 (a) how many were approved (b) what amount was involved (c) what percentage of loans were or are in default?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises that statistics are not maintained on a constituency basis. However, for Rural Municipalities 315, 316, 344, 345, 347, 373, 376, 403, 404, 405, 406, 434, 436 and 466, which closely approximate the constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar, the answer is as follows:

	Applications	Approvals	Amount	Per cent of Loans in Default
		Number	$
1974-75	145	145	6,646,300	4.8
1975-76 (to September 30, 1975)	117	111	7,022,900	6.4

PUBLIC UTILITIES INCOME TAX TRANSFER ACT

Question No. 3,499—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the government intend to submit telephone companies to the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act?

2. Did any province ask for such a transfer and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): 1. The government does not intend to submit telephone companies to the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act.

2. None of the provinces has asked for such a transfer.

MILLHAVEN PENITENTIARY—INCIDENT ON NOVEMBER 3, 1975

Question No. 3,518—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did any form of uprising or trouble occur at Millhaven Penitentiary on Monday, November 3, 1975 and, if so, what are the details including the (a) use of tear gas in the Segregation Wing (b) reasons for the suspension of Mr. Earl Oliver, a twenty year correctional officer in charge at the time?

2. Was there a threatened walk-out of the staff to take place at midnight Tuesday, November 4, 1975, as a result of Mr. Oliver's suspension or any other aspects of the situation and, if so, what are the details?

3. Did the day staff on Wednesday, November 5, 1975, show up for duty in its entirety and, if not (a) for what reasons (b) were the food and exercise areas the only areas available to the inmates?

4. Has the government disclosed any details of this incident and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): 1. Yes. A number of inmates in the segregation area of the Millhaven Institution created a disturbance by yelling and by kicking and banging cell doors. Tear gas was used in order to subdue to inmates. Mr. Oliver authorized the use of tear gas in order to pacify the rebelling inmates. Mr. Oliver was suspended from duty for non-conforming to institutional standing orders in the use of gas. Disciplinary charges have been laid against Mr. Oliver and will be dealt with in accordance with normal procedures.

2. No. However, there was a withdrawal of overtime services by the custodial staff.

3. The regular scheduled staff members reported for duty on November 5, 1975. However, due to the withdrawal of overtime services, it was impossible to man all posts. All institutional areas were available to inmates except the industrial workshops.

4. General factual information relating to this incident was provided on a regional and national basis upon request by the media.

ARCTIC AIR FACILITIES PROGRAM

Question No. 3,567—Mr. Murta:

1. (a) What is the Arctic air facilities programme (b) are the monies in the programme to be used solely to upgrade existing Arctic airstrips (c) how large is its funding and will the amount be increased in the future (d) how long is its duration and will the programme be extended?

2. What criteria were used in choosing which airstrips would be upgraded?

3. Have the airstrips at Grise Fiord and Arctic Bay received any aid from the programme, and (a) if so (i) how much (ii) for what purpose (b) if not, for what reason?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) The Arctic Air Facilities Program is a multi-year program being implemented by Transport Canada to enable the operation of regular, reliable air services to communities in the North, particularly those which are dependent on the air mode for regular transportation services. (b) The monies in the program are being used both to upgrade existing Arctic airstrips and to construct new airstrips and other transportation facilities. (c) In the first year of the program (1974/75), the expenditures totalled $5,630,000. The annual amount now exceeds $10 million and expenditures in subsequent years will depend on the availability of financial and human resources. (d) The program will continue until the airstips meet the minimum standards required to enable the operation of regular, reliable air services.

2. All airstrips serving communities with a population of 100 or more and with no other means of regular transportation will be upgraded to the minimum standard required to enable the operation of regular, reliable air transportation services.

3. Grise Fiord and Arctic Bay—No upgrading of these airstrips has yet been undertaken under the program. Due to the nature of the terrain surrounding the airstrips, projects have not yet been identified which would improve the regularity and reliability of air services to these communities. This matter is under study, and should improvements be identified which would enable the safe operation of regular air service, they would be considered on a high priority basis. However, with respect to Arctic Bay, it is currently planned that this community will eventually be connected by road to the new airport under construction at Strathcona Sound.

GROSS REVENUE OF SKY SHOP EXPORTS LTD.

Question No. 3,571—Mr. MacKay:

For each year since 1964 (a) what were the gross revenues of the duty-free shop at Dorval Airport operated by Sky Shop Exports Limited as reported to the government (b) how much revenue accrued to the government from this operation under the terms and conditions of Sky Shops' lease with the Department of Transport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): For the fiscal years ending March 31, the company's gross revenue and rent paid are as follows:

	Gross Revenue	Rent
1965	$ 29,336	$15,000 (1)
1966	66,556	15,000 (1)
1967	218,650	15,000 (1)
1968	692,303	23,563
1969	905,931	44,015
1970	1,170,067	58,504
1971	1,371,002	68,451
1972	2,036,870	101,843
1973	3,308,860	297,073
1974	4,316,609	388,499
1975	5,134,891	434,825

(1) guaranteed annual minimum.

Under the terms of its lease, Sky Shops pays the greater of:
(1) a percentage of its gross revenue, or
(2) a guaranteed annual minimum.

MEMBERS OF FARM CREDIT APPEALS BOARD, ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 3,572—Mr. Marshall:

What are the names and address of members of the Farm Credit Appeals Board in the Atlantic Region?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): The Farm Credit Corporation advises as follows: Jones, Charles, RR 1, Charlottetown, Queens County, PEI; Yeo, Charles, St. Eleanor's, Prince County, PEI; Mackenzie, Wilbert, Vernon River, Queens County, PEI; Bridges, Sidney, Sheffield, Sunbury County, NB; Hannington, Albert G, RR 1, Dorchester Crossing, Westmorland County, NB; Ouellette, Leo, RR 2, Grand Falls, Victoria County, NB; Fisher, Garnet, Shinimicas, Cumberland County, NS; Woodman, Gordon, Grand Pre, Kings County, NS; Rhodenizer, Robert, RR 1, Barss Corner, Lunenburg County, NS.

BUDGET CUTBACK OF $4 MILLION FOR VIP PROTECTIONS

Question No. 3,590—Mr. Reynolds:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 3,170, could the Solicitor General advise which VIP groups or individuals will not be protected because of the budget cutback of $4 million for VIP protections?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Nil.

Mr. Blais: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the parliamentary secretary question No. 3577 standing in my name. It is a question about which we had some discussions a matter of months ago before it was entered on the order paper. Although I appreciate the fact that it is a long question and will require quite a lengthy reply, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary can give some indication as to when the government will be prepared to answer it.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I have no information at this time. I will provide it for the hon. member by Monday.

[Mr. Lang.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

AUTHORIZATION FOR CMHC TO MAKE INTEREST REDUCTION GRANTS, CASH GRANTS, ETC., TO ENCOURAGE HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs) that Bill C-77, to amend the National Housing Act and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak for very long, but I think it is necessary to point out that this legislation, like a lot of other legislation that is brought into the House, will not do much to solve the problem it is supposed to solve. I mentioned last night that we would have a much better housing system if we had originally established CMHC as an agency to build one class of house for those who cannot raise money in any other way. If over the years we had had a revolving fund, the payments made to CMHC would have been available to be reinvested. I am thinking about the system we follow with regard to the banks. We keep reserves in relation to the amount of lending which can take place somewhere in the range of one to eight: for every $1 deposited, the banks lend $8. It seems to me that this system could be followed with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation if we used the payments as a revolving fund rather than coming back to parliament every few months for a change in policy and a new direction.

● (1210)

Mr. Speaker, we are not building houses in Canada. We have a surplus of lumber and a surplus of building materials. There is a very high rate of unemployment in the construction industry. Despite this, a large number of Canadians are looking for houses that they can afford. Maybe Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should be buying land themselves. We should be establishing federal municipalities, if necessary, and constructing housing for Canadians.

I am always amazed at how quickly this government hides behind the constitution and the responsibility of the provinces. But when it came to the anti-inflation legislation, they did not bother about the constitution at all but decided the provinces could go along with them or stay out. They should be doing that with housing. We work out all kinds of arrangements with the provinces, and most citizens are not even aware that the federal government is involved; they think the schemes are provincial but are financed by the federal government through CMHC.

For some time, veterans' housing was separate. Recently, when the Veterans Land Act was ended, we were told that veterans would have special privileges under the national housing scheme. Only two veterans have taken advantage of the special arrangements, and approximately 50 have taken advantage of the AHOP program. The veterans obviously do not believe they are receiving preferential treatment from the national housing authority.

The government has participated with the provinces in a very cheap housing program—HOME. I should like to know where the inspectors of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are when it comes to maintaining the high standards of the corporation. I know of housing built under the program where you could not only look outside the house from inside, but from outside you could see inside without looking through the doors or windows. In my opinion, that kind of housing should be condemned. It does not meet any standard of construction; it cannot be heated properly and will not last very long.

Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation sets reasonable standards and if a contractor wants his house inspected it is done, but it is not easy for an individual who may have to wait as long as a month. Even banks have a great deal of trouble. I am always getting calls from them about their difficulties. In my area, however, I do not see any difficulty for the big contractors in getting inspectors to come in. They play footsy with each other. I can tell you of some terrible housing that is built and of disasters where large corporations are involved. Hedman is a good example. A major construction company in Timmins is building houses that should never be approved because they are unsafe in several respects.

There are many houses in Ottawa, where large corporations are involved, below the standards of Central Mortgage and Housing. In my opinion the head of Central Mortgage and Housing has built some houses that are dangerous and detrimental to the housing industry. Houses with aluminium wiring are potential death traps: in Ottawa, seven or eight fires have been directly attributed to it. I remember an instance last spring where the wiring was responsible for the death of a young girl. It should have been known that that type of wiring was causing considerable difficulty.

Central Mortgage and Housing is also approving trailers. One person I spoke to who lives in a trailer told me that you can feel along the wall and find it warm when the aluminium wiring gets hot. But people buying houses with aluminum wiring are not warned of the danger. I spoke to a government official who indicated that they had not been able to prove that aluminium wiring was unsatisfactory. When I asked if he would live in a house with aluminium wiring, he said, "Certainly not; it is dangerous." So it is not dangerous from a scientific point of view, and it is not dangerous according to the regulations the minister has put out, but it is dangerous for anyone who knows anything about it.

Housing standards are not enforced and in many cases we have agreed with the provinces to build substandard housing. My last point is that this minister is worse than any of the others we have had when it comes to changing the regulations and the subsidies for housing. In fact, only the real estate people can keep up to him. They are the only ones who can advise buyers and builders of all the advantages. Even the banks are having trouble in training their employees to understand the advantages of the current program, because it will be in effect only a few months before it is changed again. Any program that changes as often as the housing program cannot be good because most Canadians cannot take advantage of even the small advantages offered.

We are bribing the industry with subsidies. We are carrying on a policy of subsidizing the corporate bums, the large corporations that are building housing in this country. The result is that mostly expensive housing and shopping centres are being built because they bring greater returns. Other departments of governments are also to blame because the government ends up renting out accommodation that it cannot use. Mr. Speaker, Central Mortgage and Housing should not be providing assistance for building office space and shopping centres when in many cases there is a surplus of that kind of accommodation.

In parliament we are all aware that Parkinson's law is the guiding law of government. You build it, you create it, and you will use it. We have certainly done that in Ottawa and Hull with regard to office space. We have spent a great deal of money to provide unnecessary accommodation which obviously will have to be filled simply because it is there. This is lousy legislation, Mr. Speaker. The minister should sit down for a while instead of gadding about the country making speeches: he should look at some of the studies done in the past five or six years, none of which has been given any consideration, because every time a problem develops a new study is dreamed up.

There is a great need in this country for low-cost housing. If the minister considers the problem he will realize that to a large extent the banks subsidize the building of the low-cost housing that we need. If we are to meet our goals in housing we may have to control the banking industry, perhaps even nationalize it, to make sure that money is available for low-cost housing. That is where the need exists. The need is not so great in the case of middle-incomer earners. We need more housing for the poor and the banks must provide the money at low interest rates.

Finally, I suggest that when borrowers repay money to Central Mortgage and Housing the government should leave it there; in other words, the corporation should be empowered to lend again to other borrowers. This business of the government making available every so often a few hundred million dollars for housing is nothing but a gimmick. With every new program the ground rules are changed and people become confused. Would it not be better to let Central Mortgage and Housing retain repaid funds and lend them again? Instead of introducing new programs every so often, the government ought to embark on a long-range program of which people can be aware. Canadians should know today what will be available later in housing programs. The government ought to consider the Hellyer report and produce a white paper showing its long-range plans for housing.

The government must change its approach to housing. You cannot treat houses as you treat cars. People are being encouraged to buy cars before the end of the year because the Ontario government removed the sales tax on them until the year-end. They will reimpose it next year. Consequently, people are being pressured to buy cars. Buy now and save, they are told.

The minister tried to do much the same thing with housing. The house buyer who bought before a certain time was to get a federal grant of $500. If he delayed buying, he would lose the grant. That is not the way to go about it. I suggest, therefore, that there is something wrong with the government's housing program. The government should explain to the average Canadian—not to the construction industry and not necessarily to the House of Commons—its housing program so that the average man will know which aspect of it will give him the greatest advantage. I think the government is obligated to do this.

If the minister is interested in solving the housing problems of our low-income people and is not merely interested in playing politics, he should work out a long-term program and explain it to the people. Since being appointed to his portfolio he has brought in three housing bills, not one of which, so far as I can see, has been worth supporting.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the minister back to the House after his trip to Vancouver, and indicate that I support the difficult position he had to take with regard to the holding of the conference in that city.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Over the years, the government has been justifiably criticized for its so-called housing policy. As the Economic Council of Canada suggested, the government has treated housing policy as a sort of filler, in the same way as newspapers include fillers when their stories are shorter than anticipated. But this filler, this policy, has been used to stimulate the economy. As my colleague from Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) said, this program is nothing but shadow-boxing. It is a political program.

Of course people want a house of their own. Therefore, housing programs have always been political programs. I am not against political things except when they involve something as important as housing. In housing there must be a policy, and we have seen no policy. Of course, at election times housing policy becomes part of the government's program. It tells people what it will do to encourage home building and it says, "We will put money into such programs." And not only this government has said that. I do not say this government is exclusively to blame in that regard. However, it seems that the federal government's housing policy—and I include the policies of some provinces—has consisted of gimmickry rather than any attempt to come to grips with our needs. An adequate housing policy has not been established. The minister may say that this kind of gimmickry has been successful and that it has worked, although it has not always. That is hardly justification to those who are serious about solving the severe housing problem in Canada. When I speak of a severe housing problem, I do not mean that most Canadians are ill-housed or suffer from housing problems. Most Canadians do not suffer from housing problems and therein lies the great difficulty of determining what is a good housing program.

About two years ago I did a survey in my constituency. I asked my constituents, "Are you adequately housed or are you experiencing a housing problem?" About 90 per cent of the people replied that they were not experiencing any housing difficulties. One woman said, "Yes, I have a housing problem. His name is Richard." Nevertheless, a significant group in this country is suffering from serious housing difficulties. The parliamentary secretary, who I presume delivered the speech on behalf of the minister, defined them as the ill, the poor and the elderly. I wish the people who write these marvellous speeches were responsible for implementing policy, because invariably we run into a non-sequitur. On the one hand we see definitions and an outline of what must be done, while on the other the proposals put forward in no way meet the need defined.

What will be the effect of the present proposal? This business of encouraging home ownership has increased the cost of every home in this country. Every time the government subsidizes people and allows them to acquire property, it makes more money available for bidding up the price of housing. We have seen this happen over and over again. The government has subsidized a small segment of the Canadian population but not that segment which is most in need.

Home owners have derived great capital advantage from the government's program which has forced up the price of houses. Presumably, that is one reason why it is so difficult to introduce an adequate housing policy in this country. Most people have a vested interest in seeing the price of houses rise. Most home owners look after their property, and although most say they deplore the sharp rise in house prices they are content to note how much their personal wealth has increased as a consequence of government programs. Certainly, that has been the effect of these programs.

You can see this sort of thing happening in other areas. For instance, consider government programs designed to encourage young people to buy farms. Every time we make credit easier we force up the price of farms. The same thing applies to housing. Every time the government introduces a program for encouraging people to buy housing, whether by giving a $500 federal grant on top of the $1,500 Ontario grant or any other method, the end result is that house prices rise. Is this what the government wants? Is this what the minister wants? If so, let him say so. That is one of the great consequences of what he is doing.

Let us discuss home ownership. There has been a terrible tendency to equate home ownership with living accommodation as though they are exactly the same. Obviously, home ownership and living accommodation have a relationship. One of the main reasons people buy homes is to have accommodation for themselves. What is often overlooked, or certainly is not stated, is that home ownership is more than just accommodation. Home ownership is a method of investment. What the government is doing is being very partial to a group of investors. That is what is really involved.

The government is creating two classes of citizens in this country, those who own and those who must rent accommodation. All the advantages are in favour of those who own. They are subsidized in the purchase of their home and in some cases are sustained in the payment of their mortgages. They receive benefits under the Income Tax Act, in contrast to those who have to rent. Is this the kind of society we want, where one group of people who are fortunate to have surplus income and are able to save some money receive advantages on top of that?

The hon. member for Broadview documented the effect of some government programs such as registered retirement savings plans and things of that kind. We go beyond subsidizing and there is a tremendous amount of dissatisfaction engendered among those who do not receive any benefit. When the $500 grant came in I received many bitter complaints. People were asking if they were eligible for the grant with respect to houses they had bought two months earlier. I had to tell them they were not eligible unless they had purchased after a certain date.

How fair is a program that on an arbitrary basis, or depending on the political whims of the government, provides great capital benefit to some Canadians but not to others? The minister may say, in his defence, that we need to stimulate employment and this can be done by providing an increased housing stock, something that is badly needed. This has been said by various ministers over the years. Surely there are better ways of doing this than the subsidization programs the government now has.

It almost looks as though the Liberal party commissions the MacLaren Advertising Company to determine which group will have to be pleased in the next election. That company comes up with a target group. It may be young married swingers looking to do certain things. The company then tells the government what kind of program they must design in order to satisfy the target group. The poor are never a target group because they do not vote to the same extent as other people. So why bother pleasing them? They may have the greatest needs, but they are not as great a political force. Therefore, programs are not designed to please them. Programs are designed for the middle-class group. They please those who can be expected to be grateful to the government for bringing in measures of this type. They do not come to grips with the serious problems of the 5 per cent or 10 per cent of the population completely outside the housing market.

This minister has an opportunity of doing what others in that ministry have not done, that is, to deal with the housing problem in this country. For most people, the private housing market can take care of their needs. However, there is a group which the market can never take care of; therefore, their needs must be met. They cannot be adequately met by the gimmickry of a $500 bonus, the AHOP program or other forms of subsidization: if they do help, it is only at a marginal, accidental and incidental level.

We should look at the figures to see who really needs housing. Who is really in trouble with regard to housing? As the minister has said, it is the aged. We should be doing more with regard to housing for senior citizens. I should point out that our record in senior citizens' housing is not all that bad; it has been one of the finest programs on which this country has ever embarked. If you live in an area where the municipality has been farsighted enough to take advantage of the provisions for building senior citizens' housing, you will find senior citizens who are managing well on their old age pension. However, this is only because they have adequate housing at their disposal. Where there is good public housing available, in many cases senior citizens do better on retirement than they did during their working lives. Where that housing is not available, senior citizens just cannot manage. That has to be a top priority. We are so close to solving this problem that to relax with regard to it now would be criminal. That is one program that should be expanded.

In my own area of Waterloo-Cambridge there is a program that has been very successful. Frankly, without public housing I do not know where families with children would live. Who is in desperate need? Young people have no need. Single people do not have a housing problem unless they so choose. Young married couples in good health do not have a housing problem. They may have a problem of choice, but there is no real housing problem for them anywhere in Canada. Those who have a housing problem are those who have children. The problem is getting worse every year. A recent ruling by the province provides that if an apartment owner in the city of Toronto wants to exclude children and rent to adults only, that is fine. What happens in that situation?

You can understand older people who want peace and quiet, or swingers who do not want children getting in their way, having this self-centred attitude. But what about public responsibility? Where do people with children go? If you have three or four children you cannot find rental accommodation. If you have a lot of money you do not have to worry because you can purchase a home. However, for those with children who have to rent, without public housing they would end up on the street. This is one program that should be expanded. The minister may say that the budget has been increased slightly, but the evidence is otherwise.

The hon. member for Broadview documented the sharp decline in the percentage of aid being directed to public housing as against that being directed to other areas. I suggest we should get out of the AHOP program. In fact, the whole program of subsidizing ownership should be discarded in favour of providing the money for public housing. That is the serious problem. I agree that it is a little easier for people to buy housing with a subsidy, but what is desperately needed is housing for families with children. There is no sense in saying that they should not have had children; the children are here. This is not the time to moralize or to say they should not have done it; the children are here and have to be looked after.

There are many advantages to public housing. It does not have to be bad. I can tell the minister that public housing in my area is good. It is some of the best housing in my area. I am delighted to say that. I know it is not always like that, because some public housing should never have been built. The public housing in my area was planned intelligently. It was done years ago. We did not have to deal with neighbourhood groups who seem to have a vested interest against public housing. I have in mind groups who want to be protected against the sight of children, or perhaps against the sight of the poor. In fact, they are probably one of the most reactionary elements in our society, all in the name of neighbourhood control and participatory democracy. They are the ones I used to fight years ago because I tried to build a sidewalk and they would not let us go through their nice lawns.

That question aside, the point is the government has some measure of control. The government says that is up to the municipality, it is up to the province. Admittedly, they are the ones who have to make the final decisions on zoning, and so on. But the government has a great deal of clout with the mortgage money at its disposal, with the assistance it is prepared to offer municipalities. The government can say that unless municipalities pursue intelligent policies like making provision for families with children, there will be no money going into the area. This is a tough stand to take, but the government has a responsibility, particularly since it is involved in things like immigration and mobility problems. They say, "All right; we have an immigration policy, but what happens to an immigrant once he hits the city is of no concern to us." There isn't any housing, or he tries to compete with those who have been there a long time and all kinds of ill will develop because there is a shortage of housing. It is said that if competition exists, that is not our responsibility but a municipal responsibility.

If we have a mobility program that moves people from the coast to central Canada, it is said that is not our problem: once we provide a mobility grant, it is no concern of ours. You cannot have these federal programs, you cannot have an immigration policy or a mobility policy without at the same time making provision to house the people affected by those policies. That is why these policies fail. It is because we don't make these provisions. There was a time, a couple of years ago—there aren't any jobs now, anyway—when there was a lot of work in Toronto, a lot of work in northern Ontario and other parts of Canada, and people were trying to encourage migration from high unemployment areas to low unemployment areas. But people weren't moving, and the reason they were not moving was that they had nowhere to live when they moved. This is what a housing policy should really be trying to deal with.

I do not understand the government's mathematics in saying we are trying to encourage the private developer, or we are going to provide some assistance or some encouragement for professionals to invest in apartment construction in order to get more construction, as though that doesn't cost money. I presume the government would say, "We do not have the funds," or, "We cannot raise the funds." But that is really a camouflage. It is coming out of the public treasury when you subsidize somebody or allow them to write off their losses on one activity against their income from another. That is just as direct a cost to the government and Canadian taxpayers as it is to go out and raise the funds directly and charge them the tax they should have been paying.

We went through this business with the white paper. One of the provisions of the white paper on taxation, one of the progressive things it did and one of the things it corrected in our tax system, was that it prevented people writing off the losses of one apartment building against the profits of another. People have accumulated millions of dollars in capital assets because they have never paid a cent in taxes by using this route. We got rid of that measure only to have it come in the back door now. The government is acknowledging its own failure by saying, "The builders were right when they told us, if you close this tax loophole you will not get the construction we were giving you before." So the government has backed away from its position in the white paper, something it never should have done, and it is now allowing this other method for investors to get into the business.

You do not need that kind of private investor when you are dealing with the kind of problems I have outlined, the problems of the old and those of the families. When the great socialist millenium comes, perhaps we will have housing as a public utility: we will have the right to housing, the right to accommodation accepted in the same way as we accept the right to medical attention, to hospital services and to the old age pension. But we are some distance away from that. Therefore, like many other things we have to deal with the most urgent problem, and the most urgent of our problems is public housing for families with children. If we do not do this, I just don't know where they are going to find rental accommodation or housing. That has to be the target area of any government proposal. For most Canadians the minister can take his euphoric position that we are one of the best housed people in the world. That is true for most Canadians. But for some Canadians it is shocking and shameful that these policies are directed toward providing benefits for the middle classes and to those who are already reasonably well off, rather than dealing directly with the problems of the poor.

If the minister is really interested in helping the poor—and I think he is—another area he has to explore, if he does not want these subsidies, if he does not want public housing, if he wants to do it some other way, is to provide more income to people with housing needs, people with family responsibilities and obligations whose talents, skills or vocational positions do not permit them to obtain adequate housing. That can be done through family allowances. We could have a housing grant go out through the family allowance program, providing a sum of money to assist people go into the private market in order to buy houses, because that is where the problem is.

If the minister doesn't want to go one route of providing more public housing, then surely he has to admit the failure of his program to help the poor and advise his cabinet colleagues to do something with the family allowance scheme or some income supplement scheme. Otherwise, no one can really commend either his work or the work of his predecessors in doing anything about housing. We are so close to coming up with an intelligent housing policy—we have solved so many problems in this country—that to stop short at this time and play political games with housing, gimmick after gimmick, depending on the political whims of the time, is really unforgiveable.

I want to return to something I started to say earlier. Housing or home ownership is more than accommodation; it is a form of investment. When the minister says that no one should have to pay 25 per cent of their income for accommodation, I don't think he is correct. Private home ownership for people, unless they have children—I am talking about people who do not have families—is an investment choice, it is not just a housing choice. If all they want is housing, there is a great deal of housing and good rental accommodation around. But they have decided they do not want to go that route. They want to be a home owner. Then they are investing and they have to be considered as investors. They should not be supplemented. The government does all kinds of things to help investors in this country; but is it correct, when you have severe housing problems for some of our people, to go around augmenting the wealth of those who are already reasonably well off? This is really the effect of many of these programs.

The minister may want to take a few minutes at this point to reply to some of the things that have been said in the debate; therefore I shall conclude, but not because I have said everything I wanted to say. There is one thing I want the minister to look at because I consider him to be an intelligent and sensitive man; I should like him to look at the kind of mess he has inherited and is perpetuating.

● (1250)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, in the closing minutes of the debate—because I think the matter should proceed now—I wish to say something to the minister concerning two matters which I consider to be important. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) mentioned that housing is an investment and that it is wrong for the government to subsidize this kind of thing. I think there is some merit in that argument.

I hope the minister will consider that in order to make housing less attractive as an investment and more attractive regarding what it is intended to be, a roof over one's head and over one's family, there is a duty on all governments—not just this government but provincial and municipal governments—to ensure there is a greater supply of serviced land. This shortage is creating to a great degree the conditions about which the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge is concerned and which concern us all, not only in this House of Commons but in the country, who are home owners and who look at the acceleration of the price of property and realize that in terms of housing the acceleration of value has been unconscionable. I suggest that the importance of a program with regard to serviced land and its availability cannot be over emphasized.

One other matter I should like the minister to consider, as we look at this question as an ongoing consideration in this country, is the dreadful tendency in Canada to live in our large cities. There is a new concept in the legislation. There is a certain viability and a certain quality of life available in the smaller communities, and I hope the minister will use the powers he has, limited as they are in the constitutional sense but large in the moral sense, to encourage housing development around existing smaller towns. I think this is important not only for the provision of housing but, as well, for the social fabric of our community. I think we have forgotten about this in Canada. There is still time in our country, but that time is running short having regard to the projection of statistics.

I just wished to bring those two matters to the attention of the government. We are not just building boxes for people to live in, but we are playing with the social fabric of our country. The minister's program today, his programs of the future and the programs of future governments must be looked at from the point of view of their social attributes as well as the provision of four walls and a roof.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the minister I must inform hon. members that, pursuant to Standing Order 37(2), if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I should all like to apologize for not having been in the House when this debate commenced. I am grateful to my parliamentary secretary who spoke on my behalf. I have been following the transcripts of the debate and the contributions of various members. I am especially grateful to those hon. members. I made arrangements for the parliamentary secretary to speak on my behalf only after speaking to the leaders of the opposition parties and the spokesmen, in this area, for those parties. They understood the necessity and the urgency of my being away and they supported me on this very important subject. It is important, I think, nationally and internationally in relation to the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements to be held in Vancouver next year.

I appreciate the support of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) in this regard. I might say I have been encouraged by my visit to Vancouver and the response by the city council there and the community at large. As hon. members know, we are going ahead with the conference. It will be highly successful for Canada and for the United Nations.

I was especially interested in the two speeches I had the opportunity to hear today dealing with housing and, in a specific sense, also the philosophy. There is an understanding that we do not have a crisis in the sense that we are a badly housed nation, but there are aspects of housing which are quite critical. Housing has been considered much more than a place to live in, in many cases. There was also mention of the urgency concerning the acquisition of serviced land. I was very grateful to my friend, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), for his appreciation of such development in southeastern part of the city. In respect of the Lebreton development, the land assembly work is already done and we are moving ahead in a very comprehensive way, as is the case in the southeastern part of the city. I realize how important this is to the hon. member's constituency.

I believe my parliamentary secretary explained the urgency of dealing with this legislation as quickly as may be allowed. It is important legislation. I am sure all members of the House realize how important it is. I should like to deal in a general way with some of the observations made by hon. members opposite and emphasize some of the important features. I note that some hon. members recalled statements my parliamentary secretary and I have made regarding some of the most serious housing problems in Canada, as well as the number of families inadequately housed in crowded or unsanitary facilities.

I see it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I shall continue after lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, before we adjourned for lunch I was referring to the comments of hon. members in this debate relating to the number of families which are inadequately housed, live in crowded conditions or lack sanitary facilities. This is a matter of concern to me. I am glad these figures are receiving attention and being remembered, because I believe they should be uppermost in everyone's mind when considering the housing needs of this country. My parliamentary secretary began this debate by saying, on my behalf and on behalf of the government, that these people's needs are the number one priority. Indeed, these figures are always uppermost in my mind.

As the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said, we are the best housed people in the world and we do not have a housing crisis per se. However, as I said in my remarks before lunch, there are many critical areas in housing and I carry in my pocket a list of statistics relating to housing because that is the challenge we face and that is where we begin. It is a rather strange phenomenon that each time the government introduces a new housing initiative, many hon. members react as if all previous housing programs had been superseded or wiped out. Because we are improving and expanding the Assisted Home Ownership Program, for instance, to help more people and to reach down more deeply into the lower income levels, that does not mean we have gone out of the public housing business or that we have abandoned our non-profit and co-operative housing programs. We invested more than $600 million in these programs in 1975, programs directed at least at the most urgent housing problems, almost one-third of the total CMHC capital budget of $1.6 billion. I have undertaken that the funding for these programs will be substantially increased in 1976.

When we say that social housing is our first priority, we back up our conviction with more dollars. It is precisely by utilizing and directing private lenders into the markets which are also of concern to many Canadians that we free more dollars for the lower income groups, for public housing, for non-profit housing, for senior citizens' housing and for rural and native housing. These are the programs which will have additional funding because the private sector will be looking at the market which does not require the same degree of public support.

As is apparent from the trend in this debate, there seems be to general agreement about the nature of the problems we face; the need to increase the supply of housing, particularly low and moderately-priced housing, the need to reduce the high cost of land and the cost of financing. There is not very much disagreement with the action we propose to take. The common cry—which I have heard before—is, "You will never make it work". Let me assure the House that we will make it work, and we are making it work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: They said that last year, last month and the month before. They were saying, "Be realistic. Don't be so optimistic about 210,000 housing units being built this year". I have the November housing starts figure which shows the rate of starts for last month was at the annual rate of 258,500. These figures, on top of the increased figures of last month and the month before—figures well above the previous figures for the same months last year—virtually guarantee that we will achieve the 210,000 this year and perhaps surpass it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: I do not lie down and die easily because they say some nasty words, are skeptical or do not have the same faith in Canadians that I have. There might be times we do not achieve our target. That does not disturb me very much. I know we have done the best we can. We agreed that we must increase the supply of housing in Canada, and we say we will build a minimum of one million new homes in the next four years. To do that we must emphasize, at least for the time being, new construction to build up the existing stocks. To do that we must increase the supply of serviced land, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton indicated. We will accomplish this objective by making residential development much more attractive to the municipalities. We already give them favourable land assembly terms. We will give them money for water treatment and mains and $1,000 for every low-cost, medium-density unit that they approve and build. I think this is an aggressive attack on the problem of land supply.

● (1410)

I have had some very good discussions, also, with my provincial colleagues about the problems arising from municipal approval processes and zoning. There has been a very useful exchange of ideas, expecially at our last meeting of provincial ministers. But this is a subject which is constantly on their minds and is a concern which we share with them. Although the matter clearly lies within provincial jurisdiction, it is a serious enough problem that it has national implications. I share the concern of the provincial ministers and that concern is reflected in some of the measures we are proposing now, from which they can take off and move further in their own jurisdictions.

To meet our targets we will need another $750 million in private money in addition to the approximately $7 billion which private investors put up this year. Some hon. members say that is not enough. They say that will give us only 20,000 or 25,000 new starts in 1976, and that is right. That would bring our 1976 starts up to about 235,000, and that is our target. It is consistent with our goal of one million good quality, well designed housing starts by 1980. How many would they like—two million, three million? Our target is realistic and related to population growth and household formations. I think our track record is pretty good in that field. It also takes into consideration the real delivery capacity of the industry.

Last year I said that 210,000 would be a realistic target for 1975, and now, in spite of all the skepticism which I just mentioned, we are going to make it. When I speak of one million starts with an emphasis on the lower price ranges, this target will be achieved without sacrificing quality. In that connection I should like to advise the House that on December 17 we are convening a meeting of provincial officials, consumers, builders and lenders in a determined effort to move forward on consumer warranties. At the last federal-provincial meeting on housing there was substantial provincial support for a national system administered by an independent council, and I am hopeful we can quickly resolve any remaining obstacles.

When we say we will have more private investment, the reply always is that the lenders will not come through, that they will cross us up somewhere along the line. Some hon. members suggest that we pass a law telling the lenders where they have to invest their money. That is one way. We could do it that way. But I have spoken with some of the lenders and I do not think we will have any problem at all. As a matter of fact, I am confident we will not have any problem. After all, we are not asking them to pour their money down the drain. They are persuaded that this kind of shift in priorities will not only be socially useful but will be a sensible decision as well. Even without that specific direction, just by offering programs they started to see the value of those as business decisions in the latter part of this year. It did not really catch hold until about July. I urged hon. members then, and I urge them now, to assist the passage of this legislation through the House because there are time lags and it does take time to catch up. Every week or month of delay holds up the implementation of this program.

We are agreed that mortgate rates are too high, and this House has just passed some very important and significant legislation which supports a vigorous attack on the root causes of high interest rates. One hon. member suggested that I could solve the problem of high interest rates by announcing to the financial institutions that interest rates shall be 8 per cent. I can assure the hon. member that if it were that easy, I would not hesitate for a minute. I might be tempted to say that interest rates shall be 6 per cent. Why not? The fact is that most lenders operate on a margin of 1¼ per cent to 2 per cent between what they borrow for and what they lend at. Not many people would be prepared to accept 4½ per cent cent interest on their bank accounts to make 6 per cent mortgages possible.

As long as financial institutions must pay 10 per cent to attract term deposits, I do not think we can be expected to compel them by law to lend funds at a lower rate than they borrow for and, on top of that, to absorb their administrative costs. I would not expect workers to have their pensions lowered and to invest their money on a return which did not at least reflect the realities of the economic scene today. They cannot be expected to do that, and they would not do it. In the meantime, we are offering help with mortgage payments to people who need it most. For people with families and low or moderate incomes we are increasing the government's outright grants to help them buy their homes without putting out more than 25 per cent of their income in monthly payments. For people who are without children or who are not so hard up, we are offering some temporary help until they get established, a loan effectively to reduce their interest rate to 8 per cent, which must be paid back eventually but which is interest free for the first five years. That is pretty fair. We are helping people get established. We are helping young families get into the market, and when they pay the money back they are paying it to their fellow taxpayers, their fellow citizens. They have an obligation to pay it back, but at no time are we asking them to pay out more than 25 per cent of their income.

One hon. member said we are offering some people easy credit and leading them into unmanageable debt. That is not so. Borrowers will have to discuss their financial arrangements with the lenders and will have to conform to NHA loan regulations. We believe that when people know what they are getting into, they will make the right and responsible decision. We have much faith in the common sense of ordinary Canadians. Perhaps that is why they support us.

We are going to make similar arrangements with people who will agree to build good rental accommodation at reasonable cost. In return for government help, they have to sign an agreement with us about rent and other matters such as maintenance standards, and so on. When we talk about critical areas, I consider that the whole area of rental is one of the critical areas. As the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge said, housing is not always a matter of ownership, it is a matter of accommodation and rental as well. For some people rental is the best solution, and it is a solution which is being exacerbated by our inflationary spiral and by some of the restrictions of which the hon. member spoke today.

Some hon. members say that AHOP price limits are too low in many places. That may be so. We are constantly reviewing these prices in relation to the market and I will have an announcement to make in that regard within a few days. However, it is surprising what builders can do when they have to. We can make them work to come up with a good, well designed and comfortable home within AHOP terms. We aim to have some influence on keeping prices down instead of just following every rise in the market. When I first came into this job, people said they could not buy houses at those prices, and they were right. The builders said they could not build them at those prices, and they were wrong. When we were the only action in town, the only place mortgage money was available, the builders found they could build very good houses for that money.

In some parts of the country the AHOP limits will allow a single-family detached house; in some places it will be a townhouse or a condominium. None of these options is a terrible hardship, especially if people who otherwise could not make it are allowed to get into the home ownership market. They are given security of tenure which they otherwise would not have, and they are allowed to begin to build an equity in some property. Very few of these families would expect to spend their lives in their first home.

Some hon. members have suggested that the federal housing action program will be inflationary. On this point I firmly disagree. It is essentially aimed at increasing the supply of affordable housing. That is what AHOP and assisted rental programs do. They are decreasing the pressures on the market with respect to the cost of housing, which in terms of ownership is perhaps the largest single payment or obligation any family assumes in its lifetime. For those masses of people who have to rent in Canada, with the vacancy rate as it is the pressures are on for rents to go up because they are not economic these days. They have not risen as high as the cost of replacement. We are trying to make it possible, and that is deflationary.

At the same time, by requiring purchasers of expensive housing to make bigger down payments we are cooling out demand in the high-priced ranges and increasing the supply of capital for the kind of housing we need in this country. This will cool out the existing housing market, but that is not so bad. If we have a home which we want to sell—and perhaps we will get less for it next year; I hope that is the case,—because we want to move somewhere else, we will be able to buy less expensively because, as one hon. member said, some prices have risen unconscionably and we intend to cool that market out. These are speculative gains. We have said this is the type of housing people are living on, rather than living in. It became one of the hedges against inflation and I think that situation will be reversed, not dramatically and not immediately but we will see a gradual cooling off. Indeed, in many places that has started to occur.

To wind up these brief remarks, I appreciate the contributions which have been made in this debate by hon. members on all sides of the House. I think all those who have spoken have helped in some way to illuminate the real challenges which we face in ensuring that all Canadians, not just most Canadians, are well housed. I commend the principles of this legislation to the serious consideration of all hon. members and I look forward to a more detailed consideration of its provisions at the committee stage. Indeed, I am prepared to sit morning, noon and night seven days a week, if necessary, in the hope that all manner of questions will be addressed to me and properly answered, and the legislation thoroughly dealt with so that we can give it third reading before we recess for the Christmas holidays.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not want the minister to leave the House under the apprehension of his statement as to my position with respect to Lebreton Flats and southeast city. I put my position quite clearly and I think it is important that he understand that. I regard those decisions on the part of the government, in terms of their priorities for the national capital area, as stupid and I think I should tell him so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. What the hon. member just said proves he has no question of privilege. He is just making an argument which should be made at another time.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND CERTAIN PROVISIONS TO DECEMBER 31, 1981

Hon. Jean Chrétien (for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-74 intituled "An Act to amend the Regional Development Incentive Act", as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chrétien (for Mr. Lessard) moved that Bill C-74 be read the third time and do pass.

[English]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am thinking of the Friday afternoon syndrome when occasionally bills whose application is rather simple, or they are short bills, tend to slip along for discussion without notice.

I am not going to detain the House for any great length of time, but I think we should remind ourselves that when the Department of Regional Economic Expansion was set up with what might be called a flourish of trumpets and press releases, the expectation of people, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, was at a high level indeed. Like so many undertakings of succeeding governments in Canada, the purpose has not in every case fulfilled this expectation. I am therefore sorry to say there is a fair amount of cynicism about the purpose of the department, in my part of Canada at least.

Some years ago it was the "in" thing to say that all the problems of the department would be solved if there could be decentralization. I am sorry to say that despite the most excellent people who have been decentralized to places like Moncton, it seems to me that the criticism could be made that it just adds one more layer to the long and difficult decision-making process. Instead of expediting the decisions of this department, I think it is reasonable to say that in many cases another layer of bureaucracy has interrupted the flow of information and decision-making between the federal government and the provincial governments. This is not a harsh criticism. It is, though, a comment on the fact that often the best plans, made with the best will in the world, do not work out in the best interests of the program.

I have two constituency concerns, Mr. Speaker. These general agreements signed by the federal department and the provinces often overlook the more modest proposals that towns and villages make to improve their facilities. I know that in some cases the onus is on the provinces to give the federal government a catalogue of those things for which they expect assistance in funding. There is a particular case with regard to the Fundy national park in the constituency of Fundy-Royal which is the satellite service village in the national parks' system. Very great strains are placed on that municipality as far as water and sewage are concerned. I hope that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) will not only take note of this service village, but that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Buchanan) will do so as well.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss for a moment the problems that arose as a result of a question I put yesterday having to do with the New Brunswick Multiplex which I termed a joint federal-provincial industrial expediter. It is a rather imaginative concept and has joint funding. Its board of directors has on it public officials from both the provincial and federal governments. In reply to my question, the minister said that the experiment had been highly successful, but after he got through praising its success he said he was not sure whether it would be continued. I hope that when another five-year lifespan is breathed into the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the continuation of Multiplex as an essential component of the regional plan will be taken up at an early date.

It may be interesting to the House to know how I became involved in this project as a member of parliament. It is a good commentary on the case of a citizen getting in touch with the member of parliament, telling of the success of a program and asking that there be an intercession with the government. Multiplex does a very interesting thing: it provides the experts with the scissors with which to cut red tape. It provides expertise in a special field.

● (1430)

Mr. Stanfield: Where is the minister? I ask this question seriously.

Mr. Fairweather: Multiplex is a facility which enables small businesses not in a position to obtain the services of a computer to obtain data from computers. Here we are, with an operation that is fulfilling an important function, yet its future is jeopardized. There is uncertainty about the future of what the minister admits is a successful but not, apparently, an overly expensive program.

On the Friday afternoon swing shift let me say that although I welcome the extension of this department's life, too much time elapses between the conception of projects and their final approval by government. The other day I was informed of an application which took 26 weeks to go through. If the Chair will allow me to make an aside, I think the government gets into serious trouble over the way it implements some imaginative pieces of legislation. The conception is fine. Although debate may be somewhat protracted in parliament, the statutes are finally placed on the books. Then everything comes to a shuddering halt.

If I were ever to spend a few minutes with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), I would not discuss with him the unravelling of the universe; I would discuss the unravelling of the red tape surrounding many of the imaginative programs advanced by parliament, red tape which hamstrings by insisting on procedures that are expensive, lengthy and largely unnecessary.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North-Nipissing East): Mr. Speaker, I had not expected this bill to be debated so soon. However, I am glad it has come before the House and I say to the hon. member who just concluded his remarks that on this swing shift Friday afternoon I am glad to be in my seat. I know he is, too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Welcome to the Friday afternoon club.

Mr. Hopkins: Like the previous member, I am pleased to see this program extended for five years from the end of 1976 to the end of 1981. No government program, be it federal, provincial or municipal, is perfect. Even though a program is introduced with the best intentions in the world, we must remember that human beings administer it, and there is not a human being on earth who at one time or another is not open to criticism.

My personal experience with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion during the past few years has been a happy one and I wish to take this opportunity to pay special tribute to those who work in the department. I include the minister, the deputy minister, the regional assistant deputy ministers and the staff. I thank them for the co-operation they have extended to many members of the House and the dedication they have shown to their jobs. They have been severely criticized, often unjustifiably.

What benefits has the program brought to those special areas designated under the legislation? I suggest that the true measure of any government program of this type will be determined if one compares what has actually happened in an area designated with what would have happened if the program had not been introduced. During the decade from 1960 to 1970, in the county of Renfrew, one small company was established and there was one instance of one small industrial expansion. That was the extent of our industrial growth. After a certain section of Renfrew county and the northern part of Hastings county in Ontario was designated as a Special Area on March 11, 1970, we enjoyed a number of successes. A number of developments occurred which would not have occurred in the constituency, including the eastern part of Nipissing if this type of legislation had not been enacted.

I am glad to note the presence of the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), my neighbour to the north. I am sure he will agree with me that DREE has done a tremendous job for the people of our district, the people of Nipissing, and the people of northern Ontario in general.

Mr. Blais: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: It annoys me, Mr. Speaker, to note so much criticism in our newspapers, on television and radio, of a good program. We must have critics because we want to live in a free democracy, but let them get their facts correct and mention the good with the bad.

I can say now that if the Department of Regional Economic Expansion had not been established by a Liberal government, the slow growth areas of this country would have been in a far worse condition today. Their condition would have been terrible. At the end of December this year, the designation of the special area encompassing Arnprior, Renfrew, Pembroke, Barry's Bay and Bancroft will end, after extensions by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I plead with the government to extend the designation for another 12 months. I plead for the people in the northern part of my riding, in the district of Nipissing, to be included uner the Regional Incentives Development Act (RIDA).

My reasons are these. Two days ago I received a call from a major industry in the area which had been established under DREE, it has been a good corporate citizen but was forced to lay off 60 employees because its furniture component sales to the United States dropped almost to nothing. The firm established in an area which was almost down and out and put about 300 people on its payroll. I have been in touch with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and DREE, and have tried my utmost to save the entire complex. Mr. Speaker, the entire population of Mattawa, consisting of about 3,000 people, and all the people who live on small farms near the town, will be in great jeopardy if this industry disappears. The three branches of this furniture business constitute the only industry operating in that section of the upper Ottawa Valley. It is for this reason that I am supporting the bill before us and asking that this area be taken, not just into serious consideration but realistic consideration when the time comes for renewal of the program in 1976.

I could list other statistics for the county of Renfrew and city of Pembroke but I shall not do so at this time because other members want to speak on this bill. However, I sincerely request that the area I have mentioned be reinstated for another 12 months. At the present time, the city of Pembroke and the county of Renfrew are negotiating with the provincial government of Ontario for a General Development Agreement. This has been going on for months but the agreement has not been signed. I should amend that by saying subagreement, because the general agreement covers the entire province.

I know that many members of this House look upon the province of Ontario as the rich brother of this nation. That may be true for certain areas of the province, but the Ottawa Valley, on both sides of the river, is quite often compared with the conditions existing in the maritime provinces. In fact, many members of the Canadian armed forces who retire from the service at CFB Petawawa remain in the Ottawa Valley because it is so similar to their home province in the maritimes. There is a very close relationship here.

While there are rapid growth areas in certain parts of Ontario, many areas of this province are very similar to the slow growth regions of Canada. Because they are slow growth regions, many municipalities, counties and districts cannot afford the water and sewage services about which the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) just spoke. Therefore, they do not have the up to date industrial parks, with all the facilities, to offer incoming industries in the same way as the rapid growth areas of Ontario.

The local municipalities make suggestions as to what they feel should be included in the General Development subagreements which is a federal-provincial program. Those GDA subagreements should include water and sewage services in order to upgrade industrial parks. However, even if an area 250 or 350 miles from a large urban area has an up to date industrial park, industry still locates in the large centres of this country. What we need in rural Ontario, and in the small municipalities across this province which do not have the same benefits as the large urban areas because the latter have a greater municipal tax base, is an incentive program built into the GDA program. This is necessary if it is going to work effectively and efficiently for those areas.

The GDA subagreements should cut away some of the red tape. Unfortunately, this is common with many federal-provincial agreements. It is very important that we have a good working relationship among officials at the federal and provincial levels. It is important that there be close conversations between the federal and provincial governments on a very sincere basis. We should not stall in those areas classified as slow growth. There should be sewage and water facilities in industrial park areas. Assistance should be given to municipalities so that they can provide better sewage disposal plants, upgraded water facilities, sewer lines, water lines, and so on. Much of this has already been done by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and for that I compliment that Crown corporation: they have done a tremendous job at that level.

In order to provide for the growth that will take place as a result of the development of upgraded industrial parks, we must also provide facilities for those who will be moving into these areas. The increased population will increase the necessity for facilities. This will drain off some of the large populations needlessly concentrated in certain areas of Canada, creating added expense by more expensive housing, for example.

Many people have moved from rural areas into large urban areas. Others who have lived in urban areas all their lives see a certain value to the small town or small city way of life. It offers them a rural landscape, natureland in the shield area, as it is known in eastern Ontario. Not only does this increase the quality of life for people, but through this legislation we are discussing, it provides for their livelihood. It will slow the growth in the large urban centres of Ontario which, if allowed to grow at the present rate, would cost this country a fortune. Do we in Canada want a New York City, Chicago or Detroit?

Under the legislation that we are discussing, and under the General Development subagreements at the federal-provincial level, there should be programs to develop small communities across Canada and to provide for a better quality of life for our people.

● (1450)

I want to say that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), who by the way is my seatmate, certainly has my total support in his endeavours as far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned. I hope these programs will continue to go forward in the years to come so that we do not get into the problems I discussed a few minutes ago.

In closing, I should like to reiterate the request I put on record earlier with regard to a 12-month extension of the special area in Renfrew county. I should like to see more rapid progress in signing the sub-CDA agreement between the two senior levels of government concerning my area of the Ottawa Valley. I should like to say of the Ottawa Valley in general that the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) who has worked very closely with me over the years—and we have an excellent rapport—faces many of the same problems and we both support the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to the hilt. Once again I pay tribute to the people of that department regardless of the criticism which has been thrust at them from time to time.

I should also like to add that I am prepared at any time to put the plus factors together and stack them up against the minus factors as a whole in the Ottawa Valley as far as the effect the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has had on our locale.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make two or three points in connection with DREE. I am not sure everyone will agree with me with regard to some of it, but I think I should emphasize that I am speaking in a very personal sense. I want to make it clear that I am not expressing a point of view on behalf of my party. There are certain views I hold in connection with DREE which I feel I can express at this stage of my political career without any misunderstanding. These are things I have said before and I would like to emphasize them again. I am sure there will be a good many on both sides of the House who will disagree with me. Nevertheless, it is important that some of these issues be discussed.

The first point I wish to make is this. It has been said many times that an attack on regional disparity involves, if it is to be effective, a very high degree of co-ordination within the government. It is so obvious I do not need to deal with the proposition at any length. It is evident that DREE could make a great effort to stimulate the economy of a region and that this effort could readily be offset by some countervailing policy adopted, perhaps unwittingly, by another department of the federal government.

The obvious example of this was when DREE was going ahead full force in 1969-1970 and when the Department of Finance was at the same time pursuing a policy of tight money—a tight fiscal policy. Those effects were felt first and foremost in areas of slower growth. Such a policy, pursued by the Department of Finance, negated the efforts of DREE. Then, again, there was the failure of the Department of Transport, for example, to pursue policies which complemented and reinforced the efforts made by DREE. This is another obvious instance where the thing could come apart and where a substantial effort made by the department could fall to the ground.

Also, there must, of course, be effective collaboration between the federal government and the province or provinces involved in particular programs. While there have been agreements between the federal government and particular provinces covering the development of certain parts of a province, I would say, speaking particularly of the Atlantic provinces, that there has not been the degree of co-operation or agreement essential as a foundation of an attack on regional disparity. I think, for example, of the long delay before the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia could come together to establish the so-called Magi experiment in the Halifax metropolitan area. This was a program which was announced by the federal government before the election of 1972. It drifted on for two or three years at least, substantially because the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia could not agree who would assume final responsibility for direction.

This is a key question with regard to regional development, and I do not pretend to have the complete answer: how would one secure within the federal government the necessary degree of co-ordination to launch an effective attack on regional disparity? Nor am I sure what kind of institutional arrangement might be needed within the federal government. I know some machinery has been established; I am sure there are interdepartmental committees, and so forth. But if the government is to make any dent in regional disparity in the Atlantic region, for example, during the next five years there has somehow to be a much higher degree of co-ordination of effort within the federal government itself and between the federal government and the provinces concerned. I am not sure, as I say, what the framework of the institutional arrangement should be, but I do say it does not exist today. There has not been, since DREE was launched, the necessary coordination and collaboration required for a successful effort.

It was rather naively assumed at the time the Department of Regional Economic Development was established that this department would in itself provide the necessary co-ordination of effort within the federal government. I think it was rather naively assumed that bringing together the agencies and what not that were brought together when DREE was established would in itself provide that necessary degree of co-ordination of federal effort. That obviously has not been the case.

I want to make it very clear, that to me it is not adequate for the federal government at this time simply to extend the life of DREE for a further period of five years and carry on with the same kind of inadequate institutional arrangements to do battle against regional disparity in an ineffective way. I want to make that point as forcefully as I can.

The second point I want to make, and this is where I expect I will run into specific disagreement from all quarters of the House, is that I think it is wrong and a substantial mistake to have anything like a uniform approach to regional economic development across the country. Let me make it clear what I mean. I think regional development in the Atlantic provinces, including parts of Quebec like the Gaspé Peninsula, have regional disparity problems that are different from those that exist generally in other parts of the country.

It would seem to me that what the Government of Canada should be concerned about basically is having vigorous regional economies in all parts of the country, in British Columbia, on the prairies, in the north, in Ontario and Quebec, and in the Atlantic provinces.

For example, I do not think the federal government should feel itself primarily responsible for assuring that all the communities in the Atlantic provinces are prosperous and dynamic. The federal government should not feel it has a primary responsibility to see that all the communities in my own province of Nova Scotia are dynamic in their growth. The responsibility of the federal government in connection with the Atlantic provinces is in terms of achieving a vigorous economy in the region which will develop its own dynamism.

One of the mistakes the federal government has made, and one of the things that is wrong with what the government has done to date, is that it is trying to do too much. What is wrong with the DREE program, in my judgment, is that the federal government is just trying to do too much rather than concentrate upon regional development, not allowing itself to be distracted, as I might put it, by thinking in terms of community development.

For example, with regard to the prairie provinces, and members from the prairie provinces might think this is a purely gratuitous thing for me to say, I would think that the responsibility of the government in respect of the economy of that area is to help ensure, in co-operation with the governments of those provinces, a vigorous and diversified economy. As I understand it, one of the things the people living on the prairies want to see there is economic diversity.

To be blunt about it, I do not think the federal government should feel it is primarily concerned with the state of prosperity or otherwise of a particular community in Saskatchewan, Manitoba or Alberta. Of course there could be crises and catastrophes in respect of which the federal government would be expected to play its part.

It is my belief that in attempting to reach down below the region, assuming responsibility in terms of community development, the federal government through DREE is taking on so much it is not doing an adequate job and not concentrating itself adequately on the development of the region.

I am not suggesting that in a province like Ontario, for example, DREE should keep out all together. I can recognize that in terms of northern Ontario there is a region of sufficient size with enough in common that there is a problem of regional development. On the prairies a similar area may be that mid-north strip across the prairies and into British Columbia. There may be a problem there. I recognize that the Department of Regional Development should think in terms of regional development in these areas, but not in terms of uniform development within regions, which is more the responsibility of the provinces concerned.

If the Government of Canada adopts that approach then the programs it pursues and the methods it follows might well be very different in the Atlantic provinces and in eastern Quebec from those in northern Ontario or in western Canada. Such an approach might be very different, and the government might be much more effective and run much less risk of the federal agencies and departments involved being so bogged down in detail they cannot get anywhere really with regard to regional stimulus.

After all these years of DREE being in existence I have to say that there is no plan for the development of the Atlantic region as a whole. The Atlantic Provinces Advisory Committee, which succeeded the Atlantic Provinces Development Board, under the chairmanship of Professor Smith, emphasized time and time again a few years ago the importance of the federal government and the four provinces down there agreeing on a plan or a general approach. This has never been done. I do not know whether it has not been done because there has not been a will to achieve it, or because nobody has been able to produce a plan that looks as if it might work. Whatever the reason, there has been no plan put forward or adopted for that region as a whole, although there have been agreements entered into between the federal government and these provinces relating to parts of the provinces. The whole of Prince Edward Island is under a plan agreed to by Prince Edward Island and the Government of Canada, but that falls very far short of economic planning for the development of the maritime provinces or Atlantic region.

Are we going to enter the next five years in the life of DREE, drifting along as far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned the way we have been doing? I am not suggesting the people of the Atlantic provinces do not appreciate the effort that has been made, or the money that has been spent by the people of other parts of Canada in an attempt to attack the long standing and deep seated economic problems of the Atlantic region.

I ask whether the government is to drift into this renewal for another five years, going along in the same way as in recent years, simply improvising and certainly failing to produce any coherent attack on the problems of the Atlantic region? I am afraid that is exactly what is happening and that, as a result of this happening and continuing, the whole concept of fighting regional economic disparity in areas like the Atlantic provinces will become discredited. I am concerned that people in other parts of Canada will more and more become impatient about having to foot the bill. So I say to my colleagues in the House of Commons this afternoon that we are not doing very much simply in extending the life of DREE for another five years.

I say that members of the government and this House should face up to the inadequacy of what is being done. They should abandon the approach of having one uniform economic attack across the country. We should think in terms of our responsibility here being a regional one rather than thinking in terms of being responsible for the equal development of communities within regions, certainly in areas like the Atlantic provinces.

We should face up to the necessity of developing a coherent attack that is likely to produce some results rather than the kind of improvisation that is going on which has been very useful to particular communities but which has done very little indeed, I must say, to reduce economic disparity for the people in those regions as compared to people in other parts of the country.

I certainly intend to support the bill, Mr. Speaker. I will support the renewal of DREE's mandate, but I feel very strongly, when DREE is being given a mandate for another five years, that this is an appropriate time for the government to re-think the working of the DREE program, to re-think its approach, and to recognize that really at the present time it has not achieved a satisfactory program of regional development in the various parts of the country. The government must face up to the necessity of doing this. It will be a great tragedy if members of this House think they are doing their duty this afternoon simply by extending the life of DREE without at the same time facing up to the fact that DREE has been a very limited success despite the amount of money spent, and despite the good will behind it.

If members of this parliament are to discharge their responsibility to the people of Canada as a whole, as well as to the people living in these disadvantaged areas, I think they should make up their minds to face up to the responsibility and the challenge that a really effective fight against regional disparity involves. There must be co-ordination which DREE in itself does not provide. There must be a determined and orderly attack on these problems which is flexible in respect of the country as a whole.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by commending the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) for the speech he has made. I think it is a speech all of us should take a second look at; he made a number of recommendations which I think are very worthwhile, some of which I wish to refer to in my remarks today.

One of the real concerns I have about DREE is that coming from a province like Saskatchewan—and perhaps the Leader of the Opposition coming from Nova Scotia would share my view—I feel that many of the government's programs work at cross purposes to DREE. DREE spends a considerable sum of money in a particular province or area to create jobs, while at the same time some other federal department spends as much or perhaps more money in central Canada in a region like Toronto, or some other developed area, which works at cross purposes to DREE. I shall give some examples.

I remember last year or the year before participating in a debate in this House on the Export Development Corporation. If one looks at the annual report of that corporation one will find that almost all the expenditures of that corporation, except for aid in finding markets for western grain and so on, go to assisting the large corporations that are based primarily in places like Toronto, Montreal, other southern Ontario cities, and Vancouver.

The whole purpose of the Export Development Corporation is to stimulate and expand the manufacturing sectors of the Canadian economy. Most of that industry is restricted to areas not under the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and this in many cases works against the general purposes of DREE.

If we look at the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and a good many of its programs we find again that much of the money that department spends goes into areas such as southern Ontario, the lower mainland of British Columbia and so on, which again works at cross purposes to DREE. I remember a bill a few years ago in this House which provided tax exemptions for manufacturers and rapid write-offs. Who did that help? It helped the manufacturers in this country, who again are located in areas that are not affected by DREE. More incentive is given to manufacturing companies already in existence in areas that are developed. They are given an incentive to expand. There seems to be a lack of over-all planning and co-ordination where DREE is part of an over-all governmental plan and where there is a balanced growth and balanced development in this country.

We might also look at our taxation system. I have already referred to the fast write-offs and the cuts for manufacturers. I think that taxation system fits into the pattern where once again advantage is given in general to areas which already have industry, areas that already are wealthy, to the detriment of the Atlantic provinces, the northern part of the prairies and British Columbia, as well as much of the province of Quebec, or Renfrew County, or any other area that is lacking in development. Industry already exists in southern Ontario. The type of taxation system we have will give manufacturers in this area an even greater advantage than they already have.

We could look at the financial institutions. Again, where are these located? And from where will all the extra jobs come when they expand? I think this is a very real concern.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to some problems and some of the cross-purposes of the federal government in over-all planning and co-ordination. I come from the prairies and I see a great many people from that area becoming more and more concerned about the lack of development in the prairies and more and more alienated from the federal government, more suspicious of eastern Canada, and more willing to look at the idea of western nationalism or western secession. Much of that develops because in the prairies we have a discriminatory freight rate structure, a freight rate system, for example, which makes it cheaper to ship livestock from Prince Albert, Saskatoon, and Regina to Toronto than it is to ship the same poundage or the same weight of finished beef. When that occurs, you are naturally exporting jobs to Toronto.

It is natural that the slaughterhouses and the packing houses will be in Toronto if it is cheaper to ship the livestock there than the finished product. As long as we have a freight rate system which will make it cheaper to ship our raw materials out of the prairies and process them elsewhere, the jobs will go elsewhere, and people will be wondering about the real benefits of Confederation and whether or not DREE, which is supposed to eliminate regional disparities, will achieve that end.

I think DREE would be much more useful and successful if other governmental policies were to take into account regional disparities, if more money, for example, were put into the transportation system to overcome some of the inequities and anomalies not only with regard to us in the prairies but with regard to the northern part of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces to enable a more valid and diversified industry to develop there. Thus we could process and package more of our own food, we could have a petrochemical industry in the prairies, etc., rather than see a lot of that developed in central Canada or across the border in the U.S. DREE would then be much more successful and we would have a nation that would pull together in a more unified way than it has in the past. We must have that type of national development plan if DREE is to be really successful.

As the Leader of the Opposition said, we have put money into regional development, but I am not sure whether we have reaped the benefits from that investment that we should have gained. It may be the fault of DREE, or the fault may lie squarely at the door of the cabinet for not having an over-all national, balanced development plan and better co-ordination between the various departments and the various levels of government. If that were done I think we could go a lot farther much quicker in clearing up the inequities which exist.

A while ago representations were made to me in my riding from a number of businessmen who told me that because of the freight rate structure—I am sure the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) would be interested to hear about this type of inequity—there are manufacturers of prefabricated homes who send them to Port Churchill and Hudson's Bay and it is cheaper to ship these homes by rail to Montreal and then load them on boats and ship them along the St. Laurence river, around by Newfoundland and to Hudson's Bay to their destination, than it is to ship them by rail to the port of Churchill only a few hundred miles away. It is about four, five or six times the distance to go around via Montreal.

I am told by some Hudson's Bay officials that the reason for that is that they do not have adequate barge facilities and other facilities at the port of Churchill to handle prefabricated houses. The government should look again at some of the problems of regional development and the transportation system, such as utilizing the port of Churchill and processing more of our raw materials such as food, gas or oil in the west, the fishery business, and so on. It seems to me that the regional economic gaps in this country are growing larger, not closing, and I question the value we are getting from some of the money that is now being invested in DREE.

There is one other concern which I would like to voice, and I will make two more points about DREE. We seem to be getting more centralization in terms of the expanding civil service in the Ottawa-Hull area. When the government talks about regional development and the inequities in this country, it should explore very seriously the possibility of decentralizing many more of the federal government departments.

For example, why should the Department of Fisheries not be located in the Atlantic provinces, or the Department of Agriculture and perhaps the Department of Transport not be located somewhere on the prairies? I am taking these two examples out of the air, there are perhaps other examples that would make more sense, but it seems to me that it is a possibility which should be considered. Locating the headquarters and the staff of several government departments outside of the Ottawa-Hull area in regions of the country where the jobs and the extra economic stimulus would be of real benefit should be considered very seriously. It would make the people in Quebec, the Atlantic provinces, and the prairies feel more a part of the country. This issue should not be considered from an ideological or partisan point of view but should be considered as a program to develop the country and bring it closer together.

The last concern I want to voice about the bill, since we are giving a mandate to continue the act for the next five years, is with regard to some of the grants that are made to private corporations.

In many cases, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said when he spoke on second reading, we hear about the number of jobs that are expected to be created, but we do not hear about the jobs that are being created and about some of the long-term impacts of certain grants to corporations. I am concerned that, as the years go by, we will find a number of examples of grants to certain corporations which will continue to operate as businesses and continue to expand just so long as the grants keep coming, but once the grants or tax concessions end the companies will no longer see the value of expanding their plants or continuing their operations, in a certain area.

So long as the carrots are coming, the rabbit will keep eating, but once the carrots are gone there will be no point in staying, and the manufacturer might as well fold up his tent and go to central Canada, to the lower mainland, or to British Columbia where the hospitals are greater, the universities are larger, and so on. We should reconsider the whole philosophy of whether or not we should bribe a company by way of grants to locate somewhere.

We should look at the whole grant structure with a view to applying it so that, for example, if we are to provide money to a company, the federal government should take equity in the company equal to the money it is putting into it. If you give money to General Electric in Kamloops, say $500,000 to develop their plant, the federal government should take equity equal to the amount of money it is putting in because after all we are spending the taxpayers' money, so why should it be an outright gift? Certainly the companies provide jobs, but why should the government not be taking equity?

If we were private individuals we would not be putting money into any business endeavour or parcel of land unless we had a proportinate share of the equity. The federal government should have a continuing and direct say in a real way over the operation of a plant in the years to come. I suspect that as the years go by we will find that in some industries the majority development of which DREE will have financed, the government will be left with no equity in the end. To me that does not make good business sense, and it certainly does not make good political or moral sense since we are using the taxpayers' money for the purpose. That has been the practice in this country for a number of years, not just in DREE but in terms of tax concession which we give companies, in terms of total cost allowances given to companies, in terms of the plots of land which we give free to municipalities and provincial governments, or the years of tax free operation which we give to certain companies. It happens in all the provinces and in most cities.

If you were to total all the give-aways to certain corporations, you would find out that in many cases the majority of the money put into developing a plant has been taken from a public source. If we are going to put the money in, why do we not own the place? If we are going to build a plant, why do we not own it? I think that is not only responsible and highly moral but also good business, since it is taxpayers' money we are spending.

One last point I should like to make is that I should like to see some time in the future a really thorough study made by DREE as to the impact it has had in a particular area, with regard to how many jobs it has really created which would not have been created if the department did not exist, how many jobs are still there after DREE stopped giving certain grants or handouts, and what impact the department has had on the economy of our country.

I would like the government to consider seriously the three things I have mentioned: government departments working at cross purposes with DREE—I think that is a very valid point and a very valid criticism—working out a national development plan, and considering the whole concept of decentralization and, over the years, moving some of the headquarters and head offices out of the national capital area into the developing areas of the country.

Finally I should like the government to consider the philosophy of giving money to a corporation. It should not just be giving it by way of a grant, but if it is public money the government should be taking out equity to the tune and proportion of the grant being given so that in the end we will own the proportion of the plant we are paying for, and so that we are not being Santa Claus with public money. If we are going to use public money we should have something to show the public in years to come as a result of the investment taxpayers of this country will have made.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as we move to extend the authority of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the Regional Development Incentives Act, it is time to reflect, as some of my colleagues and the leader of my party have, on the approach used by the government in its attempt to equalize opportunities in this country for all Canadians, regardless of the area and the region in which they may reside.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion has quite a history, a history of success and a history of failure. My colleagues—and I will take the same liberty—have spoken about their own particular areas with regard to regional economic expansion, and coming from British Columbia I have much to talk about—

Mr. Nystrom: Including a good government.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Despite the government.

Mr. Oberle: —not because so much has happened as a result of the presence of the department, but because so little has happened in the province of British Columbia. While the fault is not entirely with the federal ministry or with my colleagues in this House, some of the blame can justifiably be directed at the government in British Columbia.

The Regional Development Incentives Act does provide that the provincial governments have to co-ordinate their efforts with those of the federal government, and this has not, in all areas at all times, been possible to achieve, particularly in British Columbia. Because the act is so linked to political expediency, a number of politicians have used it to their own advantage.

When the act was first implemented, the previous administration designated an area in British Columbia, namely, the Okanagan Valley, because that is where the premier as well as some of the key ministers of that administration came from, and we industrialized an area which really did not need industrialization. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said, not all areas in our country require the same consideration. It was the case in the Okanagan Valley that we used some of the most productive and beautiful farm land to build factories and truck plants to stimulate the economy there, which really did not need it at that time.

This area did not need to be stimulated to the extent other areas needed it, and the potential of other areas was not recognized.

One of the big concerns I always had about the early stages of the act was that it was really only possible for large corporations or big businesses to take advantage of it. The reason was that the decision making process was highly centralized in that it took an army of consultants and engineers, and much political patronage, to achieve approval of a program. Proctor and Gamble, for instance, received $12 million to establish a pulp mill in Grande Prairie, in northern Alberta. While there is nothing wrong with establishing a pulp mill in northern Alberta, there were other areas which needed that kind of development.

Mr. Baldwin: You are talking about the constitutency I love.

Mr. Oberle: I had not noticed that my hon. friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), is sitting right in front of me. The wrath of God will probably strike me.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not to mention lightning.

Mr. Oberle: I should approach the question of the pulp mill in Grande Prairie with caution. It certainly has done a lot in that area. It has diversified opportunity for the business community.

Mr. Baldwin: Great speech.

Mr. Oberle: I probably could also say that it was because of my hon. colleague in the House of Commons that that particular company was able to carry out that program there. Naturally, what will have to happen in Grande Prairie and in some of these areas where large resource industries have been placed as a result of regional economic expansion is that there will have to be a challenge to make the program conducive to the aims and ambitions of secondary industrial plants, and certain changes will have to be made in the act over the years to make it possible for small firms to apply. It is very difficult for them to cut through the bureaucracy, and even after decentralization and the establishment of regional offices in Vancouver, Moncton, and throughout the country, decisions are still made in Ottawa.

We still must depend on the development strategy of the provincial governments, and they are still not co-ordinated with other departments of government. My leader has adequately described what happens when the Department of Regional Economic Expansion moves into one area and other departments of government concentrate their efforts in some other region. It has often occurred to me that it would be better to spend our money providing areas of low growth and areas with depressed economies with the means to establish their infrastructure, transportation facilities and access to resources. This is a very serious consideration particularly in northern British Columbia and northern Alberta.

It simply does not make sense to move into an area and to establish a great big industry without answering some of these very important questions, not just in the area of transportation, but also in the area of the quality of life of the people who move to these regions which have the resource potential to be developed, and thus in the area of the infrastructure to support the quality of life Canadians have a right to expect. I am talking about infrastructure connected to smaller communities which have to be established, the essential services, utilities, recreational facilities, and so on.

Again I should mention and give credit to something which has happened, the first major agreement which was recently announced in the province of British Columbia. Fort Nelson in my constituency received a $6 million grant to upgrade some infrastructures in the area to conform with the aims of the province, and to ready itself for the industrial development expected to take place there as a result of resource management and so on. More things like that must happen rather than simply concentrating on large industrial development. I think the department should get away from the prime industrial development concept and concentrate more on the secondary industries that have the aims and ambitions to diversify.

● (1540)

We must recognize that we have entered an evolutionary phase in Canada's development. Our industry is mainly capital oriented at the moment, and as we chase capital out of the country through the government's fiscal and monetary policies, we must create an industrial capacity and a labour oriented approach to this evolution. But that is not happening. We are not developing the capacity to bring our resources to a semi-finished state before exporting them.

I should like to turn now to the input of regional and local governments. Usually arrangements are made with the provinces, and the local governments have no input even though they have to provide the infrastructure, the quality of life, and prepare for the work force that might come in, providing the housing facilities and so on. Usually the local government is the last to know the plans for the region made in Ottawa or in the provincial capital.

The Regional Development Incentives Act must be used to develop a strategy by which all Canadians can find fulfilment of the dream we have always dreamt. It must be remembered that some of us will not go along with the technocrats who pledge that 85 per cent of our population will have to live in metropolitan centres, and that the vast hinterland can be controlled by computers from those centres. Somebody will have to populate these areas, and if we are to work out a decentralized strategy for industry it will be important to develop some incentive to go to them and remove some of the penalties for those people who face the elements in order to find part of their dream in the north country.

Last night in committee I had discussions with officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development regarding their strategy for developing the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. They admitted there is no strategy that we do not know what use to make of these great regions. We have not recognized the potential in agriculture or the renewable resources in the forests of that land. Of course we have a transportation strategy for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon but it is really only geared to what the large resource extractive industries are planning for the areas. We have not decided which comes first—the chicken or the egg. No transportation strategy has been developed in the Northwest Territories which would open up the region for agricultural use or for the development of the renewable resources in the forests for wood and fibre industries.

[Mr. Oberle.]

It is a sad thing when the minister gets up in this House and declares it is the responsibility of our country and our challenge to improve or increase the productive capacity of our farming industry and our renewable resource industries. It is amazing that the minister is not concentrating more of his efforts toward these areas. It is not good enough for us simply to pass this bill extending the mandate of the department for another five years without raising some of these very important questions.

The aims, ambitions, and potential of the various regions of our country are very diversified. It does not make sense to industrialize some of the regions that could be put to better use for recreation and tourist facilities, nor does it make sense to take out land for tourism and recreation when they have not potential in that area. To this point there has not been an assessment of the situation.

My colleague who just finished speaking mentioned that there has not been an assessment of the impact of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion on the country to this stage. There are tales of bungling and tales of success, but it is high time that the new minister came to committee and to the House with the full story of what has actually happened in this department over the first six or seven years.

I would be remiss if I did not touch on the inequitable distribution of funds throughout the country. I hesitate to point the finger at one region or another, but I have figures here to show what happened in the fiscal year 1972-73 which I would like to put on the record to show how the total of $374 million was spent. The province of Quebec got $115 million; British Columbia got $4 million; Newfoundland, $37 million; Prince Edward Island, $19 million; Nova Scotia, $52 million; New Brunswick, $44 million; Ontario, $19 million; Manitoba, $24 million; Saskatchewan, $13 million, and Alberta, $17 million. This indicates that something other than common sense was used in making the distribution for 1972-73. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the annual report issued by the department does not give these figures. We had to put questions on the order paper to establish where the majority of funds are spent.

Some of the criticisms of the program that I have received concerned the way industries, particularly the large corporations, have followed the designated areas. In fact in some areas industries have sold plants only to establish new facilities in a different area, making use again of the grants and loans made by the department. As a result no new employment is created, but in some cases new and modern plants have been built. I am sure all of these things must concern the minister and I hope we have an opportunity in the months to come and in the new session to discuss some of our concerns first hand.

I hope the minister will consider the sentiments expressed today in the House, and in the second reading debate. Without being entirely negative about the regional incentives program, I suggest there is lots of room for improvement. I hope the minister will consider our demands in this regard.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this bill is to extend the date by which facilities must achieve commercial production to qualify for a grant from the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I am quite happy that DREE incentives are extended for another five years. The Regional Development Incentives Act has an obvious impact in creating new industries as well as developing existing industries which have to be modernized. Besides their new economic impact on municipalities, those incentives tend to reduce unemployment by creating new permanent jobs, if and when projects have been carefully selected and accepted in view of their profitability.

It is pointless to look back indignantly at sums which were granted frequently on the occasion of an election, and did not fulfill the people's hopes, because the sums had been voted on the eve of an electoral campaign and the minister took advantage of them. Those are things of the past, boss patronizers are no longer with us, so that today, with a new minister, we are looking to the future with confidence.

Obviously the minister cannot do everything by himself. Each region, each group and I should say each businessman should proceed with a serious study of the economic situation in their areas and submit to the department projects which might be approved by the minister. We are going through a somewhat uncertain period, since markets are less open than they used to be in the past years. The minister will therefore have to concentrate slightly less on primary industries to explore more fully the opportunities and needs of secondary and tertiary businesses.

Mr. Speaker, in my area of the Roberval constituency, with which the minister is as familiar as I am, a fair share of unemployment is to be blamed on the development of our primary industry, namely forestry. Modernization and mechanization have paved the way for higher productivity while reducing manpower needs by 50 per cent.

Since the forest industry labour force included 50 per cent of farmers—they were called marginal farmers, which means half farmers and half forestry workers—this explains the reduction of the population in most of our small municipalities since no industry filled the gap left by the forest industry. We shall therefore have to think of something else to replace that industry and consider multipurpose secondary and tertiary industries. Since in Quebec we now have to import 45 per cent of our food products, it seems to me that businessmen must have enough imagination to produce in Canada what is required to create secondary and even tertiary industries which will allow the consumer to benefit from our farm products 12 months a year.

I do not understand that Quebec does not have all the processing plants and cold storage plants required to receive the harvests that our producers must sell immediately at ridiculous prices because of the lack of processing and storage industries. We also have an urgent need of mechanical industries and finished wood industries.

I therefore ask the minister to direct his activities towards this area in the next five years. Moreover, I believe that the minister should help cities and municipalities solve their water and sewer problems.

The problem of sewerage is urgent in the Roberval-Lac-Saint-Jean area. We should protect our environment. We should first of all clean up our rivers and lakes and then ensure that they will remain pollution-free.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion will have to continue to help in the development of new industrial sectors in co-operation with the provinces and cities concerned. If the minister wants to meet his objectives of eliminating regional disparity, he will have to free himself of certain political influences of past years and treat each area justly and fairly. This can certainly not be restricted to the federal department level or to the officials of the minister.

We shall therefore have to cut through the red tape and ask for the co-operation of the provinces and all groups interested in working for the prosperity of their area. Lac-Saint-Jean-Roberval is a young area to be developed which is achieving a place of its own in Quebec's economy. That is why we shall be relying tremendously on the assistance of the Regional Economic Expansion Department in the years to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Sharp: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it has been agreed among House leaders that we are to proceed with the bill changing the name of Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation as the next order of business as announced. I do not think there is any intention to engage in debate; I think we are to give it third reading.

May I also say that it is a great pleasure to see in the House this afternoon our newly appointed Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO CHANGE NAME OF CORPORATION

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (for the Minister of Transport) moved that Bill S-27, to amend the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mrs. Sauvé moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party may I extend congratulations to the minister on her new position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad to see her moving up in the world, and I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could have done worse than make her minister of finance.

I notice that the bill will change the name of COTC to Teleglobe Canada. That is interesting. Applying this thinking to other departments, I concede the possibility of changing the name of the Department of Finance to "Inflation Canada." I will say no more, Mr. Speaker. We congratulate the hon. lady and wish her well. We have noted her presence in the House and her wit and disposition in dealing with all matters coming before her. We wish her well with the duties which lie ahead.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I join my hon. friend from Peace River in extending congratulations on behalf of my party to the hon. lady who has just been appointed Minister of Communications. I am sure that this is the first time in the 107 years of the history of this parliament that a lady minister has moved a motion in the House within hours after being appointed to her portfolio.

● (1600)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have not had time to do all the research that might be necessary to make that assertion, but I am sure it is correct. We congratulate her on this appointment, and we shall back up our congratulations by passing this bill without further debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party and myself, I would like to congratulate the new Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé). We are very happy to see her in her new department. We were proud of having her as Minister of Environment because we had always felt no one can match a lady to clean up the nation. But I believe she will be even more at home in her new office and I am sure that, with such an able captain, communications will thrive. We are sure the whole country will benefit from her appointment. I once more extend my congratulations to the new minister.

[English]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for being so expeditious in passing this bill. I appreciate that they are doing this to facilitate my task as, indeed, I was only sworn in a couple of hours ago. I thank them for passing this bill so expeditiously.

I thank the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for his very kind words and good wishes. As I already have had occasion to tell him, we all have our favourites on the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Sauvé: That is true.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Explain.

Mrs. Sauvé: I have something for you too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sauvé: As for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), we have a very old acquaintanceship. We have had many discussions. The only problem we have is that we feel we should be on the same side of the House.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear! Come on over.

Mrs. Sauvé: I also want to thank the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

I would like to thank the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) for his good wishes and his kind words. Hon. members of his party have always shown so much courtesy to me that I am pleased but not surprised by their graciousness. Thank you very much, and now I hope we shall be able to get the bill through.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

SUGGESTED EXEMPTION FOR COSTS OF TOOLS PURCHASED BY MECHANICS

The House resumed from Monday, December 2, 1974, consideration of the motion of Mr. Balfour:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure to amend the Income Tax Act to provide that, for the purpose of computing the income from his employment, a mechanic may, in addition to any other deduction to which he may be entitled, deduct the cost of tools or other supplies required in the performance of the duties under his contract of employment.

Mr. Balfour: Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. If the hon. member speaks, he will close the debate.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at the debate up to this point on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour). It has been backed by many members on both sides of the House, and for good reason. However, it leaves some questions in my mind and in the minds of others I am sure, particularly with reference to other supplies required for the purpose of the duties under the contract of employment. As has been said earlier, and said by the hon. member for Regina East, the class of employees singled out is very important.

If we accept this motion and give the tax relief that has been requested, we leave the door open to other segments of our population making a similar legitimate request. I refer to carpenters, masons, and so on.

What about other trades that also have to supply in varying degrees their own tools while under contract to perform various services? The hon. member for Regina East is really concerned with trades in this motion, not with professions. We have to look at it in that light to see whether in this time of high inflation, when a reasonable effort is being made to cut back by all segments of the population, this would entail a great expenditure of money and take from the treasury of Canada a large sum of money as well.

Basically, I agree wholeheartedly with the sentiments expressed thus far in the debate. A mechanic is required at his own expense and at varying times to supplement the tools in use in the various garages throughout this country. However, if we open it up for the mechanic, we may have to open it up for other tradesmen as well.

Carpenters require expensive tools in the work they do. Most are required to supply at least the basics. It used to be that if a carpenter had a square, handsaw, and a good knowledge of those basic tools, that was all that was needed. However, these trades are becoming much more technical and it is much more expensive in respect of the tools that they require.

We must look at this carefully because of a precedent that will be established. Will it be necessary to submit a licence to prove that you are a mechanic to qualify for exemption under the measures proposed by the hon. member? What about repeats? Will there be an exemption on the initial cost of the tools required? It was said previously in this debate that that exemption could be as high as $3,000. What are the other supplies required in the performance of the duties under the contract? Where do we draw the line?

We do have, as members know, an exemption now for 3 per cent, with a full exemption of $150 each year for those employment expenses. I think we have to take a look and see, if we are making a drastic change in the income tax, whether it is justified at this particular time in history and whether it would be taken advantage of by other segments of the population as fully as possible.

What is the situation now? What tools are supplied mostly by the service stations in which these mechanics are working, and what would we have to do to know exactly where the income tax people stand with respect to the tools that the man himself must employ?

I do not wish, of course, to digress from the topic we are studying, but I think perhaps for the thought of those in the present House and for other times we should also look to the general lack of qualified mechanics that appears to be on the scene now as far as this trade is concerned. And I might just briefly perhaps propose to the House that in this deliberation at some time in the future it should look to the licensing of mechanics through the armed services. I will not take that idea too much further other than to say I have had representations that the licences supplied by the provinces primarily, should be looking toward the supply of more qualified mechanics. But right now we must deal with the motion put forward by the hon. member and look at the exemption with relation to the tax act.

The fact that self-employed professionals are allowed deductions for materials and equipment consumed in income earning clearly establishes that it is administratively impossible to audit such expenditures. This was a statement made by the hon. member in the course of the discussion on December 2, 1974. I think we have to look at this in the light in which it was put forward. Consider the term "self-employed professionals".

Is a mechanic a professional? I would like to think most of them are. So we should perhaps consider very strongly allowing the deduction for a mechanic whether he is employed by a garage or large firm or as a self-employed professional, because if he is giving his professional services to a garage he is really self-employed due to the training he has undergone. We do have lawyers who work for corporations and they are self-employed professionals. I think too often we tend to look at a mechanic or a tradesman and say he is not professional. I think that is one of the things that has seriously hurt this country. But of more concern is to have them look upon themselves as non-professionals.

I trust some consideration will be given to the motion put forward by the hon. member because basically I must say I am almost fully in agreement with it with respect to the use of the Income Tax Act by mechanics. I think we should perhaps go further and open it up to many of the trades that make this country a better country in which to live. I could mention, of course, just a few of the others—draftsman, I believe, masons, and carpenters among others. We should not limit our discussions or our openings in the income tax levy to just the mechanics. I must say I am fully in agreement with the motion and, bearing in mind the possibility of establishing a precedent and possible loss at this particular time to the tax structure of the Government of Canada, I would support it.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to commend the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) for bringing to the attention of the House by way of his motion a very important matter and to say I am delighted to hear that the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) supports that motion.

It is interesting to note that when this matter was debated previously—I think in December, 1974—it was supported by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), a member of the NDP; by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), a Liberal, and by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), another Liberal. I note that the only Liberal who spoke against it at that stage was the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Cullen), presently Minister of National Revenue. I do not know whether that is the way to the cabinet—to speak against progressive motions of this nature. At any rate I am happy to hear the words of the member for Bruce-Grey. I hope he speaks for his party when he says he is in favour of it and supports it, and that at the end of this hour the government supporters in this House will give more than lip service in terms of their support and will allow the motion to come to a vote.

I believe the motion is a constructive one and, as the member for Bruce-Grey has said, perhaps it does not go far enough. This is not to say we ought to stop, in view of the support the motion has received, on the grounds it does not go far enough, having regard to the spirit in which it has been presented and the way in which it has been received. It is a step along the way and I think it would be a shameful thing if any of the hon. members opposite were to stand up and talk out the motion.

I do not intend to speak for very long. I think that if there is this kind of agreement in the House the motion should carry. We should perhaps go further to deal with the motion before us today. Let me say I believe it is important for the very reason the hon. member mentioned, namely, the fight against inflation. I wonder how many more young men or women might be induced into the trade, calling, or profession of mechanic if the incentive were given them to do so by removing the obstacle of the expensive purchase of tools they have to acquire. I am wondering if any hon. member has statistics that might indicate whether the infusion of new blood into a trade, calling, or profession would produce a great deal of tax revenue for the people of Canada as a result of that gainful employment.

It seems to me the government talks always in terms of restraint rather than recognizing that while there must be restraint in some areas—perhaps one is government spending, and others have been mentioned during the course of the last few days in this House—there is also a neccesity to encourage productivity and gainful employment, and to encourage those who want to enter gainful employment in order to contribute in some way or other to their community.

There is the other side to the coin of restraint. This is important because of the metric system, whenever the government decides to introduce it. This will produce great expense for mechanics who must trade their tools in or, in the alternative, buy additional tools. This would be one way in which the government could recognize this impediment to the conversion to the new system and the burden it will place on mechanics who wish to convert.

In so far as the argument that has been advanced about justice and equity is concerned, let me say I have listened carefully to the debate thus far, as well as on the last occasion. I was in the House on December 2, 1974, when the earlier debate took place. I see no reason in equity why a mechanic, and indeed at some stage we could carry this through into other trades and callings, ought not to be treated in the same way as a lawyer, a doctor, an accountant, or perhaps an engineer, in respect of our tax system.

I see no reason, for instance, why a lawyer who may use an automobile in the course of the conduct of his practice should stand in any more advantageous position than the mechanic who uses tools in the course of his trade, calling, or profession. I see no reason why a mechanic should be in any less significant a position than the engineer in respect of the tools of their trades, or why a lawyer in terms of his tax return should be in a more advantageous position because of owning a typewriter than the mechanic who has a set of wrenches or tools.

There is an important element here in terms of equalizing opportunities, and I think perhaps the reason that there is some hesitancy on the part of some people to accept this kind of approach is the great adherence to tradition. Traditionally lawyers, doctors, accountants, and engineers have been regarded by society, by parliament, and by those who advise the minister on what are proper deductions, as the privileged professions. The fact of the matter is that they are becoming less and less privileged in terms of the requirements of society.

If one is to advise a young person today where he or she ought to seek their fortune one would not be wrong if he advised that young person to seek his or her fortune or career in some area that is other than professionally oriented in the traditional sense. We have to take a hard look at this, and that is why I was very happy to hear the hon. member for Bruce-Grey state that he supports in principle this kind of deduction even though it does not go far enough. I was glad the hon. member for Nipissing supported the principle, and I was pleased that the hon. member for Assiniboia was in favour. I was equally happy that the new Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan) supported it as well, because it is an important principle.

Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would ask my colleagues on the other side of the House to bear witness in terms of the way in which this debate is conducted today by giving some efficacy to their support. They can do that by not talking the motion out, thus bearing false witness to their words, and by letting this motion proceed to the appropriate standing committee of the House, because this is a principle that ought to be put before the government and the committee where there can be intensive study, not only having regard to equity but to the matter of restraint and inflation raised by the hon. member. I think it is important that we discuss all these things.

When I leave the House today I hope I will not be disappointed. We still have 30 minutes time left, of which I hope ten minutes at the end can be used to vote in favour of this motion. Having regard to the support from the other side I am confident that it will pass this test with flying colours.

I want to express my thanks to all of my colleagues on the Liberal side who have indicated their support for the position taken by the hon. member for Regina East. I ask them not to send that member home tonight disappointed in that what has come from the other side is really only a lot of wind and very little substance. I know that those who are in the House today are not the kind of members of parliament who would give lip service to this kind of thing, but are the type who intend to allow it to pass.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, because I agree with the view just expressed by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that it is desirable to pass this resolution this afternoon, I shall keep my remarks very brief.

As the previous speaker pointed out, everyone who has taken part in this debate, both on December 2, 1974, and thus far on December 5, 1975, has spoken in favour of the resolution, with one exception. Even that one person who was not in favour of the resolution, namely, the present Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), admitted that what is presently being done by way of an exemption for the purchase of tools is not good enough. At the conclusion of his remarks on December 2, 1974, as noted in Hansard at page 1863, he said:

> Recognizing there is some merit in this argument, the government went part of the way with the 3 per cent or $150 deduction. Speaking personally, I do not think it is enough. I believe it should be higher. If the opposition had not spoken so long, I would have been able to expand on that.

The place to expand on that kind of proposition is in the committee to which this matter might be referred. I say, therefore, since all who have spoken have either supported the resolution outright or admitted that something ought to be done, I hope we can express that by passing this resolution this afternoon.

The only other word I should like to add is by way of the same thing said by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, namely, with the changeover to the metric system that is coming many workers will have to buy additional tools, and in many cases they will require two sets of tools. Some workers who at the present time may be fitted out with the tools they need will be faced with this kind of expense, so I think this issue becomes more urgent at this time in our history. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support all those Liberals and all other members of the House who say this is a good resolution. I hope it can be passed this afternoon.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, there is a proverb in the country from which I come which, briefly translated, says in effect that you never praise the day before the sun sets. I am afraid the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has made a kind of mistake by thanking everybody in this House.

It seems to me what we are debating today is a subject that probably is raised many times at lunch hour in the factories, on construction sites, and in the mines of Canada. It is one that has probably attracted the attention of workers in particular when they look at the way an employed worker is treated and then compare that to the way an employer can proceed in deducting all the expenses the employer is allowed to deduct under the Income Tax Act. Then I suppose they ask themselves why the employer can do this, while they cannot. Some speakers have already said that they would not want to see this limited to one trade but in fairness would like to see it applied to all trades.

Of course one could make a very good argument in favour of bricklayers, plasterers, electricians, technicians, miners and so on. They would all have a very good argument because they take pride in acquiring and developing a set of tools of their own.

I am surprised that a member of the Conservative party, which party historically has adopted the concepts of private enterprise, has missed one of the basic philosophies in our Canadian tax system, namely, the fact that income from employment in our country is treated differently from income from business. I imagine the reason is the fact that income from business is the type of income that allows one, if he is an employer, to create his own job and the jobs of his employees, and therefore having done so he is given a consideration and treatment under the Income Tax Act that is particularly favourable because he performs a special role of creating jobs. Now all of a sudden we have members of the Conservative party taking an approach which seems either to disregard this basic principle or forget the fact because of personal, local, or regional considerations.

It may be there is a large number of mechanics in Saskatchewan since that region seems to be particularly interested in this type of exemption. Let me say that at least in theory the assumption has been made that an employer will pay his employer-employee expenses, which include the tools, and in a case where an employer does not pay his employee's expenses other expenses are considered to be unnecessary. This, of course, we all know is not the case in respect of tradesmen, including mechanics. We know traditionally that tradesmen for reasons of pride, practicality, and reasons related to the fact that they have a certain preference or choice in the selection of tools, develop their tools and equipment on their own at their own expense. Therefore I think the question is very legitimate. However, let us for a moment think this through.

What would be the ultimate result if we were to adopt the resolution put forward today? It would mean that we would have in our society a group of tradesmen who are already commanding a very good income who had been recognized under the act, if it were to become law, as having been granted an additional preference, namely, that of deducting certain expenses that other workers who are employees do not have.

I am very surprised that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who seems to be staring at me with great astonishment, would support this measure which would really make the rich richer in a sense, and the poor poorer. This would be the net result of this kind of measure. Surely the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, because of his fine contribution to debates in this House, would see the merit of another approach I would put forward to you, Mr. Speaker, namely, that instead of this kind of a measure we might support one that would perhaps increase the amount which can be deducted by any worker in this country, regardless of whether he has a trade, whether he is semi-skilled or is unskilled.

It is true that such a measure would not address itself to a specific sector, and therefore would not relieve the workers in the particular industry or trade referred to, but in terms of social benefit it seems to me a measure to increase what is presently being permitted, that is to say, the $150 per year or 3 per cent of wages, to an amount that would not greatly affect the revenue of the Department of Revenue, first of all would be fair because it would apply to every employee, whether in the mines, in a body shop, an auto shop, a construction site, a bank, or an office downtown.

[Mr. Caccia.]

I refer to a measure that would provide some form of modest tax relief to everybody in this country who happens to be an employee. This is the basis for my argument. It would not be a measure that would provide an additional income benefit or advantage in society to a group which, for a number of reasons, can already command in our economic system a fairly good or reasonable income.

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, if I may digress for a few seconds from the topic at hand I should like to remark that just about a year ago when I was a very new member and easily intimidated, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) while a private member's bill was under discussion thundered across to members on this side that people on this side of the House had a tremendous habit of talking out private bills. Then he proceeded to take up quite a lot of the time allotted to the discussion of that bill. I should like to say that now, one year from then, the same thing has happened again.

My intention is not to talk out this bill but rather to endeavour to make a contribution, which I believe is what all members should be encouraged to do. My theme is similar to that of my colleague, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

● (1640)

Why single out the mechanics rather than the carpenters, the dye makers, the tool makers, or even the hairdressers and barbers? How about waitresses? As my colleague, the hon. member for Davenport pointed out, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has done tremendous work inside and outside the House for the lower scale employees. For instance, waitresses, if they are lucky, might earn the minimum wage an hour. Big deal! Who buys their uniforms? If they are lucky enough to work in high class restaurants they might get some tips, but the ones I know do not even get work there.

Mr. Johnston: I give them good tips.

Mrs. Appolloni: I am glad the hon. member across is so generous. I must tell all the waitresses I know to serve him.

The wording of the motion concerns me. As I said, I do not see why mechanics have been singled out, even though they deserve tax deductions as much as anyone else.

I also notice another anomaly in the phrase "cost of tools or other supplies". The wording lends itself to speculation. Here again I ask, what about special clothing, for instance, that is needed in almost every sector of industry and commerce in this country, and who helps to buy it?

I sat on a special board, again last December, where we were discussing the egg situation in Canada and I remember some of the farmers, members of the various boards, told us why they must get so much a week, especially in Quebec. They said they needed it to keep up with the industrial wage in Ontario. I asked them, "Do you have the same expenses as the average worker who lives in a large urban centre, who must pay for his transportation to his place of work and who must provide suitable clothes for himself in order to carry on even the most basic work such as answering a telephone, because when you turn up in an office in blue jeans you can lose your job pretty fast?" What about these people? Do you think of granting them tax exemptions? We think of mechanics who, as my colleague, the hon. member for Davenport pointed out, are not badly treated; they are well paid.

I agree with the substance of the motion but I also agree with what the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) said—that was his private opinion but hopefully now he will make it more public—that $150 a year is not sufficient and that it should be increased for all. Let us apply it to all people. Let us not cure one inequity only to create another.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, before I enter the crux of the subject I am sure I will be permitted to join my colleagues in expressing my best wishes and my most sincere congratulations to the new Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé), the former Minister of Environment, and wishing her utmost success in her new department. The one thing I and the members of the Committee on Fisheries and Forestry regret is that henceforth the former Minister of Environment who became today Minister of Communications will no longer sit on that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I must first congratulate the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) for the topic he chose to discuss today, and I must state right away that I am in great sympathy with the purpose he has in mind.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I was always surprised to find what I will call "discrimination" that always existed between the businessman, the professional and the shopkeeper and worker whatever his trade. And, as the hon. member who spoke before me said so properly, with the conviction it commands, I must say there is still in this motion by the hon. member for Regina East a feeling of discrimination since it is purely aimed at allowing mechanics to deduct from their income tax the cost of the tools they must use to practice their trade.

Why not? But that presents danger that is pointed out by the Department of Revenue, or those who are in charge of collecting taxes. If we open the door to mechanics, it means that everybody will be coming here to ask for a deduction as well. It is perfectly normal. Just like the lawyer needs paper, a telephone, secretaries to be able to practice his profession, just like the doctor, the worker needs tools. The same goes for the carpenter and all workers if they are to practice their trade decently and earn their living like all other professionals. Some companies supply the tools, fine, but in the case of those who do not supply them, the worker himself must pay for them. So I think it would be more equitable to allow those people to deduct it like lawyers, notaries, all other professionals, innkeepers, businessmen, industrialists and so on.

Fortunately, this government finally recognizes that something ought to be done in this sense and this is why a $150 deduction or 3 per cent of the yearly income, whichever is the lesser, is now allowed. It is always the same thing, it is always the lesser figure but when it is on the other side it is always the higher figure. I am informed that no voucher is required. We are told that the approximate cost of those automatic annual deductions of $150 a year for the federal treasury is $235 million.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that those deductions be extended to everybody, I mean to every worker for the real cost of his tools or what he needs to work and practise his trade, but we should require supporting evidence. Today, anyone can deduct $150 a year even if he does not buy any tool at all. Even if it means extra work for the staff ot the National Revenue Department, I do believe it would be better to require receipts and to allow not only mechanics but every worker to file a real deduction representing the cost of the tools they bought during the year to practise their trade. If they did not buy any, no deduction is allowed. Some people might not agree with my point of view but I think it would be more equitable for everybody and for the government—that is for Canadians—and particularly for those who have to buy tools to work at their trade. Those were the few comments I had to make on the motion of the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) and once again I commend him for this initiative and I hope the government will consider it.

[English]

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) spoke at such great length because it is impossible for me, in the few minutes remaining, to have a chance to discuss this subject as fully as it deserves to be discussed.

Fortunately the subject has been discussed very wisely by my colleagues on this side, and they have brought a sensible perspective to the problem which was not revealed by the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton. He, of course, skipped quickly over the subject matter of the bill and discussed the whole economic question in Canada, which he saw as being very ominous. He elevated the discussion, we have to admit, to a very high moral level, but I think he failed to deal with the particular questions raised by the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour).

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just so that there is no doubt, I have always looked forward to the contributions in these debates by my good friend, the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott). Speaking on behalf of my party I want to say that we are quite prepared to extend the time for as long as it may be necessary for the hon. member to finish his speech, and for all other hon. members who wish to speak in the debate to finish, so that the question can be put, and I hope there is general agreement from the other side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear! Agreed.

Mr. Abbott: Unlike the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton I have a very lengthy journey to make back to my constituency tonight where I have an engagement. I know many of my colleagues are not as fortunate as the hon. member. He can drive his car five of ten minutes to get home.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I will lend you my car.

Mr. Abbott: My hon. friends and colleagues here raised the very important point as to why we have singled out mechanics and, having singled them out, why do we not ask ourselves whether it is appropriate for people employed by gainful concerns, who are deducting the cost of doing business from their income, to have to outfit themselves with tools to begin with, or having outfitted themselves, do they not have them replaced as they wear out at the employer's shop? The question of a lawyer's expenses, the utilization of his car—a very suspect device at any time—is, I suggest, very unlikely to be closely related to his business needs. However, what of the employees who are in this same lawyer's office who, in order to enhance the premises and their appearance, dress expensively at their own expense? I suggest that the hon. member's own law office is a pleasure to walk into, but I doubt whether he pays any great heed to the cost of clothing borne by his employees as they help to create an impression of thoughtful affluence.

So the question is, therefore, why are we confining our discussion to the question of mechanics? However, I am curious as to why the $150 deduction or 3 per cent is not in itself probably adequate, even in the case of mechanics. I read in the speech of the hon. member for Regina East that he contended that expenses could run as high as $900 to $1,000 per year for replacement of tools. I find that to be a very high figure, and I would be inclined to cut it in half, which is a suitable procedure to take with regard to anything we hear from the other side of the House. So, taking half his statement as true, it would seem that the depreciated value annually of the tools would probably come close to $150 as a deductible item, so that in this case the mechanic is not faring too badly.

However, there is a very valid question at the moment about the cost of mechanics converting their inventory of tools to the metric system. Here I think the government should take special note and should recognize that this is a fundamental alteration in the assets of workers, people who can ill afford this sort of blow to their economic condition, and I think there should be a special provision introduced by the government to take account of this. This has been raised at meetings of the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade, Economic Affairs, which is discussing the metrication program. I think hon. members on both sides of that committee are enthusiastically supporting the concept of something being done for individuals, for to fulfill the national objective of metrication they must invest heavily in the tools of their trade. I strongly recommend that the hon. member for Regina East give further study to this matter so that when he reintroduces this motion, perhaps at another time, its more carefully thought out provisions will lend strength to this aspect of the argument.

Finally, we should consider the anomalies this kind of bill as it presently stands presents, because all across the economic community are inequities created by the problem of either being employed and the employer deducting expenses, of not being employed or of being self-employed. The hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the hon. member for Don Valley as he then was, spoke in debate and pointed out that the musician who had been self-employed was able to deduct his taxi expenses, but as soon as he signed on as a permanent member of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra he could not do so even though compensation was offered by the orchestra, and I suppose he had heavy instruments to carry.

All across the country there are these very hard to administer matters, and I recommend that the government take very careful note of the problem of the metrication program and the cost which will be borne by mechanics in this regard. Then the government perhaps should study the meritorious proposals brought forward by the hon. member for Regina East, and I urge upon him the desirability of studying the question and coming up with a sounder and more acceptable measure.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I too am glad to join in this debate today, and I must say that I am happy to find the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) in such a conciliatory mood. I hope that when major pieces of government legislation come before this House he will be in such a conciliatory mood at that point in time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration for private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

IMMIGRATION

ALLEGED DIRECTIVE THAT LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BE GRANTED WHEN ORDERED BY APPEAL BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising from a telex directive sent by the director of immigration for the Ontario region to all officers in charge of Canada immigration centres and subsequently circulated under date of October 15, 1975 by E. J. Fanning of the Canada Immigration Centre in Toronto to immigration supervisors. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Capilano (Mr. Huntington):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration make a statement concerning recent instructions under which immigration officers at Canada immigration centres now operate, which state that immediate landed immigrant status is to be granted any person where such is ordered by the Immigration Appeal Board regardless of whether immigration officials have received necessary medical examination reports, or whether immigration officials have completed investigations required regarding criminal or subversive backgrounds which would be harmful to national security, and further that the minister forthwith assure the House that steps will be taken to prevent the Immigration Appeal Board from hearing future cases without availability of all evidence at the time, that the minister guarantee immediate legislative steps will be taken to prevent continuance of a situation whereby criminals, subversives and other undesirables can receive landed immigrant status by Immigration Appeal Board decisions, and finally that the minister make public the number of such individuals to date receiving landed immigrant status in this way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, cannot be debated without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—LENGTH OF PROVINCIAL COMMITMENT TO GUIDELINES ACCEPTABLE TO GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister whether the government is still asking the provinces to enter into an agreement with the Government of Canada for a full three or three and a quarter years, the full term of the government's anti-inflationary program, or whether the government has indicated that it is prepared to accept a shorter commitment from the provinces. I am thinking particularly of those provinces deciding to let the federal government administer the plan with regard to their own civil servants, and so forth.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the public sector, which is the part which is being discussed with the provinces, we discussed at the most recent meeting the notion of entering in for a period shorter than the full period of the program with the expectation that there would be a review and a renewal at the end of that shorter period.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—RECONCILIATION OF ACCEPTANCE OF SHORTER COMMITMENT FROM PROVINCES WITH LONGER PROGRAM OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): If that is the appropriate technique with respect to the provinces, I wonder why the minister could not have agreed to it with respect to the program generally, as we suggested. However, I should like to ask the minister how he reconciles accepting the shorter commitment with the provinces—I heard the term a year and a half mentioned—with the government's whole concept of a program of gradually phasing down inflation over a period of three or three and a quarter years.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Our distinct preference was to phase inflation down more slowly over the three year period rather than have a very sharp reduction, which would bring about certain risks in the way of unemployment. Our distinct preference is to go on that slower incline. On the other hand, we have recognized that the provinces are sovereign governments in Canada, and that the best means of achieving this is with their agreement. We hoped to get their agreement to the longer period. If their agreement can only be obtained by their entering into an initially shorter period with the hope of renewal, that is the second best, but that is still a preferable solution to having no provincial participation in the public sector at all.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSITION OF QUEBEC ON ACCEPTANCE OF GUIDELINES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): It may very well be, then, that if the federal government decides to continue beyond the year and a half to which the provinces are committed, the program may be very unequal in fact, with some provinces in and some out. I should like to ask the minister whether he is now able to give us any firm statement about the plans of the one province which intends to administer the program itself in its own area of jurisdiction. Has the Government of Canada received any commitment from that province that it will follow the federal guidelines rather than its own guidelines?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): In general terms, the hope and the expectation is that the federal guidelines will be followed. As yet there has not been a final commitment that that province would make any necessary changes in its own guidelines so as to provide a mirror image of the federal guidelines. This question is still being discussed.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF MODEL AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Finance. On Friday, November 28 the minister said that he would table or otherwise make available copies of the model agreements he submitted to the provinces in connection with Bill C-73. Would the minister now make that material available to the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have seen the report of the question on Friday by the Leader of the Opposition. There was some discussion of those agreements the day before, and it was because discussion was anticipated that the form of the agreement had not been completed. I have asked my officials to prepare translations and to prepare the documents for tabling at the appropriate time tomorrow.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DRAFT REGULATIONS—AVAILABILITY OF DRAFT REGULATIONS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Last Thursday the minister said, and I quote:

> . . . regulations are not yet complete in a number of respects and depend on the outcome of discussions occurring today with the provinces.

Arising out of current meetings of officials does the government now have a full package of draft regulations, and if so, is the minister able to make them public in draft form in order that this House and others can review them and make comments?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): We are proposing that they would be promulgated just as soon as we receive Royal Assent. I anticipate they will be available some time next week.

Mr. Stevens: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Do the provinces now have in their possession a package of draft regulations in order that they can begin to reach a decision on how they will participate, and at least whether they will accept a national set of guidelines, particularly on incomes that fall under provincial jurisdiction?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, in general terms I would have to say no.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON CONTROL OF PROFESSIONAL INCOMES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering that a survey of lawyers in the Toronto area which was made public today indicated that they have not the slightest bit of concern about the effect of the controls program on their incomes, could the minister tell the House whether an agreement has been reached with the provinces as to the form that the controls program will take in regard to professional incomes?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the most general terms it is as previously set out a number of times. It obviously will vary from province to province but we would expect to be able to agree on ways in which billing will be controlled so that there would be no excess of the guidelines as we have set them out in the House.

Mr. Broadbent: I hope we can progress beyond that, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister saying to the House that it is conceivable that in some provinces increases in salaries or professional fees well beyond the $2,400 limit imposed on other people, will be possible?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would just repeat the guidelines for the hon. gentleman. We stipulated that increases in fees shall be no more than is necessary to recover the additional costs of overhead plus a return to the individual not in excess of $2,400 for the same amount of work. Obviously, if there is a further return resulting from longer hours of work—further productivity, if that term can be applied in the professional sector—the higher level would be available just as it will be available in the form of overtime to wage earners.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTED REDUCTION OF LAWYERS' FEES IN CONNECTION WITH MORTGAGES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A final supplementary question. Considering that both in terms of equity and in terms of the effect of this program on all sections of the population, and in the hope of some letoff in pressures on home owners, would the minister consider taking steps immediately to alter the situation that now prevails with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? At present a lawyer obtains 1 per cent of the value of a mortgage for arranging financing and in addition can charge the home owner another 1¼ per cent for legal fees. This means thousands of dollars for the home purchaser. Would the minister consider changing the government's requirements in terms of mortgages as a means of getting at these high legal fees?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we sought to do that on a broader basis, with regard to all real estate transactions and not just those of the government of Canada. We recognize where the billing has been for a percentage of the value involved in the deal, that without any change in the billing there can, of course, be an increase in the individual lawyer's return. There has been some discussion directed toward scaling down the billing rate as the actual cost goes up.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INQUIRY WHETHER REGIONAL OFFICES ESTABLISHED IN QUEBEC AND UNDER WHOSE JURISDICTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Minister of Finance.

As far as Quebec province is concerned, can the Minister tell the House if the Anti-Inflation Board will have a regional office in each region of that province and if that office will be under federal or provincial jurisdiction or jointly administered?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the hon. member correctly, he would like to know if the federal Anti-Inflation Board has jurisdiction over the postal employees. It is really the Anti-Inflation Board which has such jurisdiction and it is empowered to consider the agreement between the postal employees and the government.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

The minister did not understand my question completely. Will the Anti-Inflation Board have regional offices throughout Quebec and, if so, will they be jointly administered or only by the federal government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we shall have a Montreal office under Mr. Castonguay but not so in all regions, at least for the time being.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

PARTICIPATION OF MR. NADEAU IN EXAMINATION OF ATTEMPTED TAKEOVER OF ARGUS IN VIEW OF POSITION WITH ROYAL BANK

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister decided whether there would be any conflict of interest in Mr. Pierre Nadeau, a member of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration, participating in the examination of the proposed takeover of Argus Corporation by Power Corporation? I ask this as Mr. Nadeau is a director of the Royal Bank, which made available most of the funds necessary for the proposed takeover, and as the whole question of the loan was thoroughly examined by the Royal Bank board.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the conflict of interest guidelines function in their application this way with departments or royal commissions: the deputy minister, in the case of a department, and the chairman of the royal commission, in the case of commissions, reports to me on his own freedom from conflict of interest. People under him report to him. I am sure Mr. Bryce will have this question drawn to his attention, and he can make his own judgment. I must add that, in the case of a royal commission in particular, or other areas where we seek to have people work part time for the common weal and draw them from the private sector, whether from business, labour, finance, the universities, and so on, it is inevitable that these people will not sever all links with the rest of their lives; otherwise we would not be able to enjoy their expertise. So, on this basis I am sure Mr. Bryce will make an equitable decision.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Prime Minister that when we draw useful people for these commissions there is bound to be the possibility of conflict of interest from time to time. Would it not be desirable if Mr. Nadeau were to withdraw from the board for this particular case? Otherwise a lot of people will think there is a conflict of interest here.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the facts of the particular case to which the hon. member refers but will ensure that Mr. Bryce, the chairman of the commission, hears about it.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you read the guidelines yourself yet?

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SKY SHOPS AND MIRABEL—INQUIRY WHETHER INVESTIGATIONS SEPARATE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my brief question is directed to the Solicitor General. Has the Solicitor General conferred with the Prime Minister, pursuant to the admonition the Prime Minister gave him on December 4, as reported at page 9708 of Hansard, not to give information to the hon. member for Calgary North on whether or not the Mirabel and Sky Shops investigations are one and the same? I wonder whether he is authorized to give any answer today. I realize that he must be cautious in what he says. Can he give us any information about the way the investigation or investigations are proceeding? For example, are any investigations being conducted outside this country?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed the matter further with the Prime Minister and have no further information to give the House at this time.

AIRPORTS

DORVAL—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LEASE WITH KEBEC RESTAURANTS—POSSIBILITY OF FUTURE TENDERING

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport? Has the Prime Minister brought to the attention of the Minister of Transport, as he indicated he would last Friday, the matter of possibly tabling in this House of copies of lease agreements between the Department of Transport and Kebec Restaurants? Perhaps at the same time the Minister of Transport would indicate whether or not the lease with Kebec Restaurants is up for renewal and whether it will be put out to open tender, in keeping with stated departmental policy.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look at the question of tabling the lease, to see if there is any difficulty about it. The three five-year periods included in the original lease should expire early in 1976. At that point we will look at the best procedure to use in connection with the lease.

Mr. Baldwin: Why not refer it to the Anti-Inflation Board for a ruling?

AIR TRANSPORT

SKYWEST APPLICATION—POSSIBILITY OF REPRESENTATIONS BY TRANSAIR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport relates to the Skywest application, and also the hearings which were adjourned last week. In the last few months has Transair, which operates from Winnipeg, made direct representations to the minister about the Skywest application, or any aspect of it? If so, what was the outcome of any representations made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I and members of my staff held discussions with various carriers. At least two of the carriers were interested in the earlier question of supplying service on this route. Transair was one of the companies. I would not characterize those discussions as representations. The question of their role, generally, in this area was discussed.

SKYWEST APPLICATION—REASON FOR ADJOURNMENT OF HEARINGS

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Transport whether the hearings have been adjourned for the time being and, if so, is the reason that the minister is more interested in looking for a private carrier than the public carrier proposed in the Skywest application?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. I made it clear to the Manitoba government that I thought there was perhaps a simpler route to a licence than using a government carrier and the particular proposal put forward by them. However, the decision to not proceed with the hearings was taken by the Air Transport Committee, as I read the judgment, on the basis of a real lack of information on the part of the applicant.

CUSTOMS

RIVERPORT, NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR EARLY APPOINTMENT OF OFFICER

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Over the past ten years, Riverport, Nova Scotia has been increasingly utilized as an export centre for processed seafoods. In fact, in the past month three substantial cargos were exported, two destined for Europe and one to South America. There were 184 clearings from the port since the beginning of April. My question to the minister is this. In light of the fact that Riverport is one of the most active marine centres in the maritimes, when can we expect the appointment of a full-time customs officer to fill the position made vacant some nine months ago when the holder of that office passed away?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State have both made these representations. We did in fact have an individual named and the order in council passed. However, the individual indicated after that he was not interested in taking up the position. We are at the present time selecting another individual to fill that role.

CRASH OF AIRCRAFT AT HÂVRE-AUX-MAISONS—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY AND IMPROVEMENT OF AIRPORT FACILITIES

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Transport.

But before, Mr. Speaker, may I present my deepest sympathy to all families affected by the loss of a close relative as a result of the crash at the Hâvre-aux-Maisons airport, in the Magdalen Islands, last Thursday. My question to the Minister of Transport is the following: has the department undertaken an investigation to find the cause of that tragedy and will this tragedy prompt the Department of Transport to hasten the improvement work required for that airport which has been asked for a long time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we certainly are looking into this matter. I share with the hon. member the sympathy he has extended to the people who were directly affected.

POST OFFICE

SUGGESTED OFFERING OF OVERTIME TO REGULAR EMPLOYEES BEFORE HIRING CASUALS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that in many cities postmasters are still operating under the old rules regarding casual help, thereby violating the intent of the new contract initialled by the government and CUPW, will the Postmaster General issue a directive to all postmasters to adhere to the principle of minimizing the use of casual labour by offering extra hours and overtime to regular employees first?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this fact was drawn to my attention by the union on Friday. I believe that the matter has been settled satisfactorily. It is part of the new contract which has yet to be signed. It has been ratified and we have been notified accordingly. Of course, we have not as yet signed the contract. However, in the interval, I have given instructions that we arrive at local decisions on what is a suitable number of hours of overtime that should be permitted to regular workers. It is not specific in the collective agreement. Needless to say, it should be limited by common sense. We hope that this can be arrived at in each individual post office through consultation.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICE—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF LABOUR-MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It relates to the disturbing information provided by the minister last Wednesday to my colleague, the hon. member for Malpeque. He indicated that no arrangement had been made or any agreement reached with respect to continuous ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland during the ice season but more particularly during labour disputes. I ask the minister whether the communications committee set up by his predecessor last July, and composed of representatives of both labour and management in an attempt to maintain ongoing communication and work potential solutions with respect to this problem, is still in existence and is still meeting on the same basis as was then indicated, and when that committee might be presenting its report either to him or to the provincial government of Prince Edward Island?

● (1430)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. member for Malpeque's question was particularly related to the labour disputes. While I indicated that we could not assure that this kind of problem would not occur again, it is true the matter is one of concern and is therefore the subject of a number of pieces of work.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I should like to direct attention specifically to the Marine East co-ordinating committee which was announced by the hon. minister's predecessor, now the Minister without Portfolio, a year ago July. The committee was to meet in the months of January, May and September and effect continuing communication on potential labour disputes which might result in the termination of a service which vitally affects the economic interests of Prince Edward Island. Is this work still going on and when can we expect a report from that committee?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had a report on that matter but I will look into it.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

ALLEGED DELAY OF DECISIONS—POSSIBILITY OF MEASURES TO IMPROVE OPERATIONS

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the new Minister of Communications.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: In asking her her inaugural question, I should like to extend my sincere congratulations and tell her I can say in all confidence that she will certainly be the best Minister of Communications the government has had since Pierre Juneau.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Is the minister aware of the large number of complaints raised by people within the industry during the tenure of the former chairman of the CRTC that fairly routine procedures were left hanging by the CRTC for extremely long periods of time, much to the detriment both of the industry and of the public it serves? If so, what plans, if any, has the hon. lady to reorganize the workings of the CRTC in order to speed up routine decision making?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their good wishes and particularly the government members who show such a good spirit under the circumstances. I also thank the member who asked the question. I would be inclined to ask the parliamentary secretary, who fulfilled his duties so judiciously during the interim, to answer this question. Moreover I cannot give the genial answer the hon. member would expect. But however little I know of the matters of the department I am responsible for, I am aware that the CRTC is being reorganized and, of course, if there is any delay in its decision, I will do my best to expedite the procedures.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO PRIORITY OF DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister has stated that it will take some $110 billion in the next decade to develop our energy resources in accordance with our needs. In view of the fact that the huge injections of cash into the economy which will be required will certainly contribute to inflation, and in view of the fact that there is a limitation on the technology, the supply of skilled people and the funds available to develop these projects, will the minister tell us whether he or the government have given any thought to developing a set of priorities? Has it considered which projects are to be developed, and in what order?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We have indicated that the $110 billion would be spread over many different projects. About half that sum would probably be allotted to the generation and transmission of hydro-electric power with the remainder going largely into oil and gas, though I think a considerable chunk would be directed to coal. The danger in mentioning priorities when we are talking about numbers is that if I indicated a priority one might think I should be putting a greater number against the oil and gas and less on coal. We consider all these areas to have priority. Perhaps the greatest priority of all is to introduce a stricter measure of discipline in energy conservation, because if we do we could reduce the bill by close to $40 billion.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBLE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO REPLACE WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last week the Solicitor General stated outside the House that the government was preparing legislation which would replace the existing War Measures Act but was unwilling to confirm that statement in the House. The Minister of Justice, upon questioning, seemed not to know whether such legislation was being drafted by his department or not and said he would have to take the matter up with the Solicitor General. In view of the apparent unwillingness of his cabinet colleagues to clarify this matter, would the Prime Minister advise the House whether or not such legislation is being considered by the government and for what purpose, and when we can expect it to be introduced?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Going back a few years, I believe it was early in 1971, the House will recall that the government was ready to prepare a bill which it would have sent to a committee to see if we could bring in legislation which would avert in the future the need to resort to the War Measures Act. So, in a sense, the government has some policy prepared on this issue. But in view of the fact it has not been introduced, what we are doing now is reviewing the situation and considering whether we would want to modify the kind of policy decision taken at that time. I still believe, and it is the view of the government, that it would be important to have such legislation on the books in the future. The manner in which it would be presented and the timing would depend a great deal on the disposition of the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA HAS PROTESTED TO ISRAEL OVER ATTACK ON REFUGEE CAMPS IN LEBANON

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the hon. members for Hillsborough and Greenwood asked the Acting Minister of External Affairs about the aerial raid conducted by the state of Israel 200 kilometres inside Lebanon, in which 30 Phantoms and Sky Hawks blindly bombed the refugee camps of Naher Al Bared and Bedawi, killing 80 Palestinians and eight Lebanese and injuring 106 Palestinians and two Lebanese. Has the minister taken cognizance of the statements made by the Acting Minister of External Affairs and reported to the new ambassador of Israel how horrifed the Canadian people feel at this mad behaviour, as His Holiness Pope Paul VI has called it?

[English]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have read the answer to the question given by the President of the Privy Council. I support 100 per cent the comments he made in connection with these raids, and I want to assure the hon. member that a transcript of those comments has been drawn to the attention of the Israeli embassy in Ottawa.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DIRECTIVE THAT LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS BE GRANTED ON ORDERS OF APPEAL BOARD

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister willing to table in the House a copy of the Telex sent by one of his officials changing the procedures under which his department handles immigration cases dealt with by the Immigration Appeal Board to the extent that immigration officials must now grant immediate landed immigrant status on orders of the board, even prior to receipt of medical reports or completion of investigations with regard to criminal or subversive backgrounds?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Since, obviously, the hon. gentleman has not given me any notice of this question I would not care to say whether I would table it or not until I have had an opportunity to see the alleged directive, one of which I have no knowledge at this moment.

Mr. Cossitt: Point of order—three o'clock!

ALLEGATION QUEBEC SEEKING AMENDMENT TO PERMIT GAMBLING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

It seems now more and more certain that Quebec intends to set up a casino on its territory. However to do so, the federal legislation must be amended, as pointed out by Premier Bourassa. Could the Prime Minister tell the House what are the views of the federal government on the matter and if it intends to alter the legislation to allow Quebec to set up that casino?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, no such request has been made. Therefore, the question remains hypothetical.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS COVERING EXPLORATION FOR OIL AND GAS

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Last Monday, December 1, the minister stated that he would be meeting during the week with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the oil and gas regulations. I should like to ask the minister whether the meeting did take place and, if so, whether he would advise the House of a firm date when the oil and gas regulations will be brought down.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the meeting did take place but a couple of complications have arisen and at this point I am not able to give the hon. member a firm date. I will be back to the hon. member on the matter.

PROCEDURE FOR RELEASE OF PERSONS ILLEGALLY DETAINED IN FOREIGN COUNTRY—POSSIBILITY OF IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In posing my question to the minister I know he would wish to join with all hon. members of the House in welcoming to the gallery of this chamber two Canadians of outstanding faith and courage who have recently returned home after several months' captivity in a prisoner of war camp in Viet Nam. I am referring to the Reverend Norman and Mrs. Joan Johnson, of Hamilton, Ontario.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has been kind enough to meet with Mr. and Mrs. Johnson today, I wonder whether he is in a position to tell the House if the department is reconsidering the procedures for seeking the release of Canadians held illegally abroad in such dire circumstances.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the hon. member has drawn our attention to the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson in the gallery. I am as pleased as he that it has been possible to arrange their release. I do not know of any better way of handling cases of this kind than the procedure we followed. We made repeated representations to the authorities, and I believe the last one was made by myself at the United Nations to the representatives of the north, and following that representation the release was arranged. If there are better procedures we would be happy to follow them, but I do not know of any other than those we have followed in this case.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONSULTANTS' FEES FOR DESIGN OF RUNWAYS, APRONS AND TAXIWAYS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Three weeks ago, as reported at page 9017 of Hansard, the Minister of Transport said that he would look at the $10 million expenditure on consultants for the design of runways, aprons and taxiways at Mirabel airport. In light of the fact that all of the design work was done by his staff in the ministry of transport, can the minister report on this matter now?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. member that I would look at the answer to one question to which he referred and also a return that was tabled. If the hon. member will look at the return that was tabled, he will find it explains the way in which the various calculations are made and the attribution of costs for the consulting services in question.

Mr. Huntington: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I say in reply to the minister that I have looked at the return and it in no way coincides with the information that was given to me in the written answer previously printed in Hansard.

Mr. Lang: I suggest the hon. member read the paragraphs instead of just the numbers.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO SALE OF IMPORTED GLOVES UNDER CANADIAN LABEL

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Could the minister advise the House whether it is true that glove manufacturers are selling foreign goods as though they were Canadian made, thereby favouring massive imports and seriously jeopardizing existing jobs in areas which suffer already from high unemployment rates and where existing jobs must be maintained?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the hon. member's concern for workers in the glove industry and I commend him for it. I want therefore to assure him of the full co-operation of my departmental officials. An investigation could be carried out within the next few days, following the delivery of relevant information or documents. I can assure him that first priority would be given to such documents.

HOUSING

INCREASE IN MORTGAGE INTEREST RATE IN AREAS NOT SERVED BY NHA APPROVED LENDERS—EFFECT ON LOW INCOME GROUPS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the announcement by CMHC last Friday increasing mortgage interest rates from 11 per cent to 11¾ per cent for persons living in remote areas not served by NHA approved lenders, and in view of the minister's statement announced by his parliamentary secretary on introducing Bill C-77 last week that the thrust of the legislation is to help low income, elderly and native people, in what way does this mortgage rate increase assist these people to purchase decent housing at reasonable cost?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was quoting from a news release of December 5. If I may quote also, rates to non-profit housing organizations and entrepreneurs under the special rental housing program also remain unchanged at 8 per cent. Under the assisted home ownership program CMHC mortgage rates may also be as low as 8 per cent, depending on income, and further interest reducing grants of up to $600 a year are available. These grants would be increased to $750 by legislation now before parliament.

I think the hon. member knows that we are asking the lenders to increase the amount of money that they are going to put forward by $750 million. We have great confidence that the government will be able with its money to encourage further construction of social housing.

SPRUCE BUDWORM CONTROL—REQUEST FOR SPRAY PROGRAM FOR NEW BRUNSWICK NEXT SPRING

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fisheries) and Minister of the Environment. I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate the minister on his extended duties and say that I believe that the government has selected very wisely.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howie: Significantly, Mr. Speaker, my question has a New Brunswick flavour to it. Has the minister had an opportunity to inform himself of the critical condition of New Brunswick forests as a result of the continuing spruce budworm infestation, will he give immediate consideration to a more intense program of research to find a solution to the problem, and in the meantime prepare an effective spray control program for next spring?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his good wishes and I hope that my answers do not indicate that my temporary situation will last for too long. I am speaking in terms of knowledge, of course, not in terms of other things. I should say to the hon. member that a meeting had been planned for tomorrow between the previous minister and the Minister of Natural Resources for New Brunswick. I asked that this meeting be delayed for probably one week in order that I may familiarize myself with the subject. Although I have made a start on the subject, I am not yet ready to give a valid reply to this question.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC CRIME PROBE—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION TO LEGALIZE ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question in connection with a statement that he allegedly made outside the House regarding the appeal case now before the Supreme Court of Canada in which the counsel for alleged gangsters in Montreal, supported by the counsel for the government of Canada, are arguing that the setting up of the crime probe is outside the jurisdiction of the province. The minister allegedly said that, if that were so, legislation to legalize the setting up of the commission would be brought in.

Since apparently the government has decided that the crime probe is beyond the powers of the legislature of Quebec, regardless of what the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada may be anticipated to be, would the Solicitor General bring in such legislation before the Christmas recess so that, in the event that the Supreme Court of Canada does decide that it agrees with the counsel for the government of Canada, the crime probe would not be emasculated for a period of several months until parliament resumes, thereby benefitting the kings of the underworld?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice. I merely tried to repeat outside the House what the Minister of Justice said in this House in answer to a question put to him by a member from the other side. Perhaps the right hon. member could put the question to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter peculiarly of the law, and the Solicitor General being interested in law enforcement and representing a Quebec constituency I am sure would be able to assure the people of that province that the crime probe will not be set in cold storage for a period of months.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might answer the question. As I indicated, I have had discussions with the province of Quebec concerning the type of legislation which should be introduced in this House in the event the position of the Attorney General of Canada in the Supreme Court of Canada is maintained. Those discussions are still continuing as to the proper time and proper type of legislation to be introduced here in order to clothe the provincial crime inquiry with a proper constitutional basis.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether the government feels an amendment to the British North America Act is necessary in order to bring about the legalization of that which the government's counsel, in a cozy way with the counsel for the underworld, is arguing to the contrary.

Mr. Basford: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am very startled that the right hon. member, a learned member of the bar, would ask the question and use the words he has.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the truth hurt?

Mr. Basford: With regard to the fact that he did choose to use language like that, it is not a reflection on me but rather a reflection on him. Concerning the question itself, stripped of its silly language—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: —the answer is no.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MERCURY POISONING—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROVIDE ALTERNATIVE FOOD OR RELOCATE NATIVES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since both the federal and provincial governments are warning native groups in the areas of Yellowknife, Dryden, Ontario and Matagami, Quebec, as well as in numerous other locations, not to eat fish because of high contamination of mercury, is the federal government, first, doing anything to provide an alternative protein supply and, second, is it doing anything to help these people relocate into other occupations?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first portion of the question is yes. Alternative sources of protein are being provided. The answer to the second portion of the question is that an effort is being made to create other forms of economic development on these reserves.

MERCURY POISONING—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO NATIVES IN OBTAINING SETTLEMENT FOR DAMAGES FROM COMPANIES CONCERNED

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the federal government doing anything to assist the native groups to obtain proper settlement from companies such as Dryden Chemical Company or Domtar Limited which have contributed to the destruction of health and the means of livelihood of many native people.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, this matter is being investigated. Currently representatives from the province of Ontario, who are also very much involved in this since it is their law which has to be complied with, are investigating the compensation the people should have and to see whether in fact a basis for a lawsuit does exist against the company in Dryden.

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT TRAFFICKING IN PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In view of the findings of the coroner and the coroner's jury the other day in the Poulin case in Ottawa regarding the harmful effects of pornography, may I ask the minister what steps he is taking in his capacity as Solicitor General of Canada to prevent inter-provincial traffic of this material and to prevent this material coming into the country in accordance with the provisions of Section 159 of the Criminal Code.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP is responsible for policing the transportation of pornography into the country from outside, but it is up to the attorneys general of the provinces to police the law within Canada and the hon. member will have to approach them with regard to that question.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General, with regard to the provincial application of these provisions of the Criminal Code and in view of the findings of the coroner and the coroner's jury in this unfortunate case, if it is his intention to meet with the attorneys general of the provinces and include this matter in the revisions his colleague the Minister of Justice and he intend to bring to parliament shortly.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we had not considered amending any laws in respect of pornography. We could take the suggestion under consideration.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—APPLICABILITY OF GUIDELINES TO NEGOTIATIONS OF CLOTHING WORKERS

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to put a question to the Minister of Labour, but in view of his absence, I shall put it to the Minister of Finance.

Can he tell the House whether he has met the representatives of the clothing workers union to discuss the application of the guidelines in Bill C-73 in the conflict that opposes them to their employers? If so, how can we ensure that the workers make up the salary to which they are entitled?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity of meeting the representatives of such a union, some three weeks ago, as well as representatives of the National Labour Council. I can make no comment on the agreement now under discussion. I am not aware of all the details, but I must say that part of the group is covered by the guidelines in the white paper and, of course, we expect the members to respect those guidelines.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR NAME OF PERSON WHO WILL BE ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which is almost a supplementary question. PARIS ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA BEING CO-CHAIRMAN—CANADIAN POSITION AT CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister confirm that Canada has been invited to be a co-chairman of the forthcoming Paris economic conference and what Canada's stand will be in putting forth practical ideas in trade and monetary reform to close the rich-poor gap in the world, ideas first presented through the UN's economic order and which now need specific implementation by countries like Canada.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to the first part of the question is yes, Mr. Speaker. It has been suggested that Canada become a co-chairman of the conference. With regard to the second part of the question, it is very difficult at this stage to indicate the various policy developments or the policy responses that will be required within the four commissions that will operate under the over-all conference. We are presently working out very preliminary policy attitudes which will require elaboration as the work of this conference and of the commissions proceeds.

● (1500)

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When I questioned the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) a few moments ago regarding a most serious change in immigration regulations which could affect both criminal and subversive activities in this country, he replied that I had not given him notice that I would refer to a directive sent out by Telex by one of his most senior officials.

I agree that I did not give him notice in advance, but my point of order contains two very brief points: first, I cannot see that any notice to a minister is required in advance, under the rules of the House, with regard to such high-level instructions which could or should hardly be given without ministerial approval. Second, with the greatest respect, I am certain that the supplementary question that I was not able to put referring to the Yates and Wynder cases would have quickly refreshed the memory of the minister so that he might then have provided the House with the necessary answer.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Text]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,191, 3,335, 3,519, 3,557, 3,576, 3,584 and 3,621.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

FRANCOPHONE EMPLOYEES IN THE DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Question No. 3,191—Mr. Whittaker:

1. What are the number of francophone employees working in the Department of the Secretary of State (a) how many are Canadian (b) how many speak French only?

2. Are they required to speak or learn the other official language and, if not, for what reason?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): 1. 1,438 Francophone employees. (a) In order to obtain this information, it would be necessary to check the personal file of each person. (b) 290 speak French only.

2. These Francophone employees must speak the other official language if they hold bilingual positions and, consequently, the unilingual people who apply for or hold bilingual positions must learn the other official language in accordance with the guidelines adopted in the Resolution on the official languages passed by Parliament in June 1973.

ASSISTANCE TO REGIONAL LIBRARIES

Question No. 3,335—Mr. Forrestall:

Will the Department of the Secretary of State give consideration to applications from the Government of Nova Scotia for funds to assist regional libraries such as the Dartmouth Regional Library and (a) if so, what procedure should be followed (b) if not, for what reason?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Funding of regional libraries is a provincial responsibility.

Order Paper Questions

MULTICULTURAL PROGRAMMES AND ACTIVITIES

Question No. 3,519—Mr. Forrestall:

What is the role of the Treasury Board in monitoring the funding of multicultural programmes and activities conducted under the auspices of the Department of the Secretary of State?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): The Treasury Board does not monitor as such the funding of the multiculturalism program of the Department of the Secretary of State. The Department, however, must seek Treasury Board approval to pay any grant exceeding $20,000 from within the allotment authorized by Parliament. In the case of grants under $20,000, the Secretary of State is delegated responsibility to make payments in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board.

CASES OF ABDUCTION

Question No. 3,557—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Would the Minister of External Affairs advise what his progress is on the abduction cases of (a) Mrs. Stephanie Gribbon, Surrey, British Columbia, one child abducted and taken to Portugal in 1973 (b) Mrs. Jean Hobbs, Victoria, British Columbia, three children abducted and taken to the United States in 1972 (c) Mrs. Nicolette, Vancouver, British Columbia, three children abducted and taken to Italy in 1973 (d) Mrs. Mildred Clarke, Mission, British Columbia, five children abducted and taken to the Philippines in 1974?

2. Could the Minister advise if any legislation is being drafted which will assist in these cases?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. (a) In the case of Mrs. Gribben, in response to a request by the British Columbia authorities that the father be extradited from Portugal to face abduction charges in Canada, the Department obtained a legal opinion from Portugal that extradition was not possible in the circumstances and that Mrs. Gribben must seek a custody order in the Court of Minors in Portugal. In addition the Department has consulted with the local welfare authorities concerning the well being of the child. (b) The Department has not been contacted by Mrs. Hobbs. (c) The Department has not been contacted by Mrs. Nicolette. (d) In the case of Mrs. Clarke, the Canadian Embassy in Manila has informed the Philippines Department of Foreign Affairs, the Philippines Department of Justice and the Manila Metropolitan Police that the children are believed to be in the Philippines. The Embassy has been assured of the co-operation of these agencies in locating the children. To date, however, these agencies have not located the children. The Department of External Affairs has informed the Philippines authorities that, if the children are located and ordered to be returned to Canada, the Canadian Government is prepared to repatriate them.

2. The legislation of the jurisdiction in which the children are located determines the conditions under which they may be ordered by local authorities to be returned to Canada. The Department of External Affairs can only bring the matter to the attention of the local authorities and request their assistance in arranging for the return of the children to Canada.

Order Paper Questions

PARLIAMENTARY OBSERVERS AT UNITED NATIONS

Question No. 3,576—Mr. Landers:

1. Does the Department of External Affairs intend to send Members of Parliament and Senators to New York as UN observers in the future?

2. Will translating services be provided in the Canadian mission in New York to enable unilingual observers to understand the briefing sessions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. No. The officers of our mission and the members of our delegation in New York work in the official language of their choice in accordance with the bilingualism policy of the Canadian government. Most of the officers are bilingual. The informal format of the briefing sessions normally permits any unilingual participant to raise any question or seek clarification on any matter that may have been discussed in the other official language during the meeting.

DISABILITY PENSIONS

Question No. 3,584—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the Minister of Veterans Affairs satisfied that applications for disability pensions handled by the Canadian Pension Commission from applicants with serious disabilities threatened by imminent death are handled within a reasonable time frame?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Yes. The Canadian Pension Commission has a priority system which takes into account situations where there is an urgent social or medical need. Where the Commission is aware of the "imminent death" of an applicant, the claim is handled on a top priority basis.

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE BOARD—LAWYERS RETAINED IN CONSTITUENCY OF VICTORIA, B.C.

Question No. 3,621—Mr. McKinnon.

1. What were the names and addresses of all lawyers and law firms in the Constituency of Victoria, British Columbia who performed services for the War Veterans Allowance Board during 1973 and 1974?

2. By year, what was the total amount paid to each?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Nil.

2. Not applicable.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CONDITIONS AND PROVISIONS GOVERNING CITIZENSHIP

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner that Bill C-20, respecting citizenship, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, back on May 21, 1975, I first had the opportunity to make some brief remarks respecting my position on Bill C-20. At that time I pointed out quite clearly that the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons was conducting hearings across Canada relative to future or possible changes in Canada's immigration laws, and that the question of citizenship and its requirements were part and parcel of that discussion. It was my view at that time that the debate should be delayed until such time as the committee had had an opportunity to present to the House the findings it was able to make in its travels across Canada and at hearings in Ottawa. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I intend to bring to your attention and to the attention of the House some of the recommendations of that committee as they reflect on Canada's present citizenship act.

Also in my brief remarks on May 21 I stressed the positive aspects of the bill, namely, that the bill will correct a deficiency which now exists in the Canadian Citizenship Act in that it is proposed that citizenship be granted to a child born outside of Canada if one of his or her parents is a Canadian citizen. It is a right that is presently only held by male members of our society but which should be extended to female members. That provision in the bill has my endorsation.

The second matter concerns lowering the eligibility age from 21 to 18. It stated on May 21 that those regulations should have been brought in when the Canada Elections Act was amended. That is another deficiency which Bill C-20 corrects. The central thrust of Bill C-20, as I see it, is the reduction of the waiting period for residency requirements and qualifications of landed immigrants, which at the present time is five years; that is, five years from the time an immigrant receives landed immigrant status when he can apply for citizenship and become a Canadian citizen if he fulfils the requirements.

The proponents of this provision argue that five years is an arbitrary figure and say that three years is more equitable. They say, also, that it reduces somewhat the arbitrariness of the act and the stigma of having to wait a long period of time which could make immigrants feel they are regarded as second-class citizens. I pointed out on May 21 that the residency requirements presently in effect in the United States, Britain, Belgium, West Germany, Australia and New Zealand are generally five years or longer. I am sure hon. members could also point to the fact that in some countries the residency requirements are less than five years, and that this period of time would be no less or no more arbitrary than the present requirement of five years in Canada.

However, I should like to point out that very few countries in the world could be termed receiving countries, that is, countries which receive significant numbers of immigrants yearly. Canada happens to be one of these countries. There are very few countries in the world which meet those qualifications. In fact, in the last five years Canada has welcomed to its shores approximately one million immigrants. So I suggest that our citizenship requirements have slightly different ramifications from those of countries which have very few people coming in as landed immigrants.

All of us should ask ourselves whether we have given immigrants an adequate opportunity to adapt to the Canadian way of life. During the hearings of the joint committee the question of adaptation received a fair amount of attention and discussion. We found, for example, that generally speaking—I know we have to generalize in circumstances such as these—studies show that immigrants have an income equal to or higher than the average income of native born Canadians shortly after they come to Canada. So the economic adjustment that immigrants make is relatively quick and generally painless, and the positive factors are there not only for the immigrants but for Canada as a whole.

On the matter of language, it was found that despite the horrendous problems they were exposed to in places like the Toronto school system—if my memory serves me correctly, at one Toronto school there were about 18 mother tongues represented in one elementary classroom—and despite what one might call the pedagogical problems that situation represents, generally children of immigrants adapted to either one or both of the official languages of Canada in relatively short order.

The government must keep in mind that much more has to be done at the tripartite level. The federal government must assume more responsibility, in my view, and when immigrants come into Canada they should not then say to the provinces and municipalities, "Here they are. You are responsible": the federal government has to go beyond that. I am sure all hon. members recognize that the residency qualifications are really for one purpose, and that is for the immigrant to be able to adapt to the Canadian way of life upon which is based his citizenship. At least to some degree adaptation has to be made.

It was also very clear that we were not very successful in having immigrant women adapt to the Canadian way of life and become part of the social milieu. This was quite clearly pointed out in the immigration brief. I should like to read a portion of it into the record. I am reading from page 53:41 of the report of the Special Joint Committee on Immigration Policy as follows:

> Attention was also directed to the particular plight of immigrant women, and especially wives and mothers. When they are not in the work force they have little opportunity to learn the language and make personal contacts, advantages enjoyed by their husbands and their school-aged and working children. Many of them remain in the home isolated by language differences, and can become estranged from the community and even from their own families.
> It was pointed out that language training is the single most important need of these women. The committee is aware that federal funds are made available to the provinces to finance courses organized through the adult education division of the schools. But committee members gained the impression that not enough attention has been paid to this program by the responsible authorities and recommends that it be reviewed.

I think the evidence is quite clear that whether it be five years, three years or whatever, we are not doing enough to give members of the immigrant community an opportunity to adapt to the Canadian way of life, specifically with regard to language to which I have already referred. If people come to Canada and take Canada as the country of which they want to become citizens, we must ask ourselves what is the proper waiting time. I fully admit that whether it be five years or three years, it cannot be argued as an arbitrary time. I recognize that. I think we must consider what we are going to do in the three-year period or the five-year period, whatever the case may be, to make immigrants who are potential citizens feel at home and encourage them to make the contribution of which they are capable.

So often in our society we stress rights; we stress also the rights of immigrants, for instance, when they are being interviewed in the country of which they are citizens. When they come to Canada we also point out their rights. I believe we should stress more the obligations in a democratic society. Not only does this apply to immigrants but also to native born Canadians. I think there has been a glaring deficiency in that part of our educational program. We have not given enough thought, direction and thrust to the training of immigrants and our young people as to the obligations a democracy imposes.

I would like to point out that by the teaching of obligations we will not create negative reactions; I feel that this would do just the opposite. In order to create in our immigrants and our young people a love for Canada, regardless of the period of time we are considering, the minister, the government and Canadians generally should consider this matter seriously and work out a citizenship training period and citizenship courses which will create for all of us a commonalty as to what we think Canadian citizenship means and what its rights and obligations are.

I should like to point out that at the present time we are receiving a number of immigrants who come from countries which do not have strong democratic traditions. It would be for the benefit not only of Canadians but also of immigrants if we taught them not only language, economic adjustment and social adjustment, but also their obligations in their new country. For too long our public schools and citizenship courses have been lacking in this area. I am not preaching an extreme nationalism. I know that for many years Canadians have almost recoiled at the thought that we should try and push nationalism. I am not looking at this matter in terms of negative nationalism or blind allegiance but, rather, as something which should be done in a positive manner.

As we consider Bill C-20 I must be very frank and say that I have certain views on the five-year limit, but when I consider the statistics with regard to people who came before the committee, who wrote to the committee in letter form or prepared a brief, I find that Canadians are rather inconclusive as to whether it should be made five years or reduced to something less or, as the bill suggests, to three years. In respect of that issue I should like to read into the record how the committee thought Canadians generally viewed citizenship requirements and changes which might be possible. I read from page 53:49, paragraph 12 of the same report:

> Most persons expressing these concerns felt that government has lost control of the immigration flow. Submissions revealed a lack of public confidence in the ability of government to manage the size of immigration movements, the racial and ethnic composition of the Canadian population, and the settlement of newcomers in underpopulated regions and away from the large cities. The ability of Canadian communities to absorb newcomers, and the role of government in aiding immigrants in their initial settlement and integration, were also primary concerns.

Many people in Canada, as they viewed our immigration laws, made one point time after time. I do not have time to go into the statistics, but the point they stressed was that the reaction to immigration today—many briefs pointed this out—was largely spawned or largely due to the fact that people felt in many areas the government had lost, so to speak, the handle or control of immigration flows. For that purpose I should like to read from page 53:42 of the same report:

Many submissions received by the committee suggested that if Canada's record of successful multicultural adaptation is to be maintained, more attention must be given to the development of programs related to cross-cultural and inter-racial understanding . . . Should an assessment show a need for significantly expanded national, community and school programs to promote intercultural harmony, the committee believes—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has the floor. If other hon. members have anything to say, I wish they would wait.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: I will repeat:

Should an assessment show a need for significantly expanded national, community and school programs to promote intercultural harmony, the committee believes the federal government should explore with the provinces ways of encouraging and implementing such programs.

● (1520)

I believe we will only have to teach immigrant Canadians that this is a bilingual, bicultural country, but also that it is a multicultural country. These should not be empty words, either. The program should not be constantly threatened by cutbacks or, as is presently the case, by extinction. All we have to do in this regard is look at the testimony of the Canadian consultative committee which has said that the Minister of Labour who is responsible for multiculturalism has virtually abandoned his portfolio. Rather, we should look upon multiculturalism, and the contributions these Canadians can make, as a positive force.

I look forward to the committee hearings when the minister and his officials can outline the advantages of reducing the period of residency qualification from five years to three. If this is the time that is necessary for immigrants to adapt socially, economically and culturally, I should like to see it demonstrated and know what programs the minister has in mind to encourage the use of immigrant talents and abilities. One part of the bill which I cannot support in any way is clause 5 on page 4. I should like to read it into the record:

5. (1) The minister shall grant citizenship to any person who, not being a citizen makes application therefor and

Then follow the paragraph:

(b) (i) for every day during which he was resident in Canada before his lawful admission to Canada for permanent residence he shall be deemed to have accumulated one-half of a day of residence—

The way I understand that provision is this: it means that an alien—let us not even say "illegal immigrant", because I do not believe you can use the two words in the same context—who is here illegally for six years, under the terms of that clause can be given citizenship on the ground that he has fulfilled three years of the residency requirement. For every two days in Canada, one day is counted toward his residency qualification, so I read it the minister is saying that parliament will now make legal what to date has been illegal. This is preposterous, Mr. Speaker. I wish the minister could give us an assurance that this clause will be deleted from the bill. It certainly would improve it. I say that because I do not want to make legal something which is illegal.

All around the country immigration officers at private talks stressed time and time again that they needed manpower and sophisticated investigative devices to cope with the large, international movement of illegals. They stressed that the type of illegal they come in contact with often has international connections, sometimes criminal, particularly with drug trafficking on an international scale. They asked for the tools to do a good job either at the primary inspection line or the secondary inspection line.

The immigration program in the last few years has suffered because in the minds of Canadians the alien who enters Canada illegally has been equated with those who came legally and wanted to make a contribution to the country. As the clause stands, it gives the appearance that the minister is in favour of legalizing something that is presently illegal, and it forces members of the House to condone something that is wrong. It also erodes the confidence that we should have in our immigration officers and RCMP special officers who are concerned with these movements every day. For the life of me I cannot find any purpose in this clause.

In his speech, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) did not say why he felt clause 5 was necessary. We hear all kinds of estimates of the number of illegals in the United States and Canada, but I am sure no one knows exactly what the figures are. Canada is attractive and people want to make a home here, so it is natural that a number come this way. But surely the minister does not wish to see a clause in the bill which will erode the work presently being done by his officials. If he knows of some good reason why this clause should be included, I should like to hear it, but I think the bill would be enhanced if it were amended.

Another clause that I should like to deal with concerns the hearing before a judge of the citizenship court. The judge has no right to defer the application. Sometimes the judge may feel that the applicant is not ready for citizenship and that a review in six months' time would be in order. If the bill is passed as it stands, however, the judge must hear the case and within 60 days he must make a decision. If the application is denied, the applicant is informed of his right of appeal, and once that process is carried out that is the end of it. I feel that if a judge considers that a delay of six months or a year will help the person adjust to Canadian life, a delay should be granted.

Bill C-20 makes many positive contributions, but we must ask ourselves, first, if the change from five years to three years will ensure that people have truly become Canadians, are proud of Canadian life and will make a contribution to Canada. We must also ask if a person who has been in Canada illegally should be allowed to use 50 per cent of that time to go toward the residency qualification. I look forward to the committee hearings, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the minister can give us some positive reasons why the bill should be accepted by members of this House.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on May 21 last the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) gave this party's view of Bill C-20, saying that in general we approve of the changes embodied in it and we propose to support it on second reading. There are one or two observations that I should like to make, however. One of the reasons we approve of the bill is that it represents a step forward in establishing equal rights for women. In many respects the previous act was discriminatory. Under it, a person born outside Canada who had been lawfully admitted to this country and whose father or, in the case of a person born out of wedlock, whose mother was born in Canada was considered a natural born Canadian citizen.

Under the new act a person born outside Canada will be a Canadian citizen if either of his parents were Canadian citizens. There is no distinction between men and women in this respect. Under the old act there was provision for a father to apply for citizenship for a minor child, or for a mother to do it in the case of an illegitimate child. Under the new act each parent will have an equal right to apply.

Further, under the new act spouses will be treated equally when they apply for Canadian citizenship. That is to say, both men and women when applying will need to be 18 years of age or older and to have lived in Canada for at least three years. Under the old act the spouse of a Canadian citizen who had resided in Canada was entitled to apply for citizenship, I think after one year. Under section 10 of the new act any woman who has lost her citizenship by reason of marriage or the acquisition by her husband of foreign nationality may require citizenship by giving the minister notice in writing that she elects to be a citizen. There appears to be no such provisions in the old act.

Incidentally, at least two of the bill's provisions owe their existence to private members' bills put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). He, in turn, secured the ideas for these amendments from someone to whom I wish to pay tribute, Grace MacInnis, formerly a member of this House. My party has a long history of supporting equality for women, particularly in the important field of citizenship. One of the basic changes in the new act is that the age for application for citizenship is reduced from 21 years to 18 years. Most of us think that is a good idea. We grant citizens the right to vote at age 18 and there is no reason why non-citizens who otherwise qualify should wait until they are 21 before they can apply for citizenship.

I have already, by implication, referred to the reduction to three years of residence in Canada as a necessary qualification for citizenship. In the original act, five years residence was the qualification. In our view, three years residence in Canada is enough to determine if an applicant has adequate knowledge of Canada, of the responsibilities and privileges of citizens and of one of the official languages. These are still requisites or, at least, alternative requirements, for the granting of citizenship. If a person in a period of three years can satisfy the citizenship court, that should be enough. The ability to become established in Canada can surely be determined within a three-year period. Indeed, evidence and experience show that although most new immigrants may experience initial difficulties in adjusting to Canadian life, they can and do adjust very well within three years.

I am glad to note that the minister's power and discretion have on the whole been considerably reduced. Under section 10 of the old act it is provided that the minister may, in his discretion, grant a certificate of citizenship, etc. The bill now being debated provides that the minister shall grant citizenship and the matter is then referred to the citizenship court. This is a step away from arbitrary ministerial discretion to a judicial decision. I am sure the minister will be glad to have this burden taken off his shoulders.

I regret one thing: by virtue of section 18, the act continues to preserve an unfettered power to the governor in council to intervene and prevent any judicial hearing or appeal in a case in which the governor in council declares that the grant of citizenship would be prejudicial to the security of Canada or contrary to public order in Canada. I am not clear what the last phrase means. It is made clear that the exercise of this power is put beyond review by the citizenship court or, indeed, any other court. The declaration by the governor in council is stated to be conclusive.

It has been my experience that the worst cases of denial of citizenship fall within the category in which security reasons are put forward as grounds for refusing the grant of citizenship. In the past, at least, these so-called security reasons were sometimes based upon the failure of the police to distinguish between radical or left-wing opinions on the one hand and danger to the security of the state on the other. Sometimes they were even based on cases of mistaken identity. I do not believe that this power should be exercised without provision for appeal or any sort of review.

I appreciate that it has often been said that such absolute and arbitrary powers are required because security demands that the sources of information should not be disclosed. There is a way round this, as we discovered during the Second World War when many people of German, Italian and Japanese origin were interned, without reason given, on so-called security grounds. But the regulations were amended to provide for a tribunal composed of a judge of superior or county court rank to review these detention orders. No one was required to disclose publicly the sources of the information on which the detention was based. Some particulars were required to be given to the person detained by order in council. I never heard it suggested that this quasi-judicial type of hearing interfered in any way with the security and safety of the state.

On the other hand, many who were detained were ordered to be released and injustices due, no doubt, to overreaction and overzealous action on the part of those responsible for the internment were righted. Those people were released. I never heard of any harm coming from this process. Indeed, it represented an extension of justice and freedom in wartime when we were very sensitive about questions involving security. If that could be done in wartime, I see no reason for not doing it in peacetime. I suggest that those denied citizenship should be given the right to that sort of quasi-judicial inquiry. Sources of information could be kept secret. I suggest that we need some form of review to be undertaken by a judicial authority.

I am interested and pleased to note that the requirements for citizenship do not include the provision of the old act, that the applicant must be of good character. Instead, there seems to be substituted the necessity of showing an adequate knowledge of Canada, of the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship, and a "substantial knowledge of Canada." This is an improvement. Obviously, it is difficult to judge the good or bad character of would-be citizens, just as it is difficult to divide native born Canadians into sheep and goats. That must be left to a higher judgment. Yet the requirement for some knowledge of Canada and the privileges of citizenship is useful and reasonable. It is too bad it cannot be made retroactive and applied to all native born Canadians or to those who have the privilege of being citizens. However, I am comforted by the alternative provided, namely, a substantial connection with Canada. I find it unclear whether an adequate knowledge of Canada or of the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship is an alternative to the knowledge of languages. The clause as drafted appears in legal terms to be disjunctive, in other words, to make these alternatives.

● (1540)

One thing interests me. I see reference to the official status of a citizen of the Commonwealth provided for. The minister is not here at the moment. I do not know why not; he should be here. I would like to ask him some time, when he does deign to be present when his legislation is being considered, what is the significance, if any, of being a citizenship of the Commonwealth in Canada. Is this just a word, or does it mean something in actual status? However, taken all in all, this bill deserves our support, certainly at this second reading stage.

Canadian citizenship is of great importance. It is an essential element in our democratic system. It is a matter of special pride to those who have made their homes and plan to live their lives in Canada and are anxious to assume the responsibilities of full citizenship and exercise the full privileges of that status. It is important, therefore, that anomalies, arbitrary provisions and unnecessary obstructions to citizenship be removed. That is the direction of this bill and that is why we support it at this stage.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) for his analysis of the bill. He approached it in a manner that attempted to dissect the meaning behind some clauses contained in the bill that could in future be a possible source of surprise. It might be worthwhile to devote a couple of minutes to a brief explanation of the motives that lie behind the decision of a person to apply for Canadian citizenship. It may not be necessary for most members of this House, but it might be helpful to some on the other side who seem to waiver, as did the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), between the merits of the three-year residential requirement as opposed to the five-year requirement.

The moment a person decides to leave, cross the ocean and come to Canada, he has made a major decision. It means severing friendships, bonds and roots in the country of origin in order to emigrate to a far away land called Canada. The making of that decision is the beginning of a commitment of certain importance. The person arrives in Canada. He is struck by a variety of feelings and sensations, such as a great sense of space, freedom of movement, mobility and, of course, a great sense of opportunity is grasped by that person, depending upon his or her abilities. That experience upon arrival usually further cements the process of eventual full attachment to this country through the conventional process called acquiring Canadian citizenship.

I am sure some members of this House will share the view that becoming a Canadian citizen is a process which begins many years before in the life of such a person. It is finalized at a certain point of life in Canada when the immigrant comes to the conclusion that this is exactly what he wants to do about his future as a citizen of this country. Against this background, the decision in the homeland, the emotional experience upon arrival and in the years following, and the development of a profound attachment to and fondness for a country in which one did not happen to be born but has conscientiously chosen, the number of years to which the hon. member for Provencher attached so much importance becomes almost irrelevant. It is arbitrary whether it is five or three years.

This bill provides an open door for those who after three years are ready to become members of the Canadian family. In other words, for those who are ready, they can take this step relatively early in their phase of adjustment in Canada. They can simply come forward without having to wait five years. It could be after one, two, three or four years. We could debate this matter for a long time. The fact remains that you provide for a number of years that seems to be reasonably short for those who are ready, early, to take the step. As an example, I would refer to the Czechoslovakian refugees who came here in 1968. They asked for Canadian citizenship on the day they had been here five years. I suspect they would have done the same after three years, or four years. They were ready. They knew it. This was their future. This was their country. They came forward and asked for the Canadian citizenship. I really do not know what else can be said about this question of years. It must be understood against the background of the experience of the individual.

The experience of an individual also seems to have some relevance in the question of language and the question of knowledge. Before getting into that matter, however, I wish to refer back to the time this debate began on May 21 last. Some interventions by members opposite seemed to reflect a concern that under the proposed act British subjects could obtain citizenship after two years of residence. That impression is not supported by the bill. As I understand it, a British subject will have to be here five years just like everyone else.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) seemed to be under the impression that time spent in Canada under permit from the Minister of Manpower and Immigration could not be counted toward residence. It can be counted. As the hon. member for Provencher indicated earlier in his opposition to the clause, every day spent in Canada by a person who is not a landed immigrant counts as half a day.

Perhaps one might give this example to the hon. member for Provencher to convince him about the merits of this measure. If you have a person here on a minister's permit who is not a landed immigrant, it could be a mother aged 62 who came here as a tourist and who is in the process of being landed—sometimes it takes years—this person may be here for some time before she becomes officially landed. You have also people in other categories. It stands to reason that people in those categories should be given recognition for their residence in Canada. They are here not as landed immigrants, they are here only on a minister's permit, but they are exposed daily to the Canadian environment, to Canadian institutions and they breathe the Canadian air, so whether they are here as landed immigrants or on a minister's permit, surely something can be done to recognize this, in terms of the fact that they are here, if they wish to become Canadian citizens.

I think you can approach this bill from the viewpoint of one who counts hours and days and scrutinizes details, or from the point of view of interpreting Canadian citizenship as, of course, a great gift that is made available to anyone who comes forward and wishes it without really becoming involved in the calculation of half days or full days, or three years or four years. Citizenship is too important to be treated in that way. If it were to be treated in that way it could lead to the dangerous situation we have in some places like Montreal, where there are stagnant pockets of landed immigrants who are very slow in coming forward to request citizenship. This is not good for the country. It is not good for our society if a person who has been here for 10, 15 or 20 years has not, somehow, found the motivation or the channel for coming forward and applying. Something is not quite right there.

Before I am misunderstood, I should like to to stress this point. It is a great characteristic of Canadian citizenship that so far we have resisted the temptation to provide advantages in the law if a person becomes a citizen. In other words, we have kept Canadian citizenship pure, as a thing to be desired if you want to have it: we have not said a person will not be entitled to or will not be qualified for social security measures, or will not have access to certain services and to certain things in society that are desirable. We have resisted that temptation and treated landed immigrants and citizens virtually alike, with very few exceptions. This is why I take exception to the recommendation in the orange paper on immigration which says you would be entitled to sponsor your parents at an earlier age than at present allowed under the law—I believe it is 60—if you have become a Canadian citizen.

I would resent it very deeply if we were to implement that recommendation. A father is a father and a mother is a mother, and the desire on the part of children who are landed immigrants in Canada, who work to raise their children, who pay taxes, should be looked upon on the merits of that very close family relationship, regardless of whether or not the sponsor is a Canadian citizen. I think we have been doing very well over the years in not making such a distinction and we should keep up this fine record.

In this bill there is a provision in relation to knowledge. Perhaps the minister would like to have a look at it before he appears in the committee. In the bill it is said that the minister will have the power to waive the requirement for knowledge. I would consider that to be a poor practice if it were ever to become an administrative practice. It seems to me that the present way, whereby we require an applicant to memorize answers, to know the names of capitals, to know the name of the Governor General, when it comes to people who are in their fifties or in their sixties who have worked all their lives here, raised their children and sent them to school and done all their duties as citizens, is not reflective of an understanding of what citizenship really means from the viewpoint of the applicant.

It doesn't make sense to encourage people to memorize mechanically certain things. Surely an old lady who came from Europe 55 years ago and comes forward to apply for Canadian citizenship does so for deeply-felt reasons. If she should be judged at all, which I doubt, it should be in the form of a conversation between a judge and herself, a kind of preliminary welcome into the Canadian family, certainly not on the basis of whether she knows certain things which have to be learnt mechanically, which have nothing to do with the maturity of that individual nor with her sense of understanding of the country, because whether or not you know that the capital of Prince Edward Island is a certain city, which for the moment escapes me, has little to do with citizenship.

The hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) is prompting me to say that it is Charlottetown. Surely, whether you know the name of the longest river in Canada really has nothing to do with citizenship. But over the years I suppose it was necessary to develop some kind of measurement, particularly when you had a large number of applicants, to determine whether a particular applicant was ready or not. I would much prefer to see a system under which, instead of giving the minister power to waive the requirement for knowledge, which is just a bureaucratic invention, we held classes within a community.

First, we would find out from the viewpoint of the applicants what they would be interested in knowing about Canada. Having established that, and not having decided a priori what is of interest to them but what is of interest to applicants across the country, there would be a fairly uniform pattern. We could then offer courses, and having conducted a certain number of courses for these applicants in a certain way, they would be given a little piece of paper—called whatever you like—and with that piece of paper the applicant would demonstrate to the judge that he or she had taken a certain kind of course. I have in mind a course which would explain the economy of Canada, where our national resources are, where our industries are, what our historical relationship is with other countries, and a few other matters.

I am sure this would be a much more interesting and stimulating experience from the viewpoint of the applicant than having to know the names of capitals or the names of rivers. Therefore, I would say that knowledge of Canadian geography and knowledge of the official languages should not be stressed as a qualification, because we know they are very good citizens in the far north, in the Arctic region, who perhaps do not speak a word of English or French yet they are Canadian citizens. We have Indian people, also, who are not very fluent in either of the two official languages; nevertheless they are fine citizens of our country.

I was glad to learn that we are going to have a new oath of allegiance, to be called the "oath of citizenship", permitting the applicant to identify more with Canada as a country. It would be great if one day we had an oath drafted in simple language, language that everyone can understand with wording less complex and obscure than "fulfil", "heirs" and "allegiance". This would permit applicants to become even more aware of the great step in life they are taking in becoming citizens of Canada. It would give them a deeply felt attachment to and pride in this great country of ours.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) touched briefly on the powers given a citizenship judge to defer applications. My understanding is that a judge does not have these powers under the legislation; the power is given in a regulation that is rather obscurely worded and has been interpreted over the years as being power to defer. As opposed to that, this bill espouses the concept of the power of refusal on the part of the minister for a period of two years, and this will probably remove a certain area of discretionary decision-making on the part of judges. In other words, it is either refusal or not. I should like to defer debate on this subject for clarification to committee, where we can discuss the merits of the former approach and the one contained in the bill. Both need to be examined in greater depth.

Reference was made on the last occasion to the provisions contained in clause 33 and I should like to touch upon this briefly. A few weeks ago a report was tabled in the House by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) under the heading "Federal-Provincial Committee on Foreign Ownership of Land". The report deals with the question of citizenship in relation to land acquisition in Canada. For some time now many of us have been very concerned about foreign interests buying land in Canada, people who are neither Canadian citizens nor landed immigrants. This practice has caused great concern, as already demonstrated by legislation passed in P.E.I. It has also caused real hardship in terms of pushing up the price of land in some of our more densely populated areas, something that in times of inflation particularly commands our attention.

It seems to me that although Canada's territory is vast, we have come to the point where we have to decide whether foreign investors, no matter from which country, should be allowed to invest substantial funds to acquire land in Canada. In the end, this inevitably has the effect of increasing the price of this valuable commodity. The report on land ownership makes a recommendation that I would very much support on this rather delicate question. At page 42 the report is dealing with the acquisition of land and has this to say:

> This could be accomplished by an amendment to the Canadian Citizenship Act or some other enactment, providing that aliens could acquire land and interests therein subject to such conditions and terms, including complete prohibition, as might be imposed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province where the land is situated. Such conditions might be made subject to limitations such as the following, e.g., that they may not: restrict on the basis of citizenship acquisitions by bona fide landed immigrants intending to become citizens; conflict with Canada's international legal obligations; discriminate as between aliens on the basis of their different nationalities . . . ; hinder foreign states in acquiring property for diplomatic and consular purposes.

If this is a viable route to follow, it seems to me that we will require, either in this bill or in legislation to follow, a measure providing that the acquisition of land in Canada be permitted only in the case of Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. Another question we should ask ourselves is why some people do not take out Canadian citizenship. Surely the reason for this deserves examination. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has done extremely good work in recent years by opening up citizenship courts in places removed from the more structured high-rise type of office building in the downtown areas. In other words, he has tried to reach out into the community in offering this specific service.

I suggest we are at the point now where we must go even further. A citizenship judge should become an activist in the community. There are isolated pockets of landed immigrants where people should be Canadian citizens but are not. Judges could let them know where services are available and they could become active participants in the community, particularly in large cities where they could become more visibly involved in the life of the community.

In conclusion, there are other aspects of citizenship with which the bill does not deal. For example, citizenship begins when a person decides to become an immigrant and receives landed immigrant status. After his arrival in Canada, he becomes integrated with the community of his choice, he builds a future for himself and his family over the years, until he or she feels they are ready to take this final step. At the time of taking up citizenship, on that day that person comes out of the minority group to which he or she belongs: sometimes just for the evening, sometimes for the day, sometimes for the duration of the ceremony, sometimes for a month and sometimes even for good. Mostly we find this to be a person who moves comfortably and lives happily at ease in both communities, namely, the major Canadian community as well as the small community from which the citizen has come.

One fact is clear. That to become a Canadian citizen in the lifetime of a person is a conscious act; it is the will of that person, a great experience which reflects a deeply-felt love and attachment for the country. It is for this reason I shall conclude by saying that the measures contained in this legislation should be looked at against the background of the typical applicant who comes forward every day in our courts. He is to be judged accordingly.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak on this bill, which has caused me considerable difficulty. It gives me particular pleasure to follow, in the debate, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I think many of my colleagues share the feeling I have. It is easy for me to understand the judicial import of this legislation and the techniques and logistics involved, but being Canadian by birth it is impossible for me to share the emotion which I am sure must be felt by the hon. member for Davenport and those for whom Canada is their chosen country. I was very interested in what the hon. member for Davenport had to say and I shall comment on it during my remarks.

I was particularly interested when he said it should be the function of the government to reach out into the community. I believe the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) is calling this his out-reach program. I suggest it has not reached the area I represent and I rather suspect this is the case with respect to the majority of members of this House. I think I part company with the hon. member for Davenport when he says it should be the judiciary which does the work. I am more inclined to think it should be the citizenship branch.

Before coming to grips with the bill itself, may I say I have very grave reservations about the citizenship branch being part of the office of the Secretary of State. It seems to me the citizenship branch is so closely allied with immigration that to put it into two separate ministries makes no sense. I have a great advantage in my riding in having vitally interested and dedicated citizenship officers both in Kitchener and in London. No government officials have given me more co-operation than those two officials. While they have never told me so, I am aware of the difficulty they have through not being with the department with which they have the closest connection and that, obviously, is the Department of Manpower and Immigration. It is beyond me why we continue with this farce of having the citizenship branch under the Secretary of State.

In respect of Bill C-20, I hope later in my remarks to be a little more charitable, but at the outset may I say it is my opinion that this bill has been gathering dust in the citizenship branch for years and all through the twenty-ninth parliament. It is absolutely ridiculous that we are sitting here in the closing days of 1975 debating whether an 18-year old can apply for citizenship. It is absolutely unforgiveable.

Let me relate what has happened in my riding. There are two young men in my riding whose character, education and integrity are beyond question. One wishes to serve his country in the armed forces and the other wishes to serve his country in the RCMP. They were arbitrarily prevented from doing so because their father, for his own good reasons, did not wish to apply for Canadian citizenship. These young men, aged 18 and 19, who wanted to serve their country in the RCMP and the armed forces were arbitrarily excluded from so doing because the Secretary of State sat on this legislation for so long.

When we gave these people the right to vote and to enter into contracts, why did we not give them the right to citizenship? The Secretary of State in the twenty-ninth parliament when we had a minority government could have brought in this legislation to reduce the age to 18 and it would have been passed immediately, but he has sat on it for years. I am not the only one who has introduced a private member's bill to reduce the age. Members of this House from other parties have had similar legislation on the order paper which never has been accepted by the Secretary of State.

The bill received first reading in October, 1974. Seven months later we got around to having the second reading debate. Now, well along in 1975, we are just getting into the third day of debate on this very important piece of legislation. I hope the Secretary of State, as is his habit, will not stand up in this chamber and say that we have to rush this bill through, the way he did in respect of the legislation concerning Reader's Digest and Time magazine. There is no way I will be impressed with the need for haste in respect of a bill which for three or four years the Secretary of State has not been able to get the cabinet to act on in order to get the legislation before the House.

An hon. Member: Don't be political.

Mr. Jarvis: I will not be political about this bill. I intend to speak on it and I hope you will stand up and speak on it, too. With one qualification, I agree with the object of this bill as described by the minister. There are three objects. The minister wants a bill that will be equitable, he wants a bill that is logical, and he wants a bill that is liberal. Those were the three hallmarks in the speech he made in Calgary.

There has been one change. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Landers), speaking on behalf of the Secretary of State, agreed that it should be equitable and logical but suggested that the word "liberal" should be changed to "consistent". I am delighted. I compliment the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, because to me "liberal" and "consistent" were never synonymous. To achieve these three principles, the minister has rejected the principle of citizenship being a matter of ministerial discretion because—and I quote the minister—this permits the possibility of arbitrary exercise of authority without public or legislative sanction. Therefore, citizenship is to be a right rather than a discretionary act. There is a great deal to be said for this and I can see very great arguments on both sides.

This raises, for me, at least two basic questions. First, why are we always talking about rights rather than responsibilities? It seems to me that in this decade we have had an evasion in respect of coming to grips with responsibility to our fellow citizens and we have become preoccupied with our rights. We are so preoccupied at times that we ignore the fact that every right has a corresponding responsibility. When the minister talks about the right of citizenship, he would encourage me to join forces with him if he spent a little time talking about the responsibilities which flow from that particular right. In all fairness I should say that the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, in the speech I mentioned earlier, instead of referring to the right of citizenship referred to the qualified right. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster is getting closer to the kernel of truth than the minister in his Calgary speech or in his speech in the House.

● (1620)

The second question that this raises is that the bill retains positive ministerial discretion; in other words, the minister can award citizenship but he cannot withhold it. I have to ask this question: If negative ministerial discretion is to be deplored, why is positive ministerial discretion to be acclaimed? To me, this is inconsistent. If there is to be ministerial discretion, why must it only be to award citizenship rather than to withhold it? I hope we will hear from the minister or from a government spokesman in that regard. I would suggest that when this bill goes to committee we should be talking not just about the details of the bill but also about the philosophy behind it, because from reading the minister's speech, not only the one in the House but the one in Calgary, I conclude that he has never come to grips with the philosophical and emotional aspects of this legislation.

I should like to deal for a moment with the part of the bill which deals with British subjects because there is a major change in status there. Frankly, I am not so concerned about the change in status; my major concern has been—I can use no other words to describe it—the absolutely rotten job the government has done in getting information out to British subjects. There were changes some years ago in the Canada Elections Act, which became effective last June 25, under which British subjects were no longer allowed to vote in federal elections. I will not re-fight that battle because that is the law of the country. I raised questions in the House of Commons 2½ years ago and the minister was courteous enough to send me a letter referring to the campaign to inform British subjects of the change. He wrote:

> In the promotion campaign in the media which will accompany these new programs, provisions have been made to draw the attention of British subjects to their electoral rights and their relationship to the Citizenship Act.

I have never heard of this promotional campaign. I read five or six newspapers a day, and I have never seen one word coming from the Secretary of State advising British subjects of their change in status or their change in voting rights. Let me say what I did in my riding. I have quite a number of British subjects, although I have more of German descent. Nevertheless, I had a public forum in my riding in co-operation with the citizenship branch. I repeat, their co-operation was absolutely splendid. We informed these people of their status. I am told that there have been more applications for citizenship from British subjects in my riding than in any other riding in western Ontario. I say that not to take credit for it but simply to indicate that if the Secretary of State had done a proper job probably every riding in Canada would have had a proportionate number of applications for citizenship. The minister has failed miserably in his responsibility in this area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: This is not just to encourage British subjects or anyone else to apply for citizenship. I do not think we should be salesmen of citizenship. That is something that should come from within, from the heart of the person who has to make that decision. But let me point out that the minister has done nothing to indicate to British subjects that many of them are automatically Canadian citizens. For example, consider the war brides, those who came in the 1940s. Most people do not know that they are Canadian citizens by the operation of the law.

My colleagues may ask, what does it matter so long as they are citizens? It matters when they come to vote or when they apply for a passport. All of us have been faced with the deadline when our passport application has been refused because of lack of proof of citizenship. It certainly matters there. It also matters at the border if you do not have that proof of citizenship. It seems to me that if the Secretary of State intended to honour what I thought was an undertaking in his letter to me of July 17, 1973, he has done a horrible job of it.

My final comment with respect to British subjects is that the new bill makes us citizens of the Commonwealth. I do not know what it is, and I am most anxious to find out. I think it would be interesting to hear and I hope that someone on the government side will address himself to that question during the debate.

With respect to the removal of judicial discretion and the right to citizenship, the hon. member for Davenport or the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) welcomed the removal of the criterion that an applicant be of good character. I quote as follows from the minister's Calgary speech where he said the following:

> —I think that citizenship judges have interpreted the phrase with responsibility and good sense. But here, as in the case of the discretionary powers of the minister that I discussed earlier, the application of the requirement was necessarily an arbitrary thing. It seemed to us that instead of that nebulous phrase, specific criteria should be set down which could be invoked without fear of abuse.
> Under the new bill, certain sections of the Criminal Code and the Narcotics Control Act provide these necessary guidelines. About these guidelines there can be no dispute. After all, a person either has done certain things or he has not; he is certain things or he is not. The removal of the words "good character" is, in our opinion, an important step in the direction away from arbitrary law.

What concerns me is that there has been no indication that I have heard or read in the minister's speech that complaints have been received that citizenship judges have acted arbitrarily. I may be blessed with a rather outstanding one in my riding, covering generally the London area. Frankly, he is a vital person in our community and I welcome his visits to my riding. All hon. members who are served by His Honour Judge Calder welcome him in their ridings. I wonder what has prompted the deletion of these words. I realize they are very general in nature, but what concerns me about the criteria now is the provision that the applicant must have an adequate knowledge of Canada and of the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship.

He may have that knowledge and he also may be the greatest abuser of his rights and responsibilities that ever came before a judge. Yet the judge has no discretion but has to grant him citizenship so long as he has followed the mechanical processes laid down in Bill C-20. The judge is simply following certain criteria. On the other hand, the minister retains discretion to award citizenship. I find this terribly inconsistent. If I had my choice, I would prefer judicial discretion to ministerial discretion. With respect to ministerial discretion, I would like to know the use to which that discretion was put under the old act in exceptional circumstances, and I hope we can get some of that information in committee.

In the new act, where the right to citizenship is emphasized, I notice that the minister is given the right to grant citizenship under a number of clauses, but the minister has the discretion to waive at least two requirements which are rather important. First, the requirement that the applicant has adequate knowledge of one of Canada's official languages; and second, which is perhaps more important, the requirement that the applicant has adequate knowledge of Canada and of the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship. It seems to me that to leave that tremendous power in the minister's hands is dangerous. Finally, the governor in council may order the minister to grant citizenship and the minister shall forthwith grant citizenship to the person named, even though that person has not fulfilled one of the several requirements in the act. So we have a one-way street: we have all this ministerial and governor in council discretion, but we do not have the opposite where the granting of citizenship can be arbitrarily refused.

● (1630)

There has been some difficulty with regard to illegal immigrants. The new legislation says that in order to accumulate his three years of residency an immigrant receives one-half day's credit for every day he was resident in Canada before his lawful admission. I point out to the hon. member for Davenport that that does not mean a person who is here on a student visa or something of that nature. I think the hon. member for Davenport was sidetracked in his speech a few minutes ago in that regard. The present legislation says that each full year of residence in Canada by the applicant before his lawful admission is deemed to be a half-year's credit toward his five-year residency requirement.

This raises certain questions which I hope the minister will have an opportunity to answer. First, why the change from years to days as a measurement? Basically, that is what we are doing. I do not believe the minister dealt with this question either in Calgary or last May on second reading. Second, I serve notice on the minister that I will want to know in great detail what use the department has made, under the present legislation, of granting the 50 per cent residency credit for unlawful immigrants. We have never come to grips with that in the chamber, and I for one in committee or at the close of this debate would certainly like a substantial amount of detail as to how that has been applied in the department under the present legislation.

With respect to the five-year rule and the proposed three-year rule, I have checked the history of citizenship legislation which is found in the two-volume work by Mr. Clive Parry, entitled "Nationality and Citizenship Laws of the Commonwealth and Ireland", and I am no clearer now than I was before I checked that unquestioned authority. I go back to the Upper Canada Act, which was the first Canadian statute, and there was an oath of allegiance to be taken within three years. Then it went to seven years, then to five years. Provincial statutes were generally seven years and five years. There was one three-year requirement in British Columbia. The Dominion Act of 1868 repealed provincial legislation, and there was a three-year requirement and after 1880 it became a five-year requirement.

From 1914 to 1946 we were unable to control the law of nationality or naturalization, so we did so by immigration restrictions. The Canadian Citizenship Act of 1946 had a five-year rule and British subjects did not have to go to court. There were amendments in 1967 and 1968. As I say, the history was of no help to me. I hope that in committee we will be able to come to grips with that matter and receive some information from those who know best. I want to hear many witnesses, frankly, from ethnic and other groups. I have heard various opinions from various people, but I am not satisfied.

The period of residency is an arbitrary thing; I realize that. I do not know why we are changing it now. Maybe there is a good reason; I simply have not heard it yet. I hope the committee hearings will give very wide scope to groups who want to appear, and that we will not have to limit witnesses as we did in the Time-Reader's Digest committee hearings. It is the same committee, but it is a good, hard working committee and we will be willing to listen to people who want to participate in the discussion of this topic. In addition to the five and three-year rule, I want to hear them talk about the philosophy of citizenship, whether it should be a right, a privilege or a discretionary matter.

With regard to equal treatment for men and women, all I can say is that that was recommended five years ago by the royal commission. This is a pretty good indication of the general track record of this department in getting legislation in front of us. I have no quarrel with this legislation in so far as the equality of status between men and women is concerned, but I deplore the length of time it has taken. The old act could have been amended very simply and quickly and I simply cannot understand why that was not done.

I have heard suggestions about retroactivity with regard to citizenship, which the minister has resisted; it is not in the legislation. For example, it has been suggested that children born abroad to Canadian mothers and alien fathers be proclaimed citizens retroactively. My first reaction is to agree with the minister in resisting that type of suggestion, but I want to hear evidence from groups advocating this, because there may be some very good reason of which I or my colleagues are not aware, and perhaps we might be persuaded that this is a more equitable approach to the new citizenship legislation.

In summary, the minister wants legislation which is equitable and logical. He originally wanted legislation that was "liberal," but that is now changed to "consistent" and I applaud that change. With regard to equity, I hope the bill is more equitable than this government has been to 18, 19 and 20-year olds for the last few years, and with regard to equality between men and women. With regard to logic, I have to ask myself whether it is logical to eliminate judicial discretion and replace it with one-way ministerial discretion. Someone will have to do a lot of persuading to convince me that that is more logical. With regard to consistency, I have to ask whether it is consistent to say, on one hand, "You have the right to citizenship", and on the other hand to say, "Even if you fail every single criterion for citizenship, the governor in council may order the granting of citizenship".

I am anxious to discuss these three tests with which the minister has challenged us. Again, I deplore the length of time this legislation has taken and the harsh treatment many of our citizens have received from a complacent Secretary of State. Parts of this legislation should have been introduced at least four or five years ago. There was absolutely no reason for not doing so. I will welcome the legislation in committee and hope it will be given the treatment it deserves, not a ramrodding through, which has been the case with certain other legislation.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the late hour I do not particularly want to use an undue amount of the time of the House, but I should like to make just a couple of points. Like the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the principal reason I want to speak is that we know the problems in the Citizenship Act. They are closely allied to immigration problems. Having listened to the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis), it is quite obvious that they do not understand the problems which promoted the changes in this bill because they do not have large, new Canadian populations in their constituencies.

Mr. Jarvis: I have 5,000 Germans.

Mr. Collenette: The hon. member has 5,000 Germans. I do not particularly want to bore the House with a list of the groups I have, because it would take too much time. However, in the urban centres we do know what these problems are and we support this bill wholeheartedly. I do not want to go into the aspects referred to by the hon. member for Greenwood. He made some very good points about the reduction of the age limit from 21 to 18. Also, naturally, all Liberal members would agree that the clause regarding equal status for women and men as to parentage of minor children is quite acceptable in this International Women's Year, as well as being equitable.

I should like to deal with the clause the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot touched upon. There does not seem to be very much disagreement with regard to this clause, which deals with British subjects and requires them to be examined by a citizenship court judge and to take an oath of allegiance. In addition to the large number of new Canadians in my constituency, there are very many old-time residents who have come from the British Isles, and some of their attitudes really baffle me. In the general election many of them surprised me by their reluctance to take out Canadian citizenship. The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot referred to changes in the Canada Elections Act. There seems to be a myth that British people—I was born over there myself—lose some indefinable rights by taking out Canadian citizenship even though they live and work in Canada most of their lives.

Mr. Speaker, I have constituents who arrived here as children at the turn of the century and they still have not taken out citizenship. I agree that this is a deplorable state of affairs. As members of parliament, we must take steps to help these people realize that by taking Canadian citizenship they will not lose any other rights. In fact, I believe that the United Kingdom Citizenship Act of 1949 made provision for all those born in the United Kingdom to retain their rights as citizens of that country. When I was back there working a couple of years ago, I had the same rights as everyone else for health insurance, unemployment insurance and that sort of thing. This is one of the essential points that I should like to bring out.

Members of the official opposition cast aspersions on this party as being againsts the British connection, but many of us were born there and many of us were elected in constituencies where large numbers of the people came from Britain. British citizens should be aware that they are not in danger of losing their rights, but they should realize that Canada and the world have changed since the days of the old empire when British citizens did not have to submit to the same requirements as all other potential citizens. We must wipe out all the inequities in the law, Mr. Speaker, so I am particularly supportive of this aspect of the bill.

[Mr. Collenette.]

I should like now to refer to the three-year requirement for citizenship, although most of the points were covered by my colleague, the hon. member for Davenport. I was surprised at the attitude of the hon. member for Provencher when he spoke of this Canadianization program that he seemed to propose. If you ask applicants in Canadian immigration offices abroad why they want to come to this country, you will find that they know about the rights Canadians have, about free speech and tolerance. It really does not matter how many provincial capitals they know, or how many politicians' names they know. I am sure that even those who do not have a great command of the Englsih language would be able to tell what it means to be a Canadian citizen if they were interviewed in their own language.

The hon. member for Provencher asked why the qualification period should be reduced to three years. I ask why should it not? Surely it would promote a greater interest in and a feeling of belonging to this country. The hon. member for Provencher dealt with clause 5(1)(b) which provides that for every day during which a person was resident in Canada before his lawful admission for permanent residence, he should be deemed to have accumulated one-half day of residence. He spoke about sanctions for those who have been here illegally. But what about people on minister's permits, for instance? I will not go through all the categories, but there are epileptics, the retarded and even homosexuals. The hon. member criticized this aspect of the bill, yet he was a member of the committee studying the green paper which proposed changes to the immigration law to give these people landed immigrant status. Why should we continue to penalize deserving people because of an anachronism in another law which we all agree should be changed?

These are the points I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. I want everyone in the House to know that those of us who represent constituencies with large, new Canadian populations wholeheartedly welcome the measures contained in the bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, puruant to Standing Order, 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—External Affairs—Inquiry as to justification for proposed increase in price of passports; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian National Railways—Suggested relocation of proposed piggyback terminal in Winnipeg.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CONDITIONS AND PROVISIONS GOVERNING CITIZENSHIP

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner that Bill C-20, respecting citizenship, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to bring some historic perspective to this debate which concerns the most important privilege a nation can grant, the privilege of citizenship. I should like members to cast their minds back to the occasion in 1897 when the then prime minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, went to Great Britain for a jubilee celebration. An important theme underlay the celebrations and much of the discussion concerned the suggestion that the empire should become a formalized entity that would have an additional parliament on top of the two levels that already existed. There would be provinces, nations, and then the imperial parliament.

The idea was put forward very seriously by Sir Joseph Chamberlain, and at one point it appeared as if the Canadian prime minister approved but then he lost his apparent enthusiasm. In his biography of Laurier, Joseph Schull writes that when it came to discussing the proposal for an imperial parliament overriding the authority of all dominion parliaments, Sir Wilfrid treated the project with a cool vagueness that was damaging. He admitted the idea was an old one and impressive; he was stirred by it and asked some important questions. What exactly would he do there? Whom would he represent? How would he vote, and so on? From that position came the decision that produced the independent Canada that we know now. In the school texts of this country, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is treated as one of the great heroes who established a process which at that time was very important. He is given enormous credit for being one of the fathers of the country as we know it now.

I would like to suggest that what was set in motion then should be taken seriously now, although things might not have turned out exactly the way Laurier anticipated them. Now we find ourselves a nation in a sort of splendid isolation. The Commonwealth, as the kind of political entity it once was, is gone and we cannot attach ourselves closely to the United States because of the surge of nationalism in this country. Their system of government is fundamentally different from the British parliamentary tradition that we inherited.

● (1650)

We cannot attach ourselves easily to the countries of the far Pacific rim because there are language and other difficulties. We are not part of the developing united Europe. I am sure if the ghosts of Chamberlain and Laurier could observe what is happening in the world, they would watch with keenest interest the possibility—in fact, it is far more than a possibility—of the establishment of a three-tiered parliamentary system in Europe, which will ultimately fulfil the concept that was to have linked Canada, the empire and Britain. We may see this system tested one day; we may see if democracy can function on three levels, on three tiers. We have known for many years that under a federal system it can function on two levels.

Our isolation is important. There were set in motion long ago developments which made us singularly Canadian. For that reason, I find much in the bill before us to be a contradiction of those processes set in motion long ago by the leader of the party which now forms this country's government. Parts of this bill I hail. Certainly, I welcome the right for citizenship to devolve through the female line as well as the male and do not question it for a moment. I welcome the right to be given to women who years after their marriage may have found that they had sacrificed their citizenship even though they were born in this country. Now they may elect to receive their citizenship. I have no hesitation in hailing that development.

I speak as one who, as a member of an earlier parliament, saw the shattering effect of the law on a woman who learned that although she was born in this country she had lost her citizenship unwittingly years ago and could not obtain a Canadian passport. I welcome the provision for such people to gain their citizenship if they give notice in writing. I cannot understand why the same privilege is not offered to those British subjects who have already been referred to. I will return to this topic as it is important.

I am concerned about reducing the waiting period for citizenship from five years to three years and wish to talk on this subject as one who has been close to the experience of immigrants, although I was born in this country. My mother's people came from Sweden, and when I was in high school I looked after my aging grandfather. It was during the war, when domestic help of any kind was extremely difficult to get, and I learned a great deal from my grandfather, as he rambled on during those long evenings, about what it meant for him to leave his native Sweden and come to North America, first to the United States and then to Canada, specifically British Columbia.

I married the daughter of immigrants of a different race, and therefore am aware of criticisms levelled all too easily and callously at people who question the important feature of this bill to which I am now addressing my remarks. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, at no time have I or my wife ever felt that we faced any kind of discrimination or prejudice since our marriage in this country. We have cast our minds back but cannot recall a single incident which would be a blemish on the tolerance of Canadians. But we know first-hand, of course what was done in wartime to her people and to herself. We have travelled together extensively. We returned to both our ancestral homelands, spent some time in Sweden and some time in Japan. Strangely enough, we only encountered discriminatory expressions during our first two visits to Japan. Perhaps the unhappy wartime experience of the Japanese is grounds for excuse.

I found it interesting to return to Sweden, the land of my grandparents, and to be obliged to make my way in Swedish, a language I had not learned previously, as the people with whom we stayed, relatives of my mother's, knew no English. That experience, more than any other, impressed on me what it means for an immigrant to leave his native country and come to Canada, not for a holiday but for a new way of life. We holidayed in Sweden. That was an interesting but difficult experience. When it came time to leave, I thought what it would mean to me if I had to stay there and make my way and earn a living in that language. The contemplation of what I should face left me breathless when I thought of the courage of those who emigrated to this land.

One thing I do know, Mr. Speaker: if I had decided to stay there, I should not have made any demands on the Swedish government; I should not have asked it to take care of me. Staying would have been my decision, my responsibility, and I should have had to adapt my life to what I found there. I suspect that I could, just possibly, have fitted into the Swedish scheme of things and it might have been possible for me to make a decision to stay. I know that such a decision would have been far more difficult in Japan because the process whereby a person from another country becomes a citizen of that crowded island is difficult and rare indeed.

No one that I know has ever criticized the Japanese for this, because their land has long been the byword for a crowded land. We, too, are becoming a crowded country. Things in this land have changed, too, and what used to be regarded as wide open spaces, are not wide open any more. We hear this theme all the time from ecologists, naturalists and others and learn that many of our so-called vast, empty spaces are virtually incapable of supporting human life. We also hear it from demands of native peoples who increasingly ask for vast sections of this country to be set aside for them. Therefore, we should no longer look on the vast spaces of Canada as empty places to be filled by all who want to come here. Indeed, as someone said earlier, conditions have changed in ways not easily understood.

Clearly, we must consider carefully the move to a residency requirement of three years rather than the previous one of five years. Incidentally, I wish to make it understood that the purpose of my preamble was to remove any suggestion of racism or of ethnic discrimination in the comments I am making. I say this bearing in mind this country's form of democracy. As I said about ten years ago in this House, I consider our democracy to be a plant of tender growth. I know that an hon. member who is now a colleague in this party, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), said that he considered it a sturdy plant. I suspect that in the years which have passed he has come to appreciate that our specimen of democracy is much rarer and of much more tender growth, than he suspected.

What disturbs me most about this change to three years' residency as proposed in the bill is this: the time span is less than the life of a parliament, which can extend to five years. It is less than the customary four-year of a majority parliament. If this bill is passed, many immigrants will be eligible to vote in the first election of which they have experience in this country. There are some who say that three years is ample time to learn all about this country. I, however, have my doubts. During the last election campaign, a candidate in my constituency adopted a very shotgun approach to electioneering. He made a vast number of charges of all kinds. One could pay very little attention to any of them. One charge that he made was that the government of this land was influencing elections through its immigration policy. The charge was ridiculous. Immigrants had to wait five years before becoming citizens. He did not seem to know that Bill C-20 was in the works.

But if this bill is passed, any government that follows in this land can be open to the charge that it influences elections through its immigration policy. It will be easy to open the doors immediately after one election and to make voting citizens before the next. It cannot be done now. Of all aspects of the bill, that should be given the most careful consideration by those who are proposing it.

In spite of anything the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) may have said, all the calculations were made on that side. This bill has been calculated, and calculated carefully. It should be delayed until legislation follows on the immigration recommendations made by the standing committee on immigration. We are being hasty in bringing forward this bill at this time when the committee which laboured long and travelled far made a report but we do not yet know what the government is going to do with it.

From that report comes some very interesting statistics and suggestions. One such statistic is that in 1974, Canadian immigration offices received over 750,000 inquiries regarding the possibility of immigrating to Canada in 1974. I suspect that when some of those people made their initial inquiry, they did not know that this land had a five-year waiting period. However, I suspect that the vast majority did know. I further suspect that the five-year waiting period would not slow anyone. Obviously, it did not. One can almost be categorical about this. In spite of the waiting period, they made an inquiry about coming to this land.

I cannot understand, when the pressure at the gates is so great and when population of this country is exercised about the immigration policy to the extent that it is—to the extent that it was not only necessary to have the green paper, but for the select committee to travel; and as we all know, the travels were rather riotous—why should we reduce the time. It is not an acceptable business practice to hold a fire sale when the demand is rising—40 per cent off in this particular case. There are very few countries in the world who are accepting immigrants at the present time. The pressure is enormous.

I am constantly amazed at the ingenuity of people attempting to reach this land and obtain a foothold here. One must have every sympathy with them. Of course, the motivation is twofold. It is economic opportunity, but surely it is also political freedom. We must be very concerned about the heritage of political freedom that we have. As I electioneered, as I am sure most people do, I talked to many peoples. I found that far too often this is held too lightly by Canadians. Far too many people press upon us a wish for a benevolent dictatorship. Too few people understand what is involved in the principle of a responsible government, or in the constitutional monarchy, the best guarantee of political freedom ever invented.

When I am not here, I teach social studies. I work with people at the end of secondary school. I am shaken, as many other people have been shaken, by their total lack of knowledge on this subject. What really shook me was to receive, a few months ago, a rather well put-together pamphlet from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce about Canadian government. I read it with shock, dismay and disbelief. The person who had written it, the proofreaders who read it, and everyone who helped and paid to put it together, had no concept of responsible government as it is technically understood in this parliament and the provincial parliaments of this land.

Three years is not long enough to make your way in a strange country, to learn a new language and to fight the economic struggle that is always there. It is not long enough to learn how the electoral process works and see what kind of government this land has. There is not even the possibility of sitting back and watching one election. Three years is not long enough to do all those things. The numbers are arbitrary at best, I will agree, but it is important for us to choose five years instead of three.

[Translation]

I doubt that the hon. members from Quebec can vote in favour of this bill: what is five years compared with the glorious history of "la belle province" and the three centuries since Champlain, since the start of the colony?

[English]

Citizenship is not for the moment. It is for children and children's children. We who are here hold a trust for the people who are coming. Sometimes I think we should hold it more firmly for their sake as well as our own. The hon. member for Davenport talked about the reluctant applicant for citizenship. I cannot, personally, become exercised about those people. I know there are many. It is the contradiction to the argument presented by those who advocate haste that there are those who take a very, very leisurely approach to citizenship. For whatever reason, I think perhaps one should respect that leisurely approach. I do not think they need to be hunted down or sought out so avidly, because their decision is their own and it is different from what has happened to the British subject who came to this country perhaps as many decades ago, almost, as the conference I mentioned at the beginning of this speech, and who was assured in coming and very often given solemn promises by the development companies which brought these people out, that they would never have to change citizenship and that the British subject status would go on forever.

There are many people who came to this country who were as sure of that as they are of anything. So if any member of this chamber finds elderly British subjects upset at the news they cannot get a passport until they show proof, or they cannot vote until they show proof if challenged at the poll, I think they have good reason to be upset and I entirely agree with the hon. member who suggested that the way should be clear for them and a search should be made for them because they have something to lose. I know officials of the department tell me this is falacious and it is not so. But I know that these people, when they are up against the passport application and they have to obtain that other piece of paper, no matter how automatic you make the return of that piece of paper, the mere fact they have to go through the process when they were confident it would never happen is an issue which must be taken seriously by the minister and by the government.

For the reluctant immigrant, I do not believe it is all that wrong to wait. I know how fond memories of immigrants can be and I know how they cling to the sense of homeland and how long it takes to give what Frost, an American writer, calls, "the gift outright." In fact, in Canada we have never really demanded "the gift outright" from a lot of people. It takes a long time, and I think the wishes of individuals should be respected. But they are not going to be, I suspect, because when we read the report on immigration alongside this bill there is another factor there which frankly dismays me. It is on page 534, section 135. The Immigration Act provides that Canadian domicile is acquired by a person having a place of residence in Canada for five years after having been admitted as a landed immigrant.

The significance of domicile is related to deportation. Landed immigrants without domicile are liable to deportation on a number of grounds, including commission of a criminal offence, illegal entry, and so on. Most immigrants, with domicile or not, are of course landed immigrants and they have reason to be disturbed by the proposal that the concept of domicile be deleted from the Immigration Act. Put that together with the move from five years to three and you have virtually eliminated the choice that all these citizenship candidates have had until now, and you make it almost certain that every immigrant would have to apply for citizenship at the end of three years whether he felt ready or not. He could not run the risk of losing the protection he now has from the domicile provision.

That is why the bill is hasty and why we ought not to act in haste. We ought to have in place, and pass as the law of the land, the new Immigration Act. Then, and only then, can we look at the proposals which are being presented to us now on citizenship, I would like to think that my opponent in the last election campaign was wrong on every issue, but the more I think about the implications of this bill, about the implications for the political future of this country, and as we broaden the scope of lands from which we accept immigrants until it is virtually worldwide, we at the same time increase the percentage who do not have a background in democracy. What is involved here is far too important to rush through before Christmas, after the delays we know have gone on already. It is far too important to proceed with at all until we know what the law on immigration will be.

One final word, and that concerns the clause which deals with Commonwealth citizenship. I am seriously disturbed about that clause. I have travelled widely around this world and I have crossed Commonwealth countries, India, Singapore, Hong Kong—not independent yet, I know, and maybe it never will be. I know that people in those lands attach great importance to the written word and I know the importance they are going to attach to the section on Commonwealth citizenship. As I read the bill, maybe I should not be worried at all because it suggests that the rights of Commonwealth citizens will be the same as those of the British subject.

However, I do ask seriously: What rights does a British subject have in this land that anyone else does not have? If it is to mean nothing more than that, it should not be in the bill at all. I plead with the minister not to do anything so cruel to the people who will read that clause and feel they have a claim on this land, unless he truly means that Commonwealth citizens have the sort of thing that Sir Joseph Chamberlain had in mind so long ago and which Sir Wilfrid Laurier rejected. It is essential that we, in 1975, live with and accept the decisions which were made at that imperial conference and subsequently.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, after a while I thought we were having Toronto day with regard to the citizenship bill. We had the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), and now myself. Also, I am sure that before the debate is over we shall hear from the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). We in Toronto have a special experience with regard to immigration and citizenship.

An hon. Member: We don't hold that against you.

Mr. Gilbert: I notice that the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) is making one of his friendly interjections and I am going to give him a little history. Broadview was represented from 1951 to about 1962 by the present member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees).

● (1720)

Mr. Ellis: Best representation they ever had.

Mr. Gilbert: Well, that is a very debatable point. Let me tell the hon. member that during that time the composition of the riding was 95 per cent to 98 per cent Anglo-Saxon. However, in the last 10 to 12 years there has been a dramatic change in composition. The Anglo-Saxon content is between 40 per cent and 45 per cent; then there are the Greeks and Macedonians, the Chinese, the Italians, people from the Caribbean and other groups from central Europe such as Germans, Latvians, Portuguese, and so on.

Mr. Ellis: You cannot blame George for that.

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member says, "You cannot blame George for that", and probably you cannot. But it would be rather interesting if George came back and ran in Broadview, competing against a little Irishman. Big George against Little John would be quite a competition and there would be a tremendous debate. Toronto has become a global village of nationalities and races from across the world. The result has been a richer and better city culturally, linguistically and in many other ways. Having travelled across the country, I have found major cities with a comparative fusion of different nationalities and races which are richer for the experience. Even during my short travels with the immigration committee to the maritimes, I noticed many people from different countries and of different races living there and making their contribution.

I think all Toronto members who have spoken on this bill have been in favour of it, and they have welcomed removal of some of the inequities and anomalies that exist in the present legislation. This legislation was first passed in 1947 and from then on to the present day there have been 61 amendments. The legislation has been cursed, criticized, battered, bruised and kicked at by many people who have had difficulty applying its provisions. Since 1947, times have changed and this is why there still remain anomalies and inequities in the act.

This is why we in the New Democratic Party welcome some of the changes proposed in this bill. There are four main changes. Firstly, the period of residence required prior to an application for Canadian citizenship will be reduced from five years to three years. Secondly, the age of majority for applying for Canadian citizenship is reduced from 21 years to 18 years. Thirdly, men and women will be treated equally. Fourthly, citizenship now becomes a matter of right, not a matter of privilege upon fulfilment of specified conditions.

I have heard my Tory friends speaking of this reduction from five years to three years in applying for citizenship. I do not mind criticism of the bill, but I do like constructive criticism and constructive solutions, which is what I have not heard from them so far. This disappoints me. The main thrust of their argument is that when the bill gets to committee, they will question the minister about why he has reduced the waiting period from five years to three. I do not think that is enough. As one member of the Conservative party has already said, he himself had a bill on the order paper reducing the waiting period from five years to three. In the NDP, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) also had a bill reducing the waiting period from five years to three. There is a consensus that this step be taken. The reason is that people who come to Canada have to pay taxes—income tax, sales tax, municipal tax, and so on—so within a very short time they should have the full rights, obligations and privileges of a Canadian citizen.

So far as the program to encourage citizenship is concerned, many people who come to Canada from other countries have difficulty in applying for citizenship, and I understand this. Having had roots in some other country, it takes a period of time before they can adjust to the Canadian way of life and master one of the two official languages, French or English. It takes them a while to settle down and to get over the cultural shock.

I recall a neighbour of mine who came to Canada from Scotland. He is chief plumber at the Royal York hotel and has been here 27 years but has still not applied for Canadian citizenship. He says the reason is that he has his roots in Scotland and so is rather hesitant about applying. I am positive that he does not know that under the British law as it now stands he can still retain his status of British subject if he ever returns to live in the U.K. So he and people like him need have no fear about that. He has made a tremendous contribution to this country and will continue to do so.

The reduction in age from 21 years to 18 is following a trend today. It is consistent with changes made in other areas, such as the reduction in voting age, property rights and contracts. The best way to make people mature is to give them rights and obligations. Reduction of the age to 18 will, I think, make them mature much quicker and accept responsibilities much faster. I am delighted to see that men and women are to be treated equally. This is really a victory for women. I am sure some of us, including yourself, Mr. Speaker, are reminded of the tremendous efforts that Grace MacInnis of our party made regarding the achievement of equality of condition for women across Canada. It is a credit to her and to many other fine women across Canada that this provision is in the bill. Certainly there are inequities in this respect in the present act.

Henceforth, all applicants for Canadian citizenship will be required to meet the three years' residency qualification without regard to marital connection with a citizen. That is an important change. In addition, children born abroad will derive citizenship from either parent, and either parent will be able to apply for citizenship on behalf of a minor child. Women who lost their Canadian citizenship through marriage to an alien prior to 1947 will now be able to recover it automatically upon notice to the minister. During the last war many young Canadian women married men from other countries and automatically lost their citizenship. The present provision is a step in the right direction.

The bill also establishes citizenship judges. Under the new act, British subjects will no longer be exempt from the requirement to be examined by a citizenship judge or from attending a citizenship ceremony. They will also be required to take the oath of allegiance. When I read that, I had mixed feelings about it, quite frankly. I come from an Anglo-Saxon family and I thought that we should have special rights and privileges. But when I applied that thinking to my own constituency, which is really a global village of many nationalities and races, I saw no reason why I, as a British subject, should have any special privilege that other people living in the community do not have.

● (1730)

In fact I am rather proud of the young people in my community who at school rub shoulders with Greek children, Italian children, children from the West Indies, and Chinese children. I think they are much better students because of that experience. In fact they rub shoulders with people from all over the world. This enriches and matures them. I do not know why I as a British subject should have a special privilege beyond what others have. This is neither fair nor equitable. Therefore I welcome the change being made by the minister.

Some of my Anglo-Saxon friends in my riding, who I hope vote for me, may be a little disturbed about my position in this regard. I may say I have adopted this position because of my experience in the riding rubbing shoulders with so many people. I feel richer because of that experience. I am sure that this is a step in the right direction. When I read that citizenship becomes a right and not a privilege upon the fulfilment of certain conditions, I think this is the proper course.

If a person fulfills the residence rule, if he has an adequate knowledge of one of the official languages of Canada, and if he has an adequate knowledge of Canada and the responsibilities and privileges of citizenship and is not subject to a deportation order, he should be entitled to Canadian citizenship. I notice also that the minister has the right on compassionate grounds to waive some of the requirements in cases of special and unusual hardship. Many parents of landed immigrants have difficulty mastering the language and in meeting some of the problems they face. Yet at the same time they want to become Canadian citizens because they have a certain pride in being a resident in this country. I do not think they should be held back because of the problem they have. I am rather happy to see that the minister has this particular discretion in respect of Canadian citizenship on compassionate grounds.

My colleague, the hon. member for Broadview—I am sorry. My colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), has indicated some of the legal problems.

Mr. Stanfield: That is the difficulty when you have a large crowd.

Mr. Gilbert: I might tell the Leader of the Conservative Party (Mr. Stanfield) that in the next election the riding of Broadview will disappear and will become the riding of Greenwood. In all probability I will be representing the new riding of Greenwood. I am adjusting myself to the change. I am sure the Leader of the Conservative Party will forgive my odd slip. It may be that the present member for Greenwood will direct himself down to Nova Scotia, because I believe originally he came from or has some connection with Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nystrom: It is New Brunswick.

Mr. Gilbert: In any event it is the maritimes. As I have said, the hon. member for Greenwood dealt with some of the legal problems. I shall not go into that except for one exception.

I wish to mention the problem concerning the ownership of Canadian land by non-residents. I understood there had been a meeting of provincial representatives with federal representatives concerning the problem of the ownership of land by non-residents. May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that there is so much ownership of Canadian business by non-residents that I am concerned about it, and now we find the government has failed to move with regard to the ownership of land by non-residents.

We have had a tremendous influx of foreign funds in respect of housing and land. I thought perhaps the government would move in this connection. I understand the provincial representatives wanted the authority shifted to the provinces so that they could determine whether or not non-residents should own land in Canada. We have the experience of the maritimes and Ontario, and I am sure there has been a similar experience in British Columbia. The amount of penetration and ownership by non-residents of Canadian land is rather frightening. I am rather unhappy that the minister has failed to move on this important problem. He could do two things. He could state in the legislation that non-residents should not own Canadian property, or he could turn the matter over to the provinces. However, he has failed to act in either way. I hope he can be persuaded during the committee hearings that a change should be made.

I am rather happy that Bill C-20 is before us at this time. In my opinion it is sheer nonsense that we should wait until there are amendments to the Immigration Act. I am surprised my Tory friends made that suggestion, but I forgive them because they are a little behind at times concerning what is obvious. I am proud the minister has brought forward Bill C-20. He will have the full support of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I realize the debate is preliminary to a more exhaustive examination which will take place in the committee. I hope that in the committee there is a full opportunity for a very extensive examination of the bill because, as the minister has pointed out, this is really the first major change since 1947. In that period a great deal has happened to this country, to the concept concerning the role of citizenship in the country, and of course in the world community.

I think our first obligation is to examine in detail the question of citizenship not in any chauvinistic manner nor in the context of superficial nationalism but in a broad sense, dealing with the issues which have not been raised in the debate to date. I was a little concerned about the final remarks by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) in which he attempted to suggest that this is the kind of matter which should be dealt with quickly and which should bear no relationship to the exhaustive work done by the special committee on immigration. I served on that committee, as did the hon. member for Broadview from time to time.

Mr. Gilbert: I enjoyed the lobster.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): We hope there is more where that came from. I think the hon. member will appreciate the number of aspects that are related to citizenship and immigration. In fact I am sure he would agree with me and other members of this House that the government in its treatment of immigration has worked on a much too narrow plane, and that there is much which should be considered in terms of the future development of the country.

The government has not looked at the major question in terms of the further development of the country, the social impact of immigration, and the whole demographic question which only recently was directed to a special interdepartmental committee. Indeed I had the feeling, which I expressed openly in the committee, that the whole process of examining the immigration question had been carried out much too quickly. The report that was tabled a few weeks ago in this House unfortunately was able to come to grips only with many of the sort of superficial or off-the-top of the head type of questions.

There was far too little opportunity for major groups and organizations to make presentations to the committee from their own solid basis of research. In a sense I feel we have merely a kind of brushing up of some of the present anomalies and a change in respect of some of the restrictions concerning present immigration procedures, rather than a look at the whole context in the light of the growth of this country over the next quarter of a century and a look at immigration as a phenomenon that will continue to be with us hopefully, and of course related to the vital questions of citizenship raised by the minister in Bill C-20.

I think we must be grateful for the initiatives that have been taken by the department and by the minister. I do not want to dwell at length on some of the missing aspects in this legislation because I realize that no bill will ever be considered complete, and as a comment aside let me say that I am very much in support of the matter raised by the hon. member for Broadview with respect to land ownership.

As the minister is well aware, we in Prince Edward Island know that our most precious resource is the land that we possess, and there has been a very conscious attempt on the part of our premier as well as of a number of important citizens in the province to control the rapidity with which land has gone out of use and has left the ownership of those who are resident and are primarily citizens of P.E.I., and to diminish the degree to which this can effectively destroy communities and destroy the capacity of the people of the province generally to use that land to its optimum advantage, whether it is in terms of agricultural production, recreation, or other uses.

Perhaps P.E.I., because its land is such a precious and limited commodity, is the most glaring example of the problem we face, whether it is in parts of northern Ontario or British Columbia, or concerns valuable farm land in western Canada or elsewhere. The degree to which land can be accumulated by those who have no direct and continuing interest in its benefit, and particularly its direct benefit to those who make their homes in that area, is of great concern to me.

I think also that one of the bad by-products of the present inflationary situation is that a great many foreign investors are inclined to invest even more rapidly in land, realizing that it is one of the safer areas in which one can put one's money, with the expectation that inflation may continue to rise at a rapid rate. Therefore the action that the minister can take, either through amending this legislation or through effecting some kind of uniform procedure on the part of the provinces, is of great importance to the long term benefit of the country.

I realize that this is not the essence of the legislation before us today. From one point of view it tidies up some of the idiosyncrasies, some of the glaring aspects with respect to the problems that we have faced in keeping up with the concept of the equality of men and women.

It has been referred to before, but I think it came to me most forcibly this fall when I received a letter from the daughter of a classmate of mine from university days who had found, to her shock and sorrow, that she does not have the same rights of citizenship to bestow on her children as would a Canadian man. She just mentions it to me in a letter and I want to put it on the record to indicate that this is a very direct and human problem. Here is a young lady who left Canada in 1972 and met her jusband while studying in another country. He came from Africa where they were married, and within a year or two she gave birth to her first child. She writes:

> ... I gave birth to our first child, a girl. I then began to wonder if the child was entitled to Canadian citizenship through me and wrote to the nearest Canadian embassy in Pretoria for details. The information that I received from that office was quite unbelievable and I would like to know if such legislation in Canada exists. Apparently, a person born of a Canadian male living abroad is eligible for Canadian citizenship and is entitled to hold a Canadian passport but someone born of a Canadian female living abroad is not entitled to these privileges. This to me is a blatant form of sexual discrimination on the part of Canada and I am very surprised that it exists in such a "progressive" country.

I suppose the word "progressive" is one with which all of us can identify in some measure or other, and it is an indication of the fact that as recently as 20 or so years ago when this act received a substantial overhauling we continued to maintain that kind of discrimination in a statute of this country with respect to citizenship. Of course the minister has indicated that this is one of the measures which will effectively be set aside and that citizenship will be passed on by either male or female Canadian subjects. I believe that in that mood we must certainly welcome it, and can only regret that it has taken so long for action to begin on such a basic aspect of human rights. It is also appropriate that this action will be taken this year which is regarded as International Women's Year. Perhaps it is one of the more tangible things that has been done by way of legislation in the House.

There have been some other measures considered, but I have not received the impression that the government's momentum with respect to rights, legal rights for women, has been given much of an examination and much forward motion with regard to activity in the House. I do not know what future plans are afoot with respect to the examination of other statutes, but I hope that the minister and his officials, perhaps in consultation with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), have urged very strongly on the Law Reform Commission that it continue to examine our laws to pinpoint in what ways they may still create a situation of continuing inequality for women.

International Women's Year has undoubtedly been a mixed blessing, in my estimation. It has focused much more consciously the thoughts of all citizens on the ways in which we have built procedures and traditions of discrimination into our social system. But the temptation in having a women's year as such is to think that when we reach December 31 all actions that are necessary to take will have concluded. I think that is not obviously the case. I say that because I have had another matter that I have raised with the minister which also relates to the legislation we have in front of us.

It is a matter that has received a fair amount of publicity, at least in the Ottawa newspapers because it involved a former citizen of this country and of Ottawa, who found to her surprise, shock, and eventual sorrow that she had lost her citizenship after being incorrectly informed by officials of either the Department of the Secretary of State or of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, but certainly an official of the government.

Perhaps again I should relate this as an aspect which I am not sure will be satisfactorily resolved under the proposals that are before us. I wrote to the minister on September 19 of this year indicating that a Mrs. Michele Beach, formerly Robert, born in Canada and married to someone form Great Britain, because of certain misinformation lost her Canadian citizenship. The story was as follows: in 1972 while living in Canada, and before her marriage to Mr. Beach, Miss Robert inquired of the Department of the Secretary of State and Department of Manpower and Immigration if she would lose her Canadian citizenship by marrying a citizen of the United Kingdom. She was reassured that, no, she would not lose her citizenship but would, in fact, enjoy a dual one; Canadian and United Kingdom.

After their marriage the young couple moved to England for a couple of years before intending to settle permanently in Canada. Mrs. Beach again checked that by leaving Canada she would not lose her citizenship. Again the answer was, correctly, no.

In Britain she decided to formalize her dual citizenship status by formally registering as a United Kingdom citizen. Continually fearing a loss of Canadian citizenship, Mrs. Beach inquired of the British Home Office officials. They informed her that formal registration as a citizen of the United Kingdom would cause people of many countries to lose their original citizenship, but that that particular ruling did not apply to Canada; her Canadian status would be O.K. So naturally she went ahead with the process and was granted U.K. citizenship on July 12, 1974.

● (1750)

In August of 1974 the Canadian High Commission contacted her stating that as she was officially registered as a citizen of the United Kingdom, she was no longer a Canadian citizen, and would be required to surrender her Canadian passport and certificate of Canadian citizenship. The upset this must have created for Mrs. Beach can be imagined. After that she and her husband went frequently to Canada House in protest. The officials there agreed to look into the matter, and on August 28 of last year the second secretary for consular affairs advised Mrs. Beach to take formal steps to renounce her U.K. citizenship in order that her Canadian one would still be valid. Accepting that advice, on September 4 she did just that.

Unfortunately, this second mistake was brought home to her on December 30 when the registrar in the Canadian citizenship registration branch of the department wrote Mrs. Beach explaining that her renunciation of U.K. citizenship made absolutely no difference. She was still not a Canadian citizen, and would not be until she had established residence in Canada for one year. In fact at this point she was stateless along with being, I imagine, almost speechless.

Mrs. Beach has since had her U.K. citizenship reinstated because it would be impossible for her to continue in that situation for any length of time. The difficulties which would immediately be created for her can be imagined. However, obviously her basic desire is to regain her Canadian citizenship. She has made a number of appeals, and even came to Ottawa during the past summer to make personal calls on government officials to plead her case.

In this instance I wrote to see if this was not a case where the minister, through an order in council, could restore a citizenship where obviously in the situation she had received a good deal of misinformation from two Canadian government departments, and in this case also from the United Kingdom department. I want to read the letter I received from the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) with respect to this very human problem because it seems to me that this is the very kind of thing the minister should be conscious of in bringing this legislation forward. His letter is dated November 4, 1975, and it reads as follows:

> I refer to your letter of September 19 regarding Mrs. Michele Beach (née Robert) whose status under the Canadian Citizenship Act has received recent publicity.
> Since the Canadian Citizenship Act came into force on January 1st, 1947, a Canadian woman does not lose her Canadian citizenship by marriage to a citizen of another country. However, any Canadian not under a disability (i.e. as to age or mental competence) who, by a formal and voluntary act other than marriage, becomes a citizen or national of another country while outside Canada, thereupon ceases to be a Canadian.

Hon. members will note that that particular situation has not been altered, in my present reading of this legislation.

I am satisfied that no citizenship officer so designated under the authority of the Canadian Citizenship Act would have assured Mrs. Beach otherwise.

The Secretary of State did not tell me in this letter or in any other way how we will be satisfied of that fact, and inasmuch as Mrs. Beach has made these comments publicly I am just curious as to how the Secretary of State has been able to verify that. In the next paragraph he goes on to say the following:

Although this young woman was mistakenly advised by a Canadian officer of another Department that she should not jeopardize her Canadian status by registering as a citizen of the United Kingdom while in England, the unfortunate fact remains that Mrs. Beach actually ceased to be a Canadian when she became a United Kingdom citizen on July 12th, 1974.

Besides submitting representations from overseas, Mrs. Beach recently called at the Citizenship Registration Branch in Ottawa when the circumstances of her case were discussed at length with her. She was again informed that after she has resided . . .

This, to me, is an indication of the kind of continuing insensitivity there is at the present time.

. . . in Canada for twelve of the eighteen preceding months, she may apply for the grant of Canadian citizenship under a special provision of the Act for persons who ceased to be Canadians by naturalization outside of Canada. Another requirement of this special provision is that such applicants must satisfy the Minister that they intend to have their place of domicile permanently in Canada. If there were other means under present law by which Mrs. Beach could more readily become a Canadian again they would have been explained to her during her recent interview.

The minister concludes, and here I find the weakness and the lack of flexibility present in these legislative proposals:

As regards future law I would hesitate to speculate whether subclause 5(4) of the Citizenship Bill (Bill C-20), if passed in its present form, could be applied to Mrs. Beach's case. The sub-clause would empower the Governor in Council to allow grant or resumption of citizenship without condition in cases deserving of compassionate consideration for exceptional reasons.

What seems to be suggested there is that in the case of Mrs. Beach, in spite of the fact that she was misinformed on more than one occasion and is being faced with a considerable amount of unnecessary hardship, in my estimation, she would not be considered under the legislative framework the Secretary of State has placed before us in Bill C-20. If that is the case, the so-called updating and modernization of Bill C-20 as against the model of 1947 is not exactly the modern instrument the Secretary of State would have us believe. He may have provided some window dressing, and he may have provided some new terminology by changing nomenclatures such as "British subject" to "citizen of the Commonwealth", but I will have more to say about that when we resume at eight o'clock.

However, apart from some of the window dressing it is difficult to discover where the minister is really following through on his commitment to make this a modern, effective, and fair piece of legislation, in particular with respect to the rights of those people—and we will have an increasing number—who will be travelling abroad for purposes of business, study, or for their own relaxation. If they are unfortunate enough to be even in the least misinformed with respect to the present procedures with regard to citizenship, they can find themselves in the victimized state of Mrs. Beach who, in her situation, for a period of time has been absolutely stateless and now finds that she will have to go through the whole process of immigration to this country again.

Again, relating this kind of proposal, this kind of situation, to the very tightened up and increasingly complex administrative procedures which have been proposed by the Immigration Committee report and which will likely be introduced by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), one realizes what a great amount of sorrow and difficulty we are going to create for a number of people who have the misfortune to travel from this country and be misinformed as to their rights and responsibilities as citizens.

May I call it six o'clock and continue when the House resumes at 8 p.m., Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, there are two other matters I should like to raise in what might be called the second half of this speech on Bill C-20.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is the score?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The second half, hopefully, will be more interesting than the first, but no less pertinent.

Before moving on I want to refer to one particular aspect of the bill that I mentioned at the outset. Perhaps I did not put it totally in the context that will be considered by committee.

As the minister is well aware, reference is made in clause 33 to the ownership of property, particularly land. Of course this is of some little consequence to those of us who come from Prince Edward Island—I stress the word little in terms of size but not of importance.

As I mentioned this afternoon, ownership is one of the basic concerns in Prince Edward Island at the present time so I am somewhat surprised to note that in clause 33 there is no substantial alteration or recognition of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada which upheld the decision and the legislation of the government of Prince Edward Island concerning the sale of areas of land over ten acres. While there is one major difference between the reference in clause 33 and the Prince Edward Island legislation, the essence is really the same. The difference is that in Prince Edward Island absentee ownership refers to anyone who is not normally resident there, whereas in this legislation it refers to individuals who are not citizens of Canada. As I understand it, in the previous act the reference was to aliens.

As I mentioned before six o'clock, there seems to be a pattern of an attempt to modernize and update citizenship but there seems to be difficulty in coming to grips with the reality of the situation. I refer to the experiences of Mrs. Beach in her so far frustrated attempts to regain Canadian citizenship. The minister has indicated that the change in the law which is already before us is not likely to satisfy her predicament. In the same way the situation with respect to clause 33 will not satisfy the growing concern that exists in provinces like Prince Edward Island, or Nova Scotia, or Ontario, or British Columbia, or perhaps in any of the provinces and territories over the rapid increase in foreign ownership.

● (2010)

Various segments of our economy are under foreign ownership. Sometimes ownership is exercised exclusively by non-Canadian subjects. Perhaps the Secretary of State will explain, either in this debate or at the first opportunity in committee, how he proposes to deal with a situation which is of concern to provinces like Prince Edward Island which are worried about the extent of foreign ownership of their land.

I notice the presence in the House of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan)) who shares with me, I am sure, my concern for Prince Edward Island. I hope he will communicate his concern to the secretary of State. Although this matter is not dealt with in the legislation before us, we shall need to look at it seriously and introduce amending legislation. I want to know how the Secretary of State proposes to deal with this situation. Perhaps he will give an explanation in committee. Unfortunately he did not touch on the matter in his presentation on second reading. I hope he will touch on it in committee and explain how we can make our legislation fit the needs and realities of the modern day.

As I said earlier, the bill, by mentioning certain new terms, seems to acquire in the opinion of some, let us say, and air of modernity. This is not sufficient, and the meaning of the new terms has not been adequately spelled out by the Secretary of State. The term "British subject", in use since Confederation, is to be replaced with the term "citizen of the Commonwealth." I am a long-time supporter of the Commonwealth concept. It is an admirable bridge between this country and the international community. The Commonwealth brings us together. It brings together nations of the world which have some traditions in common, but which otherwise live according to different precepts. The change, speaking in terms of semantics, is attractive. But we do not see defined what, in essence, this change will mean.

The term "British subject" is of long standing, and has been tested with experience. For instance, many Canadian citizens have travelled all over the world and used the diplomatic services and facilities of United Kingdom offices, or of other Commonwealth countries. What is to be the definition of "citizen of the Commonwealth?" Was the term introduced merely to avert the criticism of those who come from other than Commonwealth countries and cannot be identified as British subjects, or will the term be given the same meaning and importance as is given now to "British subject"? The Secretary of State has not told us.

One hopes that an attempt is being made at the Commonwealth Office in London to gain some degree of acceptance for the term which will apply to Canadian citizens. Designating ourselves as citizens of the Commonwealth will be cheap and misleading unless we are prepared to give some enhanced meaning to the term. Obviously the Secretary of State owes us an explanation.

In the few minutes remaining I wish to deal with perhaps the most controversial part of the bill, that part reducing the residency requirement for citizenship from five years to three. When the minister spoke on second reading in May this year, he said he was surprised at the controversy his proposal had created. I am surprised he was surprised. Anything less than great interest in this proposal could be signified as a passive acceptance on the part of Canadians about our methods of granting Canadian citizenship.

Many of us have not taken seriously this business of how citizenship in this country is granted. the minister suggested that the bill will make it easier for immigrants to obtain citizenship after three years. They will not need to wait five years. But there is to be another change. The spouses of Canadian citizens who could, under certain conditions, obtain Canadian citizenship after one year must now wait for three years.

The minister suggested that the changes in the bill relate to the increased mobility of members of our society. I remind the minister that we are dealing with something basic. Already hundreds of thousands of immigrants to this country have acquired Canadian citizenship under the old system. We must realize that the question of changing residency to three years from five is one that is fraught with emotion, emotion with which many would prefer not to deal at all. Obviously a man's relationship to his country is basic.

The immigration committee held hearings for several months and occasionally had a chance to ask witnesses what they felt about this proposal. I must report that most witnesses appearing before the committee favoured the reduction in the residency requirement from five years to three. Perhaps the matter was best put by Mr. Wall, vice-president of the Royal Canadian Legion in St. John's, Newfoundland. He saw nothing wrong in reducing the period from five years to three, and said:

> I do not think there is any argument on it. I would not particularly care if it was reduced to one year, provided that the person who is applying for citizenship has proved to be a person who would be of benefit to Canada. I think this is the whole criterion of citizenship in immigration policy. It is not? If they can contribute to Canada, welcome them in with open arms.

Those comments by a representative of the Royal Canadian Legion show that some Canadians do not think you can define citizenship merely in terms of some time requirement for eligibility. After all, it could take a lifetime or more for a person to be fully aware of his responsibilities and privileges as a citizen of this country. Professor Head, of York University, said to us that he thought five years is too long, that the waiting period would be dropped to two or three years. He even felt that most people would support franting citizenship after one year of residence. He made some further comments which the minister ought to examine, as they deal with an aspect of this problem which we may encounter in future.

Professor Wilson, Head of the Faculty of Social Work, York University, expressed the concern that citizenship training facilities in Secretary of State offices are "very small" and that officials in most Canadian cities were "poorly trained." If you consider statements such as made by Professor Head, and by others who are actively working with immigrants and new Canadians, you sense that there is more to this issue than was presented to the committee.

Although we congratulate the minister for relieving hardship, the provision for reducing to three years from five residency qualifications for citizenship is not an unmixed blessing, as, undoubtedly, some people will encounter difficulty. Certainly spouses, who could acquire citizenship after one year in some cases and who now must wait three years, are adversely affected and, in that regard, the provision of the bill works in reverse. Even more important is the suggestion that it will now be necessary for spouses to meet language requirements. This aspect may create considerable hardship.

While there are many people who will come here in the prime of life as young people to participate in their own future and in the long-term future of this country, we annually receive thousands of people who come here as the parents of new Canadian citizens. What is to be the situation in their case? If the parents of Canadian citizens come here in their fifties and sixties, are they to be denied citizenship if they are not able to develop language facility in one or the other of our official languages?

I ask hon. members to think of the people they know from their experience, and in their community, who have been excellent citizens in their country and yet may not have mastered the ability to speak or communicate in one or the other of our official languages. This seems to be a foolhardy insensitive extension of what in many instances has been a sensible language policy. I urge the minister to give some consideration to the special kind of hardship that may be created by building this kind of inflexibility into this new act.

Finally, there has been some discussion about whether citizenship is a privilege, responsibility, or right. I believe it is all three. Citizenship creates a greater sense of being a part of this country, of being anxious to play a constructive role in it and, indeed, of being willing to sacrifice to make this country a better place in which to live.

Perhaps most of us in this House are fortunate because we were born here. Those who have chosen, sometimes at great personal cost to themselves, to leave their country, culture, language, and religion to establish a new home here have done so with the hope of bettering their situation. They have come with the idea to maximize their contribution to this country. Canada would not be the country it is today without their assistance, their contribution, and their place with us. In this instance we should be attempting in every way possible to make citizenship for them more of a reality, with more of a hope in that reality.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, this bill, which generally speaking is an omnibus bill, reminds me of some of the old home remedies we had to take when we were kids. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Andres) will remember some of these.

A remedy for the common cold was turpentine. Because no one liked to take a dose of turpentine, they put it on a spoonful of sugar. That was supposed to make it good. You held your nose, swallowed it, and it was supposed to cure you. Certain elements of this bill remind me of that kind of home remedy.

There are some good parts in this bill which we accept, and in fact welcome. At the same time some are rather hard to swallow. Some of the redeeming inclusions in this bill are obvious. For example, in clause 10(2) there is finally some recognition given to the equality of women in the area of citizenship. Legislation that recognizes their equality is long overdue.

There is another aspect of the bill which makes the machinery for acquiring citizenship a little more accessible. The court system will be a little more available. That is a commendable feature of the bill. At the same time the court system should not be depreciated. The trappings and majesty of the court system should not be a kind of travelling affair. You must not take away from the wholesome austerity that exists in the court system. On the one hand the bill provides, and ought to provide for those amenities. At the same time it ought to make the process of citizenship a meaningful experience.

There are some major flaws which deserve attention. They raise questions in our minds. If these features are as important as the government feels, why were they so long coming forward? Was there great public pressure? Were people writing to the government asking when it was finally going to reduce the waiting period to become a citizen? Has the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) been deluged with mail from immigrants who have come here in the past five years complaining that this is too long to wait? I hardly think that is the case. I doubt there are any members of this House who have been deluged with this kind of mail.

Many people, even some overseas, were aware that this bill was in the offing. On an overseas parliamentary trip some months ago one hon. member found that people were aware that this bill was coming forward. They were asking when C-20 was coming to the floor of the House. I had to look to see what C-20 was, but those who were thinking of coming to Canada were aware that it was in the offing. Therefore the first question I must ask is why the government has now decided to bring this bill forward.

Second, what is the purpose of wanting to reduce the waiting period from five to three years? If the government has some cogent, logical arguments that will explain the reason for this reduction, we ought to hear them. To this point, the government has not presented any such arguments.

This seems to be the day when everything is instant. We have instant unemployment insurance. I am thankful that the government has brought legislation forward to take away some of the instant quality of unemployment insurance. We have instant welfare, and almost instant LIP grants. The Canada Council has instant artists like you wouldn't believe. One need only scratch out a few lines of so-called poetry and, voilà, another poet! Now we have moved to instant citizenship; citizenship made easy.

The previous speaker mentioned Professor Head who appeared before the special parliamentary committee studying the green paper. I well recall when he met with that committee. I recall him saying that for him it was not necessary to wait five years. It was not even necessary to wait three years. He was ready after one year. I have no doubt that after one year Professor Head was ready to adopt Canadian citizenship. There may be others like him who, after one year, are fully convinced that this is the country they want as their homeland. However, Mr. Speaker, many others are not ready after one year or even three years to decide whether this is going to be their homeland. One could argue very easily that even though there is a three-year requirement they are not obliged to take out citizenship after three years. But when you face the peer pressure, the feeling this is something they ought to do, who knows how many citizens will decide that because three-year citizenship is available it is something they ought to do? It is so easy to shift from the possible to the "ought-to."

● (2030)

The bill also raises the question of whether citizenship is a right or a privilege. If it is a right, then the legislation becomes a contradiction in terms because, if citizenship is a right, it ought to be a right as soon as they land here. It seems to me we are running into a conception we could term a qualified right. Then immediately one has to ask what that is. It seems to me that a right is not something which can be qualified, but that it is absolute. Why pass legislation making people wait even three years for something which is theirs by right of existence, guaranteed by the Bill of Rights? On the other hand, if it is a privilege, the host country has a responsibility for establishing criteria for the welfare of both the immigrant, or the applicant, and the host country itself.

There are some needs we must consider on behalf of the applicant. Most of all, an applicant needs to feel welcome. When an immigrant comes here it is his right to feel welcome. This, I suggest, has nothing to do with citizenship. I might add that authority for establishing welcoming committees and immigration services was originally under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of State. Evidently he was not doing this well, so it was taken away from him and placed under the aegis of the Minister of Immigration. I wonder whether the minister is really concerned about that feature of this bill. Immigration services, welcoming services, are something we have to work on diligently.

Over and over again as the committee toured the country attention was called to the need to make immigrants feel welcome as soon as they landed on these shores. If an immigrant's first need is to feel welcome, this is something which ought to take place long before citizenship, and it will not necessarily be met by the fact of citizenship. Naturalization will not necessarily make an immigrant feel more welcome. If citizens do not reach out and make the immigrant feel at home, just acquiring citizenship status will not make him feel that way.

I suggest the second need which every immigrant and every applicant has is a need to feel a sense of worth, a sense that he has something to offer this country. Here again this is not related to naturalization or citizenship; it is something we must encourage within an applicant, and he will contribute out of the wellspring of his being provided we create a climate for him. It has nothing to do with citizenship.

Third, I think all of us, including the applicant or the immigrant, need to experience a healthy quality of anticipation. This is one area of life which is being taken away from us. More and more each year society is pressing in closer upon us. The media, Madison Avenue advertising techniques, are crowding us more and more so that there is nothing to anticipate any longer. Not only young people but even adults are expected not to have to wait for anything. A great deal of humanizing can take place within all of us if we experience some healthy anticipation. There are many immigrants who have acquired citizenship over the years and who, in retrospect, realize that though at the time they were waiting for citizenship they were in a hurry and would like to have had it a lot sooner, once they had it it was a good experience to wait, and waiting did not hurt them at all—as a matter of fact the experience of anticipation was a good one.

The minister says a five-year limit is arbitrary. Let us assume that it is so. If that is the case, a three-year limit is also arbitrary. Any limit would be arbitrary if we accept his premise. However, I am not sure it would be wise to accept the statement the minister has made. Changing scenes in the world today have so altered the conditions of society that a five-year wait for citizenship is a good experience.

I suggest, as others have done, that the bill has been introduced in order to mollify the feelings of immigrants who have come from the British Isles as they themselves are called on to experience the process of citizenship. There was a time when British subjects did not have to become citizens of Canada. Those were the days of the British Commonwealth, later known as the Commonwealth. There was a kind of universality of experience among those who were members of the British Commonwealth. There was a common experience which all of them shared. Their experience was portable, as it were. They had experienced the parliamentary system, the whole spectrum of British culture in any country within the British empire, and they could take those experiences with them to any other part of the British empire. But all that has changed.

We do not have the British empire any more. We do not even have the Commonwealth in that sense of the word any more. Not only has the Commonwealth changed but conditions within the countries which at one time were British Commonwealth countries have changed, and the experience those countries share is no longer as universal as it was. So to expect immigrants who come to Canada to be able to bring with them the common experience of those nations and make them applicable here is to expect far too much of these people. It is not their fault and it is not our fault. It is one of the facts of life.

As the nature of the world changes, so has the nature of immigration changed, and the immigrants who are coming to our shores today do not share a common background as they did two generations ago. Therefore, I suggest it is not fair to them to expect them to decide after three years that at that point they must make a choice to adopt Canada as their homeland. Again it can be argued that it is not mandatory that they do so, but nevertheless once the suggestion is made we open the door to them to take that step.

● (2040)

If there is one universal feeling across this country—I think all of us on the immigration committee touring Canada were apprised of this—it is the desire to establish and maintain a sense of worth in Canadian citizenship. People want our citizenship to mean something. The implication is always there that if citizenship is made too easy to obtain its value is depreciated.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is one other aspect of the bill that it is discouraging—for lack of a better word—to contemplate. If lowering the waiting period from five years to three tends to depreciate the value of citizenship, then even more so if people are allowed to count 50 per cent of their illegal residence in Canada toward their citizenship. Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the present bill passes a person could be in Canada illegally for six years and he will qualify for citizenship? Do we want to reward violation of the law in this way? Is this the way we enhance the value of Canadian citizenship?

I suggest that as presently drafted the bill has far too many areas requiring consideration before it can receive our acceptance and be presented to the Canadian people. I recommend that we examine the bill thoroughly, and that in committee we make the kind of amendments that will make the bill fair to immigrants, and certainly fair to the Canadian people.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, before I commence my remarks perhaps I should comment on Your Honour's fine appearance in the Chair tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): It is a privilege to take part tonight in this debate on Bill C-20, an act respecting Canadian citizenship. It has been said many times before in this debate that it is high time certain changes were made in Canada's citizenship law. These changes are long overdue. I think the last time any meaningful changes were made was in 1947. The bill before the House, I am sure members on all sides will agree, contains some provisions that cannot be disputed, which are much needed, and which we certainly support.

I want to talk about four points tonight. The first concerns equal rights for women. The second has to do with lowering the age of eligibility to 18 years. Then I want to say something about persons born outside Canada of Canadian parents. Lastly, and perhaps more important from our point of view, I want to discuss lowering the residence time in Canada from five years to three to qualify for making application for Canadian citizenship.

Before making these points I should like to review the citizenship court procedure, as I have witnessed it many times in the area I come from and which I have the honour to represent here. I want to talk about the citizenship courts in the judicial district of Norfolk, presided over by His Honour Judge Pringle, and in the judicial district of Haldimand, presided over by Judge Leach. Both of these gentlemen perform a meaningful ceremony in their respective citizenship courts. The proceedings are conducted with dignity, and the national anthem is played by a school band which is actually brought into the courtroom. There is a colour parade by the Royal Canadian Legion or local police, so that the Canadian flag is prominently displayed before our new citizens. Heads of the various ethnic groups in the community are invited to be present and to welcome new citizens after they receive their certificates. The Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire takes this opportunity to instil a note of patriotism into the business of citizenship.

In addition, police officials and publicly appointed officials such as the mayor of the municipality, members of service clubs, and last but hopefully not least, members of parliament and members of the provincial legislature are present. I always make a point of attending these courts because of the fact that the judge tries, in the way I have described, to make the ceremony a meaningful one to the new citizens. It is not a sausage machine where citizens are turned out en masse; they know they have participated in a ceremony that is of great benefit to them and which will have meaning for them for the rest of their lives.

One matter that has disturbed me a bit in the past and which I notice will now be changed is that a judge presently asks new citizens to take an oath of renunciation, renouncing their former homeland. I always thought that this was a little difficult for a person who had already torn himself away from his homeland and come to a new country. In future a judge will not ask citizens to take such an oath; they will simply be asked to take the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty the Queen, and to obey the laws of Canada, their new country.

Now I wish to say a word or two about each of the four points I want to make. With respect to equal rights for women, it is very fitting and timely that this amendment be made this year, International Women's Year. Already this year the government has taken steps to amend certain other acts so as to give equal rights to women. I have in mind the Canada Pension Plan where the survivor is now referred to as the spouse, be he or she man or woman. The veterans' legislation was also amended so that a woman serving in one of the women's arms of the armed forces can participate equally with men. No one can fault the minister on this score and I am sure we applaud him for taking this step.

With regard to lowering the age of eligibility to 18 years, this too is a step in keeping with the times. In Ontario today the age of majority is 18 years, which means a person of that age can own property, has the right to sue—and can be sued, I guess—and is generally responsible for his actions. Eighteen is also the voting age now across Canada. I might also mention, perhaps with not too much pride, that for good or bad it is also the legal drinking age. Thus it is certainly logical that the age of application for citizenship should also be reduced to 18 years.

Perhaps even more important than reasons such as this, it seems to me that young people in this day and age mature more rapidly than was the case when I was growing up; certainly they seem to have a better grasp of what is going on around them in society. They have a better understanding of government. They are more critical of their elected officials, and demand to know where they stand on issues. This being true, it seems to me it follows that they ought to have the right to participate more fully in the democratic process. The lowering of the age of eligibility to 18 years makes this possible. As citizens they have greater opportunity to do the things in which they are interested.

● (2050)

An anomaly has been brought to my attention in this legislation. I am not very clear about it, but perhaps the minister will clear it up when he appears before the committee. I refer to subclause (3) of clause 4 in Part 1 of the bill concerning persons born of Canadian parents outside Canada. This matter was brought to my attention through the case of a Canadian man who is attempting to obtain his citizenship. He was born of Canadian parents while they were missionaries in India. At age 15 he came to Canada with his parents while they were on furlough. He remained in Canada. He entered school in Oshawa. He was educated there and then worked for a period. During the war he joined the air force. He served with distinction.

After the war he returned to Canada and entered university where he obtained a degree in forestry. He is now employed by the Ontario Department of Resources in the Lands and Forests Branch. This man attempted to obtain his Canadian citizenship. Despite all his efforts he has been unable to do what should have been a simple thing. I should like to refer to the letter he received from the Registrar of Canadian Citizenship. It states:

Dear Mr. Scott:

This refers to your application for proof of Canadian citizenship.

In order to have a claim to Canadian citizenship your father had to be born in Canada and you had to have entered Canada as a landed immigrant prior to January 1, 1947. We have proof that your father was born in Canada. According to immigration records you entered Canada as a non-immigrant on May 29, 1937. They have been unable to locate a record of your subsequent landing in Canada.

For goodness sake, this man never left Canada. He has been here continuously since he first entered Canada.

We therefore request that if you have any documents in your possession showing that you did obtain landed immigrant status please forward them for our notation.

How would a young man 15 years of age, coming here with his parents who were on furlough, have gone through that process?

If we are unable to locate a record of your entry as a landed immigrant before January 1, 1947, it will be necessary to rule that you do not have a claim to Canadian citizenship. You will then be required to clarify your status with the immigration authorities and apply for the grant of citizenship. Please forward any return correspondence to the attention of the undersigned.

The young man then sent an exact record of what he had done. He wrote:

Born: April 7, 1922

Location: Indore, India

Parents: Alex Scott, Canadian Missionary

Canadian citizen by birth.

I came to Canada in May 1937 when my parents came back home on furlough for a year. They went back in 1938. I stayed in Canada and went to high school in Oshawa at O.C.V.I. I graduated from there in 1942 and joined the RCAF. I served in the Air Force for about 3¼ years. I was overseas in England for 13 months and returned in the fall of 1945. After working for a year in Toronto I went to U. of T. graduating in 1950 as a forester. Since then I have worked for the Ont. government as a forester.

Surely a man in that situation should not be put through the wringer in order to prove he is a Canadian citizen and has the right to a citizenship certificate. I hope the minister, when he speaks in this debate, will say that that situation will be corrected by the subclause to which I have referred.

The last but certainly not the least matter so far as we on this side are concerned has to do with the period of residence in Canada before an immigrant can qualify and apply for Canadian citizenship. This period is to be decreased from five to three years. The immigrants who come to this country come from a variety of cultures. Some of these cultures are not too dissimilar to that in Canada. I refer particularly to Great Britain, France, or even Germany and other European countries. Those who come from countries behind the iron curtain come from a different culture, or at least certainly from a country in which there is a different form of government.

I refer, however, to immigrants from the Far East. They come from a culture which is vastly different to ours. To expect these people in three years to assimilate a culture which is so different from their own is asking too much. I do not think they would feel that in such a period they would be sufficiently acquainted with the Canadian system, the customs, the language, and all the other things which are necessary in order to qualify for and obtain Canadian citizenship so that they might make a contribution to this country. For that reason it seems to me a period of three years is a little too short a time.

Another point, which I do not believe has been made, is that we have many people who have been granted citizenship after waiting a period of five years. I know this is the situation in many areas. In my own area, which is a rural area, I think perhaps I have as varied a group of ethnic people as in any section of Canada. These people have waited five years. They have become Canadian citizens. I do not think they would look too kindly on their compatriots who come here and then in a period of three years are able to qualify.

When we lower the period for qualification I think we depreciate the value of Canadian citizenship. I know there are those who will say if we do not do this we are denying them their right when they have shown they are ready and fit to become Canadian citizens. I do not think too many people will strenuously object on that score.

I recall attending at a citizenship court when a judge was examining a certain applicant for Canadian citizenship. The judge had to ask the applicant certain questions about our country. This person knew nothing about it. The judge told him he could not sign his application and asked him to come back in three months. I was in court the next time the same person was examined, and this time he knew no more than he did the first time. The judge turned down his application. This told me that this particular judge, Judge Pringle, was doing his job as a judge of the citizenship court. He was making sure that these people knew what they were getting into, and that they knew they had some responsibility to become acquainted with the country to which they were asking to be admitted as citizens. After five years this particular applicant was not able to satisfy that judge. With the period of three years such a situation could be even worse.

I believe it is unjust to lower the period from five years to three years. I think the applicants will treasure their citizenship more if it is a little more difficult to obtain. When this bill goes to the committee the committee will have a great deal of work to do to make it meaningful. Many questions which have been raised in this debate will have to be answered. I look forward to the proceedings in the committee and to what the minister will have to say when he replies.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps I should rise at this time so that members of the House would know that the Mr. Towers who passed away today was not the member for Red Deer, even though he had the same initials. I refer to Mr. Graham Towers, who was Governor of the Bank of Canada when it was first instituted, and who held that position for some years. I am sure everyone feels a great deal of sympathy for his survivors and would like to pay a tribute to him for the contribution he made to Canada.

● (2100)

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to dwell for a moment on the point that the great depression of the 1930's came about because of lack of protection from an institution such as the Bank of Canada. The Bank of Canada itself was instituted under prime minister R. B. Bennett. The reason that corporation was established was to protect Canada forever from recessions of that nature. I am sure there are some of us in the House today who remember well the financial crash in 1929. I hope that nothing like that will ever happen to Canadians again. I am sure that Mr. Graham Towers, in spite of governments, has instilled in the hearts of Canadian people a desire to protect themselves from a depression such as we had in the 1930's. I am sure that all members of the House agree with me when I say that we are all saddened by his passing.

Today we are dealing with a very important bill because, after all, citizenship is one of the greatest benefits we have to offer to those who come to our country to make their home. Sometimes I think that we as a people have a tendency to take things too lightly. If something comes easily, we do not appreciate its value.

Many of us sitting in the House today can trace our ancestors back over 100 years and we appreciate what these people have done for us. They have set the stage for the benefits we are now enjoying. One of the things which we have to be particularly careful about is that we do not take any of these privileges for granted. It is so easy to have all these benefits slip away, in which case we will not be able to do those things for those about us, as Canadian citizens that we are privileged to do at present.

[Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand).]

Actually, proper citizenship builds the country, and pride of citizenship is probably one of the greatest things that can be instilled within the human being. All too often we have a tendency to feel that the country or the world owes us a living. This is one of the greatest mistakes that anyone can make. In fact instead of asking what the world can give us, we should ask what we can give to the world. In like manner we can ask as Canadians what Canada will do for us. What we should ask is what we can do for Canada. One of the most important things we have to realize as citizens of this country is that we all have a contribution to make to our country and to our heritage. We must not take this too lightly.

I rise to speak in this debate because I believe that when you see something happening with which you do not agree, perhaps some time in the future people may ask you why you allowed this to happen and where you were. Certainly I think it would be very unfortunate for a member of parliament to answer that he was there but did not say anything. That is why I rise to speak now, because I want to try to instill in those about me, and those who may read the words of wisdom that have been expressed in the debate today, a spirit of Canadianism, a spirit which will carry us well into the future.

I am concerned about one aspect of this bill, that is the provision under which an individual who is in this country illegally can use half of the time he spent here toward the period that is required for his acquisition of Canadian citizenship. I think that is wrong because, first of all, that person is in this country illegally, so why in the world should we as Canadians condone that which is illegal? I think it only depreciates the worth of Canadian citizenship. I do not think we can afford to condone that which is wrong. Certainly it must be wrong, or why should we say that a person is in the country illegally? Therefore it is wrong, and it must be considered so. We are entirely wrong in agreeing with that provision in the bill, and certainly I wish to voice my disapproval of it. I do not want to have any part of it whatsoever.

Second, there is possibly a misconception to a certain degree concerning what Canada has to offer to people in other parts of the world. I believe that perhaps we have misled them to a degree and they might feel that this is a land of milk and honey. We should tell these people when they want to immigrate to Canada that we expect them to become good citizens because that is the only way in which an individual can justify his existence here and give his utmost to the land in which he lives. When immigrants come here we must be assured that they will be happy.

Just recently I was in communication with a family that had come to Canada under the illusion that everything was hunky-dory. The man, his wife and children stayed here for awhile, but eventually he decided that Canada has nothing to offer him, so he left. I think we must be honest with these people who immigrate to our country and we must tell them that we expect them to become good citizens. We must do this for our personal benefit as well as theirs. To a degree, all people are selfish—but I think we must be careful that they be good citizens and that they will enjoy living in Canada.

After reading some of the headlines which appear in the newspapers these days I sometimes wonder if Canada has that much more to offer other people than perhaps they have in their own country, because this is not a land where you can go out and pick a coconut or a banana, or an orange off a tree since we have a winter which lasts six months. We must take this into consideration with regard to people who come here from a hot, humid climate. It is a hardship for many people. Therefore the Canadian citizen has to realize that he has to allow for six months of winter and six months of summer, and this is something which is not known to all people.

Going back to the earlier days, just for a moment, when this country was being settled, many people brought their livestock up from south of the border. Their loss was tremendous simply because they did not know what they were getting into and were ill prepared. In view of that I think it would be only honest on our part to ensure that today's immigrants are better informed. Many of us will remember the 1920's when there was a large immigration of people from, primarily, the United Kingdom. I remember the experience our family had with some of those immigrants. They were particularly unhappy here, and after they had spent a number of years in Canada they decided to go back to the land they loved best and the land in which they felt most comfortable.

So it was with many war brides. Many of those girls went back to the old country after the war because they were not happy here. In view of that, if we were to have a short period of time, whether it be an extra year or two, to ensure that those people will be satisfied to be Canadian citizens, I think that would be to their benefit. It must be very disenchanting to individuals to take out citizenship in a country and then to find out that they have made a mistake. Of course they then must go through the whole procedure again, because usually when citizenship is taken out in one country it is not possible to maintain dual citizenship. I think we have to consider that.

In our citizenship courts I am sure we all appreciate the work our judges are doing. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), who spoke previously, mentioned this matter, and I also should like to mention the judge who presides at the citizenship court in Red Deer, Judge Allen. He does a tremendous job. In a very moving ceremony Judge Allen impresses upon people the importance of the step they are taking. As mentioned by the hon. member, the IODE takes part in this service, and they extend a welcoming hand of friendship, for which I am sure those people are very grateful.

Of course there are other organizations which also participate in the ceremony including the Canadian Bible Society, which makes a presentation of a bible to each of the individuals at these citizenship courts. All in all, it adds up to a certain satisfaction in the lives of those who become Canadian citizens. We must take these things into consideration in this House when we are dealing with this bill in order to ensure that whatever legislation is passed serves a useful purpose.

We must realize that we have problems in Canada which other countries do not have. There probably is not another country in the world with the major portion of its population living within 300 miles of a neighbouring country, which is the case in Canada. Over two thirds of our population live within 300 miles of the United States border, and of course the remainder is spread over about 5,000 miles.

Immigrants seeking citizenship should be told that there are other places in Canada besides Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, and Montreal. It seems that too often immigrants decide to go to major centres, and I am not always satisfied that this is in their best interest because of the fact that to a great degree they then lose their identity.

There is one other aspect of this bill which I am concerned about, and that is we must exercise a great deal of care to ensure we do not encourage people to come here and become second class citizens. In view of the affluence Canada and Canadians have been enjoying, there is a tendency not to want to do those jobs we feel are beneath our dignity. I have never been one to condone this attitude. I have always felt that a person should never ask someone else to do something he would not do himself. If we as Canadians were to adopt that philosophy, I think we would have a great deal more to offer the people of the world. It is a dangerous policy for us—but it is the policy at the present time—to allow people to come in and fill the positions we as Canadians are not prepared to fill.

I realize that there have to be some guidelines, but we must also realize that we have to exercise a great deal of care so that we do not develop a group of second class citizens. We have seen what has happened to our neighbours south of the border over the years with regard to their importation of labour. This really concerns me because it takes hundreds of years to overcome the effect of this aspect of immigration policy. I know that in many parts of Canada, especially in southern Ontario, large groups of immigrants are brought in to do the work we Canadians are not prepared to do.

It used to be that in Canada we would move people back and forth across our land. People from the west would go east, and vice-versa. Many workers from eastern Canada would move west, perhaps for year round work, or perhaps it would only be seasonal work. I well remember as a boy on a farm that we always relied on the help which came from Ontario in taking off the harvest, something which I thought was wonderful. However, when we start bringing in people from other nations we have to exercise a great deal of care. I hope the government takes notice of this to ensure that we do not become dependent upon other people to do the things for us which we are not prepared to do for ourselves. We must also have something to offer those people who come to our borders asking for admittance, wishing to become Canadian citizens. That way there will always be a place in the scheme of things for Canada and Canadians.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some brief remarks with respect to this bill. I know the minister is anxious to get it before committee and I am always one to accommodate the minister in that kind of aim, as I have done in the past.

I think there is an analogy between what is proposed here and the attitude toward the American revolution. The Americans went through a revolution in order to obtain nationhood, and it has often been remarked that since then they have been trying to prevent revolutions with the same objectives in other parts of the world. It seems to me that when we consider this legislation we have to consider it in the light of other legislation in this country, particularly that which pertains to immigration.

Some of the changes proposed in the legislation seem to be an attempt by the government to make up to new Canadians, to give them something they did not have before, but there is a restrictive side to it that I prophesy will have the effect of preventing people coming to this country more than is presently the case. An attitude seems, therefore, to be developing that while most of use are now in Canada through the process of immigration ourselves or by our forefathers, in future we will tend to limit immigration to our shores.

One of the provisions of the bill would reduce the period of qualification for citizenship from five years to three years. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, this is an arbitrary decision; it is difficult to say that either period is appropriate. I would suggest that the only purpose of this bill is the political motivation of the government, which is receiving a considerable amount of representation from people newly arrived in the country who have families in other parts of the world and want them here. To a great degree these people are unhappy about some of the legislative plans of the government. Instead of this questionably magnanimous gesture reducing the qualification period, the government would be well advised to consider its over-all policy, and to be frank with the people of Canada about its intentions in regard to new Canadians.

In light of the green paper on immigration it seems to me that we must expect a restrictive type of regulation. Also, there have been recent developments in the area of multiculturalism vis-à-vis newly arrived persons in our country. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) of late has gone around the country indicating that the government is taking new and different directions in regard to the multiculturalism program. He wishes to change the policy to provide for more emphasis on anti-discrimination and communicating understanding. This indicates that the government has been under some pressure from people who have just come to Canada about the problems of discrimination and lack of understanding that they face.

This reduction of the qualification period from five years to three, and the unusual step of allowing a portion of the time spent in Canada illegally to be counted as part of the total time required for citizenship, seem to be gestures made for the purpose of ingratiating the government with people newly arrived.

Some interpretations of the provisions indicate that half of the total time a person is in the country illegally will count toward the citizenship requirement, but really the clause that deals with this is rather convoluted. As I read clause 5, a maximum of one year is to be allowed in the computation for citizenship. Be that as it may, I think we must hear something more from the minister about the government's motive for this rather novel proposition. If it thinks three years is appropriate then it should explain to us the necessity to have the illegal residence in Canada counted toward the requirement of citizenship. Sometimes people come into the country illegally through desperation, and indeed in some cases it is possibly the only way they could come. I think I understand the background in many such cases, and perhaps relief should be given to them sometimes. It strikes me that this is a rather peculiar provision to have in statute form, and that the government could find other measures to deal with the situation.

An hon. Member: Like what?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Well, under the Immigration Act there is a discretion given to the minister to give dispensation to illegal immigrants on a number of bases, and it seems to me that this discretion could be exercised in deserving cases. For example, the period of illegal residence could be taken into consideration in granting landed immigrant status at the earliest possible time in cases of need. But when the statute enshrines the principle that a portion of illegal residence is to be counted toward the period of acquired residence for citizenship, this is a sufficiently novel proposition that I should like to hear from the minister—

● (2130)

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question? Does he suggest that, in the case of a student who is in this country under a student's visa and studies here, say, for four or five years, that we should not include some of his time in this country as coming within the three year provision? That, really, is at stake in this clause, not the sort of illegality to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, obviously this is a matter of interpretation. The minister may interpret the clause as he pleases and suggest that it refers to students, and so on. My reading of the clause—and I shall be interested to hear the minister's interpretation and the interpretation of his legal advisers—suggests that its application is far broader and that it is not limited exclusively to students, as the minister seems to indicate. If the intent of the clause is as the minister suggests, why does he not put it in explicit terms, instead of in general terms which lend themselves to misinterpretation? Why does he not say that the clause is restricted to students?

I said I would keep my presentation brief on some aspects of the bill. I hope the minister will answer some questions in committee. At the same time I compliment the minister, just to show that I am not against all the provisions of the bill, as obviously some of its provisions meet with our approval and consent, and deserve our support. This being International Women's Year it is only fit and proper that we should provide equality of treatment for women.

I am glad to note that the status of wives will not necessarily depend on the nationality or fate of their spouses. This is an appropriate forward step, especially in International Women's Year. I suggest that the minister should confer with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras), in order to discuss a similar provision whereby a woman may apply for landed immigrant status in some reasonable cases without being bound by the intentions of her husband in this regard. We ought to examine the law in this area, and make sure it is consistent. God knows, it is little use asking the government to be consistent. Nevertheless it ought to be consistent in the areas of immigration and citizenship, which are closely related and intertwined.

When the minister closes debate on second reading I hope he will explain in detail the motivation behind this legislation and what induced him to substitute one arbitrary period of residency for another. Finally, what is the government's position with respect to clause 5? We need to know it, in order to study the bill adequately in committee and again in the House when it returns for third reading.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, a man's citizenship was of utmost importance to him in the days of Greece and Rome. Those concepts of citizenship have guided many nations, including our own, and ought to guide us as we change the laws pertaining to citizenship.

Most in this House know of the great status attaching to Roman citizenship in the days of the Roman empire. A man's status as a citizen of Rome was an honour which made itself felt in every part of the then known world. Let us remember these lessons of history. Then, after the Roman empire, came the British Commonwealth of Nations. If you were a citizen of the Commonwealth you were a citizen of the United Kingdom, and had the right to move freely within the British Commonwealth. That was an important advantage and made available to the British citizen, or Commonwealth citizen, important services at home and abroad. Let us keep these examples in mind when considering laws to change citizenship status. Let us, at the same time, reflect on the value of our citizenship.

I hope the government will not be inflexible, will not insist on passing the bill, clause by clause, exactly as written. I hope amendments will be moved. Although certain parts of it are a step in the right direction, other parts of the omnibus bill are not as beneficial to Canadian citizens as they might be.

The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) went to some length to explain aspects of the bill which he thought were good. Now I must raise certain questions. Actually my first question was raised by the previous speaker, who referred to clause (5)(1)(b)(i) which, purportedly, has to do with students. He did not find its language acceptable. How will that language apply, for example, to refugees, a large number of whom Canada has accepted? I do not quarrel with this. Such people have been allowed entry. But what about the many other people who are constantly being discovered in Canada, who have not come in legally in the proper fashion? Will this clause apply to them, as well as to students?

My reason for asking is simple. In order to become a landed immigrant, one must apply abroad. This means that those who did not apply abroad for entry are at present illegally in Canada, regardless of their present status as dishwashers, students, or anything else. Any provision allowing such people to apply for landed immigrant status within Canada negates this legislation, which says that the application must be made outside Canada. There is an inherent contradiction in our legislation in this area which we must consider carefully. Apparently one act of parliament virtually negates the effect of the other proposed legislation. I do not think that is intentional.

Mr. Benjamin: What has that to do with citizenship?

Mr. McCain: Almost without exception we are citizens of Canada either because we emigrated or because our ancestors came here. Most of us are descendants of immigrants to this country, immigrants from one part of the world. There are few exceptions. Those who came to Canada made this a fine country. Therefore we have a responsibility to those who are in Canada, and to those who are or will be applying for citizenship.

● (2140)

Citizenship is not a right of any individual other than by birth. It is not a right which has to be granted because an individual makes application to come to our shores. It is in fact a privilege. It is a privilege which has ministerial discretion to guide how and when he can grant this extension of privilege called citizenship.

The purpose of a term of eligibility is obvious. It is necessary for the country granting citizenship to have some time to appraise the individual who has come, and to determine whether in fact that person should be given his citizenship. This should be regardless of his linguistic capabilities and regardless of his knowledge of our geography, but certainly not regardless of whether he is prepared to assume the responsibilities of citizenship and whether he is in fact a builder who will add to our structure of Canada.

Five years is not too long to assess this. We can show many cases in this country where people who have come to our shores for what appeared to be the intention of being Canadians have in fact become the centre of some of the areas of discord in this country, to put it mildly, which have caused great concern to Canadian citizens at large.

It is of particular importance at this moment in time that the government should give very careful consideration to the five year term. Again I refer to some of the people who have come here under forced circumstances, whom we have accepted under forced circumstances, and who should prove to us that they want to be Canadian citizens and a part of this nation. They did not come here of their own volition. They came here because of expulsion or to escape prosecution, and because we opened our doors. That prosecution may have been from a government of any flavour in this world because we have not been discriminatory in the acceptance of refugees into our country.

I submit that this nation and the minister in charge of this department need some time to evaluate some of the people who have come to this country. It is quite all right for some to say that this is being discriminatory. However, not a single person has ever said to me that he should have obtained his citizenship in five years.

I come from a community which in the last 40 years has received probably 25 per cent of its population as a result of immigration. Not a single one of them has ever complained to me about the period of time required to acquire citizenship.

There is another facet that, on behalf of the immigrant applying for citizenship, should be carefully considered. The clause which says you cannot have dual citizenship in Canada eliminates the possibility of being a Canadian and American citizen, a Canadian and a British citizen, or a Canadian and a French citizen. That is a trend everywhere in the world.

As near as I can tell, and the minister will correct me if I am wrong, if a Canadian goes abroad and for any reason loses his citizenship, he then has to apply as any other world citizen would have to apply to come to Canada. The same will apply to those immigrants who come to Canada and obtain citizenship here. They are not going to be able to hold Canadian and American, Canadian and Portuguese, or Canadian and Dutch citizenship simultaneously. If by some inadvertence they have made a wrong choice in their three-year period, they may find themselves in serious difficulty if at any point in time they wish to return to the land of their birth or the land from which they came. Under those circumstances I do not think five years is too long.

There are some aspects of changes in citizenship legislation which are pertinent to Canada and which follow the pattern of other countries. Holland, for example, is in a unique position at the moment. Recent press reports have told about their problem with the arrival of people from what at one time was their empire. People held Dutch citizenship in the same way that people held citizenship in the British Commonwealth. Those who were citizens of the Dutch structure held Dutch citizenship and had free access to Holland.

It is a very forward and proper step that this country cannot be inundated by an influx of people from any part of the world any more readily than it can from any other part of the world under the present structure of citizenship and immigration. In that sense there has been something acquired in the consideration of these two items.

I very strongly urge the minister to give serious consideration to clause 5(1)(b)(i), both for the sake of Canada and for the sake of the immigrant. I think I speak with a concern for both. Changing the eligibility from five years to three should be reconsidered. That is not a step which gives the landed immigrant any particular advantage other than voting privileges. It reduces the necessary time which any citizen court or minister might require before extending to an applicant the very important and highly privileged rank of citizen.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the government House leader saw fit to bring on this bill for consideration by this parliament at this time. I can think of nothing more important on the list of legislation that we must consider before Christmas, having regard to what remains on the order paper and the progress that has been made thus far. It is an unusual example of his foresight with respect to the legislative priorities of the country that he has seen fit, so close to Christmas, to bring forward to this House this important piece of legislation.

I am very happy that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) are in the chamber this evening because there is, within this general field about which we are talking, an interrelationship with their responsibility.

I suppose there was a time in the history of our country when upon coming to Canada, taking a working position, and being involved in the cultural life of this growing country, the matter of citizenship was not nearly as important as it is today. But we are debating this bill in a world which is changing, a world which is becoming less and less democratic, a world in which people are pressured by over-population and diminishing agricultural production, resulting in starvation in many areas.

• (2150)

The number of democratic regimes is being diminished day by day; Canada is one of the few nations left in the world which believes in the democratic process, which is healthy and strong, which can allow debate such as this to go on, with different points of view being interchanged. This is a very attractive situation for increasing numbers of people and I believe that, as a result, over the next 20 years or so this country will find itself bearing the brunt of pressures in terms of the movement of people from other parts of the world. That is what makes the bill before us so important; that is why parliament should consider the whole question of citizenship with a great deal of care.

We are extending, by the offer of citizenship, the right to participate in a strong, healthy, and vital society. That is why this statute is important and that is why I want to thank the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) for bringing this legislation forward.

There are provisions in this statute which concern me. Other speakers have mentioned that a period of time one might call unauthorized time, as far as the statute is concerned can be allowed in certain circumstances, at least to a limited extent, whether the final period be three years or five years. This is important if the required time is to be reduced to three years because it makes the full period all the more important. I am not arguing now whether the period should be three years or five years; I will come to that issue, perhaps a little later.

The statute as presented, notwithstanding the minister's explanation, does within the ambit of its wording allow for time spent illegally in this country. In my view this does a disservice to many people who, aware of the rules qualified to come to this country under a very generous immigration policy, served out the period of time required, and were successful in obtaining citizenship. I think we ought to take a hard look at this aspect of the bill, and perhaps amend it in committee.

The reason why I think this is important is that I have discussed the bill with a number of immigrant groups in my constituency. We often hear about immigrants in western Canada, in northern Canada, and in the larger centres of population. But in this city, Ottawa, which ostensibly moves on a bi-cultural and bilingual axis, there is a large and growing immigration population.

I have made a point of sitting down with several groups representing people of various ethnic origins, some of whose members are landed immigrants, and asking their views with respect to this clause. It is the vagueness of this clause which has disturbed many of the people who have spoken to me about it, and which has disturbed me as well as a number of other members of the House. The present debate is an important occasion in terms of considering this right to participate in one of the free democratic societies in the world.

There is one other aspect I should like to deal with, and it has to do with the citizenship courts. It has been my privilege in the course of practising law in the national capital to know a number of the citizenship judges who have taken their place in this aspect of the public service.

I want to mention a former judge, Mr. John Dawson, who happens to be a constituent of mine. He was an appointee of the government of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert. I also wish to call to the attention of the House the service which has been rendered to the whole field of citizenship and its importance in the scheme of things by Mr. Paul Tardiff, who at one time was a member of the House of Commons and who, if my memory serves me correctly, was appointed by the late Mr. Lester Pearson. Both these men have done a tremendous job, and it has been my privilege to sit in both their counts from time to time and watch the proceedings.

I believe it is important that the role of the citizenship court should not be downgraded. I have spoken to people who have appeared before these judges and they tell me that one of the most impressive and important days in their lives was when they appeared in a courtroom before a citizenship judge and passed the test. It was an emotional day for them in terms of their feelings for the country of their adoption. There seems to be an element in this statute which puts the functions of the citizenship court judge a little to one side, and substitutes therefor the functioning of the bureaucracy. This is one matter which ought to be examined. I have talked to many in this city, about which the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) speaks in such florid terms, who were impressed by the work of the court.

May I call it ten o'clock?

Mr. Blais: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House would consent not to see the clock so that we could proceed with the consideration of this bill.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): May I call it ten o'clock, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—INQUIRY AS TO JUSTIFICATION FOR PROPOSED INCREASED IN PRICE OF PASSPORTS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight because of a question I asked last Wednesday, December 3. My oral question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), was answered by the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp). As reported at page 9682 I asked:

It—

That is, my question.

—pertains to the reported intention of the government to increase the price of passports issued to Canadian citizens from $10 to $12. Is this the government's intention, or policy, and if so how can the increase be justified?

The minister answered:

The question is under consideration. Any increase would be justified by the increased cost of supplying passports.

As a supplementary I asked:

Since the reported increase would amount to 20 per cent, thus exceeding the guidelines laid down by the Minister of Finance, how can such an increase be justified?

The minister replied:

The guidelines do not speak about percentages in the case of prices or fees. They talk about prices reflecting increases in costs. That is how we would justify any increase we might make.

What a lot of hypocrisy there was in the minister's last response! Right there they say, "Do as we say, but you cannot do as we do".

There are a few points I want to make in rebuttal of the answers I received to this seemingly insignificant and innocent little question. The acting minister said any increase would be justified by the increased cost of supplying passports. The country's passport office here in Ottawa never was a profit-making service. How are the actual costs increasing? No more than usual. True, the clerks are getting more money than they were five years ago, but they are also issuing more passports. The fees charged by an office of this kind should remain constant. They were originally statutory, but I do not believe the department should be allowed to raise the price at this time, especially considering the serious condition the country is in financially, primarily because of inflation.

I can point to other offices in this country to demonstrate my point that passports now being granted to Canadian citizens for $10 should remain at that price. It is not very long ago that they were only $5, but this is Liberalism, Mr. Speaker, Liberalism in action. The main thing they are noted for is being liberal with other people's money. In this vicious escalation of prices and fees there is one class of fees that should not rise, and that is government fees for documents of the nature that we are discussing this evening—passports.

Related to the point I am making, I was very pleased the other day when I visited the county registry office of the county of Lennox and Addington in Napanee, where I live. I wanted to search the registry concerning certain property, and when the service had been performed for me by the clerk in charge I asked her how much that would be, and she said 50 cents. That price has remained the same for 50 years, Mr. Speaker, yet the county level of government of Napanee also has increased costs the same as Ottawa. There is far more activity in the county registry, far more real estate activity that takes care of higher costs.

The same thing is happening in the Department of External Affairs. Any member of parliament in this House will tell you Mr. Speaker, that his or her requests from constituents for passport servicing are increasing by leaps and bounds. I hope the minister does not include the cost of the new "Taj Mahal" housing external affairs at Sussex Drive when he mentions increased costs. That is another place where the Liberal government was very liberal with the taxpayers' money. I am informed that the Lester B. Pearson building cost about $40 million. Of course it was not built for the sole purpose of issuing passports. Therefore the passport office should be left to perform its duties without increasing fees.

Getting back to increased costs, if costs have increased they must have been included in this year's estimates. A further increase in the fees to citizens requiring passports is a dual levy or double taxation. The taxpayers of Canada have paid increased costs, and now those requiring passports are not only paying their share of increased costs in the budget but a 20 per cent increase in fees for passports as well. How reckless can the government get with other people's money?

There is another point I must make too. This week we are currently debating Bill C-20, the citizenship bill. Bill C-20 is not a good bill. It is liberalizing our immigration policy in many ways to would-be immigrants to this country, making it easier to obtain citizenship at a time when this legislation would not be good for the economic and social well being of our troubled country. The point I make is one that shows the inconsistencies of Liberal policy. This current citizenship legislation favours the immigrant, but the policies of the government in increasing the cost of passports penalizes the full-fledged Canadian citizen, whether he be a citizen by birth or by immigration, to the extent of 20 per cent in additional costs, grossly exceeding the guidelines laid down by the recent controls.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the majority of Canadians all across our country today are asking who is in control. In today's Ottawa Journal we see the headline: "Canadians in favor of Controls—Survey". It states that support for controls is growing, along with discontent. If we are to have control of retail consumer prices and control of the price of services, we must have control rigidly practised in government, yes, right down to the price of passports.

Another point, Mr. Speaker, is that each year there is a greater ratio of our passports issued to students travelling in groups, through schools and universities, on tours of other countries. This is the youth segment of our society, least able to afford increased fees for government documents. But at the same time they are the segment most in need of building their experiences and developing their education. Therefore why penalize them another 20 per cent increase in the cost of their passports?

This is a timely topic tonight. This question has exposed the government's hypocrisy and duplicity. The government is saying to the people who administer the controls, "We'll tell you what to do, and what you can or cannot do, but we, the government, will do what we like".

Well, Mr. Speaker, the government will not get away with this arrogant and cavalier policy. Controls can be made to work, and the first place the government should start is right here in Ottawa. I say to the Prime Minister and whoever is answering for him and/or the Department of External Affairs tonight on this question—cut out your contempt for your guidelines. Let us start by holding the price of passports issued to Canadian citizens at the present satisfactory price of $10, and show the Canadian people that the government can practise what it preaches in its doctrine of monetary restraints.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have a certain difficulty in understanding the line of reasoning in the speech made by the honourable gentleman. He spoke at the same time of the Taj Mahal and the arrogance of the policy in Bill C-20. Let me put the honourable member straight in respect of Bill C-20 first of all. It is a good bill, and if I had been the minister responsible I venture to say I would have submitted to the House a reduction to two years from five years for the obtaining of citizenship.

Returning to the problem raised concerning the increased cost of passports may I say that the passport office is a non-profit agency operating on a revolving fund basis, and required to meeting operating expenses from the revenue generated from passport fees. When it became evident early this year that current passport fees would not be sufficient to cover future operating costs beginning with 1975-76—and I do not think I need go into the detail for the honourable gentleman—the passport office sought and received Treasury Board authority to increase the fee to $15 beginning January 1, 1976.

The objective was to develop a fee structure that would recover costs averaged over at least five years to avoid annual or more regular increases that bring substantial new fee introductory costs, estimated at $140,000, and delays and service inconvenience to the public.

When the fee was last increased in 1969 a large majority of the public were either not aware of or ignored the new price and submitted applications with the old fee. This necessitated correspondence with applicants, which in turn delayed passport issuance and created serious public inconvenience to the point that normal passport service was seriously disrupted for a period of months. I do not think my colleague opposite would like to see that happen again. To avoid a recurrence of this situation the objective is to stabilize the fee for as long a period of time as possible and to advertise extensively any changes.

When the anti-inflation guidelines were announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on October 14, 1975, it was agreed to scale the fee change down to $12 beginning March 1, 1976, to conform with the government's policy, notwithstanding the additional costs and public inconvenience that would be created unfortunately by having to increase the fee again in less than two years. I think that is enough to say, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SUGGESTED RELOCATION OF PROPOSED PIGGYBACK TERMINAL IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour once again to rise to debate with the parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), who always promises he will check into my queries and provide an answer, but from whom so far I have never received any answers.

On December 3 I put a question with regard to the CNR locating a piggyback terminal on Wilkes Avenue in south west Winnipeg. This subject has been debated at length at the municipal level for over a year, and the local Community committee and residents are thoroughly opposed to a piggyback terminal being located so close to the residential area.

There are now two additional reasons why the terminal should not be located on Wilkes Avenue. Last week the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Danson) announced a $436,000 loan for the Manitoba Housing and Renewal Corporation for the purchase of land for housing west of the proposed piggyback terminal. A housing development and a piggyback terminal adjacent to one another are in no way compatible. There will be heavy truck traffic in the area as well as diesel engines shunting box cars, and no doubt the terminal will have to expand in the future, thus compounding the problem. Second, the city of Winnipeg agreed last Thursday to send a telegram to the federal government to register the city's position and to ask that an order in council permitting the construction of the terminal be rescinded.

I feel that the federal government is setting a bad example in this case, as apparently there has not been proper consultation between CNR, the Ministry of Transport, the Department of Urban Affairs, and the Department of the Environment.

The Department of the Environment does environment impact studies on any new federal government developments, and I believe this piggyback terminal was its first project under a new order in council calling for an environmental study on new developments. I would say that the Department of the Environment is off to a bad start on its first project. In their report its officials state:

> The currently underdeveloped area west of Kenaston may be affected by sound emission from the proposed terminal.

We now find that a 220 acre housing development by the federal government is to be built. No doubt hundreds of children will reside in the development, and there will be danger to them from the heavy traffic generated by the terminal. The Department of the Environment should now review its study. Also, the area north of the proposed site contains $1.25 million of installed services for housing. Further services at a cost of $1.50 million will shortly be installed. Present plans call for housing developments to extend right up to the CNR mainline which is adjacent to the piggyback terminal.

I am sure the parliamentary secretary can see by now that this is no place for a piggyback freight terminal, and I hope he will impress this upon the minister and have him instruct CNR to look for a more suitable location. CPR was allowed to construct a freight terminal adjacent to a residential area in north Winnipeg some years ago and has since expanded, and the traffic and noise are unbearable.

Another reason why the terminal should not be located on Wilkes Avenue is that the main artery to the terminal at Kenaston Boulevard has already 80 per cent to 90 per cent of the traffic it can bear during peak periods, and the addition of tractor-trailors going to and from the piggyback terminal would make the traffic flow situation impossible.

Also, a number of residential subdivisions are to be built off Kenaston Boulevard, and a neighbourhood shopping centre is to be built to accommodate these housing developments. It is becoming more and more apparent that a piggyback freight terminal will not blend into the area for very obvious reasons.

The total number of residential units to be built in the immediate area is approximately 2,198, bringing the total population of the area of 73.3 acres to between 5,000 and 6,000 people. So you can see that CNR and the Department of the Environment have done no long range planning.

In addition, the Fort Garry-Saint Vital Bridge has just been approved and will be extended to Lagimodiere Boulevard and Kenaston Boulevard, making it possible for the trans-Canada highway to be routed up Kenaston on completion of the bridge.

In a city of Winnipeg traffic study dated 1973 it is stated that Kenaston and Grant regional streets will be incapable of absorbing future growth due to Kenaston Estates housing development being completed in 1983. This report did not take into consideration the piggyback or the Fort Garry-Saint Vital bridge traffic on Kenaston. Also, a small herd of white tailed deer is known to inhabit Assiniboia Forrest Park and areas adjacent to the terminal. Housing developments will be less harmful to them than engines shunting freight cars.

Any way we look at it the CNR proposed site was a short sighted choice. Within a few years the surrounding area will be developed residentially, and pressure will mount to have the terminal moved out. It would be better not to put it there in the first place. Locating the piggyback near the west perimeter highway would be much more acceptable to the local residents, and much more desirable for truckers who would then not have to fight bumper to bumper traffic.

I strongly suggest the four ministers involved, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp), who should have received the telegram from the city of Winnipeg requesting that the terminal be relocated, should instruct CNR to act accordingly in the name of sensible, long range planning to protect the citizens of the area.

I also understand there has been similar poor planning in the Edmonton area where rail terminals have been allowed to locate in residential areas. Hon. members will be hearing more of this in the near future.

In closing I should like to say that the local residents advisory group chairman, Mrs. Donna Mae Yeo, said at the most recent hearing that CNR officials presented half facts which were beneficial to them, leaving out those which were detrimental.

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), and I are becoming regular partners at this particular point in the proceedings of the House, and I welcome the opportunity of responding to one of his concerns again this evening. As I begin, I draw to his attention the answer which the minister gave to him on this point in this House just a very few days ago when he first raised it, and that was that the minister would be happy to engage in consultations about the problem the hon. member has raised, but the minister did not think it was appropriate to rush immediately to conclusions before those consultations had in fact begun. So I am a little hesitant tonight to proceed much farther down the road upon which the hon. member has embarked because, in a very real sense, that would be prejudging the conclusion to any particular consultations which may be undertaken.

However, I should like to explain the situation as it was known to CNR and to the ministry prior to the most recent development which the hon. member has mentioned. First, I should mention that the CNR main line through Winnipeg passes by the Canadian forces base between Kenaston and Wilkes Avenue. At present there are no residences within one quarter to one half a mile from that line. The area in question has been zoned for heavy industry. The CN development has been categorized as light industry. A federal government environmental study has been completed, and it recommended approval of the location as having no deleterious impact on the community. On this basis the federal order in council was passed.

A noise level study was conducted in the area, and the level at the proposed yard was found to be lower than on the streets of the Tuxedo area. The city of Winnipeg committee of the environment approved the location in 1974. The CN has investigated alternate sites, none of which has been found to meet the requirements of either the railway or the community. The CN has entered into a lease with the owner of the land selected.

My hon. friend invited the minister just a very few days ago to engage in further consultations with respect to this particular point. The minister has agreed to do so, and I do not think further comment should be made at this moment.

Mr. Paproski: That's what they said in Edmonton.

Mr. McKenzie: The environmental study is outdated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:22 p.m.
