Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, my point is almost the same point as my hon. colleague. The NDP House Leader quoted me as saying in Maclean's magazine of July 18 something that I would have a hard time to explain. As usual, the NDP does not always read the whole article. However, I must confess this time that even if he had read it, it is not exactly what I said. Maclean's magazine did not report everything I said. What I said was: "No matter, $8 billion is a lot of cash. It is very hard to explain, but once you have the explanation that it is over a 25-year period and it is only $300 million a year, I have no problem at all. It is still a lot of cash but I have no problem at all to solve that. To update the fleet will cost more than that". I also said that at least 65 per cent of the project will be Canadian built and will create 55,000 person-years of work.

• (1540)

I just want to make it clear that the NDP did not quote me correctly and that Maclean's magazine did not quote the whole line. I have no problem in defending that. It is very easy to explain. It is too bad that my hon. colleague did not at least read the full line.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West on a point of order. I hope the Hon. Member for Regina West is not going to continue this afternoon's debate on defence.

Mr. Benjamin: Far be it from me to do that. I only want to quote the bard. Me thinks the last two speakers doth protest too much.

Mr. Speaker: On that note perhaps we could move to Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) had been recognized. Since he is not in the House I will recognize the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, east or west, in the case of Regina the twain shall meet.

I am delighted to have an opportunity to attempt to persuade the Government to change its mind on legislation, the whole foundation of which is based on the worst kind of mythology. I want to deal with some of the specific points of the Government and those outside of Parliament who have attempted to justify the privatization of one of the best airlines in the world on grounds of business management. The five-year business plan of Air Canada itself shows why the legislation is unjustified, unnecessary, and a waste of taxpayers' money, the money of Canadian investors, and money which otherwise could have gone to Air Canada.

I will deal first with Air Canada's five-year business plan which takes it up to 1991 inclusive. Air Canada's business plan specifically excludes any privatization or the selling of shares to the general public. Air Canada specifically states that its five-year plan does not taken into account privatization. Air Canada's business plan says:

> Profitability improves throughout the plan as does the debt/equity ratio because existing debt is retired and additional debt is not required. By 1990 the return on equity achieves the Corporate objective. Retained earnings grow steadily throughout the planning period.

That is without this Bill, Mr. Speaker. Air Canada has not changed its five-year plan since this Bill was brought in. Air

Canada is still operating on the basis of its five year business plan, which is without any privatization.

It has been stated repeatedly by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and the two previous Ministers that the purpose of privatization is to give Air Canada capital to buy new planes. That may be a valid position except that Air Canada, in its five-year plan, says:

> —Air Canada will proceed with fleet renewal to take advantage of operating efficiencies available through new aircraft. The funds required for this multi-billion dollar investment will come largely from internally generated funds and borrowing. The airline's current drive to substantially increase earnings will therefore be maintained to generate the corporate share of the funds needed.

There is not a single word in Air Canada's own business plan about funds from the sale of shares.

It has been alleged by spokesmen from the government side, from outside this House, and from competing airlines, that Air Canada has the backing of the national Government, has access to government borrowings, et cetera.

My colleagues and good friends opposite forget that Air Canada itself says that it has received no equity infusion from the Government since 1977. That is 11 years ago. It says that it has received no government subsidies since 1962.

How does the Government explain its case that it is necessary to sell shares to the public in a company it already owns? That is another Barnum and Bailey con game if I ever saw one. As evidenced by Air Canada's own words, it does not need a nickel, has not received a nickel from the Government in equity since 1977, and has not received a nickel of subsidies since 1962.

Mr. Malone: Why do they want to be privatized?

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend asks why they want to be privatized. Mr. Jeanniot and Mr. Taylor of Air Canada are exactly the same as Mr. Lawless, the Chief Executive Officer of Canadian National who told the Transport Committee: "We'll take the capital money any way we can get it". I will explain to my hon. friend in a moment how Air Canada can and should be getting it. I will be happy to elucidate for my hon. friend.

The other reasons given for the legitimacy of privatizing Air Canada are better management, flexibility in management, and corporate decision making overnight without having to go to the Cabinet, Government, or Parliament of Canada. I raised this matter in the Transport Committee with officials of the Government, the Minister, and officials of Air Canada.

I asked whether Air Canada felt any restrictions on flexibility or management decisions in their daily and monthly operations. Air Canada said no. In fact, the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall), who I believe was a member of the Transport Committee at the time, will know that the Liberal Government in 1977 decided that Air Canada should operate in a business-like fashion. According to the previous Government and the present Government, operating in a business-like fashion means one has to make a buck and not ask the Government for money. Air Canada has not asked for money, nor has it received any money.

When I asked that question in committee, the answer was no. It has not operated any differently than any other airline in this country. In fact, when Air Canada hears that Canadian Airlines International or Wardair holds a seat sale, Air Canada management has all the flexibility to announce the same fare or even a lower one overnight. When Air Canada announces a discount fare or seat sale, the other airlines can act overnight. There is absolutely no difference between any of the airlines in this country in terms of flexibility and management decisions. None of them conduct their affairs any differently, whether they are privately or publicly owned.

Therefore, the Government's argument for better management and flexibility is sheer nonsense. That argument falls on its face in front of the actual experience of Air Canada.

Air Canada has received international awards and gold medals as one of the best managed airlines in the world, but the Tories cannot stand that because it has the words "Crown corporation" in front of it. I would be quite happy to amend the Air Canada Act to eliminate the words "Crown corporation" if they would like. The point is, however, that it is a public utility that is owned and controlled by Canadians through its Parliament and its Government. That is the way it should be.

The Government and others in the private sector, particularly stockbrokers, have suggested that the public and employees can buy shares as a good investment in Air Canada. If it is a good investment, which it is, why would we not want the Government of Canada, on behalf of the taxpayers, to increase its investment?

Mr. Malone: It does not pay a dividend.

Mr. Benjamin: Exactly! My hon. friend has made my argument. In the last 11 years Air Canada showed net profits of $102.5 million, with $45 million last year and $40 million the year before. What did the shareholders in Canada get by way of a dividend? Not a nickel. The record speaks for itself. It has not paid any dividends. Surely the taxpayers of this country, as investors, are just as much entitled to an opportunity for a return on their investment as anyone who buys a share on the Toronto stockmarket or anywhere else that these gamblers operate. That is another nonsensical argument put forward by the Government as justification for selling to Canadians shares in something they already own.

The Government obviously intends to turn its social and economic responsibility for a national airline over to private interests so that it can continue to say, as the former Minister of Transport said, it will not interfere with the day-to-day operations and management decisions of the CNR or Air Canada. They want to place that responsibility with those in the private sector so that the federal Government can avoid the responsibility for a national airline.

What are the costs of this privatization? I have been reading the figures about the brokerage fees and commissions when the British Government privatized several companies in that country. While I do not have anything to do with shares or the stockmarket, from what little I have been able to find out from some of those in the business, if 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada are sold for $300 million the brokerage fees and commissions would come from that amount which Air Canada will receive. If the brokerage fees and commissions amount to $30 million on $300 million in share sales, Air Canada will get $270 million. That is somewhat short of what the Government claims it needs to buy new airplanes. In fact, Air Canada has said that it does not need that money to buy new airplanes.

Any net revenue taken in on the sale of shares will not be used to buy aircraft, it will be used to reduce the $2.3 billion debt of Air Canada, with assets in excess of that, in order to make it more attractive to sell off the rest of the company. This charade has gone on long enough. This is a corporation built and payed for by the taxpayers of Canada. They are entitled to a return on their investment but they are not getting it. The Government has put up nothing else but the wrong reasons for privatization. It is not to buy planes. It is to reduce debt. It is to reduce pressure on the Government.

The law already provides that the authorized capital for Air Canada is $750 million. The people of Canada in fact have less than half of that, $329 million, and the Government already has the authority to purchase additional share capital for Air Canada even to reduce debt or buy planes. It is already there.

This Bill is totally unnecessary. Its foundation is mythology. It is terrible when a democratic socialist has to teach Conservatives something about sound business practices. I hope the Government will have second thoughts and withdraw this Bill and not deal with it any further.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank all Hon. Members opposite who have stayed in the Chamber to hear my remarks with respect to this particular Bill. I particularly want to thank those Members from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island who obviously have a great interest in the subject matter and want to hear a viewpoint which is probably shared by them. Unfortunately, they have not found the courage nor, indeed, the conviction to stand up in the House of Commons and condemn what is best known in Atlantic Canada as a sell-off of a very important ingredient to the economy of Atlantic Canada.

The events surrounding Bill C-129 in coming to the House of Commons are indeed disturbing, not only to Members of Parliament but to the general public and various interest groups across this country. The legislative committee on this particular Bill spent approximately one day contemplating its advantages and disadvantages.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), the official spokesperson for our Party, has demonstrated very clearly the position of our Party and why we are opposing this Bill. He has received numerous complaints from Canadians across this country who wanted that particular committee to review the Bill in detail and to hear their views on the importance of a nationally owned airline. Notwithstanding the substance contained in the McGrath report on parliamentary reform, the Government, which promised democracy, openness and fairness, has decided to say no to the commitments it made some time ago and to push through this Bill in a very quick fashion.

In addition to allowing only one day for the legislative committee, the Government refused Canadians in those regions of the country an opportunity to express their views in their own region. The committee did not travel to Atlantic Canada, western Canada, Ontario, Québec or British Columbia. In fact to no part of this country did the committee travel.

Transport 2000 expressed it best when it said: "By selecting witnesses from exclusive airline management, organized labour and academic circles, the legislative committee overlooked Air Canada's most important constituency, the travelling public". How true that is. An airline conceived and implemented by a national government to service all the country is now in the hands of a Government which does not wish to hear the views of ordinary Canadians nor, indeed, those Canadians who use the airline the most. This is another example of a Government which is wedded to a concept of privatization notwithstanding the consequences. It is a blind and ill-conceived attitude on the Government's part.

Hon. Members opposite do not understand, nor do they appreciate, some of the institutions that a national government must put in place in order to sustain and enhance national unity and opportunities throughout the country. Partial privatization of this Crown corporation, I believe, will have negative effects on the various regions of this country. We have all heard Members opposite, as well as those on this side, speak glowingly and with a great deal of passion and concern in terms of trying to provide additional economic opportunities in their regions. We now have a Government which is backing off the very important clause contained in the Constitution, equality of opportunity. This legislation will, in the short run as well as in the long run, decrease the type of service we have in our regions. I speak primarily of my own region in Atlantic Canada. It will have an immediate as well as a long-term impact.

It is one thing for the Government to suggest that by selling 45 per cent of the shares, which value is yet to be determined, I am told, but taking the hypothetical figure of $300 million, it is certainly not going to be sufficient to embark upon the purchase of new aircraft, which we are told may cost to the tune of $2 billion to $3 billion.

Air Canada will only want to have those routes which are exceptionally profitable. For example, flights from Halifax to Toronto are normally full to capacity. As a result, those flights, and those flights directly to Montreal, take place on a daily basis. They enable Air Canada as a Crown corporation to have a profitable margin on those flights so much so as to enable it to extend out into the hinterlands of the country to service such places as Corner Brook, Stephenville, Newfoundland, Yarmouth, Summerside, Charlottetown, Fredericton, Moncton and communities of that nature. Not all of the runs of Air Canada are lucrative enough to sustain its operations, so its most profitable operations such as the Halifax-Toronto run or the Halifax-Montreal run generate the needed revenues to provide the necessary, and I underline "necessary", service to the regions of this country.

One does not have to be a schoolteacher, a Philadelphia lawyer or a graduate of a business school to understand that those of us in the regions of the country, such as the region of Atlantic Canada, require the services of a national airline operating in our communities. Not only does a national airline provide service but it provides the necessary infrastructure which business, investment and the ordinary economic spin-offs need.

But what has the Government said to the regions of the country? It has said: "We are going to privatize Air Canada". Thereafter what will happen? You will see, Mr. Speaker, that the jet service into places such as Corner Brook, Newfoundland, Moncton, Fredericton and Sydney, which is in my own constituency, will be terminated. That will have an impact on economic developments in those communities. For what? The concept of privatization, a concept being espoused and expounded by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

What is even more alarming is what the Prime Minister said on January 14, 1985. I do not want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, what my constituents think of this particular statement or the person who made it. The Prime Minister said: "Air Canada is not for sale. Canada needs a national airline. There is a possibility that shares in Air Canada will be sold to the public, but the Government would certainly retain a majority interest". I am not going to repeat, because I think it would be very unparliamentary, what my constituents were saying when I was in my constituency on the weekend. The language that they used is not, shall we say, very supportive. It is not very favourable to the Prime Minister or to the image of the Prime Minister and his Government.

On April 12, 1987, the Deputy Prime Minister, when he made a statement in the House of Commons, stated that the legislation would permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public, which is essentially the first phase. Once again, as we have seen from time to time in this Chamber, the Government says one thing and then does exactly the opposite. This is an affront to those regions of the country which do not share in the bounty and the wealth that the country has. The results will affect us and affect us negatively.

My colleague, our spokesperson, quite succinctly pointed out all the difficulties that we will have with regard to the privatization of Air Canada.

I just wish to underline for those Members who are in the Chamber and, indeed, for those Canadians who may be viewing this particular debate, that we said that, when it comes to regional economic development and when it comes to maximizing the opportunities for those of us who live in non-economically viable communities, the erosion of Air Canada as we now know it will will result in the eventual lessening of service to those communities. It will happen sure as next year will be 1989. Governments are very much aware of that because they will cherry pick, the poor ones will be sold off to some other form of airline, which may or may not for a period of time use those runs for their purposes, and thereafter services will be terminated in their entirety to those various communities.

Air Canada was a symbol of national unity. It enhanced the feelings that we are one country, one nation, linked by our railroads, something which has since been terminated, and linked by an airline which the Government is trying to get away from. There are not only economic reasons why we in the Opposition are opposed to this measure, but there are other fundamental reasons as well.

There will be a reduction in the number of jobs as a result of this partial privatization. Earlier my colleague talked about the centralization of the reservations system. In fact, Air Canada's system in the United States is already centralized in New York. The day will come, and I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is not very far away—perhaps within the next fiscal year—when there will be nothing more than a centralization of reservations in the country, perhaps in Toronto or in Montreal.

What will happen to the rest of the country? There will be lay-offs in Moncton, which has already sustained more than its fair share of lay-offs with regard to the CN shops. There will be the lay-off of individuals at facilities such as those in Sydney and in Yarmouth. There will be lay-offs in Summerside and in Charlottetown. There will be lay-offs as well in Newfoundland, in parts of Corner Brook and Stephenville. This privatization will certainly result in the loss of jobs as a result of the centralization of reservations.

Airline stewards may have to leave their families in order to locate in one central area, otherwise they may have to give up their high-paying jobs. Employees on feeder lines will no longer be unionized. Their wages could fall from $14 to less than $8 an hour. Let us talk about that for a moment. That is a very sizeable decrease in the wages that are paid to union members.

Those opposite ought to realize that it is the working person who is really the backbone of the Canadian economy. The more money one can pay an individual on an hourly rate, the more he or she can make a significant contribution. It is those people who have the surplus moneys to buy the durable goods, something that makes the economy go around. It is better to give to those producers and those workers than to lay it on in terms of corporate profits to Canadian banks or multinational pharmaceutical companies. That is where Canadians should be placing their dollars, which gives a true picture of a Canadian investing in his own country because of additional dollars.

Work will be contracted out. No longer will the services of many employees be needed. No assurances are coming forward with respect to how many employees will be retained in Winnipeg, although the legislation states that the maintenance base will not be closed. One would think that if one can give a commitment to keep the base open, then one can certainly give a commitment in terms of the number of employees who will be employed there. But, again, that identifies the hidden agenda of the Government.

We have heard many times before in this Chamber the Deputy Prime Minister say that there would be no lay-offs in Moncton when it came to CN. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), previously the Minister of Transport, stated to the communities of Glace Bay and Port Hawkesbury that there would be no closure of their water plants, only to find that within a short period of time that was changed. There is no assurance that 500 employees at the financial branch located in Winnipeg will continue to be located there. The Government cannot give the community, the municipality, and the residents a clear legislative undertaking that that particular branch will remain in operation in Winnipeg. The Government is saying one thing, and on the other hand it does something that is entirely the opposite.

There will also be downgrading of services to less profitable routes, for example, Halifax to Sydney, frequency of flights versus the quality of the service, jets carrying disabled people, express freight, and industrial machinery.

There are a number of serious issues in those smaller runs. I mentioned the economics, but a great number of individuals travel from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to Halifax in order to attend the Victoria General Hospital for proper medical care. Now they have to get on what we call little puddle-jumpers. This is inconvenient, difficult, and requires them to wait at wickets where there is no seating, if they are disabled, particularly in Halifax airport. Perhaps some Members are saying that that is not a major problem. It is a major problem when a substantial number of individuals and patients must go from one area of the province to another on a regular basis. By downgrading and doing away with the jet service once again we are hurting those individuals who need the assistance of a Government, and of a caring Government.

There has been no opportunity for parliamentary scrutiny of the public share offering. The decision with respect to the value of Air Canada is being given carte blanche to investment dealers. Is it not nice that the investment dealers will get a bonanza of a return for their efforts? If it is $300 million, they will probably pick up $30 million. That is not a bad days pay for some of those investment brokers. Canadians have not had the opportunity to go forward and state their views as to what they believe to be the appropriate amount.

In conclusion, the privatization of Air Canada and the method the Government has chosen will be difficult for those of us who live in Atlantic Canada. The difficulties are compounded, because it will directly interfere with provincial, federal, and municipal Governments in their attempts to maximize and enhance economic opportunities. There will be a lessening of service to those communities that I have mentioned such as Sydney. There will be a major inconvenience to those in the travelling public, whether they are patients going to the Victoria General Hospital, or small business people who must travel to the capital city for a variety of reasons.

I hope that the Government in its conclusions and in reviewing what it has done will come to its senses and recognize the suggestions that have been made by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), who has been our official spokesperson and who has made numerous suggestions on how to enhance a situation which we believe could have a very serious and negative economic impact on our entire region.

Mr. Angus: I listened with interest to the Member in his participation in this debate, and I would like to raise a question that government Members have been putting as their reaction to speeches by the Opposition, and that is, the comment and the reality that Air Canada has not been the airline flying into the smaller communities, but that it has been one of the private sector airlines. Therefore, in the twisted logic of the Conservatives, they think that by privatizing Air Canada that will change.

From his experience in Atlantic Canada, could the Hon. Member indicate why Air Canada was not in there and aggressively providing that service? Was it because of the mandate of the Government of the day? Was it because there were private sector services there? How does the Hon. Member see that being affected by the change in Air Canada? Will we see Air Canada all of a sudden expand into those smaller communities, or will we see a situation where nothing changes?

Mr. McMillan: What a loaded question.

Mr. Dingwall: It is becoming more and more apparent that questions of that nature, which are to the point and rather forthright in terms of their substance, have to be addressed by all Members. In communities in Atlantic Canada Air Canada has provided the service. It has led the way and taken the initiative to provide service to those communities, both in terms of passenger and cargo service. Transportation and air transportation must be first and foremost a major part of any economic model. Because the Government of the day is urging Air Canada to get out of those smaller runs which do not generate the same profit as the big runs, for example, from Halifax to Toronto, or Halifax to Montreal, it is being given out to new airlines to pick up those routes.

A very good example of that has happened. A new company called Air Bras-d'Or, funded by the Government of Canada, opened its doors and advertised that it was going to transfer people from Sydney to Halifax to Port Hawkesbury. What happened to Air Bras-d'Or? There is no longer an Air Bras-d'Or company servicing that particular area, because it could not generate sustainable profits over a period of time to stay in existence. However, with a national airline reaping the profits from the major routes, it then had the ability and cash flow to service smaller communities.

I guess that the Government is only concerned with that corridor of Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver. I would have thought that representatives from Charlottetown would have been so concerned that they would have stood up for the people of Charlottetown after a Liberal Government put in place one of the nicest airports in all of Atlantic Canada. We will find within the next fiscal year that there will be lay-offs of employees at the Charlottetown airport, and we will find that the service will decrease substantially. We will also find that the economic benefits and opportunities will decrease accordingly because the Government has failed to keep a national airline serving all of Canada, not only the plush corridors of this country.

Mr. McMillan: Charlottetown is a plush corridor.

Mr. Hawkes: I am motivated to make a few comments. This debate is déjà vu. This is the thirteenth privatization of this Government, and I hear the same predictions about lay-offs from the same speakers. I hear the same predictions about drop in service from the same speakers. I challenge the Hon. Member to stand in his place and name one of our privatizations that has produced lay-offs rather than increased jobs, increased service, and increased customers. That is the characteristic of each and every privatization undertaken by the Government.

• (1630)

The same thing will happen with the privatization of Air Canada. The deregulation which this Government has accomplished has produced association between feeder airlines and the larger companies. Employees are better paid, more satisfied. There are more services to more communities through more flights. The safety record is outstanding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: The reason is really quite simple. No company makes a profit without customers who pay the bills. In the airline business it is service, schedules, equipment that attract customers. The airplanes are better. It is people happy in their jobs, who satisfy customers when they come in. In the airline business it is the safety record.

Some Canadians are still afraid to fly. The safety record is an important aspect in attracting those customers and producing those thoughts. This privatization will serve consumers and employees well and customers very well, indeed.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, responding briefly to the challenge of the Hon. Member—and I take the challenge seriously—he has asked what Crown corporation or what agency of the Government of Canada has been privatized where job loss has occurred. The Hon. Member must be living in a dream world. The fact of the matter is, CN Route was privatized to become Route Canada. It has closed its terminal in many communities across this country, in particular in Sydney, Nova Scotia. It has closed its entire operation, throwing 22 people out of employment. That is what it has done. So do not tell me that these privatization matters that you people are engaged with, along with the Air Canada privatization, will not result in job loss. We have ample evidence to suggest, beyond a shadow of a doubt, that that will occur.

The Hon. Member is smirking over there, but he knows only too well that places like Charlottetown, Sydney, Moncton, Fredericton, Stephenville and Corner Brook will have major lay-offs within the next fiscal year. If he does not have the guts to stand up in the House of Commons to—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): And de Havilland fired hundreds of people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in the third reading debate on Bill C-129, an Act to sell out Air Canada.

I want to deal with a couple of matters, some of which my colleague who spoke just before me has touched on, in particular, the interrelationship between the privatization plans of this Government and its deregulation plans. It is acting in concert, and one is the natural extension of the other. We started with the Liberals before the last election floating the concept of deregulation in the air industry. Changes were put in place to ease the restrictions to allow carriers to get in and out of the business much more readily and to get in and out of routes much more readily, in and out in the sense of providing services to it.

When we speak of the evolving hub-and-spoke system that has been developed in Canada, much as it did in the United States and much as we predicted, we are finding less competition, not more, as a result of deregulation.

We now have the two major airlines, Air Canada and Canadian Airlines, owning, directly or indirectly, small feeder services that will service the hub airports of Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Vancouver, Thunder Bay, Winnipeg and what have you, and then transferring on to the major carriers.

My colleague made reference to the problems in his area about individuals who have to fly in order to obtain medical services. One of the things that we found during our hearings into deregulation, particularly when we talked to people in the smaller communities or in the communities that were in such a geographical location that they had to fly to hospital, was that you could not get the same kind of service on an Air Canada DC-9 as you could on a Canadian partner that seats 19 people. You are unable to get a wheelchair or a stretcher in to transport an ill individual to those communities.

Although it is not directly related to the privatization of Air Canada, it certainly is part and parcel of the approach and the end result of the privatization deregulation push in this Government.

Let me deal with the Act itself.

An Hon. Member: How come Canadian Airlines would prefer to take smoking off their flights?

Mr. Angus: They saw the writing on the wall. This Government did not have the guts at that point in time to send a directive to Air Canada saying that that is what they would like them to do.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Don't be silly.

Mr. Angus: It took a New Democratic Member of Parliament, who had the courage for years to plant the seeds about that issue and was able to get legislation passed in this House, and in the other House, to ban smoking on domestic flights. That is what it took. It was not the Government that moved; it was a New Democratic Member that moved.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Don't be silly.

Mr. Angus: Now that I have their attention, let me go into the suggestions that my colleagues have put forward in terms of changes to the Bill, suggestions which unfortunately were not accepted by this House, by this Government in particular, which would have made what we think is a very bad Bill, a very flawed Bill, a little bit better, at least in providing some protection to the taxpayers.

The one that I was most interested in was the limiting of foreign ownership in Air Canada. The Bill currently follows international trends or conditions that maximize by 25 per cent the ownership of any airline in Canada. That is similar to a provision in the United States.

I gather that during committee hearings the committee was warned that the American Government is now moving to increase the allowable percentage and, because of the trade deal, which calls for harmonization between our two countries, that in fact Canada would have to follow suit. So if the Americans go to 40 per cent ownership allowable for foreigners, Canada would have to do the same thing. It would apply directly to Air Canada.

We tried to change that. We were worried that we might have a situation where one of our two airlines, whether it is Canadian or Air Canada, becomes acquired in large part by an American carrier and we develop into a hub and spoke system that is based not in our Canadian cities, where the hubs are, but in some of the major U.S. cities, and we find Canadians having to travel south to Minneapolis or Washington or New York before they could move back into Canada to another point. This is something that Sir John A. Macdonald made sure would not happen to the rail system when he arranged for the financing and development of the CPR to keep this country together. He was concerned about the north-south movement when what he really wanted was an east-west movement to keep this country whole. I would encourage his descendants in the Tory Party to rethink perhaps what they are doing in that regard.

The other amendment was to try to put into fact what the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), in tabling the Bill, suggested was there, and that is to limit the actual share offering. As we know, the legislation is open-ended. It could allow—and in fact the Minister has stated that at some point it will allow—100 per cent of Air Canada's shares to be sold to the private sector, to private individuals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: I hear "hear, hear". I am not surprised that some of the Conservative government Members want to see the whole airline sold. Given the way the legislation has been written and the directive given by the Government to Air Canada to vote its majority 55 per cent share with whatever the wishes of that minority group are, maybe it is just as well that they went the whole route. It is a half-baked pie that we have here. We tried to put in the legislation the restriction that only 45 per cent of the shares be offered to the public.

Let me deal with the philosophical aspect of this matter. Why do New Democrats oppose the sale of this Crown corporation? Is it because we like to own things as governments? Some people think that that is how we operate. Or is it because there is a need in a country like Canada to give the elected representatives of the people a chance to influence trade and travel patterns within the country? Yes, we have regulations that provide some level of control on transportation companies, airlines, railway and trucking companies. But if you give up the other element in the equation that government policy initiatives be directed through a Crown corporation to provide services to the far North or to ensure there is a cross subsidization between the very lucrative Montreal-Ottawa-Toronto triangle and some of the smaller outlying region, there is a need to say to the Board of Directors of Air Canada that the bottom line cannot be their only consideration. Service has to be there not only to the major centres, to which many business people travel, but also to the Thunder Bays, the Sault Ste. Maries, the Sudburys of Ontario and elsewhere. The test of public convenience and necessity, which was there prior to deregulation, required an airline by regulation to provide a certain level of service. Perhaps it is a service beyond the economic capabilities of the community. We have seen in northwestern Ontario Dryden which has lost its jet service, a service it had for a number of years, a service very important to the economy of that part of northwestern Ontario.

Mr. Orlikow: Brandon too.

Mr. Angus: It was a symbol of being part of the mainstream. It is down to NorOntAir, Air Ontario and a Canadian partner, the very small lines. Dryden does not feel the same kind of attachment it had before. My colleague reminds me that Brandon used to be on a route connecting through Thunder Bay which provided jet service which has been taken away.

There are some economic impacts that go beyond whether or not a company makes a profit. While obviously we do not want to see government corporations losing money, we think it makes sense to force them to make it their mandate to provide those kinds of services. Through deregulation and privatization we have lost the tools we once had to ensure there is that kind of service.

There is another area we were concerned about. Under a policy direction, Air Canada has certain responsibilities with respect to the Official Languages Act to ensure the appropriate mix of our two official languages across the country. There is concern that as a private sector company there would not be the same pressure or controls. We want to ensure that the Commissioner of Official Languages is able to continue the monitoring process and what is still our national airline will provide service in both languages that we have come to accept as appropriate.

My Party and those we represent are concerned about privatization. We see it being done not for sound economic reasons, but more to satisfy a certain philosophical approach that is represented by the Conservative Party.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Which is sound.

Mr. Angus: We have seen Air Canada allowed to operate more and more as a private sector company without the benefit of legislation. We have not as taxpayers had to provide any money to Air Canada for many, many years. It has been self-sufficient, which is the goal of any Crown corporation, as long as it continued to provide services. We know from the documents available that the share assets of Air Canada provided by the Government of Canada have not been drawn upon. Money is available allowing Air Canada to refurbish its fleet. There are all sorts of exciting and innovative ways of acquiring equipment that are not capital intensive and could have been utilized to ensure that Air Canada was able to grow appropriately. Yes, it would have cost money, but it would have cost a lot less than eight or ten nuclear submarines.

It is important as a symbol that we have an airline that is ours, not some small group or an individual or two. Air Canada belongs to all of us, every taxpayer today, and those yet to be born. We are the owners. This great movement to privatize Air Canada is not giving it or selling it to the people, it is selling Air Canada to a select few, taking it out of the control of the many through their elected representatives and giving it to a small section of our population and to people outside of our country. I do not think that is right, Mr. Speaker. I do not think that is an appropriate policy direction for the Government of Canada to take. That is why I and my colleagues will be voting against this Bill as we did at second reading.

We attempted to make the changes in committee and at report stage to make the Bill a little better. None of the amendments were accepted, even though I think they were appropriate safeguards that even the government Members should have considered more seriously. I think, because changes were coming from the NDP, Tory Members say, "Whatever the NDP wants is wrong and we will ram the Bill through in any case". That is not the appropriate way to do things.

There are no guarantees for the workers, no collective agreement job security clause. The guarantee for maintenance bases is weak, and other employees such as ticket agents and aircrew are not included. Flight attendants, who traditionally have had a number of bases in Canada from which to work, are not protected. Air Canada is being privatized with an eye on the bottom line. Air Canada could easily say to those people who live in western and Atlantic Canada, "Sorry we are not making as much money this year as we would like to. We will have to centralize and you will have to locate in Toronto and Montreal. You will have to leave your home in Winnipeg or Vancouver because it is more cost efficient to have you coming out of the major hub". Then there is the possibility of greater and greater foreign control. You have a situation developing of a privately operated airport terminal in Toronto. What happens if the company involved in that becomes attached to one of the American companies? What are the ramifications?

It would be nice if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would phone us and tell us he has been elsewhere in his community, has spoken to the Governor General and will call an election so we can kill this Bill as well as the trade Bill. Then we can get rid of the Government that should not have been elected in the first place.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): You are history.

Mr. Angus: I am not history. I am here for a long time. I want to thank you for your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, in listening to my comments. I am sure there will be some interesting questions or comments from my colleagues across the way.

• (1650)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the doom and gloom, the spreading of fear, the attempt to make Canadians nervous about unreal situations is incredible. It goes on and on and it has no basis in knowledge and no basis in honesty.

The Hon. Member should know that to get an airline licence in Canada, a company must be Canadian-controlled. He is saying that all these foreigners will take over our airline. If he had read the Bill itself, the subject matter of this debate, he would know that those who are non-Canadians who own shares can never, no matter how many shares they own, control more than 25 per cent of Air Canada at any meeting and for any purpose. All of their shares have to be prorated in terms of voting power so that collectively they do not exceed 25 per cent. Seventy-five per cent of the votes, in perpetuity, remain in Canadian hands. That is what the Bill says.

How can the Hon. Member bring that bogyman out in this Chamber if he has read the Bill? I challenged the previous speaker to name a privatization that had led to job losses, and he came back with something called CN Route. I did not have time to respond.

CN Route was a subsidiary of a Crown corporation. The board of directors had to make a difficult decision: should it wind the company down and throw 3,000 people out on the street, or should it seek a buyer who can make it viable, who can provide work opportunities, instead of throwing 3,000 people out of work. That is what that was all about, it was about protecting Canadian jobs by finding a viable ownership to keep the company alive and healthy and to make it work.

Does this Hon. Member have any evidence of previous privatizations of this Government and this Parliament that have not led to better working conditions for employees and more employees, even hundreds more employees in the case of de Havilland, more customers, better service, better products and better situations for the free trade environment? That environment will produce hundreds of thousands of jobs for Canadians, and members of his Party keep filibustering it.

Every reputable economist in Canada, not the lackeys of a few labour union bosses, tells us that it is time to join the modern age. It is time to be productive. Canadians can and will compete, and given the opportunity of a market, there will be more jobs, there will be better jobs and there will be a higher standard of living for Canadians.

Canadians have watched this filibuster. They have seen the 19 dilatory motions occur in the month of June, 1988, and they know about the half a million dollars a day it costs to operate this Chamber, which is going down the drain on the basis of this filibuster. The Opposition's popularity is dropping like a rock because they do not represent the aspirations of the Canadian people. They listen to half a dozen labour leaders, not labour union membership, of a few rich unions. Those labour union leaders drive Cadillacs and have a different view of the world.

It is time to get back to the grassroots and listen to the people on the street. They want a healthy Air Canada. They see an opportunity to participate in ownership. They see a healthier company down the road, and regarding this filibuster on this Bill, the nation would be better served if the debate would end and we could get on to other government business.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, filibuster? Give me a break. We have had three speakers on this very important Bill. I would not call that a filibuster. Certainly I do not have the impression that we dragged out report stage last week. We certainly did not drag out second reading debate.

Let us face it. It was the Government that did a one-day wonder in committee. Is that consultation with the Canadian public to find out whether the Canadian public is in support of or against this legislation? Transport 2000 was not given an opportunity to appear, nor were other groups.

The Government knows that it cannot sell this to the Canadian people, so it wants to ram it through. It has forgotten about the tradition of this place that provides that matters of major consequence should have public and parliamentary review.

The Hon. Member talked about de Havilland. That was a company which the Government of Canada had to take over years ago. It had to pour millions into it, and as soon as it started to make a profit, the Tory logic told the Government to sell it so that someone else could get the gravy. That is incredible.

The Hon. Member goes on about the trade deal and all of these reputable economists who say how great we will do. Let me remind the Hon. Member that those studies were based on a 75-cent dollar. Where is that dollar now? Where are those jobs now? How can we turn over our country to an economic situation which has already been changed and over which we have no further control? Once again, the Government is not prepared to take the necessary steps to ensure that Canada can compete properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is a point of order on the part of the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mrs. Cossitt) to table a committee report, and I think there is unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville to do so.

Committee Reports

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, I have the honour to present Bill C-205 to the House with amendments. We had an opportunity to hear from all witnesses concerned who made a valid contribution to this Bill. Those interested were, of course, Heritage Canada, VIA Rail Canada, Canadian National Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on the same matter, I would like to tell the House that, on behalf of my Party, we are prepared to give unanimous consent tomorrow at any time for the conclusion of report stage and third reading of this very important piece of legislation which all Parties support.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is that so agreed?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly agreed to the tabling of the report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is tabled, and that is the extent of it right now.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUGGESTED DELAY IN ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider delaying its decision to purchase a fleet of nuclear powered attack submarines until the Canadian people have judged the proposal in the forthcoming election.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to introduce my motion calling on the Government to delay its misguided decision to purchase a fleet of nuclear powered attack submarines until the Canadian people have debated and judged the proposal in the forthcoming election. The Government, I suggest, has no mandate to proceed with what it boasts is the single most expensive military expenditure in Canadian post-war history. Just like the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, this foolhardy proposal was not even raised during the last election campaign.

Furthermore, most Canadians want to express their profound opposition to it at the ballot box. A recent public opinion poll commissioned by the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament found that by a margin of two to one Canadians disapprove of the Government's plan. Any Government, even a Conservative Government that claims to be sensitive to the needs and wants of Canadians must acknowledge one simple and telling fact: Canadians do not want these submarines.

I want to explore the many reasons underlying Canadians' opposition to this proposal because, fundamentally, this plan raises questions about how Canadians see the world, how we see Canada in the world, what kind of threats we feel, and how best to respond to those threats. I want to begin with what is perhaps the most critical question arising under the proposal, namely its implications for Canada's maritime strategy and Canadian sovereignty.

The Government claims these nuclear submarines are needed to defend our sovereignty in the Arctic. That argument is patently bogus. So much so that even the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) is using it less and less these days. In fact, the Minister recently revised the subs' main mission to "patrolling on Canada's east and west coasts".

Mr. Crofton: That is what it has always been.

Ms. Jewett: However, the Minister, only last Sunday evening on The Nation's Business, returned to his original premise, namely that they were to protect Arctic sovereignty.

Naval analysts on both sides of the Atlantic have exposed the ludicrousness of the Government's bravado in saying these subs are intended to assert and defend Canadian sovereignty in the North. The Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament, for example, recently declared:

> To assert Arctic sovereignty with submarines that will seldom be in the Arctic is like being represented diplomatically by the invisible man.

Veterans Against Nuclear Arms added that:

> Canadian submarines are not going to be wheeling around under ice like police cars picking up vagrants.

Invisible men in police cars roaming under the Arctic ice picking up vagrants, is that the Government's concept of asserting sovereignty in the North? Like many Canadians, Ross Campbell, a former Canadian ambassador to NATO and former Chairman of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, is not deluded by the Government's claim that the submarines are designed to defend Canadian sovereignty:

> It is not at all clear why nuclear powered submarines are needed to do a surveillance job equally well done by a combination of fixed sensors and conventional subs.

Canadians are demanding to know why the Government is planning to spend billions and billions of dollars to monitor the presence of foreign submarines in or near our Arctic waters when other means of protection, as alluded to by Mr. Campbell, would better serve our sovereignty needs. Tom Pullen, a Canadian authority on Arctic navigation, rightly points out that ice-breakers, which are visible, would be more effective than nuclear subs in asserting our sovereignty by making our presence known.

The real irony is that Canadian submarines would have to communicate with DND headquarters through a communications network which includes the U.S. and other Allied navies because only very low frequency signals can reach a submerged submarine, and the Canadian Navy lacks this capacity. It is difficult to understand how a fleet linked so closely to U.S. communications networks and operationally co-ordinated with other NATO navies can expect to assert our sovereignty in the Arctic unless our claims to those waters have already been recognized by other nations.

In other words, nuclear powered attack submarines will not solve our outstanding territorial dispute with the U.S. if diplomatic efforts do not. For that reason, the Government's proposal has been dismissed by Donald Kerr of the International Institute for Strategic Studies in England and British naval analyst Anthony Preston as not a military program at all, but simply political posturing, and very expensive posturing to boot.

Canadians are also very concerned that the decision to Buy nuclear-powered submarines will fundamentally alter Canada's traditional defensive maritime strategy. As The Globe and Mail columnist Jeffrey Simpson aptly put it:

> Make no mistake: the possession of these subs would represent a quantum change in Canada's strategic posture.

The Canadian Government has not given sufficient attention to the strategic implications of this plan, specifically as to how the fleet will be co-ordinated and, undoubtedly, integrated with the U.S. maritime strategy. Writing in the U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings, Ronald O'Rouke describes the U.S. maritime strategy as being characterized by "forward operation". According to Mr. O'Rouke, this involves:

> —bottling up the Soviet Navy in its home waters—using one's forces offensively—particularly one's nuclear powered attack submarines.

He goes on to suggest that:

> Only by operating in forward positions can the U.S. SSNs simultaneously perform these missions: help bottle up Soviet forces, threaten Soviet nuclear powered ballistic missile submarines and pose a tomahawk land-attack cruise missile threat.

Vice-Admiral John Anderson of the Canadian Armed Forces told members of the Standing Committee on National Defence on February 3 that in periods of tension, Canadian nuclear submarines could be sent to attack Soviet strategic subs. This admission confirmed the fears of many Canadians that these subs would be participating in the U.S. forward maritime strategy, including bottling up Soviet naval forces in their own waters. The acquisition of nuclear powered submarines will mean that Canada's maritime forces will be more, not less, subordinate to U.S. authority.

Mr. Crofton: False.

Ms. Jewett: Admiral Robert Falls, ex-Chief of Defence Staff, has warned that any Canadian participation in the U.S. forward maritime strategy would be destabilizing inasmuch as it threatens Soviet missile carrying submarines directly and creates an incentive, as it were, for the missiles to be released before they are lost. Furthermore, it is important to remember that all of this would be taking place in waters far from Canada since no Soviet subs have actually been observed operating in or near Canadian waters.

Mr. Crofton: False.

Ms. Jewett: I am deliberately quoting reputable experts and authorities in order to have my friends in the Conservative Party understand what they have been saying. Deputy Chief of Defence Staff, Vice-Admiral Brodeur, acknowledged this recently, namely that no Soviet subs have actually been observed operating in or near Canadian waters, when he said:

> At the current time we do not have evidence that Soviet submarines are entering into the Canadian Arctic.

Given that there is no evidence of Soviet incursions, no proof that Soviet long-range cruise deployments are contemplated, and minimal probability of a pre-emptive attack, a nuclear submarine fleet seems an irresponsible and wholly unnecessary proposal.

Some of the best wisdom on this subject comes from an unlikely source, the Conservative Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg). In a letter to his constituents last year, the Hon. Member wrote, and I quote:

> But if the subs are really meant to scare anyone, the threat is surely half-hearted. What would one of our new subs do if they came across a Russian or American sub in our waters? We are not going to risk confrontation with a superpower over an incident like that . . . Canada is not a superpower. The use of submarines as a policy instrument for the attainment of sovereignty simply commits us to playing the game by superpower rules . . . and that may be the worst of both worlds. For we certainly don't have the muscle to make foreign policy with a big stick, and if we try to do so, we may well lose our influential voice as a moderate and sensible member of the international community.

Most Canadians, including some Conservative MPs, do not want membership in the nuclear submarine club. They do not want to see this country drawn into a provocative and hostile maritime strategy which membership in this exclusive club represents.

The Canadian people never gave the Government a mandate to adopt such a military posture so at variance with Canadian traditions, a posture which would serve only to deepen tension and suspicion between nations at a time when the world has witnessed a welcome thaw in East-West relations. Canadians do want to give an emphatic no to this proposal, and that is what this motion, when passed by this House, will enable them to do.

The Canadian Centre for Arms Control also points out that in every one of the three traditional tasks of Canadian maritime command, including sovereignty protection and the defence of North America, other options, quite apart from nuclear submarines, would be better suited to these specific needs.

The much touted under-ice capacity of nuclear submarines is unnecessary in peacetime since detection and reporting of incursions can be done at far less cost. It is unnecessary in wartime when the enemy threat would not come in the Arctic, as we all know, but in passages to the Atlantic which would be monitored at so-called "choke points".

Perhaps retired naval officer Douglas Maginley passed the definitive judgment on nuclear subs when he wrote in Policy Options earlier this year:

> The nuclear-powered attack submarine has limited uses. It is, in fact, the mechanical equivalent of the great white shark. Its only function is to kill; to sink ships and other submarines. It cannot make use of the sea, only deny its use to others.

Canadians are also profoundly concerned about the threat these subs pose to our good international reputation and how their acquisition will undermine the nuclear non-proliferation regime.

Canada plans to declare that weapons-grade enriched uranium will be used for military purposes for these subs and then returned to civilian use. However, Canada would bar UN inspectors on the grounds that classified information might be obtained by Eastern bloc inspectors. Each submarine reactor will need between 150 and 200 kilograms of weapons-grade enriched uranium. This is a lot of material which is effectively being removed from international scrutiny.

While Canada is within its legal rights, as a signatory of the NPT, to take advantage of a loophole in the treaty, no other country in Canada's category has ever tried to exempt atomic fuels from international safeguards so as to use them for military purposes. In other words, Canada is the first non-nuclear weapons power to consider the use of nuclear materials for military purposes. In the eyes of many observers this would set a very disturbing precedent.

David Fischer, a councillor at the International Atomic Energy Agency, has said that Canada is imperiling its international reputation as a champion of non-proliferation by taking advantage of a loophole in the treaty.

It would also undermine the International Atomic Energy Agency's ability to reassure other countries that no uranium is being diverted which has, until now, been the foundation of the global strategy for curbing the spread of nuclear weapons.

Other signatories to the NPT could cite Canada as a precedent and also withdraw stockpiles of enriched uranium from public scrutiny. Perhaps more ominously, non-signatories to the treaty, on whom diplomatic pressure is continually brought to adhere to the treaty and the International Atomic Energy Agency's verification regime, including Brazil, India, Pakistan, and South Africa, could point to Canada as itself undermining both the treaty and the verification regime.

The Canadian Centre for Arms Control has condemned this aspect of the submarine purchase as a "major departure for Canadian policy and practice" which is "gutting an important arms control treaty".

The cost of compromising Canada's 40-year commitment to the peaceful use of nuclear materials could be immeasurable both in terms of our international reputation and global efforts to curb the spread of nuclear weapons.

Canadians are also profoundly concerned about the risks these nuclear subs pose to our delicate and precious environment. It is curious that the Department of National Defence, in answer to a written question of mine a few days ago, has just now initiated an environmental impact assessment on the proposed purchase. Who has been contracted to undertake the initial environment screening? Why, it is Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I know a lot of environmentalists from across the country who would question the objectivity of an agency whose business is, in part, to promote atomic energy.

Canadians have reason to be concerned about the safety record of nuclear submarines. First, it is doubtful that Canada's claim to meet its exemplary standard for civilian reactor safety in the submarine project is even possible with the stingy budget proposed by National Defence to meet safety standards. More important, the past record of American and Soviet nuclear powered submarines is not a reassuring one, despite American claims that no accidents have been related to the power plant.

In fact, the loss of a U.S. submarine in 1963 was reactor-related according to the chief of the U.S. Navy's Bureau of Ships. Nuclear propelled submarines have run aground, sunk, and collided with warships, tankers, other subs, and even whales. A 1986 survey done by the Centre for Investigative Reporting in San Francisco revealed 99 incidents, 46 of which involved the nuclear power plant. At present, two U.S. and four Soviet subs lie abandoned on the ocean floor complete with nuclear reactors, certainly not very reassuring to all of us.

Also, the Department of National Defence has failed to outline procedures for decommissioning these nuclear submarines, particularly with regard to retrieval and disposal of all radioactive material and waste.

Perhaps it is appropriate to give the last word on safety to the father of the U.S. nuclear navy, Admiral Rickover. Late in life the Admiral became a vocal critic of both nuclear weapons and nuclear power. Before a U.S. congressional committee in 1982 he said:

> I do not believe nuclear power is worth it if it creates radiation. Then you might ask me what I would do with these nuclear-powered ships—I would sink them all.

Finally I want to address briefly the incredible and still undetermined cost of this proposal. The Minister of National Defence says that Canadians can afford to foot the bill for this batch of nuclear subs. However, what he will not tell them is the precise cost of these subs. The Minister of Finance (Mr.

Wilson) recently said that although the Government has some "general parameters" as to costs—whatever that means—it will likely be two years before an exact figure is available. What is clear, however, from all naval experts is that the basic cost of buying just the subs will far exceed the $8 billion figure the Government offers up as gospel.

The Canadian Business Council on National Issues has said $12 billion, Captain John Moore of Jane's Fighting Ships says $11.25 billion plus 50 per cent over 10 years for refitting, refueling and training, and the Canadian Centre for Arms Control says $14.8 billion.

A Conservative Member from Toronto is quoted in Maclean's as saying that "the cost of these things boggles the mind". Another Conservative Member from Québec said in Maclean's this week that he is having a great deal of trouble explaining to his constituents why the Government is planning to spend all these billions of dollars on useless, provocative, unnecessary nuclear subs when the money could be spent elsewhere, as we all well know.

Surely Canadian taxpayers have a right to know the exact cost of this program before any decision is made to purchase this fleet. Finally, surely all Canadians have the right to debate and judge this proposal in the forthcoming election.

• (1720)

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make some comments on the motion of the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) who proposes that we should defer action on the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines until after an election-type referendum. She is a little late. This decision was taken last year.

In the 1984 election, my Party made a particular issue of the sorry state of our military forces' equipment and our resolve, when elected, to implement corrective action. The unprecedented mandate we received in the 1984 election was, in part, an expression of approval for these military proposals. The people have already spoken.

Why nuclear powered attack submarines? The NDP is scandalized because these SSN's are attack submarines. There are no other kinds of submarines. Our Oberon submarines, those aging diesel electric boats, are categorized as SSKs, conventional attack submarines. There are no other kinds of submarines.

The NDP would appear to be oblivious that we have destroyers in our fleet and fighters in our air force. No doubt we will soon get an NDP motion to erase those naughty words from our vocabulary.

Ms. Jewett: Why do you not talk about the U.S. forward maritime strategy?

Mr. Crofton: Why submarines at all? I think it is worth spending a few moments reflecting on Canada's circumstances and Canada's needs.

The Hon. Member talks about the United States naval forward plan. We have no connection with that. It is not NATO policy. We belong to NATO, not the United States Navy.

We are a major trading nation. We depend heavily on the safe and timely delivery, by ship, of much of our trade. Our economic well-being, and consequently our social well-being depends on this secure sea trade. We front on three major oceans. We have the longest seacoast of any nation. Thus we have a vested interest, indeed vital interest in the safe and unimpeded use of the oceans, especially those that lap at our shores.

How do we achieve this? One way is in friendly and co-operative participation with other like-minded nations who share our views. Hence, we belong to various U.N. agencies and to NATO. We have a commitment, an obligation to those with whom we have made these commitments.

We have another obligation. That is an obligation to the nation of Canada and her people, our constituents. That obligation is to maintain those facilities and those forces necessary to patrol, protect, and exercise appropriate authority over these areas of land, air and water we call our own. No amount of weaseling around excuses any government for neglecting these basic obligations of office.

It would be very nice if we could declare the world burglar-free. Unhappily it is not. My own neighbourhood back home is not burglar-free. We find it necessary to maintain a police force and to encourage other organizations such as Neighbourhood Watch. Our oceans also have a variety of challenges awaiting us, from bogus refugees, to fish thieves, to drug runners, to potentially unfriendly naval forces camped on our doorstep.

We need in our inventory the capacity to deal effectively with all of these potential problems.

The NDP and Liberal defence critics have both publicly acknowledged that we require a Navy. So far, so good. They also agree with us that the Navy should be a mix of vehicles which include submarines. They also publicly acknowledge that nuclear powered submarines are the most useful and most cost-effective submarines we could have.

Having come this far on fact, evidence and logic, both opposition Parties now depart into the Land of Oz with all sorts of convolutions, contortions and distortions about cost, need and safety.

No doubt my Government colleagues will address the cost and safety issues. I limit my remarks to the need factor.

The NDP defence critic has suggested that the NDP, instead of building SSN's, would buy additional patrol frigates and up to 12 conventional submarines at a price some $2 billion more than our proposed expenditures.

Acquisition of conventional submarines would be a colossal waste of money. Even worse, it would be a dangerous and fraudulent waste of money. Such expenditure would try to delude the Canadian people that our defence needs are satisfied, and even worse would expose our submariners to a disastrously uneven contest in any conflict.

Given the military capacity of our potential adversary, we would be emulating the unhappy Polish cavalry who tried to halt the German Panzer divisions with horses and swords in 1939. That is the reality of the utility of conventional submarines.

The Canadian taxpayer, and certainly our long-suffering sailors, deserve capable equipment. The issue really is not should we or should we not have nuclear powered submarines. The real question is: Do we still need a Navy? The answer clearly is a resounding yes. Even the opposition defence critics agree.

We cannot afford quantity, even though our huge ocean expanses, our lengthy seashore, and our heavy dependence on ocean trade suggests we do indeed need quantity. The obvious route, the only sensible route, is to seek cost-effectiveness for what we do acquire. That means the SSN's.

The acquisition program upon which we have embarked calls for delivery of boat No. 1 in 1996, boat No. 2 in 1998, and one boat every 18 months thereafter until program completion in about the year 2010, which is 22 years from now.

There is an urgency to get on with the contract process because of the lengthy lead times required. We already face the prospect of a gap between the time when our three conventional submarines are scrapped for safety reasons and the time when the new boats come into service.

Thus we must get on with the task of replacement. The pending decision of country of source is still to be made, and we will need another two years of contract definition and contract allocation before commencing construction. We have lots of time between now and 1996 to change, amend, even cancel the program. What we do not have is time now to procrastinate. It may be the NDP's favourite policy on most subjects, but not ours. We see action as essential.

I look for an early decision and early action on this vital question of which submarine to buy. Whether to buy is long since decided.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in this debate brought forward by the New Democratic Party. The Canadian Government's intention to acquire nuclear-powered submarines, commonly known as SSN's, is entirely consistent with Canada's long-standing renunciation of both nuclear weapons for Canada and nuclear roles for the Canadian Armed Forces. These vessels utilize nuclear power for the purposes of propulsion only. They will not carry nuclear weapons or nuclear explosive devices of any sort.

The principle of using nuclear power for propulsion is much the same as using nuclear power to generate hydro-electricity energy which is a common practice throughout Canada and the industrialized world. It is fully compatible with our commitment not to acquire nuclear weapons.

Because of its size, Canada has some unique problems and some unique responsibilities. We must keep certain vital sea lanes open in our three-ocean perspective. We must accept our role in defending sea lanes which are vital to western Europe and no one can deny the importance the Pacific Rim will play in the near future to our way of life. Even the New Democratic Party accepts the concept of the three-ocean perspective.

The submarines will not only be used in the Arctic, they will serve our entire territory, the Arctic, the Pacific and the Atlantic. During the previous Government, our entire Armed Forces were allowed to deteriorate to a level never seen. After World War II, we had the third largest Navy and proud officers and sailors serving our country. This Government has been able to give back some of the needed improvements.

The nuclear powered submarines will be the cornerstone of the new Navy. The SSN has unlimited underwater endurance when compared to the conventional submarine, which must spend at least 15 per cent of its time recharging on the surface. That alone should prove the necessity of the nuclear submarine. If one of our submarines was going from Halifax to Vancouver using the North West Passage, which is normally a two-week trip, an intruder would have to assume that he could come in contact with a Canadian submarine anywhere in our territory. One week a submarine could be in the Atlantic and two weeks later, having travelled under our Arctic water, could find itself on our Pacific coast. As for showing the flag, once in port, like any other submarine, they surface but once they leave port they again become invisible.

We have heard so much about the need to protect our own territory instead of letting other countries do so. I am quite sure that everyone is aware that Canada has the longest coastline in the world. I believe it is estimated at some 37,000 miles, so we can see the great advantage of the nuclear powered submarines. We must be able to control our waters in the three oceans, and the nuclear-powered submarine will do this.

Another benefit of the nuclear-powered submarine is that it will be less polluting. The cost of owning these submarines, as has been pointed out, is $300 million a year spread over 27 years. Its all very well to have a sign put up in the North West Passage saying, "Keep out. Canadian territory", but it is even better to have a big watchdog on a leash. There was an interesting letter published in the Citizen yesterday with respect to nuclear subs. It reads:

> In today's navy, where speed, endurance and reliability are of the utmost importance, a diesel-electric boat does not meet the needs of our navy. They are slow, have low underwater endurance, cannot proceed through the North West Passage in summer even under ideal conditions and their diesels pollute the atmosphere with carbon dioxide, adding to the global warming.
> Moreover, should an accident occur, the batteries containing in excess of 13,000 litres of sulphuric acid could spill into the sea, adding to the pollution already in our oceans. The salt water, when mixed with sulphuric acid, will produce the deadly phosegene gas which could kill the ship's crew.
> Conversely, a nuclear submarine can operate in all three of our oceans and, for the first time, exercise our sovereignty anywhere along our lengthy coastline without limitations, with speed and efficiency. this would be done without the pollution of our seas or air above.
> The U.S.S.R. has 400 submarines and commissions one every five weeks.
> Canada does require nuclear boats. To quote commander of the Marine Command, Vice-Admiral Charles Thomas, "The issue is not the cost of owning nuclear submarines—it's the cost of owning a navy."

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on this issue today and I congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), for raising this issue in the House. It is certainly important that the House of Commons have an opportunity to debate this issue prior to an adjournment and possibly an election.

When the issue of nuclear submarines was first raised, it was raised in the context of protecting our Arctic sovereignty. I think most Canadians now have enough information to believe that that is not going to happen. Even Conservative Members of Parliament are beginning to address their constituents and the media by saying they cannot justify those costs. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg), in his direct mail correspondence to his constituents said he could not justify that use, that it did not make sense to use it in the Arctic, that the costs were just beyond the comprehension of most Canadians and even himself. Today in the House two other Members claimed they were misquoted by the media and not fully quoted by others, but this opportunity to suck and blow by two other Members of this House is not what is happening. What in truth is happening is that government Members are falling quickly on this issue because it is so irrational.

There is no doubt, I think, in a lot of people's minds that this issue will be dropped.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I protest. The Hon. Member just mentioned a question of privilege raised earlier in the House today. I don't think it is appropriate for the Hon. Member to make these references in his speech, especially when the Speaker has yet to rule on my question of privilege.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is debate, and I would hope the Hon. Member would carry on with his speech, but I would bring to his attention that there is a ruling coming down from the Speaker, so I hope he will keep that in mind when he does mention anyone in this Maclean's article.

Mr. Skelly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I think what I was commenting on more than anything else was the difficulty people are having explaining to their elected constituents the enormous costs and the changing use of this particular instrument. It is now recognized by many individuals who are experts in this field that we will not be able to enhance our Arctic sovereignty with nuclear-powered submarines. In all likelihood, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, mentioned these submarines will in fact be used in the Greenland-Iceland-Norway Gap along with other NATO forces to contain the Soviet fleet in the North and will also be used by the U.S. in the Northwest Pacific in its forward maritime strategy. It is a strategy designed to destabilize the balance of power and it is a strategy that is going to create an additional incentive or momentum in the arms race. It goes absolutely counter to the peace initiatives that have come about lately and to the traditional approach of Canada. The costs of this program are enormous and Canada would be well advised to stay far, far away from it by ending this program.

The cost of the submarines are enormous in terms of destabilizing the balance of power, undermining the arms and peace negotiations going on and undermining the non-proliferation treaty. One of the other interesting things we do not hear about from the other side of the House is the skewing of the national defence budget. There are many, many other branches in the Armed Forces which serve this country well, which have earned an international reputation, and over the next 25 years they are going to find their budgets very short. They are not going to wind up with the promotions, the additional staff and resources.

If I were involved in search and rescue and wanted an adequate number of flying hours, new equipment, new techniques and additional personnel to serve the people of this country, I would be very worried that my entire budget was going to be skewed by the submarine program. The peacekeeping forces, the anti-submarine warfare programs already in place, have been proven and tested over a period of time. This budget is going to harm the personnel in the Armed Forces, their families and the programs wherein they work hard to serve the people of Canada. Mark my words, the cost of this will cause an enormous amount of problems for those people.

In addition, it will erode Canadian sovereignty. The participation is clear. We are not going to attack the Americans under the Arctic ice in which their presence is clearly known. According to Armed Forces NDHQ, there is no information that there are Soviet submarines operating under there.

We do not have a communications system to communicate with those submarines. We will have to use the American very low frequency communications system. That speaks in an interesting way for a national armed forces whose primary problem with sovereignty in the Arctic is the American's attitude toward the Arctic archipelago.

With respect to the fuel supply, the Americans are uncertain that they will give a long-term enriched uranium fuel supply. We are now dependent for that fleet on the United States. There is no agreement in place for that to happen. We will either have to buy our fuel supply from the United States or manufacture our own, which will cost several hundreds of millions of dollars.

Not only will we be dependent upon the United States for the fuel to operate our ships, we will be dependent upon it to use its communications system to maintain contact with it. We will likely be operating in a subordinate position in its forward maritime strategy.

The political costs to the Conservatives are interesting. There is a clear understanding in the minds of Canadians that this program is irrational. The two issues which are likely to loom largest in the next election are nuclear submarines and free trade. I admit that free trade is grey for some people. They are not sure about the conflicting stories that they are hearing. However, when they are asked about the nuclear submarines, they are absolutely clear that it is a crazy undertaking. They know that there will be an erosion of other programs. Not just the National Defence budget will be skewed. The people in the Armed Forces today will be harmed by it. They know that programs such as old age pensions and health care as well as others will be competing with funds that are already earmarked for the submarine program.

There is talk of this program exceeding a cost of $16 billion, and that that $16 billion represents an enormous cost in lost opportunities in the country. It represents things that we could do.

This is a very unfortunate program. It is ill-conceived by a Government which has not done its homework. It is gradually coming to the realization, as statements by a number of Members of Parliament in written form to their constituents now acknowledge, that the Government cannot justify those costs. It cannot justify the program. It is not related to Arctic sovereignty.

There are many other ways to address the question of Arctic sovereignty, and addressing them more effectively and cost-effectively than by using nuclear submarines.

It is interesting to note that we cannot assess where those costs will come from. One individual, the Commander of Canada's Army, Lieutenant-General James Fox, delivered through members of his staff a curious comment of the Department's plans to acquire the 12 nuclear-powered submarines at a cost of $8 billion. The General's staff argued, first, that the submarine acquisition will not have any effect on other defence expenditures. Then in a conflicting statement it was argued that Canada will be able to afford the subs because $6 billion of the $8 billion have already been identified in existing defence expenditures.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, whose salary will be cut? Whose promotions will not take place? Whose resources will be cut? I am surprised that my colleague from the Esquimalt—Saanich area can stand in this House as a former member of the Armed Forces and watch his brothers and sisters in the rest of the Armed Forces be cut to the bone financially. I am convinced that the Government will be forced by the people to see the light and that it will drop this crazy program before the next election, or certainly suffer defeat.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, before I get into my presentation I want to convey some intelligence from the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) in respect to the Maclean's magazine article which was referred to before. He tells me, Sir, that he was interviewed by the magazine and his point of view was, like mine and that of most Members on this side of the House, very positive. We believe that the Government is doing what is right in this acquisition program. But, for some reason or other, anything in a positive light, a positive vein, was neglected to be printed in the Maclean's article. Perhaps that gives Hon. Members some idea of the objectivity of that particular publication.

The motion before us today asks that the Government delay its submarine acquisition program until after the next election. It is my view that this matter was decided at the previous election. I remember standing on the shores of the Arctic Ocean in 1984 handing out leaflets which provided a description of the PC defence policy. The fact that I was elected, along with 210 of my colleagues on this side of the House, would seem to indicate to me that the PC defence policy found favour with the electorate of Canada.

At that time we promised to guard Canadian sovereignty on the land, in Canadian waters and in Canadian air space. We wanted to give our military the tools with which to do that job. We wanted to defend the northern parts of Canada which hitherto had been neglected. There was overwhelming support for this policy.

The NDP ideas of getting out of NATO and NORAD were rejected. The Liberal policy of allowing our military forces and military equipment to decay were rejected by the people of Canada. Not only at the time of the election but also about a year ago, at the time of the publication of the White Paper on national defence, that overwhelming support was again there.

If we ask ourselves the question, do we need a Navy, and answer that question in the affirmative, as just about everyone here would, then the next question becomes this: what should become the make-up of that Navy? What can do the best job for the money available?

The Liberals allowed over a period of years for our Navy to deteriorate. Virtually what we have left is a bunch of rust buckets. Really what we are doing is starting from scratch. We are in the process of acquiring a number of new vessels. We did not have one minesweeper in Canada. We are in the process of acquiring 12 new frigates. I guess, to give the Liberals credit, that acquisition program started under them. It is our proposal to buy some 10 to 12 nuclear propelled—not nuclear armed but nuclear propelled—submarines over about a 25-year period.

The Liberal plans, when we came in to office, although they had not been put into the process of implementation, were to acquire some 18 frigates, about six more than we are going to get. These things cost about half a billion dollars apiece. Frigates do not come cheap. They do not come in boxes of corn flakes.

The Liberals were also going to acquire a fleet of conventional submarines. The price-tag over the 25-year period would have been about $2 billion in excess of what we plan to spend. It would not have done anywhere near as good a job.

The former Liberal Defence Minister, the Hon. J. J. Blais, as quoted in a newspaper article yesterday, admitted that he was a supporter of the Conservative acquisition program, that nuclear-powered submarines were three times as effective as a destroyer, or three times as effective as a conventional diesel electric submarine.

The Oberon submarines that we have are old. They have to be replaced. They are dangerous and we cannot use them any more. We have to buy a new model.

Who in their right mind would go out in 1988 and buy a brand new Model T automobile? One would not do it. If one is going to buy a new automobile, then one is going to go and buy the latest model available, the most fuel efficient, et cetera. Diesel electric submarines when submerged have to use batteries. We have had described to us the environmental hazards of diesel electric and battery-operated submarines. They can only go for two hours at maximum speed while submerged. What chance is there of a diesel electric submarine catching a nuclear submarine or getting away from a nuclear submarine? There is no chance at all. We would be submitting submariners to inappropriate and great risks by putting them out to sea in times of potential hazards in Model-T submarines.

The nuclear-powered submarine's range under water, under the ice, is virtually unlimited. These days no other country buys diesel electric submarines. The United States has several hundred submarines and it has three diesel electrics left. They use them for target practice because the Soviet Union still has a few diesel electric submarines.

The U.S.S.R. has a much more ambitious nuclear submarine acquisition program than ourselves. One of the Members earlier pointed out that it is acquiring submarines at a rate of one every five weeks.

If we buy these submarines, as the Government proposes to do, we can have a three-ocean Navy instead of a two-ocean Navy. For most of the year our Arctic Ocean is covered with ice, and conventional submarines cannot be used under the ice. A conventional submarine has to surface to recharge its batteries.

Furthermore, we would be unable to move submarines from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific Ocean without going through the Panama Canal. "Please, Mr. Noriega, can we use the canal? We want to get a submarine from Halifax to Vancouver". Whereas, nuclear powered submarines can be moved through the North West Passage in our own territorial waters without having to ask any one's permission.

In the Arctic the nuclear-powered submarine is the only one capable of operating there. That is my backyard. My constituents as Canadian citizens want to be as well defended as Canadians who happen to live in Vancouver or Halifax on the Pacific or the Atlantic. I feel that they have a right to be properly defended. The first responsibility of Government is to provide for the collective defence. I cannot accept any policy where the first response to any invasion would be to abandon northern Canadians to the enemy.

If we do not have submarines, we will not stop nuclear submarines from being present in the Arctic. There will be nuclear submarines there. The question we have to ask ourselves is, do we only want American ones there, do we only want Soviet ones there, or do we also want Canadian submarines in the Arctic?

If we do not have them we are abandoning our defence. We are abandoning our sovereignty to the Americans. That is the policy of the NDP and the Liberals. They want to abandon the defence of northern Canada to the Americans and let them do what they want, and let us have no say in how that defence is to be conducted. That is not our position. Our position is that we are quite prepared to take on the responsibility that goes with an Arctic power of some measure.

The proposed acquisition program of the Government makes eminent sense to me. With it we will be able to protect Canadian sovereignty. We will be pulling our own weight in the defence of North America. The acquisitions will be cost effective. On an annual basis they will amount to 2 or 3 per cent of the defence budget. It will not disrupt in any way other military programs, as the NDP have stated. These vessels are the most effective available. The acquisition is in keeping with the wish of the Canadian public as expressed in the last election, and as I am sure will be confirmed at the next election.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, my special thanks to the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett) who raised the point. To me, it is so obvious that a decision of this kind which involves enormous costs and is probably one of the biggest Government expenditures ever ... and then all of a sudden, they tell us: That's our decision. It's based on the White Paper on National Defence and that is our policy. I can't deny that the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) gave us some excellent arguments.

[English]

My esteemed colleague, the Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) who has sat on the Committee of National Defence with me, and the Hon. Member who introduced the motion, made some points, but so did the member of the New Democratic Party.

The important thing is, and it must be said here in the House, that we cannot go on believing that a country like Canada, whose mission in the world is to set an example ... Does joining the big nuclear club set an example to the rest of the world, considering Canada's well-established reputation? We have a right to think about it. We have a right to consider very carefully and very attentively all the points made by the Hon. Member from Vancouver. What I fail to understand is the rush to make a decision on a matter of such vital importance, a matter that can make or break Canada's reputation. She said, as others have said in the past and will say in the future, that we are entitled to ask ourselves whether it is Canada's mission to do this.

Is it good for Canada to believe that we should spend between eight and sixteen billion dollars on what many in the United States see as a great adventure? A retired admiral of the U.S. fleet—I am not quoting pacifists—said that as far as he was concerned, he would sink them all if he had the impression that, and so forth. You can read what he said. Personally, I think Canada is on the wrong track. We are just as sincere as the Hon. Members who spoke earlier, but we fail to understand why a decision of this magnitude should not be debated at length in the House of Commons and put before the Canadian people when the Prime Minister, in his wisdom, decides to call the next election. This is an important decision. It is a decision that is vital to the future of Canada's youth. Does it always have to be bigger and better? That is what I keep wondering about national defence.

In concluding, I want to say that my Party is clearly committed to NATO. We believe in that institution, which does not prevent us from wondering how we could improve it. My Party believes in our membership in NORAD, which does not prevent us from thinking about it, just as my Party believed in the cruise missiles, and after thinking about it, we decided that enough was enough, and that is why we are now against the cruise missiles. Mr. Speaker—this will be my last comment, and I want to thank you for your patience—embarking on this great adventure would make Canada a different country from what it is now. Canada has a reputation that is known throughout the world. We know that is not how Canada is perceived. Canadian men and women have a right to ask themselves whether that is the kind of national defence they want. Make no mistake: We firmly believe that we need the army, we firmly believe that we need the navy, but we don't believe ... I think we are at least as honest as all these people who would have us rush almost blindly into a decision of this magnitude.

Finally, I would like to thank the Hon. Member who raised the subject for this debate, because it is probably the only debate we will have.

• (1800)

It is probably the only time Parliament at the end of a term of government has had the chance to say: "Be careful. Is it really what you want?"

I conclude by thanking you for your patience, Speaker. If it is impossible to delay and if the House continues to sit, I wonder if my colleague and I should look into the possibility of having an urgent debate on this matter, so that more Members could participate and we can obtain more information from the Minister. The Minister is very confused. He was talking about security and sovereignty; now he is talking about the Atlantic and the Pacific. The sovereignty issue seems to be flying away and I think we should discuss it intelligently.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to listen to the Hon. Member, but we have given him an extra three or four minutes.

[Translation]

The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There were two or three minutes left for questions and comments on the speech of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. I will allow the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North to ask one question and a rebuttal.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I have heard from the government Members on a number of occasions that as a result of Air Canada getting rid of many of its feeder routes—and the planes are not jets but prop planes—smaller communities obtain more frequent and better service.

Is it not a fact that Air Canada could have made those changes if they were really better? The real reason for getting rid of those routes and creating the smaller companies is that they operate without unions and, certainly even with unions, they do not pay the same kind of wages or benefits as Canadian Airlines does?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for the question. What happens in this kind of an environment is that other companies are set up, and companies that tend to pay less have no unions involved in the workplace. We saw a situation this past winter where Air Ontario, which was formed out of Austin Airways and Air Ontario, had one group of pilots with a collective agreement and another group that was going for its first collective agreement, and where there were very severe problems of morale and imbalance in the treatment of employees.

We must remember what has been happening in the whole area of deregulation. In effect major companies have been allowed to buy up the small competition and to create a situation wherein we have a duopoly. There are really only two owners in the country, and at the very least one of those owners should remain in the public sector so that we could have a window on the operation to ensure that public policies are adhered to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Is the House ready the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until a later time.

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until Monday at 6 p.m., at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-121, an Act to authorize the reorganization and divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Perhaps Hon. Members could take their seats. I would like to know who is seeking the floor. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise on this third reading debate and to follow up on the committee hearings in which I played a part. I do so in the name of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), the Hon. Member for Vegreville, Alberta. This Bill primarily affects Ontario and Saskatchewan, so it has a central Canadian element to it and a western Canadian element to it.

After third reading the Bill will give the federal Government the authority it requires to proceed with the agreement made with the Province of Saskatchewan and announced on the February 22 of this year. It really has two parts. The first part allows the assets of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and a provincial Crown corporation, Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, to be merged. The second part of the Bill deals with the privatization of the merged company over a period of seven years.

Bill C-121 provides for the transfer of the assets of Eldorado Nuclear Limited to a new company in return for securities. The articles of the new company, which will be incorporated under the Canada Business Corporations Act, will specify certain conditions the new company will be required to honour.

First of all, certain provisions will be included to allow a large number of investors to purchase shares, while ensuring that the new company will remain in Canadian hands and under Canadian control.

Thus, non-resident shareholders or affiliated groups may not own more than 5 per cent of voting shares. At any meeting of shareholders, votes cast by non-residents may not exceed 20 per cent of voting rights. Similarly, no Canadian may own more than 25 per cent of the shares issued. Furthermore, the new company may not issue non-voting shares.

The articles of the new company will provide that the head office shall be located in Saskatoon. We feel it is important for senior management of the company to be close to the primary mining facilities.

• (1810)

The proceeds of the sale of the securities of the new company will be used by Eldorado to discharge its obligations, including the debt which is an obligation of the Government of Canada. It makes a contribution to reducing the debt load borne by the Government of Canada. The two-stage plan, the merger and the privatization of Eldorado and SMDC, was recommended by Eldorado's parent organization, the Canada Development Investment Corporation, as the best privatization opportunity for Eldorado. This recommendation followed three years of detailed and complex negotiations and preparations.

Those of us who served on the committee heard a lot of testimony about the various efforts made to sell the company and privatize it. On the basis of testimony before the committee clearly this was the preferred option in terms of Canadian taxpayers. Both CDIC and its financial advisers, Burns Fry Limited, have stated that the transaction was equitable and provided fair value for Eldorado's assets. Having listened to that testimony, Mr. Speaker, it was clear that it was not an easy situation to assess, and I think they deserve some credit for a job well done.

The best guarantee of jobs and job security for any company is for it to be a healthy, viable operation with financial stability, competitive advantages, and a secure market for its products. All these conditions apply with regard to this merger and privatization effort. There will be positive benefits in terms of better and more secure jobs similar to those which followed other privatization initiatives of this Government.

I bring to the attention of the House the success of de Havilland where hundreds more Canadians have jobs because we were able to sell the company to a much larger entity with a better marketing system. Our capacity to manufacture the Canadian product, the airplane itself, has produced increased market opportunities and increased opportunities for Canadians.

One issue that all Members accept as a serious and important responsibility is that the employees of any privatized corporation and the public at large be protected adequately. In April, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced new uranium mining regulations. These new regulations reflect this Government's commitment to the health and safety of workers and to the protection of the environment. In testimony before the legislative committee, the Atomic Energy Control Board made clear that the privatization of Eldorado would not affect the board's authority under the Atomic Energy Control Act. The new company will be subject to the same regulations concerning the health and safety of workers and the protection of the environment as any other private or public corporation. That is true of all privatization initiatives. They apply before the privatization and after the privatization.

It is clear that the transaction we are proposing through this legislation will not affect the regulatory framework that oversees the uranium industry. Exports of uranium and nuclear materials will continue to be controlled and monitored by the AECB and the Department of External Affairs in accordance with Canada's nuclear non-proliferation policy. Other Acts and regulations such as the Canada Labour Code will also continue to apply to the new company.

The new company will operate existing dump sites under the statutory supervision of the Atomic Energy Control Board.

The federal Government remains committed to developing and contributing to a solution to the problem of management of existing waste. To this end, the declaration of intent provides for a shared-cost formula. Management and the full cost of management of new waste will be the responsibility of the new company, within the existing regulatory framework.

Furthermore, the Government will ensure that Eldorado, in addition to all its commitments to local communities, will meet its other obligations as well.

[English]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope other Members will speak briefly to this legislation which opens up new opportunities for Eldorado. The merger with SMDC will create a significantly stronger company with the resources, technology, and personnel to compete effectively in the global market. The free trade agreement with the United States opens markets to us. Increased efficiency and productivity will take us into global markets with more effectiveness. History tells us that every nation since the Second World War which has entered into agreements, small nations with large nations, has broken the dependency upon the larger nation. Through increased markets we will get increased productivity, increased competitiveness, and a better sense of being able to compete in global markets.

The wide distribution of shares and restrictions on the ownership of shares will give Canadians and employees of the company a real and direct interest in the future of the company. That too follows through with previous privatizations. Employees are among the first and the fastest to take a share ownership position because they have believed in a company and had faith in it. I am sure it will be the same in this case as well.

These safeguards will also ensure that control will always remain firmly in Canadian hands. At the same time the operation of the current regulatory regimes will ensure that vital public interests such as health, safety, and environmental protection will continue unabated.

This agreement will benefit Canada and it will benefit Saskatchewan. It adds strength to Canada's uranium industry in a manner that will enable it to contribute more to the national economy and to Saskatchewan's economy and to maintain its world leadership in uranium production and technology. As with all the privatization efforts which the Government has undertaken since 1984, this legislation encompasses a pragmatic and sensitive approach to the public interest as well as the continuing interest of employees and the communities concerned.

I hope the House will move expeditiously this evening to complete third reading debate so that we can proceed to other important legislation.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, we do not want to move too expeditiously to other legislation because this one is important as well. We have to spend a little time on it, but I can appreciate the sentiment of my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary. Certainly we are going to move very quickly on this Bill.

I appreciate having this opportunity to speak at third reading on the reorganization of Eldorado Nuclear Limited. While I find there are some problems with this privatization and the amalgamation with the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, we feel that generally the Bill should be approved. In light of that, I would like to outline a few of my concerns, that I have and I hope the Government will be addressing them.

On reviewing this Bill the legislative committee was very fortunate to hear witnesses who highlighted concerns on Eldorado's activities in the past and the possible consequences of this proposed merger with Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation.

We also discussed problems which could occur as a result of the privatization of these two companies. This will not necessarily be a smooth merger, but if both parties act in the best interests of their intentions, then I think it can work.

While the Liberals continue to support Bill C-121, I would like to comment on specific problems incurred in the production and marketing of uranium. That is where the basic problems lie. While they have been allowed to fester for some time, there seems to be an acknowledgement by all parties to the merger that these problems exist. It seems that it has at least been stated that there is a willingness to deal with these problems.

My argument is that if privatization is to be the solution for the debt problems incurred by Eldorado, then Canadians must be assured of several things. First, they must be assured that there is an adequate regulatory framework to monitor this unique commodity, uranium. Second, they must be assured that there is a vigorous environmental assessment of any new projects undertaken by this merged company. Third, they must have the assurance that we have in place a time frame, financing, and competent management which will be accountable to the federal Government so that it will clean up disposal sites. Fourth, they must be assured that no municipalities will be left in limbo as a result of the termination of ongoing grants in lieu of taxes by this merger. While we want to help the uranium industry and these two companies, we have to be sure that we are not leaving problems with municipalities as a result of this merger and privatization. I will explain further what I mean by that later in my remarks.

I would like to elaborate on each of the four issues I have mentioned. With respect to the regulatory framework, it is the Atomic Energy Control Board which has been and will be responsible for ensuring that the activities of the new company are undertaken in a manner consistent with public safety, particularly with respect to protecting the environment from the release of radioactive material into the atmosphere.

Testimony of Dr. Terrence Downey, who did his Ph.D. dissertation on the uranium industry in Canada, emphasized by historical evidence the safety, environmental, health, and social problems which resulted from inadequate government supervision during the war years when Canada virtually lost control of its supply of uranium as a result of contracts with the United States. Furthermore, supplies of this radioactive material were bootlegged out of the company confines. The long-term ramifications of this activity is still evident today in the Malvern subdivision of Scarborough, Ontario. Soil in this area is still suffering from radioactive contamination. We have before us a precedent of what inattentiveness, bad business practices, and no consideration for the environment can mean. Even 40 years later, the City of Scarborough is still suffering from these ramifications.

It was not until full government ownership of Eldorado was in place that discipline was imposed on the production and marketing of uranium. Even so, the committee was informed of a whole host of environmental problems resulting from uranium mining and refining. In Port Hope, Ontario, the cost of cleaning up the low-level radioactive site was estimated to be from $265 million up to $735 million. That is a tremendous amount of money to clean up a site which has been like that for a considerable period of time, much to the chagrin of the people living in the immediate area. Yet it is still there, though it has not been there for as long as the polluted site in Scarborough, Ontario.

There is an alarming aspect to the obvious need for supervision and monitoring of a company which deals with this resource. In testimony from two sources, officials of the Atomic Energy Control Board and Dr. Hare who headed a thorough study of nuclear safety in Ontario, concern was expressed about the capability of this regulatory agency to carry out its responsibilities. The Atomic Energy Control Board is responsible for the regulation of atomic energy in Canada. Yet, we heard from Dr. Hare who headed a study on nuclear safety in Ontario and from the agency itself that there were doubts about this very agency's ability to carry out its responsibilities. To me, that is tremendously alarming, and I think it is alarming to all Canadians who know about this very grave problem.

In discussing the need for a 50 per cent increase in resources, the President of the Atomic Energy Control Board noted in testimony before the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources on May 11 of this year the following:

> I have a feeling we are crippled. It takes longer to do the work, but we also cannot do it as much in depth as we would like to do it.

The President of the Atomic Energy Control Board is saying that his own organization is crippled by a lack of funds. He is saying that it takes much longer to do the work and that when they do the work, they cannot do it adequately because they are not properly financed. This is the agency that is supervising, monitoring, and controlling the nuclear industry in Canada. To hear a statement like that from its President is alarming, to say the least.

In testimony to the same committee, Dr. Hare responded to the suggestion of increasing the size of the board by saying:

> Yes. I think perhaps my most crucial feeling about regulation in this whole business is that the Atomic Energy Control Board is too small. When I compare it with the regulatory bodies in other countries, I am amazed with what they do, but at the same time I do not think this can continue.

In addition to the testimony of the President of the Atomic Energy Control Board, the chairman of a committee investigating the nuclear industry in Ontario is saying that the Atomic Energy Control Board is too small and that he is amazed that it is doing as well as it is. These are two tremendous sources of information, both condemning the inattention to and ineffectiveness of this board because of the Government's lack of action and support.

Dr. Hare went on to tell committee members that out of five board members, two were ex officio. What is relevant to this debate on privatizing a uranium company was his suggestion that the Atomic Energy Control Board did not have the scope to make proper decisions.

This board which oversees our industry, in addition to everything else, does not have the scope to make proper decisions. Dr. Hare stated:

> It is quite clear to me that in making its decisions the board ought to take into account far more broadly than it can do at the present time socio-economic, radiological and environmental questions for which the board members themselves have very little skill. So in my report I recommend that the size of the board be increased so as to make such broader representation possible.

That is a very valid recommendation. If the Government is trying to cut costs, then the Atomic Energy Control Board which supervises our very vital and controversial nuclear industry is not one of the areas in which the Government should be cutting costs.

Doctor Hare also noted that the Board should remain a technical regulator. He said:

> What I am saying is that those technical regulations should have been made by a board that is competent around the table to consider more deeply the socio-economic, health and environmental questions which are the real stuff of this business. The technical questions are not usually in doubt; it is the non-technical matters that really have to be discussed in depth, and they have been inhibited from doing this. Moreover, it has been their policy to avoid this.

That is alarming. We have placed our complete confidence and faith in the Atomic Energy Control Board. It has been a very good agency, but it is under financed and does not have enough members. The members it has cannot deal with a lot of the questions with which they should be dealing. They are only dealing with technical matters and not with socio-economic, health and environmental questions as they should be, and as Dr. Hare's study stated.

We need some definite attention to these matters. While we are agreeing to the passage of this Bill, we want to set out that we are doing so mainly as a business framework. We agree that the AECB can have as much jurisdiction over a private company as we can, but we must point out that the AECB has not had control over the public company. With government support it has to zero in more on the concerns of the citizens of Canada with respect to nuclear energy.

With respect to some of the environmental matters, representatives from Newcastle, Ontario, gave us a very enlightening presentation on the problems which occur when a regulatory agency does not or cannot adequately control the disposal of low-level radioactive waste from a uranium mine. They told us, because they are in the Port Hope area, about the problems they have with the waste site in their area.

Eldorado Nuclear placed its waste management facility near Newcastle on a site of approximately 30 acres of land adjacent to Lake Ontario. In this area, which includes not only Newcastle, but Port Granby, Port Hope, and Welcome, Ontario, there is a total of 880,000 cubic metres of low-level radioactive waste.

As I mentioned earlier, the cost of cleaning up this dump site is estimated at up to $735 million. One cannot help but question why the AECB has not been successful in stabilizing and decommissioning this environmentally sensitive dump site. Why has this been allowed to continue on the banks of Lake Ontario? Of course that waste is going to spread. If erosion takes place on the banks of Lake Ontario, as it very well could, seepage and leeching into Lake Ontario is going to occur that much sooner. It is expensive to correct, but the problem exists and the price is not too great when we consider the safety of citizens of this country, in particular those in the Province of Ontario.

Bill C-121 establishes financing for cleaning up existing waste. The first $2 million will be provided by the new company. The next $98 million will be split, with the new company providing twenty-three ninety-eighths and the Government of Canada providing the other seventy-five ninety-eights. Canada will pay any amount over $100 million. Use of the waste disposal site at Port Granby has been terminated as of June 30. Fortunately the AECB and the Government got the message, got together and decided that they were not going to use at least this dump site any more. That is long overdue.

What is alarming about all this is the fact that the Government has condoned this situation for four years. It has not recognized the seriousness of having a dump site like this one in a residential area so close to Lake Ontario.

With respect to this merger, while the financing agreement is in place, I am concerned that there is no time frame in place to complete the decommissioning of this low-level radioactive waste site. The Government is saying that it is going to leave it in a state of limbo, that it is not cleaning it up, and that it is not helping the residents of the area. We want action from the Government. It has to tell us when it is going to start decommissioning this site. Furthermore, responsibility for cleaning up the site will be in the hands of the federal Government. Speculating on the estimated cost of $75 million for stabilizing the dump site, the President of the AECB raised a serious problem. Once again I want to quote from his testimony in the legislative committee:

> According to the agreement, Eldorado would have to pay 25 per cent of that $75 million up to a maximum of $25 million, with the remainder to be paid by the federal Government. According to the Atomic Energy Control Act, we can tell Eldorado to make changes or stabilize a site, but we cannot force the federal Government to pay its share.

That is the difficulty. The federal Government is delaying the cleaning up of this dump site, but it has to decide. It has to act now to clean up and decommission the site. He went on to say that he wondered whether this might not lead to outright refusal. Obviously the agency is very concerned about whether the Government is acting in good faith with respect to this dump site. The President of AECB went on to say:

> From a legal standpoint, I do not think we have any problem with the company; I think that the problem would be between the company and the federal Government. That is one of the questions we are asking ourselves. Will there be problems of this nature every time we want to impose measures that might be very costly?

It is in the open and the Government has to respond. It has to lead the way, take the initiative, and clean up the dump site. Yet it has been silent, even in the face of testimony from its own agency.

We heard similar concerns about the delay in the clean-up process expressed by representatives of Newcastle and Port Granby. I urge the Government to give the Atomic Energy Control Board a specific time frame in which to stabilize and decommission this site. Furthermore, I would hope that there will be vigorous environmental assessments of future projects by the new company. It may also be necessary to have a field office with Atomic Energy Control Board staff located in Saskatchewan where a substantial amount of the uranium mining will be undertaken.

With respect to the previous obligations between Eldorado Nuclear and Blind River, Ontario, one of the communities which I said I hoped would not be jeopardized or left in an indefinite position as a result of the privatization, it is my understanding that the new company will honour the commitments made by Eldorado.

The Town of Blind River will be assured of the continuation of the $85,000 a year grant that Eldorado made in lieu of school taxes with which Blind River is paying off a mortgage on a community centre. In addition, there will be a continuation of the town's right to lease the golf course for $1 a year from Eldorado. The new company will also agree to assume responsibility for the erosion of the river which runs through the Eldorado property and affects the golf course.

I want to say how pleased I am that the Town of Blind River has been given these assurances. I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), who worked very hard on behalf of his constituents in Blind River to attain this assurance. He sat with me on the legislative committee and questioned the witnesses. I believe that the success which has been achieved was largely through the Member for Algoma. I think he deserves congratulations for his work. Without this Member's persistence and true loyalty to his constituents, the new company may not have assumed the previous contractual obligations of Eldorado Nuclear.

The new company will be made up mainly of Canadian shareholders. The Act says that non-Canadian shareholders can own a maximum of 20 per cent of the shares. However, I read something very alarming in the Saskatoon Star Pheonix on July 8. It reported the statements of the new chairman of the new company. The article read:

> A 20 per cent restriction on foreign ownership could be lifted if there is too much difficulty in selling enough shares to Canadians in what will be the world's largest uranium producer, says the newly-appointed chairman.

If that is starting already, Mr. Speaker, the Government's legislation will not mean anything. Many of us are giving our approval to this legislation on the basis that non-resident ownership in the new company dealing with our uranium resource, which is of tremendous concern to Canadians not only from an economic point of view but from a safety point of view, will be limited to 20 per cent and absolutely no more. The Bill is not yet even passed, and the chairman is saying that non-resident ownership may increase beyond 20 per cent if they cannot sell enough shares to Canadians. That is terrible.

I know the chairman and find him to be a very serious and capable individual. I do not think he would say this unless he has spoken to the Government about this possibility. If the Government is playing games with this issue—and I have no reason to believe it is other than that from what I am reading—it is acting in bad faith. I hope the Government is not acting in bad faith and is not seriously considering increasing the level of non-resident ownership in this company.

To emphasize this, the chairman said:

> This restriction can always be changed, and those levels will be looked at as we go into the future... careful consideration would be given to increasing the 20 per cent restriction currently in place on foreign investment.

I think it is awful for that even to be mentioned at this particular time. Through you, Mr. Speaker, and through this House I want to serve the Government with warning that if it or any Government attempts to increase the percentage of non-ownership above 20 per cent in this new company, our Party will fight it as hard as we possibly can with every means at our disposal.

In the interim, there are problems yet to be solved with respect to low-level radioactive nuclear waste. There are uncertainties about what the actual financing picture was. I doubt very much whether the values placed on Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation are accurate. I think this was a political compromise between two Governments. However, that is for the future to tell us. I honestly do not think the figures were accurate but, on the other hand, at least the head office will be in Saskatoon. I wish the people of Saskatchewan well and I hope that this company will be successful.

I ask the Government to maintain all due diligence in monitoring this opposition and to strengthen the Atomic Energy Control Board, not only for the sake of this new company but for the whole of the nuclear industry in Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party opposed this Bill to privatize Eldorado Nuclear when it was brought forward in the House; we opposed it in the House. We attended the committee meetings, listened to the witnesses, and questioned the witnesses. Everything we heard from them confirmed for us even more clearly than when we first opposed the Bill how correct we were in opposing it.

I will deal briefly with some of the reasons for our opposition, beginning with the financial ones. Atomic Energy Control Board officials told us that as a result of the operations of this company there are, in the area of the Towns of Newcastle and Port Hope, hundreds of thousands of tonnes of low- level radioactive waste very near Lake Ontario. Unless major steps are taken to contain the waste and eventually remove it, it will gradually move into Lake Ontario and pollute the water which is used by millions of people.

This happened when Eldorado was a Crown corporation owned by the people of Canada. We are now turning it over to private investors whose main purpose, quite understandably, will be to make a profit. We are turning it over to them without adequate control of their future operations, and the Government of Canada has committed the people of Canada to undertake almost entirely the cost of cleaning up that waste.

Let us look at the record of Denison Mines, a privately owned company in the nuclear business, owned by Stephen Roman. I recommend an interesting excerpt from a book being written about Stephen Roman and Denison Mines. It shows how that company deliberately and consistently breached the most elementary rules for protecting the environment and the workers in order to make greater profits.

Those are the kinds of concerns we have about privatizing this company. First, we believe that it is financially a bad deal for the people of Canada and a good deal for the new owners, particularly because of the environmental aspect.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) related the concerns expressed by the head of the Atomic Energy Control Board. I want to summarize the concerns of people living in the Towns of Newcastle and Port Hope and surrounding areas. They have not been reassured by this Bill. They have been expressing their concerns for years, which were essentially ignored by the former Government and the present Government.

They came to the committee with some specific requests, none of which were dealt with. They want a clean-up of the Port Granby dump and the continued presence of the federal Government in the disposition of the surrounding 650 acres where this low-level radio-active waste exists. They want an indication that a clean-up will proceed and that there will be sufficient funds to undertake it. Is there anything in the Bill that would give them that assurance? No.

Given the cost of between $250 million and $650 million to clean up this mess, there is nothing in the Bill nor in anything said by any government spokesperson to indicate that there are the resources or the will needed to finance the clean-up from the sale of shares, while the new company escapes with a very limited burden of some $25 million.

There is still no clean-up set for the Port Granby dump and other low-level radiation sites. This is not for good. This area has been campaigning locally on this issue at least since 1970. In 1984, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was Leader of the Opposition he promised a great deal more. Let me quote from the letter which the Prime Minister, then Leader of the Opposition, wrote to Mr. James Sculthorpe of Port Hope, Ontario, on August 21, 1984. He said, referring to the activities of the Hon. Member for Durham—Northumberland (Mr. Lawrence):

> As Mr. Lawrence stated recently, there is ample evidence that neither of the current proposals by Eldorado Nuclear Limited for establishing a permanent radioactive waste disposal dump either near Port Granby or near Wesleyville are acceptable to the people of those communities or to their elected representatives. All such waste should be removed from major population areas and kept well away from any major water resource such as Lake Ontario.
> While this would involve greater expense, the federal government, as owner of the Eldorado Nuclear Limited, must accept at least partial responsibility and provide the leadership.
> For several years federal authorities have been exploring where and how to store permanently Canada's growing accumulation of nuclear and radio active waste. The waste from Eldorado Nuclear Limited must be considered part of that problem and its solution.

That was stated when the Prime Minister was Leader of the Opposition. All that was forgotten when he became Prime Minister. What we see is privatization, with no guarantees at all that the Government will do very much about the waste.

Let me deal with another concern expressed by the employees through their union. It is the question of pensions, which have become an issue in almost every privatization we have seen, including Teleglobe, Canadian Arsenals, and now Eldorado.

The Eldorado situation is supposed to be a very happy one, with a surplus of over $54 million in the pension fund. Many promises were made by the former Minister responsible for privatization, the present Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), and the President of Eldorado Nuclear, George Currie, that the surplus would be used to improve indexing and distribute other benefits to plan members. There was a statement by the then Minister in which she said that existing pension and benefit plans would be adopted by the new company. She went on to say: "I can confirm that pensions are protected by this agreement".

The President of Eldorado Nuclear gave the same assurances. Now we see that the Eldorado pension plan will be changed from a defined benefit to a money purchase plan and that such disbursements as indexing will be dropped. The current defined benefit plan, which could easily accommodate post retirement inflation protection for both current and future retirees will be dropped. Under the new money purchase plan, post retirement inflation protection for future retirees cannot be provided.

The surplus may be distributed by a contribution holiday which will reduce the surplus from $54 million to $12 million. Clearly United Steelworkers of America, representing the union members, was upset by this development as was made clear by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), in a statement which he made on July 7, 1988. He said, as reported at page 17236 of Hansard:

> When the Government announced that it would be privatizing Eldorado Nuclear the Minister then in charge of privatization said in a press release that "existing pension and benefit plans will be adopted by the new company". In a statement and a letter sent to employees she repeated that promise. The company itself repeated that promise before a committee of the House of Commons.
> Now in a proposal made public to the workers yesterday it becomes apparent for existing workers who continue to work for this firm that they will lose the protection of their present pension plans. The protection will only exist for those people who have already retired.

We see what the promises of the Conservative Government and the officials of the company mean.

Let me deal with another matter of tremendous importance. It is the question of job guarantees. We moved an amendment which was rejected by government Members, of course. It dealt with job guarantees due to the fears that the merger between Eldorado and the Saskatchewan Mining and Development Corporation would mean that jobs in the upgrading plants at Port Hope and Blind River would be in jeopardy. They are especially in jeopardy because of the free trade agreement which, according to Annex 902.5, exempts the U.S. from the Canadian uranium upgrading policy of 1985. Let me put that section of the agreement on record:

> Export Measures
> 2. Canada shall exempt the United States of America from the Canadian Uranium Upgrading Policy as announced by the Minister of State for Mines on October 18, 1985.
> 3. The United States of America shall exempt Canada from the prohibition on the exportation of Alaskan oil under section 7(d) of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as amended, up to a maximum volume of 50,000 barrels per day on an average basis, subject to the condition that such oil be transported to Canada from a suitable location within the lower 48 states.

There you have, Mr. Speaker, another illustration of the serious adverse effects Canada will experience as a result of this free trade agreement. The testimony heard by the committee indicated just how the free trade agreement was part of a reshaping of the uranium market in North American which gives the United States access to our low-cost, high-grade uranium in northern Saskatchewan without the uranium having to be upgraded in Canada. This was confirmed by Professor Douglas McArthur, Professor of Economics at the University of Saskatchewan. He was questioned by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) about this matter and he said:

> I think we are seeing an integration of particularly North American markets taking place, with free trade and other developments, the removal or virtual withdrawal from the further processing policy and so on. I am not very hopeful or optimistic for fuel processing in Canada under those conditions. Others will perhaps come back and tell you they are optimistic. I would challenge them to provide substantial evidence of this.

The Hon. Member for Algoma then asked:

> Do you see the trade-off with the Americans and the free trade, where we are giving up our further processing, and they are doing away with the limitation on enrichment of Canadian uranium? It seems to me the administration has been fighting this, day in and year out, in the courts, and so on, to make sure they can buy $17-a-pound uranium from Saskatchewan anyway. If there were no free trade deal, are they not just going to pass a law that they can get access to this cheap uranium anyway? Did they just give us the sleeves out of their vest?

Professor McArthur answered:

> I do not think there is a lot in that arrangement that is going to advance the interests of the Canadian uranium industry, I think it is going to have the result of making the various stages more competitive, which at one level is attractive. But it raises some serious questions, as I said, about the the future of Blind River and Port Hope. These are some of the consequences of moving into arrangements of this sort that one has to be aware of. This strikes me as being one place where we can expect to see some implications in terms of industry and cities and towns and people and workers in our country.

Those views expressed by Professor McArthur were never answered. They were ignored completely because, again, the Conservative Party has this blind belief that the private sector can do anything better than the public sector.

I would like to raise one other matter about which Professor McArthur spoke. He talked about how the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, a Crown corporation, made it a major tenet, a major reason for having a Crown corporation, that that corporation make every effort to provide employment for the people of northern Saskatchewan who are, in the main, native people. I do not have to tell Members of this House how disadvantaged, how poor and how sick native people are in many parts of Canada because there have been no jobs. The then New Democratic Government of Saskatchewan determined it would try to change that in northern Saskatchewan by using its Crown mining corporations to do everything they could to provide jobs for native people. They succeeded in that, and now what we see through the privatization of Eldorado and the privatization of Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, is a private corporation which will naturally have as its major objective, the making of profits. You can be certain, Mr. Speaker, that if it will be cheaper to employ people from southern parts of Canada, who are not native, then that is precisely what will happen. For these and other reasons with which I think my colleague, the Member from Regina, will deal, we intend to continue to oppose this Bill as we have from the day it was brought forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too wish to join in the debate on Bill C-121, a Bill the Government has placed before us which creates a new corporation by combining the assets of Eldorado Nuclear with the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation. When future historians look back at this particular period in the evolution of our society, I think they will view the action taken by the Government with Bill C-121 as one of the great and unfortunate mistakes of this particular period.

In the evolution of social societies, certain laws, which I cannot quite figure out yet, prevail and it becomes necessary at certain times to have right wing governments to correct mistakes from a previous period of evolution. The mistakes that right wing government makes in turn leads to its own defeat, and then society moves onward. Some people compare it to the swing of a pendulum. It swings to the left and it swings to the right and somehow this produces social change and progress.

Bill C-121, I believe, will historically prove to be a tremendous excess of right wing philosophy. It is, as many Members have pointed out, an ideology defeating common sense. I would like to deal with this topic in terms of some of the sub topics. I would like to talk about the environmental impacts, the effects on the whole nuclear industry, and I would like to discuss some of the history of Eldorado. I would also like to discuss the business reasons behind this.

Let me take the last point first. Even from a business point of view, what the Government is doing today does not make business sense. It continues to astound me how a right wing Government that espouses business philosophy does at times make very stupid decisions. To put the assets of Eldorado Nuclear and the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation on the market now just does not make any sense. The industry is in a slump. There is a surplus of uranium that has been stockpiled. It is not a good time now from a business point of view to dispose of the assets. It makes no sense whatsoever. Of course, the really dumb people are the Tories in Saskatchewan, the Government of Saskatchewan, because the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, from a business point of view, has indeed been a very successful corporation, bringing in revenues and royalties to the coffers of the Province of Saskatchewan on a very consistent basis.

I would like to quote from the paper presented to the committee by Professor Douglas McArthur of the University of Regina. He stated that over the four-year period since the company commenced production, and he was referring to the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation, it has returned close to 50 per cent of the province equity excluding taxes and royalties. In its most recent year, 1987, the return on equity was 20 per cent, placing it well ahead of similar firms in the mining industry. Even though there is a slump in the uranium industry on a world-wide basis, the Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation was able to show a return of 20 per cent on equity. That is certainly not the case when it comes to Eldorado. Eldorado had total cumulative losses by the end of 1986 of $155.9 million. Its cumulative return on shareholder equity over the period amounted to a negative 50 per cent.

Eldorado has some major and serious obligations, many of which in fact appear that with this legislation the Government will retain. For example, Professor McArthur in the paper he presented to the committee stated:

> A second matter of concern has to deal with the handling of wastes and other potential liabilities contracted by the companies up to the time of the formation of the new firm.
> The Government of Canada has indicated that there will be an effort to transfer to government (i.e. socialize) a considerable part of the responsibility for these to some degree unspecified liabilities. This suggests a curious ambivalence about the principle of privatization. Private ownership > generally implies obtaining the rights to the benefits of an undertaking, while at the same taking the responsibility for associated business obligations. In this case, the government intends to transfer the benefits to a select group of people with the ability to pay for shares, while imposing the burden of a major part of the obligations onto taxpayers in general. This is without doubt being done to enhance the marketability of the shares. But legislator and the public should be aware of the degree to which this compromises the principle of privatization, and the extent to which taxpayers are potentially burdened in order to meet a purely political, need with significant potential benefits for a select group of shareholders. Some have called this practice socialism for the few, which is a fairly apt description.

We see that this means does not make much business sense. I suggest that in Bill C-121 the Government shows that it is made up of lousy business people when it comes to conducting business for the public interest.

Let me reiterate. It is not a good time to put these assets on the market. There is a slump in the uranium industry. The Saskatchewan Government is made up of a bunch of damn fools for taking a very profitable operation and selling it off. It appears as though from a public point of view it is the public and the taxpayers of Canada who will be inheriting many of the liabilities from Eldorado. The new owners, the new shareholders, will not be acquiring those liabilities, which means the clean-up of soil that contains uranium wastes.

I would like to go back into the history of Eldorado to see why it was created in the first place as a public company. First, it was not due to a great amount of zeal for socialism by C. D. Howe that Eldorado was created as a public company. It became obvious that in the early 1940s during the war years the British Government was anxious to secure a reliable supply of uranium for its own joint effort with Canada to produce nuclear weapons. So, very quietly the federal Government of the day, a Liberal Government, started to acquire interests in this uranium mining company, Eldorado.

It thought that it had control over Eldorado. What it did is that it left the management of the company with a group that was initially there, a private group. By the end of 1943 the Government had acquired a controlling interest in the company, yet not a majority interest. However, in the spring of 1943 the British Government discovered to its dismay that Eldorado had contracted to sell to the United States all the uranium it could produce over the next two years. Despite the fact that the intention of the Canadian Government was to obtain a controlling interest in Eldorado so that it could meet its obligations to Great Britain, it left the management of the company in private hands.

These private managers did what good private managers do all over the world, managers who are mainly motivated by profit. They took the best bidder. The best bidder was the United States. All at once Canada was not able to fulfil its obligations to Great Britain.

When Eldorado was totally nationalized Mr. Grant Glasgow, a member of the firm of Clarkson Gordon, did a thorough review of Eldorado and its practices under private management. It was found that, first, some of the top managers in Eldorado had sold uranium secretly. Second, it was discovered that there was some $2.6 million in cash and materials that had been extracted from the company. Third, it was discovered as well that practices that were detrimental both to the environment and to the health and safety of the workers were being undertaken. Those are the reasons why Eldorado became a public corporation.

Uranium is not just something that is dealt with like a commodity that can be bought at a cornerstore. What we are talking about is a substance whose negative effects will be felt for thousands and thousands of years. The effects of radiation, low-level radiation or high-level radiation, will be with us for generations to come. If you think, Mr. Speaker, of the time between now and the time of the construction of the pyramids, that time span is but just a twinkle in the time that the negative effects of radiation will be felt.

There are no social organizations, whether public or private, that I feel are responsible enough to deal with a substance whose effects will be felt for generations and generations to come. If I had my way, only a group of monks and nuns totally dedicated to the welfare and the well-being of the human race would be responsible for the uranium industry if we are going to have one at all. To hand it over into private hands is the ultimate of follies, the ultimate of stupidities, the ultimate of where ideology is master over the concern and the well-being of generations to come.

That is why at the beginning of my remarks I stated that Bill C-121, historically, will show to be the most stupid and inept act of this particular Government and the right-wing swing.

Let me put it on record that if I ever have in my power and am in a position of influence when this Government will be chucked out, as it will one day, then I suggest to all those who have invested in this new company that there will be many of us who will insist that this company be expropriated and brought back under public control without the type of compensation that they might otherwise expect. The uranium industry should not ever be in the hands of private industry. It is not an industry that works in a normal way. The effects are too long-term. It requires a sense of social responsibility to present and future generations that I suspect even publicly-owned corporations have a great difficulty demonstrating. To put it in the hands of the private sector that must show a profit on a yearly basis, and which is driven by market forces, is to invite disaster. It is irresponsible. The Government should be thoroughly ashamed of itself.

The Government states that there is nothing to worry about, and that it is going to put in place some regulations. In fact, it does not state that it will put into place some regulations. It states that the existing regulations will take care of the environmental concerns, and the concerns for the health and safety of the workers.

First, let us recognize that the present regulatory régime was brought down under the assumption that there was a public Crown corporation in the uranium industry. I would suggest that the regulations need changing and updating to reflect this new reality.

This was definitely presented by Dr. Terrence J. Downey, Chairman, Department of Political Science, University of Waterloo, in a letter he wrote to the Clerk of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-121. He noted that the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) had invited him to send some of his observations to the committee dealing with the regulatory régime under privatization. In part, Dr. Downey's letter states:

> In view of these considerations, I suggest that an enhanced regulatory regime must be put in place to correct current weaknesses and, of utmost importance, to bridge the major supervisory gap which will be created by a privatization which removes a key element of the regulatory framework.

In his letter Dr. Downey states that he has serious reservations that the existing regulatory régime is sufficient to ensure that this new corporation will be prevented from doing environmental damage and injury to the health of its workers.

Some very important work has been done on the effects of low-level radiation. We know from statistics that there was a tremendous increase in deaths from leukaemia throughout the world in the late 1940s and early 1950s as a result of the nuclear testing that the superpowers had been doing above ground. In fact, the statistics became so alarming that one of the first agreements on nuclear weaponry between the Soviet Union and the United States was to continue the testing underground because of the effect that low-level radiation was having on a global scale.

Some of the work now being done on low levels of radiation has shown a marked increase in deaths of those people born in the late 1940s and early 1950s in a period of time when there were high levels of low level radiation throughout the globe, and that there has been a marked increase in death and illness among that group of the population in the period of the Chernobyl disaster. The statistics now show that those people who were placed at risk because they were born in a time when there was a large amount of low-level radiation on a global scale were much more susceptible when the globe was in another period of massive low-level radiation because of the Chernobyl disaster. We see the effects of something that occurred 20 or 30 years ago later on down the road.

When we deal with uranium we must surely deal with it with a tremendous sense of responsibility and awe. By privatizing our uranium industry, I am afraid that we take a step away from responsibility. We allow it to be in the hands of people who are purely and totally motivated by market forces.

It is understandable when people invest in something that they expect a profit. They do not expect it in 10 or 20 years from now, they expect it at the end of the year. There is no doubt that decisions will be made that are primarily based on the need to satisfy investors. That puts at risk the health and safety not only of the workers, but also of the environment, and generations to come. It puts at risk the health and well-being of the globe, the planet, and the children yet to be born, all in the name of some idiotic ideology of the Government and its insistence on privatizing, and that before the election it must have a good record of privatization. That is its motivation. Indeed, it is the height of irresponsibility. It shows and proves my contention that, at present, human institutions, whether they are government or private institutions, do not have the maturity and the responsibility of dealing with substances whose effects will be felt generations into the future.

Therefore, I must be opposed to this motion.

Mr. Benjamin: I thank my colleague from the other half of our Queen city for his remarks. I fully agree with and support what he said. By way of comment I wish to say that, as far as I am concerned, and I have some confidence as far as hundreds of thousands of people in this country are concerned, it is time now to serve notice on those who would be inclined to buy shares privately in the uranium industry that as and when the Government is defeated those shareholders should be happy to just get their money back. There is no time or place for private ownership for profit in the nuclear industry in this modern world. That is my comment, and that is my view.

I want to ask my colleague if he would care to comment on that view, and whether he agrees or disagrees. I welcome his opinion, and I also welcome his comments as to the feelings of most Canadians on this issue.

Mr. de Jong: I share the views of the Hon. Member, as I also mentioned in my remarks. When the Government changes, whichever future Government replaces it, one of the things that that Government will have to do is to correct the excesses of this particular Government, and on top of that list will be correcting the tremendous mistake that Bill C-121 is committing. It is a terrible mistake and a terrible blunder that must be corrected, not only for business reasons, but for environmental and health reasons, and for the safety of Canadian citizens yet to come.

Mr. Hawkes: I want to thank Members opposite for their co-operation on this Bill. It is my understanding that there is a predisposition to move it through the House, and I very much appreciate that, as does the House.

It is interesting that we can have such differences of opinion, and I believe that those differences of opinion are healthy. One of the things that speeches of Members opposite have triggered in me is a thought pattern that I have felt for quite a while. There is a considerable danger when a group of people set the rules, and a group of people control the policemen, and the same group of people are the owners. I recognize the genuine concern for health and safety, but the nation might experience less conflict of interest, and it might be a safer world, if elected people set the rules and were responsible for policing the rules and did not complicate the situation through ownership. There is a normal, natural tendency among things that are closely interrelated to be influenced by other parts of that relationship.

I put this out generally as a difference of opinion, but I think that Government should restrict itself to setting down what the rules should be, making sure that there are adequate ways of policing the rules, and not complicating that any more than necessary with ownership, because the desire to please the ownership part of it might indeed complicate and make the world a little less safe.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I have some trouble with that argument, particularly coming from this Conservative Member. We have heard from the Government over and over again that we must get government off its back and that we must rid of all these regulations. The mining industry hates government regulations. It is always at war with government because of mining regulations.

Now we hear a government Member justifying privatization of this industry. He obviously recognizes the need for a tremendous amount of social responsibility when dealing with nuclear substances and uranium substances. He says: "Oh, well, regulations will take care of that". I can see what will happen: "We will privatize it. We will have the regulations three or four years down the road. Well, there is another slump in the market. We will have to lay off workers. There are a few short cuts that we can make", and there go the regulations. We are getting government off its back, all right; I do not buy that argument!

I think he makes a valid point when he says that quite often public ownership and the regulators begin to come too close to each other. Yes, that is a danger and that is why we must have Parliament being ever vigilant to make certain that that does not occur. That is why we must always make certain that the representatives of the people—Parliament—has indeed the final say and that the wishes of Crown corporation become subservient to the wishes of Parliament.

To correct the possible danger of the regulators being too close to the Crown corporation, the solution is not to privatize. The solution is to make certain that the Ministry and Parliament are on top of the situation and ensure that that close relationship does not exist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the assistant to the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until a later time.

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until Monday at 6 p.m., at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

CANADIAN INTERNATIONAL TRADE TRIBUNAL ACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal and to amend or repeal other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank Members of the House for the interest they have shown in the Bill over time. It is an important Bill. It will streamline and rationalize the activities of the Canadian import institutions. In addition, it extends the right of direct access for safeguard inquiries to all Canadian industries.

Members will know that this particular Bill has undergone a great deal of scrutiny, as evidenced by a number of amendments proposed both in committee and later in the House. Some of them have been adopted. They were good ideas. Most notable was the one changing the majority requirement for initiation to a major proportion requirement and eliminating a clause which was alleged to cause a conflict of interest situation for members of existing tribunals.

Clearly after this process the Bill is a fair and balanced one, and its passage is eagerly awaited by a broad spectrum of Canadian industry. Jobs indeed will be enhanced, jobs indeed will result. I hope that the Senate will deal with Bill C-110 in an expeditious manner in order that this new tribunal can begin functioning as soon as possible.

I would point out that as of this morning the Senate had 15 Bills before it. If we complete our work as scheduled this evening, they are likely to have 19 Bills before it. It would be very helpful to the nation and to the House if it were to move expeditiously on most if not all the matters before it.

I thank Hon. Members for their attention. I hope that the particular Bill will receive a minimum of debate and relatively swift passage at third reading stage. I am optimistic in that regard.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief in taking part in this debate. Our critic, our spokesperson for this Bill, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) has done an excellent job in putting forward the point of view of Liberals on this Bill and in putting forward possible amendments to improve the Bill. I cannot say that all our ideas were accepted, but I think one should recognize the excellent work done by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity, in the study of this Bill.

Certainly there is a point to be made for Bill C-110, since it rationalizes and combines three separate pieces of trade legislation into one. The rationalization and improvement of Canadian trade legislation is a central component of Liberal trade policy. This policy has been set out in the reports that we have put forward to the public. For example, the Liberal report entitled Reaching Out.

More precisely, we have said that in order to communicate effectively and to deliver federal trade policy it is necessary to have transparent omnibus trade legislation which addresses all possible trade issues.

I did want to put on record some problems that we see with the Government's approach. The Government has gone ahead and negotiated a trade deal with the United States. We have told the House and Canadian people how in our view the trade deal undermines Canadian sovereignty, puts at risk hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, and limits the ability of present and future Canadian Governments, federal and provincial, to make decisions which Canadian people may consider in their interest and in the interest of their country in future years. I am talking about limiting the ability to make decisions in areas like energy, investment, financial institutions, agriculture, and cultural industries.

We now have a situation where the Government is trying to put us in a position where we will have two sets of trade legislation or rules. One set for our dealings with the United States and one set for everybody else. Ultimately I do not think that it will help Canadians or those who want to deal with Canadians, who want to understand and make the best use of Canadian trade legislation.

We have already made many comments about the flaws in the Government's trade deal with the United States when it comes to the rules set out in that deal on our trading relationship with that country. We pointed out that although the Government has set as its primary objective in a trade deal with the United States the freeing of Canada from any possibility of harassment by American trade through penalty legislation.

It is very clear that we have not been freed from the threat of American trade legislation. Even if the trade deal becomes law, we will continue as before. The only difference will be that added to it will be another stage of bureaucracy, the so-called machinery which the Government says it has negotiated with the United States for a dispute settlement. However, this dispute settlement mechanism will do nothing other than decide whether or not the American law has been applied correctly according to its own terms. Also, there will be a very complicated set of rules arising out of the trade deal, if it ever becomes law, for determining whether goods can flow on a duty-free basis between Canada and the United States. Many Canadians had hoped that a comprehensive trade deal with the United States would mean that they could go to the U.S., buy anything they wanted and bring it back here duty-free. They are in for a big surprise, Mr. Speaker, if this deal goes through.

The rules provided in the Government's trade deal with the United States indicate that people who purchase goods in that country will still have to pay Canadian federal-provincial sales taxes. They will be able to bring in products duty-free, only if they can prove that those goods are essentially of an American origin. We know today that many of the things we want to buy when we go to a country such as the United States do not come from there at all but from countries like Japan, Korea, Singapore, and Taiwan. If that is the case, those purchases will be subject to duty as before. If the deal with the United States goes through, we will have one set of rules no less cumbersome than the rules that may exist at present dealing with our relations in trading matters with the United States, and another set of rules and a tribunal to examine the rules which will be set up under this Bill in respect of trade with all other parts of the world.

There is a second concern that I have to express about Bill C-110. It could well be argued that Bill C-110 does not cover a very essential area. The kind of trade legislation proposed by Liberals in the trade policy we have put forward would specify how complaints are to be processed and administered. However, this legislation will make it possible to deal with the issue of whether there should be federal assistance available to help Canadian industry that would be affected by any ruling of the tribunal to adjust to import competition. If so, what type and amount of assistance should be put into effect to bring about this kind of adjustment?

Bill C-110 does not do this. It basically prescribes how complaints and investigations are to be handled. An essential corollary of any ruling being made by the tribunal proposed under Bill C-110 is what effect it will have. If there are effects that will be evident because of a ruling, even though that ruling is said by the tribunal to be in the over-all Canadian public interest, more attention has to be paid to the fact that this Bill is ready to allow the tribunal to help the affected industry adopt the machinery and technology to meet increased import competition effectively, or to enable the affected industry to move into other lines of production. It should also help the workers involved to get the skills and training which will enable them to keep their jobs in an industry which may be a very different kind of industry as a result of a ruling of the tribunal, or in some cases to help them go on to work in a totally different industry.

This key aspect of dealing with import competition has been virtually ignored by the Government's proposal. I hope that we will have the opportunity, and I predict another Liberal Government will have that opportunity, to do a better job than this Conservative Government has done until now, especially through Bill C-110 in addressing the vital issue of adjustment.

By way of conclusion I want to say that although I have brought forth some concerns about the Bill—and these concerns and others I have not mentioned have been expressed with a great deal of eloquence and insight by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity—I do want to say that our general position is that there is much desirable about Bill C-110 in so far as it rationalizes three separate pieces of trade legislation into one piece of trade legislation. As I have said, this kind of rationalization and the over-all improvement of our Canadian trade legislation are essential components of our Liberal trade policy.

I am glad to have put on record some comments on Bill C-110. I think we have reached the stage where this debate can be concluded, and for that reason I am happy to conclude my own remarks.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few moments in the debate on Bill C-110, an Act to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. I am tempted to say at the outset that this debate, brief as it will be, is a nice demonstration of why the House should not be sitting into July as it is doing now. This evening we are having a very brief third reading debate on a Bill that may be of enormous importance to Canadian industry, the manufacturing industry generally. It deserves to be treated with all the seriousness which that involves. Quite simply we have had persons from the Government, the Official Opposition, and my caucus speaking to the Bill who are not directly involved with it. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) is not here. I do not mean to violate the rules or cast any reflections at all, because his Parliamentary Secretary is standing in for him, but the Liberal House Leader and myself are here doing yeoman service for persons who know the Bill intimately, who are aware of its strengths and its weaknesses, and who would want, I am sure, to say more about it on third reading.

As the Liberal House Leader has done, I want to recognize the hard work of my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), who worked very hard in the House and in the legislative committee on Bill C-110. In fact, he had the satisfaction at report stage of having the Minister of State for Finance recognize the close attention that he had paid to this Bill and the work he had done trying to ensure that the Bill to establish the Canadian International Trade Tribunal would be an effective piece of legislation. May I say on his behalf, Mr. Speaker, in focusing my comments more particularly on the Bill, that in principle the proposal to roll together three different tribunals into one can be seen as a good thing. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor would want to give his support in principle to putting these several bodies—The Tariff Board, the Textile and Clothing Board, and the Special Import Tribunal—together, to reorganizing them as the new Canadian International Trade Tribunal. That ought to be a good thing, but the question is whether in fact the Bill as it stands is a good thing, and whether the kinds of powers that have been assigned to this new tribunal, the composition of the tribunal, and the procedures that it is expected to follow in their individuality and totality would make an effective board. On behalf of my colleague and our caucus I want to say that we do not think it will be effective. We have very serious concerns about several aspects of the Bill and about the tribunal that it will create, if the Bill is finally passed, given Royal Assent, and proclaimed.

In my own observation one concern raised is the matter of easy access. The tribunal dealing with the textile and clothing board has been noted for its easy access. The textile and clothing board has existed to ensure that agreements dating back to the early 1960s in the clothing trade, which take the form these days of multi-fibre agreements with various Third World producing countries, and their impact on Canadian manufacturers are properly administered and that those industries are safe. The ease of access to the board has been one of its most important features.

Both textiles and apparel producers of Canada and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which speaks for far more of Canada's manufacturers, have expressed concern that the new tribunal will not provide this ease of access. One can see on the very face of it that with three tribunals and 15 members, even now the procedures are all too slow. If we move to a new structure with only nine members with far more responsibilities than the three different boards now existing have, there will be grave concerns about whether the new International Trade Tribunal will be able to work effectively and to respond to the concerns of industry as surely we would want that tribunal to do.

What makes this particularly ironic is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself, in a press release in Sherbrooke, Eastern Townships, the heart of some of Canada's most important textile and clothing producing areas, promised a greater role to the industry in shaping textile and apparel policy. Yet the legislation, Bill C-110, does away with a board which has played such an important part in studying the situation and making recommendations to government in the past.

Another serious problem that gives us cause to criticize and oppose the Bill is the matter of the discretionary power to conduct inquiries which the Textile and Clothing Board in particular has under Article 9 of the Textile and Clothing Board Act. That discretionary power is done away with in Bill C-110. In addition, the new reality is that the International Trade Tribunal will be prevented from making recommendations and reports on injury inquiries which would follow from the concerns of various industries affected by trade.

Given the particular fact that under the Act only producers who produce the majority of specified goods can petition for an injury inquiry, we feel grave concern for the small producers who are in a certain marginal position in an industry and who may manage in some industries, given the kind of price leadership which some are able to execute, to have a reasonably good life. Others may find themselves in boom time doing reasonably well, but when business is slow, they may find it very difficult to survive. In those circumstances particularly, will the small and marginal producers have any kind of recourse at all, given the way in which the International Trade Tribunal will be constituted under Bill C-110?

There is a third concern which relates to the question of an arm's length relationship which the tribunal is supposed to have with the Government. This is actually thrown into question by the fact that it cannot initiate its own inquiries. Does the fact that the large producers producing the majority of the products will have access to this tribunal make up for the fact that the tribunal is not able to initiate inquiries? The legislation is not very clear on this matter, but we can certainly imagine a situation in which the new tribunal will have a very close relationship with government and with large producers. What then is the situation of the smaller producers to whom I have already referred?

Since the purpose of this new International Trade Tribunal is supposed to be to deal with international trade and economic issues, it should surely have a much larger and more independent role in considering what is happening in the various industries, in initiating inquiries, and in recommending the kinds of adjustment assistance measures that may be necessary.

We are concerned that this Bill is surely part of the reorganization of Canada's trading system which this Conservative Government is carrying out. This is just one more example of the kind of bending over backward to U.S. interests which has characterized the Conservative Government in negotiating the trade deal that is being pursued these days in the legislative committee on Bill C-130, and in other areas as well.

This is a Ministry which all too often has been ready to sell out to American interests, to forget what American industries do to Canadian industries, particularly through the use of American trade tribunals. In northwestern Ontario we have had to live for months with that 15 per cent export tax which was imposed on Canadian softwood producers and continues to be imposed on Ontario softwood producers because this Government buckled under to American pressure. It was so stricken with fear that it would not be able to win before the American trade tribunal that it accepted an export tax on our lumber, though we in Ontario are convinced that there has never been any subsidization of the industry through stumpage prices for our timber.

If the Socred Government in British Columbia did not have the strength and courage to charge the proper amount for stumpage, then let British Columbia Governments go ahead and deal with the matter properly. We do not need American Governments under U.S. industry pressure forcing the B.C. Government to do the right thing. However, that should not be imposed on the people of Ontario, the workers in the forest and sawmills of Ontario, as it has been to the detriment of the industry and the loss of hundreds of jobs in northern Ontario already. In the context of what U.S. law allows and what U.S. tribunals make possible for U.S. industry, we see in this Bill just one more example of an inability of the Conservative Government to defend Canadian interests.

I note in glancing over the material my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, has provided that he focused at report stage on a number of amendments which were designed to take care of some of these shortcomings in the Bill. Having read the record of that debate, I note that the Minister of State for Finance argued time after time that this would be some sort of a violation of our GATT obligations. He provided all kinds of assurances that all was well in the Bill.

We are not convinced of that. We are not impressed that this Bill will do things right. Because the amendments we put forward to try to make the Bill what it should be were not accepted, I state clearly now that the New Democratic caucus does not support Bill C-110, and when you put the question in a moment, Mr. Speaker, of course we will follow through on the statement I have just made.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a few concerns about this legislation that I want to put on the record. I know that most Hon. Members would rather be at home than here this evening, so I will not take too long to say what I have to say.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: I am sure that my remarks will be welcomed in the same enthusiastic fashion.

When it comes to the textile industry, there are theories of international trade, theories of free trade, and theories of prosperity coming as a result of greater liberalization of trade. When I put the theories of the economists on the one hand and the reality of the workers in the textile industry on the other hand, I find that my heart is with those in the textile industry. My heart is with those in the textile industry. I say that before we open our doors to greater competition in the textile industry, we ought to take care to see that the people presently working in that industry will still have their jobs after these changes in legislation.

It is fine for a Prime Minister seeking an issue to run on in an election to hype free trade. It is well and good for economists who live in university ivory towers to promote the theory of free trade. However, when it comes down to the bread and butter issues for the people who work in the textile industry, they would like an orderly transition. They want their interests taken into account before legislation is changed.

We are afraid this legislation will weaken the instruments in the hands of the textile industry which ensure its survival. We in this Party have pointed out weaknesses in the legislation which ought to be corrected before it is passed. My colleague from Windsor introduced specific amendments because we want the people who work in the industry to feel secure and know that tomorrow morning, when they get up, their jobs will be there and that they will not be guinea pigs for some academic theory of free trade. Let us plan where we are going in an orderly fashion. Let us proceed with some care and caution. I urge the Government to accept the amendments we put forward so that the dangers contained in the legislation for the textile industry are not there when the legislation is passed.

It is well known that there are countries that produce textile products with labour which is paid at a much lower rate than is possible in Canada, even though the people who work in the industry in Canada earn low wages by our standards. Therefore, if we just throw open the doors to international competition, then we put the jobs of those presently in the industry at risk. If we are marching down the road to more liberalized trade, if we are going to bring down trade barriers, let us do it cautiously. Let us amend the legislation before it passes so the people in the industry will know that we have taken their interests into account and that we are not just following the theory of some academic economist or some political leader seeking an issue for a general election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), I have been requested by the assistant to the Chief Government Whip to defer the division until a later time.

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until Monday at 6 p.m., at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, as reported (without amendments) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Merrithew (for the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I see that I have unlimited time. This is the first and may be the last time I will have that opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Merrithew: We are adjourning at ten o'clock.

Mr. Manly: Well, I can carry on tomorrow and Monday.

Seriously, this is not the routine Bill that its treatment by the House would appear to indicate. It deals with Canada's relationship with the debt-ridden, poverty-stricken nations and peoples of the Third World. The Bill gives the Government authority to provide funds to the International Monetary Fund, through loans and grants, for a trust or any other body established by the IMF. The Government has explained that these moneys are for enhanced structural adjustment facilities, or ESAF. It provides highly concessional terms to the poorest countries faced with the problems of debt repayment and structural adjustment. Part of the money coming from Canada will be in the form of a loan and part in the form of a grant.

The purpose of the funds in the form of a grant are to allow very concessional terms to the recipient countries. In other words, the grant funds coming from Canada enable the borrowing countries to borrow the money at very low interest rates. At the same time, the IMF will be paying the regular commercial interest rates to the lending countries such as Canada. The grant portion of the money comes from our official development assistance, ODA.

I am concerned about some of the specifics in the Bill. First, while the Government explained that the purpose of these moneys was for the ESAF, the Bill does not say that. It says "any trust or body established by the IMF". The committee rejected an amendment that would have tightened that up. In the same way, the Bill specifies certain specific sums of money but then goes on to say that any other funds that the Government wants can also be given. In effect, the Bill gives a blank cheque, and again the committee rejected amendments that would have tightened that up.

I am concerned that this Bill has the grant portion of the funds coming from ODA at a time when that assistance as a percentage of our GNP is dropping.

A June 22 Globe and Mail report pointed out that foreign development aid from western countries fell by 2 per cent in real terms last year. According to figures released by the OECD, Canadian overseas aid spending fell as a proportion of Gross National Product from 0.48 per cent in 1986 to 0.46 per cent in 1987. That is a very small percentage drop, but we must compare that with the commitment the Government made when first elected.

At that time the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) went to the United Nations and promised that Canada would meet its commitment of reaching 0.7 per cent of its funding for ODA by 1990. Since then we have seen one cut-back after another rather than the fulfilment of that commitment. Now, rather than increasing the percentage of our GNP which goes to development assistance, we are decreasing it. In this connection we are concerned that the grant portion which goes to ESAF is being taken from Official Development Assistance.

Roy Culpeper who studied this matter appeared before the committee and said:

> In its recent report, the UN Secretary General's advisory group on financial flows to Africa concluded that $5 billion in additional flows annually would be necessary to secure some economic growth, increased imports, and reduce the debt servicing ratio in sub-Saharan Africa. If the ESAF and other recent initiatives, notably those by the World Bank, are factored in, then the net additional requirement falls to $2 billion annually, still a sizeable amount that we are nowhere close to meeting. However, it is important to realize that the positive effect of the ESAF itself requires additionality; that is, it should mean that new money is flowing into Africa and not simply being taken from existing aid funds.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, that is what is happening. Nevertheless, he and our Party see the ESAF as an advancement on traditional international monetary fund policies. The traditional IMF imposed form of structural adjustment with which we are all familiar involves currency devaluation, cutbacks in social programs, elimination of subsidies on basic food stuffs, cutting back on the public sector, privatization, and forcing Third World nations to spend more and more of their energy in exports and opening up their economies to external investment and control.

Very often this kind of structural adjustment, while being very hard on the poor people in these developing countries, helps local elites to become even more rich because it provides them with a pool of cheap labour, enables them to pick up bargains in terms of privatized parastatals, and so on.

ESAF will continue to impose this kind of conditionality, along the same lines as IMF traditional conditionality, but the funds will go to ease the impact on the poorest of the poor. In other words, there will not be a change in the basic kinds of conditionality that are imposed.

The head of UNICEF pointed out a couple of weeks ago that 40,000 children die every day from hunger and hunger related causes. We do not pay any attention to that because it happens in a quiet way and is far removed from the reality which we in Canada experience. He went on to point out that a good deal of that hunger and those hunger related causes are directly related to the kinds of conditionality that have been imposed upon these nations by forces such as the International Monetary Fund. Canada, as one of the nations which has a significant voice in the IMF, shares some of the guilt and responsibility for the death of those children.

I would like to suggest that there are different kinds of conditionality. In a report entitled "Adjustment with a Human Face", a group of people working with UNICEF suggested that instead of the traditional IMF conditionality we should be working for different kinds of structural adjustment. They make six suggestions.

First, there should be more expansionary macro-economic policies aiming at sustaining levels of output, investment, and human need satisfaction over the adjustment period. In other words, instead of retrenchment and cut-backs there should be expansion.

Second, there should be the use of meso policies to reinforce the more expansionary macro approach and to secure the priority use of resources to fulfil the needs of the vulnerable.

Third, there should be sectoral policies aiming at restructuring within the productive sector to strengthen employment and income generating activities and raise productivity in low-income activities, focusing in particular on small farmers and informal sector producers in industry and services.

Fourth, there should be improvement in the equity and efficiency of the social sector by restructuring public expenditure both between and within sectors by improving the targeting of interventions and their cost effectiveness.

Fifth, there should be compensatory programs to protect basic health and nutrition during the low-income adjustment. Two major elements of such policies are public works employment schemes and nutrition interventions encompassing targeted food subsidies and direct feeding for the most vulnerable.

Sixth, and perhaps the most important, is monitoring of the human situation, especially of living standards, health, and nutrition of low-income groups during the adjustment process so that needs may be identified and the effectiveness of adjustment programs assessed and modified accordingly. Monitoring of human conditions, especially the health and nutritional status of the population, particularly that of vulnerable groups, should be given as much weight in monitoring adjustment as monetary variables have in the conventional approach.

In other words, when there is need for some kind of international intervention in the economy of one of these struggling nations, instead of imposing the kind of cut-backs and decimation of the local economy that the IMF has done traditionally, there should be a kind of structural adjustment that places the priority on human needs.

There has been a number of suggestions made in the last few weeks and months for debt forgiveness. When I think of debt forgiveness I think of a story which we studied in Grade 10 called The Revolution at Satan's Trap by Norman Duncan. The story was about a small outport in Newfoundland where the local people were indebted to the trader. No matter how many fish they caught they were always indebted to John Woll, the trader. By a combination of circumstances it so happened that they finally had him in a situation where he had to agree to a form of debt forgiveness and had to restore to the people what was rightfully theirs. However the story ended as follows:

> And within three years John Woll possessed again all that he had yielded, and the world of Satan's Trap wagged on as in the days before the revolution.

In other words, debt relief without changing the system does not really change anything. Debt relief by itself is not going to help unless something is done about commodity prices.

The IMF, acting as international monetary policemen, has forced low commodity prices on the Third World which keep them in debt. Then it keeps dribbling these nations small amounts of money, sometimes just enough to keep them from defaulting but never enough to enable them to get out of debt. I mentioned earlier that the UN committee which considered this issue said that there was need for $5 billion a year. We are falling far short of the amount which is desperately needed if Africa is ever to get out of the deep pit into which we have helped to put it as a result of the ecological destruction it is facing right now.

We must realize the basis of debt. Often democratically elected Governments are now faced with having to repay debts which were contracted by dictators. It is interesting to note that three-quarters of the debt of Nicaragua was contracted by Somoza. Twenty per cent of Third World debt is for the purchase of military goods. A great deal of it ends up financing elite consumption and megaprojects which often have very little developmental impact upon the great mass of the people. Sometimes these debts were contracted and in fact forced upon Third World countries by banks in Europe and North America simply because they wanted to make quick bucks.

In the September 1983 issue of Harpers, a Mr. S. C. Gwynne wrote an article entitled "Adventures in the Loan Trade". He told how as a young loans officer 25 years of age he had visited some 28 different countries in a period of six months, flogging money for a medium-sized bank in the mid-western United States. He described how he knew that when he made those loans they would simply not be repaid adequately, but in order to make them one only needed to get the guarantee of the government or the local national bank. By the time they defaulted on the loans, he and the other people who had been involved in making the loans had passed on to some other job.

The entire loans business that took place in the middle 1970s was simply a way in which the western banks became very greedy. They pushed money without adequate investigation into the ways in which loans would be repaid.

Susan George, in an excellent book entitled A Fate Worse Than Death made an excellent analysis from the perspective of someone concerned with development itself. She pointed to the impossibility of ever having debts, which amounted to over a trillion dollars for the Third World as a whole, paid in full, in hard currency. At the same time she opposed a policy of total debt forgiveness. As she pointed out, this often simply kept local elites and local dictators in place.

Instead, Susan George calls for a new type of restructuring, a new type of approach to the whole debt problem. It was radical in the sense of going to the root of the problem. She tied debt to the whole issue of development and democracy.

The repayment of debt should be tied to the development and democracy issues as well. For example, a country's bilateral debt could be dedicated to a development fund to which each debtor country would make regular interest payments. The development fund would have broadly based management from that country, including people from the rural area, proper representation for women and for different ethnic groups. Susan George said:

> The development fund would finance projects and programmes determined by consultation and consensus, focusing primarily on rural areas. Various groups (village councils, associations of young people, women, artisans, > peasants, etc.) could apply to the fund for seed money to undertake their own self-managed projects.

> The fund would also provide money for revolving credit schemes to make modest loans directly to farmers and other small-scale rural entrepreneurs (with priority here given to the landless and to women.)
> Each payment made by a government into its own national development fund would trigger a corresponding reduction . . . of its external debt in hard currency by the IMF, the multilateral development banks and the official bilateral creditors.
> Rigid, IMF-type conditionality would give way to a more flexible system. Whereas adjustment has always meant increasing agricultural exports, no matter how grim the internal food situation, and drastic curtailment of basic services in health, education, staple-food subsidies, creative conditionality would take the form of contracts.
> These negotiated contracts would concern equitable, democratic management of national development funds and the terms for matching, in hard currency, each step towards improved performance.

She was suggesting that instead of nations like Canada and others that control the IMF just dribbling out bits of money to these nations to enable them to keep from defaulting, and at the same time imposing a kind of conditionality on them which put them on the rack, we should be developing a new approach. Rather than these countries paying money back to the First World, they should be paying money into their own development funds, which should be tied to genuine democracy and a genuine approach to development.

I urge the Government to consider this kind of radical policy. I urge it to recommend this policy to the IMF and the World Bank. It is a better policy than we practised last fall when there was a lot of criticism of the Government for its forgiveness of debts to Anglophone and Francophone nations in Africa that often had very bad human rights records.

Some of us felt some queasy about that. On the one hand, we did not want to criticize the Government for a generous gesture to the nations of Africa, but on the other hand we looked at some of the nations which did not have good human rights records and we wondered what was the real value of forgiving those debts. Instead, if we worked to establish this kind of internal development fund and insisted that local elites paid into the development fund to help their own people, perhaps we would have been doing a whole lot more for genuine development in our world.

The ESAF is a small step forward. One of my concerns, which is shared by other members of our Party, is that it is under the direction of the International Monetary Fund. We know that the one nation which cracks the whip for the IMF is the United States of America. Yet the United States is not putting any money into ESAF. We are contributing to a fund that will be controlled by the United States, which is not making any contribution to it.

ESAF is a small step forward, and I think we should be taking the much larger step recommended by Susan George. I regret that Bill C-126 does not have the kind of checks and balances that I think parliamentarians should have insisted upon. I would urge the Government to consider a radically new approach to the whole question of Third World debt.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in this debate on third reading of Bill C-126. I do so because our very distinguished critic, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), is not able to be here this evening. She has done an excellent job in taking part in the study of this Bill and putting forward our points of view.

This Bill will authorize the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to contribute to the new initiative of the International Monetary Fund known as the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, or ESAF. This fund will assist the poorest developing countries with the provision of balance of payments support. Most of these countries are in sub-Saharan Africa and include: Zambia, Zaire, Uganda, Tanzania, Somalia, Sierra Leone, Senegal, Rwanda, Niger, Mozambique, Malawi, Madagascar, Liberia, Lesotho, Kenya, and Ethiopia. The average per capita income of these countries is 300 Canadian dollars per year. The ESAF is a trust fund that will make resources available to these countries at concessional interest rates so as to minimize the impact on their debt servicing burdens.

The two main features of the program are long-term lending and concessional interest rates. This program is designed to allow these countries to make the economic adjustments required to reach a stage of development which will eventually lead to healthy economic growth, rising living standards, and a sustainable balance of payments position. I will talk more about this key provision in a moment.

This initiative arose at the annual summit of industrialized countries in Venice, Italy, last year. I understand the plan was endorsed at the meeting of the group of 24 developing countries that met in April of this year. The ESAF will operate on the basis of two accounts, a loan account and a subsidy account. This Bill authorizes Canada to lend approximately $550 million to the IMF fund. It also authorizes Canada to provide grants of approximately $250 million to subsidize the interest on these loans. This grant will bring the interest rate on Canada's contribution down to 0.5 per cent and will come out of Canada's aid envelope over a period of 12 years.

In a speech given on May 20, 1988, the Hon. Member for Trinity emphasized that the key component in facilitating conditional aid was effectively to implement change co-operatively and to monitor it closely. I must re-emphasize this evening the need for co-operation and acceptance by the recipient country. Imposing harsh and unwanted conditions on the recipient country will only yield resentment and a lack of co-operation. The Hon. Member for Trinity asked the Minister in committee what assurances we had that Canada would assist in monitoring such things as how the money was spent, the performance requirements, and the timetables for implementation. The Minister responded that the initiative was an experiment.

Of course, we cannot ask for guarantees. We are not asking for that, but to refer to this initiative as an experiment is not apt. Conditional aid is not new and the failures in implementing this aid are not new. Canada must ensure that these errors are not repeated. Our representatives on the International Monetary Fund should be involved in the monitoring of the program.

As the Hon. Member for Trinity said during her speech at second reading that our Party supported the Bill in principle. The ESAF, as one expert witness told the legislative committee, will provide a window through which richer countries can channel resources to poorer countries. It changes the structure of the IMF from that of a revolving fund. Mr. Michel Camdessus, the new managing director of the IMF, has shown great interest and sensitivity to the concept of adjustment with a human face. I hope this sensitivity will be reflected in the important evaluation, implementation, and monitoring of conditional aid about which the Hon. Member for Trinity spoke previously.

However, while we support this Bill and while the ESAF is necessary, I must point out that it is not a sufficient vehicle for alleviating the debt crisis in the poorest countries. According to a recent United Nation's report, $5 billion in additional flows are required to secure adequately economic growth, to increase imports, and to reduce the debt service ratio in sub-Saharan Africa. The commitments by Canada and other countries to the ESAF reduces this $5 billion figure to about $2 billion annually, so it is a help. It is also important to note that Canada's contribution to the grant component is not new money but is allocated from our development aid envelope.

Much remains to be done. The poverty in these countries is crushing. Evidence of assistance and aid that address the quality of life, employment needs and social programs in developing countries has been meagre to date. In order to improve the economies of these countries and to set them on the road to economic independence, programs like the ESAF are important. We also need to see evidence of the human face of adjustment that will ensure sensitivity to each country's needs. This means mutual co-operation between assisting and assisted countries when it comes to conditional aid in the future.

I offer these comments as a contribution to the debate on third reading of this Bill. In so doing again I want to pay tribute to the important work of my colleague, the associate critic of finance for the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Trinity, for the excellent work she did in studying this Bill and putting forward the point of view of the Liberal Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre and let the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary be the clean-up batter.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, once again I will assure the House that I will not take too much time this evening, but I have a fundamental point I want to make. I will start by indicating that we will not be opposing this legislation.

I understand that the legislation makes some money available at low interest rates to developing countries, and this is not to be sneezed at or condemned, yet important questions have to be faced in this debate with respect to debt and international development.

The simple point I want to make is that this issue is not a question of whether we have done our share or whether we have done a little more. There are fundamental questions of direction involved, of conception about what is the problem, and what it is we are trying to do on the international development arena with regard to debt.

Over the last few days I focused my attention on a headline in the newspaper. A gentleman who was involved in an international development agency had done a study and said uncategorically that international debt owed by developing countries, which were being forced to pay back, was causing the deaths of children. What we are faced with here is a question of life and death. It is a critical question.

When I hear of international debts, what I understand as a lay person is that the big western banks, including Canadian banks, went on a binge in the last couple of decades lending out money to the poorest nations of this world. Now that they are faced with the hangover and now that the western banks themselves are shaking, they are asking these poor countries to pay up. But, at what price? It is at the price of life and death; that is the implication for those communities. These banks, which want to preserve their efficiency as institutions of capital, are doing it at the cost of the lives of people in developing countries.

If that was the only thing that was possible, then I guess we could close our books and our mouths, go home and watch television and forget about it. I saw something else in the newspaper over the last few days. It was an article about a man who lived in Bangladesh. He started a bank with a difference. It was a bank that lent money to the poorest of the poor in the poorest country. When the man went to a conventional bank to help borrow money for a local family, a local entrepreneur but a poor person, he found that poor people could not borrow money. The poor people did not have access to the capital necessary for development. He stood good for that person. He used his own name as a guarantee in order for the loan to go through.

That was the start of this bank with a difference. What was different about it was that it lent money to poor people who had no collateral. Western banks, as we generally know them, demand collateral before one can borrow money. He changed that. What he did was that he got together a dozen people, each of whom needed money. They all stood for each other in terms of their loans. Thus, if one person in the group was not to pay back his loan, then that would affect the creditworthiness of the whole group. They all worked together and they paid back their loans. This man found a new way to run a bank. It was very significant. It said to me that there was another approach. He put the highest value on human development, on the development of the human community, and on the rescue of those people who live in poverty, not by doing something for them but by arranging things in a way that capital could be put at their disposal to do the kinds of development they wanted, which was very small-scale development.

The question before us today is about values, about what we think is most important. Do we agree with the large western banks which seem by their behaviour to put the highest value on the dollar? Or, do we agree with this person from Bangladesh who started a bank that could operate in the poorest corners of the globe and who put the highest priority on the human person? That is what I think is essential to the question of international debt today. What is required is a spiritual reawakening in the sense that the human person will be treated as sacred, as the highest value, and that capital be used to serve human development, the development of the community and of shared responsibility.

I want to say that while we do not oppose this legislation since it makes some money available for poorer countries and communities, there is a greater challenge. The challenge is to make some fundamental shifts in direction.

One of the things this gentleman who started the bank in Bangladesh said was that we need a commitment. We need to renew the commitment or make a commitment to eradicate the pollution of poverty from this planet. It is enough of a surprise actually to find a person who is doing something that makes a difference for poor people, someone who can actually change their situation while at the same time allow for their development and give them control over what is happening to them. That is enough. Then this person challenged us to say that poverty on this planet is a pollution. In other words, it is something that threatens our survival.

I think there is a greater challenge than that which has been faced up to in this legislation. While I will not vote against it, it is about time that we in the western world in particular take up the challenge to change the direction of how we approach the use of capital and make a real difference in regard to poverty on this planet.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I would like to begin by thanking members of the Opposition and government Members for the co-operation that we have had since supper hour. I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, a predisposition to vote as soon as I am through my remarks and then we might see the clock as ten o'clock. It is a kind of reward for the co-operation that we have had this evening.

I was lucky enough to be asked by the Government in the fall of 1984 to attend the General Assembly of the United Nations for 11 weeks as the Canadian representative to the Third Committee where we dealt with issues of poverty, health and so on. I came away convinced that what we as western and so-called rich nations could do most effectively is co-operate with other nations, and to be a moral conscience at times, as well as to be a prodder and developer, in order to get international co-operation in place. A great many people live in poverty. A great many people could use and benefit from our help.

If someone reads our Hansard and hears about the Bretton Woods Agreement, they will see that it is not a very descriptive title. It does not say much about what it is we are engaged in as the House of Commons and as a country. This initiative, these few paragraphs, spell out what we are intending to do. At this point we are really carrying out the consequence of the June 1987 Summit where western industrialized nations, and Canada as represented by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), agreed that the International Monetary Fund should increase its resources significantly, for the specific purpose of helping low-income countries by establishing what is referred to in English as the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, which are very complex words. The essence of it is that western industrialized nations would provide more resources to the International Monetary Fund so that it could make them available to eligible countries once they have a program in place designed to promote structural adjustment and economic growth over the medium term.

I think it is self-evident to nations such as ours that if the structure in place which has produced the poverty is not changed it is not likely to change.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, through the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, the IMF will be able to make loans to the poorest debtor countries on very favourable terms, by means of contributions made to two accounts. The loan account will facilitate the transfer of funds that will earn interest at market rates. The subsidy account will allow the IMF to lend loan account funds to eligible developing countries at one-half per cent interest per year.

Mr. Speaker, many countries have reacted favourably by transferring substantial amounts to the facility. Canada will give $550 million in loans and $250 million in grants.

[English]

France has pledged some 800 million in special drawing rights in loans. West Germany has committed special drawing rights of 700 million to the loan account and 300 million Deutschmarks to the subsidy account. Italy has contributed special drawing rights of 370 million to the loan account and a corresponding subsidy. In total these western nations I have mentioned pledged special drawing rights of 5.7 billion in loans and special drawing rights of 2.2 billion in subsidies.

Mr. Manly: None from the United States?

Mr. Hawkes: I mentioned that to indicate that it is working. I hear a friend from the NDP, and I say the word "friend" with some mixed feelings. He asks whether or not the United States has contributed anything. On the Third Committee we dealt with refugees, and this Chamber has dealt with refugee legislation. I would like the Hon. Member opposite just to remember that the United States of America provides about 65 per cent of the resources that go to refugees through UN agencies. It is somewhat disturbing when we hear from time to time in the House such a good friend, ally, and generous country to so many people in the world treated with such disdain. I am sure the United States of America more than pulls its weight.

The Central Agencies of the United Nations are dependent upon the United States for approximately one-quarter of their income. There are many countries, particularly iron curtain countries, that do not produce a dime for refugees.

In any event I thank Members for their co-operation. I hope there is unanimous consent to pass the Bill and to help get the money where it belongs to start helping those poor nations.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is unanimous consent to call it ten o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 10 p.m., pursuant to Order made June 20, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 8.51 p.m.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (for the Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)) moved that Bill C-92, an Act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the amendments before us today regarding Bill C-92 are designed to improve the efficiency of the Wheat Board. They are amendments which are suggested to the Government both by the Board itself and by producers. There are six amendments in total. They have been discussed in considerable detail in committee and in the House at various stages. Thus I will spend only a few moments on them this morning. I believe they have the support of the House in general.

The first amendment would ensure that quota and other delivery provisions under the Canadian Wheat Board's marketing system would fairly apply to deliveries of grain to railway cars as well as to those who are delivering to the primary elevator system. That is designed to ensure that there are no special provisions given to users of producer cars that are not intended.

The second amendment would enable the Canadian Wheat Board to take advantage of a broader range of financial markets for borrowing and investment purposes. Up to this point in time the Wheat Board, which is a major borrower, has been borrowing almost exclusively from chartered banks. We believe it would be to its advantage to give the Wheat Board the prerogative to borrow in a wider range of markets if it so desires.

The third amendment would add Canola to the definition of grain for the purposes of this Act. This is simply a reflection of showing the importance of Canola within the world community and, of course, is of extreme importance to producers in western Canada.

The fourth amendment, which is the amendment that has received some considerable attention throughout the country, would permit the Canadian Wheat Board, subject to Governor in Council approval, to adjust payments to producers who deliver grain to a railway car instead of to a primary elevator to reflect reduced carrying costs incurred in the handling of this grain. At the moment the situation is that users of producer cars or railway cars are paying for services which they do not receive, that is, storage costs and interest costs that are applied, assuming that the grain would be going to the country elevator system when in fact it is not. It is bypassing the country elevator system and going directly into the railway car.

The fourth amendment would permit the Government, upon the advice of the Wheat Board, with the concurrence of the Minister through Order in Council, to reduce a portion of those costs currently paid by producers for services they do not receive. In times where we are trying to reduce the operating costs of the farm community, we think that it is only logical to do everything we can to assist to make this amendment possible to permit the Governor in Council to pass on a share of those savings to the users of producer cars.

The fifth amendment would permit the board to pay advisory committee members a per diem, a relatively minor sum, one would assume, for the role that they play in advising the Wheat Board.

The sixth and last amendment would provide that the Act or any of its provisions would come into force on a day or days to be fixed by proclamation. Essentially that is a housekeeping item.

The committee held hearings on Bill C-92. A number of witnesses appeared. There is general support for the amendments. Certainly the users of producer cars who represent a small percentage of the population on the prairies, but an important one, are happy with the amendments. Barley growers in western Canada are happy with the amendments. Western Canadian wheat growers are very supportive of the amendments.

Mr. Benjamin: Fifteen hundred farmers. They don't amount to many.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I see that the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) who is anxious to become the agriculture critic for his Party is present and making his usual interventions.

Mr. Benjamin: I have been around that business longer than you have.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The key thing in the amendments is that up until this point in time farmers have been charged for services which they have not received. We simply do not feel that that is a philosophically sound position. We feel that it is appropriate that those who use the services should pay for them. If we establish in the future that users of producer cars are receiving services for which they do not at present pay, then it would only be appropriate at that time to pass those charges on to them. At the moment it is very clear that the users of producer cars or railway cars are paying for services that they would use if they used the country system. Therefore, it is only appropriate that they should not pay the total cost currently charged to them. I would point out that under the amendments they will continue to pay a certain portion of the costs which would be incurred if they were to use the service. In that sense, we feel that they are paying for a share of the line elevator company expenses, and we think that it is just.

On behalf of the Government we are happy to bring Bill C-92 to third reading. We believe that it has had an extensive debate and we hope that it receives the concurrence of the House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-92 contains a number of provisions, most of which are technical and not controversial. The provision to allow the Canadian Wheat Board to borrow in foreign markets, from provincial governments, and a whole variety of agencies, provides additional flexibility. I would caution the Wheat Board that other Crown corporations have found themselves in serious difficulty. For instance, Eldorado Nuclear borrowed some $500 or $600 million in Swiss francs. It has borrowed United States dollars in overseas markets. It has lost something like $190 million on foreign exchange trading. The Wheat Board deals with much larger amounts of money than Eldorado Nuclear, but it is still a Crown corporation, and great caution should be exercised in this regard. Obviously we want to see the Wheat Board borrow its money as cheaply as possible, but great caution has to be observed by Crown corporations when borrowing in foreign exchange markets, particularly when the Canadian dollar and the United States dollar have lost ground in foreign exchange trading. That caution should be put in place in passing Bill C-92.

The most controversial part of this legislation is the producer car provision contained in Clause 8 which provides for the Canadian Wheat Board to pay a sum to the users of producer cars to cover those services they do not use, that is, storage charges, interest and carrying charges because they load their own cars. This issue has been very hotly debated. The Prairie Pools Incorporated are opposing it.

In committee, the concern of most people was what impact that will have on the maintenance of the country delivery points if producer cars were to assume a very large percentage of the shipments, because there are certain costs involved which are not storage or carrying charges relating to the costs of country delivery points, for example, the maintenance of infrastructure, and so on. This Bill simply deals with the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It does not deal with the Western Grain Transportation Act which is covered.

I thought that the Government made a mess of things because it would not provide the documentation and the information. We wrote to the railway companies and their response was that they did not know what it cost to maintain a rural delivery point, and they could not give us those figures. We could not put forward amendments relating to the Western Grain Transportation Act because Bill C-92 only relates to the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

I put forward an amendment which was promptly voted down. If the Government is defeated in the next election, it will be because of its overwhelming majority and its assumption that everything that the Opposition puts forward is wrong and does not deserve any consideration. The government Members vote by rote. They automatically vote it down.

My amendment simply stated that the sum refunded to those who use producer cars shall reflect an equitable allocation of the costs incurred by the board to maintain the country delivery points. The wheat pools are not saying that there should not be some reduction related to the storage and handling charges. Obviously, those people are not using the storage and handling charges. They are saying that the maintenance of those rural delivery points is something that comes under another Act and cannot be amended in this Bill.

That is why I put forward an amendment which would have relieved some concern. We do not know, but perhaps those storage, handling, and elevator charges are identical. If the Government had come forward and stated that the cost for charges which are not used is much more than the cost of maintaining the rail sidings and the country delivery points, there would have been some balancing. But the Government did not do that and, of course, it did not accept the amendment. I do not understand why the Government did not accept the amendment. I hope that the Senate will consider it. Apart from striking the whole clause which is proposed, it seems to me that it strikes a balance that we tried to reach, that people who use producer cars pay their fair share of the country delivery points and still may be eligible for some reduction in those costs which they do not use, but the Government did not accept it.

I would like to read a most urgent and telling communication which members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture have received, signed by Bill Strath, the President of the Manitoba Pool Elevators, who acts as the person responsible for Prairie Pools Inc. As well, it is signed by Garth Stevenson, the President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and by Mr. D. E. Livingstone, the President of the Alberta Wheat Pool. This came from an urgent message on July 8, the day that we dealt with report stage and concurrence. It was addressed to all Members of Parliament, and it said:

> The Board of Directors of Prairie Pools Inc., meeting in Calgary today, reiterates its strong opposition to inclusion of Clause 8 of Bill C-92, amending the Canadian Wheat Board Act.
> Prairie Pools Inc. is a western based farm organization with a membership of 130,000 farmers in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.
> Clause 8 would allow the Canadian Wheat Board to waive interest and storage charges on grain shipped in producer cars.
> The farmers' right to use a producer car must be maintained. However, the only savings that should be deducted are elevation and handling costs. Any further deduction of storage will likely add to the costs of those farmers using the country elevator system. The infrastructure costs of western Canada's grain handling system are not charged to the users of producer cars.

That is the point I have been making here this morning. The whole section of the infrastructure relating to the country delivery points is not covered in this Bill and cannot be covered because the Bill does not provide amendments to the Western Grain Transportation Act. The letter continues:

> There is clear evidence of extra costs associated with the producer car since these costs are attributed to the railways and are paid for by all producers in the costing process.
> You are aware of direct expressions of concern from large numbers of grain producers in the Prairie area. We urge you to take all possible steps to remove Clause 8 from Bill C-92.

That is the nub of the problem. They are not arguing about elevating charges; they are arguing about the storage and interest of carrying charges.

I think that this issue was really brought forward by the Prairie Pools Inc. It is opposed strongly by them because they see a number of straws in the wind against the whole idea of the Canadian Wheat Board. They know that its powers and prerogatives will be reduced by the Canada-U.S. trade deal, that there will be provision for grain to come in from the United States, and they will not be issuing end-use certificates. They know that feed grain will come in and be denatured, which will cost an extra $7 or $8 a tonne, I am told, and that that grain in the end can be used illegally for planting. Many producers in western Canada see the powers and prerogatives of the Wheat Board and the whole system of marketing run down by the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They see the whole country elevator system being destroyed or weakened by this, because the producers using producer cars will not be paying for their fair share of the infrastructure for country-delivered points.

I think that these matters should be taken into consideration by the Government. It did not come forward with a Bill with the whole range of western grain transportation aspects of it. It did not come clean with the exact information. If it had come forward with the data, proving that the storage and interest charges and carrying charges were much higher than the infrastructure cost of maintaining those country delivery points, I think that it would have had a much more telling argument before the committee and before the House, but it did not bother.

Those are the issues which are still with us in this Bill and on which the Government is really missing the point. I hope that when this matter is before the other place it will get more thorough study because, although there was some concern when it went through the agriculture committee several months ago, the intensity of the concern in the prairie regions is much stronger now. At that time we asked for information from the two railway companies. I believe we asked for information as well from the National Transportation Agency as to the exact costs, so that when dealing with this at report stage we would be able to compare. We do not have that information. The situation is no better now than it was at report stage when the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and I put forward amendments to Bill C-92.

I hope that more information can be garnered, if not here at least in the Senate, so that they can deal with this in an effective way. Clearly, there is a lot of concern in the prairie region with this legislation, partly because of the other overriding concerns with the trade deal, and also that the Government has not come clean and has not provided the information. The railway companies have not provided the information. We have a situation where we do not know how much the Government is going to be giving back, whether there will be a tremendous incentive for the people who use producer cars. If we see that, then we know that the Government will be hell-bent on destroying the whole pooling system and the Canadian Wheat Board. There are certainly a lot of straws in the wind in that regard already. These are the concerns as we move to third reading of Bill C-92.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have to rise again on the whole matter of orderly marketing, particularly the Canadian Wheat Board. This is probably the tenth or twelfth occasion in the last 20 years when there has been a further erosion and the whittling away at the whole principle of orderly marketing, single-desk selling, for all western grain producers through the Canadian Wheat Board and the marketing system which it entails.

The whole purpose and reason for the existence of that system of grain handling and marketing in Canada is to allow the grain producers to co-operatively pool, share the cost of moving the grain and share the benefits from that system. That has worked very well in practice as well as in principle since 1935, particularly since the start of the Second World War when the Canadian Wheat Board legislation was fully implemented and enforced.

This legislation has three items in it. One has to do with enlarged financial arrangements for the Canadian Wheat Board so that it can make more investments or whatever to benefit grain producers. Another has to do with some minor changes to allow for improvement in the very, very low expenses allowed for the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. We have no problem with those two provisions. They are relatively minor. But the fly in the ointment, the bug in the soup, is Clause 8.

Nobody is objecting to the producer having the right to have a producer car should he so choose. That has always been available. Even in years when I was on the railroad and we implemented the car order book, from time to time individual producers would come and order their own cars.

The principle of all of the producers sharing in the costs of the system cannot be and should not be departed from. I listened to the Parliamentary Secretary saying how this makes the western wheat growers happy. I think maybe they have 1,000 or 1,500 members at best. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool has over 70,000 members. The three prairie pools plus the United Grain Growers, all four farmer owned co-operatives, oppose this and represent something in the order of 150,000 grain producers. They do not want this clause. But it is there to pacify the right wing Tory minority, an extremely small minority on the Prairies and is pandering to those who have always opposed orderly marketing. It is pandering to the private grain companies and the Winnipeg commodity exchange as well.

In a letter to the Minister of State in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board of June 9, the three pools in a joint letter and in separate letters from each of the prairie pools made it as plain as the nose on your face that they were opposed to the Bill because of Clause 8. They asked the Government to reconsider. When they last met with the Minister—they were happy about the consultation that went on and everything else—they waited for the Minister to raise the subject of Clause 8. When he did not report to them about any reconsideration—obviously there wasn't any—the pools raised it as the last item on the agenda, and then followed it up with their letter of June 9 in which they outlined their reasons for the opposition. The item was discussed at every single meeting of every local and sub-district of the three pools in the three prairie provinces. It was discussed thoroughly by the farmers. There would be in total tens of thousands attending those local and sub-district meetings and there was overwhelming opposition to this measure.

I think it is logical that a farmer who ships a producer car is not charged the elevation and handling charges normally assessed at a country elevator since it did not go through that country elevator. That is fair ball. But to relieve that producer from paying his share of all the other costs means that a smaller number of most of the producers have to pick up all the costs, which means higher costs for the larger number of producers. Surely that is unfair. There are costs that are not being accounted for in the handling of producer cars. The Canadian Wheat Board charges a nominal fee for producer cars mainly to cover the extra administration costs entailed. There are costs such as capital, maintenance, taxes, et cetera on many of the rail sidings in western Canada which are being used exclusively for producer cars. The three pools believe that is a substantial figure and they asked the Minister of State to demand that the railroads provide those figures. There is the extra switching costs involved in the spotting of producers cars at those sites.

One of the economic benefits of elevator rationalization is the least number of stops that freight trains have to make to spot and pick up grain cars. That benefit is lost when you have to stop a 60, an 80 or a 100 car train and switch off one car and then a few days later stop another train and pick it up. Those costs are additional. If there is a siding and no country elevator the costs are even higher. The benefit, of course, is lost and the rail costs are not reduced. They may even increase on a per tonne basis if the spot is for a single car or two, three or four. The railways have told the pools that if producer cars are not loaded in the allocated time the they must be picked up on the next train run. That adds to car turnaround time. A lot of fuss was made over the past several years about reducing turnaround time. At one time I think it was up to 27 days. Now I think we have it down to 17 or 18. When producers do not load their cars on time, it lengthens the turnaround time.

The grain companies, which are 80 per cent farmer owned, have spent tens of millions of dollars not only in rationalizing and modernizing their country elevator system but have spent many, many millions in addition by remodelling and putting the latest technology into their country elevators to provide for higher speed legs, longer car spots to accommodate a faster system for loading railway cars. By the way, this legislation will increase even more the number of producer cars and that increased use of producer cars will negate the investment, 80 per cent of it by the grain producers themselves.

A majority of producer cars conform to the shipments called for but there have been too darn many which are purposely or accidentally misshipped. The Canadian Wheat Board may call for a specific grade. If a country elevator manager ships No. 2 wheat as No. 1 wheat he is penalized two, three or four cars in the next round of car orders. But producers who ship the wrong grade, even if they do it innocently—there have been too many times when this was not done innocently—receive no penalty at all. Sure, there is the authority if they misship their grain for the whole carload to be returned to the shipper, but it is rarely done. In fact, I have never heard of it ever being done.

bypassed the country elevator system and the Canadian Wheat Board embargo and shipped grain that had a moisture content as high as 20 per cent in producer cars to Thunder Bay or Vancouver. Those are the kind of people who like this legislation. Those are the kind of people the Parliamentary Secretary says are satisfied. I guess they are satisfied.

All these extra costs that are incurred by producer-loaded cars are averaged into railway costs and are paid by all grain shippers in the freight rate. It would be grossly unfair to relieve producer-car shipments of their share of carrying the costs of the country elevator system and not charge them the extra costs that producer cars incur. I do not think anyone can argue with any kind of logic or facts and figures that producer cars do not produce extra costs.

The three wheat pools, the UGG and the National Farmers' Union, five of the major farm organizations in Canada, all oppose the Bill and they all say that the proposed change in Clause 8 is an increased incentive to the use of producer-loaded cars and a much larger percentage of them will be used. This will increase pressure on the rationalization of the country system and an over-all slowdown of the ability to service the export grain market. It would also increase the concerns of producers regarding undue shrinkage of the grain handling and transportation system. The culprit, as those five major farm organizations see it, is Clause 8.

These organizations say, and we agree, that because of the inclusion of Clause 8 in the Bill, and because of the narrow stubbornness of the Government, the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary, Bill C-92 is bad legislation. On those grounds, they say that they will continue to oppose it. It is contrary to the interests of the vast majority of prairie farmers and, as well, it jeopardizes the orderly marketing system.

I find it incredible—I should not find it incredible. It is not unusual. I have heard the Tories say that they are in favour of the co-operative movement and the wheat pools and they support them and are in favour of orderly marketing. They say they are in favour of the Canadian Wheat Board and that they want to strengthen it. Yet every time they have made a move, they have weakened the Canadian Wheat Board and the orderly marketing system.

Clause 8 flies in the face of the whole principle of orderly marketing and of the existence of the Canadian Wheat Board. That underlying principle is the sharing by all producers, co-operatively, in the benefits and the costs of shipping their grain to market, 80 per cent of which is the export market.

The Tories talk one way and act the other. Over the years, I have heard Tories say what great supporters they are of orderly marketing and the Canadian Wheat Board. Then every year I find that the Tories are criticizing, complaining and legislating to weaken the system that they claim to be such great supporters of.

The fact is that the Tories are pandering to, at best, 3,000 or 4,000 grain producers who belong to the barley, flax and western wheat growers' associations and a couple or three other little outfits. They are pandering to them out of their narrow market forces, bottom line, private enterprise ideology at the expense of probably 90 per cent of the grain producers of western Canada.

We will be calling on all the farmers we can after this Bill passes, if it does. We will be going to see them by the thousands to show them once again how the struggle by the co-operative movement and by western grain producers through various economic and political actions to get the Canadian Wheat Board strengthened and orderly marketing from being undermined. We can win all the economic battles we like, but they can be done away with or weakened with the stroke of a pen by an unfriendly Government which does not believe in or support what obviously 90 per cent of the grain producers of western Canada want and demand.

This is just an attack on the Canadian Wheat Board and the whole concept of orderly marketing. I for one, and members of my Party as well, will not hold still for it. I know that tens of thousands of grain producers in western Canada will not hold still for it either.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Lobbyists Registration Act

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to draw to your attention, Sir, that I understand that it could be that the Chair may have some difficulty with the admissibility of some of the amendments I have proposed. As a matter of fact, in the unlikely event that you would rule that some of these amendments may be slightly out of order, I would like to take a moment to make a point to the Chair, particularly as it pertains to Motion No. 3 which would amend Bill C-82 to refine the definition of a public office holder. I would respectfully submit that this amendment would be in order.

We know, of course, that on page 555 of the latest edition of Erskine May, there are a number of examples set out to describe when an amendment is and is not admissible. I simply want to remind you of the parliamentary debates of the House of Commons of Great Britain in 1912 at page 2859. I am sure you are familiar with the decision that was taken by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at that time. Nevertheless, I think I should refresh the memory of other Hon. Members who may not be as familiar as you are with this issue.

It had been ruled at that time that an amendment to a tax Bill would be inadmissible because it changed the scope of the Bill. What happens is that amendment described at page 2859 of the House of Commons Debates of Great Britain in 1912 says that the particular tax was to be applied only to male persons. It was quite obvious that was introducing something to the Bill which went beyond the scope of the legislation the Minister had in mind. The chairman very ably recognized that and said the amendment was inadmissible.

I also want to refresh your memory about a decision taken at page 311 of the 1905 parliamentary debates of Great Britain which had a similar provision in it. Again it was ruled that a tax which was to apply to a particular class of person was foreign to the Bill because no class of persons had been identified in the original legislation.

I bring those two examples to your attention, and I have other similar examples which I could raise, to demonstrate that in my respectful opinion all the amendments that I propose are in order, in particular Motion No. 3 which says in part:

> "public office holder in an attempt either to influence or to obtain information for the use of a client who attempts to influence"

My amendment further refines the definition of when lobbying is lobbying. In other words, when a lobbying activity exists. It does not create a further charge upon the Government. It does not introduce a new class of person that is to be taken care of in this particular legislation, and of course it does not attempt to introduce something foreign to what was in the Bill to start with. One could even argue that the amendment I have proposed could narrow down, as opposed to expanding, the scope of the Bill already.

What we are merely trying to do with Motion No. 3 is to ensure that those who lobby government are required to register when they are lobbying for a change in legislation or, with my amendment, when they are attempting to obtain information to provide it to a client who will then attempt to lobby the Government. I know you have been giving my representations your undivided attention, as you always do, and I trust that the Speaker will allow my amendments, in particular amendment No. 3, to be dealt with and voted on.

In the National Insurance Bill of Great Britain of November 22, 1960, there was an issue which also created a precedent setting case. Because it was so precedent setting I am sure you are familiar with it as well. What happened there, of course, was that an amendment was introduced by a Member with regard to the National Insurance Act, or the National Insurance No. 2 Bill as it was referred to. The purpose of the amendment was to amend another Act, in other words, an Act different from the one that was originally being amended in the original Bill. Therefore, if my amendment was attempting to make a change to another piece of legislation, the Speaker would be quite correct in saying that amendment would be out of order. Of course, the Chair knows that is the last thing that I intend to do with any of my amendments, more particularly amendment No. 3.

Therefore, I ask that you consider very carefully the representations I have just made in order to ensure that this Bill is as good as possible. In my opinion, with the further refinement of Motion No. 3 the Bill will be better and will make better legislation. From the procedural standpoint as well it will better clarify the definition of when someone is in fact engaging in a lobbying activity. As such I submit that particular motion is entirely in order.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): On the same point, Mr. Speaker. I have listened with care and attention to the representations of the Hon. Member opposite. Having had a chance to review Motion No. 3, I think we must always be careful about amendments which run against the principle of the Bill as approved by the House at second reading. In the case of this particular motion, I think you might indeed find it out of order. I think it is the insertion of the words "or to obtain information for the use of a client" which would be particularly hazardous for the House. With a little imagination that would include, for instance, all journalists—

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Hawkes: —who come to us seeking information.

Mr. Boudria: That is a point of debate.

Mr. Hawkes: If I review my recent meetings in my constituency office, a great many involved people in someone's employ in some way, shape or fashion, who come to me for information may indeed use it in a way designed to try and influence the Government. I had someone come to my office recently on behalf of organizations concerned about the abortion issue, as one example. Therefore, I suggest that you use your usual good offices to make sure that any of the amendments that would indeed change the principle of the Bill would be found out of order.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention in particular to Motion No. 2 which stands on the Order Paper in my name. Your Honour has indicated it would be out of order because it attempts to introduce a further element into Clause 5 of the Bill. That clause states in part:

> Every individual who for payment undertakes to arrange a meeting or to communicate with the public office holder shall file—

And so on. In fact, Motion No. 2 includes mass mailings and advertising. All of those are attempts to communicate with a public office holder with a view to influencing—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take into consideration the representations made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and make a decision immediately after Question Period. I did not mean to cut off the Hon. Member. If he has further representations to make, he can make them after Question Period.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if one examines the Government's position on water exports and diversions the picture is far from reassuring. First, the Government decided not to exclude water from the trade agreement. Second, almost three years after receiving the Pearse Report commissioned by the Liberal Government, legislation is not ready to be introduced in this House. The federal water policy has no teeth without legislation.

Third, by contrast, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) recently claimed he did not need legislation, that a policy was sufficient to protect Canadian water. Fourth, the Minister of the Environment declared in this House that greater outflows of water from Lake Michigan have nothing to do with Canadian waters, as if the Great Lakes were not interconnected.

Unless the Government amends the trade legislation to exclude water Canadians will never be certain that water will not be one of the natural resources to be shared under the agreement. We urge the Government to amend the trade legislation and to exclude water from it once and for all.

PORNOGRAPHY

CALL FOR PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, pornography is a multi-million dollar industry in Canada with the underworld as the main benefactor. It victimizes women, children, and innocent family members.

Bill C-54, the Government's porn Bill, was introduced for first reading on May 4, 1987, and the Justice Department has received overwhelming support for it from Canadians across the country.

Why is the Department continuing to listen to the vocal minority projected by the media as the vocal majority? Let's give this Bill second reading and get it to committee now where we can hear witnesses.

As a Government we said we would be bringing in legislation. I have to ask who is deep-sixing Bill C-54. The Government and the Department of Justice have brought forward strong juvenile prostitution laws and stronger laws against family violence. Let's be consistent and get on with Bill C-54. This is clearly the wish of an overwhelming majority of Canadians.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would make a half decent fire-fighter. Just when he puts out one caucus brushfire up pops another one.

This time it seems a growing number of his colleagues, both in and out of Cabinet, are opposing his plan to spend billions and billions of dollars to purchase a fleet of nuclear-powered hunter killer, attack submarines.

In fact the Conservative Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) actually defied the Prime Minister and wrote to his constituents that these subs were a complete and utter waste of taxpayers' money.

A private poll just handed to the Government, which shows that a majority of Canadians are opposed to this plan, is bound to fuel the growing revolt in his caucus against his foolhardy proposal.

The Tories are having a hard time selling nuclear subs on doorsteps right across Canada. Canadians are asking why we need to spend billions of dollars on a batch of nuclear subs. Well, the Conservative Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton) has the answer. He says that we need the subs to chase after drug runners and fish thieves. With thinking like that, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that Canadians do not want these nuclear subs?

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, historically and currently Canada has been blessed with an efficient, creative, and productive Public Service. No Government can function without an efficient and responsive Public Service and the present Government is no exception. True, the Public Service may be under stress, but we should not be surprised at this because of rapidly evolving circumstances.

The present Government has been a responsible employer. It introduced master bargaining, a fully funded dental plan, employment equity measures, additional day care centres, and a smoking policy for the workplace. It abolished mandatory retirement, and created a self-funded leave program and voluntary early retirement measures.

The Government also introduced a most successful workforce adjustment program, developed measures to ease the impact of privatization on employees; introduced performance pay and productivity bonuses for managers; and created the Canadian Centre for Management Studies which will bring together leading practitioners and scholars to contribute directly to new and improved management practices in the Canadian Public Service.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

EASTERN ONTARIO—CALL FOR NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) put the economy of eastern Ontario in jeopardy on the day he appointed the Hon. Member for Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton (Mr. Dick) as the regional Minister to protect it.

As of June 30 the Government has cancelled all regional industrial development incentives for eastern Ontario. The Government is now in the position of having deserted regional development in this region of Canada.

When is the Government going to depart from its callous ways and bring in a new regional development program for eastern Ontario to support industry and tourism? This is the first time since 1970 that a large part of eastern Ontario has been without an industrial regional development program. The Government was very quiet about letting the industrial development incentive package drop and obviously wanted to play it low key.

We in eastern Ontario demand that the Government bring in a regional development and tourism program. If the Prime Minister can give $164 million to Lac St. Jean in a by-election, he can bring in an industrial and tourism incentive program for eastern Ontario for years to come.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

RESPECT FOR LAW

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): This morning, I feel I must bring to the attention of Hon. Members what happened to me last night at Ottawa International Airport, an incident that was very significant, especially after the passage of Bill C-72. In fact, I wanted some information, and I went to one of the Transport Canada employees at the airport and spoke to him in French. To my astonishment, he was unable to respond in French. I repeated my question but failed to get any results, so that finally, an RCMP officer stepped in and saved the day.

Mr. Speaker, this very ordinary incident made me think of how vigilant we will have to be about enforcing the Official Languages Act. Now that the Bill has been passed, I think we have a duty to ensure that all possible steps are taken to enforce the legislation.

I therefore urge all Ministers to ensure compliance with the legislation within their respective departments and within the Crown corporations for which they are responsible.

INDUSTRY

SITUATION OF TRUCKING INDUSTRY

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, the Government is allowing two grave threats to the Canadian trucking industry to grow and fester because of deregulation and the Mulroney-Reagan free trade deal.

First, U.S. truckers are pouring into Canada supported by an American tax regime which gives them a tremendous advantage over Canadian carriers. It is only a question of time before Canadian truckers shut down in Canada and move south to take advantage of U.S. capital depreciation rules. The Canadian Government should level the playing field forthwith.

Second, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act has been the law of the land for six months and its implementation has created chaos in the trucking industry. Shippers and truckers both agree that there are serious problems with the regulatory process related to the Motor Vehicle Transport Act. The provinces and Territories are each implementing the Act in their own peculiar way, leading to a complete lack of regulatory uniformity.

The present Government long ago let the trucking industry know that it is not interested in exercising its powers under that Act. Therefore, today's confusion is no surprise.

The Government must take steps to correct serious problems that have arisen as a result of the implementation by the provinces and Territories of the Motor Vehicle Transport Act.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ONTARIO GRAPE AND WINE INDUSTRY

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, as an Ontario Member of Parliament I understood the frustration of my western colleagues at the implementation of the National Energy Program. Because of the grave consequences to western Canada I fully supported their efforts to have the NEP scrapped. Therefore, westerners will understand when I speak of my concern for Ontario's grape and wine industry.

Mrs. Lena Byl of my riding has pointed out to me comments attributed to the Premier of Alberta who was quoted as saying that 150 grape growers in Ontario should not be allowed to put the free trade agreement at risk. Let me set the record straight on this.

My riding is one of at least ten in Ontario with grape growers. There are at least 240 grape growers in my riding of Niagara Falls alone. The Canadian grape and wine industry is unique to only a few parts of this country and contributes millions of dollars to provincial and federal tax coffers. It is an important industry to everyone in this country.

However, I agree that Premier Peterson and the Ontario Government have a responsibility to assist this industry as well. I look forward to both our federal and provincial Governments working together to help this important sector of Ontario's economy.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

RESPECT FOR ELECTION PROMISES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) was to announce to the people of la Montérégie, the people of Beauharnois, that there would be a bridge. This reminds me of the fifties when Duplessis promised to pave road sections.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) promised there would be more developments in his riding. The Minister promised that the Quebec City area would get a centre . . .

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers should be warned. Remember the false promises of the Conservatives and this Prime Minister, his promise about social programs which he never kept, his promise about the old age security pensions that were de-indexed.

Let the people of Quebec, around Quebec City and shipyards, remember the promise that the shipyards would have more work than they could cope with! Let them remember how they were cheated by this Government on the frigate contracts.

Mr. Speaker, broken promises won't go over well during the next election campaign.

POLITICAL PARTIES

LIBERAL PARTY'S NOMINATION MEETINGS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the deep, deep slide in Liberal fortunes as recorded in the polls can in part be attributed to the shocking and disgraceful behaviour of that Party's supporters at various Toronto nomination meetings. They kick and scream, stuff ballots, and spend tens of thousands of dollars buying phoney memberships. The police have to be called in to keep order.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is unwilling or unable to do anything about these ugly squabbles. No wonder Canadians have no confidence in him or his Party.

The Liberals should be ashamed of themselves for turning Hog Town into "Eatanswill North".

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

OPPORTUNITY TO APPOINT CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES TO NICARAGUA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, according to the first report of the Special Committee on the Central American Peace Process, in line with the spirit of the Esquipulas II Accord and to encourage negotiations, the United States should end its economic embargo against Nicaragua and stop objecting to the granting of loans to Nicaragua by international financial institutions. Furthermore, the U.S. should be urged to maintain its decision to stop supplying military aid to the Contras.

The Committee recommended as a minimum solution to inadequate Canadian representation the appointment of a chargé d'affaires in Nicaragua, because relations between Nicaragua and the United States have worsened and Canada's role has become very important.

I urge the Government to act quickly on the Committee's recommendations on the peace process.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE OF SERVICE SECTOR TRAINING

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, no nation has more splendour than Canada. The beauty of this magnificent land abounds in every region.

Moreover, each region presents a uniqueness of landscape and culture that causes our nation to be the most intriguing land on earth.

We have been blessed with rich natural resources and scenic countryside that are the awe-inspiring wonder and grandeur of the world. Our cities are modern, alive, and exciting. One-fifth of the world's freshwater is contained in our innumerable lakes and rivers.

Our country has what the world community wants to visit. Citizens of many nations yearn to explore our land of peace and beauty.

Yet, unfortunately, our capacity to serve tourists at a professional level of excellence is, at best, quite inconsistent. Therefore, I call on all levels of government to enhance and enrich their involvement in service sector training so that we might attain the volume and quality of tourists that this land so richly deserves. Our objective ought to be to make Canada the most desired nation on earth to tour and visit.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR GLENGARRY—PRESCOTT—RUSSELL CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on June 30, the federal Government's Industrial Regional Development Program, better known as IRDP, ended. This good program was established, naturally, by the Liberal Government in the early 1980s.

Mr. Speaker, there is therefore no remaining federal program to encourage industry to set up in the rural regions of eastern and northern Ontario.

Although it is true that Ontario is doing well, the situation in my riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is not so rosy. The Prescott area, for example, is still suffering from an unacceptable unemployment rate of over 12 per cent.

I know that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion is now negotiating with his provincial counterpart from Ontario to draw up a master agreement for the regional development of Ontario.

Personally, I have already spoken to the Minister and I encourage him to set up such a program to develop the eastern part of the province. Glengarry—Prescott—Russell needs federal Government assistance and I urge the Conservative Government to restore a good program such as the Liberal Government set up in the past.

SENIOR CITIZENS

INCIDENTS OF ABUSE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canada's senior citizens are one of our most valuable resources and, unfortunately, one of our most vulnerable. Having made an invaluable contribution to our country, many seniors are now threatened by growing incidents of elder abuse.

There have been cases reported where senior citizens have been mistreated by landlords, made prisoners in their own home or forced to turn over their small pensions to abusive relatives.

Last month in Toronto representatives of the Government and community groups met to formulate a strategic plan to deal with the problem. They proposed changes to the Criminal Code, expanded education of the public, and increased research and data collection on abuse cases.

I urge the Minister of State for Seniors (Mr. Hees) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to commit all of the resources required and to seek the cooperation of all levels of government in order to eradicate elder abuse in Canada.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—U.S. DRAFT LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Yesterday the two Houses of the U.S. Congress endorsed their version of the legislation implementing the Canada-U.S. trade deal. In that legislation is a brand new power for the U.S. administration to harass Canadian exports and so-called Canadian subsidies.

After two years of negotiation, after all the promises raised by the Government, the end result is that Canada is being singled out as being uniquely subject to a brand new trade remedy law, a brand new power to harass and to penalize Canadian exports. That is the result of two years of negotiation.

Considering that the Derek Burney mission is a total failure, that Canada is now subject to a brand new trade power to harass our exports, what will the Government do? Does the Minister have some way to respond to this serious new invasion of Canada's trade rights by the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The hon. gentleman can splutter all he likes. It does not change the facts. There is no new trade remedy given or sought by the version of the U.S. legislation approved yesterday by the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee. All Members of the House should be pleased that both these committees have acted. The Chairmen of both those committees have assured the public at large that they believe it will pass in splendid style in the United States. I would have thought the hon. gentleman would have been pleased with that.

The so-called Baucus-Danforth amendment does not give any new trade remedy to the United States. It does not change the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement that we have entered into. As a result of our representations many changes in language have been made with respect to that amendment. While we still do not like it, and do not think it should be in the Bill or is necessary to be in the Bill, it only gives the Americans the same kind of powers to investigate alleged subsidies and the like as we have in our legislation. I can tell the hon. gentleman that he does not need to be upset, and his theatrical performance can be toned down somewhat because it is not the crisis he is pretending it is.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, he is the one talking about theatrical performances? You have to be kidding!

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF CANADIAN LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, it simply proves once again that the Minister has not read the proper documents. Again, his illiteracy is proving to be a disadvantage for Canadians.

Section 31 of the legislation endorsed yesterday by the United States gives the U.S. Administration new powers not only to monitor Canadian exports and determine subsidies, but to initiate actions unilaterally against those exports. That is a brand new power. It singles out Canada exclusively. It does not apply to other countries. Yet the Minister somehow has his head stuck in the sand or some other place where darkness prevails and does not understand that this is a clear violation of existing trade law. It is a brand new power. It makes Canadian exporters vulnerable to brand new trade actions. I want to know if the Minister is going to amend our Bill to give us the same powers the Americans are abrogating to themselves.

• (1120)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I repeat again that the amendment known as the Baucus-Danforth amendment, in its final form, does not create any new remedies for American industries or for American interests whatsoever. It provides certain powers for the U.S. trade representative to investigate complaints if an industry believes it is competing against subsidized imports into the United States, it gives certain powers to investigate to try to establish what the facts are. It establishes no new remedies. It is not in conflict with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We don't think it is necessary. We don't think this is the proper place to have such a provision inserted.

It has been universalized in its application so it does not apply just to Canada. It will apply to any country that enters into a free trade agreement—

Mr. Axworthy: There's only one, then.

Mr. Crosbie: —with the United States. There may well be others, including Japan, where the Senate Finance Committee is now investigating and doing a study to see if there might be room for a trade agreement between Japan and the United States. So I can tell the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Foster: That we struck out.

Mr. Crosbie: —there is no new remedy being provided for American interests under this amendment.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister says that Canada has not been singled out, there is only one nation that is proposing to sign a free trade agreement with the United States, and that is Canada.

An Hon. Member: So far!

Mr. Axworthy: Therefore, we are the only country to which these new powers will apply. I appeal to the Minister. As the Minister responsible for defending Canadian interests, he knows full well that Section 31 gives the U.S. trade office new powers. It will be monitoring exports to determine all the subsidies. It will be able to take unilateral action against those subsidies on the government level, not relying upon industry petitions.

Those are substantial new powers that are not in the U.S. trade law now. They are not in our laws. They are brand new. They will provide severe and very harsh new constraints upon Canadian exports. I don't understand why the Minister refuses to stand up for Canadian interests.

He has a Bill in front of the House. That Bill could be clearly amended simply to parallel, if he wants, what the Americans are doing to us. If we are supposed to have reciprocity, why don't we at least have reciprocity in protecting Canadian interests? Why are this Government and this Minister refusing to stand up for Canada once again?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, every time the Opposition cries wolf, we are not going to respond "bah bah" as the hon. gentleman wants us to do. This is ridiculous. Just because the Hon. Member says something is so, doesn't make it so. I am going to read what the clause says:

> An entity can make a complaint to the United States Trade Representative if the industry is likely to face increased competition from subsidized imports, with which it directly competes, from any other country designated by the President following consultation with the Congress as benefiting from a reduction of tariffs or other trade barriers under a trade agreement that enters into force after January 1, 1989.

Mr. Axworthy: It sounds like Canada. It sounds like us.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no point shouting when I am trying to answer the question. I will outshout you if I have to.

Mr. Axworthy: We know that. That's all you can do.

Mr. Crosbie: What this means is that this applies not just to Canada but to any country that benefits from a reduction of tariffs or other trade barriers under a trade agreement. That could be the MTN agreement or any other trade agreement that lowers barriers with the United States after this Act comes into force. So it does not apply just to Canada.

In any event, the hon. gentleman is completely wrong as usual, wrong-headed and wrong.

APPLICATION OF UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN LAW

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade. In the Bill agreed to yesterday by the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives, they have kept in Article 3, the provision that says: "In the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the agreement, U.S. law shall prevail". In our Bill, Article 8 states that our Bill will override every other Canadian law whenever there is a conflict. How can the Minister tolerate such a flagrant difference between our law and their law? Is he now prepared to amend our law and either take out Article 8 altogether or make it the same as the American provision?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is another little wolf on the wolf's hind legs again.

Mr. Axworthy: Forget the insults, John. You're an absolute failure as a Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. sheep is pretending to be a wolf. That is the difference.

Mr. Axworthy: Stand up for this country, you big fraud!

Mr. Crosbie: You couldn't even gum anyone to death.

With respect to the question, this is a question of statutory drafting. Clause 8 of our Bill, which states that the Bill would override any inconsistent provision in other Bills relating to the same subject matter, is a common piece of statutory drafting in Canada. That kind of clause appears in many of our federal statutes.

In the United States there is a congressional system, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, but hon. gentlemen opposite have difficulty in grasping that. They have a President and they have a Congress which is independent of the President. The Congress doesn't trust the President, therefore, their habit is to say—

Mr. Foster: We don't trust you so it is all the same.

Mr. Orlikow: We don't trust you.

Mr. Crosbie: And the Canadian public doesn't trust any of you. That is why you are where you are and we are where we are.

Some Hon. Members: Let's go! Let's go!

Mr. Crosbie: We are going to have a election, don't you worry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Supplementary, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

REQUEST THAT LEGISLATION BE AMENDED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is not just a drafting provision. This is a matter of substance. Clause 8 in our law, Bill C-130, makes the Canadian-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in Canada sort of a quasi-constitution subject only to the Constitution of Canada, but able to override every other Canadian law whenever there is an inconsistency or conflict. The provision in the American statute—and it has nothing to do with the American system—is exactly the opposite. It provides: "In the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the agreement, U.S. law shall prevail". Therefore, every other law to be passed by the American Congress can amend the agreement and their Bill. How can the Minister tolerate such a difference in provisions? Why doesn't he do as much for Canadians as the American Congress is doing for its people?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Clause 8 in our Bill is a matter that has been dealt with before the present legislative committee. That is the proper place for this to be discussed. If the committee, for example, wanted to recommend a change, naturally we would consider whether or not there should be a change. But the committee has not recommended any change.

Mr. Axworthy: You said we can't.

Mr. Crosbie: All that Clause 8 states is that this particular piece of legislation will overrule any inconsistent other federal legislation that has not been amended in the Bill. Twenty-seven federal statutes have been found to have provisions inconsistent with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We are specifically amending them. But it is possible that in some obscure provision in some other piece of federal legislation, and God knows there have been thousands of pieces of legislation passed in the last 100 years, there happens to be something that has not been discovered, that we have not seen in our research, that it is inconsistent with this trade legislation, it will be overbound by this federal trade legislation. That is a common statutory provision in our Canadian practice and I see no reason at the present time—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Crosbie: But if the committee in its wisdom, in looking at this, makes a recommendation, then we will consider it.

CHILD CARE

REQUEST FOR DIRECT FEDERAL GRANTS TO PROVINCES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Crosbie: Child care is needed over there, Madam, right next to you.

Ms. Mitchell: Child care is in far greater crisis than it was four years ago.

Mr. Crosbie: There is a crisis over in the Liberal ranks.

Mr. Manly: The Tories think this is funny.

Ms. Mitchell: Child care is in a far greater crisis than it was four years ago, with long waiting lists, few services for children under three, day care centres closing, under-paid workers leaving, and working parents are very concerned about care for their kids. Despite four years of promises and press releases, the Government has not provided one new federal cent for child care services.

• (1130)

Since it is now obvious that there will be no shared funding available to the provinces before the next election will the Minister consider using part of the $1 billion that he found this week and allocate at least $320 million of it for direct good-faith grants to provinces so that they can begin to deal with our child care emergency? Will he do that?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, no, I will not do that, since it is less than what we are doing now. I know that that was the NDP policy.

The Hon. Member says that the Government has done nothing. She is wrong on that point. In the four years since we took office we have has done a great deal. There was the $6.4 billion program over seven years, not to mention the 200,000 spaces, not to mention that after seven years there will be $800 million per year for spaces only support, almost $1 billion a year.

Despite all that, since the Government took office that has been increased by 100 per cent in terms of expenditures under CAP. The Hon. Member says that we have done nothing. Like everything else, it gets tiring always to have to correct the Hon. Member. I understand her philosophy. While I disagree with her even on that, I always have to keep changing and correcting her position.

PROVISION OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister had listened, I said that there was not one new federal cent for child care services. The money the Minister mentions was only in press releases. Of course he has done some things, but unfortunately they have been the wrong things, in our view.

This week the Senate Committee on Child Care joined many other experts across the country in pointing out the numerous flaws that there are in the child care strategy, including the inadequacy of funding, the need to ensure quality of care, the promotion of non-profit child care, and the need to expand services. Since the announcement this week corrects none of these flaws, and the Minister admitted yesterday that this $1 billion does not deal with these problems, would it not make practical sense to allocate good-faith grants now in order to have time to redraft the plan so that we can be proud of our first national child care program in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I did not admit anything of the kind. I did not say that at all. In fact I said that the $1 billion will increase quality. I said that it will increase the salaries of child care workers. I will explain it to the Hon. Member again.

The money for 1988-89 flows as of April 1, 1988—April 1, 1988. We are in July now and April was a few months back.

The point I make is that the provinces can sign on. It is more money for this year than even the NDP wanted.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister can surely not deny that it is money on paper. There is no money in place yet. Again, I say that. It is not just New Democrats who are saying it but experts across the country are saying that the money is being used in the wrong way. The Minister has said in the House, when I questioned him before, that accessibility, affordability, and quality are important national child care objectives. We agree with that. However, he knows that his plan will not achieve these goals. Two hundred thousand spaces will not even begin to meet the need over seven years.

Will the Minister act on his child care promises to Canadian families? Will he show some good faith by putting some money in now before an election? Will he provide emergency funding while he redesigns a workable national child care program, and go to the electorate with it?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have showed good faith. The money is available as of April 1, 1988. The money is there. The federal-provincial agreements will be signed.

Ms. Mitchell: Will be—not now. Not one cent has gone.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I finished saying that the money is available April 1, 1988. If the Hon. Member knows anything about social policy—anything at all—she will know how to take a look at the adjustment over each fiscal year to see how the adjustments are made. The money is available as of April 1, 1988.

The point we are really debating is this. We wanted to give Canadian parents a choice. What the Hon. Member and the NDP want, and something which the Liberals joined in yesterday, is for the Government to drive everything. They want the parents to be told by government how to have care and how to access it. We oppose that. We reject it. That is why we have a plan which was agreed to by other provinces, the federal Government, and by parents who want a choice.

ENTREPRENEUR IMMIGRANTS—MONITORING SYSTEM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Since the Government assumed office in 1984 not only has it doubled and tripled its levels of entrepreneurial immigration to the detriment of other classes such as the family and assisted-family classes, but as Toronto newspapers have been demonstrating for the last several weeks, by failing to implement a comprehensive monitoring system and by lowering the standards, thereby making it easier for business immigrants to get into the country, the Government has created a huge incentive for widespread abuse.

Since the Government's own study in 1985 indicated that it could not even locate over 40 per cent of all business immigrants entering the country, or those who were supposed to have entered, why has the Government refused to establish a monitoring system that would ensure that promises for investment and job creation be fulfilled? If the Government is not prepared to do so now, will it at least re-evaluate the entrepreneurial program within the Government's immigration policy?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member of three things. First, this program has been in place since the late 1970s. Until we got here there was not a finger lifted even to review what was going on under this program, let alone monitor it. My predecessor introduced a review of this system. I said as soon as I took this portfolio that I would be instituting a monitoring system, and that there would be a private sector advisory committee on how to do it. I will be announcing that very soon.

It is this Government and this Party which have aggressively expanded the Government's sponsored refugee program, family reunification, and the independent immigrant program.

ENFORCEMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that it was this Government that tripled the number of business immigrants, and expanded the program to make it easier to qualify. It is now being irresponsible in not following up and ensuring that, if there is a priority for rich immigrants, they at least be followed up on their promises to invest and create jobs for Canadians.

I ask the Minister again why she permits a double standard to continue whereby family or assisted-family class cases are meticulously screened and refused for the slightest of oversights while the rich are not only able to buy themselves into the country more easily but many of them who do so do so free of charge? Will the Minister apply the force of our Immigration Act equally to all its applicants without accounting for the size of people's wallets?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the important part about the lowering of the amount of investment required is because of a bilateral agreement with provinces that have very little capital investment. That does not apply all across the country. It applies in provinces that need investment and, indeed, it was at their request that we did this. So we are now balancing the business immigration program—

Mr. Marchi: No one is coming over.

Mrs. McDougall: It has just been put into effect. We are now balancing the program in a way that will spread that investment out across the country instead of just having it go to some of the richer provinces.

• (1140)

The cornerstone of our policy is that we do indeed apply the standards of the Immigration Act to everyone, and will continue to do so. We will be enhancing the monitoring and the standards around this program. For those who have been in office while the program was instituted with absolutely no monitoring, I find this remarkably hypocritical.

ADMISSION OF HONG KONG BUSINESSMEN

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In an article in The Globe and Mail today Victor Malarek documents abuses in Canada's immigration system that the Minister of Immigration and all her employees cannot document.

Can the Minister tell the House why it is possible that 18 Hong Kong businessmen admitted under the program promoted by the Government can supposedly live with their families in two houses in Metropolitan Toronto while continuing to live in Hong Kong, and still escape the detection of the Department?

Is this the type of monitoring the Minister meant when she told The Globe and Mail on July 5: "I told my officials that I really want this program monitored and very carefully watched"?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on the case that is under way at the present time, except to say that even the story in the paper suggests that what is being investigated goes back for many years. It did not start last week, last month, or even last year. It goes back for quite a long time, and that is the only comment that I will make on this case.

CONDITIONAL VISAS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Government has two immigration policies—Bill C-84 to slam the door on refugees, and Bill C-55 which lets this program be wide open for the wealthy.

Can the Minister explain why there is such widespread cheating, rampant among these wealthy immigrants, while only half of them have restricted conditional visas which require them to enter the country and establish the businesses that they promised to do under the terms of their entry, which they are not doing?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already suggested to the House that until this Party took office there was not even a review of this program.

Mr. Orlikow: Four years. How many more years do you want?

Mrs. McDougall: There has been a review of this program. We are looking actively at how to monitor more effectively. Conditional visas do involve Charter considerations. That may or may not be the answer, but we are looking at it very actively and will be making some announcements soon.

IMMIGRANT DOCTORS—STAFFING OF RURAL HOSPITALS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Bearing in mind the alleged near crisis reported by some rural medical associations, as the result of the unwillingness of Canadian trained doctors and nurses to staff hospitals in rural Canada, would the Minister give consideration to allowing for a designated system that would appropriately label some rural communities as difficult to staff medically and allow those hospital administrators to apply in foreign lands, simultaneously with any advertisement with provincial and Canadian medical associations, and specifically without the requirement for the three-month waiting period while time is wasted in applying in the domestic market for medical staff?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is to be commended for his continuing interest in what is a real problem in the rural parts of Canada.

There is a program of co-operation between federal and provincial health authorities. In the Immigration Department we do expedite the entry of foreign doctors when the problem comes to us.

At the moment there are two log-jams. One is with the standards and interests reviewed by the medical association. The other is at the provincial level. To the extent possible, we are prepared to break the log-jam on the immigration side. We do process those applications very quickly.

I would be interested in helping out in other ways that might expedite the situation, and if designated areas are one of them I would be happy to do that. It will not solve the fundamental problem of foreign doctors coming and practising briefly in an area and then moving on, and that may create another source of difficulty in the future.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN ONTARIO—ASSISTANCE FOR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and it concerns the desperate drought situation in many districts and counties of Ontario and in some areas of Québec.

After the federal-provincial Ministers' meeting two days ago, the Minister announced that the same assistance would be provided in Ontario and Québec as has been provided in the West. So far the only program is the livestock program in the West.

Will the same $60 per head of breeding cow be provided in the Ontario counties and districts affected? Will the same $15 per acre of assistance in tax deferral be provided for Ontario counties and districts affected? When will application forms be available? Will the funds be provided on the same date as they are being provided in western Canada, which I assume is using the starting date of July 1 with payments being made sometime in late August? Could the Minister clarify those issues?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity for further clarification, although the message coming out of the federal-provincial meeting was very clear.

At the federal-provincial meeting in Toronto on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday I said that the same process that we followed in western Canada would be followed in eastern Canada. As of last Tuesday we had already formed the federal-provincial drought co-ordinating committee in the East. One meeting had already been held.

What I said then, and what I am saying here today, is that the same process will be followed in the eastern part of the country that was followed in western Canada.

CORN PRODUCERS—CROP INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. I hope that the Minister will be able to provide exactly the same assistance in eastern Canada as is being provided in the West. That is what farmers want to know. They are not so much concerned about the process as they are that the funds will be provided on the same basis.

I also want to deal with the question of the losses in wheat, soybeans, corn, and a number of horticultural crops. Those losses are estimated to be well over half a million dollars already. By the end of the month the losses could approach 80 to 90 per cent in corn alone.

Is the Minister prepared to accept the recommendation of the Ontario corn producers that the yield factor be raised from 80 per cent to 90 per cent, and that the pricing factor be raised to the current day pricing?

In co-operation with provincial Ministers is the Minister willing to extend the application date for crop insurance until September 1, provided that the producers enrol for a two or three-year period? Will that type of assistance that has been proposed by the Ontario corn producers cover other crops? Is the Minister willing to accept those recommendations, many of which were contained in the federal-provincial review committee and were reported over a year ago? So far no legislation has been brought forward or policies adopted to implement those recommendations in the 1987 federal-provincial crop insurance review committee report.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for anyone who is paying the bill to accept any recommendations at this time. Any recommendations at this time are sheer speculation, and they will be speculation until later in the year when we are closer to harvest time, or at the normal harvest time, depending on the specific crop.

We will work jointly with the provinces and with the producer organizations to come up with recommendations to deal with the situation, exactly the course of action that we followed in western Canada.

We are interested in fairness and equity. We are interested in enhancing the crop insurance program. We are interested in encouraging a greater participation and a greater enrolment in the crop insurance program. But we are also interested in ensuring that there is fairness and equity in financing.

We are proposing to the provinces that we have a more equitable way of financing, more on a tri-partite approach. If the provinces would follow this, this would mean that there would be fairness and equity in crop insurance. It would also mean that Canadian farmers would pay somewhat less. That concept already exists in the Province of Québec and in the Province of Newfoundland. If we get on with the job, if the provinces are prepared to pay their fair share, then we can make an awful lot of progress in the next week to ten days.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY—SCIENTIFIC AND PROFESSIONAL CATEGORY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister knows that despite the Government's employment equity program to increase employment of women in the federal Public Service, 232 scientific and professional jobs held by female public servants will be gone by 1991. Representing only 25 per cent of this group, women will lose 30 per cent of the jobs.

Will the Minister not admit that it is sheer hypocrisy to talk about increasing employment of women in the federal Public Service while making such disproportionate cuts in this very, very important category?

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that the Hon. Member has not congratulated this Government for being the first one to accentuate employment equity and to set targets for the employment not only of women but also of the disabled, natives, and visible minority groups.

Yesterday we published a report called On Target which indicated that in the first three years of this very important program we increased the number of women in the scientific and professional groups. It is reflected in the report that the increase was from 5,305 in 1985 to 5,580 in 1988. I think that should answer the Hon. Member's concern.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, that is what boasting does in refusing to deal with the fact that the numbers will be dropping back toward the levels they were in 1985. That is outrageous, Madam Minister.

REPRESENTATION OF VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister who knows very well that visible minorities are very seriously under represented in the Public Service, representing perhaps 3 per cent of the Public Service by her own figures, less than half of their proportion in the Canadian population.

How can the Minister reconcile the Government's supposed commitment to multiculturalism with a paltry 4.2 per cent increase in the numbers of persons from visible minorities who will be employed in the federal Public Service by 1991? At that kind of rate of increase, Mr. Speaker, it will take until the middle of the next century to achieve fair representation for visible minorities.

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that our efforts to increase the employment of women, minority groups, the disabled, and natives are outrageous. They are without precedent in the history of any previous Government. We are the first ones to bring in a commitment to employment equity and we have delivered, as yesterday's report shows.

The Hon. Member should be aware that, of course, there may be a downsizing in this group as the Member suggests because we are devolving certain aspects of employment to the territorial Governments and to Indian bands, where nurses and teachers will be affected. That will be because their jobs are being devolved to other agencies. The Hon. Member should take that into account.

In terms of the other issues he raises, I suggest he both read the On Target report and the targets that we have set for the next three years. The Hon. Member should be aware that this Government has spent in excess of $30 million in order to ensure that special measures for employment equity are both in place and enforced.

ABORTION

PLANNED USE OF BRAIN TISSUE FROM ABORTED FETUSES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, researchers at Halifax Dalhousie University plan to use brain tissue from aborted fetuses for transplantation, a practice that I am sure most Canadians will find clearly unacceptable and morally repugnant.

The U.S. Government in a move to to stop fetal tissue transplants is refusing federal funds to any institution that carries out medical research with fetuses. Can the Minister assure this House that there will be no federal funds awarded to any university, institution or organization which would try to carry out this despicable practice?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I too read the news reports with great alarm. I think that human life either in utero or in vitro, which is induced for experimental purposes, is both ethnically and morally unacceptable and wrong.

That does not relate, for example, to the spontaneous abortions and the medical and ethical procedures relating to organ harvesting and cadavers. There is also a very strong medical difference with respect to the fact that other options could not be used.

I say, as the Minister of National Health, that while there is review for any federal funding of medical research, this Minister will not approve such a procedure.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET UNION REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. There has been a definite deterioration in the morale of the Public Service of Canada under this Government and there has been a total lack of constructive dialogue between the duly elected representatives of the Public Service of Canada and the Treasury Board.

Today, regardless of what the Minister says, we find that in the science and professional job cuts female public servants have been the hardest hit.

Why has the President of the Treasury Board chosen not to meet with representatives of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada despite their many requests to do so over the past several months? Is the Minister prepared to commit herself to a meeting without further delay to discuss issues of pressing concern to its members and representatives?

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that I held a special reception in May in order to meet with union representatives and to get acquainted with them, because this is a year of tough negotiations. I explained at that time that I did not want to undercut the collective bargaining process that we have in place at this time.

I am quite willing to meet with the representatives at a time when my participation would be helpful, but considering the lack of progress at the bargaining table I do not see what point would be served at this time.

LABOUR RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. The Minister and the Government have adopted an increasingly confrontational and non-communicational approach to labour relations with its own employees.

When will the President of the Treasury Board and Treasury Board officials get their heads out of the sand, stop stonewalling the bargaining units, and start treating the employees with a sense of decency? When can we expect some action and not just the damning, the ignoring, the downsizing and the degradation of the Public Service of Canada? When will the Minister and the Government start treating them with some respect?

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think this Government has been a good employer of the Public Service. We have brought in special measures such as the self-funded leave provision which was introduced recently. We have brought in the employment equity scheme and we have brought in a whole series of special benefits and measures that will assist the Public Service.

In view of the Hon. Member's concern, possibly he could suggest that the unions involved should come to the bargaining table and accelerate their efforts to settle on these agreements.

TELEFILM CANADA

FORMER CHAIRMAN'S EXPENSE ACCOUNT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, last October Peter Pearson, Executive Director of Telefilm Canada, a $100 million Canadian cultural agency, made serious allegations about the Chairman, Mr. Jean Sirois, an appointee and friend of the Prime Minister. I quote:

> No examination of the Chairman's expense account and billings could stand public scrutiny . . . The Chairman stridently intervened to help personal and political friends.

My question is for the Chairman of the Communications and Culture Committee of the House of Commons. On three occasions, March 1, March 15, and May 4 that committee promised hearings into these serious allegations but last night the Conservative majority overruled this commitment. Why this whitewash? Did the Chairman receive instructions from the Prime Minister's Office to bury these embarrassing allegations against a friend of the Prime Minister?

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, without accepting the ridiculous premise to that question, I would offer two points in response.

First, the Member should recall that on June 22 the committee held a planning meeting and decided at that point to forgo the calling of witnesses and instead issue a written report. The Member was represented at that meeting of the committee.

Second, it is a tradition in this place that committees set their agenda and decide on the calling of witnesses in committee meeting. I would suggest that this Member continue that practice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: That is a pretty lame excuse.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, they promised an investigation, but they will do nothing. Because Sirois is a personal friend of the Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson will not have an opportunity to defend himself.

DEMAND THAT MR. PEARSON BE ALLOWED TO JUSTIFY HIS POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): My supplementary question is: How can the Committee Chairman justify such an action and when will Mr. Pearson be able to tell his story to this House or a Committee of this House?

● (1200)

[English]

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Again, Mr. Speaker, without accepting the preamble to that question, I would suggest that the Hon. Member consult with those who represented him at the June 22 meeting when the committee made the decision to issue a written report on this matter and to forgo the calling of witnesses. I would suggest that the Member's actions have now jeopardized the tabling of that written report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one question from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys and one question from the Hon. Member for Don Valley East.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

WATER PATROL UNITS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The RCMP has cancelled its' water patrol units. The water patrol units of the RCMP have been responsible for patrolling and for matters relating to the Shipping Act and the Migratory Birds Convention Act. It is the only agency patrolling for water safety and has been responsible for uncovering a great deal of illegal drugs coming into Canada, a racket which now amounts to $10 billion a year. In light of the good work these units have done, why has the Government disbanded them?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question and for bringing to the attention of the House the good work of these units. I would like to take notice of the question and have the Solicitor General respond to it when he returns.

TAX REFORM

INTERIM SALES TAX CHANGES

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There were press reports earlier this week indicating that he may be shelving the interim sales tax measure that was announced last February. Such a move, of course, would create a cloud of uncertainty for tax professionals and business people. What are the Minister's intentions in this regard?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, over the course of the few months since we did release those proposals on the interim sales tax changes, we have had considerable consultations and discussions with members of the private sector, tax professionals and others who do have an interest in this particular issue. On the basis of these consultations, we are proposing to make some technical changes which will make the proposals more workable. I would expect to be introducing legislation into the House, based on these technical revisions that I have referred to, some time in the next little while.

DEAF CANADIAN STUDENTS AT GALLAUDET UNIVERSITY

Question No. 367—Mr. Young:

1. Are deaf Canadian students currently enrolled in Gallaudet University in Washington, D.C. and, if so (a) in what numbers (b) what are their annual (i) tuition (ii) residence fees (c) do they receive financial assistance from the Government or, to the knowledge of the Government, from any provincial Government to cover the cost of attending this institution (d) what is the total cost of their education there and from what sources does that money come?

2. Are deaf students currently enrolled in Canadian universities and, if so (a) in what numbers (b) what kind of financial assistance is provided to them (c) does the government contribute to this support and, if so, what is the total cost per year to the government?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): 1. Yes. (a) 134, (b) (i) U.S. $1,700 per semester, (average cost); (ii) U.S. $1,650 per semester, (average cost).

(c) According to Gallaudet University, most of their Canadian students receive assistance from the Vocational Rehabilitation for Disabled Persons Program (VRDP), a federal-provincial cost sharing program administered by Health and Welfare Canada. Also, students may receive assistance from the Canadian Student Loans Program (CSLP), provincial bursaries, loans and grants.

(d) Total costs vary from student to student, depending on what course is being taken. An average amount would be $12,000. Sources of money are: own or family contributions, VRDP, Canadian Student Loans Program (CSLP) of the Department of the Secretary of State, provincial bursaries, loans and grants.

2. Yes.

(b) Financial assistance is provided by VRDP, CSLP, provincial loans, bursaries and grants.

(c) Federal government contributes via VRDP and CSLP. Total cost has not been broken down to identify costs for specific groups.

N.B. The above information refers to students who require special services and does not include those who choose not to identify themselves as deaf or request special services.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, before Question Period, I was dealing with Motion No. 2. I have been informed that Motion No. 2 will be ruled out of order because it adds something further to the Bill.

I cannot see how Motion No. 2 is different from Clause 5 of the Bill. As a matter of fact, the only difference I can detect is that there is in my motion the following subclause:

> (v) the appointment of any individual to any body or office established by or under the authority of any Act of Parliament or by or under the authority of the Governor in Council,—

In fact, that particular subclause was in the original Bill when we debated it at second reading. In the legislative committee, the Government withdrew that subclause. I simply added it back in.

Right at the end of the motion, there is another part that is different. I have added such other information relating to the identity of the individual, the client, the employer or any corporation or subsidiary. I cannot see that my Motion No. 2 is any different from what is in the Bill now except for the addition of the appointment of any individual. In other words, those who lobby on the appointment of an individual are considered to be taking part in lobbying activities.

I cannot understand why the motion would not be accepted. As far as I can see, it does not go beyond the scope of the Bill which we debated in principle and which is before us today.

There is one other point I would like to bring to Your Honour's attention. It must have been an error in the printing of Motion No. 6 which has been accepted. It reads: "graphs 5(1)(a) to (g)," and it should be (f) rather than (g).

Mr. Boudria: That is what it says. Mine must be reprinted.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am looking at the Order Paper of Monday, July 11.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is correct, of course, but I would like to inform him that on today's Order Paper, it has been corrected.

I would first like to thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Hawkes) for their representations concerning the amendments at report stage. The Chair has taken the representations into consideration and is now ready to make a decision on Bill C-82.

There are eleven motions in amendment at the report stage of Bill C-82. These motions in the names of the Hon. Members for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), and Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), cause the Chair some difficulty. The majority of these motions were dealt with in the legislative committee which studied the Bill.

• (1210)

Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 3 attempt to introduce a further element into Clause 5. This is of course with respect to the representation made by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Clause 5 states in part that "every individual who for payment undertakes to arrange a meeting or to communicate with a public office holder shall file". Thus it appears that the principle or scope, and those words are used interchangeably, of Clause 5 is to restrict registration to items based upon arranging meetings or communicating with public office holders. In addition, the Bill makes no reference, among other items, to mass mailing, advertising campaigns, collecting information, or summary of costs. Accepting this point, that the scope of the said clause is as stated, then to insert additional items not previously covered would indeed take the clause beyond what was originally envisaged at second reading.

Accordingly, as paragraph 1 of Citation 773 of Beauchesne's states, an amendment is out of order if it is beyond the scope of the clause under consideration. That reference is further supported by Erskine May, twentieth edition, page 555.

I thus find that the proposed motions numbered 1, 2 and 3 are beyond the scope of the clause and therefore are inadmissible and consequently will not be put to the House.

[English]

Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8 were considered at length in the legislative committee. Nevertheless, after consultation, Hon. Members have made the case that this matter of requiring lobbyists to register certain items is of enough significance that it warrants further consideration as permitted under Standing Order 114(10). Accordingly, Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8 will be debated together but voted upon separately.

Motions numbered 5 and 9 were moved, debated but negatived at the committee stage. Therefore, in accordance with Standing Order 114 (10), they shall not be selected for the consideration of the House.

[English]

Motion No. 10 is similar to Motion No. 9 and as a consequence will not be put to the House.

Motion numbered 11 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) attempts to give the registrar more powers than those that were envisaged when the House gave the Bill approval in principle at second reading. Therefore, in accordance with paragraph 1 of Beauchesne citation 773, I declare it inadmissible.

[English]

To summarize for Hon. Members, Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, 9, 10 and 11 are not admissible and will not be selected. Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8 are in order.

Therefore, I shall now put motions numbered 4, 6, 7 and 8 to the House which will be debated together but voted on separately.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That Bill C-82 be amended in Clause 5 by striking out lines 11 and 12 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(e) the fee charged by the individual for performing the activities described in subsection (1); and

(f) such other information relating to the".

That Bill C-82 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 30 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"graphs 5(1)(a) to (f), that employee shall,".

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved:

That Bill C-82 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 38 to 41 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) the name of the employee;

(b) the name and address of the person or organization by whom the employee is employed; and

(c) the proposed subject-matter of the meeting or communication, as the case may be."

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 8:

That Bill C-82 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out line 41 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

(c) the proposed subject matter of the communication; and

(d) the summary of the costs incurred by the person or organization while performing the activities described in this subsection."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just draw your attention to Motion No. 4. Looking at the lineage and the way it is worded, there are three words which complete a previous clause. I can see what the Hon. Member is intending but in the absence of those three words we would end up with a script which might not be what it should be. At least that is my reading of it. We can proceed with the debate but I think there is a technical problem which people might want to look into while we are proceeding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. On debate.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate at report stage of Bill C-82. Of course, I regret that not all motions were acceptable to the Chair but of course I accept the ruling in that regard. That leads me to debate Motions Nos. 4, 6, 7 and 8, and I want to address my remarks principally to Motion No. 7. That happens to be the one I proposed.

Bill C-82, as we know, offers a two-tier system of registering lobbyists. It says that there shall be a category of consulting lobbyists and from them we should ask certain information. For another category, the Tier II or so-called other lobbyists, we should ask merely the name and address of the person or organization by whom the employee is employed, and that the employee who files a return referred to shall as soon as practicable in the circumstances advise the registrar of any change. That is the only thing we are asking of those people.

In my opinion we are asking far too little of Tier II two lobbyists. I want to remind the House that the whole purpose of having a registration system is to offer some form of transparency. Of course, as it pertains to Tier I lobbyists, we will be asking for a bit more information and that is good. I think we should have gone one step further and asked to register the fees that lobbyists charge as well. However, that amendment being inadmissible, we obviously will not be able to ask that.

Nevertheless, the whole purpose of the exercise is to provide a certain transparency. In the case of Tier I lobbyists one could argue that there is at least an element of that which will be required of those so-called Tier I lobbyists or, in other words, consulting lobbyists. When we talk about consulting lobbyists, we talk about the GCIs and Frank Moores of this world.

As we deal with Tier II lobbyists, we are talking about a different kind of person. At least, the Government thinks we are talking about a different kind of person. We are talking about someone who, let us say, is the vice-president of government relations for General Motors or Inco or another similar company. That could be the definition of a Tier II lobbyist but it is not necessarily so. Let me give you the following scenario.

For example, say that a company has one of its vice-presidents as a Tier II lobbyist but that company does lobbying work for another company. I will give an example. Say we have a large corporate entity by the name of Imasco. That, of course, is a large corporate entity and owns a number of subsidiaries, one of them being Imperial Tobacco, another one being a cookie factory and so on.

In that situation there may be no transparency at all because if the lobbyist is working for the parent company, it will not be at all evident which one of the subsidiaries he or she is lobbying for because we are not asking enough information of the Tier II lobbyists. We are not asking from them the same thing that we are asking of Tier I lobbyists, namely, the subject of what the lobbying activity entails.

One could even argue that in the case of very large multinationals, the parent company could in fact be lobbying two completely diametrically opposed things, depending upon which one of its subsidiaries it is arguing for. In the case of the large multinational which I raised a while ago, if it were lobbying for or against a tobacco initiative, it would be totally different than if it were lobbying for or against something pertaining to its food production department.

I want to keep my comments very brief in this regard because we made the point at committee that we need a more transparent system. The Government has offered us a system of registering lobbyists after considerable controversy.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Conservative Government had some very serious problems and it still does, during the summer of 1985. Subsequently, and as I said, the problems are still with us, the Prime Minister made a statement in the House and sent letters to Hon. Members, dated September 9, 1985, in which he discussed the issue of public sector ethics, and Lord knows the Government certainly needed some ethics at this point. However, in this case the Government announced that it would draft a new code for public office holders. Furthermore, instructions would be given to Ministers, imposing specific limits on the hiring, on a permanent or contract basis, of members of their families. Lobbying legislation would also be forthcoming, Mr. Speaker. I just want to quote, very briefly, one paragraph of this letter to show that we need the amendment I am proposing to the House today, if we are to meet the objectives the Prime Minister set in his letter of September 9, 1985. He said and I quote: "The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date . . . ", mark those words: "at an early date", " . . . legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists . . . " Now listen carefully, Mr. Speaker, the next sentence is very important: " . . . we will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients." That does not apply to the Tier II lobbyists I referred to earlier. " . . . This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation . . . ", and finally: " . . . I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity " . . . "On an urgent basis", Mr. Speaker . . . that was September 9, 1985. It is now July 15, 1988, in a session extended by this Government.

I think it is clear that the Conservative Government has again failed to keep his word. In any case, I believe that with my amendment and the amendments moved by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), we could at least try to provide a measure of transparency throughout the system, something the Prime Minister himself had asked for. Mr. Speaker, I would ask all Members in the House to support the four motions before it today, and more specifically, a motion I moved myself, Motion No. 7, which is not very exacting but which nevertheless would be better than the system proposed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, can I get a clarification? Since I have three amendments, do I get 30 minutes to debate? Do I see you nodding? He is awake. The Speaker is always awake when I am on my feet. I don't get away with anything around here.

I want to direct my comments to the three amendments which stand in my name on the Order Paper. Bill C-82 is the Government's response to the unanimous report of a standing committee of the House of Commons. The committee studied the issue of lobbying as a result of an open letter to Members of Parliament and Senators dated September 9, 1985, signed by Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada. Among other things that he said to Members of Parliament and Senators was the following:

> The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date, legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists. We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients. This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.

It was as a result of this letter that the committee studied the issue of lobbying and produced a unanimous report. In that report we recommended that lobbyists be registered. We recommended that the item on which they are lobbying be registered and that the client who hired them be registered.

The standing committee did not recommend a two-tiered system. Bill C-82 makes a differentiation. The committee has always held that a lobbyist is a lobbyist is a lobbyist and that whether lobbyists are hired by a private company or an association such as the Pharmaceutical Association, their activities are identical. The purpose of their existence is to try to influence the legislators with respect to regulations and/or laws.

Bill C-82 has attempted to set up a two-tier system, Tier I containing all of those who are identifiably lobbying consultants such as GCI, PAI, and a host of other lobbying consultants. Tier II would cover associations and unions. The Government proposes to require different information from the two tiers. The first group will be required to name their client and the issue on which they are lobbying. However, Tier II will be treated entirely differently. They need only declare who they are. In other words, all they have to do is hand over their business card. That is the only registration required.

I used to think that the most powerful lobbyists were the Frank Moores type. I thought those were the powerful lobbyists, the ones with clout. I have since had reason and opportunity to change my thinking on that question. In fact, the most powerful lobbyists on the Hill and around the bureaucracy are the associations like the Bankers Association, the Pharmaceutical Association, and BCNI. They really have the clout around here. We have observed the influence that they have had on the Government with respect to legislation. They will escape, scot-free, from the network of registration.

Canadians have every right to know who is doing what to whom and, I would add in one of my amendments, for how much. That is absolutely essential in a democratic system. It must be totally transparent. My amendments seek to erase the difference between Tier I lobbyists and Tier II lobbyists.

Second, I want to ensure that the amount of money paid by the lobbying activity, or the amount spent on a lobbying activity in the case of associations, is on the public record. That amount indicates the importance of the issue to those who want to have the change.

Third, even the Tier II proposal of the Government would eliminate the registry of those who would attempt to get an appointment to a board or commission. That is maintained in Tier I but completely eliminated for Tier II so that all the hacks can continue to be appointed without any right of the public to know about the relationship between those making the appointments and those making the representations on behalf of the appointees.

That is not in keeping with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wrote us in 1985, when he stated in his letter that we would have a transparent system, that we would not only be registering the lobbyists but registering the particular lobbying activity.

It is absolutely essential that the public be aware of the particular issue. We know that there is direct and indirect lobbying. All of us are aware of the vast numbers of letters we received with respect to the tobacco legislation. While we have no proof, all the letters were the same and obviously some groups were spending considerable amounts of money to put out those letters and have people sign and mail them. I suggest that that is a form of lobbying about which the public has a right to know. Parliamentarians and bureaucrats have a right to know who was sending out this information and how much they were putting into the lobby. In fact, it was all done by the Tobacco Manufacturers Association, who hired Bill Neville to make the big pitch. Canadians have a right to know that. Canadians have a right to know about the issue, who is behind it and how much they are paying.

Bill C-22, to amend the Patent Act, suddenly came upon the scene. Were the drug companies approaching the bureaucracy and, if so, those who were opposed to the changes ought to have been aware of it so they could mount their campaign as well.

Where did the question of free trade originate? I have no doubt in my mind that it originated with BCNI. I have no doubt that Tom d'Aquino and BCNI were pushing the Government into adopting the free trade program. We have a right to know what those who lurk in the shadows and dark recesses of Government are doing. We should be able to put the light on those who hide behind the curtains and do their deals in the dark.

The Canadian public has every right to know, as the Prime Minister once said. That does not only apply to access to information, it applies to all things relating to Government, including influences on Government. It is extremely important.

The Government took the position in committee not to accept any amendments. It refused to accept any changes to the legislation in the committee. In fact, I got the distinct impression that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) was an unwilling sponsor of this Bill. He did not even want to have a lobbying Bill. The lobbyists have done a very effective job on the Government with respect to the lobbying Bill.

The Minister kept saying the Government did not want to register lobbying, that it wanted to register lobbyists, in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister said lobbying activities must be registered. We supported the principle of lobbying but we cannot support a Bill that has turned out to be a powder-puff Bill. We cannot support that because it would be participating in a nothing Bill.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on this Bill and the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). We are concerned about the issue of the public's right to know. That should not be confused with other issues that have been raised in the House.

The public has the right to know who is attempting to influence the decisions of Government. Not only should they know who is doing it, they should know the specific issues they are raising and how much money is being spent on it.

Let us consider the example of the submarine program, which is subject to millions of dollars of lobbying, and consider how that relates to the importance of this legislation. Yesterday there was a debate on the submarine program. Conservative Members spoke in favour of it and Opposition Members spoke against it.

Unfortunately, there are small groups of very powerful and influential people in this country who want this program to go ahead because of the large amounts of money they can make. These groups include the classical organized lobbying groups like Public Affairs International, Government Consultants International, Corporation House and a number of others.

Mr. Ouellette, who heads Government Consultants International, is a personal friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from law school days. He was a principal instrument in his leadership campaign. The same organization involved Frank Moores, a personal friend of the Prime Minister. These people are not without influence and are the louder voices looking for a share of the spoils of the Government. The people have a right to know what they are doing in the Prime Minister's Office, how much is being paid and for what.

This program has attracted a very nefarious type of undertaking. The former Chief of Defence Staff and Deputy Minister of Transport, Mr. Ramsey Withers, is now on the payroll promoting this program. He held a very important position in Canada as Deputy Minister of Transport and Chief of Defence Staff. He is being paid a pension by the Government of Canada and should not be lobbying for private groups for private advantage. That type of activity cannot be allowed to continue. It should be made clear in this House that Ramsey Withers has no business lobbying this Government on this issue.

We have the spectacle of a former Minister of National Defence, Mr. Jean-Jacques Blais, who served in this House as a Minister of the Crown, now lobbying as well. It would appear he is not only receiving money as a lobbyist but he is also receiving money from the Government of Canada, although indirectly. That is unacceptable. It should not be allowed to continue. This Government must take positive action to deal with these amendments and this legislation to stop this. The Canadian public is being exploited in a very serious way by these kinds of activities. People who have held strong positions of trust in the Government are now turning around and using those positions of trust for personal financial advantage, and in this case, for a very questionable program.

It even goes further than that. Lobbying is being conducted by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty). There are reports in the newspapers that he is using officers of the Armed Forces to travel back and forth across this country promoting the submarine program. That is lobbying. It is absolutely unacceptable. It appears to be a politicizing of the Armed Forces, and we cannot tolerate that.

The Minister of National Defence has also used the resources of his Department to enhance the decision-making process around the nuclear submarine issue in the public eye. That is not acceptable. It undermines democracy. The particular issue of the submarines illustrates every negative aspect of the lobbying issue.

What it is is louder voices, smaller groups and louder voices. The Government is getting its message out by spending millions of dollars of taxpayers money. The submarine manufacturers in Britain and France are promoting this project using millions of private dollars. The defence contractors are spending millions of dollars in getting their message out. In short, there is a very small number of groups, who stand to make a very large amount of money, which are getting their message out.

What about the other side of the question, the fairness of the decision-making procedure, whereby these groups who are critical of this program do not have the resources to raise that that kind of money. When there are private interest groups, which stand to make a lot of money off the success of this particular program, having access to millions and millions of dollars to promote it, and when the prize is in the billions of dollars, they ought to be putting up an equal amount of money to be allocated to other groups so that these groups can campaign and give the other point of view. That would be a legitimate approach to this issue.

The citizens of this country would then have a fair chance. They would be allowed to look at advertisements not only of submarines and Soviet threats and all the jobs that allegedly will be created by this program, but they would also be able to look at such things as Canada being mortgaged for generations for a program in which the first submarine will not be delivered for 10 years. The technology in that submarine will be absolutely out of date by the time it hits the water.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton), wants to use these nuclear submarines to chase dope importers and fisheries violators. He is right on track. When the Minister of National Defence first raised this, he wanted to protect Arctic sovereignty. When that fell apart under the criticism of experts in the field who said there were more cost effective ways of doing that, then the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich stands and displays his incredible knowledge of this subject by suggesting that we can use nuclear powered submarines to chase dope importers and fisheries violators. I guess we can. We can probably use a sub to surface ship missile in Esquimalt to shoot them as they come out of the harbour in Colombia. But I would think that most people would find there were other more cost effective ways of handling that problem. We have a serious problem here.

The message from the other side of this controversy is not being heard. The democratic system and decision-making procedure should be made to work. People with good reputations say we are not spending $8 billion on this program. The Department of Supply and Services estimates it at $10 billion. The security adviser to the U.S. Senate estimates it at $12 billion. Other naval analysts are saying it will cost in excess of $16 billion. The security adviser for the Senate suggests that this will mortgage the defence budget of Canada for a complete generation. That $16 billion will not allow us to do anything else in defence, to take care of things like search and rescue and peacekeeping. The public should know that. The only way to let the public know is effective lobbying legislation. They should also know that this program will harm things like medicare and old age pensions.

Something else the Canadian public should know is that spending $16 billion on a submarine program that will be out of date by the time the first sub goes in the water is going to destabilize the world situation. It is going to act as an initiative for further moves in the arms race. It will undermine the nuclear proliferation treaty. In all seriousness, we must give people in this society the other point of view in a fair and equitable way. This is what this Bill is for.

What about the lost opportunity costs of this Bill, the things we could do if we chose not to buy the submarines to chase dope importers and fish violators? If we did not want to use the money for nuclear submarines, our municipalities in Canada could create tens of thousands of person-years of work by improving municipal infrastructures. They have pleaded for that program. Health care in this country is in a crisis situation. Some of that $16 billion could be used to help people receive coronary bypasses in a timely way with elective surgery. Education is in chaos. The $16 billion could help there.

I know my colleague from the Conservative Party, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich, is getting more and more frustrated and wants to get up and speak on this issue so I will close by saying the situation is critical. Lobbying is the issue and the friends of the Prime Minister and the powerful interests should not be the only ones who get their message out.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the motion put forth by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has been discussed time and time again, most recently by the legislative committee. The motion requires the lobbyist to disclose the subject matter of his or her lobbying. As the Minister said repeatedly, the interests behind these lobbyists are generally long known.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take much imagination to realize that Mrs. Judy Erola, who is President of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, is interested in the pharmaceutical industry. That is pretty obvious, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

In drafting this Bill, we had four guiding principles, openness, clarity, access to Government and administrative simplicity. What the New Democratic Party are proposing in its amendment will create what we call an administrative nightmare. It is unbelievable to think that the people who are doing the right thing, which is lobbying, will have to suffer an administrative process whereby it would be impossible to find the end of it.

I want to be brief in my comments because I am sure the Minister will at third reading of the Bill make the points about why we tabled this important legislation, Bill C-82. You may ask if this Bill is perfect, Mr. Speaker, I do not know. That is why we put in a three-year review, so we can find out if there are problems after that time and make the necessary improvements.

In summary, this Bill proposes a lobbyist registry with some basic, and, I think, important attributes. If we have not gone far enough, as some critics suggest, then Parliament has a perfect opportunity in three years to revisit the system and make improvements. I call for the vote on the amendments now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member is correct as usual. That will be done.

THE NATIONAL PARKS ACT

The House proceeds to consideration of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act, as reported with amendment by a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are 13 motions on the Notice Paper at the report stage of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act.

After careful consideration, I am now ready to make my decision concerning the grouping and voting for the proposed motions in amendment.

[English]

Motions Nos. 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 standing in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes), and the Hon. Members for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), and Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), respectively, are proposing to amend Sections in the original Act and not clauses in the Bill presently before the House. Therefore they are out of order. The Members can be referred to many references in this regard.

Motion no 2 is admissible and will be debated and voted upon separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 5 and 13 are acceptable and will be debated together with a vote on Motion No. 5 being applied to Motion No. 13.

I will now put motion no 2 to the House.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I understand from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) that the government amendments which were moved as they appear on the Order Paper were indeed discussed in committee. They come about as a consequence of activities which have occurred since the Bill was introduced. The option was to come forward with a new Bill with those items in it, or to seek the unanimous consent of the House to move those amendments at this stage. I think you would find, Mr. Speaker, a predisposition on the part of Members of the House to accept those amendments. Therefore they can be put before us at this stage. I would be pleased to move them on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In reply to the Parliamentary Secretary's intervention, and on the assumption that he is referring to Motions Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, yes, we concur on our side.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I request that the House give consent to move Motion No. 10 and the subsequent motion thereto. That motion would be to delete line 5 and substitute the following: "Land Districts, and to include, subject to negotiation and agreement with the Government of the Province of British Columbia, that region of Renfrew".

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I am wondering if we are not jumping ahead of ourselves just a bit in terms of the order. I do not have any objection at all to the proposal of the Hon. Member, nor do I have an objection to the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary in terms of unanimous consent to allow the motions in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) to be considered.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the bit of confusion may be that the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) correctly identified that there is unanimous consent to move Motions Nos. 1, 3, 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12, but they happen to be standing in the names of different people at different places. Indeed, the Hon. Member is the sponsor of one of those motions.

Mr. Speaker, you will find unanimous consent to accept those motions. Then, I think the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) wishes to amend Motion No. 10 which stands in his name. I think he has shared with the House the thrust of that amendment.

If Your Honour were to proceed and put the motions, then the Chair would find those people willing. In my case where the name of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment appears it would be my pleasure to take her place and move her motions on her behalf.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

• (1300)

The Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) to move his motion which the Chair will consider to be a new Motion No. 10?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In view of the unanimous consent given by the House to permit honourable members to move these motions in amendment, I am prepared to group these motions as follows:

[English]

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 12 will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows:

(a) Motions Nos. 1, 2, and 11 will be voted on separately;

(b) Motion No. 7 will be voted on separately with the vote being applied to Motion No. 12;

(c) An affirmative vote on Motion No. 9 obviates the need to vote on Motion No. 10. A negative vote on Motion No. 9 necessitates the requirement of a vote on Motion No. 10.

Motion nos 3 and 4 will be debated together but voted upon separately.

[English]

Motions Nos. 5 and 13 will be debated together, but voted on separately.

Motions nos. 6 and 8 will be debated together but voted upon as follows:

[English]

An affirmative vote on Motion No. 6 will obviate the need to vote on Motion No. 8. However, a negative vote on Motion No. 6 will necessitate the requirement of a vote on Motion No. 8.

I shall now put motions nos. 1, 2, 7, 9, 10, 11 and 12 to the House.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: I rise on a point of Order, Mr. Speaker, to draw to your attention that in light of the subamendment put forward by the Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), it no longer follows that a favourable vote on Motion No. 9 will automatically dispose of Motion No. 10, because Motion No. 10 is now different from Motion No. 10 listed in the Order Paper. You may wish to reconsider that aspect of your judgment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Both Motions Nos. 9 and 10 amend the same part of the same clause. Is the Hon. Member in agreement with the Chair on that point?

Mr. Hawkes: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It being a Friday with all divisions deferred, we are talking now about the wisdom of the decision for deferral given the nature of the amendments. The Chair would certainly have the support of the House if the Chair decided to look at the division aspect of it and we could get on with the debate on the basis of the groupings. In fact, if we were to know by the time of the vote on Monday, it would certainly be clear to the House what the sequence of voting will be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since we will be voting for Motion No. 9 we could not possibly vote for Motion No. 10 if Motion No. 9 is adopted.

Mr. Caccia: This is my point. By voting favourably for Motion No. 9 the Chair would still want to consider Motion No. 10 presented by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West who has today introduced a text different from that on the Order Paper. I am alerting you to this necessity, Mr. Speaker, and to the fact that in your ruling, paragraph (c), you indicated that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 9 obviates the need to vote on Motion No. 10. I would submit that an affirmative vote on Motion No. 9 will still require a vote on Motion No. 10 in order to take into account the substance of the subamendment of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands the point being made by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). If the Hon. Member does not mind, and if the House agrees, we will proceed with the debate and take care of the vote a little later.

Mr. Angus: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It being a Friday and Members want to give the opportunity to all those who wish to participate, I wonder if, in light of the fact that the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West has to move westward, we could deal with the grouping containing Motions Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12 first and return and go through the normal process.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is what the Chair intends to do. The Chair will put the motions to the House.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 1 by striking out lines 4 to 7 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

That Bill C-30 be amended by adding immediately after line 15 at page 14 the following:

Following the disposition of any claim referred to in subsection 15(1) in respect of the reserve established pursuant thereto, the Governor in Council may, by a proclamation amending Schedule I to the National Parks Act, establish a National Park comprising all or any portion of the reserve under the name designated and having the boundaries set out in the proclamation."

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended by adding immediately after line 15 at page 14 the following:

"15. (1) Subject to subsection (2), the Governor General in Council may, by proclamation setting out the boundaries thereof, establish a reserve for a National Park in the Barclay, Clayoquot and Renfrew Land Districts,to include that region of Renfrew District commonly known as theCarmanah Watershed area,on Vancouver Island in the province of British Columbia and in the internal waters and territorial sea of Canada adjacent to the coasts thereof, pending the disposition of any claim by aboriginal peoples of British Columbia to any right, title or interest in or to the lands comprised in the reserve and the establishment of a National Park therein.

(3) Upon the issue of a proclamation pursuant to subsection (1), the National Parks Act applies to the reserve established thereby as if it were a park within the meaning of the Act.

16. Following the disposition of any claim referred to in subsection 15(1) in respect of the reserve established pursuant thereto, the Governor in Council may, by a proclamation amending Schedule I to the National Parks Act, establish a National Park comprising all or any portion of the reserve under the name designated and having the boundaries set out in the proclamation."

And:

To delete line 5 and substitute the following:

"Land Districts, and to include, subject to negotiation and agreement with the Government of the Province of British Columbia, that region of Renfrew" . . .

Mr. Jim Hawkes (for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 15 by striking out lines 16 to 31 at page 14 and lines 1 to 7 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"15. Section 10 of An Act to amend the National Parks Act, being chapter 11 of the Statutes of Canada, 1974, are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

(a) the Governor in Council is satisfied that clear title to the lands described in the proclamation is vested in Her Majesty in right of Canada;

(c) a notice of the proclamation setting out the boundaries of the lands has been published

(i) in the Canada Gazette at least ninety days prior to the date of issue of the proclamation, and Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, may I first express my appreciation for the courtesy of the House in giving consent to consider my motion. As we discussed this among ourselves in the House, all members of the House of Commons are enthusiastic about the Carmanah watershed.

The Carmanah watershed partly in and adjacent to the boundary of the Pacific Rim National Park possesses the most significant ecosystem of Sitka spruce at least in Canada and perhaps in the world.

Sitka spruce are rare in Canada and they grow only on the West Coast. They present a majestic, striking example of Canadian forests. It is difficult to describe to you, Mr. Speaker, or anyone in the House a Sitka spruce tree of this nature. Perhaps I could suggest that Members look at the pillars in the Chamber and see that those pillars tower approximately 75 feet. If one were to put a Sitka spruce in place of that pillar, the pillar would only be part way up that Sitka spruce. If one were to take a Sitka spruce out to the tower in the Parliament Buildings that so many Canadians know and to the top of which they have gone, one would still look up to see the top of a Sitka spruce tree of the nature of the Carmanah giants.

Some people simply call them "big trees". To me they appear as living pillars holding up the sky; they are so tall as they reach forward and upward, there is no way to describe them. By this motion I want to be sure that all Members in the House of Commons, their children, and their grandchildren might have the chance not only to see the Sitka spruce but to know and feel them through the experience of a visit to that area.

Unlike West Coast valleys which are short and narrow, the Carmanah watershed contains 600 hectares of flat alluvial river bottom in the shape of an oval. It is approximately .8 kilometers by 7 kilometers and it is formed by the meandering Carmanah River. Ecologists recognize the uniqueness of this river bottom which provides the large number of Sitka spruce groves that contain approximately 2,000 of those West Coast giants.

Individual trees average 8 feet in diameter and 250 feet in height. The largest tree recently identified measures 12 feet in diameter across the bottom and towers 315 feet into the sky.

I would like to begin by crediting MacMillan Bloedel for being the first to identify officially the tallest Sitka spruce trees on record, possibly the tallest in the world, on June 13, 1988. Frank Hastings of MacMillan Bloedel measured, recorded and publicized the tallest of these giants which lie less than a mile from the famous West Coast Trail in the Pacific Rim Park. It is important to point out that MacMillan Bloedel immediately put a stop to all logging roads in the Carmanah area, upon the request of various interest groups and their own recognition.

In fact, we need to recognize that MacMillan Bloedel has been a responsible corporate citizen in setting aside 14,000 hectares of reserve parkland throughout the Province of British Columbia for ecological, wildlife and recreational purposes. The size of the commitment that they have made, just to put it into perspective, is equal to more than 35 parks the size of Stanley Park in Vancouver. I give credit to MacMillan Bloedel for its initiative.

Secondly, I would like to recognize Mr. Clinton Webb of the Western Canada Wilderness Committee, along with those individuals from the Heritage Forest Society and the Sierra Club of Western Canada, for their public awareness campaign. I was indeed impressed by their dedication and energetic commitment to the preservation of the Carmanah Watershed.

It is my understanding that MacMillan Bloedel is also committed to preserve and to protect the giants of Carmanah and is requesting reserve status for a portion of that area.

I am also pleased to report that the Government of British Columbia has responded positively to MacMillan Bloedel's initiative, and I am sure that it is now ready to begin discussions with the Government of Canada regarding lands that will have to be set aside to protect and preserve the Sitka spruce trees of Carmanah.

I want also to assure you that Members of Parliament from British Columbia, including the Hon. Member from Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), are strongly in support of this move. In fact, I know the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) is strongly in support of this move as well, as are other members of the British Columbia government caucus. It is my understanding also that all members of all political Parties from British Columbia are in support of this move today, and I am sure that they will express that following my comments.

It is imperative that the watershed be saved. The land proposed to be in the amendment is to be included in the Pacific Rim Park, and it includes the streams and the run-off areas that contribute to the unique hydrological balance which allows these spruce trees to survive.

Since the valleys rise steeply to over 3,000 feet, disturbance of the valley sides by roads or logging would quickly alter the run-off patterns and cause erosion, which would rapidly change the valley bottom, making it unlikely that the Sitka spruce would survive. Together with hemlock, fir and giant red cedars in the valley, the Sitka spruce-dominated river bottom present the most significant and one of the few remaining intact ecosystems of its type in the world.

I would also credit MacMillan Bloedel with having identified other Sitka spruce groves on the West Coast that have considerable merit as well. As these unique forest areas of Canada disappear, so does the potential for long-term economic growth through tourism. Locally and regionally, preservation of the valley has strong support. A recently constructed non-ecologically damaging foot trail has provided passage for those who believe in the value of sustainable development. I hope that as summer recess looms on our Parliament many Members of Parliament would have an opportunity to share my experience with the giant Sitkas in the Carmanah Valley by visiting it over the summer break.

I am reminded of my first visit to the forest with the youths who are working there to provide a trail through the trees. As I shared their last cream and coffee in their primitive campsite, I was encouraged by their fresh zeal and enthusiasm, which gives them the energy to open up this beautiful forest so that others might share this primeval experience. Our own insignificance is put into perspective against the silent giant trees which have presided over the history of many generations of our people.

Pacific Rim Park will preserve unique ecological areas of the West Coast of Canada that offer tremendous potential for human and tourism experience. The addition of the Carmanah watershed will preserve another unique ecologically-forested area for our heritage, enhancing the diversity of life and lifestyles that we struggle to maintain in our country.

I commend this motion to you and I express my appreciation to all Members of the House of Commons from all political Parties who have supported us.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this group, except for Motion No. 10, is housekeeping amendments, and we support them. With particular regard to Motion No. 10, the one that has been moved by the Hon. Member of Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), we certainly congratulate him on his fine initiative and we support his motion as well, in the hope that both the Government of Canada and British Columbia will come through and make what he proposes a reality, an enjoyment for generations of Canadians to come, and in that sense we are very glad to support him.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to speak on this motion put forward in the name of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). I would like to commend the Hon. Member for his initiative in two areas. First of all, he took the initiative to visit the area. He saw it, he was open to the beauty, the wonder, the awe and majesty of the area. Second, he came back and filed this motion. He not only filed it but he has talked about it with his colleagues in the Conservative Party and has received a considerable amount of support for it. I want to be very open in my commendation of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West, Bob Wenman. Pardon me for being out of order in mentioning his name.

If rumours of a Monday election call are true, this might be the last speech I make in this Chamber, since my present riding, Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, is going to be disappearing. If it is, there is nothing that I feel more strongly about than this particular issue. It is central to the work I have tried to do in the House of Commons. It is also very important to Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands, which is a riding that will be disappearing at the time of the next election.

The fact is that politicians come and go, political boundaries come and go. This afternoon we have an opportunity to do something that will last for all time. That is why I feel so strongly about this important issue. We have an opportunity to preserve a living forest, with the largest Sitka spruce not only in Canada but possibly in the world. As our world becomes increasingly urbanized, it is so important that we preserve places and spaces such as this that can still move us to a sense of awe and wonder and enchantment.

It is important to note that the motion specifies the region "commonly known as the Carmanah watershed". We are talking about the entire valley, 7,000 hectares, more or less. We are not just talking about a couple of groves of big trees on the valley floor.

The large spruce are found on the valley floor, while on the hillsides you will find decent sized hemlocks and some old large-sized cedars. It is important that we preserve the hillsides and not just the valley floor. This is not only for aesthetic purposes. To preserve the spruce on the valley floor, we have to preserve the hillsides as well.

Anybody who has driven through British Columbia's backwoods of Vancouver Islands will know that in some places we have clear-cut areas that should have never been clear-cut. I am not completely opposed to all clear-cutting, but in some places we have clear-cut very sensitive areas, very steep hillsides, so that, afterwards, there is nothing to hold the very thin layer of soil that is on those hills. Then the rains come and the thin layer of soil is washed away and, when further rains come, there is nothing to retain the water so that it can be gradually released to the valley floor. Instead of a gradual release of water, there is a flash flood which, in turn, creates even more erosion, and a beginning of the eroding of the river banks as well.

Each large spruce on the floor of the Carmanah Valley uses hundreds of gallons of water every day. If the rains come down and get washed away immediately, there will not be that gradual release of water for the dry period which occurs even on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Some people say we already have Cathedral Grove so why do we need something like Carmanah Valley. First, Cathedral Grove is fairly small. Second, it is composed of fir trees. I do not think there is anything more magnificent in the world than fir trees. I think they are even more magnificent than spruce. But fir trees are shade intolerant. They do not grow in the shade. They only grow in an area that has been cleared. That is why on Vancouver Island you can trace the growth of fir from the time of large fires. In Cathedral Grove on Vancouver Island the fir trees will eventually die. When they do, they will fall and that will be the end of Cathedral Grove as we know it. But spruce are more tolerant of shade. They will grow as part of a climax forest. That means self-perpetuating.

In the Carmanah we can see spruce in all stages of growth, seedlings taking root in old logs, young saplings, mature trees and old trees ready to die that will soon fall, and the cycle continues. Trees die but the forest lives. If we saved only a few groves of particularly big trees on the valley floor, when they died—this would only be a matter of time—that would be it. We know comparatively little about forests and how trees reproduce themselves. It is important that we preserve a valley like this so we can study how the genetic imprint of trees is passed from one generation to another.

It will take much hard work and much co-operation by all parties affected, by members of all political Parties in this House, both the federal and provincial Governments, MacMillan Bloedel, the IWA, environmental groups and not least by the aboriginal people. I was pleased to see in the motion moved it says that this will be:

> —pending the disposition of any claim by aboriginal peoples of British Columbia to any right, title or interest in or to the lands comprised in the reserve and the establishment of a National Park therein.

It is very important that the aboriginal people, in this case the Nitinaht people, be included. Carmanah, of course, is derived from a Nitinaht word. It is urgent that we take action because logging plans are moving. Logging roads have come right to the head of the valley. And there is an issue of jobs here. People are worried about the loss of jobs in the forest industry. This emphasizes the need for intensive forestry in the areas to be logged so there is a rapid turnover. There are jobs also in the tourist industry.

In conclusion, let me stress the need for the House to move today on this issue and to continue to move. Passing this motion is only the beginning of a negotiation process. We should see the importance of this issue not only to this generation, not only to the people of Vancouver Island but to future generations and to our world. We talk about the destruction of rain forests in other parts of the world. We also have a responsibility to preserve something of our own forests so that future generations can be moved, as the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) was, and as I was when I was able to visit the area. This is one of the heritages given to us by the Creator. We should not allow it to be despoiled.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like for a moment to comment on this matter. We have seen a number of projects come forward. In early times we saw the Tsitika watershed, the Tahsish watershed, Meares Island, Moresby Island and the Carmanah Valley. It is critical to remember that the people who will be displaced out of the logging operations in the Carmanah Valley live in Port Alberni. They are people who will be unable to put food on their tables or pay their mortgages. Compensation is a critical factor to the people who live there.

When the Moresby Island issue went through, loggers were to be compensated, but my understanding is they never got so much as a plane ticket home. Many of those affected are in Port Alice and other areas that I represent. When Meares Island was put into limbo, the Ucleulet operations, the Port Alberni operations were again suspended and there was a reduction of 6,000 people in that area. That community suffered grievously.

There will be more suffering as this project goes ahead. I do not speak against it but I speak for compensation. It must occur. The people in those communities must be supported. The preservation of the environment is a cost of doing business. It is an operating cost of the Government, something not honoured on the West Coast in Ucleulet and Port Alberni, or in the Moresby Island situation. I urge that this cost, which is of benefit to all Canadians, be calculated as a cost to all Canadians not just to the people who live in Port Alberni and Ucleulet.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a quick comment for people listening who might be concerned about the difference between Motion No. 9 and Motion No. 10. It is the Government's position that the passage of Motion No. 9 does include the area under discussion. It would indeed protect the valley. We are turning this area into a park reserve rather than a park.

There could be a problem if Motion No. 10 were accepted that the specificity of the valley itself might make it more difficult in a legislative sense to do some of the work, and the generality of Clause 9 is the Government's preferred option in relation to this. But I think both motions are trying to get at the same result. I just wanted to put that on the record.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak to one of the motions. We are supporting all of them. I want to thank the Government for listening to the people who appeared before the committee and then seeking unanimous consent in this House to allow them to come forward.

The motion I want to speak to is Motion No. 11 which was in the name of the Parliamentary Secretary. That motion will give the Government the ability to establish new national parks in new areas of the country. We have long had a dream in Thunder Bay to protect a range of mountains known as the Nor'westers as a provincial or national park. The committee in its consideration and the Parliamentary Secretary in her wisdom have decided that there is a desire in a least four parts of our country for the establishment of national parks and have provided the tool to the Government to allow that to occur. In Thunder Bay we have talked about it.

Under the master planning process of the Thunder Bay Parks and Recreation Department we have a written desire to move toward the development of a wilderness park known as the Nor'westers encompassing parts of the City of Thunder Bay, parts of Reserve No. 52, and parts of the Township of Neebing. This motion allows the planning to commence. It sets out some rules that would protect the owners of the land, would protect the communities and the interested parties. We have had some controversy in Thunder Bay over this matter. The Parks and Recreation Department went to the city council and said, here is an idea. The department asked for permission to meet with the band council and to meet with the neighbours to the south and west, the neighbouring municipality, to talk about the idea. Unfortunately, one of the city councillors decided he would put out a press release which caused all sorts of bad reactions from those neighbours.

This amendment, on the other hand, ensures that that kind of consultative process will occur. It talks about ensuring that the lands are owned by the Government of Canada, that the Government will not arbitrarily draw a line around a municipality on land owned publicly, whether provincially or municipally.

The Government cannot automatically incorporate private lands and would have to use another process to obtain them before the lands could be declared a national park. The province has to agree that the lands are suitable for a national park or a national marine park, as the case may be.

Then there is a procedure to ensure that people are informed through Gazetting and four weekly ads in local and provincial papers in both official languages and in a language that is deemed appropriate. If it were a park in the far part of northwestern Ontario, for example, Ojibwa may be the appropriate language to advertise in so that the people there could have a chance to review it.

I am quite pleased to support this amendment as well as the others. I think it is an excellent bit of progress for national parks, and I compliment the members of the legislative committee, including the chairman with whom I had discussions about this very matter some time ago, for seeing this change implemented in order to give us the power to create those parks where they are needed and where people want them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motions Nos. 1, 2 and 11 will be voted on separately. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Motion No. 2 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Motion No. 11 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 7 will be voted on separately with the vote being applied to Motion No. 12. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 7 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Motion No. 12 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An affirmative vote on Motion No. 9 will obviate the need to vote on Motion No. 10. A negative vote on Motion No. 9 will necessitate a vote on Motion No. 10.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt Motion No. 9?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 9 (Mrs. Browes) agreed to.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given your ruling and the fact that Motion No. 9 just passed, perhaps I missed something, but now what happens to the amendment to Motion No. 10 and what appeared to be a willingness of the House to adopt the proposal of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman)?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think we gave unanimous consent to the amendment being included as part of Motion No. 10 earlier this day, but the vote on Motion No. 9, following your ruling, obviates the need for a vote on Motion No. 10. It is Motion No. 10 as amended that we are not voting on.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in light of what the Parliamentary Secretary just said, it seems to me that you have to call Motion No. 10 because Motion No. 10 now incorporates Motion No. 9. That is what the Parliamentary Secretary indicated a moment ago. We concur with whatever is required to be done in order to support the motion put by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). It seems to me that you will have to call Motion No. 10.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair knows that everyone is in favour of the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), Motion No. 10. However, because Motion No. 9 amends Clause 5 at the same line as Motion No. 10, Motion No. 10 could not carry. We could not carry both motions. That is why the Chair indicated that if Motion No. 9 carried, the Chair could not put Motion No. 10.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering then if there would be unanimous consent to take the vote on Motion No. 9 again so that we could force a vote on Motion No. 9 and perhaps give time for the Government to consult so that when it comes to the deferred vote on Monday, the Government might have had a change of heart and would actually vote against Motion No. 9.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of progress and getting to another Bill this day, if we simply let things stand and if there are deferred divisions on Monday, there may be consultations and some way of working things out. However, at this point, the Government has indicated that Motion No. 9 is broader and should therefore be the motion which passes, and I think it has been passed.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, for the sake of clarity and brevity, unless you consider the subamendment by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) as a subamendment to Motion No. 9, then you would call that subamendment an amendment to Motion No. 9 and having then incorporated it into Motion No. 9, we will know that we have approved it. Is that acceptable to the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared, with unanimous consent, to set that issue aside and continue on, giving us a chance to consult a little further, if that is agreeable.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will set aside the issue for now.

We will now deal with Motions Nos. 3 and 4 which will be debated together but voted upon separately.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 2 the following:

"(2) Immediately following subsection 3.1(5) of the said Act the following is added:

"3.2.(1) The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, designate a site containing a unique or rare natural feature of phenomenon, or a site of high scientific value and public interest, whose protection is feasible as a Canadian Landmark.

(2) The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, establish criteria for the selection, administration and management of Canadian Landmarks.""

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 2 the following:

"(2) Immediately following subsection 3.1(5) of the said Act the following is added:

"4.(1) The Governor in Council may set apart any land the title to which is vested in Her Majesty, as a National Wilderness Park."

"(2) National Wilderness Parks shall be administered, managed and controlled in a manner consistent with sections 5(9) and 5(10) of this Act, and with preservation of the wilderness character of the Park as the only priority.""

He said: Mr. Speaker, for the sake of brevity, I will explain only that it was Mr. Speaker, in his previous incarnation as Minister of the Environment in 1979, who approved in principle the Canadian Landmarks Program. This motion, therefore, takes into account the establishment of that program, and since authority at the present time does not exist in the present law, it seeks to introduce the powers for Cabinet, on recommendation of the Minister, to introduce the designation of Canadian landmarks in the future National Parks Act. In other words, we are taking one step further following a decision that was made by Mr. Speaker in 1979 by putting it in the Bill.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I too will be brief. I want to indicate my Party's support for Motions Nos. 3 and 4. Clearly, as the Hon. Member has said, it is the next logical step forward and it is regrettable that the Bill was not changed before now.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, with respect to Motions Nos. 3 and 4, the Government agrees that the idea is a good one because we need to define ways to protect unique natural sites, but without the process of prior consultation with the affected communities, as we recognized in Bill C-30 that with respect to the heritage fund there was not enough consultation, the Government will not be accepting this motion.

The motion is also complicated by the fact that it would not provide authority for the Minister to acquire lands for the purpose of landmarks nor for the Governor in Council to establish regulations for their protection and control. Unfortunately, the Government will not be able to support Motion No. 3.

Motion No. 4 is opposed by the Government as to the rationale to focus on the national wilderness park. There is a clause in the Bill which the Government believes will cover that. It was passed unanimously. Therefore, the Government will not be supporting Motion No. 4 either.

• (1340)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 3 in the name of Mr. Caccia.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 4 (Mr. Caccia).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 5 and 13 will be debated together but voted on separately.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 7 to 14 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) The Governor in Council may, by order, amend Schedule III to designate a portion of Banff National Park in the vicinity of Mount Norquay a commercial ski area, but that schedule is not subject to subsequent amendment by the Governor in Council."

That Bill C-30 be amended in Schedule III thereof by adding to the description under Banff National Park immediately after paragraph 1 at page 41 the following:

"(b) The whole of Parcel DD according to Plan 67271 in the Canada Lands Surveys Records at Ottawa, a copy of which is filed in the Land Titles Office for the South Alberta Land Registration District at Calgary under number 8011493, said parcel containing 918 hectares, more or less."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is probably the most controversial aspect of this Bill. Under normal circumstances it would certainly warrant a full intervention in the time made available under the rules. However, I will try to compress it for the sake of moving this Bill ahead.

The issue here is the Sunshine ski areas and the description of its boundaries in the Bill. When the Bill was introduced the Government was committed to define those boundaries in the Bill itself. The reason was simply the fact that there was already a ten-year old commitment to these boundaries as a result of a public planning process which took into account all considerations on the part of all concerned sectors. In other words, the Minister was introducing a Bill with our full concurrence because the boundaries he was proposing were the ones that were arrived at through public consultation and it was a good idea to have those boundaries entrenched in the legislation. Unfortunately, the Bill was held up for almost 16 months, I understand because of opposition from members of the Alberta Progressive Conservative caucus who forced the Minister, so to speak, to retreat on this subject.

What we are doing with these two amendments is to bring back into the Bill what the Minister had in the Bill at second reading when it was debated in this House. It is extremely disappointing to see that the Minister could not defend his own Bill in committee. The Parliamentary Secretary also gave in. What we are doing here is putting some starch back into his collar and some courage in his position by urging the Government to stick to the wording of the Bill on second reading so that it will contain the boundaries of Sunshine Ski Village.

We could go over a phenomenal amount of documentation submitted to us in committee on this matter, quite a number of press clippings that would make the debate very juicy and interesting. However, the fact is that while on the first occasion when the Bill was introduced the Government was determined to define these boundaries, we now find ourselves at report stage facing a retreat on the part of the Minister in particular. As I say, the purpose of these amendments is to bring back into the Bill the definition of this ski village so it is well determined, defined clearly, and not allowed to expand into the national park in a manner that would be out of control.

I commend these two motions to the consideration of my colleagues in this House today and I thank you for your consideration.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, just briefly, I want to indicate that we support these two motions. I have always made the argument that when we have matters of environmental concern, particularly concerning parks under federal jurisdiction, we should try to ensure that the same kind of approach necessary at a municipal or provincial level through the planning act is adhered to. In this case the only way to do that is by fixing the boundaries of Sunshine Village ski area in legislation, so if someone in the backroom decides to redraw the boundaries to expand it or contract it, they cannot do it. It would have to be an Act of Parliament, and therefore the residents of the area will have a chance to put pressure on the Government, rather than a lobby group.

I just wanted to add those comments and say we support the amendments.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, those two motions would overturn a subamendment to a government motion which was voted on and passed by the legislative committee. I would like to add that the Minister has been consistent and emphatic that the boundaries of commercial ski areas within the parks must be legislated. He further insists that no new commercial ski areas are to be established within national parks. We therefore have a Bill that will clearly and explicitly transform these policies into legislation.

The Minister has not made a final decision on the boundary matter, nor has his Department. That will be made following completion of the environmental assessment and further public consultation. Then, and only then, will the Sunshine Village ski area boundary be legislated. Therefore, the Government will not be supporting these two motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5 in the name of Mr. Caccia.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is now on Motion No. 13 in the name of Mr. Caccia.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

We will now deal with Motions Nos. 6 and 8, which will be grouped for debate and voted on separately.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 14 at page 12 the following:

"10. Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada under section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, or any rights conferred by land claim settlement with aboriginal peoples within a National Park."

Mr. Angus (for Ms. McLaughlin) moved:

Motion No. 8:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 13 by adding immediately after line 42 at page 13 the following:

"(2) Nothing in this Act or the National Parks Act in any way derogates from or abrogates the aboriginal and treaty rights that are already constitutionally recognized in subsection 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982."

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important motion because it will determine the capacity of this Bill, once proclaimed, to function and not be stopped by very understandable and justifiable court challenges.

I will explain briefly what it is all about. It has to do with aboriginal rights and in legal terms is called the non-derogation clause. The matter was first brought to our attention by the witness from the Tungavik Federation of the Nunavut who made the point that there is in this Bill a potential conflict between the proposed amendments to the National Parks Act and Section 35 of the Constitution of Canada.

This observation by witnesses was supported and reinforced by several other witnesses, including the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society and the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance. Professor Morse of the Ottawa University Law School pointed out that the conflict was not only limited to the matter of traditional subsistence, which had by that time been dropped, but applied as well to the issue of aboriginal rights as envisaged in our Constitution. Professor Morse pointed out that Section 6(1) of the National Parks Act could also conflict with Section 35 of our Constitution.

This amendment is taken word for word from the Petroleum Resources Act which was passed in the first session of this Parliament which the Government must be fully familiar with and, hopefully, supportive of.

In conclusion, this amendment is intended to avoid conflict between the National Parks Act and our Constitution as it concerns our aboriginal people. For that reason, and for the functioning of the law in the future, we sincerely hope that it will be accepted by the Government.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly in support of the motions of the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). We must ensure that this kind of override is contained in the Bill.

A few minutes ago I spoke about Motion No. 11, which was passed, which provides for the potential development of a national park in the district of Thunder Bay in the Province of Ontario. Within that district, and in fact within the candidate park about which I spoke, the Nor'westers, there is reserve No. 52. While there is not necessarily an outstanding land claim in process, a determination may at some point in time when research is completed be made, first, to start a land claim and, second, be settled. That may have some bearing on a future national park.

We must assure aboriginal peoples who have treaty rights that nothing in this Act will force them to give up something which is their due. I encourage support for both amendments, realizing the ruling you have made.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this motion relates to traditional subsistence activities which the committee discussed long and clearly with regard to hunting, fishing, and trapping. The committee, in fact, passed unanimously some changes to the Bill at that stage.

However, Section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982, provides that the existing aboriginal and treaty rights of Canada's aboriginal peoples are recognized and affirmed. Furthermore, Section 35(3) makes it clear that rights under existing and future land claim agreements have the same protection as other treaty rights.

It is felt, therefore, that the insertion of what is called a non-derogation clause into the National Parks Act at this point in time is not necessary given the overriding constitutional protection for native rights. The Government, therefore, will not be supporting these motions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: An affirmative vote on Motion No. 6 will obviate the need to vote on Motion No. 8. However, a negative vote on Motion No. 6 will necessitate a vote on Motion No. 8.

The question is on Motion No. 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded divisions on the motions stand deferred.

Normally at this time the House would proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions at the report stage of the Bill now before the House. However, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 13(5), the recorded divisions will stand deferred until six o'clock on Monday, July 18, 1988.

INDIAN LANDS AGREEMENT (1986) ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-73, an Act to provide for the implementation of an agreement respecting Indian Lands in Ontario, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Maurice Foster (for Mr. Penner) moved:

That Bill C-73 be amended by adding immediately after line 8 at page 2 the following:

"7. Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms of Indian people in Ontario."

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions among the Parties and with the private Member whose motion is scheduled to be debated at two o'clock. I think you will find a general predisposition to move through report stage, and perhaps even third reading stage, of this Bill prior to seeing the clock at two o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-73 provides a framework for negotiation between the federal and provincial Governments to implement the provisions of the 1986 Ontario-Canada Indian Land Agreement. This is an extremely important piece of legislation for 16 bands in Ontario.

One of the most important claims is that made by the Manitoulin bands which involves unsold surrendered lands of some 90,000 acres. The bands involved are the Sheguiandah, Sheshegwaning, Sucker Creek, West Bay, Wikwemikong, and Whitefish River. The bands in the North Channel area of Batchewana, Thessalon and Serpent River are also affected by this agreement. There are also other bands, such as the Garden River Band, which are affected.

The amendment provides that the provincial Government interests in these unsold surrendered lands would be able to be turned over, by a specific agreement, to the bands concerned. We are told that some $4.3 million is presently held in trust by the federal Government for the province in royalties.

More important, at second reading the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) indicated that funding would be provided for these bands to negotiate these agreements and finally get these Indian land claims settled. No one has any illusions that this will happen in a few months or even a few years, but at least we are putting in place a framework with the legislative authority to carry this out. I am especially concerned about the Manitoulin and those in the North Channel area because those negotiations have been under way for years and years. This will provide a legal framework.

Most bands and Indian associations in the province support this agreement which provides for opting in, that is, negotiations are not automatically required. It is simply a framework agreement which gives bands the opportunity to opt in. Those bands which are not involved in the 1924 Indian land agreement are concerned that there might be some impact of this 1986 agreement.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), proposes in his motion that:

Nothing in this Act shall be construed so as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms of Indian people in Ontario.

There are bands like those in Treaty III and the members of the Association of Iroquois and Allied Indians who are very concerned that even though their bands are not directly involved, the precedent set by the negotiations between the federal and provincial Governments and the bands involved might have some impact on their future rights with regard to their treaties.

This is a non-derogation amendment. There are precedents for this kind of non-derogation clause. It does not in any way affect their treaty or aboriginal rights and freedoms.

We had hoped the Government would have introduced one of its own amendments, but I understand it will not do so. If this amendment is adopted by the Government, we believe it would satisfy the concerns of a number of bands who appeared before the legislative committee.

It is difficult to overestimate the importance of this agreement to those five bands in the Manitoulin Islands district who have been negotiating for many years. They have almost 90,000 acres of unsold surrendered lands on which the province has a claim because of the 1924 agreement. They want to get on with the settlement of those claims.

The Minister has made a commitment that he will provide the additional funding required for any research, especially for the negotiations that will take place under the framework of the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement.

I hope the Government will give further consideration to the acceptance of our non-derogation clause, but the Bill will ultimately be passed so that the economic benefits will flow to literally dozens of bands in Ontario for the betterment and improvement of the economic lot of the bands and communities concerned.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, we support the amendment. There is a need to ensure that there is final protection and that nothing in Bill C-73, an Act to provide for the implementation of an agreement respecting Indian lands in Ontario, be construed as to abrogate or derogate from any aboriginal, treaty or other rights or freedoms of Indian people in Ontario.

We support that amendment and we will support the Bill at third reading.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, we have given serious consideration to this proposed amendment but we feel that given the nature of the Bill and its wording it is not necessary.

The concern that has been raised by both Hon. Members stems from representations made by concerned Indians who will be affected by this Bill. When asked for specific examples of potential conflict between Indian rights and the agreement, none were brought forward. It is dubious at best to include a general clause in the legislation where there is no specific problem to be addressed. By doing so, we would run the risk of frustrating the over-all intent of Bill C-73.

There is concern that a broad clause protecting all treaty and other rights of the Indian people of Ontario could be at odds with the terms of negotiated specific agreements. For instance, a specific agreement could provide that unsold surrendered lands now being used as municipal streets, provincial highways or other public installations, which have been occupied by non-Indians for many years, would remain as such but Indian bands would in return be adequately compensated. It is the case in this example that the rights of Indian bands to these lands come into conflict with the terms of the specific agreement. It is because of this potential conflict that we did not consider it wise to include such a general provision regarding the protection of Indian rights.

This is not to say that the agreement does not concern itself with, and that we are not concerned with, the protection of Indian rights. First, it is the case that an Indian band involved in negotiations for the purpose of arriving at a specific agreement must be satisfied that the deal is acceptable and does not unduly compromise its rights. They have that protection.

Second, several provisions of the agreement expressly state that Indian rights are not to be compromised. In particular, I want to refer to Clauses 5 and 6 of the agreement which stipulate that neither the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement nor any specific agreement negotiated thereunder will affect the validity of any treaty or surrender, and that no federal-provincial agreement concerning any letters patent will affect any rights or the recourse that any band may have against any person or lands, including the Crown or Crown lands. Furthermore, in response to the concerns that the Bill could adversely affect lands that do not enter into specific agreements, Clause 12 of the agreement states as well that the specific agreement will affect any band unless that band confirms that particular specific agreement.

I believe the concerns expressed by the Members are fully addressed in the Bill itself. Furthermore, is it necessary to state that aboriginal rights are protected by the Constitution of this country?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

Motion (Mr. Penner) negatived.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the Bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Valcourt (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, we have made amazing progress in the last 24 hours. We have passed seven Bills through a variety of stages.

Perhaps a representative of the Government could give us an indication of what we will be doing on Monday and whether we can go home on Tuesday?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Senate has more Bills before it than we have before the House of Commons.

On Monday, I believe, we will begin dealing with the ACOA Bill that has been reported back to the House by the Senate. It is my understanding that the debate on Monday will commence on our message to the Senate about their behaviour in the other place.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am rising as the communications critic for our Party. I understand that my hon. friend's Party was able to get 100 telephones installed at their campaign headquarters. Given that information, I wonder whether the House of Commons will be sitting on Tuesday?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am not sure it is a relevant question, but the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: I heard conversation in the lobby today about the difficulty in getting telephones for a number of people who intend to run again. It has been suggested it may take six weeks, a fair portion of an election campaign. I want to thank our Party activists who have had such foresight to make those orders such a long time ago that we are prepared for every eventuality.

• (1410)

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Assistant to the Deputy House Leader indicated that ACOA would be up, but could he give us an idea of what other legislation is on line? There is nothing under Government Orders that is obviously going to come forward.

Mr. Hawkes: I think, Mr. Speaker, that you can expect all the projected kinds of things. We do have a lot of votes at six o'clock on Monday. There seems to be a predisposition in the case of some of those Bills to move immediately after the votes, perhaps, to the third reading stage so they could go on to the Senate as well.

We have made commitments to members of the opposition Party to make sure that the ACOA discussion is still alive after Question Period on Monday, so I think that will take us very close to the votes and there will be negotiations on the Order, I think, throughout the day on Monday, if that is agreeable.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

CULTURE

SUGGESTED REVIEW OF CULTURAL ASSISTANCE POLICIES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of undertaking a review of its cultural assistance policies with regard to the funding of semi-professional and amateur organizations that are exemplary of Canadian culture but which are ineligible for any federal assistance program under the current criteria.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to debate this Private Member's Motion, M-171, today in the House of Commons. As you, Mr. Speaker, have just advised the House of the content and substance of the motion, I will not take the time of the House to read through it once again. As Hon. Members will note, M-171 calls upon the federal Government to reassess its cultural assistance policies dealing with semi-professional and amateur organizations.

I have been a member of this place long enough to know that doubtless there are some here who would say that the federal Government cannot afford to fund every group that comes knocking with tin cup in hand. In case there are any of those Hon. Members in the House, I would ask that they hear my arguments and decide for themselves whether Motion M-171 is worthy.

The introduction and debate of this motion is really the culmination of a long chain of events that began back in 1983. I will elaborate on this in a moment or two. Naturally, when I undertook this project and began to look into the programs and funding available to amateur groups through the federal Government, I also did some research into federal initiatives for funding for similar professional groups and amateur sports. I should say that Canada should be very proud of its commitment to both our professional artists and to our young athletes.

The year 1987 marked the thirtieth anniversary of the Canada Council which was set up by an Act of Parliament in 1957 to "foster and promote the study and enjoyment of and the production of works in the Arts". That quotation comes from the object of the Canada Council Act. This Government increased the 1987 budget for the Canada Council to $98 million, a $5 million increase from the previous year. The Government has indeed demonstrated by its actions a deep commitment to fostering the arts.

In 1986-87, the Canada Council administered 100 programs and some 4,000 grants. This contribution to the development of the arts in Canada is significant and the Canada Council should be applauded by every Member of the House, and indeed, every Canadian, for its undeniable contribution. It is very difficult indeed to find fault or criticize the way in which Canada treats its professional artists. Like all things, however, those who are professional today were once children or young adults aspiring to be artists, musicians, writers and so on. At some point in their careers, these artists were once amateurs who, I am sure, found it very difficult to gain recognition, let alone be taken seriously as an artist.

I mention the professional artists in arguing for support for this motion because I think it is very important to note that Canada is very supportive of the arts as a profession. However, there is a void in our support for young people who wish to participate in an art form. By way of example I will explain my motivation behind introducing Bill C-171.

Cultural Assistance Policies

I have been contacted on a regular basis since early 1983 by the Hillsborough Girls Choir. Hillsborough is a small village in my constituency of Fundy—Royal. This choir, while it is considered to be an amateur choir, has performed all over the world and has proudly represented this country on many occasions. Apart from its local performing schedule, which is very extensive for an amateur group, the choir has performed across Canada in competitions and workshops. It performed for the Governor General in 1981 and for Prince Charles and Princess Diana in 1983. The Hillsborough Choir recorded an album in 1982 and on several occasions it has performed on both radio and television.

The choir's visit to Wales also in 1983 was the subject of a documentary produced by the New Brunswick Department of Education. This was broadcast locally as well as in the public network in Maine. The Hillsborough Choir has, to its credit, an impressive and extensive list of both national and international awards.

Besides the various things I have mentioned, I think it is important to know that the school choir was honoured by an invitation to the World Music Congress in Oregon back in 1984. It was at the opening ceremonies of the Canadian Music Educators' Conference in Sackville, New Brunswick, in May of 1983. It has been on two consecutive occasions the winner of the Leslie Bell Choral Award, both in 1981 and 1983, for the most outstanding choral performance. It has as well attended international competitions in Wales, as I previously mentioned, in 1983.

All one has to do is to look at what the Hillsborough Choir has accomplished since it was established in 1979 to admit that these so-called amateurs are just not simply a bunch of girls from Hillsborough, New Brunswick. This group has made a significant contribution to Canadian culture. The choir and its director, Mrs. Ruth Schiller, has displayed a dedication and professionalism which is, I believe, unprecedented for a school-based amateur choir. These are only a few of the reasons I have introduced this motion.

I find it particularly disturbing that the Hillsborough Girls Choir has been treated with, I must say reluctantly, such a small amount of respect by the federal Government. The choir has never once received any form of assistance from the Government, either the previous Government or the present Government, to pursue its goals. I have tried over the years to secure even the smallest amount of financial aid for the choir and every time, for one reason or another, I have run up against a stone wall. The federal Government policy simply does not support or endorse groups like the Hillsborough Girls Choir who ably represent Canada around the world.

I understand that the federal Government cannot become involved with funding every single amateur choir or organization that springs up. I am not suggesting that. I am, however, suggesting that organizations that are deserving of federal assistance should have it made available to them by some means. What is most perplexing about federal government policy in the field of cultural assistance funding is the fact that there are amateur choirs, groups and organizations, which are actually receiving funding from the federal Government. Unfortunately, this funding is only available to groups that are considered multicultural. I find this a little unfair. Indeed, Canada is a multicultural nation, a fact we should be and have been promoting for many years. But there are a lot of people all over Canada who are losing out because their group or organization does not conform to the criteria for consideration under the multicultural guidelines. Many people simply do not understand why one group may be funded while another is not.

Members of the public often do not differentiate between one federal program or another. They see that the grants come from the federal Government and when one group appears to be favoured over another, the public has the impression that the federal Government is biased in its distribution of funds. This might not be the case but, certainly, the public perception in my riding tends toward precisely such a view.

As an example, the constituents who have contacted me quote the case of the Hillsborough Girls Choir, arguing that the group performs in both official languages of Canada and five other languages representative of a small part of Canada's diverse ethnocultural background. The choir itself is not a Ukrainian choir, or a Chinese choir, or an Acadian choir, nor does it purposely reflect any other visible minority group but, rather, it is representative of our unique "Canadian culture", and Canada's diverse ethnic and cultural roots through music and the languages in which they perform. Some of the group's repertoire has been composed in Canada by Canadians. This is Canadian culture. This is, to quote a popular phrase, "Canada's unique cultural identity".

The second point of contention I have with the present government policy is in its support of the performing arts. When the case of the Hillsborough Girls Choir was again brought to my attention in September of 1987 I wrote to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). I would now like to take a moment to read from the reply. It says:

> I fully recognize the meritorious achievements of the Hillsborough Girls Choir over the years and I am sympathetic to its needs. However, I must advise you that the cultural initiatives program administered by my Department is designed to assist the professional artist. Policy discussions took place in the fall of 1986 concerning the funding of amateur organizations between interested Departments and agencies at the federal level. Due to the number of projects submitted by professional organizations and limited financial resources, it was decided that the federal cultural bodies could not commit themselves to fund amateur groups.

I must reiterate that I do not believe that it is possible for the federal Government to fund all amateur groups such as the Hillsborough Girls Choir. I am merely advocating that some of the federal money spent to promote the performing arts should be going to encourage the development of young performers by sponsoring amateur or semi-professional groups, such as the Hillsborough Girls Choir, which do not have access to the sponsorships and endowment funds more readily available to professional people.

Also, in the reply from the Minister she commented on the number of applications being submitted by professionals for consideration for funding. My first reaction to that particular statement was of shock and surprise. To such a comment I reply that certain amateur groups are as deserving of our support as the professionals, and that these groups should be considered under different criteria from that of professionals. What we need is a separate program from those which currently exist, similar to our support of Canada's various ethnic cultures through the policy of multiculturalism and the recent legislation passed in the House.

For a nation struggling to make its cultural mark in the world, Canada has in my opinion taken a rather narrow view. I am not saying that professional performers should be cut off because it is well known that carving a living out of the performing arts is a struggle. However, we must not, through our ignorance or devotion to a policy that has worked well, deny our young performers, who may very well be Canada's professionals of tomorrow, the opportunity of experiencing this profession firsthand. Of course, there must be specifications, rules and guidelines, but there also has to be a willingness to support the very serious and dedicated amateur performing artists.

In this respect I refer to Canada's policy toward the promotion of fitness and amateur sports. Again, Canada and Canadians should be very pleased with the commitment that the federal Government has made in this area. Under the Ministry of Fitness and Amateur Sports there are two divisions known as Fitness Canada and Sport Canada. Both of these federal government organizations are well equipped, amply funded, and have been given the policy direction to achieve very commendable goals. All one has to do to recognize this fact is to take a look at the success of the recent Olympic Winter Games in Calgary. The co-ordinated efforts of the federal government Department have produced world-class amateur Canadian athletes.

It is precisely this type of commitment that is required for our amateur or, more appropriately, semi-professional performing arts groups. I strongly advocate a further review of federal policy in this area. I am not saying that we deprive one area for the sake of another, but simply that we redirect our efforts and resources to accommodate a most deserving and worth-while part of Canada's expanding culture.

Motion M-171 simply asks the Government to take another look. One way of addressing this matter might be to establish a special task force or committee comprising representatives from Parliament, Government and the public to look into this matter with the purpose of making a constructive policy change. No matter how the issue is addressed, such an undertaking will require much thought and dialogue before any solution can be found.

It is time that we, the legislators of the country, give this issue some serious thought toward positive action. I urge my colleagues on both sides of the House to lend their support to Motion M-171.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to comment on the motion of the Hon. Member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Corbett). I thank him for bringing this matter to the attention of the House and for his thoughtful remarks this afternoon. It is certainly evident that he is committed to the arts in Canada in their many forms of expression.

I would like to take a few minutes to clarify for the House what I think some of the principles, some of the notions inherent in the question the Hon. Member has put to the House, are. Some of the questions I will address are the following. For example, what is professional? What is semi-professional? What is amateur? What are our expectations as Canadians?

In reading The Ottawa Citizen several weeks ago I came across three reviews, three opportunities for Canadians to understand and even attend live theatre experiences. The first play, The Jester and the Queen, was performed at the National Arts Centre in the Studio. It featured an international company from Czechoslovakia which performed six days in English and three days in French.

The second play Stealing Home, was performed by a professional Canadian theatre company in a tent on the grounds of the Victoria Museum here in Ottawa. Performing in the Ottawa-Hull Children's Festival, of which I had the honour of being a director for a number of years, this Caravan Stage Production has a cast, according to The Ottawa Citizen reviewer that is an "accomplished group", able to handle their many roles and musical numbers well", but adds that "at times the production strikes controversial chords . . . and comes with a parental guidance rating". In both cases our expectations are high, and we recognize the professional techniques of trained performers.

The third play, a very well known one, The Miracle Worker, was performed in a new theatre here in the National Capital Region by an amateur theatre company, Nepean Little Theatre, in the newly constructed professional facility in Nepean, the Centrepointe Theatre, at the new City Hall in the City of Nepean. It is a building, I might add, and a theatre, built entirely with municipal, provincial and private sector funding, and not with one federal dollar. I will come back to this point later in my remarks. The Ottawa Citizen said that the actress playing Annie "gives the play a most convincing, subtle and rounded performance" and that the whole production is a "mostly successful one".

All three plays, the international professional, the national professional, and the regional or local amateur, are given equal play in the newspaper of the nation's capital, and the fact that such a wide range of theatre experience is available to audiences is very important.

My point is that the issue is a complex one. A thriving arts scene requires the participation of amateurs, semi-professional—which I have always understood to mean "pre-professional'—and professional. Sometimes it is difficult to differentiate between them.

Let us talk for a moment about professional employment in the cultural sector. The term "professional" signifies full time employment at a high salary after a significant level of training and experience.

Does that mean that the Montreal, Toronto, or Vancouver actor who is between plays and television commercials and finds work as a waiter is not a professional actor? Is "professional" defined as earning the wages of a doctor or a lawyer which are classified as professions by employment agencies?

A principal dancer in the National Ballet of Canada, and we are talking about household names here, in 1984 earned $573 a week, or approximately $30,000 per year, before deductions for rehearsal clothing, ballet shoes, and so on. Is the principal dancer of Canada's largest ballet company any less professional than the physicians of this country, especially after equal years of training and professional performance experience?

In the 1984 study: What Jobs Pay, by Paul Anisef and Etta Baichman, some very interesting statistics underline the point that, in the cultural sector, salaries are not reflective of professional training and experience in Canada, unlike our neighbour to the south where movie stars like "Rambo" Stallone are rumoured to make $20 million for one violent picture. In the report it states:

> Of the 5,963 paid-up members in Actor's Equity, only 25 to 28 per cent are usually working at any given time. Only 15 per cent of ACTRA's 6,800 members (including actors and writers) are fully occupied in the profession. In March, 1983, 54.7 per cent of ACTRA members earned less than $3,900, 73.9 per cent earned less than $8,000.

In an average first year with Canada's major ballet company, a dancer earned a minimum of $311 a week. The minimum weekly salary for opera singers performing in town, with our largest company, the Canadian Opera Company, was $421 a week. The average annual income of dancers with modern dance companies in 1980-81 was only $6,000. Certainly, in recent years there have been some slight improvements to keep up with inflation, but the net disposable income has not increased.

One last example. Recently, a visual artist visited the Department of Communications and indicated that she had sold almost $60,000 worth of work in the last fiscal year, but her take home pay after deducting the costs for studio and supplies was only $6,000. What physician or any other professional would stand for that?

In other words, in spite of subsidy, because of the volume potential in the Canadian market-place, because of low ticket prices and fees for service, because less than 10 per cent of Canadian businesses give to the arts, the word "professional" in the arts means paid somewhat, some of the time. This country has a lot more work to do here, and the Government is committed to help in this area.

What about semi-professionals? What do they earn? Or have they decided that, by choosing to be semi-professional, they can balance their regular income from more regular sources with the opportunity to express their creativity on a frequent part-time basis? Are they really apprentices, artists in training, not yet trained sufficiently to be able to earn full-time work?

Finally, what does amateur mean? It does not mean poor quality, that is clear. To me, amateur means joy, the joy that comes from volunteering one's time and talent, a passion for self-expression strong enough to compel participation.

Amateur cultural organizations are essentially volunteer organizations. The actress in a local amateur production may some day decide to work semi-professionally, but today she is volunteering in order to be able to participate in the performing arts and to experience the thrill of a live audience. Occasionally, there is a live audience in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, but it does not look as though we had one this afternoon!

Cultural activity is supported by all levels of government, some better than others. Traditionally, the federal Government has supported primarily, although not exclusively, the professional sector, as the Hon. Member pointed out. Through our support to cultural agencies such as Telefilm, the Canada Council, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to museums and galleries across the country, and through the many programs sponsored by government Departments, we provide close to $2 billion a year in support of our nation's culture—$2 billion is a significant sum of money.

We accept our role because of the value we place on Canadian culture. We encourage other players, particularly the private sector, to increase their participation and join us in promoting the development of the arts in Canada at both the amateur and professional levels.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to speak on this motion. It is a very interesting motion and I congratulate the Hon. Member for putting it forward, and for taking us away from the general to talk about a specific issue which is getting funding for the Hillsborough Girls Choir. As the communications critic for my Party I learned something in listening to the Hon. Member's speech on how he attempted to get funding for what is no doubt a very good cause.

Today I had a meeting with a young man who works for a band called L'Insolite. In English it means "unexpected". It is a drum and bugle corps band from St. Jérôme, Québec. It is a world-class band just like the Hillsborough Girls Choir. The band has 65 youths age 13 to 21. In addition, the band has 20 young instructors who are not paid, and another 15 people who volunteer their time as organizers. That is approximately 100 people associated with this cultural endeavour, this band from St. Jérôme, Québec. I talked to Mr. Norman Lalonde who works with the band. He is from St. Jérôme. He told me how the band raises money. For example, a few weeks ago on a Saturday it had a benefit day and raised money from approximately 3,000 towns people who came to this fund-raising occasion. I guess the Hillsborough Girls Choir raises money in a similar manner.

I may add that Mr. Bill Clay, the New Democratic Party's candidate for Laurentides and, I hope, the new Member for Laurentides after the next election, introduced me to Mr. Normand Lalonde . . .

[English]

I am grateful to him for that introduction so that I could learn a little about the local band, and today I also learned a little from the Hon. Member from Nova Scotia who talked about his problem. I wish to deal with some of the remarks in his speech. Let me try to distil his speech down and he can correct me if I am wrong. What he is basically saying is that if you go for cultural funding in Canada you can only get it from the cultural initiatives program if you are a professional group. You cannot get it if you are amateur. If you are multicultural, you might be able to get the money from the multicultural program. If you are not multicultural, then forget it, you are not going to get it from that program.

He also said in his speech, I think, if you are a professional or amateur athlete, you can get funds. So amateur athletes get funding but amateur cultural initiatives do not get funding. I see what the Member was saying.

It is very interesting to note that the Member seems to support—and I agree with him—state initiatives and financing for the athletic sector, which, in his words, "produce class amateur athletes". If I might say so, as a socialist, it is good use of the state's power and money to produce a good in the end. I am glad that the Hon. Member agreed with that principle. He does not always agree with those particular principles and neither does his Party.

Let us talk a little bit about getting funding for cultural programs. I have also run into this with respect to professional groups from Vancouver, specifically a program called "The May Works" which is a cultural festival that is put in on May Day in Vancouver to celebrate with theatre, musical performances and so on. It is a workers' day, a May Day. We did get some money from the cultural program, the initiatives program, and I am very grateful that we got it. I think it was about $7,000.

I will tell the Hon. Member what I found out in pursuing that grant. There are two funds; the Canada Council and the cultural initiatives program. The cultural initiatives program gives about $17 million, I believe, in funds. I am talking off the top of my head but I believe these figures are right. I was told by people who are administering the fund, when I tried to get money from them, that in fact they have about $100 million in applications. So there is quite a big demand out there, and there are limited resources. It is a profession, and I agree that they do fund professional groups.

We should look at this situation in the light of why we have a Canada Council and why we have a cultural initiative fund. As to why we have both, as far as I could determine, the Canada Council gave money equally to groups across the country. I am not sure I could say the same thing, although this is disputed, for the local initiatives fund. It is very open to being a political slush fund, where the Ministers can deal out grants.

We had evidence with the previous Minister that there was some mal-distribution, if you like, where some areas of the country got more than others. So I say that it is right in the sense that we have to look at the role of those two funds. Why do we have those two funds? Should we only have one fund, a Canada Council rather than a special initiatives fund? Could the Canada Council administrate that? Why should the Minister's office administer it? We should look into all of that.

The second thing we should look into is, should the fund, whether it is Canada Council or the cultural initiatives fund, or both funds, be giving money to amateurs as well as professionals? That is a good question, and I am not sure that I have the full answer for that. One of the problems that the amateur cultural initiatives have in getting funds is that they used to be able to get money from the federal Government. There used to be lots of money in the federal Government because the federal Government had the lottery funds.

I think in 1979 the Conservative Government gave over the money from the lotteries to the provinces. We might want to have another look to see whether we can get some of that back. Are the provinces funding properly? The band in St. Jérôme were saying that they were having difficulty getting money from the province. Are the provinces using these lottery funds in the way that they are supposed to be using them? Are they just using them for sports and not for cultural initiatives? It follows from what the Member raised that we should look into that as well. So we should look into why there are two funds, should it fund amateur as well as professional, and what is the role of the provinces in terms of lottery funds and money that has been turned over to them?

Now, with respect to multicultural aspects, I would not want to say to those groups, "We are going to cut you off because you are getting an advantage that the others are not getting". I would prefer to put the multicultural aspect out here, if you like, to separate it, and to say, "We do need funding for multicultural groups", and that may include cultural funding, like a Ukrainian choir, a Sikh dance group and so on. I believe that there have been grants—you might correct me if I am wrong—I hope that there have been grants in the multiculturalism area. I trust that the Member is saying that. We would have to check with the multicultural people and take a look at their grants to see whether they have in fact given the cultural institutions. I think that they pursue different criteria, a multiculturalism approach. I would not want to end that because some other group was not getting it. I would prefer, in the case of the Hillsborough Girls Choir, to expand the funding in other initiatives.

If the Member is making the point that cultural institutions are equal to sports, then I think he is right concerning that. I do not think he can say that there should be funding for amateur sports and no funding for amateur cultural institutions. In some ways they are all part of Canadian culture, in a broad definition of culture.

The NDP, my Party, and I hope the Hon. Member, believe in a broad definition of culture, a culture for the people and not just for a few elite groups. The Member for Ottawa made some comments, as well as the Member from Nova Scotia, about the Government's deep commitment to helping the arts. I have two criticisms here that I want the Hon. Member to consider. The Government has underfunded the CBC and in fact politicized the boards of the arts, organizations like Jean Sirois and Telefilm and some of the other bad political appointments. I will finish by saying that the Hon. Member's point was well taken and worth considering and studying. I want to broaden the study to look at the things that I suggested, and I hope that the Hillsborough Girls Choir can continue to represent Canada both here and abroad and that the L'Insolite band from St. Jérôme can represent St. Jérôme, Québec, and Canada abroad just as successfully as before. I hope that we can find some additional funds for them and for the people that help them.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House today and respond to the comments of the Hon. Member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Corbett) concerning the Government's funding of various Canadian cultural groups.

In fact, this gives me an opportunity to focus on a vital aspect of one of our Departments, and I am referring to the Department of the Secretary of State. And speaking of the Department of the Secretary of State, I think I should say that the new incumbent is someone of immense value both to Quebec and to Canada. He has great credibility in Quebec and the other Canadian provinces, and even internationally. Mr. Speaker, I know to what extent the Department of the Secretary of State . . .

Mr. Waddell: Wait and see!

Mr. Champagne: I know it hurts the NDP to realize that intelligent people, men of integrity and especially men of this stature, come to us instead of to their party. In fact, Mr. Speaker, in politics, intelligent people generally opt for parties that are doers, not dreamers. I think this was borne out by the election in Lac-Saint-Jean, and the Hon. Member should listen instead of making remarks.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the fact that the Department of the Secretary of State is a very important department, and that also extends to the riding level, in Champlain, among my constituents. The Department is very much involved in promoting the status of women and in helping and promoting the status of the disabled, and since the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Funday Royal is about multiculturalism, it is a Department that covers a host of different aspects and facets since it promotes the linguistic duality of this country.

This Department already offers many support programs for professional and semi-professional groups and tries to respond to their needs. The Department also encourages our cultural agencies such as the Canada Council to be more receptive to the needs of groups and performers in the multicultural sphere.

Mr. Speaker, in its structure, its range of activities and its staff, the Department of the Secretary of State reflects the regional, linguistic and cultural realities of this country. Many of its activities complement those of other departments. However, the Department plays a distinctive and important role within the Government in that it defends the interests of our socio-cultural communities.

In other words, its mission is to contribute to enhancing our national identity and to preserving the cultural heritage of all Canadians. It would be impossible for me to describe or even to touch on all the aspects of the programs offered by the Department of the Secretary of State in the areas of literature, visual arts, and the performing arts. But these areas are an inherent part of several large programs of the Department of the Secretary of State.

All those involved in the Multiculturalism Program, the Status of Disabled Persons Secretariat, the Women's Program, and the Native Citizens Directorate are firmly committed to promoting the interests of the groups that concern them. Literature, visual arts, and performing arts make up an important part of their activities in this regard. For instance, Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister responsible for Multiculturalism wants to ensure that all Canadian men and women will have the opportunity of participating fully in our national life.

The Minister strives to help them preserve their cultural and linguistic heritage. He is thus the advocate of multiculturalism within the federal Government and with the support of the Department he administers a wide array of national and regional programs. The Multiculturalism Program provides technical and financial assistance to hundreds of volunteer community groups and to the heads of various specific projects that are seeking to bring about a better understanding and a greater appreciation of Canada's cultural diversity.

The Program has for a long time provided considerable resources to the publication of literary works and to the visual and performing arts.

In 1986-87, the Multiculturalism Program provided more than a million dollars to assist 161 projects to publish literary works, and more than $2.2 million for 243 projects in the visual and performing arts.

Grants are available as well in the dramatic arts field, to those who wish to create or produce plays or to hold workshops. For instance, the Secretary of State recently subsidized the production of a play entitled The New Canadian Kid that explores the integration of immigrant children into Canadian society, and the production of a play entitled Skin, performed during the Children's Festival in Vancouver.

In the areas of film and audio-visual productions, grants are awarded to encourage development, scriptwriting and production. For instance, the Department of the Secretary of State contributed to the presentation of a program of multicultural films in repertory cinemas throughout Canada and sponsored a part of the Toronto Film Festival called Cultures in Conflict. It also provided financial assistance for the production of a T.V. series entitled Inside Stories, which probed the lives of ethnic communities in Toronto. The scripts are the work of writers who live in these communities.

Furthermore, the Secretary of State provides funds for folk art organizations and for the training of artists. Those funds are also available to amateurs, both organizations and individuals. They are also used to finance the translation into English and French of Canadian literary works written in foreign languages.

Also worthy of mention, Mr. Speaker, are the funds provided to community and amateur theatre groups and to various special activities. The latter are extremely varied and include the following, for instance:

The Canadian Heritage Festival, an annual event of national scope that is held in a different province from year to year;

A heritage festival organized by the Moncton Multicultural Association, that calls on the talents of a large number of regional artists;

The re-issuing of a general guide published by the Sikh Education Society of Vancouver;

The organization of a cultural festival in London, Ontario, for the purpose of introducing the general public to Eritrean crafts, cooking and music;

An art contest and an essay competition for the children of Kelowna, organized by the multicultural association of that region.

The production of a pamphlet and a short film on the experience of immigrant women in Prince Edward Island;

The organzation, this fall, by the Edmonton Chinese Multicultural Centre of a cultural presentation entitled A Duet of East and West, and the showing, every two weeks, of films on Chinese culture.

And finally, last March in Winnipeg the first national conference on folk arts was held. The Department of the Secretary of State was particularly proud to sponsor that important meeting which dealt with the future of folk arts in Canada and was attended by the spokespersons of various communities, artists, and public servants. Participants discussed the future of multicultural folk arts in Canada and the ways of promoting and enhancing them to best advantage.

I could go on and on and continue to list other similar projects.

The program to assist multiculturalism will provide $192 million in the course of the next five years to implement the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. This means $62 million in new money. Of these new funds, $14.5 million will be devoted over the next five years to the promotion of heritage languages and cultures. In 1991-92, the annual budget for that item will be $13.8 million.

Part of this amount will be used to finance activities aimed at promoting various cultures through literature, the visual arts, and the performing arts.

The Department of the Secretary of State has already created a multiculturalism secretariat to encourage federal departments and agencies to help implement the multiculturalism policy stated in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act.

The Disabled Persons Participation Program has a budget of $3.2 million. Again, Mr. Speaker, these funds are used to finance a wide variety of projects carried out by associations of the disabled, among other things.

We could mention the Insight Theatre Company, which received a $20,000 grant to produce a film with blind actors, and "A Show of Hands", the only Canadian theatre troupe made up of deaf and hard of hearing actors, which received $50,000 for a cross-country tour.

Among the activities of the National Week of the Disabled, let us mention the gala held at the National Arts Centre that brought together disabled artists, including actors, singers and musicians.

A resource centre for the arts in Newfoundland received $7,000 to produce the "Trawler Show".

The Women's Program has a budget of $13.2 million to promote women's issues. The visual arts, literature, theatre and film are indeed effective vehicles for this purpose.

Although it would be ideal to have more money to help all sectors of artistic activity more, our present granting policies and eligibility criteria are meeting Canadians' needs adequately.

I would not hesitate to add, Mr. Speaker, and I know that my time is running out, that we are and will remain attentive to all groups and individuals in these fields, in order to encourage the arts and interest all Canadians in them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired,.

It being three o'clock, pursuant to Order made June 20, 1988, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Ministry's response to the five petitions bearing the numbers 332-4722, 332-4785, 332-4812, 332-4830 and 332-4836.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CHAPLEAU CONSTITUENCY

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue) asked for leave to table Bill C-308, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Chapleau.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of this House that the Hon. Member introduce this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, when the electoral map was being re-drawn, the Commission suggested that the whole rural section of my riding be amputated, and it chose as the new name for the new riding that was thus created, the name of Chapleau.

Because of representations made by the residents of my riding, including the mayors of all the rural municipalities that did not want to be amputated from the riding of Gatineau, the judge decided not to change the structure of my riding.

But inadvertently the new name was kept, Chapleau.

Mr. Speaker, we have nothing but respect for Mr. Chapleau as a figure in our history, but he has no association, either geographical or historical or emotional, with the Gatineau region.

I therefore ask this House to permit me to return to the former name, adding to it "La Lièvre", which is the other river valley in my riding, so that the name for the new riding would be "Gatineau—La Lièvre", with the same structure we had before, that is, 80 per cent rural. It would be much fairer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of this House to adopt the Motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read a second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-33—DEINDEXATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS' PENSIONS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition which has been certified as correct as to form, pursuant to Standing Order 106, from a number of residents of St. John's, Holyrood, Torbay, Bay Bulls, Goulds, Portugal Cove and other communities in Newfoundland, who state that the Conservative Government, through Bill C-33, seeks to deindex the pensions of federal public servants who now have complete protection through full linkage to the Consumer Price Index, and that the Government has insisted on dropping full indexing for public servants. The undersigned petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to reject Bill C-33 as regressive, unfair, untimely and against the best interests of public servants and all Canadians, and that Parliament affirm full indexing to the Consumer Price Index as the model for inflation protection for all Canadians.

Order Paper Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 365 and 374.

[Text]

FOREIGN DOMESTIC WORKERS

Question No. 365—Mr. Heap:

Since November, 1981, according to the latest statistics available (a) have domestic workers been refused landing in Canada under the Foreign Domestic Program and, if so, in what numbers and, in each case, what was the applicant's (i) country of last permanent residence (ii) age (iii) number of dependents (iv) gender (v) reason for rejection (b) have domestic workers applied for landing under the program and been accepted and, if so, in what numbers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Since its inception in November, 1981, the Foreign Domestic Program has accepted 14,199 workers as permanent residents. Very few do not qualify. For example, of the 28,869 foreign domestics who have entered Canada as temporary workers, from 1981 to the end of 1987, only 635 have been refused permanent residence. The approximative 14,000 remaining are in the immigration stream or they have left Canada having decided not to become permanent residents.

Data on the composition of the refusal group will be available at the end of August, 1988, covering the period June 1, 1987 to June 30, 1988. Statistics on refusals for 1987 are available; however, it should be noted that the data breakdown requested only started as of June 1, 1987. Prior to June 1, 1987, there was no collection of specific data on refused applicants (i) country of last permanent residence (ii) age (iii) number of dependents (iv) gender (v) reason for rejection.

GREAT LAKES—CONTAMINATION MONITORING PROCEDURES

Question No. 374—Mr. Langdon:

Are contamination-monitoring procedures being carried out for the Great Lakes and, if so (a) with what frequency (b) by what groups or individuals (c) in what areas?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and of the Fisheries and Oceans as follows:

Contamination monitoring procedures are being carried out for the Great Lakes by Environment Canada, the Ontario Ministry of Environment, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and eight Great Lakes states under the Canada/U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Environment Canada is responsible for the monitoring of conventional parameters and contaminants in the waters of the open lakes by carrying out the following: Lake Ontario—two cruises/year; Lake Huron—two cruises/year; Lake Superior—one cruise/year; Niagara River—weekly (Niagara-on-the-Lake, Fort Erie); St. Lawrence River—daily.

Environment Canada also operates a network of 30 air quality monitoring stations throughout the Great Lakes Basin and monitors contaminant trends in herring gull eggs in 13 colonies.

Since 1977, DFO has carried out a contaminants monitoring program on fish and other biota on the Great Lakes in response to federal commitments respecting the 1972 and 1978 Canada/U.S. Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement.

Annual surveys are carried by DFO throughout the Great Lakes at approximately 20 sites (10 sampled annually) to determine trends on selected contaminants in fish and other aquatic biota. The program receives the assistance of the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources and is part of a co-ordinated international study involving the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Environmental Protection Agency. Results of these annual surveys are presented through the surveillance Workgroup of the International Joint Commission to the Water Quality Board and reported biennially.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Grisé: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

On the Order: Government Orders.

July 14, 1988—Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-137, an Act to provide for incentives to assist in financing exploration for mineral resources and hydrocarbons in Canada and to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act.—The Minister of State (Forestry and Mines).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to this, but in fact there is no copy of the amendments in the folders which are on the desks of the Hon.

Members. I asked a Page to find one, but according to the Order Paper they are listed in Votes and Proceedings of last Thursday. Perhaps we can spend a minute until the House is able to review what these amendments coming back from the Senate are. I do understand that they are technical amendments and should be treated in that way.

On a procedural point, I am not sure whether the motion allows us to consider these amendments or whether it is for the acceptance of the amendments which have been sent back to the House by the Senate.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, my understanding from the other Parties was, that there was no necessity to debate these amendments. However, if my friend wishes to debate them, I am perfectly prepared to suggest that the House not proceed with these amendments immediately so as to give my friend an opportunity to review them. Instead, we could move to the second item on the Order Paper, which is an item which we intend to debate, and there are members from the other Parties here who are prepared to debate it. We can take up Bill C-137 after Question Period, if my friend wishes.

Mr. Cassidy: Agreed. Mr. Speaker, I have consulted with my colleague from Yorkton—Melville, who is acting as House Leader today. It might make sense to ensure that the members of the Opposition have at least reviewed the amendments coming back from the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, I think that the suggestion made by the Hon. Minister of State may be a very good one. It seems to be agreed to by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I must ask if there is consent in the House to adjourn this matter and to proceed with another matter on the understanding that we could revert back later today or at another appropriate time.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Members. I will call the next order.

CANADIAN ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT—NON-CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moved:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the text of the Message made by the Senate to Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, because this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87, as recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General to this House, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and asks that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one normally starts these speeches by thanking the House for an opportunity to address the matter. I have to say to the House that I regret very much the necessity to make this speech and move a motion of reply. Recent actions of the Senate have caused Members of the House of Commons grave concern, and I think that we should send a signal of that concern to the Senate and to the Canadian public.

First of all, I want to set the debate by explaining what happened. The Government introduced and passed Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, on May the 10th, 1988. By this Act our Government established the principle that we wanted Atlantic Canada to grow through federal government assistance directed regionally and not directed from Ottawa.

This was a new and innovative step by our Government—a departure from the "Ottawa knows best" attitude of the previous Liberal administrations. When the Bill reached the Senate the Liberal majority instructed the Senate Finance Committee to divide Bill C-103. The procedural acceptability of this move was challenged and the Speaker of the Senate ruled the motion out of order.

The Speaker of the Senate based his ruling on the fact that Bill C-103 involves the payment of taxpayers' funds and the sound legislative theory that the Senate could split Bills originating in the Senate but not Bills originating in the House of Commons.

The decision of the Speaker of the Senate was challenged by the Liberal majority in the Senate and overturned by that majority. The Bill was split by the Finance Committee and Part I was reported back to this House on Friday, July 8, 1988.

Progressive Conservative Members of Parliament immediately objected to this high-handed action by the appointed Liberal Senators.

I must say that we were pleased to be joined by our colleagues from the New Democratic Party, in a rare demonstration of non-partisanship, in order to establish the rights of the elected representatives over the rights of the appointed Senators. We were distressed that the Liberals in the House refused to back the democratic principle that elected representatives have pre-eminence when it comes to spending the taxpayers' money. I suggest that we are indebted to the Chair for the strength of the arguments put forward by Mr. Speaker in the ruling. I want to refer to some of them.

• (1120)

First, on the question of whether this was common practice, the Speaker said:

> I have been unable to find any instance in our practice where the Senate divided a Commons Bill or where the Commons has divided a Senate Bill.

The Speaker pointed out that there was one precedent for consolidation of two Commons Bills into a single legislative measure by the Senate which took place on June 11, 1941 with a message from the Senate to the House asking for concurrence. The Commons agreed with the Senate's proposal waiving its traditional privilege, and a single Bill was eventually given Royal Assent. Mr. Speaker went on to state that concurrence was specifically sought by the Senate.

The message received last Friday was not one of seeking the Commons consent but one of saying, "We have done it. Tough luck". In our opinion the Senate should have respected the propriety of the original Bill and asked if we would concur in the splitting of that Bill. That is the one part of the argument which the Speaker of the Senate made and which the Chair made in its ruling.

The other part is under Standing Order 87, namely, the question as to who controls the spending of taxpayers' money. Our Standing Order reads:

> All aids and supplies granted to the Sovereign by the Parliament of Canada are the sole gift of the House of Commons, and all Bills for granting such aids and supplies ought to begin with the House, as it is the undoubted right of the House to direct, limit, and appoint in all such bills, the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such grants, which are not alterable by the Senate.

The Speaker went on to say something that I have not heard in my nine years here. The Chair said:

> I have ruled that the privileges of the House have been infringed . . . The cure in this case is for the House to claim its privileges or to forgo them, if it so wishes, by way of a message to Their Honours informing them accordingly.

I want to state unequivocally on behalf of the Government, and I hope all Members of this House of Commons, that we are claiming our privileges, the privileges traditionally granted to elected representatives over appointed representatives. As I said when the message originally came back, this action is an affront to Atlantic Canadians. It has been two months since the Bill passed the House of Commons. By dividing this Bill the Liberals have ensured that further delay will result before it is enacted in its entirety.

I want to go into some detail as to why it is important that Bill C-103 be passed, complete, in its original form, not just for the procedural purposes but for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Robichaud: Why complete?

Mr. Lewis: Just hang on, my friend. Let me quote some of numbers. We want to demonstrate to Atlantic Canada that we feel that the decision-making authority ought to be given to Atlantic Canada to direct its own future. We have had years of mismanagement from the Liberal Party with local authority being refused and all decisions being made in Ottawa. If my friend from New Brunswick wants to continue the practice of all decisions being made in Ottawa, let him take the floor and state that for his people back home. Even his colleague is not in favour of that.

We want Atlantic Canada to know that Parliament and this Government feels that it should be treated the same as western Canada. Atlantic Canadians know that we have passed the Western Diversification Fund, that it is in full operation and not being held up by the whims of one Senator. It is in full operation.

Mr. Robichaud: Full operation?

Mr. Lewis: Let us look at what this authority has done. We have interim authority, certainly. But we want to give full and final authority to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Let us run through what this program has meant to Atlantic Canada so far.

The program has solicited in the region from February 15, 1988 to May 30, 1988, 2,886 applications, 643 of which have been approved for a total contribution of $58 million, making possible over $209 million worth of investment in Atlantic Canada. During the month of May alone, 917 new applications were received by ACOA as compared to 304 in the previous year under the old programs left by the Liberal Government. Look at that increase, Mr. Speaker. That is why we want ACOA for Atlantic Canada.

Furthermore, during the same period, 306 applications were approved under ACOA as compared to 144 under the same program in 1987. We have some 1,900 active applications. There is a great deal of interest in this program in Atlantic Canada and that is why we want to pass this Bill to try to meet the needs of Atlantic Canada.

This legislation will give the ACOA Minister and the agency more flexibility; it will give it decision-making in the region; ACOA will be able to participate in co-financing of regionally advantageous projects with other Departments. ACOA will help the newly established designated areas of exceptional opportunity and it will help harness federal programs to the common goal of increasing opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada. But, and here is the but, should Bill C-103 be allowed to die, as my friend from New Brunswick wants it to do—he wants to go back home with that on his record. He will have to answer as to what he did in his four years in Parliament. He will have to answer that Atlantic Canada did not get any opportunities. I tell him to put that on the record.

Mr. Robichaud: What about your responsibilities?

Mr. Lewis: I ask him to stand up and state firmly where he stands. He should tell the people that he does not want this Bill to pass.

Mr. Robichaud: You don't want it to pass.

Mr. Lewis: He can go home and tell the people that. I await his speech with interest, Mr. Speaker.

We regret very much these delaying tactics. This is not a single instance. By tomorrow morning the Senate will have 24 Bills from the House of Commons on hold, 24 pieces of legislation with which the Senate is dilly-dallying and on which it is not going forward. These include the multiculturalism Bill, the official languages Bill, a new immigration Bill, and emergency refugee legislation.

We returned here here on August 12 last year to proceed with emergency refugee legislation, which the House of Commons passed on September 14, 1987. We sent the Bill back to the Senate once again just recently because the Senate has been delaying, delaying and delaying on that important legislation. When Canadians ask what happens when a ship lands with illegal refugees on it and why airplanes can land at Pearson International with people on them eating their passports, Hon. Members opposite can tell them that it is because the Senate has refused to move. That is where the legislation is, and everybody ought to know that. That is the kind of delay we are getting from the Senate.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House that these efforts by the Liberal Senators to delay and derail our legislative package—this one in particular—is an affront to democracy in all of its principles. It is an affront to Members of this House. It is an affront to Atlantic Canada, and it is an affront to the taxpayers of Canada. I ask all Members of Parliament to stand and be counted when this motion is put to the House. At that time my hon. friend will have to ask himself whether he is for the House of Commons and against the Senate for attempting to dictate important principles of democracy in this House. He is either for the House of Commons or for the Senate. My friend will have to ask himself whether he is for the taxpayers of Canada deciding who spends money or for the Liberally appointed Senate.

Mr. Robichaud: Let's have the election right now.

Mr. Lewis: That is the question. I want my friend to have a chance to put a few remarks on the record and we will all await those with interest.

Mr. Gauthier: He will and he has unlimited time.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend will have to ask himself in the final analysis whether he is for Atlantic Canada and the principle that people in Atlantic Canada should make their own decisions, or does he want them made on Wellington Street? We say that Atlantic Canada should have the opportunity to make its own decisions as to its future as expressed in ACOA legislation. My friend says, "No, we like it the way it was going under Ottawa's rule".

• (1130)

In conclusion, I say that I hope all Members of the House will put aside partisan interests and get behind this motion which says, first, that we want to do something for Atlantic Canada and, second, we defend the principle that the elected representatives of the House of Commons should decide how taxpayers' money is spent.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not going to quarrel with the Speaker's decision on this matter. It speaks for itself. Nor, as the Hon. Minister said, am I going to say that I am not in favour of the rights of the House of Commons. I do not think that is the major question here. The question before us is the motion presented by the Government.

It was interesting to listen to the speech of the Hon. Minister. He did not once mention the people of Cape Breton or the main objection of the Liberal Party, which I will get to in my speech.

I have unlimited time, so if the Hon. Member for Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) continues to interrupt because of the insecurity he feels about his Party's position, then I will just wait him out. This is far too important a subject to let it go by without putting the proper points across.

We can, of course, signal the position of this House with respect to its privileges without sending back to the Senate that portion of the Bill it has sent to us. The two things are not connected at all. In saying that I want to refer to a couple of things which have been misinterpreted by my friends opposite in their discussion of the Senate's action.

They say that the fact that the Speaker of the Senate was overruled indicates something important. Of course, the Speaker of the Senate is in an entirely different position than the Speaker of the House of Commons. The Senate Speaker is appointed by the Government. At the first sitting of the Senate he or she announces that he or she has received the appointment from the Governor General to be the Speaker, and that is unchallenged. The Speaker of the Senate remains so at the pleasure of the Government.

The reason that the Speaker's decision can be overruled is that he or she has a vote on all motions before the Senate. The reason for that is that all the regions of the country are to have equal representation in the Senate. The Senate was formed to protect the regions of the country. If the Speaker did not have a vote, then of course one of the four regions would be one vote short. It was decided that this would not be in the interests of any region.

I would like to now go on to what is a very important question and that is, what kind of a Bill do we have here? It has been stated that it is a money Bill. If this is a money Bill, then all Bills of the House of Commons are money Bills except perhaps amendments to the Criminal Code.

What is a money Bill? Do we have a definition? The only reference to the term in the Constitution Act is in Section 53 and Section 54. What do they say? Section 54 says:

It shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any Vote, Resolution, Address, or Bill for the Appropriation of any Part of the Public Revenue, or of any Tax or Impost, to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House—

There we have the word "Appropriation". Can we really say that this Bill is an Appropriations Bill? Of course it is not. An Appropriation Bill is a Bill that appropriates money for the House of Commons. This certainly cannot be considered an Appropriations Bill under that definition.

Mr. Valcourt: So the Speaker is wrong?

Mr. MacLellan: What about Section 53? It says:

Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

Fine, but once again we are talking about the word "appropriating". This is not a Bill appropriating money.

What we have to ask ourselves is this. Is there anything in this Bill which says that we need it in order to fund the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency or the supposed successors of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation? There is nothing. The only reference to money is the salary of a vice-president, and we do not need this Bill to appropriate the salary for a vice-president.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why are you against Atlantic Canada?

Mr. MacLellan: Then we have had reference to a Royal Recommendation as if any Bill that had a Royal Recommendation were a money Bill. Yet there is no indication that because a Bill has a Royal Recommendation it is a money Bill and cannot be amended. Bill C-18, for example, I put to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), had a Royal Recommendation, but it was amended, as was Bill C-22. Just because it has a Royal Recommendation does not mean a Bill is a money Bill, nor does it mean that it cannot be amended. The question is: What kind of a Bill do we have here? As I said earlier, we do not need this Bill to approve funding. The Estimates are where we approve funding for ACOA, and the Estimates have been passed and the funding is in place.

During the meeting of the committee dealing with this issue in the other place the President of ACOA was asked this question:

But there is nothing in this bill that gives you any funds. In other words, I do not see a dollar bill in it.

MR. MCPHAIL: I was speaking of the Estimates.

SENATOR MACEACHEN: Yes, and your money comes from the Estimates, not this Bill.

MR. MCPHAIL: Yes.

The Minister of State said the Government presented this Bill so decisions could be made regionally. One of the big decisions that was made regionally was on the funding allotted to the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. That was the major feature, that decisions were made by the Board of Directors of the company in Cape Breton and the funding for that division was over $11 million a year. The decisions on that $11 million of funding were made in Cape Breton.

• (1140)

The Deputy House Leader said that they want the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency to be in operation. Well, it is in full operation at the present time. When going through my mail on Friday I found some notices in my "in basket". The letterheads on all four of the notices read "Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency". Evidently the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has its letterhead and has had it for quite a while. One press release says:

Five Valley Firms to Receive ACOA assistance.

Pat Nowlan, M.P., Annapolis Valley—Hants, announced today that five Valley firms will receive assistance from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

That is dated July 5. The second one reads:

Pictou County Projects Receive Assistance.

Ten Pictou County entrepreneurs will receive $1,076,867 in contributions and loans to carry out expansion development plans that will create 85 permanent jobs.

That announcement was made by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay). There again is proof that ACOA is in operation. Another release dated July 6 says:

Minister of Public Works, and M.P. for Halifax (said) . . . Halterm Limited will receive $450,000 ACOA contribution . . . Halifax-Dartmouth Industries Limited will (receive) . . . $160,000 . . .

A release dated July 8 says:

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency ACOA will provide assistance to four companies to establish, expand and modernize their operations in Dartmouth.

It was none other than the Member of Parliament for Dartmouth—Halifax East who made that announcement. Today, along with other members of the Conservative Party, he is saying that we need this legislation in order to get ACOA in operation.

First, this Bill is not needed for the funding because the funding is provided with the Estimates, and certainly no Conservative Government would ever give the funding if it did not have it. They say they need this Bill in order to get the structure in place so that they can operate. They are already operating and already giving funding, as we have seen.

What exactly is the present state of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency? It is in full operation and the Government is asking today that this House give retroactive approval to the origin of it. That is fair enough, but Members should not be spreading doom and gloom all over Atlantic Canada that there will be no funding for projects unless this Bill is passed, because that will not be the case. Mind you, it seems that the only places where approval is being given is in constituencies represented by government Members. The reason for that, of course, is that they want to persuade opposition Members to change their position and sabotage the Cape Breton Development Corporation and people of Cape Breton.

Mr. Forrestall: You're misleading.

Mr. MacLellan: No, that is not misleading at all. That is exactly the situation.

We must look at exactly what the Government is trying to do. The Senate sent this Bill back, the Speaker has made his ruling, and that is inviolate and is to stand. However, very important questions must be considered. The Government's motion says that:

> —this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87, as recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General to this House, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and asks that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form.

First, the principles and intention of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency have not been infringed upon in any form whatsoever. As a result of the Senate separating the Bill, all of the provisions which relate to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency are now before the House. Whether the Government or the Speaker feels that the rights of the House of Commons have been infringed upon is another matter. It is up to the House to decide whether or not it wants to adopt the Bill in its divided form. That is in the Speaker's decision.

There is nothing to stop the Government if it is, as it says it is, interested in getting the provisions regarding the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency through. There is nothing to stop the Government approving the provisions which deal with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. They are before us in the House right now. How can the Government say that the Liberal Party is stalling ACOA? For one thing, ACOA is already in operation. Second, the revisions are before the House right now.

The reasons for the situation which exists in the House now is that the Government is not interested in ensuring the early passage of the Bill implementing ACOA. The Government is more interested in retribution against Cape Breton and the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In the Deputy House Leader's statement he did not mention what will happen to the Cape Breton Development Corporation as a result of the undivided Bill. ACOA is only Part 1 of this Bill. Part 2 relates to doing away completely with the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation was set up under a separate Act. If the Government wants to do away with the Industrial Development Division, the way to do that would be through the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act. However, it has chosen to do it as a rider on the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Bill. It has decided that if it does it that way it will be able to include something unpalatable and economically devastating to the people of Cape Breton in a wider subject of general appeal, thereby catching the people of Cape Breton and Atlantic Canada in a catch-22 situation.

If they want the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency enshrined in legislation they have to do away with the Cape Breton Development Corporation. The people of Atlantic Canada are being told that if they want the legislation to implement this agency passed they have to punish the people of Cape Breton who have had the Industrial Development Division since 1968. In order to get the general benefit of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency they have to turn against the people and the economy of Cape Breton by including the provisions doing away with the Industrial Development Division.

What happens if that succeeds? I am talking about precedents and the rights of Canadians. This would be a precedent because it would give the Government free rein to include such unpalatable provisions for a certain small region of this country in any Bill it wanted to pass if, of course, the Bill was generally acceptable.

In the Bill dealing with the Western Diversification Fund, which this Party supported, there was no provision for any part of western Canada to be detrimentally impacted upon. The people in western Canada did not have to turn on any part of western Canada in order to get the general benefits of the Western Diversification Fund, and therefore this Party approved it, and rightly so.

Why can the people of Atlantic Canada not have the same benefits? Why can the people of Atlantic Canada not have a program to set up the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency without having to cut the economic feet from under the people of Cape Breton? That is the major question right now and that is something the Government does not want to explain to the people of Canada.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation Act was passed in 1967 setting up the Cape Breton Development Corporation which had two divisions; a Coal Mining Division and an Industrial Development Division. The purpose of the Industrial Development Division was to bring in industry to replace the jobs that were being lost in the coal industry at that time. The people of Cape Breton had a reprieve in the early 1970s because the price of oil went up.

However, let us consider the situation in Cape Breton at the present time. There are at least 1,500 less jobs in the coal industry today than in 1967. Employment at Sydney Steel Corporation is less than half of what it was 10 years ago. The Government has closed the two heavy water plants, costing the area between 600 and 700 jobs.

The Government just stated that it is closing the railway in Newfoundland, which supposedly will not hurt the people in the Sydney and North Sydney area. Yet we are told that the containers will be routed through Halifax and Montreal. There is no compensation for the people in that regard.

The special investment tax credit upon which the Government hinged its whole regional development policy on Cape Breton has elapsed. Essentially, everything has been taken from an area that has one of the highest rates of unemployment in this country. The Government knows that the unemployment figures are bogus because there is no way of gauging the true problems in unemployment according to the system the Government has implemented. One no longer has the right to see the councillor in the unemployment office but must simply pick a job from the job board. People in Cape Breton have been unemployed for so long that they simply do not bother going to the unemployment office.

When one also considers the problems of the much older than average population, one can realize the true problems with the economy in Cape Breton. This Bill will not address those problems.

The Government is saying that it does not want to keep the Industrial Development Division that was established by an Act of this Parliament in 1967. It wants to set up a separate Crown corporation called Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. It is essentially the same name as Enterprise Cape Breton, to be established under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The reason the Government is not original in naming the other corporation is that they will eventually be merged, without anyone knowing the difference. That one operation will be a local office of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

The President of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, which the Government intends to establish, is Mr. McPhail who stated before the Senate committee that the ACOA legislation was not necessary in order to have funding. He is also President of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton, through its direct relations with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Essentially, we are dealing with three parts of the same entity. Whether there are three or 300 agencies in Cape Breton, if they operate under the same framework and according to the same system, it is only one agency. It is a complete fallacy to suggest that the Government is replacing the Industrial Development Division with a separate Crown corporation. The people of Cape Breton are gaining nothing whatsoever. They will lose the industrial division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, with a budget of at least $11 million a year in an area that has one of the highest unemployment rates in the country.

In 1967, this House decided that the people in that area needed this assistance. Today, there are fewer jobs in that area than in 1967. Those jobs are required to develop the economic framework in which people can support their families. The Government is not only taking away the funding, but the ability of the Cape Breton Development Corporation to decide how to apply that funding in the area.

I agree with the Deputy Government House Leader that it is important for people in Atlantic Canada to make their own decisions. That will not be the case in Cape Breton if we lose the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It is wrong to put the people of Cape Breton in that position.

The Government believes that if it can pass this Bill through Parliament without any amendments, or without its being divided, it will be able to eliminate the Cape Breton Corporation Industrial Development Division. That will be a serious blow to Cape Breton.

The Government believes that the general benefits in the broad concept of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will allow it to include a measure that will adversely affect the people of Cape Breton. It believes that the people in the rest of Atlantic Canada will not bother with what fate befalls the people of Cape Breton, that the greed of the rest of Atlantic Canada will be paramount and win the day. That is not true. The Government has taken a cynical position with respect to the people of Atlantic Canada. The loss of this valuable agency will be devastating to the people of Cape Breton.

While we support the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, it has many problems and is not the complete answer. The political nature of the agency is rampant and could turn into nothing but the biggest pork-barrel in the history of Atlantic Canada.

However, it is the only game in town for Atlantic Canadians, since the Government has decided that this is all it will do. The Government has provided funding to the various regions through the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Western Diversification Fund and the Northern Benefits Program in Ontario. However, that is all it is going to give and will refuse any further requests from these areas. Regardless of the need for regional development funds in Atlantic Canada, that is no reason why the people of Cape Breton should be targeted for this clandestine and detrimental action on the part of the Government. I cannot accept that.

The Government's motion is flawed. It states that the House believes that in dividing the Bill the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill. All the Senate is doing is considering further the section that refers to eliminating the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. It wants to study the impact of that on Cape Breton.

I too would want to study what that would do to the Cape Breton Development Corporation in particular. I hope the other place will look at that and realize that the loss of the Industrial Development Division will result in a coal mining company that is just ripe for privatization. That, I would say, is what the other place is maintaining it wants to study. What it has given back to the House are the provisions that relate to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency without amendment and without any change whatsoever, ready for passage by this House. If the Government is interested in the passage of these provisions with respect to this agency, there is no reason that we cannot deal with that right now. But the Government wants to play politics with Atlantic Canada. That is the pure and simple reason for not dealing with it, and I think that is a travesty.

I would say to members of the governing Party that if the people in Cape Breton, certainly all Atlantic Canadians, do not know what the Government is doing, they are certainly going to know. I think the people of Atlantic Canada are going to see through this sham.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this motion by the Minister of State and Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis), because I believe we have in this particular case a very special motion. It is perhaps rare that this House must assert its privileges against the Senate. I have been in this House since last August as a new Member of Parliament and I must say it came as a bit of a shock to see some of the traditions in this House. For example, the Black Rod knocks on the door of this Chamber, interrupts proceedings and Members of the House of Commons dutifully go to the Senate to hear some message or pronouncement from the Senate. I was told, of course, that this is a tradition, a mere formality of subservience of the House of Commons to the Senate, and it was a bit of a shock to me to have to participate in asserting our privileges in this House against the Senate.

What the Senate has done with this particular piece of legislation is a disservice to the House of Commons. It has divided a Bill this House passed, albeit with substantial disagreement on particular parts of it from this side of the House, particularly from the New Democratic Party. But we supported the over-all legislation. In dividing this Bill, the Senate, as the Speaker has ruled, has interfered with the privileges of the House of Commons.

We, therefore, must join in with the motion in stating as follows; that we send a message to the Senate stating that this House disagrees with the text of the message made by the Senate to Bill C-103 because the House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and we ask that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form. This motion is a very serious one. This House must claim its privileges against the Senate.

I must make a few comments on the Government's attitude toward the Senate in this respect. We have heard the Deputy House Leader rail against the unelected Senate as it carries out its activities in opposition to the House of Commons. The New Democratic Party has opposed the choice of a Senator as a Minister responsible for this Bill. The Government has chosen not to have a Minister in this House be the main spokesperson to report to Cabinet on this legislation. Instead, the Government itself chose a Senator to head the agency and to be the Minister responsible, and we must have someone in this House to answer questions and speak for this agency.

The Government rails against the Senate for interfering with this Bill, but the Government itself has made use of the Senate and instead of having one of its many Members of Parliament in this House act as a Minister responsible for ACOA, it has chosen a Senator. So the Government, I would suggest, is rather hypercritical on this point. It rails against the Senate yet it chooses a Senator. In addition, the hyprocrisy of the Government on this issue is evident by refusing, despite many invitations from this side of the House, to bring in legislation to curb the power of the Senate with respect to what it can do to Bills originating from this House.

We listened to what the Government had to say about the Senate but we do not believe it is sincere in wishing to do something about it. It continually rails against the Senate yet does not take any action despite repeated invitations by this Party to do so.

I should also point out that the very issue on which the Senate has taken action in dividing this Bill is one that was brought up by my Party at the first opportunity in the legislative committee studying Bill C-103. That committee, as you know, Mr. Speaker, travelled to Atlantic Canada, to St. John's, Halifax, Cape Breton, Port Hawkesbury, Prince Edward Island and Fredericton. We heard submissions on this issue.

This issue first came up in Port Hawkesbury where the committee held hearings. Members of the Liberal caucus and Liberal Senators are now taking up the cause of DEVCO, particularly, the Industrial Development Division, but when the committee held hearings in Cape Breton, there was not a Member of Parliament representing that Party even present, nor was there a Member present in Prince Edward Island or in Halifax to discuss the issues of ACOA and to listen to what those parts of Atlantic Canada had to say. It was my Party, and myself on that committee, who first moved amendments to the legislation to delete the entire section of the Bill dealing with the breakdown of DEVCO, hiving off the Industrial Development Division. We listened to the arguments put forth and the comments made by the people of Cape Breton as to what they felt was wrong with breaking up DEVCO and breaking away the Industrial Development Division. I will not go into all the arguments except to say that with DEVCO having both a Coal Mining Division and an Industrial Development Division working together, the DEVCO operation, with certain flaws, of course, has become a model of enterprise. With that operation there has been the ability of the Industrial Development Division to maintain flexibility in dealing with economic circumstances and changes within Cape Breton. It was an agency within Cape Breton that had control, not from Moncton or Ottawa, but from Cape Breton itself.

Within the Industrial Development Division, working with the Coal Mining Division, there was also the capacity of the advice, knowledge and expertise of those involved in the coal mining operation which could be used to assist other enterprises within the Cape Breton community which were participating in the Industrial Development Division programs. That is very important to the success of many programs. The Industrial Development Division was also able to respond when, for example, there was a fire in a colliery and a particular mine had to be shut down. The assets of DEVCO were able to be used in conjunction with the other aspects of the Industrial Development Division programs to create new opportunities and employment.

After the House voted on amendments to that legislation, and those amendments have been turned down, this House ultimately has the final say in voting in favour of the legislation, so I reject the notion that the Senate can then alter the Bill in a substantial way as it has done. What would stop the Senate, in that case, from taking any Bill passed by this House, no matter which Government, and chopping it up into little pieces because the Bill did not suit the Senate? That would destroy the effectiveness and privileges of Members of this House to carry on their mandate from the people of Canada who elected them to pass legislation and get on with the business of Government.

We in the New Democratic Party supported amendments, both in committee and in the House, which would have separated the Bill. In effect, they would have done the same thing as the Senate has done. We voted on those amendments and they were lost. The Bill, in its original form with certain amendments which were accepted, was passed along to the Senate and has come back mangled. It was changed in a way that perhaps we would have liked to have seen. In fact, if the amendments by Members on this side of the House had been accepted, the Bill would have the same appearance as it has now coming back from the Senate.

We cannot accept the fact that the Senate, having received the wishes of this House, decided to act in so drastic a way, as the Speaker has ruled, to breach the privileges of this House. They are privileges which we must claim as Members of Parliament.

However, I reject with great force the contention of the Government that delay of this legislation will destroy the program as it now exists. The Government, through ACOA, is still spending money. That is something that has been going on for many months. The Government is very much overstating the consequences of a delay of this nature since under the new program of ACOA money has been handed out quite regularly in the form of grants. The details of those grants and criticisms of them are another issue.

It strikes me as very hypocritical when we hear Liberal Members of the House talk about their commitment to regional development. For much of the last 20 years since 1968 when the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO was established we have seen activities by the Government, most of which have been Liberal Governments, which have given Cape Breton an unemployment of 15.3 per cent, as reported today in The Halifax Chronicle-Herald. In all of Newfoundland and Labrador there is an unemployment rate of approximately 17.3 per cent. In many parts of Newfoundland and in whole statistical divisions there is an unemployment rate of 28 per cent.

We see a history over the last 20 years of regional development programs of both Conservative and Liberal Governments which have not resulted in any real commitment to changing the unfortunate realities in Canada wherein the unemployment rate in Newfoundland, in Cape Breton and the Maritimes is unacceptably high.

We have seen a program unveiled by the Government which has made some improvements under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It has some features that we welcome. There is the feature of flexibility in terms of granting and programs that can respond to the different needs of the Atlantic provinces. Indeed, one of the major defects of existing programs or pre-existing programs was that, although they were designed in Ottawa, they did not take into account the realities of economic and industrial life in the Atlantic provinces. They were not successful. We hope that with ACOA there will be improvements in that rate of success.

Therefore, the measures that were taken in the whole were supported, despite the fact that there were serious flaws. One of the most serious was the destruction of the Industrial Development Division of the Cape Breton Development Corporation, which had been put together and which had worked very well as a model. It was not successful in moving full employment in Cape Breton. It still left an unemployment rate of 15 per cent. However, in terms of the model of the type of activities that could be undertaken on a regional basis within a part of a province of Canada it was a successful model. It did not receive the total commitment of the Liberal Government before this one, and obviously it has no commitment from the present Government which has set out to destroy it.

These points with respect to the attitude taken toward the Senate by the Government are most important. We support the motion which is before us. The reason we support the motion is that we must, as the House of Commons, rise up and claim our privileges against the Senate. We must insist that the Senate respect the privileges of the House, despite the fact that the changes made to the legislation are ones that we ourselves would have made in this House. Those changes, once denied by this House as a body, must not be imposed upon this House by the Senate.

We support the motion. We support the message to be sent to the Senate to claim the privileges of this House against the Senate.

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism and Minister of State for Indian and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I join the other Members of this House in this debate on the motion which has been made. I would like to start by saying that I listened attentively to the remarks of the Hon. Members for Cape Breton—The Sydneys and St-John's East (Mr. MacLellan and Mr. Harris) about the motion, and I imagine, Mr. Speaker, that I and the other Members of this House have an obligation to regard this debate as a historic event in the history of the Canadian Parliament, because it is the first time that anyone can remember that the Senate has done what it did with this Bill, which aims at promoting the economic well-being of Atlantic Canada.

[English]

I guess that when people look at this debate and when they look at what has caused this debate to occur they will realize how desperate the Liberal Party of Canada has become. An explanation for this action by the Senate must be found. Why is it that unelected people in the other place have, on their own, decided to transgress convention, even the powers of this House, by infringing on the privileges of every Member of this House?

What I find astonishing this morning is to see members of the Liberal Party standing up to defend yet again their little cousins in the other place for the very single reason of playing partisan politics. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) tried to portray the Government as playing partisan politics here. Who has been playing politics with this issue if not the Liberal Party of Canada represented by the Liberal Senators?

It is a shame to see Members of Parliament from the Liberal Party who are elected standing up to say those things. After all, their cousins in the other place are not elected. We can understand that MacEachen and his gang would try to hold on to power to frustrate the will of the elected people of Canada. What I find astonishing is to see Liberal Members of Parliament defend the other place and the actions of the Liberal Senators.

We should not have this debate this morning. The Senate of Canada should not have divided Bill C-103. In his remarks this morning the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys challenged the ruling of the Speaker. The Speaker said quite clearly that this was a money Bill, but the Hon. Member attempted to explain that it was not a money Bill. By doing what it has done the Senate was infringing the privileges of the elected people of Canada. That is what the issue is about this morning.

The Liberals attempted to justify the gestures of the Senator who leads the Liberal Party in the other place by saying that we were destroying the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO. If it were not for the rules of the House where we have to watch the language we use there are certain terms I could use to describe that Member of Parliament. I will not, because I respect the rules of the House. I think that the smoke-screen that the Liberals are attempting to put over this issue will dissipate, just as in 1984, after 20 years of apparently dealing with regional economic development problems in Atlantic Canada, the smoke-screen has dissipated and people have seen the Grits doing everything in Atlantic Canada from Ottawa. The difference today is that it will not be done by bureaucrats in Ottawa; the Liberals want it to be done by Senators in the other place who are not elected. They know what is best for Atlantic Canada.

The same Senator seems to forget that he was here in the House of Commons for a long time. He was a very influential member of the previous Liberal Government. What has he done for Atlantic Canada? Where was he all those years? He talks of the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO as if this was a solution to the problems of Cape Breton. What has happened to Cape Breton since 1984? What has happened to Nova Scotia and to Atlantic Canada? When one looks at the number of unemployed people in Cape Breton in 1984 and compares that to today, there is a big difference. Many more people are working today in Cape Breton, not because the Government has thrown money at the problem, like the Liberals did, but because the Government in Ottawa has decided and understood that Atlantic Canadians have the stuff to do it themselves. Hence the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency would give the people of Atlantic Canada the very tools that they need to be the architects of their own economic development. That is what ACOA is all about.

In the House today we hear the Liberal Members of Parliament defending the unelected Senators who are trying to frustrate the will of Parliament. That is unacceptable and Atlantic Canadians will not forget. The only Liberal federal representative in Ottawa, the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud), applauded the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys when he stated that there are interim authorities and that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency can do whatever it wants.

To justify their position on this issue today the Liberals say that, first, we are doing away with the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO, and, second, that the Senate's action does not result in any delay in ACOA bringing forward initiatives to support regional economic development because it is funded.

ACOA is operating under interim authorities that will allow the agency to put in place the action program. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys was talking about an announcement made for certain companies across Atlantic Canada under the action program. That is only one program and one leg of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

The Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys stated in the House on July 8 that Bill C-103 does away with the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO. He called this an affront to Atlantic Canadians. In fact it is a statement that is an affront to the truth. The Industrial Development Division of DEVCO will remain after the passage of Bill C-103 but with a strengthened mandate as the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The only difference is that currently that division, as part of DEVCO, reports to the Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology, the DRIE department. That is where DEVCO has to answer to.

Mr. Forrestall: Here in Ottawa.

Mr. Valcourt: Here in Ottawa, what is proposed in this Bill by the creation of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation is to have it report to the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

With the creation of ACOA and a new Department of Industry Science and Technology, IDD as the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will report to the new Minister responsible for economic development in all of Atlantic Canada. As a result, Enterprise Cape Breton will not in any way be impeded from doing what the Industrial Development Division has been doing for the past 20 years, contrary to what the Member stated. In fact, it now has a better chance of success because it is now in direct connection with ACOA, which is the lead federal agency for economic development in Atlantic Canada.

There are further provisions in the Bill that prove the absolute hollowness of the Liberal Party's argument. In establishing the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, Section 27 gives it its own board of directors separate from ACOA and separate from DEVCO. To me that is an improvement. That means more strength for this important tool for Cape Breton economic development.

Furthermore, Clause 33 lays out the objects of Enterprise Cape Breton. I challenge any Liberal Member to take exception to what I am going to say. Clause 33 lays out in identical terms the powers of the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO to the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation. The words are exactly the same and they state:

> The objects of the Corporation are to promote and assist, either alone or in conjunction with any person or the Government of Canada or of Nova Scotia or any agency of either of those Governments, the financing and development of industry on the Island of Cape Breton to provide employment outside the coal producing industry and to broaden the base of the economy of the Island.

In other words, the Government remains committed to the original mandate of the Industrial Development Division. No one, not even the not-so-famous Senator in the other place, can take exception to that. It is plainly written in Clause 33.

It is even more important to note that in Clause 34 the powers of the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will be the same as those of the IDD, except for some minor technical changes. The Industrial Development Division has been given an extraordinary range of powers that very few, if any, other federal Crown corporations have received. All those powers have been retained for Enterprise Cape Breton Development Corporation. They include the power to provide assistance to a company that is likely to make a substantial contribution to the industrial development of Cape Breton Island through loans with or without security and with or without interest, grants, equity participation, or guarantees subject to Governor in Council approval. The Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation will also retain the power to purchase lands, sell lands for cash or equity, take mortgages on lands sold, and advertise industrial opportunities on Cape Breton.

Clause 38 provides that the head office of that corporation must be in Sydney in Cape Breton, and not in Moncton, as the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys was trying to let the people believe. He was claiming that it would be run from Moncton. Clause 38 clearly provides that the head office of the corporation must be in Sydney. The corporation will be run from Sydney and not from Moncton or Ottawa. That is contained in the Bill. Bill C-103 and the philosophy behind it create very direct links between the ACOA Act and the ECB Act. The Government has set out to establish a new economic development system in Atlantic Canada. It is vital and necessary that Cape Breton should be linked to that system. That is what Bill C-103 accomplishes.

If we listen to the brilliant Senator up there, he would want IDD to remain there linked to Ottawa, not linked to the one agency that has the mandate for the economic development of all of Atlantic Canada. He wants it linked to Ottawa again. Those Liberal Senators like it to be closed. Now that they are in the Senate, they have found a way to keep it closed to Ottawa. They are against the economic development of Atlantic Canada. The Liberal Party has been estranged from the people of Atlantic Canada by this move. To see Members of the House of Commons defend this move is totally unacceptable. I dare say that in the very near future—and I hope that is soon—Atlantic Canadians will have a chance to condemn those Members of Parliament who are denying them the opportunity to develop their own regions with the implementation of this Act. That is what this debate is all about this morning.

For them to defend their unelected cousins in the other place, against the will of the elected people, means that they will go down in history as the people who have done just that. Atlantic Canadians will never accept non-elected people being the master of their economic development. They want to be the architect of their own economic development.

Even the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), who has not informed himself, says everything is fine. Even if the Senators are playing with Bill C-103, even if they are delaying the approval of the Bill, it does not disturb anything. Money is still flowing. It is the same old attitude and it has not changed. They think that by throwing money at the problem they will solve it. They do not realize that Bill C-103 creates more than just giving money to corporations in Atlantic Canada. These measures cannot take effect until the Bill is passed.

The Hon. Member from Westmorland—Kent—and this I cannot believe—has one of the poorest counties in all of Canada, but yet he is here applauding the Senators who are infringing on the privileges of this House.

[Translation]

Mostly Acadiens, Mr. Speaker! And what does the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) do? He applauds the efforts of Senators who are trying to frustrate the will of the elected representatives of the people. In his riding, which is perhaps the second poorest in Canada, the passage of and Royal Assent to this Bill would make possible, for example, to designate certain parts of New Brunswick, such as the region of Kent, a special region. But to do that, we need legislative authority, and that legislative authority is being denied to us by the Senators. That is the issue.

[English]

These Members of Parliament will have to explain to the Member for Westmorland—Kent why he is preventing the adoption of this Bill as it is. That area could be designated a special area under the enabling legislation of Bill C-103. I cannot stress enough the importance of this Bill and the approach of this Government to regional economic development. I am a product of Atlantic Canada. I come from northern New Brunswick. The people who are represented here have been subjected to regional economic development policies of the previous Government for 16 to 20 years.

In 1984, when the people across Canada and Atlantic Canada decided that they wanted to do away with this approach of throwing money at the problem they have spoken loud and clear and we have answered. That is why we have brought in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Bill C-103 addresses every problem that they have. Everything is in the Bill. The integrity of the mandate of the Industrial Development Division is protected and it is in the Bill. Instead of reporting to Ottawa it will report to the Minister who is responsible for all of Atlantic Canada's economic development. That is the only difference. I guess I know why the Senators acted as they did. They used to be here making laws.

It's pathetic to see that. Imagine the poor Senators over there, who can't come up with any solutions, who can only watch what the government does and try to frustrate the will of the elected representatives of the people.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Liberal Party just have today to wake up and stand up for the House of Commons!

[English]

The issue is the powers of the House of Commons versus the prerogatives of the Senators. The Speaker has ruled that this is a money Bill, that they have infringed upon the privileges of each and every Member of the House. I want to see those Liberal Members of Parliament stand up for the right of Canadians who elect their representatives, not the Senators who are not elected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to address myself to this particular issue before us today on the floor of the House of Commons. It is a great opportunity to follow the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), who has made some suggestions and comments with regard to what is taking place in another Chamber and, in particular, what is taking place here in the House of Commons. I failed to hear from Members opposite. Perhaps, as the day progresses, we may hear from them. I failed to hear nor did I receive any specific indications from them as to what parts of this particular Bill they would deem to be a money Bill.

In the motion it says:

> . . . because this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87.

I would hope that in the course of our debate Members opposite would clearly spell out, for Members on this side, where that has been a bridge. It is passing strange that government Members have not themselves alluded to their support of the somewhat ill-founded substantive portions here before us today, with any reference to those sections of the Bill.

There is a fundamental problem which members on the government side and, to a lesser extent, my colleagues to the left, the New Democratic Party, do not wish to acknowledge or to address in any substantive way. All of them knew in their hearts that Part I of Bill C-103, notwithstanding the shortcomings and numerous amendments which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), made in committee and in the House, would be passed by the House of Commons. But when it comes to the second part they know in their hearts, that what they are doing is fundamentally wrong.

This is a piece of legislation which, by the Government's own admission, and I say to you, Sir, respectfully and sincerely, ought to be treated as two separate and distinct pieces of legislation. Why? First, not I, not members of the New Democratic Party, but government Members in introducing Bill C-103, in referring to it by its short title, said it is the Government Organization Act, Atlantic Canada Act, 1987. The short title in Part II reads Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation Act. There are two distinct, different elements, yet the Government attempts to lob them in as if they were one.

It is interesting to note that when the Bill was introduced in this House, a great deal of time, a great deal of rhetoric was given by the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), with regard to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. In checking through Hansard it became clearer and clearer that the second part was a throw-in by the Government of Canada for, in his deliberations, the Minister of the day provided but three or four brief, succinct sentences with regard to Part II of the Bill known as the Enterprise Corporation Act. We have two separate and distinct elements.

Listening to the Minister who preceded me was somewhat reminiscent of watching and listening to the Keystone Kops. Rarely did he talk about the substantive aspects, rarely did he admit what is taking place here, and purposely and intentionally he has attempted, without success, I might add, to brandish the Opposition for wishing to split this Bill as somehow being against motherhood, apple pie, et cetera. I guess the difference between this Party and the other Party at that end of the Chamber is that its Members talk a pretty good game when it comes to assisting and enhancing the economic opportunities in Cape Breton. But when it is put on the line, you get another answer.

I am disappointed, really disappointed, in my colleagues to the left who, for I would believe political gain in their own parts of the world, have not seen fit to support the splitting of this legislation knowing full well as they do that if it were split we in this Party would support it, they would support it and the Government would support it. That does not mean that each and every scintilla of a sentence would be accepted. It does not mean that at all. But I am disappointed for other reasons.

The New Democrats have talked about heart and about sensitivities toward regional economic development. When I hear a colleague from my region, from Atlantic Canada, from Newfoundland, cast aspersions, if you will—and he is free to do that in his choice of words—and say to the people of Canada that no success was ever uncovered with regard to previous regional economic development policy, let me say how shameful, how utterly untrue and how utterly unfair that is. There is no question that my colleagues on the government side as well as in the New Democratic Party would jump to their feet and say, yes, there may have been some successes, but not nearly enough, with which I would concur. But to try to sustain over a period of time that the economic policies of former Governments were not successful in the rebirthing, if you will, or the enlightening of the economy in the Halifax area is utterly untruthful. It is utterly untruthful concerning parts of the city that he represents. Some of those policies worked in Charlottetown and Fredericton. But it goes much beyond the New Democratic Party; it goes to the heart of economic development.

The Cape Breton Development Corporation with its Coal Mining Division and its Industrial Development Division has had some success and some failures. When one tries to address regional inequality, there is no quick fix. There is no panacea. Over its history DEVCO has been able to provide financial assistance to business and to non-profit institutions. It has, however, done more, Mr. Speaker. It has been the leader of a people, because in trying to change the behavioural patterns which comprise an economy, DEVCO has also served the community in lifting its standards. Now the Government comes along and is supported by Members opposite, and particularly the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) who will have to answer in this Chamber as well as elsewhere as to why he would concur with such a decision. The question is this. Will the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation have the same independence and the same status as the Cape Breton Development Corporation, of which the Industrial Development Division is an integral part?

We heard some pretty unbelievable two-sided arguments from the previous speaker, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism, as to why he believes it will be the same. I asked this Minister, this fountain of knowledge, this individual who thinks that he has each and all of the answers to regional inequality, why does his own appointed President of the Cape Breton Development Corporation disagree with him? Why does his own appointed Executive Vice-president of the corporation disagree with him? Why, Mr. Speaker? Because of the very fact that it will not have the same independence as the Cape Breton Development Corporation. By a single definition, the Deputy Minister of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is also made the head of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation which, accordingly, becomes a subordinate part of a regular government Department or, in the words of the Minister, and I quote, "a member of the ACOA family". That is quite different from the present legislation of the Industrial Development Division which comes under DEVCO.

The Vice-President of the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO was asked by Senator Graham before the Finance Committee:

> So once you have your money approved for the ensuing year, the entire authority as to how that money is spent is up to the Board of Directors?

Mr. Brown, appointed by and reaffirmed by this Government, answered the question by saying, "Yes". You cannot answer in the affirmative when you talk about the Cape Breton Enterprise Corporation. You cannot say that because it becomes an integral part of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, thereby reporting to the Deputy Minister. His head office is in Moncton, he resides in Halifax, and has operations in Cape Breton.

Another aspect of this issue concerns what was said by the Chairman and Acting President of DEVCO, Dr. Theresa MacNeil, appointed by the Government. She said the strength and reputation the corporation acquired in the past 20 years arose in the main from its independent status, its autonomous legal base, which provided the necessary flexibility in dealing with changing circumstances and new situations. She was asked in committee if she had concerns that Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation would not have the same kind of independence that Devco at present enjoys and has enjoyed for the last 20 years. Her answer was, yes, she had concerns.

Those are but two individuals who see many difficulties with the new organization of DEVCO. Yet the Government has intentionally tried to portray the splitting of this Bill as endangering money flowing to ACOA. If there was ever an untruthful portrayal of the facts, it is just that. No Member of Parliament, particularly on the government side, can say that splitting this Bill in any way delays or stops money going to ACOA. Members of the Government do not have to accept my word for that. They should accept the word of their own appointed Deputy Minister, Mr. McPhail. He said in committee that money for ACOA comes from the Estimates. Therefore, when the Minister of State for Tourism tries to portray the Opposition as holding up money for ACOA, I say, with great respect, that this completely and utterly false.

Senator Stewart from Antigonish-Guysborough asked a question of Mr. McPhail in the committee on June 23, 1988. He said:

> Am I correct that you said that you were operating on the basis of the appropriation made for your predecessor organization for the fiscal year 1988-89?
> MR. MCPHAIL: No, Sir. There is in the Estimates a separate provision for the agency.

On that same day Senator MacEachen put this question to Mr. McPhail:

> Yes, and your money comes from the Estimates, not this Bill?
> MR. MCPHAIL: Yes.

No more smoke-screens. No more false accusations by government Members. No more jumping in bed with the Government by the NDP on this matter.

Mr. Grisé: You don't jump in bed with them, you live there with them.

Mr. Dingwall: Their allegations are utterly false and they know that.

We have heard from Ministers of the Crown, but only one or two Members opposite, about the great things they have done for Cape Breton. They ought to be ashamed, utterly ashamed. It took them four years to conceive a legislative package to institute ACOA. The Prime Minister said in 1984: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". The people in my riding say, "Bull" you know what.

In 1984, when we were in power, the Industrial Development Division received $13.6 million. The Government reduced that to $10.6 million by 1988-89. That is a loss of $12.7 million since the Tories came to power. Don't tell me and my constituents, who are far more intelligent than Members opposite, that the Government has been treating them with equality and generosity. The facts are completely and utterly the opposite. Just the other day a fish plant closed in Glace Bay, throwing in excess of 300 women out of work, and the response of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) was to bob and weave, weave and bob, not reply to correspondence and not meet with the people concerned.

When we stand in this Chamber as Members from Cape Breton and ask the Government to split a Bill, which it should do based both on precedent and substance, we do it because we speak not only from the heart but from the head. It is clear to each and every living soul on the Island of Cape Breton that this is an affront to the independence DEVCO has enjoyed for a considerable period of time. It is an affront to regional economic development in Cape Breton.

I can say in conclusion only that government Members who support the raping of DEVCO as we now know it, and members of the NDP who support that attack, will answer for it in a general election, and when we are elected we will restore the original mandate to the corporation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just told us that the NDP wished to destroy the Industrial Development Division of Devco. No one from his Party was in Port Hawkesbury when we first heard about the major concerns with that division. It was an NDP member, myself, who moved the motions in committee to delete that part of the Act dealing with the destruction of the division. We also spoke against it in this House. Therefore, when the Hon. Member says what he says, he is creating a false impression in the minds of the voters of Cape Breton and Members of this House.

What I ask him to tell us is whether or not he supports and is prepared to stand up for the privileges of this House as against those of the Senate.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I am in your hands, but I always thought it was unparliamentary to comment on whether Members attend certain functions of a legislative nature. However, if the Hon. Member wishes to raise that concern perhaps we could refer to other situations where he and his Party have not particularly participated in debate on initiatives which have been taken on Cape Breton Island. I could recite for him a litany of those initiatives.

With regard to the substantive question, the motion before us, what he is saying to the coal miners of Cape Breton is that this is the first stage of the Tory Government's move to privatization of DEVCO through which we will see the elimination of the coal industry in Nova Scotia. He is saying that he supports that action by saying we will not split this legislation.

May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

HOUSING

TORONTO—PROPOSED USE OF RAILWAY LANDS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the recent $1.2 billion housing proposal by the City of Toronto to build affordable accommodation for 12,000 people offers yet another opportunity for the federal Government to demonstrate a tangible commitment to ease the crisis in affordable housing that has befallen Metro Toronto and other major urban centres.

To date the Conservative Government has failed to respond to proposals to utilize either parts of the Downsview Airforce Base or surplus postal lands for additional and reasonably priced residential units.

Now, in terms of the new St. Lawrence project, which includes 15 acres owned by the Canadian National Railways, a federal Crown corporation, I urge the Government to direct the Canadian National Railway to release these lands and become a co-operative partner in this housing plan.

The Government is quickly running out of time and opportunities. The urban housing malaise demands that the federal Government act swiftly and decisively.

OCEAN RESOURCES

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OIL FIELD

Mr. Gérald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, today, all Canadians were delighted to hear the news of the historic decision to proceed with the development of the Hibernia oil site, a project that will involve billions of dollars for the development of this offshore oil field. Thanks to this project, the people of Newfoundland can look to the future with confidence. They can look forward to being on an equal footing with their fellow Canadian citizens, to a future of dignity. While the impact of this megaproject will be felt across Canada the spinoffs will be very substantial for the Atlantic Provinces and Quebec, involving the purchase of supplies, manufacturing and engineering firms. Furthermore, thousand of jobs will be created.

I want to congratulate the governments of Canada and Newfoundland, as well as the members of the consortium who signed this historic agreement, and I congratulate the citizens of the Atlantic provinces who will benefit from this project.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

TRAINING PROGRAMS—IMMIGRANT WOMEN'S ACCESS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the Conservative Government was given another clear message about its language policy for immigrant women. The largest Roman Catholic women' s group in Ontario, the Catholic Women's League, has called for greater access for immigrant women to government subsidized language training programs. These women add their voices to many more groups that have urged progressive reforms of federal policy in this area.

Despite these numerous calls and despite a legal challenge under the Charter of Rights, the Government continues to ignore the fact that its language policy discriminates against women and keeps immigrants in low-paying, dead-end jobs.

Immigrant women need a fair language policy in order to integrate and contribute best to Canadian society. The Government would be wise to avoid a lengthy and costly legal battle, and start negotiating for better programs for immigrant women.

THE LATE CLAUDE BRUNET, C.M.

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, every person, every society needs role models who live exemplary lives and who impress us by their humanism and warmth. Today, we mourn the passing of Mr. Claude Brunet, the founding president of the Comité provincial des malades in Quebec, who championed the rights of the chronically ill, who was the moral and political support of the disabled and the apostle of the sick and all those who received medical care.

Mr. Brunet probably did more for the image of individuals who are stricken by illness than the most sweeping reforms of our health care system. Mr. Brunet was a true advocate, not because of any desire for financial gain but for humanitarian and highly laudable reasons. The passing of Mr. Brunet comes as a shock, but even after his death, he remains a symbol of the urge to live.

FISHERIES

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF HIGHLAND FISHERIES PLANT IN GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern and, indeed, disappointment with the Government of Canada and its lack of sensitivity toward the former employees of Highland Fisheries in Glace Bay. It should be noted that the people of Cape Breton have had to sustain a number of set-backs since the present Government came to power, but in particular the people of Glace Bay.

Recently Highland Fisheries, owned and operated by Clearwater Fine Foods of Bedford, Nova Scotia, indicated that its plant will be closed because the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) will not provide that plant or those employees with an enterprise allocation of fish. Some 310 individuals have lost their employment as a result.

I am further advised that the Minister has failed to meet personally with the Premier or senior management to discuss this situation. Almost 3,000 people from Glace Bay and surrounding areas have signed a petition calling upon the Government of Canada to provide the necessary quota of fish in order that this particular operation employing some 310, mainly, if not all, females, would re-open immediately. It is time that the Government of Canada showed some generosity and sensitivity to the workers at the Highland fish plant.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OILFIELD

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, today marks the beginning of a historic agreement involving the Government of Canada, the Government of the Province of Newfoundland, and a major oil consortium to develop the long awaited and often promised Hibernia oil project. The dream and promises of past Governments have finally become a reality under the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada.

Hibernia represents the largest single capital investment ever undertaken in Atlantic Canada and will usher in an era of major economic development in Newfoundland. Hibernia will open the door to the development of other energy resources off the shores of Atlantic Canada. The spin-off opportunities will be significant, not only in Newfoundland but throughout Atlantic Canada.

Efforts will be made to achieve Canadian content targets of 50 per cent, to maintain 66 per cent construction phase employment for Atlantic Canadians, and to target 80 to 95 per cent of engineering, design, and project management contracts for Canadian firms.

The Government of Canada's contribution represents an investment in the future of Newfoundland and an investment in the future of Atlantic Canada. Most important, it represents an investment in new jobs, new skills, and new technology for Atlantic Canadians.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

RESIGNATIONS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA CABINET

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): The Liberal-Conservative coalition in British Columbia is alive and well but looking for a new leader. Brian Smith from the Conservative wing of the Socreds and brazen Grace McCarthy of the Liberal wing have both resigned from the Vander Zalm Cabinet because Bill Vander Zalm runs a one-man band that always plays off key.

The number one enemy of the continued Liberal-Conservative coalition is no longer the NDP but Bill Vander Zalm, the very person the coalition chose two years ago as their saviour when the Government of Bill Bennett was totally discredited. Bill Vander Zalm hung on to power for the Socreds by running against the Bennett record and by promising reform. Now McCarthy and Smith try to restore their popularity by running against Vander Zalm.

This time the people of British Columbia will not be fooled. Regardless of their style, Bill Bennett, Grace McCarthy, Brian Smith, and Bill Vander Zalm all belong to the same right-wing coalition. They deserve each other. The people of British Columbia deserve better.

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

OPENING OF GEOSCIENTIFIC CENTRE IN STE-FOY

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday in Quebec City I was at the news conference where the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced that after an absence of 110 years, the Geological Survey of Canada would be back in Quebec with the opening of a geoscience centre in Ste-Foy, at the INRS.

In five years time, the centre will have a budget of $24.2 million, of which $13 million will be provided by the federal government. Furthermore, there will be 15 new jobs in research and management. Mr. Speaker, the centre will provide for a presence in Quebec of the Geological Survey of Canada and correct the existing imbalance by promoting increased participation by Francophone scientists in research and science projects.

This is an excellent initiative by our Government, and I want to thank the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who once again has helped Francophones to take their rightful place in this important field.

The entire scientific community in Quebec was delighted with the announcement, and the Minister, Raymond Savoie, Jacques Desnoyers of INRS and Gilles Boulet, President of the University of Quebec, were enthusiastic.

Once again, our Government has demonstrated its equitable treatment of our country's two language communities.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH TEN WEEKS' ELIGIBITY PERIOD FOR RURAL REGIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, for some months now I have been urging the government to distinguish rural regions from urban regions when statistics are compiled to determine the number of weeks required to be eligible for unemployment insurance. Unfortunately, the Government is continuing to use a system that is not fair to rural residents. The fact that the unemployment rate is actually twice as high in rural areas is not taken into account by the system. In those areas it is much more difficult to find jobs that last more than 10 weeks especially when one considers that many of those jobs depend on fishing seasons.

The Department of Employment and Immigration has just announced that once again for the next 30 days people living in south-eastern New-Brunswick will have to work 16 weeks to be eligible for unemployment insurance.

That is unfair, Mr. Speaker, and once again I beseech the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to act and to see to it that the eligibility period for the people of south-eastern New Brunswick is reduced to 10 weeks.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that after considering historic, economic, and political implications, some Canadians want to reject the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

After all, Prince Edward Islanders turned down the concept of creating a Canadian nation in 1867, a majority of New Brunswickers voted against it in 1865, and Newfoundlanders rejected the idea several times, all because of the historic, economic, and political implications.

Fortunately for all of us today, including the present free trade opponents, the visionaries, not the timid, prevailed and created Canada. If the visionaries prevail this time the free trade agreement will create a Canada that is economically stronger and politically more self assured than ever before.

SOUTH AFRICA—CALL ON GOVERNMENT TO FREE NELSON MANDELA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the federal New Democratic Party caucus, indeed, I am sure on behalf of all Members of Parliament, I rise to wish Nelson Mandela a happy seventieth birthday, and call on the Government of South Africa to free Nelson Mandela to permit him to take his rightful place in the history of South Africa and play a constructive role in the development of a democratic non-racial South Africa.

This is a day on which all peoples of the world are joining to express their unanimous wish that the South African Government finally wake up to reality, wake up to justice and free Nelson Mandela, and get rid of apartheid to permit the kind of South Africa for which the blacks of South Africa have been working so long, with Nelson Mandela as their leader.

IMMIGRATION

PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS—CONDUCT OF HEARINGS BY TELEPHONE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Court of Appeal has ruled that prospective immigrants overseas have the right to have an immigration hearing by telephone. This added condition will further increase the huge backlog of cases already present in our overburdened immigration system.

Let us consider the ramifications of the ruling. Huge costs will be incurred by the cost of overseas calls, and the amount of overtime that will be incurred due to the time differences between Canada and the rest of the world. Many Third World nations do not have the telecommunication technology and equipment in order to have reliable conference calls. Language will be a major problem. How will translators function over the phone, and what will be the cost?

The application of an oath will also pose legal problems. Thus this ruling will result in a costly nightmare that will create further chaos in our immigration system.

SMALL BUSINESS

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I salute the many people who successfully run small businesses across Canada. I share the disappointment of those who have suffered under Tory small business philosophy and policy.

You who have been squeezed through tax increases, through broken promises for a revamped Federal Business Development Bank policy, and through cuts to programs under the Small Business Loans Act, know that I have been listening and I sympathize with your concerns.

The Conservative Government has increased the cost of your telephones. It has reduced loan guarantees. It has begun charging small businesses for the right to borrow this money and it has increased the size of businesses that qualify for small business loans. It seems in the eyes of the Government that you have to be a big business to be considered a small business. That is Tory small business policy.

We need a much more constructive approach, including more streamlined access to a co-ordinated range of government services. I remind small businesses that have been left out in the cold by the Tories, that all hope is not lost. Change is not too far off. Fairness and equity for small business owners and their families are the policy concerns of the Liberal Party of Canada.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—MEMBER'S POSITION

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, last week in this House the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) produced a report I had written to my constituents in which I related my thoughts on the proposal to purchase nuclear powered submarines. The Member told this Chamber that I had "recently stated" my opinions on the issue, and later suggested to the media that this is a new development.

The Hon. Member was wrong, as he often is. I wrote that piece in June, 1987, when the Defence White Paper was issued. It was published in all of the newspapers in my riding of Nanaimo—Alberni some 13 months ago, which tells us a great deal about the abilities of the NDP research department.

The lengthy debate on this issue also tells us a lot about the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada and our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). This is a Party of discussion and debate. This is a Party that listens to what Canadians have to say.

The Prime Minister has given this nation single digit inflation, single digit unemployment, and single digit interest rates. Prime Minister Trudeau only gave us the digit in British Columbia.

Trudeau called backbenchers "nobodies". The Prime Minister has allowed us to be called "somebodies". That is why the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada will be leading this nation into the next century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HISTORIC SITES

IMPORTANCE OF LACHINE RAPIDS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, recently our very able Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) publicly recognized a most noteworthy natural feature of the environment situated in our riding of LaSalle, the Lachine Rapids. In fact, a bronze plaque confirming the importance of that part of the St. Lawrence, both for tourism and from the historical point of view will be put up next August close to that enchanting site.

All the constituents of the wonderful riding of LaSalle—Émard want to seize the opportunity of this unique event which constitutes national recognition of the site to issue a most cordial invitation to all Canadians. ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OILFIELD—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PLANS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning in Newfoundland and Labrador, the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland announced with great fanfare and excitement their plans with respect to the development of Hibernia oil.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: The province has not seen such a commotion since former Premier Frank Moores fired off dynamite on both sides of the Strait of Belle Isle commencing a $1 billion hydro tunnel project. Frank Moores was re-elected, but to this day we have not seen the hydro tunnel project.

With this in mind, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the following words contained in the document released this morning in St. John's, Newfoundland, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Premier Peckford, mean:

> The execution of this Statement of Principles by the signatories hereto is not intended to and does not create legally enforceable rights or obligations between the signatories hereto or between any of the signatories hereto and any third parties.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister separate himself from the enthusiasm of this photo opportunity for a moment and explain those words to the House and the people of Newfoundland and Labrador?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that an Hon. Member from Newfoundland would criticize a very important national and regional project that will be good for Canada, good for the Atlantic region, and particularly good for Newfoundlanders. It will generate some 47,000 person-years of employment in Canada, and almost 35,000 person-years in work for Newfoundland.

What has been announced today is a Statement of Principles. That is precisely what it is. The finite details of this will be worked out in a formalized legal fashion.

DEFINITIVE AGREEMENT QUERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister says he finds my reaction surprising. I tell him that my reaction, and the reaction of all Newfoundlanders, is born of experience. We heard Premier Peckford announce this project once in 1979, we heard it again in 1982, each time coupled with the calling of an election.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What's Turner's position on Hibernia? We know what Trudeau's position was.

Mr. Tobin: On both occasions the hopes of Newfoundlanders were crushed and on both occasions many Newfoundland investors lost sizeable amounts of money. How can the Government this morning in Newfoundland describe the announcement not, as the Deputy Prime Minister just said, as a statement of principles, not as a progress report, not as a report card, but as a firm agreement, when in fact, and I quote again from the document:

> The signatories hereto will use their best efforts to finalize a definitive agreement or agreements—embodying this Statement of Principles as expeditiously as possible but in any event by March 31, 1989.

That is eight months hence, one day before April Fool's Day. What do those words mean? Will the Deputy Prime Minister answer?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious the Hon. Member has never been involved in an agreement of this nature.

Mr. Tobin: I would like to be.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is quite usual. This is the way in which a major project of this nature proceeds. When the Hon. Member suggests that there was disappointment in Newfoundland, I can tell him that there was disappointment in Newfoundland when the province lost two court battles over whether in fact it had any share in the ownership. This Government acknowledged there was a partnership in terms of the ownership of those resources, which was enshrined in the Atlantic Accord.

This has been a positive step by step process, and today Canadians right across the country, but particularly in Newfoundland, are welcoming this announcement because it is a good announcement for Canada, it is a good announcement for Newfoundland, and it is a good announcement for Atlantic Canada.

REQUEST THAT NEWFOUNDLAND INVESTORS BE GUARANTEED AGAINST POSSIBLE LOSSES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister, who should know better, and ordinarily does, now attempts to drag the decisions of the courts into a partisan arena.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: We are talking about the credibility not only of the Government of Canada but the credibility of the Government of Newfoundland which, for the third time, has trumped up a Statement of Principles and called it a definite agreement.

The Deputy Prime Minister has the document the same as I do. Will he now not admit that this statement that I have quoted, these words I have quoted, are an escape clause allowing any one of the partners to walk away at any time from the so-called Statement of Principles announced this morning? If he is not prepared to admit that, if he is not prepared to admit that unassailable fact, will he give an ironclad commitment today to Newfoundlanders and, in particular to Newfoundland investors, that any money they may lose this time, as they have twice before because of a less than forthright statement by politicians anxious for an election call, those losses will be guaranteed by the Government of Canada? Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to say that today in the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Member has suggested, I was not criticizing any court action. I was simply criticizing the policy and position of the former Liberal Government which would not acknowledge the fact that the province had any share or potential ownership in the resources.

Mr. Tobin: Will you acknowledge you do not have an agreement? Will you acknowledge that?

Mr. Mazankowski: It was in fact a Liberal policy that was militating against the interests of Newfoundland. That was clearly the case.

What we have here is a definitive Statement of Principles which has been agreed to—

Ms. Copps: Tories with principles?

Mr. Mazankowski: —by the parties; the consortium, the federal Government, and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland. I am sure, as the Government of Canada negotiated the Atlantic Accord with the Government of Newfoundland, as the Government of Canada negotiated the Western Accord with the western provinces, this policy will be implemented on the basis of that, and it is a day on which all Canadians should herald a very major development based on a very definitive and practical policy.

TERMS OF STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I also want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about this so-called Statement of Principles which in fact has to be the most unprincipled statement ever put forward because the player with the least gives the most. The companies get billions of dollars and an ironclad guarantee. The Government of Canada gets its duties and its taxes all paid. Yet Newfoundland, little Newfoundland with the highest unemployment rate in Canada, is asked to give up its taxes and to lower its corporate tax and to pay $100 million on top of that. Why is it that the player with the least has to give the most? And isn't this in fact the biggest rip-off since Churchill Falls?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's rationale rather amusing because, under the Liberal policy, the Government and the people of Newfoundland would have gotten nothing, absolutely nothing.

Mr. Rompkey: One hundred per cent of royalties. That was guaranteed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Absolutely nothing. He asks what Newfoundlanders are going to get. Well, 47,000 person-years for Canada and almost 35,000 person-years for Newfoundland. In terms of the macro economic impact of Hibernia for Newfoundland, it will be $11.6 billion in 1987 dollars. In terms of incremental employment, it will be 94,350 person-years of employment. If that isn't good for Newfoundland, I don't know what is.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Liberal offer was 100 per cent of royalties to Newfoundland. That was the Liberal offer. We have been offered jobs before. Under Churchill Falls we sold our birthright for a few menial jobs and we are not doing it again.

An Hon. Member: Who did it?

An Hon. Member: Joey Smallwood.

Mr. Rompkey: On this agreement, which comes to conclusion on April Fool's Day, I say to the Deputy Prime Minister, fool us once, shame on you; fool us twice, shame on us. We are not going to be fooled again, and I ask if this is not simply the greatest rip-off since Churchill Falls.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we have a clear picture of where the Liberal Party now stands. It is against the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We saw that demonstrated today. It is against Hibernia. It is against Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: We are against lies, l-i-e-s.

Mr. Mazankowski: And if what they are saying is they want—

Mr. Tobin: That's what we are against. You wouldn't know that if it jumped up and bit you.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. members from Newfoundland and Labrador are suggesting that they are going to tear up this deal, well, I guess that will be their position. Let them suffer the consequences.

Mr. Rompkey: We will offer the old deal. We will offer our deal.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE PROJECT WILL PROCEED

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, while the people of Newfoundland and Labrador would welcome economic activity if it happens as a result of this Hibernia announcement today, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, in view of the fact that the Statement of Principles signed does not create legally enforceable rights, is not binding on any of the parties unless there is a real agreement reached by March of 1989, what guarantee is there that this is not just a pre-election scheme by both the Canadian Government and the Newfoundland Government? What guarantee is there that this project is going to go ahead at all?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the guarantee is that you have the signature of the Government of Canada, the signature of the Government of Newfoundland, and the signature of the consortium.

ROYALTY PAYMENTS TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, an examination of this deal shows that Newfoundland is drastically reducing and forgoing enormous royalties to allow its own oil to be developed. This deal provides minimum royalties to Newfoundland, a far cry from the 10 per cent to 35 per cent that Newfoundland was talking about and proposed years ago. Does this deal not end up being just like another Churchill Falls for Newfoundland—only construction jobs, and a long-term role of watching our energy flow out of the province with very little economic return?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, day after day in this House we hear from Members from Newfoundland talking about the high unemployment level and the fact that there is a desire and a need for regional economic development. Here we find out today about a very major project that has been in the making for some 10 years. While it should be heralded as a major breakthrough, we find Hon. Members criticizing it.

In terms of jobs, as I said, 47,000 person-years direct and indirect will be created, with 35,000 person-years for Newfoundland. In terms of the permanent jobs there will be 1,100 direct jobs in Newfoundland, 2,450 indirect jobs, for a total of 3,500 jobs, after the project is completed. In incremental terms to the Gross Domestic Product it will add some $15.1 billion in 1987 dollars to Canada, $11.6 billion to Newfoundland, 106,900 person-years of work for Canada and 94,350 person-years of work for Newfoundland.

These are not figures that are pulled out of the air. These are figures that have been developed by the Governments and the consortium. The Hon. Member opposite should be congratulating the Government of Newfoundland and the Government of Canada rather than criticizing them.

REQUEST FOR JOB GUARANTEES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister produces figures that he said are developed by the consortium. Even in this non-binding agreement all the provisions related to jobs and procurement for Newfoundland and for Canada are only targets. They are projections. There are no guarantees.

Why has the Government not insisted that the oil consortium guarantee job content for Canada and Newfoundland? Why has it not guaranteed that the goods and services required for production will come from Newfoundland? Why are they just targets? Why are there no guarantees? Does this have something to do with the trade deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is an important project, not only for the economic development fortunes of Newfoundland and the Atlantic region—

Mr. Tobin: An important photo opportunity, but it is no deal.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: If you want a job after the election you better listen to this.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Are you bribing him? Mr. Justice Tobin?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether that was an offer or a threat.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I was trying to say, this is not only an important project for economic development and job-creating activities in Newfoundland and the Atlantic region but, indeed, for all of Canada. What is more important is that it is important in terms of security of supply. This will develop between 520 million and 650 million barrels of oil which will help Canada attain and achieve its self-security and, in particular, supply the Atlantic requirements. That should be welcome news for everybody.

The NDP, we know, and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, expressed views about the frigate contract going to Saint John, New Brunswick. Now we have a Member right from Newfoundland criticizing the Hibernia project. We can only assume that the NDP are against the Atlantic region—

Mr. Cassidy: Balderdash!

Mr. Mazankowski: This Government is not against the Atlantic region. It is for the Atlantic region. That is why this program is going forward.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COME-BY-CHANCE OIL REFINERY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question, likewise, is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister says that this deal will help security of supply in Atlantic Canada. That is not true. There is nothing in the agreement that says that any of the oil has to be maintained for refining or use in Atlantic Canada. With the free trade agreement there is no way to ensure that it will.

Also, Come-by-Chance is the only refinery in Canada which cannot sell into the Canadian market. After the free trade agreement it will be the only refinery in North America which cannot sell into Canada.

Why is the Government not ensuring that some of this oil be processed in the Come-by-Chance refinery and sold in Canada? Why is the Minister not assuring us that at least a portion of this oil will be used to meet the security supply problem in eastern Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have a little difficulty in following the twisted and distorted logic of the Hon. Member. He knows very well that there is nothing in the free trade agreement that compels the Government of Canada or any province to sell energy to the United States at any given time. That is strictly within the control of the province.

This project is being developed for the security of supply, for job opportunities, and for regional economic development, not only in Atlantic Canada, not only in Newfoundland, but right across the country.

PAYMENT OF ROYALTIES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the fact that it has nothing to do with security of supply, because it is not there, it is not an agreement, it is an agreement to agree. It is a Statement of Principles.

When the Prime Minister was campaigning in the 1984 federal election he said that oil off the shore of Newfoundland would be treated exactly the same as oil inland in western Canada. Yet Newfoundland gets a small fraction of the royalties that are available to the provinces in western Canada.

Why is it that the province in Canada that can give the least economically is paying such a high price for this development project?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that under the Liberal policy the people and the Government of Newfoundland would have gotten nothing.

Mr. Rompkey: That's not true and you know it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You were in Cabinet and you didn't know it.

Mr. Rompkey: Completely inaccurate.

Mr. Mazankowski: This deal is developed consistent with the Atlantic Accord. The Hon. Member knows very well that there have been royalty concessions on projects such as Syncrude and Suncor, and if the provinces which own the resources wish to make a royalty concession, to get the resource developed and to get economic development stimulated, then that is clearly within their prerogative. That is precisely what the Government of Newfoundland chose to do.

The over-all net benefit to the Government and to the people of Newfoundland is clearly a positive one.

FEDERAL COURT RULING ON POLITICAL ACTIVITY BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister with regard to the historic decision of the Federal Court of Canada last Friday which I regard as a great victory for the men and women who work for the Public Service of Canada.

As the Minister knows, the Federal Court struck down Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act as being contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, thereby removing the restrictions on political activity by federal government employees.

My question is the following. Will the Government undertake not to appeal this decision to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, naturally, we are looking at the judgment in some detail now, having received it on Friday. We will consider the implications of the decision.

In that regard I think special mention should be made of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West who has given leadership in this House with respect to the question of political rights of public servants.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is interesting to note in the course of the judgment that only part of Section 32 was struck down on the basis that there was not sufficient definition of the rules with respect to the Public Service being involved in political activity. All Members of Parliament would share the view expressed by the courts that political neutrality in the Public Service in positions which involve public policy and dealing with Governments is a desirable objective.

We in our Party have demonstrated by our policy that political rights are a priority for us with respect to public servants. We intend to take the appropriate action on this particular issue.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the Minister of Justice that he and his Government have consistently opposed efforts made by back-benchers on his side of the House as well as by members of this Party to get political rights for federal employees. They have not lifted a finger in order to implement the promise they made back in 1984.

I ask the Minister whether the Government still upholds the promise made in 1984 in which the Progressive Conservative Party said that it favoured a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements, and that these restrictions were unnecessary and might not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Is that a promise that one can trust, Mr. Speaker, or is the Government going to back away from that promise and take this matter to appeal, rather than allowing a good decision to stand?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were to read the judgment he would find that the court indicated that there is the capacity in the Government to define specifically the limitations with respect to political activity. The Hon. Member would have to agree that we would have to look at the appropriate legislation that should be applied with respect to the public service.

Having said that, I do not think that any Government, in terms of its relationship with the public service, has had more success with Presidents of the Treasury Board than this Government. We have moved forward with respect to five of the six items which we were negotiating with the public service unions.

Mr. Cassidy: Not on this particular issue.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: With this particular issue.

We are now examining it, and especially in light of this decision.

Mr. Cassidy: Only because you have to.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: When the Hon. Member says that we should not look at the court decision, I think he is singing another tune. I am sure the Hon. Member would agree with us that we want to make sure what the law is and what the Charter implications are. I do not rule out the possibility of appeal to make sure that we have the highest court in the land looking at the law with respect to the Charter and public service rights. We have not made a decision. We have not ruled out the possibility of appeal until we have had a chance to look at it.

If we can receive some co-operation from the Opposition we might look at some legislative initiatives that we can pass in short order. Perhaps the Hon. Member could have his House Leader consider that possibility.

REQUEST THAT SECTION 32 OF PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT BE SUSPENDED PENDING APPEAL

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. In his capacity as Attorney General I would like to ask him, if a decision is taken to appeal the Federal Court of Appeal decision to the Supreme Court, would he undertake or give serious consideration to not asking, as part of that application for leave, that Section 32 be considered to be reinstated pending the disposition of the appeal so that the judgment of the court, until it is appealed, will stand?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate the point that I think all Members would agree with, that it is important to have neutrality in our Public Service. We would not want to have a politicized Public Service in this country.

I can assure the Hon. Member that we will be consulting with him and with other Members. I will be consulting with my colleagues who have responsibility in this regard as to what would be the best policy to give some stability to the system and to allow us to move forward. It may take the form of legislative action, in which case I know the Hon. Member has a very substantial interest because of his leadership and his Bill. He can rest assured that, as far as the Government is concerned, we will be wanting his input in this whole matter.

PUBLIC SERVANT'S RIGHT TO PARTICIPATE IN POLITICS— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, many had been rejoicing since Friday, but the news that the Minister is considering appealing has many people worried and shows once again that the Conservative Government is unable to make a decision.

The Government promised rights for public servants four years ago, but it took a court decision to say that they do have rights. Now we hear the Minister saying that he is not sure whether he will appeal or not.

Can the Minister assure this House today that he will not appeal the decision and that he will let the court decision to give full political rights to public servants stand?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to remind the Hon. Member and the House of the point that I raised earlier. This decision has been based upon the lack of precision and specificity in the current rules with respect to political involvement. As I understand the court's decision the rules were too broad and were not properly defined.

This court by its decision, and other court decisions, have indicated that the principle of political neutrality is an important position to be taken with respect to the Public Service.

We are examining the decision with a view to establishing an appropriate legislative framework. I have not ruled out any possibilities at this time, and I think that is fair, until we have looked at the whole decision and see the underlying implications. That is not in the nature of a threat. That is simply prudence which any Attorney General would want to take when there is an important decision such as this under the Charter.

I reiterate to the Hon. Member and to all Members in the House that it would be our intention to look at this very carefully to see what the legislative options are for us. That will require the co-operation of the Opposition, because we have a very heavy legislative load. If we receive the co-operation of the Opposition we would want to ensure that we put forward a régime that is fair and consistent with our long standing and well known party position and government position, and I hope that we can count on the help of the Hon. Member.

EMPLOYEES OF CROWN CORPORATIONS AND AGENCIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Federal Court of Appeal applies to approximately 214,000 public servants under the Public Service Employment Act.

Many Crown corporations and agencies, with possibly over 300,000 public sector employees, over the years have copied the directives—the restrictive directives, mind you—of the Public Service Commission in regard to political participation.

Given that these corporations and agencies over the past 20 to 25 years have literally given their employees restrictive political rights, will the Minister and the Government be clear and issue directives today to Crown corporations and agencies regarding the political participation of their employees so that we do not create two groups of public sector employees—those who have rights, and those who do not have rights? Will the Minister act on that today?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member, who I think is a fair person, that this Government has moved, in the time that we have been honoured to serve as government, with our relationships with public servants and with respect to the whole question of the organization of Crown corporations.

We have brought a rationale and a responsible approach that were lacking in the previous Government. I know that the Hon. Member was critical of the Liberal Government because of the fact that it did not take steps in these areas. We are moving on those matters. We have committed ourselves to action. We will carry those commitments out. We will need the help of the Hon. Members in the Opposition so that they do not delay the matter and will co-operate with us in the sense of making sure that public servants' interests are served in the proper way.

SPORTS

WORLD JUNIOR TRACK AND FIELD CHAMPIONSHIPS—BROADCASTING FACILITIES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, and it is placed in light of the fact that we seem to be enjoying Christmas in July.

The World Junior Track and Field Championships will be held in the great riding of Nickel Belt in northeastern Ontario and the Sudbury region beginning on July 26. To be able to broadcast internationally to the 150 countries that are represented at the games the broadcast facilities needed some $684,000. They are now short by $300,000.

We are pleased with the $115,000 that we did receive from the Government. Would the Government consider digging deep into the bag to see if we could get the other $300,000?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, replying on behalf of the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, all of us want to thank him and the Department for the sensitivity brought to this issue. We have been trying to have these types of games right across Canada, as the Hon. Member knows. I also thank him for his words of thanks for facilitating the games, together with many volunteers, and I am sure those are the people we should thank first.

The Government of Canada has tried to move those games forward. The Nordic Games in Thunder Bay are another example.

I cannot give the Member any specifics on his request, but I can assure him that I will take it back to the Minister and we will discuss it.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION ON ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as all Members know, we have all had our sympathies with the Sudbury basin when the price of nickel was down. It is a single industry town. The community has since made great strides in moving forward. This was a great attempt to project the community internationally with all the possibilities that would ensue. In light of the fact that we need to have an answer soon, will the Minister mind getting the machinery moving because the games open on the twenty-sixth?

• (1450)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct. A lot of us, including Members from northern Ontario, were attempting to try to build a broader base than the metal industry; tourism to name another one, and, for example, the whole matter of the arts community and what has been done in Sudbury in that field.

I will look into this matter along with my colleagues. While I cannot give any guarantees, obviously, I can assure my hon. friend that we will see what we can do.

FISHERIES

HIGHLAND FISHERIES PLANT IN GLACE BAY, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ENTERPRISE ALLOCATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Over 300 employees of Highland Fisheries in Glace Bay have been informed by their owners, Clearwater Fine Foods of Halifax, that their plant is closed and will be closed because the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will not give that plant or its trawlers an enterprise allocation.

Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans indicate to those employees and to the people of Glace Bay specifically when he received a written request from Highland Fisheries and why he is refusing to grant this enterprise allocation when, in fact, he knows the unemployment situation in Glace Bay is chronic and getting worse as a result of this particular action?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a problem of extreme concern to the fishermen and their families of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. It is a problem of which I have been aware for several weeks. This is not an uncommon problem in some of the communities where there are smaller fish plants which did not receive large enterprise allocations under the enterprise allocation scheme introduced by the former Liberal Government in 1984.

The Hon. Member well knows that Clearwater Fine Foods does have enterprise allocations. In fact, it has uncaught enterprise allocations for the present year. These are dispersed according to a process in which all of the companies and the Atlantic Council of Fisheries Ministers engage each autumn. I cannot violate that process by making a special exceptional allocation to this plant when there are still fish in the water that could be caught. We gave Clearwater additional enterprise allocations in the northern waters this year for vessels between 65 and 100 feet.

The problem arises for other reasons relating to market prices and not to a shortage of fish available to Clearwater Fine Foods.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): That answer, Mr. Speaker, is in direct contradiction to what senior company officials are saying to the employees.

The Minister will know that the chronic unemployment situation in Glace Bay is there now. People need the assistance of the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Cape Breton Advisory Committee has recommended an enterprise allocation for that company, the provincial Minister of Fisheries has agreed with that particular request. Based upon fairness, equity, and because of the chronic unemployment, on behalf of the employees and on behalf of the community, will the Minister not now reconsider his position of some time ago and give an enterprise allocation to that plant and to the trawlers at Highland Fisheries, thereby enabling those workers to have some dignity for themselves and their families?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may not like my answer. I said that we had exercised equity and fairness. We have been bound by an enterprise allocation scheme which his Government created in 1983-84. Under that enterprise allocation scheme, which I have supplemented in the past year, there are still fish waiting to be caught by Clearwater Fine Foods which could be delivered to the Glace Bay plant rather than to the other plants to which it is delivering.

The problem results because of a softening price and demand for fish in the market at the present time, and because Clearwater is not willing to continue to employ these workers, notwithstanding the fact that there are fish available to Clearwater's plant if Clearwater chose to go out and catch them.

CFB PETAWAWA—FORMER TROOPER'S ALLEGATIONS OF MISCONDUCT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence.

I met on the weekend with a former trooper, Don Laird, of the Royal Canadian Dragoons based in Petawawa, Ontario. He made a series of very serious allegations of misconduct at that base, which included doctors' orders being ignored or disobeyed by field commanders, harassment of injured or ill troopers, acts of brutality encouraged or ignored by NCOs and junior officers, drunkenness while on duty and while operating unsafe vehicles, as well as drunkenness and fighting going on in the barracks, vomiting in hallways, rooms, and in washing machines. Has the Minister caused an investigation to be launched and, if so, what facts have so far come to light?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. This matter has come to my attention since the newspaper reports and we are very concerned about it. They are serious allegations.

I have asked my officials for a complete report. Further to that, I have ordered that a board of inquiry be established to investigate the facts, to do an adjudication and to render a decision.

REQUEST THAT RCMP PARTICIPATE IN INVESTIGATION

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): I appreciate the answer and what the Minister has done to date, Mr. Speaker. I would like to suggest to the Minister that it would not look right in my view if at Petawawa we have the same people judging the same people, the same officers looking into the same mess in which they may have been involved—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I am not talking about the wet or the dry mess either.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I am talking about the problem, and it is a serious one.

Will the Minister engage a third investigative party such as the RCMP to be part of that investigation, so that not only will there be total objectivity but there will be the appearance of objectivity from a third disinterested party?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that the board of inquiry will be made up of three people. This comes under Mobile Command based in St-Hubert.

I take the Hon. Member's representations and I thank him for them.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMERCIAL BLOOD BANKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Several weeks ago the Minister for International Trade stated when asked questions about the relationship between the free trade agreement and blood banks, "The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has nothing to do with blood".

We see today from press reports that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in fact, confirmed that under the free trade agreement American blood banks for profit will be allowed to operate in Canada.

Who is speaking for the Government on this issue?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, maybe I can clear up the misunderstanding which the Hon. Member has. The Minister cleared it up a few weeks ago but I will just repeat the situation. First, the Government strongly favours the current not-for-profit blood supply system. Second, there is nothing in the free trade agreement that will interfere in any way whatever with the continuation of the non-profit system administered through the Canadian Red Cross, nothing.

The agreement imposes no obligation on Governments regarding the purchase of blood and blood products. Therefore, Governments will remain free to use the Red Cross as the sole supplier to the health care system. The non-profit blood system can be maintained.

INCLUSION OF COMMERCIAL BLOOD BANKS IN AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has confirmed that the free trade agreement will allow American commercial blood banks to operate in Canada. To clarify the matter, why did the federal Government put commercial blood banks in the agreement, if it is opposed to the commercialization or sale of blood in Canada? Why did they put commercial blood banks in the free trade agreement?

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one point which the Hon. Member should keep in mind is that the Canadian Red Cross today purchases about 70 per cent of blood content supplies especially for haemophiliacs from the United States and Europe. There is a use for purchasing offshore—

Ms. Copps: You are commercializing blood.

Mr. McDermid: —and the Hon. Member should keep that in mind. I am sure she would not want to cut that off.

Ms. Copps: Blood for profit now.

Mr. McDermid: Second, the agreement does include commercial blood bank laboratories under its services chapter. This simply means that Canadian and American commercially operated blood banks, where they are allowed to exist, must be treated equally. That is all it says, nothing more and nothing less. The Hon. Member is chasing a pipe-dream with that one.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Federal Court of Appeal has ruled that prospective immigrants overseas have the right to an immigration hearing by telephone. This new procedure will cause a further delay in the existing backlog of cases. Will the Government appeal the decision to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have always said that immigrants and refugees should have, and we have always made real efforts to provide, a fair hearing. The implications of this decision are still being examined by my Department and I will be getting back to the House with an answer as soon as we have gone through all the ramifications.

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OILFIELD—STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the Hibernia Statement of Principles released today. This statement does not come into effect as a binding agreement until as late as March 31, 1989. That is after the trade deal will have come into effect if the Government is successful in its efforts.

My question is this. Is it because it comes into effect after the trade deal is in place that there is no binding commitment included in this statement with respect to performance requirements, Canadian content requirements, and the employment of Newfoundlanders on this project?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should first point out that the document indicates that the binding agreement embodying the Statement of Principles would be implemented as expeditiously as possible, but in any event no later than March 31, 1989. It is anticipated that it will be done much sooner than that since most of the hurdles have been overcome.

The conditions with respect to employment are pretty clearly outlined, as is the degree to which this activity will take place using Canadian supplies. Something in the order of 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the total project will be Canadian supplied. As well, there will be 14,500 person-years of direct Canadian employment. Indirect and induced employment would raise the total impact on Canada to 47,000 person years, almost 35,000 for Newfoundland alone.

It is all contained in the documentation and I would recommend the Hon. Member read it in full because he will then get a clear picture of what the deal is all about.

CANADIAN CONTENT—ABSENCE OF GUARANTEE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the document I have in front of me says the project owners estimate that two-thirds of total pre-production employment will be provided by Canadians. "Estimate"! There is absolutely no guarantee.

Can the Minister tell me why there is no guarantee, no commitment, no specific promise to this country and the people of Newfoundland with respect to Canadian content or employment? Is it not because we are unable to do that in the future under the trade deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that last question is no.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that that concludes Question Period.

PRIVILEGE

HURTIG ENTERPRISES COURT ACTION—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to Hon. Member's attention a matter of some importance which was raised on Wednesday, May 4, 1988, by the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), and commented upon by other Hon. Members on both sides of the House. On that day the Hon. Member raised a question of privilege alleging that his rights and privileges as a Member of the House had been breached as a result of a lawsuit commenced against himself and other parties.

[Translation]

I have given this matter serious consideration and carefully reviewed the arguments offered by all the Hon. Members who participated in this discussion and I thank them for assisting the Chair. I have also consulted the relevant authors and precedents on the matter, and I am now prepared to make a determination on the question at issue.

[English]

For the benefit of Hon. Members and the public the Chair would like to summarize the facts as they were presented by the Hon. Member in his intervention. On October 14, 1987, the Hon. Member for Athabasca placed on the Order Paper Question No. 207, which reads as follows:

> Since April 1968, have (a) grants (b) loans (c) loan guarantees (d) contracts been provided by the Government to Hurtig Publishers of Edmonton or other Hurtig enterprises and if so, how many and, in each case (i) on what date (ii) in what amount (iii) for what purpose?

In accordance with the rules of the House, the Government provided a written answer on January 27, 1988. Essentially, that answer indicated that certain government Departments and agencies granted various amounts of money to Hurtig Publishers Ltd. for the purposes of training programs, sales and marketing assistance, and feasibility studies, inter alia, as reported at page 15125 of Hansard for May 4, 1988.

At that point, so that everyone understands this, the Hon. Member had done what he was completely entitled to do. He had used the written question procedure to ask the Government certain questions. The Government then responded to those questions.

The Hon. Member stated in his argument that, in late February, as a result of the answer tabled in the House, he received a letter from a law firm in Edmonton, acting for Mr. Mel Hurtig, which intended to proceed with a defamation action against the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member further advised the Chair that he then received a second letter in late March from another firm acting for Hurtig Publishers Ltd., stating that their client intended to bring an action against him pursuant to the Defamation Act. There is of course in each province an Act which sets out the law of defamation in that province.

The Hon. Member expressed the view in this Chamber that both letters were based on the information he had received in reply to his question on the Order Paper and that these two letters advising him of the intention to proceed with the lawsuit were, and I quote the Hon. Member:

> —a deliberate attempt to intimidate me from seeking further information with regard to grants given by the Government to Mel Hurtig or Hurtig Publishers.

I understand that the Hon. Member has now received a copy of the Statement of Claim in the action referred to, and of course a copy has also been obtained by the Chair.

• (1510)

In his remarks the Hon. Member for Athabasca argued that his "privilege to speak freely without fear" in the House had been violated by the action brought against him which "goes to the very heart of a Member's obligation, a Member's right, a Member's privilege to ask questions in a free and unfettered way in the House of Commons".

The position as put forward by the Hon. Member for Athabasca was supported by the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who stressed that freedom of speech is a fundamental privilege and that, in his words, "Hon. Members are also to be free from intimidation or threats that would try in some way to direct their actions".

In the same vein the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) reiterated the principle that, as he said, "Nothing can impede the privilege of a Member to ask questions in the House, either by written deposition or orally during Question Period". The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier quoted from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 55, which reads in part as follows:

> The privilege of freedom of speech is both the least questioned and the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House and in commitee. It is primarily guaranteed in the British Bill of Rights . . .

There can be no question as to the relevance and appropriateness of the principles invoked by Hon. Members in their interventions. Indeed, as all Hon. Members very well know, the privilege of freedom of speech is so fundamental that this House could not discharge its constitutional functions without it.

[English]

British parliamentary institutions, from which our own system was derived, were afforded the protection of the Bill of Rights three centuries ago. It is interesting that the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association is presently celebrating the three hundredth anniversary of the Bill of Rights at Westminster.

Article 9 of that Act clearly states:

> The freedom of speech and debates, or proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament.

Careful reading of that provision raises at least one particular concern in relation to the matter now before us. Essentially the privilege of freedom of speech protects "proceedings in Parliament". The question to be answered then is, what constitutes proceedings in Parliament?

This phrase has never been exactly and completely defined by statute, by the courts of law, or by the House itself. In its narrow sense the expression is used to denote the formal transaction of business in the House or in committee. Traditionally it covers both the asking of a question and the giving of a written notice of such question, and also includes everything said or done by a Member in the exercise of his or her functions as a Member of the House, either in the House or in any committee of the House in the transaction of parliamentary business. I refer to May's Twentieth Edition, page 92.

In its wider sense "proceedings in Parliament" is used to include matters connected with or ancillary to the formal transaction of business. Obviously, written questions placed on the Order Paper are to be considered part of proceedings in Parliament. In effect, they are time-saving substitutes for speaking in the House. As stated in May's Twentieth Edition, page 92:

> While taking part in the proceedings of a House, Members, officers and strangers are protected by the same sanction as that by which freedom of speech is protected, namely, that they cannot be called to account for their actions by any authority other than the House itself.

I emphasize again, "while taking part in the proceedings of a House". The insertion of the term "proceedings" in the Bill of Rights of 1688 gave statutory authority to the privilege of freedom of speech, which was later clearly recognized in the law case of Dillon v. Balfour reported in 1887, 20, Irish Law Reports at page 600. The judgment stated that words spoken by a Member of Parliament in the House of Commons are absolutely privileged and the court has no jurisdiction to entertain an action in respect of them. I cite Halsbury's Laws of England, Fourth Edition, Volume 28, page 52 as follows:

> When Parliament is sitting and statements are made in either House, the member making them is not amenable to the civil or criminal law, even if the statements are false to his knowledge, and a conspiracy to make such statements would not make the members guilty of it amenable to the criminal law.

While a member of the House receives absolute protection and is free to speak as he sees fit during a debate in Parliament, subject only to the rules of the House, it is not so when the Member chooses either to speak or to publish his speech outside the House. The same privilege does not extend to statements made outside a "proceeding in Parliament" even if it is a reproduction of what was said in the House.

[English]

In the first edition of his book published in 1844, Erskine May expressed that reservation as follows:

> —a Member may state whatever he thinks fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character of individuals, and is protected by his privilege from any action for libel; but if he should proceed to publish his speech, his printed statement will be regarded as a separate publication unconnected with any proceeding in Parliament.

The same principle is reiterated in the Twentieth Edition at page 202 where it states:

> —when a matter is a proceeding of the House, beginning and terminating within its own walls, it is obviously outside the jurisdiction of the courts . . . But if a proceeding of the House issues in action affecting the rights of persons exercisable outside the House (as e.g., in the publication of a part of the proceedings of the House . . .) then the person who published . . . will be within the jurisdiction of the courts.

That does not mean, of course, that the person who published may, given the circumstances, be subject to condemnation by the courts. It only means that if published outside, that publication would be subject to the courts but all the defences which would be available to any other citizen would, of course, be available to the Member of Parliament if published outside this place. To make it very clear, when I use the word "publish" I mean either to publish in print or to express verbally to others by way of television, radio, or otherwise.

To expand on this further, in Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, Joseph Maingot states on page 38:

> A member could not come to Parliament for protection if he was sued for having published to the world. One could not question what the member said in the House but publication outside the House was another matter. The protection afforded the member speaking in the House is, in law, spoken on an occasion of absolute legal privilege, that is to say, spoken with impunity to the outside world, but he publishes outside the House at his peril. Parliament protects him when he speaks in Parliament, but when he speaks outside, or publishes outside what he says inside Parliament, Parliament offers no protection; only the common law does, if it is offered at all.

In the case at hand there is no indication that the legal proceedings commenced against the Hon. Member for Athabasca are based on a proceeding in Parliament. From a close reading of the statement of claim filed in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta on April 26, 1988, it would appear that these proceedings relate to a newspaper article published in The Edmonton Sun and to the comments attributed in that article to the Hon. Member for Athabasca and to written information allegedly provided to employees of the Toronto Sun by the Hon. Member.

As this legal proceeding appears in no way to be based upon "proceedings in Parliament", but rather upon events which transpired outside of Parliament, the Chair cannot find, after long and very careful consideration, that the Hon. Member's privilege has been breached.

I want to add some comment to this because it is important. Nothing in this ruling should be taken to indicate whether the Hon. Member for Athabasca has or has not a defence to the defamation action taken against him. This ruling is confined to whether the Hon. Member's privileges as a Member of Parliament have been violated.

There is, of course, under the law of defamation outside this place, a defence of privilege. It is important to understand the distinction and to understand that my ruling in no way intrudes into the law of defamation or into the present action concerning the Hon. Member and others, and in no way affects whatever defences are available to that Hon. Member outside this place.

I want to apologize to the Hon. Member for Athabasca for being so long in returning to this House with this ruling. I have to say that the ruling gave the Chair a great deal of difficulty. I have decided it, I think correctly, but not without a great deal of concern. I thank Hon. Members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it may be of assistance to advise the House of the tentative order of business for this afternoon and this evening. We intend to resume debate on the Government's response to the Senate's amendments to Bill C-103. Once that debate is concluded, we will proceed to the Government's response, which is essentially in the affirmative, to the Senate's amendment to Bill C-137, also known as the flow-through shares Bill.

Once that is finished, we would call second reading of Bill C-139, the income tax reform Bill. Pending completion of the speech of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) on that Bill, we would call it five o'clock in order to allow for Private Members' Hour to proceed. There are several votes at 6.00 p.m., which will commence at 6.15. Pending success at report stage, we would then proceed, on consent, to third reading of Bill C-82 and Bill C-30, whichever order is most appropriate for those Members involved. Upon completion of those two items of business after the votes, we will call it ten o'clock.

Tomorrow at 11 a.m. we will resume debate on Bill C-139.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION ACT, ATLANTIC CANADA, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the text of the Message made by the Senate to Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, because this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87, as recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General to this House, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and asks that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form.

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating a motion that should not be debated. Indeed, we are having a debate in the House that should not be taking place at all.

The Senate of Canada should not have divided Bill C-103 because it has neither the right nor the privilege to do so. As the Speaker stated in his ruling on July 11, the Senate has in fact "infringed the privileges of this place", not just the House of Commons as an institution but the privileges of each and every Member of Parliament.

While we take up the valuable time of the House today to debate a motion disagreeing with the action of the Senate, all of Atlantic Canada suffers. That includes Cape Breton Island, whose fate the Senate now holds in the palm of its usurping hand.

One is truly amazed to sit in the House and listen to Liberal Members of Parliament defend the actions of their friends in the other place. Their strong words of support provide aid and comfort to the architects of the old discredited policies and programs of regional development in Atlantic Canada, those whose approach to regional development is embedded not in the belief of the individual entrepreneurs of Atlantic Canada and their ability to create new jobs but in the almighty transfer payment.

It was not the Senate that proposed to Atlantic Canadians the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. It did not, because it remains the last bastion of the old Liberal philosophy of economic development based upon hand-outs. It could not because it would have had to create a money Bill, a Bill which is clearly beyond its prerogative.

Why is the Liberal majority in the Senate now attempting a constitutional end-run on the House of Commons when it has neither the moral nor the constitutional authority to do so? We can only put the answer down to simple partisan politics. Now, in a thinly disguised veneer of caucus unity holding together the Liberal ranks, Liberal Members of Parliament support, in the name of fraternity for all, the action of Liberal Senators.

Bill C-103 was thoroughly debated at all stages by Members of Parliament. The first reading took place on December 18, 1987. Second reading took place in January, and that process took 11 hours, 4 minutes of House time. There were 26 Members who had a chance to speak on second reading, including six Members from the Liberal Party.

At the committee stage, the legislative committee travelled throughout Atlantic Canada because the Government felt it was essential that Atlantic Canadians had input on a Bill that was extremely crucial to Atlantic Canada and the welfare of Atlantic Canadians. That was the first time a legislative committee travelled. There were 34 hours and 20 minutes of hearings in which 73 witnesses had an opportunity to appear before the committee.

When that committee was in Halifax, in Port Hawkesbury and in Charlottetown, two Parties were represented: The Government Party and the New Democratic Party. Where was the concern of the Liberal Members of Parliament then? Where were they in Port Hawkesbury when we had a chance to be on site in Cape Breton to hear the concerns of the people from Cape Breton with regard to Bill C-103 and particularly with regard to the Bill to create the Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation?

It was not, as we have heard since then, a major thrust against the division of Devco. If I remember correctly, there were two major concerns expressed at that time. One concerned the geographic area set aside for Enterprise Cape Breton and the fact that it did not match exactly with the area assigned for the tax credit purposes. The second concern was expressed by the very chairperson of DEVCO, and dealt with the division of the assets and whether the assets were divided appropriately. They did not debate the principles as much as they debated the logistics of how this Bill would be implemented.

Not only did we hear from the people of Cape Breton at that time, but in September, 1985, the Government had an opportunity to hear from the Cape Breton Advisory Committee chaired by Dr. Theresa MacNeil, the lady everyone else now quotes as being against what Bill C-103 does to DEVCO. In that report, the Cape Breton Advisory Committee suggested that several things happened. It identified barriers to development caused by the confusion of a multiplicity of development agencies. It felt that it was a barrier to economic development in Cape Breton. It recommended a new development agency, independent in matters of policy, management and operation from the coal side of the corporation, which is exactly what Bill C-103 does. We split DEVCO, and the Industrial Development Division goes to Enterprise Cape Breton and DEVCO retains its mandate with respect to the Coal Mining Division.

The report further recommends that there should become a one stop shop to the degree possible by encompassing the Industrial Development Division of DEVCO and DRIE. That is exactly what is done in Bill C-103. As a result, we heard from the people of Cape Breton. After that, of course, we came back once again to report stage in this House in March. At that time, four hours and 50 minutes was assigned to debate. Twelve Members of Parliament had an opportunity to speak. Third reading took four hours and 10 minutes, and another nine Members of Parliament had an opportunity to present their points of view. I was shocked when, on May 10, we had the vote on Bill C-103 and as I sat here as an Atlantic Canadian, I watched my colleagues, and I use the term loosely, from the Liberal Party, vote in favour of the Western Diversification Office and against the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. I could not believe that those Members felt differently about the economic development opportunities for western Canada and those for eastern Canada.

The Liberals took a stand in favour of new economic programs for western Canada and a stand against the creation of the very same for eastern Canada. That caused me concern. I think it caused everyone in this House concern because we realized that over the last 20 years, the Liberal regional development policies were concocted in Ottawa and bore no relationship whatsoever to the real needs of Atlantic Canadians. In Bill C-103, the Government gave Atlantic Canadians the opportunity to be involved in the economic decisions facing Atlantic Canada, but the Liberal Party decided it did not want to transfer the power from Ottawa to Atlantic Canada. When we scraped the surface, we found it did not want to transfer the power from the old-line leadership of the Liberal Party to people in Atlantic Canada who were capable of making decisions that would benefit the economy of Atlantic Canada.

The Liberals still want to hold hostage the economic opportunities of Atlantic Canada with a view that "Ottawa knows best". We had 20 years of that kind of rule in this country. We in Atlantic Canada were constantly told that Ottawa knew best. We have heard members of the opposite Party speaking today about the high unemployment rate in the past. They spoke about the lack of economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada. But those were the result of holding in Ottawa all the decision-making ability and power that affected Atlantic Canada.

Now, of course, here in Ottawa, the Liberal Senators, propped up by the Liberal Members opposite, are continuing to foster that point of view. The Liberals continue to be reluctant to let Atlantic Canadians make decisions for the benefit of Atlantic Canadians. Those Members say that what the Senate has done has not affected the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and its ability to function. That is not the case. There are provisions in Bill C-103 that ACOA can use to the benefit of Atlantic Canada which are not available under the existing mandate assigned by the Cabinet and previously given to DRIE. If the Bill is split, Cape Breton would not have the benefits of a Crown corporation directly connected with the federal regional economic development agency that has the primary responsibility and resources for economic development in Atlantic Canada. In order to improve service to Cape Bretoners, the two federal economic development organizations should report to the same Minister and should have the same president. That would not be possible if this legislation is not adopted.

The reorganization that is provided in Bill C-103 will help both organizations be more co-ordinated in order to reduce duplication and confusion. If the ACOA Bill is not passed, Atlantic Canadians will be denied access to some very important economic development opportunities. Specifically, the Minister responsible for ACOA will not have the power to co-finance the projects of other Ministers that will improve the economic base of Atlantic Canada. The Minister will not have the power to designate areas of preferred treatment. ACOA will not have the power to take stock options in certain circumstances. Those are all provisions that are included in Bill C-103 as it is currently drafted.

We would not have those tools to put to work for the economy of Atlantic Canada if the Senate gets its way and this Bill is split. I think all Atlantic Canadians are concerned. The Atlantic Canada Chamber of Commerce has expressed its concern with respect to the tactics we are seeing displayed in this House in defence of the actions of the other place. I do not believe the Liberal Party is explaining to Atlantic Canadians exactly what it is trying to do, because I do not think it can explain what it is trying to do. I do not think it knows what it is trying to do.

There is one gentleman located in the other place who does not believe that anyone would have a new idea with respect to attacking the problems facing Atlantic Canada since DEVCO was created in the 1970s. But people do have new ideas and new solutions to old problems. We have had 20 years of the same kind of policy. We have had 20 years of that Party and that Government. We have had 20 years of those decisions being made here in Ottawa, and at the same time in Atlantic Canada we have had 20 years of high unemployment and limited economic opportunities.

What is the Liberal Party showing Atlantic Canadians? Is it showing that it wants to change the way the Government of Canada assists in regional development in Atlantic Canada? No, it is not showing that. Is it showing it is prepared to resist the status quo nature of the other place? No, it is not showing that either.

Is it showing that it is prepared to pave the way for new ideas for economic development in Atlantic Canada? No, it is not showing that. Is it prepared to show Atlantic Canadians that it is willing to accept new solutions to old problems? No, it is not. It is prepared to show what it has shown all along, contempt for Atlantic Canadians, and lack of faith in the entrepreneurial spirit of Atlantic Canadians, lack of confidence in the ability of Atlantic Canadians to make decisions good for Atlantic Canada. That is what it is showing the people of Atlantic Canada. The Liberal Party is showing Atlantic Canadians that it is not prepared to accept reality, not prepared to face the fact that what it has done over the years has not worked in Atlantic Canada and that there are chances in Bill C-103 for greater success and economic development in the Atlantic provinces.

I think it is time Liberal Members of the House of Commons stood up to the old-line leadership, coming from the Senate. They should stop playing partisan games at the expense of Atlantic Canadians and their opportunities. They should realize that the division taking place in DEVCO is just what was asked for by the advisory committee in September of 1985. The Industrial Development Division will go to Enterprise Cape Breton. The Vice-President will be located in Sydney, and there will be a separate board, prepared and willing to make decisions to benefit Cape Breton. DEVCO will still retain its mandate with respect to the coal agency and the work it has to do in Cape Breton, work that was done successfully in the past. They have to recognize that this is one stop shopping to avoid the duplication and confusion that exists and surrounds past government policies as they relate to Cape Breton and its economic development opportunities.

I think it is time that the Liberal Members of this House recognized that Bill C-103, with the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the creation of Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation, is beneficial to Atlantic Canada and to Cape Breton. ACOA is good for Atlantic Canadians. Yet we are hearing today, as we have heard in the past, members of a certain Party standing up and saying that they are not in favour of what is good for Atlantic Canadians. They will have to answer to the people from the eastern part of the country who feel that ACOA offers a number of opportunities for Atlantic Canadians, opportunities for Atlantic Canadians to take advantage of federal government programs to complement the entrepreneurial spirit that exists in Atlantic Canada. They will have to answer to those people. They do not have to answer to members of the other place. They will have to answer to the people of Atlantic Canada when they say: "Why did not the 19 of you support the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency?"

I urge all Members of the House today to join in favour of this resolution to indicate to the other place that we do not accept what it has done, that what it has done is beyond its mandate and that it is not good for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Binns: Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to listen to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) which he made in regard to the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. However, I was somewhat distressed to find that he feels that the Liberal Members of this House were not supporting the agency, and he was questioning why. I am wondering if the Hon. Member could tell me whether he is surprised that the Liberal Members in the House are not standing on their own feet in support of the agency instead of taking their cues from the Senate Leader, Mr. MacEachen.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I guess I am surprised, although I know the temptation of that Party to go along with its leadership, which for years cracked the whip and kept its Members submerged under the previous leadership of that Party. However, I am surprised that they were not able to throw off the yoke of the old-line leadership and take away the partisan politics and recognize what is good for Atlantic Canada. They were not able to see beyond their smoke-filled back rooms and their bagmen to recognize that this agency offers Atlantic Canadians an opportunity to take advantage of federal government programs, create employment and allow Atlantic Canadians to capitalize on what the improved economy of the country has to offer.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Cochrane) for a very impassioned address. I like to hear Members speak on behalf of the people who elect them, irrespective of what side of the House they are on. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member.

This question really focuses on the other place. It shows that the other place did something that it had no authority to do. It illustrates very definitely what we were trying to correct when I had a motion before the House for the creation of a Triple E Senate.

The present Senate is responsible to nobody. It can do anything that it likes and still get away with it. As the Hon. Speaker said the other day, it acted without authority. It does not have to account to anybody.

This demonstrates very definitely that if we are going to have a Senate, we should have one that is elected and responsible to somebody in that it would have to answer to the people. The present Senate is not doing that.

The second part of the motion which I moved would have given every province equal representation. In other words, the four Maritime provinces would have equal representation in a Tripe E Senate, just the same as any other four provinces. That would have given them protection for something that vitally affects their region.

The action of the Senate in this particular case illustrates very definitely why we need a Triple E Senate.

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has said. It reminds me of an old saying which I have heard quoted a number of times with regard to the Senate and its efforts to thwart the efforts of the House of Commons. It is that even a fish cannot get caught if it keeps its mouth shut.

The more we see this type of action taken by the Senate, the more we see Senators defying the elected Members of the House, the more we hear from Members such as the Member for Bow River, and other Canadians, expressing their concerns about the comfortable pew that exists in the other place.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple question to put to the Member who has just spoken. Since this morning we have been hearing Government Members tell us that there are people in the other place, that is the Senate, who don't have to report to anyone, and who are not responsible to anyone.

How is it that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chose one of those persons to direct that Agency?

[English]

Mr. Cochrane: Mr. Speaker, I think the reason was the affinity and the closeness of that particular Senator to Atlantic Canada and the fact that a brand new agency with as little political partisanship as possible was trying to be created. We wanted to answer the false accusations that it was a political slush fund. Thus the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed a gentleman who is well experienced in the affairs of Atlantic Canada. More important, he is the Minister responsible for intergovernmental affairs. One of the bylines, one of the main principles behind ACOA, is co-operation between the Government of Canada and the four Atlantic provinces, co-operation, I suggest, that was not available in the last 20 years of Liberal government rule. Members of the Liberal Government did not bother talking and asking the people of Atlantic Canada what they wanted. They did not go to the Premiers of the provinces. They just went out and said: "Here is what Ottawa thinks is best for you, now take it and like it".

I can tell Hon. Members that we did not like it. We did not advance because of it. We were held back because of it. I think of the Mitel plant in Buctouche. All of a sudden there it was, and the Premier of New Brunswick was not even consulted.

The only Government to spend money in the country to take care of that hollow election gimmick was the Government of the Province of New Brunswick. It had to upgrade the sewage system and build new access roads. That plant sits there, and the Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud) knows it sits there, as a monument to the failure of the past Government's economic development policies in Atlantic Canada. Thus it was logical to appoint the Minister responsible for intergovernmental affairs to be the Minister who could talk to the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, to co-ordinate programs, to co-ordinate the expenditure of federal dollars so that we could have a maximum effect, the maximum number of jobs created for Atlantic Canadians. I thank the Hon. Member for the question.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on Motion No. 34 before the House. Although I must say that I do not entirely appreciate the wording and the structure of the motion, our Party will support it.

There is no doubt in my mind that the Senate proposal should be refused and that we have a responsibility to refuse it. It is very obvious that there is a very cynical approach to the Senate taken by Members of the Government. They stand up and shout about the bad things that the Senate does. Yet they go ahead and appoint a Senator to be the head of the organization which is supposed to be helpful to Atlantic Canada. They also have appointed a good number of their Members to the Senate. For many years our Party policy has been to abolish the Senate. The basis for our proposal to abolish the Senate has always been that it is not a democratically-elected body.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) made much of the fact that the New Democratic Party was supporting the position of the Government against the Senate. I know the Hon. Member recognizes that our opposition is based on our principles and belief in democracy and not necessarily in what we think is support of a flawed Bill which has gone through the House. Because of the majority that the Government has in the House it was able to pass it through and did not accept the rather pointed criticisms of people from the Maritimes, the New Democratic Party, and the Liberal Party about what was in the Bill and how it would affect future development in the Maritimes or in the Atlantic provinces.

We have many of the same concerns about ACOA as the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond has, but we do not believe that the other place has the right to operate in this type of legislative or any other legislative area. Consequently, we will not back away from that principle in order to allow it to become a much greater power than it already is.

It is very significant that this particular move by the Senate is a power move. If it were allowed, the precedent thus established would give the Senate, an unelected body, the same ability to develop legislation and decide the direction of legislation as the House of Commons. In this process the Senate has taken a major step in attempting to establish itself as a legislative power. It does not have this power constitutionally. Therefore, it is important that we recognize the direction or what would have happened had the House and the Speaker not made the ruling that he made.

It is interesting to note that the Liberals did not challenge the ruling of the Speaker. The Speaker gave the House the right to reject or accept the Senate ruling, although the Speaker stated specifically that the Senate's doing so without requesting the permission of the House was an infringement on the privileges of the House.

The Speaker ruled that the splitting of the Bill is a matter of privilege, and the other place infringed on that privilege. If we want to allow the Senate to do that, the Speaker ruled that we may go ahead and do so. Consequently, if this resolution is accepted it will send Bill C-103 back to the Senate to be passed again, hopefully, and established as the law of Canada.

We recognized that this Bill is a flawed piece of legislation, as have many people in the Atlantic provinces and in the Official Opposition. During the period that the Bill was going through second reading and committee stage, our member on that committee made several attempts to rectify some of those flaws. Perhaps it is not so surprising that many of the reasons the Senate gave for splitting Bill C-103 were the same reasons that we had for putting in amendments during the period that the Bill was going through the House.

The idea that DEVCO would disappear in its present form and be replaced by the Enterprise Cape Breton was considered by ourselves and by the President designate of DEVCO, who was an appointee of the Government, as being a move in the wrong direction. It removes the Cape Breton Industrial Development Corporation from a position of independence and puts it directly under the Minister in charge. By the way, the Minister is not a member of the House, and consequently with a certain amount of cynicism I have to point to the position taken by the Government when it states that this is such a great democratic process. Then the Government makes the organization the responsibility of a member who is not elected, who is an appointee, and who resides in the other place.

Therefore, we felt that the legislation needed a considerable amount of work. We tried to make those changes. To some extent, we were happy to see that the Senate also recognizes those changes. The process is unacceptable to us. The Senate is not a democratically elected body and it does not have the authority or responsibility which it has taken unto itself. We do not want the Senate to develop that type of power in the legislative structure of Canada.

We have taken the position that we will support this motion to send the Bill back to the Senate with the request that it pass it in its original form. I think that it is rather sanctimonious of the Government to suggest, as it does in this motion, that the Bill it sent to the Senate was so perfect that it should not have been changed in any way. The Government must recognize, as do the rest of us and many Canadians, that the Bill was anything but perfect, and that it could have used a good number of changes.

We will support the Bill. We will support democracy. We believe that the Senate does not have the authority or the power, and should not have the authority or the power to make the type of changes that it is suggesting in this particular Bill.

• (1600)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been requested by the Acting Chief Government Whip to defer the vote until six o'clock tonight. Government Orders.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-137, an Act to provide for incentives to assist in financing exploration for mineral resources and hydrocarbons in Canada and to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that these are technical amendments which have come back from the Senate. It is not our intention to speak to them at great length, but I understand that other colleagues may have short speeches which they may wish to address to the House. We would then proceed to call the question and directly thereafter move to the first speech on Bill C-139.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Government House Leader. I have indicated to him that I would appreciate it if this Bill was put back by a few minutes.

I would like to briefly comment the amendments and the issue of flow-through shares. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the amendments originating in the Senate are of a technical nature. This morning I had not had a chance to look at them and unfortunately, they were not in the order paper we have in our offices, but as I look at the amendments, I note that their purpose is essentially to ensure that the French version agrees with the English version, and so, generally speaking, we have no objection. But since this is the last opportunity we are going to have to discuss flow-through shares, Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to underline with regret the impact of the Conservatives Government's delays on investment in the mining sector, on exploration and the development of mining resources attributable to the flow-through share program.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the combined effect of two factors resulted in a sharp drop in the issuing of flow-through shares. According to the figures available to me, about 560 million dollars' worth of the shares were issued in Quebec in 1987, but this year it is expected that only about 90 million dollars' worth will be sold. In Canada as a whole, a decrease of approximately $1.2 million in the sale of flow-through shares is forecast, and a drop of up to $500 million is expected for all of 1988. Why, Mr. Speaker?

The answer is simple. On the one hand, last year's October crash had a particular impact on investment in mining exploration projects. That was something the Government could not have prevented.

But in addition, Mr. Speaker, the uncertainty created by the Government's decision in June last year as part of tax reform to abandon any incentive for investment in and development of our mineral resources had a very negative impact on flow-through shares. This was because the Government announced in June 1987 that it was going to give up the mechanism that had yielded so much investment and given such impetus to the economy of regions like Abitibi and Schefferville and many others in Quebec. The Government maintained this position for a long time despite the pressure and representations from all over the mining industry, especially in Quebec but also in northern Ontario.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, after municipalities, exploration companies, stock exchanges, unions, educational institutions and other groups formed a coalition to save flow-through shares, progress started to be made.

[English]

It was the same thing in northern Ontario. We will see a very substantial drop in mining investment and exploration under the flow-through share program in 1988. One of the major reasons is the uncertainty which has been introduced into this program because of the Government's decision back in June of 1987, in the context of tax reform, to abandon the whole program of flow-through shares without putting anything else in its place.

As a result of a great deal of pressure coming from this side of the House, from the affected communities, and from the coalitions that were very broad ranging which sought to put these programs back in a way that would be effective and reasonable in terms of public resources and would continue the high rate of development and activity which was prevailing, gradually the Government has come around until we now have their proposals in this Bill.

After a period of more than a year we finally see third reading of this new proposal to replace what was effectively announced as being removed in June of 1987. When it is taken together with the impact of the crash in October of last year, it has resulted in a very sharp, if not disastrous, cut in exploration. This is, interestingly enough, despite the fact that at this time the prices of base metals and of other metals which are sought through mining exploration have in fact risen substantially as part of the economic revival which has taken place within the industrial countries.

I wanted to note that fact while saying at the same time that the New Democrats are prepared to accept these amendments. Now that I have had a chance to look at them, I see that they are in fact technical and they show that, yes, the Senate can play some exceedingly modest but helpful role in an affair like this are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to propose the second reading of Bill C-139 today. This debate gives me an important opportunity to review the principles on which the measures in the Bill are based and to remind all Members of the long, deliberate process of consultation and development which preceded the development of the Bill.

The primary object of this Bill is the implementation of the first stage of our government's tax reform proposals. It is the most sweeping reform of Canada's tax system in many years, and one of which we can be proud.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to remember that tax reform is an integral part of this government's program of economic policies laid out in the November 1984 Agenda for Economic Renewal issued by the Minister of Finance. Since September 1984 we have been working to achieve the goal of sustained economic growth and the creation of productive jobs for Canadians. Tax reform is part of our larger vision for a dynamic, innovative and competitive Canadian economy.

With the passage of this Bill, Canadians will benefit from a fairer and more efficient tax system—a tax system in tune with the needs of Canada today, and which will assist individuals and businesses in meeting the challenges of a changing more competitive world.

As well as the tax reform measures, Bill C-139 also contains provisions implementing the measures announced in the February budget, as well as other provisions announced separately. I will return to these measures in a few minutes.

The measures that comprise state one of tax reform are not new—they have been before the House and the public for some time. Just over a year ago, on June 18, 1987, the Minister of Finance tabled in this House a White Paper outlining detailed proposals for comprehensive reform of the taxation system.

That White Paper was the result of consultations with Canadians, indeed from the beginning consultation has been an integral part of the whole process of tax reform. In developing the White Paper proposals the Government benefited considerably from the insights and recommendations of parliamentarians, representative associations, business, labour, and individual Canadians. When we tabled the White Paper we again invited interested groups and organizations to examine the proposals and present their views. The standing committees of both Houses of Parliament have undertaken extensive public examination of our proposals. In addition, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and I and officials of the Department of Finance have met individuals and representatives of many organizations across the country.

Those involved in this process—committee members, representatives of other groups, and individuals—have made a valuable contribution to the consultative process and to the refinement of the reform proposals. This has not been a process in isolation from them but together with them. In their respective reports both parliamentary committees have supported the main thrust of the reforms, and each committee has also suggested a number of specific changes to the proposals. Each of these recommendations, like those we have received from other sources, has been carefully reviewed and weighed against the often stated objectives of tax reform.

One objective is to have a balanced package of measures and a balanced tax system as a result. Another is to ensure that the net fiscal effect of the reform is neutral—a balanced package, a simpler system with a neutral fiscal effect. The December 16 draft of our proposals elicited further comment and allowed us to make a number of changes to the details of our legislation. As a result the detailed notice of Ways and Means motion tabled last month contains an appropriate, well drafted series of proposals.

The process of tax reform is not easy. This House knows that many previous Ministers of Finance have tried to reform the system to a greater or lesser degree and that they have had different degrees of success in their efforts. I believe that the present reform which is the largest one attempted since the reform that followed the Carter Commission report, owes its success to a thorough process of consultation.

Why reform at all, Mr. Speaker? Why did we embark on this large comprehensive process of reform? In the Government's view the urgent need for reform was clear and still is clear. In recent years Canadians have increasingly recognized the need for a fairer system and a more effective tax system. Serious problems have developed since the last major reform. Those problems have affected all parts of the system—the personal tax system, the corporate system, and the sales tax system.

Let me remind Hon. Members of some specific problems of the tax system which have been increasingly recognized in recent years. First, the proliferation of special tax preferences, loopholes, and boondoggles, all of which has put increasing pressure on the equity, the efficiency, and the revenue stability of the income tax system in this country.

Second, in the personal income tax area the growth in preferences, deductions and loopholes has led to an erosion of revenues and has contributed to a growing inequity among taxpayers with similar incomes.

Next, over the decade from 1975 to 1985, there was an increased incidence of high income individuals paying little or no tax. Canadians are not willing to go on supporting a tax system that allows those who are better off to shift the burden to those who are less able to carry it. This cannot and will not be supported.

Next, let us look at what has happened in the corporate income tax world. This was a world profuse with special rate reductions, tax credits, accelerated capital cost allowances, special accounting provisions, and growing tax avoidance. All this extra complex world of corporate tax preferences has not only led to an erosion of the tax base but has also resulted in a substantial variation in effective corporate tax rates across sectors. Some sectors of our country industrially pay very little tax; others much higher. As well, too many preferences have had a considerable distorting influence on investment patterns and business decisions which are too often made on the basis of tax considerations rather than profit potential or economic merit. Business decisions were being deflected from profit potential into taking advantage of tax considerations; in other words, putting the cart before the horse.

Then there is the federal sales tax system. It is antiquated and badly flawed. The problem with the federal sales tax system is that it is narrowly based. It is biased in favour of imports at the expense of Canadian producers. It is complex with high compliance costs and it has a widely different effect on prices. It increases the cost of investment and it places a hidden charge on our exports. It is difficult to think of a sales tax system that could be so badly designed for a country like ours.

Our over-all proposals, then aim to deal effectively with these problems in the tax system. The personal, the corporate, and the sales tax have grown to the point where they seriously compromise opportunities for economic growth, development, and job creation. These problems of the tax system are increasingly undermining the foundation of equity on which a well functioning tax system must rest.

[Translation]

From the outset we knew that to deal with the problems I have outlined, a reform had to meet certain objectives. Canadians want and need, first, a tax system —That is fair and progressive, that imposes little or no burden on those least able to pay, and that levies similar amounts of tax on individuals in similar economic circumstances; second,

—That has a broader base and lower rates, that encourages individual initiative and in which all high-income individuals and profitable corporations pay their fair share of tax;

—That supports our ability to compete internationally, creates employment, creates employment opportunities and assist our regions to grow and prosper.

Finally, that is more understandable and reliable in producing the revenues needed to finance public programs.

Our reform meets these objectives, Mr. Speaker. Looking just at the personal income tax for a moment, it lowers income taxes for 9.7 million households, over 85 per cent of all households in Canada, and it reduces the taxes of about 850,000 lower-income Canadians to zero.

• (1620)

Tax reform reduces taxes for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households with at least one person age 65 or over. Tax reform reduces the variation in taxes paid by persons in similar circumstances and with similar incomes. That is a summary of what is accomplished by tax reform on the personal income side.

In the corporate sector, tax reform means that the number of profitable corporations not paying tax will be more than halved. The financial sector will pay significantly more. Other low rate sectors will see their taxes increased, and very high rate sectors such as the retail sector will see their tax burden reduced modestly. Continued general preferences for the mining sector which promote exploratory activity in many parts of Canada will be maintained.

What is more, the rate of tax on the return from new investment will be reduced and incentives to research and development maintained. This will strengthen the incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. The already low rate of tax for small business will be further reduced and remain below that for large corporations.

How have we made these reforms possible? How can this be done? The key to all these improvements is the fact that we are broadening the tax base and lowering the tax rates. This two-pronged attack, broadening the base and lowering the rates, will make our tax system one that encourages initiative and strengthens competitiveness, growth, and job creation.

As we have maintained from the outset, lower rates are the best incentive for Canadians to work, invest, and raise their living standard. They will also support our international competitiveness and increase employment opportunities available to Canadians.

When I speak of the broader tax base, what does that mean? It means there are special tax preferences, fewer loopholes, fewer boondoggles for avoiding the payment of tax. It allows lower rates and ensures that high income individuals and profitable corporations pay their fair share of tax. Canadians will have a fair and progressive tax system where the tax burden reflects more fairly the situation and the ability of the individual to pay. Individuals in similar economic circumstances will be subject to similar amounts of tax.

Reform means, too, that the system will promote the growth and prosperity of all regions of Canada. The reformed taxation system provides a more reliable and broader tax base. It provides a secure source of revenues to finance public programs.

Finally, I want to reiterate that these reforms of the taxation system have been carefully designed to be fiscally neutral. How is this possible? It is done this way. The corporate tax measures contained in this Bill largely pay for the reduction in personal income taxes. When combined with the sales tax measures already passed in Bill C-17, the over-all fiscal effect is neutral. The measures in this Bill will not have to be paid for at some later stage.

I want now to go over in very general terms the major provisions of Bill C-139.

One of our goals was to make the tax system fairer and easier to understand. In a move towards such a system, the Bill implements the conversion of personal exemptions and many deductions to credits, and eliminates or restricts other deductions, credits and exemptions. It thereby makes the entire system more progressive.

[English]

As a result of these changes, most taxpayers will find that their effective rate of tax is lower than under the existing system. Those who have been using special preferences in the existing system, those who have been taking advantage of all these special preferences, which this Bill reduces significantly, are the ones who will see their taxes increase. There is no doubt about that. I believe that is appropriate.

Restriction or elimination of a number of deductions in the corporate tax means that the corporate tax base is significantly broadened. This means that many more profitable corporations and a higher proportion of their income will now be part of the tax base. This broadening of the base has allowed us to lower rates. It has allowed us to maintain an internationally competitive system. At the same time, it has allowed us to increase the amount of revenue being raised from the corporate tax system. Other measures will ensure that financial institutions will also pay their fair share of tax.

This Bill also introduces a general anti-avoidance rule to remove the tax advantage of transactions that involve misuse of the tax law. These are carried out not primarily for bona fide purposes but for the simple avoidance of income tax.

Bill C-139 also brings forward a limited number of changes not directly related to the tax reform proposals of last June. First, it contains the income tax changes announced in the February 1988 Budget. The most significant are the increases in the child care expense deduction and the increase of the refundable Child Tax Credit to implement the taxation aspect of the national strategy on child care. I should also mention that the amendments to tighten up the rules used to determine whether corporations are associated with one another for the purposes of the Income Tax Act are also in this Bill.

Second, this Bill includes amendments announced on September 25 and October 1, 1987. The former prevents tax avoidance through the abuse of the rules relating to capital dividend and dividend refunds, and the latter implements changes to the taxation of trusts and their beneficiaries.

Bill C-139 is an important piece of legislation. Many measures in it have been in the public eye for over a year. The Bill has benefited from extensive input from the standing committees and taxpayers. An earlier draft of the Bill has been scrutinized by the committees and by tax professionnals to ensure that it was technically satisfactory. This has been an important and useful process, but it is time consuming. The result is the complete and technically sound bill we have before us today.

[English]

I do not think I can exaggerate the importance of this Bill to the tax system, the economy and, above all, to the average Canadian. Our tax reform measures as embodied in the Bill now before us will contribute to building a stronger, more just and more vibrant economy. This is comprehensive reform. This is reform for the average Canadian as well as for the economy as a whole. These measures are based on a solid assessment of today's needs and will help us build a better tomorrow.

As evidence of the Government's commitment to assist further speedy, thorough examination of the Bill, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has agreed to appear before the House Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs as soon as possible, to help them begin their final consideration of the measures in the Bill.

[English]

I am proud of tax reform. I am proud of the provisions of this Bill. It is historic in its scope. It is vital in what it means to the future of Canada. I call on Members of this House to respond to my own sense of urgency and the urgency felt by hundreds of thousands of taxpayers, both individuals and corporations, and proceed quickly with this Bill.

• (1630)

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is appropriate to ask for unanimous consent to call it five o'clock. The House Leader said that there may be such a disposition, but I am in your hands in that regard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre on the same point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Not on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, on debate.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe there was unanimous consent among the Parliamentary House Leaders for the Chair to call it five o'clock and to proceed now to consideration of Private Members' Business. All three Parties gave their consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm what the Parliamentary Secretary just said. The Leader of the Government in the House consulted us, and it was understood that once the Minister had finished his comments, the debate on Bill C-139 would be suspended and we would proceed to Private Members' Business because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition which is supposed to follow the Minister, is according to our custom entitled to forty minutes. I believe that tomorrow, the Government intends to call Bill C-139 at eleven o'clock, to resume debate.

Mr. Grisé: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. As the Liberal Whip, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), just said, there is unanimous consent for reverting to the same Bill at eleven o'clock to resume debate, so that the Official Opposition critic will have the same speaking time the Minister had today.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that may well have been discussed between the Liberal and Conservative Parties but I, as the Deputy House Leader of the New Democratic Party, was not consulted on calling it five o'clock after the Minister's speech. Not having been consulted on that, we did not agree to it. I assume we are going to continue until five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the Member and the House Leader should consult at this time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, it was my understanding that the Hon. Minister was going to speak until very close to five o'clock. For that reason we thought it would make more sense to call it five o'clock and then, at five o'clock, proceed with Private Members' Hour. The second speaker in the debate, which will be called at eleven o'clock tomorrow, will be the spokesperson for the Official Opposition. I think it would be more appropriate to handle it that way. In that way no one will be inconvenienced.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it five o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

AUDITOR GENERAL ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert) moved that Bill C-288, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the third time I have put this Bill or legislation very similar to it before the House. Under ordinary circumstances I may have given up by now and said that it was not worth the effort. However, when I presented this Bill in the House last April, it was seconded by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) and the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) who are the chairman and vice-chairman respectively of the Public Accounts Committee. I therefore decided that in order to keep this before Parliament and keep it alive it was worth while to present it once more.

This legislation has a long history. On July 18, 1980, the Public Accounts Committee presented a report to the House which suggested that the Auditor General use his power more often to make special reports to the committee so that the committee would be able to examine current issues more often. As a result of the procedure of the Auditor General in reporting only once a year, we often found ourselves dealing on the Public Accounts Committee with subjects which were two and sometimes even three years old, and quite often with audit reports which were more than a year old. We were always after the fact and very rarely dealing with current situations.

In 1981 there was an agreement among all Parties of this House. The then President of the Treasury Board, House Leader of the Official Opposition, and Leader of the New Democratic caucus agreed to allow legislation to come before this House which would do exactly what I am suggesting in this Bill today, that is, allow the Auditor General to report intermittently rather than only once a year. This legislation was submitted to the Government early in 1982 but did not proceed at that time and, consequently, was not passed. Since then I have submitted this Bill in 1985, 1987, and again this year. In each case it was either talked out or did not receive the consent of the House.

The Bill's purpose is very simple and straightforward. It would allow the Auditor General to report intermittently rather than under the present structure of once a year. All that is required is a very small change in the Act. The words "the Auditor General shall report at least annually to the House of Commons" are added as well as some subsequent changes which are required in order that the rest of the Bill will make sense, as is quite often the case in an amending Bill.

This small change in the Auditor General's Act has been recommended by the Public Accounts Committee, as I have indicated, on three separate occasions. It has been recommended by the Auditor General's office and also by a private sector committee which has been advising on accountability in government. In addition, it has been recommended by a cross-section of Members of the House from all three Parties. It would seem, therefore, that we should proceed with it but we have not done so.

In each case that this legislation has been presented to the House it has been talked out and consequently dropped from the Order Paper. This may be my last opportunity to bring the Bill before the House for passage into the committee which can decide whether to let the Bill proceed or be amended to address any government concerns. However, I know that many government Members agree with the Bill in its present form.

It has been suggested that the Government would not be opposed to quarterly reports. Such a policy would not even require a change in the Act and could take place with the changes I have suggested.

The committee could also decide that the Bill is unacceptable in its present form and recommend that it be withdrawn. I would be quite willing to do that.

I would also accept a government Bill instead and would withdraw mine on that occasion. That may be the best way to deal with it. Any of these suggestions are possibilities we should consider.

Why should the changes be made? One of the concerns of the Public Accounts Committee, and other Members of Parliament, is that it cannot deal with current issues. When the Auditor General makes his report in the fall, the Public Accounts Committee must suddenly deal with five or six Departments whose comprehensive audits have been reported in the annual report. As well, a number of audit notes have to be studied along with other areas of concern. We must decide which of these items we will discuss for the rest of the year until the next Auditor General's report is tabled. If this tabling could be made intermittently, we would be dealing with many more current items in a much more effective order for the Public Accounts Committee.

Governments of many other countries use a continuous or intermittent reporting system as suggested in this Bill. In a 1984 report to the House, the Auditor General said that the Auditor General's office had considered what its counterparts in the United States, the United Kingdom, and Australia had done. Each of these legislatures receive periodic reports in one form or another. The Auditor General's office is convinced that this is more cost effective, as well as allowing it to report more frequently.

He also stated that until the next legislative changes were introduced it was impossible for the Auditor General's office to report intermittently. It believed it had to retain the schedule that was established by the Act.

While one section allows the Auditor General to make special reports on particular subjects, such reports could only be made in an emergency. This Bill would allow the Auditor General to make a report at the end of each audit, rather than tabling them together in an annual report.

The Governments of the Netherlands, Germany, and Sweden have continuous reports. The British Parliament has a report approximately every week. My suggestion is not new or unusual, but it is highly acceptable and a widely practised procedure. It would improve the accountability of Governments in Canada. I believe this is a possible solution to a serious problem. If this Bill could be sent to committee, we would be taking a step toward that end.

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and speak to Bill C-288, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act. Before commenting on the Bill, I want to reflect for a moment on the importance of this opportunity for Private Members to propose amendments to existing statutes and take initiatives that are of importance to all Members and all Canadians.

The Bill today deals with the functioning of the Auditor General's office, particularly with the frequency with which the Auditor General must make reports to the House of Commons. All Members fully appreciate the important role that the Auditor General plays for Parliament.

The Auditor General is an officer of Parliament who watches the spending habits of Departments. From time to time he calls upon Ministers to explain the spending of Departments and answer questions that pertain to the authorizations for spending and whether the Departments are functioning within the legal limits and guidelines prescribed by Cabinet and by statutes.

Members of Parliament have the services of the Auditor General and the Auditor General's office which has substantial staff and expertise pertaining to the whole question of evaluating the spending of government Departments.

I believe the amendments presented for debate today are largely redundant. The existing statute provides in Section 3(b)(i) that the Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance that in his opinion should not be deferred until the presentation of his annual report. It is very clear that the existing statute fully authorizes and gives the Auditor General total discretion with respect to a matter that should be brought by way of a special report.

I believe it is important that the discretion in these matters stay with the Auditor General. We do not wish in any way to restrict that discretion, to impair the functioning of the Auditor General, given the important role that he plays.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) talked about the need for a special provision that would give greater guidance to the Auditor General. Clearly that is not required under the statute. The Auditor General and his staff can respond in special circumstances. It is important for the staff to know that it has an annual report to make and that the annual report will be comprehensive in providing its evaluation of the respective Departments.

What kind of Parliament would we have if every week a report came sliding into Parliament for parliamentarians to comment upon. One week it could be the Post Office, and the next week it could be the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

It is obvious that all these alternatives were considered and the decision was made that the reports should be annual. I believe it also provides the necessary focus to the public servants who work in the Auditor General's office. It is a practical thing. Most Departments, if not all, provide annual reports, and there is accountability of the Departments before the permanent committees of this House. There are other ways, such as daily Question Period, for instance, where the Ministers and Departments are held accountable for the spending within the Departments.

I believe the amendments are unnecessary. I believe they put the Auditor General in a position of perhaps responding to ongoing political climates. If there is an ongoing debate in the House, pressure mounts and demands are made by politicians of whatever Party to the Auditor General to investigate and report immediately to the House of Commons on one matter or another. Perhaps the demand might be tomorrow that the Auditor General should report on the advisability of the very ambitious Hibernia project, to which this Government has committed itself and which is welcomed by Atlantic Canadians, should that dominate Question Period this week.

Should the role of the Auditor General become totally political? Should he be at the disposal of Members of Parliament with all the political pressures that dominate the business of this House? I do not believe so. I believe we have to maintain the professionalism that has prevailed in the functioning of the Auditor General's office. It is clear that the system is working, and the Auditor General is obviously very pleased with the improved accountability of our Government. His latest report was very supportive of the efforts of this Government to improve the accountability and spending habits of government.

That is not to say that any Government is perfect. No Government can be perfect. However, the Auditor General has certainly given this Government high marks. We want to continue to give the Auditor General that flexibility. The Auditor General's office must know that over a period of a year it has the responsibility to do audits and provide substantial reports on all these Departments, but not to give passing commentaries or short-term analyses about one project or another.

Surely we can understand how in any given week the spending of the Government could become a political and partisan issue. The Auditor General's office could then be put in a position where it might become an agency of partisanship. We do not want that and we do not need it. One week the Opposition might want an audit of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Department of Agriculture. It might want an audit of land claims. The list is endless. We do not want the Auditor General's office subjected to that kind of political pressure.

It was clear today in Question Period how the Opposition is particularly perturbed about the great step forward the Government has taken in Hibernia. There is a substantial commitment by the Government of Canada to the people of Atlantic Canada with respect to developing the Hibernia oil field. We in Atlantic Canada welcome that. We do not want it politicized and made part of a political issue in this House.

Today we saw the Opposition really attempting to make the issue other than a very sound economic decision by the Government of Canada. We do not need the Auditor General pulled in this week perhaps to slow down the process of economic development in Hibernia. I welcome the opportunity to speak on this matter. I congratulate the Hon. Member on his initiative, but on reflection I find that the changes he proposes are constraining on the Auditor General, are unnecessary, would really place the Auditor General's office in a difficult position and perhaps, in the long term, compromise the professionalism of that office.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-288, an Act to amend the Auditor General Act. This is the third time the Hon. Member has tabled in the House an amendment to the Act which would allow the Auditor General to report to the House more than once per year. The purpose of the Bill, according to the explanatory notes accompanying the Bill, is as follows:

> At present the Auditor General Act requires the Auditor General to report to the House of Commons annually. The purpose of this Bill is to allow the Auditor General to report annually and as often as he deems necessary.

I was listening to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) who said that it was not a good idea because the Auditor General would go too far and table a stack of reports that might be embarrassing to the Government and make Government operations excessively transparent. Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with this position, because we know perfectly well that the Auditor General, who is a reliable person, who is accountable to Parliament and an agent of Parliament, would never abuse the powers conferred on him by Bill C-288, namely to report once or several times a year.

I can inform the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) who sponsored this Bill, and who also sponsored Bill C-250 in October 1985, and Bill C-262 in October 1987, and who today is sponsoring Bill C-288, that the idea is a good one. In fact, in the spring of 1984, the principle was approved by the Liberal Government at the time, by the Official Opposition and even by the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, who in his report to the House of Commons had suggested that this initiative be approved by parliamentarians. Mr. Speaker, the Chairman of the Committee at the time was none other than the Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis), and Government House Leader in the House of Commons. In his report, and I will read it word for word, because it is rather interesting, and considering that today he is a Minister, one would have thought he would be able to convince his Cabinet colleagues of the excellent motives for introducing this Bill and the need for such a measure.

In the Fifth Report to the House of the Public Accounts Committee chaired by the eminently qualified Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Deputy House Leader, we read as follows:

> Your Committee favours the reporting of comprehensive and other audits on a completion-date basis. This will enable your Committee to deal with the Auditor General's findings in a timely manner and to exert its remedial influence as soon as possible after the audit is completed. The Auditor General endorses this approach because it provides for greater efficiency and flexibility in his reporting to Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, it's fairly simple and it is actually a good idea for the Auditor General to occasionally report more than once a year. It seems to me when one is in the important and complex business of administering a country with $120 or $125 billion annually, one should from time to time ask someone who is objective and independent, and who is accountable to Parliament, whether this business is properly managed. It seems to me that a Cabinet that is thorough and competent would be able to live with this kind of open government and with regular scrutiny by Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that at the time the Member for Simcoe-North (Mr. Lewis), the Chairman of the Committee, now a cabinet Minister, had attempted to obtain the consent of all parties not only because he believed that this proposal was a good one, that it would make Canadian public administration much more effective, but also because he felt it would bring an added measure of efficiency to administration as well as greater transparency, through a regular audit of public accounts and expenditures.

In his comments in June 1984, he stated that there was agreement, that the then Liberal Government and the Opposition parties were of one mind on the issue. Unfortunately, an election was called and we know what happened. The Conservative Government that was elected put this proposal aside, and judging by the comments I have heard from Conservative Members on Bills C-250 and C-262, for instance, it seems they think it would be a terrible thing to ask, demand, or allow the Auditor General to table more than one report per year.

As we know, he must table his report before January 31. Custom has it that when the annual report of the Auditor General is published, members of the media study this quite lengthy document carefully, and look for flaws, flagrant examples of unwarranted expenses, and perhaps even stupid expenditures the Government might have indulged in. It is the Auditor General's role to raise them, to direct public attention to them, and to make appropriate recommendations to have these administrative wrinkles ironed out quickly.

As it happens, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General himself is in favour of this proposal. He feels it would allow him to cut the period up, so to speak, so that instead of having to wait one year, sometimes even two, to read the report on the previous years' activities, we could, in a business-like way and on a regular basis, obtain periodic reports on current issues, major projects, on the administration of federal affairs generally, which to my way of thinking seems like an entirely sensible and reasonable way of doing things.

And I would like to say to the Member for Prince-Albert that I am very impressed by his tenacity and persistence in trying to get this government to understand ordinary common sense.

The fact remains that it is hard to get this Government to move. They always wait for someone else to get the ball rolling. One has only to look at the major questions. Today is July 18, and some major issues have been dragged out for three or four years.

It takes time, but I encourage the Member to continue to be persistent. Perhaps one day the light will dawn on the Conservative dark ages and they will see the simple wisdom of allowing the Auditor General to make regular reports, without abusing the process, with all due respect to the Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, because I do not think that the Auditor General would abuse it; he could then submit regular reports to the House, reports that would help to improve the administration of the country, that would make public servants accountable to the Canadian public, that would be conducive to the openness and transparency we and public opinion are seeking in order to ensure that each tax dollar that is spent is well spent on serious pursuits.

Mr. Speaker, I don't have much more to add except to say to those who are listening that they must read the speeches that were made on Bills C-250 and C-262 to see clearly and realize that this is not a bad idea. It is a very good idea. All we need is some good will and a little action.

In conclusion, I will be supporting this measure, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I too express appreciation for the opportunity to make a few comments on the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). I appreciate his sincerity in this matter coming as he does from the Province of Saskatchewan, my native province, and for pointing out that it has been a number of years since he first introduced this proposal.

He does so out of extensive discussions that have taken place over the past number of years before the Public Accounts Committee with respect to the timing of those reports coming forward as they do from the Auditor General. During those discussions very often the topic for consideration by the Standing Committee was dated, the mistakes had been done and corrected, the past performance had been such and remedied. What was left for the committee to do?

Its actions were rather limited. It appears logical, then, that permitting an Auditor General to bring forward a report as often as he or she chose, other than the annual report, would be appropriate. It would render more accountability to the process.

As has already been mentioned, Section 8(1) of the Auditor General Act gives all the powers and authorities to the Auditor General to act as immediately or as promptly as the person in that office chooses to do.

The Hon. Member who spoke just before me referred to "as often as necessary", as stated in the explanation clause in the Bill being proposed. Are those words any different from the existing clause which states that the Auditor General may make a special report to the House of Commons on any matter of pressing importance or urgency that, in his opinion, should not be deferred until the presentation of his annual report? Does this not give him the authority to present a report as soon as he or she considers it necessary?

I want to bring a number of other factors to the attention of Hon. Members of the House which must be taken into consideration as well. I refer to the initiatives taken by the Government to reduce the number of problems that have come before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. One of the most important initiatives arose out of the great work done by the former Hon. Member for St. John's East through the establishment of a special committee of the House of Commons charged with the responsibility of examining the powers, the procedures, the practices, the organization, and the facilities of this House. This committee was known as the special committee on the reform of the House of Commons. It performed its work well, and it was valuable work indeed. The committee examined many matters, some of which included matters relating to the Auditor General. I would like to highlight some of those reforms in order that Members of the House will keep them before them when they vote on this issue.

The actions of the committee tended to minimize the number of changes that should be made to the Auditor General Act. These reforms have far-reaching effect in the House committee system and must be considered before any additional change is made as a result of the proposal today. I submit that the Auditor General is fully clothed with the powers requested.

Let me turn to more pertinent changes stemming from the actions of the committee on reform that we so often talk about, that is, those that have an impact directly on the issue of timely reporting and meaningful information in the concept of proactive intervention by Members of the House. These changes made it possible for those of us under those revised rules to take an active part. The changes directly affect the issues that we are dealing with today in that they provided a vehicle by which Members could more easily obtain relevant and timely information. All Members of the House are now able to perform a more meaningful role through increased participation and influence in the formation of policy and legislation. This leads to a more effective House of Commons, a more relevant House of Commons, and reduces the need for the proposed amendment.

The standing committee structure now mirrors as much as is practical the organization of government. A standing committee can now choose to become expert on a particular matter before it, or the activities of a particular Department. It has before it the full departmental policy array of opportunity to review and report, as well as a Department's expenditure plans for its activities, and the achievements of the Department measured against its objectives. The standing committee also has more freedom to review the operations of government Departments and to choose for themselves the matters which they wish to examine closely. Standing committees and legislative committees are now empowered to examine and inquire into all matters referred to by the House and to report back to the House. They may call for the appearance of Ministers, of departmental officials, of outside witnesses, and for the production of department documents and papers.

They have the opportunity to question witnesses, seek details of particular programs, question Ministers with respect to policy, and seek administration information on matters from different officials of each Department, or particularly the Department under examination.

As a result some parliamentary committees have called before them the Auditor General himself to respond to certain inquiries about Part III of the Estimates, such as the departmental performance in achieving its objectives from a value for money perspective. The committee can use this testimony in arriving at its assessment of the assessability and the acceptability of departmental expenditure plans.

Concerns about the need for more timely information for Members of Parliament have surely been reduced by this enhanced role of standing committees and Members of Parliament. Accountability has been improved through the automatic referral of annual reports to Departments, Crown corporations, and agencies to the standing committees concerned, and the Public Accounts Committee found that the lack of timely information had been greatly alleviated.

Recently the Public Accounts Committee has been focusing on the adequacy of actions taken in response to the Auditor General's recommendations and has instituted regular follow-up reporting. This is a positive approach and recognizes the need to ensure that improvements are effected. I am just as interested as any other Member in more timely, more effective, and more relevant information on which to base assessments. I agree with the initiative to see that each and every one of those goals should be attained. However, I believe the way to do it is through the reform already implemented by Members of the House and by Parliament and through urging the Auditor General to use the powers vested in him if an earlier reporting is necessary.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words in support of Bill C-288. I would like to make a few brief points. First, I would like to thank Your Honour for the respect you are showing for Private Members' Hour by recognizing me at the present time. You have a list of speakers in front of you, Mr. Speaker, and I do not happen to be on that list. The list was submitted to you by the Government. Notwithstanding that this is Private Members' Hour, I am not on the list because I indicated that I would be speaking in support of this Private Members' motion, and apparently the Government does not appreciate that.

Second, the focus of this Bill is to allow the Auditor General to report to Parliament more frequently than he is doing now. At the present time he reports on an annual basis. Some Members have attempted to make the point that the Auditor General does not have to report more than once a year because there is some logic, some routine, or some magic to reporting only once a year, if he reports only once a year, he does a more thorough job than if he were to report on a more frequent basis. Other Members, like my friend, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), seem to be under the conception that by the time the Public Accounts Committee gets the report of the Auditor General all the mistakes have been corrected and there is nothing for it to do.

As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, and as the Hon. Member for St. Catharines is well aware, if he had not been only looking at a speech prepared by the staff of the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney), that is a far cry from the facts. It is important that the reports of the Auditor General are submitted to Parliament, to the Government, and to the Public Accounts Committee long before they are now.

What happens at the present time is that the Auditor General and his staff start preparing these reports perhaps two years before they finally see the light of day in the House. That is far too long when the primary objective surely is to cut out government waste. Surely that is the objective of everybody in the House, whether it is the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), a member of the back bench, or a member of Cabinet. Nobody wants to see public funds squandered and wasted. That is what the reports of the Auditor General are all about. Surely what we should be doing is trying to get the reports of the Auditor General before us more promptly in order that we can ensure taxpayers' money is spent efficiently, effectively, and not wasted flagrantly. That is what the whole process is about.

Reference has been made to the fact that the Auditor General already has the authority in the Act to report more frequently than once a year. Quite frankly, I too believe that is the case, but for some strange reason the Auditor General and the lawyers who advise the Auditor General have come to a different conclusion. They feel that unless it is an emergency, unless the Parliament Buildings are burning down or something of that nature, the Auditor General does not have the power in the Act to report more frequently than once a year. That is the reason the Auditor General states: "No, I cannot do this unless I have specific authority".

In the questioning before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts a few weeks ago, the Auditor General stated that he did not have the authority either to do international auditing but that that did not stop him. Here too the Auditor General claims he does not have the authority to do this, but in fact it does stop him. That presents a big question mark as to why, if he does not have the authority in one case, he would go ahead and do it anyway but if he feels he does not have the authority in another case he will not go ahead and do it anyway. Regardless of who is right, who is wrong, and what are the legal opinions on this, the Auditor General made it quite clear that unless he gets authority to report more frequently he is not going to do it. That leaves it up to this House, up to Private Members like you and I and all other good Private Members in the House who do not want to see public funds wasted. We are here and are elected to make sure that they are not wasted and to do our best to help the Auditor General to get those reports before the House as frequently as he possibly can.

Does it make sense that he should have the right to do this? They do it in the United States. The government accounting office in the United States does it all the time. They do it in the United Kingdom; the Auditor General of the United Kingdom does this all the time. They do it in the Netherlands; the Auditor General in the Netherlands, the President of the Court of Audit there as it is called, does it all the time. They do it in West Germany; the President of the Court of Audit in West Germany does it all the time. The Auditor General or the President of the Court of Audit in Sweden does it all the time. What is so revolutionary about doing it in Canada when they do it already in the States, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, West Germany, and Sweden, to name just a few? It is certainly not revolutionary.

In discussing this matter with the current President of the Treasury Board, it has been indicated to me that she thinks that there might be some merit in allowing some sort of more frequent reporting as long as it does not come too frequently. There is a feeling that maybe four times a year, when the President of the Treasury Board and her officials could know in advance that something was going to drop on them from on high, would be all right as long as the dates were known. In fact, after I took that back and had a little chat with the Auditor General about the same issue, he said: "Gosh, four times a year. I would be happy to do it even three times a year".

It is clear that there is some room for movement if there is goodwill on the part of both sides. What I am left with, however, is a feeling that perhaps there is no real commitment to goodwill, commitment to seeing that the taxpayers' money is going to be looked after very carefully, as we are all here to do, and not wasted or squandered. In fact it has been suggested to me by staff of the current President of the Treasury Board that this is not a priority item.

Surely, it should be a priority item for you, for me, and for every Member of this House to make sure that taxpayers' money is spent as effectively and as efficiently as possible and not wasted.

The only way we are going to do that is to make sure the Auditor General can report to us as frequently as he possibly can to get the facts before us and to cut out that waste which I am sure the Prime Minister wants to cut out, which I am sure the President of the Treasury Board wants to cut out, and which I am sure you and I and every other Member of this House wants to cut out. Heaven's, let us all support this Bill!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, it was very interesting to hear what was said in the House about when, and especially how, the Auditor General should report the results of his audits. Mr. Speaker, as you know, I myself had some problems with the tabling of certain investigations by the Auditor General, but on the whole, I would say that in 1980, the previous Government, lethargic though it was, supported the Public Accounts Committee which had recommended that the Auditor General report more frequently.

Between 1980 and 1984, nothing happened, owing to the lethargy of the previous Government, as I just said.

Since then, however, our Government made recommendations in 1984, in 1986 and even this year, in 1988, to improve the situation. We are not afraid of the Public Accounts Committee or the Auditor General's reports. In fact we support them. However, the Auditor General himself, Mr. Kennet Dye, recommended on several occasions that the Auditor General's Act should be amended to allow him to report immediately on certain specific audits, right after completion. He made the point that this would speed up work in his office and improve efficiency. At various times, all parties represented in this House supported at least the principle that amendments were necessary to authorize the Auditor General to report more frequently and on a completion basis.

The reasons in favor of such changes were that tabling of reports immediately upon completion of audits would give the Public Accounts Committee and parliamentarians a better chance to discuss the issues involved while they were still very current and thus corrective action could be taken far more quickly and more effectively.

I would like to point out that the purpose of this Bill is not to table reports on very urgent matters. The Auditor General may at any time make such reports, Mr. Speaker. There is no limitation on the subject matter of such reports. Today, however, we are talking about questions that are not judged by the Public Accounts Committee to be of vital importance or extremely urgent.

It is claimed that this change advocated by this Bill would have the advantage that the public servants called to testify before the Public Accounts Committee would more likely be those involved when the Auditor General made his observations. That is true, Mr. Speaker. However, I sincerely do not believe that the turnover is significant enough for this Bill to apply. It is believed that all these changes will make the Government more accountable to Parliament and thereby to the taxpayers, which is an objective that we all support.

Nevertheless, it is obvious that in spite of the support expressed for changes that at first seem simple and uncomplicated, there has not been unanimous support in this House for the changes proposed to the Auditor General Act. As with many issues brought up in this House, I believe that this question is more complex, much more complicated than people seem to think. Personally, I see some negative effects that could result from it and far outweigh the advantages described.

As I see it, the question we must really ask is what the impact of these changes will be on the Auditor General's effectiveness. I would not want to support changes that would in any way compromise the effectiveness of the Auditor General's Office by imposing on him a host of complications that would make his work more difficult.

The issue of the efficiency with which the Auditor General's Office can produce its reports is in reality secondary. The cost is relatively insignificant compared to the fantastic savings that result from the Auditor General's work. We would not want to compromise his effectiveness for relatively unimportant savings. It has been recognized for a long time that the Auditor General should have the resources he needs to do his job effectively and freely.

Mr. Speaker, in my mind there is no doubt that the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee do important work. In fact, when this matter was discussed in the House last October, the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) pointed out quite rightly that the Auditor General's findings have become more encouraging and that he recognizes that progress has been made in solving the problems described in previous reports. Mr. Speaker, it clearly follows that our Government is responding well to the recommendations of the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee. And before anyone accuses me of being partisan—I certainly am not and I hope I did not give that impression—I think Hon. Members should compare the present tone of the reports to those tabled in the early eighties.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has never been as laudatory in his comments as he has been since this Government came to power in 1984. Previously, the Auditor General's reports were a catastrophe for all Canadians. Our policies have been revamped, and we welcome his reports instead of hiding from reporters when the reports are tabled, which was the case between 1980 and 1984, Mr. Speaker.

I think the system works very well, and in fact it is improving, and that is what we are here for. I agree that completion-based reporting would make it possible to obtain the conclusions several months earlier. However, that alone would not resolve the problem of timeless, if there is such a problem. It is a fact that in many cases, carrying out a comprehensive audit within a department may take up to two years.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, in Parliament and in the departments, we welcome the Auditor General's comments which make it possible for us to improve the situation as we go along, without having to wait for the final results several years later. Mr. Speaker, this new approach to government is that of a businessman who has been involved in politics and not of politicians who think they can do business, as was the case with the previous Government.

We must not forget that audit results are discussed with management as they are drafted. In government, managers must deal with problems on a priority basis as soon as they are brought to their attention. They cannot wait until the final report. Corrective action is generally taken well before the annual report is tabled.

Mr. Speaker, this is a new approach. It is ongoing management and no longer disaster management as was the case before.

Under the new system of increased departmental authority and responsibility established by Treasury Board, ministers and senior officals are even more strictly accountable for the measures they take to correct deficiencies in the management of taxpayers' money, and for doing so as they are detected, instead of letting them go on for a couple of years and waiting until the final report to apologize for past mistakes, after officials have left or politicians have been replaced. That was the old way which our businessmen's government cannot accept.

There already are mechanisms to ensure that attention is given quickly to matters of a pressing nature raised by the Auditor General. In fact, the Auditor General, as I said earlier, already has the authority to bring urgent questions to the attention of the House, and to do so at any time. He is not prohibited from speaking out before he tables his final report. He may, at any time, draw the attention of the Prime Minister and Parliament to any matter he deems appropriate.

Mr. Speaker, I believe nevertheless that it may not be advisable to table audit results automatically, upon completion. It is reasonable to suppose that the Auditor General would be given a short-term investigative function that could be used to fuel the controversies of the day. The risk would increase if Bill C-271, allowing standing committees to ask the Auditor General to examine specific questions, were adopted. The Auditor General might then have to investigate some questions that would impede him in carrying out his heavy responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General must still have the right to choose what he considers pertinent to investigate and not simply accede to all the frivolous requests from sensation-seeking Opposition parties.

Mr. Speaker, we have a high quality audit bureau that reports to Parliament and it seems to me that we should look very closely at the consequences of the proposed changes to the Auditor General Act before implementing them. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Bill is unacceptable because of the lack of measures in it to preserve the Auditor General's independence.

Mr. Speaker, in this whole matter, we must judge the operations of the Auditor General on the basis of the powers conferred by our party since we took power and the responses we make to the deficiencies that he has discovered in our system. We do not wait four or five years or two years or for an election before realizing that things are not right. We correct them as we go along and we intend to continue to do so like the good businessmen we have always been.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

When shall the Bill be read a third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just want to make it abundantly clear to the House that the front benches of the NDP caucus are not on both sides of any issue and that the vote of the front bench of the NDP caucus will apply to the second time we voted.

Mr. Mazankowski: How many votes do you think you get for a nickel?

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

The House resumed from Friday, July 15 consideration of Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-30.

Mr. Angus: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. During the debate taking place on the report stage amendments to Bill C-30 on July 15, as shown at Hansard page 17631, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Government House Leader indicated that the Government was prepared, with unanimous consent which was given, to set aside the issue of Motion No. 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) in order to give the Government time to consider the process. Is the Government prepared to accept that very specific amendment relating to the Carmanah watershed area?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend giving me notice of his intention to raise this point of order. He is correct in his comments with respect to what the Parliamentary Secretary said he would do. I would reiterate that it is the feeling of the Government that Motion No. 9, which was approved, gave broader coverage than Motion No. 10. We feel it has the same effect but would not foreclose on the option of the province taking all or any responsibility for preserving the valley. For that reason we will hold with Motion No. 9.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The first question will be on Motion No. 3. Mr. Caccia moved:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 2 the following:

"(2) Immediately following subsection 3.1(5) of the said Act the following is added:

"3.2(1) The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, designate a site containing a unique or rare natural feature of phenomenon, or a site of high scientific value and public interest, whose protection is feasible as a Canadian Landmark.

(2) The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the Minister, establish criteria for the selection, administration and management of Canadian Landmarks."

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think you will find there is a disposition to apply the vote just taken to Motions Nos. 4, 5, 6, 8 and 13. I understand that if there is a negative vote on Motion No. 6, that it would necessarily have to be negatived also on Motion No. 8. Although we would be affirmative on all these questions, I take it the Government would maintain its position.

Mr. Lewis: Always.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal made by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on Motion No. 4. Mr. Caccia moved:

Motion No. 4:

That Bill C-30 be amended in Clause 3 by adding immediately after line 18 at page 2 the following:

"(2) Immediately following subsection 3.1(5) of the said Act the following is added:

"4.(1) The Governor in Council may set apart any land the title to which is vested in Her Majesty, as a National Wilderness Park."

"(2) National Wilderness Parks shall be administered, managed and controlled in a manner consistent with sections 5(9) and 5(10) of this Act, and with preservation of the wilderness character of the Park as the only priority."

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the text of the Message made by the Senate to Bill C-103, an Act to increase opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, to establish the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and to make consequential and related amendments to other Acts, because this House believes that in dividing the Bill, the Senate has altered the ends, purposes, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of the grants of aid and supplies set out in the Bill, contrary to Standing Order 87, as recommended by Her Excellency the Governor General to this House, and has therefore infringed the privileges of this House, and asks that the Senate return Bill C-103 in an undivided form.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I want to put those discussions on the record. The Government will now call Bill C-30 at third reading. When the debate is finished, if there is a division requested, it will be deferred until 6 p.m. tomorrow and the House will call it ten o'clock.

NATIONAL PARKS ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of the Environment) moved that Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend an Act to amend the National Parks Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) supports this Bill very enthusiastically, as he does everything I do in the Government and in the National Capital Region. He is a great credit to this region. He is going to work for me in the next election.

I am pleased to have been chosen to speak on behalf of the Government on this extremely important and timely piece of environmental legislation. As you know, Sir, I am one of the legislative committee chairpersons and I have a personal policy of not wanting to get involved in debates on any Bill I had chaired or was going to chair. However, as a former National Parks employee I am making an exception because I am intensely proud of that past and our expanding National Parks system. Also, the legislative committee proceeded in a very non-partisan way on what we all agree is a very non-partisan but important national issue.

A short time ago the Canadian Environment Protection Act was the first comprehensive federal environmental legislation in this country's history to be passed by Parliament. On behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and his Parliamentary Secretary, I have the honour of speaking to another tremendously significant environmental initiative as it comes before this House for third reading, namely, the long overdue amendments to the National Parks Act.

In 1974 the Act was amended in a minor way. The Act which was originally created in 1930 by this Parliament is now being amended in a significant way, 58 years after it first came before this House.

The Environmental Protection Act is aimed at safeguarding us in our homes, our businesses, our industries, and our urban areas. In short, it protects the people of Canada where we live and work.

The National Parks Act is aimed at safeguarding special islands in an urban sea for the times we leave our normal surroundings and wish to revive our spirits—places where we surrender control and manipulation of our environment and let nature itself dictate the terms of our visit.

I am sure you will agree, Sir, that we all need and deserve clean, unpolluted surroundings for the enjoyment of our everyday lives. We need and deserve the refreshment of nature when we depart from our routines. This is what the quality of life in Canada is all about. How many times have you told yourself that you want to get away to somewhere quiet, somewhere clean?

Canada is often called the country of the great white north. God bless the great white north. Let us keep it strong and free. These revisions to the National Parks Act will significantly enhance those opportunities, not only for our people but for those around the world who visit our great system.

CEPA and the National Parks Act will work side by side to keep the quality of life in Canada one of the highest in the world. In the case of the national parks, even those unfortunate people who have never visited one must take pride that this nation has the sensitivity to preserve such magnificent examples of our national heritage. Last year over 19 million individuals, mostly Canadians, visited the national parks system in our country.

The National Parks Act amendments are strong simply because they must be strong. It is a great credit to the legislative committee members who reviewed Bill C-30 that they recognized this need and worked long and hard to reshape and add to the original proposals. I commend the opposition Members on the committee whose reasoned analyses of the issues led to many important changes being adopted in the report.

Over 30 individuals and groups who made consistently thoughtful and insightful oral or written presentations on behalf of their specific interests are also to be commended for their input to Bill C-30.

Participation ranged from environmental organizations such as the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society—and here I wish to congratulate Kevin McNamee, the conservation director for that society, for the tremendous work that he and his society did toward helping us making this a better Bill—to groups representing the native peoples of Canada and tourism-oriented agencies such as the Chamber of Commerce in Jasper.

• (1930)

All of their very thoughtful presentations included some suggested changes to the Bill. We could not accept all of them, but we certainly satisfied many of the requests they brought forward to make it a stronger and better Bill. Through that process of consultation, this committee can be very proud of the work it did.

One of the most significant changes to the original Bill concerns the addition of the legislated requirement to produce management plans for each national park. It was evident from the committee hearings that the wide range of viewpoints and the passionate concerns of interest groups must inescapably be considered in preparing such plans. The parks service has a very good record in conducting consultation, but the committee decided that a greater accountability was needed.

The committee therefore proposed that all plans be tabled in the House, that such plans be reviewed every five years and retabled in the House with any changes. That proposal was accepted. Through that process of consultation, the framework of the actual purpose of the national parks which is outlined in Clause 4 can and will be maintained clearly and consistently. Clause 4 states:

> The National Parks of Canada are hereby dedicated to the people of Canada for their benefit, education and enjoyment... and shall be maintained and made use of so as to leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

It reminds me of when I worked in Africa at the national parks in Tanzania. The sign at the entrance of the Serengeti National Park read: "Here the world is still young and fragile, held in trust for your sons and ours". We can apply a similar philosophy to the national parks in our great country.

A significant amendment that was accepted by the committee was put forward by the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). It links directly to the importance of having those management plans tabled and approved in Parliament. His amendment read:

Maintenance of ecological integrity through the protection of natural resources shall be the first priority when considering park zoning and visitor use in a management plan.

Another important amendment states that the Minister of the Environment will table a document in the House every two years reporting on the state of the parks and progress toward establishing new parks.

Other changes made as a result of the process of consultation on Bill C-30 relate to the additional protection in a second schedule of certain wildlife species. We also incorporated at report stage reference to national marine parks, the first one being on the Bruce Peninsula in Ontario.

This new national marine park reference signals the start of an ambitious program of conservation aimed at protecting significant examples of the salt and freshwater environments.

The Minister will use this new found authority to push on with important initiatives related to establishing marine parks in South Moresby, the Saguenay and many other parts of Canada.

Another provision of the Bill which has been requested since the first Act was proclaimed in 1930 is the change to penalty provisions that were drastically out of date. Bill C-30 has now established the highest fines in the world for the protection of endangered and trophy species in our national parks. For example, fines of up to $150,000 can now result from convictions of those killing threatened species such as polar bear and bighorn sheep. Fines could be up to $10,000 for persons convicted of killing protected species such as wolf or elk in our national parks.

In order for the parks employees to enforce these new measures of protection, they will need more help from the Ministry of the Environment. I encourage the Government and the Minister to allocate the help that the enforcement officers will need to catch those who are destroying our wildlife.

Bill C-30 will also ensure continued protection for wilderness areas. Within Banff and Jasper National Parks in particular, it will give a clear rationale for defining limits to commercial and urban development.

Aside from the Bruce Peninsula National Park and the National Marine Park amendments introduced at report stage, Bill C-30 will establish Ellesmere Island National Park Reserve and give proclamation authority for Grasslands National Park in Saskatchewan.

I am proud to be speaking on behalf of the Government. I congratulate the Minister and, particularly his Parliamentary Secretary who worked long and hard and showed excellent leadership in ensuring that Bill C-30 has come to pass. The committee did an excellent job. Most important, the officials and the staff who helped us throughout our deliberations did a superb job. I congratulate all of them.

Parliament will have its final say on behalf of our people and our parks. This is a very proud moment for me because I first went to our national parks system as a labourer. Now I am speaking as a legislator.

In 1967, when I went to Banff National Park to work as a labourer, I recognized the magnificence and beauty of that park. I know the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is proud to say that that part of his wonderful province has been entrenched in law for over 100 years. I recall that Jack Nicol was director general of Parks Canada and Jean Chrétien was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development at that time. I give him credit for initiating new national parks during his mandate.

Pierre Lesaux, presently one of the commissioners at the Public Service Commission of Canada, worked for the parks system. Pierre Desmeules was involved in the resource inventory task force. All of us worked hard to make sure that our parks systems would continue to grow.

It is my honour, looking back over 21 years of national parks interest, service and dedication, to have this last word before our National Parks Act is amended and greatly strengthened by this Parliament.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-30, an Act to amend the National Parks Act. First, I want to congratulate my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for the excellent work he has done in this area. We know that the Member was an excellent Minister of the Environment and is someone who really cares about environmental issues. Unfortunately, he cannot be with us today because he is representing our country at an international conference on environmental issues. Again, he has our interest at heart.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) described this Bill as a major piece of legislation. While our national parks system is a major issue, this legislation itself does not qualify as the type of legislation described by the Member for Ottawa—Carleton. After all, this is a Bill that was introduced in a previous Parliament, by the Hon. Member for Davenport when he was Minister of the Environment. Since the previous Parliament dissolved in July, 1984, one wonders why the new Minister of the Environment waited until December, 1986, to reintroduce what is essentially the same Bill. One cannot help but wonder why the Bill was allowed to gather dust all that time. Nevertheless, the Hon. Member for Davenport and I are very pleased the Bill is proceeding now. After all, it was a Bill he introduced.

As I indicated moments ago, the Bill was introduced in this House in December of 1986. One would have assumed the Government would have dealt with it expeditiously, trying to advance the legislation and make progress so that it could wind its way through the different processes. However, interestingly enough, the Bill which has just been described as landmark and super important by the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Carleton was not even touched by the Government for 16 months. Sixteen months after it was introduced in the House in December of 1986, remembering that it had gathered dust for 30 months before that, the Government began to proceed with second reading debate.

During those 16 months there were urgings by Members of this House, particularly the Hon. Member for Davenport, that the legislation proceed and be enacted into law. Nevertheless, there was a considerable delay. One could ask why there was a delay. According to the Edmonton Journal of December 5, 1987, Bill C-30 was "held hostage by the Tory Alberta caucus". The ransom demanded for allowing Bill C-30 to go through Parliament was the expansion of tourism and resource development in national parks, particularly the four mountain parks in British Columbia and Alberta. Those, of course, are Yoho, Banff, Jasper and Waterton.

According to R.V. Rasmussen of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society in Edmonton, the Minister of the Environment had the people of Alberta on his side. In a letter dated January 10, 1988, to all Members of Parliament, Mr. Rasmussen wrote:

> The Alberta caucus is very much out of touch with Albertans on this issue.

I have a copy of that letter in front of me, in fact.

> Letters and editorials are unanimously against the development stance. In fact, there has not been a single letter (to the editor) supporting the stance of the Alberta caucus.

With the public on his side, we all hoped that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. MacMillan) would stand up to some of those Members of Parliament, and I do not know whether the Member opposite is one of them. I can only report the information we received from the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society. Instead, the Minister retreated. He supported the removal of the boundaries of the Sunshine Valley Ski Village from Bill C-30 instead of leaving it to Cabinet to decide on the degree of expansion to allow for the ski area.

In other words, the original proposal would have called for Parliament to decide on the boundaries of this particular ski village. That decision can now be taken by Cabinet. We feel this was a watering down of what otherwise could have been stronger legislation. This was the price the Minister agreed to pay in order to get the co-operation of some of his colleagues in getting Bill C-30 through Parliament.

I would like to speak briefly about the improvements to Bill C-30. Witnesses in front of the legislative committee put forward some excellent suggestions to improve the Bill. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton has referred to some of those. The committee accepted a number of amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Davenport and others to make Bill C-30 a better piece of legislation. The Canadian Heritage Fund was dropped. This scheme proposed to solicit money from individual Canadians to improve national parks, but the fund would be spent at the direction and discretion of the Minister. There had been no consultation with non-government groups who were seen as the instruments to collect the money for what appeared to be little more than funds that could be used for political motives.

Fortunately, the committee was convinced to remove this measure from the Bill and we urge the Minister of the Environment to take up the offer of the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society and immediately initiate discussions with all interested parties to determine how best to set up a co-operative funding scheme that would be acceptable to all parties concerned and, most important, lead to the development of a capital fund for the acquisition of new parks in Canada.

Ecological principles will be made the first management priority for national parks as a result of an amendment to Bill C-30. This important amendment was suggested by the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society so that the National Parks Act would reflect the principles laid out in the 1979 Parks Canada policy. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, government members on the committee initially refused to support this amendment which legislated parks policy until interventions were made by interested parties. In other words, government members refused to go along with this proposed amendment.

Overnight, a number of people, particularly the Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society, lobbied and convinced the Minister that this amendment was worth while. Overnight the officials of the Department redrafted the same amendment—with a few different words, of course—and when government members came into the committee room the next day, and looked at the brand new amendment, they noted how much better it was than the previous one. Of course, it was exactly the same but with different words. The amendment passed unanimously.

Another amendment adopted by the committee will require the Minister to prepare and table in the House a park management plan for new parks within five years of their proclamation. There is now also a requirement for public participation in the preparation of management plans, as appropriate.

The Minister will also be required to report to Parliament every two years on the status of the national parks system and the progress made toward establishing new parks. That again was referred to previously today by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton.

We all know the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton is indeed an expert in this area. As he indicated, he has been a park warden both in this country and abroad. I have often chatted with him about such issues and I can indeed attest to the fact that he is very knowledgeable in the area of the functioning and management of parks.

There are still things missing in Bill C-30. We voted about an hour ago on amendments to Bill C-30 which would have made the legislation far better. The Canadian Landmarks program was approved in principle in 1979 when the present Speaker of our Parliament was Minister of the Environment. The 1984 land claims settlement of the Inuit of the western Arctic established the pingos of Tuktoyaktuk as a Canadian landmark to be managed by the Minister of the Environment under the National Parks Act. For those who are not familiar with "pingos", they are a very unique feature. It is a form of outcrop coming from the land which is caused by heaving. It is similar to what we might find in our driveway in the spring with the exception that they are much higher. I am told they can be 60 to 70 feet high. They are a very unique and distinctive formation. They are indeed something that is very special. They have been identified as a landmark.

The present Act makes no reference to Canadian landmarks, even though there was an amendment proposed to have those landmarks identified. Parks Canada is having some difficulty in finding a way to carry out its mandate with respect to the pingos of Tuktoyaktuk. The Hon. Member for Davenport put forward a motion to include the Canadian landmarks in the Act. The Minister wrote back to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport, saying what a great idea this is. As a matter of fact, I have a copy of a letter undoubtedly written by officials in the Minister's Department. There are a few handwritten notes in which the Minister tells my colleague, the Member for Davenport: "P.S. Charles, you can count on my full support of the idea. I'm eager to pursue it with you. Might we discuss how the program could be launched in a way that will work and that won't violate the fiscal rules to which I am subject . . . " The Minister of the Environment responded to my colleague, suggesting that it was a neat idea to identify and protect the landmarks. "I am glad you are putting up this amendment. Isn't this great. Don't know what I can do about it, but I am glad you are bringing it up. Why don't we meet and discuss it sometime".

The interesting thing is that Canadian landmarks are already part of the Parks Canada policy. In other words, the Parks Canada policy which governs the Minister's own Department covers the landmarks. Seemingly the Minister did not know about this when he wrote that letter to my colleague.

I have a copy of "Canadian Landmarks" component of Parks Canada policy. Page 59 of "Canadian Landmarks" states:

> Parks Canada Objective for the Canadian Landmarks System. To foster protection for all time of exceptional natural sites of Canadian significance in a co-operative system of Canadian landmarks, and to encourage public understanding and appreciation of this natural heritage so as to leave it unimpaired for future generations.
> 1.0 Proposed Criteria for Inclusion in the Canadian Landmarks System.
> 1.1 Canadian landmarks must be exceptional natural sites of Canadian significance identified according to the following criteria:
> i) the sites must contain a natural feature or phenomenon which is unique or rare in Canada or the world, or the sites must be the best example of a particular natural theme component in Canada; and > ii) the sites must have experienced minimum modification by man or, if such modification has occurred, the main feature must be unaffected and the sites must have potential for restoration to a natural state.

There are pages here describing the landmark system.

You will recall what I just quoted from the handwritten note of the Minister saying what a great idea it is to talk about these landmarks, and what could we do to promote it. One can now attest to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister did not seem to be too much au courant of the policy of his own Department, the policy which is supposed to govern what he does, by the way.

I want to talk briefly about the non-derogation clause. A little earlier this evening we voted on the amendment which was proposed by the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin). The Tungavik Federation of the Nunavut brought to the attention of the committee that there was a potential for conflict between the National Parks Act and Section 35 of the Constitution Act dealing with aboriginal rights. The Canadian Parks and Wilderness Society and the Prairie Treaty Nations Alliance supported and reinforced the submission of the Nunavut. As a result, the offending clause of Bill C-30 was amended. However, Professor Brad Morse of the University of Ottawa Law School pointed out that there could be a conflict between Section 6(1) of the National Parks Act which is not affected by Bill C-30, and section 35 of the Constitution Act. For this reason he suggested that a non-derogation clause be moved at report stage to protect the rights of aboriginal peoples in the event of a conflict between Bill C-30 and the Constitution. That essentially is the amendment that we were voting on tonight as proposed by the Hon. Member for Yukon.

Interestingly enough the Government chose to vote down that amendment. What bothers me is the fact that we pass legislation on a fairly frequent basis relating to resources or lands that contains a clause identical or fairly similar to the one proposed by my Hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon. If the Government states that that one was not appropriately worded, why did it not propose one of its own, so at least the Bill would have contained that non-derogation clause which we should include more and more in legislation, particularly when we are dealing with resources or with land issues.

Finally, I want to talk about the Sunshine ski area in Banff. I have been to that area. As a matter of fact, like most Canadians, I probably see the national parks in the context of making a short visit to Jasper or Banff, as I did last year. My family and I skied at Sunshine Village. It is a very beautiful area in which to ski. I am sure all Canadians want us as a country to have those facilities in that beautiful setting in Banff. I believe that is in the constituency of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). I am sure he must be very proud of that area. It is absolutely beautiful. It was the first time that I visited the Sunshine Village. I am sure the Hon. Member and all his constituents must be very proud of it. Of course, all of us want that type of enterprise to succeed, and we want to attract tourists. We favour the proper development of that type of an area.

There boundaries of the ski area were agreed to in 1979, following a number of years of public consultation. That is the way in which it should be done. There should be public consultation. We must always ensure that the ecological concerns are taken care of before developing or increasing the size of a development. The commitment was made then to legislate these boundaries so that only Parliament could, in its collective wisdom, expand the boundaries of the ski area. It was the reneging of this commitment by the governing Party that resulted in the situation that we now have where Bill C-30 has changed that wherein in the future Cabinet unilaterally can make that type of change. We believe that the Bill would have been far better had the Government stayed the previous course of having that type of change made by the House of Commons.

So, Mr. Speaker, to conclude, we, for our part, support Bill C-30. As I indicated earlier, this Bill was delayed by the Government for a very long time. As I said, the Bill was put on the back burner for about two years, and was then introduced to the House and stayed on the shelf for another long while. We, however, do not want to delay the Bill's possible adoption in any way. I do regret, as does my colleague the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that the Government has decided to amend the Bill with regard to the Sunshine Village Ski Area in Alberta, as I said earlier.

Nevertheless, I support the Bill. The others members of my party intend to support it, and there would be no advantage to delaying this Bill tonight.

I will conclude with that, Mr. Speaker, and I do hope that the House, that Parliament, will pass the Bill shortly.

• (2000)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to make a contribution to the closing moments of the debate on Bill C-30. I want to start by indicating that I, like the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner), have a fairly lengthy background in parks but not to the same exotic degree as has the Member for Ottawa-Carleton. He has been involved in parks outside Canada, outside this continent. My experiences are primarily within municipalities and within the Province of Ontario.

I give the Government credit for what it is doing today. It is taking that next step in our growth as a nation, in our understanding of the importance of our wilderness areas and of the important aspects of our history from the point of view of human beings as well as geological and marine to ensure that we provide the necessary protection of our natural environment.

On the one hand it is there for the purposes that we need it for and, second, it is there for all of us, whether we be Canadians or visitors to this country, to enjoy nature at its best. Whether it is parks in or close to the urban settings of this country or parks that are long distances away from people, it is extremely important to do.

I want to speak for a moment about the myth that we so often hear about. I hear it in my constituency. There was a newspaper report this morning talking about an attack on a wilderness park operated in the Province of Ontario by people who basically believe that if we cannot cut it, if we cannot dig it out of the ground, if we cannot sell it, it has no value. That myth has no basis in reality. There are some things that we cannot buy or sell. There are some things that should not be cut, some places that we should not dig up. Part of what Bill C-30 does is provide that protection. It also provides the ability to expand that protection. I will come back to that in a moment.

In terms of the wilderness park, there are some who believe that wilderness parks are only there for an exclusive group, be they physically able or financially able to travel to distant points to access these wilderness parks or the national parks. In terms of a mental attitude just because they do not want to use them does not mean that they are important. They forget that there is another value, the real value about parks in general but wilderness parks specifically. On one hand they operate as a bench-mark. I use the term "bench-mark" because I used to be an employee of the Ontario Department of Highways, as a surveyor. My hon. colleague from Bow River will know of what I speak when I talk about a bench-mark being a point of reference, a point that one can measure up or down. Our wilderness parks provide that. They provide it in an ecological sense, so that we can measure the changes in wildlife, the changes in our vegetation, the impact of acid rain, and any other atmospheric pollutants or water pollution. We can measure it and compare it with what the natural should be. That is one important issue of wilderness parks.

The more trees we cut down, the less oxygen we are producing and the less carbon dioxide is being absorbed. This is becoming more and more crucial every day. We are getting into a crisis point because of the greenhouse effect, because of the attempt by the so-called industrial world, the so-called leaders of the economy of the world who are now encouraging those with rain forests to cut them down, to eradicate them. What we are doing, over time, is destroying life on earth as we know it.

Wilderness parks are an extremely small component of the land mass and the vegetation of this world, not only this country. I am sure that if we put all national parks that exist in Canada today in northwestern Ontario from where I come from, we would barely be able to see them. In fact, they probably would not be any bigger than Lake Superior, one of the largest freshwater lakes in the world. They would disappear. It is not as if we are going out there and destroying the economy of the Rockies or northern Ontario or Atlantic Canada; we are protecting something for the future, and it is extremely important that we continue to do so.

It also provides for those that we share this earth with, those so-called less intelligent beings, and I know there are some who will dispute who the most intelligent is.

Mr. Benjamin: The animals are.

Mr. Angus: We have done a pretty good job of screwing up the earth. They have not had that chance. As we look at them and see how they operate, we know that the fur bearing creatures and feather creatures are in sync with the environment, whereas man, the so-called intelligent species, seems to go out of his and her way to destroy. In fairness, I think we have to say that most of the blame has to be passed on to the males of history, because they are the ones who made the decisions, the mistakes. We have gone out of our way to destroy what existed and what should exist.

The wilderness parks, the national parks, provide an incubator—again another bench-mark—which on the one hand allows us to see the changes elsewhere but on the other hand ensures that those species that we have come close to eradicating for trophies on walls, for souvenirs, or even for food, have a chance to come back. I think of the buffalo in western Canada. I think of the American eagle in the United States.

Mr. Benjamin: The Golden Eagle.

Mr. Angus: The Golden Eagle. I think of ducks and the fine work being done by Ducks Unlimited, in the sense of restocking. It is not just ducks, but geese. In the area where I live we had not seen geese for years. Now, thanks to Ducks Unlimited, they have been transplanted and we have a very large flock based close to my place in Thunder Bay. It is great to see them. Wilderness parks provide a place for them to live and survive, to grow, to re-establish their species; for another reason, it is important to set that area aside.

Now we can move on and appreciate one of the amendments that was put forward by the Government at the late stages of report stage debate providing for the marine parks, the water component. Whether it is in the County of Bruce or elsewhere, we can take a look at our undersea neighbours, our underwater neighbours, to ensure that their species can be protected.

There are things we would have liked to have seen changed in the Bill to make it better and to make it less sensitive to the commercial instincts which the market-place tends to place on us. Unfortunately, the Government did not see the wisdom of the proposals. We also wanted to ensure that the aboriginal peoples, the first people of this nation, in no way were infringed by any element of this piece of legislation so that nothing in the Bill could take away something that by treaty, by agreement, was made between the Government of Canada and their nation. Again, it is unfortunate that the Government did not feel it appropriate to provide that specific override in the legislation. There will come a time when we will ensure that this legislation is improved that much more. Just as we build a nation we will build and develop our parks. I use the term "develop" very loosely. I am not talking about ski resorts or major commercial entities. I am talking about the development of the boundaries to ensure that there are boundaries and about the protection that is necessary to ensure that sites are protected for as long as we are here and for our children, our grandchildren, our great-grandchildren, and so on.

I want to speak to another specific element of the Bill which provides yet even more growth—the ability for us as a Parliament of Canada and for the Cabinet of the day no matter which Party is the governing one, no matter whether it is this year, 10 years or 20 years from now, to have the power to designate national parks. We did that on Friday for four areas of this country: the rural municipalities of Val Marie and Old Post in the Province of Saskatchewan, the County of Bruce in the Province of Ontario—we have also provided specific reference to marine parks in that case—the District of St. Barb and Humber West in the Province of Newfoundland, and the District of Thunder Bay in which I reside. That one, of course, is appropriate to my area and is of specific interest to myself.

I live at the tip of a mountain range. It is a mountain range in northwestern Ontario but you have to appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that it may not be the same size as the ranges in the neighbourhood of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). This mountain range is called the Nor'westers. It has been a dream for years that that range, which runs along the edge of Lake Superior and stretches down to the Pigeon River where the Voyageurs went from Lake Superior up to Lake of the Woods and into western Canada, could be protected forever from development by declaring it a national or a provincial park. This amendment brought forward by the Government, and I do thank the Government for it, was as a result of an initiative taken by the City of Thunder Bay Parks and Recreation Department.

About six years ago, when I was still there as a park planner, we entered into a master planning process to see where we should be going in the next 10, 15, or 20 years in parks and recreation planning. An item that came out of that study and an analysis of the needs and wishes of the people of Thunder Bay was the need for a wilderness park type facility along the Nor'westers. The report went to the council and it was recommended that we look at it. The City of Thunder Bay wrote to the legislative committee asking to be heard. It saw Bill C-30 as a part of the process which would allow the City of Thunder Bay at the very least to ensure that at some point should the citizens of Thunder Bay agree with the proposal that they would have the opportunity to be heard. Regretfully the committee decided what it wanted was outside the scope of the Bill and declined to invite them to appear. Because they had raised the matter with the committee on my suggestion, it came to the attention of the Government and through the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mrs. Browes) a motion was brought forward which included the District of Thunder Bay in that opportunity. It does not mean that the District of Thunder Bay will get a national park. It may not. At some point, even if the community decides or the community of communities decides to make an approach, the Government may say: "I am sorry, we cannot afford it". But it opens the door for the process to begin.

There are some very good restrictions in the process. The land has to be owned by the Government of Canada. This means that private land holders who exist within the broad stretch do not have to fear that somebody will draw a park boundary line which all of a sudden includes their land, preventing them from doing with their land what they have done with it for years. It requires notification so that people have an opportunity for input. It gives the City of Thunder Bay the opportunity to begin discussions with its neighbours to the south and east, the Fort William Indian Band, with its neighbours to the south and west, the Municipality of Neeming, and perhaps even farther away to the Municipality of Paipoonge.

We can now begin to talk about how that could work and whether or not there is agreement to bring forward a specific proposal to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) that is well thought out, well supported with a clear idea of the finances involved, letting the Government of the day react. The ball is now in the court of the parks and recreation department of the City of Thunder Bay. What we have done with Bill C-30 is to make sure that the City of Thunder Bay knows the door is open. It is an important step.

The same thing can apply to Newfoundland, to Saskatchewan, to Bruce County, and elsewhere in Ontario because those places too now have that door open to them. They do not have to worry about how to convince Cabinet to bring in a separate Bill to do this when it has a loaded agenda. If it is four years from now we will be bucking against a possible election with people trying to go home for the summer, maybe! This is a good tool. It really does make it easier for representatives of those four areas to put forward their concepts.

It also does not preclude the powers that be in Thunder Bay from saying: "No, it doesn't make sense. We were wrong. However, we might want to make a deal with the Province of Ontario and turn Sibley Provincial Park, which has the famous sleeping giant, into a national park. Everything is wide open within the District of Thunder Bay as a planning tool. That is extremely important, Mr. Speaker. I want to thank Members for the opportunity to participate at third reading on Bill C-30. I know at least one of my colleagues wants to speak about the proposal for the Grasslands Park in Saskatchewan. Perhaps other Members might want to speak.

We will be supporting this Bill. It is good legislation. It could have been better, but we will have our turn to make it even better at some future date.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I was looking at the Bill and I could only find one small reference in it as it pertains to the Prairies, leaving out the references to Banff, Jasper, Elk Island, and a park in Manitoba.

I want to remind the House that it is now about 15 or 16 years ago that I was invited by the then federal Minister of the day and the provincial Minister of the day to a great ceremony and celebration which was held in the City of Regina. Officials were there from the Provinces of Manitoba and Alberta and the States of Montana and North Dakota.

All the wildlife and naturalist people from western Canada were there. Authors and artists were there. Two or three hundred people attended that celebration because it was the announcement of agreement on the Grasslands National Park. My good friend, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), will appreciate that because he has a lot of grasslands in his riding.

Once that had been accomplished, then all the naysayers took over. Every Government since, provincial and federal, of the three different Parties, have procrastinated, waffled, horsed around, delayed, and found every excuse imaginable to avoid having that park proclaimed and instituted.

On the last page of the Bill, in the second last subclause, I saw the rural municipalities of Val Marie and Old Post in the Province of Saskatchewan are mentioned. Those two municipalities, of course, could be part and parcel of a much larger area which will be the Grasslands National Park. Maybe the coming of another drought and the terrible difficulties that our grain and livestock producers are going through will produce over the next several years some great good, because hundreds of those people have already left the area. There is no doubt that hundreds more will do so. Sad to say, what is left of some of the communities in that area are dying. So I suppose it is somewhat ironic that a large area of the Prairies could be returned to mother nature to turn it back into its natural state. Tens of thousands of acres of marginal or submarginal lands that should never have been farmed or ranched in the first place, but thanks to the Hudson's Bay Company and the CPR and a few others like them, they were settled and farmed.

It has always been next year country in that part of my province, if not my whole province. The grasslands is a heritage fast disappearing in Canada and the U.S., the Soviet Union, and parts of Asia where they have vast tracts of grasslands. Yet in those other parts of the world they have much denser populations. There is a unique opportunity here for Canada, if we move fast enough, to allow nature to restore in its natural habitat and environment a truly great prairie grasslands national park. I know my hon. friend from Saskatoon West has been down in that part of the province a lot of times and he knows something about it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I know it like the back of my hand.

Mr. Benjamin: If you have never been there, Mr. Speaker, you should go. It is the kind of area where farsighted people come from. You stand on a small hill and you can see straight ahead for three days.

It is not only a question of preserving the grasslands and the wildlife. I want to list a number of species of wildlife that I came up with in my own amateurish manner. All but a couple of them are endangered species whose natural habitat is the Prairies. They are not going to restore themselves unless we make certain there is a territory for them to do it in.

There is the kit fox, kangaroo rats, prairie dogs, sage grouse, sharp-tailed grouse, prong-horned antelope, and the prairie buffalo. That is not the wood buffalo. The prairie buffalo are the big ones. Even elk. Most people do not know that the elk are not native to the mountains. The elk were and are native to the Prairies and if you ever took the trouble to read the journals of the northwest fur traders and the Hudson's Bay fur traders, the ones who went up the North and South Saskatchewan Rivers in their canoes and rafts and came out above the river valley and on to the Prairies, they talk about the tens of thousands of elk and deer and antelope and buffalo that roamed those Prairies. Yet people are surprised when you mention the word elk in connection with the Prairies. They are native to the Prairies, not the mountains. We forced them up there.

Then we have, would you believe, things like cactus? Would you believe even rattlesnakes? I know we have had trouble with rats and snakes there from time to time. It is like trying to get rid of the Liberals and Tories. I am just teasing my good friend from Bow River.

So we have cactus and rattlesnakes, hawks and eagles, burrowing owls, and a host of wildlife and plants and flowers that were always natural to that area. Over the last 20 to 25 years, Sir, we have allowed that wildlife and that natural growth to be devastated with herbicides and pesticides. We have continued to cultivate submarginal land that should never be cultivated. We have continued to allow it to be overgrazed. If there is any one argument that I have had with ranchers it concerns overgrazing. They would overgraze their land all year, through the spring, summer, and fall. They would cut hay off the bottom land and then would come running to the provincial Department of Natural Resources, either in Alberta or Saskatchewan, and demand special permits to shoot the elk and moose and deer that came down into their haystacks. What else were those poor beasts supposed to do? I watched elk being slaughtered up in the Crowsnest Pass country when ranchers got their way and got a special permit. They would even run cattle and sheep and horses up above the timber line and graze the meadows down to nothing. As soon as there was a little bit of snow the wildlife came down and got into the haystacks and the ranchers got permits to slaughter them. That is unforgivable. I have no time or patience for those who run livestock and misuse the vegetation or the wildlife. If they are going to keep domestic animals, they have a responsibility to look after them rather than leaving them to fend for themselves at the expense of the wildlife and, later, the expense of the taxpayers.

We have a great opportunity to allow nature to restore to the state it was in when we came here one of the few grasslands areas left in the world. The Indian people moved with the wildlife. When grass and water was in short supply, the wildlife moved and the Indian people moved with them. The area they left was able to restore itself. This grasslands national park must be big enough to allow an element of that to happen.

The Indian people never took more than what they needed for themselves. The white man, who came mostly from Europe, in order to make a buck failed to conserve. I think my friends opposite cherish the word "conserve". If there is one crime which society as a whole has committed, it is our failure to conserve the national elements of our country and, in this instance, our beloved Prairies.

If I had my way on the issue of proclaiming and developing national parks, and I do not know if my own Party would agree with me, I would not let the private sector in on it at all. I wouldn't mind if they put up a couple or three motels and a couple of the chintzy hotdog stands they have in so many of our parks outside the park border, but beyond that they would not be allowed to do anything else. Their primary purpose is to make some dollars and they, like so many of us, want to make dollars at the expense of the natural environment and the wildlife.

The Queen Charlottes, the grasslands, our streams, Rocky Mountains, and rocks in northern Ontario are things which we have no right to leave in a mess for our children and grandchildren to clean up, if possible. There should be no question about the purposes for a national park for our people and for nature and wildlife. Those who are selfish and thoughtless and oppose this sort of thing should be able to have their say. However, unless they can present an overwhelming case, we must proceed with this anyway.

I wish to invite all of my colleagues to spend an evening camping on the Prairies and to get up before dawn. They will hear a meadow lark sing and a gopher squeak. They will see some hawks and eagles. They will hear a coyote howling from a hill nearby. They will hear the beat of a sagegrouse or sharp-tailed grouse. They will watch the beauty of a herd of antelope galloping at speeds up to 60 miles an hour. I invite you, Mr. Speaker, and all my colleagues to experience that. If you do so, I expect that we will get an even bigger and better grasslands national park than we are presently envisaging.

I hope this legislation will allow whoever is governing this country to implement this initiative. We will support it in the hopes that that will be accomplished. I hope that Hon. Members will not think only of the Queen Charlottes, northern Ontario, Atlantic Canada, or northern Canada, as beautiful and as great as they are. The most sadly neglected area has been our Prairie grasslands and there is not much time left for it to be rejuvenated. I hope the present Government and all governments succeeding it will ensure that it it preserved.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support my colleague and friend, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), in the splendid speech he made on grasslands. His remarks reminded me of the first school district in which I was engaged to teach. I was raised in the hills of Drumheller. Around the hills there is a lot of prairie grassland. However, not as much as there was at Lake McKee.

One morning I got up and looked out of the old granary which was serving as a teacherage. I saw about 15 prairie chickens doing I did not know what. I watched them in fascination. They were going through various movements as if they were in a dance or a drill. That lasted for about 15 or 20 minutes. I have never seen anything like it. I wish I had had a camera to take pictures of those prairie chickens which I believe are now extinct on our Prairies.

They are extinct because we destroyed their habitat and also because they were so patient. I remember a friend of mine taking a shot at a prairie chicken when I was just a boy. He missed but the patient prairie chicken gave him a second chance. It sat there and let him shoot it. That is another reason it is extinct.

I love hunting but I have never shot a duck when it was sitting on the water because the very thought of my friend shooting that helpless prairie chicken which was patient enough to give him a second chance always brought horrors to my mind.

I want to support this matter of the grasslands. They are a beautiful thing. During a terrible flood in the Drumheller Valley a nurse came to help us out with some of the tragedies which were taking place there in 1940.

• (2040)

I took her up to the top of a hill to show her the beautiful view of the Nacmine area which the Hon. Member for Regina West would know well. You could survey the whole valley. I asked her if she did not think it was a beautiful sight, even though it was flooding. She thought it was weird, not beautiful. I said: "Sister, you do not know what beautiful is". Every hill, every blade of grass is beautiful as far as I am concerned. People ask what we see in the grasslands. I will not try to duplicate what the Hon. Member for Regina West said, but everything he said about the grasslands is true.

As a Member representing Banff, where the first national park was formed in Canada, I want to say a few words about how Bill C-30 affects that area. National parks and protection are synonymous and must be kept that way. The meaning of national parks is protection.

The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) mentioned wilderness areas. I too am very fond of wilderness areas and believe they should be protected in their natural state. National parks exist for people to enjoy wilderness areas. Many people enjoy walking, others enjoy riding horses, while others enjoy driving.

People said in the early 1900s that it would be horrible to let a car enter the Banff National Park. While it may have been necessary to cut down some trees for railway lines and roads, without those roads or railway lines it would have been impossible for hundreds of thousands of people to enjoy the beauties of the national park. Today, some people question the necessity of an airstrip in Banff National Park, which has been there for some 15 or 20 years. It has not killed any animals. It is a safety feature for airplanes that get lost in the mountainous area where weather changes rapidly. It brings people in so that they may enjoy the national park.

I agree that national parks need protection, but I think we have to realize that in order for everyone to enjoy the national park there must be means for them to get there, whether it be by train, by car, by horse, by walking, or even by airplane. That is why I would support keeping the airstrip at Banff National Park.

Recently a vote was held in the townsite of Banff. The people voted by a large majority to have local government. Since its inception, the people of Banff have been governed by a "mayor" living 2,000 miles away, the Minister of the Environment. He has had to contend with municipal problems like sewers, roads, snowdrifts, water lines and so on. The people of Banff have not had the privilege of governing themselves.

Now they will have that opportunity and I want to thank the Minister and his staff, as well as the superintendent in Banff and his staff, the school board and their staff and many others in that area who worked together in order to obtain self government. Some may say that an elected council will operate in a way that is not in harmony with the protection provided by national parks. I do not believe there is anyone more anxious to preserve and protect the national park than the people of Banff who live there. It is their livelihood and their joy. It is their life. Consequently, I am sure that no council in Banff will do anything to hurt the national park.

There will be two administrations: The town council and the park administration. I believe the two will work together in harmony to solve any problem that may arise in the interest of protection of national parks.

Some people do not favour tourism, but tourists have made Banff National Park what it is today. We want people to continue to enjoy Banff National Park. This means different things to many people. A skier needs a place to ski, and the ski hills must have competitive facilities to attract the skiers. The Hon. Member mentioned Sunshine Village. It is a wonderful site, and unless those facilities are equal to those found south of the border or in British Columbia, people will not visit.

I agree that national parks means protection. We must also make sure that we provide facilities for the people who visit. I do not want a Coney Island in the town centre of Banff, nor do I think anyone in Banff wants that. However, they want facilities that will attract people and let them enjoy the scenery.

Occasionally Banff has closed off trails and hostels. We must be very careful about that. For instance, Shadow Lake is a place to visit for people who are unable to walk very far. They can travel part way up the mountain by car and walk a mile or two to a beautiful place called Shadow Lake. Many people are unable to walk 12 or 14 miles up a mountain. However, I have seen aged people and crippled children travel the last mile and a half to Shadow Lake where they could see Mount Eisenhower and the beautiful scenery which is thrilling to anyone who sees it. I do not want to deny that to the aged or handicapped who cannot travel far. We should provide those facilities so that they may enjoy the scenery as well.

Many of our youth have visited our hostels in Banff. I have received a mass of letters because one hostel is being closed. The facilities must be competitive as well as in harmony with the parks. The people of Banff are just as anxious to achieve that as anyone else.

I want to say a few words about the people who live in Banff. They often feel like second class citizens who cannot enjoy the same rights under the laws of Canada as Canadians who do not live in a national park. Sometimes this is true.

I recently sent a letter to the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) because civil servants and RCMP in Banff are required to pay rent and live in houses that belong to the Government. The fact is that the rent for houses in Banff is the highest of any park in Canada, some three or four times the rent paid in eastern Canada or central Canada, and twice as much as they pay in Jasper.

These people are citizens of Canada. Some may say they should save enough to buy a house but there are no houses for sale in Banff. They live in a different community because the national park must be careful about how much land it uses for developing single houses. The rents are excessive, and I have been asking the President of the Treasury Board to consider this problem. These people should not be treated that way, and I think we will solve these (ground rents) through the town council and an arrangement with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). I think that is an essential item as well. Some of the commercial operations are being taxed excessively. They all want to pay their taxes but not in such excessive amounts that they cannot even make a living. These are the things I think we have to look at very carefully.

There are many, many things in Banff that we could talk about which would be interesting and worth while, but I want to say that I have found the people of Banff to be protective oriented. They want to protect the environment, but they also want the same rights as every other Canadian citizen, and I want them to have the same rights as citizens of Calgary, Drumheller or Toronto. They are citizens too. They should not be penalized because they live in a national park.

We want to bring more and more people to these parks. I wish every person in Canada could enjoy the beauty described by our Liberal friend a few moments ago. I want to thank the Members who worked on the National Parks Act, those who are protecting our environment and our habitat and, most of all, making our national parks—and I am thinking of Banff because that is the one in my riding—a place where people love to go and return to again and again because they enjoy the scenery and the excellent facilities.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 29 petitions numbered as follows: 332-4838, 332-4839, 332-4844, 332-4846, 332-4864, 332-4868 to 332-4882 inclusive, 332-4889, 332-4890, 332-4904 to 332-4906 inclusive, 332-4909, 332-4920, 332-4922 and 332-4923.

CANADA WATER PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-309, an Act to protect water in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to introduce this Bill. This Bill is cited as the Canada Water Protection Act. Because it appeared that the trade deal allows at least for the possibility of interbasin water transfers to the United States, this Bill, particularly Clause 9, dealing with interbasin transfers, says that no person shall export water from Canada by interbasin transfers. Essentially, the Bill would prohibit any consideration of moving Canadian water into the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PRESENTATION OF COMMITTEE REPORTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been the usual discussions between the Parties. I think you will find consent to the immediate putting of these motions. Therefore, I move:

That, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting, reports from the Standing Committees, Standing Joint Committees and Special Committees be deemed presented to the House on the day such reports are deposited with the Clerk of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

REFERENCE OF BILL C-142 TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): The second motion I wish to move reads as follows:

That, the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee on Bill C-142, an Act to establish the Transportation Accident Investigation Board and to amend certain Acts in consequence thereof, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (1110)

REFERENCE OF BILL C-139 TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): The last motion reads:

That, the Order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, and certain related Acts, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to read second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I take it that there has been the usual consultations with the opposition Parties on this matter. With the usual co-operation that the Opposition shows, the Minister has its concurrence.

I take it that he can give us the assurance that these matters have been cleared with the House Leaders?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and the finance critic for the Official Opposition that the usual consultations have taken place, and everything is go.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present on behalf of a number of constituents.

On the first, the petitioners believe that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a free trade deal with the United States and they believe that the trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and as well undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. They have a number of concerns, but basically they are asking Parliament to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which reminds us that the previous Minister of Immigration promised that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages would be considered as members of the family class for immigration purposes and that married children and brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points as opposed to the 10 points they would normally receive.

Hundreds of petitioners are drawing that to our attention and they call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfil its promises on these issues.

EQUALITY OF CHOICE IN CHILD CARE

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition with 271 signatures on it from Calgary, Edmonton, Wainwright, Strathmore, Lethbridge and the Raymond areas of Alberta. Whereas it is becoming increasingly common to learn of government encroachment upon the parental responsibility of child care decision making and government child care incentives do not consider the validity of parental care as a viable alternative to out-of-home child care, and whereas parents are in the best position to determine what is the most appropriate and beneficial form of child rearing, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act upon the problem of this limitation in choice for child care, and restore to the system fairness and justice, by opposing any form of national child care policy which does not provide equality of choice, thereby leaving the child care decision-making process with the parents where it belongs.

This was organized by Mrs. Brenda Ringdahl, President, Kids First Lobby Group. This is one of a number of petitions that I have had the honour and privilege to present.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition today, along the same lines as the one I tabled before, concerning the Reagan-Mulroney Free Trade Agreement. The petitioners, who come from Ontario, would like the House to censure the Government for this proposal. They submit and humbly declare that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada without getting anything in return, that Canadian industries are still not protected from American trade laws, that the United States obtained everything they wanted, in all important areas, in particular agriculture, energy, automobile trade, financial services and investments, that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened and that the Conservative Government has not planned any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

For these reasons . . .

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he well knows the rules on presenting petitions.

Mr. Gauthier: I wanted to read the petition briefly for you, Mr. Speaker.

I conclude by saying that these people humbly ask Parliament to censure the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions from members of congregations in my constituency regarding the Supreme Court's decision to allow abortion on demand.

The first one is from members of Reverend Wendell England's congregation. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare case in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother. And as in duty bound your petitioners will humbly pray.

The second petition is from members of Reverend Horace Gardner's congregation. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to formulate and legislate a law to protect life from conception, a law which seeks to save the life of both mother and child and as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty again today to present to you petitions from residents of my riding, more particularly people from Sackville, Midjik, Ogden Mill Road, Bouctouche, St. Maurice, St. Norbert, St. Pierre, Ste Anne de Kent, and other petitioners from Sackville, Midjik and Aulac.

The petitioners deplore the decision of the Department of Employment and Immigration to again change the qualifying period for unemployment insurance from 10 to 16 weeks.

They say that the Department has not considered the high rate of unemployment in rural areas and they humbly ask Parliament to rectify the situation by restoring the qualifying period to 10 weeks.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to register according to Standing Order 106 a petition from citizens of Edmonton, Alberta and surrounding area. These citizens point out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

The undersigned, the petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

USE OF PESTICIDES AND FUNGICIDES

Question No. 377—Mr. Althouse:

1. Has the Department of Agriculture investigated the use of pesticides and fungicides at the Strathbourne, Nova Scotia, tree nursery and, if so, in the period investigated, (a) what are the recommended maximum rates (b) what were the actual rates of use per hectare for each of (i) ROVAL 50 (wettable powder) (ii) CAPTAN (iii) RIDOM 16 (iv) FURDAN 10 (v) BASUDIAN (drazanone) (vi) BENLATE (vii) SEVIN?

2. In each case of any difference between recommended and actual rates of application is there a particular reason for the difference and, if so, what is it?

3. Was any of these pesticides or fungicides, as well as CHLORDANE and POAST, used (a) under conditions (b) in ways not recommended for its use and, if so, which ones and, in each case (i) under which conditions (ii) for what reasons (c) what amount of CHLORDANE (i) was used (ii) is still in stock and in each case, for what reasons?

4. Who is responsible for application rates?

5. Are precautions or warnings provided to workers concerning the effects or dangers, or both, of exposure to overdoses of these chemicals?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Yes, an investigation of pesticide use has been conducted at the Strathbourne Nursery in Nova Scotia.

(a) Recommended use rates for products are as follows (where product names given were not registered, closest approximations are provided): (i) Rovral 50 (wettable powder)—750 g of the active ingredient iprodione per hectare. (ii) Captan—10 kg of the ingredient captan per hectare. (iii) Ridomil—1.13 kg of the active ingredient metalaxyl per hectare. (iv) Furadan 10—5.5 kg of the active ingredient carbofuran per hectare. (v) Basudin—3.6 kg of the active ingredient diazinon per hectare. (vi) Benlate—1.5 kg of the active ingredient benomyl per hectare. (vii) Sevin—1.5 kg of the active ingredient carbaryl per hectare.

(b) Actual use rates are not yet available as further investigation is ongoing.

2. This information is not yet available. It is expected that this type of information will emerge during the course of the ongoing investigation.

3. This information should be available at the conclusion of the investigation.

4. The user must ultimately be accountable for application rates. The Pest Control Products Act states that no person shall manufacture, store, display, distribute or use any control product under unsafe conditions.

5. Individual product labelling provides precautions, warnings and other relevant information regarding the product and its application. These labelling requirements are set down in the Pest Control Products regulations and are intended to provide users with use directions, precautions and others information that will provide for safety in storage, display distribution and use of products.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 347 and 380 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled imediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The questions listed by the Honourable Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that questions Nos. 347 and 380 be deemed to have been made orders for returns?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We will deal this morning with Bill C-139 until one o'clock. We will then move to Bill C-136. We will have three speakers on that Bill from 3 p.m. to approximately 5 p.m. After the third speaker we ask that you call it five o'clock.

It is my understanding that the Private Member's Motion has been dropped. We will adjourn from five o'clock to 6 p.m. From six o'clock to 10 p.m. we will return to debate on Bill C-139, and if there is any vote on this Bill it be deferred to Wednesday at six o'clock p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was listening to the Parliamentary Secretary, and I want to thank him for giving us the agenda for the day. However, I want to say to the Government that I would not want the Canadian public to get the impression there has been a full day's debate on Bill C-139 when we only had a few hours, yesterday and today. This is just a warning against any attempt to have the public believe we had two days of debate on Bill C-139.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Yesterday, there was only one speaker on this Bill, and today there will be two speakers for the Opposition parties, while this evening we will continue the debate on the same Bill.

• (1120)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate having the line-up presented this way so we have a clear understanding, at least today, about what the business will be.

Since we are discussing tax reform, or as my hon. friend from Ottawa Centre indicated, tax deform, and this is very important legislation which touches the lives of every Canadian because it has serious implications for their future taxes, we would like to see a thorough and complete debate. We do not want to see the Government trying to rush it through. I am not suggesting that that is what he is doing, but just so there is no misunderstanding, this is important legislation and should not be rushed by anyone.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, as I just said, there was only one speaker yesterday. There will be the two speakers for the Opposition today and then we will resume debate later this evening. It is not the intention of the Government to force or speed up this Bill. It is a very important piece of legislation for all Canadians, as the Hon. Member said, so I am sure we will have the full co-operation of both opposition Parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has listened carefully to the proposal made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. It is a matter for the three Parties to agree on, of course, but there is one small problem concerning Private Members' Hour. The Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) would have to withdraw his motion, either at five o'clock, or notify the Chair earlier, that it is his intention to do so. Normally he would need unanimous consent to withdraw the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will abide by your decision.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, July 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements, and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contribution Act, 1977, and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would just like to remind the House that when the motion was moved originally it was that the Bill would go to a legislative committee. By unanimous consent this morning it was decided it would go to the Standing Committee on Finance, and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-139 before the House today contains more than 500 pages of legislation, does not even have an index and is a collection of extremely complex clauses. Curious though that may seem, Mr. Speaker, while the White Paper was tabled in June 1987 and amended in December 1987, this is the first opportunity the House has had to debate this reform in this Chamber.

Granted, the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has considered the question for a number of weeks. It also heard witnesses. However, this is the first time the debate on tax reform will take place in the House. This reform has aroused considerable concern. The Finance Committee alone received more than 400 letters and briefs and heard thirty witnesses from all parts of the country and all levels of our society. What do these Canadians have to say to the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and to parliamentarians? Basically, they don't like this tax reform. Families don't like it, middle-income taxpayers don't like it, R & D firms don't like it, mining regions are disenchanted, and insurance companies, self-employed workers and farmers came here to explain their dissatisfaction with this legislation.

In fact, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has the satisfaction of getting a unanimous response to his Bill, since everyone agrees it is unacceptable. More specifically, Canadians came to tell the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs:

First, that the tax reform is merely a smoke screen because it is an attempt to camouflage four years of massive tax and income tax increases.

Second, these people came to tell the Committee that this reform is incomplete because it postpones the most important part, sales tax reform, until after the election.

Third, people came to tell us that this reform does not simplify our taxation system and in many ways makes it more complex.

Fourth, Canadians told us that the reform does not make the tax system more progressive, more equitable or fairer for private citizens.

Fifth, they told us that the reform hits hardest at middle-income taxpayers.

Sixth, the reform is entirely unfair to families.

Seventh, it discourages the building of capital.

Eighth, it makes businesses, especially in the manufacturing and research and development sectors, less competitive.

And ninth, the reform makes life more difficult for self-employed workers.

But before analyzing this reform in greater detail, Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain the broad principles that should have served as a guide to the tax reform proposed by the Minister of Finance.

[English]

The thrust of the Minister's reform centres on removal of incentives from the tax system and lowering of the tax rates. This general thrust, if I may say so at this point, is in sharp contrast to the position the Minister originally took upon coming into office, in his first three Budgets. You will probably remember that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his previous Budgets, introduced extremely costly tax incentives such as a capital gains exemption, and on a number of occasions he increased the tax burden, mainly by partially deindexing the tax system and imposing surtaxes. Now the Minister has recognized the error of his ways and has repented, at least on these issues. This change of heart is a death bed repentance and I do not think Canadians will be fooled by the eleventh hour conversion. The pre-electoral timing is just too blatant.

In these various political games that the Minister of Finance plays he has completely neglected to reach the key objective of tax reform, that is to have a tax system which is equitable, redistributive, and fair. Equity and fairness must be achieved in ways which do not lower work incentives either at the lower or at the upper end of the income scale.

Clearly, this reform has in no way improved the progressivity of the tax system. This has been illustrated vividly by at least three different studies which show that middle-income Canadians are hardest hit by this reform. Those studies were done by the Institute of Research on Public Policy, the Senate Committee on Tax Reform, and the Thorne Ernst Whinney analysis. In other words, this is not real tax reform since it neglects to institute what Canadians value the most, namely fairness.

Concerning the role of incentives in the economy, as a general principle we in the Liberal Party favour a move toward a reduction of incentives. We also favour the use of this new room to manoeuvre to lower the tax rates. Tax incentives, when they are blindly piled up on top of each other, can represent—and I emphasize "can"—an inefficient way of encouraging a type of economic activity. They can also distort progressivity in the personal income tax system and can hide the real cost of those programs.

This general principle, however, has to be balanced against other government policies. For instance, if drilling in the mining sector drops off, or if research and development in Canada lags behind other countries, there are legitimate arguments in favour of tax incentives over other forms of government tools such as direct government grants. Tax incentives tend to reduce the role of government bureaucracies and their ability to make discretionary choices.

Pragmatic as always, Liberals believe that governments should, under certain circumstances, use tax incentives to shift the short-term direction of the economy or to solve structural problems for a better long-term allocation of resources or a fairer balance of economic development among regions and sectors.

One must not minimize the enormous challenges the Canadian economy faces if it is to grow at rates necessary to meet the income and employment demands of our people. We should not underestimate the structural weaknesses of our economy. There seems little doubt that in an economic context where high income countries need to be at the cutting edge in research and development based industries, a strategy based purely on the free market or on foreign-centred firms will not be successful.

It is obvious to me, as it is to many business people, that tax reform will not meet this new challenge. It puts our manufacturing sector at a competitive disadvantage. It puts our research and development firms at a disadvantage. It puts our small businesses at a disadvantage. It puts our entrepreneurs, our risk takers, at a disadvantage. Ultimately, this will only reduce growth and jobs.

One way to settle the dilemma that the Government faces by keeping useful tax incentives that run counter to progressivity is to set a limit on the total amount of deductions an individual can claim. A "box" of deductions could, for instance, be set up. An individual would not be allowed to claim more than a certain amount or proportion of his income in regard to that box. This box would be a more effective tool to ensure that every taxpayer pays a fair share of taxes. In other words, it is a minimum tax that can replace the complex and ineffective so-called alternative minimum tax of the Tory Government.

I also think that all new incentives, as well as all the existing ones, should be accompanied by a three to five-year revision clause and be subject to parliamentary scrutiny. I emphasize that I am not speaking here of a sunset clause that would automatically kill an incentive after a given period of time, but of a revision clause.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, instead of proceeding with the kind of tax reform I just described, the Minister of Finance, a bit like his Prime Minister, preferred to make this reform a political game. For instance, in a pre-election move that did not deceive anyone, the Government announced that as of July 1988, the tax reform would result in a slight drop in source deductions on the paychecks of many taxpayers. Whatever the Mulroney Government cares to think, this respite is merely a smoke screen, a pre-election move to make us forget four years of tax increases unprecedented in this country's history.

The tax reform as tabled is merely the latest in a series of increases in personal income tax, sales tax and excise tax. If we look at studies made by independent agencies, the tax measures introduced by the Conservative Government in the past four years have been both regressive and unfair.

In a report published recently, the Institute for Research on Public Policy calculated the impact on the taxpayer of all changes in personal income tax made by the Conservatives since they came to power. To those figures we must add the additional burden on taxpayers as a result of numerous increases in indirect taxes, such as the increase in federal sales tax from 9 to 12 per cent and the 5 cent per litre increase in the excise tax on gas. There are three points one can make as a result of these calculations, and I would say, Mr. Speaker, that these three points reflect the main deficiencies of the tax reform proposed in Bill C-139 before the House today.

First, in 1988, even after the tax reform, all taxpayers will pay more income tax then they did in 1984, with one exception: taxpayers with an income exceeding $117,000 a year. The average tax saving for this privileged group, which represents only 1 per cent of Canadian families, is about $3,500 annually.

Mr. Speaker, this means that all taxpayers will pay more income tax except those privileged members of our society with an annual income of more than $117,000.

Second, middle-income families, for instance a family with an annual income of $32,000, will pay $1,200 more in taxes than in 1984.

On this side of the House, when we talk about the unfairness of the Conservative Government's tax reform, the following example is eloquent. The rich, people with an annual income of $117,000 or more, stand to gain over $3,500 per year as a result of the tax reform, while middle-income families with children will pay an additional $1,200 per year.

If we look at the federal Government's total revenues, if we consider the projections made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his last Budget, and we compare these with the Government's revenue in 1984-85, we realize that corporate income tax increased by only 28 per cent, while personal income tax, including sales tax and excise tax, has increased by 62 per cent, which means 62 per cent more for workers and only 28 per cent more for corporations.

In other words, Canadians will not be fooled by the Government's attempt to gloss over four years of massive tax increases, which took place despite promises made to the Canadian people by the present Minister of Finance and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when they were campaigning in September 1984.

So despite promises by the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance that they would not increase taxes, the list of tax increases has grown steadily in the past four years.

Mr. Speaker, I shall mention the main increases. First of all, federal sales tax has increased by 3 per cent: from 9 per cent to 10 per cent in October 1984, just after this Government was elected, and then to 11 per cent on January 1, 1986, and to 12 per cent on April 1, 1986.

This decision by the Finance Minister and the Conservative Government means that just on the basis of these rate increases, in 1988 Canadians are going to pay over $3 billion more in sales tax.

Mr. Speaker, sales tax was extended to candy, soft drinks, health care products and dental instruments on July 1, 1985, which brought in an additional $400 million. All candy and snacks were taxed, which raised $60 million more for the Government, on an annual basis.

The sales tax on paint, wallpaper and toys was increased from 8 to 12 per cent. The excise tax on gas was increased four times, Mr. Speaker. First, two cents a litre more on September 3, 1985, then one cent per litre more on January 1, 1987, another cent on Febuary 17, and another cent again on April 1, 1988. This adds up to a total of 5 cents a litre or more than 23 cents a gallon. The sales tax on leaded gas was raised to bring the price to the same level as that of unleaded gas. There was a progressive increase in the air transportation tax, and excise tax and duties on alcohol and tobacco were increased four times between May 24, 1985 and January 1, 1988. Mr. Speaker, one tax I find outrageous is the 10 per cent tax on long distance calls which became effective on January 1, 1988. The hardest hit are those living in remote areas who must call long distance to reach their doctor, their accountant, their general store, and so forth. This tax will raise an additional one billion dollars and will have a negative impact on regional development across this country. These tax increases were all introduced by the Conservative government since 1984.

And what about income tax? First, the tax tables were partially de-indexed, which increased the tax burden on Canadian families by $635 million then and there. Since the $635 million applies to the first year, January 1986, it means that in 1987, it was twice that and in 1988, three times, Mr. Speaker. This means that in 1988, Canadian taxpayers are paying over two billion dollars more in income tax because of the Finance Minister's decision.

Tax exemptions have been eliminated: $650 million. The deduction for registered home ownership savings plans was eliminated $100 million. The temporary 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtax and then the general permanent surtax of 3 per cent were introduced. Changes were made in the tax treatment of dividends. Married exemptions were changed. Mr. Speaker, all these tax increases were introduced by a Government that made a solemn promise to Canadians that it would not increase taxes.

If we add it all up, Mr. Speaker, you know how much this represents? It works out to $26.7 billion in new taxes, for a Government that promised not to increase taxes for Canadian taxpayers. And when after that they tell us, as the Finance Minister did last week, that the deficit will be $28 billion instead of $29 billion, what kind of an attitude is that on the part of a Finance Minister who just increased taxes by $26 billion! And pleased as punch because he managed to reduce his deficit by $1 billion!

Mr. Speaker, I will get back later to the deficit. For some days now, in fact some weeks, billions of dollars have been spent left and right. Have we had a progress report from the Minister of Finance? How can this Government give away billions and billions of dollars without ever giving the House a statement of revenues and expenditures for the next five years? It's easy, Mr. Speaker. Every time they give away another billion, they charge it to future budgets so that the current year is not affected. The following year will be marginally affected but later on, the bills will start coming in, and then this Government which is so proud of reducing its deficit will have to come clean or take the consequences.

As a result of those measures, "tax freedom day" as calculated by the Fraser Institute has occurred later and later each year since 1984. It now occurs on July 10, which means that the average family works more than six months just to pay its federal, provincial and local, direct and indirect, visible and hidden taxes. The Government has done nothing to reverse this trend. At least these taxes could be collected fairly, but unfortunately that has not been the case. Furthermore, this is only current taxation.

If one considers that the deficits are nothing else but deferred taxation, the average taxpayer will work from January 1 to August 12 merely to pay taxes.

[Translation]

The answer to this question: Why has the Government done nothing? I will say, Mr. Speaker, that when you look at the tax increases brought in by this Government, when you look at what has happened over the last few years, you see that this Government is just deceiving the Canadian electorate.

[English]

In spite of these numerous tax increases, public finances remain extremely vulnerable to any downturn in the economy. The Government brags of its success in reducing the deficit, but the reality is that it has not prepared the Canadian economy for the inevitable downturn which many economists fear will come as early as next year.

In spite of six years of strong growth, thanks to the global economic picture, and in spite of four years of massive tax increases, the deficit is still in the $28 billion-$29 billion range. The public debt now amounts to more than $320 billion, or more than $25,000 per taxpayer.

Mr. Hockin: It is because of the debt that you left.

Mr. Garneau: This debt has increased by 80 per cent since the Tories took office. I hear the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). The Government stated in its electoral platform that its main objective was to cut the deficit without increasing taxes. The deficit has increased by 80 per cent since October, 1984, with more than $25,000 per taxpayer. The Government's agenda was to cut the deficit. The deficit is still growing at a pace of $77,000 per day.

Mr. McKnight: It is interest on your debt, Raymond.

Mr. Garneau: When the Liberal Government left office, the debt was $175 billion. It is now $320 billion, an increase of 80 per cent for which you are responsible. You should tell that to the Canadian public.

This huge debt that has been piled up by the Tory Government, which promised to cut the deficit, costs $13 billion in interest charges every year. The Government has increased taxes by $26 billion, after telling Canadians that it has done a terrific job by cutting the deficit by $1 billion this year.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we also know that tax reform will be done in stages. The first step took effect on January 1, 1988 and contains a few tax reductions but unfortunately its impact was not felt on pay cheques until the beginning of July. Six months later! Why? The answer to this question is obvious: this Government acts only in response to political pressure. July 1 was chosen because it was near the elections, so that voters could feel a slight tax decrease after being hit with $26 billion in increases; the Government gives a few billion back and does it on July 1 to make it as close as it can to a possible election date. And in order to keep some room to manoeuvre, to be able to play on all fronts, the Government said to itself that with the July 1 date, if it could not hold the elections in 1988 but only in the spring of 1989, the refund for the first six months of 1988 would be paid then. It will give the voters another small gift and hope to buy their votes with their own money. Mr. Speaker, this is a loan of over one billion dollars that the Government has given itself. Many Canadians and companies would like to be able to give themselves the same privilege of interest-free loans.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few minutes in this speech to denounce the other election trick of the Government, namely announcing now the good news, or what it claims to be good news, but leaving the bad news for after the election. I wish to talk about this two-stage reform and the one that is not on the legislative agenda now, sales tax reform. The Government is waiting until after the elections to bring it in. It is clear that the Government is only trying to repeat the trick it pulled in 1984. This Government then promised not to increase taxes. And we know how much this Government has increased taxes since 1984! Today they are trying to give us the good news before the elections, but after, watch out! That is when this famous sales tax will hit us. They did not want to introduce it in one step, as all observers and all Canadians who came to the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee asked, so that they could see the pros and cons and know what to expect for the future . . .

But this Government lacked courage! We must recall that more than three years ago, the most important component of tax reform according to this Minister of Finance was sales tax reform.

So much so, Mr. Speaker, that at that point the Minister of Finance did not even refer to personal income tax reform—he only stressed sales tax reform. He even suggested the existing sales tax, to use his own words, was "a silent killer of jobs".

He also indicated, as the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) yesterday repeated in his speech, the sales tax was hurting exports, and helping imports, in addition to being excessively complex to administer.

And so, may I ask, if since 1985 that tax has had so many flaws, how come the only part of the tax system that has not now been reformed is the sales tax?

Mr. Speaker, the C.D. Howe Institute even indicated in its 1988 report titled "Focus on follow through", the major economic advantages to be derived from reforming our tax system would come from reforming the sales tax rather than direct taxes. But when the time came to proceed with that reform, this Minister and this Government backed off.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Liberal Party feel that the current sales tax system must be improved. The Liberal Party is committed to reforming that tax upon coming to power. We further feel that basic foods such as milk, bread, butter and meat, should be non taxable items.

Moreover, we believe that a generous refundable tax credit must be established, to be indexed and paid in installments to middle and low income families.

Mr. Speaker, let me now say a few words concerning the complexity of that tax reform included in Bill C-139. I must first emphasize that the legislation includes more than 500 pages, 500 pages without even an index. Try and find your way through that!

In those more than 500 pages of text, there are a number of explanatory notes. We might as well laugh rather than weep over that! Especially when one of the major objectives announced by the Minister was to simplify the tax law.

To sum up my views on the matter, that reform no doubt is one of the most complex we have ever seen in this House. The tax system is being made much more complex in a number of areas rather than simpler. Even the experts can hardly find their way through that maze.

It should be remembered that in October 1986, the Minister of Finance stated in the document titled Guidelines for tax reform in Canada that one of the objectives was, and I quote: "making the tax system simpler so that it is more readily understood by more Canadians".

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing all observers agree on, it is that the simplification goal never was achieved.

[English]

The best example that has been given to us concerning the complexity of tax reform has been provided by the Joint Committee on Taxation of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. Let me quote what it said in its May 1988 submission about the so-called simplification:

> Our review and analysis of the April draft legislation, (now Bill C-139), only reinforced the conviction of the Joint Committee, that if simplification was a priority objective of the tax reform process, the Government has failed.

The most important consequence of such a complexity is, in the words of the Joint Committee, "the prospect of widespread non-compliance".

The report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs on tax reform came to the same conclusion. It capped its chapter on tax simplification by saying: "Tax reform has not successfully addressed the problem of simplifying the tax system". Why did the Minister promise something when he had no intention of delivering?

[Translation]

According to a recent study conducted for the Canadian Tax Fondation, only 30 per cent of taxpayers are brave enough to complete their income tax returns themselves. Nearly 40 per cent have it done by specialized firms, and 30 per cent by friends or relatives. If such was the case under the previous tax law, my prediction is a still larger proportion of Canadians will have to use tax experts in order to complete their income tax returns that otherwise could be greatly simplified.

[English]

I recognize that tax simplification is not an easy thing to achieve. It is a long-term goal. However, to achieve any progress at all, I believe, again with the Joint Committee, that the Government must make a firm commitment to simplification as a priority and be willing to accept trade-offs with other policy objectives.

If you remember, Mr. Speaker, in June 1986, the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs released a report about tax simplification. I must point out that this was a unanimous report also signed by the majority of the Conservative members of the committee. Those recommendations called for measures to simplify both the income tax form, which is the key aspect of tax simplification for most taxpayers, and the Tax Act itself. The Government should have acted but it did not. Why? Liberals have always stressed the importance of having a progressive tax system. It is a question of equity and fairness. No other issue more naturally divides Conservatives from Liberals. I fear that income distribution has worsened over the last four years. This is partly a result of economic trends, but also because of a tax system which has become much less progressive.

I believe one of the most important ways to redistribute wealth in this country is the tax system. What the Tories have done is to redistribute the revenue, but upside down, giving more money to the rich and taking more from the middle-class and lower-income earners. Along with millions of Canadians, I am shocked to see that every taxpayer pays more taxes in 1988, even after tax reform, than in 1984, except those earning more than $117,000 a year. I am shocked that some 60,000 profitable corporations will continue not to pay any tax despite tax reform, and I am also shocked at some 5,220 taxpayers with incomes above $50,000 a year paid no tax in 1986. Forty of those have incomes of over $250,000 a year.

You have to remember, Mr. Speaker, that 1986 was the first year of the implementation of the so-called minimum tax by the Tory Government. That is not fairness. It is not progressivity. Even though those numbers are striking, the most perniciously regressive aspect of tax reform is to be found in the new tax structure with three levels. It is not easy to explain why this new structure lacks progressivity, but the difficulty of the task does not make the system acceptable.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the number of tax rates have been reduced from ten to three. We now have three rates, 17 per cent, 26 per cent and 29 per cent. These are the federal rates only. Provincial rates must be added to these rates. Have you ever asked yourself, Mr. Speaker, why the 26 per cent rate, which kicks in at $27,500, is so near to the 29 per cent rate paid by high-income earners? Why is it that the 26 per cent rate, which is the middle rate, does not lie right in the middle between 17 per cent and 29 per cent? The answer to this question is very simple. The Government has decided to raise the middle rate to 26 per cent because it did not proceed with the reform of the sales tax immediately. This is why the Government claims that under phase 2 of the tax reform, when the sales tax will be reformed, enough revenue will be generated to reduce the middle rate. This is an implicit recognition by the Government of the unfairness of its new tax structure.

Those who are hurt are middle-income earners. Those with incomes between $30,000, $40,000 and $45,000 a year are the big losers with tax reform, and the Government knows it. What we used to call the silent majority are people earning between $30,000 and $45,000. The Government hits that group because it knows that those people will not come here to Parliament Hill and demonstrate their disapproval. However, I am confident they will do so during the time of the next election.

But the situation is even worse than what I have just described. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in their tax reform report the Senate Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce pointed out that, on all additional income, a good many middle income families will pay a higher tax rate than will high income households. Mr. Speaker, at the 26 per cent official federal rate a middle income family has to allow for an additional hidden 5 per cent levy due to the fact that every time a family gets a salary increase—say going from $30,000 to $31,000—it stands to lose 5 per cent of its refundable child tax credit. Let us look at it this way: a $30,000-a-year family whose income increases to $31,000 will have to pay a 31 per cent federal tax on the extra $1,000, which is more than the 29 per cent rate a taxpayer whose earnings go up from $100,000 to $101,000 would have to part with. The extra $1,000 in the hands of a family will be taxed at the rate of 31 per cent.

A future Liberal Government is committed to make the tax structure more progressive. Progressiveness does not necessarily imply higher tax rates. By lessening emphasis on counterproductive tax incentives and raising . . .

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, oh!

[English]

Mr. Garneau: When the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has his turn he may address a question, but I would request that he please let me make my speech.

By lessening emphasis on counterproductive tax incentives and raising the minimum tax rate as we suggested earlier, while at the same time proceeding immediately with the sales tax reform, we would manage to make our tax system more progressive and still maintain lower tax rates.

In addition to axing some family assistance programs through the partial de-indexation of family allowances and refundable child tax credits, the Government missed a golden opportunity to revamp the whole family tax system. Canada's birth rate happens to be among the lowest in the world and the family structure has changed considerably over the past 20 years, but the Government has yet to make its tax legislation reflect this new reality.

As you know, in terms of the Income Tax Act a common-law couple is not treated as a family unit and each partner is considered to be a single taxpayer. This simple distinction between a common-law and a legal union entails very heavy financial consequences for couples, so much so that in some cases a common-law arrangement is a much better proposition than marriage when it comes to income tax considerations. Many groups gave strong evidence to that effect, but the fact remains that family needs are exactly the same whether the couple are legally married or live as common-law man and wife. First and foremost, I should think, overhauling the family tax system would be the fair approach. Some people might be concerned that such changes would favour a lifestyle over another, but not so, Mr. Speaker. I think that the state must avoid making a value judgment on the kind of union it prefers, it has to respect personal choices and give fair treatment to all couples no matter what their lifestyle may be. That was the low-key message conveyed by the Standing Committee on Human Rights. So what has the Minister of Finance been doing to make tax legislation more consistent with our society's changing mores? Not a thing, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

I would like to address one last issue before concluding my remarks. It is the issue of capital taxation. As many business people said when they saw the Government's proposal: "This is not capital taxation, it is capital punishment". The capital reform proposal will cause capital gains to be taxed more heavily than dividend payments. The signal sent to the business community is that the Government preferred to encourage prudent investment rather than risk-taking investment.

You indicated to me, Mr. Speaker, that I have only a few minutes left.

[Translation]

May I ask the House to show leniency and to give me two more minutes to complete my speech?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to give the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) a few more minutes to complete his statement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think his time shoud be unlimited since he is the first speaker from the Opposition to take the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), just like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), is allowed 40 minutes. I think there is unanimous consent to let him complete his speech.

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, I will not abuse the privilege granted to me by this House. I will only take a few more minutes to conclude my statement.

[English]

The Finance Committee has recognized this problem of capital taxation, and has proposed many measures to improve the situation. For instance, the committee proposed to limit the inclusion rate for capital gains to 66 per cent instead of 75 per cent, as proposed by the Government in this Bill. I fully support this recommendation, but it is only a partial solution to the whole question of capital taxation. I sincerely believe that the whole question of capital taxation must be completely revised.

How can the Minister of Finance explain the coherence of having abolished the $1,000 of investment income deduction, which is widely used by middle-income Canadians as well as senior citizens, while at the same time keeping $100,000 of capital gains exemption? How can the Minister of Finance explain that the capital gains and the investment income are not protected from inflation? What is the logic of a capital gains tax exemption and an inclusion rate of 75 per cent on the excess?

To improve the taxation of capital gains, some people have proposed to index the gains, as has been done recently in the United Kingdom. Some others propose to have more targeted measures to help the capitalization of corporations; some also claim that the $100,000 capital gains tax exemption should be simply abolished.

As the Senate committee report said, the question of capital taxation and of taxation of investment income has to be thoroughly reviewed. The Government must generate a new set of proposals more favourable to investments in the country's long-term competitive needs. The Liberal Party recognized this need.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I did not have time in the 40 minutes allotted to me to deal with all aspects of tax reform. For example, I leave it to my colleagues from Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) and Trinity (Miss Nicholson) to go further into the taxation of families, especially children. I leave it to my colleagues from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) and Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to discuss the issues relating to seniors.

I did not have time either to talk about the flow-through shares that the Government first eliminated and then replaced with a program that does not seem to give the desired results. I will simply remind you that the Liberal Party is in favour of maintaining this system of flow-through shares.

I did not have time to go to the bottom of the questions affecting research and development, and taxation of farmers. Neither did I have time to develop many other aspects concerning small business, taxation of... for example, the whole question of car expenses and offices at home. These are all questions that I hope my colleagues will deal with.

I did not have time either to talk about the taxation of insurance companies, which will have a considerable impact on Canadians' savings in those institutions. I did not have time to discuss the taxation rate of small manufacturing companies. The Minister had promised to lower the tax rate for small business from 10 to 8 per cent. Despite that, he increased it to 12 per cent. Neither do I have time to talk about the film industry.

[English]

This tax reform is only a smoke-screen. It remains incomplete; it does not simplify the tax system; it in no way improves the progressiveness or equity of the tax system; it places an unfair burden on middle-income Canadians; it is unjust for families; it discourages capitalization; it reduces the competitiveness of businesses; it makes life difficult for the self-employed.

The net result of Bill C-139 is that, in 1988, even after tax reform, all taxpayers will pay more taxes than in 1984 with the exception of those privileged few whose income is $117,000 and over. The average reduction in taxes for this group, which represents a mere 1 per cent of Canadians families, is close to $3,500. Second, a family with two children earning $32,000 a year will see their taxes increase by an average of $1,200 in comparison to 1984. Finally, if we compare the total revenues of the federal Government between 1988-89 and 1984-85, we realize that corporation tax increased by 28 per cent, while personal taxes and sales and excise taxes, paid for by all Canadians, increased by 62 per cent.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the motion now under consideration be amended by striking out all the words following "that" and replacing them with the following:

"That this House is opposed in principle and therefore refuses to proceed with Bill C-139, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, because this Bill seeks to impose a tax system

1) that is not progressive;

2) that imposes an unfair burden on families;

3) that unfairly taxes middle-income individuals;

4) that is more complex than the one now in place;

5) that discourages capital formation and that reduces the competitivity of Canadian businesses".

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds that the motion of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is in order.

[Translation]

Resuming debate on the amendment, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

• (1210)

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak specifically about Bill C-139 which deals with the Government's tax reform. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) talked about a sense of urgency with respect to this Bill. It is interesting to me that this sense of urgency was such that the Government brought its tax proposals forward last June after lengthy delays, and then in December it decided what it was going to do. It was not until June 30 of this year that it finally tabled its tax reform proposals.

What came forward was not tax reform in the sense of a fairness that people were looking for across the country. What we got was Tory tax reform. This means that the interests of wealthy Canadians and of corporations was put ahead of the interests of average Canadians.

That is indicated by such facts as the following. The biggest tax cut in the tax reform is the cut in corporate tax rates from 36 per cent to 28 per cent. The biggest beneficiaries in terms of the income earners who win from this are wealthy Canadians earning over $100,000 per year. Average Canadians get about $6 per week in tax cuts. They have had far more than that in tax increases over the course of the last four years since the Conservatives came to power just under four years ago. But wealthy Canadians get an average of some $80 per week. What that means is that it is lunch at Winston's every week for a wealthy Canadian family which gets tax cuts under this particular tax reform, but for the average Canadian it is two big Macs and one milkshake to share every week.

The Bill which has come forward is some 500 pages long. It is an abuse of Parliament for the Government now to have this Bill before Parliament and the people of Canada for as short a period of time as the Government intends to have it.

The Finance Committee has worked at this Bill with a great deal of energy and effectiveness. Despite the fact that we disagreed about basic issues such as progressivity, nonetheless we made a large number of very useful and constructive proposals. I regret the fact that, perhaps guided by the Finance Department, or perhaps guided by its own ideological motivation, the Government has systematically chosen to ignore the vast bulk of those recommendations, let alone the recommendations coming from the New Democratic Party.

I want to serve notice to the Minister of State for Finance, to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to all members of the Conservative Party that tax reform will be a major issue in the forthcoming general election campaign. The options that Canadians will have to choose will be between Tory tax reform that benefits the rich and the corporations on the one hand and fair tax reform as proposed by my leader and the New Democrats on the other hand and what we have been fighting for over the last many years.

What the Government has done is to put forward changes in the tax system to please its friends in the business community and among wealthy communities. I would say to the Minister of State for Finance that a symbol of the Conservative priorities is the fact that the urgency of tax reform that they saw was a tax-free capital gains provision of half a million dollars for wealthy Canadians most of whom earn more than $100,000 per year. As a symbol of the Tory priorities, when the Prime Minister had to replace his Principal Secretary, did he choose a union leader? Did he choose someone who had worked with the poor? Did he choose a woman who knows the problems that women have in having second class citizenship in our society? No, no, and no.

Who did he choose? The Prime Minister chose a close associate of Conrad Black of Argus Corporation. He brought the corporate elite to the Prime Minister's Office by putting Peter White to work as his Principal Secretary. That indicates the priorities of this particular Government.

The average Canadian has had tax increases on an average income of about $1,300 per year since 1984. That is the reality of Conservative tax policy. Under tax reform, if they are lucky they will get a tax cut of about $300 per year. That means that for every $4 that they have had taken from them in tax increases they will get $1 back. The finance critic from the Liberal Party tried to suggest that the Liberal Party was opposed to the approach to taxation taken by the Progressive Conservatives. He seems to have a short memory. Perhaps because he just came to the House only in 1984.

Who was it that began all the tax concessions to wealthy corporations? It was the Liberal Party. Who was it that began the cuts in top tax rates which are being continued by the Progressive Conservatives? It was the Liberal Party. Who was it that began the increases in sales tax?

[Translation]

The sales tax increases which had been first initiated by the Liberal Party were later on perpetuated by the Tory Party. Which is the party which widened the sales tax base to make sure that an increasing number of consumer goods used by the middle income Canadian family would be taxed? It is the Liberal Party which started all that, Mr. Speaker. Which is the Party which was the first to impose taxes on Canadian families below the poverty line? It is again the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker. Who started the de-indexing process? It is the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, with the 6 p. 100 and 5 p. 100 program which it introduced in the early 1980's. Who has maintained the archaic sales tax system which still exists now? It is again the Liberal Party which did nothing to change the system.

Who used its empty rhetoric to defend the fairness of the tax system? It is the Liberal Party, followed now by the Tory Party. That is why I wonder if the Liberal Party would increase the taxes on major corporations? The Liberals are like the Tories. They would equally preserve the privileges of the private industry in our country, just as they did when they were in Government. That is why I urge Canadians to judge the two major parties on their deeds rather than on their words, to judge the Liberal Party on what it achieved while in Government. When they sit on this side of the House, the Liberals talk like New Democrats, but when they are in Government, they act like Conservatives.

[English]

They talk like New Democrats when they are in opposition, but they act like Conservatives when they are in government. That is why when we say that tax reform will be a major issue in the forthcoming election campaign and New Democrats will be talking about fairness in taxation for average Canadians. We will put our proposals up against those of the Conservatives. We will put our proposals up against those of the Liberals as well. We will contrast the kind of fairness that we are talking about with what the Conservatives are doing in office and with what the Liberals did when they had power just a few short years ago.

It is interesting to recall that from 1981 to 1984 when the Liberals were in power Canada's banks with profits of more than $5 billion paid approximately 2 per cent of those profits in tax—about $72 million. Canada's trust and life insurance companies paid around 5 per cent of their profits in federal income tax.

It is interesting to note that during that period of time a teller in a branch of the Royal Bank paid more in tax than the Royal Bank itself paid. Did we hear the finance critic from the Liberal Party, who was then himself a bank president, criticize that particular position? He was silent. Did we hear Liberal back-benchers criticize that particular situation? They were silent. Did we hear Conservatives in opposition criticize that situation? They were silent as well. Yet that is a situation which creates unfairness, cynicism and, finally, non-compliance from average Canadians who say: "Look, if the big corporations are getting all of the breaks, why the devil shouldn't I fiddle my taxes just a little bit as well?"

That is fundamentally demoralizing and undermining to the tax system which depends on voluntary compliance. If Canadians were really looking for fairness and frankness from the tax reform, then they are disappointed and will be disappointed with what they get from the Conservatives. In terms of fairness, when all is said and done what the Conservative tax reform really means is that three out of four wealthy families earning over $100,000 per year will get an average $4,165 per year in tax cuts.

Where does that figure come from? It does not come from the researchers in the NDP, it does not come from a bunch of gnomes in the back room of our Party who devised that. It is in the Government's own documents. The Government itself admits that after its tax reforms, some 60,000 profitable Canadian corporations will continue to get off every year without paying any tax. The average Canadian family will be left paying about $1,000 a year more in income and other taxes than in 1984, presuming that they had the same income as they had in 1984.

In addition to that, the Conservatives have been hardly frank with the Canadian people. They have kept the bad news hidden in terms of what they intend to do about the new sales tax. The Democrats admit and accept that we need a change in the present sales tax system. It is up to the Government to act on this issue. The Finance Committee has just in fact come back with a report indicating that the current changes, the interim changes proposed by the Government on sales tax, are unworkable, unacceptable and ineffective, but we do not know what the Government intends to do.

It was only after months of pressure that we finally had the Minister of Finance accepting that he was not going to continue with his long-cherished ambition to slap an 8 or 10 per cent sales tax on food, on the groceries that every Canadian buys every week. Now, we just do not know what else will be taxed and what is out. The Minister of State for Finance is here. He can interrupt me now and tell me what is going to be taxed and what is not, what is in and what is out. How much will any tax cuts that took effect in July of this year for average families be wiped out once we have the regressive sales tax as proposed by a Conservative Government that puts the interests of the wealthy and of corporations first? How will that affect the tax savings?

Mr. Hockin: What do you think of the present sales tax?

Mr. Cassidy: I have just said—if the Hon. Minister had been listening—that the present sales tax is not a good sales tax. It ought to be changed. The Finance Committee has said that as well. We do not know and Canadians do not know the Government's proposals. The Government is carefully waiting until after an election for the other shoe to drop.

Mr. Hockin: How about the Labour Party in New Zealand?

Mr. Cassidy: The Conservatives may have got some of the ingredients right, but they are still following the same recipe that favours the wealthy and lets the largest corporations off easy. The end result is that the average Canadian family is left paying the bill.

Let me point out that three out of four wealthy families get over $4,000 a year in tax cut. The average family earning $35,000 a year gets a cut of only $350 a year. The family earning under $15,000 a year gets a cut of only $100 a year.

In addition to that, the tax reform as proposed by the Conservatives is fundamentally unfair when it comes to families across Canada. As far as families are concerned, the Conservatives think that all it takes to raise a family is $65 a year in tax credit, over and above what is given to the tax system for the average taxpayer who is single. It is $65 a year per child. It is a bit more for the third and subsequent child, if your income is under $24,000 a year. But a tax credit of $65 a year is about $1.28 per week, I believe. Now, $1.28 per week, I would like to inform the Minister of State for Finance, will not even buy one of the cheapest hamburgers at McDonald's or at Burger King in order to help that kid make it through the week. Certainly, it will not pay for the food, milk, extra housekeeping, clothing, personal supplies, educational supplies, sporting goods that a child needs, if the child is going to live normally with his or her peers, for all of the other expenses that are entailed in having children and raising kids.

I think people have said that raising a child these days is an investment which we carefully make. It may be $75,000 or $90,000 over the childhood of that child, until the child is independent and on his own at the age of 20 or 21.

What does a Conservative Party propose to give in terms of that cost? Well, $65 over 20 years works out to about $1,300 or perhaps 1 per cent of the extra cost to families who are raising kids.

Finally, the Conservatives point out that 850,000 taxpayers will be taken off the tax rolls, but they ignore the dimension. A million taxpayers have been added to the tax rolls since 1984. If the wealthy had paid their fair share under the tax system as proposed by the Progressive Conservatives, middle and low-income families could have got a fairer tax break. If the wealthy had paid their fair share, we could have taken families which were below the poverty line off the tax rolls in terms of paying income tax, instead of a family who is $1,000 below the poverty line paying tax. A family who is $2,000 below the poverty line will be paying federal income tax. A family who is $3,000 below will be paying tax. In fact, the tax for families will begin at around $18,500. The poverty line in urban Canada, for an urban Canadian family right now is some $23,000 per annum. So you reach down to $4,500 below the poverty line and yet people at that level are still going to be paying tax.

It is interesting to note what the priorities of this Government are. A taxpayer with an income of $30,000 a year, if he or she is single, will get a $695 tax cut. The Minister nods. He acknowledges the figures which are drawn from his figure. A single taxpayer earner with two kids, with a spouse who is not working, will get a tax reduction of $590. If it is a more typical Canadian family, two income earners and two kids under 18, it will get a tax cut of $285. A single person over 65 will get a cut of $430.

It is significant that in the typical Canadian family with two incomes it takes two wage earners to support the kids, pay the mortgage or the rent, and buy the food and other essentials that you need. That particular family at $30,000 a year, instead of getting the largest tax cut—which would seem to make sense—gets the smallest tax cut, while the single person gets the largest cut. There is something fundamentally wrong about that.

We, the New Democrats, believe that the Canadian tax system is long overdue for fundamental reform. We stand out and speak up for fairness, efficiency and simplicity in the tax system, but the tax system that we have in Bill C-139 is neither fair, efficient nor simple. The committee has come in with some useful suggestions, but it failed to take up the challenge of redrafting the proposal in terms of the fundamental principles which should underpin real tax reform.

Let me cite one specific thing. The first recommendation of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, I regret to say, was to endorse the rate structure which is contained in the proposals put forward under tax reform by the Minister and by the Government. I think it was a very serious mistake because, when you cut the top rate of taxation from some 34 per cent of the federal level down to 29 per cent, it is impossible to create a progressive tax system. When you create a situation where a secretary working for Bell Canada pays a marginal rate of tax, only five points less than the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Bell Canada, Mr. Jean de Grandpré, who has an income of close to one million dollars a year, there is something fundamentally wrong with that. Average Canadians will tell you that, and yet, somehow the Government is so distant from average Canadians that it simply does not understand that at all.

How can you defend a situation where out of every dollar that Mr. de Grandpré gets in additional income he pays only a nickel more in tax than the secretary who perhaps is trying to raise a couple of kids and live on her own, perhaps on one income, and certainly is having a tough time getting by on that particular income?

While the tax system's intention is, among other things, to raise funds for government expenditures, it is also a serious moral and philosophical intervention into the society and the economy. We live in a society where income is unequally distributed through the mechanism of the market in the form of wages, salaries, dividends, interest and that kind of thing. Income is not distributed equally and the market will not distribute it equally. Whether or not the market acts efficiently in economic growth, it is a poor instrument for realizing social equity. Therefore, as New Democrats, we believe that the central focus of the tax system is to achieve a redistribution of income from the wealthy to average and lower-income Canadians. What the Conservatives believe is something completely contrary. They have been captured by the neo-Conservative view that we need to get the tax system down to a system of taxation as flat as possible. If they could have reduced the categories from 10 rates to 1 rather than 10 rates to 3, I believe they would have done so if they felt they could have sold that, but in the end they could not do that.

The Conservatives are setting the stage for a shift from income taxation over to consumption taxes, despite the fact that consumption taxes affect average Canadians much more than they affect wealthy Canadians, because wealthy Canadians can afford to defer expenditure and consumption because they have lots of money to go around. The Conservatives are creating a system which is less and less progressive. That is demonstrated by the fact that the biggest tax cuts go to wealthy Canadians and the smallest tax cuts go to average Canadians.

The reform package here fails to achieve any substantial redistribution of income among Canadians. The one progressive part of the system, which is the personal income tax, is not far from being neutral in its impact. The reform package is consciously structured so as to be neutral in terms of income distribution. Otherwise progressive features, such as converting tax exemptions which favour upper income earners to tax credits which favour lower income earners are more than offset to changes to the structure of tax rates.

If you really believe in fairness, Mr. Speaker, then you would judge that all forms of income should be treated equally. The Liberals, however, do not believe in fairness. When they were in power they did not treat income equally, and the Conservatives are no better. Income from property, such as capital gains and dividends, is treated differently by the Conservatives than income from wages and salaries.

I hear the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Bosley) basically supporting the privilege in which many of his constituents live since he comes from one of the most affluent constituencies in the country. While I have great respect for the Hon. Member, who is a former Speaker and a distinguished Member of this House of Commons, I want to suggest to him that his constituents are far less in need, and if they are committed to a fair society here, they should be prepared to accept willingly a redistribution of income through the tax system rather than fighting at the top always to be in first place.

I go on to point out that we think the corporate share of the over-all tax burden which represents a withholding tax on property income should be increased. We think that the sales tax share, which represents a regressive tax on consumers, should be reduced. Unfortunately, this question of balance was not examined at any length by the Finance Committee nor, of course, was it examined to any extent by the Government.

We think as well that there is a real problem in tax fairness between big business and small businesses in Canada. That continues in the tax reform which is here. The tax rate on businesses and on larger corporations is alleged to rise by a modest amount. The corporate share of Canadian tax collections, which was about 20 per cent in 1984 when the Conservatives came to power, is down to 15 per cent today. In four or five years time it will still be no more than abut 17 per cent of total tax collections, about $1 in every $6, whereas the average taxpayers will be paying well over half of those tax collections, Mr. Speaker. In addition to that, tax benefits intended to create jobs are overwhelmingly concentrated and directed toward large corporations, while small businesses pay more tax and yet create the vast majority of new jobs in this country.

I would say that if we are talking about efficiency, and that is an important goal as well, then the Government has failed to come to grips with the whole question of tax expenditures, which amount to some $30 billion a year, which amount to a sum equal or greater than the annual sum of the deficit in Canada, and which the Government has simply not touched through the tax reform. If you were to take these tax expenditures and reviewed and assessed them on an annual basis, as the New Democrats believe should be done, then you would start to create a system that would be more efficient, you would be measuring every expenditure by a Government whether it was a direct expenditure or an expenditure through the tax system.

[Translation]

Unfortunately, the Tory Government has done nothing in that direction. We believe it is possible to target tax expenditures to ensure that key objectives such as job creation and regional development are achieved with considerably less spending on the Government's part. Once in a while, some tax expenditures are justified such as the flow-through shares. Nevertheless, we believe that in a great many cases, direct expenditures from the Government are much more efficient than tax expenditures to reach national economic goals.

[English]

We believe that the goal of accountability has not been seriously addressed by the Government or by the committee. That is what I was saying just now. We recommend that each tax expenditure program should be assigned to a relevant Department for review and consideration every year with regard to alternative policy instruments.

We believe that there should be a tax expenditure analysis presented annually, along with the spending Estimates, the Budget and the Public Accounts. We believe the tax expenditures should be integrated with the spending envelope system and be subjected to the approval of Parliament. Unfortunately, we are not making much progress on that. Why, Mr. Speaker? Because wealthy Canadians and corporate Canada know they have a better chance of making headway through the back door via tax expenditures than through the front door via direct expenditure by Government.

Finally, on this front, we have the question of simplicity. The Bill which is 500 pages long hardly adds to simplicity. In fact, the tax practitioners are absolutely beside themselves in trying to deal with this tax measure. I regret that the measure is likely to go through the committee and back through this House with little or no effective scrutiny of the details of the legislation.

In 1986, before tax reform, half of all Canadians had someone else prepare their tax returns. One-third of Canadians had tax experts prepare their tax returns because they were too complex for them. Ordinary Canadians are increasingly baffled by the complexity of the tax system. That will certainly not change through this provision. In fact, that is also true as far as corporations are concerned.

There has been a lot of talk about the automobile expense provisions which the committee urged be fundamentally changed and which advice the Government ignored. I read through a seven page memo prepared by one of the leading accounting firms that purported to explain the new provisions on automobile expenses. I have to confess that I did not understand it, even as someone who has some expertise in this area and who has spent the last year looking at tax reform as a member of the Finance Committee. If I cannot understand it, how can someone who is running a small business understand it? How can a salesperson or someone working for a firm understand it? Why do we have to create a system where every time you turn around you have to resort to a tax lawyer who charges $200 an hour for his or her advice?

We had hoped to see a fairer balance between individuals in the tax system. Unfortunately, that is not to be. We had hoped to see a higher top rate on those people earning $50,000 or $60,000 a year who can afford to make that kind of contribution. We had looked for a system where wealthy Canadians would pay more rather than less.

We are fundamentally in disagreement with the approach taken by the Government, which is to say that it will plug loopholes on the one hand but then turn around and take money which is gained from loopholes and give it back to the same people. When a Department is forced to give up expenditure because of cut-backs in a particular area, it is not allowed to take the money and put it into some other area of Government. The money goes back into the Treasury and is then spent according to the general priorities of the Government. When it comes to tax reform, the Government has shovelled money around so that wealthy Canadians who lost certain loopholes are getting the money back through lower tax rates.

It may be a more neutral tax system, but it is not a tax system that is fair or more equitable.

It should also be noted that the new credits to be introduced in 1988 will not be fully indexed to inflation. The income tax burden on average families will increase in real terms and many more poor families will be forced back on the tax rolls. In other words, the 800,000 families who may be taken off the tax rolls today will find themselves back on them in the unlikely event that this Government is back in power for the next three or four years after the election.

The partial deindexation means that the $300 tax cut for the average family will be systematically eroded to the point where there will be no effective tax cut about three or four years down the line. That is primarily rooted in two things. The first is the failure of the tax reform White Paper to introduce a fair tax rate structure. The second is the failure of the Government to bring in full indexing on tax rates, particularly for people earning under $30,000 a year. Instead, the credits and everything else are partly deindexed as part of the Tory approach to tax reform.

There are other problems and disparities. One is the fact that the Government is still backing away from full taxation of capital gains. My Party disagrees with that. We disagree with the priority given to the $500,000 tax exemption. The fact that it has been capped at $100,000 is modest progress, but the tax exemption should not have been put there in the first place. It should not be changed or maintained, it should be taken out. We think that the principle that a buck is a buck is a buck, first enunciated by the Carter Commission on taxes back in the 1960s, should be endorsed now if we are to keep our country economically strong and provide for economic regional development. Surely people should know that a dollar they earn is taxed on the same basis as for everyone else and there are not sharpsters and wise boys and girls and people who have the inside track who are able to cut their taxes by means of such devices as the privileged rate given to dividends and capital gains.

That is why my Party recommends that, with the exception of farmers and small businesses—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Darling: Aren't you wonderful?

Mr. Cassidy: —and we are prepared to make those concessions, that capital gains be fully taxable and that the lifetime exemption be eliminated. I hear some disagreement. Perhaps some members of the Conservative Party do not believe that farmers or small businesses should be exempted. If that is the case, let them say so during the debate.

We note that while many of the tax exemptions or deductions in the system have been replaced by credits, at the same time other personal tax measures which largely favoured the wealthy, such as the deduction for RRSP contributions, the special treatment of dividend income, and the full deduction of interest costs for income, have been treated as deductions rather than credits. If you want a system that deals fairly with people at different income levels, we propose that those be dealt with in the form of a credit rather than a deduction. Why should wealthy Canadians get deductions and average Canadians get credits? Why not make it all a system of credits?

I have already spoken about the unfairness of the system with respect to families. I have spoken about the fact that the tax reductions for average families are themselves derisory. A few bucks a week, and that money is going to be very quickly taken away. They are far less than the tax increases which have taken effect under the Conservatives since 1984.

The figures are a bit difficult to calculate, but the National Council on Welfare calculates that by 1991 the total child benefits for a two-child family at the poverty line will have been reduced by $314, and the average two-child family will actually lose $925. Those figures may have changed a little bit with the changes to the proposals since 1987, but not a heck of a lot. I ask, what kind of country is this when the tax system deals so unfairly with people who are performing, apart from everything else, the one absolutely fundamental responsibility of every generation in any society, which is to ensure that children are born and a new generation comes along to carry the torch and keep the human race going? How do we treat that in Canada? Judging by the Tory tax reform, we treat it with contempt.

We urge that the $65 tax credit per child be significantly increased and indexed to inflation. The change just for the third child and subsequent children is not good enough. We believe the new credit could and should be melded with an increased and reindexed family allowance.

The NDP also has a long-standing policy to increase the refundable child tax credit by 80 per cent as an essential step toward lifting low-income families with children above the poverty line. If we have a commitment to children, if we have a commitment to families, then let us do it now, and not wait until after the election.

In the same vein, I heard my friend, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), suggesting that absolute necessities of life such as bread, milk, butter and a few similar products should not be subject to sales tax. I am not sure if he was trying to draw a distinction between all groceries and certain limited essentials. However, I want to serve notice on the Government again that it would perform a major disservice to Canadians, and would make a fundamental political error, if it ever again tried, as the Minister of Finance did a year ago in June, to impose a sales tax on the groceries Canadians buy every week. That is a fundamentally unacceptable position. We do not accept it. We fought it from the moment it was proposed. The Minister, after six months, finally backed off. However, on behalf of average Canadians, we say that this is an unacceptable provision and we will not accept it. Do not let us see the Government going back on that promise.

I want to go on now to deal with the corporate side. It is significant that the increase in taxes on corporations under the Conservatives is far less proportionately than that which took place under tax reform in the U.S. In fact, I think there is a lot of deception taking place on this issue. The marginal rates on high income individuals in the U.S. are much higher than the Progressive Conservatives try to pretend. Corporate taxes went up far more there than in this country. It is interesting that the Conservatives, having promised in 1984 that a minimum tax would be brought in on individuals have failed to do so on corporations. Yet it has been estimated that a minimum tax on corporations of 20 per cent, which is the rate applied in Ronald Reagan's America, would bring in an extra $2 billion a year here in Canada. That would in turn allow tax cuts for average Canadians.

It is also notable that that would sharply cut down if not eliminate the large number of profitable Canadian corporations, some 60,000 or so, who will continue to be able to avoid tax on their profits after tax reform.

New Democrats suggest there should be a minimum tax on corporations here in Canada. If it can be brought in in corporate America despite Reaganomics, for goodness' sake, we can do it here in this slightly more progressive country. I suggest we should be doing that now. We should not be waiting. We should bring in the minimum tax. That is another way of assuring average Canadians that when they pay their fair share, everyone else is doing so as well.

I have had a great deal of correspondence from individual Canadians asking about the elimination of the $1,000 investment income tax deduction. The theory for removing it is quite strong in the sense that you make up for it by means of changes in the basic tax rates and credits and that kind of thing, and by not distinguishing between people who earn by working and those who earn from interest or dividend income. That I understand. However, the more I think about this, the more I realize that the reason people are really offended at that omission is the fact that the Government is cutting the taxes of wealthy Canadians, much of whose income comes from interest and dividends, and at the same time is taking away one of the few tax concessions given to average Canadians. That raises real questions in our minds.

I understand my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I would seek the indulgence of the House and ask for unanimous consent to continue, with the understanding that I would finish by one o'clock.

• (1250)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House grant unanimous consent to the Hon. Member?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: I suggest that in terms of simplicity we have a very serious problem. When I began to pay income tax 20 odd years ago my tax form was a dozen pages long, now it is 80 or 90 pages. I am overwhelmed with record keeping and the various ancillary documents I have to submit. Many other Canadians are suffering the same kind of thing. That is why New Democrats believe that there should be a plain language tax form. Why can the tax form for most Canadians not be a dozen pages or so, something we can fill in in the course of a couple of hours rather than having to consult a tax preparer and pay $50 or $200? The tax preparers often do not understand the law either. Why does it have to be so complicated? Why can it not be simple again? Why can we not provide people with a system which is both simple and fair?

Why can Revenue Canada officials not be available to meet with taxpayers on a regular basis to assist in tax filing? A constituent of mine who works here in the House of Commons told me the other day that for the last two weeks he has been trying to get the taxpayer inquiry number at the Revenue Canada office here in Ottawa. He has phoned morning, afternoon, and evening, day after day after day and that telephone number has been consistently busy. That, of course, is no service at all to the public. If he were Mr. White, working for the Prime Minister, or a colleague of Mr. Black, it would be available in black and white. He would have easy access to the people who could give him the tax information he needed. However, that is not available for average Canadians.

I want to turn now to the changes made by the Government since this first came forward in 1987. We know that the Government refused to move in a meaningful way in terms of the tax credit for children. It moved only with respect to the third and subsequent children. I grant that that was the Finance Committee's recommendation. I think the committee was wrong on that particular point. We argued very strongly against that. The Government increased the refundable tax credit by the magnificent sum of $35 per child but refused to raise the net family income threshold as the Finance Committee had proposed.

On automobile expenses the Government proposals are of a mind-boggling complexity. It refused to listen to the Finance Committee. I want to tell the Minister of State for Finance and his boss that every small business in the country is up in arms over that particular provision. They will be spending thousands of dollars every year just to try to administer this particular law in its proposed complexity. The 27-cent and 21-cent feature which was added in the final run might alleviate things a bit. We will study that in the committee.

However, it does not have to be this complicated in order to prevent business people from driving a BMW or a Jaguar to work on the firm. That is what we want to eliminate. That is what offends average Canadians who are nursing an eight-year old car and do not understand how someone else can drive a very expensive automobile on the firm.

With respect to the taxation on farming, the Government has listened to a certain extent, and I say thank you for that. The Government's proposal for a modified accrual system of accounting on farms was going to offend and outrage every farmer across the country. It was not workable, it was not fair, and it was not reasonable. I am glad to see that the Government has finally backed away from that particular proposal and is now looking at this in more detail.

In other areas, however, the listening was a little less intense. I note, for example, that the Government refused to impose the alternative minimum margin tax which was unanimously proposed by the Finance Committee and would have had the effect of bringing in some $400 million a year from under-taxed sectors, that is, the banks and other financial institutions. In other words, the Government caved in to the lobby from the banks and other financial institutions. It came in with a temporary capital tax on the charter banks of one or one and a quarter per cent, which the Minister of State for Finance himself knows is a perpetuation of an archaic tax. If the Minister wants to move on the sales tax because it is archaic, why is the Government perpetuating an archaic tax?

Mr. Hockin: You want revenues from the banks. That's revenue.

Mr. Cassidy: The revenue that will come in is an estimated $120 million in the first year and $125 million in the second year. The committee proposed unanimously, with the support of the Conservative Members, a $400 million increase in revenues. That would have enabled us to create a fairer tax system, but the Government did not want to offend the banks by doing that.

It is interesting that the Government has moved a little bit on some technical provisions with respect to the "put in use" rule relative to the capital cost allowance but, having plugged a few loopholes, it now starts to open them again, most notably with the guarantee of a tax ruling on the Revenue Department with respect to the expenditures on the Hibernia project which it seems to me now sets a precedent for every other corporate interest to look for similar treatment. We will be back very quickly to where we were under the Liberals.

The Government did not accept the Finance Committee's recommendations of an advanced corporation tax or to close the preferred share dividend loopholes available to large corporations. There, too, I think the Finance Committee was well in advance of the Government. Again, the people who benefit the most from things like the preferred share dividend loophole or the moving of dividends from one company to another are Conrad Black and Peter White in the Prime Minister's Office. Only four or five days ago he was in Toronto fiddling around with preferred tax share dividends and that kind of thing in order that ordinary taxpayers would have to pay more so that he and his corporate associates could make more and more bucks.

Mr. Hockin: Nonsense, we removed all that.

Mr. Cassidy: The Minister of State for Finance says "nonsense", yet it is true and he knows it. He used to teach business at Western Ontario and he should know that that kind of thing is going on.

The committee recommended that legitimate out-of-town travel expenses for sales purposes, et cetera, should not be subjected to the 80 per cent rule on entertainment and meal expenses. The Government did not grant that, and I think it was wrong. Instead, the Government has left the situation that legitimate business travel will only be deductible to 80 per cent, but if Labatt's from London wants to invest $200,000 in a VIP box at the Skydome it will be able to deduct 80 per cent of that cost as a business entertainment expense.

Again, there is some disparity in that. The small business here in Ottawa in the hightech industry which is trying to crack the European market will find that the cost of maintaining its representative in Europe for a week or two while on a sales trip is not fully deductible, but the expense for a box at the Skydome is 80 per cent deductible. There is something wrong with that.

The final point I wish to raise on that particular issue is that the Government has refused to move with respect to the recommendations coming from the tax fraternity on the issue of anti-avoidance. I would like to read an excerpt from the submission made by the Joint Committee of the Bar Association and the Association of Chartered Accountants. They said:

> The Joint Committee is fundamentally opposed to the introduction of a general anti-avoidance rule of the kind included in the draft legislation of April 13, 1988. The Committee is unanimous in its view that the existing statutory rules (with relatively minor modifications) and jurisprudence are adequate to combat unacceptable tax avoidance.
> The general anti-avoidance rule in the form proposed by the Minister of Finance is unnecessary, undesirable and represents a retrograde step in the evolution of Canada's income tax system. The introduction of such a rule will create an aura of uncertainty over ordinary business and commercial transactions for many years to come.

They strongly recommended two changes. The one which was accepted was to rule out Section 245(10). The one which was refused was to put the onus of proof onto the Minister of National Revenue.

I cited that because the committee itself felt that way too. It believed that if the Government had administratively been prepared to enforce the existing rules about anti-avoidance it would have been much more effective than bringing in new jurisprudence which will take seven or eight years to be clarified. In the meantime the Government is giving many firms a licence to cheat, firms which will not be caught under this new anti-avoidance rule.

The basic point which New Democrats have been making and will be making on the hustings is that New Democrats want a fairer tax system which benefits average Canadians. Tories want a Tory tax reform which benefits the wealthy and corporations. I believe that Canadians across the country want New Democratic tax reform and not Tory deform.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ENERGY

DEVELOPMENT OF HIBERNIA OILFIELD

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Governments of Canada, Newfoundland and Labrador, and a consortium of oil companies announced the details of the largest development project ever undertaken in Atlantic Canada.

The project means thousands of quality jobs to Newfoundlanders and Atlantic Canadians. As the first major offshore development project in Canada, Hibernia will also generate significant new business opportunities for hundreds of companies in Newfoundland, Atlantic Canada, and other parts of Canada.

The project will take Canadian companies to the leading edge of offshore oil and gas development technology. Canadian companies can then plan an even larger role in future offshore projects both in Canada and around the world.

This project is great news for Newfoundland and Labrador, great news for Atlantic Canada, and great news for all of Canada.

FARM WOMEN—OFF-FARM JOBS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Canadian farmers are faced with a drought this year that threatens their livelihood. The drought is also accelerating major changes in rural families. Women have always worked hard on the family farm, helping with the harvests, raising their children and maintaining the home. But now they are faced with another burden, seeking paid employment off the farm to pay the bills.

The number of farm women with outside jobs has increased dramatically over the last 30 years. In 1951, 13 per cent of farm women worked off the farm; in 1988, that number is 68 per cent.

Farm women face many obstacles in trying to combine their many responsibilities. There are inadequate child care facilities for their children in the rural areas where they live. The jobs available to most of these women are minimum wage employment. Farm women are still responsible for most of the housework and child care, and that in addition to helping with many tasks related to the farm. All of this makes for very long and demanding days.

I call upon the Government to offer concrete support to Canadian farm women, especially now because of the drought. More rural day care centres need to be established. Farm women's organizations need to be strengthened through increased funding. As well, women's contribution to the farm must be recognized through pension reform. Finally, farm women will benefit along with all Canadian women from effective employment equity legislation.

VIA RAIL

EFFECT OF ANTI-SMOKING LEGISLATION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, when passing laws in this House sometimes our enthusiasm for a cause blinds us to the adverse effect and expense imposed on others. For example, we recently passed Bill C-204, the Non-Smokers Health Act, which if proclaimed as is will impose severe constraints on VIA's operations. It will prevent VIA from offering smoking accommodation on more than 40 of its trains. In fact, Clause 5 will ban smokers entirely on all of its one-coach trains.

Also, VIA is discriminated against as it has no time limitations as provided for other modes, even though some trips last 75 hours. Additional equipment required to meet the requirements of the Bill will cost $8.5 million, and even worse, the rights of 300,000 smoking VIA passengers are negated and they will have to find other modes. Are smokers not Canadian citizens too?

ABORTION

SUPREME COURT'S REFUSAL TO POSTPONE HEARING

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Supreme Court of Canada summarily dismissed an application by the Government to postpone indefinitely the case of Borowski. In that particular case now pending before the Supreme Court, the court is being called to decide on the rights of the fetus.

The Government had the audacity to interfere in an unprecedented fashion in the process of the court. In effect, the Government asked the independent Supreme Court of this country to dovetail its agenda into its own agenda, for political reasons.

Chief Justice Dickson of the Supreme Court of Canada was not persuaded. One could not help but be embarrassed for the lawyer from the Justice Department who was instructed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to argue a very weak case.

It was an abuse of the process. When will the Government have the courage to bring in legislation in order to protect the innocent unborn?

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in a letter dated February 24, 1984, when he was Leader of the Opposition, said:

> On the overall issue of abortion, I realize that there are personal, moral and religious commitments on all sides of the abortion question, and I am not prepared to support abortion on demand.

I call on the Prime Minister to live up to his convictions and bring in legislation to protect human life right from the moment of conception.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CALL FOR SENATE TO PASS LEGISLATION

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal dominated Senate is blocking progress in Atlantic Canada. It is holding up the Opportunities Agency legislation which is the best news for us since John Diefenbaker was Prime Minister.

We want to spend $1 billion in the next five years to let business develop their ideas, to create thousands of jobs and create long term prosperity.

• (1405)

Are the Senators, supported by Liberal Members of Parliament across the way, afraid we will get credit for new jobs and prosperity for Atlantic Canadians? Are they afraid of giving control to Atlantic Canada rather than keeping it here in Ottawa? Are they afraid we will succeed where they failed? Are they playing partisan politics on the backs of our small businessmen? This is an injustice to every Atlantic Canadian, to every Prince Edward Islander. We want jobs. We want prosperity.

I call upon the Liberal Members of Parliament to stand up, to get out of their seats, to walk over to the Senate right now and tell Mr. MacEachen and his colleagues that they are tired of being his patsies. Tell him he is wrong. Tell him you will support the Tories to develop Atlantic Canada.

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LONG-TERM DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, three years ago the Prairies experienced drought and grasshopper infestations. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) agreed then that ad hoc federal disaster assistance to Canadian farmers was inadequate. The Minister promised to do something about it. Three years have passed and we still have no sign of a long-term disaster assistance program.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, much of Canada is in the midst of the worst drought in over 50 years. The Government is providing some assistance to Canadian cattlemen. However, there is still no sign of help for Canadian grain farmers.

The uncertainty of government drought assistance is causing deep anxiety for tens of thousands of farm families. My colleagues and I join farm leaders across Canada who want to know what happened to the commitment of the Minister of Agriculture to create a permanent disaster assistance program. New Democrats call upon the Minister of Agriculture and the agricultural community to develop immediately a long-term assistance program, a program to cover crops, livestock and fixed assets, a long-term program that would greatly reduce the anxiety farm families face each time they are subjected to natural disasters.

SPORT

TOUR DE L'ABITIBI

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Tour international de l'Abitibi is the most important multi-stage junior cycling event in America. From July 26 to 31, 1988, a number of national teams including those of Switzerland, France, The Netherlands, Czechoslovakia, Guadeloupe and Canada will be on the starting line. A total of 25 teams will be taking part in the 20th edition of the Tour de l'Abitibi. The 20 years of dedicated work by people such as Léandre Normand, Marc Lemay, Robert Baril, Roland Lord, André Babin, Claude Pagé and thousands of volunteers have paid off. Val d'Or has been chosen to host this 20th edition of the Tour.

Mr. Speaker, Canadian Steve Bauer showed his ability in the Tour de l'Abitibi in 1976 and look at him now: he is a top contender in the Tour de France.

EXERCISE OF POLITICAL RIGHTS BY PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Federal Court of Appeal ruled on the political rights of federal public servants. The ruling invalidates section 32 of the Civil Service Employment Act, thereby granting the 214 000 public servants who come under this act the same political rights as all other citizens.

In so doing, the Court fulfilled the election promise which the Conservative Government was not able to keep. All interested parties expressed their satisfaction. Alliance President Daryl Bean called it a victory for all employees, one which allowed them to emerge from obscurity, and said that these new freedoms did not endanger the integrity of the Public service.

However, in its ruling the Court has created two categories of public servants. On the one side there are 214 000 public servants with full rights, and on the other there are 357 000 federal employees with no political rights.

I hope that the Government will have the courage to fulfill its 1984 promise and go all the way by granting full political rights to those Federal Government workers.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CALL FOR SENATE TO PASS LEGISLATION

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard Liberal Members in this House charge that the ACOA Bill will mean the end of the ID Division of Devco. Nothing could be more misleading. The ACOA Bill gives the ID Division the status of an independent Crown corporation. The ACOA Bill will give it a separate board of directors. If Liberal Members want an autonomous ID Division they should support Bill C-103. It is time to support Atlantic Canada, not the Godfather.

Cape Breton has never seen the growth of new industries and the commitment of federal money of the kind delivered since the election of this Government. Included are $110 million for Sysco modernization, tens of millions of dollars for Devco, more than $150 million for small business development, and more than $50 million under the tax credit program. Our record is clear. If the previous Liberal Government was as committed as we are, we would not be discussing unemployment in Cape Breton today.

• (1410)

Yesterday we learned about Hibernia. We will develop oil in the interests of Atlantic Canadians. The Liberals were determined to leave it under the sea.

RAILWAYS

SITUATION OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, when rumours first circulated about the closure of the Newfoundland Railway, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and Premier Brian Peckford of Newfoundland said that their first priority would be the workers who would lose their jobs. We learned on Sunday that the Minister for International Trade gave repeated assurances to the workers and the unions, saying to them behind closed doors: "Keep your mouths shut, and we'll look after you".

They were deceived. When the deal to close the railway was announced on June 20 there was nothing there from the Government of Canada for the 500 workers who would lose their jobs. They would get nothing that they were not already entitled to by their hard won collective agreements or existing employment contracts.

"Keep your mouths shut, and we'll look after you". Those are the words of the Minister for International Trade—patronizing workers, intimidation of possible opposition, and then a stab in the back. That is the arrogance of this Minister and this Government. That is how much they can be trusted.

When will the Government learn that people expect openness and honesty from government? The workers at the Newfoundland Railway got exactly the opposite.

TOUR DE FRANCE—ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF CANADIAN CYCLIST

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, for the last two weeks Canadians have been following the heroic achievements of Steve Bauer, an Erie riding constituent who lives in Fenwick. He is in fourth place in the Tour de France, the world's most prestigious bicycle race.

To win this over 3,000 kilometre race which demands that riders pedal over mountain peaks from 4,000 to 7,000 feet in height, and speed across the borders of Belgium, Spain, Switzerland, and Italy, is considered to be cycling's highest honour. Steve has won the coveted yellow jersey five times. The yellow jersey is presented to the over-all leader at the end of each day-stage of the race. He wore le maillot jaune for four consecutive days, earning him the recognition and respect not just of Canadians but of Europeans as well.

I am sure I speak for all Members of the House and all Canadians in congratulating Steve Bauer and conveying to him our best wishes for a quick finish to Paris.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

LAY-OFFS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE URGED

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the crisis on the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system continues. We still have in excess of 1,400 men and women, most of whom reside in the city of Thunder Bay and elsewhere along the system, who have been laid off. We have grain that is trickling to a slow stop coming from the west to a point at which we may only be handling 4 million tons for the next crop year.

I have raised this matter in the House. I have raised it directly with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDougall) asking for some kind of program that will ensure that those people who are required to move Canada's gain through the eastern system are treated in the same way as those who are producing the grain, the farmers.

I call again on the Government to develop a program that will ensure that grain can move through the eastern system. Temporary elimination of Seaway tolls, lockage fees, and government imposed charges will help. The long term requires additional work.

We need to do what we can to protect those workers who are so vital to the system. I ask the Government to give consideration to changes to the unemployment insurance legislation so that those workers can be protected as well.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, the opposition fearmongers were wrong again. Last week, for days on end they tried to link the proposal to divert water from Lake Michigan to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Now the United States Army Corps of Engineers has decided not to go ahead with that diversion.

If water is part of the deal, why would the United States have done that? Could it be that water is not part of the deal? "'Tis so", cries the paranoid Opposition. One thing is certain, the Opposition intends to drag every red herring it can out of Canadian water.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—APPOINTMENT OF DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVE ADVOCATED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, today is the ninth anniversary of the Nicaraguan people's victory over Samoza. A tiny country often invaded and ruled by the United States sacrificed many thousands of lives to rid the country of the last ruler left in place by the United States. Since then, the U.S. Government has tried to recover control of Nicaragua. It hired ex-National Guard officers with bloody records of brutality, and initiated a war of terrorism, concentrating on the killing of children, women, and unarmed campesinos.

• (1415)

Recently an uncertain ceasefire has been negotiated with the help of other Governments in Central America, South America, Europe and Canada. However, the U.S. has recently tried again to disrupt the peace through its ambassador, who openly encouraged a public demonstration which ended when the demonstrators attacked the police with stones and sticks and provoked the police response.

I call on the Government of Canada to follow the recommendation of the special committee and appoint a direct representative to Managua so that we no longer depend on the United States for our information about Nicaragua.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S.S.R.—SITUATION OF ARMENIANS IN AZERBAIJAN

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet decided that the region of Nagornno-Karabagh will remain part of Azerbaijan. This decision is a shock and huge disappointment to Armenians around the world. They had been hoping and praying that Karabagh would become part of Soviet Armenia. As I said in this House on March 1, 1988, the decision to separate this territory in 1923 was an injustice.

With Armenians accounting for at least 75 per cent of the population of Karabagh, they have everything in common with Soviet Armenia and nothing in common with the other citizens of Azerbaijan. In fact, they have suffered human rights violations and many have been killed.

This was one of the most important tests of General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev's policy of glasnost. He has failed in his first major test. Canadians of Armenian heritage will not forget nor will they give up. The struggle for human dignity and justice will continue.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I am told that today in Newfoundland investors big and small are making firm investment decisions based on what they perceive to be a firm agreement or deal announced yesterday in Newfoundland by the Prime Minister and the Premier of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Land is indeed being bought and sold and scarce financial resources are being drawn to offshore related activities in the expectation of a guaranteed return. My question to the Deputy Prime Minister, and perhaps to the Hon. Member for St. John's West, is the following. I ask the Minister whether he is prepared to confirm today in the House that, notwithstanding the stated intentions contained in the Statement of Principles, what in fact was announced yesterday in St. John's was merely a Statement of Principles and not a firm and legally binding agreement to proceed with Hibernia development.

• (1420)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, what was announced yesterday in St. John's was just as described, an agreed statement of principles between the Government of Newfoundland, the Government of Canada, and the five oil companies that make up the consortium that is developing Hibernia. It was a result of two years of negotiations from June, 1986, and finally concluded on July 9, 1988. As is the usual practice, the detailed legal agreements will be completed before the end of March.

Major expenditures on the project will start in 1989. There will be an investment of $8.5 billion, the greatest investment in any single project ever in the Atlantic region, and ever in Newfoundland. There will be 35,000 direct and indirect jobs created in Newfoundland, and of course across Canada many thousands of others.

The people who stopped the development from 1980 to 1984 and tried to crush the Province and the Government of Newfoundland are the very people now across the House trying to sabotage the deal with this type of silly question.

TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the only thing the Opposition is attempting to sabotage is falsehoods. What we are trying to save and define is the truth. I thank the Member for St. John's West who stood on his feet, unlike the exercise that took place in St. John's, Newfoundland yesterday. There was quite a difference, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday it was a firm deal. Today the Minister has confirmed it is merely a Statement of Principles.

The first principle contained on page 1, paragraph 2 of the document, is the following:

> The execution of this Statement of Principles by the signatories hereto is not intended to and does not create legally enforceable rights or obligations between the signatories hereto or between any of the signatories hereto and any third parties . . .

The Member for St. John's West, who is a Newfoundland Member of Parliament, shares with me and every Newfoundlander a desire for development, but also a desire not to see people's hopes crushed or their investments burned. Is he prepared to say clearly today, out of all the confusion, all of the hoop-la, and all the smoke and mirrors, that that article, that escape clause that precedes every other statement in yesterday's announcement, makes it possible for any one of the partners from now to March 31, 1989, to cancel out of this deal at any time without penalty? Is he prepared to confirm that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will confirm this, Mr. Speaker, that five major oil companies have entered into a compact with the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, the principles of which are set out in the agreement made public yesterday that will result in a $5.2 billion dollar capital expenditure off the coast of our province. It will put a firm economic base under the economy of the Province of Newfoundland for the first time in 450 years. Every Newfoundlander, except those who are jealous or those who are politically motivated, is claiming that this is a great day.

Rather than the actions of former Prime Minister Trudeau who said to Premier Peckford: "I'll see you in court. The jurisdiction and the resource belongs to us", our Prime Minister has gone hand in hand under the Atlantic Accord and we are putting $2.7 billion into the project so it goes ahead and saves Newfoundland and gives Newfoundland an economic chance for the future.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, an empty barrel makes the most noise.

Mr. Crosbie: You should know.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will note that the Chair felt it was appropriate to close off the Minister's reply. I would hope that the Hon. Member, recognizing that, would phrase his question in such a way that neither the Minister nor the Chair is provoked.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure you, Sir, that I meant no disrespect to you and, more important, no disrespect to the Minister. He has a wonderful mind. It ignites when he wakes up in the morning, works flawlessly, and stops as soon as he stands on his feet in the House of Commons.

POSITION OF PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not want to deal with the document. He does not want to admit that the first clause, the legal clause or the escape clause, means that any partner could cancel out at any time for any reason without penalty, but we will take his silence as an acknowledgement of that fact.

• (1425)

Let me ask him this question, Mr. Speaker. Even given the best intentions of having a real deal by March 31, 1989, within eight months, how is it that the Government would be so sure of its statement yesterday and so sure that within eight months there will be a real deal—sometime after elections are held, of course—and how is it that we see the president of one of the major partners in the consortium who was at the press conference yesterday—and I speak specifically of Petro-Canada and its President, Bill Hopper—

An Hon. Member: Where is the question?

Mr. Tobin: You are getting the question—saying with respect to Petro-Canada's financial obligation—

Mr. Grisé: Short answers, short questions.

Mr. Tobin: —and Petro-Canada's financial participation in the deal, "We don't have the money"? How is it, 24 hours after a deal is announced, the President of Petro-Canada is saying with respect to that deal, "We don't have the money" as is reported in today's Financial Post? What kind of Statement of Principles was announced yesterday? When will that Statement of Principles be kept as a firm, legal, binding document?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that Hibernia project is going. It is agreed. The companies have agreed. The Government of Canada has made it all possible with the initiative that we have taken and with the agreements that we have made. They will all be legally bound at the end of March. In the meantime, we are morally bound. We are completely bound. We are bound by our word. We are bound by the handshakes exchanged. And, Mr. Speaker, the proof of the pudding will be in the eating.

Those people who tried to crush the Government of Newfoundland, who stopped development for four years, who sat in their seats here and did nothing, the Benedict Arnolds, have failed, and their last minute attempts to sabotage this project will fail as well. As I said yesterday about Premier Peckford, a hero is one who knows how to hang on one minute longer than the vile forces arrayed against him.

AMOUNT OF PROVINCIAL ROYALTIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister. He talked a lot about being bound. The fact is the one that is bound most is the Province of Newfoundland. Of the three partners, the weakest partner has to give the most. The companies get money, they get a guarantee. The Government of Canada gets its taxes, its duties, and the Prime Minister himself said Canada will be paid back every cent that it spent. The Government of Newfoundland gives up taxes, reduces corporate taxes, it has to pay $100 million and it gets a royalty of 1 per cent.

Why is it the weakest partner gets a royalty of 1 per cent where Alberta gets a royalty of 12 per cent and Saskatchewan gets a royalty of 20 per cent? Why did the Member for St. John's West allow Newfoundland to mortgage its own future?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in my 23 years in politics I was never prouder than yesterday, and I am just as proud today.

Last week the hon. gentlemen opposite said that Newfoundland wasn't going to get any royalties at all, it had given up royalties. Today the hon. gentlemen are suggesting it is 1 per cent. The way it works is this. Before the project is in full production Newfoundland starts off with a royalty of 1 per cent. As it gets to full production the royalties mount. If the price of oil goes up, royalties continue to mount.

Mr. Tobin: To what?

Mr. Crosbie: Then, Mr. Speaker, if the project does really well Newfoundland gets a supplementary royalty of 12.5 per cent. In addition, the main support frame is constructed in Newfoundland, the gravity base structure is constructed in Newfoundland, 50 per cent of design engineering is done in Newfoundland, and 35,000 jobs will be had in Newfoundland. While the hon. gentleman was in the last Cabinet he did everything he could to crush Newfoundland. He should be ashamed to stand up in this House and ask a question about this project.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if ifs and ands were pots and pans, there would be no work for tinkers. That is what the Minister is, he is a tinker. He is tinkering with the future of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, what is the maximum? It is 5 per cent if the price of oil goes up. There are so many ifs.

I know what temporary jobs are like. I have gone through Churchill Falls and temporary jobs evaporate pretty quickly. What about the long-term revenue? There is no long-term revenue. I ask the Minister again why has he allowed Newfoundland to mortgage its own future, because that is what he has done?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of thinking that resulted in the betrayal of Newfoundland from 1980 to 1984. When Mr. Peckford wanted to settle with Mr. Trudeau, what did Mr. Trudeau say to him? He said, "I will see you in court". That was the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite. They weren't thinking about the future of Newfoundland then. They were doing the bidding of their master.

But we have a Prime Minister who wants to see every part of Canada develop, who was met yesterday with gratitude, who will go down in history as a friend of Newfoundland, as someone who built co-operative federalism, who has built our economy, who has carried out his promises, who entered into the Atlantic Accord and carried out the Atlantic Accord. The Hon. Member should be ashamed for questioning this deal in this House.

COST ESTIMATES—TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister about a part of this deal which I assume he has read, after the public relations disaster of the trade deal. I would like him to enlighten us on the escape clause which says that if the detailed cost estimates for the project rise to $5.6 billion from the current $5.2 billion, either side to the agreement can pull out.

In light of the fact that the cost estimates rose from $4.2 billion in March of this year to $5.2 billion at the end of May, what assurance can he give us that from now until March, 1989, we will not see a cost increase of $300 million and the whole deal is gone?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, isn't that a typical NDP attitude? Their philosophy is expressed by the statement that many a man waits for his ship to come in who never sent one out in the first place. That is the NDP philosophy.

We are sending our ships out. Mobil is sending its ship out. Gulf is sending its ship out. Columbia Gas is sending its ship out. Chevron is sending its ship out. They are committed to putting over $1 billion into this. They are not going to lose all that and let it all go because costs may have gone up. They figured inflation into this.

If the NDP were in power this project would never be started, and there is the living proof. Why, I was reading documents before you were snivelling!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harris: The comments of the Hon. Minister give truth to the idiom that age does not necessarily bring wisdom.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRICE OF FUTURE ENERGY EXPORTS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: We want George!

Mr. Masse: Baker is smart enough not to be here.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for St. John's East.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement brings into focus the energy provisions of the trade deal, which parts the Minister may not have read. I would like him to confirm that Article 904 of the trade deal will force Newfoundland and Labrador energy, whether it be oil or hydroelectricity, to be exported to the U.S. at the same price it can be sold in Newfoundland, thereby prohibiting for all time energy pricing as a method of attracting industrial development to Newfoundland and Labrador, which the Minister knows is an economic development strategy that successive Newfoundland Governments have long promoted.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised when I did not see the hon. gentleman down celebrating in Newfoundland yesterday. He was up here trying to condemn and damn this deal when he should be supporting it with every inch of his frame. It is St. John's east and west of the Avalon Peninsula that are going to be especially favoured by this development, along with Come-By-Chance where the main support frame and gravity base structure are going to be built. I would sooner be older and less wise than a puking babe, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: That wasn't even funny. Flora is embarrassed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: I withdraw the words "puking babe" and change them to mewling babe, Mr. Speaker.

With reference to the question, the free trade agreement does not dictate what price the oil from Hibernia can be sold at, or the price of electricity. It can be sold at whatever price a willing buyer will pay for the oil or electricity. There is no impediment at all. In fact the free trade agreement helps this development because of course there is now an assured market in the U.S. for this oil if it is not all sold in Atlantic Canada.

Some 110,000 barrels a day will come from Hibernia, and that is 60 per cent of the capacity of Atlantic Canada. As a result of Hibernia will come Terra Nova, and Ben Nevis, and all of the other fields out there will be developed. For the next 100 years Newfoundlanders will experience prosperity such as they have never experienced before.

Fortune has turned for Newfoundland because of our Prime Minister and our Government, and Premier Peckford and his Government, not because of the saboteurs and people who never take a risk on the other side of this House!

EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the province of Québec has used the availability of low cost energy to attract industry for many years. Much of it is derived from the Churchill Falls hydro power. This resulted in significant economic activity, in the pulp and paper industry, and aluminum, and magnesium smelting, to name just a few.

Why is Newfoundland limited to the development and export of energy, watching it flow out of the province forever, this time from 200 miles away? Why is Newfoundland being denied this economic development strategy which has worked so well for Québec? Does the Minister not realize that Article 904 of the trade deal will forever deny industrial development in Newfoundland and Labrador based on our abundant energy resources? Will he not admit that there really is prohibition of a two-price system for oil which would allow Newfoundland to use it to develop its own industry?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland can purchase the oil. Atlantic Canada can purchase the oil. Canadians can purchase the oil. Americans can purchase the oil. Germans can purchase the oil. Japanese can purchase the oil. They can all purchase the oil at the highest price the market will pay. That is what they can buy the oil for.

With respect to jobs, the Atlantic Accord is grandfathered. The free trade agreement does not apply to it in any event with respect to the provisions for employment and performance and benefits. Even if it did, appropriate packages could still be there.

There is going to be work done in Québec. There are going to be thousands of jobs created in Québec shipyards as they construct modules there. There are going to be hundreds of jobs in engineering in Alberta and Ontario and right across this mighty nation. Some $5 billion is going to be spent, much of it on goods and services.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Crosbie: This is a national project of which Canadians can be proud!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

Mr. Crosbie: There is not one part of Canada from one end of the country to another that is not going to benefit from our Prime Minister's leadership in carrying out his promises to the voters!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

REFINING OF OIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: We want George! We want George!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member for St. John's West. The Statement of Principles gives no indication that any of the oil is going to be refined in eastern Canada, at Come-By-Chance or any other refinery. Nor do we have any indication that any of it is going to be sold in eastern Canada, let alone Newfoundland itself. In fact a federal official says it will probably be sold on the Atlantic seaboard of the U.S.

Why is it that the Minister cannot at least give us some assurance, in spite of the free trade agreement which he says will not allow us to dictate where the oil is going to wind up, that at least Newfoundland will be able to purchase some of the oil produced on its own territory?

• (1440)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Oh, Mr. Speaker, the inconsistency of it! The first two questioners from the Liberal side say it is all a bluff, it is not going ahead, it is just a statement of principle, there is no legally binding agreement. Then the next questioner gets up to complain that the oil not yet produced is not going to go to Canadian refineries, it is going to go somewhere else in the world. That's inconsistency.

The oil will go to Canadian refineries if we want it to go to Canadian refineries. If someone else will pay more for it, it can go to their refinery.

The Member is right that there is going to be oil. His comrades are wrong, wrong, wrong, just as they were wrong from 1980-84, sitting by, doing nothing while Newfoundland was stabbed in the back.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised the Minister does not know anything about oil because it is obvious his speciality is wind power.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

JURISDICTION OVER RESOURCES

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Government has said it wants Newfoundland to be able to control its own resources. Yet the agreement—or the Statement of Principles, I should say, excuse me—says that the project shall be exempted from any production prorationing or other restrictive programs.

That means that Newfoundland was forced to give up jurisdiction over its own resources so that any contract that may come as a result of a potential or possible agreement will have complete control.

Why did the federal Government force Newfoundland to give up jurisdiction over its own resources while telling it it would have them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, no one was forced to do anything. This was a voluntary agreement. It was Mr. Trudeau's Government, helped by the hon. gentleman opposite, that tried to force Newfoundland, and where did that get them? It got them where they are now, on the other side of the House.

No one is forcing Newfoundland. Newfoundland is going to get, for example, 1,100 direct permanent jobs and 2,426 indirect jobs. In the peak year, 1992-1993, it will create 8,900 jobs in Newfoundland.

Newfoundland now has an unemployment rate of 17 per cent. That is why the Prime Minister has been so supportive in this project which he has carried out in accordance with the Atlantic Accord. Our Prime Minister was described by Shakespeare in Measure for Measure. "He was ever precise in promise-keeping."

Mr. Tobin: "Oh, what a tangled web we weave,
When first we practise to deceive!"

Mr. Crosbie: You've had it, you've had it.

Mr. Tobin: We'll see about that. I'll meet you in Corner Brook. I am waiting for you, Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: Bring out the stretchers.

Mr. Speaker: I am reminded of what Burns said:

Oh wad some Power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as ithers see us!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CONTINENTAL CONTENT RULE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Member for St. John's West, the Minister responsible for International Trade and the champion of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: John Dingell, the representative of that automobile manufacturing State of Michigan and Chairman of the United States House of Representatives Committee on Energy and Commerce states that his bottom line with respect to the free trade agreement is that there must be a 60 per cent North American content rule. Many automobile makers in this country support that proposition.

If automobile producers on both sides of the border support a 60 per cent continental content rule, why do we have to wait till next year or "sometime maybe"? Why can we not make that amendment to this agreement now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is the first intelligent question we have heard in this Question Period.

Mr. Boudria: That's more than we can say for the answers.

Mr. Crosbie: The free trade agreement rule of origin requires that at least 50 per cent of the direct costs of manufacturing be incurred in Canada or the U.S. That is a more demanding rule than is presently in effect. At the present there is included in that calculation overhead, advertising, and administrative expenses. Under the new rule none of those categories are included.

Therefore, the rule of origin now requiring 50 per cent is equal to at least 60 to 70 per cent of the cost under the present rules. Therefore, we have made quite a stride forward already under the free trade agreement.

Finally, when this was discussed with the Americans they would only agree to do this if certain provisions for the enforcement of the rule were weakened, which would have made it very difficult to enforce the content rule. Therefore, there was no satisfactory agreement arrived at with them. We have the 50 per cent, but our 50 per cent is equal to 60 or 70 per cent today. I trust the honourable "sleekit beasties" opposite understand that.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

DOCUMENTARY ANALYSIS OF ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have here a copy of a document prepared for AECL by the Ridley Research group of Toronto. They targeted some 20 environmental groups for surveillance, shadowed these groups, and did research on them.

Did the Minister approve this investigation? If he did, why did he approve it? If he did not approve this, what action is he taking to discipline AECL?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was informed of yesterday's statement this morning and I asked AECL officials to explain the situation. I was told, first, that this was public information quoted from articles in Canadian newspapers and magazines; second, that AECL had no plans whatsoever to create any group to organize the phoney promotion of environment positions. The House and the Hon. Member particularly can be assured I will give this matter due consideration. It is important and I will meet personally with AECL management to make sure that Crown corporation's behaviour towards Canadians is above reproach.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, in this document there was some reference made to personal conversations between some of the people who were investigated, which was probably not culled from newspaper articles. At two o'clock this afternoon Mr. Ian Munford told one of our staff that they had filing cabinets full of documents on these groups.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Since those environment groups asked for a public inquiry on that issue, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister is now prepared to order that inquiry and make public all the information concerning that matter?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House I take this question most seriously, and I must first meet with AECL management before committing myself publicly to the position the Hon. Member is suggesting.

FISHERIES

HIGHLAND FISHERIES PLANT IN GLACE BAY, N.S.—LAY-OFFS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday the Minister told the House that Clearwater Fine Foods received additional enterprise allocations for vessels between 65 and 100 feet. He stated further in Hansard:

> —Clearwater is not willing to continue to employ these workers, notwithstanding the fact that there are fish available to Clearwater's plant if Clearwater chose to go out and catch them.

Would the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans explain to the House and the 310 workers affected at Highland Fisheries in Glace Bay what he meant by that statement? Will he also explain why he refuses to grant an enterprise allocation to that particular plant for boats 65 feet or less in Glace Bay?

The workers wish to know the facts. The community wishes to know the facts surrounding this most difficult situation.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I certainly share the concern being expressed by the workers of the Highland Fisheries plant.

• (1450)

We have received representation from Clearwater Fine Foods seeking additional allocations to maintain supply to this plant. The Hon. Member knows that the enterprise allocations are dispersed each autumn and according to criteria of fairness to ensure that all plants receive adequate supply within the limits of available quotas. That process has been followed in this case.

The company in question has several thousand tonnes of quotas available. In 4VN, for example, there are 4,000 tonnes of inshore groundfish; 4VSW, 7,800.

The offshore enterprise allocations of June 18 left 2,100 tonnes of groundfish for Clearwater and 750 tonnes of groundfish for the 65 to 100-foot category.

In a nutshell, there are ample quotas available to this company. The fact is that the four vessels originally based at the Highland Fisheries plant have been moved to southwestern Nova Scotia by the company and are catching fish in that area and delivering them to the Port La Tour plant as a matter of corporate policy.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for outlining those facts for Members of the House, the workers, and indeed the community at large. However, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans knows only too well that his Government has assisted Clearwater Fine Foods on a number of proposals to the Government of Canada. It has provided a great deal of funding for the modernization and building of a new fish plant at Highlands in Glace Bay, thereby helping the corporate sector.

Will the Minister not now intervene on behalf of those 310 workers at the fish plant in Glace Bay and order the senior management of Clearwater to come to his office with a proposal which is both sound and realistic, and order them to put that plant into full operation? In view of the fact that the Government of Canada has spent money at that plant and has given money to this multinational corporation, will he not now do that for the workers affected?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, of course the Hon. Member is referring to the unfortunate fire that devastated the Glace Bay plant some three years ago, which led to assistance by this Government to reconstruct that plant prior to its acquisition by Clearwater Fine Foods last year.

I would expect that the management of Clearwater Fine Foods, who have received many allocations in other species, particularly in the area of special allocations in shrimp and offshore clams, et cetera, would live up to their obligation to keep that plant open and keep these employees working. I will convey such a representation to the company.

HOUSING

MORTGAGE INTEREST RATES—USE OF CROWN LANDS IN TORONTO

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will know that the major banks in Canada have increased their mortgage rates on five-year mortgages to 11.75 per cent, which will make it even more difficult for people in areas like Toronto to get into the housing market. What steps is the Government taking to control mortgage rates? Second, what steps has the Government taken to free up either unused or under-utilized Crown lands in the city of Toronto for the construction of affordable housing?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. In order to control mortgage rates the Government is making sure that inflation does not get carried away. The inflation rate outside of energy and food has been 4.8 per cent in the last five months. This high rate is a problem. We want to avoid the 22 per cent interest rates we had in 1982. We want to avoid the situation that Canadians faced in 1981 and 1982. We want a moderate monetary policy and that is what we are pursuing.

CN LANDS

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that an annual income of some $98,475 is required to get a house selling on the market now for about $230,000. He knows that last week the City of Toronto made a proposal to build affordable housing in the downtown market area, and that some of those properties are owned by the federal Government through CN.

Is the Government talking to CN to make sure that those properties are handed over to the City of Toronto at a reasonable price or at no cost at all, in order to build that kind of affordable housing that is being proposed by the City of Toronto?

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there is probably nowhere in Canada where growth and prosperity are more noticeable than in the city of Toronto. Certainly this has had an effect on the housing market there.

The Minister is well aware of the concerns of the Hon. Member and has already met with the Minister of Housing for the Province of Ontario. They have looked at available options and are evaluating the situation.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—LIMOUSINE SERVICE PERMITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the disastrous and chaotic situation with limousine service at Pearson International Airport in Toronto.

A few days ago the Minister's officials issued 35 new permits to five existing companies without tender and without advertising. The Minister knows that the total street value of these permits is over $4 million.

Why did he issue these 35 new permits without tender, without advertising? Can he explain why individuals were not allowed to tender or bid for these permits? Will he explain to the people of Toronto what the pay-off was?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that is the same type of question that Hon. Member asks in the House, in which he hints at something without having any proof. Everyone knows that in Toronto presently it is very difficult at Lester B. Pearson Airport. Indeed, on an urgent basis we issued 35 new permits to the existing companies. At the same time, however, I can assure the House that we have already advertised in The Toronto Sun, The Toronto Star and The Globe and Mail 35 new permits that will be tendered next fall.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVOKE NEW PERMITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made the situation worse at Pearson International. I do not think he realizes that he has given these five companies a windfall of over $4 million.

Will the Minister revoke these 35 permits and issue all permits on a tendering basis? Will he allow for a fair system so that all individuals and companies will be able to bid fairly for these lucrative permits at Pearson International Airport in order to ensure that the travelling public is better served?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member is trying to hint at something when he knows that there are some conditions to those 35 new permits. I hope he knows that, otherwise he should not ask the question. Those conditions will guarantee, for example, that a permit cannot be transferred for any kind of reimbursement.

I repeat, in the fall 35 new permits will be issued by tender. It is quite possible that with Terminal 3 we will do the same operation next spring or fall. First we have to give the best service to people in Toronto. That is exactly what we are doing.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT APPOINT DIPLOMATIC REPRESENTATIVE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Today marks the ninth anniversary of the Sandanista revolution in Nicaragua. For some nine years Canada has not had any diplomatic representation in Nicaragua.

Given the unfortunate deterioration of events in Nicaragua recently between the United States and the Sandanista Government, and given the recommendation of the special committee on the peace process in Central America to establish at least a chargé d'affaires if not a full ambassador in Managua, is the Government prepared to act on that recommendation and move toward placing someone in Managua on behalf of Canada?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his question, and himself and other members of the committee for their work. At this stage I can only report that we are considering the recommendations of the committee of the House that travelled to Central America and I cannot give him today the assurance he seeks today.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this kind of action would be forthcoming very soon. The Government appears to have moved expeditiously to restore relations with Iran. I would hope that in the very near future the Minister would be able to announce that a new relationship has been entered into with Nicaragua.

Given the situation in Nicaragua and the fact that the peace process is in such a fragile state of affairs at this point, making Canadian participation on the ground even more important, could the Minister say when the Government intends to make up its mind? There is an element of urgency to Canadian involvement here.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the report came down a matter of weeks ago. It was welcome. I am considering its recommendations and we will act on some of them as quickly as we can.

I think the Hon. Member would agree that, important as it might be to have an enlarged permanent diplomatic presence there, it is also very important for us to try to do everything we can to ensure there is some new life injected into the peace proposal in that region.

FISHERIES

GEORGIA STRAIT CHINOOK FISHERY

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is aware that the Georgia Strait Chinook fishery is important to the British Columbia economy. He is also aware of the declining number of Chinook available to fishermen. With the reluctant co-operation of the sports fishing community, he has acted to save those Chinook by implementing a tagging program, spot closures, and size restrictions. Now the Minister has received a recommendation that his Department initiate a policy of non-retention. In other words, fishermen can have all the fish they can't catch. Surely the Minister has no intention of bringing in catch and release regulations on Georgia Strait Chinook?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I cannot give the Hon. Member that assurance at this time. As the Hon. Member knows, the Chinook stocks in the lower Georgia Strait rivers have declined drastically over the past 20 to 25 years to a level of some 4,000 fish returning to these rivers last year as compared to over 30,000 in the mid-1950s. Our scientists tell us that these stocks are threatened with extinction if we do not take strong management initiatives, and we have asked all sectors to absorb a 20 per cent cut in their harvest this year of these important and magnificent Chinook stocks, compared with last year.

We have, therefore, introduced a minimum size limit of 24 inches, so that we already have a non-retention fishery for Chinook smaller than 24 inches. I will be looking carefully at the catch rates and the strength of this stock as we approach the autumn months before making any decision as to whether or not a non-retention fishery might become necessary later in the year.

Mr. Speaker: The final question will be from the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. This morning the Rawson Academy of Aquatic Science, a non-partisan, independent association of scientists and professionals, made a very thorough, comprehensive and scientific case that fresh water is in fact included in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It said that the agreement gives the United States substantial rights to our water not given under GATT, and that the dire consequences will only be known in years to come.

Considering the warming of our planet due to the greenhouse effect and the growing shortage of water, and considering the fact that the Government says it is opposed to the export of water, why does the Minister not make this thing absolutely clear by amending the agreement so that there is a provision that fresh water will not be covered by the agreement? Why will he not agree to that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there appear to be different opinions on this matter because I can refer the hon. gentleman to a study done by Mr. Frank Stone of the Institute for Research on Public Policy, a well known, respected and independent group. Mr. Stone is the author of "Canada, the GATT and the International Trade System". He has had a long career in the Department of External Affairs. He represented Canada at the GATT and represented us in negotiations on the Canada-U.S. Agreement on Great Lakes Water Quality. I will quote what he said:

> The free trade agreement . . . has nothing at all to do with the diversion or inter-basin transfer of water.

Furthermore, he said:

> Water diversions have never been discussed in the GATT and any suggestion that GATT covers water diversions or inter-basin transfers would be hooted down in Geneva by the GATT member countries.

So, Mr. Speaker, let me repeat, large scale water projects are not part of the FTA. There is nothing that forces Canada to sell water or build pipelines or canals to divert water and, as was said earlier in this House, this is the hon. gentleman's red herring.

Mr. Allmand: Make it clear, John. Don't leave it to chance.

BROADCASTING ACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be speaking in this debate this afternoon. I say that because what we are doing is moving steadily forward on a process which was begun some three years ago with the establishment of a task force to review the broadcasting system of this country, the Caplan-Sauvageau task force. There were then many weeks and months of detailed study by the parliamentary Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, with the intervention of many individuals and organizations all across the country to bring to fruition a new Broadcasting Act for Canada.

When this broadcasting Bill received first reading just a few weeks ago, I stated at that time that it contained vital measures which would affect for many years what Canadians viewed on their television screens and listened to on their radios.

Broadcasting, without question, is the most pervasive cultural medium in the country. That is why I am convinced that Bill C-136, the new Broadcasting Act, is far more than just a set of business criteria governing an industry. It goes to the very heart of our culture and of our country.

[Translation]

I am pleased to have an opportunity to tell my colleagues in the House how important this Bill is. I will be telling them why I think it ought to be passed quickly.

[English]

Clause 3 of the Bill is, of course, the key article and is fundamental to understanding the thrust of Bill C-136. It is a statement of principles. It states clearly that radio frequencies are public property and that broadcasting is a public service "essential to the maintenance and enhancement of national identity and cultural sovereignty", irrespective of the method of transmission. The broadcasting system, as stated in Clause 3, should serve to "safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada". These statements, and the redefinitions of broadcasting terms, represent a recasting of the regulatory landscape to reflect the dynamics of modern Canadian society.

The influence of broadcasting is known to all Members. The power of radio and television to inform, to sell, to mold opinions, to create personalities, to provide people from coast to coast with a shared experience is enormous. It is unparalleled.

While this Bill seeks to carry the broadcasting industry into the 21st century, it also recognizes the central role that it plays in the lives of most Canadians. For example, in just one week a typical Canadian listens to between 18 hours and 24 hours of radio and 24 hours of television. It is therefore fundamentally important to our political and our cultural sovereignty that our broadcasting system be an accurate reflection of who we as Canadians are, how we behave and how we view the world.

In addition to these social considerations, there are other external pressures threatening the broadcasting system, pressures endangering the ability of our broadcasters to remain competitive and to explore new ways of contributing to the choices of programming that are available and must be available to all Canadians.

As you know, Sir, the existing Broadcasting Act was passed in 1968—20 years ago. It is based on one technology, the technology of over-the-air broadcasting transmitters. New technologies, ones which do not use this spectrum, are increasingly making obsolete current definitions of what constitutes broadcasting as written into the 1968 Act. New technologies have emerged which are not included or defined in that piece of legislation and are therefore making that Act increasingly obsolete.

Existing technologies, ones which have come into being in more recent years such as cable and satellite dishes, do not fit easily into the 1968 Act. We have had to turn to the courts again and again to determine whether they fall within the jurisdiction of existing broadcasting legislation.

[Translation]

The courts confirmed that the 1968 legislation applied in certain cases but not in others. Every time the scope of these definitions gets narrower the Government loses some of its ability to set the socio-cultural aims of broadcasting on behalf of all Canadians.

[English]

We face the challenge of drafting legislation that can deal with the technology of today, as well as the technology of tomorrow. Our solution is not to add to existing definitions; it is to allow broadcasting technology to evolve by freeing it of legislation that defines the medium of technology.

The approach of Bill C-136 is to be technology-neutral. Broadcasting is defined by content, not by the way it is received by the audience. The signal is not the key. What the signal carries is the important factor.

This technology-neutral approach means that distribution systems can use the technology of their choice. It also ensures that Bill C-136 will keep its legal foundation in the face of future technological development, something which is very critical if the institutions that govern the broadcasting system are not to have their power eroded.

There are increasing societal pressures which demand attention as well. Since 1968 our society has evolved and has changed in many areas. For instance, there is now the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the changing role of women, Meech Lake, the recognition of distinct French and English-speaking societies, the growing awareness of our multicultural diversity, the recognition of aboriginal claims and rights—all these developments are changing how we approach broadcasting and what is expected of the medium. The pressure for legislation which recognizes this evolving reality is growing upon us every day.

[Translation]

The particular context of English and French broadcasting commands our attention as well.

The presence of two official languages is more than a simple constitutional reality, it is a fact throughout our broadcasting networks. Bill C-136 explicitly acknowledges the existence of our two official languages as well as the fact that the economic and cultural reality is not the same for English and French broadcasters, that their requirements may differ.

The Bill stipulates that the programming provided by the CBC should reflect the different needs and circumstances of each official language community, including the particular needs of English and French linguistic minorities.

The CRTC must apply these regulations with flexibility and take into account the different characteristics of English and French broadcasting. For instance the Bill has a clause concerning the establishment of a wide array of English and French broadcasting services throughout the country. With this clause the CRTC will be in a position to require that more French services be made available to francophones outside Quebec, in addition to those provided by Radio-Canada. This clause also shows that the Government is committed to expand services intended for official language minorities.

[English]

With the rapid progress in broadcast technology Canadians are demanding an ever greater variety of choice. Our broadcasting system provides a truly remarkable range of radio and television signals. There are literally hundreds of radio signals in the country. Cable television carries dozens of channels. The mix includes private and public stations, both in English and in French, as well as Canadian and foreign programming.

However, in their demands for more and better choice, Canadians are sending a message that is loud and clear. It is: "We want access to increased Canadian choice especially in prime time." That is the message. That was the message that I took to the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in February of 1987 when it began studying the Caplan-Sauvageau report.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Government had just received the report of the task force on broadcasting policy, a report which has been referred to many times in this Chamber and elsewhere. This report was referred to the standing committee for examination and for recommendations. The committee studied it in detail over a period of months—indeed, for one year and a half. I said at the time that I first addressed the committee on this subject that I was convinced that the Canadian broadcasting system is the nervous system of our country. It links us together. I told the standing committee at that time that, more than ever, "broadcasting must be seen as a fundamental part of cultural policy."

It was clear then, and it remains clear today, that any initiative must set out the over-all broadcast framework policy, the broad policy under which we must operate, outlining the objectives of the broadcasting system as a whole, as well as the mandate, structure, and powers of both the CRTC and of the CBC.

As I told the standing committee at that time, our ultimate concern must be with the content of programming that is and must be available to Canadians. We must address both the quantity of Canadian programming and its quality if we are to promote viewing acceptance by the public. If we are to have the audiences that we think are vital to Canadian programming we must be sure of the quality of that programming as well as its quantity.

A nation's fictional repertoire is the life-blood of its culture. We must never underestimate the impact of dramatic television programming for, within it, I would say we find the surest expression of our cultural values, of the way we live, as well as our collective memory.

We do indeed share the life experiences of people in other countries. But, as Canadians, we experience them in our own way. We must ensure that we have the opportunity to share this experience with each other, and to appreciate the heritage we enjoy as Canadians—and we must do it, Mr. Speaker, in prime time.

Bill C-136 promotes this imperative. It will strengthen Canadian programming; it will enrich our culture and our national identity; it will permit us to embrace new technologies; it will provide the choices that Canadians expect and want; and it will strengthen Canadian broadcasting.

I would like to make it very clear that this Bill does not seek to limit choice and does not restrict choices. But to ensure that competitive Canadian programming is a central component of an even greater choice of viewing and listening options, the Canadian choices must be there. This means additional Canadian drama and variety must be seen and must be shown in prime-time English television, and also improvements in the production quality of French-language television.

I want to make it very clear that this legislation does not erect barriers against programming that is not Canadian. Canadians now, for the most part, are able to access programming directly from a variety of sources in the United States. What we are talking about here is the encouragement of the production of more Canadian programming by a broadly based approach involving all the players in the broadcasting system. I want to talk about those various players for a brief time, because so often in the past we have considered the players being solely the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We must go beyond that.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is vital in this enterprise. Bill C-136 makes clear the central role of the CBC and, in particular, its responsibility for the provision of Canadian programming. The CBC will serve Canadians by providing a distinctly Canadian viewpoint in its programming, including news, variety, drama, and sports.

The Government believes very strongly that Canadians deserve genuinely Canadian popular choice programming which may be different in emphasis from the offerings that private commercial stations give us. We are giving the CBC the financial means of creating programming aimed at the interests of the Canadian audience. We are increasing the CBC's budget by $35 million a year above and beyond its annual increase for inflation. That $35 million is money that is directed to programming. Of that $35 million, $20 million is targeted to help the CBC meet its goal of 95 per cent Canadian content on prime-time English television. The other $15 million is intended to help Radio-Canada increase the production budgets for French language programs. The CBC will remain what it has always been: the principal vehicle for cultural expression in Canada.

We are also strengthening the accountability of the CBC, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. At the same time, we are guaranteeing the CBC's independence in programming and operations. I want to underline, Mr. Speaker, that the corporation's freedom of expression and its journalistic, artistic, and programming independence is safeguarded for the first time in Bill C-136; it is written into the legislation.

The mandate of the CBC, as contained in this Bill, will mean that the CBC will lead in providing authentically Canadian choices, particularly in popular drama in both official languages. But the programming responsibility is not the CBC's alone. I mentioned the role of all of the players in the broadcasting system, and so I want to make it clear that the responsibility for Canadian programming does not rest solely with the CBC. For the first time private broadcasters have a specified legislated responsibility to contribute as well. The Bill contains a number of new instruments for the regulatory authority so that it will be better equipped to supervise the broadcasting system without excessively intrusive procedures. The new powers that are accorded to the CRTC will make this possible.

It is important to understand that broadcasters do not have the option of not doing, or doing less Canadian programming. That option does not exist for them. They cannot say that they will not do more, or they will do less. That is not an option. We are putting before them the means by which they too as private broadcasters can increase their Canadian content.

This Bill is a new approach. It gives the CRTC the tools to work more closely with private broadcasters so as to increase Canadian programming in vital but under-achieved target areas such as drama. The legislation includes the basis for a performance incentive which encourages individual broadcasters to increase the amount of specifically targeted areas of programming, notably drama, in a way which best responds to their economic capabilities. That is above and beyond the Canadian content that is now expected of them.

We will ask the CRTC to hold hearings on applying the performance incentives and to recommend the best use of the incentives. This innovative new tool will give English language broadcasters in particular an added incentive to invest in quality Canadian programming. It is worth noting that private broadcasters themselves say that quality Canadian programming makes good sense. It distinguishes them from the competition. Canadians have said time and again that they will watch quality Canadian programming. Canadians have shown it. I would say to you that French-speaking Canadians have done so and shown so for decades.

Bill C-136 also provides an Alternative Programming Service to meet needs not fulfilled by existing mass entertainment broadcasters. This service has been discussed in many ways: by the task force, by the parliamentary committee and by advisers to my Department from the industry. This service will provide the kind of programming that does not appear, or only rarely appears, on existing television outlets. A key role of the Alternative Programming Service will be the portrayal of Canada's multicultural nature to Canadians as a whole.

Canada, as you know, does not have a uniform single culture but a diversity of cultures. The Alternative Programming Service mandate will provide all Canadians with a more realistic view of the multicultural realities in all parts of the country, and that is so critically important as the diversity of our country becomes greater and as the strengths and the benefits that that diversity provides become better known. This new service's innovative programming will complement large audience programming, and it will cater to tastes and to interests not provided for by mass producers. The process of establishing the Alternative Programming Service should be completed within two years.

Programs from across the country, regional programs, programs through the multicultural dimension, programs of the performing arts, all these will be part of the new service's specific mandate which is anchored in Bill C-136.

This Bill also recognizes the unique contribution which distribution services are making. While cable is the most common method of distribution, others are emerging. I refer specifically to subscription television, satellite master antenna television, multi-channel, multi-point distribution systems, and satellite direct-to-home, to name but a few of the new distribution systems that now exist.

[Translation]

Bill C-136 acknowledges that cable TV has expanded considerably since the Broadcasting Act became law in 1968, reaching into more than 70 per cent of Canadian households and altering the basic concept of broadcasting.

Time has come to define anew the role of cable TV operators. Are they just like ordinary companies, or should they be expected to play a wider role and shoulder heavier responsibilities in the field of broadcasting?

As it happens, cable TV companies are already actively involved in programming, particularly with respect to French broadcasting.

The Bill acknowledges the fact and provides that program producing distributors open access to non-affiliated services.

[English]

The CRTC is being given the power to mediate disputes between broadcasters and cable distributors. The distributors involved in programming will still be subject to CRTC approval and control, and they will be required to meet the objectives of the broadcasting policy. That is written into Bill C-136. All distributors, whether involved in programming or not, will be required to continue to give Canadian programming a priority.

I would like to comment briefly as well on the way in which this legislation deals with the questions of fairness and access. The past two decades have been marked by a growing awareness of human rights. Canada has repatriated the Constitution and has entrenched within it a Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The accessibility of broadcast media to all Canadians, the way in which broadcasting reflects Canadians to themselves, and the fairness with which it handles different points of view, these are all addressed in this Bill.

This legislation also recognizes the needs of Canadians living outside of urban areas, recognizes the needs of aboriginal peoples, and the special needs of Canadians with physical disabilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The Government has already announced a number of initiatives to bring distribution systems to small communities, communities that are more remote, and as well has undertaken to provide a satellite distribution system for the reading service of the blind.

I return to the need to stop the erosion of the institutions to regulate and direct the broadcasting system, because that is what has been happening in recent years.

Bill C-136 therefore does not base its definition of broadcasting in technology, but takes a technology-neutral approach.

The major participants in broadcasting can therefore expand and change with the most effective, the most profitable, technologies that they can utilize. Bill C-136 opens the door. It does not limit technologies in the way in which they can be employed, in delivering broadcasting services across the country.

Because it is not solely rooted in technology, the federal Government's ability to exercise its jurisdiction will again be firmly established and will not be challenged as technologies continue to change.

In summary, let me recapitulate why Bill C-136 is vital for this country. It establishes primacy for Canadian programming. It reflects the linguistic duality and the differences in English and in French broadcasting. It ensures that Canadian culture, Canadian tastes and society are reflected in programming and in operations. It provides all Canadians with access to a wide range of radio and television signals. It is technology-neutral and able to accommodate technological changes. It provides for an efficient and responsive CBC and CRTC.

[Translation]

With this Bill the Governement wants to promote our national culture and identity.

[English]

I want to say that I am very proud of this Bill. It has come about as the result of the work of a large number of people. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Cabinet, the members of the standing committee who worked for so many months, the Caplan-Sauvageau task force and all its members, the many Canadians who have appeared to express their views, individually and collectively, as organizations, have all had a major input into this piece of legislation.

I may say that no piece of legislation will ever satisfy everyone, in all of its details, but I am pleased with the initial response—whether it is from people in the media or organizations or groups across the country—to the way in which we are moving on this Bill. I am sure that it has been a collective effort and one in which I think the House can take a lot of pride. The Bill itself, I believe, will ensure the existence of a vibrant and dynamic Canadian broadcasting industry well into the 21st century. It will as well foster a cultural identity that is distinctively and uniquely Canadian. I am sure that that is what we all are seeking to attain.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could I get unanimous consent to ask the Minister a question?

Miss MacDonald: That is fine with me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As unanimous consent has not been granted, we will resume debate. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): I have the sense that the Minister was prepared to answer, Mr. Speaker.

Miss MacDonald: Yes.

Mrs. Finestone: I am quite pleased to rise to speak to this Bill. I acknowledge to the Minister that this has been a tour de force. There have been inputs from large sectors of Canadian society to the Bill itself. These people have not as yet had the opportunity to examine the actual Bill which, as I am sure the Minister will agree, was only tabled a couple of weeks ago.

The Minister should receive a medal for the star performance which I accord her for getting this Bill through Cabinet and for getting permission to have it on the docket at this fast rate. In that regard I think we are all quite pleased to see this Bill coming to the point of its natural rotation of every 20 years so we can have a new look at what is happening in this incredibly swiftly evolving and changing telecommunications world in which we live.

That being said, it meets the commitment of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who during his campaign in August, 1984, undertook to see to a new communications legislation which the Minister is now bringing forward in the summer of 1988. I find the timing rather interesting and I would like to comment on that for a moment.

Mr. Boyer: It is prime-time.

Mrs. Finestone: It is prime-time? I wonder whether it is prime-time, Mr. Speaker. This is the summer which is a time when people are out relaxing, not paying much attention to the public agenda. It is interesting to note that the public agenda of those matters, which I believe fundamentally touch the character, the nature and the kind of people we are as Canadians, has been addressed during the summer months. We came back here two summers ago for a criminal issue. Last summer we came back because we were being inundated with refugees and we had to address a new immigration Bill.

Mr. Grisé: Thanks to the Senate we are still here.

Mrs. Finestone: We addressed as well at that time the Meech Lake Bill. This summer we are dealing with free trade and now broadcasting.

Mr. Boyer: All this and more.

Mrs. Finestone: If you look at the implication of what Canada is, who composes Canada, which the immigration and refugee Bills do, and if you talk about Meech Lake and the organization of this country, if you look at free trade and its potential impact on the future organization of this land, and then look at the broadcasting Bill, which as I think the Minister mentioned and which I would like to underscore, is one of the most powerful mediums of communication, education, information that impacts on society, you will note that here we are addressing this issue in the middle of the holiday season when there is very little interest about how we share and communicate with one another. I find this a little sad because we are talking about local, national and international future impacts.

This powerful medium, TV, radio and cinema form that part of our lives, and when you think about it, watching television is the number one leisure activity for Canadians. Canadians spend more than 24 hours each week on average in front of a television set. Each year Canadian children watch almost 1,000 hours of television compared to the 800 hours they spend in school. It is little wonder that they have an interesting perspective on what is Canada and how they will perceive things as they grow into adulthood and hopefully become interested in active political life. How will their thinking evolve with the impact of our public media on their lives and thought processes? Ninety-five percent of Canadians are radio listeners, spending 18 days a week on that activity. Two-thirds of Canadians say watching television is their favourite pastime, and more than 50 per cent of Canadians say that broadcasting is still their principal source of news and information.

I suggest that this Bill, which the Minister, with a degree of pride that is well earned, brings forward today, is one that will have a fundamentally important impact on the sovereignty of this country. That is why it is of great concern to me.

The standing committee tried very hard to remain non-partisan and non-politicized, although we had one unfortunate fall out over All-News. That aside, I think in general we have been of one mind with respect to how we should perceive this very important industry. We have all said that there is nothing wrong with having access to the wider world, notwithstanding the fact that there is an inordinate amount of American programming on our television screens. It is also very critical that Canadians have access to programs and movies, entertainment, information and enlightenment which represent our own cultural values. That is what we are missing. There are so many more hours of American news available which I think could have a very serious impact on us.

In order to remain as non-partisan as possible in this undertaking, I would like to put on record what some of the groups who have been looking at this Bill have to say. I am sure the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) will listen and address these issues and concerns in the legislative committee, but which will be addressed to our standing committee sometime, I hope in the very distant future, but anyway—

Miss MacDonald: Don't say that.

Mrs. Finestone: What has been said in Le Devoir?

[Translation]

. . . in the Saturday July 16, 1988 edition of Le Devoir. The author of this article, Mrs. Esther Désilets, is Director General of the Canadian Institute of Adult Education. What happens to the CBC's mandate? That's the question she asks. And she adds:

> The long-awaited Broadcasting Bill is the culmination of an extensive process of reflection and consultation which the Canadian Institute of Adult Education has followed closely.
> There is reason to be happy, of course, that the Bill recognizes major achievements such as the leading role of the CBC and the public nature of the broadcasting system as a whole. However, the CIAE considers that the Bill has major faults which must be corrected if the present situation is to improve.

[English]

These are the observations where they find some errors or holes in the legislation which they feel need to be addressed.

[Translation]

The first is:

> Political Control over the CRTC
> The Bill proposes major changes concerning the CRTC. While reaffirming the need to put a single independant public agency in charge of regulating and monitoring the system, it does not increase its powers. It increases rather the powers of the Government and the Minister.
> The Bill would enable the Government to issue directions concerning all the CRTC's activities except the granting and renewing of broadcasting licenses. As far as broadcasting licenses are concerned, however, the Government would be able to send back and reverse CRTC decisions. Furthermore, the Government could exempt broadcasters from certain provisions of the Bill.
> Under the Free Trade Agreement, the Governor in Council will also have the power to issue directions to the CRTC as to the implementation and interpretation of the clause dealing with copyrights and integral re-broadcasting of American signals.

Finally, upon request from the Government, the CRTC could require that stations broadcast programs which the same Government feels are urgent in nature and of great significance for the Canadian people. We can foresee already the possible risk of frequencies being used for political partisanship.

The legislation does not provide for any real public consultation mechanisms concerning these directions. The policies and regulations developed by the CRTC have always been scrutinized during public hearings. Well, government orders provide only for very limited consultation mechanisms.

While supporting the principale that our elected representatives and the Government are responsible for developing major broadcasting guidelines, we cannot agree with the proposed political control measures on the broadcasting system. This control is much more political than democratic in nature.

Private broadcasters.

It should be recognized, however, that some recommendations in the Bill will reinforce the power of the CRTC over private corporations. Private corporations will have to respect more CRTC's regulations and decisions, as a result of to the explicit power given to the commission to issue licensees with binding orders. The Commission will also be empowered to levy a performance fee for broadcasting certain types of Canadian programs. It is to be hoped that these new measures will prove efficient.

Finally we note that the real monitoring power of the CRTC will not be reinforced by an extension from five to seven years of the licence renewal period. In this area, we would prefer, as suggested by the CPCC, that the CRTC should issue more frequently license renewals of less than five-year duration.

A Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with a different vocation? The vital importance of the CBC is clearly reaffirmed in this Bill. Moreover, this recognition is reinforced by supplementary budgets. That is the most interesting aspect of the new policy.

We wonder however about the proposals which might alter the CBC's vocation. When we compare the clauses in this Bill with those in the 1968 legislation, we realize that such a possibility exists.

According to the current legislation, the CBC should be "a balanced service of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes covering the whole range of programming in fair proportion".

According to Clause, 3(1)(m) of this Bill, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as the national broadcaster, should provide radio and television services incorporating a wide range of information and entertainment programming that is predominantly and distinctly Canadian.

What will happen to the CBC's mandate concerning the broadcasting of programs for people of different ages, sexes, cultures and tastes? It is stated further that in the evening, during prime time, CBC will offer Canadian programs which are likely to appeal to the widest audience and that such an effort is necessary to justify the subsidies granted by Parliament and obtain the advertising money it needs.

● (1550)

[English]

There is the mass audience appeal as opposed to the "large" appeal that CBC had before.

[Translation]

There is ample reference to TV dramas, as if that was the essential part of TV programming. What about news, public affairs, cultural programs? Is the CBC recognized a specific role in those areas?

A reading of the proposals suggests that the only aspect that would set CBC's programming apart from private sector programming would be the quantity of Canadian productions as compared to American productions.

It goes on to say:

In the area of news and programs to satisfy more diversified tastes and smaller audiences, they proposed alternative programming. Although in the legislation there is reference to alternative services in French and in English, in fact one English language service only is in play, the French speaking public having to be content with TV 5 and existing services.

What is the next question?

French language television.

The recognition of the specific nature of French-language TV is a welcome fact. But what is behind that principle? On closer look, the proposals would rather seem to increase the imbalance between services offered in French and in English. Although new English services are proposed, when it comes to French services the only proposal is for improvements to existing ones.

The policy declaration is based on the fact that French-speaking audiences already are getting from Radio-Canada and Radio-Québec a programming that meets its tastes and special interests, and that soon TV 5 will be added to those services, while such needs are not covered on the English side, whence the proposal for an English-language alternative service.

It may not be warranted to multiply French language programming services because of the limited size of the French-speaking market. However, there should be an attempt at assessing the impact on the development of French-speaking culture of the lack of new programming services in such strategic areas as news and culture.

Currently, the specific needs for specialized broadcasts of a major part of the French-speaking population are no more covered than those of the English-speaking public. Radio-Québec, in the evening, increasingly tends to target the larger audience. TV 5's future programming will not either meet the requirements for alternative programmings services proposed in the legislation.

Measures to improve the quality of French-speaking programming will not have such a significant impact as is being implied. Of course, a $15 million budget increase over the next two years is an improvement. But, in view of the current imbalance—in the order of 50 per cent—between French and English-language production budgets, this measure seems to provide for a catching up rather than for real development.

In order to increase Canadian programming, the statement suggests incentive bonuses. These bonuses will have practically no impact on the French programs produced by the private sector . . .

. . . and I can even add on the English programs as well.

The performance incentives will be determined by the number of drama and variety shows produced by private broadcasters. But, since the French private broadcasters already transmit more than five hours of drama shows a week, which is more than the suggested minimum, they will not benefit from this incentive.

Only the additional credits granted to Telefilm Canada for French productions will in fact benefit the French language television community. It's clearly insufficient. Democracy not at stake

And then, she adds:

> This Bill is leaving unresolved some major problems related to the whole issue surrounding the control and the democratic access to the broadcasting system. As far as broadcast time for regional communities, various social groups and women organisations is concerned, the Bill suggests no real measures. It also avoids talking about the concentration of media ownership, offering no solution to the problem relating to the joint onwership of distribution and programming undertakings. Also, no specific recommendations apply to community broadcasting.
> This Bill respecting broadcasting, as presented, is unacceptable. Some serious deficiencies will have to be corrected if we are to improve the broadcasting system and allow it to develop in conformity with the relevant social and cultural objectives. The Government has to provide for the creation of a parliamentary committee to study this Bill.

[English]

I think that is one of the best summaries of the concerns. I recall raising many of those concerns at the press conference following the deposition of the Bill by the Minister.

• (1600)

Mr. Boyer: What does the Liberal Party think about the Bill?

Mrs. Finestone: I said at the very outset what the Liberal Party thinks about the Bill. I suggest that my hon. colleague not worry; he will hear in parliamentary committee what we think about this Bill. I have already made my point of view known.

The Canadian Conference of the Arts has some concern about cabinet power of direction. Paul Siren, President of the CCA, expressed some unease with regard to the Cabinet's seemingly unlimited power of direction over the CRTC while maintaining the Government's power to set aside or refer decisions back to the commission. He said that either of these measures would have been sufficient safeguards but that both would give the Government undue control over the arm's length regulator.

We in the committee did not necessarily agree with that point of view, but I would advise the Minister that there are important and substantive groups which see problems other than those the committee indicated.

With respect to alternative programming, the Canadian Conference of the Arts was also disappointed with the estimated two-year delay in the setting up of an alternative programming service. Other concerns include the provisions to allow cable operators to become programmers and broadcasters. The lack of consideration for regional production and programming needs is underscored as well as the state of the CBC all-news channel. These are serious concerns which they intend to bring to our attention in the parliamentary committee.

With regard to the CBC, ACTRA said:

> The extra money that will be phased in hardly makes up for the millions the CBC has lost in cut-backs. And while the CBC is expected to fulfil a wide mandate, the money to go forward just isn't there. In short, this part of the announcement doesn't exactly make my socks roll up and down. The CBC's parliamentary appropriation for 1988-89 is $119.6 million less than the appropriation for 1984-85 in constant dollar terms.

With respect to alternative programming, ACTRA said:

> It deserves scrutiny, because unfortunately it may contain some pitfalls. The notion that Canada needs another outlet for Canadian production, particularly of the kind that has no current access to the broadcasting system, is a good one. But, if the mandate of the service is too narrow, and the funding insufficient, it risks becoming a ghettoized service ignored by the viewers. If implemented to genuinely serve Canadians equally, it may prove a success.

With respect to cable companies, ACTRA said:

> Cable should not be in production because there are too many possibilities for unfair corporate concentration. We've maintained that separating programmers from cable distributors provides for a much healthier climate. It's a shame the Government doesn't see it that way.

With respect to the Minister's discussion about the Canadian Charter and equality opportunities for both women and minorities, allow me to bring to the Minister's attention that Media Watch has been following this new Broadcasting Act and is concerned about serious omissions.

The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture supported a number of the Media Watch representations. It was convinced that special employment equity measures were necessary. The standing committee recommended that the Broadcasting Act include provisions designed to increase significantly the number of women and minority groups at all levels within broadcasting until equitable representation is achieved.

In this new Act, the purpose for which operations and therefore employment may be scrutinized is obscured. The Government claims that it is recognizing human rights in provision 3(1)(c)(iii), but it chose not to define in clear terms that operations and programming come under scrutiny for the purpose of determining whether principles of equality are reflected. The CRTC authority to make real change in terms of employment equity is undermined in this new legislation and women are once again faced with legal and administrative battles which they can ill afford. I would suggest that the same holds true for minority groups. I regret that the CRTC was not given a direct and specific mandate to apply employment equity as part of its responsibility.

We have heard from other groups, and I wish to cite a very interesting observation which was brought to our attention this morning as we were involved with the free trade agreement. It comes from the Stratford Festival Company and is signed by nearly 350 employees at all levels including actors, producers, seamstresses, tailors, cutters, et cetera. They are concerned about the free trade agreement and the specific cultural provision in Article 2005 which exemplifies the kind of sell-out of our national sovereignty which they believe to be taking place. They are particularly concerned about the notwithstanding provision of the agreement. The example they use relates to broadcasting. I hope the Minister will have an adequate answer for this example. They say:

> If a future government were to introduce a broadcasting Bill that specified greater Canadian content—

I know that is what the Minister wants and that is why she has put incentives into the Bill. They continue:

> —U.S. commercial interests could claim loss of revenue (less "Dallas" "Cosby Show" etc. on Canadian TV channels). The U.S. government could assess that loss as $X millions and take "measures of equivalent commercial effect" in, let's say, the Atlantic fisheries. Our Atlantic fishermen would naturally be outraged by the cultural initiative. Canadian would be set against Canadian and of course the new broadcasting Bill would be dropped. U.S. corporate interests would prevail.

They elaborate on this perspective with respect to how measures of equivalent commercial effect can open the door to American corporate intervention and interest. I suggest that these are serious concerns which ought to be addressed.

In terms of aboriginal languages the committee recommended that the new Act recognize the right of Canada's aboriginal peoples to receive service in representative native language where numbers warrant and as public funds become available. We went through a whole presentation on this issue, but in the final analysis the legislation does not assure service in representative native languages. I will save the Minister from all the details of this matter, but I will certainly bring it forward in committee. The Government has failed to act upon the committee's recommendation that the CBC offer services in the aboriginal languages. The National Aboriginal Communications Society has expressed its dismay about the failure of the Government to act on the committee's recommendation.

This legislation does not set limits on foreign broadcasting services in Canada. Recommendation No. 58 was that the Act should be drafted to define the essential role of distribution undertakings, those being cable, as that of distributing Canadian radio and television services in English and in French, both public and private, with first priority given to public sector Canadian services, followed by private Canadian services with the exception of the "three plus one" services already carried.

The Bill should make provision for the carriage of foreign radio and television services only when the programming they provide is complementary to that available from licensed Canadian broadcasters and network operators. The Bill should also provide for priority to be given to the carriage of services in French in distribution undertakings that serve primarily Francophone subscribers.

I see nothing in the Bill that will enforce the provisions found in Recommendation No. 58. In fact, there is great disappointment about tiering and the amount of carriage of non-Canadian services that will be allowed on extended basic cable according to the Government's Bill. The Minister will recall that our standing committee recommended limits on those foreign broadcasting services in Canada. The Government claimed that this would unduly restrict the access of Canadians to a range of international broadcasting services and that its purpose was simply to encourage more high quality Canadian shows.

I suggest The Toronto Star sums up that response in a very significant and succinct way when it said: "Do statements like that mean Ottawa has declawed its broadcast policies in the same way it weakened its film distribution Bill to overcome American objections?" Did Jack Valenti write the script for this performance as well?

Let us consider vertical integration of distribution undertakings. The committee stated the following in Recommendation No. 51:

> The Act should provide that no distribution undertaking may have an ownership interest in, or be in common ownership with, a pay television, specialty or any other network programming service distributed on such undertaking on the basis of a contractual relationship between the licensed network and the distribution undertaking, or where the consent of the network or the distribution undertaking is required for carriage.

There was very serious and long debate about this area and how it should be addressed. The Government decided on inaction on vertical integration. It chose not to preclude distribution undertakings from participating in programming and from participating as broadcasters. The Minister has rejected our recommendation, our recommendation in the committee's sixth report, in its policy report, and the recommendation in the Caplan-Sauvageau report that they not be allowed to be programmers and vice versa. There is an inherent conflict of interest. I hope the Minister will be open minded in addressing this issue in the committee.

I have had much comment on the legislation that weakens the CBC's regional programming role and lacks definition of the community sector. We have made it quite clear that the broadcasting industry should address the private, the public and the community sector. I know the Minister responds by saying it is covered under local broadcasting, but it is not defined who is responsible or how the community sector will be financed and by whom.

Our Recommendations Nos. 22 and 23 suggest that the Canadian broadcasting system should play an active role in stimulating a Canadian consciousness and should serve the special needs of each geographic region in both official language groups by contributing actively to the exchange of information and expression among the regions and between French and English speaking Canadians. The system should acquaint all Canadians with the traditions, values, practices, and aspirations of each region of Canada. I have said that there should be a footprint in both French and English right across this land as part of the fundamental characteristics of this land.

Recommendation No. 23 was that the Canadian broadcasting system should encourage the development of Canadian expression, providing a wide range of programming that reflects Canadian attitudes, opinions, ideas, values, and artistic creativity; displaying Canadian talent in entertainment programming; and offering information and analysis concerning Canada and other countries from a Canadian point of view.

I suggest to the Minister that by changing the mandate and description of the responsibility of the CBC that particular responsibility has essentially been emasculated. The legislation states: "It is hereby declared as the broadcasting policy for Canada that the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive, providing a balance of information, enlightenment and entertainment". The Government has removed "enlightenment" from the CBC's mandate, which is a serious responsibility. The Bill states that the system should reflect the regions rather than that each region should have a role.

As a result of the Government's cuts, CBC's service to the regions has been reduced by 28 per cent. Even the increase of $35 million a year to the CBC will do little to those Tory cuts.

Bill C-136 has weakened the CBC's regional programming role even more. The 1968 Act required the CBC to serve the special needs of geographic regions. Now the Conservatives only want the CBC to reflect Canada and its regions to national and regional audiences. That is a significant difference in responsibility and operation.

Other groups who have spoken to me are very concerned about the policy that fails to ensure a distinction between a made-in-Canada program and Canadian programs made in Canada. There is a very significant difference. The program Night Heat is an example. It is part of a move toward a North American broadcasting system about which we must be very careful as we analyze the impact of this Bill.

The requirement that individual broadcasters provide programming that is predominantly Canadian in character is proposed to be changed. As a result, the CRTC would be free to reduce its requirement that broadcasters maintain 50 per cent Canadian content and still be consistent with the new Bill's intent. The CBC description is reduced to distinctive. These descriptions are of fundamental importance. We see the Bill as paving the way for the Canadian broadcasting system to become more Americanized than we had anticipated.

The CBC's mandate has been altered by removing the requirement that its programming contain a balance of information, entertainment and enlightenment. We are left only with information and entertainment. While programs like Ideas, Quirks & Quarks and Arts National on radio and Man Alive and The Nature of Things on television may not attract the large commercial mass audience needed for high ratings and the maximum advertising dollars, it is the kind of programming that has made CBC so unique and highly respected as a broadcaster. The alternative television service is ill-defined.

There are many positive aspects of this Bill. It addresses some areas that needed attention. It was an excellent move to make this Bill technology neutral.

However, there are also issues which makes one wonder about the juxtaposition of the free trade legislation with the broadcasting legislation. I suggest that those considerations will be addressed with great precision under the lens of a microscope.

[Translation]

. . . to study it through a microscope in order to make sure that the goal the Minister is aiming for is reached, as well as the goal our Committee is aiming for, and the goal of each and every group we have heard, and which the Caplan-Sauvageau Committee has heard, which is to increase the Canadian content of television programs throughout the day so that our children will be able in the future to learn who they are and why they are who they are.

• (1620)

With that observation, I look forward to an open-minded approach at the committee hearings that will take into consideration the observations I read today. These are not my observations but the observations of people who looked at this Bill, people who were part and parcel of the input into this Bill and who are generally happy with the Bill, with the exceptions I have brought to the Minister's attention over the course of the last 37 minutes.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as communications and culture critic for the New Democratic Party, I am very pleased to respond to Bill C-136, to the Minister's speech, and to the speech of my colleague, the Member from the Liberal Party. I think the essential problem with Canadian broadcasting is that the public sector is underfunded and the private sector is not doing its job. I can summarize my speech by that line. I think the rest is detail, although important.

Let me say it again. The public sector under this Government is underfunded. That includes the CBC. The private sector, that is all private radio and television stations especially the television stations, is not doing its job. It is not producing quality Canadian programs. The question is: Will this Bill change the situation? I am afraid that the answer is no, it will not change the situation, all rhetoric aside.

As the Minister has said correctly, this Bill is the first major change to the Broadcasting Act since 1968. The necessity for this change is beyond question and the Minister has also said that. First, for technological reasons there needs to be a change. The evolution of distribution and production technology since 1968 has been truly extraordinary. Just as important, however, a new Act and new policy have been made essential by what might be called the crisis in Canadian broadcasting. That crisis has been the subject of numerous commissioned reports. If one stacks them up, they would go from the floor to the ceiling. Two of the reports I hold in my hand, the Caplan-Sauvageau report and the report of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, are two examples. They outlined the contemporary crisis in Canadian broadcasting, and it is not just because of new technology. The Minister mentioned the satellites and cable that we did not have in 1968. It is a crisis in watching, if you like. I would like to give some figures from the Caplan-Sauvageau report.

[Translation]

... page 745. Of the 52,000 hours of English-language television programming provided annually to average Canadians, only 70 hours are Canadian drama, including comedies, films, mini-series, etc. Of the 27,000 hours of French-language television programming available to the average francophone viewer, only 630 are Canadian drama. It means that 98 per cent of all English-language drama programs are of foreign origin. For French-language television, the proportion is 90 per cent, Mr. Speaker; only 28 per cent of all programs offered on English-language television are Canadian. Domestically produced programs do not even account for one third of the time Canadians spend watching English-language television.

Francophone teen-agers spend half their television viewing time watching foreign programs. For anglophone teen-agers, the figure is 80 per cent.

[English]

Eighty per cent of our Anglophone young people spend their hours in front of television watching foreign programs in English and the majority of the time passed by Francophone young people is also spent watching foreign programming. The crisis of Canadian television is not isolated, and I want to quote from the study by the Caplan-Sauvageau task force:

> The reasons for these problems are clear: the public sector, which must be the chief purveyor of quality Canadian programming is inadequately scaled and funded; the private sector which should complement the public sector at least to the extent of contributing to the fulfilment of the social objective of the Broadcasting Act is not contributing enough.

I say also that this crisis, which is documented by the statistics and by the Caplan-Sauvageau report, is not isolated. Canadian television is not isolated in the difficulties we face in developing distinctively Canadian cultural industries. I think the Minister knows this. She is a Canadian nationalist, I believe. She must know that Canadian films represent only 3 per cent of screen time in Canada. Canadian films only take up 3 per cent of our screen time.

Three per cent of film profits stay in Canada. Ninety-seven per cent of profits go outside of Canada. Three per cent of the new video cassette sales are Canadian made. Ninety-seven per cent are foreign made. Our own publishers own only 30 per cent of the Canadian market. Seventy per cent is foreign owned. Seventy-seven per cent of the magazines sold in this country are foreign magazines. Eight-five per cent of the records and tapes sold in this country are foreign. Rick Salutin pointed out: "No other supposedly independent country mirrors this situation". To be a really independent country, it seems to me that we must have as far as it is possible, and in the sense that we live in a global village, an independent Canadian culture. Frank W. Peers, writing in A Canadian Forum Supplement in March 1988, said:

> —one of the tests of nationhood is that more communications take place within a country than between that country and another. Are Canadians governments prepared to recognize the importance of internal communications if the political structure is to be sustained?

I agree that he makes a good point. Doug Fisher, writing in the Toronto Sun—another level of journalism; going from the left to the right here—on June 27, said:

> How do you see that the viewers and listeners have their profusion of choice, even as technology widens it, while ensuring enough of the listening and viewing is Canadian to keep our identities and distinctions?

I think that is a good point and I will come back to it. Of course, a wider number of positive things is happening in Canada's cultural industry—and I do not want to sound too negative—in particular with respect to its broadcasting system, with such films as My American Cousin, Un Zoo La Nuit and television programs such as The Kids of Degrassi Junior High. I said before that that is not a description of an evening cabinet meeting.

One sees what Canadian talent can produce. We have lots of talent in Canada. In animation and documentary work, Radio Canada, the CBC, and the National Film Board have had remarkable achievements. One need only draw attention to the work of Frédéric Back, whose film L'homme qui plantait des arbre won an Oscar this year, to see the kind of programs Canadians can produce when given the opportunity. However, it is a little tragic that in the days following Mr. Back's triumph at the Oscars it was revealed that Radio Canada had been forced to dismantle its animation department because of the Government's fierce assault on the budget of French language broadcasting in this country.

Miss MacDonald: What nonsense. He is going to a new international film board.

Mr. Waddell: I should mention the extraordinary success of CBC Radio both in English and French. In spite of being forced to run on a shoe-string it is gaining audiences yearly from the top 40 competitors.

• (1630)

This morning I listened to the Peter Gzowski program. He did a great interview of the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett).

Miss MacDonald: Do you stay in bed that long?

Mr. Waddell: The Minister asks if I stay in bed that long. This morning I did just to listen to CBC radio and Peter Gzowski.

What is clear at this time is that Canada and its cultural industries need visionary and aggressive policies of expansion.

It is a particular shame that due to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal our ability to engage in such policies will be severely curtailed.

I want to come back to the trade deal because one has to see Bill C-136 in the context of the world around it. Part of the big world around it is the trade deal.

Before leaving this aspect of Canadian culture I want to say that I think we English Canadians do not know how vulnerable we are. I think we cannot wait 20 years for another Broadcasting Act. That is why this Act is so important. In my lifetime we used to have debates, when I was a student, about whether there was a Canadian culture. We meant by that an English Canadian culture. We always felt that there was a French Canadian culture.

There is an English Canadian culture. We have accepted that. We understand it. We know what it is. I do not think that young people today have that debate. There is an English Canadian culture and a French Canadian culture and, above that, a Canadian culture with its multicultural aspects and its native heritage. We know that. The question is: Will we be able to keep that in light of the onslaught of the American empire and its incredible cultural penetration of the Canadian market?

I was told by someone in the Government who is a Francophone, and I will not mention his name, someone who had been in Cabinet: "You Anglophones do not realize that you may lose your whole culture if you do not start now trying to protect it as we in Quebec in the 1960s took measures to protect our culture".

Having outlined the present crisis we face in Canadian broadcasting, I would like to assess what the Government has done over its entire mandate to help or to hinder Canadian broadcasting. I suggest that one cannot look at this new broadcasting policy and at Bill C-136 without putting it into the context of the Government's performance over its mandate.

We have seen the Government over the past four years institute a systematic attack led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the public broadcasting system in Canada. One need only cite the example of the all-news network decision. In that case the CRTC, the federal regulator, awarded the licence to put together an all-news network to the CBC. The CBC had a bid that was vastly superior to its competitor. It was also cheaper to Canadian subscribers.

The Government and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) intervened to sabotage the CBC's bid. What is the result of the Government's policy? The result of the Government's policy—

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has made an accusation that he cannot in fact back up in the House. The licence awarded by the CRTC to the CBC for an all-news station comes into effect on September 1, 1988. The Department of Justice has stated that the appeal period is the 60 days following that. Therefore only then can appeals to the Cabinet be considered.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That sounds a bit like debate.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that right now we do not have an all-news network. The all-news network in Canada is the CNN, Ted Turner's network. We have an American all-news network as a result of the Government's policy in delaying this matter. The real story of the Government's assault on the CBC is found in the vicious budget cuts we have seen over the past four years. I would add that this process started with a previous Liberal Government and has continued. I wish to give Hon. Members the figures.

In 1984-85, the CBC's budget was $905 million. In 1985-86, it was $826 million. In 1986-87, it was $806 million. In 1987-88, it was $789 million. In 1988-89, it will be $775 million.

With respect to this Bill the Minister talked proudly about the new money for the CBC given to it to help it reach its commendable aim of having 95 per cent Canadian content. In fact, the Minister is giving $20 million to the English service and $15 million to the French service. That is great, but that hardly even begins to correct the damage to public broadcasting the Government has done over the past four years. We cannot, as the Minister apparently believes, continue to expect the CBC to produce magic when it is not given the means to fulfil either its present mandate or the mandate that is outlined in the legislation we are discussing today.

What has been the result of the Government's broadcast policy? We have seen the cut-backs in the CBC budget. There has been de facto privatization of the CBC which is consistently being forced to find new money on its own, mostly through commercials, to make up for its shortfalls. Over the past four years the evolution of CBC generated revenue has been as follows. I will give Hon. Members the figures. In 1984-85, the commercial revenue for the CBC was $232 million. In 1985-86, it was $232 million. In 1986-87, it was $251 million. In 1987-88, it was $251 million. In 1988-89, it will be $266 million.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the effects of this Government policy have been especially hard on the CBC's French services.

[English]

We have seen a pattern. It is: cut the CBC budget and increase commercial revenues for the CBC, force it into becoming more like a private station. The way one makes money, as private broadcasters know, is to bring in all the American cop shows and put them on prime time. That is how cash is generated. That has been the change that this Government is forcing on the CBC.

The Minister said in her speech, and I give her credit for it, that the CBC is the nervous system of our country. When we look not at the Minister's rhetoric but rather examine the substance of it, we find that it really does not follow this Bill, the letter or the spirit of either the standing committee's report or the Caplan-Sauvageau report. It was not a New Democrat but rather a Conservative, the chairman of the standing committee on broadcasting, who said that 250 million new dollars annually were needed.

The Minister, in relative terms, is offering crumbs to the CBC. Where, at the very least, is the money that was lost by the CBC as a result of the sledge-hammer cuts of the Minister and her predecessor? When it comes to rhetoric the Minister is fine. When it comes to getting the beef, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has not produced it. It is a sham. That is not just my view, Mr. Speaker. I will give Hon. Members some quotes from people who have looked at this matter. The President of ACTRA, Dale Goldhawk, said on June 24, 1988:

> And while the CBC is expected to fulfil a wide mandate, the money to go forward just isn't there. In short, this part of the announcement doesn't exactly make my socks roll up and down.

The Ottawa Citizen stated:

> But MacDonald's pledge to spend $250 million over four years to enhance the Canadian broadcasting system wouldn't even restore funding to the level it was at when the Tories took power four years ago.
> And the promised spending is only a fraction of the $130 million to $250 million a year that the all-party communications committee said two weeks ago was necessary to improve the broadcasting system.
> MacDonald has obviously won some concessions from a cabinet with a blinding anti-CBC bias. But it didn't buy the basic conclusion of the Caplan-Sauvageau task force . . . the CBC is the heart of Canadian broadcasting and it is seriously underfunded.

Jamie Portman stated on June 23 in an article in The Spectator of Hamilton:

> The government has ignored a recent call from an all-party Commons committee that it show its commitment to better Canadian programming by increasing its support of broadcasting with up to $250 million in fresh funding annually . . . in real dollar terms, the CBC's budget has shrunk by more than $150 million since the Conservatives came to power.

Mr. Portman is a senior Southam reporter in arts and culture.

● (1640)

Those are my major criticisms with respect to the CBC in this Bill. I have some other matters that I would like to raise about the CBC that should be considered in the legislative committee. We were pleased to find in the Bill, and the Minister acknowledged it, that: "The CBC is the principal vehicle for cultural expression in Canada". We were also pleased that some of the recommendations of the standing committee with respect to the distinctiveness of the French language service and the separation of the president and chairman's office have been addressed.

However, I have the following question for the Minister. As I read the Bill, Clause 91 seems to fire the President of CBC, and no doubt that will be clarified in committee. Clause 91 states:

> Every person holding office as a director of the Corporation, other than the President, immediately preceding the coming into force of section 35 shall continue in office—

Goodbye, Mr. Juneau, after that. Perhaps in committee we can examine the difference between the president and how the president is now to be elected by the Board of Directors.

I have some concern, as does my colleague from the Liberal Party, about the word "enlightenment" which has been dropped with reference to the definition section in the Bill. The CBC is expected to become simply a mass audience network with the abandonment of more specialized programming. At the same time, in the Bill the Minister is ignoring the crisis of regional programming in the CBC. On the first point, I would say to the Minister that we need to have a CBC that is capable of having an appeal to a mass audience, while at the same time is able to address more minoritarian interests. To take off the CBC live drama, music, and documentaries, and perhaps programs such as Man Alive, the Minister seems to be making commercial factors the litmus test of what should and should not be on the network.

The real abandonment comes in terms of regional programming. I say to the Minister that we take this very seriously. The standing committee has detailed the problems of regional programming in its report. The CBC has been forced to cut 28 per cent of the resources for regional programming in order to maintain networking programming in recent years. I come from Vancouver and I see what that means to the local CBC, to the actors, the producers, the writers, and the directors. They get laid off.

This Bill reduces the CBC's mandate to meet the distinct needs of the various geographical regions of the country. I do not understand why the Government wants to do this. What we have here is a centralizing of the CBC. If all CBC dramatic programming is to come from Toronto in English and Montreal in French, then this can hardly be called Canadian content totally. The Minister has forgotten that Vancouver, Calgary, Québec City, Halifax, and Chicoutimi have to be involved in this process in order to have a truly and uniquely Canadian CBC.

The role of enlightenment as well as regional multicultural programming falls under the rubric of the new alternative programming network. However, the Minister has not yet secured the funds for this network. We appreciate that she did not get it turned down, but she put it on hold. We still do not have it. Thus we will have to wait for a few more years of study and delay, and the Government has apparently ruled out a CBC role and left it to the CRTC to decide on the structure. This service does not exist and will not exist until some time in the next decade, yet there is a pressing need for the type of programs that I talked about.

Mr. Grisé: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council, on a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt . . .

[English]

I want to inform the House of the proceedings for the rest of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it has been brought to my attention that motion M-163 stands under Private Members' Business in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), but that the Member will not be present and that his motion will be postponed or put at the end of the list of Private Members' Business.

[English]

You will find unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that at five o'clock the House will move to Government Orders with Bill C-139. This Bill will be debated from five o'clock until nine o'clock, at which time you will call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Motion No. 163 was to be moved by the Hon. Member for Athabasca. Normally it would have been debated at five o'clock. If I understand the rules a Member may give notice prior to that that he is not ready to proceed. I understand that the Table Officers received no such notice that the Member was ready to proceed today even though the motion was to be scheduled.

If I understood the Parliamentary Secretary, he wants us to agree to drop this to the bottom of the list. Indeed, what should happen is that the motion itself should be completely dropped from the list. If I understand the rules correctly, since the motion has been called and there is nobody to move it, it should be withdrawn completely from the list of motions and Bills to be proposed to the House by private Members.

If the Parliamentary Secretary is asking for concurrence in his proposal that the motion be dropped to the end of the list, then this is a precedent that is being created. I do not disagree with that, but I want to ensure that we do not do this every time. Members cannot put motions or Bills on the Order Paper, not come into the House, and prejudice other private Members who may have motions or Bills about which they feel strongly and would like to move. We would then be held hostage by somebody who at the last moment does not show up.

There is a stick here which should be applied once in a while to remind Members that they cannot have it both ways. Members have to be present when their motion or Bill is called, otherwise it will be dropped.

Out of respect for the Member, and the fact that the question was put in such a courteous and reasonable fashion, I agree that although we will co-operate today, no precedent has been set.

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I just want to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for his comments and clarifications on the situation before us. I accept his comments.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the House may allow me a few minutes after five o'clock. I was going to finish by five, but if the House will give me a few minutes to wind up I will not abuse it.

I stated that the essential problem with Canadian broadcasting was that the public sector was underfunded. I outlined that in figures and in debate. The second problem was that the private sector was not doing its job. This is probably the weakest part of the Minister's Bill, if I might say so.

In the Bill the Minister proposes to pressure the private network to produce more Canadian programming. This will have, at most, a very modest effect. Private broadcasters are always talking about producing quality Canadian programming, but they show very little interest in providing it. I want to quote from an article in The Vancouver Sun of June 25, 1988. In the article Douglas Sagi quotes Mr. Barry Duggan, Vice-President of CKVU, who stated:

> I question whether Canadians want more Canadian programming. But I agree they certainly want better Canadian programming.

This is a standard line. Ray Peters, President of western BCTV, also questioned whether Canadians want more Canadian programs. He stated:

> I don't think there should be more Canadian programming. I think there should be better Canadian programming and that's why I like the idea of incentives.

That basically summarizes the position of the private sector. The question is: What about the whole idea of this policy thrust? I would like the Minister to pay special attention to this. Robert Fulford, a very distinguished Canadian and writer, has put his finger on it. Mr. Fulford made the point by stating:

> —the ancient bureaucratic axiom that an idea should never be allowed to die just because it doesn't work. In this case the idea is that private broadcasters, licensed by a federal regulator to use the public's airwaves, will spend a substantial part of their revenue on original production.

Mr. Fulford basically said that we were flogging a dead horse here. He further stated:

> —the parliamentary committee on communications and culture delivered one more rebuke to the broadcasters. "Private television," the committee's report said, "has been making an insufficient contribution to achieving the goals of the Broadcasting Act."
> Every royal commission and task force has said the same thing, and each of them—like the parliamentary committee—has then expressed the pious hope that private broadcasters would finally deliver what they promised when they were licensed. Year after year, the broadcasters have declined to do so—

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what the rate of return is for private broadcasters in this country, as set out by the broadcasting committee and not denied by private broadcasters? It averages 50 per cent a year on investment. They are enjoying unprecedented riches, but almost none of this money is going to writers, actors, and film makers. In my view, this Bill is not going to change that.

• (1650)

Private networks have become transmission belts to bring American programs to Canadian viewers with Canadian commercials inserted. The regulators, the CRTC, have not been able to do anything about it over the years. In fact they have become like other regulators an essential part of the business that they are supposed to control.

What is the Government doing to change this matter? It seems that the Government has watered down the requirement in the current Act that private broadcasters be predominantly Canadian—and it has not worked anyway—and has brought in a form of performance incentives.

This is the question I want to put to the Minister, and I was not given unanimous consent to put it. How do these performance incentives work? If you look at it in the face of the Bill, we have fees collected by the Treasury Board if these private networks do not perform with more Canadian content, which they have never done in the past in prime time. This is going to be done in secret. This is a recipe for slush funds, for political interference and for trouble. This is one of the worst parts of the Bill. It is supposedly to attack the worst offender, that is, the private networks especially on television that are using the service just to run American cop shows in Canada, to make a lot of money, and not to put enough of it back into quality Canadian programming. There is the villain.

What are they doing about it? In this Bill the Government is bringing in a very shoddy scheme which is flawed with difficulties in terms of the performance initiatives. I think that we have to look at that issue very deeply in committee.

I want to raise another point and I think the Minister would be interested in it. I want to cover the Bill's reaction to one of the recommendations of the committee with respect to women in minority groups. I will read the recommendation, and I quote:

> The programming carried by the system should provide a balanced representation of Canadian society, reflecting its multicultural and bilingual realities, its aboriginal peoples and the composition of its population with respect to sex, age, race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, and mental or physical handicaps.

What does the Bill say in Part I, Section 3? It says the following:

> 3(1)(a)(iii) strive, through its operations and programming, to reflect the circumstances and aspirations of Canadian men and women, including the linguistic duality and multicultural nature of Canadian society and the special place of aboriginal peoples within that society,

That is not good enough. What the Government said in its reply to the committee about why it could not put in a tough section as the committee recommended was that the goals of commercial expression were to outweigh the goals of government policy toward minority groups and women.

We will still see on television the Italian who is portrayed as greasy, the Newfoundlander who is portrayed as stupid, women who are portrayed as not being important. That kind of continuation of these things will remain on Canadian TV without a tough section. Considering the Minister's record in this matter, she should look at it very carefully.

I see the Minister has arrived, perhaps she did not hear that I was attacking her for the fact that women were very critical of this aspect of the Bill and that that aspect needed strengthening so that the portrayal of women can be different on Canadian television.

With respect to aboriginal communities, I have heard in recent weeks that the Minister's somewhat limited commitment to satellite broadcasting in the North is somewhat less than originally thought. We will be pressing the Government on these proposals. I put it on guard with respect to any weakening of this proposal.

I would like to particularly underline the work of Rosemary Kuptana who is with Television Northern Canada in her proposal. I was co-counsel of the Berger inquiry into the Mackenzie Valley pipeline. In 1974 the CBC, through the vision of the late Andrew Cowan, through the hard work of Whit Fraser, a CBC reporter, and other native reporters, was able to broadcast the hearings in seven languages. That was 1974. We broadcast in English, French, in Dogrib, Slavey, Loucheux, and East and West Arctic Eskimo. That was done. It is amazing what can be done with aboriginal broadcasting in this country. It is amazing what can be done in terms of Canadians from different parts of the country talking to each other. It does not have to be cop shows from L.A. as the basis for Canadian programming.

I want to refer to the trade deal before I close, and why the two matters are so intertwined. Basically the trade deal says that it does not change the status quo. Fine. Then look at the status quo. Three per cent of our film distribution and 80 per cent of our publishing are foreign controlled. We can on down the line. I gave the figures at the beginning of my speech.

What happens if the Minister really wants to change that to enact a nationalistic Canadian policy so that we finally have control of our own airwaves and our own culture? What happens if we want a real progressive policy? Then the other part of the trade deal comes in, the Americans could take equivalent commercial measures, not just in culture but in other aspects like forestry, mining, and so on.

Assume for the moment that you are the Minister of Culture, Mr. Speaker, and that you enact a very progressive policy in which Canadianization is very important and of prime concern. The Americans start retaliating. What do they do? They put tariffs on B.C. lumber or B.C. fish. Then the workers who are out of work come to you and say: "You had better remove that progressive cultural policy".

Do you see how it works, Mr. Speaker? That is the insidious part of the trade deal. The fact is that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will mean that there cannot be any Canadian nationalistic cultural policy. There can only be this tinkering that we see in the present Bill, which is fundamentally changing the rules of the game. That is why the people from the Stratford theatre who recently signed a petition of protest, the actors and actresses, know in their hearts that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal stops the future Canadian Government from really enacting progressive policies with respect to Canadian culture.

I want to end there, because the Bill will go into committee. Marshall McLuhan once said that we lived in a rear-view mirror society. It was like looking in the rear-view mirror in your car, which takes you back to your past. Even though we live in the present we think in the past. Artists, he said, think in the present. They do not live in a rear-view society. We are looking back, it seems to me, in this Bill. We are not looking ahead. The new world means fibreoptics, codable signals on television, and addressable receivers. Nothing has been dealt with in the Bill with respect to that. This is a backward looking Bill, not a forward looking Bill. It is a Bill born in haste, because of the attitude of the Conservatives on pornography, their vicious cut-backs in the CBC, and their general attitude to Canadian cultural agencies and patronage appointments. The Government had to do something, and that is why we are debating this Bill today.

I want to say to the Minister that I am not making those criticisms against her personally. I hold her in the highest of regard. I am sad that she is shackled with such a right wing bunch of Philistines as are in this Government. We have built a unique broadcasting system in Canada. It is unique in that it is ours. It is both public and private. It goes back to many commissions and reports. In the future this new technology will help us. We will have to zero in on choices for Canadians. We do not want to force Canadians to watch Canadian programs. That will not work.

Miss MacDonald: That is exactly what you said earlier.

Mr. Waddell: What we in the NDP offer, which the Government is not offering—and the Liberals have no policy on anything so they are not offering it—is a chance for Canadians to watch quality Canadian programs and for Canadian artists, writers, performers, dancers, and musicians to have those jobs and produce that programming, not only for Canada but for the whole world. To do that there has to be adequate funding for the CBC, including perhaps what Robert Fowler said years ago in his royal commission. He said that we had to give the CBC a long-term plan and assured funding removed from political influence.

First, we have to fund the CBC adequately and make it the main vehicle of public broadcasting. Second, we have to require private broadcasters to do their fair share. I have my doubts whether the system proposed in this Bill will work.

Miss MacDonald: All you have to do is vote against it.

Mr. Waddell: We cannot wait another 20 years. It is ironic that this debate comes on a Tuesday afternoon in the middle of the summer with a few Members in the House. The Minister is here listening to the debate, I acknowledge that. It is almost like the Bill has gone through as just another Bill. Next to the trade deal it is maybe the most important legislation that we deal with. Let us think of where Canadians spend their time and get their knowledge, Mr. Speaker. They get it through modern communications and from watching TV. That is from where we now pick most of our news, our drama, and public affairs. That is what people do in the modern world. That is why this Bill goes to the whole heart of the future of Canada. That is why this Bill is flawed. It still has not solved the essential problem, and that is an underfunded public sector and a private sector that is not doing its job. That has to be changed or Canadian cultural sovereignty will not survive.

Miss MacDonald: Will the NDP vote against it?

Mr. Waddell: You heard me.

Miss MacDonald: Great.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that the debate was now finished and there would be further debate later on. There was not to be just three speakers on the Bill. This was just to start the Bill.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Waddell: That is not the agreement that I gave. We have more speakers. The Hon. Member from Saskatchewan wishes to make comments on the Bill.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is right. It was agreed by the three House Leaders that we would have the first three spokespersons on the Bill and then we would call it five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville satisfied with that?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, we will now proceed to Private Members' Business.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

NATIONAL ALL-NEWS CHANNEL

On the Order: Private Members' Business:

December 11, 1987—Mr. Shields—That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should set aside the decision by the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission (CRTC) to award the national all-news channel to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 39, notice was published of the debate scheduled to take place today on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields). Since the Member is not present to move his motion at this time the motion would, by unanimous consent, be put to the bottom of the order of precedence. Is there unanimous consent to do that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Parliamentary Secretary indicated, debate will resume on Government Orders from now until nine o'clock tonight, and the House will rise at nine o'clock by unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate on Bill C-139.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, and on the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724).

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak on second reading of Bill C-139, a Bill of vital importance to all Canadians and to the economy of this country. As you know, Bill C-139 concerns the tax reform which started in 1984 and was subsequently continued, a reform that will make our tax system more equitable. First, there was thorough planning.

There was consultation, and adjustments were made as required to provide the majority of Canadians with a tax system responsive to their needs, a system that, I would say, for the first time in the history of taxation in Canada, responds both to the economic needs of this country and to the needs of Canadian men and women. It is probably the first time, Mr. Speaker, since the famous war tax of 1917, which was a temporary tax, that Canadians will see an increase on their paycheck in July as result of this reform. Mr. Speaker, about 9.7 million Canadian families will pay less income tax in 1988 and subsequent years. This means that 85 per cent of Canadians will pay an average of $500 or less income tax per year. And that is a first!

This was achieved in a number of ways. First, as you know, over the years we phased out the tax shelters provided under the system, such as tax credits for scientific research which meant that billions of dollars were spent by a few taxpayers, a few companies, while the majority of taxpayers did not benefit. And even worse, the people who should have benefited from this scientific research tax credit, our scientists, never benefited at all. It is time we put an end to the abuse that existed under the previous Liberal Government and which cost Canadians billions of dollars without doing anything for our country, without giving Canada anything worthwhile as far as scientific research was concerned. Now that these funds have come back into the system, today we can consider the kind of tax reform that will benefit all Canadians. And as I was saying, 85 per cent of taxpaying Canadians will see their tax bill go down this year—they already saw that on their pay cheque for the beginning of July.

This was also done by broadening the tax base; as you know, many companies were not paying their fair share of taxes, for various reasons. So companies that were not paying tax will from now on pay their fair share, giving us money that will allow us to reduce Canadians' tax burden.

What is perhaps most important in this whole tax reform is the change we made to the personal exemption and all exemptions, converting them into tax credits. As you know, Mr. Speaker, exemptions are beneficial to high-income individuals and penalize low-income Canadians. This is easy to illustrate: If you earn $100,000 a year and have a personal exemption of $3,000, your tax rate is 50 per cent and you save $1,500. But if you earn $10,000 a year, your tax rate is 20 per cent and with the same $3,000 annual exemption, you save $500 or $600 of tax. By changing this and giving everyone the same $1,000 tax credit for personal exemptions, whether they make $10,000 or $100,000 a year, they all have the same tax advantage. And this is a major reform of our tax system. It makes it an equitable system, fairer for all Canadians. Looking at my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), I am sure that he cannot contradict this. He is familiar enough with the tax system to know that tax credits definitely make our system fairer and more equitable. This same principle will apply to all exemptions that Canadians had before, like the married exemption, etc.

Tax reform also has another purpose, namely to encourage private initiative, to give Canadians more money in their pocket, as we have been saying since 1984, so that they can decide what to do with it. I do not think that it is up to the Government to direct everything that goes on in the daily lives of all Canadians. The more money taxpayers have in their pockets, the more they will be able to spend as they like, or save or invest, spend on recreation, whatever; that will be good for our economy and our country. And it will automatically encourage economic growth and help create jobs. That is how you have to look at tax reform; this is the philosophy for Canada's future to keep in mind.

Our reform will also solve the problem of corporate taxation. Some companies were overtaxed and others paid nothing at all. As I said, those that paid nothing will pay from now on. But those that were overtaxed could not be internationally competitive; again, Mr. Speaker, in running a country, you must not think only of tomorrow, but 5, 10, 11 years ahead. We are 11 years away from 2000. This underscores the importance of the free trade agreement and of the tax reform which will make Canadian companies more competitive on international markets because their tax rates will indeed stand comparison with those of companies in other countries. It is just as important to Canadians who want to work, who have jobs and want to hang on to them, who are eager to make progress and seek to achieve a better quality of life. You know, Mr. Speaker, very often people equate quality of life with environmental considerations. It is true and it is a sound approach. I think in terms of social benefits, it is true and it is a sound approach as well. But quality of life also implies that Canadians have decent incomes which are not reduced by unduly high taxes. There are no incomes without jobs, and there will be jobs only if Canadian companies can make progress and expand on a logical, normal and lasting basis. That is where that tax reform comes in.

Viewed from a different angle, the reform means that 850,000 Canadians will no longer pay income taxes. Low income Canadians will no longer be taxpayers, including 250,000 older men and women who will never again have to file a tax return, if indeed they have no other income to declare.

With respect to older Canadians, the tax reform means that nine out of ten of them will pay less income tax. Mr. Speaker, you can appreciate that the one out of ten who will have to pay more has a much higher income, and it is only normal that he or she contributes to our society just like all other Canadian men an women.

We have maintained the $100,000 capital gains tax exemption, $100,000 which again will make it possible for Canadian taxpayers to invest and earn a fair investment income.

As a rule, as you know, investments create a great many jobs. So we left at $500,000 the capital gain exemption to benefit farmers as well as small and medium sized businesses.

In this country, most jobs are created by small and medium-sized businesses, and I think it is advisable, as well from an economic point of view in terms of the tax reform, to give special attention to those who keep the economy moving and create employment. That is the reason the $500,000 capital gain exemption exists for them.

And the same reform offers the advantage of being an incentive for the private industry. I met last weekend with people with small and medium-sized businesses who told me: we feel it is important for our employees to have a lighter tax burden because we can give them a good pay, and it is equally important that our business should also have a lighter tax burden to keep us competitive on the international market.

Mr. Speaker, the future of Canadian businesses is on the international market. I do not think that as Canadian businessmen, we should rest on our laurels but that we should think of the future. We must realize that we have in Canada some 25 million potential consumers, but we should think of the new opportunities open to us. In the Trois-Rivières riding, there are a number of very good business people who have already understood the message and who are already exporting in large quantities on the international market. I could mention a few who, through their exports, have created dozens upon dozens of new jobs in my riding. If these people had felt that they were going to limit themselves to Trois-Rivières, the region, the province or even the country, fewer jobs would have been created in Trois-Rivières. I feel I must congratulate and encourage our Canadian exporters to look towards this extraordinary new market which beside the United States—this will be achieved through the Free Trade Agreement—also includes the European Common Market. We must have an economic vision of what will happen in a few years from now and to take the necessary steps in Canada to improve the quality of life for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I referred a moment ago to a vision of the future. Automatically, we think of children. The child's tax credit in 1988 has reached $559 and is consistent with what we had already announced in 1986 concerning the federal sales tax.

You will certainly remember that when we increased the federal sales tax by 1 per cent in 1986, we introduced at the same time the concept of a sales tax credit for low-income people and families.

That is what I called developing a tax system which takes into account the needs of Canadians, something foreign to the former Liberal Government which increased taxes without an eye for the future. We had ample evidence of this with the successive budgets of the previous federal government, the scientific research tax credit, the various industries where they abused the income tax legislation, overburdened Canadian taxpayers, without ever doing anything to improve the quality of life and the economic future of Canada.

This is a priority of the tax reform, something for which we can congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and say: You have done a great job! The tax reform is great for all individual Canadian taxpayers, for all Canadian corporations, for the economy of Canada and the quality of life of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite may quack as much as he pleases, nothing he can say will disprove that. Those are the facts of Canadian tax reform.

I see my colleague from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) nodding that I am right. Even though he is on the other side of this House, he's able to recognize—because he is an honest man—the good things accomplished by the Conservative Government, and I congratulate him for it.

It might be useful, Mr. Speaker, while talking about tax reform, to go back to what has been done since 1984. With the minimum tax put in place in 1986, for example, all Canadians must pay their fair share. That could have been done under the previous Liberal Government, but their good friends wouldn't stand for it. We have put in place a system that requires all Canadian taxpayers to pay their taxes on a yearly basis.

We have also stopped income splitting between family members, which provided tremendous tax shelters to restricted groups. That has also been set aside.

The Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan was primarily used as a tax shelter by families, but low income people couldn't afford to take advantage of it. That has also been settled.

Tax shelters created by the old regime for yachts, cottages and the like were used any which way. We also put a stop to that.

The scientific research tax credit, which I referred to earlier, cost Canadians billions of dollars, didn't do anything for our scientists or the Canadian economy, but fattened some companies' pocketbooks. That, Mr. Speaker, is an aberration. It is unbelievable that this party let such things go by when it was in power.

I recently read an article in which the former Minister of Finance said that he was aware of what was going on but that nothing could be changed and that the deed was done. So they let it go at that. They let billions of dollars escape which should have gone to companies X, Y, Z here in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, when we speak of fiscal reform, I think we must also consider the second stage of fiscal reform. Indeed, it is also important. It is part of the vision of Canada, of the expectation of a better quality of life which I mentioned earlier.

The second stage of fiscal reform will deal with the federal sales tax. It is a well known fact that the federal sales tax, in its present patchwork form, in its sorry state which defies description, Mr. Speaker, and with which the former Liberal administration had managed to "put up", is a nuisance to Canadian businesses and prevents them from competing successfully with foreign firms.

So the second stage is on its way and hopefully, as negotiations are proceeding well, with the agreement of the ten provinces we shall arrive at one single provincial and federal sales tax which will apply to most if not all goods and whereby Canada as well as the ten provinces will have a better tax system for the good of all Canadians, one which will be beneficial, which will improve the quality of life of Canadians and, rather than cause the loss of jobs in Canada, will create employment as does the first part of the tax reform, which I hope will be adopted as soon as possible by this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

• (1720)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity which we get very seldom, to put questions in the House to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, in this case on matters concerning tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that the tax reform proposal was tabled in the House in June 1987, today, July 19, 1988, is the first time we debated the issue in the House, except for a few short statements in response to the statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in June and December last year.

I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary. He just said that all Canadians should pay their fair share of taxes, but in the Government's proposal, and I have the figures here, we see that among the winners, a family with an annual income of $100,000 will enjoy a tax reduction of $4,165 compared with $140 for the individual with an annual income of less $15,000.

Mr. Speaker, the Government seems to think that those who were not paying their fair share were mainly Canadians on low incomes. If we look at the breakdown, we see that the 26 per cent on low incomes will receive about $250 million in tax deductions, but the 2 per cent on higher incomes will get about $380 million in tax deductions. This means that 12 per cent of these reductions go to the wealthier groups in our society and only 8 per cent to people on low incomes, despite the fact that the latter group is much bigger.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary explain why the Government failed to introduce a tax reform proposal that would provide for a more progressive tax system? If we consider all taxpayers, in both cases the winners, that is those who are well off, receive far more in terms of tax reductions than those on low incomes. And could he explain the fact that if we consider the principle of fair tax treatment of families and single taxpayers, there seems to be a disparity that is indefensible in terms of social and fiscal justice? Mr. Speaker, a taxpayer with an annual income of $30,000 and who happens to be single receives a tax reduction of $695 per year, but if we have two taxpayers, both working with two children, their tax reduction is only $285.

It is difficult to give all the figures, but I wonder why a family with two wage earners who both have to work to be able to pay the rent or their mortgage, receive about $5 per week in tax reductions, while someone else with the same annual income will get $14 per week in tax reductions; and why do the wealthy get thousands of dollars in tax reductions, while those who are less well off might get a few hundred dollars? Why?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the questions the socialists ask are always distorted and do not reflect reality. What I said at the beginning was that those who paid no tax will pay. And those who paid no tax, those who did not pay their fair share, were the ones who benefited from the tax shelters introduced by the previous Liberal Government. There are no more tax shelters. All Canadians must pay their fair share. There are no more tax shelters and the minimum tax was introduced for the very purpose of making everyone pay his or her fair share.

Moreover, 850,000 Canadians will no longer pay income tax. Eighty-five per cent of Canadians will pay less income tax. But still, Mr. Speaker, the socialist Member is unhappy. Eighty-five per cent of Canadians will pay less income tax and he is not happy! Eight hundred fifty thousand Canadians will no longer pay a cent of income tax. He is still not happy!

It was the same socialist Member, Mr. Speaker, who said that flow-through shares, which are a tax shelter, as you know, should be kept. This same Member is telling us to cut tax shelters and not to give to the rich and those with high incomes. Mr. Speaker, it is high-income individuals who buy flow-through shares; not people with low incomes, but those with high incomes buy them. So you see what the socialist Member is doing, Mr. Speaker. He is speaking out of both sides of his mouth. That is quite unfortunate. We have a fair, equitable tax reform that will benefit most Canadians and that will also . . . but the socialist Member does not mention that, nor that we have converted exemptions into tax credits, which definitely makes the tax system fairer than it was before. He does not talk about that. But maybe he should take a look at it, maybe he should take a proper look at his figures, and he would then see that this is fairness, this is a Government that shoulders its responsibilities and also considers the country's economy. You have to have a vision of the country when you carry out a reform, and a vision of the country for the future also, for the future of Canadians and their children. That is what the tax reform does.

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the Hon. Member from Trois-Rivières (M. Vincent) and Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, I have a few comments to make on a particular tax credit, namely the R&D tax shelter. In the years 1983-1984, the then Minister, the Hon. Marc Lalonde, stated that his program would cost between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000. Some time after the Conservative Government's victory, the Right Honourable Prime Minister, Mr. Brian Mulroney, said that this research program had to be cancelled immediately, which was one of the first things the Minister of Finance did. Several months later, the Auditor General of Canada made public his audit of the program. Instead of $300,000,000, it had cost 3.9 billion dollars, Mr. Speaker, and out of those 3.9 billion dollars allocated to R&D, it was revealed that 1.9 billion dollars had been lost due to frauds and bankruptcies.

Here is a case in point. A mechanic from Victoria, British-Columbia, asked for 5 million dollars to set up a computer technology research program. He presented his project to senior officials and, by the way, Mr. Speaker, in 1983 and early 1984, these senior officials told the then Minister, Mr. Marc Lalonde, and the Canadian Government, the Trudeau Government, as well as Federal Liberal Members of Parliament—and the Hon. Member from Abitibi, Mr. René Gingras was one of them—to put an immediate stop to this waste of public funds. And that Victoria mechanic who got $5,000,000 is now in Japan writing a book on break-dancing.

And to think, Mr. Speaker, and I will close on that, that with those 1.9 billion dollars, we could have built right here in Canada, for the benefit of the Abitibi region or Trois-Rivières, whose Member works very hard for his riding and his constituents, we could have built, Mr. Speaker, in this great country of ours, 50 hospitals.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on this Bill on tax reform. Tax reform was introduced with great fanfare by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It was introduced as being his effort to simplify the tax system.

When I first saw the Bill I asked: Is it not great that we have a simple tax system? I decided to read some of this simple Bill, which has only 500 pages, since it introduces a new simplified tax system. I want to read some of it into the record to show how simple it is and how Canadians will be glad that the tax system has been simplified in this manner. It states at page 149:

> (4) All that portion of paragraph 88(1)(e.5) of the said Act following subparagraph (ii) thereof is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "shall, if the parent has been a private corporation continuously from the time of the winding-up to the end of the taxation year, be added to the aggregate determined under subsection 129(3) from which the parent's dividend refunds are to be subtracted, except that the amount to be added to the aggregate determined under subsection 129(3) shall be deemed to be nil where, had a dividend been paid by the subsidiary immediately before the winding-up, subsection 129(1.2) would have applied to deem the dividend not to be a taxable dividend".

Does that not clarify it? I am glad the system has been simplified in such a way as to make it understandable to my constituents and all Canadians. I am sure that when my constituents read this clause it will be eminently clear to all of them that we have a simplified and beautiful tax system.

If the House is not convinced that the tax system is easy to understand, let me turn to the next page to show that I have not purposely selected any passage to embarrass the Government. That is the last thing on my mind. It states at page 150:

> (6) Subsection 88(1) of the said Act is further amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (e.8) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (f) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:
> "(g) where the subsidiary was an insurance corporation, (i) for the purposes of paragraphs (12)(1)(d),(e),(i) and (s) and 20(1)(l), (l.1), and (jj) and 20(7.(c), section 33, 138, 138.1, 140, 142 and 148 and Part XII.3, the parent shall, notwithstanding paragraph (e.2), be deemed to be the same corporation as, and a continuation of, the subsidiary, and
> (ii) for the purpose of determining the amount of the gross investment revenue required to be included under subsection 138(9) in the income of the subsidiary and the parent and the amount of gains and losses of the subsidiary and the parent from property used by them in the year or held by them in the year in the course of carrying on an insurance business in Canada—

Most of my constituents, as all Canadians, will be pleased that the Government has simplified the tax system in the way I have just described it.

We have had some deliberations on this Bill at the committee level. On May 17, 1988, I attended the Finance Committee hearing because I was interested in this new simplified tax system. I wanted to know in very tangible terms whether or not this new system would result in a more simplified tax form. Obviously, the jargon I just read is quite complex, even in its so-called simplified form. I asked an official of the Department of Finance, Mr. David Dodge, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, who was appearing at the committee that day: "In very tangible form is it going to have fewer lines on it"—I was describing the tax form—"or is it going to be essentially the same thing?" I asked: "To most Canadians our tax system is measured not in many of the ways that perhaps you would, sir. It is: Am I able to fill out my income tax? That is a tangible measure of how simple or otherwise the tax system is".

The response of the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister, as it appears at page 164:10 of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee was:

> It is going to be a little bit shorter, because there are a few things that are treated differently, or are not there under the new legislation. But as I said, my colleagues at Revenue Canada have tried to design it in such a way that there would be as little change as possible in terms of the flow of what people are used to in filling out their own forms.

In other words, the Senior Assistant Deputy Minister has told us that essentially it will be the same thing.

• (1740)

Are you not glad we are simplifying it, Mr. Speaker? Once it is simplified it will be the same as before, after all that effort. That kind of explanation, of course, does not satisfy me entirely of how simple a tax system could be.

[Translation]

In his excellent speech earlier today, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) explained to the House that this tax reform occurs following four major tax increases from this Tory Government. We should remember that these increases were quite unfair for middle-income Canadians. And we know that under this tax reform, there will be very little progressiveness in the application of this so-called reform. The reform is certainly incomplete, because the sales tax will be delayed until next year. But why next year? The answer is quite simple and most Canadians are aware of it: because this Tory government wants to implement these tax increases only after the election. Yet, Mr. Speaker, there is something which this Tory Government has overlooked but which you know as well as I do, being non-partisan, and it is that the forthcoming election will mean the end of this Tory Government. That is fortunate for most Canadians, except of course for the rich friends of this Tory Government.

Mr. Speaker, the personal income tax under the proposed tax reform will be reduced from 10 to 3. So the federal tax rate will be 17 per cent on the first $27,500 of taxable income, 26 per cent on the amount between $27,500 and $55.000 in taxable income, and finally 29 per cent on the amount in excess of $55,000 in taxable income. If you look at the three levels, you see quite clearly 17, 26 and 29. Therefore, the middle class will face a tax rate of 26 per cent. Mr. Speaker, 26 per cent is not halfway between 17 per cent and 29 per cent. As you can see, people with average salaries will again pay more than their fair share, contrary to what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister explained to us today. Again, this is a Tory legislation which is unfair to a great many Canadians.

The Parliamentary Secretary told us today something to the effect that the affluent in Canada should assume their fair share of the tax burden. That is true and most of us agree that the rich should pay their share and naturally low income people should not have to shoulder a disproportionate amount of the tax burden. Well, we are well aware that ever since this Tory Government came to power, 1 million Canadians are paying more income tax. The Government is now saying that 850 000 Canadians will pay less income tax. Well, Mr. Speaker, the net result is that 150 000 Canadians will continue to pay more. If 1 million pay more while 850 000 pay less, the net result is that 150 000 Canadians are already losers in this whole process, even before the implementation of Phase 2 of this Tory Government's tax reform. The end result is that Canadians are always losing under a Tory Government. It is a well known fact that Tory times are hard times. As the English say . . .

[English]

Tory times are hard times. Let me remind Canadians of some of the tax increases. Since the Tories have came to power, many Canadians are paying more income tax. As I indicated previously, a million taxpayers are paying more.

Let me refresh the memories of Members of the House and all Canadians who are listening to us with respect to those tax increases. First, let me talk about direct taxes. In October 1984 we had a sales tax increase from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, a $1 billion increase. On January 1, 1986, the sales tax increased from 10 per cent to 11 per cent, another $1 billion tax increase. As the Tories say: "What is a billion?" On April 1, 1986, the sales tax increased from 11 per cent to 12 per cent, another $1 billion. Then they decided to extend the tax to children's candy—Tory policy—soft drinks, health goods, dental instruments, snack foods, and so on. That resulted in $460 million of tax increase. There was an increase in sales tax from 8 per cent to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper, and children's toys, which produced $60 million.

Then there were tax increases on gasoline. There was a 2 cent per litre increase on September 3, 1985, a 1 cent per litre increase on January 1, 1987, a 1 cent per litre increase on February 19, 1987, and a 1 cent per litre increase on April 1, 1988. If we add all that together, and I say this so that the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) can repeat it faithfully to all his constituents, we have $2.5 billion worth of tax increases. Strangely enough, that is an increase of some 5 cents per litre. That 5 cents per litre is more than the 18 cents per gallon which caused the Government, led by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), to be turfed out in 1979. That is the sad reality.

Unfortunately for all Canadians this particular Conservative administration has a large majority in the House of Commons. What I am saying today must be thought provoking. It is even waking up some of the Tory back-benchers. That is a good sign. They are earning their day's pay.

I could continue talking about massive tax increases. Let me speak about the 10 per cent sales tax on long-distance telephone calls and cable television services. That has generated $945 million. I represent a largely rural constituency, the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. In my riding, and in many other rural constituencies in Canada, citizens do not have a choice as to whether or not they will phone long distance. Some people in rural areas have to phone long distance to speak to their doctor, the farm implement dealer, the veterinarian or the drug store. To phone anywhere one has to pay for a long-distance telephone call. That is the reality of living in a rural area.

Obviously the Minister of Finance, who comes from downtown Toronto, is not too familiar with rural areas. He imposed a sales tax not on basic service, not on luxury items, but on long-distance telephone calls, which means that this tax is unfair and discriminatory against the rural Canadians I am charged with representing in the House of Commons. That is the unfairness of this system and this so-called tax reform with these tax increases of the Conservative administration.

I see the Hon. Member for Gaspé (Mr. Marin) opposite. He represents, as I do, a rural riding. He knows how unfair are those taxes on long-distance telephone calls. He has probably had the opportunity to tell the Minister of Finance. If he has not had that opportunity, there is still some time before the Tories are turfed out of office; a few months at least but not much more. He should tell the Minister of Finance, while he is still the Minister of Finance, that this tax on long-distance telephone calls is indeed unfair to a large number of rural Canadians living in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and elsewhere.

It is particularly unfair to senior citizens. I received a telephone call yesterday in my office from a senior citizen in my riding who, upon looking at his telephone bill, became really upset about the fact that because he lives in Hawkesbury he had to pay tax on a long-distance phone call to his children living in Ottawa. He has to pay surtax because he has cablevision coming into his house. This gentleman is 88 years old. Why is the Government permitted to impose these types of taxes on senior citizens such as the one I have just described? Obviously there is no rational explanation for that other than the fact that the Minister of Finance is insensitive to the needs of rural Canadians. He has imposed this most unfortunate regressive and discriminatory tax on rural Canadians, the tax on long-distance telephone calls.

There are pages of tax increases in the Bill. I could read them all into the record but if I did that I could hardly speak on anything else this afternoon, except of course if my colleagues extended the time permitted for me to speak, which I know that given the non-partisan tone of my speech they would probably want to do. In the unlikely event that they refuse, I am going to change topics here and move on to more on the area of tax reform.

In the constituency that I represent there is an organization which builds low-head generating stations. These generating stations create employment in my constituency. They are then built on site. They are manufactured in my riding and installed in northern Ontario. They usually provide meaningful employment to residents of remote communities in northern Ontario. This was creating good employment in my riding, which is certainly not in northern Ontario but which suffers from high unemployment. People investing in these types of projects were doing so by means of the flow-through share mechanism. Of course, they have now had a lot of difficulty, first, with the outright cancellation of this measure and, second, with the modifications that were proposed by the Minister of Finance. The long and short of it is that valuable research, development and installation was going on here, and now the whole thing has been placed in jeopardy by the actions of the Conservative administration.

We know that the New Democratic Party has had a great deal of difficulty with this issue. Sometimes it has been in favour of it and sometimes it has been against it. It has not been easy for members of that Party, and I sort of sympathize with them on this issue. I will return to the area of research and development in a minute.

I want briefly to touch on the area of automobile expenses in the tax reform Bill. A number of people in my constituency and several other constituencies in Canada use their cars to work. Their car is a travelling office. I feel that the imposition of the $20,000 maximum for the deductibility of automobiles is unfair. I ask the Minister at least to index that amount and, hopefully, even to increase it so that it will not adversely affect people who work in their cars.

If one's office does not have wheels on it, then it is fully deductible. If an office does have wheels on it, as is the case with a travelling salesperson, then there are restrictions which are unfair which have been put on them by the Government.

In conclusion, I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government has failed miserably in the area of research and development with or without tax reform. I talked about the flow-through shares. There are several other areas which I could address.

I want to say that in the United States the non-tax support for research and development is 33 per cent and the tax support is 7 per cent for a total of 40 per cent. In France there is 22 per cent non-tax support and 7 per cent tax support for a total of 29 per cent. In Canada, we have 12 per cent non-tax support and 8 per cent tax support for a total of 20 per cent. We can see how underfunded research and development is in Canada.

Given that serious underfunding, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin):

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the "and" before (6) and the period at the end thereof and by adding the following:
> "and (7), imposes a higher burden on small manufacturing corporations and unnecessary red tape on the self-employed."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will take the Hon. Member's subamendment under advisement and report back to the House later. On questions and comments the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) agrees with me in some of the criticisms I have made about the Government in terms of the lack of progressivity in the tax reform proposals which have been put forward. I am sure that he agrees with me that there is something wrong with the tax system that cuts taxes for most people earning over $100,000 by $4,000 per year but only cuts taxes for people earning $15,000 and less per year by an average of $140.

I know that he agrees with me that there is something wrong when the Government claims that many people will be paying less tax when in fact average Canadians were paying about $1,200 more in tax after tax reform than they were prior to 1984. In other words, the Progressive Conservatives have raised the taxes on the average family earning of perhaps $35,000 per year by a sum of $1,500, and then it has turned around and taken down their taxes by perhaps $250 or $300 per year for a net increase that we calculate of $1,253 per year.

I know my hon. friend will agree with me that there is something perverse about a situation in which only the top 2 per cent of taxpayers earning more than $100,000 per year wind up paying less tax in 1988 after tax reform than they paid in 1984.

My reason for asking a question of my hon. friend is the fact that it seems to me that some of the problems we are having with taxation under the Progressive Conservatives did not begin on September 4, 1984. They began before then.

I would like to ask my friend if he recalls the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance who is currently the Opposition House Leader in the Senate, Senator MacEachen, who in 1981 brought in a Budget which purported to broaden the base of the tax system and at the same time resulted in a very substantial drop in tax rates on wealthy Canadians.

Does he recall as well the fact that the loopholes that were being plugged by that Budget eventually got opened up again, and that in fact the Minister of Finance of the time gave way in front of the interests so that the broadening of the base that he was proposing did not take place but that it did not take away the reductions to wealthy Canadians?

What is the difference between the Liberal Party which cut tax on wealthy Canadians in 1981 without notice that it was dropping the base and the Conservative Party which in 1988 is proposing to cut taxes on wealthy Canadians while still leaving a number of loopholes?

[Translation]

I noted that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance had indicated that there are no more tax shelters in the tax system. Of course, he did not mention the capital gains tax exemption on the first $100,000 earned by the rich people as provided under the Conservative tax system.

My question is the following: Didn't this regressive tax, whose history began with the Conservatives, exist under the Liberals?

Naturally, Mr. Speaker . . . I realize that the Hon. Member told us there is a lack of funding, a lack of support by the government for research and development. But, this lack of funding, wasn't it something the Liberals proposed in the first place? History didn't start on September 4, 1984. So, how can we distinguish between his Party, which decreased the tax rate for the rich and did not properly finance Canadian research and development, and the Conservative Party which is now doing the same thing?

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my colleague stated that not everything in taxation started under the Conservatives. It would be true to say that nothing has started under an NDP Government because there has never been one, and there never will be one. Thus we have to start off with that particular premise since it is a reality that all Canadians know and certainly all Members in this House know as being a fact.

That being the case, let me remind the Hon. Member that it was indeed the Liberal Party which stood up for universality of old age pensions when the Tories tried to cut old age pensions in the Budget of their Minister of Finance.

• (1800)

It was the Liberal Party that established a national health care system, the old age pension, and a guaranteed income supplement. Those were measures to more evenly distribute the wealth and to aid people who were in the position of having less financial wealth than others. Those are some of the examples of good social programs established by the Liberals in the past. Those very same programs have been threatened and cut back by the Conservatives who are in power now. One need only look at the issue of deindexation of income tax deductions.

Mr. Cassidy: What about six and five?

Mr. Boudria: Let me repeat this slowly. The deductions in income tax were indexed by the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) in the days when he was the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton, part of the riding that I now represent, and when that Member was the Minister of Finance for Canada—and a great Minister of Finance he was. He established a system whereby there would not be an inflation-causing income tax system the way we have now. In other words, if someone receives a 3 per cent cost-of-living allowance each year, that 3 per cent is now taxed. Under the Liberals it was not. The system was far fairer and was established by a more progressive Government than the one we have now.

I am glad the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is listening attentively. This information will come in handy in the election that we will soon have when Peter Milliken confronts her with some of those facts in the great riding of Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Cassidy: I was a little puzzled when hearing the response of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I recognize that he was in the Ontario House in 1981, and not in the federal House, but I do not recall his responding to my specific question. The question I asked is, what is different about a Liberal Finance Minister in 1981 cutting taxes on the rich, and a Conservative Finance Minister under tax reform cutting taxes on the rich? I find it difficult to distinguish between them. I listened carefully, but I did not hear the Hon. Member offer any credible distinction. I recall that in Opposition the Liberals seem to talk like New Democrats, and we welcome their support from time to time on issues that we feel to be important, but at the same time we find it somewhat inconsistent. The Hon. Member seems to forget that his Party deindexed Public Service pensions under the six and five program and turned around and attacked the Government for attempting to do the same thing in 1985. The Liberals are being a bit inconsistent.

What is different about the Liberals who cut taxes on the rich in 1981 in the MacEachen Budget, and the tax reform here which seems to be far more interested in cutting taxes on wealthy Canadians than it is in bringing in tax equity for average Canadians?

Mr. Boudria: The Hon. Member from the NDP states that he welcomes the Liberals in Opposition from time to time. I am glad that we are only in Opposition from time to time, which is certainly not the same as could be said for the NDP Members. They have a lot of practice at being in Opposition. They have been there and will be there forever.

The Hon. Member asked what the difference is between a Liberal Finance Minister and a Conservative Finance Minister. The Hon. Member raised the issue of a Budget in 1981 which he says was unfair toward average Canadians. The Tories criticized that Budget because it was unfair toward rich Canadians. It is difficult to reconcile the views of the Tories and the NDP. Each one is polarized with tunnel vision and they cannot see the rest of the world around them. That is unfortunate.

I described how in the past Liberals attempted to make the tax system fairer by redistributing wealth throughout the country. Many of the valuable social programs, supported from time to time—but always when they were in Opposition—by members of the NDP.

I have described how all this has happened for the benefit of the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who, by the way, was not here before 1984 either. I was in the Ontario Legislature, and so was he as the Leader of the NDP.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in support of Bill C-139 which deals with the question of tax reform. You and I, Mr. Speaker, have heard a lot about tax reform over quite a number of years. In fact, when I first considered standing for Parliament, I can remember that the whole issue of tax reform was in the forefront of public discussion and debate. I can remember a leadership contender in our Party by the name of Mr. Peter Pocklington who made that one of the prime objectives and thrusts of his efforts to become the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party in 1983. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the debate that raged around the issue of tax reform. As a nominated candidate for office, knocking on the doors of many people, I found a great interest in and a great desire for tax reform.

However, tax reform means different things to different people. As we talk to different people, they send us the message that tax reform does not always mean the same to everybody. If there is one thing that people have in common about tax reform, it is the whole question of its conveying the meaning to them that they will be paying less taxes under some sort of reformed system than they were under the present or past system. That is what the Bill before us this evening is all about. This Bill means that most people will pay less in tax than they have been paying.

I had the opportunity of sitting here today and listening to the comments of the Opposition with respect to this Bill. I listened to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) speaking on behalf of the Liberals. I listened to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) speaking on behalf of the NDP—the new dinosaur Party. I also listened to the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria). Frankly, as I listened to their comments, I was astounded. I wondered if we were talking about the same thing. I have a friend who was the Mayor of the Borough of East York where I hail from by the name of Leslie Saunders. He used to describe some things as being "out of this world". As I listened to the comments of the Liberals and the new dinosaurs, I had to agree with him that they were "out of this world". In fact, I thought that perhaps they were "out of this world" by many of the comments they made on tax reform. I could spend all my time commenting on all of the things that they said. However, I do want to comment on a few of the things, because they were and they are "out of this world".

One of the first comments the Liberals made had to do with the question of the progressiveness of the income tax system. Both Liberal Members who spoke in this debate indicated that under the former Liberal Governments there was a progressive tax system but that for some reason or other, the progressive tax system is now being done away with. Well, I can see the smile curving at the edges of your mouth when you hear those words about the progressive tax system under the former Liberal Governments. You and I know about all of those interesting tax shelters that the former Liberal Government had introduced and put into effect. You will remember the tax shelter for MURBs. That certainly was a very progressive measure. It allowed people with high incomes to invest their money and in fact to have a tax deduction and not pay any tax on the money that they had in that tax shelter.

You will remember, of course, the film investment tax shelters that were put in place by the former Government, again a tax shelter which enabled rich people to invest their money in the production of movies, shelter their income and not pay any income tax on it.

You will remember as well that there were similar tax shelters for things like hotel investments, similar tax shelters for things like recreational vehicle purchases. These certainly added to the progressiveness of the tax system in a big way. You know that as well as I do that the system that was in place under the former Liberal Government was anything but a perfect progressive tax system.

To top it all off, there was something called the scientific research tax credit, one of the greatest boondoggles that has ever been introduced into the income tax system by any Government. It was introduced by the former Liberal Government, and it milked and looted the Treasury of this country. It certainly could not be considered in any way, shape or form to be adding to the progressiveness of the tax system. In fact, it did just the opposite, as all of these tax shelters did.

What has happened to these tax shelters, as you and I know, is that they have been eliminated by the present Government, by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and all of those steps in eliminating those tax shelters have helped to return the system to a progressive tax system, the kind of a system that the Liberals tell us that they want to see but the kind of a system that certainly they did not produce.

Another of the comments of the Liberal spokesman on this tax reform legislation had to do with the question of the simplicity of the tax system. Once again the Liberal spokesman seemed to imply that the tax system as it existed under the previous Government was far simpler than it is going to be under the present system.

You and I know that many of the complications of the previous system—complications which included some of these tax shelters—are being eliminated by the present Government. One thing that always strikes me about this whole question of simplicity—and several members of the Opposition have touched on this issue, whether they were Liberals or new dinosaurs—is that it seems to imply that it is some sort of a panacea, that there is some way of creating a simple system but still creating the same kind of a system that they want to see, one which takes into account rich Canadians, poor Canadians, and the question of a progressive tax rate. You and I know that that is very difficult and probably impossible to accomplish.

Certainly we can have a simple system, one where all of us can sit down, as we did 40 or 50 years ago, and work out our income tax on one simple page, but it does not take into account all of the complexities that have now been built into the system, which would cause a great furore and uproar if they were done away with.

One simple example, is the deductions for charitable donations. You know, Mr. Speaker, as I know, that under that very simple system that we used to have there was no such thing as making deductions for charitable purposes from income tax. That system was instituted in an effort to assist organized charities to raise money. A great number of organized charities doing very beneficial work for society have been created under that system.

Just think, Mr. Speaker, of the furore the Opposition would raise if we suddenly did away with the charitable donation or any charitable tax credit whatsoever. Certainly it would make the system much simpler, but at the same time it would devastate this system of charitable giving and the system of charitable expenditures that have been built up over many years. It would make the system simpler, but it certainly would devastate the present charitable scheme that has been established over many, many years.

Another comment of both of the opposition Parties had to do with the fact that although the Government has indicated that there are some 850,000 taxpayers who will be taken off the tax rolls by this tax reform legislation, in fact there are a million people who are now paying taxes that were not when the Government took office.

Again, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that there is a very simple answer to that, and that is the fact that when the Government took office, there was an unemployment rate across this country of something approaching 12 per cent, whereas that has now been lowered very substantially.

Miss MacDonald: Thirteen per cent.

Mr. Redway: Into the 7 per cent range. You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that most of those people who are new taxpayers are people who were not working before but now have jobs. No wonder they are paying taxes. I guess they are happy to do that. They were not happy when they did not have a job. They wanted a job, and they knew that with a job they would have to pay some income tax. That is in fact what has happened.

As you know, there have been over 1.2 million new jobs created since September, 1984. In fact, it is interesting to note that unemployment has fallen since 1984 by 430,000. The number of unemployed youth has fallen by 201,000. The number of unemployed women has fallen by 150,000. That means, very simply, that these people now have jobs which they did not have before. It is no wonder that they are paying taxes where they were not paying taxes before.

The Opposition in their criticism went on to deal with a number of other items as well. One of the things that they talked about was the unfairness of things like the capital gains tax exemption and the dividend tax credits. In a recent newsletter I published an outline of how this new tax reform legislation would impact on the average taxpayer. I published in effect a tax return for 1988, and I left it to the reader to work out their own income tax in terms of that income tax return for 1988. I invited them to contact me if in fact they were going to have to pay more tax or have to pay less tax. It is interesting to note that 100 per cent of the people who contacted me and who felt that they were going to have to pay more tax under this system were either people in a high-income bracket to begin with or people who were presently taking advantage of the dividend tax credit, whether they were modest-income people or whether they were high-income people, and it is that that concerned them.

Some modifications had been made to this legislation which the NDP says is helping the rich get richer. Those modifications concern people with high incomes because with the changes in the dividend tax credit and the change from what was anticipated in the capital gains tax credit, they anticipated that they would be paying less income tax with the present system than they would be with the new system. It is significant to my mind, Mr. Speaker, that these so-called assists to the rich, the dividend tax credit and the capital gains tax credit, are really the main source of criticism on the income tax reform package. People in the higher income tax brackets feel the substantial change in the tax system and feel they will be paying much more tax than they paid in the past whereas I, at least, am not hearing from the lower income people because, I assume, having worked out their tax, they find that they are saving money. It is not costing them any money under the new system.

Finally, let me comment on the criticism which the opposition Parties have levied regarding the sales tax changes. The opposition Parties said that people are now paying tax on potato chips but were not before. I have a company in my constituency by the name of Wrigley's Gum. Wrigley's Gum became very exercised with me and with the Government a couple of years ago when it discovered that under the sales tax system people who bought Wrigley's Gum had to pay sales tax whereas those people who bought potato chips did not.

The Wrigley's Gum people felt that potato chips were a direct competitor to them and said that everybody should be paying sales tax on goods or no one should be paying sales tax. I suppose the Government could have said: "Well, we will eliminate sales tax on everything". As you know, Mr. Speaker, that would have meant tax on something else.

Another comment which the opposition Members have made and make regularly has to do with the whole question of the increases in taxation over the last four years. There is one simple answer. Under the previous Government, supported by the New Democratic Party, the deficit in this country rose enormously to frightening heights, approaching $40 billion on an annual basis. When our Government came to office, we started off by suggesting we would cut some of the expenditures so as to reduce the deficit. Every single solitary suggestion that was made for a cut was opposed vehemently by the Liberals and by the new dinosaur party. In each case, both opposition Parties opposed anything that would cut expenditures and now, of course, they are opposing and have opposed anything that would change the tax system in any way. You know, Mr. Speaker, and I know that when you are in Government you cannot have it both ways. Unfortunately, the Opposition wants to imply that you can have it both ways. That just does not work and we all know it. Even the opposition Parties know it in their hearts.

I did not hear the Opposition commenting on the results of tax reform. The Government has said that the net personal income tax revenues to the Government will be reduced under this package by about $12 billion over the next five years. I did not hear either of the opposition Parties dispute that in any way. The federal Government said the income taxes will be reduced for 9.7 million households for over 85 per cent of all households by an average of $490. I did not hear either of the opposition Parties or any of the opposition spokesmen dispute those facts.

The Government says that about 850,000 low income Canadians will have their income tax rates reduced to zero or will receive refundable tax credits in 1988. I did not hear either of the opposition Parties or their spokesmen dispute those facts. The Government said that income taxes will be cut for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households. About 250,000 elderly Canadians will have their income taxes reduced to zero. I did not hear either opposition Party dispute that nor any of their spokesmen dispute those facts.

All in all, it is interesting to note that as the Government has indicated, under this tax reform package there will be a very substantial reduction. In fact, a very, very substantial number of people will be cut off the tax rolls entirely. A very, very substantial number of people will have their taxes reduced, but we did not hear any of those facts disputed. All we heard disputed was the past. That is where both opposition Parties stand on this issue and on all issues. They are deeply rooted in the past. They do not seem to be able to look forward or get their heads out of the sand. It is time that both opposition Parties admitted, as they know in their hearts, that this is good legislation. It will be good for Canadians and we should see the Bill passed quickly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has considered the subamendment moved by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and finds it to be in order. I will, therefore, propose it to the House. Mr. Boudria, seconded by Mr. Grondin moved:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the "and" before (6) and the period at the end of thereof and by adding the following:
> "and (7), that imposes a higher burden on small manufacturing corporations and unnecessary red tape on the self-employed."

The debate will continue on the subamendment. Questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for his speech. I found it a bit difficult listening to him to recognize how progressive his Party really was. I noted the number of people whose taxes would be cut. I do not dispute the figures particularly, but what I noted was that a cut, after you have had a big increase, is hardly a cut at all. It reminds me of the story of somebody who goes to the store and he or she—I will be catholic about this—comes back and says: "Well it was 33 per cent off. I could not afford to buy it". You still wind up paying something for whatever it is you bought. That is very much the same with Conservative tax reform.

If your taxes go up by $1,500, which is what has happened for the average family since 1984 under the Conservatives, and you get a tax cut of $300, should you be grateful for the tax cut or should you not recognize the fact that you still wind up paying $1,200 or more in taxation compared to when the Government came to power. That seems to me a very relevant figure. I do not think it is a very progressive type of tax reform if the Conservatives wind up soaking the average family $1,200 more after four years and after tax reform than that family was paying before.

I heard the Hon. Member trying to blame the Opposition that the Conservatives could not cut expenditures where they felt like cutting expenditures. We make up 32 Members in the House of Commons. There are a few more Liberals, a total of some 70 Members in Opposition. The Progressive Conservative Party has three times our number. If they could not cut expenditures, it was because they did not know how, they did not want to, or it was politically unfeasible.

However, my question is whether it is progressive, in his view, to cut taxes on the average person earning more than $100,000 a year to a level lower than in 1984, but to raise taxes on all other Canadians higher than they were in 1984? Is it progressive to have three-quarters of the taxpayers earning over $100,000 a year receiving a tax cut of $4,165, whereas the average taxpayer earning under $15,000 a year gets a cut of only $140? If he thinks that is progressive, I am not in agreement with him and I find it very difficult to associate myself with the so-called tax reform put forward by his Party. It is not fair reform, it is Tory tax reform.

The Hon. Member suggested his Party had done away with a number of tax shelters and therefore deserved a certain amount of praise. He neglected to mention the $100,000 total tax break for capital gains which is available largely to high income Canadians. Is that not a tax shelter worthy of being enshrined in the pantheon of Liberal tax shelters which the Conservative Government inherited? If that is the case, why did the Government, if it is so progressive, not eliminate it?

I would conclude by saying that since the Hon. Member insists on referring to my Party by a name unfamiliar to me, and I always thought the dinosaurs were in the Progressive Conservative Party, and given the retrogressive nature of the tax reform proposed by the Progressive Conservatives, they should be renamed the "prehistoric coprolite party".

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member had listened carefully to my comments before he launched into his own dealing, first, with the tax increases that occurred before this tax reform package. If he had, he would have heard me say that those tax increases preceded the package we are talking about now and therefore he should be addressing the legislation we are dealing with now. He apparently is not interested in tax reductions now because he finds that a tax reform package that actually cuts taxes should be criticized. He apparently would have been much happier had there not been any tax cut whatsoever. He then could have said that all we have had is tax increases over these years.

In addition, the Hon. Member obviously was not listening when I spoke about the enormous deficit that was in place when this Government came to power. He and his Party and the Liberal Opposition criticized and vehemently opposed every suggested spending cut. It is interesting that under a government of the Hon. Member's Party there is no way anything could be cut. There is no way you could raise taxes.

At the same time, somehow or other they want the deficit to mysteriously disappear or else they do not care about it whatsoever.

The economic policies put in place prior to this tax reform package have rejuvenated the country. They reduced unemployment and increased economic growth. We have had the greatest job-creation in the western world for each of the last four years. We have had the greatest economic growth for each of the last four years.

It is interesting to note as well that there has been a decrease in the number of Canadians living below the poverty line since 1984. It has fallen by 525,000. This, apparently, under these terrible economic policies of the present Government. Not only have people been put back to work, not only were 1.2 million jobs created since 1984, there are also 525,000 people who are now above the poverty line who were below it in 1984.

In addition, with all the Hon. Member's criticisms about the economic policies and taxation policies of the Government, the average family income in this country has climbed in real terms since 1984 by some $1,600. That is very interesting in light of the Hon. Member's comments with respect to this package.

I am sure that on reflection the Hon. Member is really supportive of this package. He really wants to see taxes cut and he really feels this is a good piece of legislation and wants to see it put in place as quickly as possible so Canadians can benefit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Regina East.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I definitely wish to participate in this debate this evening. I might say, however, being a member of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that we have discussed tax reform for almost two years now and it is not until the dying months of the Government, in the middle of the summer, that it finally brings in its legislation. It seems to me the Government has waited for some of its most important legislation in order to try and ram it through Parliament when at least half of the Members are not present and most Canadians are either on holidays or at the cottage. I think the Government's intention is quite clear. It is not interested in the Canadian people having too close a look at what is in the legislation, and I do not think it is interested in having a full debate in the House on this legislation.

When we first heard from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) about tax reform, he stated in his speech on June 18, 1987, page 7360 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, tonight I am proposing sweeping changes to Canada's tax system. These changes will directly affect all Canadians for many years to come.
> Our tax system should be a strong force in meeting the challenges that face our country.
> It must help individuals and businesses deal with the challenges of the 1990s and into the next century.
> It must reinforce our ability as a country to continue to provide the social programs needed by our people.
> It must generate the hope and opportunity that will motivate Canadians to build a strong country in a very competitive world.
> But to do this, the tax system must have the respect of Canadians. We know that it does not. And we know why.
> We all know that the tax system allows many profitable corporations to avoid paying a fair share of tax, year after year.
> We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax than the average Canadian wage earner, year after year.
> We all know that it allows those who are able to use special tax breaks to shift the burden to others less able to carry it.
> Canada needs a tax system that raises revenues in a fair and reliable way; a system that supports our national effort to promote economic growth and create more and better jobs.

Those were the comments of the Minister of Finance. By these comments I and all Canadians will judge the legislation before us today.

Since the Conservatives were elected, corporate income tax has increased by 8 per cent, personal income tax has increased by 45 per cent and sales tax has increased by a whopping 67 per cent. I ask again, is this equity, is this fairness? It is obvious to the Canadian public that the tax burden, particularly under a Conservative Government, has been placed on the shoulders of income earners, mainly the middle-income earners. They are the ones who are carrying an increasing load of the tax burden. Again, corporate income tax has only increased by 8 per cent since the election of the Government but personal income tax has increased by 45 per cent and the sales tax has increased by 67 per cent.

Conservative Members, including the Minister of Finance, made much to do about how this tax reform proposal will take some 850,000 low-income earners off the tax rolls. They are right, but they do not mention that since the election of this Tory Government some one million low-income Canadians have been put on the tax rolls. What we have is a revolving door, smoke and mirrors. The Government made low-income Canadians liable to pay tax and is now taking some of them off the rolls. However, that is only temporary because the Government failed to reintroduce full indexation and many of the 850,000 Canadians taken off the income tax rolls this year will be back on next year or the year after.

One million Canadians were put on the income tax roll because the Government took away indexation. Therefore, as incomes rose, because of inflation, they all of a sudden found themselves paying tax whereas before the election of this Government at least the thresholds kept pace with inflation. The Government took that away and that is why one million Canadians who should not be paying taxes because of their low incomes are paying tax for the first time. The Government is now attempting to take credit for removing 850,000 of them for this year only. I emphasize the fact that it is for this year only because full indexation has not been introduced and many of these 850,000 low-income Canadians will be paying tax again next year or the year after.

The Minister talks about fairness, he talks about removing the tax load from the backs of poor and middle-income people. I ask again whether he has done it. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that he has not. He has reduced the rates of wealthy Canadians from a top rate of 51 per cent to 44 per cent. In other words, a stockbroker earning $200,000 a year is going to save $15,000. Is it fair that a secretary earning $28,000 per year should have a marginal tax rate 5 per cent lower than someone earning over $1 million a year? Is is equity that a secretary or labourer earning $28,000 a year should have an effective tax rate only 5 per cent lower than a person earning over $1 million a year?

What we have before us today is a sham. Let us look again at the savings. A household earning $15,000 a year saves $90 with this tax reform proposal. A household earning up to $100,000 a year saves $1,615 in taxes. A household earning over $100,000 will save $4,365 per year in taxes.

Is this fairness? Is this equity? It is not, it is a sham. It is a sham that the Tories are hoping to perpetrate on the Canadian public. I suspect that the average savings in income tax of $8 per week which the average Canadian received on his pay cheque in the month of July will not make up for the many tax increases that the Government has imposed on many of those Canadians.

One should also mention that much of these income tax savings will be lost. In fact, most of it will be lost because of the increases in sales tax which the Government has introduced for this year. There is a $1.1 billion increase in sales taxes for 1988. Therefore, most of the poor will lose out.

When the Minister of Finance announced his tax reform proposals, he also mentioned that many Canadians have lost respect for the tax system because many large corporations did not pay any tax. In his White Paper he stated that in the year 1983, 110,000 profitable corporations did not pay a cent of tax. He was proud to point out that had his proposals been in effect, some 50,000 of those corporations would now be paying tax. Why, under these proposals, will there still be some 60,000 profitable corporations which will not pay one cent of tax?

Is this fairness? Is this equity? Is this what the Minister of Finance meant when he said: "We all know that the tax system allows many profitable corporations to avoid paying a fair share of tax year after year"? The rhetoric is great but the reality, I am afraid, is something else. The fact is that some 60,000 very profitable corporations will still not pay a cent of tax. That means that $10 billion to $12 billion in profits do not create one cent of tax. Is that what the Government means when it talks about equity and fairness and restoring confidence in the tax system? It is no wonder that many Canadians feel ripped off by our tax system.

We hear Tory Members talking about the need to raise taxes because of the terrible deficit that the Liberals left behind. I sympathize with that. I think we have a problem with the deficit. It is much too large. The amount of interest we have to pay on the deficit every year is unacceptable, it is scandalous. However, I do not accept that we have this deficit because we have been spending and living beyond our means.

The OECD figures show that Canada spends less on social programs than any industrialized country in the world with the exception of the United States. We spend the second lowest percentage of our gross domestic product on social programs; old age pensions, housing, education, health, family allowance, and income support programs. We spend less as a percentage of our gross domestic product than Holland, Ireland, Italy, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, Japan, France, or Belgium.

Why is it that little Holland, with hardly any resources and an over-population, can spend more on its senior citizens, its education system, and its health system than can Canada, a young country with a population of young people and an abundance of resources? That is, I suggest, because the wealthy in this country have not been paying their fair share.

We have the deficit because there is $10 billion to $13 billion that does not generate one cent of tax. The deficit is not a result of overspending on senior citizens or the unemployed, or because we are spending too much on education or housing. I hear the Tories complain day after day that we are living beyond our means and must tighten our belts. There are food banks in every major city of this country. Yet the Tories still have the gall to tell us we are living beyond our means. I find that obscene. It is also obscene when the spokespersons from the large and wealthy corporations tell us that we must tighten our belts because we are living beyond our means and must reduce the deficit.

One year I received a letter from the President of the Royal Bank of Canada who advised us that we must tighten our belts because the deficit is out of control and government spending must be cut. Yet in 1982, I believe, the Royal Bank of Canada had over $365 million in profits and did not pay one cent in tax. In other words, a woman teller at the Royal Bank of Canada would have paid more in dollar and cents in tax than the Royal Bank of Canada. In fact, in that particular year the Royal Bank of Canada received a tax credit of some $20 million.

That is why we have a deficit. Yet we see a letter like that from the President of the Royal Bank of Canada saying that we must cut back on old age security and pensions, cut back on the benefits to the sick and elderly, cut back on social assistance and cut back on education while there are food banks and hungry people on the streets. That is obscene.

The Royal Bank of Canada is only one example. We asked the life insurance companies when they appeared before the committee when was the last time they paid tax. Most of them could not remember because the last time they paid tax was in the mid 1970s. Billions of dollars in profits did not create one cent in tax. I suggest to the Tory Members that when they are concerned about the deficit, as they should be, they should examine why it exists. It is not because we are spending too much on social programs. It is shameful that we are second to last among all other industrialized countries in the world in terms of the amount we spend on social programs. When the elderly, the sick and the kids are blamed for the deficit, I say double shame.

The New Democratic Party Members on the Finance Committee co-operated with Government Members. I thought we produced a relatively good report. Unfortunately, the Government chose to ignore many of the recommendations of the committee. For example, it chose to ignore our recommendation of an advance corporate tax. It chose to ignore the recommendation of a minimum corporate tax to ensure that a company will indeed pay some tax if it makes a profit.

These companies enjoy a good business climate in this country. They depend upon educated young people to make profits for them and it is the public that has paid for their education. Is it not about time that the corporations paid something back to the public?

These corporations enjoy the road system and railway system in this country. Is it not time they paid for some of that? They enjoy many of the incentives governments have given them in grants and subsidies. Is it not time that they help pay for that?

We have seen the wealthy receive most of the tax breaks under the present Government. Despite all the rhetoric of the Minister of Finance about the unfairness of the existing tax system in which the rich were not paying their fair share and corporations making good profits were not contributing to the national purse, when it comes to the bottom line in Tory tax reform the Minister is taking the same action that he is denouncing. After tax reform, the rich in this country get even greater tax breaks than before.

Although the Government claims it will create more revenue from the corporate sector, already some of the Minister's estimates are out of whack. It is a farce for Government Members to talk about tax reform. It does not even measure up to the Minister's own standards.

It is true that compared to last year many Canadians will pay less tax. However, when we compare that to when the Tories came to power, most Canadians are paying more in tax. The corporations will be paying proportionately less in taxes than before.

When the Tories were elected, corporations made up some 20 per cent of tax revenues. In 1987-88, it was 15.6 per cent. After tax reform, it is projected that 17.2 per cent of all revenues will come from corporations. That is a far cry from the measly 20 per cent that existed before the Tories were elected.

The Minister has not introduced genuine tax reform. In fact, the tax system is even more regressive. Canadians will easily see through this sham, and I suggest they will reject it as they will reject the Government when it gets the courage to call an election and face the electorate. At that time Canadians will make a pronouncement on this Government that the Tories will not like.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my colleague on his analysis of this Bill. We need to consider further the kind of progressive tax policy that is needed in this country. The Government has considered using tax credits rather than tax expenditures. Does a policy of tax credits rather than tax expenditures give a break to the poor?

There are more people living below the poverty line and paying tax now than ever before in the history of Canada. I do not believe it is acceptable to anyone that we ask the poor to pay our bills. We must give consideration to a tax reform system that redistributes income on an equitable basis. Has the Hon. Member considered the difference between tax credits and tax expenditures? Does it make this legislation any more progressive?

• (1900)

Mr. de Jong: That is a very good question. In theory, yes, moving from a deduction to a credit is more progressive. It works in this way. Let us take a $1,000 deduction. If one is paying a tax rate of 50 per cent, a $1,000 deduction is worth $500. However, if one is a low-income earner and only paying, let us say, 25 per cent rate, that $1,000 deduction is only worth $250. The Government is taking away certain items as deductions and making them into credits so that the value of the credits are the same whether one is earning $100,000 and is in the 50 per cent bracket or one is earning $25,000 and is in the 25 per cent bracket. If the credit, let us say, is $200, it will be worth $200 if one is earning $100,000, and it is the same $200 if one is earning $25,000.

Having said that, it is interesting to see what the Minister of Finance and the Tory Government decided to move from a deduction to a credit and what they kept as a deduction. Those items that are important to lower and middle-income Canadians such as the personal exemption, the dependent's exemption and so on became credits. These are not too important to those earning $100,000 and more a year. What is important to them, of course, are the capital gains. What is important to them is the retirement savings plans, the RRSPs. These were not made into credits. These were still deductions.

It is interesting to note that 1 per cent of all taxpayers whose incomes are over $100,000 receive 34 per cent of all the capital gains. Capital gains do not become a credit. That still remains a deduction. Those with the higher incomes are the ones who will benefit. It is the same with retirement savings plans. These were not made into credits. They are still deductions. Those earning $100,000 per year will eventually be able to deduct $15,000 a year. If those people are in the 50 per cent bracket, that means the Government will forgo some $7,500. Even if one is earning $30,000 and puts half of that into a RRSP, the way the Government has it rigged, they could not even claim that $15,000. But let us say for argument's sake that they could, and they are in the 30 per cent bracket. That $15,000 is only worth one-third or $5,000. It is worth $7,500 to the guy in the 50 per cent bracket but only $5,000 to the guy in the 30 per cent bracket. Again, in terms of capital gains and in terms of retirement plans, these did not become credits, they are still deductions, so while on the one hand we can say that moving personal exemptions into credits is progressive, where it really counted, the Government did not move.

The Government also took away some tax deductions that are important to middle-income earners. It just wiped them out. It did not even change them into credits. For example, the $500 deduction that was previously able to be deducted because of employment expenses is gone. The $1,000 interest deduction is eliminated. These are two deductions that are important to middle-income earners. They are not as important to those earning $100,000 or more per year. Deductions that are important to middle-income earners are gone and deductions that affect the poor have been turned into credits, but deductions that really benefit the rich still remain a deduction. I think that proves my thesis that this legislation is making the income tax system not more progressive but less progressive. It is making it regressive despite what the Minister of Finance initially claimed.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware, and I do not think he disputes the fact, notwithstanding his comments, that income tax under this legislation will be reduced for 9.7 million households, over 85 per cent of all households, by an average of $490. He knows, and I do not think he disputes the fact, that about 850,000 lower-income earners will have their income taxes reduced to zero or receive refundable credits in 1988. He knows as well, and I do not think he disputes the fact, that income taxes will be cut for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households with at least one person aged 65 or over and about 250,000 elderly Canadians will have their income taxes reduced to zero. I do not think the Hon. Member disputes any of those facts, but he does dispute a good many of the changes that have been made in the legislation.

Would the New Democratic Party eliminate flow-through shares? Would the New Democratic Party eliminate the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for farmers? Would the New Democratic Party eliminate the deduction for Registered Retirement Savings Plans?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, in his rhetoric, the Hon. Member wants us to look at 1987-88. He does not want us to look past 1987. He says we are dinosaurs if we talk about 1986 and 1985. Does the Hon. Member want me to totally blank out and not consider the full record of this Government since it was elected in 1984? I do not think that would be quite fair. We have to look at where things were when the Tories were elected and where things are now. It is true that compared to last year, all these people are off the income tax rolls. But did the Hon. Member not hear my address? Perhaps he did not. I pointed out that since 1984, the Tories have added a million people to the income tax rolls.

Mr. Redway: Did you hear my comment about that?

Mr. de Jong: Yes, but that happened before 1987 and I am a dinosaur for looking back prior to 1987.

Mr. Redway: They did not have a job before.

Mr. de Jong: The fact is that you guys dropped the deindexation of the income tax and so all at once a whole bunch of people got moved onto the income tax rolls.

Mr. Redway: Those people were unemployed before.

Mr. de Jong: That is the reason why more people, poor people, ended up paying income tax. For example, let me put on the record that the $3.1 billion that is going to be taken out of the income tax system, or the $3.1 billion that is going to go back into the pockets of people because of the changes in the tax regime because of tax reform, means a savings of $3.1 billion to taxpayers in this country, but with respect to the bottom income group that means 26 per cent of all householders will receive some $257 million in total as a tax break. That is 8 per cent of $3.1 billion.

Twenty-six per cent of all householders will receive 8 per cent of the benefits. The top income group, which represents 2 per cent of all householders, will receive $379 million in tax breaks, or in other words 12 per cent. Twenty-six per cent of the low-income earners will receive 8 per cent of the total tax benefits whereas 2 per cent of the top-income earners will receive 12 per cent of the tax breaks that the Minister of Finance has introduced in this budget.

Is this fairness? Is this equity? Is this what the Minister of Finance talked about when he said: "We all know that the tax system allows many profitable corporations to avoid paying a fair share of tax year after year. We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax than the average Canadian wage earner year after year"? Is that what he meant when he said that the average Canadian taxpayer is paying more taxes than the wealthy? It is a sham.

What this is about, as my figures have indicated, is that low-income Canadians are still paying more and that high-income Canadians are getting even more tax breaks than before tax reform. It is a sham. It does not hold water.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that my Conservative colleague asked a question to the last NDP Member who had the floor, wanting to know whether an NDP Government would do away with the capital gains tax exemption for farm producers, whether the NDP Government would abolish—no, he ought to listen instead of shouting—whether an NDP Government would abolish flow-through shares or boost corporate taxes. There was no answer, Mr. Speaker. The NDP Member chose to criticize something else.

But I want to go back a bit further in the debate because my Conservative colleague did raise a very good point, particularly when he referred to the capital gains tax exemption for agricultural producers who, in my opinion and in the opinion of most Members who are genuinely concerned about the nation's business and the public weal, know full well that their $500,000 capital gains tax exemption is not a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption for wealthy people.

This is something our Government had promised in 1984 to help Canada's farm community get back on an even keel, and that is the way we forged ahead thanks to the generosity of the Minister of Finance.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for giving me this opportunity to take part in the debate this evening. I think it is a very important debate, precisely because it deals with the tax reform as set forth in Bill C-139.

Mr. Speaker, some people have their own peculiar vision of what a tax reform should be, but as a responsible Government, a Government whose budgets follow a logical sequence, we simply could not come up with a tax reform featuring every single change which should have been made to the Canadian tax structure. That is so because over the last 20 years there was no major overhaul of our tax system despite the fact that we made significant economic progress and that tax rates underwent some changes, in the sense that corporate taxes declined while personal income taxes increased.

The Opposition, headed by the father of the federal deficit, the leader of the Opposition, not to name him, has accused the Conservative Government of not having done enough. Mr. Speaker, a little history lesson is in order. When we came to power in 1984, the deficit was already over 200 billion dollars divided among all Canadian taxpayers including low-income families and our future generations. In the final analysis, that amount was spent for purely partisan purposes and in an irresponsible manner by a Governement supposedly willing to defend the interests of Canadian consumers.

When we were elected in 1984, Mr. Speaker, under the leadership of our Minister of Finance, we said that we were going to clean up public spending and the facts have proved us right. First of all, we had to bring our spending under control.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought down his first budget. Liberal and New Democratic Members said that we would never be able to recover our expenses. They were wrong. We recovered our expenses and we brought the deficit under control.

With the second budget, we reduced the deficit. This year we cut the deficit even further and we introduced tax reform.

Myself and many of my constituents do not understand the New Democrats and the Liberals when they say that tax reform penalizes the poorest families.

Mr. Speaker, I have read the documentation in French and English and found that 850 000 Canadians will no longer be paying any income tax. Indeed, 850 000 low income earners in Canada will not pay taxes any more. And I would respond to my NDP colleague who just made a stupid statement which I find beyond comprehension when he said that the rich are the ones who benefit. Mr. Speaker, those 850 000 low income Canadians are ordinary people who live in my riding, in his riding and in those of my colleagues and who are getting some relief thanks to a Governement which has been able to take charge of public finances, thanks to a Finance Minister who has been able over the last four years to manage budgets rigourously, to lay down within the Civil service, within the departments, budget restraints, more than 70 percent of which have been absorbed by the Governement, regardless of what the two opposition Parties would have us believe . . . That is why, Mr. Speaker, our Government is able, along with the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to put in place a tax system, a fiscal framework, because we do not claim, as a Government or as a Party, that all problems can be solved in one fell swoop.

We leave the magic wands to the Wonderful World of Disney, which is to say the "World of Broadbent". We act in a rational fashion, Mr. Speaker, and that means controlling spending first and then moving forward progressively with legislation.

We have thus seen over the last four years the Conservative Governement put in place an allowance for widowers aged 60 to 64. The Liberals had promised as much but it took a Conservative Governement to deliver the goods. We have seen an increase in the child tax credit. We have seen social measures for senior citizens. We have seen social measures put in place for low income families. We have also seen, Mr. Speaker, incredible benefits. We only have to think of what our Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) just announced about child care, a very important program for all Canadian families, for all low-income families, for all families that need government assistance. That is the thrust of our tax reform. And that is why we can rightly say in all honesty that the tax reform presented by the Minister of Finance will give low-income Canadians major tax benefits.

People on low incomes, Mr. Speaker, have always been and will always be a special group for our Government, special in that the Governments of our industrialized countries must do their best to help these people.

Despite what the Liberals and New Democrats say about tax reform being meant for the wealthiest individuals and for big corporations that pay no tax . . . For us, Mr. Speaker, as the figures clearly show, tax reform means that 2 million Canadian families will be entitled to a higher refundable credit. Two million Canadian families will have a refundable credit of $70 instead of $50 for adults and $35 instead of $25 for children.

Mr. Speaker, under this tax reform eight Canadian families out of ten will pay less tax. Certainly the Liberals and the NDP will not make me believe that eight Canadian families out of ten were rich families, privileged families. Certainly there must have been some that were low and middle income families. Eight Canadian families out of ten will pay less tax—this is a courageous move from a responsible Government and it will benefit the neediest, those who deserve a greater amount of Government support.

Mr. Speaker, tax reform in my view is of direct benefit to senior citizens, especially since nine out of ten senior citizens, people of 65, will pay less tax. As a responsible Government, as a Government that has a concern for the last phase of the productive life led by senior citizens, we were obligated, as is the Minister of Finance, to ensure that our senior citizens could profit from that very significant tax system.

Mr. Speaker, we do not boast we will solve or have solved everything. But let me come back for a moment to the income levels at which individuals used to start paying income tax before that tax reform. For a single taxpayer below 65, it was $4,940 before the reform, and after reform it is $6,220. Mr. Speaker, $6,220 does not involve the rich. For a couple under 65, with one source of income, two children of 18 or less, it was $16,670 before tax reform, and after reform it becomes $18,890. For singles 65 or over, before tax reform it was $10,785, and after tax reform it is $11,430. For a married couple 65 or over, it was $16,945 before tax reform, and after tax reform it is $19,010.

Mr. Speaker, I see a Liberal Member opposite who seems to find the reference to those figures funny, but let me tell you that the tax reform provided by this legislation helps Canadians much more than the tax framework under which the Liberals had led us over these last twenty years.

Mr. Speaker, when we say on this side of the House that we took our responsibilities, this is true. And how did we do that? There is the minimum tax for high income-earners. The removal of tax havens for high salaries did not exist under the Liberals, because under the Liberals, Mr. Speaker, people could go and buy yachts, they could buy houses in Florida, they could split capital, they could do almost everything, and they paid no income tax.

Under their Government, Mr. Speaker, people who paid no income tax were the rich. Under this Government, Mr. Speaker, people who pay no income tax after tax reform are the neediest. We can prove that because the supporting figures say that 850,000 low income Canadians no longer pay income tax.

Mr. Speaker, the tax system we knew for years hit Canadians hard. Just think of the billions of dollars Liberals squandered under their infamous scientific research tax credit program, where companies sent billions of dollars through that loophole supposedly for research but which in fact remained in their coffers. Such was the Liberals' social justice.

The Liberals' social justice, Mr. Speaker, also let interest rates jump to 16, 20 and 22 per cent, froze pension increases to 5 and 6 per cent when the inflation rate was 12 or 16 per cent. Such was the Liberals' social justice—letting Canadians sink lower and lower below the poverty level, creating an increasing gap between the rich and the poor, a gap that increasingly favoured the richest to the detriment of the poorest. And now, all of a sudden, as if by a miracle, because this is the appropriate word to be used after 1984, we see on the Liberal side, or what is left of it, Members like the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who overnight became the champion of widows and orphans.

Mr. Speaker, where was the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie when the Montreal refineries closed their doors? He was sitting comfortably in his office, saying: «I don't bother to defend the workers. I don't bother to defend those who need help. I stand behing my Government. Nowadays, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is traveling across Quebec and Canada to say that the Conservative Government in unfair. But, Mr. Speaker, Canadians, and I have met a large number in my riding, are not that easily taken in. They know how much the old tax system established by the Liberal Government has hurt them in recent years. They know about the new tax structure we will apply, which we will have to change from time to time because it is not perfect, we admit it. They know that the better system is the one we proposed through the Minister of Finance, since the Minister thought that the corporations should be paying more. How will we do it? By expanding the tax base and telling corporations: You will now have to bear a larger burden of the expenses incurred by the State, and assume greater social and economic responsibilities towards the State. Canadian taxpayers have done their share during the last years, and, unfortunately, in some cases, they have done too much. It is now your turn to pay your share of the taxes.

At the same time, we said, and the Minister of Finance has confirmed it in writing: Taxpayers will pay less. When they fill in their income tax returns, Canadian taxpayers will owe less money to the federal taxation authorities. Why? Because we have to restore the balance. In order to do so, we cannot change everything at once and redress the system, in other words, go completely into reverse. We have to change things progressively, and that is the object of the tax reform. When applied, the tax reform should, immediately, increase the tax share of corporations and diminish it for individuals. That is why I am proud to say that 850 000 Canadians will no longer pay income tax, that 9 out of 10 Canadians over 65 will no longer pay income tax, that this Government, through its Minister of Finance, will work to make it possible for every Canadian to save money and increase its purchasing power. We are setting up a new balance.

A while ago, I heard a NDP Member tell us that the Government was favouring corporations at the expense of the needy. One of his colleagues nods in agreement.

Mr. Speaker, some months ago an NDP Member moved a motion in this House blaming the Government for maintaining flow-through shares; now, a few months later, he moved another motion this time calling on the Government to maintain flow-through shares. Mr. Speaker, the situation is such that nobody knows exactly where the New Democratic Party stands any more! Yet, that is exactly what happened and the official record of this House can back me up. A NDP Member rose in the House and accused the Government of being too generous with Canadian corporations with flow-through shares, that it should get rid of them because they favoured the rich at the expense of the poor . . . It is a member of this same party, with a very slight possibility of becoming the next government, who rose and said that the House should blame the Tory Government for removing flow-through shares. That is a blatant evidence of intellectual cowardness at the decision-making level and shows that Canadians should not trust the New Democratic Party.

Again, Mr. Speaker, it is also true when we consider that the $500 000 capital gain tax exemption mostly benefits farm producers from all parts of Canada. Our Party does not feel that they are rich, contrary to some high-income people who could certainly afford to pay income tax. No, Mr. Speaker! This is a sector of economic activity which we must assist. And it is for these people that we have implemented the capital gain tax exemptions.

NDP members and some Liberal members are saying that we should abolish that capital gain tax exemptions. Personally, I am against removing the capital gains tax exemption for our farm producers because they need protection and their economic interests should be promoted. We should assist them through regional development and the capital gains tax exemption is a way to achieve that.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to say just how proud I am of the Minister of Finance, of the responsibility he has assumed over the past few years, especially through his tax reform, because he has managed to stand on his own two feet, contrary to all the Ministers of Finance before him over the past 20 years. He has given this House and Canada a new direction, a new approach based on income tax fairness, which means that corporations will pay more, that taxpayers will pay less, that the rich will not enjoy tax exemptions and loopholes as they did under Liberal governments, and that this way we will be able to give Canadians a more equitable social system, more suited to their needs and an economy made for them where they will be treated with fairness from coast to coast.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to participate in this debate. Perhaps before we proceed much farther we ought to remind ourselves of some of the comments that were made by Conservatives in the election campaign of 1984 in relation to tax reform. We all know that politicians, particularly Conservative politicians, have a tendency to speak with great compassion, in great urgency, but when the time comes to seek concrete and specific action, something is left wanting, something is omitted.

Tax reform. I wonder what Joe Howe would have said of the Conservatives' promises with regard to tax reform. For Members opposite, Joe Howe was a great Nova Scotian. He fought for responsible Government. One of the underlining pinnings of democracy and of responsible Government, as Howe defined it, was the foundation of accountability. When we look at the Government's action, and indeed omissions, as it relates to tax reform, we see very clearly that they must be accountable for their actions and for their lack of actions in other areas of tax reforms to the Canadian people.

Prior to the end of their mandate we have before us Bill C-139. By the words of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), it is a piece of legislation which supposedly is to be tax reform, but in its substance and in its essence there is not much that will benefit the Canadian people.

Tax reform, as touted by the Leader of the Conservative Party during the last election, was going to be major, substantive. It was going to be effective and equitable for all Canadians. Bill C-139 does not live up to the billings of some four years ago. We should remind ourselves, as well as Canadians, that it was four years ago and then some in the campaign in July and August of 1984 that promises were made to the Canadian people with regard to tax reform. They have not moved with great urgency, they have not tried to facilitate an agenda which would result in major substantive tax reform for Canadians.

It has come at the end of their mandate and just prior to a federal election. The Conservative Government is trying to make Canadians believe that it has been concerned about tax reform and has done something very substantive, hoping that the first 36 months of their administration will be forgotten by the majority of Canadians. Well, it has not been forgotten by the majority of Canadians. That is why I remind government Members that, as Joe Howe fought for the principle of accountability, that principle of accountability will be brought to the forefront in the next election as it relates to their lack of action with regard to the subject of tax reform.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), has outlined the reasons and the rationale for our opposition to some of the measures which are being put forward by the Conservative Government of the day.

In summary, they can be stated in seven reasons. First, we oppose this reform because its intent is merely to have Canadians forget four years of massive tax increases. I will come back to that. It is massive tax increases. Second, because it is unfair, mainly to middle-income Canadians. Third, it does not improve the progressivity of the tax system. Fourth, because it is incomplete. Sales tax reform has been delayed until after the next election.

Is that not a buzz word for this Government? We had the smoke and mirrors, the singing of When Irish Eyes Are Smiling in Quebec, with the President of the United States, only to find out some time later that Canadians would be entering into an arrangement with the United States where we would in effect be selling many of our natural resources and, in particular, energy, at a very, very low price.

We oppose this legislation because it makes the tax system more complex, not simpler. It discourages capital formation and it reduces the competitiveness of our corporations, mainly those in the manufacturing sector.

In summary, those are the seven reasons as enunciated and spoken at length by my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides. The new structure of tax rates and tax breaks is not progressive enough. Hon. Members opposite know, and only know too well, that these rates are not enough. The gap between the second and third rate is not large enough—three points only—in comparison to the nine-point difference between the first and second rate.

If you want to be fair and equitable, you must put in place a system which is fair and equitable in order to achieve the end result. Even some Republicans have tried to be progressive, people like Theodore Roosevelt. He talked about tax reform. Yet, there is nothing here to equal some of the statements and sentiments expressed by Ministers of the Crown and Members of Parliament with regard to equity in the tax system.

• (1940)

Three brackets are all there is. Even after tax reform, 60,000 profitable corporations will still pay no tax. I remember posing a question to the Minister of Finance. His response was: "Well, you know, we are trying to do better". Is that what this is all about, Mr. Speaker? I thought there was a substantive package being put forward by the Government of the day.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I think if the Member checks the record he will find that the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) answer was to the effect that those 60,000 companies lost money at least one if not two or three years prior to that.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not you ruled that that was a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: A point of correction.

Mr. Dingwall: A point of correction says the Hon. Member. Perhaps he could read carefully what Hansard reported on that particular day and dissect the response of the Minister of Finance, who often puffed and shifted feet from one day to the next and from one answer to the next and did not respond with any degree of clarity other than to say in terms of his conclusion: "We are trying to do better". Quite frankly, from a Government which promised tax reform, which campaigned on tax reform and received the largest majority of any Canadian Parliament, it has fallen far short, far short, of the promises made to the Canadian people.

Even after the implementation of a minimum tax, 5,220 taxpayers who earned over $50,000 did not pay one cent in tax in 1986. You cannot in all fairness say to the working people, to those people on fixed incomes, that the system is fair when they can readily and easily point to situations where Canadians are not paying one copper in tax. What about the working man or woman who puts in a good day's work for a fair rate of pay? At the end of the week or the end of the month when they collect that pay cheque and find that there are taxpayers making in excess of $50,000 paying nothing while they are paying a substantial amount of taxes, particularly under this Conservative administration, how are they supposed to have faith in the system? There is no faith by many Canadians in this tax system which the Government promised to reform so as to give us some equity.

Of these 5,220 taxpayers, some 40 earned in excess of $250,000. That is a lot of money. It may not be a lot of money to the Minister of Finance, but it is a lot of money to average Canadians across the country whether they reside in Newfoundland, British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario or in many parts of western Canada. Contrary to the promises made by the Minister of Finance, the tax system has not been simplified by tax reform at all. We have not seen, although we have asked to see, some demonstrable proof of tax simplification. I think all Members would concur that that has not taken place. Even my colleague who rose on a bogus point of order would concur with that particular sentiment.

Mr. Friesen: Careful now.

Mr. Dingwall: In October, 1986, the Finance Minister affirmed in the document Guidelines for Tax Reform in Canada that one of the guidelines was to make the tax system simpler to make it more readily understood by more Canadians. That has not been achieved. The House of Commons Finance Committee concluded its chapter on simplification by stating, and I quote for the Hon. Member who rose on the previous point of order: "It is disappointing for the committee to draw the inevitable conclusion that the proposed tax reform has not successfully addressed the problem of simplifying the tax system". That is found at page 136 of that report. An all-Party committee clearly, and by a process of consensus, reached that conclusion.

I commenced my remarks, and I believe I have only a few moments left, by referring to a principle enunciated by a great

Nova Scotian in the person of Joe Howe who fought for responsible Government, particularly for the principle of accountability. Let us today as a Chamber account for the Conservative record over the last four years with regard to taxes. The record must be corrected, as I am sure the Hon. Members opposite would at every opportunity. With regard to sales tax, in October, 1984, we had a 1 per cent increase in that tax. The effect was $1 billion in revenues for the Government of Canada. In January, 1986, that tax went from 10 per cent to 11 per cent, which brought in another $1 billion for the Government of Canada. This tax rose from 11 per cent to 12 per cent on April 1, 1986, which brought in another $1 billion. Since the Conservatives have been in power, the sales tax has gone from 9 per cent to 12 per cent, costing Canadians some $3 billion. Where is the fairness, Mr. Speaker? We know that the sales tax affects and hurts those Canadians least able to afford it.

The Government extended the sales tax to such things—old Mr. Scrooge himself, the Minister of Finance—as candy, soft drinks, health goods, dental instruments and snack foods. That is what the Minister of Finance did. On July 1, 1985, this cost Canadian taxpayers $400 million. In July, 1987, there was an additional $60 million in taxes collected, for a total of $460 million. That is what the Minister of Finance did for kids. He put tax on candies for children. That shows you how tough, how determined our Minister of Finance is with regard to fairness in the tax system. He said to the four and five year olds and to the nine and ten year olds across this country that the Government would have to charge them more for their Crispy Crunch. What a complete and utter joke.

Yesterday I referred to the Conservative Cabinet as the Keystone Kops. Another prime example of the Tories wonderful achievements in the last four years was to say to four and five year olds: "I am sorry, the deficit has to be cleared up and you will have to pay for it. Get into line. We need to have more taxes on candies".

We have had increases in sales tax from 8 per cent to 12 per cent on paint and wallpaper and, oh, yes, a tax on toys. It was not enough to hit the kids for candies, the Government had to go after kids' toys. That was done in January, 1988, for a total of $60 million. Of course, there were increases in the excise tax on gasoline. Listen to this, Mr. Speaker. On September 3, 1985 there was a raise of 2 cents a litre on gasoline for a total of $900 million. On January 1, 1987, we had a 1 cent increase for a total of $450 million. That was duplicated again on February 19, 1987, for another $450 million. Again on April 1, 1988, there was another $450 million. That is some accountability on the actions of the Government of the day. It goes on and on and on.

In conclusion, Sir, it is quite obvious that when Canadians stop and reflect on what has taken place over the last four years and the proliferation of tax increases, compared to what is proposed in this Bill, they will find that the Government has again broken its promise to them. I find it very upsetting indeed that the Government would place an undue burden on certain elements of our society while it allows certain others, the more fortunate, further tax benefits and holidays. The Government does not care enough to try to resolve the problem.

Those are some of the reasons why I oppose this measure and why it is important that we make the Government accountable for all its actions over the last four years, not just the last few months because we are nearing an election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quoted Joseph Howe, a famous politician and statesman from Nova Scotia, and said that he fought for the principle of accountability. That is a principle I certainly believe in very strongly and I was most interested to hear the Hon. Member refer to it. He also indicated that this Government should be held accountable for its record of the last four years.

It is also interesting to note, and I know the Hon. Member will find it interesting also, that his leader served as Minister of Finance from January, 1972, to September, 1975, a period of four years similar to the period of time the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has served. I know the Hon. Member will be aware that during the time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance the deficit rose by $4 billion, while during the current Government's four years the deficit has been cut by $9 billion.

He will know as well that total spending when his leader served as Minister of Finance increased by 107 per cent, whereas during this Government's time in office total spending has increased by only 21 per cent. He will know as well that when his leader was Minister of Finance the prime interest rate rose 3.75 per cent, while in the last four years it has fallen 3.25 per cent.

He will know as well that the inflation rate while his leader was Minister of Finance doubled from 5.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent, but over the last four years it has remained stable at about the 4 per cent range.

He will know as well that while his leader served as Minister of Finance the number of unemployed climbed by 164,000, while in the last four years the number of unemployed has fallen by 430,000.

He will also know, I am sure, that during the four years the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance, personal income tax revenues rose by 76 per cent. During the last four years, personal income tax revenues will have increased by only 55 per cent. That means that personal income tax revenues rose 38 per cent more under his leader than under the current Government.

Does the Hon. Member agree with me that his leader, his Party, and he himself should be held accountable for those things as well?

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member alluded to certain figures which he may have pulled out of his hat or the hat of a colleague, but it is very clear to anyone who has entered Parliament in the last 10 to 15 years that we have been held accountable, just as the Hon. Member and his colleagues will be held accountable in the next federal election. He will, as we have in previous elections, have to account for the expenditure plan, account for deficits, account for tax increases, account for social programs introduced, account for assistance given to the elderly, account for the various programs dealing with housing, energy, and a host of other things that were put before the Canadian people who will adjudicate accordingly.

However, I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he is going to try and provide bogus arguments about a previous government, hoping that Canadians will somehow forget these last four years, he is making a mistake. His Government was given the largest mandate the Canadian people have given any Government based on a promise of, among other things, substantive tax reform. Yet the complete opposite has occurred.

What has happened? On January 1, 1986, family allowances were deindexed along with the income tax rates at a cost of $635 million. We had the elimination of the federal tax reduction on January 1, 1986, $650 million. We had elimination of the deduction for the registered home ownership savings plan, $105 million, on May 22, 1985. The list goes on and on and on. It is obvious to Canadians that this group which was trusted to run this country has clearly and unequivocally come down on the side of the corporate sector. That infringes, in many instances, on the average working man and woman in this country.

The Hon. Member can twist, do the limbo, rock and roll, the Crosbie shuffle or the Wilson two-step, but it ain't gonna help because he will be held accountable for the four years his Government has spent in office.

The Government has fallen miserably. It has lost the trust of Canadians from one coast to the other. They think you are shysters. They do not believe you. All they remember of the Government is scandal, not tax reform. Hon. Members are coming to life now because the truth hurts. It hits them in the heart because Canadians have seen time after time, whether it be deindexing senior citizens' pensions, or a proliferation of goodies for the Conservatives' corporate friends, this has been a rape of the middle class. You shall be accountable and we shall run in the next election shoulder to shoulder on what you have done over the last four years.

• (2000)

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was talking about accountability. I certainly think that accountability is important. However, I am wondering whether the Member has considered the accountability of the Government's response to the deindexation of the family allowance and the increase in taxes for families with children versus working couples with no children.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, that is a very sensible question regarding a very important problem which had a dramatic and devastating effect on a lot of low-income families across the country. I know there are big shots in this House of Commons who make a lot of money, or have made a lot of money. However, we must recognize that a lot of Canadians are living from paycheque to paycheque and scraping by. Some of them are going to food banks. Some of them find it very difficult, as a result of the legislation and actions of the Conservative Government, to find enough money to buy snowsuits and boots for their kids in the wintertime and to provide them with enough money to go to a show on the weekend. Of course, if you are a Conservative and are poor you should not have any entertainment; entertainment should only be for the select few who can afford it.

The impact has been very substantial indeed. People who are scraping to make ends meet are, in some instances, aided by provincial and municipal Governments, but the fact remains that they are not living on the types of salaries referred to earlier in debate which go by tax-free. Not as partisan politicians, but as thinking Canadians, we must realize that it is no wonder that large numbers of Canadians believe they are being ripped off and have legitimate and profound concerns about the tax measures of the Government.

It does not take a very tough Minister of Finance to tell a four-year old that the tax is going to be increased on Juicy Fruit gum. However, it underlines that the Government has no heart, that it does not care. It cares only about its friends, its corporate Tory friends.

The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) rose in this House one time when in opposition and read a letter from a constituent from another part of the country, I think it was North Sydney, who talked about the lack of heart of the then Government. What about the Government's attempt to deindex the pensions of senior citizens?

Mr. Nunziata: She's leaving; she can't take the truth.

Mr. Dingwall: The truth hurts. The fact is that not on one occasion, not on two occasions, and not on three occasions but repeatedly the Government has singled out the middle-class Canadians, the poor, and those on fixed incomes to bear the brunt of government action while its corporate Tory friends get away scott-free.

I could name those friends but I do not want to get into a game of sleaze politics prior to an election. We will save that for the hustings. In the election campaign the Government will be accountable for its actions and inactions with regard to its corporate Tory friends. What John Diefenbaker said that dogs do to poles is what is going to happen to the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien).

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the advantages of tax reform and to go on to more serious matters, after listening to the Hon. Member for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely state that most Members in this House are in favour of tax reform, in other words, a thorough revision of our tax system. Today's debate is about choosing the approach that is fair to the largest possible number of Canadian taxpayers.

The new legislation on tax reform is simply a reflection of the basic principles of lower tax rates and a broader and fairer tax base. The fairness of our system is the main concern of Canadian men and women. In fact, they will judge the new system in terms of this fundamental principle.

During the last ten years, Mr. Speaker, the system has failed to meet the legitimate expectations of Canadians with respect to fairness. So many people are wondering why their neighbour, who earns more than they do, is paying less in taxes. And why does the system contain so many loopholes that are of little benefit to the average Canadian unless he or she can afford to spend a lot of money on accountants and lawyers?

When the present Government came to power, we asked ourselves the same questions and, like so many Canadians, we were not satisfied with the answers. Consequently, we have eliminated a number of loopholes. The scam of the century was the scientific research tax credit program introduced by Marc Lalonde. We can say today, and we will say it again during the election campaign, that this was the scam of the century in Canada during the past twenty-five years.

Mr. Speaker, we introduced a minimum tax for Canadians on high incomes. We limited the option of redistributing income among members of the same family. We got rid of certain tax shelters involving investments in consumer goods such as yachts and pleasure vehicles. We put an end to the serious abuse of tax credits mentioned earlier, the scientific research tax credit of Mr. Lalonde.

However, in order to provide for a system whose fairness and effectiveness would be in line with the expectations of Canadian men and women, a complete revision of personal and corporate income tax and sales tax was necessary.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians told us that above all, they wanted their system to be fair and that they didn't want the majority of taxpayers to be deprived of certain advantages for the sake of a small group.

They told us that corporations and private citizens on high incomes should pay their fair share of income tax. They told us that people in the same income bracket should pay substantially the same amount of income tax. They said that above all, Canadians on low incomes, especially the elderly, deserved fairer treatment.

Mr. Speaker, our tax reform reflects the desires of Canadian men and women. Perhaps I may point to one particular aspect of the reform which I feel illustrates the general principle of fairness which has been our constant guide. I am referring to benefits for the elderly.

Tax reform certainly meets the needs and aspirations of all Canadians, but it is especially beneficial for people 65 and over.

As of 1988, nine out of ten senior households will pay less income tax. In other words, about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households that have at least one person aged 65 or over will pay less income tax. Furthermore, nearly 250,000 seniors will no longer pay income tax. That is what this Government has done and what is really important for our seniors.

The minimum income subject to income tax for seniors has also been changed. Depending on the type of income, the minimum for single people will be $11,430, or $645 more. For married couples, the minimum will rise by more than $2,000, to $19,010.

These changes are due to the reduction in tax rates and the conversion of personal exemptions and some deductions into tax credits.

This conversion is particularly beneficial for people aged 65 and over. Indeed, it is largely because of the greater value of credits that more than 90 per cent of senior households will pay less income tax.

Mr. Speaker, income tax credits will make the system fairer and more progressive. Members of this House know that exemptions are worth more to high-income individuals because they can reduce income that is subject to a higher marginal tax rate. On the other hand, credits directly reduce the amount of tax that seniors have to pay. They are worth the same for all taxpayers. For example, the new age credit for people 65 and over will be $550 in 1988. This represents a tax decrease of $550, whatever the level of income. It is a considerable additional tax saving for most seniors, because the exemption that the new credit replaces would only have been worth $450 for an individual declaring a taxable income under $25,500.

But for senior citizens with income of $55 000 or over, the former exemption would have been $775. Since some 80 per cent of senior taxpayers are at the bottom tax bracket, the new credit for the great majority of them means a significant improvement in terms of system fairness. Also, the basic personal exemption, that of the spouse and the disability credit all are worth more for most senior citizens than the exemptions they replace. Converting the pension income deduction into a 17 per cent credit up to a maximum $170 will still benefit those senior citizens whose taxable income is below $25 500. For most Canadians 65 and over, those credits will largely compensate for the elimination of the $1 000 deduction for investment income.

Mr. Speaker, certain other deductions involving senior citizens also will be converted into income tax credits:

-The deduction for medical expenses becomes a 17 per cent credit. All taxpayers whose medical expenses are not covered by insurance will also enjoy the same income tax reduction;

—The new credits for tuition fees and student expenses applicable to post-secondary students involve a significant change: The unused portion of the first $600 of those credits can be transferred to the spouse, parent or grandparent who assumes the maintenance costs of the student;

—The new, two-tier credit for charity is not only fairer to all taxpayers, it should also generate higher charitable contributions.

Low-income seniors also benefit from the increased sales tax credit. The level of family income at which that credit begins to decrease in value has been raised by $1 000 to $16 000.

I would also like to take this opportunity to mention the fact that the Minister of State (Seniors), the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), recently published a book.

> This publication was made possible by seniors themselves. They suggested that I publish a complete, detailed guide with every possible information on federal programs available to them.
> This idea . . .

As he states in his message . . .

> . . . strongly appealed to me and you can now see the results. Your comments on that guide will furthermore be welcome because they can be included into the later revised editions.

As maybe seen in this book, reference will be made to income security, such as Old Age Security programs, Old Age Security pensions, Guaranteed Income Supplement, spouse's allowance, the Canada Pension Plan and all other provincial programs.

This is a publication the Hon. Minister of State (Seniors) had prepared for every Canadian man and woman.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure all senior citizens that tax reform will not affect the Old Age Security program. The Guaranteed Income Supplement and the spouse's allowance will remain tax free. Canada Pension Plan and Quebec Pension Plan benefits will not be affected. Finally, the unused portion of the age credit and pension income credit will remain transferable, just as the exemptions they replace.

Mr. Speaker, some senior citizens who earn high dividends or capital gains or have access to other tax benefits will have to pay a fairer share of taxes. However, those people usually earn high incomes. They will still benefit from the reductions in the tax rates and will have an advantage over wage-earners and those who receive basic pension revenues, but they will pay an amount of tax which is closer to what people with comparable earnings make. That is only fair.

As my colleague from Champlain (Mr. Champagne) was saying earlier, the entire $500,000 capital gains exemption will continue to apply to allowable agricultural equipment. This will be of great benefit to retired farmers who often cannot build up a pension fund. This exemption also covers capital gains from small business shares.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the Government's tax reform lives up to the high expectations of Canadians as far as fairness goes. All things considered, it will allow the vast majority of Canadians to pay less tax, senior citizens being the main beneficiaries.

As I mentioned at the beginning of my speech, our Government has eliminated the tax shelters. To think that the Auditor General of Canada stated in September 1987 that under the Liberals billions of dollars had been wasted. Indeed, the then Minister of Finance learned, in early 1984, that there were problems with the R&D Tax Deduction Program. He was warned again of the situation around the middle of the year, and several warnings were made by public servants to all the Federal Liberal Members under the Trudeau and Turner régimes. Public servants had warned them that a lot of money was being wasted through this tax shelter. Had they intervened earlier they could have saved a lot of money, and I am talking about billions of dollars.

I noticed as well that there was a feature article that same year in the magazine L'Actualité, and my colleague and friend from York East (Mr. Redway) told the standing committee it was the fraud of the century, an unprecedented embezzlement carried out by the Government itself.

That is quite a conclusion . . . when the Liberals raise the spectre of scandal and immorality. We too will have a chance during the election campaign to say exactly what happened concerning this $1.9 billion swindle. We could have built 50 hospitals throughout Canada with that kind of money, we could have built community centres for elderly Canadians, we could have built social centres for senior citizens. Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of deals we must unveil before the public. That is what happened in 1984.

In conclusion I would urge all Members of the House to join me and support the tax reform, an outstanding initiative for Canadian men and women as well as for all elderly people in this country. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

• (2010)

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment and then pose a question to the Hon. Member. My comment concerns the scientific research tax credit.

I agree with the Hon. Member's statement that the scientific research tax credit turned out to be a complete waste and an abuse. This initiative that first began under the Liberals was a scam that resulted in a loss of roughly $1.5 billion.

The Hon. Member was quite right that the Liberals were warned. However, I do not quite understand why the Conservatives took almost a year to shut down this tax credit. The Conservatives were elected in September, 1984. In October, 1984, the Minister of Finance tried to implement a restriction, but he also allowed a grandfathering clause. This meant, for example, that if the Hon. Member and I had a scientific research agreement written on the back of an envelope, the research credit would be honoured.

Statistics will show that of the approximate $3 billion lost on the scientific research tax credit scheme, over $1 billion of it was while the Tories were in power. Had they shut it down completely in October, 1984, we could have saved $1 billion. However the Minister waited until May, 1985, when he finally realized the types of abuses that were occurring, to shut it down. What he did in May of 1985, he should have done in October of 1984. Had he done that in October of 1984, he would have saved over $1 billion. We made that point in the fall of 1984, but the Minister of Finance said that a commitment was made, that after all this was the law, and that the liberals had allowed it to be. In other words, he was saying that a commitment was made and even though there was all this abuse he could not shut it down. He left in the grandfathering clause and that cost Canadian taxpayers a further $1 billion. This went on until it became so obscene that he finally just had to shut the whole thing down, regardless of what previous agreements had been made.

That was the comment I wanted to make. I come now to the question I want to pose to the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member stated what all government Members state when they echo the Minister of Finance. We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax year after year than the average Canadian wage earner. The Hon. Member stated as well that higher-income earners should pay more taxes. Therefore, is tax reform fair when it results in a family which earns over $100,000 a year receiving a tax break of $1,615 and families with an income of between $30,000 and $40,000 receiving only an income tax break of some $320? Is that what the Government means by "higher-income Canadians paying more tax"? Tax reform in this form means that those earning $100,000 or more receive a tax break of $1,600 while the average income earner earning between $30,000 and $40,000 will only receive a tax break of some $320.

Is it fair that under this particular tax proposal 175,000 families whose incomes are over $100,000 a year will be receiving an average tax break of $365, compared with a $90 tax break for families earning less than $15,000 a year? Is it fair when the tax reform so obviously favours the rich and is only of minimum help to the poor?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe we have a quorum in the House at the moment, do we?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We do have a quorum now. The Hon. Member for Abitibi.

[Translation]

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, it is a good intervention on the part of the NDP Member. She forgot to count Government Members, she counted Members on her side only and we can see for ourselves that the NDP does not have a quorum. That is what we understood. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Before answering the question of the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, I should like to point out something to him, particularly in connection with Marc Lalonde's scientific research tax deduction program. Referring to La Presse of Wednesday, September 30, 1987, for we know Opposition Members in the House often draw inspiration from daily newspapers or the Quorum . . . I will go back a little further, back to Wednesday, September 30, 1987 where it says:

> The Liberals are responsible for the fact that Canadians lost billions of dollars.
> In a statement yesterday Auditor General Ken Dye said that without valid reason the former Liberal Government, mesmerized by the political situation, made Canadian taxpayers lose billions of dollars.

During his press conference, Auditor General Dye went on to say:

> Had they intervened earlier they could have saved a lot of money. I mean a lot of money.

It was stated in the motion from my NDP colleague that the Government of the day, the Conservative Party, had done nothing! But I have to say, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect for my colleague from the NDP that what is mentioned in the news report is as follows, and I quote:

> But so far the program, which was cancelled by the Conservative Governement shortly after it came to power, amounts to $3.5 billion . . .

It is clearly stated in the La Presse article. We must rely on articles written by newspapermen and in this one which is written by Canadian Press, it is clearly mentioned that this is shortly after the Conservative Governemnt came to power, the Canadian Governement, under the leadership of the one who has been showing us how to run an economy in the last four years, how to take up the challenge at home, how to build an economy with the future of our children in mind, the right Honourable Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In other words, this is a $1.9 billion rip-off.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell my NDP colleague that he is right to say that this has cut into . . . Mr. Speaker, I have not finished . . .

In my speech, and I am aware of the fact that many are looking forward to speaking . . . I spoke mainly about senior citizens. And that is what is really important.

M. Boudria: Fine, say no more!

Mr. St-Julien: Single people over 65 years of age . . . for a 65 year old couple with two children, the base was $4 440 before the reform and $6 220 after.

But to answer his question, in the case of senior citizens in Canada, not many are earning $100 000 in pension income. Not many have $100 000 in the bank.

The subject of my speech was senior citizens and fiscal reform, a reform which was put in place by a very competent government and which is truly fantastic for Canadian men and women, for seniors.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on tax reform. I have in front of me some criteria on how we should test tax reform. First, the burden of income and consumption taxes should be removed from low-income families and individuals. Canadians with incomes below the median or mid-way point for 1987, an estimated $13,000 for a single person and $42,000 for a family of four, should pay less total taxes, both income and consumption taxes. Only the taxpayer with an above average income should bear a heavier over-all tax burden under the new system. Tax reform must restore full indexation of tax brackets and credits, and the tax mix should not be altered to get more revenue from the regressive sales tax and less from income tax, which is the only progressive part of the over-all tax system. That is fairly clear. It is not too complicated a way of being able to judge legislation for tax reform.

We have looked over the years at what has happened to the tax system in Canada. There is no question in our minds that we certainly have ourselves into such a boondoggle that it is very difficult to get out of it. I think we need to look at some kind of criteria to see how we are to do it. Canadians must be terribly insulted by the kinds of reform the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has brought before this House. It is not reform. One thing we have done is to recognize the fact that additional revenues should not dependent on sales tax. As we look at the Bill before us, we find that more and more people with adequate incomes will have their taxes reduced. Sure, we have reduced the brackets from ten brackets to three brackets, but it is looking more and more like the flat income tax which the Fraser Institute, that right wing institute, wanted to implement over the years. The rich Conservatives certainly ascribe to that kind of philosophy and policy, but it is not the kind of policy average Canadians want to have implemented.

We must recognize that in 1984 when the Government came into office it said that it wanted to be fair and honest. It promised tax reform. If it had said since then that it had changed its mind and was not going to go ahead with it and that it would reduce taxes for the rich, then that would be okay. What is most upsetting is the sneaky way that this measure has been introduced. There has been a lot of rhetoric with respect to the introduction of this Bill.

If we look at what the Bill is all about, we see that what is being done is that a burden is being laid on the poor. A family earning $10,000 which was not paying any tax up until now will be paying about $1,100 to $1,200 in taxes in the form of sales tax in the next year.

What upsets me even more is that the return of taxes which was to be implemented January 1 will not come into operation until July 1. If the Government really thinks that Canadians are that gullible, then it has a great surprise coming to it. The electorate is not stupid. The electorate understands on what it is paying taxes and to whom it is paying them. Members of the public know that they will be getting a rebate even though they have been paying more taxes in the last four years than they have ever paid before. They will receive a rebate on July 1. That will be retroactive to January 1. That is an insult to their intelligence. It is a crass political operative type of program.

If we look at the loopholes about which the Government brags about closing, we know that some of them do not come into effect until 1991. What the Government is really saying is that perhaps after the next election we will be able to change the minds of some of the politicians and we will be able to continue with our tax breaks. That is not any way to run a railroad, and it is certainly not any way to run a country.

What Canadians have been looking at over the years in terms of tax reform is fairness and honesty. I travelled across the country when I was in another position which I held before I came here looking at the tax system. What I heard from Canadians right across the country was: "We do not mind paying taxes. But we really do object to knowing that people who are much better off than we are are paying less taxes than what we are paying". Canadians are not selfish or greedy. Perhaps the top 2 per cent of income earners might be. Perhaps their modus operandi is to ensure that they pay less tax and keep more for themselves. On the whole, as a society, we have clearly demonstrated over the years that we do not mind redistributing our income.

Another item which disturbs me is some of the rhetoric being used with regard to accountability and having to be careful in the corporate sector. The Auditor General for years has asked to have an accountability with regard to tax expenditures come forward to this House. In this way, for instance, if there was a tax expenditure in place we would know whether it was doing its job or not. The reason we have got into the science and film industry and other areas which have not necessarily worked is because there was no accountability and no measuring. To allow a tax exemption and not to look at its merits and not to see what it is doing to stimulate whatever industry it was put there for simply does not make sense.

We have heard that corporations are not paying taxes because three or four years ago they lost money and therefore they cannot afford to pay. If I had been unemployed for a couple of years and I consequently became employed, National Revenue would not say to me: "Because you did not have any income for two or three years you do not have to pay any income tax this year". That is something which does not make any sense.

The rhetoric which has been used in the introduction of this Bill has been an attempt to make the system look very complex so that the ordinary person cannot understand it. The ordinary person can understand finances. They know how to run their country. They care about what happens to their public dollar. They will not be had by this type of façade that says that we now have in front of us tax reform. We do not have that.

I have heard members of the Government say that they cannot tax corporations too high because if that is done there will be no incentive for reinvestment. It has been said that initiatives will be discouraged. Studies have shown that a measure of this type does not provide incentives to business. The level of taxation on corporations has no effect on whether or not they will reinvest.

In this respect we need only consider Japan, which has a very high level of productivity. The tax level in Japan is at 86 per cent. We realize that with this policy we do not have to be afraid to redistribute the income where there are massive profits being made. I will never understand the reluctance of people after they get into public office who say that, yes, it is an unfair system and, yes, we have to do something about it, and lo and behold they do nothing about it.

I know that there is a heavy dependency on the bureaucrats and the advisers when we have these types of Bills put before us. I think that our professionals should be well paid. I think politicians should be able to live within an adequate standard of living. I am not into a martyr syndrome at all. However, if we look at the people who deal with this type of policy, as well as every Member in this House—and I am not talking in a partisan way—we see that we are living a lot better than a lot of people living in our constituencies. The people who draw up these Bills very often have not been in that two room or three room accommodation where there are two or three children. They do not recognize that those people are still paying taxes.

I cannot express to Hon. Members how much it upsets me when I realize that very low-income people are paying taxes. By flattening out the tax system and by going to a consumption tax what we are really doing is saying: "Okay, poor, you have paid some now but we are really going to get you every time you buy something—and you can't wait for a sale because you do not have any extra cash. We'll get you then. You'll have to pay at that point in time". That is not a compassionate type of policy. This is not a compassionate type of Bill.

More important, this is not an intelligent piece of legislation when we consider it in terms of reinvestment in our country and in terms of stimulating the economy through the tax system. What we have in front of us is a Bill that does not provide us with the type of accountability for which we are looking. It is a Bill which states that we do not have to measure what the incentives were.

A great many of my constituents in Hamilton Mountain are over the age of 65. I have heard various Members of the House address the income of senior citizens. Wiping out the $1,000 investment exemption does not mean a thing to people who have large incomes and large investments. For the ordinary working person who has invested, for example, seniors who are receiving $1,000 annually, they have looked at it as part of their income. As one gentleman said to me, it has been the way in which he has been able to provide Christmas for his family. He knows that with this money he can get things for his grandchildren and feel comfortable about it. Now that $1,000 is gone. It is being taxed. When bureaucrats look at those types of things and decide that they have to get rid of some exemptions, they take a whole page and get rid of them. Not a lot of thought went into the recommendation to take away that $1,000. It is not the upper-income earner who is hurt, it is the ordinary person who is hurt by that type of policy.

There has been much talk about the number of people who will drop from the tax lists. We must look at the number of people who came onto the tax roll since 1984. All of a sudden they are to be dropped and we say that that is good. That does not make any sense. That is not reform, but regression to where we were. I hear the Conservatives saying that they want to be different from the Liberals, and they are going back to where the Liberals were. That is not what we want.

Certainly, if we are going to look at tax reform, we must look at starting to pay taxes at the upper end of our society so that income tax is used as a real tool for redistribution of income. We should not play games with each other. We have a very rich country with many resources. Yet 40 per cent of the clients of the soup kitchens in our major cities are children. Here we have a tax Bill in front of us that is putting a burden on families with children, and is kinder to a two-income couple who are childless. That is not the type of tax reform that Canadians are looking for.

To redistribute the income we must look at who taxes are hitting most. When we burden the poor we are making society non-functioning, and putting a bigger burden on people generally. The cry for more housing is heard. Surely no one present does not recognize the fact that soup kitchens are a cancer in our society and in our cities. People are lining up at soup kitchens and are beholden to each one of us for the crumbs from our table, and we are sitting here with a tax Bill where our own tax rate will be reduced. Most of us are at the upper end of the scale and we will pay less. Sure, it is great for us, but what is happening to the population is really hurting. They are not getting any breaks from this Bill. All they will receive are more burdens.

Further, there is an attempt by the Government to put a veil around all of this. It states that it will go to the second step after the election; the second step after we know we have you and we will really lay it on you. I have news for the Government. Canadians are not that gullible and they certainly will not swallow that.

We must seriously look at some of the companies that are not paying any tax at all. I have here a list for 1986 of income figures for certain companies. In 1986 Alcan Aluminum on income totalling $220 million received a tax credit of $32 million; Brascan on income totalling $187 million received a tax credit of $2.3 million; Power Financial on income of $132 million received a tax credit of $1 million; Xerox Canada on income totalling $115 million received a tax credit of $10.8 million. I am sure we all contribute to that company's income in our offices. Bramalea on an income totalling $51 million, no taxes were paid; Wardair on an income totalling $70 million, no taxes were paid. In 1987 Carena-Bancorp on income totalling $37 million, no taxes were paid. Hudson's Bay Company, a company we all contribute to as consumers, had income totalling $50 million, and a tax credit of $15.7 million; Seco-Camp on income totalling $43 million, no taxes were paid; Union Carbide Canada on income totalling $28 million, no taxes were paid.

These are not the types of policies that we think are tax reform. We certainly do think that there are resources in this country, and that we can redistribute that economy in a more fair way in order that every Canadian citizen has the ability to have a quality of life with some dignity.

I am certainly not giving any credit to the Liberals because they got us into this mess. They started with the tax expenditures and there was no accountability. When the Carter Commission was conducted in 1967 it was appointed by a Tory Government. When it came to reporting predominantly business commission and it was decided that there must be accountability in the tax system, Bay Street got into the act. The lobbying took place and they all backed away. Who was hurt? The ordinary Canadian. We knew in 1967 that we were in a mess and we dug ourselves deeper and deeper into it. We are giving more corporate give-aways and consistently putting a greater burden on the poor. That is not tax reform. The people of Canada will not be fooled by it.

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member had quite a bit to say on the question of fairness of the tax reform package with respect to low-income Canadians. I know that the Hon. Member would not want to leave the impression that this particular Bill and the tax reform package before the House is not going to be of assistance to low-income families, and to all families.

Miss MacDonald: Of course they would like to leave that impression. That is exactly the impression they would like to leave.

Mr. Redway: I certainly hope that we can correct that tonight, if that's the impression that they want to leave.

The Hon. Member is well aware that, for a single individual under 65 before tax reform the threshold of tax, that is, where the income that can be earned by a single individual under 65 before he or she starts paying any taxes prior to tax reform was $4,940; after tax reform it is $6,220. In the case of a married one-earner couple under 65 with two children 18 and under, which is a pretty typical case, prior to tax reform that family started paying tax when their total income was $16,770. After tax reform they will not start paying tax until the income is $18,890.

Mr. Cassidy: That is $5,000 before the poverty line.

Mr. Redway: I know the Hon. Member wants to talk and he will have the opportunity to ask a question when I am finished. I hope that he will allow me to ask my question.

In the case of a single individual aged 65 and over prior to tax reform he or she started paying tax at $10,785; after tax reform it will be $11,430. In the case of a married couple aged 65 and older, before tax reform they started paying tax at $16,945; after tax reform they will not start paying tax until they have earned some $19,010. There is a substantial difference, and the Hon. Member is quite well aware of that. I am sure that she does not want to leave a false impression.

There are some other facts as well that I know that she is aware of and that she would not want to leave a false impression about. One has to do with what is happening again with the tax cuts for couples, both earning income, with two children 18 and under. In fact, the tax refunds go up for people earning a family income of $10,000, by $280 for a $15,000-a-year couple. They go up for a $20,000-a-year couple by 59 per cent. That is a percentage of tax of 59 per cent.

In the case of a family earning $25,000, it goes up by 21.6 per cent. I am drawing to a close, but as your income goes up the percentage of savings goes down. At $30,000, it is only 11.4 per cent. At $75,000 it is only 5.9 per cent. I know that the Hon. Member does not want to leave a false impression. I know that she wants to stand up now to correct that false impression and to make it quite clear that not only are Canadians going to benefit under this tax reform package, but they will have already benefited under the economic policies of the Government as there has been a reduction in the number of Canadians living below the poverty level since it took office of 525,000 people.

In addition, the average family income has climbed, in spite of tax changes, by $1,600 in real terms since this Government took office. I know that the Hon. Member wants to correct the record and to applaud the Government for its fine work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do want to correct the Hon. Member's record. One of the things that I opened with was looking at five basic points of what good tax reform is. One of them was was that tax reform must restore full indexation of tax credits, in brackets.

Certainly, if you look at the falling threshold you recognize that tax reform will provide only a temporary respite from the downward trend in the tax-paying threshold for the simple reason that deindexation has taken place. It also depends on where you are comparing it from, whether from 1984 or from 1988. After all the regressive policies have been put in, from 1984 to 1988 you will see that it makes a big difference. However, if you just take 1988, you will see that it lifts the tax threshold up to $5,971, or 54 per cent of the poverty line. But partial indexation of the tax system pushes it back down after 1988. By 1991, federal income tax applies to earnings of $5,448, or just under half the poverty line.

I think that it is an absolute disgrace that this Government is constantly trying to mislead the Canadian people, and when they are talking about a tax threshold that has been—

An Hon. Member: What is the assumption?

Ms. Dewar: The assumptions are the deindexation that has taken place, and we are looking at about 4 per cent. It is the same as you are doing. What you are saying, if you wanted this tax reform to be able to sustain itself so that people would be better off, is you would keep the deindexation in place. By deindexing, what you have done is wiped out the ability to be able to sustain that plateau. Of course, if there is no inflation, your index rate would be there. But you have taken that away.

An Hon. Member: What is the difference?

Ms. Dewar: What you have done is made everybody vulnerable. It is insidious that this Government is constantly attempting to tell the people of Canada that they are going to be better off when they know that this kind of policy is in front of them. I think it is important to recognize that it is the upper level, about 2 per cent of the people of this country, who are going to be better off after this is through, and the rest of us are going to be carrying the burden for the mismanaged Government that we have in this country today.

Miss MacDonald: Such virtue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston on a question or comment.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) drew me into this debate. I was content to sit back and listen. One cannot help but to stand up when you listen to the nonsense coming from the Member of Parliament from the Conservative Party. I would like to ask the Member from the Ottawa area if she can comment on the credibility. It is Hamilton. I am sorry. You were formerly from Ottawa and you went to Hamilton. In any event, I would like the Member to comment on the issue of credibility. In the election campaign, the credibility and the integrity of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Conservative Government will be at issue. She knows that even after tax reform 60,000 profitable corporations will still pay no tax. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) knows that even after the implementation of a minimum tax, 5,220 taxpayers who earned over $50,000 will not pay one cent of tax, or did not pay one cent of tax in 1986. Of these 5,220 taxpayers, 40 earned $250,000 and more. She knows as well that if we compare the total amount of tax paid by taxpayers in 1988, after tax reform in 1984, when the Conservatives took power, we realize that only families with incomes of over $117,000 a year paid less tax in 1988 than in 1984.

These families account for the top 1 per cent of all Canadian families. The Member for York East said that he does not want to leave a false impression. I put my question to the Member for Hamilton Mountain: Would she not agree that the Member for York East was really stretching it in terms of credibility? I recall very specifically, when the—if the Conservative Members opposite would grant me the courtesy of listening, maybe they will have the opportunity to stand up and defend the Conservative Budgets and their economic policy. I appreciate that we are nearing the bewitching hour of nine o'clock. Perhaps the Member for Hamilton Mountain could comment on the Conservative Government's attempt to deindex senior citizen pensions when they talk about fiscal responsibility and social justice.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. What we really have to look at is what has happened to senior citizens, what has happened to a lot of people in this country and what will happen after 1988. What I was really attempting to do was to help the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) understand the Bill that we have in front of us, because obviously he has difficulty with the figures that he is using, comprehending what the implications are of this Bill. Certainly Canadians are going to be worse off after 1988 than they were before. When we are looking at the reduction of taxes, all we are doing is reducing the taxes that we have already increased in the last three years. It seems to me that the Hon. Member needs to read the legislation so that he will understand.

THE FRANCHISE

OPPOSITION TO PENITENTIARY INMATES ACQUIRING RIGHT TO VOTE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Supreme Court of Ontario has decided that prison inmates in Ontario are entitled to vote. The court ruled that a provision in the Ontario Elections Act that disenfranchises prisoners is contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The effect of this decision is that all inmates, including federal inmates, will be allowed to vote in provincial elections. The effect of this decision is that inmates such as Helmut Buxbaum, Colin Thatcher, and Clifford Olson will be allowed to vote and to participate in the democratic process. That would be unconscionable, Mr. Speaker.

A Canadian citizen who is incarcerated and deprived of his freedom for committing a crime should also forfeit his right to vote. The right to vote should belong only to those who are Canadian citizens and to those who have respect for the rule of law.

• (1405)

I call on the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to request that the Attorney General for Ontario immediately appeal the decision. As well, I call on the Government to seek an amendment to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to exclude inmates specifically from the franchise.

QUEBEC MUNICIPAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INVESTMENTS—JOB CREATION

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, in order to promote and encourage job creation, the Québec Municipal Economic Development Board has been associated with many projects in the industrial zones and parks of Quebec City.

In 1986, this resulted in some $41 million of investment. In 1987, the value of projects in which OMDEQ was involved reached $62 million, an increase of over 50 per cent. In two years, more than 2,000 jobs were maintained or created.

This performance reflects the dynamism of Quebec enterprise, small and medium-sized companies working in the service and high-tech sectors.

For 1988, we expect nearly $100 million in industrial and commercial investment for Quebec City. That is encouraging, Mr. Speaker! The very healthy economic climate resulting from the policies of the Conservative Party in Quebec and throughout the country is certainly responsible.

Like André Joncas, the director of OMDEQ, I would like to thank all those investors for openly showing their confidence in the promising future of the province's second most important economic centre, Quebec City, the capital.

AGRICULTURE

CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF LONG-TERM DISASTER ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago the Government announced some ad hoc drought assistance for western cattlemen. Being ad hoc in nature, the program is being designed and implemented on the run. It is already experiencing administrative problems.

First, cattlemen will have to wait several weeks before they can even get application forms. This means that they will experience cash flow problems well before the Government will be ready to pay out the promised assistance.

There is concern because the assistance rates are based on geographic areas which are too large to reflect drought damage accurately. Farmers on one side of a road may get less assistance than their neighbours on the other side of the road, even though both are equally affected by the drought. Other similar problems are coming to light.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) would implement a long-term disaster assistance program as he promised he would do three years ago, farmers would not be faced with these administrative headaches. New Democrats call upon the Government to act now to develop a long-term disaster assistance program for Canadian farmers.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BELL CANADA STRIKE—APPOINTMENT OF MEDIATOR URGED

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Bell Canada strike by some 19,000 members of the Communications and Electrical Workers of Canada has to be resolved. I have here a letter from the Government Relations Department of Bell Canada which reads in part:

> Despite the general walkout, the company is making every effort to maintain reasonable service to its customers.

The company should tell that to the people of Elmvale Acres and Chapel Hill in my constituency where serious sabotage has taken place in the last 24 hours which has knocked out the phone services there. In fact the people there cannot even get access to emergency services in the event that they are required.

Phones are an essential service in Canada now and should not be disrupted by sabotage. I am led to believe that neither party is talking. There is no expression that the parties want to get together. They are both unwilling to make concessions on key issues.

I call upon those concerned to stop burning cables and to start talking like intelligent, mature, responsible people. I also call on the Government to be prepared to appoint a mediator within 24 hours if no progress is made on this issue.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF HIGHLAND FISHERIES PLANT IN GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, last weekend, Highland Fisheries Ltd., a subsidiary of Clearwater Fine Foods of Halifax, closed its processing plant in Glace Bay, Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, throwing 310 people out of work in a town where there is already chronic unemployment.

The company closed this plant without proper reason and with a total disregard for the contributions the federal Government has made to the company and its predecessor in the last number of years. The manner in which this company has gone about this closure shows a total lack of corporate integrity and will not be forgotten by the workers.

In light of the closure, the responsibility now lies with the federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon). He can, using the many tools at his disposal, encourage senior management of that particular plant to reassess this closure and to have a business plan put in place in order to make the plant operational. The community and the workers want this to take place. They want co-operation. They want employment. They want the Government of Canada to come in on their side and fight for their economic interest by having this plant reopened.

HOUSING

TORONTO—USE OF FEDERAL LANDS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the housing crisis in the greater Metropolitan Toronto region becomes more acute as each day passes. Families are having a very difficult time buying a home due to high costs. In fact the perception beginning to set in is that, if you do not already own a home, you never will unless you have solid financial resources.

As a Government we must ensure that affordable housing is available to all. Presently the Town of Vaughan is in the process of negotiating with the federal Government the purchase of a 107-acre property owned by Environment Canada. The Government should sell the land with the condition that the majority of the site be used for affordable housing.

I believe that all surplus federal land which is to be sold must have affordable housing as its main usage.

SPORTS

APARTHEID—TREATMENT OF BLACK AND WHITE SOUTH AFRICAN ATHLETES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the 1977 Gleneagles Agreement which Canada signed specifically requires the signatories to discourage participation by their nationals in events involving South African athletes, and to withhold support for organizations promoting such contact.

Tennis Canada, a federally funded organization, invited two white South Africans to participate in the Players Cup next month in Toronto. Meanwhile, Albert Ramovha, a black softball player from Soweto, sought a visa on his own to attend, as a mere spectator, a tournament in Saskatoon. What was the Government's response? It was to deny the black softball player a visa because he might be mistaken for an official of his virtually all-black softball association.

There was no mistake with the white South African tennis players, for they were treated differently, and the invitation by Tennis Canada was legitimized. Why? Because $815,000 in prizes available to the South African tennis players make them admissible as entrepreneurs.

That is a policy so inconsistent with the Gleneagles Agreement, a policy based upon the greater weight of private profit over professional principle, a policy so discriminatory as to proclaim the victory of hyprocrisy over commitment, a policy intolerable to all opponents of apartheid that it must be changed so that Canada lives up in full measure to its commitment under Gleneagles.

TAX REFORM

BENEFIT OF INCOME TAX REDUCTIONS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was talking to my daughter who remarked "Dad, I got a raise". "Great", I said. "How much?" She replied, "About $55 a month". I asked her if she had checked her pay statement to discover the source.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Listen!

Mr. Tupper: In doing so, she discovered there was no change in her gross pay but that the increase was a result of her income tax reduction. On checking with other members of my family I found similar results.

In a major parade that I was in last Friday evening, several constituents called out "Thank you, Mike Wilson". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised that some 80 per cent to 85 per cent of all Canadians would pay less income tax under tax reform. Canadians are discovering that he was correct.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

CANADIAN COMMITMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, during each fiscal year the Opposition in the House of Commons has a total of 25 days to bring forward items and issues it feels should be debated. On March 4, 1988, I introduced the following motion for debate:

S. O. 21

> That this House recognizes the pivotal role that NATO continues to play in mutual security and defence and in furthering progress in arms control and disarmament and, therefore, reaffirms its commitment to continued Canadian participation in and active support for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization as a primary instrument of Canadian defence policy.

At the end of the day's debate a vote was taken on the motion. The NDP voted against it. We did not expect a Conservative Government to do the same thing, but every Conservative MP and cabinet Minister did vote against the motion. Only the Liberal Party voted for this reaffirmation of the NATO alliance. The Government had been strong in its rhetoric about NATO and then stood up in this House and voted against this reaffirmation on behalf of Canada.

NATIONAL REVENUE

EDMONTON TAXI FIRMS—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks Revenue Canada officials in Edmonton announced their intention to assess selected Edmonton taxi firms for unemployment insurance contributions for taxi drivers, based upon existing federal tax jurisprudence. Such assessments will be retroactive to January 1, 1987.

• (1415)

Edmonton taxi brokers have expressed deep concern that the introduction of such unemployment insurance contribution assessments on a selective basis will create instability and, mostly, unfairness in the Edmonton taxi industry as drivers will move to unassessed taxi firms.

The taxi industry is an essential component of the Edmonton transportation network, especially now as Klondike Days, a major tourist attraction, start tomorrow in Edmonton.

I urge the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) to introduce a UI premium contributions moratorium until all Edmonton taxi brokers have been assessed and properly notified of Revenue Canada's policy intentions in this regard.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LAND CLAIMS—OBSERVANCE OF SASKATCHEWAN FORMULA ADVOCATED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, Indian people from all over the country, and especially from Saskatchewan, are becoming increasingly frustrated with the Conservative Government.

This week the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations is hosting a forum at the Beardy Reserve to express their outrage at the Government's failure to settle outstanding land claims. Once again I and the New Democratic Party join Saskatchewan Indians in demanding that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) honour the Saskatchewan Formula, an agreement which was signed 11 years ago.

Much time and thought have already been spent on negotiating land claims. What is needed now is the political will and backbone to live up to those agreements. These treaties were not negotiated so that a Conservative Government could replace them at whim. Indians should not have to go to court to have these land claims respected.

By failing to commit itself to settling land claims quickly the Government is demonstrating its lack of commitment to the Indian people of this country. This country needs a New Democratic Party Government which will respect the rights of all its people.

DEMOCRACY

FUNDAMENTAL CHANGES TO CANADIAN LIFE—OBLIGATION TO GO TO THE PEOPLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Only the Canadian people have the right to change the fundamental nature of this country. Canadians have the right to vote on the trade agreement with the United States, but the Prime Minister has no mandate from Canadians to implement this agreement. Will the Prime Minister call an election and let the Canadian people decide?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons is now considering and discussing a great piece of legislation on free trade, and we intend to continue our work. To answer the Leader of the Opposition, I can inform him that when I came in I heard about a statement he just made, and I was surprised to hear that the Leader of the Liberal Party would offer the leadership of his elected Party to a handful of Liberals appointed to the Senate. This violates the most fundamental principles of our democracy, and the people of Quebec and Canada are watching.

[English]

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, only Canadians right across this great country have the right to change the fundamental nature of how we live in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is a basic democratic issue, allowing the people of Canada to decide on a matter which is critical to our future.

I have not requested the Senate to reject the deal, I have asked the Senate to allow the people of Canada to reject the deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The issue is a simple one for the Prime Minister. Let the people decide. Why does he not call an election on this trade matter and let the people decide?

Mr. Rossi: Don't sell Canada.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have always believed that it was the fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy that the House of Commons was supreme.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: The people are supreme.

Mr. Mulroney: We have today a violation of one of the most fundamental precepts of British parliamentary democracy. The Leader of the Liberal Party has asked the Senate of Canada, a bunch of appointed people, to hijack the most fundamental rights of the Canadian House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: The Leader of the Opposition wants me to run against Allan MacEachen, but I want to run against the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE CALLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, you know that I love and respect this House of Commons. But I say to the Prime Minister that the people are supreme and we will take this issue to the people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rossi: Call an election.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Neither the Prime Minister as Leader of the Government, nor his colleagues, nor, with the greatest of respect, the Members of this House received a mandate from the people of Canada to change the nature of this country the way that trade deal does. I call on the Prime Minister once again to let the people decide. Call an election today and let the people make up their minds.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has introduced a very novel concept into our constitutional considerations. This issue came up in another way during the life of this Parliament. On November 20, 1987, The Toronto Star reported that the drug Bill was approved as Senators surrendered. It stated at the end: "The entire process was extremely awkward for Liberal Leader John Turner who said both that he supported the proposed Senate amendments to the Bill but that he also believed the will of the elected Commons should prevail at the end of the day".

Of course, the will of the elected Members of Parliament must prevail at the end of the day. This is an unacceptable new concept that the Leader of the Opposition is introducing, that the will of the House of Commons should prevail at the end of the day, unless and until he asks Allan MacEachen if it is all right. It is all right. The contrary is not all right. The people of Canada will deal with the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MANDATE TO LEGISLATE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, what is at stake is not the supremacy of the Senate or the House of Commons, but the fact that Canadians should be allowed to decide on a fundamental question, the free trade agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Leader of the Government, during the campaign for the leadership of his Party, took a very clear position against free trade when he said, and I quote: "Free trade with the United States is like sleeping with an elephant; Canadian factories will be unable to compete with American firms operating on a much larger scale, without some form of protection . . . ". Since that was the message he gave Canadians, where did he get a mandate to adopt legislation without consulting Canadians first?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Quebecers are going to be very interested to hear what the Hon. Member just said. In fact, he is telling Quebecers and Canadians that despite the signing of the agreement, despite the fact that the Government of Quebec and seven other provinces have approved the agreement, and despite the solemn commitment of the Government of Canada and the favourable reaction of our elected representatives, the Liberal Member would have this impressive authority make way for the Liberal Senators, the same Liberal Senators who, when they were considering Bill C-22, tried to strangle economic expansion in Montreal. It didn't happen with Bill C-22 and it won't happen with free trade!

LIMITS OF PRIME MINISTER'S MANDATE

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we are beginning to see how the Prime Minister wants this fundamental debate to be held. Instead of letting free trade be the order of the day, he is trying to change the course of the debate. I will ask the Prime Minister again, since he did not answer my question: Where does he claim to get his mandate to change the very fibre of the country in a fundamental way by bringing in such an important piece of legislation, a law that will profoundly affect the future relations of Canadian men and women with the United States, when he held a totally different position during the leadership campaign and during the 1984 election campaign?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on November 18, 1987 in Le Journal de Montréal, the following was printed: "Last August, John Turner said that the Senators appointed by a Prime Minister had to accept the decisions of elected representatives. The Liberal Senators were appointed by a Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and they must bow to the will of the people." Well, Mr. Speaker, that is a new and interesting strategy!

[English]

This is a new one and an interesting one, Mr. Speaker, because last week, on July 7, on page A4 of The Globe and Mail we read:

> The Liberal majority in the Senate will not block the federal Government's legislation to implement the free-trade agreement with the United States, Liberal Senate Leader Allan MacEachen said yesterday.
> "I would think not twice, but 20 times before I would recommend the Senate kill the Trade Bill in one plunge of the dagger," Mr. MacEachen said—

Now, in an act of desperation, the Leader of the Opposition no longer wants the House of Commons to consider this important matter. He wants to resign his leadership in favour of the Senate, and I say that is not good enough for the Canadian people.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will recall that in 1983, when he was asked whether the kind of deal he has now negotiated with the President of the United States would be desirable for Canada, he said no. The former Secretary of State said no at that time. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said no. The Minister of Finance said no at that time. The issue is, should the people of Canada have a right to decide on this deal before the Prime Minister signs? Will he agree now with the majority of Canadians who want an election on this and do the right thing, dissolve the House and go to the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Let's go! Let's go!

Some Hon. Members: Go! Go! Go!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a first, the NDP defending the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Right on! Absolutely!

Mr. Mulroney: We are in the process of debating free trade. We are in the process of creating new jobs.

An Hon. Member: Yes, for Tories.

Mr. Mulroney: We have announced, on Monday, the Hibernia development, so important for Newfoundland and Labrador. We are getting on with the business of creating new wealth and prosperity for all Canadians—

Mr. Riis: Buying new subs.

Mr. Mulroney: —we will do that. The House will consider all appropriate legislation and at an appropriate time I will be happy to oblige my hon. friend.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Prime Minister that we are not defending the Senate of Canada, we are defending the people of Canada. That is what the Government should be doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Prime Minister had wanted Senate reform—

Mr. Gormley: Twenty-seven per cent.

Mr. Broadbent: —we offered the Prime Minister not once, not twice, but three times, a measure that would substantially abolish Senate power, and the Prime Minister refused it three times. That is the reality.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister is now clearly reneging on what his views were in 1983, and the Cabinet itself, most of the Members of which opposed this kind of approach in 1983, has betrayed its trust to the people of Canada, does the Prime Minister have one good argument for not going to the people of Canada after almost four years into his mandate, a mandate in which he has betrayed his most serious commitments to the people of Canada?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP asks if I have one good reason for not calling an election.

Mr. Manly: Besides being afraid.

Mr. Mulroney: The work of the first mandate has not been done. As I have already indicated, our four years will not be up until September 17 next. I know my hon. friend is very exercised about the fact that people may have had a change of heart in respect to policy. Canadians can consider that. They will consider as well the change of heart of the Leader of the NDP in regard to NATO.

[Translation]

DEMAND THAT A GENERAL ELECTION BE HELD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister wants to debate and discuss external affairs, domestic affairs, and the Free Trade Agreement with the Americans, the New Democrats are ready. The Conservatives are the ones who are not ready for an election now.

And so I ask, for the third time: If the Prime Minister is confident in this approach to relations with the Americans, why does he not want to call an election, not in September, not in October, but right now?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the socialist leader is calling for a general election. He had asked during the winter that the population be given the possibility of expressing its wishes through a vote. And so I called a by-election in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding.

The Leader of the NDP expressed his point of view at the time. We saw the results of his intervention in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding and I will give him the opportunity of measuring up, not only in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding, but in all of the ridings of Quebec and Canada.

EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

HIRING OF FILIPINO WORKERS ON THE MARY NOUR— MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

For two years now, the Miron Company in Montreal has been hiring Filipino workers for its factory ship, the Mary Nour, at an hourly rate of $1.74; they work nearly 80 hours a week in deplorable conditions, in violation of our labour and immigration laws.

Is the Government prepared to investigate this situation? What does it intend to do to stop this deplorable practice?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we did look into this matter. The Coast Guard investigated the situation as it arose. I am informed that this does comply with our immigration laws and with our employment laws concerning the crews of foreign ships. We are continuing to monitor the situation.

I can assure the Hon. Member that, should we discover that there is something that is outside the law, we will be happy to do something about it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE TO PREVENT EXPLOITATION OF WORKERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is a clear contravention of Canadian labour laws and Canadian immigration laws. The Canadian public and the Minister should know that.

In this case we have people not simply acting as sailors but acting as industrial workers. Since they are acting as industrial workers, they should be subject to our labour laws and our immigration laws.

I ask the Minister this question once again. Will she immediately take action to stop this deplorable practice of exploiting workers employed by a Canadian company in a Canadian port?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can simply repeat my first answer. We have taken a close look at this situation. My officials inform me that they are operating within the law, both within the immigration laws and within the employment laws of Canada.

I assure the Hon. Member, the House, and the people of Canada that I will ensure that my officials continue to enforce the law.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question. In view of the fact that there are now considerable obstacles which are going to exist before his trade deal is accepted, I want to ask him in a very straightforward way if he is prepared to give a commitment to the House that there will be an election called before January 1, before the trade deal comes into effect, so that the Canadian people will have the right to pass judgment on this deal which is so harsh for their future.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had already answered that question in my response to the Leader of the NDP. In fact, the answer was such that it has driven him right out of the House. One shot and right back to the swimming pool!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: The usual Mulroney cheap shot! It's no wonder you're a scumbag Prime Minister in the eyes of most Canadians.

Mr. Mulroney: I just want to tell my hon. friend that at an appropriate time there will be an election. He will have a chance to put forward his point of view. The Canadian people will have a chance to judge him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE HELD PRIOR TO AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, after that belly-flop into his swimming pool, I would like to ask the Prime Minister the question which he has not in fact answered. Will he see to it that before this trade deal comes into effect, that is, before January 1, 1989, there will be chance for Canadians democratically, through an election, to pass judgment on whether the Bill makes sense to Canada or not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend and anyone else co-operates in getting the Bill through committee, I will invite him and others for a swim.

Mr. Riis: What a funny guy!

Mr. Nystrom: Smart ass!

Mr. Mulroney: And then we can move on. I have already answered my hon. friend, and I have answered his Leader—

Mr. Riis: That's the kind of Prime Minister we have, a Johnny Carson Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: —and I am trying to answer the Hon. Member but, unfortunately, I am being heckled by a member of the NDP who should know better, the so-called House Leader of the NDP.

All I am trying to do is tell the Hon. Member from Windsor that we have negotiated an important treaty with our friends, the United States of America. The House of Commons is considering it. A committee is paying attention to all the details. Once it comes back to the House and is passed, at an appropriate time we will take a look at future actions. But all of them will be consistent with the point of view that the House of Commons and not the Senate—

Mr. de Jong: And not the people?

Mr. Mulroney: —is the body that was elected by the people and should prevail.

Mr. Riis: You forgot that this is a democracy.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to Hon. Members' attention the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Tommy G. Thompson, Governor of the State of Wisconsin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—POSSIBILITY OF REOPENING CANADIAN EMBASSY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the apparent truce evolving between Iran and Iraq, and the recent government decision to normalize relations with Iran, and recognizing that in Canada there is a very large and very important Lebanese community, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows so well, can the Minister indicate what progress is being made by the Government of Canada to reopen our embassy in Beirut?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question and the interest that he has shown in this very important subject.

The Government is very favourably disposed to reopening the Canadian Embassy in Beirut. However, it would do so only after it was convinced that the personnel would be safe and could reside there in relative security.

• (1440)

I can tell my hon. colleague that the situation is being monitored very closely. When it is considered appropriate that our people would be safe and secure, then we will initiate positive action toward achieving the goal to which the Hon. Member has referred.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

BANKRUPTCY OF SHAWBEC PLANT—GRANT MADE TO PLANT—QUERY WHETHER MONEY UTILIZED ACCORDING TO SPECIFIED CONDITIONS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, I heard to my great concern that the Shawbec plant in Shawinigan went bankrupt, when only two years ago the Conservative Government approved a grant of $2.3 million for a company that until yesterday employed nearly 150 people.

I therefore want to ask the Prime Minister how much of this $2.3 million has been paid so far? What were the conditions and what steps were taken to ensure that the amounts paid were used in accordance with the conditions agreed to when the grant was awarded?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, not having received prior notice that the Hon. Member would ask for details about a very specific question, I will take his question under advisement, and we will transmit the information requested as soon as possible.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, it is a specific question, it is a very currrent issue, and the people of my riding are very concerned.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, as my supplementary, I would like to ask the Minister whether following this bankruptcy and considering the involvement of the Conservative Government, he intends to order an investigation to find out exactly what happened and why grants allocated only two years ago ran out so quickly, and also to find out whether there were economic reasons for the bankruptcy or whether it was the result of a management quarrel.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I will take the Hon. Member's statement as a representation to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I will bring the Hon. Member's comments to the attention of the Minister, and we will advise him if any action will be taken.

[English]

MARINE TRANSPORT

CANADIAN CARGOES CARRIED IN FOREIGN REGISTERED SHIPS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Under Canadian law, Canadian companies, through their subsidiaries can move Canadian cargoes on foreign flag vessels thereby bypassing Canadian labour laws, Canadian safety laws, and Canadian health laws, as in the case of the Mary Nour which is the Panamanian registered vessel now in the port of Montreal.

Will the Minister tell the House what action the Government of Canada is going to take so that in future Canadian cargoes, whether they be cement, potash, or grain, are carried from Canada to other countries on Canadian-crewed and registered vessels?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, marine shipping in Canada is subject to a set of regulations, and I have not been advised of any violation of these regulations by any vessel whatsoever. Considering the Hon. Member's request, I believe this is a normal situation. I will make the necessary inquiries to ensure that the law has been observed. If that is not the case, I will take the necessary action to ensure that there is no recurrence.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the problem is that no law has been violated. It is the approach of the Government of Canada, starting with the Liberals and continuing with the Conservatives, that allows Canadian cargoes to be transported on non-Canadian vessels, thereby allowing 80-hour weeks and $1.75 an hour, and vessels such as The Paul Martin transferred to foreign ownership.

Will the Minister, whose Department has been examining the issue, finally give an indication to the people of Canada, particularly the marine sector, of what action will be taken to prevent this from occurring in the future?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that as I said earlier, and as he himself has confirmed, no law was violated. We are talking about a policy. We intend to look into the application of this policy. Now I make no commitment that it will be changed. However, I have no objection to considering the implications, and once again, if there are any factors that are detrimental to the development of the Canadian merchant marine, I will consider his proposal.

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EASTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whomever is answering on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On June 30 the Government allowed all regional industrial development incentive programs to lapse and disappear from eastern Ontario.

Large parts of the Ottawa Valley are now without an industrial and regional development plan for the first time since 1970. Industrial parks were developed by previous Liberal Governments. Tourism projects are in need of help to get off the ground, agricultural and forestry projects need a shot in the arm, and jobs are needed.

When will the Minister bring in a regional development program to address the dilemma in which the Conservative Government has placed the Ottawa Valley?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member states that there are no programs left in that part of Ontario. He should do his homework, look at the books, and he will see that there are many programs still applicable to all of Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Name one.

Mr. Valcourt: As to the question of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology, and what type of programs will be available to Ontario and to all of Canada, the Minister should be in a position very soon to make the announcements.

ECONOMY OF OTTAWA VALLEY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should do his homework because as of June 30, as I said, there were no industrial development incentives left for that part of eastern Ontario, and there are not.

Will the Minister bring in an industrial development plan that would include promoting the opening up of the Ottawa River under a tourism plan, together with industrial incentives, in order that we could have a combination of tourism and industry in the area, and introduce a larger element of small craft and recreational boating to the area? This would improve the over-all economy of the Ottawa Valley which needs diversification in its economy.

Instead of saying that no one has done his homework, will the Minister give his commitment that he will now bring in an incentive program for eastern Ontario?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the best industrial development program for Ontario has been the economic policy of the Government which has seen the rate of unemployment drop in Ontario to 4.6 per cent. That has been a good program for Ontario.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: The Hon. Member is talking about homework. I will advise him that the tourism subsidiary development agreement is always in effect in Ontario with over $20 million in it still to commit. There is a defence industry productivity program which has seen tens of millions of dollars invested in Ontario.

Most of all, we will keep on pushing for the free trade deal, because Ontarians know that this is in their best interest, and that is a good program for Ontario.

AIR CANADA

PURCHASE OF AIRBUSES—BENEFITS FOR WINNIPEG

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Today Air Canada announced that it would be purchasing 34 Airbuses to modernize its fleet, and will also have the aircraft maintained in Winnipeg.

Does the Minister concur with both decisions by the board of Air Canada? How will Winnipeg benefit from this decision?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport always agrees with that type of decision by Air Canada. We are delighted, and we approve of the decision by Air Canada, particularly because the people of Manitoba will now trust—not the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry—but the Government of Canada. The Government of Canada has always stated that the overhaul centre will be retained in Winnipeg.

Moreover, I wish to tell the House that this decision by Air Canada will give Winnipeg and Manitoba, already having the best expertise in terms of the maintenance of all Boeing 727 aircraft, not only for Canada, but also for the United States and North America, maintenance for the Airbus 320. It is what we said three months ago to the people of Manitoba.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' SERVICE FEES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. On June 30 the Minister announced with great fanfare that a voluntary agreement had been made with the banks to drop several service charges and provide basic banking service to their customers. In the last few days my office has surveyed a series of banks across the country. It found that some branches had not yet dropped the NSF charge and most banks had not yet introduced a basic account which met the Minister's conditions.

In light of the fact that the Minister raised the expectations of consumers across the country that finally we would have justice for them, I think it is only fair for us to ask, "Where is Tom?"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister would like to answer that question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, Tom is not a Johnny-come-lately to this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: As the Hon. Member knows, on June 30 the banks, after some pulling and hauling, agreed voluntarily—by the way voluntarily on the suggestion of NDP Members as well as Liberal Members. They supported the voluntary agreement in committee—

Mr. Rodriguez: Never.

Mr. Hockin: They did, indeed; the banks agreed voluntarily to ban these obnoxious charges. A number of these charges have already been removed and the others will be removed in the next few weeks.

In terms of the basic account, my understanding is that of the eight major financial institutions in Canada almost all of them now have a basic account and two more will be moving toward having one in the next few weeks.

VOLUNTARY COMPLIANCE PROGRAM

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. I would rather be a Johnny-come-lately than a Tommy-come-never.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Settle down, guys.

It has been three weeks since the Minister introduced a so-called voluntary compliance, Mr. Speaker, and, in fact, my survey discovered that at best compliance is uneven across the country. I think it is summed up in the words of one of the bank tellers from Sydney, Nova Scotia, who responded to my survey, when she said: "Not much will be done about bank service charges until the Government legislates. We are only doing what we are doing out of good faith".

Will the Minister not agree, in view of the fact that he seems to have more faith in the banks than the people who work for the banks, that the time has come now to act, to legislate, and make changes to the Bank Act so that Canadian consumers can get justice with respect to their services at the banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the Hon. Member's research is faulty. My research indicates almost comprehensive compliance already. I would like to see his results, and if they are different from mine I will find out why.

More important, we have put in place a compliance mechanism which together with enforcing compliance will give us a report on the level of compliance right across every branch in Canada. We have done that for the consumers of Canada. The Party of the Hon. Member opposite wanted this done voluntarily in agreement with the Liberals and the Conservatives a month ago, but having done it voluntarily they stand up and criticize. The banks will comply and we will make sure they comply.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is not true.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—LIMOUSINE SERVICE PERMITS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It again concerns the issue of limousine service at Pearson International Airport in Toronto.

The Minister knows that the public is being ripped off by limousine service at Pearson International. He knows that the fares are exorbitant, that the delays are inexcusable and the service is terrible. It is all because of the monopoly that exists at Pearson International which the Government refuses to break up.

The independent drivers and owners at this very moment are protesting that this Minister issued 35 permits without tender to friends of the Government. Will the Minister stand up and explain why he gave to five limousine companies 35 permits worth over $4 million—a gift of $4 million—to friends of the Government, without tender and without advertising? Is that the Conservative way of conducting the business of the country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): I answered that question yesterday, Mr. Speaker. This Member is used to giving that kind of spectacular reaction. I told the House yesterday, and I repeat what I said, that we needed urgently to issue 35 limousine permits at the Lester B. Pearson Airport in Toronto to companies which are considered good companies which give the service that is expected in Toronto.

I said also that in the fall there will be a tender for 35 other permits and the tender will be opened up to everyone who wants to tender. I think it is a fair process.

Once again, we have more than what the Hon. Member has in mind. He has in mind a political issue. I have in mind the service to people at the Lester B. Pearson Airport at Toronto.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, we want to ensure that the system is fair. Can the Minister explain why he intends to put out the tender for 35 permits in the fall while the 35 permits he issued a few days ago were not tendered? Is that fair? Is it fair to the independent owners and drivers that 35 permits should be given to five companies while the additional 35 permits are put out to tender? Can the Minister explain in no uncertain terms today why he issued those 35 permits without tender? That is the issue, Mr. Speaker. Why did he issue those 35 permits without tender?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Member wants to make this a political issue but it is not a political issue. There was an urgent situation. We made a decision, and we have made another decision for the fall and we will maintain that decision.

FINANCE

EXCHANGE VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—INTEREST RATES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the relative value of our dollar and the level of interest rates. Can the Minister tell Canadians how he feels about the constant increase in the value of the Canadian dollar?

[English]

Is our Canadian dollar currently too high? Could the Minister comment on the Canadian interest rate level compared to that in the United States, and has he noticed any difference over the last months in these rates?

[Translation]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the value of the Canadian dollar is the result of the strength of the Canadian economy.

[English]

The strength of the Canadian economy largely accounts for the strength of our dollar. It has risen slightly in the last few weeks because of the intrinsic strength of the economy. Retail sales are up. Housing starts are strong. The expansion of credit in this country has been growing very strong in the last two months as well. Basically we have an economy in which the world has confidence.

Second, there has been some repositioning of monetary positions taken regarding the U.S. dollar with the co-operation of the United States Federal Reserve. In the sell-off of the U.S. dollar some of this value has been repositioned in the Canadian dollar which technically lifts our dollar to a slightly higher level.

More important, the Hon. Member asks about interest rates and their effect on the Canadian dollar. I think the Hon. Member should know that the spread now between Canadian interest rates and U.S. interest rates has narrowed significantly in the last three months. Therefore, the exchange rate presently for the Canadian dollar is in no way a function of the spread. If anything, the spreads are narrower. The result is a strong economy. The world is confident, and that is why our dollar is strong.

LANGUAGE TEACHERS—LABOUR DISPUTE—REQUEST THAT ALL DEMANDS FOR IMPORTANT CONCESSIONS BE WITHDRAWN

M. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Treasury Board. It concerns the fact that negotiations between the Government and its language teachers are at a standstill; the deadlock is due to the Government's stubborn determination to obtain major concessions that would adversely affect the quality of language teaching at a time when the Government has just passed a new Official Languages Act. Is the Government willing to withdraw its request for major concessions from the language teachers in order to allow negotiations to resume in good faith, with no strings attached, so that we might see a settlement of this conflict that has already dragged on too long?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate what we said earlier. A settlement was reached last September. The parties agreed to go back and sell the settlement. Unfortunately PSAC did not. The finding of the arbitration tribunal was that PSAC had not bargained in good faith.

I reiterate what we said, that the Government is ready to go back to the bargaining table and to work on either the old agreement of last September or on any new suggestions which the language teachers have.

• (1500)

REQUEST THAT NEGOTIATIONS RESUME

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, whatever happened last September, the Hon. Minister knows that even if the Alliance had tried to sell the settlement it could not sell it today. That is why there have been sit-ins and demonstrations from a group of language teachers who normally would go along with things. Why is this group being singled out among all the bargaining units by the Government of Canada, and asked to make major concessions which the Government has neither sought nor achieved in its negotiations with other groups?

Why will the Government not agree to go back to the bargaining table, without pre-conditions, without having a fixed idea of what it should achieve, and bargain in good faith, rather than trying to insist on unacceptable conditions which it knows the language teachers cannot professionally accept and will not accept?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, their negotiators accepted that position last September. I do not know for a fact how many times the employees' association was found to have been bargaining in bad faith by the Public Service Staff Relations Board but that in fact is what was found here.

We believe that the agreement reached was fair. We are prepared to go back to the bargaining table and discuss the matter. That is where we would like to be now.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET LANGUAGE TEACHERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue in the same vein. The 800 or so language teachers have been wanting to meet with the Minister for some time now. He systematically refuses to meet with them, to explain his position clearly, and to lay out conditions that might be negotiated. Can the Minister tell the House now whether he is willing to meet with the language teachers tomorrow, or this very day, in order to solve this labour dispute?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that we have skilled bargainers whose job is to meet and to negotiate. We believe the negotiating should take place at the bargaining table, not with the politicians.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is abdicating his functions. He is the Minister of State for Treasury Board and he has obligations. He has along with the employees of this Government a strong commitment to help them come to a conclusion in a conflict of such importance. Four years have gone by without a contract signed by these employees. Will the Minister sit down with them and negotiate a fair settlement? Never mind all this nonsense about, "I have professionals helping me". Do it yourself, Mr. Minister.

Mr. Rossi: He has to ask Brian.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, we are carrying on the policy of the previous Government of letting the negotiators do the negotiating. Our position is that we want them to come back to the bargaining table. We have no pre-conditions. We want them back at the bargaining table.

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-310, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, (cattle rustling and range cattle).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill that does not have a lot of interest in many of the urban areas of Canada, but in many of the rural areas we have a serious problem, particularly in those areas that raise stock. It is interesting to note that each year virtually thousands and thousands of cattle are rustled, stolen, shot, mutilated, poisoned and so on by various people. It seems to me that the House would be well advised to take a position showing our outrage at these kinds of acts.

For example, in the Thompson-Okanagan area of British Columbia alone, last year 927 cattle were stolen or disappeared, and dozens more were shot or injured by hunters and poachers and so on. This Bill would essentially provide up to a five-year sentence for anyone who was convicted of cattle rustling, and if they were convicted of mutilating or poisoning or injuring cattle, they could be liable for up to 10 years imprisonment.

I think that we have to send a very clear signal that, while stock producers are having a difficult time these days, losing thousands of head of cattle to cattle rustlers is something that should stop, and perhaps the intent of Parliament along these lines should be to send a clear signal to those unscrupulous people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today from constituents. The first petition indicates the petitioners' opinion that the Government appears to lack a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude this trade deal with the United States. They believe that the trade deal seriously compromises Canada's sovereignty, and they are asking that Parliament dissolve to enable the people of Canada to have an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

I also have another petition, which is quite differently worded, from a number of constituents who believe that the trade deal as such will result in a loss of many jobs in many sectors and regions of Canada, and that the trade deal between Canada and the U.S. would have a fundamental impact on our country's economic, cultural and political independence.

They have many other concerns, but fundamentally they are asking that the Government of Canada to enable the people to voice their opinion on this trade deal through a national general election.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present today. The first one is on behalf of a number of residents of Manitoba who have explained their concern with the issue of schizophrenia. They believe that it is a major illness in Canada, affecting about 1 per cent of the population, causing severe mental anguish and suffering to the patients and their relatives and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs.

They believe that the research effort that has been undertaken is not enough to limit this problem and not sufficient to meet the burden that this illness imposes on Canadians. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be sufficient for the seriousness of this illness.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition signed by residents of my constituency, expressing their concern regarding the issue of abortion. They believe that the Supreme Court decision has left Canadians without any law restricting abortions and that nothing in the Supreme Court decision has established abortion as a right. And whereas human life is a continuum from the moment of conception to the moment of death and there is no point of time between conception and the birth of an infant at which point we could say that this is not a human life, therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, ever pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and through all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which the abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

DOOR-TO-DOOR MAIL DELIVERY IN THOMPSON, MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my third petition is from residents of my constituency from the City of Thompson. These are the people I mentioned in Question Period earlier who are being forced to move from one trailer court in the City of Thompson to a new trailer court just a few blocks away. At the present time, these people receive door-to-door daily mail service, but because of the rules of Canada Post resulting from the Canadian Government's policy, these people will not receive personal door-to-door delivery in the future even though it is the same population moving from one part of the city to a very close neighbourhood. Therefore, the people who have signed this petition humbly call upon Parliament to demand that this cut-back in service not be allowed to proceed and that daily door-to-door mail service continue for all the residents of the trailer court regardless of its forced relocation.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two petitions, the first on behalf of constituents of Prince Albert who call upon the Government because they do not believe that the Government of Canada had a mandate to make a free trade agreement with the United States, to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. This petition, of course, forms the basis of questions we have asked in the House.

OPPOSITION TO FOOD IRRADIATION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my second petition comes from people who are mostly from Ontario, places like London and Chatham. They suggest that food irradiation not become part of the food processing system in Canada and that our children not become guinea pigs for hazardous processes like food irradiation. They call upon Parliament to have an unbiased, independent agency of scientists to complete studies on the safety of consuming each food that has been irradiated, the effects of long-term consumption and the environmental dangers involved. In the event that any food irradiated be allowed, it should be clearly labelled as being treated with ionized radiation. Labelling should include packaged, bulk and imported foods as well as spices and other ingredients in prepared foods.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the obligation to table a petition from constituents and people from Manitoba as well to the effect that they disagree with the Government's intentions of proceeding with the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement and humbly submit that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and has received nothing in return. Whereas Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, whereas the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors including agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, whereas thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers, wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement and they add that we should have an election on that issue.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly authorized petition from a number of Canadians concerned that the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to negotiate a trade deal, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in negotiating the deal promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, pointing out that the trade deal compromises that sovereignty in three specific ways: by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present to you petitions from people in my riding, more particularly, from Sackville, Dorchester, Aulac and Middle Sackville.

The petitioners deplore the decision of the Department of Employment and Immigration to again change the qualifying period for unemployment insurance . . .

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to bring justice to the situation by keeping in place the 10-week qualifying period for the rural areas of southeast New Brunswick.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and we have made some changes to the order of business today, changes which were communicated to the Parties earlier in the morning. It is our intention to call for debate the item on the Order Paper No. 35 under government business which begins:

> WHEREAS the fur industry plays a vital role in our traditional rural economy;—

There has been an understanding between the Parties that there will be one speaker for each Party and that the question will be put after the third speaker. We would then proceed to resuming debate on Bill C-139, the tax reform measure.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

REAFFIRMATION OF SUPPORT FOR INDUSTRY

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moved:

WHEREAS the fur industry plays a vital role in our traditional rural economy;

AND WHEREAS well-managed trapping, as practised in Canada, is in accordance with the principles of the world conservation strategy;

AND WHEREAS Canada is a world leader in humane trap research;

AND WHEREAS this House has previously affirmed its opposition to a proposed resolution before the British Parliament on the labelling of fur products from Canada;

BE IT RESOLVED THAT the House of Commons reaffirm its unanimous support of the Canadian fur industry in recognition of its economic importance to the country and its importance in sustaining resource development economies of both native and Northern communities;

AND THAT the House of Commons reaffirm its opposition to trade distorting measures by foreign governments, such as are now being proposed for consideration by the European Parliament.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on this motion introduced by the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) on July 18. It deals with the vital role the fur industry plays in our traditional rural economy.

All Hon. Members recall the emergency debate that took place in the House on June 1. Members from all Parties spoke on the concerns we all had that the British House of Commons was currently considering legislation which would require fur products to be labelled clearly to restrain in effect and check retailers from selling furs from Canada and the public from purchasing them.

That evening, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) gave eloquent speeches defending the trapping and fur industry in Canada. They, along with all Hon. Members, gave a clear and strong message to the British Parliament.

We all know that the British Government scrapped that Bill on June 18. All Members of the House were very pleased with the news. However, I, along with other Members, realized at the time that it was just a small victory in a very long and determined battle with a group that was intent on destroying an industry and a way of life for so many Canadians.

Today we have another threat to the livelihood of many Canadians connected with the fur industry. The European Economic Community has put forward a motion which, if approved, will have the effect of moving forward the same legislation which the British Government scrapped on June 18 concerning the tagging of Canadian pelts.

I would like to take a few moments to speak about the economic aspect of the fur trade for Canadians. The industry is worth approximately $600 million annually. There is a spin-off of $200 million for allied industries. For the last two to three years, Canadian fur exports totalled approximately $350 million annually, much of that going to the European market. To put those figures into perspective, 105,000 Canadians earn all or part of their income from the fur industry. Approximately 100,000 are trappers, half being aboriginal people. More than 80 per cent of the retail fur sales in Canada are made through privately owned, family run, one store businesses.

Above and beyond the economics of this issue, and even more important, are the social and cultural factors involved when considering the native people and our northern communities. As you well know, in December of 1986 the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development presented the House with The Fur Issue Report. The committee heard from many Canadians who depend directly on the fur trade. The report said that, for native people, trapping involves more than simply trying to earn cash income. It implies a unique social, spiritual and cultural relationship with the land and its resources. For northern communities, trapping and trade are the activities which hold the people together, creating a bond of belonging, and providing all of the inhabitants with a purpose. Those comments were echoed time and time again in our committee hearings.

May I remind my colleagues in the House that this is not the first time we have been charged with defending our fur industry. Both in 1979 and 1982 we considered the serious threat and implications of the anti-fur campaign with respect to the seal hunt. Then the European Community banned imports of seal pup pelts as a reaction to a lobbying campaign based on an emotional appeal which was very shallow in its facts. Through an effective use of the media, the animal rights movement was successful. The devastation caused by the collapse of our industry, especially in the Maritimes, is well recorded.

There are towns today which are economically ruined, where families have had to move or have been torn apart. An entire way of life was altered because we were unable to put an effective case forward for our seal hunt. The loss of that hunt and what it meant for thousands of Canadians can still be seen today in family break-ups, bankruptcies, needless suicides, alcoholism, the loss of individual self-worth, dignity, and sense of belonging. We cannot allow those tragedies to reoccur.

The impact of the animal rights campaigns and the anti-fur campaigns, particularly those in Europe, have been felt by many Canadians. Our Government, in partnership with the Canadian Fur Institute and other representatives of the industry, has taken steps to address these concerns. In the past decade we have become increasingly active in the conservation and management of our wildlife, in the development of humane trap testing and design, trapper education, and education of the public on the trapping advancements which have been made in Canada. However, it is evident from the ever-increasing and constant pressure being applied by the animal rights groups and anti-fur lobbyists in Europe on their elected members that our efforts are not being fully recognized or appreciated.

Succinctly put, the animal rights groups are unrealistic in their goals, and if those goals are met it will undoubtedly be extremely harmful to the many Canadians who depend on the fur industry for their livelihood. What the British and European Parliamentarians and public must recognize about our fur industry is that it is the responsible harvesting of a renewable resource.

I raise this issue today because I feel it is extremely important at this time to send a strong message to the European Parliaments and public. What those elected representatives are being told through the animal rights lobby groups are distortions and manipulation of fact. As they did with the pup seal issue, these interest groups have singled out Canada and our export industry as their initial target. The European public is being fed videos, billboards and posters filled with misinformation and half-truths.

The time has come for Canadian Parliamentarians to act together. I say to my colleagues that we must remain steadfast in our support for the fur industry, for trappers across our country, and for our native communities and peoples for whom the fur trade is an integral part of their lives.

Canada is in the forefront of humane trapping research. The Canadian Government and the fur industry have already committed over $8 million to scientific research programs. The results of this research in terms of improved humane trapping technology, including leghold systems, is extremely positive.

Meetings with officials from the Department of External Affairs, the Department of the Environment and the Department of Indian Affairs have been ongoing. There have been meetings with European officials to gather support for our position. I call on all Members in this House to join together in sending to the European Community members the strongest support possible for the 105,000 Canadians who are directly and indirectly employed in a vitally important industry.

I believe it is fitting to close with this final comment on how important this industry is to Canadians. I wish to draw into focus what this debate is all about. This reflects not necessarily on an economic industry or an export commodity, but on the sense of being, livelihood and way of life of individual Canadians. During our hearings a trapper came before us and this is what he had to say about trapping:

> I have been a trapper all my life. I had a family, but I lost my wife. I am just by myself now. I am 69 years old. I draw the old age pension and I am still trapping. I have never been to school. I just live in the bush. All I know is how to sign my name on a cheque. I cannot read one word, but I love the way I live.

That is what we are talking about, the livelihood of individuals, and it is being jeopardized. I want to thank my colleagues for the support they have given on an issue vital to all northern Canadian communities.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I, along with the other members of my Party, wish to indicate to the House that we support both the thrust and objective of this government-sponsored notice of motion regarding the fur trapping industry in Canada. We in this Party believe that the wording could have been even stronger but, leaving that aside, we believe we must convey a message of opposition to the European Parliament with regard to the misguided and destructive proposal to label fur products imported into the European Economic Community. These labels would have no purpose other than to create, in the minds of some consumers, a false and completely wrongly-based sense of guilt.

I regret that time allows for only one speaker from each Party because there are many other Members in my Party who would want to express their views on this important issue of the fur industry in Canada. The Member of Parliament for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins), who is in the House today, would certainly have spoken in his usual eloquent way. In fact, he has spoken on this issue. He has raised questions in the House and is giving leadership in his own constituency to those for whom the fur industry is important.

My friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), would also have spoken. He would have told the House about the devastating effect the EEC ban on the seal trade has had on communities of which he is aware. The same could be said for the Member of Parliament for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey). They would all have spoken from personal experience and with considerable emotion on this important issue.

A mammoth new volume entitled Wild Furbearer Management and Conservation has just been released. It was published by the Ontario Trappers Association under a licensing agreement with the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources. It is an important piece of work. It is a large volume and costly to purchase, but I hope that many libraries will be able to buy it in order that more Canadians can be well informed about the fur industry in Canada.

This volume quite correctly points out that the fur trade played an important part in the economic development of North America. However, more to the point of today's debate, the fur trade remains a dominant industry in the vast boreal forest of the Canadian sub-Arctic which is the largest region in Canada. I have the good fortune to represent a significant part of that important region in our great country.

Climatic conditions favour the production in this region of very high quality fur pelts. Trapping for these pelts is a means of wildlife harvesting. I cannot emphasize that too strongly. It is wildlife harvesting. This means harvesting a resource which is renewable. Trapping for these pelts means that those who engage in the industry must be very conservation-minded because conservation is an essential aspect of this activity.

Fur Industry

The vast boreal forest region of Canada does not lend itself to other kinds of industrial activity. For example, it is not well suited to large-scale agriculture. Although this region of which I speak is very well endowed with minerals, economically viable mineral deposits are found in only relatively small portions of that area. The forestry resource is substantial but commercial exploitation is generally restricted to the southern periphery of this region. Thus it is, Sir, that the fur trade is still the region's most extensive industry providing some income to the greatest number of people.

In Canada about 100,000 people are engaged in trapping. More than one-half of these are aboriginal trappers. We can safely estimate, given an average of four people in an aboriginal household, that nearly one-quarter of a million aboriginal people in Canada rely to some extent on the fur trade, a trade which in a good season may bring in between $5,000 and $10,000. That is not a great deal of money, but it is used to buy essential equipment manufactured elsewhere but needed in these modern times by our aboriginal people.

I say to you, Sir, and to all Members of the House, that if the fur industry collapses—and the proposal now before the European Parliament will, to a significant extent, contribute to that collapse if it happens—it is the aboriginal people of Canada who will suffer the most.

As many Members of Parliament know, the seal ban by the European Economic Community created serious social dislocation in a great many Inuit communities. The rate of suicide went up as did alcoholism and drug abuse. Mr. Gordon Wray, the Minister of Economic Development and Tourism in the Northwest Territories, recently indicated in an interview he gave to the Toronto Globe and Mail that:

> Animal-right groups opposed the slaughter of harp-seal pups in Newfoundland and succeeded in mobilizing the European Community to boycott seal skins in 1984. In the NWT, where most sealing is done, the hunt took only adult seals. Residents insist the centuries-old practice maintained a delicate ecological balance, as well as holding together Inuit communities.
> In 1980-81, sealers earned $884,000 but this dropped, after the EC ban, to only $77,000 in 1983-84, and then to a negligible $26,000 last year.

Mr. Wray said that the social dislocation inflicted on these communities is staggering. Children who were raised to revere sealing as an honourable livelihood saw television commercials portraying their parents as criminals. During the same period 21 of 29 Northwest Territories coastal communities received substantial increases in social assistance. Therefore, this European move created social chaos in the Inuit communities, took away the livelihood of these people, and placed them on social assistance taking away their self-respect and dignity.

In northern Ontario the Indian people who belong to the so-called Treaty Nine Area are organized as the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation. Many of these people depend on trapping as their only source of income. Recently there was an editorial in the Wawatay news, an aboriginal peoples' newspaper. That editorial said that trapping "means a way of life that retains a traditional economic activity".

Eighty-five to 90 per cent of the Nishnawbe-Aski Nation people are engaged in trapping to some extent. Many are only part-time trappers. In the western James Bay coastal communities 80 to 85 per cent of the people trap. The unemployment rate in these communities is between 80 and 85 per cent. These people trap in order to supplement their meagre incomes, to supplement their social assistance.

Trapping, hunting, and fishing are all part of living with the land, in harmony with the land, and off the land. Not to understand that is to lead one to a false and fallacious conclusion. It is that the furbearing animals of this country are systematically being destroyed because there is a fur industry and because people go out trapping. That is far, far from the truth.

I want to point out that animal-rights activists tend mainly to be urbanites and what they fail to realize in their misguided zeal is that it is the growth of cities, its building of superhighways and airports that have been far more detrimental to wildlife than trapping will ever be. It is the loss of habitat to overdevelopment and industrialization which is the real danger to wildlife, not trapping.

How ironic it is that we are today, in this House, I expect unanimously resisting and opposing a proposal that will go before the European Parliament, when in Europe we had those successive European wars in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries with the slaughter of millions upon millions of young men. This paved the way for massive industrial expansion in Europe and pollution on a basis that was never known anywhere in the world before. Now these same European nations, at least speaking through some of their representatives in the European Parliament, want to restrict the importation of wild furs from Canada. It is more than ironic, it is crass hypocrisy. Trapping is not a threat to furbearing animals.

In fact, the Aboriginal Affairs Committee heard testimony that the furbearing population in Canada is at least as high if not higher than when Europeans first came to this continent. After 400 years of commercial fur trade, most furbearing species in North America are still flourishing, and those few species today that are in danger, are threatened mainly because their habitat has been destroyed. I believe that animal rights activists are best advised to focus their attention on the humane treatment of pets and other domestic animals.

The trapping of wild animals in Canada involves the survival of a culture, a way of life. I am speaking of the culture and way of life of aboriginal people. If these city-dwelling zealots who, in my view, constitute a part of the urban lunatic fringe, have their way, they will be responsible for nothing other than cultural genocide. The proposal planned for the European Parliament will contribute to the destruction of that culture and that way of life.

Let me speak about some of the concerns of these people, which they have inflated beyond all reason. In Ontario there is a native education program. It is sponsored by the federal and provincial Governments. In the past year over 500 aboriginal trappers were exposed to more modern and humane methods of managing and harvesting furbearing animals. Educational programs such as these, plus the millions of dollars that are being spent on trap research, are in my mind the effective ways to combat the anti-trapping movement. The labelling of products, the boycotting of fur garments are illogical and silly ways of proceeding.

It should be noted in addition that for many trappers, the food value of the animals that are caught often surpasses the value of the fur pelt itself. In many remote areas there are often limited options for food. Most beaver, snowshoe hare, muskrat and bear whose skins are sold, are also used as food. We have studies that show that the value of the meat thus harvested is in many cases greater than the value of the fur itself.

The issue here is not one of abuse. Not at all. The issue here is not one of non-use. Not at all. The issue is one of wise use of a resource. In my experience, trappers are among the most active supporters of wildlife conservation. Why would they not be? Their own livelihood is involved. Of course they are conservationists. Fur trappers tend to be among the most conservationist-minded of people.

Recently, the Cochrane Area Fur Council wrote to me about their industry. In their letter they said: "Conservation means the wise use of natural resources".

I conclude by saying to the House that Europeans must be helped in their understanding and appreciation of aboriginal culture. Trapping is a vital aspect of that culture and by supporting this notice of motion today in the House we are saying to European countries, to the people of Europe: "Turn your attention to the relevant problems that exist on your own doorstep. Please do not reach out in an uninformed and self-righteous manner and destroy an industry, a way of life and even a people which are indigenous to this nation of ours here in North America".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity again today to address some remarks on the question of measures that have been proposed in other jurisdictions with regard to the labelling of fur. The measures that were first proposed in the British Parliament have, very happily, been withdrawn. But they are now within the European Parliament of the European Economic Community.

I believe those proposed regulations are profoundly misleading and profoundly dangerous to the basis on which international commerce and international relations are undertaken. They are profoundly misleading to the people who might read them.

I am glad to join with my colleagues in all three Parties in extending thanks and recognition to the Government for the opportunity again to address this important question. As I recall, I was the second to the last speaker sometime after midnight on the morning of June 2nd when we were addressing the motion that had been put forward at that time. We heard from all three Parties, but I am glad to say that my Party participated most fully in that particular debate. I am pleased that all Parties and all Members who spoke were united in their concern for the impact these regulations might have on aboriginal people of this country.

Arriving very recently in Ottawa, I have not had the opportunity to research the exact procedure and stage of this proposed measure before the European Economic Community, but I think the specific stage is perhaps not so important as is the need and urgency for this House to get across to those major partners of Canada—and let them not forget it—in the European Economic Community that Canada does not appreciate this sort of interference and harassment of the longest standing, continuous commerce between our country and the European Economic Community.

I looked at the historical perspective in my speech of June 1 and 2, and I believe it is worth re-emphasizing. Let us remember that it was the European market that built up the fur industry in this country. Successive generations of European consumers, furriers, traders and merchants have dealt with successive generations of Canadian trappers, both aboriginal and non-aboriginal. This was done by means, of course, of the intermediaries the great trading companies and the co-operatives of today, such as the Ontario Trapping Association. Let us, above all, not forget that it was the fur trade that radically altered the economy, traditions and lifestyle of the aboriginal people, during what is considered to be a period of pre-history but about which more and more is becoming known. It led to some very drastic changes by the aboriginal people, by the Métis and by the early European trappers and traders in order to restructure the economy and life of North America at that time.

There was a time in this country when the fur trade was the largest part of the economy. There was a time when it was, so to speak, the fer de lance of exploration and economic development within Canada and the northern part of what is now the United States. Indeed, there was a time when the fur trade provided this country with its basic currency, its first universally accepted trading medium. That was the standard beaver, as it was known. The Hudson's Bay Company, and the Northwest company before it, kept their accounts not in pounds, shillings and pence, not in dollars and cents, but in what were called "made beaver", what we would now call a double-x large beaver pelt in prime, flattened and properly tanned. At one time it took a pile of made beaver as high as a musket to buy that same musket.

Let us not forget that even as Canada grew and developed, and exploration pushed back the frontiers of the imported European civilization, in many parts of this country it was trapping and the fur trade that provided not only the basic raison d'être of many communities but was the largest part of the economy in a whole region twice as large as the entire continent of Europe.

In examining this question today, we have to be very careful in our approach. We have to remember that mere oratory or rhetoric, and even, as important as it may be, the reiteration of the importance of fur trade to Canada's economy, particularly to the aboriginal people, is not the most effective thing we can do. What we have to do is to work towards an understanding of why these labelling regulations are being brought forward. We have to work towards a strategy to counteract the motives behind the introduction and proposals of such legislation or regulation.

I think it is worth spending some time to consider the psychology that underlies the attempts to have Canadian fur mislabelled, or, I would say, labelled in a misleading fashion that is designed to deter some consumers, although, frankly, I am surprised at the store that is set by this because I do not believe it would be terribly effective even if it went into effect.

As the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), a defender of aboriginal people in this House over two decades, pointed out, it is primarily because of the psychology of urbanization. Urbanization in the European continent even since the Second World War, which was largely fought on that continent, has taken the proportion of urban dwellers to near double pre-war levels, somewhere, I believe, in the region of 80 per cent. That has led to a divorce between the people and their sustenance. It has led to a divorce between the people of the European Economic Community and their environment, a divorce between them and those who supply them with the means of everyday living.

Along with that divorce from nature has grown an unreal psychological environment in which people are raised. I should know because, after all, I was raised in what is still the largest city in the European continent. The feelings that arise very naturally within the minds of human beings are all too easily transferred and transmogrified because of the environment in which they live. We learn, and certainly people in Europe learn, to have respect for those who are near and dear to us, but increasingly that respect is set against an appreciation of the wider environment. It is said that there are children within the inner City of London who, at the age of nine years, have never seen a cow, yet drink milk every day. That does not surprise me because it is a long haul from that city out to the country where one could actually see a cow.

In an age of increasing affluence, people have come to identify animals not with the milk in the glass, the slice of roast beef on the table, the leather on the shoes they wear, but with the hamsters and the gerbil, the pussy-cat and the lap-dog, the pets they keep on an everyday basis and for which, understandably, they have feelings.

Another sad consequence of that divorce from the natural environment, even with television bringing the images to our homes on a daily and even hourly basis seems to be a divorce from an understanding of the plight of fellow humans. There are people starving on the sidewalks of Calcutta, there are the wasted fields of drought-scorched Ethiopia, the flood victims in Bangladesh and the victims of malnutrition and elevated child mortality rates in the Andes, among the aboriginal people of the southern American continent. It seems that as a society we are losing our understanding and compassion for our fellow human beings who live in those circumstances.

There has to be, of course, a specific spur to action, to mobilize the psychological factors I have described. We might very well ask, and would, I hope, ask our foreign Minister, who did such good work with his namesake, the junior trade Minister from Great Britain, Mr. Allan Clark, to ask these questions of the European Community. Why does the European community not take action against bullfighting? Why does it not take action against the obscene sport of fox-hunting which is still carried out in the United Kingdom? Why does it not take action against the barbarous practice of many French farmers who nail to the floor the feet of geese and force corn down their gullets in order to produce paté de foie gras?

• (1600)

Let us not be seen to be pointing fingers because we all are prey in some degree to such actions and such motivations. The fact is that the European Economic Community has decided to take action on fur trapping and fur products because it is much easier to try to beat up an external "enemy" than to address some of the grave divisions and dissensions within European society, whether it be on a single country or on a pan-European basis.

We should understand that motive. We should be very clear to the countries of the European Economic Community that we do understand those motives and that Canada is not without the ability to resort to trade sanctions and trade measures if indeed such regulations are passed within the European Parliament.

My hon. friends from Timiskaming and Cochrane—Superior have said it well already. The trapper is a conserver. The trapper is a harvester. There is no species on the North American continent that has been endangered by trapping. The passenger pigeon was exterminated because of the desire for food, not by trapping. The true enemy of the survival of wildlife species is indeed the destruction of habitat, the destruction that is carried out as a by-product of economic activity, it would appear, within the European Economic Community and, indeed, in many other jurisdictions because environmental protection regulations are not perfected here in Canada, not perfected in any jurisdiction.

Let us not forget the number of species that have been exterminated in Europe by habitat erosion. Let us point out to the Europeans that it is by protection of the habitat, of which having communities of people and having active trappers is an essential part, that species will be saved from extinction.

Turning briefly to the cruelty issue, nobody will pretend that it is in some way an amiable experience for the animal. But we have heard a great deal of dissimulation and misinformation from European sources, and even from so-called animal rights advocates in this country, as to the nature of what an animal does or does not feel, and particularly as to the nature of what animals are being trapped.

There is no large-scale problem with so-called unwanted or scrap species. Trappers came before our committee on the hearings that the Hon. Member for Timiskaming mentioned. They said: "Not once in my career as a trapper have I taken an animal other than the animal that I wanted to take in that trap". I believe that is a point which has to be made because, of course, the propaganda films show species that cannot be used by the trapper struggling in the trap. We have to emphasize just how rare that is.

I think that the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior also made the point very well as to the economic value of the non-fur part of the animal. I would say that it is no misrepresentation to say that all the trappers whom I have known respect the animals with which they deal. I say respect in terms of the aboriginal peoples' spirituality, the spirit of the animal that they are using, using because of their profound belief that the creator put the animals there for their use and that while the animals are used respectfully they will return. When they are abused, the animals go. This is something which runs through the legends of all the aboriginal peoples of Canada. That surely is the representation of the effects of successful conservation as practised by aboriginal trappers in the country since time immemorial.

Because of the shortage of time I must turn to the question of what will happen. The seal ban showed us what will happen. It showed us that the eradication of an economic base and the consequent deterioration of the social fabric of communities that depended upon that seal hunt constituted as an end nothing more than a cultural genocide of the people who were victimized, the people in the Arctic who were victimized by the eradication of that hunt. The people of Nishnawbe-Aski and the people of the Grand Council Treaty Three reserves whom I represent know that this could be the final straw, the final, destructive, demoralizing, alienating straw that would tell them that the people who came to their land, emissaries in a commercial sense of the European Market, have now seen them as having outlived their usefulness, and are preparing to discard them and to turn their communities into little more than welfare ghettos.

That is a consequence which I will always be determined to fight. I hope that all Members of the House will be determined to join me in that particular fight.

The fragile economic base of these communities, the terrifying pace of change that they have seen will be doubled and redoubled if this sort of measure ever takes effect. In a community of my experience, Weagama Lake, it went from one plane a week to five planes a day in three years. They went from paths to roads in a similar period of time. The blows, the psychological impacts, the sense of being hemmed in that the people of Nishnawabe-Aski, the Cree, the Ojibway of the communities of Grand Council Treaty Three have had to endure will be doubled and redoubled if this sort of measure ever takes effect.

In summation, we must examine what we can do—because it is of only limited usefulness to fulminate—to spread the information. It is only of limited usefulness even to undertake educational campaigns within the European Economic Community. We have to come down to the hard pragmatic measures that will have some effect in blunting this initiative.

To do so we have to call upon the support of our largest trading partner, the United States. After all, the United States does export more fur than does Canada. While the fur industry is of lesser significance proportionately in the United States, as a whole it is indeed larger than the Canadian fur industry, which must come as a surprise to some.

Above all, we must try to take away the main ammunition and the main thrust which is being used by these animal rights advocates which is, of course, cruelty. I believe we can do that by continuing the excellent programs of trap replacement that have been started, and the very well supported, particularly by the trappers themselves, trapper education programs. We must reach out to the people who are proposing these regulations. We must expand and intensify our research in humane trapping methods. We must spend some money and make some effort to ensure that those who have the opportunity to decide on these matters are brought to Canada and shown the economic, the social, the cultural context, and also the techniques of humane trapping as it is fast developing in Canada today.

If we can take those measures, then I believe we do have some chance of blunting this initiative which, if it is successful, could have some very sad consequences and some very tragic consequences in the aboriginal communities of this country for whom the fur industry is still the economic mainstay.

Motion agreed to.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and the Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contribution Act, 1977, and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724), and the subamendment of Mr. Boudria (p. 17770).

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, during the debate on Bill C-139 many of my colleagues discussed how tax reform benefits individual taxpayers, but comparatively little attention has been devoted to another vital area of reform, corporate tax reform. Canada needs a reformed corporate tax system that is competitive internationally, more efficient and market-oriented, and fairer.

In the past, Canada's corporate tax system suffered from serious problems. Its capacity to raise revenues was seriously eroded over the years by a multitude of special tax deductions and other incentives. While each special preference was introduced to address a particular problem, the number of these breaks has enabled many profitable corporations to reduce their tax liability or pay no tax at all.

As a member of the Finance Committee I recall that the life insurance industry in particular paid little or no tax for the last 10 years. At one point in the hearings a chairman of the board of one of the largest companies, when questioned on whether or not the company paid tax, stated that it did not. When corrected by a vice-president he admitted that the company had received oil royalties and had paid a bit of tax on those. However, there are some sectors where the tax system has become totally unfair.

One of the problems is that the sheer number of incentives distorted market signals and led to inefficient uses of Canada's resources. It got to the point where tax considerations directed investments instead of sound business considerations. Again, if I could direct my thoughts back a few years to my former company where, from time to time, I worked on acquisitions, it was amazing how often the number one consideration when looking at a possible acquisition would be the tax situation. We did look at the type of services and the market share, but time and again the number one consideration would be the tax situation.

Our corporate tax system must remain competitive in an increasingly competitive world economy. Many of our trading partners have overhauled their tax systems to reduce tax rates and improve efficiency. Canada's general corporate tax rate was much higher than that of the United States and the United Kingdom. If we fail to narrow this gap, firms can arrange their operations to pay their taxes at lower rates to other countries rather than to Canada.

From time to time our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may have been criticized for moving ahead with this. I can recall perhaps two years ago asking the Minister of Finance if he was going to move ahead with comprehensive tax reform. At that time his answer was that we were moving in that direction as a Government, but did not plan a comprehensive tax reform. But the world and realities change, and when the United States, in particular, moved ahead with its comprehensive tax reform, the Minister of Finance was wise to change his mind on that factor for the reasons that we have already touched upon.

Our proposals for reform of the corporate tax system will resolve these problems and achieve the three major goals we set out in the White Paper. First, profitable corporations will pay a larger share of the total tax burden. Corporate income tax will be a more predictable and reliable source of revenue.

Second, many special tax breaks will be eliminated or reduced. This will pay for the lower personal and corporate tax rates. It will return the profit motive to investment by rewarding success. It will encourage investment decisions based more on economic factors than on tax considerations. Certainly, some proposals of the previous Government went completely off the rails. I think particularly of the scientific research tax credit. When that was announced by the former Government it was believed that it would cost taxpayers something in the order of $200 million. We all know that that was poorly thought out, ill-conceived, and inadequately controlled to the point that the best estimate now is that this initiative will cost the taxpayers of Canada in excess of $3 billion. Some serious mistakes have been made. However, the Minister of Finance proceeds cautiously and carefully and he is making tremendous headway.

Third, corporate tax rates will be reduced. This will promote growth and job creation by maintaining a corporate tax system that is competitive with other countries.

There has been general support for the goals and the outlines of these proposals. We consulted extensively with the corporate sector and the public, and listened carefully to what they said. We considered all proposed modifications in the light of the goals of our reform, and as they would affect other elements of tax reform. We made some changes to improve the original proposals.

The rates of corporate tax are the same as those set out in the White Paper. Effective July 1, the general federal rate dropped to 28 per cent from 36 per cent. The small business rate fell from 15 per cent to 12 per cent. The rate for manufacturing will be phased down to 23 per cent by 1991.

The White Paper's proposals for broadening the corporate tax base will generally be implemented. While there will be fewer special tax preferences, not all tax incentives will be removed. The tax system will continue to recognize the importance of incentives for investment in resources, manufacturing, R and D, and small businesses, among others. The incentives that remain will be fairer and more effective in supporting economic growth and regional development.

For example, we improved our proposals on flow-through shares to ensure they remain an attractive investment vehicle and a benefit for junior resource companies; the proposed limitation on claimable investment tax credits has been increased to ensure that our tax régime for R and D remains among the most attractive in the world; and our proposal for capitalization of interest on vacant land will be modified so it does not affect small home building firms.

Concerns about the fairness of the system were aroused because of the number of profitable firms not paying tax. Our proposals, when fully implemented, will mean a substantial decline in the number of such companies. Tax reform will reduce by one-half the number of profitable corporations that pay no tax. Those that remain will either be firms in cyclical industries that have experienced significant economic losses in prior years, or will be firms in industries which receive incentives directed at important national priorities. These priorities include promoting regional development, ensuring a healthy and active resource sector, and encouraging research and development that will provide jobs for Canadians in the future.

A combination of a broader base and lower rates will produce more revenue, bringing the over-all tax system into better balance. Corporate tax revenues as a share of general tax revenues will increase from 15.6 per cent in 1987-88 to 17.2 per cent in 1991-92. In dollar terms, the federal corporate tax revenues will increase by about $5.5 billion over the next five years. That is approximately 10 per cent higher. Across the entire economy, corporate tax reform will strengthen the incentive for firms to invest in profitable ventures. The rate of tax on the return from new investment will be reduced. The tax treatment of capital will continue to encourage risk-taking initiative, growth and job creation. There will be less variation of tax paid by different sectors. Sectors which formerly paid below average taxes, such as finance and life insurance, will pay higher effective tax rates. Sectors that paid higher than average taxes, such as trade, services and construction, will pay lower effective tax rates. At the same time, the tax rate for small business will continue to provide a major incentive for entrepreneurs to create jobs and to promote economic growth.

The federal small business tax rate of 12 per cent is less than one-half of the tax imposed on large businesses. In addition, owners of shares in small businesses will also benefit from the full $500,000 exemption in capital gains on these shares, to reward success in private entrepreneurship.

Corporate tax reform is a key element of the Government's over-all plan to position the Canadian economy and to take advantage of the opportunities in the 1990s. I urge all Members of this House who want to see a stronger Canadian economy to vote with me in favour of Bill C-139.

Just before closing, if I might touch on a couple of other points, let me say that it is vitally important that we get on with this legislation. Those people involved in tax planning and running business know that one of the big problems on something like this is delays and uncertainty. We must get on with this so that people can plan confidently and not be wondering continually when this legislation might be passed.

I think that the confidence of our Finance Minister, as I mentioned earlier, grows by the day and by the month. We have here a Finance Minister who in the past three years has made projections of what the deficit would be. Every single year of the last three has come in on or under the projections. This latest one will be something like $1 billion lower than forecast. A lot of Canadians would not realize this, but that is the best three-year record in 45 years.

I think we have tremendous confidence in this Minister. Let us get behind him, let us get this legislation passed, and let us get on with the increases that will occur in the corporate sector, to help provide lower taxes for the consumers.

We know that four out of five consumers will be paying less tax, and nine out of 10 seniors will be paying less tax. This is a great over-all package. People will nit-pick on certain aspects of it, but on balance it is a super package, one that a lot of Canadians will benefit from, and I think we are moving in a very excellent way to a fairer system.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would be willing at least to acknowledge that what appears to be tax reductions that are contained in the Bill before us really do not, when looked at over the picture of tax increases of low and middle-income Canadians over the last four years, give back to low-income Canadians the amounts that this Government has taken away from them in the whole four-year picture.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, of all Parties to start trying to slow down this Bill, that should be the last Party. It is the Party that put us into a deficit situation year after year, so much so that now the entire deficit of $29 billion to $30 billion is devoted not to reducing the debt but devoted 100 per cent to paying the interest on that debt.

Now, let us have our focus on moving ahead. I have described the package in the corporate sector, certainly. There is a lot being done. We must get on with the business and eliminate the uncertainty that exists out there. I will quote the following from The Globe and Mail issue of April 25th:

If an election were called before stage one became law, tax reform would die and the current system would stand until new legislation was introduced.

That would create chaos. "I hope Brian Mulroney isn't irresponsible enough to call an election before the bill gets through the House."

The person who made that comment was the Liberal finance critic, Raymond Garneau.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think it must be obvious to everyone in this Chamber, including the large crowd in the gallery, that the Hon. Member made no reference at all to my question in the statement that he just made, or any attempt to answer it or to explain away, which I thought he might do, the point that I tried to make. I called on the Hon. Member and asked him to recognize that the reductions that are contained in Bill C-130, for most Canadians, lower and middle-income Canadians in particular, do not restore the tremendous tax increases that those very groups have sustained since this Government took office four years ago.

I know that there was a deficit to deal with and that it is a legitimate option to increase taxes. I am calling on the Member to recognize that the taxes that have been increased are not the taxes that are on the richest in society, on the highest income earners. The taxes that have been increased are on the lowest earners and middle-income Canadians.

I call on the Hon. Member to admit that this is the case, at least out of a sense of honesty.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, Canadians are going to get a chance to judge fairly quickly what this Government has done.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Attewell: It has been a great package in total.

An Hon. Member: They cannot wait.

Mr. Attewell: They are going to see that four out of five Canadians are going to be paying less tax, and nine out of 10 seniors will pay less tax. Some sectors are finally going to be paying their share. I mentioned that some people might try to slow down this package in certain isolated areas, but in total I can only stress again—and you mentioned people watching this in the gallery and elsewhere—I know that they will be, but I know that they are also examining our record as a Government, the record of the Finance Minister, which I will just highlight again.

It is the first time in 45 years that we have had three successive projections of being on or below the forecast. That is a responsible performance compared to the totally irresponsible performance of the Liberal Government. I can remember the Liberal Government adjusting its projections on deficits by the week, not too many years ago. I think it is pretty clear in which Party, in which Government the people of Canada are going to have their confidence. They are not going to return it back to the irresponsible bunch that they had for about 16 years.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Time for a change.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I will say a few words to the Hon. Member who sits from time to time on the Finance Committee and who does his work there. In a sense I think that there is something wrong with the Conservative tax reform. It seems to suit the residents of the Hon. Member's constituency perhaps more than the average Canadian. Is it fair to have a so-called tax reform which winds up leaving only one group among Canadians paying less tax on their income than they paid in 1984, namely people who are earning more than a $100,000 a year? Is it fair to have a tax system which will leave the corporate share of tax revenues to the Government of Canada, to drop it down to 17 per cent in 1991, which in fact is lower than the 20 per cent share that corporations paid of tax revenues in 1984? When the Conservatives came to power, corporations were paying a larger share of federal revenues than they will be paying in 1991, after this particular and so-called tax reform is mature.

• (1630)

Perhaps the Hon. Member could say whether it is fair to have tax reform which will give tax cuts of only $140 to poor people earning under $15,000 a year but which, according to the Government's own figures, will give a tax cut of some $4,165 on average to three out of four families earning over $100,000. Is that fair? Is that just? Could the Hon. Member take those facts into a pub in Kamloops or Newfoundland and defend that? Could he take that to a group of families and justify the unfairness of a system where the tax credit which people get if they have children is the magnificent sum of only $65 a year? Is that fair? Could the Hon. Member say, if he agrees with me that these things are not fair, why the Government is going ahead with a tax reform which essentially is unfair to families, unfair to average Canadians, and fair only to the rich and to corporations?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, the system we are recommending, the package, I say is fair. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has been on the Finance Committee. I have been on it for almost four years now. We have had a tremendous amount of consultation and have done a lot of research. Our committee visited Washington. Every aspect of this package has been thoroughly looked at and analysed.

Let me highlight again some of the benefits and who will be paying less. Income taxes will be reduced for 9.7 million households, over 85 per cent of all households, by an average of $490. About 850,000 lower-income Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero or will receive refundable credits. In other words, they will be coming right off the tax rolls. Income taxes will be cut for about 1.3 million of the 1.4 million households which have at least one person in them aged 65 and over. About 250,000 elderly Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero. Personal income tax will be lower for all ranges of income. Most taxpayers whose income consists primarily of salary or wages, family allowance or standard pension and retirement revenue will receive tax reductions. Last, net personal income tax revenue to the federal Government will be reduced by about $12 billion, not $12 million but $12 billion coming off the personal side. I say that that is a giant leap in fairness.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that it is a giant leap backwards. When I talk to my constituents and to average Canadians and ask them what they think about this tax thing, whether they think this tax reform is a good idea, the reaction I get is: "You know, I am not sure what it is, but I am not seeing as much money at home as I was four years ago. I am not sure where it is going, but I know it is going".

This is a product of two things, Mr. Speaker. On the one hand, real incomes of Canadians have not been rising. On the other hand, the bite of the tax collector has been increasing on those average Canadians. As we calculate it, it is an average of $1,500 or so in tax increases on the average Canadian with an income of perhaps $30,000 or $35,000 a year since 1984, and tax reform will give about $300 or $350 back. If you have to give up $4 and you get $1, you are not better off; you are worse off. It seems to me that that is the situation which prevails with tax reform. The Government will say: "Look at last year and look at what is happening this year". The Government will ignore the consistent pattern of tax increases on average Canadians imposed by the Conservatives at the same time as they cut taxes on wealthy Canadians by the capital gains exemption and stuff like that.

Mrs. Mailly: And the farmers.

Mr. Cassidy: I would correct the Hon. Member's recollection as well. In committee when my colleague from Regina West and I raised the question about the rates and asked "why are we giving such cuts to people who are wealthy and doing so little for people on average incomes", the chairman simply said: "We are not discussing that here", and we went on to something else. My colleague and I had two choices. We could have either co-operated on the areas where the Finance Committee was able to co-operate productively, or we could have simply walked out and said: "This is a Tory show". We were constructive and chose to participate. I think the committee made some constructive suggestions, but in this area we were completely excluded from the game.

I am really surprised at my hon. friend from Don Valley suggesting that this was looked at. It was not looked at all. It was on the Tory agenda that the Conservatives wanted to give very large tax cuts to wealthy Canadians, a sharp reduction in taxes for many corporations, and to do that with a small cut for average Canadians, which is far less than the increases in tax they have had since 1984.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have a few words concerning this very extensive Bill. I have listened to Hon. Members argue about who is responsible for this tax increase or who is responsible for that tax increase. I have heard them argue that there was not a tax increase, there is not going to be a tax increase, there is going to be a tax decrease, or there is not going to be a tax decrease. For those of us who help people in our constituencies fill out their income tax returns, one thing is obvious. People are paying more income tax as the years go by than they did in previous years.

If you took the last four years and filled out the income tax returns for the same person, you would discover that the individual is paying more income tax as each year goes by. I do not know where Hon. Members are getting all these facts and figures about people paying less income tax. All I can see is that they are paying more income tax.

I suppose there are only two groups of people. I was thinking about this as I was glancing at some portions of the Bill a few moments ago. One group are millionaires. Of course I do not fill out income tax returns for millionaires; I do not know any. In the place from where I come on the northeast coast of Newfoundland we do not have any millionaires sitting around doing their income tax. They would not fill them out anyway. They would have a chartered accountant do it.

I want to make an honest to goodness logical suggestion for the Government of Canada on this one point about income tax. I have here in my hand a list of some 200 communities in Alberta, about 600 communities in British Columbia, about 400 communities in Newfoundland, and so on. This year these communities qualify for a new tax break. Granted, some of the communities are pretty small. If you live in these communities you will probably gain, if you pay taxes, about $2,000 to $2,500 on your income tax return when you fill it out. I noticed that some of the communities do not have anybody living in them. There is a community in Newfoundland called Exploits. Only two people live in Exploits. They are Richard Wells and Lydia. They have lived there all their lives. Richard is a pensioner. Also, some of the communities are quite large. If you examine the list here, you will find that there are perhaps 50 communities in my federal riding.

The Minister stood in this House the other day and spoke about fairness in taxation. He spoke about the fact that the Government of Canada has brought fairness into the tax system. It is a funny thing, but I noticed that some communities which have now been listed for northern benefits are on the border of Canada and the United States. Some communities listed for northern benefits are in southern Newfoundland, but there are none listed in northern Newfoundland. This tells me that there is something drastically wrong with the regulations the Government has brought in.

• (1640)

Granted, this is a very difficult situation. You know what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker, because you know about that northern section of Québec and the Gaspé coast where a great many of these communities are located. It is very difficult to come up with criteria for the tax law as it relates to deductions being administered fairly. In other words, how do we define an isolated community?

We do not define an isolated community the way the Government of Canada did a few days ago, that is, by saying that everything above the 55th parallel is isolated and everything below the 55th parallel is not isolated. It does not make much sense to have the entire Burin Peninsula and the entire south coast of Newfoundland getting benefits while the islands up North do not get them.

The Government of Canada, though it has appointed a commission of inquiry to look into the matter, could have come up with a more sensible way of distributing these benefits than it has. It has sent to each person living in those communities a special form to fill out to see if he or she qualifies. Looking at the communities and areas that qualify, one would have to say that the person who made up that list really used no common sense whatsoever in determining what was isolated and what was not. The commission of inquiry, as I understand it, is starting its hearings in Newfoundland next week.

There is another clause in the Bill that I want to comment on. That is the clause that deals with the Unemployment Insurance Act. The Minister, in his wisdom, has brought in an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act here dealing with amounts of money owed by the employer to the Receiver General for Canada, the Government of Canada. The Government is now imposing a penalty on the employer. The penalty is as follows: the employer shall pay to the Receiver General that amount computed from the day on which it was owed to the day of the remittance of the amount to the Receiver General for Canada, and the normal interest rate shall be charged.

If the Government is going to amend that Section of the Unemployment Insurance Act, surely to goodness it should have then revised the penalties that apply to the recipients of unemployment insurance benefits when that same Section is in violation. Let me tell Hon. Members what that is under this particular Section of the Unemployment Insurance Act. The recipient of unemployment insurance would have to have his unemployment insurance reduced over a period of time to satisfy the debt owed the Crown. The employer, in the case of uninsurability, gets no penalty whatsoever except that he gets back the money that he paid in.

The Government of Canada, in changing the law as it relates to Subsection 68(6) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, certainly should have addressed the problem in relation to the recipients of unemployment insurance as well as the employers. As I say, the principle of fairness in the Unemployment Insurance Act goes out the window when one examines the Northern Benefits and Isolated Posts Act. It goes out the window because I do believe that politics came into play very recently when some Members in this Chamber got a hold of two Ministers and had whole areas designated as being eligible for these particular allowances.

The Bill itself also amends the Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act. I do hope that more Hon. Members will address these very important subjects as the day goes on.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am just curious. I know that the Hon. Member has been here before, and I know that the Liberal Party has been critical of the Government because of a tax reform which favours too much the rich and wealthy corporations.

I seem to recall that back in 1981, when Senator MacEachen was the Minister of Finance, the Liberal Party came in with a Budget which was ostensibly meant to broaden the base and at the same time lower the tax rates for wealthy Canadians by a substantial amount. I seem to recall as well that after a good deal of pressure from the business community and other friends of the Liberal Party, the loophole plugging exercise, the broadening of the base that was meant to take place, was in fact reversed. At the same time, the Liberal Party did not put back up to previous levels the reductions of taxes for wealthy Canadians.

I also recall that when the Liberals were in power, beginning with the present Leader of the Liberal Party, in fact, there was a series of measures which had the effect of reducing the tax burden on corporations through accelerated depreciation and various other types of allowances which, among other things, led to an enormous piling up of deferred taxation on the part of the corporate sector, to an erosion of corporate tax revenues and to many of the injustices in corporate taxation which average Canadians have been so concerned about.

My hon. friend comes from a part of the country where that kind of thing really is not very tolerable because there are not many wealthy Canadians in his constituency. How is it that he was able at that time to let pass without comment the fact that the Liberals were reducing taxes on the wealthy just as the Tories are reducing taxes on the wealthy today, and that the Liberals were reducing taxes on corporations, just as the Tories are reducing taxes on corporations today? Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell us if there was any difference between the Liberal Party at that time and the Conservative Party today, because I cannot see very much difference.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I can remember when the NDP—no, I cannot remember when the NDP formed the Government of Canada. It is very difficult to follow the hon. gentleman's logic. For the past four years, the hon. gentleman has been blaming the Conservative Government for drastically raising taxes on everyone, and he has been saying that prior to that the Liberals were drastically increasing taxes on everyone. The Hon. Member knows full well, however, that as far as federal income taxes are concerned, income taxes for ordinary Canadians took a fairly substantial drop in years prior. When I say "substantial", I mean that when a person filled out his income tax form at least he got a little more. I am talking about the average Canadian, and by "average" I mean average in my riding.

What is average in my riding? Average in my riding is $8,000 or $9,000 a year. The Hon. Member does not know very many people who make $8,000 or $9,000 a year, I am sure. He does not represent fishermen. He does not represent the primary producers of Canada. He knows a lot about the corporate sector and what taxes it is paying.

I do not know anything about the corporate sector. All I know about is ordinary, producing Canadians. When the Liberal Government was in power, ordinary Canadians were the primary concern. I have seen incredible changes take place in the past four years since the Conservatives have been in government. Most of them have been to the detriment of these primary producers, these average Canadians who pay through the nose, day in and day out.

These average Canadians do not know, and I am afraid that I must claim some ignorance here and say that I do not know, what is the corporate tax structure. I have not got a clue. I do not know what happened under the Trudeau regime with corporate taxes. All I know is that ordinary Canadians benefited greatly under the Liberal administrations year after year. All I have seen in the last four years has been programs disappearing. All the assistance programs have disappeared. Look at all the insurance programs for fishermen; they were thrown out the window. All the assistance programs for boat building were thrown out the window. Why? Perhaps it was because they went against the wishes of the United States of America.

• (1650)

However, I can assure the Hon. Member of the NDP, the people who back in the mid-1970s supported the International Fund for Animal Welfare to get rid of the seal hunt, that under the Liberal Government the ordinary Canadians, the producers of Canada, are always looked out for first and foremost, not like under this present regime.

Mr. Horner: Oh, George, I don't believe you said that.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, while I have great respect for the Hon. Member, and while I know he speaks out for his constituents, there is a kind of blindness on the part of members of the Liberal Party, particularly when they are in government.

I have done a bit of research on this question. It does not affect Newfoundland directly, but it affects people with very modest incomes living in the east end of Montreal. I wanted to find out what was happening and who was speaking on their behalf between 1980 and 1984 when the Liberals were in power. I took the trouble to look at the legislative and parliamentary record of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) who is well known here as a voice of the people, at least over the last two or three years. During the time that Montreal's economy was going down the drain, when basic industries were shutting down almost every day, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie did not say a word. This man, who was such a defender of the rights of pensioners when the Conservative Government tried to deindex pensions in 1985, actually spoke up for deindexing public service pensions when the Liberal Party brought in the six and five program two or three years earlier. Yet there was not a peep, not a word was heard from him about Montreal.

It seems to me the problem with Liberal Members coming from poorer parts of Canada is that they walked on the other side of the street. They turned a blind eye when the Minister of Finance of the day cut tax rates on wealthy Canadians from over 60 per cent to the levels that prevailed before the Conservatives came to power. They turned a blind eye when the Government brought in accelerated depreciation schedules and other tax devices which made the whole tax fraternity and the corporate sector jump with joy.

The Hon. Member says he does not know anything about corporate taxes or accelerated depreciation. He had a responsibility to know about those things because during the time the Liberals were in power they were bleeding Canadians dry by putting so many tax breaks in the hands of wealthy Canadians and corporations. They did not take all the benefits away from average Canadians. What they did instead was run up the deficit in order to give those privileges to wealthy Canadians. That is a policy which tries to benefit everyone at the same time, but it led the country close to bankruptcy.

That is why I ask the Hon. Member why he and his colleagues were not vigorously on their feet to condemn the Government of the day in 1980 when its major priority for taxation seemed to be to cut taxes on the wealthy, just like the Conservatives today.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I must say that accelerated depreciation is certainly not a major subject of importance in my riding. It certainly was not an election issue. Accelerated depreciation?

Mr. Angus: That sounds like growing old fast.

Mr. Baker: Yes. That is certainly not a subject of any great importance in my riding. However, I would certainly welcome the NDP running a campaign on it in Newfoundland. I would certainly welcome that kind of competition. Accelerated depreciation!

The Hon. Member is probably correct in one thing. That is, you will always be able to look back on what the Conservatives did and what the Liberals did, but you will never be able to look back on what the NDP did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Rossi: The people don't want the NDP.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the people will certainly be making a clear decision in the next election, and it is about time that we had a real change from the worn out and discredited policies of the Liberals of the past and those policies of the Conservatives of today. The people of Canada are going to vote for New Democrats and a Government led by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). That is what is going to happen in the next election, and we are looking forward to it.

Mr. Rossi: You are a bunch of bluffers.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on what the Government calls tax reform but which is in fact nothing of the sort. Instead of reforming the tax system in a meaningful way, it shifts the burden to the poor and powerless from the wealthy and the corporate elite. That is the effect of Tory tax reform.

I want to make it very clear that in the next federal election, and we say the time for that is now, the people should have a right to speak out on the record of the Government and voice their concerns about the proposed trade deal. A central theme for New Democrats in that election will be the question of fairness. What area of government policy is more lacking in fairness than the tax system?

What we are seeing with Tory tax reform is a move by the Government away from a progressive tax system, to a system in which, rather than taxing people on income, it is going to be taxing people on consumption. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) says that is all right because people choose whether or not they want to buy goods or services. What kind of unreal attitude is that? Tell a poor family, a single parent family, that they can choose whether or not to buy shoes and clothes for their children, that they can choose whether or not to spend money on housing, that they can choose whether or not to buy essentials to provide for their family. Of course that is nonsense. By moving from taxation of income to taxation of consumption the Government is moving away from progressive principles in the tax system.

As New Democrats we have clearly identified a number of important areas in which the Government should be tightening loopholes and increasing the progressive nature of the system. I want to pay tribute to my colleague from Ottawa Centre and my colleague from Regina East who have done such an outstanding job in committee and across this country in drawing to the attention of Canadians the unfairness and inequities in our tax system. In the four years of Conservative rule the share of taxes paid by the corporate sector has gone down from approximately 20 per cent in 1984 to some 15 per cent this year. Who is paying more in taxes? Of course, it is low and middle-income earners. That is the nature of Tory tax reform.

The Minister of Finance boasts that 850,000 Canadians are going to be removed from the tax rolls. He neglects to mention that under four years of Tory rule over one million Canadians were added to the tax rolls. This kind of cynical shell game is obviously not going to wash with Canadians.

I have received extensive correspondence from my constituents in Burnaby on the unfairness of the Government's proposed tax reform. I want to share a couple of those letters with members of the House and those who are watching these proceedings across the country.

• (1700)

I received a letter, for example, from an 85-year-old constituent, Mr. Eric Button in North Burnaby. He wrote to me as follows:

> Dear Svend:
> Thank you for your latest Ottawa update. I enjoyed reading it.
> In the last paragraph on income tax you did not mention the great change in the 1986 schedule over that of 1985. It seems to me that a multitude of poor people will be paying income tax this year. This will be the first time in 20 years that I have paid a tax . . . We have always lived during our retirement time below the Government's poverty level.

He asked for an explanation. Why is it that for the first time in 20 years this elderly gentleman and his wife, who are struggling to survive on an income which is below the poverty line, are paying tax? He included copies of the schedules from the 1985 and 1986 tax tables. I examined them and, sure enough, under the Conservative Government taxes have in fact gone up substantially for the poorest in our society, including senior citizens.

I suppose we should not be surprised at that. After all, it was this same Government that attempted to deindex the pensions of senior citizens. It was only the angry outcry of seniors from right across this land that forced the Government to back down.

It is not surprising that a very respected national Seniors organization, the one voice: Canadian Seniors Network, in their response to the Government's White Paper on tax reform was severely critical of the proposals of the Government. They note that the fundamental principles of fairness, accountability, and stability are ignored when it comes to the proposals of the Government in the area of tax reform. We, as New Democrats, do not accept that.

We say that there is something very wrong with a tax system in which, in 1985, for example, 8,000 Canadians who made more than $50,000 paid not one penny in income tax. We say there is something wrong with that system. We say there is something wrong with a system in which, in 1984, over 1,400 people who had incomes in excess of $100,000 per year did not pay a penny in income tax.

We as New Democrats believe that the income tax system should be an important mechanism for the redistribution of income. We do not accept the philosophy of the Fraser Institute, for example, which suggests that we move to a flat rate system of taxation.

Under four years of Conservative Government we have seen an erosion of the fundamental principles of progressive income taxation and a very clear shift from income taxation to taxation on consumption. That shift is profoundly regressive and clearly attacks the poor in Canadian society.

The tax system should be used to redistribute income and wealth in our society. There is something fundamentally immoral about a society which is prepared to accept the fact that over one million of our children are poor while saying that some 8,000 individuals who make in excess of $50,000 a year have to pay no income tax whatsoever. There is something immoral about an economic system which condemns 700 children in the City of Vancouver and the municipality of Burnaby, which I have the honour to represent, to go to school hungry while the Government refuses to bring forward changes in the tax system which would ensure that such poverty is eliminated.

The same Government that refuses to tackle tax reform is prepared to spend in excess of $8 billion for nuclear submarines. What kind of madness is it that a Government is prepared to waste this kind of money? In fact, as my colleague from Winnipeg—Birds Hill points out, it is well in excess of $8 billion. In 1986 an estimated 102,000 Canadians were homeless. We want to spend $8 billion on nuclear submarines while people are homeless and hungry? As New Democrats we profoundly reject that.

What exactly does Tory tax reform mean and who does it benefit? Let us look at the figures. The most significant change under the tax proposals of the Minister of Finance is the reduction in the top tax rate on the highest income earners. In fact, the highest tax rate will drop from 34 per cent on incomes above $63,000 to 29 per cent on taxable incomes exceeding $55,000.

At the same time as the top tax rate is dropping the bottom rate is increasing. We are left with a situation, when provincial income tax is added in, in which the current top rate of 51 per cent is going to drop to 44 per cent but the bottom rate is going to increase from 9 per cent to 25 per cent. That is Tory tax reform—lower the marginal rates at the top and increase the marginal rates at the bottom. There is no sense of fairness or justice whatsoever.

It is interesting as well to consider the timing of these tax proposals. The tax reductions, of course, took effect on July 1 of this year. That meant a slight increase in the take-home pay of some employees. It is not entirely coincidental that this should be taking place on the eve of a federal election.

While there may be a slight decrease in taxes and a slight increase in take-home pay, the reality is that since 1984 a series of Conservative tax measures have increased sales and excise taxes substantially. The Government has taken literally hundreds of dollars out of the pockets of Canadians that it is now saying it is going to put back in the form of income tax reduction. We do not accept this. We do not accept so-called tax reform in which, as an example, a stockbroker who earns more than $200,000 a year is going to save $15,000 in tax while the Government continues to tax people who live below the poverty line. That kind of so-called tax reform is completely unfair.

We say as well that it is time the Government took a serious look at tax expenditures in Canada. We have called for an annual review, an accountability of these tax expenditures which add up to in excess of $30 billion. Imagine what we could do with that money for social programs, post-secondary education, housing, and the environment. However, the Government refuses to consider that.

We have said that it is time that this country looks seriously at the taxation of capital gains. Why is it that 50 per cent of capital gains are exempt from taxes? The Government is now saying that it will move to tax 75 per cent of capital gains, but why do we not recognize that capital gains should be taxed just as any other income is taxed?

As long ago as 1967 Carter said it well "a buck is a buck is a buck". For that reason we, as New Democrats, have said that capital gains, aside from small businesses and the family farm, should be taxed fairly, just as is the income of those who work on an hourly and monthly basis. Why should those who earn their income from speculation in land, for example, be taxed at a lower rate than those who are employed? For that reason we have called upon the Government to recognize that it should be taxing capital gains as other income is taxed with the exception, as I said, of small businesses and family farms.

According to the proposed tax reform, the share of corporate taxation has gone down. Let us consider some of the rationale for this proposal. Why has the Government refused to tackle this question of capital gains? In 1984, the 1 per cent of taxpayers with incomes in excess of $100,000 received 30 per cent of all capital gains. Why are they not taxed fairly? That would reduce the burden on low and middle-income earners. Yet the Government is not prepared to take that step even though the Reagan Government in the United States has moved to tax capital gains at full rates, just like ordinary income.

The Government huffed and puffed about corporate taxation and suggested that it would make significant moves to increase the level of corporate taxation. However, it has done nothing of the sort. Since it took office in 1984, corporate taxes have increased 8 per cent, income taxes have gone up by approximately 45 per cent, and sales taxes have increased in excess of 67 per cent. That shows where the Government's heart really is. It is looking after its friends in the corporate elite and continuing to hit hard on low and middle-income earners.

What are the rationales for this so-called tax reform? Why has the Government not taken serious action? The Government says that by reducing the number of tax rates from 10 to 3 it will reduce the complexity of the system. What nonsense. The number of steps in the tax schedule has no bearing whatsoever on simplification.

It goes without saying that New Democrats have called for a more easily understandable tax system. The reality is that by reducing the top level of taxation from 34 per cent to 29 per cent, the Government is simply reducing the amount it will be collecting from the wealthiest in our society. Why should a secretary at Bell Canada who earns $28,000 pay a marginal tax rate that is only 5 percentage points below the rate paid by the chairperson of Bell Canada, Jean de Grandpré, whose salary last year was $977,300. Is that fairness? Is that a fair, equitable and just tax system? Of course not.

We believe that instead of lowering the marginal rate for the wealthiest and most affluent in our society, that rate should be increased to enable us to pay for the social programs that we value in this country.

That brings me to another rationale of the Government in this so-called tax reform. It says that tax reform will make us more competitive with the United States. I must question that. The United States has an estate tax which Canada has not had since 1971. Furthermore, we as Canadians value what makes us a distinct society. We value safer streets. We value a publicly financed hospital and health care system. Indeed, it was the NDP and CCF, with J. S. Woodsworth and Tommy Douglas, that pioneered these health care programs. We value a greater public role in the area of financing of post-secondary education, in transportation, and in communications. Canadians are prepared to pay the cost if our tax system is fair.

The Government's argument that we must lower these rates to bring them more in line with American rates is part and parcel with its approach to Canadian society, which is best exemplified in the trade deal. That deal, if it is ultimately implemented, will result in Canada in many ways being transformed into something like a fifty-first state. It will erode our social programs and destroy our sovereignty, resulting in far greater levels of unemployment. We as New Democrats are pledged to fight that deal with every ounce of energy we have.

Another rationale of the Government is that the upper level of taxation should be reduced because no one pays at those upper levels in any event. If that is the case, surely those loopholes should be closed. Rather than lower the upper marginal rate, close the loopholes that allow people who are making in excess of $100,000 to pay no income tax whatsoever. That is a more sensible approach than simply lowering the upper level of taxation.

Another argument made by the Government is that higher tax rates breed inefficiency. Japan is often cited as one of the most productive economies in the world. It has a top tax rate of 80 per cent. Sweden, which has a very high growth economy, has a top rate of 88 per cent. Studies have shown that high tax rates have little effect on productivity.

In bringing this proposal forward, the Government still has not moved to implement a minimum tax on its friends in the corporate sector. Even Ronald Reagan has taken such steps in the United States, and in excess of $2 billion in revenue has been raised as a result of the minimum tax on the corporate sector there.

The New Democratic Party agrees that loopholes were opened by the Liberals during their term in office. We would have hoped that the Tories would have closed those loopholes and moved to a fair, just and equitable tax system. This tax reform is nothing of the sort. That is why in the next election Canadians will turn not to the Liberals, not to the Conservatives, but to New Democrats for a tax system which is fair and equitable.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's heart is in the right place. He is right when he says there is something immoral about our society when we see Canadian children who come home at the end of the day and have to go to bed hungry and who get up in the morning and go to school hungry. These problems are caused by poverty, and it is true that they are a blot on this wealthy society of ours. However, the answer is not tax reform but a family policy that will help these children. These problems are caused by the lack of a comprehensive family policy that would include a housing policy, providing decent, affordable housing so that at the end of the month, parents would not be in a situation where they don't have enough money to make ends meet and give their children the food they need.

On the other hand, since the Hon. Member mentioned that the sales tax is a regressive tax, I would like to point out to him that we felt that a tax reform was necessary because we had reached the point where the only way we could get the money to upgrade programs to help the poor was to increase sales tax, because we could no longer increase personal income tax.

The tax burden on Canadians was undermining job creation, so a tax reform was necessary but we also had to make sure that we could get revenue from sources other than sales tax. These are the two aspects of the reform: income tax and sales tax.

As far as sales tax is concerned, we have introduced a credit to compensate people at the bottom of the financial ladder, a $50 credit for all Canadians. So an effort has been made, but the tax reform must be carried out. The Hon. Member may not agree on ideological issues or on the procedure, but our purpose, Mr. Speaker, is to provide some relief for Canadians who are overtaxed, and we want to do so by finding sources of revenue so that the Government can upgrade programs that deal with the problems of the poor, whether they are children, adults, or senior citizens. Sixty percent of the women over 65 in Canada are poor. So would he not agree that something had to be done and that we are taking this approach for a very good reason? And as far as capital gains are concerned, this also covers farmers, who are not wealthy people. I don't think he should blame tax reform for the problems caused by poverty which have been with us for quite some time.

• (1720)

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I find the Member's observation absolutely unbelievable. First of all, she does admit that the sales tax is regressive, does she not? So if it is a regressive tax, as the Member says, why have the Conservatives increased the level of that sales tax since 1984? Why, Mr. Speaker, have they increased the sales tax twice, if it is a regressive tax? The Members admits that, Mr. Speaker, and I find it unbelievable that she now says that there is no another way of obtaining the necessary money. There is another way, and it's quite plain to see. Why have they not taxed corporations, in the interest of fairness? Why, Mr. Speaker, have they not taxed corporations instead of increasing the sales tax every year? That is what I do not understand.

For instance, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has in fact removed $3.1 billion from the tax system. The 2 per cent of Canadians with the highest incomes will receive $379 million, but the 26 per cent who are among the poorest of Canadians will only receive $257 million. And there you have Conservative tax reform!

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the Members ask me why we must use the tax system to reduce poverty. We New Democrats believe that the tax system can be used in a fair way to finance social programs, for instance, programs to help poor children, the homeless, and the elderly who are grappling with poverty. We think we can use the tax system and the money obtained by way of it to improve our social programs in a fair way. The Conservatives will not recognize that reality, and instead they help their friends in the corporate sector, in the corporate elite, and because of that the Canadian tax system remains unfair.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) rise in that beautiful red Liberal tie, I thought he was at least going to say some kind things about the Liberals. However, he began by indicating that the next Government would be a New Democratic Government. In the light of that, I think it is worth taking seriously the proposals he said would be part of New Democratic tax reform.

He indicated that capital gains would be taxed at full rates. This, of course, is tragic news for many senior citizens whose savings include Bell Canada stock which they have held for 20 and 30 years in some cases and will all be taxed in one year.

Mr. Cassidy: Conrad Black's parents?

Mr. Kaplan: I wanted to ask the Member about the small business and family farm exemption. Under the New Democratic tax system, he said, that although capital gains would be taxed fully the family farm, and small business and the family-owned business, would not be taxed at the regular capital gains rates which the NDP would impose. I think it is important, if those Members are proposing that a New Democratic Government be created in the next election, for us to know exactly what these exemptions are.

After all, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) referred to his great friends, Conrad Black and family. Perhaps Argus Corporation is a family company in the definition of the New Democrats, or some of the largest farms in the country owned by one family. Are they to be totally exempt from capital gains tax under a New Democratic Government?

In a nutshell I am asking for more details about the exemption which will apply to family farms and to small family-owned businesses under New Democratic tax reform.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is not surprising that a Liberal front-bencher should rise and be somewhat sensitive in the area of tax reform, particularly someone who has been around since 1968. It was the Liberal Government that was responsible for introducing loopholes into the tax system in this country that resulted in the loss of billions of dollars in tax revenue.

Some of us remember the scientific tax credit. Some of those Members will remember the research tax credit. Those great managers of the economy brought forward this boondoggle that resulted in the loss of literally billions of dollars. It is not surprising that the Member from one of the York constituencies would rise and raise concerns.

The reality is that when we look at the question of capital gains exemptions we must look at who in fact benefits most from these exemptions. I have made it very clear that the exemption for the family farm and for small businesses will continue, but let us look at who it is that benefits from capital gains. In 1984, the 1 per cent of taxpayers with incomes above $100,000 received 34 per cent of all capital gains. It is not surprising that the Liberals should be defending those people because in fact some of them, until a couple of years ago, used to be their principal source of funds, although the Liberals are now having some difficulty in collecting these funds.

I think it is interesting as well to note that on July 1 of this year the Chief Electoral Officer published the statement of the source of revenue of the three political Parties in Canada. As New Democrats, we are proud that we are a democratically financed Party, financed by the people of Canada. The Liberal Party and the Conservative Party receive thousands and thousands of dollars from the banks. The Liberal Party receives something like $50,000 a year from the banks. The Conservatives receive $50,000 a year from each of the major banks in the country.

It is not surprising that the Liberals are somewhat sensitive. They have a record of fiscal incompetence that is embarrassing. Canadians will never again allow them anywhere near the reins of power. They will go the way of the Liberal Party of the United Kingdom and the way of the dodo bird. They will be relics of the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is rich listening to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) talking about the funding and financing of the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party and contrasting it to the democratic methods by which funds are raised by his Party. Yet the New Democratic Party is the only Party in the country which had a contributor go to the Federal Court of Canada to try to get his contribution back. He got it back, too. He did not want to contribute to the New Democratic Party. The banks which have made contributions to other Parties, as other companies have done, have at least done it voluntarily. New Democratic contributors want their money back. The court is ready to give it back to them. I do not think that the New Democratic Party should be telling Liberals and Conservatives anything about democratic fund-raising.

I have another question for the Hon. Member for Burnaby. It does not matter much that I do not get to ask it and have an answer from him, since I did not get an answer to the last question I asked. I asked him how he would define small business. He was unable but, more likely, he was unwilling to define small business for the purpose of the New Democratic capital gains tax exemption. I would be very interested to hear him—and I challenge him on some early occasion, or any other member of his Party—give the Canadian people more details about the exemptions that will be available from their Government in the unlikely opportunity, but the possibility, that they form the Government after the next election.

I have another question that I wanted to ask him, and since I did not get much of an answer to the last one, I think I will ask this one anyway as a hypothetical question. He indicated that following the next election in spite of the polls and in spite of what all of us who travel across the country meeting voters know if there is not a New Democratic Government, what his advice would be to people who are in the following situation. They cannot vote for the New Democratic Party. They might have been beguiled by what the Hon. Member had to say about tax reform, but they do not feel that they can support a political Party that wants to take Canada out of NATO. They do not feel that they can support a political Party that wants to nationalize at least one of the banks. They do not want to see the Government running a bank in addition to all the other things that Governments run and perhaps should not. Maybe they will say that they do not want to vote for a Party whose justice critic voted against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Let us say that we were dealing with a voter who could not support with good reasons the New Democratic Party. Would he advise on the basis of taxation that that voter vote for the Liberals or the Conservatives? I do not know what the Hon. Member would have said if I had called on him, but I believe that he would have said, and that his advice to the Canadian people would be, to vote Liberal in a case like that. That is why I thought he was wearing a red tie.

There are some things that should be said about this tax reform package presented by the Government. I want to try to say some of them right now. The first thing that has to be said is that this is not tax reform. I remember during the last Parliament watching some very sincere activities by Members opposite, members of the Conservative Opposition in those days, directed toward improving the taxation system. I remember the efforts of the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) to try to make the tax system simpler and less complicated. I think of how ironic it is that a political Party that in opposition developed a plan for making the taxation system simpler should have produced what it calls tax reform which is so much more complicated.

In my constituency office last Saturday afternoon I had a line-up of people who needed help with this long blue form that they had all received to enter into the simplified tax reform. It is not hard to do your twelfth, thirteenth or fourteenth form. But it is very complicated for the average individual to sit and look through and answer the complicated questions by which this so-called tax reform is being launched. It is not simpler. It is more complicated.

Also on the subject of tax reform, I remember in the last Parliament the efforts of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to try to deal frankly, openly, and honestly with taxation issues. I think he was very sincere when he was doing that. What I find to be the most astonishing feature of this so-called tax reform is the misrepresentations that it contains, the blatant efforts to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian people about what is happening in this so-called tax reform. I do not think Canadians will be fooled by this.

When the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) stood up and said that four out of five Canadians would find their taxes reduced by tax reform, he knew the full story. What he meant by that statement was that four out of five Canadians would pay less tax under this tax reform than they did in the immediately preceding year, which was the third year of Conservative Government.

What he did not say and what he is hoping the Canadian people will not find out is that those four out of five taxpayers have had substantial tax increases under this Government, so much so that the reduction in this tax reform is no reduction at all. Each of those people, if they are in the same income level that they were when this Government took office, will be paying substantially more taxes as a result of a Conservative Government than they would have without any of these tax measures over the last four years.

I say that it is a misrepresentation to stand up and say that four out of five Canadians will pay less taxes this year than last. It is true, but when we look at the whole picture we see a Government that has engaged in what our Leader has called, and quite truly, the largest tax grab in the history of Canada.

I would like to say something very direct and blunt about tax increases because when the Hon. Member stood up, and I asked him a question about it, he said: "Oh yes, but we had a big deficit to pay off which we inherited from the former Government". It is true, there was a big deficit built up during the Liberal years of office. A great many good things were done with that money. In retrospect one can see that we should have paid our way more as we went along. I concede that there was a big deficit. In years of prosperity something should be done to reduce the deficit. I am not arguing about that. I am not saying that taxes should never be increased. I am not saying that this Government should not have had to increase taxes. I am not saying that a Liberal Government, if there had been one in office, would not have increased taxes. I say something that I believe to the bottom of my heart: a Liberal Government would never increase taxes in a way which makes poor and middle-income people pay more while the richest people, the highest income earners in society, pay less. Their taxes go down while lower and middle-income Canadians have their taxes increased. I would like to think when Liberals have to increase taxes that they would be increased on a progressive basis, in order that those best able to pay would be the ones who would pay more, not those who are most able to pay would pay less. That is the formula followed by the Conservative Government.

• (1740)

The Minister of Finance had a cute phrase: "We want more wealthy people in Canada". That is an interesting idea. It is a good idea. If there are more wealthy people in the country, it is not a bad thing, but if people are made wealthy by having their taxes lowered while the deficit accumulated on the books is approached by making poor and middle income people pay more, that is fraud. It is not liberalism, and it is not tax reform. I hope the Canadian people will see through what this Government has done and call a spade a spade.

Another thing that astonishes me coming from the lips of the Minister of Finance, who was very sincere and dedicated while in opposition to have genuine tax reform, was the Government stating that tax reform has removed 850,000 lower income persons from having to pay income tax.

Mr. Horner: That's right.

Mr. Kaplan: "That's right", the Member opposite says. This year, without tax reform, 850,000 more people would have had to pay taxes than would have paid them without this so-called tax reform. Like the four out of five Canadians who are supposed to be better off, I would like to look at the situation of the 850,000 lower-income persons who have been removed from the tax rolls. Who are they? Did they suddenly get jobs and that is why they are having to pay taxes or not having to pay taxes? Those 850,000 people are the poorest Canadians who, in spite of their poverty and low incomes, were added to the tax rolls by measures the Conservative Government introduced since it came to office. There is no doubt about that.

The Fraser Institute has laid it out chapter and verse. In the first year of office the Government eliminated the inflation adjustment for taxes. The former Government had a policy that raised the floor in order that low-income Canadians were not brought into the tax rolls just because of inflation. That was introduced by the Leader of our Party when he was Minister of Finance. For a decade of Liberal Government every year the floor on income taxes increased so that poor people, who were not paying taxes the year before because of inflation, would not find that they were obliged to pay taxes because their inflated incomes brought them into the tax roll.

This hard-hearted, cruel, oriented to the rich, regressive Government removed that adjustment so that poor people, because of inflation and not because their real incomes went up, came into the tax roll year after year of Conservative Government. Over one million people became income taxpayers because of that change in income taxation. They became taxpayers not because they benefited from prosperity during a Conservative Government, which is what the Minister of Finance tried to say—

Mr. Horner: Maybe they got a job. Did you ever supply any?

Mr. Kaplan: I am not talking about those people. I am talking about people whose real incomes did not change. Some people did get jobs. Many jobs have been created during the last few years in Canada, in the United States, and in every industrialized country, but additional taxpayers appeared in Canada because of the callous policies of the Government introduced in its first years in office. According to the Fraser Institute over one million people became taxpayers because of inflation, although their real incomes did not change.

Now we get the great news that 850,000 of those one million people are being put back, as far as taxation is concerned, to where they were when the Liberals were in office. That is the Government's idea of tax reform. It might be the Government's idea of tax reform. When it says to those 850,000 people who would otherwise have had to pay taxes that under Tory taxation they will no longer do so, perhaps some people will think that a break is being given to lower-income Canadians, but the Government is not even restoring the situation that Canadians faced before the last election. There are still 150,000 people whose real incomes have not increased and who are paying taxes thanks to the Tories. During the election campaign we will see how grateful they are.

I am also concerned about child care. There is something in this wonderful tax reform package for mothers. What has been put on the table by the Government is so far from what is needed and so far from what it promised in the last election campaign that to call it tax reform and put it forward as a reason for voting Tory in the next election is the most bizarre proposition that has ever been put forward.

"We cannot afford it", the Hon. Member says, as he turns his back and marches out of the House. Canadians said the same thing about the old age pension. They said the same thing about medicare. They said the same thing about our massive support for post-secondary education, that we could not afford those things. Justice requires that Canada develop on an urgent basis an adequate child care program. Not only that, the economy demands it.

While we were bringing into place other major social reforms in this country, some of which I have just described, we were not focusing too much on child care. We lived with a reality, which has now become a myth, that there is a spouse at home looking after the children. When we needed to face up to old age pensions, and when we needed to face up to medicare and so on, child care was not competing because there was a spouse at home looking after the children and child care seemed like a frill.

All three political Parties officially recognize the reality; it was recognized in the last election campaign. There is no spouse at home dedicating herself or himself full time to looking after the house and children. She is at work, or she is looking for a job, or she has a job. She is not working for extra money to supplement the family income. In many cases—less than half, but perhaps in my riding more than most—such a woman is the sole income earner for a family with children. There is no adequate child care system.

The Government proposed a child care system. I did an analysis of it with the 200,000 additional day care spaces that were going to be created. One-tenth of the entire national production of this government program is needed in my riding. The City of North York in Metropolitan Toronto is 20,000 day care spaces short. There are more than 10 ridings in Canada; in fact there are nearly 300. We cannot say that we cannot afford it and return to that old rhetoric. We are talking about a program which is an economic reform and a way of taking a burden off the minds of mothers in my riding who need to work to support their families and cannot find a proper place for their children to be cared for during the day.

I do not like to hear men saying that a proper child care program is a frill, that it is not necessary, that it is too expensive, because unlike the other programs I mentioned child care is one where the injustice is borne by and large by women.

In this place where the majority of Members of Parliament are men, we have to be extra sensitive to a woman's point of view. I do not think Hon. Members are sensitive when they say that child care is a fringe or a frill that we cannot afford to have right now. We need to do justice to the mothers of this country by having an adequate child care program.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Kaplan: What is in the tax reform? The tax reform contains a couple of hundred dollars per child for each mother.

When Members opposite were asked about this program over the months that they were trying to bamboozle Canadians into considering their child care package to be worth while, they said: "Well, it is up to the mother. If she wants to spend it on her children, if she wants to establish child care, she has the money and she can do what she likes".

We on this side of the House know that that attitude will not create a national child care program in Canada. We do not want it totally in the public sector. We do not want to nationalize the kinds of child care facilities that there are across this country. Many of them are adequate. Many of them are economical. Many of them provide employment for mothers who take in four or five other children from their apartment building to look after them during the day. We do not want, as the New Democratic Party does, to see those types of day care facilities expropriated by the Government in favour of public child care. We have put forward a program. We want an honest, acceptable, comprehensive child care program that will give the women of this country justice. By the way, it will give the children of this country a good start in life, with a proper child care system containing great standards. This tax reform fails on every count. It should be rejected by us in this House, and it should be rejected by the Canadian people in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I know that in a certain context the word "hypocrisy" is unparliamentary, but sometimes one has difficulty in this House understanding what is meant by that word. Perhaps the Hon. Member could help me with its definition. I wonder if this would correspond to an acceptable definition of hypocrisy: the notion that somehow it is illegitimate for a democratically elected union to determine democratically that contributions will be made to the New Democratic Party, being criticized for such but at the same time being perfectly acceptable for $80,000 in money from depositors and shareholders in banks to be contributed to the Liberal Party, even though individual depositors and individual shareholders may object to it. I wonder if seeing a difference between those two is not hypocrisy.

The Liberal Party criticizes the inadequacies of the Progressive Conservative Government with respect to tax reform which it could have brought about in the many years that it was in power. Is that not hypocrisy? I wonder if there is not a danger of hypocrisy in the notion proposed by a certain Leader of the Liberal Party that there would be no wage and price controls and subsequently introduce such wage and price controls, and whether that kind of hypocrisy does not hint at the kind of hypocrisy that one might expect in the same Party with respect to free trade. It is a Party that said that it will tear it up, but a Party that also had great difficulty, recently, in getting contributions from those same banks, large corporations, and corporate people in respect to their fund-raising. I do not know what hypocrisy is, but I wonder if the members of the Liberal Party could not give us a better definition of it, by virtue of experience, than anybody else in the House.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I think that when I am finished perhaps the Hon. Member will have a better understanding, because I want to put it precisely in the context of the questions that he asked. I criticized the New Democratic Party because it attacked our method of fund-raising to get contributions from banks, from virtually anyone who wants to contribute, while in the New Democratic Party I mentioned that someone went to the Federal Court of Canada to get his money back. They belonged to a union. As the Member said, they democratically decided that they were going to support the union and therefore every member, whether he liked it or not, had to contribute.

The Member asked me: "How is that different from a bank? Do the shareholders and the depositors get a say in whether the contribution is made?" As a matter of fact they do not. If an individual shareholder finds that the directors of the bank have decided to make a contribution to the Conservative Party and to the Liberal Party, and he may not like it, there is nothing he can do about it. If a depositor who is depositing in a bank learns that the bank is spending part of its money by making contributions to the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party, he cannot change the bank's policy. There is a very important difference in a contribution that the union makes and a contribution that a bank makes. If I do not want my bank to contribute to the Conservative Party or to the Liberal Party, I can move my money to another bank. If I am a depositor and I am not happy with the bank's investment policy, I can take my money out.

Mr. McCurdy: Which other bank?

Mr. Kaplan: If I am a shareholder and I find out that the Bank of Nova Scotia is contributing to the Liberal Party and I do not like it, I can sell my shares and buy shares in another bank. This unionist is forced to pay dues to the union, whether he likes it or not and whether he joins or not and he is forced to see part of his dues go to the New Democratic Party.

An Hon. Member: The shareholder in the bank has no choice at all.

An Hon. Member: The unionist can leave his job.

Mr. Kaplan: Yes, the unionist can leave his job and the shareholder of a bank can sell his stock. There is not much of a parallel in saying that you can sell your shares and invest in another bank that contributes to the political Party that you like. I suppose there are co-operative banks registered as such that make contributions to the New Democratic Party. If someone is unhappy with the way that they are handled as a depositor and with what happens with their money, they can change.

Do you know what you have to do to get relief if you are a member of a union or if you are paying dues to a union? There is no stock to sell. There are no deposits to transfer. You have to do what someone recently did; you have to go to court. He had to go to the Federal Court of Canada to get back the money that the union contributed out of his dues, against his will, to the New Democratic Party. What is hypocrisy? I think it is failing to recognize that.

I wanted to take some time to also talk about loopholes. The Liberal Government introduced a lot of loopholes, which were characterized as tax incentives and designed to produce certain results. I am not saying that they all worked. Why the Conservatives did not stop the science endeavour when they should have, why they let it run on and on for a billion dollars, I do not know, but tax loopholes created certain important industries in this country such as the movie industry. I do not think that we want to do without it. A loophole was meant to be an incentive. In many cases, they were incentives. If they were exceeded, as the Members opposite said, they should have changed them and stopped them when they first took office.

An Hon. Member: They shouldn't have even got in.

Mr. Kaplan: They should not have gotten in. I agree with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hate to put an end to this debate, but it being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

ANNUAL REPORT—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I indicated only a few moments ago that I was intending to make a statement in the House with reference to the annual report of the Farm Credit Corporation. The document, upon study, really contains no surprises for those who have been following agricultural events over the last five or 10 years. The Farm Credit Corporation is reporting major losses again this year. It is important for Canadians to understand how the Farm Credit Corporation got into this situation in the first place and it is important as well to understand how this Government intends to bring the Farm Credit Corporation back onto sound financial footings.

In the 1970s, the so-called experts made a number of predictions that affected, and affected very seriously, many conventional or traditional lending institutions, and they also made some predictions that had a very severe impact especially on the Farm Credit Corporation. The so-called experts indicated and sent out messages to the effect that interest rates would remain stable. They said that energy costs would remain stable. They said that the inflation rate would remain stable. They said that we would be going through a time, now in the mid-eighties and beyond, of world shortages in food supply. They also said that we would be going through a period of time in our history when commodity prices would be reaching all-time high levels. Obviously, they were wrong on all accounts.

At that time, farmers were encouraged to borrow money to buy land and to expand their operations. By the mid-1970s, the Farm Credit Corporation could not supply credit to meet the demands. In 1975, the Farm Credit Corporation Act was revised to provide 100 per cent of the market value on security of the collateral for the loan.

Again, between 1972 and 1983, loan limits were increased five times to keep up with the inflation of the farm asset value. The lending decisions were made on market expectations that just did not materialize. The widely available credit resulted in heavy borrowing and the farm debt shot up from $4.6 billion in 1971 to $18.6 billion in 1981.

Then in the early 1980s, interest rates shot up. In fact, they increased by about 12 per cent to reach record highs of some 22 per cent or 23 per cent. For farmers, each percentage point represents an additional cost of about $150 million. That increase in interest rates of 12 per cent was a direct input cost to Canadian farmers of nearly $2 billion.

At the same time, commodity prices dropped, especially for grains. Incomes dropped and so did farm asset values drop by nearly $20 billion. Farmers with high debt loads were crippled and the Farm Credit Corporation became a lender of last resort. The Farm Credit Corporation found itself serving clients who owed more than the sale of their land could possibly recover.

Today we see the result of all those factors. Some 96 per cent of all FCC arrears today relate to those loans made prior to 1984. That was a direct result of the conditions during that period of time, and last year the FCC lost $511.8 million.

This Government has made it a priority to restore order to FCC policies and put the corporation back on its feet. These measures include a moratorium on foreclosures in 1984 and 1985; an $80 million interest rate reduction program in 1985; a shared risk mortgage introduced in 1985; farm debt review legislation was passed; farm debt review boards were established. As a matter of interest, a recent survey showed that 74 per cent of those who have used the boards are satisfied with the process. As well, we put in place the Canadian Rural Transition Program and also amended and enhanced the Farm Improvements Loans Act.

Last December, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that this Government would provide $100 million to help cover FCC losses. More assistance was given to the corporation to allow it to participate fully in the farm debt review process. We put in new managers at the corporation and gave them the responsibility and the challenge of developing a recovery plan. Today, I am announcing that this Government will contribute another $400 million as part of that recovery plan. We will be injecting more money into FCC over the next three years.

The message we are sending out today on behalf of the Government is the fact that the FCC is here and here to stay. This Government stands firmly behind the corporation and is helping to solve its financial problems. This new money will ensure that FCC continues to serve farmers, and a healthier corporation means better service to farmers.

The corporation's role has also been clarified. Its primary job is to provide long-term mortgage credit to Canadian farmers on a break-even basis. It will be an alternative source of credit to average risk farmers, as well as those who represent a marginally higher risk but who have significant potential for commercial viability. These measures will ensure that our farmers have a reliable source of long-term credit when they need it, and that future FCC clients will not be penalized by past corporate losses. These measures also ensure that the corporation will be able to offer competitive interest rates.

Today's financial recovery plan is only the latest evidence of this Government's commitment to Canadian agriculture. In the last four years we undertook initiatives worth nearly $10 billion to our agri-food industry. We made record payments under the Special Canadian Grains Program, stabilization programs, drought assistance programs, and the list goes on. Our record on agriculture is second to none. We stand squarely behind Canadian farmers. We are determined to put the Farm Credit Corporation on a financially sound basis. We will ensure that it continues to provide long-term credit to Canadian farmers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it has been said before that never has so much been said about so little, the "so little" being of course the action of the Government in its assistance to agriculture.

The Government today prides itself on having bailed out the Farm Credit Corporation after it allowed it to go broke to start with. The Tories applaud the fact that the Government has, a year after the FCC was technically broke, bailed it out and put it back on the footing on which it should have been all along. We are supposed to be very grateful for this.

I was thinking this morning that the Government was going to come into this House and tell us about a massive program of assistance for farmers. I thought the announcement that the Minister was going to make on the FCC would include such things as that the corporation's current losses would be supported by the Government on a long-term basis. I thought the Government would say the FCC would play a brand new and innovative role in the development of financial services for farmers. I hoped to hear the Government would recognize the need for a policy role for the FCC and would commit itself to compensate the corporation for the losses it incurs while developing these policies. I was hoping to hear the Minister tell us today that the FCC would establish a brand new set of programs for beginning farmers and set standards for management skills of beginning farmers, that it would recycle FCC properties and recycle them for beginning farmers. Those are the kinds of things I was hoping to hear the Minister say this morning, but I did not hear any of them.

I was hoping to hear as well that the federal Government was finally going to bail out the FCC from the poor condition it allowed it to get into. Of course I was hoping that. That is the least the Government could do. As usual the Government did the very least it could have done.

I listened with great attention and read the Minister's speech, and I thank him for having the courtesy to provide me with a copy some minutes ago. I was wondering whether it would be delivered by the Minister. I will just refresh your memory on what the Minister just said. He said:

> This Government has made it a priority to restore order to FCC policies—

Order? It allowed the FCC to go broke! Is that what you call order? It has to be Tory order but it is not logical order and it is certainly not farm order. Farmers do not run their businesses that way.

The Government says it initiated a number of things such as a moratorium on farm foreclosures. The Government says it initiated farm debt review measures and so on. I am glad to see the Minister listened to some of the suggestions made by Ralph Ferguson and others in the past.

Mr. Wise: Ralph who?

Mr. Boudria: I am sure Ralph is proud of the fact that he suggested some of these things. However, when the Minister copies something like that he should put a note at the bottom and extend the proper courtesy to the people who made these suggestions in the past.

Mr. Wise: Ralph could not do it.

Mr. Boudria: If one does not do that, then it is plagiarism. We would not want to accuse the Minister of that.

One of the most important things I read in this statement today is this very short sentence:

FCC is here to stay.

That is an important statement. It is probably more important than anything else in the Minister's speech this morning. That statement is symbolically important for all farmers. It is my hope that the Government and the Minister mean what they say in that statement. It means the FCC has to exist as something other than a name. An organization which is broke now and has been broke for almost a year is not exactly something that looks as though it were here to stay.

I urge the Minister not only to provide the funding today which will satisfy the FCC for the short term because it has this huge backlog of cases to deal with but, more important, to make a commitment that the Government, and any future Government, will not allow the FCC to go broke as the Minister and his Government have done.

I know that the time afforded to us is very limited. That is unfortunate because I could go on and on talking about agriculture and the sad record of the Government in supporting agriculture. The Government has failed to convince its friend, the United States of America with whom it is trying to sign a trade deal, to stop this war on subsidies which has caused the prices of agricultural commodities to go down so much and which has caused so many of the problems we have today. The Government has failed miserably in that regard.

We must remember as well that the excess farm debt at the present in this country is $22 billion. There is $22 billion of excess debt which farmers will never be able to handle. As a matter of fact, the Standing Committee on Agriculture will be reporting on that issue and making a number of recommendations which I cannot reveal, obviously, because they have not yet been reported to the House and I, of course, would never leak the contents of a committee report.

The Minister said, "Our record on agriculture is second to none". What he should have said is, "Our record on agriculture is none to second".

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is amazing how an impending election can bring a tottering Government out of the doldrums and get it to make decisions, statements, announcements of funds which are suddenly available for a variety of reasons—which funds were probably going to be available anyway in some cases—or the re-announcement of funds that have already been announced and put in place.

Much of the Minister's statement dealt with the history of the Farm Credit Corporation. History is important to know and to learn from. However, it has little value to the credit-starved farmers looking for assistance. The deficit situation of the Farm Credit Corporation is a direct result of decisions made by the previous Government. That Government decided to find money on the market rather than use the money available through the Government.

The Minister indicated that he was going to announce a recovery plan, but failed to do so. The deficit of the Farm Credit Corporation was allowed to grow and the corporation almost reached the situation of being no longer viable. A bail-out was necessary. Last December, $100 million was announced and the $400 million announced today covers part of the deficit, but it does not put the Farm Credit Corporation into a position where it can return to the role for which it was originally established. That is something the Minister will have to do before the effect of this money will be felt by the farmers.

There are thousands of farmers in very difficult straits. This so-called recovery plan will give them no more hope of survival. There are a couple of things which this recovery plan could have done which it did not do. For instance, it made no attempt to shield the farmers from high interest rates. The Government has been supporting the increase in interest rates by a Bank of Canada policy which is already affecting the survival of farmers who require credit to continue operating. Interest rates are on the rise to such an extent that they are a factor in the elimination of more farmers each year. This so-called recovery plan contains no protection for farmers in that regard.

It failed to announce the quality or quantity of funds which would be available for lending to farmers in the future. The fact that there are thousands of farmers who need credit now and need a plan to keep them on the farms is not going to be affected by the putting into place of enough money to bring the Farm Credit Corporation out of a deficit position.

Third, as long as the Farm Credit Corporation operates as a bank it will continue to abandon the thousands of farmers who need action for their survival. As long as the Farm Credit Corporation continues to be just another bank it will not help those farmers.

In the past the Farm Credit Corporation has been a very important factor in agriculture, and it can be so again. It must be so again. However, the recovery plan which the Minister suggests he is putting in place, which I suppose could be called a non-recovery plan, will not do much toward establishing a comprehensive structure which would allow farmers to survive, farmers getting into agriculture, to have a source of funds without having to go to the banks and take the kinds of risks which were taken in the past, and to allow able farmers to continue in their present structure.

I am glad that the Farm Credit Corporation is going to be able to eliminate part of its deficit. However, we need answers about how the Farm Credit Corporation will operate relative to farmers in the future. Those are the kinds of answers the Minister did not give in his statement.

I hope the Minister will follow through on the position he has taken and give us, in the very near future, a comprehensive plan for the Farm Credit Corporation so that farmers will have some security about the availability of credit and the price they will have to pay for that credit.

CANADIAN CENTRE ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE ACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-143, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre on Substance Abuse.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. In today's Projected Order of Business, on page 6 under the heading Private Members' Business for Friday, July 22, we read:

Mr. Malépart—Motion—Passage of Bills without final Senate agreement

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), since his leader, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), decided yesterday that Bill C-130—since he asked the Senate not to accept Bill C-130, does the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie still intend to table his motion tomorrow during the time for Private Members' Business?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not consider this to be a point of order, but if the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) wishes to add something . . .

Mr. Gauthier: What goes for the Parliamentary Secretary goes for the Member for Ottawa—Vanier. Besides, this is not a point of order at all, Mr. Speaker. But I would say that the Parliamentary Secretary has put his foot in his mouth. The debate will take place tomorrow at two o'clock. If he wants to know what we will do about it, let him attend the debate tomorrow and take part in it.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order. I believe that under Private Members' Business for today there has been an understanding among the Parties that while we will proceed with Motion No. 104 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), we will spend a moment to deal with another Private Member's initiative as well. Perhaps we could get a clarification before we get too much further into today's business.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the Hon. Member's point, I think the Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has a Private Members' Bill in which she wants to change the name of her riding. She has consulted with me and I believe with the NDP. I do not know the Government's position, but we are ready to facilitate any passage of that Bill quickly tonight, if she so desires and wants to proceed with it.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that is the offer we are prepared to make, with the understanding that it would not necessarily cut into the time allocated to the Hon. Member for Burnaby. However, to facilitate the request of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) to change the name of her constituency, the understanding is that we will take a moment to comment in order to facilitate her request. If that is the case, I would like not to see the clock so as at least to allow the one hour allowed for the Private Members' Motion of the Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that those discussions have taken place and that there has been full and proper notice to all Members of the House that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) wishes to proceed at that time.

While I cannot speak for Members of the House as to what might take place, I can speak for the Government in saying that whatever takes place we will ensure that a full hour of debate is given to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this is a point of order or a question of privilege, you choose! In answer to my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary and Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), I am open to any proposal to give the people an opportunity for a democratic debate and a chance to decide on the Mulroney-Reagan agreement, because I find it unfair that a small group of Conservatives in the House of Commons will force such an important Bill on the people of Canada without consulting them.

CANADA REFERENDUM AND PLEBISCITE ACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-311, an Act respecting Referendums and Plebiscites in Canada on Questions of Public Importance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, on a morning when there is controversy in Parliament and the country about whether a specific question such as free trade ought to be submitted to a general election or to the other place, the Senate, I am happy to be able to introduce for first reading a Bill that would point to a third way. The national referendum and plebiscite Act, or La loi Canadienne sur les référendums et plébiscites, is a complete code providing for the holding of referendums and plebiscites in Canada.

This Bill is certified in order, seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). It runs to some 363 pages and attempts to deal in every respect, whether with broadcasting, fairness of publicity, spending limits, and all of the issues that are important to fair and unsullied expression of direct public opinion.

In my view, it is high time that we had such a statute that would give that third option for direct expression of popular opinion. I am happy to bring this Bill before the House this morning for first reading.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and privilege again to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who are of the opinion that the federal Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude this trade deal with the United States.

They believe that Canada's sovereignty would be seriously compromised. They believe that this deal would undermine our ability as a country to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

They go on to outline all of the reasons why they think this is a bad deal for Canada. I wish the Government would listen to them, do the honourable thing, and call an election.

The petitioners are asking that Parliament dissolve now to allow the people of Canada to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of Londoners who call upon the Government to pass legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

PROSECUTION OF WAR CRIMINALS RESIDENT IN CANADA

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by some 25 citizens from my constituency and elsewhere. It is certified pursuant to Standing Order 106 and pertains to the Memorandum of Understanding entered into between the Department of Justice and the Procurator General of the U.S.S.R. It relates to the prosecution of war criminals and seeks, through this petition, that the Government of Canada would broaden the terms of that Memorandum of Understanding to include not only Nazi war criminals but all war criminals who may be resident in Canada at this time.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106 I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by a number of residents of the community of Atikokan. It is one of a series of petitions I have tabled in the House.

The petitioners are concerned that the community of Atikokan and the immediate area were not included in the northern residents' tax deduction. They call upon Parliament to take specific action.

I am pleased to indicate that on August 8, the task force set up by the federal Government will be in the community of Atikokan to hear representations from those citizens. Hopefully, René Brunelle and his crew will agree that they have been unfairly treated and will include them in the northern tax deduction.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-33—PUBLIC SERVANTS' PENSIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have received petitions from constituents, mainly from the City of Thompson and the Town of The Pas. These people are concerned with the Government's attempt to pass Bill C-33 which they believe will deindex pensions of federal public servants who now have complete inflation protection through full indexation to the Consumer Price Index.

• (1140)

Whereas increasingly in the private sector, pension plan agreements have been negotiated by such unions as the Canadian Auto Workers, the Canadian Paper Workers, and the International Association of Machinists, and now include an indexing to the Consumer Price Index formula as the best means of protecting the members' pensions; and whereas the Ontario Government, which has responsibility for 70 per cent of all private pension plans in Canada has passed legislation calling for inflation protection for Ontario pension funds and has now received the recommendation from the Friedland task force that such protection take the form of linkage to the Consumer Price Index as the best possible method of achieving this; therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject Bill C-33 as regressive, unfair, untimely and against the best interests of public servants and all Canadians, and that Parliament affirm full indexation to the Consumer Price Index as the model for inflation protection for all Canadians.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to table pursuant to Standing Order 106, and they contain the names of people who are strongly opposed to the trade agreement concluded between Mr. Reagan and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

The petitioners humbly submit that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada which has received nothing in return, that Canadian industries are still not protected from U.S. trade laws, that the United States obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment, that thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and that the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers. Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to denounce the Government for signing the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on October 4, 1987. This petition is signed by dozens of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I also have petitions to table on behalf of people from all the regions of Canada, including Quebec, Ontario, Toronto, Montreal, Vancouver and the Maritimes. The petitioners unanimously oppose the agreement signed by the Canadian Government, the agreement that has been called "a horse, a rabbit". You know, Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement.

These people disagree with the Canadian Government, and are opposed to the passage of the agreement by the House of Commons. I am convinced that the petitioners would agree with the Liberal leader in demanding an election on such a fundamental issue.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 325 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 325 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Wednesday, July 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724), and the subamendment of Mr. Boudria (p. 17770).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate on Bill C-139 with the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan).

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the tax reform Bill today and to explain some of the benefits of the Government's tax reform legislation. All Canadians benefit from tax reform, either from having their own taxes lowered or through the increased economic activity that will flow from an improved, more efficient and more equitable tax system.

Previous speakers in this debate have examined various aspects of tax reform. As both a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and as Chairman of the government caucus Health and Welfare Committee, I would like to look at how our comprehensive tax reform package provides significant benefits to Canadian families. Most important, tax reform means that Canadians will pay lower taxes this year than they did in 1987. Tax reform will reduce personal income tax for eight out of 10 Canadian households and for almost nine out of 10 Canadians over the age of 65. In other words, about 9.7 million households will enjoy an average tax cut of almost $500.

As well, Canadians will generally find their provincial income taxes reduced in the nine provinces that have tax collection agreements with the federal Government. Quebec has also made a number of changes to allow residents of that province to benefit from our tax reform measures. I said that Canadians will "generally find their provincial income taxes reduced" because there is one province where the provincial Treasurer has taken some action to pre-empt the tax benefits that should be flowing to the residents of that province. I refer, of course, to the Finance Minister, Mr. Nixon, of Ontario, who introduced increases in taxes to take away the benefits that would flow to families in Ontario before they could be received.

Most individuals are already benefiting from higher take-home pay. As of July 1, most pay cheques are larger, reflecting the reduction in taxes as a result of tax reform. Further adjustments in taxes, of course, will occur at year end. Tax reform will also mean a fairer tax system. The key to improving the fairness of the system under tax reform is replacing a number of the old system's exemptions and deductions with tax credits.

Tax credits are fairer because they directly reduce tax payable. This means that a tax credit is worth the same to all Canadians regardless of their level of income. By contrast, under the old system, exemptions were of greater value to people with higher incomes because they reduced the amount of income subject to tax at the higher tax rates.

As a result of converting exemptions to credits, approximately 850,000 lower-income Canadians will have their federal personal income tax reduced to zero. Converting exemptions to credits will provide important financial benefits to Canadian families in a variety of ways. For instance, under tax reform, the married exemption will be converted to a credit. This will benefit many households where the second spouse has a modest income from part-time work or small investments. Currently, the married exemption is reduced by one dollar for every dollar of net income earned by a spouse above a threshold. As a result, a part of the earnings of the lower-income spouse are effectively taxed at the rate applicable to the higher-income spouse.

With tax reform, this inequity will no longer exist. The first $27,500 of income earned by the low-income spouse will be subject to tax at the federal rate of 17 per cent. The conversion of the married exemption to a tax credit thus removes the tax penalty that can now discourage a second income earner from entering the labour force. The new married or equivalent to married credit of $850 represents a significant increase over the old exemption. Indeed, for most Canadians, the new credit is equivalent to an exemption of $5,000 or $1,260 more than the old exemption would have been worth this year.

More than two million lower-income families will benefit from the higher refundable sales tax credit, the increase to $70 from $50 for adults and $35 from $25 for children. The family net income threshold at which the credit begins to be reduced has been raised by $1,000 to $16,000. These measures will protect lower-income Canadians from the impact of interim changes to the federal sales tax as part of the first stage of tax reform.

The refundable sales tax credit will be significantly enriched and extended to more Canadians in stage two of tax reform when the current federal sales tax will be replaced with a new sales tax. Many families, and single Canadians, will also benefit from the changed treatment of education expenses. The current education expense deduction will become a tax credit of $10 per month. In addition, the deductions for tuition fees will be replaced by a tax credit of 17 per cent of post-secondary tuition fees. Quite importantly, the unused portion of the first $600 of these credits can be transferred to a supporting parent, spouse or grandparent. This is an important new feature. Before tax reform tuition fees could only be claimed by the student, even when the student did not have sufficient income to benefit from the use of the exemption.

• (1150)

Under tax reform the income level at which families start paying tax will rise. The increased value of personal tax credits raises the tax thresholds. That is the main reason that the 850,000 lower-income Canadians I mentioned earlier will have their income tax cut to zero.

For example, this year a couple with one earner and with two children will not pay any federal income tax until their income reaches $18,890. This compares with a threshold before tax reform of $16,770.

After presenting the original White Paper proposals the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) consulted with Canadians and gave the tax reform proposals to the Finance Committee which made a number of recommendations for improvements. Many of these improvements increased benefits for families with children.

For example, the refundable child tax credit was increased to $559 as of January 1 of this year. The dependent child credit, which replaces the old exemption, was set at $65 per child. However, for the third and subsequent children the tax credit was doubled to $130. The credits were also made available for the full year in which the child turns 18. A dependent child is now able to earn as much as $2,500 before the credit begins to be phased out.

While I have been dwelling this morning on benefits to families, it is fair to point out that a number of these increases were recommended by the Finance Committee and, indeed, the means to pay for them was also recommended by the Finance Committee in its report. The money has come from imposing effective taxes, alternative minimum taxes, for the first time on our large financial institutions. In this way banks, trust companies, life insurance companies, property and casualty insurance companies and real estate companies, which effectively for the large part have been paying no taxes whatsoever on their profits for the last 10 years, will indeed pay taxes under tax reform. By and large these taxes are being used to finance these family benefit tax credits to which I have been referring.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) also announced the Government's new national strategy on child care last December. By doubling the maximum child care expense deduction to $4,000 for each child who is six years old and under, and by introducing a supplement to the refundable child tax credit for those who do not have receipted child care expenses, we have increased substantially the level of tax assistance for parents.

Many families will also benefit from the improvements we have made to a number of the old deductions. The new medical expense credit will provide similar tax relief to all taxpayers with uninsured medical expenses. The charitable donations credit improves the tax incentive for the vast majority of Canadians to make larger donations. The improved disability credit not only is fairer to people at all income levels, it also increases tax assistance for the majority in the 17 per cent bracket. Greater fairness is being achieved by converting the deductions for the CPP/QPP contributions and UI premiums into credits of 17 per cent.

When one combines our tax reform measures with the improvements in tax assistance announced as part of the child care policy, it is clear that this Government is committed to improving the well-being of Canadian families.

If Members opposite share the Government's commitment to the Canadian family, they can show their support by voting in favour of this Bill to implement our tax reform proposals.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask about fairness and therefore will ask a rather technical question of my friend who is also a member of the Finance Committee. I ask this question because I think it is a serious issue which is difficult to ventilate in the House of Commons.

In the House of Commons we have been talking about the unfairness of Conservative tax reform and the fact that while taxes on many families are down from last year, according to the tax reform, they are up from 1984. The only people who have tax cuts from 1984 under Tory tax reform are people earning over $100,000 per year.

Because of the fact that the Hon. Member and I worked together on this matter I would like to remind him of the report of the committee with respect to the issue of the proposed anti-avoidance rule. The Hon. Member for Scarborough will recall that the committee rejected the Government's proposed new anti-avoidance rules. It rejected them because of the feeling that we would be into a period of six, seven or eight years of turmoil before the courts began to define more precisely what the new anti-avoidance provisions meant. There was a feeling, which I believe the Hon. Member shared, that a large part of the problem was not the legislation but the lack of aggressiveness of the Department of National Revenue and, perhaps, the Ministry of Finance in actually pursuing avoidance transactions under the present law. We felt that the present law could be changed modestly in order to make it more effective.

I wonder if the Hon. Member can comment on the Government's determination to ignore the advice of the elected representatives, which came from all Parties, and which was offered not just by the New Democratic members or by the Liberal members of the committee but by the Progressive Conservative members as well. Can the Hon. Member comment on the failure of the Government to look seriously at the proposed anti-avoidance provision which the committee recommended and which was based, if I recall correctly, on submissions which we had from experts such as the Bar Association and chartered accountants?

The Hon. Member will recall the fact that, after the Ways and Means Motion which contained the draft legislation was made public in April, the joint committee of the bar and of the chartered accountants came back before the committee and once again told us categorically, and I think constructively, that it thought that the proposed legislation was wrong. It said that it would create enormous problems and that, far from stopping anti-avoidance devices and dodges being used by different companies, speculators and people in the stock market, in fact it would create more problems than it would solve.

I recognize that many of the people who are active in the tax committee of the bar and of the accounting profession are some of the people who are advising private plans on these avoidance schemes. However, in listening to the testimony I was convinced that they were, nonetheless, and regardless of a potential conflict of interest, not trying to leave Parliament and the Government boxed in but that they were speaking to loopholes and running room which had been created for them by a lack of aggressive action and enforcement.

Will the Hon. Member comment on how he can support this Bill when in this particular area which, in the end, is so offensive to average Canadians, the Government, in an excess of zeal, has created probably a weaker instrument than it could have had with the existing legislation had it been reinforced?

Mr. McCrossan: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has raised two points. The first point he raised had to do with the level of taxes paid under tax reform. The second point had to do not with anything I said but with matters we heard in the committee with respect to the anti-avoidance rules in the tax legislation. I will deal with both points separately.

With respect to the level of taxes which will be paid, I think that the Hon. Member has arrived at a false conclusion. His conclusion is false, and demonstrably false, as a result of the details which were provided to the Finance Committee. It is false in respect to two separate areas.

First, he indicates that in general taxpayers earning over $100,000 will pay less tax under the new system than under the old system. I categorically reject this. Indeed, all the evidence presented to the Finance Committee also rejects the same assertion. The Hon. Member rather conveniently ignores the large number of tax references which have been closed out which were largely utilized by these people making over $100,000. Indeed, the distribution of taxes provided with the tax reform package indicates that, of the 20 per cent of Canadians who will pay higher taxes, and as I recall it will average in excess of $500 a year more in taxes, it is concentrated largely with those earning $100,000 a year as a result of the much fairer and systematic elimination of loopholes and curtailment of tax preferences.

• (1200)

Second, the Hon. Member makes the sweeping assertion that Canadians will pay more taxes as a result of what I believe is a misinterpretation of figures. I certainly would not want to suggest it was a deliberate misinterpretation. However, one of the things I have noticed is that the Hon. Member has a tendency to look at the trend in personal income taxes. Since that trend has been going up over the four years, he has come to the conclusion that the level of taxes has gone up significantly over the four years including tax reform.

In his calculations the Hon. Member made the significant omission of looking at the increased number of people who are participating in the workplace as a result of the very large drop in the unemployment rate that has taken place under this Government.

Therefore, one cannot look at the trend in personal income tax collections and divide it by the population and state that the average taxpayer is paying more. One has to look at the number of people who are working and paying taxes rather than collecting unemployment insurance or welfare.

With respect to the second point of the Hon. Member, the general anti-avoidance rules in the legislation, in part I agree with the Hon. Member. Following the tabling of the draft legislation, I would agree with him that the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants did appear before the committee and did indicate that they had serious reservations about—

Mr. Cassidy: In the strongest terms.

Mr. McCrossan: —the general anti-avoidance rules. It is fair to say that those reservations were in part shared by members of the committee from all Parties. Today we are looking at second reading of the Bill which is approval in principle. There is no principle involved in this Bill with which I have any problem. However, when the Bill gets to committee, which I would hope will be in the next day or two, I hope that once again we would call experts in the field of the anti-avoidance provision to see if we can come up with a better anti-avoidance provision which legitimately curtails tax avoidance schemes, but at the same time is not so arbitrary as to create such a large degree of uncertainty that business cannot effectively plan without seeking extensive tax rulings in advance of any major transaction in Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech of my hon. colleague on tax reform. It was an interesting speech, but I think the Hon. Member missed the point on a number of occasions in describing exactly what has happened under the so-called tax reform of the Conservative Government. It is now well known that while the tax system has been changed rather than reformed, it has been somewhat deformed. If the tax system was unjust before the Conservatives examined it, it is now more unfair; if it was discriminatory against the poor, it is now more than ever discriminatory against the poor; if it advantaged the wealthy, it now more than ever advantages the wealthy; if it was a complicated system before, it is more complicated now.

The best reference that I have read relating to the Conservative Government's view of tax reform is "Robin Hood in reverse". Rather than take from the rich and give to the poor, tax reform for the Conservatives is take from the poor and give to the rich. Very clearly, the beneficiaries of the tax reform of the Conservative Government are those Canadians who are the wealthiest Canadians. Once again, the rest of Canadian society has been hammered and hosed through this tax reform package so that more than ever they are paying more taxes now than when the Conservative Government took office.

If one totalled all the tax increases that the average Canadian family has experienced under the Conservative Government, for example, income tax increases, gasoline tax increases, and sales tax increases of one type or another, it would be found that, compared to September, 1984, in September, 1988, the average Canadian family will be paying $1,000 more in federal taxes under the Mulroney Government. That is an absolute tragedy. In all the communities of Canada it means that that $1,000 per family is not circulating in the community from business to business and person to person to keep the local economy going.

There are tens of thousands of people in our country who need shelter or affordable homes. The only shelter the Conservative Government is involved with is sheltering taxes for the various wealthy Canadians. "Tax shelter", is what the Government means when it talks about "shelter". There are dozens of tax shelters technically designed to assist the Canadian economy, but in reality they result in a handful of rich people becoming richer.

Together with a number of my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus I have the privilege to work on Tax Probe 1986 which began in 1986. For two years we travelled the country and talked to tax experts on the East Coast, in central Canada, on the Prairies, on the West Coast, and up into the North. We talked to every conceivable person we could find who was interested in talking about how to reform the tax system. We asked the questions: "As a tax expert, what tax loophole is a good one?" "As Mr. and Mrs. Tax Expert, which tax loophole would you say that Canada is getting good value for?" "If it costs the taxpayers of Canada $500 million of lost taxes, how much do we gain from that in addition to the tax loss?" There was not one single tax accountant, tax lawyer, or tax adviser who was prepared to stand up and say that a certain tax loophole is good for Canada. Certain tax loopholes are good for some people or a handful of investors, but when asked if they were good for Canada, not a single expert was prepared to say they were.

I am not prepared to say that there is not a good tax loophole, but after two years of searching out the nooks and crannies of the country and examining page by page the complicated tax Act, we could not find a single tax loophole that made economic financial sense.

How can one summarize the Conservative view of tax reform? At the top of the list is this puzzling question that has been put to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) so many times that it has become a boring question. The question is: "Under your tax reform system, how is it that 60,000 profitable corporations do not pay a single penny in income tax?" Presumably the Minister of Finance is proud of what he has done to the tax system to improve it, but he allows 60,000 profitable companies to pay not a single penny in income tax. That is to say nothing of the thousands of companies that might pay $10 or $50 in income tax a year, but those 60,000 profitable corporations do not even pay five cents.

They are not small companies, or companies that we call the "Mom and Pop Shops" of Canada. In some years they are companies such as the Royal Bank of Canada. In other years it will be the Bank of Montreal, Cadillac-Fairview, General Motors, or Shell Oil. There are 60,000 corporations that do not pay anything.

• (1210)

We have said that it is time that that changes, that it is time that we start building some fairness into our tax system. If we are going to build fairness, it means that those corporations that are very profitable should be paying their fair share. They should not be paying more than their fair share but just their fair share. I noticed that in the United States, back in 1986, the President introduced a tax law that requires every profitable company in the United States to pay at least a minimum corporate tax of 20 per cent. That was accepted in the United States as fair and reasonable. That was accepted by large, small and medium-sized corporations as the decent thing to do, so that they would be able to pay their fair share. After all, their profits and so on were coming from a country and an economy where they obviously were benefiting, and they felt that 20 per cent minimum was a fair corporate tax.

Does our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) do the same thing in Canada? Unfortunately not. He is not prepared even to touch that aspect of our tax system. I say that that is wrong, unjust, unfair and discriminatory, particularly against the people of Canada and against the small business sector of Canada.

As our well-known friend, John Bulloch, who heads the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, has indicated, our tax system is discriminatory against the small and medium-sized business in Canada. They pay their fair share and they pay what is a reasonable amount of tax, in some cases too much. They have to pay more than they should, because the large profitable corporation in some cases pays zero. We are saying that that is reflective of an unfair tax system.

Now, one can go on and speak on the personal side of the tax system. Under tax reform, the stockbroker in downtown Toronto who might make $200,000 a year will save $15,000 under Mr. Wilson's tax reform. He will save $15,000 because his rates have gone down, and yet, there are hundreds of thousands of people whose incomes rank below the poverty line who still pay income tax.

Young families struggling to get established, working hard, receiving a very modest income, pay income tax, pay $50, $100, and yet tax reform means that the stockbroker who makes $200,000 is going to save $15,000 this year on his or her income tax. That is the kind of unfairness that is perpetuated by this tax reform picture.

My dad is nearly 83 years old. He worked all of his life, saved modestly so that he could have a decent pension. He has to pay taxes on a small savings account. My dad, 83 years old, pays more income tax in some years than the Royal Bank of Canada. My dad pays more taxes in some years than Shell Oil. That is wrong. Who could sit here and say that this is a good system, that this is a fair system? My dad does not feel that way.

The tax returns that most of us have tried to fill out in the last few months, in that annual ritual where we sit awake late at night, night after night, with dictionaries and calculators and sheets of paper, trying to figure out what our tax bill should be that year, is an ordeal. I look forward to it in most years with some terror. I know that as simplistic as it seems to be, it inevitably ends up with weeks and weeks of agonizing. You finally sit down at your table and pull it all together and send it in, and it always comes back changed. They always change it. The tax minions look over your return and find that you have been a few cents out here and there, or you missed a space there, and you get a redone return mailed back.

Fifty-one per cent of Canadians cannot fill out their own tax returns; they have to pay somebody to do it. Fifty-one per cent of tax filers have to go to a third party to fill out their tax returns. Well, that is not right. It is not necessary. Under tax reform we have seen the system complicated even further.

Some members of the Finance Committee are here today. They will remember that the Finance Committee examined a simplified tax return. We studied this for some months. We looked at what other countries do, and we found that for the majority of Canadians a single-page tax return would be all that is necessary. About 10 lines, that is all that is required. With that, about 70 per cent of Canadians would not have to look forward to this annual tax return horror show every spring.

Did the Government introduce that? No, it did not. There are pages and pages of tax returns that have to be filled out now by the average Canadian. Well, you will look through the lists and lists and you will ask yourself what this tax reform has done to us. Is it Robin Hood in reverse? Is it tax shelters not for the homeless but for the wealthy? Is it tax reform not for the needy but for the greedy? Those people that have are going to get more. The average family in this country is paying an extra $1,000 in federal taxes.

Now, there are some changes. I would like to look through a list that we have compiled as to what we think should be done in terms of our tax system. At the top of the list would obviously be a tax system with a more simplified return so that Canadians would not have to agonize each spring while they fill out their tax return, with some exceptions. Obviously, if you have a complicated investment portfolio you will have to go to some pains to fill out that tax return. But for the average working Canadian man and woman, that is not necessary.

We would also like to see the structure of our tax rates examined and that a higher top rate be imposed. After all, is it not reasonable to expect that someone who makes a great deal of money should pay at a higher tax rate than someone who is making money that classifies him or her as living below the poverty line? In other words, the more you make the more you should contribute to the country where you make that money.

We are also concerned about what is taxed. I think a lot of people assume that wherever you make your money you pay the same tax. That is not the case. If you make your money speculating in property or in gold stocks or whatever, you do not pay the same tax as someone who is working in an office or a factory or a mine or a mill. We classify that kind of money differently. We say that you do not have to pay on all of that income. As a matter of fact, up to a certain level you do not have to pay any tax at all. So if you speculate on the Hong Kong Stock Exchange and you make good money on an annual basis, you do not have to pay any tax on that, no tax whatsoever. Why not? You have a capital gains allowance of up to $100,000. If you do, you only pay tax on half of the capital gains, not on a dollar.

What I am saying is that, depending on how you make your income, you pay different kinds of taxes. That is not fair. We say that capital gains ought to be exempt for people running small businesses or are family farmers, because that is the way that they provide for their retirements and so on, but not generally speaking. A buck should be a buck. That is going back to the Carter Commission many years ago. The suggestion at that time was that if we were going to have tax we should tax people on a buck being a buck, and not a buck being 50 cents for some people.

I think that all Members of Parliament would agree that the family farm has to be protected because that is the way people provide for their retirement years, and similarly the family business. I am not talking about General Motors in this case; I am talking about people you see as you walk up and down the main streets of Canada, running their independent businesses.

There are other changes that we have suggested. We are very concerned, in regard to the new tax being planned called the national federal sales tax, about the decision by the Government to impose now a sales tax on everything, every business transaction.

An Hon. Member: Even the haircuts.

Mr. Riis: When you get a haircut, as my hon. friend from Vanier reminds me, you will pay a new Mulroney sales tax. When you go out and buy a new shirt, when you have your laundry done, when you go to the movies, when you fill out your will, no matter what you do, every single business transaction in this country, large or small, will be taxed.

For the first time in history we are going to have a federal sales tax. It might be called something different, it might be called a value-added tax, it might be called a business transfer tax, it might be called a national sales tax, but whatever it is called it will be a national sales tax that will be imposed on every man, woman and child in this country.

My friend from Fraser Valley is asking what it will replace. I will tell you. We do not pay a national sales tax now when we go to the movies. We do not pay a national sales tax now when we have a will made. We do not pay a national sales tax now when we get a haircut, but we will be paying it. That is part of tax reform. I think that has been part of the tax reform that has been largely overlooked. I do not hear many Conservative Members talking about the new national sales tax that tax reform will impose on every Canadian citizen.

Mr. Gauthier: It is the second shoe.

Mr. Riis: It is the second shoe, clubbed by the first one and then we will be booted by the second one.

How do we derive our revenues? Not many years ago, Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the amount of revenue which the federal Government collected from individuals and the amount collected from the corporate sector was about balanced, 50-50. Fifty per cent came from corporations and 50 per cent came from individuals. Over the years there has been some shifting as a result of successive Liberal and Conservative administrations.

If you look at those two sources of revenue now, 82 per cent comes from people and 18 per cent comes from corporations. That is the change. Who are the winners in this? The people of Canada have been taxed and taxed again. Under this Government, under every Budget it has imposed more taxes, more taxes and more taxes. There is a breaking limit, and for many Canadians we have reached that breaking limit now. People are saying that they are fed up and they will not pay any more income tax. They say they will find ways and means of avoiding the taxman or woman. So the underground economy begins to work. If you are a dentist, maybe you will fix some lawyer's teeth who will do some legal work for you and things will get done on a barter basis—

Mr. Horner: That is cheating.

Mr. Riis: —or on a cash basis with no receipts. Someone will come in and fix my plumbing for cash and there will be no record of that. Consequently, the price that work can be done for is much less than normal. We all know that. Someone goes out into the woods and cuts a load of wood for fireplaces. He brings it into town and wants to be paid in cash, not because he wants to go out and buy something necessarily at that moment but because there will be no record of the transaction, and no tax has to be paid. The most recent estimates today would say that our underground economy in Canada is worth about $30 billion a year easily. Maybe it is significantly more than that. But that is what happens when people start losing confidence in the tax system. I suspect that for increasing numbers of Canadians that is where we are today.

In February and March of each year when you look into the book shops of Canada, what are the most sought after publications? What are the best sellers? They are books entitled, "How to Avoid Tax", "How to Defer Taxes," and "How to Shelter Taxes". People realize that our system today is unfair. It is discriminatory and unjust. Therefore, people say, "Well, if he does not pay any tax at all and is able to avoid all income tax, why not me?" That is a fact.

I am pleased to say the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had the courage to stand up the other day and say that there are hundreds and hundreds of wealthy people who pay nothing in income tax year after year, to say nothing of the 60,000 profitable corporations which pay no tax. When the small business person sees a large corporation like the Royal Bank of Canada paying not a penny in tax and a stock broker friend down the street paying no income tax year after year, people lose faith in the system. That is why we have called for at least a minimum tax on profitable corporations, not excessive, but a modest, minimum tax, so once again we can start building fairness and justice into our tax system. People will then not think of our tax as one designed for the greedy but one that is designed and composed for the needy.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I found the discourse very interesting in the sense that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) said that Canadians are being taxed, taxed and taxed. I agree. But I find it somewhat ironic that it is the New Democratic Party and his Party's policy to increase social spending. We brought out a child care program for $6.3 billion, yet his Party said that it was not enough, that more money was needed. The Member does not seem to understand the relationship between spending money and having to tax. Money does not grow on trees. It does not fall down like manna. You have to have taxes.

Mr. Cassidy: What about submarines?

Mr. Gagnon: Let us look at some numbers. Since 1961, which is a quarter of a century or 25 years ago, the cost of living has increased 313 per cent, whereas the tax bill for the average Canadian has increased over 1,000 per cent. We have escalating taxes because society, and the Hon. Member's Party in particular, is calling for more and more things out of the Government. Somewhere there has to be a breaking point.

Mr. Cassidy: The Liberals couldn't manage things.

Mr. Gagnon: The Hon. Member and his Party always want to talk about the class welfare system. Do it to the rich. The underprivileged are not being looked after. I would like to put a few things on the record, Mr. Speaker.

Let us look at who pays income tax. The bottom 50 per cent of taxpayers pay 5 per cent of the income tax and the top 10 per cent pay 50 per cent. People who are making money are paying a fair and a handsome share of the taxes. Some may argue maybe that they are paying too much, but we are trying to increase the taxes on the financial community which has not been paying its fair share to balance things out and have the poor pay even less. As I pointed out, the 50 per cent at the bottom are paying only 5 per cent.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the intervention by my hon. friend from Calgary. While I appreciate his intervention, I do not agree with any of it.

First, the Hon. Member for Calgary North (Mr. Gagnon) said that somehow the New Democrats have caused all of these programs. I want to remind him, much to my chagrin, that the New Democrats have not formed the Government of Canada yet. We plan to. But the Hon. Member is talking about successive Conservative and Liberal administrations—not New Democratic administrations. It has been his Party and the Liberals who have brought us the kind of tax system we have today. I am pleased at least that the Hon. Member thought somewhere along the line that the New Democrats had formed the Government of Canada, and I hope his wish is fulfilled in the next few weeks.

The Hon. Member asks where we are going to get the money to provide for important social programs like child care. I offer two suggestions. One, his Government says that it is imperative and absolutely necessary to spend $12 billion on nuclear hunter attack submarines.

Mr. Darling: Eight billion dollars.

Mr. Cassidy: Sixteen billion dollars, actually.

Mr. Riis: A colleague says $8 billion. Some people say $10 billion, some people say $12 billion and some even say the amount could go as high as $25 billion. Let us forget how many billions. That is what the Conservatives want, nuclear hunter attack submarines. That is the Government's decision, and it has a right to make that decision.

Some Hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Riis: I would rather see $2 billion or $3 billion additional going into child care. If the Conservatives want to say to the people that they want nuclear attack submarines—which even the Americans do not want us to get now, the Pentagon said it is stupid—that is fine, but we say, rather than nuclear attack submarines, let us have something for the children of this country so that every needy young child in this country is cared for properly. That is what we say should be a priority.

We differ, Mr. Speaker. That is fair enough. My hon. friend from Calgary asks, where else can we get the money? The Hon. Member did not mention the 60,000 profitable corporations like General Motors, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Bank of Montreal and the rest of those 60,000 that do not even pay a penny in income tax. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what our revenue would be like if we were to ask those corporations to pay what Ronald Reagan has asked American corporations to pay, a 20 per cent minimum corporate tax? Imagine the hundreds of millions, the billions of dollars, that would be collected to pay for those programs about which the Hon. Member is concerned. There seems to be an easy solution to this dilemma. If we have a just and fair tax system, the revenues will be there for these much needed programs.

The Hon. Member's friend from Nanaimo whose Householder I released the other day said that he thought the notion of nuclear attack submarines was bizarre. He said he thought this was a silly way to spend taxpayers' money. I agree with him. I think he is a very sound Conservative Member.

I suspect that if the people around here were more honest and asked themselves if they actually thought we should spend billions and billions of dollars on nuclear hunter attack submarines, they would say no. However, they cannot say anything because they are back-benchers. They are caught with the peculiar notion of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), however, and they will have to justify that in the upcoming campaign.

I appreciate the intervention of my hon. friend from Calgary, as usual. It was a thoughtful intervention. I disagree with him, but at least I appreciate the opportunity to respond as well as I can to his questions.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member for British Columbia, I want a fair tax system as well, and I share his concerns about the many corporations that are not paying taxes. I also agree with him that the Hon. Member from Nanaimo is a very sound Hon. Member.

I happen to have been born in Manitoba, and unfortunately, we saw that before the NDP Government of Manitoba was voted out of office, it increased taxes very, very substantially on people of average and lower than average incomes. Similarly, it raised the auto insurance premiums by about 35 per cent.

Does the Hon. Member plan to follow the leadership of his former colleagues in Manitoba? Does he plan to follow the leadership of the Mitterrand Government which raised taxes and nationalized banks, a number of things his own Party is calling for nationally? The result of that, as the Hon. Member well knows, is that the franc fell practically through the basement, unemployment went up and the Mitterrand Government had in effect to repeal itself within two or three years of taking office.

The rhetoric is fine, and I am sure many people agree with the rhetoric. It is the action that we on this side of the House are worried about, and I think Canadians generally are worried about that action, bearing on the experience of the Hon. Member's Party in Manitoba.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, actually I am delighted to have a chance to respond to the Hon. Member. My hon. friend from Edmonton reminds me of the auto insurance situation in Manitoba. I know that the Hon. Member is astute and is knowledgeable about the insurance business for a whole variety of reasons. As a result, he would know that virtually the lowest auto insurance rates in Canada are in the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. Kilgour: Saskatchewan.

Mr. Riis: I said virtually. Saskatchewan, of course, has had auto insurance for some time. Manitoba was following suit with what has to be described by any progressive-minded Canadian as the decent thing to do. Of course, auto insurance rates that are the lowest in Canada are in those provinces that have public auto insurance. This is because there is not a major profit motive involved in something that every Canadian citizen must have. Yes, I support that.

One can ask whether or not the rates charged ought to have jumped up by 40-some per cent on an insurance plan that is virtually one of the cheapest in Canada. I suppose that politically, that was not a particularly wise decision to take at that time. However, the decision was taken and for that reason I am concerned.

The Hon. Member referred to France and to the fact that France has a socialist Government. I suppose none of us in this room would be here if we did not believe in the fundamental principles of democracy. We would not be here if we did not believe that in the end, it is the collective wisdom of the people who decide who their Government ought to be. We in Canada are going to go through that exercise shortly, and in France they have just gone through that exercise.

After a number of years of Mitterrand's socialist Government, the Government went to the people and said that the people will now choose whether or not they want to give Mitterrand another seven-year mandate. The people of France spoke out at the voting booths. They said that yes, on balance, after looking at the policies of Mitterrand, policies similar to those that the New Democratic Party would consider for various sections of our own country, they agreed. Not surprisingly, the people of France re-elected President Mitterrand for another term.

That is the ultimate way of evaluating how effective a Government's programs and policies are. We will be doing that in our country soon. The people of Canada will evaluate the tax system that the Government has put into place, the tax system that I have described accurately, and I hope adequately, as being a system that is unjust and obviously biased and discriminatory and increasingly more complicated. The people will also have another choice. I indicated clearly in my presentation that there are a whole set of alternatives being suggested by the New Democrats. We are suggesting a tax system that would be fair and that would tax income in a fair, just and equitable way. Those are the choices that will be put rather simply to the people of Canada and they will have an opportunity to make those choices very soon, I hope.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in a debate that is important because it affects all Canadian taxpayers, including middle and low-income earners, men and women, those working in industry, and so forth.

The purpose of the tax reform, and everyone in Canada agreed that changes were necessary, was first of all to reduce income tax and other taxes paid by taxpayers; second, to ensure that any citizen, whatever his income, or any corporation that receives services in Canada should pay his fair share, and third, to simplify the process. If we look at the legislation before the House, it has failed to meet these three objectives.

First of all, Conservative Members and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) want us to believe, as when they told senior citizens they would not touch old age pensions, that personal income tax and other taxes will go down. That is not true. And I intend to prove it isn't because the Government has done a bit of manoeuvring, and if we compare 1984 to 1988, in 1988 it is going to cost taxpayers $26.7 billion more in income tax and other taxes they will have to fork over to this Tory Government, which means 62 per cent, while it will cost corporations only $2.6 billion or 28 per cent. Is that the promised balance between personal income tax and corporate tax? Why are taxpayers paying more income tax in 1988 than they did in 1984? Simply because the Government de-indexed the tax tables, which means de-indexation of personal exemptions and personal income tax.

For a family, it meant that family allowance and the child tax credit were de-indexed. It meant that the ceiling below which middle-income families were eligible for the child tax credit was lowered, and it meant eliminating the tax exemptions that could have been converted into a tax credit for families with children between the ages of 16 and 18, when children continue their education.

The Tory Government wanted more than just a bite out of our weekly pay cheque. Every week or every two weeks when people get their pay cheque, another tax credit has been cut, which means that for every $3 we now have only $2 left just because the Conservative Government has taken that dollar out of our pay cheque.

But the Government didn't stop there. It took a different approach, more hypocritical and less open, reflecting the style of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It used indirect taxes.

First we had three increases in sales tax on October 1, 1984, on January 1, 1986 and on April 1, 1986, from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. This means that every time consumers in Quebec and across Canada make a purchase, they are paying an additional Tory tax on all goods. This is a hidden tax. It doesn't show because the Government has already collected the tax from the manufacturer.

The Government didn't stop there. Gas was next, and what is more important than gas? Gas isn't just something you put in your tank to go on a holiday, to go for a drive. In Quebec, manufacturing is concentrated in the large urban centres, which means that essential products such as food, clothing and construction materials have to be shipped by truck. And trucks run on gas, which they need to deliver the goods to people in remote areas. And the same is true across Canada.

And the Tory Government, despite the fact that its gas expert promised to defend Canadian consumers in Ottawa, this Tory Government increased the price of gas by 23 cents a gallon. On September 3 1985, two cents a litre; on January 1, 1987, another cent; on February 19, 1987, another cent; and on April 1, 1988, one more cent. Mr. Speaker, all these increases in the tax on gas mean that when we open a bag of bread, drink a glass of milk or eat meat or fruit or vegetables, or when we buy curtains to decorate the house, the price increase doesn't go to the manufacturer or to the distributor. This is just another Tory ploy to increase the revenues of the Government. So much for the tax on gas.

But there is more. What about the tax on alcohol and tobacco, which has raised millions for the Government? But there are other examples, and I think the most shocking one, was the Prime Minister's failure to keep his promise to senior citizens. Last week, I had the honour and the pleasure of having lunch with Mrs. Solange Denis, the woman who said out loud on Parliament Hill what senior citizens were thinking, the woman who said: "Charlie Brown, you lied to us!". They remember. There is not one person in Canada, not one senior citizen who doesn't remember that the Prime Minister's word cannot be trusted. All senior citizens know perfectly well that the word of Tory Members cannot be trusted because they have already been cheated once, and it got to the point that senior citizens came to Parliament Hill and, as I said at the time, put down their playing cards and took up their placards to come and demonstrate to defend their rights.

However, the Government decided to increase the tax burden even more, reducing the purchasing power of Canadian taxpayers in the process. First of all, it put a sales tax that wasn't there before on soft drinks, snacks, manufactured construction materials and even on long-distance calls, Mr. Speaker.

In the areas outside Montreal, the telephone is essential. If a child has an accident and his parents have to make a long-distance call to reach a doctor, there is a Conservative tax on each long distance call. I am talking about people in remote areas of Quebec, where Conservative Members were elected, Members who did not stand up to defend the population on such an essential service.

There is a tax on wallpaper, but what really tops everything is the tax on drugs. The Prime Minister and the Conservative Government discovered that they could make money on the backs of the sick. When it discovered that drugs were not taxed, this Government decided to go ahead and tax them—just imagine, no one is safe . . . This medication isn't taken for the common cold, but by people suffering from cardiovascular diseases, respiratory illness, or diabetes.

Just as we did for the elderly, the Liberal team—smaller in number but a quality team nonetheless—had to band together with interest groups to force this inhuman and heartless Government to back down and withdraw the tax on drugs that are essential for survival. Unfortunately, the Government maintained its taxes on other drug products. This means that for the Conservative Government, a cold winter is a lucrative one—the more children with colds, the more children with the flu, the more money it makes, because it collects a 10 to 12 per cent tax on cold medications.

I have clearly demonstrated that there is no tax reduction for taxpayers and that their purchasing power is vastly diminished, because for each product they purchase they must pay the Conservative tax, either because of transport, or because of the sales tax on all the products that were not taxed previously and which the Conservative Government decided to tax.

I would now like to talk about the issue of fairness. In spite of the document we have before us today, there are still some 60 multinational corporations that will manage to benefit from advantages provided by the Federal Government and yet will not pay one cent of tax. And those businesses are not to be found in the Montreal—Sainte-Marie riding. These are not small family-run businesses where you have the father, the son and the wife all working hard—not the small car-repair shop or gas station—these are large multinational companies that are very close to the Prime Minister and whose representatives go to dinners at $5,000 and $10,000 a plate, and have managed to convince this Government to let them continue to abuse the system and continue to get off scot-free, without paying one cent of tax.

We saw figures again recently that showed that there are more than 5,000 people with incomes of $50,000 or more who do not pay tax, and others earning $100,000 or more who also pay no tax at all. Like middle and low-income earners, those people have the right to use health insurance and drug insurance programs; each one of us pays his share for those programs and we are forced to pay for the rich.

There you have proof that there is no fair treatment for everyone—corporations, the highest income earners, families and individuals with middle and low incomes—another failure. This reform has not achieved its objective.

As for simplifying the paper work, we expected, from what the Prime Minister gave us to understand, that people would find it much easier to fill out their tax returns. Mr. Speaker, here again, nothing has changed because the objective of simplifying paper work has not been met and tax forms have not been simplified, nor has the objective of eliminating tax loopholes for the rich; those loopholes still exist.

What should the Government have done? First of all, instead of granting a $500,000 exemption to the rich, while at the same time deindexing family allowances for low and middle-income families, rather than spending millions of dollars to bring in blue uniforms for the Armed Forces, it would have been preferable to continue helping our families.

But spending $16 or $17 billion for nuclear submarines is to my mind the greatest scandal of them all. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker—Canada decides that it could be under attack from two enemy countries! What countries are they? There are the Americans to the south and the Russians to the north. What weapons do those countries have? The Americans and the Russians do not just have two or three tanks. They do not have just one or two submarines, they have thousands. All of a sudden, our Canadian "Rambo", our new hero, decides to buy 16 submarines for a showdown with the Americans. He thinks that the American fleet will come here to Canada and want to get through. Then our "Rambo", our dear Brian, will jump into his submarine and say, "Hold on! If you shoot, I'll shoot!" Mr. Speaker, that is money wasted, poured down the drain!

We in the Liberal Party say no way will we have those 16 nuclear submarines. We won't do it. But what would we do with that money? With just one submarine, we can lower the pension age to 60 for all needy persons. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that your constituents in Duvernay, if asked, would rather lower the pension age to 60 than buy a single nuclear submarine. What would we do with the second submarine? We would put more money into day care and create more spaces. That takes care of two submarines and the money would help real people. What about the third and fourth nuclear submarines? What would we do with them? We would use the money to clean up the environment. We need it for the quality of life. That makes four submarines saved and many jobs for lots of people and better public services. What would we do with the fifth submarine? Our farmers in Quebec are penalized. Our farmers across the country need assistance, research and other such things.

So we would use the money from the fifth submarine for our farmers throughout Canada. There are still many submarines left for which the money could be spent in other ways. We could use the sixth and seventh submarines to establish a real family policy. Canada's number one problem is the low birth rate. What do Canadian families need? What do young couples need? Well, the sixth and seventh submarines could be used to fully index family allowances, to increase the child tax credit for middle- and low-income families, to follow the example of a good Liberal Government in Quebec and give $3,000 for the first, second or third child to help couples.

Mr. Speaker, don't you think that the voters in your riding would prefer a family assistance and support policy to two nuclear submarines that will waste their time in the Arctic?

What would we do with the money from the eighth and ninth and additional submarines? First of all, we could use the money from two of them right away to reduce the deficit and stop the fussing inside the Government. But we also have our seniors, the elderly of today and tomorrow. What do our seniors most need, in addition to an income? What does every Member of Parliament hear from seniors? They do not want to go and live in an old age home. Seniors, even at 80 or 82, are in good physical condition and want to live at home, but they need help. Mr. Speaker, at 82, you cannot wash the ceiling and the walls. So we Liberals would use the money for the seventh submarine to set up a nice national program with the provincial Governments for home support, medical assistance, things people need, not submarines!

Young people, Mr. Speaker! We had programs that helped young people and we could take the money from the eighth submarine to help youth. What do our young people leaving high school, college or university need? They need work experience, because when they apply for a job, companies ask them if they have experience. Without it, they do not get work! So they go back to studying. Well, we could have a program like the one lawyers have; a lawyer works in the field for a year before taking the bar exam. We could take the money from a nuclear submarine to give every student a year of practical work experience with companies across Canada, whatever the occupation, be it engineer, architect, lawyer, notary, machinist, construction worker or docker, Mr. Speaker.

Another important aspect is the problem these days of people 30 to 55. Today, 40-year-olds who have a specific training see their working world upset by technological change. They see that they do not have an indexed pension plan; they do not even have a private pension plan. Well, we could take the money from two submarines to give these people with work experience phased-in retirement, Mr. Speaker.

How many 50-year-olds say to themselves, "My children are grown, my house is paid for, but I cannot stop working five days a week. But I could work three days a week and I would train a young person." That is what I was just talking about.

This is an overall policy for quality of life. That is what the Liberals will be fighting for in the next election campaign, a quality of life program. Quality of life begins at home. You want quality of life in your home, on your job, in your environment, around your house, in the air you breathe.

I conclude with that and I would hope that the Conservative Members will answer my questions. Why would the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) rather have the Government waste $16 billion on nuclear submarines than use that money to lower the pension age to 60 for all seniors or for a home support program for seniors or to help young people or families? Why does the Hon. Member for Duvernay not want to defend the interests of these people? Why has the Hon. Member for Duvernay, unlike the time when he was head of the gas station owners in Quebec, allowed his Government to use gasoline as a way to get more tax from drivers or not tried to stop it, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker, I conclude and I would hope that some Conservative Members will wake up as the election approaches; otherwise, their time in Parliament will be short.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a question or comment.

• (1250)

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to respond since the Hon. Member was so kind as to refer to me several times. What he said, however, was highly inaccurate, and I must say the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie likes to hear himself talk. And in fact he talks a blue streak, as they say. And that is because when his Party was in power, the Hon. Member, the very same, was not only not talking, he was absolutely struck dumb on the subject of Quebec's problem with gas prices.

And speaking of gasoline, I will give the Hon. Member a short course on gas, off the cuff. He said we increased taxes. And so we did. We had to reduce the deficit. Yes, we raised the price by five cents a litre. But let me tell you, that even if the Conservative Party increased taxes on gas, consumers are paying less than they were paying when you were in power. Back then they were paying 60 cents per litre, and today they are paying 52 cents. Today, every time consumers go to get gas in Quebec, they think of me. And they save $9.

Another thing the Hon. Member didn't mention was heating oil. It was 40 cents when his Party was in power. Today, heating oil is 20 cents per litre. We all have homes. And everybody needs a home. We don't need children—

Mr. Gauthier: It's not the Government's fault!

Mr. Della Noce: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) says it's not the Government's fault. Mr. Speaker, it was the Liberal Party that introduced the National Energy Program.

I hope the Hon. Member is going to listen, because he might learn something. I did my calculations yesterday. If the Liberal Party were in power today and if we had maintained the Liberal Party's National Energy Program, oil would be $66 a barrel and gas would be 77 cents at the pump.

Talk about inaccurate, look at the Hon. Member who talked about $16 billion for the submarines when they will cost only $8 billion over a period of 25 years, which boils down to less than $300 million annually.

To answer the Hon. Member's question, $300 million per year, $8 billion for the submarines will cost less than repairing the scrap they left us. And the same applies to gas and the tax on gas. The Hon. Member conveniently forgot to mention this. He forgot to say that we abolished the Petro-Canada tax, the 7/10ths of a cent tax his Government introduced to build gas stations to compete with independent retailers like myself, using taxpayers' money. And what did Petro-Canada do for Canadians, Mr. Speaker? Did it give them a better price? No. Did it give them better service? No, they all have self-service operations. Did it create jobs? No, but it gave independent retailers ulcers. That is what your policy did for Canadians.

Mr. Malépart: Did you sell?

Mr. Della Noce: No, because I outlasted Petro-Canada. I am stronger than Petro-Canada. In my area, Petro-Canada didn't last.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, what did the Liberals do for Petromont in the Hon. Member's riding? They buried it. That is what the Liberals did. It took a Conservative Party to invest millions in the area. They should be ashamed to talk about energy. They should be ashamed to talk about energy when I am in the House, because of what they did. They killed the industry, and today if it were not for this Government, Canadians would be paying 77 cents per litre, gasoline would be $66—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), who I imagine will wish to reply.

• (1300)

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I see I have just woken up the former chief gas pump attendant from Quebec! But the erstwhile chief pump attendant from Quebec just admitted his failure. He just admitted that he fought Petro-Canada, but that Petro-Canada has increasing control under the Conservative Government. He just admitted that if it were not for the Conservative Government, if it had had more backbone, consumers would only be paying 47 cents a litre for their gas, because there was a five cent a litre tax increase under the Conservatives. Mr. Speaker, he just admitted his personal failure, because his main reason for getting into politics was to make Petro-Canada toe the line. Petro-Canada has become stronger and stronger throughout Canada. He wanted to ensure that the Conservative Government would stop taking small retailers hostage, Mr. Speaker. It is even worse under the Conservative Government than it was under the Liberal regime. Within four years, this Government has slipped an additional 23 cents' tax on a gallon of gas, and the chief pump jockey has been silenced as thoroughly as a car with a brand-new muffler.

Mr. Speaker, that is what has been happening and the population will remember. When I travel through Quebec, people say to me: Where is the head pump attendant who was fighting Petro-Canada and going to trials? We never hear from him anymore, Mr. Speaker! Well, I can tell you, the population . . . I know a foxy old politician, Mr. Maurice Bellemare, who is not a Liberal. He always used to say to me: Jean-Claude, the first election is easy to win, because you can promise anything, you can say anything you like. But the second one is more difficult to carry off, because people are going to say to you: Why didn't you do what you said you were going to do?

I think there are certain Members . . . he seemed nervous this morning and I think that what I said made him jump. I don't think it was the oil keg he's been sitting on, but what the people of Duvernay have been saying, Mr. Speaker. This has allowed me—

Mr. Della Noce: Pétromont!

Mr. Malépart: I did not think that the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) approved. I thought that at least on this issue he would not agree with his Government's plan to waste money on nuclear submarines. I would never have thought that the Member for Duvernay would have stood up in the House to say: I'd rather spend money on nuclear submarines than on the plight of the elderly.

Mr. Della Noce: Point of Order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

Mr. Della Noce: I would like to point out to my Hon. colleague that aside from blathering on he is exaggerating again as I am not necessarily in agreement with any expenditure, but I do agree that $8 billion—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! That is not a point of order.

Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: I had some comments I would like to make for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). Although I welcome his support for positions taken by the New Democratic Party, I get the impression that the Liberals who are now in the Opposition acted like Conservatives when they were in power. And I would like to ask the Hon. Member of Montreal—Sainte-Marie why, when he was a back-bencher on the government side, he remained silent? I agree that he made up for his silence to a certain extent in the four years from 1980 to 1984. But I did some research, and I was astonished when I realized that during that time, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie did not speak more than 15 times in four years. Today, it's 15 times a week in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker!

He said nothing about the recession in Montreal's east end during that four-year period. He said nothing about the impact of rising interest rates, up to 22 per cent, on his constituents. He said nothing about the shipyards that were closing down because of a lack of contracts. He said nothing against the refinery shutdown which occurred under the Liberals when they were in power. He said nothing about the problems of workers over 40 during that time. Nothing was said by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie about unemployment that was soaring between 1980 and 1984.

Mr. Speaker, about taxation, when the then Minister of Finance, Mr. MacEachen, proposed cuts in taxes on the rich, did the Hon. Member have anything to say? No, he said nothing! Not a word to defend the interests of the average taxpayer in his riding who would have to pay to make up for these cuts. Not a word in the House to object to the fact that tax shelters would be maintained and expanded under the Liberal Minister of Finance.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I remember how he campaigned with the NDP against the deindexing of old age pensions. However, when he was a Liberal back-bencher , what did the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie do about the deindexing of Public Service pensions? Did he object to the six and five Program or to the cuts in old age pensions like the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)? Certainly not! The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie rose in the House to support the deindexing of old age pensions for retired public servants.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member acted like a silent Conservative when his Party was in power, although he acts like a New Democrat now that he is in the Opposition?

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, it is depressing to listen to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). He reminds me of the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who as far as intellectual honesty is concerned . . . There are some doubts about that.

Remember the frigates, when the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre deceived the people of Quebec. He told them that an NDP government would renegotiate the frigate contract and bring it back to Quebec. His Leader contradicted him!

Mr. Cassidy: I made a mistake, and I admitted it in the House and outside the House.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in politics, if you are intellectually honest, you don't tell voters what they want to hear. I think the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, as far as the space agency and the frigates were concerned, was playing his game the Conservative way, a little like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), like a snake. And I don't think he is going to win any votes that way. He doesn't know the difference between a Member on the Government side and a Member in the Opposition. To win a case . . .

Mr. Cassidy: In power, the Hon. Member is silent!

Mr. Malépart: —no, because in Manitoba, when the NDP Government raised automobile insurance premiums, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre didn't say a word.

I realize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is upset about my success in fighting the deindexing of old age pensions. I understand why the Hon. Member for the NDP, who is used to playing political games in Quebec, is not getting a foothold there. I understand why the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is disappointed that I won the battle for 46,000 older workers, at a time when his Party was getting ready to throw in the towel. I understand why the NDP are disapppointed that they don't count in Quebec, and while the Liberal team is there, ready to defend the workers, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre runs around telling those workers: I'll ask a question. I'll make a statement under S.O. 21, and I'll send you a copy. I took part in a candidates' debate, and my NDP opponent said he wanted to defend the banks. A former vice-president of a national bank says that his main task is not to defend the interests of Laurier—Sainte-Marie but to persuade the NDP that banks are good the way they are and not to nationalize them.

The NDP's hypocrisy explains why it is always in the Opposition.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate why the Conservatives are not speaking on this Bill. There is nothing to defend. I can understand their unwillingness to participate and defend this Bill which is supposed to reform taxation. I can understand their shame and why they cringe and why they will not speak on this particular Bill.

It seems to me that any tax system must have three aspects to it. The tax system must be fair. The tax system must be progressive. The tax system must redistribute. Ordinary Canadians look at this so-called tax reform and they have to ask themselves certain questions. The first question has to be, is this tax system fair? There is a cynicism which exists with respect to what has happened since the Conservatives came to power in 1984, with all the hopes Canadians had that we would have effective tax reform. After all, that was one of their commitments during the election campaign. But what happened in the first three years in Government? The Conservatives taxed and taxed and taxed. They did exactly the sorts of things that the Liberals used to do.

In the year in which an election is expected, we get this much-touted so-called tax reform. Having taken out of the pockets of the average Canadian family over $1,000 over the last four years, the Conservatives decided to return it to them in their pay-packets. The Government says it is taking less from these taxpayers. This is all scheduled to happen, of course, on July 1, 1988, the eve of an election.

That is the first cynical aspect. Second, this Government has protected its options for an election next spring. Because of the so-called tax cuts in the spring of 1989, Canadians will get back a refund cheque. The amount that was collected in the first six months of 1988 will be calculated with a higher tax deduction. That is cynicism. All of these so-called loopholes the Government says it has closed, none of that comes into effect until 1991. That is the other aspect of the cynicism. That is well beyond the next election. Canadians who are perhaps more cynical than myself would look at that and realize the opportunism of this Government when it comes to tax reform.

The Government is not really interested in reforming the tax system. It is a shell game. There is a pea under the shell and the Government moves the shells around. That is the old game that is played at fairs right across this country. That is a shame because I think it really destroys the whole political process. In fact, the political process is really the arena to make moral changes. It is a place at which Canadians should be able to look and see hope for a better system, for an improved system. But when we look at this tax reform package which is embodied in this Bill we find it sadly lacking. For example, the average Canadian will look at this tax reform package and discover that three out of four Canadian families earning over $100,000 a year, who have already benefited from past Budgets, will receive yet another tax cut of $4,363 per year.

The ordinary Canadian has to ask why, after this much-touted tax reform, the rich will again benefit. Average Canadians will wonder why a family earning under $15,000 a year will receive a cut of only $100 a year. Ordinary Canadians will ask why. Why this unfairness in the way this Government deals with the wealthy as opposed to the poor? Why is it that we have to take from the poor to give to the greedy? I suspect that is part and parcel of the Progressive Conservative ideology. It is part of that ideology that believes in acquisition. This is an age of acquisition. If one cannot go out and get it, there is something wrong. It is there for personal gain. As long as I can get my share, I do not care about any one else. That is the mentality that is reflected in this so-called tax reform.

Ordinary Canadians will remember the promise of a minimum tax. They will ask themselves why there is not a minimum tax on corporations. Why are the wealthiest corporations in this country treated with velvet gloves? Small businesses, in fact create most of the employment, 80 per cent of the jobs in this country. All of those who work very hard in their small enterprises, and individual Canadians who work very hard at their jobs, will ask why this Conservative Government treats the large corporations so generously and treats them with such severity in terms of taxation. That is a good question.

Why is it that after the so-called tax reform package, 60,000 very profitable corporations will still continue to pay not a penny of tax? That is a question Canadians will ask. After all, if those 60,000 very wealthy corporations do not pay their share to keep this country—a country which allows those corporations to make their handsome profits—someone else has to pay. That someone else will be the ordinary Canadian and the small enterprise. Canadians will ask why. Why does this Government do that?

Ordinary Canadians will take a look at the statistics which show that in 1984, when this Progressive Conservative Government came to power, the percentage of taxes collected from the corporate sector was 20.3 per cent of all revenues collected by the Government. The latest figures in 1987 show that it is down to 15.5 per cent. So corporate taxes have been reduced in terms of total contribution to the upkeep of this country, and the percentage of revenues the Government has taken from ordinary Canadians in income taxes and sales taxes has gone up considerably. So ordinary Canadians and small enterprises are paying more percentage-wise to support the country while the large corporations' percentage continues to decrease. The Government boasts that after these tax reform measures that figure will rise to 17.2 per cent by 1991. Big deal. That is still about three percentage points lower than they contributed when the Government came to power in 1984.

• (1320)

Ordinary Canadians will read that statistic and say: "Why? Is that fair? Is any of it fair? Is fairness reflected in this Bill regarding income tax reform?"

I see that it is time for lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1.22 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 1.22 p.m. the House took recess.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Canada-U.S. trade deal threatens the Canada that we know and love and as we have built it for more than 100 years. This deal will limit Canada's ability to take action in regional development, social policy, health policy, industrial and resource development, environmental protection, and culture.

Such a fundamental change was not discussed in the 1984 election, and consequently the Government has no mandate to proceed. This deal threatens our independence, sovereignty, and identity. It puts us into a massive alliance with the United States in which the United States will dominate.

If the Government is serious about the agreement, let it call an election and seek the approval of the people of Canada. The people have the right to decide.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INCREASED FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, today the Government once again demonstrated its commitment to Canadian agriculture. I am referring to the Minister of Agriculture's (Mr. Wise) announcement of $400 million to support the Farm Credit Corporation.

Farmers have learned that this federal Government will always walk that extra mile to ensure that producers get a fair deal. Support for agriculture has gone up by 400 per cent in the last four years. The Government has announced initiatives worth more than $9 billion in that period of time.

The Special Canadian Grains Program is the largest federal initiative in Canadian history. It has put $2.1 billion into the grain and oilseed farmers' pockets. There has been a record stabilization payment, and timely drought assistance.

The Government has ensured that Canadian farming is here for the long haul. Today's announcement will mean that the Farm Credit Corporation is here to stay, too.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons, we have a duty to respect the rights of all Canadians, and to give full consideration to major issues which confront our country and, in particular, to those issues which would profoundly change the nature of our nation.

The right of all Canadians to share in democratic debates has been consistently denied by the Conservative Government in its rush to push the trade deal through the House of Commons in order to meet the mandate of the United States Government.

Hundreds of groups have requested that the committee travel and give them the opportunity to put forward their views on the trade deal that is before us. These people have all been denied their democratic rights by the Government.

The Government has ignored requests from groups such as the National Federation of Nurses, the National Council of Playwrights, the Canadian Teachers Federation, the Saskatchewan Tenants Association, the Toronto Workers Health and Safety Legal Clinic, the Catholic Family Services Bureau in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Conference Program Staff of the United Church of Saskatchewan, the B.C. and Yukon Women's Centre Association, the Co-op Atlantic, the Northwest Territories Federation of Labour, the Archdiocese of Regina and its Social Action Committee, the Federation of Women Teachers Associations of Canada, and the Toronto Theatre Alliance.

The Canadian people did not elect the Conservative Government to deny the history, traditions, and interests of Canadians, or to sell out to the United States. Specifically, the Canadian people did not give the Government a mandate to deny democratic rights. We need an election now on this issue in order that Canadians can be heard.

THE SENATE

POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, as a Member from British Columbia I am often accused of being from Fantasyland. Well, these days in Ottawa I feel more like Alice in Wonderland.

Here we have the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) abandoning the fundamental democratic tradition that it is the elected Members of Parliament who determine the public policies and programs of this country. He would, instead, hand this prerogative over to a group of Senators appointed by his predecessors and demand that they smother government Bills and force an election.

As The Globe and Mail so aptly editorialized this morning: "Surely the Senate lacks that right in this democracy and surely Mr. Turner should not have put the question on the table".

Surely even we from Fantasyland know a Mad Hatter when we hear one, and send regrets to his invitation to participate in this blatantly bizarre tea party.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the government Members are doing their best to blame the Senate for future holding up of the trade deal. They do not want to admit that they are afraid to go to the country and have Canadians pass judgment on the trade deal with President Reagan. There is nothing more democratic than to go to the people of Canada and to let all Canadians vote on the future of their country.

That is what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did yesterday; he asked the Senate to step aside and let all Canadians have a chance to pass judgment on the Canada-U.S. trade deal.

It is not a free trade deal because Canadians will not have free access to American markets. It is not a free trade deal because when there is a dispute on any item or circumstance the agreement states that American trade law will be supreme, and Canadians will have to accept second best.

The Prime Minister knows full well, as do all Canadians, that the elected Leader of the Liberal Party has asked the Senate to allow Canadians to decide on this bad deal. The only person who is blocking the democratic rights of every Canadian is the Prime Minister of Canada, because he is afraid to call an election on the issue.

Even while in opposition the Liberal Party is standing up for the rights of Canadians to decide on the bad trade issue that even the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said during the last election was an unthinkable thing to propose, and then they turned around and did the very opposite and did what they said they would not do.

THE SENATE

POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, as Member of Parliament for York—Scarborough I represent almost 300,000 people. How many constituents are represented by Senator MacEachen or Senator Kirby? It appears they represent exactly one person—the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), the Party that appointed them to the Senate in 1984.

Over the past two years Liberal Senators have been delaying vital legislation adopted by this House. The Leader of the Opposition has told the House that he could not be blamed since he could not control Liberal Senators. Today the truth is out. He had an option then to protect the elected representative Government. He failed.

He has the option of protecting our elected House today, and he is failing again. The sad fact is that each time he has an option, he fails.

Today he asserts the divine right of Liberal Senators to rule over elected Members by ordering the body of "sober second thought" to refuse to think. It is tragic to see a long-serving Member of this House subvert its authority merely to prop himself up for a few months longer.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons we have a duty to respect the rights of all Canadians and give full democratic consideration to major issues which confront our country, in particular to those issues which would profoundly change our country.

The right of all Canadians to share in democratic debates has been consistently denied by the Conservative Government in its rush to push the trade deal with the U.S. through the House. In spite of its massive majority, the Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to force this project through the House. Hundreds of groups have requested an opportunity to put forward their views on the trade deal presently before us. Many people have been denied their democratic rights by the Conservative Government.

The Government has ignored requests from groups such as the Diocese of Victoria Social Justice Commission in Victoria, B.C., Oxfam Canada, the Association of Canadian Publishers, the United Church of Canada, the Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto, the Executive Secretary of the United Church in Winnipeg, and the Health Coalition of Cape Breton.

The Canadian people did not elect the Conservative Government to deny the history, traditions, and interests of Canadians, or to sell out to the United States. Specifically, the Canadian people did not give the Government a mandate to deny their democratic rights. We need an election on this issue in order that Canadians can be heard, and we need it now.

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

CHOICE OF STRATEGIES

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I would be surprised if the senators were to do as they are told by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) because he has no authority within his caucus, within his Party and, particularly, within the Canadian Senate. He never did control anything. You can give orders to your caucus, to the Liberal senators, to Mr. Robert, nobody listens to you anyway. You lack credibility, just as does your Party. You are panicking. You are losing your cool. You have to be in a very desperate predicament to behave like this.

You are asking the senators—these experienced men and women—to follow you. I happen to know that serious Liberal Senators will not buy this conniving approach. The legislative agenda and the date of the elections will be set by the Party in office. In our Party, the Leader, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), faces up to his responsibilities and Canadians are quite aware of that, but in your Party the discussion is still raging on as to who will be the leader during the next election campaign. In due time Canadians will have an opportunity to say where they stand with respect to this historic trade agreement.

Is the Leader of the Opposition justified to raise objections because Canadians have made peace with themselves and with their neighbour? Canadians have lost faith in you and in your Party. If you are unable to assume your responsibilities as an elected Member of the House, go!

MEMBER FOR QUÉBEC-EST

DEFENCE OF ELECTORS' INTERESTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard the Hon. Member for Quebec-Est (Mr. Tremblay). His act was a total failure and his S.O. 21 motion was a disaster, Mr. Speaker. Instead the Hon. Member for Quebec-Est should look after the people of his riding who had their unemployment insurance benefits cut off, older workers who are told every week that the Quebec caucus will solve that problem.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, older workers from the Province of Quebec attempted to march into the office of the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) at the employment and immigration office to seek justice.

Mr. Speaker, when I saw the Hon. Member for Quebec-Est rising and failing to stand up for his constituents, I did not suggest that he ought to go because I know that the people will get rid of him.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, I am still in a bit of shock, like most Canadians, over the unbelievable statement made by the Leader of the Liberal Opposition (Mr. Turner) yesterday, requesting the Liberal-dominated, unelected Senate to block the free trade Bill when passed by the democratically elected Members representing the people, namely, the House of Commons.

I cannot believe, after four years, the arrogance of Mr. Trudeau's and Mr. Turner's appointees to the Senate, who honestly believe that the Conservative Government has in some undemocratic fashion usurped their divine right to govern Canada.

What we heard and saw yesterday from the Leader of the Liberal Opposition was not leadership but the sounds of the death rattle of an opposition Leader and in a Liberal Party making one last desperate grab for political power in Canada. What a sad way to end a Leader in the Party's life in Canadian politics.

DEMOCRACY

OBLIGATION TO GO TO THE PEOPLE ON ISSUES THAT CAN PROFOUNDLY CHANGE CANADA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa-Centre): Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons, we have a duty to respect the rights of all Canadians and to give full democratic considerations to major issues which confront our country and in particular to those issues which would profoundly change our country. The right of all Canadians to share democratic debates has been consistently denied by this Conservative Government in its rush to push the trade deal with the U.S. through this House.

Mr. Speaker, in spite of its massive majority, this Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to force this project through the House. Hundreds of groups have requested the opportunity to put their views before the House of Commons, but this Government has refused them. The Government has ignored the request from such groups as the National Federation of Nurses, the Canadian Federation of Teachers, the Pro Canada Network of Saskatchewan, the Commission on Social Justice, the DSS of Victoria, Oxfam Canada, the United Church of Canada, the Toronto Council of Social Planning, the Jesuit Centre, etc.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people did not elect the Conservative Government to deny the history, but to protect the interests of Canadians, and not to sell us out to the U.S. They specifically did not give this Government a mandate to deny their democratic rights. We need an election on this issue so that Canadians can decide, and we need it now.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, there is a huge hue and cry and the sound of fury emanating from benches opposite, from Members who are aghast at a revolutionary new and startling idea in Canadian political life. Someone has dared to stand up to suggest that after years of having the politicians, the pundits, the power brokers making the decisions, the people of Canada should decide, and that concept frightens the Tory Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we have entered a stage. The debate has begun. The election has begun, and it is not going to be the politicians, it is not going to be the pundits, it is not going to be the power brokers, it is not going to be the elite, it is going to be the people of Canada who decide the future of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: If that idea be radical, if that idea be revolutionary, let the battle begin. Issue the writ and call the election.

LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CHOICE OF STATEGIES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Leader, a former Prime Minister of Canada, officially renounced the ability of the House of Commons to legislate. He told the non-elected Senators of the Liberal caucus to oppose the free trade Bill.

Often, when weak people have exhausted all human and intellectual resources, they surrender.

Never again will Canadians want as Prime Minister a Member of the House of Commons who has decided to abdicate the powers of this House. They will not want to have anything to do with a captain who has scuttled the ship of State. Come election time, they will surely not elect a Prime Minister who would get his orders from a Senate godfather, even if it were MacEachen.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CALL FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons we have a duty to respect the rights of all Canadians and to give full democratic consideration to major issues which confront our country and in particular to those issues which would profoundly change our country. The right of all Canadians to share in democratic debates has been consistently denied by this Conservative Government in its rush to push the trade deal with the U.S. through this House. In spite of its massive majority, the Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to force this project through the House. Hundreds of groups have requested the opportunity to put their views before the House of Commons. This Government has refused them.

The Government has ignored requests from the Catholic Family Services Bureau in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Conference Program Staff of the United Church of Saskatchewan, the B.C. and Yukon Women's Centre Association, the Co-op Atlantic, the Northwest Territories Federation of Labour, the Archdiocese of Regina and its Social Action Committee.

The Canadian people did not elect the Conservative Government to deny the history and traditions and interests of Canadians, or to sell us out to the U.S. They specifically did not give this Government a mandate to deny their democratic rights. We need an election on this issue so that Canadians can decide, and we need it now.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

PROVISION OF LONG-TERM MORTGAGE CREDIT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) today gave a clear indication of the continuing role of the Farm Credit Corporation. The primary job of the FCC is to provide long-term mortgage credit to Canadian farmers on a cost-recovery basis.

The corporation is an alternative source of mortgage credit to average risk farmers. It is also a credit source for those farmers whose risk is marginally above that of average. The FCC is not about to reduce its level of service, but it will pay more attention to its bottom line. By monitoring and handling risks more effectively, the corporation will be better able to serve Canadian agriculture, now and for many years to come.

It is a telling fact that 96 per cent of the present farm accounts that are in arrears occurred in accounts that were started prior to the last election in 1984.

ELECTIONS

DIFFERENCE IN VIEWS

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian, I must say that I was somewhat distressed by yesterday's event. The Leader of the Opposition and of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) was, as usual, somewhat inconsistent in his positions and decided to have the Senate, the Liberal-dominated Upper Chamber, block the free trade Bill. At the same time he is asking us to call an election to have the population elect a Government. We have a majority Government.

Mr. Speaker, this really makes me wonder about our democratic federal system. In my opinion, we are deceiving Canadian citizens when we ask them to vote for us.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Prime Minister, but since he is perhaps on his way to Rideau Hall I will put them to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister has now had 24 hours to reflect—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —upon the proposition I put to him. He now understands that his contemplated trade deal with the United States will not happen until the people of Canada have had a chance to pronounce on it.

I say to the Prime Minister through you, Mr. Speaker, and through the Deputy Prime Minister, that there will be no trade deal with the United States until the people of Canada have had a chance to review the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There are those who approve of my decision yesterday and there are those who disapprove of that decision.

Mr. McDermid: I haven't had one phone call yet.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will say to the Hon. Member for Brampton that he should not be here; he should be back protecting his backside in the constituency of Brampton.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He ought to reach back into the locker room and get Billy Davis out there to protect him. He will need him every minute.

The real debate has finally begun. I stand ready to abide by the people's decision. Is the Leader of the Government, the Prime Minister of Canada, ready to stand by the decision of the people and, if so, will he call the election now and let the people decide?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the Prime Minister considers the date of the next election he will also be considering the comments that have been made responding to the unprecedented actions of the Leader of the Opposition which, in newspapers, were described as follows: blatant, wretched, hypocrisy, strange, desperate, sleazy, arrogant, squalid, and cynical. That is how the Leader of the Opposition's actions have been described, and I am sure that that will be taken into consideration when the request is made, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Kaplan: The media don't decide elections, the people do.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, let the people decide whether that vocabulary is accurate or not. I am ready to stand by the judgment of the people.

Ms. Copps: Let's go, let's go!

[Translation]

RIGHT OF PEOPLE TO DECIDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this agreement with the United States harms our farmers and they have the right to be heard. This agreement harms our textile workers and they also have the right to speak out. This agreement is bad for our business people and they have the right to speak out. This arrangement with the United States is bad for Canadians and all Canadians have the right to say so.

And so I put the question to the Deputy Prime Minister once again: Why not let Canadians decide?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, what is happening is that a piece of trade legislation is going through Parliament in its normal process. It was the subject of a Royal Commission, a $23 million Royal Commission paid for by the taxpayers of Canada, chaired by a former colleague.

An Hon. Member: Donald Macdonald.

Mr. Mazankowski: The trade initiative is supported by eight out of 10 provinces, eight out of 10 Premiers. It is supported literally by every think tank and objective policy based bureau that study these things. It is supported by a majority of the House of Commons. It is going through the committee stage.

I find it incomprehensible that the Leader of the Opposition who has traditionally been a staunch defender of the House of Commons—and he is on record for that—would now subvert and circumvent the role of the House of Commons. He talks about being a great friend and a champion of the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker. I can tell the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that Mr. Diefenbaker would not be very proud of him today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to say one thing about Mr. Diefenbaker, Mr. Speaker. He was never afraid of facing the people of Canada. Nor am I.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is one thing about the late John George Diefenbaker, he would never have sold out this country the way the current Prime Minister is doing.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The real issue is the future of Canada. Our senior citizens have been hit by this trade deal. They have the right to decide. Our young people have been hit by this trade deal. They have the right to decide. Our grandchildren will be affected by this deal and their parents have the right to decide. Every Canadian is affected by this deal and they have the right to decide.

Ms. Copps: Let's go!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I ask the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada why doesn't he let the people decide?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Diefenbaker always defended the rights of the House of Commons first and foremost.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: He believed, as I believe, that the House of Commons has the right to pass legislation. The House of Commons has the right to bring forth legislation. No subsequent Parliament is tied to legislation that is passed by a previous Parliament. That is a pretty fundamental part of our democracy, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nunziata: Brian is a wimp. He is more of a wimp than Joe.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Diefenbaker would have never sold his soul to the Senate, particularly to that bunch over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I find his position somewhat hypocritical because in 1961 the right hon. gentleman, in calling it a political conundrum said:

> The Senate, in terms of current facts, no longer plays a useful part in the government of Canada. Its historical purposes have been lost. It no longer operates (albeit through forces beyond the control of its own members) as a restraining influence on legislation. Its initial historical function, that of representing and protecting the rights and interests of provinces, was never discharged; and it is scarcely equipped with the necessary mandate for that role today. Consequently the argument for its abolition is difficult to resist.

DEMOCRACY

IMPORTANCE FOR CITIZENS TO MAKE POLITICAL CHOICE PRIOR TO IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I would like to put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

What we are talking about today is not John Diefenbaker's future, but the future of the Canadian men and women of today.

The Deputy Prime Minister may not be aware of this, but this week all the workers' representatives in Quebec are against the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, because they think it does not provide sufficient job protection.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government are denying workers the right to decide their future in a general election? Why is this right being denied to the men and women who work in the textile industry in the riding of Drummond, and to the men and women who work in the footwear industry in Montreal? Why not let these men and women speak out in a general election, rather than passing this agreement and forcing them to accept the result after the fact? Why are you afraid to let them vote first?

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find that absolutely incredible. The person who purports to represent all these workers in Canada showed up at committee this morning, made a statement indicating that she would not present one bit of evidence and then walked out, walked out of the committee. She did not give evidence at all. She grandstanded in front of everyone.

The labour movement is not interested in listening to the facts on this. It is supporting its socialist friends over there, that's all.

[Translation]

DEMAND FOR APPEAL TO THE PEOPLE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, if the representative of big finance wants to know whether the workers are interested in free trade, let him call an election and you will see how the workers vote! You have representatives of Quebec farmers here. They too are against this agreement. Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why does the Government not have the courage to let these farmers decide in an election before this project is accepted? Have you ever seen a collective agreement accepted over the workers' heads? Why do you not have the courage to have it accepted before, in an election campaign, right away?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been no Government in the history of Canada that has responded to the needs of the farmers as ably, capably, responsibly, and responsively as this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Since the hon. gentleman has joined with his Leader in a strange abdication of responsibility to the Senate, I would like to know from the Hon. Member what he will do with his Private Member's Motion that is currently standing on the Order Paper, which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider amending the Standing Orders so that a bill passed by the House, returned to the House by the Senate, with amendments, and sent back to the Senate with further amendments, shall be deemed to have been adopted by the Senate on the sixtieth day after receipt thereof, unless previously disposed of by the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: We are seeing across the way not only the final act of desperation but the champions of hypocrisy.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister, but I would like to say that it is more than a little amusing for Canadians to hear Liberals and Conservatives fighting with each other to see who can be most critical of the Senate. I have never known either a Liberal or a Conservative to turn down an appointment to the Senate. It would be interesting to see that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice says that there is one Conservative. No doubt he has subsequently died, but there was one.

Two days ago, Mr. Mel Clark, former Deputy Chief Negotiator for Canada at the Tokyo Round of the GATT discussions, in very serious testimony before a House committee pointed out that in his view there is no doubt whatsoever that in the negotiated agreement between Canada and the United States on the matter of trade, water is indeed included. He has urged in the strongest possible terms that the agreement be amended to exclude the possibility of the exportation of water. Today a Gallup poll has come out showing 69 per cent of Canadians in total agreement with that position.

The Minister has indicated the possibility of accepting an amendment down the road. If government Members want to fulfil their commitment, and they have publicly said that they are not interested in having the exportation of water to the United States, will they listen to one of the most learned people on this subject in the country, our Deputy Chief Negotiator? Will they respond to the people of Canada who want it excluded and announce now their intention to bring in an amendment to this agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in response to the preamble of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, might I just add in observation that it is interesting to see the NDP and the Liberals jockeying for last place in the public opinion polls as a result of the latest fiasco that has been going on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: As long as the Leader of the NDP wants to quote experts, perhaps he might be interested in the expert testimony of Mr. Frank Stone, speaking on behalf of the Institute for Research on Public Policy, a pretty well established and credible organization. He said:

> Water diversions have never been discussed in the GATT, and any suggestion that GATT covers water diversions or inter-basin transfers would be hooted down in Geneva by the GATT member countries.

He said as well:

> But the Free Trade Agreement, whatever its merits and flaws, has nothing at all to do with the diversion or inter-basin transfer of water.

That has been enunciated time and time again in the House of Commons and outside the House of Commons. It is true that the Minister for International Trade, while clearly stating the fact that water is not a part of the free trade agreement nor was it ever intended to be nor was it discussed, in the interests of clarity said that if it is so deemed necessary or fit, or if a recommendation comes from the committee to incorporate a clarification, he would certainly look at it.

This Bill is being discussed in the committee. If, in the wisdom of the committee, it so sees fit to make these kinds of clarifications, they will certainly be considered.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the majority of members on that committee are Conservative members, the same majority who denied the right of that committee to travel from Newfoundland to British Columbia to listen to Canadians.

The Government says it is concerned about the serious matter of substance, of protecting our water from a future decision that could be made, according to our Deputy Chief Negotiator at the GATT who ought to know more about these matters than either the Deputy Prime Minister or I because he was there and knows the technical material. He says it is included. We want some government leadership, not to wait for a committee, on a commitment to change the agreement to protect Canadian water. That is the issue.

Considering that I have a list of some 450 groups of Canadians, including farmers from the Minister's province, lawyers from Alberta, fishermen from the Atlantic provinces and trade unionists—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, these groups have indicated that they believe that this Accord profoundly affects the future of Canada and they want the opportunity to present testimony, not simply in Ottawa but where they live. Will the House Leader talk to the Conservative members of that committee and urge them to reconsider their decision not to have hearings, and go out and listen to the people of Canada on this matter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party was represented on the committee that brought about recommendations for parliamentary reform, and it brought forth a recommendation to establish legislative committees. As a part of that recommendation, it was clearly outlined that legislative committees would not travel.

If the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is suggesting a change in the recommendation, then he should have made that recommendation to his representative on the committee because that has been the established practice. It is rather late in the day to be making those kinds of representations.

In so far as clarification of the water issue and providing leadership are concerned, the Minister for International Trade has clearly made the point that if there is a requirement for clarification with respect to the water issue, he would certainly consider such an amendment. I hope that the wisdom of the committee will prevail.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that if it were the case that a Standing Committee could not travel—

Mr. Mazankowski: It's not a Standing Committee.

Mr. Broadbent: A legislative committee, calm down. He says that a legislative committee could not travel. I am told that the Atlantic committee which was a Standing Committee did in fact travel—

Mr. Mazankowski: Standing.

Mr. Broadbent: —so there is precedent for it. It could happen, as the Minister knows, by unanimous agreement. He would have that agreement on this side of the House. If he wanted to do the democratic thing, he could have all Canadians give testimony on this Bill, and that is what the Government should do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

REQUEST THAT GENERAL ELECTION BE HELD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government will not make a commitment to change the agreement on the important matter of water. It will not allow the committee to travel to the people of Canada to hear what they have to say. Will it at least give us a commitment that before we recess the Prime Minister will come into the House, dissolve Parliament, and go to the people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Leader of the NDP wants to get involved in a procedural battle he had better let his House Leader do it because he is a little more conversant with the rules.

So far as committee travel is concerned, there have been other important issues before the House where the committees concerned have not travelled. There was no travel in the study of the Meech Lake Accord. There was no travel by the Constitution committee in 1980. It is rather strange that at this late hour the Hon. Leader of the NDP wants the committee to travel.

With regard to water, the Minister of International Trade made our position quite clear. If the Leader of the NDP wants an election, he will get an election, when it is appropriate.

Mr. Broadbent: When is that?

Mr. Mazankowski: I would suggest he go back—

Some Hon. Members: Now!

Mr. Mazankowski: Maybe the Hon. Leader of the NDP should go back to his cottage and rest up a little more. He is going to need it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As we heard, it was reported yesterday that 69 per cent of Canadians oppose the export of any fresh water to the U.S. Some 40 per cent, the greatest number in the poll, say that water is our most important resource. Experts have said that water is covered by the agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Engineers, scientists and lawyers have said it is covered by the agreement. Whether the Government meant it or not, it is clear that water is covered under the agreement.

How can the Government proceed with this agreement without a mandate from the Canadian people? How can it sell out our most important resource without the consent of the Canadian people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer remains the same. As was indicated in the House, if it is necessary to clarify that particular issue in the legislation, it will be done. May I also remind the Hon. Member that the water policy announced in November of 1987 is pretty specific. It clearly says that federal legislation to the extent necessary to implement fully this policy, which prohibits the inter-basin transfer of water, will be brought before the House.

I can tell the Hon. Member that legislation will be brought before the House in a very short time. It is in its final drafting stage. That will clarify the issue. If it needs further clarification with regard to Bill C-130 itself, that will be done as well.

TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, the Government is contemplating an amendment to the Bill but that cannot correct the problem. It is the agreement that is defective.

Mr. Masse: How do you know that?

Mr. Allmand: Once again, how can the Government proceed with an agreement that sells out our most important resource, fresh water, without the consent of the Canadian people?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, once again, the free trade agreement does not cover the large scale export of water. Water is covered by the FTA as a tariff item under beverages, spirits and vinegar. Bottled water is covered. The bottom line is that Canadian water is fully protected. It will be even more absolutely and fully protected when the new legislation is introduced by the Minister of the Environment. If any clarification is required with respect to the definition in the trade Bill, that will be done.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE AMENDED

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the day before Mr. Clark gave his very powerful testimony to the legislative committee looking at this issue, the head of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture expressed in very clear terms his concern about the potential for large-scale exports of water and what they would do to agriculture in this country.

The Deputy Prime Minister just said that if necessary there will be a clarification. I want the Government to show some leadership for a change, and stop trying to play—

Mr. Valcourt: Is that a question?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members, given the very lengthy time it has taken to go through only a few questioners, to be as precise as possible in putting their questions.

Mr. Langdon: The Deputy Prime Minister says he is willing to clarify this issue. Is he willing at this stage to make a definite commitment that the Government will change this trade agreement so that water is excluded? Will he show that leadership?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister made it very clear in his answers today that the inter-basin transfer of water is outside the free trade agreement.

I have been sitting on the committee with the Hon. Member and we have heard some excellent testimony, including that of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the evidence of Mr. Clark. We also have the evidence filed by Mr. Stone. We had all kinds of evidence. I think the Hon. Member will admit that what we as members of that committee should do is hear the evidence, which we will hear through until next Thursday night. At that time amendments will be presented by all Parties to the committee for consideration clause by clause. Let us let the committee do its work.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, we have a situation in which we are getting clearly conflicting advice from those people who are acting as experts. With that sort of uncertainty I ask the Government to clear it up, make a commitment to Canada now, and tell Canadians that large-scale exports of water will be prevented in the future.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have already said that very clearly in our policy statement last November. My colleague, the Minister of the Environment, made a very clear statement about the water policy of the Government.

The Hon. Member says we are getting conflicting advice. We are. Our responsibility is to separate what is factual from what is not, and make a decision. We have been getting conflicting advice from the NDP for years and we know what the Canadian people think of that.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF AIRPORT AT UMIUJAQ—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Further to the agreement signed on September 27, 1983 by Transport Quebec and the federal Government to give northern Abitibi a system of airport facilities meeting the specific needs of this large region, in accordance with the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement, Mayor Noah Inukpuk and the people of the Village of Umiujaq have been demanding an airport for several months.

Can the Minister tell us today whether Transport Canada and Transport Quebec have reached an agreement to include in their construction programs building an airport in Umiujaq for the welfare of the people in their construction programs, in accordance with the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, further to the implementation of the James Bay Agreement, the Government of Canada did agree to build an airport at Umiujaq. Indeed, Transport Canada is now negotiating with the Province of Quebec and hammering out the details of the construction that is to be done shortly.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CABLE TELEVISION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the free trade hearing this morning we learned from the Canadian Cable Television Association a shocking new fact, another secret story about the Prime Minister's trade deal. It will annually grab $70 million, through monthly cable charges, from the pockets of the millions of Canadians who watch their favourite TV programs. Further, we learned that most of that $70 million will flow through to the American programmers.

• (1450)

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why does the Prime Minister not let Canadians decide whether they want their monthly cable bills to increase dramatically and their money to flow to the United States? Why will the Prime Minister not call an election and let the people decide?

Mr. Rossi: Here comes the butler.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, a personal insult is the final proof of an empty mind.

I was at the committee this morning too, Mr. Speaker, and I did not hear quite the same evidence as that to which the Hon. Member alluded. She is talking about $70 million in transfers of copyright to American broadcasters. That is not exactly what was said this morning. They said there could be potential for it.

They made certain recommendations today. They agreed that they have to pay copyright, under certain conditions, to those who produce the programs. We were discussing those certain conditions this morning.

It was an excellent presentation, and the Hon. Member will admit that. As the committee examines this legislation it will consider those very good recommendations.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that if there is any selective hearing going on around here it is that of the Government and particularly the Members sitting around the free trade table.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR ELECTION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Government trade deal amends the Copyright Act, as the Hon. Member heard this morning. It also sanctions the right of political interference, particularly by the American movie mogul, Jack Valenti, who, with these changes, can now dictate Canadian cable retransmission policy to the Canadian Cabinet.

Will the Prime Minister let the people decide whether they want their television tampered with along with their water? Will he call an election now?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member of one thing. In 1985 an all-Party subcommittee examining retransmission rights made a recommendation regarding the rights, and that is exactly what we were discussing today. It was an all-Party unanimous recommendation. We have exactly the same thing in the free trade agreement. Talking about selective hearing, I find this absolutely amazing from my hon. friend.

As far as an election is concerned, the Hon. Member's Party is going to rip up the trade deal, and the New Democratic Party is going to cancel it after six months. It will be an issue in the election, and I can hardly wait.

Mr. Rossi: Well call it then.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

MILITARY EXPORTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. He will likely recall that in the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister said, "Secrecy and stonewalling have become a habit with the Government and we will never break that habit until we change the Government". And the Government was changed.

In a letter made public today, Bruce Mann, the Assistant Information Commissioner, has stated that in his view the Department of External Affairs has been "effectively coaxing" military contractors into keeping records of their military exports secret.

In light of the comments made by the Prime Minister during the last election campaign, does the Deputy Prime Minister think it is appropriate for a government Department to be advising and coaxing private companies to keep their export records secret? Would he now admit that the real reason for this interference by the Department of External Affairs is that it wants to keep Canadians in the dark about our exports of military equipment to countries like Chile which obviously abuse human rights?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member was really serious about getting an answer to his question he might have thought about sending the letter over in order that we would have a chance to look at the context within which he brings it up.

If the hon. gentleman wants to talk about access to information, I remind him that this Government is the first Government which has operated under the access to information regime. We have strengthened and are continuing to evolve the most effective access to information regime in the country.

There is no socialist Government in the country now, but he should have talked to the former Governments of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. They never had access to information regimes worth a darn.

DEPARTMENTAL LETTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Mann cites a letter from the Department which reads in part:

> The political sensitivities of some of the export destinations for the goods being exported has changed and it would not be correct to disclose documents today on the basis of approval . . . over two years ago.

It is a most serious situation when a Department of the Government is asking private military contractors to conceal from the public details of their contracts and exports.

As a result of this very serious situation, would the Deputy Prime Minister be prepared to launch an immediate investigation into this blatant political interference by the Department of External Affairs? Is it not time that Canadians had the full story on which countries are receiving military equipment from Canada, what kind of military equipment they are receiving, and to what extent?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, while in no way acknowledging the premise of the question, I know that the Hon. Member has had a number of exchanges with the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this very important issue. I think the Minister has been very forthcoming and has told the Hon. Member that if he has any specific information or any specific suggestions he should bring them to his attention and he will look into them.

I can refer to Hansard and read back the exchanges which have taken place. There have been private discussions as well of which I am aware. I will certainly raise this with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I assure the Hon. Member that it will be looked into.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

READY-MIXED CONCRETE COMPANIES—PRICE FIXING ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It involves the allegations reported today of price fixing in the ready mixed concrete industry in the Metropolitan Toronto area. As a result of that price fixing, apparently the cost of a new house in the Metropolitan Toronto area has been increased by at least $1,000.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House what action the Government intends to take to put a stop to this?

The industry was taken to court in 1972 and it pleaded guilty and was convicted of price fixing at that time. The court made a prohibition order against further price fixing on the part of the industry. Therefore, why has it been allowed to get away with it again?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member knows, it is the usual practice neither to confirm nor deny the existence of any investigation that may or may not be taking place. It is also the practice not to comment on such an inquiry if it is in progress.

I can only assure the Hon. Member that the director of investigation will obviously be interested in the press comments. I am sure that that will trigger some action on their part.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The unassailable fact is that there will be no trade deal in this country until there is a national general election and a decision taken by the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: As of yesterday and the statement by the Leader of the Opposition, that unassailable fact cannot be changed by debate in the House of Commons, cannot be changed by questions and answers, and cannot be changed by editorial comments which either celebrate or condemn this new reality.

• (1500)

It is an unassailable fact. Given that certain reality, why is the Government afraid to allow the people of Canada to be heard, to speak, and to decide on this nation's future, by calling an election campaign?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can support his Leader and the Liberal Party's total abdication of responsibility—

Ms. Copps: Power to the people.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and tacit recognition that the real Leader of the Opposition is not in this House but in the other place in the name of Senator MacEachen. If they want to play that sort of game, they certainly can. But let me tell you, I have just had handed to me a letter sent to the Member for Burlington from IPSCO Incorporated, a steel company in western Canada. I would like to put this on the record—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Table that letter.

Mr. Mazankowski: You are darn right I will table it. It says:

Dear Bill:

I note with dismay that the Liberal Party of Canada has decided to put partisan politics ahead of the future well being of Canada with their threat today to block the free trade agreement in the Senate of Canada. I assume this threat will not stop your current committee hearing, and the purpose of this letter is to volunteer to assist your committee in pushing for an early positive result. If there is anything I can do to help please let me know.

Yours truly,
IPSCO Incorporated.

I would be glad to table it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Why do you not talk to the United Steelworkers, Don?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it never fails that whenever one asks a Tory what the people of Canada think, he quotes the head of a corporation. They know what the steel corporation thinks but they do not want to hear the steelworkers and workers right across the country, and they deny them a right to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: During the last election campaign the Prime Minister said: "Give me four years". Four years are up. He said: "Give me a sacred trust". The people of Canada have denied that trust. They now want their say and they are going to have it—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Some Hon. Members: We want George! We want George!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me put forward the revolutionary proposition, rejected by the Tory Party, that the people of Canada have every right to be heard, as much as any steel corporation or any corporate boardroom.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

AIR CANADA

ACQUISITION OF AIRBUS FLEET—INDUSTRIAL OFFSETS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Air Canada Airbus contract for $1.8 billion involves thousands of jobs. The Government failed to get assurances of Canadian content and therefore threw away thousands of jobs.

Why did it not assert the traditional Canadian position, which is that we have a right to ask for industrial offsets under GATT? Is it because the American trade office disagrees with our position with regard to the negotiation of industrial offsets? Why is he throwing away these jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the tradition has been that when Air Canada undertakes to acquire new airplanes to modernize its fleet, it is a decision taken by Air Canada. The decision is based upon the criteria that are set down by the corporation to fulfil a certain mission it has for that particular aircraft. The issue of efficiency, price, and all of those conditions are taken into account. The matter of offsets has never been a part of those criteria. It has not in the past and it is not today.

This Government and previous Governments have never interfered with the decision-making process in terms of the acquisition of which aircraft is the best to suit the needs of a particular mission. That is the case in this particular acquisition.

Mr. Speaker: There will be a supplementary question by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre. Then I regret that we are out of time.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Deputy Prime Minister realize that this new ideology of giving no direction to Crown corporations means that Canada has failed to assert its right under GATT for industrial offsets for Canadian jobs, and has failed to give opportunities for Canadian workers to have good jobs, while spending Canadian taxpayers' money?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is so interested in jobs why is he opposed to the free trade agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Because of the jobs.

Mr. Mazankowski: It will create jobs, jobs, jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask either the Government House Leader or the Deputy Government House Leader to give us the customary Thursday statement of government business.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, our agenda is as follows: The House will deal with Bill C-139, the income tax reform Bill, at second reading; Bill C-136, the broadcasting legislation, at second reading; Bill C-82, Lobbyists Registration Act, at third reading.

We will then commence the abortion debate. We will stay with that debate until it is resolved.

When we have completed these items our plan would be to take a short recess until August 10, 1988, when we will return to deal with the free trade and the child care legislation, and other important legislative initiatives. The motion will be ready to be tabled at the appropriate time tomorrow.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Government House Leader what steps the Government is taking with respect to people who work in this place and around this place? I have checked with the relevant authorities and found out that persons in the parliamentary program, that is Hansard reporters, interpreters, those who keep records here and have to keep this place going, have had all of their leave cancelled for the entire summer. They have been working extended hours; there have been 10 hours a day in sittings. They have been working since last August 18, without any significant break.

I have also found out that generally leave has been cancelled for the cafeteria workers, the messengers, the security clerks, and the cleaners who work here in the House of Commons. In the cafeterias, the normal short hours of the summer have been extended. Does the Government have any sympathy for the people who work here and provide services for Members of Parliament?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the New Democratic Party House Leader will know, the Board of Internal Economy enters into contracts and agreements with all of the organizations to which my hon. friend refers. All of the people employed in those organizations realize that the House of Commons can sit 365 days a year to do business. There are normal breaks. That is one of the reasons why we are taking a break after we finish the abortion motion.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Government House Leader clarify part of his statement? He said that after the debate on certain Bills is completed the Government will call a debate on abortion. Will he make it exactly clear for the House and the public what it is we will be debating? The Government has a resolution that is still on the Order Paper. It was tabled last May. We thought last week the Government was going to call that motion for debate, but because of the Government's own decision, that debate did not proceed. The Government in effect cancelled the debate. I would like to know from the Deputy Government House Leader if the Government is going to call the motion it put down last May, or is it going to present another separate motion or Bill?

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker, the Government will present a motion to take a sense of the House. It will be a normal motion, debated under all of the normal Standing Orders, requiring the abrogation of no Standing Orders. We believe the debate should commence without any procedural concerns at all.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, further to what was raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), the Chair will know that approximately—

Mr. Lewis: Come on!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I interrupted the Government House Leader when he spoke. Surely the same courtesy should be extended to Members, even if they happen to sit on the opposition side of the House, temporarily.

Mr. Rossi: You are not a dictator, Lewis.

Mr. Boudria: I was just speaking further to what was stated by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. Some time ago I raised with the Chair in this House the situation involving the employees of Parliament Hill, particularly through the summer months. I brought to the attention of the Chair at that time that at least some accommodation should be made to allow a number of employees throughout the summer to have some time off because, I believe, notwithstanding the fact the House sat through most of the summer, many of us took some time off.

In conclusion, I want to draw to the attention of the Chair, in particular, the treatment of the Parliamentary Restaurant employees who traditionally work eight hours a day during session and six hours a day during the month of August. This has been changed. They are now working eight hours a day during August and are not being paid overtime even though they work two hours a day extra. That decision was taken by the management, as I understand it. I would like the Chair to look into the matter to see whether or not that is fair in that particular case, as well as the other cases I have brought to the attention of the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Matters relating to the working conditions of House of Commons employees are not points of order. Nevertheless, I note the representations made by the Hon. Member and if the Hon. Member has further representations to make to the Speaker, he is welcome to do so.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek some clarification from the Deputy House Leader. He indicated that the order of business would be Bill C-139, and second reading of Bill C-136 and Bill C-82 and then we would begin the debate on the abortion motion. Did he say that the motion we would be debating would be the motion that is currently on the Order Paper or does he plan to bring in a new motion? And would he be tabling that new motion tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will be tabling a new motion tomorrow afternoon for debate. I should also point out that if we can rearrange those Bills in order to facilitate spokespersons from either Party, we will be pleased to do so in an effort to make as much progress as soon as possible.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Deputy House Leader. Can he explain to the House and to the people of Canada why he is bringing forward a motion to deal with abortion rather than showing some leadership and courage and bringing forward legislation? Can he explain why this House will not be debating legislation prior to the next election campaign?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair believes that this is a question more appropriately put during Question Period.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724), and the subamendment of Mr. Boudria (p. 17770).

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, prior to the lunch break I was commenting on the fact that there are three fundamental factors which affect every tax system. One of these factors is fairness, the other is the re-distributive nature of the system. The third factor is progressivity. I was talking about the fairness of the tax system. The Government in its proposal has scrapped the 10 rates and we are now moving to three rates. The top rate is somewhere in the vicinity of 44 per cent. Under the proposed so-called reforms in this legislation, all incomes above $55,000 will be taxed at a rate of 44 per cent. Any income above $55,000 will be taxed at a rate of 44 per cent. This means that families which earn just above $55,000 will face the same rate of taxation as a person who earns $1 million. The most striking aspect is that many Canadians with incomes of less than $30,000 will face a marginal tax rate of 39 per cent. Is that fair?

That is the question average Canadians are going to ask. Should a secretary at Bell Canada who earns $28,000 a year face a marginal tax rate of only 5 percentage points below the rate faced by the chairperson, Mr. de Grandpré, who earns some $900,000 a year? A secretary at Bell Canada will be paying the same rate of tax. Is this the Conservative view of fairness?

I also mentioned the fact that the tax system should be progressive. This Government, since it has come into power, has increased taxes. It certainly has increased the sales taxes and it is even talking now about going to a national sales tax or what might be called a value-added tax or a business transfer tax. It is now going to proceed to one of the most regressive ways of raising taxes. Everything will now be taxed. If you go to see a lawyer to get your will drawn up, you will pay a tax. The Government is going to collect.

There are those who see a devious plot in all of this. In fact, when the free trade deal comes into effect, the Government is going to be giving up some $1 billion in revenue as a result of the tariffs it is going to forgo when products come across our border. That is $1 billion the Government cannot give up without getting it from somewhere else. So the Government has come up with this system of a business transfer tax to really recoup from the consumers of Canada what it will lose with respect to the free trade deal.

All of this talk about free trade being a bonanza for consumers is not correct. I hope Canadians are not thinking that somehow or other they will be able to get all these things a lot cheaper because there is no tariff duty on, for example, television sets coming in from the United States. I trust Canadians are not thinking that way because this Government is going to grab it all with this business transfer tax.

In the long run, the Government will be taking in spades more than it has given in tax reform. The most regressive form of taxation is sales taxes. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) goes to the store and buys bread, he pays the same price as a poor person. The tax does not respect wealth and it is not sensitive to poverty. It is a tax that is applied and everyone pays it. It does not recognize that some person might be on a fixed income of perhaps $15,000 or $16,000 a year. Just because they are on a fixed income does not mean the tax will be waived. It does not apply. The tax is regressive because it does not respect incomes. It is regressive and not progressive.

We New Democrats studied this whole question of taxation. It was one of our concerns. It was an issue for us in the 1984 election campaign, and it remains an issue for us today. The New Democratic Party caucus studied the tax system. We participated in the Finance Committee when it looked at tax reform, which has resulted in this Bill. Our members on the committee on behalf of the caucus tabled a minority report in which we made recommendations. I want to put those recommendations on the record.

First, we recommended that the structure of tax rates should be further examined and that a higher tax rate should be imposed on high-income Canadians. People such as Mr. de Grandpré should not be paying 44 per cent; they should be in a higher tax rate, those who have received so much from our country. They should be prepared to contribute much more to the upkeep of it.

Second, we have recommended that the personal income tax system should be indexed fully to inflation. We agree with moving from exemptions to tax credits. We agree that that is fair. But it is not going to be fair if we do not ensure that those tax credits are fully indexed to the cost of living. In fact, what the Government has tried to establish with tax credits is to redistribute wealth to those who need it. Unless provision is made for indexation to the cost of living, the value of the tax credit will be eaten up by inflation.

Third, we recommended that capital gains income, except for that of farmers and small business, be fully taxable, and the lifetime exemption be eliminated. The Government continues to allow capital gains up to $100,000 with a lifetime exemption.

That is a tax loophole that ordinary Canadians cannot take advantage of. They are not in the speculation business. They are in the living business. They have to live from day to day. They are not the ones who buy condominiums in Florida. They are not the ones who are in the flips of property in Toronto where the market is so heated. We are saying in this recommendation, as was said in the Carter Commission report on taxation, a dollar is a dollar is a dollar and it has to be taxed.

Fourth, we recommended that other personal tax measures which largely favour the wealthy such as the deduction for RRSP contributions for upper income earners, special treatment of dividend income and full deduction for interest costs in excess of investment income be further reduced. In 1984, 187 wealthy Canadians with incomes of more than $250,000 paid no income tax whatsoever. Many more paid tax at well below the average rates. By and large, this tax reform proposal of the Government does not change much. It still allows the wealthy to take advantage of loopholes in the tax system.

We believe there ought to be no sales tax on food whatsoever. We recommended that the reform of the federal sales tax should not involve taxation of food, and should reduce the reliance of the federal Government on indirect taxes.

We also recommended that special treatment for capital gains relative to other corporate profits should be eliminated. Tax measures which favour large profitable corporations such as the seven-year carry-forward and the two-year carry-back loss provisions and the deductibility of interest costs incurred in corporate takeovers should be reviewed.

Finally, we recommended that a corporate minimum tax be implemented. That was one of the promises we elicited from the Prime Minister during the 1984 campaign.

We say to the Government that these are the kinds of recommendations that would make tax reform tax fairness. That is what we are interested in, not this phoney approach to tax reform but rather tax fairness as outlined by the recommendations which this caucus put on the record in the Finance Committee as its minority report.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Dewar: My question is with respect to the Hon. Member's point of view with regard to the regressive tax system and where we are going with tax credits. For a long time we have advocated an increase in tax credits. However, some of the tax credits we are dealing with here are tax credits which fall into non-indexed areas which the Government has now identified. The tax expenditures at the upper end have been closed off but do not come into effect until 1991. What will the effect on the revenues of the Canadian Government be in trying to finance the Government with this type of conflict?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, Canadians who are more cynical than I recognize that it is very convenient that the so-called elimination of tax exemptions and the closing of loopholes are scheduled to come into effect in 1991, a time which is well beyond the next federal election. I want to say to the Hon. Member who posed the question that there is a certain cynicism involved here. I must admit that there are times when I slip into that cynicism. I also see the cynicism of tax cuts which appear on people's pay-cheques as of July 1, 1988. Just to protect the possibility of a spring election people will get tax refunds in the spring based on the first six months of 1988 when tax is collected at the higher rate.

It seems to me we have to look at this in the context of a cynical Government which is in fact trying to pick the right time to call an election. It has protected itself in terms of calling it in the spring, summer and winter of next year.

With respect to the question of tax credits, of course tax credits are more fair than exemptions. Tax credits can be focused and be used for the redistribution of funds. One of the factors in a tax system is its redistributivity. The ideal of using the tax system to redistribute money to poor people is much more easily achieved with the tax credit system than with exemptions.

However, it is no good to have a tax credit system unless one is prepared to index it fully. If it is not indexed fully it will become eroded. In this way the poor get poorer and relatively their position does not become improved. We in the New Democratic Party have proposed full indexation. The Government has not responded positively to that proposal.

The Hon. Member has pointed out that the elimination of these proposals concerning tax exemptions will not take effect until 1991. I suppose what the Government is looking at to recoup any of those losses in the future is to move to a national tax system. I cannot think of anything more regressive than that. The average Canadian family will be paying $1,000 more after tax reform comes into effect than they were paying when the Government came to power in 1984. Even with the few pennies of their own money that Canadians got back, it did not take too long for the Liberals down at Queen's Park to rush in and grab it from Ontario taxpayers. The Liberals moved right in and grabbed it, after using the bonanza or surplus to win an election by spreading the largesse. Now they find they do not have the money, so whatever few shekels Ontario taxpayers will get back, the Liberals at Queen's Park will take.

I say to the Hon. Member that the two old Parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives, are tweedle-dum and tweedle-dumber. Their view of taxation is "Robbing Hood". They take from the poor to give to the rich. That view will not change as long as the Liberals or Conservatives sit on the government benches. We need an NDP Government that believes in tax fairness, and none of this phoney tax reform approach that is being foisted off on Canadians.

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member doth protest a bit too much. Unlike himself, many of us have seen what the New Democratic Party does as a Government. It is one thing to talk, and another to see what people actually do when in office. Until recently, Manitoba was the only province in Canada that has seen fit to elect an NDP Government, other than British Columbia and Saskatchewan. That Government raised taxes substantially for all tax-paying Manitobans, so much so that in the recent election all but 20 per cent of Manitobans voted against the NDP.

If the day ever came that the NDP was elected to office, which I pray is not the case, how do we know that the NDP would not do what their colleagues have done in Manitoba, and in a fiscal sense put the boots to the men and women of low income throughout the province?

Mr. Rodriguez: When the Hon. Member mentions that British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have in the past elected NDP Governments, I also wish to point out to him that the territorial Government of the Yukon is a New Democratic Government lead by Tony Penikett. I want to point that out to the Hon. Member because he seems to have avoided that. The economy of the Yukon was in a shambles. Today the Yukon is in a far better economic position than it was when led by Conservatives not so long ago.

It is important to look at the style of a Government when it taxes. One has to look at the quality of life of the people within the borders of that community. For example, when the New Democrats were in power, a young man or woman driving a car in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or British Columbia had a lot more money in his or her pocket to maintain that car than a young man or woman in Ontario where there is no government-run auto insurance. That is a saving right off the bat, particularly to poor people. Rich people tend to put the cost of vehicles into their corporations and the corporations write off the insurance. Therefore, one has to keep that in mind, and look at the quality of life.

When the NDP was in power in Manitoba, day care was light years ahead, compared to when Conservatives are in power in the provinces. That is a benefit and redistributing tax dollars in areas that affect the quality of life of poor people, which is extremely important.

In the area of employment, it is no good to receive a tax cut if a person does not earn any money. What good is a tax cut to that person? First, what is important is to have jobs, jobs, jobs. When Manitoba was led by the New Democrats, it had one of the lowest unemployment rates in the country, as did Saskatchewan. In fact, the Government in Saskatchewan had a balanced budget. When Allan Blakeney was defeated in the Province of Saskatchewan, there was a surplus. Within six short months of the great Devine coming to power the surplus was lost. That Government is now in a deficit position. These fiscally irresponsible Tories have run up a deficit. Who will pay for that? The taxpayers of Saskatchewan have to pay the interest on that deficit. They have to pay not only the year to year deficit, but also the accumulated deficit. That must deduct from the quality of life of the people of Saskatchewan.

What can I say about British Columbia with Premier Vander Zalm. To see what is going on one needs a numerologist to find out who the players are in British Columbia. If anyone wants to stand up and tell me that the people enjoy a better quality of life in British Columbia under Vander Zalm, then that person is dreaming in Technicolor.

We need a Government to put people first and recognize that there are people whom the tax system must serve and who do not serve the tax system. The tax system under the Tories and the Liberals serves the wealthy corporations and the wealthy people in this nation. The Tories will never understand that because they are not sensitive to people. They are only sensitive to making a quick buck. The thinking of the Tories is: "I am all right, Mack, and I do not give a hoot about you. You look after yourself, and pull yourself up by the bootstraps". The Tories believe in privatizing, deregulating, every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost. That is Tory philosophy, Buster, and you are in the wrong park because we are not in there with you.

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this important debate. I heard a few familiar words a little while ago from the Hon. Member who just spoke, although it was in different terms to what was said four years ago. I heard the ring: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". At one time it was said with disrespect, and now it is with respect. Obviously, times change.

When the Government initiated certain reforms in the House and indicated where it thought it would be leading the country, and it is fine to stand up today and report that the Government did create the jobs, very few people in Opposition thought it would. Jobs have been created throughout Canada and unemployment is at a much lower rate throughout the country. Although the Government has not achieved its goals in all areas, it has been very successful. To go along with the economic renewal program, tax reform has been initiated. This will give confidence to business, individuals, and investors.

I have heard a lot of rhetoric from the NDP and previous speakers about loopholes. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) was talking about dozens and dozens of loopholes, which apparently were studied in Tax Probe '86. The Finance Committee also looked at various initiatives that the Government has taken historically, and some that it may consider. The committee found there was some value in many of these; it included capable representatives from the opposition Parties. I am quite surprised that the Hon. Member would rise and say that there was absolutely no initiative there of any great economic consequence.

Besides the reforms initiated by this Bill, the record is quite clear as to what the Government has done in previous tax reform. A minimum tax has been initiated which was implemented to ensure that upper-income Canadians pay their fair share of tax. Tax shelters based on investments in yachts, recreational vehicles, and similar properties have been eliminated; income splitting through interest-free loans between family members has been halted; the so-called carve-out transactions in the oil and gas sector have been stopped; trusts are now unable to distribute investment income tax free; the use of partnerships and corporate takeovers to increase tax deductions has been eliminated; new at-risk rules for limited partnerships have been introduced; and corporations are being prevented from distributing profits as capital gains rather than dividends.

These are all initiatives that our Government has brought forward and these were so-called loopholes in the past. We have looked at various other initiatives that we have in place, and it is difficult to make major changes. Other than what we are bringing in now, I believe that what we are bringing in with this Bill certainly is fair and equitable. I am quite surprised that the opposition Members would argue against the initiatives of this Bill.

I would like to point out particularly one of the key elements in the tax reform package, which is the conversion of personal exemptions and some deductions to tax credits. For more than 20 years, Canadians who have studied our tax system have increasingly recommended that tax credits should replace exemptions and deductions to make the system fairer.

The reason why tax credits are fairer is straightforward: An exemption or deduction is subtracted from income in determining taxable income. It is therefore of greater value to higher-income earners because it reduces income that would otherwise be taxed at a higher marginal tax rate. A tax credit, on the other hand, is subtracted from tax owed, and therefore provides the same reduction in tax to all taxpayers regardless of their income level.

Let me illustrate in dollar terms. A $1,000 exemption reduces the federal taxes of a taxpayer in the old 6 per cent tax bracket by $60. But for a taxpayer in the highest tax bracket, federal taxes are reduced by $340—almost six times as high. When the provincial portion is calculated, the higher income earner comes out even further ahead.

Under tax reform, this $1,000 exemption is converted to a tax credit equal to 17 per cent of income, which is $170 for a $1,000 amount of money. This amount will be the same for taxpayers in every tax bracket, whether low or high-income earners.

The new tax credits will replace the personal exemption, the married exemption, the equivalent-to-married exemption, the dependants' exemptions, and the age exemption. Credits will also replace a number of deductions: The disability deduction, the pension income deduction, the medical expense deduction, the tuition fee and education deductions and the charitable donations deductions. The most commonly used credits have been set at levels that will make them worth more on tax savings for the majority of taxpayers than the old exemptions would have been worth.

Lower-income taxpayers, in particular, come out ahead. Indeed, the increased value of personal credits is the main reason why 850,000 lower-income Canadians will have their income tax reduced to zero.

Let us look at a few of the commonly used credits to see why they are better for 66 per cent of taxpayers in the 17 per cent tax bracket. The new basic personal credit directly reduces federal tax payable by $1,020. This year, the basic personal exemption would have been $4,270, reducing the federal tax by only $725; therefore, it is clear that most taxpayers come out further ahead.

The married or equivalent-to-married credit is set at $850. The old exemption would only have been worth $635. The age credit is $550, significantly higher than the $455 value of the exemption. The $65 credit for a dependent child is the same as the old exemption; however, for the third and subsequent child the credit is doubled.

Many deductions will also be converted into tax credits at 17 per cent of their present value. That is, taxpayers will be able to subtract from tax 17 per cent of the amount that they can now subtract from income. In effect, this simply means that the new credits are worth the same to those taxpayers in the 17 per cent bracket as the old exemptions. The conversion to tax credits directs more money to those in need and reduces the after-tax value of benefits going to higher-income Canadians.

Tax credits respond to the view, expressed to the Government by Canadians from one end of the country to the other, that the tax system should be fairer and give a better break to those most in need.

Tax credits also work to eliminate a number of inequities under the old system. A perfect example of this is the new married or equivalent credit. Dependent spouses will be able to earn $500 before their earnings begin to reduce the married credit. Above that amount, the credit will be reduced at the rate of 17 per cent of earnings. Under the old system, those earnings directly reduced the married exemption, which in turn increased the amount of income taxed at the highest tax rate of the higher-income spouse.

The credit system ensures that the initial earnings of a second income earner are effectively taxed only at the lowest rate in the system. This removes the disincentive under the old system for many spouses to enter or return to the workforce.

Tax reform also recognizes the importance of tax credits as an integral part of the Government's over-all social policy. The refundable child tax credit has become a vital measure aimed at assuring families of adequate income support for the care of children. The credit is being increased to $559 this year, up from $489 last year. It is now available for children in the year that they turn 18.

Combined with other tax reform measures and with the Government's child care proposals, the improved credit will significantly increase tax assistance for most families with children and make the system more progressive.

Similarly, the sales tax credit, which has increased under tax reform, serves a vital function in offsetting the effect of sales tax on those with medium or low incomes.

I might add that we have made clear that the sales tax credit will be enriched considerably and extended in the second stage of tax reform when a new, broad-based sales tax is introduced. The new two-tier credit for charitable giving will encourage charitable support by starting at 17 per cent for donations up to $250, and then rising to 29 per cent for donations above that level. The new credit means that tax assistance will now be based on the size of the donation, not the size of the donor's wallet.

No longer will we have an unfair system where the donation of a wealthy person is rewarded more than the donation of someone less well off.

Since provincial taxes, except in Quebec, are calculated as a percentage of federal tax, all the new credits will also have the effect of reducing provincial taxes in the provinces. For example, the charitable donations credit would actually be 25.5 per cent for the first $250 and 43.5 per cent for donations in excess of $250, in a province which levies a tax of 50 per cent of basic federal tax.

I am pleased that Quebec made a number of changes in its last Budget, to ensure that Quebecers can take advantage of some of the tax savings from federal tax reform.

With all of the advantages offered by tax credits in terms of fairness, social progress and flexible application, Canadians will agree that the time has indeed come to adopt them into the system as part of tax reform. I urge all Members of the House to support the Bill before us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. On debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, I also welcome this opportunity to take part in this important debate on the Bill now before the House, and I do so for a number of reasons.

First of all, I believe this Bill accurately reflects what the Conservatives are and what they have been since they came to power in September 1984. We have seen a Government that during the four years it has been in power increased taxes in a way that was both shocking and shameless, table tax reform proposals apparently aimed at restoring a measure of fairness and equity to the system so that the needy in our society could hope for a fair deal.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill also gives us a very clear picture of what is so typical of this Government, and I am referring to the fact that its decisions were always made for the benefit of the wealthy, the elite, and more often than not to the disadvantage of those at the very bottom of the scale, in other words, the poor.

We have also seen this Government hide the thrust of its tax reform, using various measures as a smoke screen. A few months ago, for instance, we had some incredible tax increases, and now we have a Bill which admittedly introduces a number of tax cuts.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval gave an example which very aptly illustrates the situation. The example he gave was this: It's like a thief who steals an old lady's purse, opens it, removes $150, leaves $50 and gives the purse back to the old lady with the remark: I didn't rob you because I gave you back your purse. So I think that illustrates the Government's attitude in the Bill now before the House.

With previous measures the Government put an incredible tax burden on Canadians, and now it proposes a series of tax cuts.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, over a four-year period there will be a reduction of $11.1 billion in personal income tax, an increase of $4.1 billion in corporate tax and finally, an increase of $5.4 billion in revenues raised by sales and excise tax. On the face of it, this may seem very attractive, but we must realize that considering the present situation, these proposals smack of electioneering, to my mind.

In recent weeks, we have seen what seemed to be a series of tax cuts, marginal though they may be. And there is also the fact that as a result of these measures, taxpayers will be entitled to a refund when they file their returns in April 1989. So all this is being planned to cover two eventualities. If an election is imminent, the Government could say: Look we cut taxes. If they decide not to call an election now or in the weeks to come, they can say next spring: Look at your tax refund. There's proof positive that we managed your tax money and this country both wisely and well.

I think this shows how little respect this Government has for the Canadian people, if it thinks it can make Canadians forget what happened in the past four years. We saw this not long ago in a by-election, when the Conservatives promised incredible amounts of money in order to win votes.

The proposals before the House are altogether unacceptable for any number of reasons.

When we talk about tax reform, I think we should aim for improvement, but this improvement should be tangible and reflect a better distribution of the tax burden, away from those at the bottom of the financial scale to those who are better off.

The main criticisms are of course the fact that the new rate structure and tax brackets are not progressive enough and I think that the best way of illustrating that reality is through the following example: Take the case of a family with an income of $30,000; their effective tax rate would be 31 per cent, which is higher than the rate for a family earning $100,000. The family earning $100,000 would only be taxed at the rate of 29 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, consider also the following fact, which is just as indecent, just as unacceptable and just as unreasonable: Tax reform will allow 60,000 profitable businesses to continue to operate and do business in Canada, without paying one red cent of income tax.

According to the document we were given on tax reform, the number of profit-making companies that do not pay income tax has in fact been reduced from 110,000 to 60,000. Before reform, there were 110,000 compagnies that did not pay tax. With tax reform, there will be 60,000 businesses that turn a profit, that are lucrative, and that certainly contribute to the economy in their region, but they will pay no tax whatsoever. That's the truth, and even if it were the only factor, the only criticism levelled at the bill, I think we should vigorously oppose it.

Of these 60,000 businesses, 35,000 will not be subject to tax because of the deferral of loss provisions, and 25,000 will not pay tax because of their low profits and the various tax incentives still present in the system.

I don't think it is going too far to ask all businesses to put their shoulder to the wheel and take on their share of the tax burden in Canada. The fact that there are 60,000 businesses out there that are profitable, that are going concerns, and that pay no tax seems unacceptable and certainly very inappropriate to me.

Also, Mr. Speaker, with tax reform the Government has brought in a minimum tax. This Government said: It is totally unacceptable and unfair that some Canadian taxpayers manage to pay no tax whatsoever. So what is known as a minimum tax was brought in. And yet in 1986 there were 5,220 taxpayers with incomes of more than $50,000 who did not pay one red cent in income tax. Of these 5,220 taxpayers, 40 earned $250,000 or more, and the Government seems content to have brought about a simple improvement in the matter, since in 1985, there were 7,947 taxpayers with incomes of more than $50,000 who also paid no tax. To my way of thinking that sort of thing is totally unacceptable in our tax system.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) claims that tax reform will improve the situation, and that 850,000 low-income individuals will be totally tax-exempt. We must understand, Mr. Speaker, that it is possible that 850,000 people will find that they no longer have to pay tax. But we should also understand that over the past four years, the Government has taxed these people unabashedly, and today turns around and says: We are fixing things so that you will no longer have to pay tax.

That dovetails quite neatly with the example my colleague the Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard) gave: We stole from you for quite a while. We'll give you back your purse with a penny in it. That's the proof that we didn't steal from you. That proves that we are generous. But I think that Canadian men and women will not forget what they paid out during the past four years and that they will be able to assess the situation quite accurately.

People have criticized the Bill on another account, and that complaint seems quite well-founded to me. For instance, if we compare the total amounts paid by the taxpayers in 1984 and in 1988, after the tax reform, we see that only households with incomes in excess of $117,000, I could tell you that although there are more than 80,000 people in my riding, those who earn $117,000 a year are few and far between. Well, people who do earn $117,000 a year will pay less tax in 1988 than they did in 1984. These households account for 1 per cent of the Canadian population. So we have families earning $117,000 in 1988 and they will end up paying less tax than they did in 1984. Need I say more? I think this is just one more very obvious and telling example showing that with all such measures this Government has done everything it could to make the rich even richer, to the detriment of poorer families.

Another fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government, ever mindful of the upcoming election, said that taxes would be reduced as of July 1. A good many Canadians will notice a marginal decrease, I agree, smaller tax deductions on their pay cheques. But, Mr. Speaker, let us bear in mind that they have been paying too much since January 1988, so much so that if an election is called for next spring these people will again notice that their tax refunds are bigger. As I pointed out earlier, the Government will then be able to say that it has reduced the tax load. That is nothing but hogwash! As it is, the deductions made since January 1988 amount to a grand total of $1 billion which the Conservative Government took right out of the pockets of Canadians, wrongfully because it had no right to collect that money which will have to be refunded when people file their tax returns next year, and of course the Government will not pay any interest on that money.

Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadians will indeed be able to see for themselves that the over-all impact of the four Conservative budgets and the tax reform will translate into a sharp drop in family benefits. The best example I can give you is that the tax load of individual Canadians has grown a lot heavier than the corporate tax load. Here are some interesting facts and figures: between 1984 and 1985, and 1988 and 1989, the tax burden has been shifting towards individual Canadians. Sure enough, the individual tax load, that is personal income tax plus sales and excise taxes, went up by $26.7 billion during these four years, a staggering increase of 62 per cent, compared with a corporate increase of $2.6 billion, or 28 per cent more. Between 1984 and 1987 therefore, the corporate tax load increased by 28 per cent while personal income taxes went up by 62 per cent.

In addition, for a number of years now the percentage of corporate taxes with respect to total budget revenues has been declining steadily. For example, 20-odd years ago, in 1961-62, corporate taxes accounted for 20.1 per cent of budget revenues. By 1984-85 the figure had dropped to only 13.2 per cent; in 1984-85, only 13.2 per cent of all revenues came from what we might call the corporate sector. This trend has been even more obvious since our Conservative friends took office: this year, barely 11.6 per cent of revenues come from corporations whereas, from 1984 to 1985, the take was 13.2 per cent, $11.6 billion this year. Of course, they could take credit, and quite wrongly, for the fact that a number of jobs were created and that subsequently taxes paid by those new employees fattened government tax revenues. I would like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that if this is so, then corporations also became more profitable, their profits increased and so their contribution to tax revenues should have gone up likewise.

I think, Mr. Speaker that those few comments show how this Government intends to make people forget those four years in which the administration indulged in an absolutely unbelievable tax grab on the backs of Canadians, and in order to more clearly illustrate, let me give specific figures in specific areas. In the area of indirect taxes, the sales tax was increased from 9 to 10 per cent on October 1st, 1984, not to forget of course that Conservatives came to power in September. On October 1st, 1984, they increased the sales tax from 9 to 10 per cent; as if this were not enough, on January 1st, 1986, they raised it from 10 to 11 per cent; and because this was still not enough, four months later, they increased the tax from 11 to 12 per cent. And on each occasion this brought in $1 billion here, $1 billion there, and another $1 billion. Who is paying the sales tax? I have no hesitation in recognizing that the rich, the less affluent and the poor pay it. But it must be understood that the sales tax is much harder, much more cruel to people near the poverty line. The Government got $3 billion through that sales tax hike. There were also tax increases on soft drinks, as everyone will recall, on dental apparatus, candies and sweets.

Those two increases that came in July 1985 and in July 1987 brought in $460 million. There again, everyone must recognize that people who eat those kinds of snacks, people who use that type of product, people who eat that kind of food are mainly the general population, in other words people who do not have the ability to pay what this Government asked from them.

On the other hand, a tax increase that was perhaps much more directly targetted to those who have the ability to pay, as I believe everyone will agree, is the progressive increase on air travel. Air travellers—and this may not mean everyone but in the main I think we can say as a rule that they have greater ability to pay than the majority of the people who never boarded an airplane. However that tax only brought in $55 million. Fifty five million from a tax that at the outset was aimed at a much richer, much more affluent category of taxpayers out of which the Government could have gotten much more than $55 million.

Also then increased from 8 to 12 per cent was the tax on paint, wallpaper and toys. There again, this brought in $60 million. We also got a whole series of increases on the tax on gas—2 cents, 1 cent, 1 cent, 1 cent, so much so that over-all this brought upwards of $2 billion—$2 billion in tax increases. And finally, we were also hit by a number, more specifically by four increases on spirits and tobacco, which brought in nearly $1 billion.

There was a whole series of such increases that all together brought in billions and billions of dollars, and now that an election is in sight the Government suggests: We are going to lower taxes somewhat in order to hopefully, although this is in no way certain, try and get the support of Canadians. I believe that if the Government has the courage to listen to our urgings and call an election, I think it will have the true answer to its legislation, its tax reform.

• (1610)

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that the Liberal Party representative should deal with the tax reform issue in the House, because we are in the process of reforming the system which his Government and party had created over the years. Some 20 years ago, for instance, the income tax paid by individual Canadians accounted for nearly 25 per cent of federal revenues, while the income tax paid by corporations accounted for nearly 75 per cent. When the Liberal Party was in power, and that includes the period under their current leader (Mr. Turner) at least for now, they completely reversed the situation to the point that in 1984, personal income tax accounted for 75 per cent of federal revenues, while corporate income tax accounted for 25 per cent. If the statement I have just made is true, and I suggest it is, how can his Party, if it wants to keep some credibility, now defend and debate in the House this most important issue for Canadians?

M. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple: my Party has always been concerned first and foremost with the need to protect the underprivileged, the low-income people. It is a fact that over the years, changes must be made to ensure a proper balance between the two main classes of taxpayers.

Changes must be made, and I suggest it is the responsibility of any government to make them and take steps to remedy an unfair situation.

It should be understood that when our friends opposite took over the Government in 1984, they made a whole series of promises, insisting that they would re-establish the balance as the U.S. Administration had done, as the provincial governments had done or were planning to do, so that those with the ability to pay would carry a heavier load than those who have lost part of their purchasing power.

I must repeat that whenever the Liberal Party introduced measures, it always took into account the need to protect the underprivileged, and I think my hon. friend will recognize that almost all our social legislation was introduced in Canada under a Liberal administration.

We should also realize that these taxes are imposed on Canadian men and women who just cannot afford these wild increases. On the other hand, we can see that the federal government is systematically getting out of regional development. Its many deregulation initiatives will cause irreparable damage and make things worse for the underprivileged while benefiting the rich fat corporations. I suggest this is the most distinctive feature of this Government.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's answer, but we do know what policies the Liberal Party is against. Let us talk now for instance about the sales tax? Could he tell us whether the Liberal Party, besides being in favour of the Senate, for we all know that the Liberal Party is definitely in favour of unlimited rights for the Senate, could he tell us what the Liberal Party thinks of the sales tax? Should the Government increase or reduce the sales taxes? Could he tell us what his Party's position is on this issue?

Mr. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, it is clear on our side that we are soundly against any measure to tax food, to impose a tax on people who do not have the capacity to pay. We must recognize that in some cases, a certain number of problems arise with taxation and with the tax base, and that, in effect, actions taken in the pursuit of some objectives have an unintended impact on some people.

So I think that in such cases, which are relatively easy to pinpoint, and which can be numerous in some instances, something can be done to restore equity.

Tax credits are one example. Other measures can also be taken to correct an initiative which may initially be intended to bring about a certain balance, a certain degree of equity, but which needs to be tempered by indirect measures.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, there is also the fact that Canadian men and women . . . with regard to taxes, I can take as an example something that comes up when we canvass our ridings during an election campaign, and I must say that I look forward to being in such a position soon. It is the case of the minimum wage earner with two, three or four children who reminds his Member that he pays the same price as he does for butter and that when he can afford to buy steak he also pays the same price. I think that the message is quite clear and that it shows how cruel indirect taxes are, how wicked they can be for people who just don't have the capacity to face that kind of expenditure.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to enter this debate primarily because the issue is fundamental to the direction of government. It also, of course, interests the average Canadian. There is no question that with the exception of employment, there is no issue of more vital importance to the people who live in my riding of Winnipeg North Centre than the issue of taxation. Therefore, I want to make quite clear where my Party and I stand on this issue and how I see the Government's approach to taxes.

What I hear from people is that they want and need justice in the tax system. They want tax justice rather than tax burdens. They want tax fairness rather than tax politics. I have concluded, and I am sure other ordinary Canadians have done the same, that the Government is playing politics with the tax system. When the Conservatives were elected they raised taxes in Budget after Budget after Budget. They raised taxes to the extent of $1,500 for the average family. Now that we are approaching a federal election, now that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is searching for the courage to call the election, now that he is peeking around the corners testing the winds to see whether or not it is all right to have an election, the Conservative Government has changed its direction on taxes and is going to give a few dollars to Canadians. After taking thousands of dollars out of the pockets of ordinary Canadians the Tories are going to give a few back.

The Tories hope Canadians will have very short memories. They hope the average Canadian will look at his or her pay cheque today and see that in comparison with the month before their take-home pay has gone up because federal taxes have dropped. The Government is hoping they will see that and say: "We have a good Government, we have a Government for the people". That is what the Government hopes. If Canadians have short-term memories and difficulty remembering as far as a few years back, in all likelihood they would come to that conclusion. However, that would be a very short-term perspective. I am sure it will not be the perspective of most Canadians because the average Canadian family knows that it has less disposable income today than it had four years ago and that it is worse off with regard to the tax burden than it was four years ago.

Those Canadians who voted for the Prime Minister, the Conservative Party, and change in 1984, voted for tax fairness. They were promised tax fairness and tax justice. They will remember that the same Government took the disposable income out of their pockets. It picked Canadians' pockets of the cash they had to buy the things they need for their families. This Government has raised taxes for the average Canadian family by $1,500 in a series of Budgets over the last four years.

Canadians have good memories and will know who to hold accountable. If the Government thinks Canadians will suddenly forget who took the money out of their pockets, just because they are being given a few coins back today, it is underestimating Canadians. Canadians will know that they are being toyed with and being underestimated. They will see through the cynical gestures of the Government and will measure the Government accordingly. They will know that the Government is playing politics with taxes in an attempt to win the next election rather than being committed to justice in economics and taxation for the ordinary family.

Canadians must remember to take the long look if they want just government and just taxes. I believe they will do that. I know that the families who live in my riding are fed up with constantly increasing taxes and having to carry the burden of the tax system while others are getting away scot-free. They know that others are being given gifts by the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I want to take a different approach to the issue. This Government is now trying to make Canadians forget the fact that it increased taxes, but who else would be responsible for such an increase? Is there an alternative for Canadians? The Liberal Member who spoke before me promised tax justice. Is the Liberal Party an alternative? Is it offering the possibility of tax justice?

While on the subject, I hope Canadians will remember the Liberals' actions when they were in power. It was a Liberal Government which introduced that system, reduced taxes for corporations and increased them for individuals.

It was a Liberal Government which increased taxes for ordinary families while reducing them for wealthy Canadians. It is not an alternative, Mr. Speaker, since the Liberal Party actually established a "Conservative" economic policy in tax matters. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, despite the wonderful promises made by Liberals when they were in the Opposition, once in power, they did not offer an alternative nor a true change of direction to ordinary people. They certainly make big promises, just like Brian Mulroney, the current Conservative Prime Minister, did! Both the Conservatives and the Liberals made big promises that they did not keep after being elected.

Mr. Speaker, people should remember that it was Mr. Turner, current Leader of the Liberal Party who, as Minister of Finance in a Liberal Government, introduced the policy of giving out tax exemptions to large corporations. Under that policy, corporations that make hundreds of millions of dollars in profit pay no taxes at all. That situation is the result of a policy put forward by a former Liberal Minister of Finance, who is now Leader of the Opposition and the Liberal Party, which is now pretending to be in favor of tax justice—

[English]

I want to take a look at the issue of justice in the tax system from another perspective, from the perspective of who benefits from and who is hurt by the tax system. Clearly the rich and powerful and the largest corporations in the country do quite well by the tax regime which both Liberal and Conservative Governments have put in place.

We know that many individuals who earn over $100,000 a year pay not one cent of tax. We know that large and powerful corporations which make hundreds of millions of dollars in profit pay not one cent in tax. I am not talking about taxing corporations which are struggling to survive and to provide employment. I am talking about powerful, wealthy, lucrative, profit making corporations which are making hundreds of millions in profits and are paying no taxes.

We ask why, not only from the perspective of justice in the tax system but from the perspective of what we give up by giving up these revenues. What opportunities do we lose by giving up the revenues which could be collected from very wealthy Canadians who earn over $100,000 a year and large profit-making corporations? What could we be doing with those revenues? What could we be doing to introduce a greater measure of justice in Canadian society?

I would like people, including Members of this House and in particular members of the Government, to ask themselves that question. What could be done with the millions of dollars of revenue that is forgone when wealthy individuals and profitable corporations are allowed to get away with paying no taxes?

The Auditor General is an objective, independent officer of the House. He has identified some $40 billion of tax write-offs whose success in achieving their stated economic benefits are questionable. For example, it is questionable whether some of these write-offs achieved their objective of creating employment or enhancing research and development to provide a stronger economy.

While we ought to retain those tax incentives that achieve their objectives and produce the required results, tax incentives such as those the Auditor General pointed to, which do not achieve the public objective for which they were implemented and only benefit the interest of corporations and the wealthy who use them, ought to be closed. The revenues saved from closing those loopholes should be used to introduce a measure of economic and social justice in this country. I want Canadians to think about how they would use those revenues.

Many people in my riding complain about the heavy burden of taxation. While they had disposable income to spend as they wished some four or five years ago, all their money is used today on the necessities of life. Those people would like some tax relief.

I spoke to a man in my riding who some four or five years ago was earning the minimum wage of $5 an hour and supporting a family. Now his wage is about $11 an hour, but he finds that his income has not gone up because of the taxes coming from his pocket. The Government has continued to increase the burden of tax so that he has received no benefit from the increase in wages.

I have also talked to people in my riding who are known as yuppies. A married couple earning $40,000 a year each are discovering that rather than being able to afford the luxuries of life, their salaries are actually dropping as their taxes continue to rise.

At least some portion gained from the closure of these loopholes should be used for tax relief. The tax relief gained by requiring individuals earning over $100,000 a year and powerful corporations to pay tax would introduce a greater measure of economic justice and social justice in our society.

What about the homeless? While we have been drawing attention to the fact that the average Canadian in a city like Toronto and many other cities can hardly afford a house, we forget that there are many individuals, as well as families who have no house. These people deserve a roof over their head. Those children deserve a roof over their head. I suggest that some of the revenues gained from closing unproductive tax incentives should be used to provide that kind of accommodation.

Why not use those revenues to provide for the hungry in our society, or to give training to the functionally illiterate in our society?

We need an alternative under tax reform that will not be satisfied by the political games that the Conservatives are playing with the tax system. The Conservatives increased the burden of taxation when they were elected. Now they are giving back a few pennies as an election approaches. Canadians will not be satisfied with the promises of the Liberal Party that started us down that road.

Canadians must be made aware of the unjust tax system that increases the burden on ordinary families while it allows the rich and the powerful to go tax-free. We need a citizenry that will demand tax reform, with a Party that will take up the fight with them in order to bring about real justice in a tax system so that everyone will pay their fair share. Such an approach will mean a greater measure of economic and social justice so that no family will have to go without a roof over its head and no child in this society will have to live on the streets. I call for a serious approach to tax justice so that those who have pay and those who do not have receive the help they need.

The Conservatives have only increased the tax burden on ordinary people. As we approach an election, they provide a little relief in the hope that people will forget who increased their taxes originally. The Liberal Party only gives big promises when in opposition but acts like Conservatives when in government.

Let us debate this legislation thoroughly so that Canadians will be aware of the nature of the tax system today. When they realize that large and powerful corporations earning millions of dollars in profit pay no taxes, they will demand change. When Canadians become aware that people earning over $100,000 a year pay no tax, they will demand justice.

Canadians know that they are paying more taxes today than they were four years ago when the Conservatives were first elected. They know they have less disposable income than they had four years ago. The election is the opportunity for them to hold the Government accountable for the fact that they have less to meet their needs than they had four years ago.

• (1640)

I call upon the people of Canada to wake this Government up and let it know that Canadians are interested in tax relief, not politics played with the tax system. Canadians are interested in tax fairness, not political stratagems. They are interested in fairness, not increased tax burdens. They want the Government to collect its just, fair revenues so that it can use them to bring about greater social justice in Canadian society, so that no one will have to go without a roof over his head or hungry, so that people can be trained to use their full capacity. We need tax justice and social justice in this country. We need a NDP Government.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724), and the subamendment of Mr. Boudria (p. 17770).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) played on one of the simplest of emotions that could ever be portrayed before a citizen of any democratic country. He said essentially that citizens do not like paying taxes. That is quite understandable. No citizen likes to pay taxes if he or she thinks there is some legitimate way of not doing so.

The Member also played on the emotion that the hungry, the indigent, those who live in the streets, ought to have some significant assistance and help. I want to say to the Hon. Member that no Member of Parliament, no matter to what political Party they aspire or work for, believe that these grossly wrong social injustices are appropriate in any society.

Having said that, let me also remind the Hon. Member that when our Government came to office in 1984, and it is still a fact today, one out of every three tax dollars did nothing other than service the accumulative debt of this country.

The Hon. Member cannot have it both ways. Let us pretend for the moment that there was no debt. In that case, Canadians could pay one-third less taxes or, alternatively, pay for one-third more services. I would be greatly interested to know if the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre believes it is appropriate that one out of every three dollars that every citizen pays in taxes to the Government of Canada should be used for nothing other than to pay interest on debt? Is that good value for Canadians? Is that why we should pay our taxes? If the answer to that is no, if the Member says, "no, that is not good value", then how is he going to bring that debt down?

Canadians should be told that it is a burden placed there by a Government past because of its wild spending habits in the years from 1972 to 1984, and that it was supported by the NDP. The NDP endorsed the Government's National Energy Program. It was those kinds of expenditures that drove the debt, year after year, higher and higher. I would like to hear the Hon. Member's response.

Mr. Keeper: Let me respond then.

Mr. Malone: He knows that the coming into office of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is what brought about the trend, to where almost 1.5 million more Canadians are employed. They are now in a position to pay taxes, to help spread the burden, and to bring down the debt.

I ask the Hon. Member: Is a major significant debt good for Canada? If the answer to that is no, then what other option is there to pay that debt other than what we have already succeeded in doing, that is, increasing employment in this country and making sure that all Canadians together shoulder the burden to get rid of the albatross that takes one out of three of our tax dollars?

Mr. Keeper: I really want to thank the Member for posing that question. I think it is an important one. I want to answer it by pointing to the behaviour of two Governments. The first Government was the Government of Tommy Douglas. When Tommy Douglas was elected during the Great Depression, the Province of Saskatchewan was deeply in debt. Tommy Douglas was a man, a leader who was concerned about social economic justice. He managed over the years to bring down that debt. At the same time, he increased social services and social justice in the Province of Saskatchewan.

To pose the false dichotomy of bringing down debt and increasing social justice is simply a rhetorical trick the Member seeks to play. I want to point to the behaviour of his own Government. How can this Member stand and point the finger at the New Democratic Party, saying that we are responsible for the debt when his Party has just gone through the process of buying a by-election? It was a "buy-election" in Lac-Saint-Jean. It cost hundreds of millions of dollars. That Party is now in the process of attempting to apply that very same strategy, that "buy-election" strategy, to the whole of Canada. That Party is seeking to buy the Canadian voters with their own money.

I would like the Hon. Member to explain how the Government can keep down the deficit when it seeks to buy elections. The Government is going to bankrupt the country without any measurable change in its social make-up. The only thing the Government is spending its money on is seeking to get back into office. If it would invest that money properly in people, we would not have the hungry, the homeless, and the functionally illiterate.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to ask the Member of the New Democratic Party a question. In the course of the debate, the NDP made certain comments about the tax policies of previous Liberal Governments, as well as those of the current Government.

• (1650)

I would like to ask the Hon. Member what the NDP thinks of the decision by the socialist Government of New Zealand to impose a tax on food. What can we expect if members of his Party are elected to government?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is seeking to deflect the criticism which justly belongs to the Conservative Party and the Conservative Government onto her political competitors. She knows she has nothing to worry about in terms of political competition from the Conservative Party. What she has to worry about is the increase in support in the country for the New Democratic Party. She is simply trying to pass on the sins of Tories on to the backs of New Democrats. That will not wash. People know that we in this Party fought against the Government's proposal to tax food. We are glad that public pressure caused the Government to retreat from the odious idea of taxing food.

It will not wash to try to corner New Democrats because the Hon. Member feels that she is threatened in her political career and her political neighbourhood by the increasing public support for New Democrats and by the fact that people know that this Party is seeking real economic justice. They know that this Party is seeking real economic reform. They know that this Party wants the rich and powerful, as well as the corporations, which make profits in this country, to pay taxes so that we can have some tax relief for the ordinary Canadian family. In this way we could have the types of programs that would bring about better social justice.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is quite sincere. He has been around to talk to his constituents. They are concerned about rising taxes. He and I have discussed that.

Given the fact that the Schreyer NDP Government in Manitoba drove many Manitobans to Alberta because of its anti-taxation and anti-business policies; given the fact that the Barrett Government in British Columbia did the same thing to many British Columbians, again to the advantage of Alberta; and given the fact that his own Government, the Pawley Government in Manitoba, raised taxes significantly for all people of all incomes in Manitoba, including my mother who pays taxes, why does he think that Canadians would be so foolish to elect a radical democratic socialist Government that would only do for all of Canada what NDP Governments have done in three of the provinces in western Canada?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question I want to start out by admitting that, yes, the Government in Manitoba raised taxes too much. That is a point of view I share with my constituents. In fact, the leadership of the Party going into the last election realized that. They sought to change direction. It is unfortunate but the Party went down to defeat. Yes, the NDP is capable of making mistakes. We are also capable of recognizing them. I wish that this Government would recognize when it has made mistakes.

The Hon. Member said that the Schreyer Government turned people away from Manitoba to Alberta. That is wrong. The Government from which Manitobans fled was the Sterling Lyon Tory Government. That was when the population of Manitoba decreased. It was only when Howard Pawley was re-elected that the population of Manitoba started to increase once again.

Let me point out to the Hon. Member, if he is seeking to attack in a false way Mr. Schreyer, who was a former Premier of Manitoba, that many families in Manitoba still have hanging on their walls a photo of the former Premier. I have seen no family homes in which the picture of Sterling Lyon hangs on the wall, or pictures of Brian Mulroney for that matter. If one attacks Schreyer, one attacks the very heart of Manitoba. I ask the Hon. Member to keep that in mind.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the previous spokesman did not respond to my question about the socialist Government's decision to impose a tax on food. I think a great many questions that Canadians legitimately ask themselves begin with: "What would you do in the place of the Government?" I was most disturbed when the Hon. Member brought this on himself by suggesting that when the Liberals were in power we had somehow imposed this kind of tax burden on middle-income and lower-income Canadians and that in fact we were like the Conservatives. I suggest to the Hon. Member that if we look at the legacy of the Liberal Party, beginning with the introduction of national medicare, as well as with the decision to increase tax credits for those who are at the lowest end of the income scale in relation to child benefits, yes, they were supported by the NDP—

Mr. Cassidy: Proposed by the NDP.

Ms. Copps: —but they were Liberal programs introduced by a Liberal Government in a national—

Mr. Cassidy: Medicare came first from the NDP, let us get it straight.

Ms. Copps: As a matter of fact, the first Bill to deal with equal pay for work of equal value was brought forward by the Hon. Margaret Campbell who was a Member of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's talk about medicare.

Ms. Copps: Talking about medicare, what Party introduced medicare?

Mr. Cassidy: Medicare came from the NDP in Saskatchewan.

Ms. Copps: I can understand why the NDP is a little bit nervous about the positions and programs of the Liberal Party. It is because, hopefully, Canadians are looking at the Liberal Party as an alternative Government. People have the right to examine policies of the Liberal Party.

However, I would like to speak for a moment about the hypocrisy of the NDP. I refer to the issue of flow-through shares. Some Hon. Members may remember the hypocrisy of the NDP when it came to the issue of flow-through shares. It is important that the public pay attention to this because it was the same Member, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), who day after day stood in the House and said: "We have to eliminate all corporate tax breaks. We have to get rid of the corporate tax rip-off. Put the tax burden on the corporations and take it away from the individual". He in fact did an absolute flip-flop on flow-through shares.

The flow-through shares measure was introduced by a Liberal Government. It was a policy introduced to try to stimulate the creation of development in northern Canada, in particular in northern Ontario and northern Quebec. It permitted small Canadian mining companies to be able to get an up-front tax adjustment or, in fact, tax abeyance if they were investing the money in looking for Canadian mineral production. It was very successful. It was a program that created jobs for northern Canadians. It was so successful that one of the first things the Conservative Government wanted to do with this so-called tax reform was to cut it out. On the one hand members of the NDP, day after day, week after week, and month after month, have stood in the House and said: "No corporate tax deductions. No loopholes". Yet on the other hand it took one meeting with the Canadian Mining Association for the NDP to change its position completely. One day members of that Party were against flow-through shares and the next they were in favour of them. They were in favour of them because they saw that in certain circumstances the judicious use of tax incentives can encourage Canadian companies to remain competitive and can encourage small Canadian businesses to grow.

I say to the NDP: "I do not mind, take a position, but for Heaven's sake do not be so hypocritical to the people of Canada. On the one hand do not say that you do not believe in any tax exemption, any tax breaks, and on the other hand when the flow-through shares are introduced"—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I saw the House Leader for the NDP wearing a button which stated: "Go with the Flow".

Mr. Cassidy: I wore one too.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member wore the button in the same week that he was standing in the House saying that we should eliminate all corporate tax advantages. I want to say to the NDP that it was a Liberal Government that permitted the tremendous success story of the Canadian steel industry, including the Steel Company of Canada—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. It is 5 p.m. She will have five more minutes in her speech after Private Members' Business.

I recognize the Hon. Minister of State for the Treasury Board on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think Your Honour would find that there would be agreement to the following. When we drafted this it was before 5 p.m. so that is intended to mean after Private Members' Hour.

This afternoon and this evening we shall continue debate on Bill C-139, the income tax reform Bill.

• (1700)

Should the House finish debate on this matter this evening the vote would be deferred until 6 p.m. on Monday, July 25, 1988. In the event that the House does finish debate on Bill C-139 this evening, the House will not sit tomorrow, Friday, July 22, 1988. However, the Journals will be open on Friday, July 22, to receive any motions and other documents which are normally received.

On Monday, July 25, 1988, at 11 a.m., the House will consider Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act, and complete debate before 1 p.m. After Question Period on Monday, July 25, the House will consider third reading of Bill C-82, the Lobbyists Registration Act, and complete the debate on that Bill before 5 p.m. All votes will be deferred until 6 p.m. The House will then recess until 11 a.m. on Tuesday, July 26. Between the hours of 11 a.m. and 1 p.m., July 26, the House shall consider other business to be arranged among the Parties.

Directly after Question Period on Tuesday, July 26, 1988, the House will commence debate on the abortion motion, and such debate shall continue within the normal hours of debate until the final question is called. I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that this would be pursuant to the hours of sitting adopted June 20, 1988. The House will then consider a motion to adjourn until August 10, 1988.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this statement by the Deputy Government House Leader reflects the discussions that have been held. There is one part of the statement that I believe requires some clarification, in order to make the record complete. As stated, on Monday, July 25, 1988, at 11 a.m., the House will consider Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act, and complete debate before 1 p.m. The Government House Leader should state exactly what stage of debate he proposes completing before 1 p.m.

Mr. Lewis: I believe it was intended that that would be second reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: I, too, rise on a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker. There were several votes anticipated on the subamendments to the motion on Bill C-139. From what the House Leader has stated, I would assume that there has been some agreement that those will be voice votes, because any vote if called would then defer further debate until 6 p.m. on Monday. Has that problem been ironed out?

Mr. Lewis: I must confess that I discussed that with the House Leader of the Official Opposition. I read the text of what I have just stated to the House Leader of the NDP. We did not discuss that. I would suggest that it is something that perhaps we could discuss later and come to some accommodation on. The Hon. Member makes a valid point. If recorded divisions are called, there would have to be some accommodation to reach an end to this at some time. That is what was intended, that is the sense of the discussion we had, and we will make sure that it is clarified.

Mr. Cassidy: My desire to have votes is tempered by my realization that it would do the House good not to be here tomorrow, so perhaps it can be worked out privately.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

[English]

The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Hon. Minister of State. Is it the pleasure of the House to agree to the motion by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In case we sit tomorrow, it is my duty to read the written notice I received from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) informing me he will be unable to move his motion under private Members' Business, on Friday, July 22, 1988.

As it has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 39, I instruct the Table to put that item at the bottom of the order of precedence.

Since the notice will be withdrawn, private Members' hour will be cancelled and, pursuant to Standing Order 39(3)(b), the House will continue with the business before it prior to private Members' hour.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CHAPLEAU CONSTITUENCY

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Gatineau), by unanimous consent, moved that Bill C-308, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Chapleau, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, on the request of the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). I recognize that we may be setting some type of precedent in the House by bringing this Bill forward so quickly through all stages. There are many other Private Members' Bills waiting to come through the House in a similar fashion. Within the context of parliamentary reform, we should recognize that we are setting a precedent. I support the Bill of the Hon. Member. I have no objections to it, but I am concerned about the process. In spite of that, I will give my consent to allow it to proceed, recognizing that we are setting a precedent that may tend to cause other private Members to wish to bring their own Bills forward in a similar fashion.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to disagree with my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner). There is no precedent being set here. This has been going on for at least 16 years. I changed the name of my riding some 14 years ago with the same procedure, and over the years it has been done by other Members. There are no precedents being set. However, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member gives his concurrence.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to confirm that unanimous consent does not in fact constitute a precedent.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Clause 1 and 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I don't want to abuse the generosity of my colleague from Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) who has been kind enough to give me a few minutes to have my Bill passed. I would also like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has kindly accepted to help me, and also the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), the NPD House leader, for his support, the members of my party caucus who, yesterday, gave me their support, and you, Mr. Speaker, for your good work. I will always cherish this moment.

Today is my son's twenty-first birthday, and I wish to dedicate this to him as a gift.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPOSITION TO REMOVAL OF MAILBOXES IN BURNABY, B.C.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should order Canada Post Corporation to cease immediately its plans to remove a number of street mailboxes in Burnaby, B.C., and further, that the government order the Corporation to consult fully with the municipal council, local Members of Parliament, and the residents and businesses affected before any future steps are taken to close street mailboxes in Burnaby.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on this important motion with respect to postal service in my constituency of Burnaby. I tabled this motion sometime ago, in February of last year, in response to a series of steps that were taken by Canada Post that adversely affected the quality of postal service in my constituency. Just briefly, what happened is that notice was given that many street mailboxes throughout my constituency would in fact be removed. This was done in a manner which involved no consultation whatsoever with the residents that were affected. It was done in a way which really demonstrated contempt for the residents of that community. One day the street mailboxes were there, the next they were gone.

Quite understandably there was an outcry in the community. The businesses that were affected, the residents that were affected, and the local council, all urged Canada Post to reconsider this decision.

I took up the battle on behalf of the residents of Burnaby on this important question. Following that fortunately some sense prevailed, some sanity prevailed, and Canada Post was persuaded to restore approximately 50 of the street mailboxes that had been removed.

Some might ask why this motion is still on the Order Paper if in fact some steps were taken to resolve the dispute which the motion addresses.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OPPOSITION TO REMOVAL OF MAILBOXES IN BURNABY, B.C.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Robinson:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should order Canada Post Corporation to cease immediately its plans to remove a number of street mailboxes in Burnaby, B.C., and further, that the government order the Corporation to consult fully with the municipal council, local Members of Parliament, and the residents and businesses affected before any future steps are taken to close street mailboxes in Burnaby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Burnaby. He will be given full time for his speech.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, when one is interrupted by Her Majesty, one always yields graciously.

Before the knock on the door I was indicating that in the early part of 1987 Canada Post had removed a number of street mailboxes from my constituency of Burnaby. I intervened on behalf of my constituents and was successful in having a number of them restored. This affected both residents in the area as well as a number of businesses, including Transport Equipment Control Systems whose President, Mr. Bob Nakashima, sent a note along saying that he appreciated very much the work that I had done on his behalf as his Member of Parliament to restore postal service in his area.

Some might ask why is it necessary to pursue this question of postal service at this time some 15 or 16 months later. Under the Conservative Government the quality of postal services has declined and the cost has gone up substantially. This is still a very timely and an important question.

New Democrats have taken a clear stand on the Post Office, particularly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). The New Democratic Party strongly believes that door-to-door delivery should be extended to all suburban residents and that all urban residents should be treated equally. We have opposed the corporate plan of Canada Post since it was approved by the Conservative Cabinet and tabled in the House last fall.

Let us look at some of the elements of this corporate plan which will have a disastrous effect on the quality of postal service in Canada. It calls for the elimination of 8,700 jobs and the closure of some 5,200 rural post offices across Canada. There will be an increased centralization of mail sorting, which will lead to even more delays in mail delivery. There will be the privatization of counter services to inadequate retail outlets and the replacement of door-to-door mail delivery with so-called supermailboxes.

In other words, effectively what Canada Post is doing is dismantling the service over a period of some 10 years. As New Democrats we believe in this public service. We believe that the Post Office is an important and a vital service. We believe that we should allow the Post Office to expand and get into areas in which it can make money, gain revenue, and cross-subsidize some of its less profitable operations. That has been done by the Post Office in Great Britain and the Post Office in Australia very successfully. I suggest that we look at the same kind of thing here in Canada.

Today some 54 per cent of Canadians receive door-to-door service. That percentage will drop dramatically over the next 10 years under Tory cuts in postal service. This is an issue of basic fairness, for those who live in communities across this land are entitled to that door-to-door delivery and should not be treated as second-class citizens because they happen to move into a suburban area which does not have the service.

I received a letter from a constituent, a Mr. Geoffrey Thomas who said:

> We are generally very satisfied with the postal service however we just moved into our first home (townhouse) to find that our mail is not delivered to our door. We must walk every day to a commercial post box to pick up our mail. This is unreasonable since homeowners in Burnaby have door-to-door delivery. I would appreciate an explanation for this situation.

This constituent is certainly entitled to that explanation. We know that the failure to provide door-to-door postal service hits particularly hard the disabled and our senior citizens. We know as well that letter carriers play an important role in the course of their daily delivery. They are not just delivering mail but in many cases they perform an important social function, particularly with elderly people. They check on them and make sure they are okay. For some elderly people this is virtually their only contact with the outside community. Now they are being told to walk several hundred yards to pick up their mail at some sort of a big supermailbox. That is unfair.

What is the rationale for this cut in service? It is set out in a letter to me as follows:

> Due to the rapid rise in housing starts, Canada Post has been faced with the fact that the cost of providing door-to-door delivery to all new homes is prohibitive, without massive increases in postal rates or greater dependency on taxpayers' dollars.

What absolute nonsense that is. This same Government which refuses to extend door-to-door delivery across this land is prepared to spend in excess of $8 billion on nuclear submarines. What kind of a twisted priority is that? To refuse to provide door-to-door service and to cut back on over 5,000 rural post offices at the same time as it is squandering taxpayers' money on nuclear submarines is absolute madness.

This applies not only to residential communities but also to industrial parks, for example. A Mr. Keith Beedie, one of my constituents, is a business person in Burnaby. He noted that he and a number of his business colleagues have put together an industrial park in Port Coquitlam called the Meridian Industrial Park. They wanted to get postal service at each of those businesses. What were they told by Canada Post? They were told to forget it, that Canada Post was not prepared to give them the service that the businesses across the street have had for decades. We as New Democrats do not accept that kind of abdication of responsibility.

Further, I note that in the lower mainland of British Columbia, a new franchise has been opened in a 7-Eleven store in Lynn Valley, North Vancouver. This has been criticized severely by the postal workers involved because the work that was formerly done by its members will be done by non-union employees at low wages and under conditions that are quite unsatisfactory. This attempt to franchise operations in 7-Eleven stores not only results in far lower wages and poorer working conditions but results in poor postal service, and I will come to that in a moment.

I mentioned rural post offices, and I want to take this opportunity to place on the record the concern of Canadians in rural communities across the land about the shutting down of rural post offices. I recently spoke out in Chilliwack, British Columbia, where many residents expressed their concern about the fact that the sub post office at Cultus Lake, British Columbia, which had been there for many years, had burned down recently. Canada Post is saying that it will not replace that sub post office, that it will open up a post office in some 7-Eleven store or another store that is open 24 hours a day. Hundreds and hundreds of the residents of that community have signed a petition asking for the service to which they are entitled.

I would note as well that in the case of rural post offices, it is women who are disproportionately hit because I believe over 80 per cent of rural postmasters are women. This is the only source of income for many of these women, and they are being told that their jobs are gone. They will be replaced by people making the minimum wage at local stores. That is Tory economics, and we reject harsh and unfair Tory economics.

Some time ago, I held a public forum in my constituency on postal service, and I also sent out a questionnaire about postal service to my constituents. I think the results are very interesting and I would like to share them with Members of the House. Some 71 per cent of those who responded to my questionnaire were dissatisfied with postal service. They said that the quality of postal service had gone down. In excess of 80 per cent had had mail either lost of damaged. Over 85 per cent strongly believed that there should be universal door-to-door delivery.

The main complaints cited by my constituents of Burnaby would, I am sure, be echoed by constituents across Canada, whether in rural communities or in urban communities. The largest complaint by far was the complaint about delayed mail. I heard about this issue time and time again. We know that the advent of these private sub post offices will mean even more delays.

Damaged and lost mail was another concern as was the increasing amount of junk mail. People are getting fed up with the amount of junk mail they are receiving. As well, they were concerned about long waits and high postal rates while service is going down. Finally, they are seriously concerned about the so-called supermailboxes. They point out, for example, that among discarded junk mail has been found valuable mail like personal cheques. They have been interspersed in the junk mail and have been lost. These are the kinds of concerns that have been raised.

We as New Democrats have concrete proposals to improve the quality of postal service. We are opposed to the recent cuts in service. We support universal door-to-door delivery. We oppose the closing of postal services.

I want to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has led the battle for New Democrats on this question and has done an outstanding job in bringing to the attention of Canadians the concerns particularly of rural Canadians but also of urban Canadians about the decline in postal service.

Finally, we believe in the expansion of postal services in Canada. We believe in selling more packaging materials, introducing electronic mail, and allowing banking services in post offices the way they do in other jurisdictions and the way we did in the past. Postal workers themselves have a number of concrete suggestions for improving the quality of service, including the addition of revenue-generating services, consumers' post, financial services, and bill payments. They suggest that Canada Post should get into package distribution and electronic bulk mail services. They note that the British Post Office has expanded its services in this area and has become profitable and even more efficient. The British Post Office has service six days a week, twice a day, yet it makes a profit. Why can we not learn some lessons from that postal system, pioneered by the Labour Government of Britain, I might add?

The postal workers also suggest that a major initiative should be taken to reduce workplace injuries and work-related illnesses by improving working conditions. In too many cases, the working conditions of postal workers are primitive. One of the worst safety records in Canada is with Canada Post. Canada Post spends in excess of $20 million annually as a result of workplace injuries. Finally, the workers note that adequate staffing is absolutely essential in order to be able to perform services efficiently.

In drawing to the attention of Hon. Members these concerns with respect to postal service, not just in my own constituency but across Canada, I would like to mention some specific concerns that were raised by the postal workers in a recent submission to the Burnaby Municipal Council, a submission made just last month. The concerns that were raised by postal workers in Burnaby are concerns that have been raised by postal workers across Canada, in Hamilton, in Winnipeg, in Quebec—all over Canada.

The postal workers noted that the new plan involving sub post offices and franchises involves a carded parcel system which will mean delays in picking up registered mail at post offices. Before May of 1987, if a person was not at home when a registered letter or parcel was delivered, he or she would get a card telling him or her to go to the nearest post office to pick up the mail or the parcel. Now people get cards telling them to go to the nearest pharmacy, drugstore, or retail postal outlet. For the residents of Burnaby and other places, that means a delay in mail service. It means at least two days' further delay because that registered mail or parcel has to be taken back to the post office, then to the franchise operation. That means delay, and Canadians are fed up with delays in the postal system. This means even further delay in receiving important registered mail.

As well, in too many cases the cards that are left in the mailboxes do not even have telephone numbers on them that would allow people to contact the sub post offices in question to find out if the parcels are big or small. That makes a difference for senior citizens. They have to know if they will be able to carry the parcels, and they cannot find out if there is no telephone number on the card.

As well, the operators of these little sub post offices which are not run by Canada Post, sub post offices in drugstores, grocery stores and so on, are offering postal services as a sideline. They are more concerned with selling groceries, diapers, and the like than they are with first-class postal services.

There are concerns about the security of mail in these places. Other concerns deal with the lack of training and lack of familiarity with postal products and regulations. There is a high staff turnover because in many cases these are minimum wage jobs, language difficulties, and real problems with difficulties in handling the volume of parcels and mail at Christmas. Sometimes staff are simply spread too thin to give decent service.

The bottom line is that staff in these little grocery stores and so on are not trained to handle postal services. They are trained, if at all, to do the kind of routine work involved in a grocery store, not the important work of postal workers. I would note that the permanent and relief clerks at the South Burnaby postal station have a total of something like 17 years and 4 months of experience in serving Burnaby residents. The same is true of the clerks in the North Burnaby postal station.

Instead of opening up even more of these sub post offices, we should be expanding postal service by, for example, opening a New Directions outlet under the operation of Canada Post in the Brentwood Mall in Burnaby. This would be an important and viable expansion of service. If we continue the way we are going, both the South Burnaby and the North Burnaby postal stations will be shut down in the future, and that is something that the residents of Burnaby are not prepared to accept.

There are other dangers as well. I mentioned already the question of supermailboxes and the importance of providing revenue-generating services within the system. We believe that Canada Post should be putting service before profit, but we also believe that it can achieve both those goals by expanding the range of services it offers.

In short, we say no to the closure of rural post offices. We say no to cut-backs in the quality of service. We say yes to universal, door-to-door service across this land. We say yes to a quality post office in Canada. We reject the attack by the Conservative Government on postal service in Canada.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) not only protests too much, he protests far too inconsistently. Therefore, it is my pleasure to talk about one of the great consistencies of the NDP, for in this they are absolutely consistent, and that is their inconsistencies.

The Hon. Member spoke about the reduction in post office outlets. I could see from here, and I suspect it was noticeable to other Hon. Members and those watching on television, that his tongue was in his cheek when he said that.

Mr. Robinson: Oh, no.

Mr. Malone: The Hon. Member knows the new postal plan allows for thousands more postal outlets.

From there he went on to talk about rural Canada where he said they were closing down even more post offices. He knows the Canada Post corporate plan allows for some 5,000 new postal outlets.

Mr. Robinson: Outlets? Oh.

Mr. Malone: The NDP does not believe in more service as the Hon. Member claimed it does in his speech. It specifically believes in the most expensive service. Yes, I know it would be nice to have door-to-door delivery in every community of Canada. It is a fact, of course, that that is impossible for rural Canada, but it is also impossible for the rest of the country if we are talking about affordability. For Members to pretend that somehow we can have service and close our eyes to cost—

Mr. Robinson: What about nuclear submarines?

Mr. Malone: Let us come to the nuclear submarines because that demonstrates something about the NDP as well. They talked about the $8 billion cost of nuclear submarines. They conveniently forgot to say that it was spread over 20 years. That is a very small price to pay to be a partner in NATO, a group of countries that have come together to ensure the freedom of Canadians, among others. We have bound ourselves to that organization in our policy, because we recognize that as members of the free world we have a joint responsibility for the preservation of freedom. Given that, we will play our part to ensure that this group of nations will always remain free. I just wanted to set aside categorically the nonsense that we can leave off part of the facts, make a comparison, and presume that somehow we can have door-to-door delivery in every community irrespective of where it may spring up.

The Hon. Member talked about cuts in postal services. He then went on to refer to "the Tory cuts in postal services". He calls it government cuts. We on this side cut the postal service. Yet the NDP, along with the Liberals and ourselves, supported the idea that Canada Post be set up as a crown corporation.

What does that inconsistent political Party really believe? They voted for the Crown corporation. Are they really saying now that they want a Crown corporation but they want the Government to manage it? Surely, members of the NDP have to sit at one end of the teeter-totter or the other. They cannot scream that the teeter-totter is too high when it is up, or complain they are having no fun when it is down. The fact is they voted for the Crown corporation, they got the Crown corporation, and they cannot stand in this House and tell the Government to run it.

The Hon. Member then talked about the elderly. He had them jogging halfway across Burnaby to get their mail. He said that they had to walk several hundred yards. If he looks at the postal plan, he will note that in hospitals, senior citizens' residences, and other places the plan is to attach mail boxes to those facilities.

Mr. Robinson: Seniors live on their own, too.

Mr. Malone: That is a good point. That is why his point of a walk of several hundred yards is wildly wrong. That is not what the plan says. It is to be within walking distance for seniors, yet he misses the point.

The Hon. Member opposes 24-hour post offices. He does not want Mac's Milk, 7-Eleven, and all the rest of these outlets running extended hours post offices, yet he turns around and champions women. He says that the NDP love the women out there and that the majority of workers at the post office are women. If there are less people working in the post office, he says that somehow puts women down. That is an interesting and strange piece of logic, but let me give him some bits of information that he might find useful. Whether we like it or not, only one woman out of six is like the traditional family where the man works and the female is at home with the children.

• (1750)

Ms. Dewar: Working.

Mr. Malone: I shouldn't say working. I apologize for that instantly. I do not mean to imply that. I mean "employed". Anyone who has ever been in the home or ever been a mother knows what absolute full-time work is. I meant to use the word "employed".

The fact of the matter is that today most families have both partners working out in the community. Under the system advocated by the Hon. Member for Burnaby, by the time they come home the post office has been closed for an hour. Under the old system of the old dinosaur Party the post office is usually located downtown in the big building with the tower and the clock, with no parking for blocks around. It is never open except when you are at your employment, and often it is closed over the noon hour.

That is what the Hon. Member for Burnaby proposes for the modern society rather than the shopping centres with parking areas and extended hours, that is, the kind of situation which is appropriate today.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby talked about junk mail. I have only received one piece of junk mail in my life. It was a request for money from the New Democratic Party. I took one look at it and said that I was going to write to someone because they were sending me junk mail. If there were in fact a category of mail called "junk mail", no one would send it. I agree that there are receivers of mail who sometimes do not like what they are getting, who wish they did not get this flyer or that brochure. When I return from my home in western Canada I am always amazed at how many new pizza companies have opened up in my area. Their flyers are always under my door, and I already eat too much pizza as it is.

However, the people who send the mail and the flyers do not think they are junk. If it were truly junk to the senders they would soon quit sending it. They do not send this mail only to watch their bank account go down. It is only junk to some of the recipients. People send that mail with a purpose in mind. For the Hon. Member to make that submission is, in fact, to deny the entrepreneurship of many people in the business community.

This inconsistent Member, who is only consistent in his inconsistencies, then said that the 7-Eleven and Mac's Milk stores are awful places, that they are terrible places to work and are insecure, et cetera. Later on he said that Canada Post has one of the worst safety records in the Canadian enterprise. This fellow would have everyone walk to the sender to pick up their mail. He cannot have it all these different ways. The argument must be better developed than that.

In all fairness to the Hon. Member, post office concerns have always touched the hearts of everyone in urban and rural Canada. It is important for him to remember that the Canada Post Corporation will show a profit next year. It has already been demonstrated that there is a speed up in the turnaround of mail. The operation of the Post Office is becoming more efficient. There will be more and more postal outlets as a result of the new Canada Post Corporation plan. I thank the Hon. Member for bringing this issue to the floor of the House of Commons, because I think people will now recognize that we are in fact on the right track.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to advise the House at this time that the time provided for Private Member's Hour will end at 6.05. The time taken by the Private Member's Bill of the Hon. Member for Gatineau is not taken away from the time of the Hon. Member for Burnaby, but unfortunately the time taken for Royal Assent is. Therefore, Private Member's Hour will end at 6.05.

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I represent a riding in the heart of Montreal, the beautiful riding of Hochelaga—Maisonneuve. For the benefit of those who aren't familiar with the neighbourhood, this is next door to the Olympic Stadium. A few years ago, a decision was made to build housing units on what used to be the Angus yards. So far, there are about 5,000 new residents. There are six or seven units for the elderly, and this week, I met one of the directors of the well-known Lucie-Bruneau Institute which is involved in integrating the disabled in housing co-ops, in housing units.

Today, I think we have to give some serious thought to the fact that beyond political Parties and ideologies, there are certain situations that must be dealt with. The director of the institute told me that in my riding, on the Angus property alone, there are 300 disabled persons in wheel chairs. How can you expect these people to pick up their mail, even if they have the best possible superboxes in the world? It was decided the boxes would be located on the street corner, but we are talking about disabled persons who cannot deal with this. We have elderly individuals who are 82, 87 and 89 years old. They have trouble walking. They are ill, they are tired, they are exhausted. They couldn't pick up their mail even if those boxes were made out of solid gold!

I wrote to the President of the Canada Post Corporation. I received an acknowledgement, informing me that he would look at the situation, but he never sent a reply. The injustice of the situation is appalling. These are Canadian taxpayers just like everybody else. They have the same rights and privileges and are entitled to the same services as the guy on the other side of the street who is in perfect health and gets his mail delivered. That is the honest truth.

I understand the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson). He has problems in his riding, and in our Party, we have people who have problems with those damned boxes. They are no good. I am against the whole principle, and I want to ask my Government and my Minister and to the President of the Canada Post Corporation as well, a corporation that is a Crown corporation, and I know it means we can't always get these people to do what we want them to do, but I ask him to give this his special attention. In the heart of Montreal, right in downtown Montreal, the mail is being delivered on one side of the street and not on the other. It doesn't make sense. This is unacceptable, and I think the Hon. Member for Burnaby is to be commended for presenting this motion, and I support it one-hundred per cent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 17724); and the subamendment of Mr. Boudria (p. 17770).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1800)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment of Mr. Boudria. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Boudria) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking on the main motion before we proceeded to Private Members' hour, I was making a point about the hypocrisy of the members of the New Democratic Party who express their opposition toward tax breaks except when it deals with an issue like flow-through shares. We all recall the flip-flop of the finance critic and House Leader for the NDP. One minute his Party was against flow-through shares and the next minute, when they realized that the Liberal Government's introduction of flow-through shares had resulted in the creation of thousands of jobs, they changed their mind.

Canada has the most competitive steel industry in the world. The heart and soul of that industry happens to be in my riding, where I represent Local 1005 of the United Steelworkers of America, as well as Dofasco which recently was involved in a bid to acquire Algoma, which would make it potentially the No. 1 steel producer in Canada.

Stelco, Dofasco and Algoma are very competitive because Liberal governments, through tax policies that allowed accelerated write-offs, encouraged companies to upgrade their steel-making capacity so that they could compete on a world-wide scale. While we may hear the NDP say that this type of tax incentive is a corporate rip-off, and would deny such a tax incentive, when it comes to actually eliminating an accelerated write-off to a company like Stelco or Dofasco, or eliminating the flow-through shares, reality hits the NDP hard. Reality dictates that there are certain tax incentives that can be introduced by governments to help business, particularly small business in this country, remain competitive with other countries.

Unfortunately, the NDP would like to play both ends through the middle. They criticized our past record for tax incentives. They also criticized the Liberal Party for believing that when there is an opportunity to assist Canadians, one should try to assist those at the lower end of the income scale.

I am not sure what the NDP would do, but there is a distinct difference in the approach taken by the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party in relation to tax policy.

One example is the area of child care, which has had much discussion in the last number of months. The Government's position with respect to child care is that there is only a certain amount of money that can be allotted to assist families facing this desperate need. If one follows the Conservative philosophy, why would the Government introduce a policy on child care strictly from the taxation point of view, which permits child deductions as opposed to child credits? The Government has potentially doubled the tax deduction available for parents. For a high income earning Canadian like myself, with the salary I receive as a Member of Parliament, the tax deduction will mean two or three times more money in my pocket than that for a steelworker or cleaning lady claiming the same deduction.

A cleaning lady in my riding works for a minimum wage of $4.50 an hour. She will not benefit from the child deduction in the same way as I will benefit.

If the Liberal Party had been in power for the introduction of a child care package, we would have told Canadians that we recognize that each family has a responsibility to be involved in the raising of their children, including financial involvement when it comes to child rearing and organizing for child care. At the same time, there are many Canadians in the middle class, particularly in the $25,000 to $30,000 a year range, who are being attacked from all sides. According to the Government's policy, rather than introducing a credit that will give the cleaning lady a better financial return than a Member of Parliament, it is giving more tax deductions to assist the higher-income individual to a much greater degree than a lower-income individual.

Even if we accept the amount of money that the Government is considering, we believe that the portion being set aside for family deductions should have been directed toward tax credits so that a mother working outside the home and earning perhaps $15,000 to $20,000 a year will be able to get a larger return on her income tax than the mother who was earning $50,000 or $60,000 a year.

That would be sane tax policy. It is a fair tax policy which recognizes that the role of Government is to redistribute from those who have to those who have not. It would give those women in the middle class the opportunity to go out and participate in the paid workforce if they so choose. We should have the opportunity to be able to remain at home and look after our children if we have the tax base that gives us that support. Unfortunately, the Government's policy has resulted in an erosion of support for the family. The family allowance was deindexed. This suggests to me that the Government is not prepared to give the same kind of support to people with children.

The principle is simple. Someone who earns $40,000 a year and supports a spouse and children should be able to pay less tax than a single person earning $40,000 a year who can spend their disposable income on one person. Such a policy indicates support for families, rather than cutting back on family allowances. This so-called tax reform has the largest tax increases in the history of this country. According to the Government's own figures, the only people who will be able to take advantage of tax reform are those earning over $117,000 a year. That is not tax reform, that is tax robbery. It is tax robbery of the middle class in particular by a Government that realizes its mandate was not to serve the ordinary man and woman.

This mandate was to serve the big moneyed operators who are able to take advantage of the half million dollar capital gains write-off. That was one of the first actions of this Government. Ordinary Canadian men and women are taking it at the gas pumps. There has been a total increase of 27 cents a gallon since this Government came into power. They are taking it in indirect taxes. The average family is now paying over $1,000 extra in taxes. The people who are being helped out are the high-income earners like the person who can take advantage of the capital gains exemption and the person who is earning over $117,000 a year.

We do not believe that is tax reform. We think this document is a fraud. We think the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government are about as honest in this particular venture as they were when they told senior citizens that their pensions would never be touched. We hope the Prime Minister and the Government will have the courage to call an election so that the people can decide for themselves whether or not they want to face these exorbitant tax increases.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), informing me that he is unable to be present to move his motion during Private Members' Hour on Monday July 25, 1988. Since it was not possible, in accordance with Standing Order 39, to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence, I instruct the Table to put this item at the bottom of the order of precedence.

Since the notice will be withdrawn, Private Members' Hour will be cancelled, and pursuant to Standing Order 39, the House shall continue with the business before it prior to Private Member's hour.

[English]

There are no questions since we are into 10 minute speeches. On debate, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the amendment moved by the Liberals on the tax legislation, but I think you realize, Mr. Speaker, that I probably would not accept all the words of the previous speaker from the Liberal Party, especially those words which were critical of the New Democratic Party.

It is obvious to many in this House and across this land that there is a need for real tax reform. The sense of unfairness Canadians have with respect to our tax system is not just a feeling held by a small group of Canadians, it is a feeling held by many, many Canadians. During the last federal election campaign, there was a debate on a minimum personal tax. It was our Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), who raised that during the Leaders' debate. He pointed out that many of the richest Canadians were not paying one cent of income tax because we had created so many categories they could use for exemptions and so many investment loopholes they could use. They were not paying one cent in taxes. As a result of the debate that took place during the last election campaign, we finally had a minimum tax put in place for individuals. We have some problem with the tax that was put in place because we believe there are still some loopholes and ways that some Canadians can avoid paying their fair share of taxes.

One of the things that did not happen is we did not make the same provision for corporations. So we are now in a situation where corporations in this country which are making money—and we are talking about a significant amount of money—are not paying any taxes whatsoever. We do not believe that is fair. We know that other nations have looked at that situation and have said it is not fair. If we believe that individuals should pay their fair share, that those in the higher income brackets should pay their fair share, that there should be a minimum tax to guarantee they pay at least something, then the same thing should apply to corporations. That is something that many European countries and others have accepted as only natural. We believe that that is something with which this tax reform legislation should be dealing. The subamendment I will be putting forward in a few moments will deal with that aspect.

We believe that it is important that people pay their fair share. We also believe that corporations should pay their fair share. There are a number of problems with our tax system. One of the problems pointed out in my riding is the whole northern tax benefit. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that until the end of April 1988 some communities in the North were allowed to deduct a northern tax benefit which saved many families about $2,000 to $3,000 a year in taxes. However, other communities, such as the community of Thompson and Wabowden in my riding, communities in northern Ontario and communities right across this land, north of the 56th parallel, were not deemed to be northern communities. Because of an outburst of protest from these people that they are indeed northerners, the Government acted on an interim basis and the people of Thompson, which is a community of 15,000, and the community of Wabowden in my riding, which is a community of 1,000 people, are to be temporary northerners. For the next two years they will be treated as northerners in the tax system until the Government straightens out its act. There was a study of costs in northern communities, and there might be some new legislation brought forward at that time.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, as an example because I think it points out the problems we have with our tax system. Over a period of time the Government has made decisions but has had to back down. It has ordered studies and has changed its tax system rather than come to grips with all the problems we have with our tax system.

In many ways, I think people who are filling in their tax forms every February, March or April must feel they are playing a shell game. They do not know what the rules are, what they should have done a year before when they received their pay cheques. They really do not know what they should do to look after themselves and their families in terms of paying their fair share of taxes, but not paying more taxes than their neighbours. In an ironic situation, a bank teller earning a very small salary finds out he is paying more in taxes as a bank teller than the bank itself is paying. How does he feel? He cannot belong to a union because every time a teller or someone else tries to form a union, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce breaks that union by transferring people out. These people receive low salaries and then the tax system makes them pay a certain amount of taxes, but their employer has not paid a cent in income taxes for the last number of years. How do they feel about the fairness of the situation then?

In some ways the system the Government has presented is a step in the right direction. We are calling for a much fairer program. I know our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has spoken before, and I am sure he will speak again this evening, to explain why the system is not fair and what we could be doing to improve the tax system to ensure fairness for the average Canadian family. Wealthy families will receive an average of $4,365 a year in tax cuts, 60,000 profitable corporations will continue to get away without paying any tax at all and the average Canadian family is left paying $1,000 a year more in income and other taxes than they did in 1984.

What has happened? We have tax reform. Many of the corporations, not all of them, are not paying any tax. Wealthy families are going to receive a very substantial tax cut. However, when we take a look at the entire situation, we find that most Canadians will be paying more in taxes after this tax reform measure than they did in 1984 when the Conservative Government was elected.

I only have 10 minutes to try to cover the whole taxation field, and that certainly is impossible. However, in the few minutes I have left there are two things I want to point out. First, I want to put forward an amendment, as I indicated earlier, and second, I want to say that we have not dealt with the whole question of what the federal Government is going to do with the federal sales tax.

• (1820)

We know that a federal sales tax can be fair or completely unfair. We also know one additional thing, that is, that people with lower and average incomes will have to spend a larger percentage of their take-home pay on basic goods and commodities. If they are taxed on each and every good which they purchase and each and every service that they use, they will be paying higher taxes to the federal Government than they are at the present time. It will not do them very much good to have a low income tax if, when the second shoe falls, as the expression goes, they end up paying more when the new sales tax measures are introduced. I find it meaningful and scary that we will not know what the Government's plans are with regard to a federal sales tax until after the next election. Here we are on July 21 and the Government is moving quickly with what it calls tax reform because it knows that it is good news for it for the next election. But it will not tell the Canadian people what the total tax bill will be until after that election is finished. I find that basically dishonest. It is certainly advantageous to the Government, but it is basically dishonest in terms of what and how it is telling the people of Canada in terms of what it would do as a government.

I realize that my time is up. I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy):

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the word "Corporation" at the end thereof and substituting the following therefor:
> "Corporations, and because the Bill fails to ensure that corporations make a fair and regular contribution to federal tax revenues by imposing a minimum corporate tax."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will reserve on the admissibility of the amendment for a few moments. On debate, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak against the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Kilgour: The trouble with my friends opposite is that they are—

Mr. Murphy: Reasonable.

Mr. Kilgour: No. I know them too well. I know what they have done in British Columbia and in Saskatchewan, notwithstanding the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), and what they have done in Manitoba. They have managed in their periods in office in those three provinces to—and part of it had to do with the question of raising taxes on average-income individuals, low-income individuals and against the business sector—to drive thousands and thousands of jobs out of those three provinces while they were in office.

Mr. Benjamin: Get off it!

Mr. Kilgour: I remind the Hon. Member for Regina West that when Mr. Douglas was the Premier of Saskatchewan for many years from 1944—

Mr. Cassidy: We balanced the budget.

Mr. Kilgour: —until the sixties, Saskatchewan was the only state outside, I think it was, East Germany which had a drop in population. I ask the Hon. Member for Regina West to explain that when he gets up to speak.

The fact of the matter is, as he knows as a Regina Member, many people from Regina, Saskatoon, and young people from the North and vigorous people from the West of the province left to go next door to Alberta where the business climate was open and where taxation was not oppressive—

Mr. Benjamin: More of them left Alberta.

Mr. Kilgour: Some of them even went to Manitoba. Then we elected the Government of Mr. Schreyer in Manitoba. I know it sounds incredible but I am told that more than $2 billion in assets left the Province of Manitoba because of his taxation policies.

Mr. Benjamin: Who told you that?

Mr. Kilgour: I think that the Hon. Member can find out quite quickly how that happened. Companies, individuals and families simply moved their liquid assets, their mobile assets, out of the province, again to the advantage of the Province of Alberta.

Then we had Mr. Barrett, who was the Premier of British Columbia for three years, which was too long. At one point there was one mine—and we all know how important mining is to British Columbia—in the entire province that was profitable, I am told in part because of the taxation policies of Mr. Barrett.

What I am saying, of course, is that socialist Governments whether in western Canada, Europe or wherever have managed to remove so many incentives for people that they end up causing umemployment, causing people to leave and generally cause great problems for the economy.

Anyone who has a family believes in incentives. I do not know whether Members opposite have families, but I think you know, Mr. Speaker, since you have a family, that one has to have incentives. One has to have fairness. I fully agree with what has been said about the need for fairness in tax reform. I have written about the subject.

One thing is very clear. It is that if the people of Canada ever elect Members opposite to form the Government, the business climate will go straight down. Unemployment would go straight up and the dollar would go down. Taxation would go up for everybody. Very quickly the result would be that the good which the Government has done in the last three and a half years would be undone.

I know how Members opposite talk before the election. They are all for everything that is good and against everything that is bad. All the people of Canada have to do is elect these people to office, and I am encouraged that that will not happen, and enough will be done to the business climate in Canada that we will all suffer. I refer to the young, the old, as well as to all regions of the country.

Members of the Party say: "We must get the corporations. Strangle them". That is what they did in Manitoba. They say that they should be got rid of.

Mr. Cassidy: That is the law in the United States. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Kilgour: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre used to be a financial writer. He should know that individuals ultimately pay taxes. Corporations, as he knows, just pass them on in increased prices.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona wants no corporate taxes. That is what he is saying.

Mr. Kilgour: I have never said that at all. In fact many companies should pay higher taxes. But if the Hon. Member thinks that the answer is to strangle the golden goose, whatever company it is, to the point that the goose expires on the floor and with it its jobs—

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member is speaking out of both sides of his mouth. He is for higher corporate taxes and lower corporate taxes.

Mr. Kilgour: His training at the London School of Economics was grossly deficient. Even perestroika, glasnost and the East Bloc recognize that incentives are needed. If cement is poured on an economy, which can be done with higher taxes, then nothing is created but fewer jobs, less productive employment and less of a future for everybody in society.

Mr. Cassidy: So 60,000 profitable companies should go tax-free?

Mr. Kilgour: I have written against that. Those companies should pay taxes. I am in favour of corporations paying taxes.

Mr. Cassidy: So you are in favour of a minimum tax? Are you with us or against us?

Mr. Kilgour: I am against what the Party of the Hon. Member will do to the business climate of the country. I am saying that they will do exactly to the business climate of Canada what was done to the business climate in British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan. Thank goodness there is no electorate in Canada today which wants to put up with the type of things that the Party will do to the business climate in Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: The Yukon has an NDP Government, and it is doing a damn fine job.

Mr. Kilgour: The only point my hon. friend forgets is that right now in the Yukon there are 23,000 people, men, women and children and they have all kinds of special problems. I accept that and agree with them fully. What works in the Yukon will not work in Ontario. I can think of nothing that would create unemployment faster, especially for the riding of the Hon. Member, than the tax policies that some of his more radical colleagues—and I will not name them for him—would impose. I can think of nothing that would do it faster. I can think of nothing that would create more havoc in this country.

• (1830)

Mr. Keeper: Why is unemployment so low in Manitoba with an NDP Government?

Mr. Kilgour: The Member asks why unemployment is lower in Manitoba. I am sure he is perfectly aware that it is because it has a more diversified economy than any other province in western Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: Who created that diversified economy? It was the good management of the NDP Government.

Mr. Kilgour: The Member is arguing that the New Democratic Party Government has created a diversified economy in Manitoba. He knows that is totally false. There are many factors involved going back to the turn of the century and the entrepreneurial spirit of Manitobans, the multicultural nature of the population, and many other things. Surely the Member would not be so foolish as to tell the House that it has anything to do with the past NDP Governments of that province. The economy of that province did well in spite of the governments in office, not because of them. Obviously approximately 80 per cent of Manitobans agreed with that view a fewer months ago.

Mr. Keeper: Do you acknowledge that the unemployment was low in Manitoba, not high, as you predicted?

Mr. Kilgour: Of course it was low. I explained to the Member that it was lower because there were less Manitobans working in the—

Mr. Cassidy: That is after 15 or 18 years of NDP government, almost two decades of good government with the NDP.

Mr. Kilgour: I believe I am being heckled, Mr. Speaker.

In Manitoba there were less people working in the resource sector, and more people working in the garment industry, in services, insurance, and all of the other sectors which were more stable during times when resource prices were very bad. Please let us put an end to the canard that the NDP policies in Manitoba had anything to do with the diversity in that province.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Regina West can explain why, when the Blakeney or Douglas government was in office, a community like Lloydminster, which is on the Saskatchewan side and on the Alberta side, looked like a balloon. As the Member knows, most development was on the Alberta side of Lloydminster. Anyone who could would live on the Alberta side, and anybody who could not do otherwise would have to live on the Saskatchewan side. The Member is smiling, but I hope he will rise and explain why Lloydminster, Alberta, did well, grew, had good infrastructure, and a growing population, and Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, was like a dwarf beside a giant.

Obviously, a great deal had to do with taxation policies and business climate. Since my time is up, I simply wish to make the point that I agree that each and every tech corporation should pay a proper and fair tax based on the ability to pay. But to let this bunch ever get their hands on the levers of the economy of Canada would do to Canada what they have done to the three western provinces.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion moved by Mr. Murphy and seconded by Mr. Benjamin, the Chair finds to be in order.

On debate the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the more Canadians understand the tax reform legislation of the Government, the more they will realize they have been the victims of a gigantic Conservative scam. The Conservatives are attempting to convince Canadians that they will benefit from this legislation through lower taxes. The facts are quite to the contrary. Starting July 1 of this year Canadians, on the surface, are having less federal taxes withheld from their paycheques. However, what they are getting by way of tax reductions amounts to a small fraction of the billions of dollars that have been taken from middle and lower-income Canadians since the Conservatives took office in September, 1984.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) claims that his tax reform will exempt approximately 850,000 lower income persons from paying tax. The Minister omits the fact that his own measures were responsible for taxing an additional one million Canadians. This situation is mainly the result of the partial deindexation of the tax system, and the elimination of the federal tax reduction. Most people who are exempted under this legislation were put on the tax rolls in the first place by the Conservative Government. If we compare the total amount of tax that will be paid by taxpayers in 1988, after tax reform, with that paid in 1984 when the Conservatives took power, we realize that only families with incomes more than $117,000 a year will pay less tax in 1988 than in 1984. Those families account for the top 1 per cent of all Canadian families. Some tax reform! The Conservative tax reform is aimed at helping the top 1 per cent of Canadian families, not the millions of middle and lower-income families who were promised relief by the Conservatives but who will get just the opposite.

In The Windsor Star on Monday, June 27, 1988, Brian Bannon, the Star's Business Reporter noted:

> Three dollars.
> That's what "the most significant tax reform in Canadian history" will add to the average Windsor resident's next paycheque.
> After July 1, the long-awaited tax cuts promised by Finance Minister Michael Wilson start showing up on payrolls across Canada. But before you celebrate, check your take-home pay.
> If you are married with two children under age 19, earn $35,000 a year in wages and your spouse earns nothing, your weekly paycheque will rise from $512 to about $515.
> That's better than nothing—an extra $156 a year—but accountants like Windsor's Christopher Renaud question whether it really lives up to all the rhetoric from Ottawa.
> "With all the hoopla", he said, "you would expect more".

Here is the truth about the so-called Tory tax reform for the type of people whom I represent in Windsor, Ontario. One can see why I describe the Tory tax reform legislation we are debating today as nothing more than a gigantic Conservative scam, an attempt to fool millions of middle and lower-income Canadians and to try and convince them that they are actually paying lower taxes because of Conservative initiatives. The facts are quite the opposite.

When one takes into account all the increases in personal income tax, federal sales tax, and excise tax, the reduction of $156 a year, $3 a week, for that family with two children under age 19 earning $35,000, would appear to be wiped out, and that family would still be far behind where it was in 1984 before the Conservatives took office because of all the other increases in taxes.

Let us look at some examples: sales tax was increased from 9 to 10 per cent on October 1, 1984, and another $1 billion was taken out of the pockets of middle and lower-income Canadians by the Conservative Government; there was an increase from 10 to 11 per cent on January 1, 1986, and another $1 billion was ripped from the pockets of middle and lower-income Canadians by the Conservative Government.

There was an increase from 11 to 12 per cent in sales taxes on April 1, 1986, another 1 billion ripped from the pockets of middle and lower-income Canadians by the Conservative Government. On July 1, 1985, and on July 1, 1987, there was an extension of the sales tax to candy, soft drinks, health goods, dental instruments, even snack foods, another $460 million taken from the pockets, not just of middle and lower-income Canadians, but even children who want a little snack on their way home from school.

What about the increased excise tax on gasoline, totalling some five cents a litre, between the September 3, 1985, to the April 1, 1988? Here we have an increase of over $2 billion. In a country like Canada, obviously for most Canadians it is essential to drive a car. They cannot write it off as some kind of business expense, like many of the top 1 per cent, who, the statistics show, will be the only ones really benefiting from this Tory tax reform.

What a contrast the way individual Canadians, middle and lower-income Canadians, are treated by this Conservative Government through this tax reform legislation with the way the larger corporations are going to be treated. Even after tax reform, some 60,000 profitable corporations will still pay no tax. Yes, the number will be reduced from 100,000 to 60,000, but 60,000 will still pay no tax.

Even after the implementation of a minimum tax, 5,220 taxpayers who earned over $50,000 did not pay one cent of tax in 1986. There is nothing in this Conservative tax reform legislation that cures that serious defect in the Conservative approach to so-called fairer taxation in this country. There is no doubt about the Conservative approach to tax reform. What a contradiction in terms to call this legislation tax reform. There is no doubt that it is to the detriment of middle-income taxpayers and small businesses.

I think it is clear from what I have just said and from the facts that I have put on the record why, when the next election comes—and I believe it should be very soon—the bulk of people in this country, middle and lower-income Canadians, will say no when asked whether they approve of the Conservative Government, especially in its approach to fair taxation. What the Conservative Government is trying to do through this legislation for middle and lower-income Canadians is definitely not fair for them.

Look at what the Institute for Research on Public Policy said in a recent study, as reported by Brian Bannon in The Windsor Star for Monday, June 27:

> In fact, middle-income individuals who see their take-home pay increase after July 1 are really no better off when compared with 1984.
> The Institute for Research on Public Policy, an Ottawa-based think tank, says that tax increases imposed since the Conservative federal government took over in 1984, took away more than tax reform gives back.

This is a confirmation of the point I made at the beginning of my remarks. On behalf of middle and lower-income Canadians, I say that this is not tax reform. This legislation is a gigantic tax scam at the expense of millions of middle and lower-income Canadians who deserve better from this Government, and they are not getting it.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I hope I get a chance to speak on this Bill three or four times. I have a couple of hours' worth of material which will have to be put into 10-minute speeches, which will not be easy.

I want to say that all this Parliament has to do—starting tonight—is blow the dust off the Carter Royal Commission on taxation of 1966. For the ensuing two or three years, when the Government of that day refused to act, Mr. Carter, like Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, finally got angry and went public. The tragedy is that he died of cancer before his intervention in the public domain. He was unable to have the time to force the Government of that day to implement real tax reform, that a buck is a buck and no matter how you earn it, it is taxable.

He called for—and many others have called for, including members in all the political Parties—some fundamental changes to the tax system in this country.

I listened to the Hon. Member from Edmonton a few minutes ago who dredged up mythology, falsehoods and inaccuracies from 30, 40 and 50 years ago which I thought had been so thoroughly discredited that nobody, not even a Conservative, would have the gall to even raise them again. He talked about depopulation in Saskatchewan, under the CCF. Under Conservative and Liberal Governments in that province from 1923 to 1944, we lost 400,000 people. In the equivalent period, under Tommy Douglas and the CCF, we regained more than half of that number. Then, under 11 years of Al Blakeney, our population got back up to the million mark.

No matter what the numbers are, the point is that we have always had a different social regime in our province. Even Liberals and Tories did not dare abolish programs that we have started. They have nickelled away at them, they have undermined them, they have reduced their effectiveness, they have increased the cost to consumers, but they have not dared to do away with them. It would be political suicide for them to do so, and they know it.

The costs of services that the people of Canada need and want have to be shared equitably by every taxpayer, no matter who they are or what their station in life is. Those below the poverty line must be totally exempt from the tax system. The only way that you get them to the position of paying some of their share of taxation—which they would like to do if you could get them to an income level where they would be willing and able to—is to put them to work and provide them with the services that every Canadian needs, rich or poor.

Every one of those services paid for through our tax system is shared by everyone. It is what we like to call a co-operative commonwealth. Taxes paid for services like drugs and senior citizens, housing and chronic care beds and air ambulances and telephones and power and automobile insurance and a host of other things, are essential public services. They are not businesses; they are services. I include the Post Office in that. It is not a business; it is a public service.

There are no taxpayers in this country, no citizens that I have ever heard of other than someone from the Chamber of Commerce, or from the Tories, who complain about the deficit in the Post Office. The deficit is shared by all taxpayers in the country. Their first priority is service. It should not only be priority post, it should be priority service.

I want to mention something since the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) was being so vitriolic about us. Under a Liberal regime toward the middle or the end of the Korean War, we had something called corporate tax deferrals. As of this day there are between $35 billion and $40 billion of unpaid corporation taxes on the books of this country. That is a debt. If you look at the annual reports of corporations whether Canadian Pacific Investments, Canadian Pacific Limited, Inco, Bell Telephone, Air Canada, CNR, you name it, it does not matter whether it is a private or a public corporation, they have hundreds of millions of dollars of deferred corporate taxes on their books carried as liabilities. But the little corner grocery store owner, the farmer and the fisherman cannot defer their taxes. Neither can we. We have to pay them. If we are late, we are charged interest.

Canadian Pacific Limited, one of my favourite friends, owes something in the order of between $1.5 billion and $2 billion in deferred corporation taxes which will never be paid. International Nickel and Bell Telephone owe that much or more. The Government of Canada has something near $40 billion in taxes receivable which will never be paid.

If the Government were to charge those corporations just the straight bank rate of interest, the Government would pick up between $3 billion and $4 billion in extra tax revenues. That is a cheap loan, at the moment it is is an interest free loan. The theory was if you let corporations defer their taxes they would invest the money in new equipment, new plants and would create more jobs. That was the theory. They did. International Nickel, Canadian Pacific and Bell got investments like you would not believe in Mexico, Chile, Indonesia and anywhere else in the world you want to go. When 3,000 men were laid off in the Sudbury area, International Nickel opened a new mine in Chile. That is where deferred taxes went. Nobody should be allowed to defer tax until they can prove that the money was invested in this country and nowhere else.

Mr. Forrestall: I agree.

Mr. Benjamin: I could not get a single Tory or a Liberal Government in the 20 years I have been here—and it is my anniversary in a couple of days. They all agree as my hon. friend from Dartmouth—Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) agrees—to do it. We have tens of thousands of Canadians on high incomes. We have thousands of Canadian corporate leaders, making $2,000, $3,000 and $4,000 a day.

Mr. Forrestall: That is not true.

Mr. Benjamin: And we have farmers losing farms and fishermen losing their boats and little storekeepers going broke. These high earning guys have tax benefits, preferred stock options that are non-taxable. They have tax dividend credits. The president of the one corporation I know makes $4,000 a day. That is more money than 90 per cent of Canadians make in one, two or three months. Do not talk to me about private enterprise, free enterprise and market forces when you allow that kind of an unfair system to prevail. It is so patently unfair.

This Government said it would do something. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the television debate, after the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), our Leader, raised the subject about tax fairness and tax reform, said: "You are right, Ed". That was four years ago. The Hon. Member for Oshawa is still right and the Prime Minister is still wrong. We still do not have tax reform. We have nothing but the juggling of the books. I will keep talking until you cut me off, Mr. Speaker. Do you want to do it now?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: Go ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) calls for the inclusion in the total amendment on this particular Bill the requirement that there be a corporate minimum tax. I will read it. We are saying that Bill C-139 as it stands right now should not be brought forward at this time among other reasons because the Bill fails to ensure that corporations make a fair and regular contribution to federal tax revenues by imposing a minimum corporate tax.

Mr. Forrestall: Who is the author of that?

Mr. Cassidy: I am the author of that, Mr. Speaker. As the spokesperson on taxation and finance for the New Democratic Party, I am proud of the last two and a half years in a very responsible way to put forward policies which will be fair to average Canadians, not the kind of Tory tax reform we have been having which seems to be much fairer to people who are rich and to corporations than it is to the average citizen.

After Conservative tax reform there will still be some 60,000 Canadian corporations which are profitable and which each year will not pay any tax at all. Is that easy to defend? I do not think it is. When we begin to tax families below the poverty line and when we begin to tax individuals far below the poverty line, why is it that we turn around and have this unusual consideration for all these profitable corporations, not loss making, but profitable corporations, leaving them in a position where they do not pay any tax at all?

You may recall that I indicated the concerns of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party over the question of the unfairness of the tax system which in 1983, and I believe in 1984 and 1985 as well, took more in income tax from a teller working for the Royal Bank of Canada than it took from the Royal Bank of Canada in its multibillion dollar entirety. There is something wrong and fundamentally unfair about that.

I heard with interest the comments of the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour). I was glad he entered the debate but I was confused by what he had to say. I think perhaps the Conservatives are somewhat confused about this as well. They have tried to wrap themselves in the rhetoric of progressive tax reform, but as in so many other things that is a deception, a snare. It is false and it is wrong. They are legitimizing and perpetuating tax privileges for wealthy Canadians.

Wealthy Canadians get an average tax cut of $4,165 whereas the average Canadian at $25,000 a year, a very modest income, gets a cut of only $140. Average Canadians will pay more tax under the Tories after four years despite tax reform. Wealthy Canadians will pay less tax under the Tories after four years because of tax reform.

I have a couple more things I want to put on the record which I think are extremely significant. I have the summary for taxpayers which was released last December by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). On the front page it says "Lower rates, fairer system". What is fair about this, Mr. Speaker? Income earners from $20,000 to $25,000 pay a marginal rate of federal and provincial tax at 26 per cent. If their income goes from just over the poverty line of $25,000 to $30,000, their marginal rate rises to 38 per cent. If their income goes from $30,000 to $40,000, just getting into the middle-income range, then they pay a marginal income rate of 46 per cent.

It is interesting that if these couples then go from $40,000 to $50,000, the marginal rate is 40 per cent, actually lower. If they go from $50,000 to $60,000, the Government's own figures indicate that the marginal rate is lower again, 43 per cent. If they go from $60,000 to $75,000, the marginal rate bounces back up to 46 per cent.

Beyond that, if Mr. Jean de Grandpré, the Chairman of Bell Canada Enterprises, gets an increase in his income from $1 million to $1,100,000 per year, he too pays a marginal rate of 46 per cent, give or take 1 per cent. There is something fundamentally wrong with that when a family not far above the poverty line will be paying the same marginal rate of tax as one of the high-priced corporate executives with an income of $500,000 or $1 million a year. In fact, the Conservatives have actually used the language of tax reform but have put in place a flat tax for most Canadians.

It is interesting that while the Conservatives copied that flat tax from the United States, when it came to a progressive measure found in the United States, the minimum tax on corporations which is a part of the package Congress put into force just two years ago, the Conservatives were not prepared to adopt that measure. The Conservatives in Canada are even softer on corporate taxation than the Republicans in Ronald Reagan's America. I find something reprehensible about that.

The Americans are taking increases in corporate taxes at about three or four times the rate of the increase taken here in Canada. The average of the contribution to federal tax revenues from corporations after tax reform will be a lower percentage of total tax revenues in Canada than it was in 1984 when the Progressive Conservatives took power.

I know that my time is limited, but I was just looking at some very significant calculations which I would like to note on the record. These are some figures prepared by Trestet Resources, a firm which did an excellent analysis for the Finance Committee, which it submitted to us a few months ago.

Taking the example of one earner with two children earning $30,000 a year, this report indicates that that family was paying $3,300 in income tax in 1984. That figure has gone up to $4,436 in 1988 before reform, it will drop to $4,200 after reform and rise again to about $5,000 in 1991 if we take it all in real dollars. This means, as we have been saying all along, that Tory tax reform is not tax reform at all.

People come to us and say that they are puzzled about their taxation rates, they feel that they are paying more but they cannot put their fingers on it. That is because it is hard to remember what we were paying four or five years ago. However, average Canadians are paying more and more under the Conservatives. They are being soaked one way or the other.

That same family making $30,000 a year paid in consumption taxes $1,575 in 1984, up to $1,800 before tax reform, a bit higher after tax reform and up to $1,925 in 1991, post-tax reform. Over-all, the taxation on that family under the Progressive Conservatives will have risen from about $4,900 in 1984 to about $6,900 in real dollars in 1991. That is a measure of how duplicitous the Conservatives have been with their tax reform.

These figures show as well that the increase in the tax burden over that period of time has been the highest for families earning average incomes. What about wealthy Canadians? They are actually paying less or getting very small increases in their tax burdens.

We will be fighting an election very shortly. I will be talking about how the Progressive Conservatives have ignored my constituents of Ottawa Centre. I know that my colleagues from Hamilton Mountain, Winnipeg North Centre and Regina will be talking about how Tory tax reform has ignored their constituents as well.

My constituents expected fairness when tax reform came down the pipe. They did not expect to see the rich pay less while average Canadians paid more. My constituents expected fairness. They did not expect to see corporations continuing to go tax-free while families living below the poverty line had to pay more. My constituents expected fairness. They did not expect a tax system in which the Conservatives held back the sales tax reforms because they were going to soak average Canadians with increases in sales taxes if they managed to get themselves re-elected.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are intitled to fiscal fairness. They did not get it from the Progressive Conservative Government. I ask all Members here in the House to support our subamendment which calls for a measure of fairness by imposing a minimum tax on corporations. It exists in the United States, even under President Ronald Reagan. I don't see why it could not exist here, to ensure that we have a fair system and to make sure that all corporations that are making a profit pay taxes every year.

That is our amendment, Mr. Speaker. It is part of our campaign for fiscal fairness and for a government that is honest and fair to its citizens.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have had an opportunity to pose questions, but I understand that that is not possible right now. I want to focus on the NDP amendment, which is an amendment to the Liberals' amendment. Today we have taken some time in the House to point out the inadequacies of the Government's policy on taxation and the unfairness of the Government's approach to taxation. It is not surprising that the Liberals would be able to come up with an amendment that appears to make sense.

The Liberals are basically saying that this House opposes in principle the taxation measures of the Government because the Bill seeks to impose a tax system that first is lacking in progressivity. What is that? Progressivity simply means that those who earn little pay little in taxes and those who earn a lot would be expected to pay a lot in taxes. It means that those who can afford to pay ought to be able to pay. It is a great principle.

Second, the Liberals say that the tax system places unfair burdens on families. That is true and it ought to be stated. Third, the Liberals state that the tax system unjustly taxes middle-income earners. That as well is true, and I spoke earlier today about the very heavy tax burden that has been placed on the middle-income earners of Canada.

Fourth, the Liberals say that the new tax system is more complex than the one presently in place. Anyone who had to fill out a tax form or who had to hire someone to fill out a tax form knows that the taxation system is very complex. There is a need for simplicity as long as that simplicity leads to greater justice in the tax system.

The fifth and sixth points made by the Liberal Party are the ones that I find interesting. The Liberals say that the new tax system discourages capital formation and reduces the competitiveness of Canadian corporations. Obviously we need capital in order to have economic growth, and our firms must be competitive, so those are good points. However, that is where the Liberals stopped. Therefore, we moved an amendment adding that we oppose the Bill because the Bill fails to ensure that corporations make a fair and regular contribution to federal tax revenues by imposing a minimum corporate tax.

We seek to complete the circle. The Liberals have indicated they are in favour of those things that will help people, such as a progressive tax system, because the burden is unjustly laid upon middle income earners. They make that point but fail to explain how the revenue loss will be made up. When they deal with the corporate side of the ledger, they deal only with the need of corporations to be competitive and a necessity for the tax system to recognize that fact. They fail to deal with the other side of the ledger, which is that if we are to relieve the tax burden on ordinary families, as they suggest in their motion, then we have to find the revenue some place.

We in this Party believe in putting the whole picture before Canadians. The place to find that revenue is from those corporations which are making profits but not now paying taxes. I understand there are some 60,000 of them. Our amendment points out that if we are to have a just tax system, if we are to give some relief to ordinary Canadian families, it will have to come from those who now get away without paying any taxes.

The Liberals fail to recognize the problem and fail to provide the solution. They criticize the Government, which is a necessary part of being in opposition, but if you want to change the situation, you must have a solution to the problems. The Liberal motion does not do that.

That is why, when I spoke earlier today, I indicated that when Canadians look for an alternative to the tax policies they have experienced over the last four years and they look to the Liberal Party, they are looking in the wrong place and they will inevitably be disillusioned.

That is why we moved this motion. The amendment introduced by the Liberal Party was only a half measure. It was like trying to take a step by lifting up your foot and forgetting to put it down again. They have identified the problem but failed to outline the solution.

We think that problems should not only be identified, they should be solved. We think what is needed is not just a change in government but a change in direction. What is needed is not only a capacity to analyse the injustices in society, but a capacity to take the action necessary to solve those injustices and bring about a better community for all Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the subamendment (Mr. Murphy).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Murphy) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the amendment. Debate.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to complete the second stage of my debate.

Mr. Forrestall: Yes, you said you would keep us here until Christmas.

Mr. Benjamin: I will do the 10 minutes on the amendment if you do not mind.

Mr. Forrestall: It is becoming boring.

Mr. Benjamin: I want to raise another matter concerning tax reform and deregulation in the free trade deal which has been festering for months now. Much has been made in the discussions and debate in this House and in the country about privatization, deregulation, free trade, and having a level playing field. It is nice to have a level playing field but what is happening now, before this Bill is passed, before deregulation is fully in place, before the trade deal is in effect, is that we have a level playing field and the other guy has the ball on our 10-yard line. In this case I want to refer to what is happening in transportation, particularly the trucking industry and the railroads.

With the passage of the National Transportation Act, the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act and with the passage of this tax legislation, we will have a situation where Canadian trucking companies will establish profit centres, or whatever they call them in the U.S. This is happening already.

• (1920)

CP Transport has already bought three American companies and closed its biggest Canadian general freight companies. Several Canadian trucking companies are leasing their tractors and trailers in the United States. This is partly because of the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act. We were assured that the purpose of that Act was to get a uniform code of regulations in the 10 provinces and the two Territories at the national level. There is now more chaos than ever before. All you need do is ask the Canadian Trucking Association or any individual trucking company, large or small, anywhere in Canada.

Why is that happening, Mr. Speaker? Let us refer back to the level playing field. Under the so-called tax reform of the Government, a Canadian trucker would be crazy to keep his operation headquartered in Canada. The Conference Board reports that the difference between fuel taxes in the States of New York and Illinois as compared to Ontario, where most of the big trucking operations are located, is the main culprit. The Government proposes to move to a sales tax regime. The Conference Board points out that the difference between the sales taxes and the difference between the corporation taxes means that the Canadian trucking industry is at a severe disadvantage under both this tax Bill and the Motor Vehicle Transportation Act—deregulation.

In the United States a trucking company's tractor is considered three-year property and they can write it off in three years. The trailer is five-year property and they write it off in five years. A Canadian trucker, under Canadian tax law and under this tax reform Bill, has to take seven, eight, or 10 years to write off his equipment.

When you add the differences in the fuel taxes to the depreciation provisions of the tax laws, both state and national in the United States and provincial and federal in Canada, you would be crazy to keep your business headquartered in Canada. People in the trucking industry tell me that many of them have already moved, are in the process of moving, or are negotiating to merge with, buy up, or establish what they call a profit centre, and it will be south of the 49th parallel.

Not only is the playing field not level, the ball is on our 10-yard line and the other guy has it. That is not tax reform, that is not fair taxation. Unless the Government is prepared to amend our tax laws—and I don't give a darn how it does that, whether through rebates on fuel taxes for cross-border traffic or provisions for faster depreciation write-offs—the playing field remains unlevel and our smaller truckers go out of business and the bigger ones go across the border.

The case is similar in the railroads. United States railroads have fast tax write-offs on rolling stock. They have lower fuel taxes, as do the trucking companies there, and they do not allow competitive line rates. However, under our deregulation and tax law, that is allowed in Canada. American railroads can come into Canada and even use Canadian railroad tracks on competitive line rates. However, a Canadian railroad cannot go to the United States because neither the national American Government nor any of their 50 states allow competitive line rates. What are the Tories giving us? They are giving us a crock and it's full of you-know-what.

Not only is this totally unfair to major sectors of our transportation industry, it is driving them out of business in Canada or driving them out of Canada. That has to be the height of economic and social stupidity. Only the organizational genius of a Tory Government could arrange to do that. The Government handed $23 million over to the provinces which are still running in 10 different directions. We are nowhere near a uniform code of safety, performance, and maintenance anywhere in Canada. That is what was promised by the Government.

My hon. friend sitting down the way to my right from the mountains of B.C. sat in the committee too and heard that. I invite him to call up the Canadian Truckers Association and ask about that. I dare him to do so.

Mr. Belsher: I have.

Mr. Benjamin: Then he got an earful. I expect him to make a speech in support of this amendment and we will all be happier with at least one Tory Member in this place.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate tonight. It was one year ago yesterday that I was elected to this House. I spent a lot of time before that on the doorsteps of the people in Hamilton Mountain. That was just at the time that the White Paper had come out and people were talking about it. The first day that the White Paper hit the news media and people heard about it they rejoiced because they read all the jingo about the progressive tax system and how good things were going to be. It did not take more than 48 hours before they started to read between the lines and the people of Hamilton Mountain were not very happy with the so-called tax reform.

Hamilton Mountain is not a community with a lot of great riches, although we do not have a lot of deep poverty. We work hard and many people have been able to purchase their homes. The people there are not greedy. If they can live with a decent standard of living after having worked hard, they think that is fair and just.

The people have recognized that tax exemptions are not a progressive approach. They started to examine what was happening with tax exemptions. A tax exemption which is very useful to ordinary working people and to retired working people is the $1,000 interest exemption. That was wiped out. The immediate response to that was that they may have been getting an unfair advantage, so perhaps it is fair.

• (1930)

They began reading between the lines to see that there were huge tax shelters and tax expenditures that would not be phased out until after 1992. People with a lot of disposable income were still able to shelter that income while people in my community cannot do so. It has really hurt them.

When we compare what is happening to people with different levels of income, we see that those earning $15,000 or less will have a savings of $90 in 1988, according to the Government's figures and its White Paper. While that is not a lot, someone earning $15,000 a year would be grateful for it.

However, when they learn that someone earning over $100,000 a year gets a saving of $1,615, families and retired people in Hamilton Mountain say that is unfair. They do not mind giving up the shelter if it helps other people, but not when this so-called tax reform only helps the rich.

In percentage terms, it is .8 per cent of savings for the poor and 1 per cent of savings for people earning over $100,000 a year. That is certainly not fair. Those figures do not take into account the various taxes that are involved, so even those numbers are false as far as the Government's information to the people is concerned. The Government does not have the courage to discuss the real situation.

Canadians have talked about tax reform since 1968. Yet we are digging ourselves deeper into a chaotic and messy tax system. The way an efficient and accountable government would approach tax reform is to make it a system that people understand. The Government has done the opposite. It has increased taxes consistently since it was elected, only to introduce the rebate this year. It held on to that rebate until July so that it would look larger than it actually is. It is manipulating people who are working hard to make ends meet within their personal budgets.

The Government is not being honest about its own expenditures. It is hiding taxes within the sales tax at the federal level. One cannot see that tax when paying for an item at the cash register. People of Hamilton Mountain are most annoyed that the Government continues to think it can manipulate them. They are insulted and outraged. They resent this so-called tax reform.

My constituents began looking at the implications of this tax reform on their own lives. They are even more insulted by the fact that tax shelters have been extended so that those who can well afford to pay more taxes not only have a reduced tax rate, their tax shelters are allowed to continue. There has been a constant history of lobbies to continue the tax shelters that are extremely beneficial to the rich. They do not do anything for the economy, and studies have shown that tax shelters do not work as a social tool, especially when there is no accountability to the House of Commons.

The Auditor General has been asking for action for years. The Government has refused to take action. The former Government refused to take action. There is no way of measuring the implication of tax shelters.

It is outrageous that the Government even dares to call this tax reform. It is time the Conservative Government told Canadians that it is really trying to skewer the tax system more than ever to make sure the rich get even bigger breaks than they have had while ordinary working Canadian families have to carry the burden for people to buy their nuclear submarines. It is a disgrace. The sooner we get rid of the Conservative Government the better.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the Government's proposal is not tax reform, it is a sham.

This Bill has been dressed up in the rhetoric of genuine reform. When he introduced this package, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated: "We all know the tax system allows many profitable corporations to avoid paying their fair share of tax year after year. We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax than the average Canadian wage earner year after year".

After hearing this rhetoric, one would assume that the Minister would follow through with measures to prevent the wealthy individuals from paying less tax than low income people year after year. One would have thought that he would introduce measures to prevent large and profitable corporations from not paying any tax year after year.

When everything is said and done, he has not done that. Right now, an individual will begin paying tax when earning $6,220 a year. Someone living in Ottawa, for example, earning $518 a month will pay at least $250 a month for shelter. That leaves $268 for food, clothing, transportation, telephone and medical bills. The Government is expecting that individual to pay tax as well.

Senior citizens with an income of $6,220 per year are expected to pay tax while there are still many wealthy individuals with incomes well over $75,000 or $100,000 a year who will not pay one cent of tax. There are about 60,000 profitable corporations that do not pay a cent of tax.

• (1940)

In 1986, PWA, with income totalling $39 million, did not pay one cent of tax. In 1986, Union Carbide of Canada with income totalling $28 million did not pay a cent of tax. Somehow those large corporations can make hundreds of millions of dollars and yet pay not one cent of tax while the senior citizen with a bare income of $6,220 per year, $518 per month, is expected to pay tax. Is there no shame? Is there no sense of justice? What we hear is rhetoric from the Minister. We all know that it allows some people with very high incomes to pay less tax than the average Canadian wage-earner year after year. We all know it allows those who are able to use special tax breaks to shift the burden to those less able to carry it.

He is right on. Why in heaven's name did he not introduce a tax package that would correct those inequities, that would ensure that profitable corporations paid their fair share, that would ensure that those who have high incomes, who benefit the most from the wealth of this country, pay their fair share? That would be far better than making those low-income individuals with incomes of some $500 per month carry the burden.

When I see members of the Government standing up in the House trying to perpetuate the myth that this income tax measure is indeed going to reduce the tax burden on the poor and middle-income earners, I am surprised. Speaker after speaker, they stand up in this House and repeat these mistruths. It is as though we are living in George Orwell's 1984, where the philosophy was if you repeat an untruth often enough, people will begin to believe it.

It is true, as government Members claim, that compared to 1987 there will be a reduction in the income tax that people will have to pay, but compared to 1984, when the Tories were first elected, the vast majority of Canadians will be paying at least $1,000 per year more in taxes, even considering tax reform. The only group which will be paying less taxes are the very rich, those earning $100,000 or more per year. They will pay less taxes in 1988 than they paid in 1984. They are the true winners in the smoke and mirrors that is called tax reform which was introduced by this Government.

It should not be surprising that this is the type of legislation the Government has introduced. This Government basically believes in the old trickle down theory which is that if the guys at the top are doing all right, eventually the benefits will trickle down. It is something like the notion that if you feed the horse a lot of oats, eventually the sparrow will get some. With this legislation, the horse will get a lot of oats. Some of the very wealthy in this country will see a tax savings of over $4,000 a year. But the benefits will not trickle down. It will not increase employment. It will not ensure that there will be an increase in productivity and that the wealth will be shared.

Mr. Forrestall: Why not?

Mr. de Jong: If the Hon. Member would care to read even basic text, he would find that a lot of the excess wealth is used for corporate takeovers. With this legislation, companies gobbling up other companies will still be able to deduct those expenses as a business cost, can you imagine, Mr. Speaker. Another reason why the trickle down theory does not work is that the $4,000, or whatever extra dollars these rich individuals save on their income tax, will most probably be spent in Mexico, Italy or Morocco.

The third reason the trickle down theory does not work is that people can only spend so much, and their excess wealth is invested in places outside this country. We have seen this. We have seen the outflow of investment from Canada increase in the years the Tories have been in power, creating no jobs, causing no increase in productivity in Canada.

The theory of Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher and our home grown Tories that assumes that if the guys at the top are doing quite all right eventually the people below will begin to benefit is a theory that has not worked. It is a theory that has resulted in armies of homeless people across the United States and in Great Britain. It has resulted in soup kitchens and food banks in this country. The wealthiest countries in the history of the human race have poverty in every major city. That is the result of these bad economic theories and I am afraid we cannot support the main motion. We will be supporting the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, as the debate on Bill C-139 is nearing completion I too would like to make my contribution. The amendment we are debating at the present time, moved by my colleague the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is quite harsh because we on this side of the House feel that tax reform will be extremely harmful to Canadian taxpayers. The amendment moved by my colleague goes straight to the point and enumerates the main flaws of the Income Tax Act reform that was introduced here in Parliament by the Conservative Government. Under this reform, the new tax system will not be sufficiently progressive. After tax reform, once it is passed, there will only be three statutory tax rates.

What is unfortunate is that the spread between the second and the third bracket is too narrow—there is only a three point spread— while it is too wide between the first and the second brackets, which means that middle-income taxpayers, who make up the majority of those who pay taxes in Canada, will tend to pay more tax and to move closer to the tax rates of high income earners than they should. This unprogressive tax rate scale means that tax reform lays an unfair burden on Canadian families. This so-called reform will mean that we will have to grapple with an income tax system that will be even more complex than what we had before, and that was complex enough.

Certain promises were made by the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to remind you of certain things, one of them being that in October 1986 the Minister of Finance stated in his document Guidelines for Tax Reform in Canada that one of the basic principles was the following, and I quote:

> . . . making the tax system simpler so that it is more readily understood by more Canadians.

Well, what has happened is quite the opposite. Canadians who found filling out their tax returns difficult before will now find themselves in an even more complex labyrinth. Let me quote the conclusions of the House Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, which had this to say on the complexity of the new tax system. And I quote: It is disappointing for the Committee to draw the inevitable conclusion that the proposed tax reform has not successfully adressed the problem of simplifying the tax system. On the contrary, it has become a tax system that only tax specialists and tax lawyers will be able to understand completely. Furthermore, even after the introduction of a minimum tax, some 5,200 taxpayers with income of more than $50,000 did not pay one cent of income tax in 1986, and probably none in 1987 either—those statistics are not available yet—and what is even more unfortunate is that they will probably not pay any in 1988 nor in subsequent years since tax reform does not touch those people; only the minimum tax introduced earlier applies, and it still lets some people slip through the tax collector's net.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) claims that his tax reform will strike some 850,000 names from the taxpayers' list; 850,000 people will no longer pay tax. That is true! What the Minister forgets to say is that he himself had added approximately one million low-income Canadians to the tax roster and forced these people who did not pay income tax previously to join taxpayers' ranks with his successive income tax hikes in 1984, 1985, 1986, and 1987. So the fact that he is allowing 850,000 people to get off the hook shortly before the election is not a bad thing, but I hope these people realize that they are being handed a wooden nickel. The fact is that they were taxed before, and taxed abusively.

What is too easily forgotten, and it will be my pleasure to refresh everyone's memory, Mr. Speaker, is that this Minister of Finance and this Government levied more tax over a period of three and a half to four years than any government since Confederation. Allow me to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that when you yourself were elected to this House, in September 1984, we had a 9 per cent federal sales tax. It increased by 1 per cent in October 1984, bringing $1 billion a year into the Finance Minister's coffers. For my friends across the aisle, a billion dollars is a thousand million. That's big bucks!

In January 1986, the sales tax jumped again, from 10 to 11 per cent, bringing another $1 billion a year into the Government's coffers. Did it end there? Of course not! In April 1986, a mere three months after the increase I just described, the sales tax went up from 11 to 12 per cent, bringing in another billion. I think that the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), who is showing me a graph representing the exponential rise of the sales tax in Canada, thus supports what I have said.

Never has a Government increased taxes as the Conservative Government has. In July 1985, taxes increased on candy, soft drinks, drugs, dental instruments, toothpaste, and so on, raising government revenues by $400 million a year.

I will skip the small increases of $60 million or $40 million. I am coming to the most important, the increases in gasoline excise tax. In September 1985, it went up two cents a litre, bringing the Government $900 million. In January 1987, another cent a litre increase, for my friend from Duvernay who knows gasoline well; this brought the Government $450 million. On February 19, 1987, as if people were not paying enough for their gasoline, there was another cent a litre tax, bringing $450 million more into the Finance Minister's pockets. And in April 1988, not so long ago . . . even as we speak, another . . .

Mr. Malépart: Another one!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) can't believe his ears. I am refreshing his memory. Another cent a litre on gasoline brought in another $450 million for the Minister of Finance. I don't understand where he finds pockets that are big enough to hold all that money!

And that's not all. Excise taxes on alcohol and tobacco went up to punish people with bad habits. In May 1985, an increase of these taxes raised government revenues by $340 million. In February 1986, they went after another $150 million. In that same month, February 1986, there were two increases, Mr. Speaker, that brought in a total of $70 million. In January 1988, more recently, another increase of $175 million hit smokers and drinkers.

But that's not all. There are people who need to make long distance calls to talk to their family at the other end of the country. They were hit with a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls. That does not seem like much, but it amounts to a lot of money. This tax was just imposed in January 1988 and, believe it or not, it brings the Minister of Finance a tidy $945 million a year. I am starting to understand where the Government found so much money to be able to spend $164 million to buy the election in Lac-Saint-Jean.

Only by looking at the public accounts did I realize where it was able to get all that money. So when somebody tells me that this tax reform is fair, equitable and equal for all Canadians, I say: No, it is unjust, inequitable and, because of the indirect taxes that I have just listed, it is regressive since it places a heavier burden on low-income wage earners. That is why my colleague from Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has moved an amendment I will support, and that is why we cannot support the government's Bill.

• (1950)

Mr. Grisé: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Deputy Prime Ministre (Mr. Grisé) on a point of order.

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member from Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) just mentioned at the outset of his remarks that we had reached a point where closure would be invoked in this debate on Bill C-139. Therefore, I think you will find there is unanimous consent of the House to put this amendment and defer the vote until 6 p.m. on Monday, July 25 1988, and to vote on the main motion immediately after that deferred division on the amendment without debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Deputy Prime Minister. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore the question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the agreement made earlier this day, the division stands deferred until Monday, July 25, at 6 p.m.

According to the other agreement made earlier this day, this House stands adjourned until Monday, July 25, at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 8.00 p.m.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 14 petitions Nos. 332-4901 to 332-4903 inclusive; 332-5008 to 332-5013 inclusive; and 332-5015 to 332-5019 inclusive.

CANADA CHILD CARE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moves for leave to introduce Bill C-144, an Act to authorize payments by Canada towards the provision of child care services and to amend the Canada Assistance Plan in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ABORTION LAW INTERIM MEASURES ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-312, an Act to provide an interim measure respecting abortion and to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I want to take a moment of the time of the House to explain this Bill entitled the Canada Abortion Law Interim Measures Act. As you are aware, the House is about to begin debate on abortion law in Canada, and I wanted to say very clearly and categorically in a Bill what I perceive to be the position that the House can take if it desires to prohibit abortions to the extent permitted by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore, I have taken it upon myself to draft and present to the House a Bill which prohibits abortion except where medically necessary.

It also contains an important exemption which I think allows for compliance with the Canadian Charter of Rights.

Even more important, the Bill also contains a provision requiring the Prime Minister to convene a conference of First Ministers to consider an amendment to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms to protect the life of the unborn. This would complete the right and privilege of making laws with respect to abortion so that a more effective law can be made in the future.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may reiterate the agreement of last week, it is the Government's intention to resume debate on Bill C-136. In accordance with the agreement, that debate will terminate at or before one o'clock. I would just like to point out that the Government has no intention of calling any further business before one o'clock and we will call it one o'clock once the debate on that Bill is finalized.

At three o'clock, after Question Period, the Government will call third reading of Bill C-82. I understand that there is no Private Members' Business today, so once the debate on Bill C-82 has terminated we would call it six o'clock and the deferred division on Bill C-82 and any deferred division on Bill C-136 would take place at that time.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the understanding. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BROADCASTING ACT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 19, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-136, an Act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the broadcasting Bill before us today gives us an opportunity to look at the state of broadcasting in Canada. Broadcasting is very important to Canadian culture. Watching television is a major form of recreation for Canadians from coast to coast as, of course, is listening to radio. People spend many hours a day watching television and it is said that children spend more hours before the television set than they do at school. Therefore, the type of material which is sent out to Canadians on our public airwaves is extremely significant.

Unfortunately, the Bill before us today is a step backward in the evolution of our broadcasting system. It is a great disappointment. There are some good things in the Bill but it is a severely flawed Bill. My list of congratulations is comparatively short and my disappointments comparatively long and relate to the most significant items.

We do not legislate in the area of broadcasting very often, only about every 20 years. Therefore, the fact that the Minister has missed the opportunity to bring in a good Bill is doubly disappointing. It is even more so since the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture gave a great deal of attention to the issue of broadcasting. We had an excellent task force report. The Caplan-Sauvageau report was thorough, comprehensive, detailed and exciting. That task force held hearings all across the country. It listened to Canadians and came up with a dynamic report.

Our committee studied that report and held hearings again to listen to Canadian consumers of broadcasting as participants, directors, performers, and broadcasters, private and public. All sectors of the system spoke to us and we listened carefully. Our report on changes in broadcasting contains some very good items, many of which did not make it into legislation.

Moreover, the Minister has tried to give the impression that this is a step forward and will result in more Canadianization. That, however, is not the case. There will be less. The standards required for Canadianization are going down. It is of what we do not see in the Bill and the slight changes in wording that we have to be most careful because that is how this deceptive act has been performed. They are small changes in terms of the number of words but critical changes in terms of the standards we set for the use of the public airwaves.

For both the private and public sectors in broadcasting there has been a diminution. We are not aiming as high as we could. Standards previously set, although not reached, are not even being set. One of the jokes that went along with the Caplan-Sauvageau report was that rather than making recommendations for a new Broadcasting Act the committee should recommend the re-legislation of the old Broadcasting Act with the added clause, "This time we mean it". Well, the Minister did not take that advice and this time she is not aiming even as high as the 1968 Broadcasting Act.

With regard to the requirements for Canadianization, Clause 3.(1)(d) says:

> —each element of the Canadian broadcasting system shall contribute in an appropriate manner to the creation and presentation of Canadian programming, making maximum use of Canadian creative and other resources;

We know that in the case of private broadcasting "making maximum use" has been paltry indeed. They are making enormous profits yet not contributing their fair share. Our committee said that in no uncertain terms and pointed out, as had the Caplan-Sauvageau report, the extensive profits and the availability which existed for Canadian programming. The Minister does not require that at all. Consistent with the financial and other resources available to private networks and programming undertakings they are supposed to, as indicated in Clause 3.(1)(p)(i):

> —contribute significantly to the creation and presentation of Canadian programming—

How much is "significantly"? They will tell you that it does not have to be very much at all because Canadians do not like Canadian programming. They do not have to be predominantly Canadian as was the requirement under the old Act. The 1968 Act said that the CBC should be predominantly Canadian, and private broadcasters at least had to be predominantly Canadian in their creative and other resources. The CRTC interpreted that to mean at least above 50 per cent. The Act of 1958 said it should be predominantly Canadian for all, public and private, in content and character.

We see this watering down. In 1988 the content and character requirement is gone for the whole system, with the CBC the only one which has to be predominantly and distinctively Canadian. That is a real disappointment. I believe that our committee showed very adequately that the resources were available to the private sector to enable them to be really Canadian in their content and character. We know that the artistic resources are there. We have excellent performers, writers, producers, directors and so forth.

The CBC has also had a diminution in its role. Taking out only one word from the aims of the CBC results in a change of direction which is extremely important. The word "enlightenment" has been taken out. It used to be information, entertainment and enlightenment.

Information is, of course, news and public affairs programming. We all know what entertainment is. The CBC previously had a requirement to provide programming for enlightenment. This was a very important role. The CBC was the only source of this kind of programming for many people in Canada. By dropping this one term as a requirement for the CBC the Minister is telling us that the CBC does not have to fulfil this goal. Information, entertainment, and enlightenment remain a goal for the whole system, but the programming which will provide this enlightenment could be relegated to only the alternative broadcasting sources. We do not know very much about what will be provided. We do not know when they will be on stream or what they will do.

We question why that enlightenment function should be in the alternative sector rather than in the main thrust of the CBC, our public broadcasting system. It is a dereliction of duty and shows the sneaky way in which the role of the CBC is being diminished. It will be forced into a greater role of simply news, public affairs and entertainment programs. It will not have to perform nor be funded to perform the role it has played in the past.

Another significant failure of the Bill is in the area of human rights. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture was very clear in what it recommended. The important issue for women across the country is that they have been absent or badly represented in many news and public affairs programming, and shown in idiotic roles in much other programming. There have been task forces, committees, resolutions, there have been policies and programs to change this. Visible minorities have been asking for more fair treatment in the media, on the airwaves as well as in the boardrooms that govern them.

Our committee said that the programming carried by the system should provide a balanced representation of Canadian society, reflecting its multicultural and bilingual realities, its aboriginal peoples and the composition of its population with regard to sex, age, national ethnic origin, colour, religion and mental or physical handicap. There must be fair representation in order for broadcasting to be fair and realistic in reflecting Canadian society.

Women make up roughly half the population of the country. They ought to be well represented and not just appear as an occasional minority group on television. The legislation states nothing along the lines we recommended. Instead, Clause 3(1)(c)(iii) states that the broadcasting policy should:

> strive, through its operations and programming, to reflect the circumstances and aspirations of Canadian men and women, including the linguistic duality and multicultural nature of Canadian society and the special place of aboriginal peoples within that society,

That is very weak and far from what was recommended. Its intention is unclear.

Women have been dealt with unjustly and unfairly for many years. The long struggle to correct that has been totally ignored by the Government. Visible minorities who have taken courage by women's organizations are demanding better treatment. Their needs have been similarly ignored.

Sex is not even mentioned as one of the objects in Clause 3(1)(g)(i), which states that the Canadian broadcasting system should:

> be varied and comprehensive, providing a balance of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes,

Sex is not even mentioned.

The discrimination against half our population has been the subject of major lobbying efforts, yet research and task force reports are not even mentioned in the Government's agenda. That is wrong. Canadian women expect better. Women represent half of Canadian society and the airwaves belong to the public.

I am also disappointed with the Government's approach to the right to service. We were very clear that it was wrong that Canadians did not get full broadcasting services, particularly in the public sector, because they have paid for those services with their tax dollars. While people will get some kind of CBC service in many parts of the country, be it radio, television or something of each, they will not get all of the services. FM radio is not available in many places, even though it could be provided at not too significant a cost. We heard that many areas get English but not French, and people feel left out because they are not getting the services for which they have paid and which other people in the country are receiving.

Our recommendation 26 was very clear about what we believe should be the case. The Bill should reaffirm that all Canadians are entitled to Canadian broadcasting services in French and English, with this right being implemented if necessary by means of concerted action by the public sector.

If it takes some special measures through public funds to see that people get these services, then that ought to be done.

Instead, the Government has done very little. The Government states in Clause 3(h) that:

> a range of broadcasting services in English and French should be extended to all Canadians as resources become available;

That is not very specific. It states that these services should be available, rather than making clear there is an entitlement to them, as a matter of right. Obviously these services must be provided as resources become available, but I thought there would be some urgency on that issue. It is very vague with respect to the regions.

The clause states that the CBC should reflect Canadians to the nation and the regions to themselves. It has also been relegated as a minor function for the alternative service, to reflect Canada, the regions and its multicultural nature.

The committee was clear that the regions ought to be in the system for the nation as a whole as well as reflecting the region to itself so that people would get the full services in their areas as well as the programming from their own area.

What is the reason for this disappointing situation? The rumour is that the Government had better legislation and would have gone further with the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, but the draft measures were sent to the trade negotiation office and were vetoed by the American Government. That is the rumour I heard. I would like to see what clauses landed on the cutting room floor and for the Minister to show us what she had planned. While we have come a long way in developing our culture, we have not stopped developing in terms of our artistic qualities, our character and the contribution Canadians can make to the world. We need all of the resources at our disposal to see that our talents and our contribution is developed.

There are measures in Bill C-136 that reflect the free trade agreement. It is one of the first casualties of the free trade agreement. The Government is stating through this Bill that it does not have confidence in Canadians to move forward. Not only will we stay still, we may even move back in some respects. That shows a lack of confidence in Canadians that I do not share.

Our culture has made enormous strides. Different sections have developed at a different pace. It is wrong that we will not even have the tools to develop in the future. As Simon Reisman said, only those measures that are consistent with the free trade deal will go ahead to help develop Canadian culture. He was confident that there were many measures consistent with the free trade deal that could be taken. But the point is that we should not be asking permission to implement our own measures. We should not have a piece of legislation that ties our hands. Instead of making decisions about what is good for Canada, Canada's regions or Canada's cultural community, we first have to ask if this legislation is consistent with the deal we tied ourselves into in 1988. That is a shameful situation to be in, and I think that the far better approach would be to say that we will keep our ability to make decisions.

Let us have confidence in our artists, broadcasters, writers and performers. Let us see to it that the public's airwaves are used for this dynamic expression of Canadian culture. Let us keep all the legislative tools we need to develop policies to protect and promote Canadian culture in broadcasting and in all of the other sectors we would want to protect and enhance in the future.

If the film distribution Bill was the first cultural casualty of the free trade agreement, this broadcasting Bill is the second cultural casualty of the free trade agreement. There will be others in other areas of life as well. I think this is extremely unfortunate, particularly when our culture is booming. We have an enormous amount of talent and we should be supporting and enhancing that talent at this stage. We should not be looking back, freezing the situation where it is now. We should have confidence and we should look toward the future.

I am extremely disappointed about having to talk about this Bill on second reading stage, approval in principle. I have worked on this subject for years. I participated in the hearings held across Canada by the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, a committee that did listen to Canadians. The Bill reflects a Minister who did not listen to Canadians. It reflects the influence of the trade negotiations office which has certainly not listened to Canadians.

If we were listening to Canadians, we would be having an election right now on all of these issues. I look forward to that election. In the meantime, I am very disappointed that now, in the middle of summer, the Government is pushing forward such a broadcasting Bill. This is one of the few opportunities we have every couple of decades to look seriously at broadcasting and to plan for the future. The Government is missing that opportunity. Instead, it is tying Canadians' hands for the future because it would rather pursue Ronald Reagan's vision of a North American market. It would rather deny the opportunity for us Canadians to develop our own culture as a part of our very exciting Canadian society.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I would like to enter into this debate. The new broadcast Bill, Bill C-136, will ensure the continued strength of the broadcasting system and the continued presence of competitive Canadian programming. Accordingly, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak in favour of the Bill.

We would have the impression from the Hon. Member who just spoke that this Bill has been greeted with only negative reactions. I think Hon. Members would be very interested to know that there have been some very positive reactions. If you would permit me to do so, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the words of some of the more recognized newspapers and groups in Canada which have been very pleased by the Minister's new broadcast Bill.

The Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, June 25, had this to say: "The federal Government's long awaited broadcast policy looks solid and impressive". The Globe and Mail of the same day said: "It passes the immediate test of increasing the variety and volume of Canadian programming".

[Translation]

> ... Instead of burying the Caplan-Sauvageau Report, this Bill embodies its spirit and follows its main policy thrusts.

[English]

"A small, well-stuffed goody bag that gives Canadian television viewers their first real hope of an all-Canadian CBC and pledges a second publicly supported network within two years," said The Ottawa Citizen.

[Translation]

> ... Miss MacDonald's Broadcasting Bill at first glance is very promising for improvement in the quality and quantity of French-language programs.

Daniel Lemay, La Presse, Saturday, June 25:

> ... For the first time, the Canadian Broadcasting Act will recognize the distinct character of the French radio and television industry and market.

Manon Cornellier, Le Devoir, Saturday, June 25:

[English]

The Globe and Mail of Monday, June 27, said: "It is a major accomplishment for Miss MacDonald to come out with a package which not only reaffirms the central role of public broadcasting, and backs it up with some more money, but also takes a swipe at the private television broadcasters for their miserable contribution to Canadian programming". There are several other quotes.

[Translation]

The Coalition for the defence of the CBC's French services:

> Miss MacDonald has met our main demands, and in terms of general principles—like journalistic independence, freedom of expression, having two presidents for the CBC and recognizing the distinct character of the French services—we are very satisfied.

And on the French CBC program, Le Point, of June 23, 1988:

> ... task force report, the central role of the CBC is maintained and the distinct features of French-language television are recognized ... Many things in this report satisfy me ...

[English]

There is also a letter I would like to quote from.

[Translation]

From the Coalition pour la défense des services français de Radio-Canada, a letter addressed to the Prime Minister.

> Mr. Prime Minister,
> This is to inform you that the Coalition pour la défense des services français de Radio-Canada supports Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act, introduced by the Hon. Flora MacDonald.
> The proposed legislation largely coincides with the position we have defended for many months and is more sensitive to the needs of our society than the present legislation. We are very pleased with your Government's proposal to recognize in the Act the distinct characteristics of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's French and English services and of the radio-television industries.

[English]

How did the Canadian Conference of the Arts respond to the broadcast Bill and policy? It responded by saying:

> —newly elected CCA President, Paul Siren, generally welcomed the bill and policy on broadcasting, tabled yesterday in the House of Commons by Communications Minister, Flora MacDonald.
> "In its wording and intent, the broadcasting bill and accompanying policy are a step in the right direction" ... "We applaud the government's objective to strengthen and increase Canadian programming, particularly in English- and French-language television drama, and welcome the new funds for the CBC.

We also had approval from Television Northern Canada which said:

> Minister of Culture and Communications Titus Allooloo welcomed today's announcement by federal Minister of Communications Flora MacDonald on funding for satellite distribution of a new northern television service.
> "The new public/educational television network, as put forward by Television Northern Canada (TVNC), is a major step forward in northern communications," said Mr. Allooloo.

These are but a few of the quotes of those who have responded very favourably to this Bill.

We as Canadians already have access to what is perhaps the most diverse and competitive broadcasting system in the world. This system has grown and developed at an astonishing pace over the past 20 years while the broadcast Act itself has remained unchanged.

[Translation]

Broadcasting is fundamentally important to our political and cultural sovereignty. That is why our Canadian broadcasting system must be an accurate reflection of who we as Canadians are, how we behave and how we view the world.

It is in fact the purpose of Bill C-136 to achieve this goal, especially with respect to French broadcasting. It must be recognized that French broadcasting and English broadcasting do not operate under the same conditions. The point of promoting Canadian programming in French Canada is to have programs that enable viewers to identify with characters that are like them. It is a matter of linguistic and cultural survival.

French broadcasters have consistently provided the requisite amount of drama programming. Thus, quality, not quantity is the issue here, because as programming costs escalate, broadcasters may be tempted to resort to foreign, less costly productions. Before this starts happening on a large scale, the Bill on broadcasting proposes a legislative solution.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time, the proposed legislation recognizes that French and English markets require different policy approaches, and these differences will have to be reflected in CRTC decisions and within the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation itself.

We cannot discuss the issue of French and English broadcasting without mentioning the presence of our two official languages. In the case of broadcasting, this presence is more than a constitutional reality, it is a fact throughout our broadcasting networks.

The Bill recognizes, for the first time, this country's linguistic duality. Many Francophone Canadians outside Quebec—in Ontario and New Brunswick, for instance—receive very few signals, if any, in their own language. Clause 3 contains provisions in this respect.

To remedy the situation, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will have to play a more important role. Its services must be offered in both official languages to reflect the specific situation and needs of both language communities, including official language minority groups.

The Bill also provides that the broadcasting system should safeguard, enrich and strengthen the cultural, political, social and economic fabric of Canada. The production of drama programming is essential in order to achieve this goal.

• (1140)

[English]

Bill C-136 will preserve and enhance the uniquely Canadian mix of private and public broadcasting while providing for even greater diversity in programming choices and encouraging continued technological advancement. It is forward-looking legislation that will guide the Canadian broadcasting system well into the 21st century.

Clause 3 of the Bill states that the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive, providing a balance of information, enlightenment and entertainment for people of different ages, interests and tastes. It should also provide a reasonable opportunity for the public to be exposed to the expression of differing views on matters of public concern.

Just as important, for the first time, the new Broadcasting Act recognizes the great diversity of Canadian society and, in the spirit of the Charter of Rights, the need to ensure equitable presentation for all Canadians within the broadcasting system. The Bill also acknowledges the bilingual, multicultural and regional nature of the country and the special place of aboriginal peoples in our society.

In order to achieve policy objectives, public broadcasting has always been an important part of our broadcasting system. The Bill reaffirms the Government's commitment to a strong and independent Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The CBC remains the central element of the Canadian broadcasting policy.

It is recognized, however, that the CBC cannot be the only source of Canadian programming, and that it can no longer be expected to provide all types of programming for all interests and tastes. The Bill therefore reflects the need to ensure that all elements of the broadcasting system contribute to programming objectives and takes steps to increase Canadian choices.

To encourage more special interest in Canadian television programming the Bill provides for a new alternative programming service. This will offer the kind of programs that Canadians have said they want to see but which would otherwise not be available because of their non-commercial nature and the high cost of television production. The ultimate form and structure would be shaped by public hearings to be undertaken by the CRTC so that all Canadians will have an opportunity to express their views.

The CRTC will also have access to a wider range of tools to enforce its regulations and conditions of licence. In addition to fines and such legal recourse as mandatory orders, the CRTC is given the power to regulate more flexibly, with a licence fee tied to performance.

Recognizing the regional nature of Canada the Bill provides for decentralization and streamlining of the CRTC's decision-making process. Panels of commissioners holding hearings across the country will be able to make decisions quickly. They will reflect more accurately local circumstances and conditions within the context of a national regulatory framework. These and other changes to the CRTC's structure and administration will improve greatly its effectiveness as a regulator and its responsiveness to the industry and the Canadian public.

For these reasons the new Broadcasting Act as set out in Bill C-136 is legislation of major importance for all Canadians. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) is justly proud of this Bill. It is an outstanding document reflecting and responding to one of the most important public policy discussions undertaken by this Government.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in the debate on Bill C-138 and to say to my colleague from the great Province of New Brunswick, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Clinch), that although he has spoken with his usual eloquence I must say that we are going to have to agree to disagree when it comes to the substantive parts of his remarks.

I would like to outline very briefly some of the concerns that I have with regard to this particular piece of legislation. There can be no doubt of its importance. The fact of the matter is that watching television is perhaps the number one leisure activity for many, if not all, Canadians. Canadians spend more than 24 hours each week on average in front of the television set. Each year Canadian children watch almost 1,000 hours of television compared to attending school for 800 hours. We should reflect on that fact for a moment—1,000 hours in front of the television set compared with 800 hours in school. Can anyone doubt the importance of the substantive arguments that have been made by colleagues on all sides of the House, particularly my colleague from Mount Royal, who has outlined very clearly the position of my Party about the importance that the content of television and radio plays?

Some 95 per cent of Canadians are radio listeners, spending some 18 hours per week at that particular activity. Two-thirds of Canadians say that watching television is their favourite pastime. I do not know if that goes for the proceedings of the House of Commons or not, but perhaps it is with regard to other programs on television. More than 50 per cent of Canadians say that broadcasting is their principal source of news and information. Thus when we sit back and reflect upon the contents of Bill C-136 and when we take into account those facts it is important to recognize that changes ought to have been made in line with those suggested by my colleague from Mount Royal.

The content of our system has been and remains a major problem, for while it is true that society's heavy reliance on recorded media is an important fact, what is even more important is that most of what we watch and hear is in fact not Canadian. It reflects the thoughts and attitudes, the world view and feelings of other nations, primarily our neighbour to the south, the United States of America. Those remarks with regard to the United States ought not to be interpreted by those who are somewhat perverted in their thinking to suggest that we do not like our colleagues to the south. I happen to believe that the United States is a great nation, and Americans are a great people, but there are glaring differences between Canada and the United States.

Canadians must have access to more Canadian programming. At the present time, less than 7 per cent of television drama available to us in English is Canadian, yet we spend nearly half our viewing time watching it. There are more hours of American newscasts available to us than Canadian newscasts. Hon. Members will realize the fact that American newscasts provide more information to us as Canadians about events in their country and their perspective of the global community than in fact we as Canadians do about ourselves. Most thinking Canadians, some of whom may be on the opposite side, but most of whom are on this side, would readily come to the conclusion that, because of our diversity in geography, the smallness of our population and the manner in which it is distributed throughout this country, there is an ever-increasing need for us to have more information and news about our great country, whether one happens to live in western Canada, Québec, Ontario, or the Atlantic Provinces.

In a recent newspaper advertisement the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting introduced Michelle, a typical ten-year old Canadian, who spends roughly 80 per cent of her television viewing time watching American programming. She spends as many hours each year watching American programming as she does attending school. As the ad states: "A foreign power has control of Michelle's mind". If one stops and thinks about it, Mr. Speaker, Michelle spends 800 hours in school and 1,000 hours watching television. Not only is that a difference of 200 hours, but it shows the massive increase in terms of viewing American programming, indeed foreign programming.

As I indicated earlier in my remarks, the position of our Party on Bill C-136 has been outlined very clearly by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). As she stated, we recognize that the 1968 Act has served Canadians well in bringing about Canadian ownership of broadcasting systems. As a result, the Canadian broadcasting system is the envy of people in many corners of the world. However, there are some things which are missing in this piece of legislation, of which the Minister is well aware. Bill C-136 changes the CBC's mandate by removing the requirement that its programming contain a balance of information, entertainment, and enlightenment. Only information and entertainment remain. Therefore, the question is why? This will undermine the basis of such fundamentally important programs as Man Alive, The Nature of Things, and a host of other programs. Removal of enlightenment will weaken the distinctive quality of CBC programming. Members opposite may have a different view, however, that is the view I take on this particular issue.

Does the Government believe that the CBC television should be only a commercial, mass-audience network, and that all enlightenment should fall under an alternative television network? That is an important point to which I believe the Government should give careful consideration in terms of examining what can be best said and done for Canadians in this great country.

Let me turn now to the subject of regional CBC cuts and change in the CBC mandate. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in its report entitled Broadcasting Policy for Canada, pointed out that the CBC, as a result of its parliamentary appropriation being cut, has been forced to cut by 28 per cent the resources for regional broadcasting in order to maintain network programming in recent years. If one happens to live in Toronto, Montreal, or cities of that nature, this particular fact, which I am underlining for the benefit of all Members, may not strike home to them. However, for those of us who live in the peripheral regions of the country, regional programming and the opportunities that it provides is important to us and to the people we represent.

Bill C-136 reduces the CBC's mandate to meet the distinctive needs of the various geographic regions of the country. The 1968 Act required the CBC to serve the special needs of geographic regions, and now the CBC is to reflect Canada and its regions to the national and regional audiences. Why does the Government want to reduce the CBC's role as a local and regional programmer? That is pretty fundamental. Prior Governments of different political persuasions have done many things to try to unite this great country, from a railroad to the auspices of regional economic development programs, and some time ago the introduction of the CBC. If we remove or reduce the opportunities for regional and local programming, I can only underline the difficulty that that will cause for many people in the regions of the country.

The 1968 Act required that individual broadcasters provide programming that is predominantly Canadian in character. Now Bill C-136 proposes that it be changed. As a result, the CRTC will be free to reduce its requirement that broadcasters maintain 50 per cent Canadian content and still be consistent with the intent of Bill C-136. The CBC's description is reduced and distinctive. These descriptions are of fundamental importance. We see the Bill as paving the way for the Canadian broadcasting system to become part of what has been known as the North American system.

I believe that the Bill has another serious flaw. There is no recognition of aboriginal services in Bill C-136. The Standing Committee on Communications and Culture recommended that a new broadcasting Act should provide for the CBC to offer service in aboriginal languages considered to be representative, where numbers warrant, and to the extent public funds permit. The Government failed to act upon the recommendation that the CBC offer service in aboriginal languages. The National Aboriginal Communications Society has expressed its dismay with the failure of the Government to act to provide this important protection.

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker, I come back to my earlier thoughts when I talked about Canadian content, about the importance in this country of looking at Canadian content—and it is a reality that we must address—and Canadians, whether they are watching television or listening to the radio, do so in great numbers. There are some individuals who will say, well, perhaps parents ought to have a more active role in the determination of what their children watch or listen to on the airwaves. That is correct. I share that sentiment. But the reality that we must face is that Canadians, in great numbers, are watching a great deal of television and of course listening in great amounts to radio. Therefore, it becomes increasingly important that the Government try to address some of the concerns that I and indeed other Members have raised. I look forward to hearing some of the responses from Members opposite, as well as my colleagues, as this debate continues.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald).

Miss MacDonald: I just have a brief comment, Mr. Speaker. For the enlightenment of the Member who has just spoken, I think that it is important to note that perhaps he has not read the Bill thoroughly. What has been done in this case was to use the words that had applied only to the CBC in the previous Bill, in the 1968 Bill, words such as "enlightenment", and now move them into a position in the Bill where they apply to the entire Canadian broadcasting system, including the CBC. But what we have done is to stipulate that distributors, carriers, the private network, the public network, all of them take into consideration that word, "enlightenment".

I also want to assure him that if he will read through the Bill carefully he will see that the question of our aboriginal societies are addressed within the Bill. All of these things are introduced into the Bill. Although previously there was a very limited application of these requirements to the public broadcasting service only, they now apply to the whole range of services that fall within the Canadian broadcasting system. Public as well as private carriers, such as cable and so on, all have these particular requirements attached to them now.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's intervention. I hope that her comments achieve the objective that I have enunciated.

Miss MacDonald: It think they do.

Mr. Dingwall: It seems to me that the removal of "enlightenment" will in fact weaken the distinctive quality of the CBC programming. If the Minister is able to convince me over a period of time that that particular objective that she has spoken of—and that I have just spoken of—is reached in the Bill, well, fine and good. If not, in the interpretation that I and my colleagues have been able to wrestle with as it relates to this particular Bill, we believe it is a serious omission. However, I do appreciate the intervention of the Minister on this matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter this debate because I have been watching what is happening to broadcasting, both public and private, for many years, and the more I see what has happened and how little we have done and how often we have done the wrong thing, the more depressed I get. In this Bill I see very little, if anything, that will begin to change the depressing realities.

First of all, let me point out that what the Minister is proposing in this Bill and what the reality is since the Conservatives formed this Government, has been that the public sector broadcasting is underfunded. In large measure, this is the result of this Conservative Government's four-year vendetta against the CBC, which has led to a $140 million reduction in the network's allocation from Parliament.

I also want to point out that the private broadcasters are not doing their job. Twenty years ago, when I was on the parliamentary committee which dealt with this kind of question, I took the time to look through the applications of the groups or the individuals whose applications were successful, those to be given a licence to set up a TV station and to broadcast from any of the cities across Canada. I am talking not about all of the applications but about the successful applications. Every one of them had grandiose proposals about how they would provide Canadian content if their application was approved. It is not just public affairs and sports, but drama, variety and comedy. You name it, they promised it. Of course, as soon as they got the licence, they proceeded to ignore every promise that they had made.

What we have now is a private system of television stations, certainly in the major cities, that—as one commentator who has studied the question has said—have been given a licence to print money.

It has been estimated that their net profit each year, after taxes, is 50 per cent of their investment. No other field of endeavour in this country is anywhere near as profitable.

Now, let us look at what we believe is a crisis in Canadian television. We see that Canadian films represent only 3 per cent of screen time in Canada. Only 3 per cent of film profits stay in Canada, and 3 per cent of video cassette sales are Canadian. Canadian publishers own only 30 per cent of the Canadian market, and 77 per cent of magazines sold in Canada are foreign. Eighty-five per cent of records and tapes sold in Canada are foreign.

There have been a number of very successful films produced by Canadians: My American Cousin, The Kids of DeGrassi Junior High, all with public money.

Miss MacDonald: There is more.

Mr. Orlikow: How often are they shown on television or in Canadian movie theatres?

Miss MacDonald: That is why we have a film distribution Bill.

Mr. Orlikow: Very little.

Miss MacDonald: Or on the CBC. But they are going to.

Mr. Orlikow: The Minister said that they are going to. We have heard those promises for longer than I would like to remember.

Miss MacDonald: It is a new policy. The NDP does not want it.

Mr. Orlikow: What is clear at this time is that Canada and its cultural industry need vision and aggressive policies of expansion. This is particularly true because the Mulroney trade deal will make things even more difficult for both public and private broadcasters.

Let us just look at the kind of thing which has happened recently. An example of the Government's performance and attitude is found in the continuing effort of the Minister and her colleagues to sabotage the CBC's bid for an All-News network. After all, the CRTC—supposedly an independent agency which makes decisions—is to study these kinds of questions and make decisions which will be followed. The CRTC awarded this licence for an All-News network to the CBC.

Miss MacDonald: As of September 1.

Mr. Orlikow: It obviously had a vastly superior bid. What happened? The Government intervened and demanded that CBC find a private sector partner. In effect, she and the Government scuttled the plan. What is the result? Canadians now have an All-News monopoly,and that is the American monopoly held by Ted Turner and the CNN. The Government has achieved its end, namely an All-News network run out of Atlanta, which does not cover the Tories sell-out on trade nor the Prime Minister's scandals, et cetera. CNN does not even know what street Canada is on. I have said earlier that this Government has helped, in the way of deliberate policy, to harm the CBC.

• (1210)

Let us look at what has happened. We have had a series of vicious budget cuts which have systematically undermined the network. Let us look at what has happened to CBC funding in real dollar terms since the Tories took power. In 1984-85, the CBC got $905 million. In 1985-86, it got only $826 million. In 1986-87, the amount dropped to $806 million. In 1987-88, the CBC got $789 million, and for this coming year it will receive only $775 million. That is a reduction, according to my rough calculations, of about 25 per cent. That is the record of the Government and how it supports public broadcasting. That just is not good enough, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister has spoken proudly of the so-called new money for the CBC that she has found to help it reach 95 per cent Canadian content level. She is giving $15 million of new money to the CBC's French service and $20 million to the CBC's English service. This does not even come close to making up for the cuts which the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have made in the last four years. The President of ACTRA, Dale Goldhawk, said some time ago:

> And while the CBC is expected to fulfil a wide mandate, the money to go forward just isn't there. In short, this part of the announcement doesn't exactly make my socks roll up and down.

Ian Morrison of the Friends of Canadian Broadcasting said:

> The most significant test is whether the Government restores the CBC parliamentary allocation to at least the real level it was in 1984 when the Conservative Government took office. The 1988 parliamentary allocation to the CBC has been reduced in real terms by $140 million from its level in 1984. In this new policy context, funding of $35 million leaves CBC with a net annual shortfall of more than $100 million. The Government has therefore failed this test.

Jamie Portman, writing in the Vancouver Sun, pointed out:

> The Government has ignored a recent call from an all-Party Commons committee that it show its commitment to better Canadian programming by increasing it support of broadcasting with up to $250 million fresh funding annually . . . in real dollar terms, the CBC's budget has shrunk by more than $150 million since the Conservatives came to power.

What good was it to have a parliamentary committee headed by the then Member of this House, Mr. McGrath, who spent weeks and months proposing new rules and a new way of handling things in Canada, giving the parliamentary committees more staff, more time saying that parliamentary committees after they have done their work would be listened to, that they would play a major role in how things are done? Here we have a Government which has consistently ignored the parliamentary committee, on which a vast majority of the members are Conservatives. Yet the Government has almost completely ignored the recommendations of that committee.

I want to point out to the Minister that the Canadian people do not share the Government's apparent intense dislike of public broadcasting. A 1986 Environics poll showed that over two-thirds of Canadians were in favour of increased spending on the CBC. Let me repeat that, Mr. Speaker. People want more funds for the CBC, not less, which is what has happened in the four years in which we have had a Conservative Government.

There ar few very minor good things in this Bill. We are pleased to find the Government and the Minister acknowledging in this Bill that "the CBC is the principal vehicle of cultural expression in Canada". Given the views of so many of the right-wing back-benchers of the Conservative Party, many of whom would like to see the CBC disappear altogether, to get this recognition out of the Tories seems like a great victory.

We need a CBC that is capable of having an appeal to a mass audience while at the same time producing such excellent programming of enlightenment as Ideas or Man Alive. To take off the CBC live drama, music as well as documentaries demonstrates a short-sighted vision. The Government is making commercial factors the litmus test for what should and should not be on the network.

As a Member of Parliament from Winnipeg, I have to join with other Members, including I think some Members on the government side, who are not only dismayed but horrified at the real abandonment by the CBC in the area of regional programming. The standing committee detailed the problems of regional programming in its report. It pointed out that the CBC has been forced to cut 28 per cent of its resources for regional programming in order to maintain regional programming in recent years. The regional managers of CBC operations in every province have noted that in recent years they are "less able to develop new talent, present variety programming, and work with independent producers". We have heard from Winnipeg, Halifax, Hamilton, Windsor and I suppose from Vancouver about the situation.

The 1968 Broadcasting Act established that the CBC must serve the needs of the regions. This current legislation suggests that the network need only reflect the regions to its audience. This is a significant difference from what we came to expect, and it can only lead to the centralization of the CBC, which we in the regions reject completely. The role of enlightenment as well as that of regional and multicultural programming is given over to the alternative programming network. The Minister, however, was not able to secure the funds for this network from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) at this time. She promises instead another two years of studying and delay for a proposal that has already been the subject of intense analysis both by the parliamentary committee and by the Caplan-Sauvageau report. The Government has apparently ruled out a CBC role in this new service and has left it to the CRTC to work out a structure, which I believe is the responsibility of Government.

When we look at private television, Mr. Speaker, we see some very sad facts. The task force pointed out that the private sector has simply not been doing its job, as I indicated at the beginning of my speech. We should remember that the standing committee established that private television broadcasters average a 50 per cent annual return on investment. Surely they should be forced to do more than what they do. Broadcasting licences should be more than a licence to print money. Private networks have to be more than transmission belts bringing in American programs to Canadian viewers with Canadian commercials. What has the Minister done about this in her new legislation? She has watered down, it would appear, the requirement in the current Act that private broadcasters be predominantly Canadian. Instead, she has put in place a form of performance incentives. Fees will be collected in secret by Treasury Board from those private broadcasters who do not meet their requirements for Canadian programming. The money will be distributed to those who do. Rather than getting tough with private broadcasters who consistently fail to meet their conditions of licence, the Minister is offering a shoddy scheme which is fraught with difficulties.

Let me take a moment to illustrate what I have been saying with an example from Manitoba. In Manitoba we have a number of private and public television stations. Most of them are located in Winnipeg because more than half the population of Manitoba is in Winnipeg. What has happened in the last couple of years? The CRTC, for reasons which I cannot understand, gave a licence to a group to set up a television broadcasting station in Portage La Prairie, 50 miles from Winnipeg. So we have Channel 13. But what do we see from Channel 13? It is almost entirely American programming, the game shows and movies. There are some very good movies, but almost no Canadian content at all.

• (1220)

Why did the CRTC issue that licence? I do not know, but part of the reason that they were able to do so is that the message they get from the Government is that it is not very concerned about Canadian content. The Canadian people are concerned about Canadian content. Sure, they want to be able to watch American programs. Sure, they want to watch American baseball games or American football games or drama or Dallas and all the others when they are on. However, they should have the ability to choose what they want to see.

Canadians who really believe that Canada is a separate country and needs its own culture if it is to survive and not become the fifty-first state, also believe that we need a broadcasting system, both public and private, which provides Canadian content. That is what they have seen less and less of since the Conservative Government was elected in 1984.

What we have here are a Bill and a Minister who says some of the right things, but their desire and determination to do the right thing is, in my view, to say the least, sadly lacking.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say something about Bill C-136, the Broadcasting Act, which the Government brought forward for debate in these last days of July. I think it is appropriate to say that it is a real shame to be debating this matter now. Broadcasting is one of the most important issues that could possibly be put before the country as it relates to culture and society and understanding ourselves. Broadcasting is absolutely central to culture in our time. To have a Bill, which will play such an important part in determining how the broadcasting system evolves over the next decade or two, brought forward for debate in July when there is not as much readiness to debate carefully and critically, seems to me fits in with the Government's agenda of moving things along with not as much critical attention as should be given in order to gloss over the shortcomings of legislation.

I am therefore pleased this morning that there is critical attention being given to these matters and I hope others will come into the debate and continue the exploration necessary at second reading to determine whether the Government has met the challenge or to clarify the extent to which it has fallen short.

I listened with great interest to the comments of my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), as he debated a variety of shortcomings in the Government's practices and in Bill C-136. I ask those who are listening to take those as a given for my own sense of the situation. I want to expand particularly on one area which, of necessity, has had limited attention in much of the debate, and that is the question of how adequately this Bill recognizes the multicultural policy of the country stated in this Parliament almost 17 years ago, and to which we have in this Parliament given legislative expression.

I refer, of course, to this House passing Bill C-93 and sending it to the other place. In doing so we declared that multiculturalism is a view of the country and describes a policy of the Government of Canada which is to characterize every federal institution. That Bill was available to us when the Broadcasting Act was reaching its final stages, and I think it is eminently fair to ask ourselves to what extent Bill C-136 has been developed and put before us in the context of Bill C-93.

I do not think it is going to be difficult to say that this Bill falls far short of what we would expect in the context of multiculturalism. It only underscores the extent to which our supposed commitment to multiculturalism is a matter of slogans, specific events and days, but is not acceptance of a reality that should be reflected in all the institutions the federal Government directs and controls. It is certainly not going to be adequately expressed in Canadian broadcasting if this Bill passes the House unchanged.

In order to justify those comments I want to take a look at Clause 3 of the Bill in particular. That clause sets forth at some length a broadcasting policy for Canada. To do so I shall have to cite a number of paragraphs indicating how much the Bill reflects the context of the 1960s, lives within the world of official bilingualism, and only in occasional references suggests that larger view that should have been basic in elaborating a broadcasting policy.

We are told, first, that the Canadian broadcasting system will operate primarily in the English and French languages. Then, of course, there are other references. We are told further on that it is designed "through its operations and programming to reflect the circumstances and aspirations of Canadian men and women, including the linguistic duality and multicultural nature of Canadian society, and the special place of aboriginal peoples within that society." That describes an aspect of the entire broadcasting system.

When we turn to those sections that describe the programming provided by the CBC, we find no such broad vision at all. The programming provided by the CBC should, it says, "be in English and French, reflecting the different needs and circumstances of each official language community, including the particular needs and circumstances of English and French linguistic minorities." Nothing better spells out our view, based on the experience of the 1960s, inadequately developed beyond our view of the country as officially bilingual, of the constraints within which the CBC and Radio Canada have carried on their functions.

Certainly the Bill continues to provide a requirement for enlightenment, the point the Minister was debating earlier. However, the very point that she and I were briefly discussing earlier this morning, the widespread ignorance about our citizens of various cultures, seems to me here, in the most important area where the CBC carries out the federal Government's mandate for informing and enlightening Canadians about other citizens, to lack any explicit declaration that the CBC is to ensure that the multicultural nature of the country is recognized.

Certainly it is part of the general broadcasting policy, yet we know how far short our broadcasters have fallen in achieving that. To leave the CBC without an obligation to do that is just an indication of how limited the vision of the Government is, and to how limited an extent the multicultural policy of 1971, legislated now in Bill C-93, has been put before the directors of the CBC and Radio Canada in ensuring that they will respect the reality of the country.

• (1230)

There is in this area a fundamental point to be made. The federal Government will operate in English and French. The federal Government will speak to all Canadians in those two languages with some very limited recognition that there are Canadians who need to be addressed, presumably through the ethnic press or multilingual broadcasting, in other languages as well. Immigrants come to this country, persons of diverse cultures from all the continents of the earth and live in this country and work in public life in those two languages. To assume that the cultures that they reflect, which continue to underlie their public lives in English, should not be reflected in broadcasting, that this is not an obligation explicitly laid on the CBC and Radio-Canada, is to recognize one of the most fundamental shortcomings of broadcasting.

I make this point because we spend a certain amount of money in the Department of Secretary of State, the multiculturalism directorate or sector, whatever one wants to call it, especially in the new context of which the Conservatives make so much. It has a bit more money and some new initiatives and is trying desperately, as an election draws near, to catch up on the past. However, whatever happens over there, precious little happens in the broadcasting area, and the Department of Communications quite clearly carries on along the old lines. Certainly there is some stirring of recognition of more needing to be done. I want, in a moment, to get to the matter of alternative broadcasting services.

In Clause 3.(1)(n)(iii) we have the declaration that the broadcasting will:

> —be in English and French, reflecting the different needs and circumstances of each official language community—

That is, it seems to me, a refusal to recognize, to lay explicity on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Radio-Canada, the obligation to reflect the multicultural reality of the country in various ways, even if it does that in English and French broadcasting.

The changes that need to be made in these areas might well be recognized if we look at one other clause which is an important addition to the Bill. The recognition of the need for broadcasting in aboriginal languages and to the aboriginal peoples is provided for in subclause (k) which states:

> —programming that reflects the aboriginal cultures of Canada should be provided within the Canadian broadcasting system as resources become available for the purpose—

There is that fatal last clause, of course, always the limited resources. What has been made available in the various regions of Canada, and I think particularly of northwestern Ontario where I have some sense of it, including the hour of broadcasting in Oji-Cree which occurs on CBQ radio in Thunder Bay every Friday afternoon from two o'clock to three o'clock is an example, a perfectly appropriate, absolutely essential recognition within the Canadian broadcasting system, within the CBC English language service on this station of another language group.

If it is recognition of the aboriginal peoples, let that provide an instance of compensation for those enormous crimes of the past carried out by agents of English and French Christian civilization in this country, the missionaries particularly and the schools which sought to stamp out the use of the various languages as pagan excrescences for which there was no place in today's Canada. Let us make that good.

There in the Bill, in a paragraph which says all the right things—although I regret the last clause about the constraints of finances—is an instance in a Canada of which my view of multiculturalism is a view which recognizes that we begin with official bilingualism and recognize the fact of aboriginal peoples. Having done both of those things there is no way that we can stop with biculturalism and the aboriginal peoples. We must recognize that the country is multicultural.

In recognizing the fact of a diversity of culture there may still be that old attitude, a mix of white man's burden of Christian missions, completely secularized of course, that these cultures will disappear, that you do not have to do very much except give people some vague sense of what these people do, of the peculiar ways of these ethnic communities, and if you have enlightened them to that extent you have done your job.

That sort of attitude which is in the legislation has permeated communications policy throughout the history of this Department back to the 1960s. Those attitudes fall completely short of providing for the reality that we have in a multicultural Canada.

What are we given in the Bill as the prime means of making up for the great vacuum which exists in CBC, Radio-Canada and obviously in far too much of the private broadcasting which is a matter of some information? The broadcasters say proudly that news comes first. Well, that is about the only local thing that they do, so inevitably it comes first. There is very often nothing after it except perhaps a bit of community broadcasting shoved into some of the lowest listening hours on Sunday morning. For the rest we get American shows, the travesty in the Canadian broadcasting system which CTV has provided over the years with a bunch of stations which exist simply to print money, not to do anything for the Canadian people. That system quite obviously is not going to meet the need which I am addressing.

What are we given in the Bill to respond to recommendation 24 from the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture which declared that the programming carried by the system should provide a balanced representation of Canadian society reflecting its multicultural and bilingual realities, its aboriginal peoples, and the composition of its population with respect to sex, age, race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, and mental or physical handicaps? There, in language from the Charter, we have the points of diversity in the Canadian population cited.

What does Bill C-136 do in addressing that particular recommendation? Well, be it noted that we are given some provisions for alternative television broadcasting services in English and French. I went over to chat with the Minister for a few moments to be quite clear about this because I was looking for some kind of provision in the Broadcasting Act for multilingual radio and television. I thought this was where the Minister of Communications was providing a gap for it.

In fact, although this particular term is not defined in Clause 2 of the Bill where the definitions are provided, alternative television programming services are not an attempt to provide for all those stop gaps, if you will. I do not mean to disparage any one of them which provide broadcasting in various languages and try, in the metropolitan markets of our cities, to find commercial support, the means to carry on this response to the desire of people to hear broadcasting in their own languages, languages other than English and French. Subclauses (i) and (j) of Clause 3 contain the Government's response to the realities I have just sketched and the attempt to provide for them.

What will the programming provided by alternative television programming services be like? One short line says that it shall reflect Canada's regions and multicultural nature. There, of course, is the vital adjective. It shall, as far as possible, be acquired rather than produced by those services.

This third network is only a concept within the legislation. The resources have not been provided and study is to continue. It is a service that will be loaded with responsibility not just for multiculturalism but the regional realities and other diversities in Canada. It is feared that as a result of this third network, CBC and Radio Canada will pay less attention to the regional nature of the country.

We are told that this third network will provide for the multicultural nature of Canada and that the programming will be acquired rather than produced by those services. I can only conclude that this will be a very limited service. It is still only a concept because the Government has not provided the resources. We shall see what the next Government will do, but can only hope that it will move quickly to provide those resources.

This service could broadcast excellent NFB productions to Canadians. This service will hardly be able to develop a philosophy and view of Canada which needs to be reflected in broadcasting, or carry primarily the production of programming designed to reflect that reality.

There is no provision for broadcasting in languages other than French and English. Will there be a channel in the predominantly English speaking parts of the country to broadcast this kind of acquired programming in English while the areas that are predominantly French speaking will broadcast on another channel? Obviously, minorities will be neglected. What will the effect of such terribly limited resources in our metropolitan markets be on those producing such programming?

While there is some vision, there is not much evidence of that concept being developed. As long as this remains broadcasting primarily in English and French, it may serve to enlighten Canadians who know the official languages well but will do nothing to fill the gap in order to recognize multiculturalism as also being multilingual and that the diversity of languages spoken by Canadians needs some reflection in broadcasting policy.

I regret that we are likely to see just this one round of debate on this Bill, without amendments in order to continue the discussion that is so badly needed if the multiculturalism policy we have enunciated is to become more than just a motto but a reality of federal institutions in the broadcast area.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Member talked about the need for programming in languages other than English or French. Not only is there very little broadcasting on radio or television in languages other than English or French, there is almost no programming which explains the life and problems of our native people and people who come from countries whose knowledge and comfort in English or French is limited.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) is here. There are elementary schools in his constituency and part of my constituency, where 95 per cent of the students come from either native families or new immigrant families whose language is neither English nor French.

Does he not agree that it is time that both public and private television and radio began to face up to the reality of what is happening in cities like Winnipeg, which is a small example of what is taking place in other areas like Toronto and Vancouver? Should they not deal with these problems? Is it not time for the Government to instruct them to do so? It has not called upon them to do the kind of job that is so essential if these people are to be integrated into the mainstream of Canadian life.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question because it gives me an opportunity to expand on this important matter. He is right about the need and the limited response.

I alluded to CBQ's broadcasting of an hour of Oji-Cree in Thunder Bay every Friday afternoon. It is a rare exception to this generalization that the need is not being met. It is a very limited response in an area of enormous importance. The population in northwestern Ontario that speaks Ojibway and Cree often live in isolated communities. They live in sufficient numbers for the languages to have their own vitality. Nothing in the age of electronic information does more to strengthen the use of language and the belief in a future of it than to be able to hear it on the radio or television.

There is a diversity of population in cities from coast to coast. Aboriginal people and others from all over the world deserve to have broadcasting in their language so they may have an opportunity to live something of the strength of their own culture through the existence of their language.

The culture we see at folklore festivals is often reduced to food and dance partly because we do not know the languages. When the languages are reduced to the level that one communicates in a family, a great deal of the beauty and strength of a culture is lost.

If Barbara Ward's observation years ago about Canada being the first international nation is to be a reality, then our broadcasting must operate in more than just English and French. There must be a recognition of the need in our cities and wherever people live with a diversity of languages, to develop those languages and hear them spoken on radio and television.

Canada can play a role in the development of language, as I understand it is doing in French. The French spoken in Canada responds to technological development more imaginatively than is sometimes the case in France. That is an example of a Canadian cultural contribution out of our richness of language.

The Member for Winnipeg North might particularly appreciate my referring to Dr. J.B. Rudnyckyj, the former commissioner on the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism. That commission played an important part in the limited linguistic development to where we have achieved recognition for the equality of status in English and French in federal institutions.

Occasionally I correspond with Dr. Rudnyckyj because he remains a powerful proponent of a larger recognition of language in this country, including the recognition of regional languages. He wants to move beyond the provisions in the Official Languages Act that legislate against the destruction of language, or "linguicide" as he terms it. We need actively to find those means that could strengthen language. There I think is where the broadcasting policy of the Canadian Government has failed ever since 1968. Of course, in 1968, the official languages policy of Canada was only being elaborated. It had not been legislated when the Broadcast Act of 1968 passed.

Unfortunately, in this Bill there is not that further recognition of the necessity of making the Canadian broadcasting system multilingual, with care, of course. I know that this arouses fear in many Canadians, English-speaking and French-speaking both, who are anxious enough about maintaining official bilingualism and who think that federal responsibility for additional languages and for broadcasting in them would only arouse opposition to our policies.

This is country that is drowned in American culture. The CBC particularly, and Radio Canada obviously less so, fight for listeners and viewers by re-broadcasting American shows. These broadcasters have given little thought to the possibility of reflecting the diversity of the Canadian population in radio and television. If they were to do so, they would attract viewers who now simply do not bother to watch. These viewers might be attracted if they saw themselves and their ways on the television screen or heard them on the airwaves. That is the challenge that faces us. This Government has obviously failed in that challenge.

We are so aware of the fact that these days, the Conservative Party is doubtful about CBC and Radio Canada, even though back in the early 1930s, the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission was a product of the Bennett Conservative Government. These days we are grateful for small mercies, for the good words that exist in Bill C-136. We probably could not have expected a Government that discovers multiculturalism just at election times to have done very much about the needs that I am expounding on. It is a challenge to the three Parties to elaborate policies and to develop the means to ensure that the multicultural reality of Canada is really reflected in our broadcasting.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, when it was time to stand up to be counted with my Leader's efforts to let the people decide the fate of the Mulroney trade deal, the NDP ran away from the challenge. Not only did the NDP's weekend retreat represent a reversal of its initial position of support, it also depicted a Party lacking political backbone.

When the purpose of this political stand was to guarantee the people of Canada a say before the deal is finalized, the NDP ignored this principle and chose instead to attack the role of the Senate. Yet it was the same NDP which encouraged Senators in their crusade against an unjust drug Bill. It was the same NDP which cheered the Senate on as it studied and challenged the legitimacy of the Government's two refugee Bills. Does not this trade deal, which will alter the very fabric of our country, merit similar scrutiny by the Senate?

History will show that when the political going got tough with the trade deal, the NDP got going. Members of the NDP wimped out. They blinked. In so doing, they failed to stand up for Canadians' indisputable right to shape the destiny and future of their own country.

ABORTION

INTRODUCTION OF NEW DRUG TO INDUCE ABORTIONS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, there exists the strong possibility that Canada could become the North American testing ground for a controversial drug that will revolutionize abortions.

RU 486 is a pill which induces abortion without the need for a physician or medical facilities. This new drug will allow the killing of an unborn baby in the privacy of one's own home. This drug, if produced, would serve to cheapen further the value of life—for killing will become a simple act of taking medication to cure some ailment. The duty of all mankind is to protect all life, and any attempt to cheapen life must be challenged.

I intend to do whatever is necessary to fight any attempt to introduce RU 486 into Canada.

AIRBUS MAINTENANCE CONTRACT—AIR CANADA'S WINNIPEG BASE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the residents of Winnipeg are being asked to celebrate the fact that the maintenance contract for the Airbus aircraft to be purchased by Air Canada will be done in Winnipeg. What we are being asked to celebrate is the fact that we have not been shafted by the Government. The 727 maintenance work is already being done in Winnipeg. By placing the Airbus work there we simply maintain the status quo.

At the present time promises are also being made to the effect that by having the maintenance work in Winnipeg we will become the North American centre for Airbus maintenance work. This echoes the promise that was made about the CF-5 when by doing the work in Winnipeg we were supposed to obtain global contracts for the CF-5. That has not materialized.

This sounds like another inflated promise. I wonder if the Government could give this one in writing. In that way we could have some assurance that, if we are going to be the North American centre for the maintenance of Airbuses, there would be a guarantee that the work will come there rather than be simply another inflated promise from a Government that is desperate for re-election.

ROYAL CANADIAN ARMY CADETS—VICTORIES AT BISLEY RIFLE CHAMPIONSHIPS

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the young people of Canada who become Canadian Forces cadets serve us well and deserve recognition.

Within the last two weeks Royal Canadian Army Cadets have competed against over 2,400 young target rifle shooters at the annual competition in Bisley, England. Led by Colonel Bert Cafick and coached by Mr. Clem Tremblay, the team of 18 cadets from across Canada won team competitions against 62 other teams.

Special mention must go to Kirsten Watt of Orleans, Ontario; Cory Roberts of Regina, Saskatchewan; Tom Sutton from Baldonnew, British Columbia; and Jamie Metlin of Truro, Nova Scotia, who won medals in events. Cadets Watt and Roberts, in different events, both beat 2,460 other shooters for their gold medals.

These are some examples of the accomplishments of Canadian young people who are cadets. I am sure that all Hon. Members applaud these achievements. We must continue the support given to cadet programs across the country.

HELICOPTER ASSEMBLY CONTRACT—AWARD TO HALIFAX ADVOCATED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to encourage the Government of Canada to ensure that the assembly of NSA helicopters takes place in Nova Scotia. This is a relatively short program. The suggestion of setting up new facilities in Québec when there are already existing facilities in Halifax, Nova Scotia, and a workforce to go along with them, boggles the mind.

In Halifax the IMP group is designing a new hangar for the ongoing support of the Sea King helicopter and its replacement, the new shipborne aircraft. We have an experienced workforce to which we need to transfer the technology and we must maintain their jobs until there is sufficient maintenance type work for them to continue this traditional Maritime program which is the core of our aerospace industry in Nova Scotia.

Québec has already been assigned two-thirds of this whole program. Québec also has the Airbus contract of over $1 billion to look forward to, and the F-18. Nova Scotia has the manpower, the training, the technology, and the infrastructure to do the assembly and maintenance work; Québec has none of these. In fairness and equity this contract must go to the workers in the Province of Nova Scotia.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF CANADIAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in its submission to the House of Commons legislative committee respecting Bill C-130, the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, stated that it sees the FTA as a means whereby more Canadian jobs would be created, with a higher standard of living for present and future generations, and greater wealth and opportunities for our children.

The Chamber emphasized that the Canadian community must be prepared to step forward and compete internationally, that we cannot afford to sit on our hands and let the opportunities offered by the FTA be squandered. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce has faith in the skills and ingenuity of Canadian business, and in the confidence and strength that Canadians have as a people.

It emphasized that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was a good deal for Canada when it was announced in October, 1987; it was a good deal when it saw the fine print in December; and it is now an excellent deal and worthy of speedy passage through both Houses of Parliament.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du Loup): The real face of John Turner! Mr. Speaker, in his editorial in La Presse of July 22, Claude Masson qualified Mr. Turner's decision to oblige the Senate to delay passage of the Free Trade Bill as inconceivable and unpardonable. He even described Mr. Turner's gesture as undemocratic.

Personally, as a Member of this House, I believe that by this action Mr. Turner has once again shown he is incapable of playing his role as Leader of the Opposition. His use of this cowardly subterfuge is positive proof that he has no respect for this House and even less for the Canadian people.

How can he claim to have the qualifications for being our next prime minister, when at the first opportunity, and this only as Leader of the Opposition, he hides behind an institution like the Senate whose members are not even elected? He hasn't fooled Canadians, and I am sure that Mr. Turner will not prevail over their common sense.

HIGHWAYS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—FUNDING REQUIRED FOR MAINTENANCE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, Public Works Canada has recently released a pamphlet on "Driving the Alaska Highway". It states: "A trip along the Alaska Highway can be a once in a lifetime experience".

I would agree that it is a wonderful trip, with unsurpassed scenery. However, since 1982 the former Liberal Government, followed by the present Government, continued to cut the funds for the maintenance and construction of this one vital link to the Yukon and northern British Columbia, to the tune of 42 per cent.

The Association of Yukon Communities, Chambers of Commerce, and the Yukon Territorial Government have made numerous pleas to the Government to prevent further deterioration of the highway which impacts on tourism, transportation costs, and the long-term goal of self-sufficiency in the North. All to no avail.

In the past two weeks unseasonable rains have resulted in washouts, long delays, and sections of the Yukon being cut off from any road access.

The 50th anniversary of the highway will be in 1992, just a few short years away. I urgently call on the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnis) to restore funding for this historic highway so that it can truly be, as this pamphlet states, "A great highway of the North".

THE SENATE

POSITION OF LIBERAL MAJORITY

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the Trudeau Government did not have an election mandate for wage and price controls in 1975. Although it had no such mandate and had actively campaigned against such controls, although its program affected every working person and business in Canada, the Liberal majority in the Senate did not block it. It made no demand for approval by the electorate. It let the program go by.

The argument now that the Senate is entitled to block the free trade agreement, on the basis of a 75-year old precedent from the semi-colonial past, defies belief.

Are those people correct who think that the Liberal majority in the Senate works hardest when it is protecting the chartered banks and the Liberal Party?

APARTHEID

TENNIS TOURNAMENT—PARTICIPATION OF WHITE SOUTH AFRICANS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as August 6 approaches, Canadians are wondering whether the Government will change its policy with respect to the South African athletes who will be playing at the Player's Tournament for Tennis Canada, which is in my riding. For us, it is a great affront to see the federal Government have a policy which permits South African athletes to play in this tournament under any guise whatsoever.

Whether visas are the issue, whether federal government financial backing for Tennis Canada is the issue, a way must be found for the Government to prevent these athletes from participating. This is what the spirit of the Gleneagles Accord among Commonwealth countries calls for, and I call on the Government now to act so that a racist Government will not be represented, directly or indirectly, at the Player's Tournament in my constituency of York Centre, Toronto.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, when I was younger, I use to like reading the Gaston Lagaffe strips.

That was some years ago, but I still see people who are past masters at the art of the "gaffe".

The Leader of the Liberal Party decided that in this country, laws are no longer made by our elected representatives but by the non-elected members of the Senate. That was the first gaffe.

The duly elected Liberal Government of Quebec is in favour of free trade. The Liberal Leader in Ottawa is against free trade. That was the second gaffe.

Seven Canadian provinces are in favour of free trade. The Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada is against free trade. Third gaffe.

In Quebec, we had Gaston Lagaffe, now we have Turner "la gaffe"!

BANKS AND BANKING

ROYAL BANK—REPORTED TREATMENT OF SAULT STE. MARIE BUSINESSMAN

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, well, the banks have struck again. There is a new user fee that the banks are applying, and that is to businessmen in northern Ontario who dare to speak out about bank policies.

Ms. Copps: What about business women?

Mr. Angus: Well, there are no problems at all; this is a man. Fred Goodine from Sault Ste. Marie spoke out at the Premiers' conference on northern development in Thunder Bay last fall, on bank policies as they relate to businesses.

Now, his company has been frozen out by the Royal Bank from any business because of his public statements. That is an unacceptable way for banks to act. I am sure that they are not going to stop donating to the government Party just because the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) happens to say things against them.

Oral Questions

POLITICAL PARTIES

THE SENATE—POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, well, four years of opposition have done nothing to diminish Liberal arrogance. For years they campaigned on any kind of catchy slogan, and then they legislated as they wished. It was campaign, sloganeer and legislate, and they called elections as they wished.

They seemed to think that calling an election was their absolute right as the elected Government. However, now, since they are impotent in this House, they have made a deal with—is it John MacEachen, or Allan Turner, or is it Allan MacEachen?

Ms. Copps: They are not impotent.

Mr. Friesen: At any rate, they will gladly sell off the role and the rights of this House, and expand the role of the Senate in order to catch a glimmer of hope that would enable them to hang on to power in the other place and maybe expand it in this one. Well, that is the kind of arrogance that drove them out of office, and that is the kind of arrogance that is going to keep them in perpetual opposition.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING—USE OF AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL AS BACKGROUND MUSIC

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, imagine my surprise as I was driving to work this morning and I heard an anthem playing very melodiously on the radio, America The Beautiful. It talked about the great continent of North America and how we had great agricultural programs and great environmental programs. In fact, the whole ad was sponsored not by the Government of the United States but by the Government of Canada, using as background music America The Beautiful. It seems to me that if the Government is bound and determined to move us down on the road of free trade, for heaven's sake could it at least pull advertisements that I as a Canadian find offensive? If the Americans want to run ads talking about America The Beautiful, let the Americans do that.

Canadian tax dollars and government sponsored ads should not be used to propagate the idea that agricultural programs are North American. The word "Canada" is not used once in that ad, and I see that as part and parcel of the Government's move to make us simply a part of the continental United States.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PRICE OF SOFT DRINKS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I brought to the attention of the House that snack bars at Pearson International Airport were charging outrageous prices. A small sized Coca-Cola is $1.29. This is an unbelievable price when you consider that a small sized Coke is half that price in the city and also consider that the Government is responsible for the terms on which concessions are operated at Pearson International Airport.

I called on the Government at the time not only to manage the airport from the point of view of a good landlord but to bear in mind as well the situation of passengers who are sometimes there for very long periods of time, with children, and who are forced to pay prices that are set with really no competition at all behind them.

Since I made that statement in the House I have received dozens of representations from people in my riding and elsewhere about the fact that prices are far too high. Does the Government intend to do anything at all about that? Will ceilings be set so that gouging at the airport will be brought to an end?

CHILD CARE

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my question of the Acting Prime Minister. It took the Government four years to deliver on the Mulroney promise for a child care package. It will take it another 7 years for a total of 11 years before we ever see the light of day totally given to this package.

How does the Government feel about introducing today a Bill into the House of Commons that does absolutely nothing to ensure the safety of Canadian children, that will leave more than half a million Canadian children without access to licensed and organized child care spaces, and that will not assure the mothers of this country that when they have to go out to work their children will be left in safety? Is this the Mulroney promise on child care?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Health and Welfare is out of the House on business. I am very happy to acknowledge the Hon. Member's question and point out to her that we are the first Government that has brought forward legislation in the House of Commons on child care. The previous Government had ample opportunity to do that but never did so when it was in office.

Mr. Gauthier: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Charest: The Hon. Member said I should stick to the facts. The facts indicate that we will be putting $6.4 billion into child care over a seven year period. If the Hon. Member is wondering how fast the legislation will get through the House, that will depend upon whether his Leader will ask the Senate to put it through or not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if this is supposed to be the centre-piece of the Conservative election, I am not surprised the Minister did not have the guts to come into the House of Commons today to defend it because it is absolute garbage.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: If the Government does not listen to the Liberal Party and does not listen to child care groups and concerned parents across the country, will the Government call an election and let the parents of Canada decide if they want to have a child care program that has no national standards, that does nothing to ensure the safety of children, and that will only meet the needs of one-quarter of those children who are desperately in need of increased spaces?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I think any reasonable citizen would recognize the fact that this is a substantial commitment to the area of child care in Canada on behalf of this Government—any reasonable citizen except for the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

As far as the election being called is concerned, we now know the position of the Liberal Party of Canada is that the Senate should decide when elections should be called and not the democratically elected people of Canada. We are not run by the Senate of Canada. The Liberals are, and soon they will have an election on many issues.

Mr. Speaker: Before the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is recognized again, as she will be, I do want to remind Hon. Members that reference to other Hon. Members, whether they be Ministers or otherwise being in or out of the House, is not appropriate. I cannot help but notice today that that tactic could be carried on by both sides. Perhaps it need not be pursued.

QUALITY OF DAY CARE CENTRES—NATIONAL STANDARDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Members should be ashamed for what has been brought forward today, which guarantees no child . . . and you have children, you over there! It guarantees no national level of quality for child care facilities.

Why has the Conservative Government decided to subsidize provinces like Alberta, which only has commercial profit-making child care services? Are those the Conservatives' standards for child care? I would like to have an answer, at least from those who are parents: Would they leave their children in commercial profit-making day care facilities or do they want national standards, to be respected by the Conservatives?

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the national child care policy presented by this Government is an investment of nearly $6.4 billion over seven years, to which another $1 billion has recently been added. The purpose is to provide flexible services and leave parents a choice, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is still not happy with that, unfortunately! Perhaps she could consult the Liberal Senate, since it decides and leads the Liberal Party of Canada. We will see if the Senate will decide and if Mr. Turner intends to ask the Senate to approve the legislation or not, because he said he was God in the House of Commons.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—TERMS OF U.S. LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. As she will know, the American Free Trade Bill will be tabled today in the U.S. Congress. The Government should know that it still contains several provisions contrary to the Canadian Bill. First, it contains a provision which will allow the American Government to monitor and oppose Canadian imports which might be subsidized. Second, there is a provision which says that the free trade agreement will be subject to American law in the U.S. The Minister for International Trade said he did not like either one of those provisions.

In these ridiculous circumstances why does the Government not submit this trade deal to the Canadian people and let them decide if this is what they want for Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the U.S. legislation is being tabled in Congress today and that it is proceeding as people in the Congress and the administration indicated it would. I only wish I could say that the Hon. Member who speaks for the opposition Party recognizes that the same kind of process should apply to legislation in this House. However, that is not the point of the opposition—and one could hardly say the "Loyal Opposition" any more. Nevertheless—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Loyal to the Senate.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the Hon. Minister that she cannot say the contrary either. I know she will want to withdraw that.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the new slogan of the Liberal Party is "Let the Senate decide". "Let the Senate decide on trade legislation". Now I suppose it is "Let the Senate decide on child care". "Let the Senate decide on the major issues before this country". It is a complete abdication of responsibility.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, if the Canadian people were to decide in an election that they want this trade deal, the Senate will respect their view.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: The Government is afraid to submit this deal to the Canadian people because it knows it cannot be supported.

TERMS OF CANADIAN LEGISLATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Article 8 in our Bill, contrary to the American Bill, provides that the free trade agreement will take precedence over all other Canadian law, including regional development law, agricultural law, fisheries law, environmental law, trade adjustment law, employment equity law, and so on. That places the free trade agreement next to the Constitution and only the Constitution in importance, and this is a major change in our country.

Why does the Government not let the people decide in an election if they want that kind of major change for this country?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): First, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's preamble is totally wrong. Section 8 pertains only to legislation affected by the free trade agreement, not all legislation as the Hon. Member would like to pretend.

• (1425)

I remind the Member that Section 8 is included in the safe transportation of goods legislation brought in by his Government. It is also in the Cree-Naskapi Act, the James Bay Indian Act, and the Western Grain Transportation Act. I have a list of Acts in which it is included. It is used in Canadian law quite frequently. The Hon. Member cannot stand up and mislead this House with that kind of inaccurate information.

CHILD CARE

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Youth who is responding on the child care legislation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare told the Senate committee studying child care that the Government would augment provinces' child care expenses up to 90 per cent of the national average.

This Bill clearly states that the Government will pay only up to 70 per cent of the expenses need to reach the national average. Why has the Government again broken its promise to the people of Canada?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, it was with great pride that the Government introduced in the House today for the first time legislation on day care. This $6.4 billion package over a seven-year period is a substantial commitment to the issue of day care for all Canadian families.

I hope that the Hon. Member will assist in its rapid passage through the House in order that it can also be put through the Senate as rapidly as possible.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government has consistently said that it would bring in a child care strategy program. This legislation has no national standards or national objectives. The Government has gone back on its word with regard to the 90 per cent topping up.

Why did the Minister of National Health and Welfare decide to change the topping up from 90 per cent to 70 per cent and break his promise to the Canadian people?

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the legislation provides a 50-50 cost sharing of operating costs of commercial and non-profit agencies, a 75-25 cost sharing of capital cost of non-profit agencies during the period ending March 31, 1995, and, finally, a top-up to certain provinces based on national average entitlement per child care formula. That is what the legislation contains.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Government promised 90 per cent topping up. It is obvious that is not there. Over and above that there are areas in Newfoundland, the Territories, and other provinces which do not have an infrastructure for child care which need that 90 per cent topping up. I would like the Minister to tell this House why the Government has broken its promise on this.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to make that representation she may do so in committee as soon as this legislation goes through the House. She and all Members of the House will have the opportunity to make whatever representations and amendments they want to put before the House. I hope she will help the legislation get through as rapidly as possible, as a responsible Member would do.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

FERMI II NUCLEAR PLANT IN MICHIGAN—LEAK OF RADIOACTIVE STEAM

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Detroit Edison Company operates the Fermi II nuclear generating plant in Munroe, Michigan, just a few miles from hundreds of thousands of Canadians in the Windsor-Essex County area.

Two weeks ago the Nuclear Regulatory Commission of the United States gave that plant a very bad report card saying it was operating at minimally acceptable levels in five key categories. Last Saturday we learned there was a leak of radioactive steam from that plant and that it has been closed down temporarily.

Will the Government insist that the U.S. Government not allow that plant to re-open until it is absolutely certain, on the basis of it being satisfactory to Canadian authorities, that there is no risk to the health and safety of Canadians in the operations of that plant? In particular, will the Government ask that there be a special inspection of that plant by the International Atomic Energy Agency of the United Nations?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concerns that have been raised by the Member for Windsor West. Those concerns have been raised by a number of Canadians and we have conveyed them to the United States administration.

It is important to note that all Members in this House share a public concern about the operations of Fermi II. As a result of that, Canadian officials have asked the United States administration to consider placing Fermi II under an appropriate IAEA safety mechanism for a review, specifically to take into consideration what has happened during the past weekend.

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR MONITORING BY INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in light of what happened this past weekend, will the Government on an urgent basis reiterate the need for an International Atomic Energy Agency inspection? Second, will the Government accept my request that the Government have the Americans agree to a permanent reference to the International Joint Commission of the inspection and monitoring on an ongoing binational basis of this Fermi II plant so that there will be assurances to the hundreds of thousands of Canadians living all too near to Fermi II, that if it is allowed to operate again, it will not be any threat to their health and safety?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, the Canadian Government has raised with the United States administration the matter of steam leaks and other occurrences at the Fermi II plant. We have asked that it be reviewed under the IAEA.

The Member suggests that this be done under the IJC. We thought it would probably be better under the multilateral standards, but we will certainly take his suggestion into consideration.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DEMAND CLOSURE OF PLANT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I want to pursue the question asked by the Member for Windsor. After months during which Atomic Energy Board of Canada and the Government refused to act at all in any serious way, we are pleased to hear that a reference to the IAEA has been made.

This plant has been described as a dinosaur of the industry, and the worst in the country by NRC officials themselves. It has been described as an accident waiting to happen. Within two days of the publication of the evaluation that showed its operational efficiency in five areas was the worst possible, there was another radioactive steam leak.

Will the Government demand of the U.S. Government that this plant be closed down until this evaluation takes place?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated that we have conveyed our concerns to the United States and made certain suggestions about how to deal with the Fermi II plant. The Hon. Member goes on to make a further suggestion.

We have asked that the matter of steam leaks and other occurrences be considered within the broad parameters of the international regulations. He has made a further suggestion. I will see that that suggestion is referred to the Department and given consideration.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, we are making progress, so I would like to pin the Hon. Minister down on this issue. We have had no answers from the Government, and the Atomic Energy Board of Canada said that it was strictly an American concern and the plant was no problem. Suddenly, after a steam leak and a report from the NRC, the Government will act.

We want the answer to be clear. Will the Secretary of State specifically request that the plant be closed until this evaluation takes place?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there have been suggestions from both the Member for Windsor West and the Member for Windsor—Walkerville about what should be done in this particular situation. I have indicated to both of them that I will convey their suggestions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs so that the suggestions could be given consideration.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES—DUMPING OF WASTES BY INTERNATIONAL SHIPPING

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment. Ships from every nation now ply the waters of the Great Lakes. It is reported that many vessels dump untreated human waste directly into the lakes.

The recent closing of some of Toronto's beaches has been attributed to some ships dumping waste directly into the harbour. This poses a serious problem for our drinking water and creates the possibility of tropical diseases being introduced into Canada. Will the Parliamentary Secretary investigate this dumping practice and bring down tough legislation to prevent waste from being dumped into the Great Lakes?

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for this very important question and for his interest in environmental concerns.

The control of vessel waste is covered under the Canada Shipping Act, which is administered by the Canadian Coast Guard. Environment Canada acts in an advisory capacity to the Canadian Coast Guard.

Let me assure the Member that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act which was passed in Parliament a few weeks ago—the first piece of environmental legislation to pass the House in over 11 years—will enable us to review and bring in strong controls if necessary and where appropriate.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

MEMBER FOR YORK—SIMCOE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. In light of the election by the York—Simcoe Conservative Association of the present Member for York—Peel as the Conservative candidate in the forthcoming election—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Kaplan: You have not heard the question yet. And in light of the finding of 14 conflicts of interest against that Member by an independent judicial inquiry established by the Prime Minister, and in view of the Prime Minister's statement that he accepted the findings of the independent judicial inquiry, does the Prime Minister intend—

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the question. I have to say that that question is out of order.

Mr. Kaplan: I would then ask the Acting Prime Minister whether she will state categorically on behalf of the Government that the Member for York—Peel—

Mr. Andre: Out of order.

Mr. Kaplan: That the Member for York—Peel will not be part of any Government or Cabinet—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: You know better than that.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will know that that is also out of order. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTATION DATE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The general counsel for the U.S. Special Trade Representative Office has said that in the event that Canada is not ready to go with the trade deal on January 1, "we will just have to wait to implement".

Does this mean, in the Government's interpretation, that the January 1 date fixed for the trade deal to come into force could be easily postponed by the Government?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we negotiated an agreement with the United States which says that it comes into force on January 1, 1989. This Government is working toward that deadline, as is the Government of the United States. Neither the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, Allan MacEachen, or whoever, will prevent us from reaching that deadline.

REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, at least to me and my Party, this quotation suggests that the Senate announcement by the Leader of the Opposition will mean very little in terms of the timing of the next election. Therefore, the moral issue still faces the Government.

• (1440)

The Government has to make a decision, and I ask the question directly. Will the Government let the people of Canada make a decision with respect to whether this deal should go forward or not? Will the Government let the people of Canada decide?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member has read the trade agreement and that he knows that Article 2105 states that the agreement is to come into effect on January 1, 1989. He is also very aware that the legislation is proceeding in committee through the House of Commons.

I want to assure the Hon. Member that that process will continue. I also want to assure him, as the Prime Minister has stated, that there will be an election at an appropriate time. I have no doubt that there will be a number of issues discussed in that election campaign, trade being one of them.

I want the Hon. Member to know that yes, indeed, we will be proceeding with the legislation. Second, there will be an election in due course. I ask the Hon. Member to be sure to put those two things together.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

DENE AND MÉTIS LAND CLAIM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question that falls under the category of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I will put the question to the Acting Minister, if one is present, or to the Acting Prime Minister.

My question concerns one of the most important aboriginal land claims in Canada at the moment, one which is in fact teetering in the balance. On July 10 the Dene and Métis of the Northwest Territories said yes to the proposed agreement-in-principle provided that certain matters could be either negotiated or re-negotiated, and a request to this effect has gone to both the Minister and the Prime Minister.

I would like to know if the Government has considered this request, and what exactly is the position of the Government at the moment with respect to the settlement of this vital northern claim.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member would be pleased, as we are, that the Yukon Indian leaders have voted to accept the land claims settlement for that northern territory. As the Hon. Member also knows, the negotiations for the settlement with the Dene and the Inuit have gone ahead. There are a couple of outstanding items still. These are being negotiated. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has himself spent a great deal of time and effort on this particular claim, and those negotiations and discussions are continuing.

CONCLUSION OF NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. It will come as some surprise to the Dene, the Métis and the Government of the Northwest Territories that those negotiations are in fact continuing. The Deputy Minister for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said that there would be no negotiation on the outstanding items.

I am asking the Government to say today whether or not the door is still open. Is the Government prepared to pursue every avenue and examine every option in order that there may be a successful conclusion of all aspects of this claim?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, and as I have said, there have been considerable negotiations that have taken place to date. There are still a couple of major areas outstanding.

I will certainly refer the Hon. Member's question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but as I understand it there is now a process under way to negotiate or to ratify an AIP. Following that ratification, the negotiations with 13 different groups will be continued, hopefully to the same successful conclusion that has been worked out with the Yukon claim.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ATTEMPT TO NEGOTIATE OUTSTANDING ISSUES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Following on the same line of thought about land claims, I would like to say that the ratification last week by the Council for Yukon Indians of a framework agreement put together by the three principals in the negotiations, the Council for Yukon Indians, the federal Government, and the Yukon Government, was indeed historic and did go beyond what happened with the Dene and Métis. To that extent, I must say that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development deserves some credit, as do the other negotiators.

Having gone this far in this important and historic step in the longest outstanding land claims negotiation in Canada, is the Government now prepared to initiate immediate talks with the principals to clear up the two outstanding issues, and what is the time frame for that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to refer that request for information to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member's comments at the time that historic step was taken, and I know that she and others have done everything possible to try to move this forward. However, I will refer her request for the next stage, the final ratification, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development so that he can give her information with regard to the proposed timetable for the final steps.

YUKON LAND CLAIM SETTLEMENT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure the Acting Prime Minister knows, this particular ratification does require the consent of the three parties and will eventually have to go to Cabinet for certain aspects of it. Therefore, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if she is prepared to say what the commitment of the Government is, now that the Council for Yukon Indians has kept its end of the bargain by ratifying its framework agreement, to complete this agreement. Will Cabinet deal with this expeditiously so that we can finally have, for the first time in nine years, a settled land claim in Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was quoted in the press the other day as saying that this is really just a framework, not a final settlement, and she wants to know what the details of that final settlement are. I am not in a position to give her the details of that final settlement today, but I have said that I would refer the requests she has raised to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

I can tell the Hon. Member that this is considered to be a major and important priority for the Government, and there will be continuing attention paid to all the details so that we can bring in that historic final document that she mentions.

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—CNR LAND HOLDINGS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the two Ministers of Transport, I address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. My question concerns the Government's silence on the intensifying crisis in affordable housing facing many Canadians in Metropolitan Toronto.

Earlier this month the City of Toronto announced a $1.2 billion housing program that would include a parcel of land which holds 15 acres owned and controlled by Canadian National Railways, a federal Crown corporation. In support of the public interest in reliable and affordable housing in Metropolitan Toronto, has the federal Government instructed the CNR to release its land holdings and therefore to become a viable and co-operative partner in this housing venture? If so, when can we expect a formal agreement to be signed between the federal CNR and the City of Toronto?

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, Canadian National is a Crown corporation, and of course, works at arm's length from the federal Government. As well, the federal Government has instructed all Departments that hold lands in the city of Toronto to review the need for those lands, along with the Bureau of Real Property Management. We are looking at the lands, we are looking at what is available, and as soon as we know what is available, they will be disposed of in an equitable manner.

• (1450)

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I tell the Parliamentary Secretary that this is not a case of reviewing lands. This is a golden opportunity that cries out for a federal partnership with federally available land. The Government must make up its mind whether it will be a partner or not.

CANADA POST CORPORATION LAND HOLDINGS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Given that many people are requesting that federal surplus lands be first and foremost considered for federal housing, can the Minister inform the House whether the Government is prepared to utilize the very substantial and surplus post office lands in Metropolitan Toronto for badly needed housing rather than selling these sites for top dollar value, which not only loses us the federal lands which are very valuable but which ironically also increases the spiralling costs of land for housing?

Will the Government finally take advantage of these land opportunities and provide some real federal leadership in the area of housing in Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a great proportion of Canada Post's capital facilities in lands and buildings are in fact leased from Public Works Canada. Public Works handles them in a manner with which the Hon. Member is acquainted. In terms of other lands and buildings and so on, I am not aware that the Post Office has surplus lands. Any surplus lands that it might have will be dealt with in a way consistent with government policy.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

LEVEL OF PURCHASING IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. Last week in western Canada he announced that his Department would be increasing the level of purchasing to 12.4 per cent in western Canada. Why did the Minister set a level below the 1984 level of 14.2 per cent? Why is he actually decreasing the percentage of money that will be spent in western Canada?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as always the Hon. Member has his facts wrong. What we announced last week in Regina, which was followed up with a specific announcement in Calgary a day later with my colleague, the Minister responsible for western diversification, was that we would increase, over current purchases from the West, western procurement on a yearly basis by some 17 per cent, with an ultimate goal of bringing in equality of opportunity to all regions.

We will be able to do this for two reasons. First, we have put a greater emphasis on Canadian purchasing. In fact, last year we reduced offshore purchases by 26.6 per cent, that is, foreign purchases, thereby giving more Canadian businesses an opportunity to sell to the Government of Canada.

When—not if—the free trade deal comes into effect, there will be an additional access of up to $4 billion of opportunities for Canadian businesses. We will be able to increase the share for western Canada without taking away from Ontario and Quebec.

EXPENDITURES IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to want to ignore the fact that western Canada was getting a higher percentage four years ago than it is now. I want to know why the target is even less than the despicable record of the Liberals. The Tories then were saying that the Liberals were not spending enough in western Canada. Now that target is even less.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as I have just said in the House and in the West, something which has been agreed to by my provincial counterparts in a recent federal-provincial Minister's conference on procurement in Quebec City, the West had been ignored for 20 years by the Liberal administration. There is no doubt about it. Thus there was a lot of catching up to do.

We have already increased procurement in the West by some 25 per cent in the last couple of years. Now, with the western procurement initiatives which were announced last week, we are increasing that even further and working toward reaching an equitable proportion of purchases in all regions of Canada.

I suggest that the Hon. Member get his facts straight. I invite him to come to my office, to give him a briefing and to let him know exactly what is happening in this area.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EASTERN ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR INDUSTRIAL AND TOURISM INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

Last week I pointed out in this House that as of June 30 the Conservative Government has dropped the industrial incentive regional development programs in eastern Ontario. I asked the Minister when he would be bringing in a new industrial and tourism incentive program for this part of the province. He chose to insult the people of eastern Ontario by quoting provincial-wide unemployment figures and by bragging about government economic policies. He ignored the high pockets of unemployment that exist in eastern Ontario. He ignored the tens of millions of dollars that the Government has cut out of the eastern part of the Province of Ontario.

Will the Minister give the House a commitment today that the Government will take the unemployment problems and the economic problems of eastern Ontario seriously and bring in an industrial and tourism incentive program?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, as everyone here would know, this Government does not need any lessons from our predecessors in terms of regional incentives that are geared to build upon the strengths of the various regions of the country and that are successful in terms of the creation of permanent jobs rather than part-time jobs, programs that are less geared to digging holes and filling them up again, but which stimulate industrial growth and opportunities in the various regions of the country.

The region about which the Hon. Member speaks has not been ignored, nor will it be ignored. Under this new arrangement there has been developed the Western Diversification Fund, ACOA, the eastern opportunities fund, a fund for northern Québec, and other regions of the country.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it is a farce that that Minister should have answered that question since he is personally responsible for some of those tens of millions of dollars of cuts in eastern Ontario.

As a complement to an industrial and tourism incentive program for eastern Ontario, will the Government start by dropping its self-imposed 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber, which is very important to this region? Will the Government cease the cuts in the Public Service of Canada? Will the Government restore research and development funding to the Chalk River laboratories and to the National Research Council of Canada which has been devastated and where we have lost several hundreds of jobs? Will the Government bring in an agricultural and forestry program in that regional development for eastern Ontario? How about doing something for a change other than just cutting?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, obviously you have been very generous with the Member, giving him an opportunity to point out all the strengths that there are in eastern Ontario.

Indeed, to be fair, we announced a couple of months ago a $1.3 billion boost to research and development, particularly in the area of industrial incentives, to permit the various regions of the country to build upon their strengths, to allow the traditional industries to revitalize themselves—forestry, agriculture, fisheries, and mining—while at the same time lessening the dependence of Canadians on some of these traditional industries and working toward a more future oriented industrial sector. All of these things are done within a framework of a new national policy on science and technology, and a new industrial strategy from which all regions of the country will benefit, particularly the region which the Hon. Member represents.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

REVIEW BOARD PRESIDENT—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE REFERRAL

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. When the Minister appointed Allan Marchment as the watchdog over postal rates he did it with great fanfare. Now the Government is trying to hide this new appointee.

Why has the Government not referred the appointment of the president of a review board to the parliamentary committee? Is the Government afraid that an examination of his qualifications as a watchdog over the Post Office will not stand up? Will the Minister make sure that his Government now refers the appointment of Allan Marchment to the parliamentary committee so that his qualifications for this job can be examined?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member was at the committee meeting at which I appeared to talk about the board and the fact that Allan Marchment had agreed to serve as chairman.

Sally Hall, past President of the Consumers Association of Canada, agreed to be one of the members.

A former Member of the National Energy Board, Mr. Senneville, agreed to serve as a third member.

If the Hon. Member would like to talk to these outstanding Canadians about their qualifications for serving the public of Canada in this fashion, why does he not suggest it to the chairman of the committee and send the invitation?

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister is not aware of the parliamentary procedure whereby such appointments are referred to a parliamentary committee on an automatic basis. The committee took the unusual action of writing a letter to the Deputy Prime Minister asking for this appointment to be referred to the committee because it has not been referred up until now.

Why is the Government trying to hide Allan Marchment? Refer him to the committee.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I thought the Hon. Member was there—I am sure he was—when I appeared before the committee and talked about Allan Marchment's appointment. If that is hiding Allan Marchment, it is a peculiar definition of hiding. I do not know why the Hon. Member is getting into such a lather. If he would simply send a letter to me requesting such a—

Mr. Keeper: The letter is gone.

• (1500)

Mr. Andre: He just indicated that he sent a letter to the Deputy Prime Minister. Since it is not a Governor General appointment, but an appointment by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, perhaps he should address the request to the appropriate person. I have already answered orally that I would certainly consider such a request.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF HIGHLANDS FISHERIES PLANT IN GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Last Friday the Minister met with civic representatives, union leaders, and myself in Glace Bay to discuss the closure of the Highlands Fisheries plant in Glace Bay, thereby putting 310 individuals out of employment.

The Minister gave an undertaking to the gathering that he would have conversations with the president of Clearwater, Mr. John Risley, to secure from him undertakings, hopefully written undertakings, as to the future of this particular plant, and more important as to when the hiring of the 310 employees will be resumed. The Minister gave a date of August 1, 1988.

I ask the Minister to respond as to whether or not that date has been firmed up and the plant will open on August 1.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister is intent on having Clearwater live up to the commitment that he is looking for from the company. The Minister visited Nova Scotia on Friday with the purpose of having that plant reopened in order that the workers could return to their jobs. That was specifically undertaken for that reason. The Minister has no reason to look for anything but a concrete plan from the company. That is why it has an enterprise allocation and access to inshore fish.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

BLOCKADE MOUNTED BY LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for that response. I wish to remind him that it was a Clearwater representative who said to the community that there was no fish available. Subsequent to the meeting on Friday with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, in the darkness of night a ship arrived in port with 30,000 pounds of fish. As a result there has been a blockade of Highlands Fisheries by employees in Glace Bay.

In view of the fact that 310 employees are out of employment, in view of the fact that the Minister has given the community an undertaking, would the Hon. Member not give this House an undertaking that he will return later in the day and give us a status report on what is taking place at the Highlands Fisheries Ltd. plant, in other words, whether the Minister has received written undertakings to open this plant on August 1, 1988?

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that the Minister is following the situation very closely. He has asked the company to keep in mind the concerns of the workers, and hopefully the 310 workers will be back to work in the near future.

The Minister has a few cards that he can play in this matter, and he is following it on an hour-to-hour basis. I am sure he will use whatever means he can to help the workers return to their jobs.

LOBBYISTS REGISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-82, an Act respecting the registration of lobbyists, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak to the House today during third reading of Bill C-82, the proposed Lobbyists Registration Act. It is an important step toward the establishment of a lobbyists' register.

In September, 1985, the Right Hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced this initiative as part of public sector ethics. Soon after, a discussion paper, Lobbying and the Registration of Paid Lobbyists, was tabled in the House and was referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure. Early last year, the committee presented a unanimous report that recommended the establishment of a lobbyists' registration system. Bill C-82, which I tabled in June, 1987, is faithful to the spirit of the standing committee's recommendations.

From the start there have been four guiding principles in the development of a lobbyist registration system. First, openness. A registry should allow the public and public office holders to know who is making representations to Government, giving transparency to the public's relations with Governments. Second, clarity. It should be clear who is required to register and who is not. Third, access to Government. The requirements of a registry system should not impede access to Government by the public. Fourth, administrative simplicity. Administrative processes should be kept to a minimum so that the purpose of the program is fulfilled without imposing an administrative burden on those affected by it.

It was not an easy task to put these four principles in one package. Some seem at odds with others, but I believe the Bill remains true to its principles.

The proposed registry has two levels or "tiers". Tier I lobbyists are professional third party lobbyists who represent clients to Government. We know them as government relations consultants, lawyers, and accountants. A Tier I lobbyist would be required to disclose his or her name and business address and, if applicable, the name of his or her firm. In addition, this lobbyist would disclose the name and address of the client, and if that client were a corporation, the names and addresses of the clients parents and subsidiaries. Finally, the subject matter of the lobbying activity would also have to be disclosed.

Tier II lobbyists are often called "in-house lobbyists". They are employees of corporations or organizations who, as a significant part of their duties, lobby on behalf of their employers. Because the interests behind those lobbyists are more readily apparent than in the case of Tier I lobbyists who have an arm's length relationship with their clients, Tier II lobbyists are required to disclose only their names and the names and addresses of their employers. In both cases, the onus is upon the lobbyist to register, not the client or the employer.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, although a two-tier system was not part of the recommendations of the Standing Committee, as the Hon. Members for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) felt obliged to remind me, we believe the system is better suited to reflect the principles I mentioned just now. Furthermore, it contributes to administrative simplicity without sacrificing openness.

Mr. Speaker, thanks to a two-tier system, disclosure requirements will be more straightforward for most lobbyists, and registration will consequently be easier to administer. It is important that the system should not become an administrative burden, either for those who have to register or for the Government, or become a maze of red tape for those seeking to obtain information.

[English]

The Lobbyists Registration Act is a very solid proposal for a registry. It will provide the information needed so that the public as well as public office holders can find out who is making representations to Government. In a democratic society, the ability to find out who is lobbying is as important as the ability to lobby. This system requires only as much information as is necessary to identify who is lobbying for whom and, in Tier I, on what subject. The registry will not be burdensome for lobbyists to comply with or for the Government to administer. The amendments made by the legislative committee have improved the Bill in terms of the clarity of what is or is not lobbying, and who is or is not a lobbyist. I am pleased to put this Bill before you for final consideration.

• (1510)

Over the past weeks and months we have discussed and debated the who, what, why and how of the lobbyist registration system. I hope today that Hon. Members opposite will agree that the when is now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I may say it is a pleasure to finally have an opportunity to rise in the House and speak to the Bill respecting the registration of lobbyists.

The subject has been discussed for quite sometime. The House will recall that the first legislation in the United States was introduced an passed in 1946. So it would be inaccurate to say the Conservative Government invented the wheel in this respect.

The first Bill in Canada concerning the registration of lobbyists was tabled in 1969 by then Member of Parliament Mr. Barry Mather. The second Bill was tabled in 1974 by a Liberal Member, Mr. Ken Robinson, Member for Etobicoke-Lakeshore at the time.

In 1976, the late Walter Baker also tabled a Bill. In 1985, our colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), tabled another bill to register lobbyists, and finally, also in 1985, the former Member for St. John's East, now His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, tabled a Bill on the registration of lobbyists in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the Conservative Government was elected largely on its promise to abolish patronage.

[English]

It is important to remember this mandate that the Government gave itself in 1984 during the election campaign. The Conservatives talked about the patronage, and they said that if elected they would reform the system. They said that they would reform the system of political appointments. They talked about the fact that, in their view, things could be done in a better way. Well, Canadians believed the Leader of the Conservative Party during the election campaign. After the election, Canadians became disillusioned by the Conservative Leader—who became the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) after the election—because he did not live up to the promises that he had made to the people of Canada.

You will remember that this Government was criticized by the Opposition, and rightfully so I might add, in a non-partisan way, of course, by members of the Opposition and by the Canadian people, the media, editorial writers and so on, for the way in which it was dealing with the issues involving public sector ethics.

On September 9, 1985, the Prime Minister decided that he had had it with scandals, with things going wrong in his Government, and he presented himself in the House of Commons and made an impassioned speech for reforming the public sector ethics that he had allowed to decay under his leadership, gave us a speech and a package of documents wrapped in a nice blue ribbon, although blue ribbons are very seldom nice. He asked a Page to table it right here on the table of the Clerk of the House of Commons. He sent a letter to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the NDP Party (Mr. Broadbent), to all MPs and Senators, and gave instructions to his Ministers. In this speech of September 9, 1985, and in an open letter to MPs and Senators, the Prime Minister promised a new conflict of interest code. He promised another one after that, but he did offer us a new code on that day. He offered instructions to Ministers, imposing limitations on the hiring of family members. We know that some of his colleagues in Cabinet had appointed sons and daughters and cousins and in-laws, and all sorts of relations, to various positions. He wrote a letter to the opposition Leaders concerning the ethical standards for MPs and Senators. He established an experimental program for parliamentary scrutiny of Governor in Council appointments. He said at that time that we would have a system of registration of lobbying activity. Now, what he said is very important. I will repeat it. He said, and I quote from point five, dealing with the registration of lobbying activity, not that we would just register lobbyists, not that we would just register lobbying, he said that we would register lobbying activity. I see my friend from Nickel Belt is paying very close attention to this, because he and I are very interested in the registration of lobbying activity.

I want to read to you from page 9 of this letter. It is a very long letter that the Prime Minister sent to Members of Parliament. I guess the Prime Minister had a lot to think about on the weekend before that. He wrote long letters to MPs.

An Hon. Member: He knew what he wanted.

Mr. Boudria: On page 9, he said:

> The fifth component of this comprehensive approach to public sector ethics is the undertaking of this Government to introduce into the House of Commons, at an early date, legislation to monitor lobbying activity and to control the lobbying process by providing a reliable and accurate source of information on the activities of lobbyists. We will require, among other things, paid lobbyists to register and identify their clients.
> This will enable persons who are approached by lobbyists for Canadian corporations, associations and unions, and by agents on behalf of foreign governments and other foreign interests, to be clearly aware of who is behind the representation.

I repeat that part: "Who is behind the representation". I see that you are paying very close attention to this, Mr. Speaker. I will read further:

> I have accordingly asked my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to prepare, on an urgent basis, legislation to govern lobbying activity.

I did place emphasis on certain key words in there, and you will see why. I want to read a little further from this letter of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister does have a pretty mean pen sometimes, and it is important for us to be fully apprised of what it is that he has told us. On page 10, he states:

> This initiative should not be misinterpreted to mean that this Government is aware of particular improprieties in the conduct of lobbyists or that it considers lobbying to be an inappropriate activity. On the contrary, the practice of lobbying plays an important role in ensuring that governments, in taking the decisions which affect the lives of all of us, are able to take properly into account the multitude of diverse interests involved. This Government is simply saying that something so important should not be shrouded in mystery.

It was said by the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

I thought that the Government was going to introduce on an urgent basis legislation to govern lobbying activity. I believed the Prime Minister, which I suppose is the first mistake. I believed he was going to do what he said he would. I know it is extremely unfair to quote the Prime Minister, using his own words, but I am doing it anyway so that all Canadians will understand that we were not quite given the merchandise that we were promised. I would be the last person to say that this Government broke a promise, because, of course, I am non-partisan. Nevertheless some of us, shall we say, have been somewhat disappointed that the Prime Minister let us down one more time.

• (1520)

I want to apprise you, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that a number of Canadians have not been satisfied with the actions of the Government as they pertain to lobbyists. We on this side of the House wanted to agree to a degree with the Prime Minister when he said that there was nothing wrong per se with the profession of being a lobbyist or with partaking in lobbying. There is nothing wrong with someone being a lobbyist and making representation to the Government on behalf of a labour union, on behalf of a corporation, on behalf of the Coalition on Acid Rain , on behalf of Campaign Life or on behalf of anyone else. That is okay. One can lobby for that. If Jean Bazin wanted to lobby to get a position in the Senate, that is okay too. I do not object to that. I thank the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay) for reminding me that people have lobbied for a Senate position from time to time. Perhaps Senator Michel Cogger may have done it. Perhaps Senator Jean Bazin, who is a close friend of the Prime Minister, may have done that. It could be that people have lobbied for Senate positions. That is not illegal nor should it be. People have a right to make a representation to the Government for anything which they feel is important.

Canadians have a right to know who is doing what to whom. If, for instance, Mr. Speaker, you and I worked for the Coalition on Acid Rain we would want to know what that giant corporate entity has done in the way of lobbying the Government. If were lobbying for the Coalition on Acid Rain we would want to know if Inco had lobbied against emission standards. If we were lobbying for Campaign Life we would want to know what the pro-choice group has been lobbying for in the area of the abortion debate which will start tomorrow. We have a right to know these things. I suggest that we have a better form of government when all these activities are in the public domain.

The Government did not initially deliver on the merchandise. As I indicated a while ago, the Government, instead of delivering the Bill that it promised, on December 19, 1985, gave us a White Paper on lobbying. That White Paper, a very thick document, was tabled in the House and everyone looked at the White Paper on Lobbying and asked what it was for. The Prime Minister promised us some legislation on an urgent basis. Remember what I said a while ago when I was quoting the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker? Three months later this urgent basis had been forgotten because we got a White Paper which discussed the pros and cons of registering lobbyists. How could we discuss the pros and cons of registering lobbyists when the Prime Minister had made a solemn promise? A solemn promise is like a sacred trust, you cannot breach it. Surely the Prime Minister would know you do not breach sacred trust. He has had to deal with that issue before, and I think he found out the hard way that when you make a solemn promise you are supposed to live up to it.

I do not want to digress from the main topic at hand here, but we were disappointed that the Prime Minister did not bring his lobbying Bill at that time. In any case, that was December 19, 1985 and there was still no Bill. The White Paper itself was shelved for five months.

Finally in April, 1986, after a few more scandals, a few more trouble spots for the Government, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure was mandated by the House to study the report on the registration of lobbyists. On that committee we had the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), other government Members and myself. We had, I think, a very good non-partisan study of the possibility of registering lobbyists. We studied this issue here in Canada. Then we went to Washington and to Sacramento, California. Those are two jurisdictions which have a system of registering lobbyists. We looked at their systems and identified the strengths and weaknesses of each one. For instance, the weakness of the system in Washington was that one was only deemed to be a lobbyist if one were lobbying an elected person. If one were lobbying an unelected official, say the executive assistant or chief of staff of a legislator, one did not have to register. Obviously that was a tremendous weakness in the system. If one is lobbying Government, whether it be a Member of Parliament, my executive assistant, my constituency assistant or the chief of staff of a cabinet Minister or even a Deputy Minister, one is still lobbying the Government. Obviously one should have to register the very same.

On the other hand, when we studied the system in California we found that it really asked for a lot in the way of detail. As a matter of fact it asked for so much that the system actually became buried in itself. Lobbyists there, I believe, have to register not only the lobbying activity but the fees they were charging, which I kind of like, but there was much detail, such as having to file with the registrar each month every invoice of every expense over $10 or something like that. It means that if a person went to the restaurant and spent $12.50, that person had to get a bill so he or she could put it with the expense account and file it at the end of the month. Can you imagine lobbyists filing into the state legislature at Sacramento with a great big box full of invoices and stuff at the end of every month so they could prove to the person in charge of registering lobbyists that they had not exceeded the amounts in every category and so on for that month? That kind of a system, needless to say, would be a bureaucratic nightmare. There is no way we would want to hire a group of people to administer that. It would be costly and because it would ask for so much information, the information we were looking for would probably be buried in some other information and we would end up knowing nothing at all. That is not what we wanted.

So our committee made a good and strong recommendation and prepared a report which we tabled in this House. The report which the committee tabled asked the Government to have a system of registering lobbyists. Some members of the committee, and I think I would be fair in saying it was the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt and myself, would have wanted to register the fees and disbursements of lobbyists—in any case the fees of lobbyists, but some of the government Members felt that was to onerous, particularly in the beginning.

In an effort to obtain a consensus of all political Parties we agreed that for the time being we would not ask for the registering of the fees and disbursements of lobbyists so long as we got the name of the lobbyist, the name of the lobbying firm, the name of the company or organization which paid for the lobbying activity and the subject matter of the activity as well as the name of the person or governmental organization which they were lobbying. That was, in fact, what we were looking for initially. Our recommendations also proposed after a period of some years that we review the system with the possibility of increasing the requirements on lobbyists at that time. With that review included in our recommendations we went along. However, we did recommend as well, and I will now read from our recommendations:

[Translation]

I read the following recommendation: We recommend prohibiting lobbyists from accepting from their clients any remuneration connected in any way with the results of lobbying. This simply means, Mr. Speaker, that it is prohibited or should be prohibited, according to the unanimous report of the parliamentary committee, that a lobbyist be able to demand fees based on results. For instance, if I am a lobbyist, I cannot go to a client and say: That will be $1,000 for lobbying, and $10,000 as a bonus if I get results. We say that should be prohibited. In any case, I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in some provinces lawyers are not allowed to charge fees on this principle. That is the case, for example, in Ontario. Does the same apply to Quebec? I don't know. Some could enligthen us and I hope that during the debate we will have shortly, someone can enlighten us on that.

As I see it, being able to charge fees based on results can lead to abuses. We know of only one firm of lobbyists that sets fees this way now and I assure you that it was quite controversial. Perhaps if this lobbying firm stopped doing so, most Canadians, I think, would feel that the system was much better.

• (1530)

These are the recommendations that we made with respect to what is required of lobbyists. We recommended that registered lobbyists be required first to disclose their name, firm name if applicable, a contact person, address, and telephone number; second, name of clients and their place of business; third, the matter upon which the lobbying activity is to take place. I said moments ago that we should prohibit contingency fees or fees contingent upon a result. We also recommended a definition of lobbyists and so on. We produced a good report that was tabled in this House in early 1987.

Because this was a compromise position, we felt the Government would introduce a Bill which pretty well mirror imaged the unanimous report of the parliamentary committee. After all, the Opposition had watered down its expectations in favour of getting a unanimous report, so we figured the Minister would probably introduce something pretty close to what we asked. Yet that did not happen, if one can believe it. Instead, the Government introduced a two-tier system of registering lobbyists. From now on, there will be a Tier I lobbyist, which is a consultant or, if you wish, a professional lobbyist. That lobbyist would be operating under a contract with a client, or the lobbyist could be a member of any profession when engaged in lobbying for pay; in other words, a lawyer or accountant who acts as a lobbyist. This kind of lobbyist would be asked to register detailed information such as that I described a while ago pursuant to our unanimous report.

There would also be Tier II lobbyists. I have no idea where the Minister got this idea. It certainly is not from my report, not from his White Paper, not from anything any Member ever raised in this House in any speech at second reading, report stage, or anywhere else. It was not even raised in committee.

The Tier II lobbyist consists of employees and officers of trade organizations, labour federations, business corporations, unions and voluntary groups who, as a significant part of their duties, lobby for their employer.

Those people will be asked to supply only limited information by the Government. For example, they will have to register once a year in a manner which has been described by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt as providing a copy of their business card. The only thing we will be asking them to do is identify themselves once a year with their name, address, and phone number. Providing a copy of their business card would pretty well do that.

My objection is that these people, the so-called Tier II lobbyists, are getting away with something that other people cannot. Why do we offer Tier II lobbyists those kinds of advantages? The Minister says the reason is that in the case of a Tier II lobbyist we know who they are, we know who they act for, and it is pretty obvious what they want. He says in his press release on page 5, that even among paid employees there are distinctions worthy of recognition. Certain individuals may, on rare occasions, represent the views of their business or association, but they are not primarily engaged by the employer for the purpose of lobbying. By contrast, many groups and corporations retain full-time individuals on staff who are responsible for liaison with and communicating ideas and concerns to the Government. While the latter should be required to register as lobbyists, the former can hardly be considered to be a paid lobbyist. That is quite true. He says further that this system of two different tiers of lobbyists is based on the well established distinction between the often hidden interests of the clients of the third party paid lobbyist, in other words Tier I, and the transparent and well understood interests of the corporations, industry associations, public interest groups, and other such organizations whose staff lobby on their own behalf, or Tier II.

Let us look at the distinction the Minister is making. He says that Tier II lobbyists are transparent, well understood interests of corporations, industry associations, public interest groups, and other such organizations. I say to him that sometimes that may be the case. I will concede that, and even that there are occasions where one can tell by the organization what it is they are concerned about. I will use as an example an organization which has been in contact with me lately, one which I have a certain closeness with, and that is the Campaign Life Coalition. They are obviously going to lobby for pro-life legislation on abortion. However, although that is true for that organization, it may not necessarily be that obvious and that transparent and well understood, to use the words of the Minister, in certain other groups.

Let me give an example. Let us say, for example, that someone is a full-time employee of a giant multinational. I will use Imasco as an example, a parent company of several other companies. If someone is a paid lobbyist for that company, how is it obvious, how is it transparent, how is it well understood what he or she is lobbying for or against? There is no logical answer. When the company is so big one cannot tell which one of the subsidiaries the lobbyist is speaking for or against or which legislation they would be favouring or opposing.

Another example is someone campaigning on behalf of George Weston Enterprises or someone like that. That company's list of subsidiaries is the length of your arm, Mr. Speaker. How can you tell which one of the subsidiaries they are lobbying for? They could just as easily be lobbying against the very thing you may think they are lobbying for. It is not, contrary to what the Minister said, transparent and well understood what they are lobbying for or against.

In order to correct some of those deficiencies I offered some amendments, and I know other Members did as well, to the Bill proposed by the Minister. I say this having supported his Bill on second reading debate and having supported the unanimous report of the parliamentary committee. We suggested amendments which would do a number of things.

Let me read the amendments we wanted the Government to include in the legislation. We wanted, first, to ensure that the Bill would provide that someone who collects information for the purpose of having someone else do the lobbying would also be identified as a lobbyist. I introduced that motion. Unfortunately, it did not get anywhere. My second amendment was to ensure that we were asking the same thing of Tier II lobbyists as we were of Tier I lobbyists, that is, of course, to correct the situation I described a moment ago.

I introduced another motion, which was debated but refused by the Government, to prevent a lobbyist from charging contingency fees. Our committee, which for the benefit of Conservative Members listening to this debate was largely composed of government Members, was opposed to lobbyists being able to charge contingency fees. However, that is not in the Bill.

The Minister says he could not make such a requirement because he does not have the constitutional authority to do so. That is, apparently, due to the fact that contract law is provincial and we are obviously dealing here with federal legislation. Although the Minister may technically be correct in saying that contract law is provincial, which is true, we should remember that the federal Government can require someone lobbying it to meet before it will entertain such a lobby. In other words, this Bill could easily include a provision which would prevent an employee or federal legislator from entertaining a lobby on the part of someone who is charging a contingency fee.

The Government had every opportunity to do that. Such a condition in the Bill would prevent legislators from receiving such a lobby. Perhaps there are other means of satisfying that. There are indeed ways in which the Government could have prevented lobbyists from charging contingency fees.

As I indicated a while ago, we are dealing with this Bill today after some delay. I want to make it clear to the House, to the Minister, and to all Canadians that in no way has either Party in the Opposition made any attempt to delay the passage of this Bill. I indicated that in April of 1986 our committee started to do its work on that report. In September of 1986 the Government prorogued Parliament. It recalled Parliament at the beginning of October, and on November 19 the Government decided, through a motion proposed by the Government House Leader, to reactivate our committee. On January 27, 1987, our committee tabled its report in the House of Commons. On June 30, 1987, we gave Bill C-82 first reading. I do not know why it took from January to June.

However, if you think that is strange, wait until you hear what I am going to say next. We only started to debate the Bill on March 8, 1988, some nine months later. I do not know why that gestation period was required, but nevertheless we started at that time.

Perhaps some would think that after we started debate on March 8, 1988, the Opposition may have dragged its feet. No, Sir, Mr. Speaker, the whole debate was concluded on March 14, six days later, and some of those days were used to discuss other legislation. In fact, only about four hours of House time was utilized to debate Bill C-82. You can see, Mr. Speaker, the great co-operation offered to the Government by opposition Members of Parliament in an attempt to have speedy passage of this legislation.

I hear a Conservative Member speaking. If he is congratulating the House on having disposed of the motion so rapidly, I thank him for that. I assume that that is what he is saying.

In April of this year the committee met. After only two or three hearings the committee dealt with the Bill in its entirety. We had had only two or three meetings on the Bill and the Minister was not pleased. He felt it was taking us too long to deal with the Bill in committee after we had had about three meetings. He literally had a temper tantrum.

On April 27, 1988, in an interview given to The Globe and Mail, the Minister threatened to shelve the Bill to register lobbyists because it was taking too much time. Can you believe that? The Minister took three years to produce a Bill which the Prime Minister promised on an urgent basis, and because we did not have it ready after three one and a half hour meetings of the parliamentary committee, the Minister literally had a tantrum.

If you do not believe me, Mr. Speaker, I will read to you what The Globe and Mail says. Surely you will believe The Globe and Mail. An article of April 27, 1988 says that legislation to register lobbyists could be postponed indefinitely if opposition Members continue to push for amendments. The Opposition was guilty of trying to improve legislation. What an awful bunch we were for trying to improve the Government's imperfect Bill!

The article continues: "He directed his comments at New Democratic Party MP John Rodriguez and Liberal MP Don Boudria who have been trying to toughen the Bill which is scheduled to be sent back to the House of Commons for final reading in May". You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that even the media thought this Bill would be dealt with in May. Today is July 25. I have been lobbying the Government since May to bring this Bill back before the House, and it only did so a week ago.

Mr. Keeper: Did you register?

Mr. Boudria: No, I did not register my lobbying activity at that time, in response to the question of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper). We do not have such legislation yet.

I would like to read an article from the April 18 Calgary Herald. I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who is reading Maclean's magazine, to listen attentively to what I am going to say because the Calgary Herald is published in his riding and Maclean's is not. The editorial is entitled "Lobbyist bill overdue". It reads:

> Almost three years since he promised legislation, Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's new law to register paid lobbyists has gone only as far as first reading and committee hearings.

Well, it had actually gone to second reading. It continues:

> It has taken entirely too long for this piece of public interest legislation to become law in Canada.
> Since the Tories have asserted, as Mulroney did in 1985, that Canada needs a law requiring the registration of all those who lobby for a living on Parliament Hill, then they should get on with the job of enacting such a law.
> The United States has had such legislation since 1946 but Canada's long delayed and slightly bedraggled Bill C-82 had to wait until this month to make it as far as a Commons committee hearing.
> It was ushered by an apologetic Consumer Affairs Minister Harvie Andre who argued that the bill ought not to require that lobbyists divulge how much they are paid for their endeavors on behalf of a plethora of interest groups which routinely seek favors from the government.
> In short, the bill will ask lobbyists employed by companies or groups to register only such data as their names, addresses and telephone numbers.

Those are the Tier II lobbyists to which I was referring. It goes on to indicate:

> A second category or so-called hired gun lobbyists will also have to report, in advance, the issues they have been hired to discuss with government officials.
> But that's the extent of government's attempts to provide for public awareness of the activities of influential but little known lobbyists in Ottawa.
> No wonder Bill C-82 is also known as the business card bill. It is almost too weak to bother with, but it is, just barely, better than nothing.

That report is from the Calgary Herald. I know the Minister knows the Calgary Herald very well.

• (1550)

I believe I have grabbed the attention of certain Conservative Members. I apologize if I spoke too loudly and woke them up. However, there is a price to be paid for sitting in the House of Commons. Tory Members will have to deal with the fact that they have to listen to what happens in here before they vote. I hope they pay very close attention as I lobby them for their support.

The Bill is not as strong as we would have liked. I have made my pitch for a number of amendments both in the House and in committee. If debate on this Bill should end today, it is better than nothing, as the Calgary Herald has stated. I will support the motion and encourage my colleagues in the Liberal Party to do so, but there is still a chance, if the Minister asks for unanimous consent of the House to revert to report stage, to accept the amendments I have offered. I would be willing to grant that unanimous consent, and I am quite sure most of my colleagues would do the same, in order to improve the Bill in the way I just described.

I have described what the Bill requires of lobbyists. It does not deal with fees as I would have preferred, nor does it prohibit contingency fees. The Bill does not require a record of official contacts, in other words, who was being lobbied.

The Bill contains no provision to stop someone from registering after they have been fined or jailed for making a false statement. A lobbyist who has defaulted under the Act could continue to practise their profession. That is another weakness in the Bill.

There could be stronger enforcement provisions in the legislation. However, in spite of its weaknesses the Bill still carries out its original objective, which is to register lobbyists.

I support the thrust of the Bill. I would like the Minister to reconsider my amendments. I would be pleased to give my consent, if he asked to revert to report stage to deal with those amendments.

While the Bill essentially follows the recommendations of our all-party committee report in January, 1987, it is lacking in those areas I have identified, including its failure to ban contingency fees and requirements for Tier II lobbyists.

That being said, I recommend that the House support the Bill notwithstanding those deficiencies. We want to register lobbyists. Let me state for the record that when the three-year period is up we should increase the requirements on these people.

[Translation]

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to this House that the profession of lobbyist is an honourable one, or should be. I note that many lobbyists in Canada do not want to identify themselves as such. They are called government consultants, vice-presidents of government relations or all sorts of other similar titles. I do not think this should be so. When the Parliamentary Committee visited Washington, we noticed that lobbyists in Washington were proud of their profession, just as lawyers or doctors are proud of theirs. And with a law that would require several things of lobbyists, I feel that we would raise the standards of behaviour and that over time, since it will take time, lobbyists will have a profession that will be better known, better recognized and more credible.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I want to encourage my colleagues to pass this Bill today.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks on third reading of Bill C-82, let me state that the New Democratic Party voted against the Bill at report stage. In the course of my remarks I am sure it will become crystal clear to the House and those who are listening why the NDP has opposed this Bill.

The Bill represents flimflam by a powder-puff Minister who was not committed to the whole concept of registering lobbyists and lobbying.

An Hon. Member: You mean he is a wimp?

Mr. Rodriguez: There are those who would be so unkind as to use the four letter word in describing the Minister, but I am not in that group. I simply say the Minister knew who his friends were and who his friends are. He recognizes that he cannot bite the hand that feeds his Government with juicy contributions that come in very handy in an election year.

Who is a lobbyist? We have defined a lobbyist for the purposes of this debate as anyone who, for pay, approaches a legislator or anyone within the bureaucracy with the intent to influence the drafting or changing of legislation, the changing of rules or regulations to the obtaining contracts or appointments to boards or commissions.

Before I came here in 1972, I and many Canadians were aware that there were very powerful interests outside Parliament which seemed to have their own way with the Government in dealing with contracts and appointments. In fact, I have a comment which sums up the way it was and the way it will continue to be in spite of Bill C-82.

It is from an article that I clipped from The Gazette in Montreal on December 3, 1986. The headline reads "Lobbying Threatens Parties: Masse". It goes on to say:

> Energy Minister Marcel Masse said yesterday the growing popularity of lobbying is undermining Canada's political party system.

He went on to say, as reported in the article:

> "It has become infinitely more easy to attract the attention of one's fellow citizens, the communications media and even the Government by belonging to a pressure group than through advancing one's ideas inside a political party," Masse said.

He went on to say that the danger inherent in lobbying is that it gives disproportionate weight to the opinions of the rich and the powerful. In fact, if people want to bring about change in our kind of democratic system, they should become involved in a political Party and work to make changes.

• (1600)

There is a further refinement that is even more invidious than the ones the Minister described. There are those who latch on, as a scavenger fish latches on to a shark, to the Government. They become friends of the Government and they work for the election of a Prime Minister or a Government because they know that when that person becomes Prime Minister or when that Party forms the Government, they can then extricate themselves from this close relationship and join or start a lobbying company.

In fact, because of the friendships these people have created within the political Party that now forms the Government, the fruits of their labours can finally ripen and fall into their hands.

Mr. Andre: John, that's a microphone in front of you. You don't have to shout.

Mr. Rodriguez: I see that the Minister responsible for this flimflammery, Bill C-82, has now been awakened. He was deeply plunged into Canada Post's annual report. Now I see that he has removed himself. He cannot stand the heat; he is leaving the Chamber.

Mr. Andre: You're hurting my ears.

Mr. Rodriguez: I am glad that someone can hurt some part of you.

What I have described is not idle speculation. In fact, that is a description of one Frank Moores who was the former Premier of Newfoundland. He was one of the Prime Minister's staunchest supporters for the Leadership of the Conservative Party. In fact, he worked diligently day and night, without pay, without an iota of compensation, doing it all out of the goodness of his heart, working hard for Brian, putting Brian in the Prime Minister's seat. However, everything comes to those who wait. In the fullness of time, as the world unfolded, Brain ascended to the Prime Minister's seat, and of course he rewarded them that brung him to the dance. In his famous words, "You always dance with them who brung you".

What did Frank Moores do? He is not stupid. You don't become a premier of a province if you don't have a little bit of stuff up here. He formed GCI, Government Consultants International. Who did he bring in? He brought in all the flops and flicks and flacks. He brought in Gerry Doucet who was a Cabinet Minister in the Nova Scotia Government, a good friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He brought in Gary Ouellet, a magician. He has a tuxedo with 12 pockets. I saw this guy at lunch one time, he made a quarter disappear. I saw it. The quarter was in his hand, he did that and the quarter disappeared. He has written 12 books on magic. He makes things disappear and I suspect he can also make them reappear.

Here was Government Consultants International, a mere new kid on the block in 1984. In that short period of time between 1984 and now, GCI has become the most powerful private lobby group in the country. In fact, its clients include Nabisco Brands Canada, Mercedes-Benz, Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., the Iron Ore Company of Canada—if ever there was a connection—and American Express Canada. As a matter of fact, American Express Canada was with Public Affairs International, and when Frankie baby arrived on the scene with GCI, he approached American Express Canada and it switched. There was a $175,000 contingency fee just on that account alone. How about Microtel, Huang and Danczkay? These groups got contracts for expanding the airport in Toronto.

Business has been booming at GCI. It has very powerful customers. Guess what? GCI does not charge a fee. It has a contingency fee. It says: "If I get you the contract, I get a percentage".

As a matter of fact, this whole thing blew up, and I think that is the reason for this flimflam, powder-puff Bill. In fact, Frank Moores literally and frankly screwed up. He took $2,000 from a fisherman on the Atlantic to get an interview with the Fisheries Minister so that he could make a pitch to get a fishing licence. The fellow got the fishing licence.

Frank Moores also sat on the Board of Directors of Air Canada at the same time as he was representing the Airbus Industrie from France which was negotiating with Air Canada to sell airbuses. Guess what? He got kicked off the Board of Air Canada. Guess what? GCI helped, and Airbus Industrie landed the contract. Do Hon. Members know what GCI's contingency for that little project alone was? It was $30 million.

There is no question that these are the louder voices, those who have political influence and friends in the PMO and the Government. These are the ones who are able to use political influence to land contracts.

The Prime Minister said something I would like to read into the record. Things were supposed to change as of September 9, 1985. The Prime Minister, embarrassed by all these revelations, realized that we needed to have ethics in government. Therefore, he wrote a letter to Members of Parliament and to Senators. I want to read the first paragraph of that letter because I think it sort of ushered in, we all thought, a new era of government ethics.

The Prime Minister wrote:

> Dear Colleagues:
> It is a great principle of public administration—I would even say an "imperative "— that to function effectively the government and the public service of a democracy must have the trust and confidence of the public they serve. In order to reinforce that trust, the government must be able to provide competent management and, above all, to be guided by the highest standards of conduct.

Furthermore, in that letter the Prime Minister promised to establish a registry of lobbying. In the letter he recognizes the need that Canadians have every right to know who is doing what to whom, and I would add for how much. That was the underlying principle when I represented the New Democratic Party in the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure which studied the question of lobbying.

• (1610)

We came back with a unanimous report. I did not get everything that I wanted. I wanted to make sure that we knew how much the lobbyists were paying for the lobbying activity. I wanted to know who the contacts were. I wanted to know who was behind the mass mailings, such as the letters we received recently about how having a law on tobacco advertising infringes on the rights of Canadians. I wanted to know who was behind that type of indirect lobbying.

I wanted to ensure that we outlawed contingencies in lobbying. The contingency fee schedule is the greatest incitement to dipsy-doodle around the law, and probably to encourage unscrupulous lobbyists to do dirty things.

I was also interested in having a registrar who would have the ability to verify the information that is placed on the lobby registry. If the registrar is not given the power to verify the information, who will find out if what is put on the registry is in fact correct?

The unanimous report of the committee represented for me the bottom line. It basically said that a lobbyist is a lobbyist. It said that it did not matter if they belonged to the GCIs of this world, or if they belonged to an association, but that they were still in the business of lobbying and therefore ought to be registered. That was the bottom line for me, and it was in the unanimous report. We also recommended in the report that the registrar be given the power to verify the information in the registry.

The Government took the unanimous report and came back with what I have described as a flimflam of a Bill. In fact, it sets up two tiers for the registry. Tier I is for companies—Frank Moores, Bill Neville and a whole host of others—such as PAI and GCI. Under Tier II there would be the associations, all these little innocent associations—and I say this facetiously—which have no power. I refer to the Pharmaceuticals Association, the Manufacturers' Association, the Bankers' Association, the BCNI, the Construction Industries Association, as well as the trade union movement. These would fall under Tier II.

Guess what information we require from Tier I, Mr. Speaker. We need to know the name of the lobbyist, the address, and the company for whom the lobbyist is working, its address and the issue being lobbied on. Under Tier II only the name of the lobbyist and the association has to be listed. That is all. In other words, all that has to be done is that the business card must be turned over.

It is imperative that at least the minimum of what the issue is ought to be included in the information that is put on the registry for the associations. While I have described Frank Moores and the way in which he operates, I have come to the serious conclusion that it is not the Frank Moores type of company, the GCIs or PAIs, which are the ones that have the most power in this country but, after looking at this matter intensively, I have come to the conclusion that it is the associations which carry the power. Those associations, such as the Pharmaceutical Association and the Bankers' Association are the ones that hold the power. One only has to look recently to how Canadian bankers persuaded the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) not to legislate with respect to the abuses on bank service charges but to accept something called voluntary compliance.

In my view it is the associations which have the greatest power today. Any registry of lobbying and lobbyists—and I include both those concepts—must demand from Tier II the minimum that is demanded from Tier I. Justice demands it. The democratic sense of openness demands that in fact the registry contains that minimal bit of information.

The Minister left the Chamber and came back. He was not interested in any of this which raises the question as to how effectively he was lobbied. Not one amendment was accepted by the Government to give some backbone to Bill C-82. Thus the caucus of the New Democratic Party voted against it at report stage. We are going to vote against it at third reading as well. All we have to do is work on defeating this Government and we will bring in the type of lobby registry Bill that ought to be brought in, which will assure Canadians of openness and transparency.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague to elaborate a bit on the very important point he made, that is, that the centre of power in the lobbying industry in Canada may not be with high profile agencies such as Public Affairs International or Government Consultants International. While these are the high profile actors in the whole field of lobbying, it is in fact the associations which hold the centre of power. They do not make the stories on the front pages of our newspapers so much as lobbyists do. I refer to the bankers and the pharmaceutical industry representatives. I refer to the Business Council on National Issues. Who knows how many average Canadians know what BCNI stands for? Will my colleague elaborate a bit on his conclusion that in fact these associations are the most powerful lobbyists in the capital?

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his question. It is an important one. It is a thought provoking one as well.

I would like to give two examples of how these associations have indeed wielded power in this Government. One is the Business Council on National Issues. The executive director of that organization is one Mr. Thomas d'Aquino. That organization is made up of probably the wealthiest corporations in this land, such corporations as Power Corp. They are the crème de la crème. They pride themselves on giving leadership to Governments of Canada. In fact, if one were to examine the journey of the free trade agreement that was signed by the Prime Minister and by Ronald Reagan, one would see that in fact here was a Prime Minister who as recently as 1983 said that we will have none of this free trade stuff with the United States. He said that the people said no to it in 1911 and they say no today. What changed his mind? As the piece unfolds it will be recognized that the BCNI was really pushing for the free trade deal with the United States. In fact, it put it on the agenda of the Prime Minister and lobbied the Government to accept the whole concept of free trade with the United States, which led to the subsequent negotiations. That is one point.

• (1620)

The other one concerns the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association. Apparently the lobbying association, PMA, approached the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs with respect to a change to the Patent Act that would extend and give protection to drugs for 10 years. That lobbying was ongoing, but because there was no registry there was no way that those who were opposed to that type of action had any inkling that they could present counterarguments to the Government and the bureaucracy. In fact, PMA persuaded the Government, and it fell neatly in line with the free trade deal being negotiated at the time. With the one using the other we eventually saw Bill C-22 brought before the House.

I have mentioned the Bankers' Association only recently hitting the fan. In fact some may say that the banks held up the fan, when all that was happening was that great demands were being made for changes to the Bank Act that would ensure consumers a fair deal with bank service charges. The Finance Committee studied the matter, came back with a report, and demanded that the Government act. Lo and behold the Bankers' Association huddled with the Minister of State for Finance, and we got the Government's acceptance of voluntary compliance with respect to bank service charges. That is where that matter has ended.

I tell my hon. friend and colleague that as I have observed it the real powerful lobbyists around the capital are the associations. I believe that they twisted the Government's arm in setting up the two-tier system. That is why we have the associations in Tier II with only business card information, while those in Tier I have to disclose the issue. Knowing the issue that is being lobbied gives Canadians who may have a differing view an equal opportunity to provide information to government and bureaucracy, it is extremely important.

Mr. Keeper: When the legislation with regard to the generic drug industry was before the House, many ordinary Canadians were seeking to put pressure on the Government and were lobbying the Government to preserve the protection that they had in the generic drug industry against sky-rocketing drug prices. At the same time, the pharmaceutical industry was doing its own lobbying in order to forward its interests and be able to do whatever it wanted with regard to the price of drugs in this country.

At that time I remember hearing about some very quiet lobbying that was going on. In contrast to the public lobbying from ordinary citizens fighting for their rights, there was some very quiet lobbying going on in Washington. There was a leak of information of how the pharmaceutical industry of the United States was able to use the American Government in order to approach the Canadian Government.

Does my colleague believe that this legislation the Government has brought forward with regard to lobbying will throw light on the process of lobbying? Will it throw light upon how power is wielded in the capital? I am thinking of the whole question of the generic drug legislation as a case study.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is an excellent question. When the standing committee visited Washington in the United States, it found out that lobbyists were registered. One can go to the office where that information is kept on file and, for a fee, have the information pulled off the computer. If one has the name of the lobbying firm or the lobbyists, the information can be taken from the computer. The computer lists the name of the lobbyists, the lobbying firms, and the issues on which lobbyists are lobbying, together with a list of all companies that are clients of particular lobbying firms.

If we had such a registry which applied not only to individual companies such as GCI and PAI but also to the associations, we could cross match. If we needed information on who was approaching the Government on what issue—for example, on the pharmaceutical question Bill C-22 that was passed—we could go to the computer to find out who the lobbyist was and, if that were the issue, it could be cross matched with the file in Washington. In that manner we could find out if the pharmaceutical association was lobbying the Canadian Government for certain changes and if in the United States a lobbying firm was lobbying the Canadian Embassy with respect to making sure that the Government of Canada made changes to the Patent Act with respect to pharmaceutical products.

A democracy cannot survive if people do not have information. One of the greatest guardians of democracy is an informed citizenry. If citizens do not have the correct information, they are left to surmise and speculate. I suggest that that undermines the whole process.

There are two other federal Acts of Parliament which are extremely important to this whole question of transparency and the right to know. The first one is the Election Expenses Act, an extremely important Act where contributors of more than $100 are listed. It is important to know who is supporting the political Parties and the candidates and that that information is up front and open. We did not have that before. The second one is the Access to Information Act, not the type that we see here where many things are blacked out, the Government chooses to delay certain information, and the commissioner of Access to Information Act states that the Act is being frustrated by the Government.

In 1983 the Prime Minister was correct when he said that the Liberals believed that Canadians did not have a right to know. He stated that Conservatives believed that Canadians had every right to know. I agree with him, and every right thinking Canadian across the country agrees with those words, but they are only words. The proof of the pudding is in the eating. Here we have a Bill which will complement those two federal pieces of legislation and federal laws, and Bill C-82 is an eunuch. The Government has eunuched lobbying registration, and it is a sad day for openness of government. It is a sad day for the transparency of government within a democracy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre.

• (1630)

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am glad to have the opportunity to put a few comments on record with regard to this legislation. I appreciate the impassioned plea that my colleague who spoke before me made for common sense when it came to lobbying legislation.

I must say that in listening to my colleague, the lobbying critic of the NDP, one is driven to the conclusion that this legislation is simply a sop to public opinion. It comes two and a half years after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised it in an open letter to the public. It is just a way to smooth over troubled waters. It is a piece of legislation without teeth, without real intent to control lobbying, without real intent to throw light on the whole question of lobbying. In listening to our critic, to the critic from the Liberal Party, and to the Minister as he presented his case for this legislation, I have come to the conclusion that this legislation is nothing more than a sop to public opinion, rather than being a real attempt to control lobbyists, a real attempt to bring to public light the activities of lobbyists, or a real attempt to reinforce the democratic traditions of this country. It is just a way for the Government to get out from under the reputation that it developed as a Government of scandal.

It is this conclusion that I want to examine by looking at the facts, at the substance of the legislation. If this conclusion stands up, it is a major condemnation of the Government.

The first limitation in this legislation which stands out is the one with regard to the kind of information that will be provided to the public. We on this side of the House and our spokespeople have said that the information is inadequate. Not only should the name of the lobbyist be made public, not only should the subject of their lobbying be made public, but the people they contact ought to be made public. I suppose that members of a Conservative Party, Members with a Conservative philosophical bent, might argue against a comprehensive provision of information by saying that it will just create another bureaucracy. My reply would be: Why bother with the regulation of lobbyists? Why bother with seeking to create something called a registry of lobbyists if it is not going to have teeth, if it is not going to in fact deliver the goods, if it is not going to provide the kind of information that is necessary if we are to control the activities of lobbyists?

Another inadequacy of this legislation is the fact that it does not provide the kind of information that people need if they want a true picture of what goes on in lobbying in this capital. The parliamentary committee made recommendations which highlighted the inadequacies of the legislation, which is to say, that we should not only have the name of the lobbyist but the subject that the lobbyist is lobbying about, and the contacts that the lobbyist is approaching.

It would be useful as well, if we are serious about registering lobbyists, for this legislation to require lobbyists to disclose the costs of their lobbying activities. Why not provide it by indicating how much they are spending in order to lobby the Government on a particular subject?

Would it not have been useful for the Canadian public to know, in particular all Canadians who used their democratic right to seek to influence the Government when it came to the generic drug legislation and their efforts to preserve the protection they had against sky-rocketing drug prices until the election of this Government, who was lobbying the Government? Who was scuttling that legislation which provided such a unique form of protection for Canadian consumers? Who was lobbying the Government? Who were they contacting in the Government? How much were they spending in that massive lobbying effort?

I want to note in brackets, so to speak, an article that I read in the paper the other day, dealing with the same subject. It concerned another country, Mexico. The Americans and the American pharmaceutical industry was laying a heavy trip on Mexico in the same area, saying: "Don't you dare do anything that will interfere with the operations of the pharmaceutical industry. Don't do anything that would impede their capacity to set whatever price they want to set for any drug that they should bring on the market".

The importance of that issue is not limited to Canada. It also has implications for the whole continent, and I would suggest the western world as well. Would it not have been useful if we had known how much money was being spent on lobbying when it came to the whole question of the generic drug industry? It is particularly useful to know those costs, because the public opinion polls showed that the public was in favour of the generic drug legislation on the books of this country. It raised a question about the Government's use of a popular piece of legislation that was saving Canadians money, a piece of legislation that was making sure that miracle drugs could be available to people at a reasonable cost. Why would a Government scuttle such legislation? Why would a Government tear the guts out of such legislation? That raises questions.

People must suspect that some pretty powerful interests have been leaning on the Government. There must have been some pretty effective lobbyists seeking to change the mind of this Government, seeking to push the Government in the direction of scuttling this legislation. We would like to know how much they spent on those efforts. Those Canadians who fought to preserve the legislation we had, which was unique in the world, had a right and a desire to know just what they were up against when they were fighting for its preservation, what kind of powerful interests were involved, and how much did they have to take off? That is one comment with regard to the whole inadequacy of this legislation, from the point of view of the information that it provides.

The reason that I am looking at this legislation is that people who have spoken before me have come to the conclusion—or at least their comments have lead me to that conclusion—that this legislation is not really intended to do anything effective about lobbying in Canada and that in fact it is window-dressing.

Let us look at what kind of information the legislation provides for Canadians. It does not provide—and it would be useful for us to know what was going on in any particular lobbying effort—is who is being paid to organize mass mailings.

• (1640)

Who is being paid to manage advertising campaigns directed at influencing government policy? As Members of Parliament we get enormous amounts of mail. We get so much that this House has seen it necessary to assign staff to individual Members of Parliament. In other jurisdictions, such as in Britain, Members of Parliament, for all practical purposes, do their own work. They answer their own mail; they write their own letters. In this country, because of the massive amount of written communication that we receive, we have found it necessary to hire staff, at least three paid employees in the offices of Members of Parliament, to assist in answering the mail. It would be interesting to know how much of that mail is an expression of the spontaneous opinion of ordinary Canadians; how much of it is a direct expression of grass roots democracy; how much of it is a real expression of public opinion and, on the other hand, how much of it is manufactured, how much of it is manipulated, and how much of it is self-serving.

It would have been useful in the generic drug debate for Members of Parliament to know whether the mail being received was something which had been arranged by a lobbyist. Did some lobbyists in Toronto, Ottawa, or Sudbury arrange for people to send in letters to Members of Parliament that called for the scuttling of the legislation, or was it a spontaneous expression? Information requiring the disclosure of names of those who are paid to organize mass mailings and who are paid to manage advertising campaigns would have thrown some light on the situation.

You might ask me, Mr. Speaker: Is it really practical for Governments to monitor all the activities of lobbyists? I must say that I do not know. It has not been done in this country yet. If we are going to bring forward legislation to register lobbyists, to give the public the feeling that we are keeping an eye on them, the legislation ought to be effective. We ought not to undertake legislative activities which are meaningless or simply window dressing.

I want to take a further indepth look, another peak, at the legislation to confirm if the conclusion that we have come to, namely, that this legislation is toothless and is simply a sop to public opinion rather than meant to control lobbyists. Another aspect of lobbying about which we have been informed is something called mapping. Apparently if you want to get something done in this city, you have to know more than a Member of Parliament, and more than just the House of Commons.

There are large government Departments in Ottawa. There are thousands of government employees. There are many managers and there are various kinds of central agencies through which the Government controls itself. Lobbyists are able to map out the way to get to the centre of power. If you have enough bucks to pay them, if you can afford the time and energy of these people who have learned to walk the maze of government decision making, you can get to the centre of power. Ordinary Canadians, if they come to Ottawa from, say, my riding and want to get a decision out of the Government, would come to myself as their Member of Parliament. That is legitimate, and I would do everything I could to help, but they could not hire an expert or someone who had spent perhaps their working life in the bureaucracy in Ottawa learning all the ins and outs, nor could they hire someone who had spent their working life supporting a political candidate who then becomes Prime Minister and, therefore, has a special insight on how decisions get made in Ottawa.

Why does this legislation fail to provide this kind of information, information that would tell us who is doing the mapping activity in Ottawa? Who leads those people who want to get something out of the Government through corridors of power? Who shows them the dark accesses to power that exist in this capital? Who shows them how to get to the real decision makers and how much are they paid? This kind of information is not available as a result of this legislation. I would say that the public will learn very little about lobbying activities from this legislation, and that is why I say it is a sop to public opinion. It is an effort for the Government to get away from the reputation that it has developed as a Government of scandal.

This legislation has loopholes. We all know the tax legislation has loopholes, but this legislation coming through today is like Swiss cheese; it has many holes.

We have here a two-tier system for the registration of lobbyists. Surely to goodness, if you are going to register lobbyists, you want to register them all and you want to treat them all the same and get the same information from everybody. You want to have a sense of fairness, and you want to know what is going on in all the lobbying activities in the capital. This Government has chosen, instead, to say: "Okay, we will ask for one set of information from one set of lobbyists and something different, something less, from another set of lobbyists".

The Tier II lobbyists are presented to us as the weak cousins, the poor cousins, of the lobbying industry. These are the guys who do not have to give as much information, I assume because they are the 80-pound weaklings on the beach. They will not be able to deliver a punch when it comes to getting a decision out of the Government. Who are these two-tier lobbyists? One is the Business Council on National Issues, BCNI. We have this alphabet soup of the lobbying world: BCNI, CGI, PJI, PAI, PMA, or PAM. It is a maze, but what is BCNI? It is an association, a group of the most powerful corporations in this country. This is corporate Canada. These are the largest companies in the country. They have got together in an organization called the Business Council on National Issues. These are no wimps, Mr. Speaker. The Minister may look like a wimp having presented such toothless legislation to this House, but BCNI is no wimp. This group convinced the Government to bring in the free trade proposal even though the issue was not mentioned in the last election.

Let me sum up. This legislation is full of loopholes. It is letting through the gate the most powerful lobbyists that operate in this capital—the Business Council on National Issues, the trade association, the Bankers' Association, and the Pharmaceutical Association. These are powerful groups which have had a real impact in this House and in this Parliament. These groups have convinced the Government, even though they did not tell the people so, to sign a trade deal with the American Government. These are the people who convinced the Government to scuttle the generic drug legislation and who convinced the Government to remove the protection ordinary Canadians had on drug prices. These people have been let through the gate without being asked the full range of information required of other lobbyists.

Because of the loopholes in this legislation we have to conclude that it is not really meant to control lobbyists. It is not really meant to throw the kind of light on lobbying that would inform the public. It is not really meant to enhance democracy. It is simply a sop to public opinion by a Government that was wallowing in scandals and desperate to get the negative news about it off the front pages of the newspapers.

This is damage control legislation. It is not meant to rein in the lobbyists or the most powerful interest groups in this country. It seeks to improve the image of the Government. It seeks to send out a message to the public that the Government is doing something about influence in the capital.

I have examined the facts and, having done so, I have to agree with the impassioned plea of my colleague who pointed out that this legislation did not deserve the support of this House. It is inadequate not only because it lets the most powerful slip through the net, but even because those little fish it catches do not have to supply adequate information. They are not required to tell us how much they are spending on lobbying, promoting letter writing campaigns, on mass advertising campaigns, or on mapping and leafing through the maze of government decision-making processes. This legislation is nothing other than a token gesture in an effort to make the public believe that the Government is concerned about the use and abuse of influence in the capital.

If the Government was really concerned about that, it would have taken seriously the recommendations of the committee that studied the issue. The committee said that if we wanted to throw light on the activities of lobbyists, if we wanted to enhance and protect democracy, then we had to have all possible information about the activities of all lobbyists.

I am sad but not surprised that after the Prime Minister promised tough lobbying registration two and a half years ago, we are getting a watered down piece of public relations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, when this Bill was in committee I tried to amend the legislation so that a registry for associations under Tier II would have to declare the name of the person lobbying, the employer, and the issue on which they were lobbying. The Minister huffed himself up and said: "Yes, that would be registering lobbying and we do not want to register lobbying; we want to register lobbyists". He is sitting there and, if I am not quoting him correctly, he can shake his head. It is obvious I am reporting it accurately.

Does the Hon. Member see any strength in that argument? Is there any logic to the Minister's argument that we are not out to register lobbying and that is why he would not require disclosure of the issue on which the Tier II lobbyists are lobbying?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I guess this is part of the Alice in Wonderland quality of this legislation. We want to know who the evil doer is, but we do not want to know anything about the evil doing. We want to hear no evil, see no evil, and we sure do not want to register it.

If any Government is going to throw some real light on lobbying in this city, we need to know more than who is doing the lobbying. We have to know who they are doing it for. We have to know what they are trying to get out of the system. If you are here on behalf of the pharmaceutical industry, what is it that you want? The public has a right to know that. We have to know how much you are spending to do it. How big a budget do you have?
