Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the minister what is the position of this matter. Has the government power to increase the capital by order in council, or is it necessary for the company to come to parliament with a Bill to increase the capital? The minister who passed this order in council must understand the situation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not in a position to say whether it is necessary. I have been of the opinion that it was not necessary, but I cannot say absolutely. It is a question that has been raised at the moment and I would have to look into it.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister get the information and give it to the House at a later stage?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. I promised the hon. member for South York to have his entire remarks investigated, or read carefully to-morrow, and give a reply to all the questions he raised.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—Capital—Lachine Canals, to complete wharf and basins, $150,000.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). This is a revote; $300,000 was voted last year for this work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was there anything done under this vote?

Mr. SPROULE. Would it be out of place to ask the minister to give us some information with regard to the government's policy on the enlargement of the Welland canal or the building of the Georgian Bay canal? The country has watched these questions with a great deal of interest and I am sure that a great many members of the House would be pleased to hear what the government's policy is. The promise was made during the election that some day the Welland canal would be enlarged and the people were led to expect that operations would be commenced in the near future. Others think that the implied promise was given that the Georgian Bay canal would be commenced soon. It would be very interesting to the country to know what the government's policy is.

Mr. GRAHAM. I never made any promise that either of these works would be done immediately. I have expressed the opinion in this House and reiterated it in the country that the position that Canada holds this year in the grain trade would be more than maintained if we enlarged the Welland canal. Last year this House voted a certain sum of money to make surveys, and I will have to ask for the voting of another certain sum to complete these surveys. I have abiding faith in the power of the development of our waterways to cheapen our transportation, and I believe that it will not be many years when either one or both of these things will be done if Canada is to hold her place. But, at the present time, I am not in a position to state what the policy of the government is. The estimate and report of the Georgian Bay canal scheme are in the Department of Public Works, and they have been laid before parliament. The report of the engineers on the Welland canal cannot be brought down until the survey is completed, and that will take perhaps another year. We are going on steadily with the work, and I am asking for another appropriation to complete this. By that time I hope I will be able to give the House an estimate of what it would cost to complete the enlargement of the Welland canal, or to build it anew in part. My own opinion is that it would maintain the trade in the carrying of grain by water from the west to the east and do its share of carrying the package freight from the east to the west. Notwithstanding the fact that the State of New York has voted one hundred million dollars for the enlargement of the Erie canal, experts tell me that the Welland canal, if enlarged to take the larger class of vessels from Duluth and Fort William down to the end of lake navigation, Kingston, Brockville or Prescott, we can get a rate for the carriage of grain that will be less than any rate that can be obtained by way of the Erie canal.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed during the elections remarks attributed to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) to the effect that he had the assurance that if the government were returned to power again, they would at an early date commence the enlargement of the Welland canal. I was somewhat curious to know what foundation in fact these remarks really had, and to that end I put the query to the Minister of Railways and Canals. But, I see that he rather fights shy of the question, and is not as desirous now of leaving the impression on the country that it will be commenced at an early date as his candidate was when such a statement was going to get votes. I presume that something of the kind was carried on in the campaign along the proposed route of the Georgian Bay canal. I thought I saw some remarks by some of the candidates to the same effect, and I wondered then whether they had any inside information which justified them in making the statements that they did. I think it is well that we should be frank with the country, and it is equally correct that the ministers should be frank with us. I do not think that members of this House, when talking to the country, are justified in going beyond the information given to the House, because I do not think it is proper for the government to give any private information to any private member of parliament. I think the government should first give their policy to the country through the House. That is the duty of the ministers, and that is what is expected of them, and if it were the invariable practice there would be less credence given to such random statements as we see in the press from time to time when it is important to leave the impression upon the minds of the people that if a certain political party are returned to power wonderful things will be accomplished with regard to works in which they are interested. I do not see the hon. member for Welland in his place to-night; if he had been here I should have liked to have his explanation of it.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister kindly give us a fuller explanation with reference to the work that is proposed to complete in connection with the Lachine canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to construct the wharf and two basins on the north side of the canal to afford better facilities for shippers.

Mr. AMES. At what point?

Mr. GRAHAM. At Cote St. Paul.

Mr. J. D. REID. On the government's own property or on somebody else's?

Mr. GRAHAM. On our own property.

Mr. AMES. Has this work been partially done already?

Mr. GRAHAM. The work is just let and the only money expended to date has been for the purchase of cement. It was got by tender.

Mr. J. D. REID. At what date was the contract signed?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some little time ago.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who are the contractors?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Canadian General Development Company. Five tenders were received.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand it, this vote was given a year ago and this is simply a revote. Last year we were told the work had to be proceeded with at once and $300,000 was voted, and now we are told no work was done. Is it possible it was placed in the estimates last year to lead the people to think that $300,000 would be spent before the election? I suppose the tenders were called for about election time?

Mr. GRAHAM. This work has nothing to do with the elections. If it were to have any influence on the elections I suppose we would have let the contract and had the men at work on it weeks before the election.

Mr. J. D. REID. You could have promised it.

Mr. GRAHAM. Promises don't go very far in this age. The session closed late last year and the money was not available until prorogation and the contract was not let until later.

Mr. AMES. Last year $300,000 was voted and this year you are asking a revote of $150,000, leading to the inference that $150,000 was spent last year.

Mr. GRAHAM. Following the usual practice we took a vote for $300,000 last year, which was expected to complete the entire work. This year we expect we will only be able to spend $150,000 and hence we ask for that sum.

Mr. AMES. Your original intention was to spend $300,000 in one year, and now you have decided to spend $150,000 in each of two years.

Mr. GRAHAM. If I followed my own inclination I would put in the original estimates the entire amount the work is expected to cost so that every one would know it, and that done I would take a vote for the money we expected to spend that year. In this case we have only spent a small amount for the purchase of cement and we are asking for $150,000, and next year we will ask for the additional $150,000.

Mr. AMES. That is exactly what I said you had done.

Mr. HUGHES. Is not the explanation that the order has been issued to economize during the coming year? At a stage in the history of the country when the ordinary business industries are more or less depressed the government is going to adopt the policy of cutting down the national expenditure in every department. I have always opposed such a policy on the part of the government, whether Liberal or Conservative. When the ordinary business industries of the country are depressed is the very time when the government should give the country the benefit of its credit and enter extensively into the construction of national works for the development of the country. Then, when the business interests of the country are prospering, it is time for the government to stay its hand in expenditure. I believe the government is seriously to blame for cutting down its expenditures in view of the depression which existed last year and which is pretty sure to exist this coming year. If work is actually necessary for the development of the country the money should be expended now.

Mr. MONK. The Lachine canal referred to in this vote is in my constituency. The wharf accommodation is entirely insufficient for the immense traffic at that particular point; the basins are too small and accidents are continually happening there and at the Cote St. Paul bridge. There is therefore absolute necessity for additional wharf accommodation at that place and also for the enlargement of the basins. The work was projected a very long time ago and it is only now that it is being carried out.

Mr. AMES. The estimates state that this $150,000 is to complete wharf and basins, but as the minister says it will cost $300,000 altogether. Is it not misleading to use the words 'to complete?'

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the word 'complete' is out of place there.

Mr. SPROULE. It has always been the practice to show in one column of the estimates the amount of money voted the previous year and in another column to show the revote so that the House would know how much had been spent during the year. The changed form of these estimates is an innovation which leads to confusion and which gives a just ground for complaint. The present form in which the estimate is put tends to confuse the members of the House as to the amount of money expended and the amount needed to complete the work. A return to the old form is advisable. In addition, I would like to know who are the officers of this Canadian Improvement Company—the president, the secretary and the directors—and who are the sureties.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is an incorporated company. It is not possible for me at present to give that information, but I can ascertain who the members of the company are. These companies have to put up as a deposit a percentage on the contract. In this case there were five tenders and the lowest tender got the contract.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like also to ask the minister when it became the policy of the department to charge repairs to capital account. I notice that the second item here is to stop leaks. Is it the custom of the department to charge this to capital account?

Mr. GRAHAM. These are leaks which have existed in the north bank for some time, very dangerous leaks. It is really a new concrete wall that we are putting up and it will close up the bank.

Mr. BARR. Where did the government get the cement?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was all purchased by tender.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice a separate item here for the testing of cement. Has that been customary? I thought that was done by regular salaried officials of the department.

Mr. GRAHAM. We test the cement for our own works. These men are paid by the year to do this work, and this is the same item we had last year.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the minister tell us from whom he purchased the cement, the quantity purchased, and the rate per barrel?

Mr. GRAHAM. This cement is all bought by tender. I may say that cement is cheaper now than we have ever had it before. This is bought from the Vulcan Company in Montreal.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does the Vulcan Company manufacture cement, or are they middlemen?

Mr. GRAHAM. They manufacture.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval). There are two manufacturers of cement in that part of the island of Montreal that constitutes the riding of Laval: One is the Vulcan Portland Cement Company and the other is the Lakefield Portland Cement Company. They are situated about two miles apart.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Which company got the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Vulcan Company.

An hon. MEMBER. It is a Tory concern.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is the Lakefield Company a Tory concern?

Mr. C. A. WILSON. No, the Lakefield Company is a better concern for the government than the other company.

Mr. GRAHAM. This cement is purchased by tender, and the contract is given to the lower tenderer without any variation.

Mr. BARR. How many barrels were bought from the Vulcan Company?

Mr. GRAHAM. 20,000 barrels at $1.62, f.o.b. at the works. I may say that the bags returned will make a reduction of forty cents a barrel.

Mr. OSLER. I think the House will remember that a few years ago the government went into a speculation of buying cement in anticipation of contracts, and bought 30,000 barrels that turned out to be absolutely useless. I do not know what system the government had then or what system they have now of testing the cement, or whether this cement has been tested so thoroughly that there is no doubt about it. I do not understand why the government should buy cement in anticipation of the contract. Who were the inspectors?

Mr. GRAHAM. One of our staff. We have a rigid inspection of our cement.

Mr. SPROULE. Has that cement been delivered?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was delivered f. o. b. at the works.

Mr. BARR. Where is it now?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is in our own sheds at Montreal, right near the works.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What is the next lowest tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not that information, but I can assure my hon. friend that the lowest tenderer got the work.

Mr. AMES. The point raised by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is of sufficient importance to make it necessary to take a few moments to discuss it, and that is the point of charging these items to capital. Just consider the position we are in from a financial point of view. In the year 1908-9 we shall spend probably every dollar of our revenue on current expense, and every dollar that we add to capital account this year will be borrowed, say at three and a half per cent, on loans not due for fifty years yet to come. We are borrowing this money without making any provision for a sinking fund and are arranging that the third generation after us shall repay it. Is it just to them that we should charge 'stopping leaks in the Lachine canal' to capital? Look over the list and you will see the same thing occurring everywhere repairing slopes and all that. Should these things be charged to capital?

Mr. GRAHAM. Certainly.

Mr. AMES. And building wharfs? We are building wharfs all through the maritime provinces and elsewhere and charging them to income, while here we are paying for a wharf from capital account. I submit that any money invested in capital account should be expended on something permanent, something that will stand for fifty years from now. It is not fair to put burdens on future generations if they are to have none of the advantages connected therewith. We ought to keep our public works in good repair, but we should do that without charging the expense to capital account and borrowing the money to do it and making that money repayable fifty years from now.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. I quite agree with the hon. member from St. Antoine that the leaks in the Lachine canal should be repaired. I am not an expert in that work, but we are manufacturing cement in the riding I have the honour to represent, and I do not see why the hon. member from St. Antoine should ask questions about these tenders, provided that, according to the judgment of the minister, the contracts were granted in the public interest. In a few days from now, perhaps a few hours, the government will be asked whether some repairs will be made to the wharf at Pointe aux Trembles; and I do not see any reason why those two factories in Laval county should not get the contracts for cement, provided their tenders be the lowest, or at any rate be judged by the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Railways as being the ones which should be accepted in the public interest. It is certainly absolutely necessary that those works on the Lachine canal, which are in a condition menacing ruin, should be repaired. That is my policy, and I hardly think that the hon. member from St. Antoine division will venture to criticise it.

Mr. AMES. This question is a very important one and might as well be tested at this point as at any other. I would move that the item to stop leaks on the north bank of the Lachine canal at Cote St. Paul be charged to income and not to capital.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is springing something new on the House. We are simply following in this matter the same practice which has prevailed for years both under his friends and ours. It is a practice which is perfectly defensible. The canals give no revenue, as a few years ago we made them free, and consequently there is no revenue account against which to charge these items. It is absolutely necessary to protect the walls and it is for that purpose we are asking that vote. Then I doubt if my hon. friend has any right to make the motion he did. This is a question involving expenditure. He could move to strike the item out or reduce it, but not to increase it or charge it against any other account. All he can do, if he does not approve of the item is to take the responsibility of moving that it be struck out. He cannot have it charged against income account by a vote. No member of the government could do that.

Mr. AMES. The question I have raised is one that can be just as well discussed and threshed out on some other item at some other time, so that I have no objection to withdrawing my amendment at this moment. But I shall bring the matter up again in the form of a resolution, so as to put on record our opinion with regard to charging the repairs against capital account.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not see why this item should be pressed when we do not know the amounts of the different tenders and who the tenderers really are.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I understand the minister to say that this cement was purchased by tender at $1.62 per barrel. I want to refer to what took place here the other night. I then asked:

How comes it that the honourable minister paid $2.50 per barrel for 85 barrels of cement bought from Kirby & Co., when he could buy that cement at Hull for $1.80.

To that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) replied:

That was but a small quantity and no tenders were called for.

I then said: You could purchase it by retail at $1.65. This item proves what I said the other evening. The Minister of Railways purchased this cement by tender at $1.62, but the Minister of Public Works went to some of his political friends and purchased 85 barrels at $2.50, showing fifty per cent profit.

Mr. J. D. REID. From whom was the cement purchased?

Mr. GRAHAM. The bulk of it came from Montreal. My hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) wants to know the particulars of this contract. I have already told him that it is a schedule contract. I can give him the details of the schedule if he wishes.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. The hon. minister (Mr. Graham) must know that this is not an answer. Even though this is a schedule contract, he must know the quantities and he must have moneyed it all out or he would not know what vote to ask for. Now, a word with reference to the charge he makes that it has been the habit of his department from time immemorial to charge such expenditures as this to capital account. I take issue with the hon. gentleman and deny that the case is as he says. The money spent in repairs on the canals or in inspecting cement cannot fairly be charged to capital. And, as to the general question of our right to deal with this matter as proposed in the motion which has been withdrawn, we have not the right to move that an estimate should be increased, but we have the right to say whether an estimate should be charged to capital or to current account, and without the consent of the Governor in Council. Now, I understand that $150,000 has been expended and that $150,000 is a revote.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, we had already discussed that before my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) came in. It is a little confusing as it is presented. But, as I explained, we had a vote last year for $300,000; parliament sat until late in the season and we did not let this contract until December. Consequently only $40,000 out of the $300,000 has been spent. This year we expect to spend only $150,000.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. If the hon. minister has entered into a contract, why does he ask for only $150,000? Suppose the contractor completes the work, will he wait for a year for his pay?

Mr. GRAHAM. We expect that we will be able to spend only $150,000 this season.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What does the contract money out at ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave all the information with regard to this matter when the item was before the committee last year. I did not suppose that these details would be required to-night, so I have not these details before me. But I have sent for them and will be able to give them soon.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. When is the work to be finished under the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. May 1, 1910.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. At that time the minister will require the whole amount of the contract. Where will he get the money after the amount of this estimate has been spent?

Mr. GRAHAM. From parliament, I hope; there will be a session in the meantime.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does the hon. minister intend to follow the practice of the Department of Public Works and, at the end of the year, ask for fresh tenders for the uncompleted work, or is this contract for the whole work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope that no person will be so silly as to take the objection which was taken against the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) in the last parliament. He proposed to extend a contract, but a member of the opposition strongly urged that he should ask for new tenders. The result was that it cost the country over $100,000 more than it would have cost. The contract in the case now before us is for the completion of the work.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I strongly endorse the remarks of the hon. member for St. Antoine with reference to charging this amount to capital. If the department is charging repairs to capital, it ought to deduct 5 per cent annually to provide a fund for those repairs. I am rather sorry the motion was not pressed to charge this to current account.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is practically not a work of repair, though it will have that effect. The leak in this bank has been repaired from time to time out of current account, but now we are building a new concrete wall in front of the bank. I might say that it is practically a new bank.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The deputy minister has had time to figure out the total amount of the contract. I do not wish to do the figuring. There are officials in the department who are supposed to have this work finished, and the minister, of all others, is the man who ought to know the amounts before he lets the contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. I know that my hon. friends opposite do not wish to be unreasonable. I have explained why I have not these details before me at the moment. I gave the details last year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. But that explanation was merely of an estimate, whereas now a contract has been made.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. There is another anomaly here. The hon. member tells us that $40,000 has been expended under this contract for cement—the cement has been bought and paid for. And yet he asks also $2,500 for the purpose of testing this cement.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are constantly buying cement for the repair of the canals, and we have to pay the salaries of the men who test that cement.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. You don't mean to say that you charge to capital account testing cement for the purpose of repairing a lock?

Mr. GRAHAM. The staff are charged to capital account. Just as the building of a cement wall is charged to capital, so testing the cement to build that wall is rightly charged to capital account.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. But all the cement he requires for this work on the Lachine canal, except for repair of the locks, has been bought already and paid for, and all the testing must apply to the material for repairing the lock and the wall; yet he charges that amount to capital account.

Mr. GRAHAM. This cement is merely a bagatelle to all the cement we use on the St. Lawrence canals.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In case tenders were called for and the lowest tender was accepted last year, why does the government buy the cement? Why does not the contractor buy the cement?

Mr. GRAHAM. We always supply the cement. As the ex-minister will agree, we want the very best quality of cement, and we test it. We make it a practice that our tenders shall never include the cost of cement; that we supply ourselves.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the customary way of testing cement that goes into public works? I thought it was tested week by week and day by day, because sometimes you will get a consignment of cement a part of which may be very good and another part very poor.

Mr. GRAHAM. We keep a staff of men constantly at work doing nothing else but testing cement. We test the cement as it is received, and also as it is used. We also test it for its keeping qualities where it is stored.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand you employ other men besides those employed in testing cement, and how is it that you charge a portion of the work to this vote and another portion to some other vote? What becomes of the contention of the minister that we cannot pay this out of revenue because it should come under capital account?

Mr. GRAHAM. The whole work is in connection with capital account, and the expenditure ought to be charged, I think, to capital account.

Mr. SPROULE. For re-testing the cement?

Mr. GRAHAM. We charge testing the cement to capital account.

Mr. SPROULE. But there are several employees who are paid by salary and who test cement regularly.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have an engineer, Mr. Lordly, in charge of this work, and he is paid entirely out of capital account, whatever work he is engaged on.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. There is another peculiar thing. You purchase $40,000 worth of cement a year before you commence to work. What were the peculiar circumstances that required the purchase of the cement at that particular time? In what month did you purchase it?

Mr. GRAHAM. We want to have our cement ready so that the contractors cannot raise any question that we detain them. This cement was purchased recently, and the delivery was completed only a few days ago.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Perhaps the minister will tell us when it was paid for? Was it last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Part of it was, and the balance will be paid in this year.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When was the last payment made?

Mr. GRAHAM. $32,400 was paid in January last past.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. When were the tenders opened?

Mr. GRAHAM. Very shortly after they were received. The tenders are marked by two officials and placed in a safe.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Can the minister tell us when they were received?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot remember.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was it before the elections?

Mr. GRAHAM. They had nothing to do with the elections. But I can get that information.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think the item ought to stand.

Mr. GRAHAM. It was asked for in the usual way, and given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I cannot understand why he should purchase cement in the month of October for contracts to be performed in the following year.

Mr. GRAHAM. The explanation given by my deputy is that the contractors expected to do some work this fall, and they kept urging us to get the cement. But they did not go on with their work until we had the cement a little ahead of time.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Did the minister say that the contract was let in January?

Mr. GRAHAM. We were going to let the contract earlier than that. The contractors urged that we should be ready with the cement so that they would not be detaind. Contractors are always ready to find fault and to complain that they are being delayed. We preferred to get it ahead of time. The date of the contract was October 24.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the contract with the Canadian Development Company. That is not the contract for the cement. I have sent for the cement contract to give my hon. friend the date.

Mr. J. D. REID. Let the item stand until it comes.

Mr. HUGHES. Did we understand the minister to say that he would ascertain the names of the officers of this development company which received the large contract?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the minister find out the name of the president of the Lakefield Portland Cement Company?

Mr. GRAHAM. The contract with the Canadian General Development Company is signed by Beaudry Leman.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Surely the hon. gentleman would not enter into a contract with a company unless the contract was signed by the proper officers. I understand it has to be under the seal of the company and signed by the secretary or the president. Surely my hon. friend has no right to enter into a contract without the signatures of those officers.

Mr. GRAHAM. That would depend on the by-laws of the company. It is signed by the head of the company and bears the corporate seal of the company.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the name?

Mr. GRAHAM. Beaudry Leman.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. That is a well known name in the province of Quebec. He is an engineer. He is also a great nationalist, a friend of Mr. Bourassa.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will send this contract over to my hon. friend opposite. There is the signature of the secretary that I cannot decipher.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think we should have from the minister a list of the different tenderers showing the amount of each tender. There were five tenders and if we had that in detail it would go on Hansard. If the minister had come down and made the statement that last year there was $300,000 voted for this work, we have spent $40,000 of this amount for cement, tenders were called on such and such a date by public advertisement in the newspapers, and a contract was awarded on such a date to whatever firm got it, there would have been no trouble about it. I have been listening to ascertain what the position is and I cannot understand who the five tenderers were, what each tender amounted to or what the date of the calling for tenders for cement was. All we want is that little explanation and I for one undertake to say that the item will go through.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no objection at all to bring down the name of the tenderers. I do not think that my hon. friend as a business man will say that in connection with each of these items, unless the matter is questioned, we should give the tender of every man.

Mr. J. D. REID. We are entitled to it.

Mr. GRAHAM. The House has never asked for it but I will bring it over.

Mr. J. D. REID. It has been the custom.

Mr. GRAHAM. Where there has been any question as to the contract having been awarded to the lowest tender, of course, the tenders have been asked for. I will bring it over if my hon. friend wants it, but my experience in this House and in another House for ten years has been that unless there was a question as to the contract being given to the lowest tenderer these particulars have not been asked for owing to business reasons that any man will realize in a moment. But, if my hon. friend wants it I will bring down all the tenders although business men do not like it.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister states that it has not been the custom in this House, but at any time we wanted any details with respect to any item the minister has always been able to supply them. We have the right to know the names of tenderers and in so far as I am concerned I want to know them now. The minister feels annoyed because I do want them.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, I am not annoyed.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the minister had a statement with regard to every item I am sure that the estimates would go through very easily. I do not think it is fair to ask us to pass these items in the way that the minister is doing to-night without offering to give us the slightest detail. The minister said that he gave all the details about this particular item last year, but I have been trying to find the details in 'Hansard'. They would be in 'Hansard' if they had been given.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. There are a lot of men here now who were not here last year.

Mr. J. D. REID. I cannot find any thing at all in 'Hansard' as far as this item is concerned. As my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) states, there are a great many new men in the House and they are entitled to the details which were given last year.

Mr. HUGHES. The original vote was $300,000, the minister has paid $40,000 for cement and he is spending $150,000. Does that include the $40,000 for cement?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. HUGHES. Then the minister has a large sum of money voted that will not be expended for two years. Yet, he has purchased all the cement and is going to keep it stored for two years.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is not enough cement for the work.

Mr. HUGHES. Then there is a large quantity of cement bought and it is going to be stored until next summer to carry on this work. I again impress on the minister if this work is necessary he should expend every dollar of the money voted each year. The time for the government to stand to their guns and come to the relief of the people is when there is general depression in the business industries of the country. Men are out of employment all over Canada to-day, and the policy of the government is to throw more men on the streets and leave more mouths unfed by cutting down expenditure. If I had the power I would move to amend that vote.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not the power either.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister can take steps to get it done and I cannot.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Was the cement purchased by tender last year ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, we always purchase our cement by tender.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. The Canadian Portland Cement Company sold you 5,000 barrels last year at $2.62 a barrel; that is a higher price than you are paying this year?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. It is a dollar a barrel more. You also purchased 2,500 barrels at $2.40 a barrel from another cement company; were these contracts let by tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. All our cement contracts are let by tender and we take the lowest tender in every case. That price is gross, and we get 10 cents per bag for the four bags in each barrel, or 40 cents.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Portland cement should be supplied actually when it is needed as it depreciates greatly by keeping. The minister has purchased $40,000 worth of cement on a $300,000 contract and he will have to keep it a year or two before it is actually used.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have just got delivery now and they will start using it on the 1st of April.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. The half of that cement will be used this year and the rest of it in a year and a half, and if it is in bags it will be perfectly useless at the end of that time.

Mr. GRAHAM. There won't be a bag of it left then.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister said this contract was entered into in January, but the contract is signed on the 24th of October. It will take me some time to figure out how the prices in the contract compare with the current prices and whether the contract has been really let to the lowest tenderer or not. I ask the minister to let the item stand so that we can have access to the contract in his department or somewhere else to-morrow.

Mr. GRAHAM. In order to give my hon. friend the information he wants I must ask that the original contract be given back. If you take that away we will have no contract at all.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I merely wish to have a look at it in the morning.

Mr. GRAHAM. You can see a copy of the contract any time you like.

Mr. AMES. What percentage on the total amount of the contract does the security represent?

Mr. GRAHAM. Usually 10 per cent.

Mr. AMES. The security furnished here is $23,698 so that the tender would be for $236,698 and the time for completion is May, 1910. We are only asked to vote $150,000 of that amount, which leaves a balance of $86,000. The $150,000 we are now asked to vote is for the fiscal year 1910, which expires on the 31st of March, 1910. Therefore, this contractor is held to complete his work by the 1st of May, 1910, but he will have to expend some $86,950 in the month of April next. On the face of it your contract is an impossibility taken in connection with the present vote, unless you intend to extend the time for the completion of the contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. We will have another session of parliament before the expiration of the contract. In April the canal is unwatered and he would do a large share of his work then. However, it is seldom that these contractors absolutely complete such contracts on time.

Mr. AMES. Is there a forfeit in this case?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think there is a penalty in any of these cases, but they can only get an extension of time by order in council. Notwithstanding what has been said by my hon. friend who has hit the nail on the head fairly well, I may say that we do not want this year to expend any more money than we think is absolutely necessary.

Mr. HUGHES. Now we are getting at the reason.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, my hon. friend struck the nail on the head as he quite often does—if the nail is in the right place. This year we believe not more than $150,000 can be expended, but if more is expended it can be provided for next year as we will have a session of parliament before the final estimate will be passed.

Mr. HUGHES. Then we are to understand that the government intends to add further to the depression throughout the Dominion by curtailing works that are necessary to be carried on in the interests of the country? We are going to have more men unfed and homes unprovided for owing to the fact that the government have brought a period of hard times on the country.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend does not agree with some of his friends, the hon. member for North Toronto, for instance, that it is a time for economy.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I am not speaking of economy. I am speaking of the conduct of public affairs. If the government wanted to be economical, they had plenty of opportunity during the years of plenty in the business of the country. This year and last year are lean years, and the government are in a panic and are hauling in their sails and turning on the labour market of the country thousands of unemployed men still further to increase the depression.

Mr. M. MARTIN (St. Marys). Does the hon. gentleman approve of the minister buying these 20,000 barrels of cement?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Not one barrel of that cement has been made since the minister gave the contract. It was old stock on hand. The cement men saw the depression coming, and they made a slick deal with the department in anticipation of it. Half of that cement will be useless when the works go on.

Mr. M. MARTIN. The hon. gentleman must remember that that cement had to be bought on account of all the permanent works being done at Montreal. Last year we made twenty miles of new streets, and we are going to make more next year. The minister had to buy the cement ahead to get it in time. The hon. gentleman says the government should give work. Well, the minister, by buying that cement, gave work to that factory.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the minister the information I asked for, as to the date when the tenders were received?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have been unable to get it this evening; but I will bring it, with the names of all the tenderers, in the morning. In the meantime the item may stand.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Can the minister tell me whether the $40,000 worth of cement is now lying at the factory or at the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is in our storehouse in Montreal.

Mr. AMES. There is just one more element of danger which the minister's remarks bear, and it is this. He speaks of having given a definite contract of $238,000, and he now asks us to vote only $150,000, and he says that probably the contractors will go on and do more work than the appropriation will cover. Is that going to be the fixed policy of the government—to intimate to the contractors that we are having less money voted than we expect to spend this year, but that they can go on over-expending? I see in that an element of great danger. I hope the contractors will be given to understand that the government is responsible only for the moneys that parliament votes, and that until parliament votes a further sum they are taking a great risk in going beyond the amount voted.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES

Mr. GRAHAM. We do that in the case of all contracts. We have notified all concerned that we want to keep the expenditure within the appropriations this year, and that if they go on and rush the work and over-run the amount voted, they do it at their own risk, because they cannot get any more cash until parliament votes it at another session.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister says that he does not see the object of bringing down the tenders except to show that the contract was let to the lowest tenderer. There is another reason why we desire to see the tenders. These tenders are sometimes made upon schedule prices. For instance, one tender may put rock excavation below another, and some other item, such as cement work, higher; and the engineer, in going over the various tenders, is able to tell the government which tender in the main is the lowest. It is interesting to see how he reaches his conclusion by comparing one tender with another. For that reason it is absolutely necessary to know what the schedule prices of various tenders are; otherwise one could not make an intelligent comparison. I understand that the hon. minister is satisfied to bring down all the tenders.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend wants them. There is not a man in the House who is not an engineer who can figure them out. We have an engineer in the department who 'moneys out' these tenders. I will bring them down, though it has not been customary to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say, as one who has been in this House for a great many years, that it has been the custom.

Item allowed to stand.

Department of Public Printing and Stationery, $88,399.50.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the hon. minister explain that item?

Mr. MURPHY. The committee will observe that there is a difference of $36,824.50 between the total amount of these estimates for 1909-10 and the total amount of the same estimates for 1908-09. This difference is accounted for by an amount of $34,470.50, which represents the salaries paid to the employees brought under the Civil Service Act of last session and the remainder, namely, $2,354, represents the increases which have been granted the staff for the incoming year. The gentlemen who have been brought in from the outside, and whose salaries represent the greater amount of this increase, are as follows: One in the second division of subdivision A, who has been put in charge of what is called the franchise room. Then in the second division of subdivision B, two gentlemen have been brought from the outside service. In former years these were paid out of the bulk sum voted for wages for the Printing Bureau, from what is known as the King's Printer's advance account .One of these occupied the position of chief foreman and the other of entry clerk. All these gentlemen were brought in at the salaries they were formerly receiving. There have been no new appointments, but simply a change in the status of the former employees, all of whom were in the outside service.

Mr. GEORGE. TAYLOR. There is one new appointment.

Mr. MURPHY. There is a position there which has not been filled. In the third division, subdivision A, there have been eight clerks transferred. These gentlemen occupied various positions in the lithographic room, accountant's office, delivery office, and advertising and corresponding branch. Then there have been seventeen transferred to the third division, subdivision B. These are clerks now performing different duties in the stationery branch, accountant's branch, correspondent's branch, storekeeper's office and acting in secretarial positions. Then the last group representing the transfer of eleven from the outside to the inside service, is made up of the messengers and packers who were employed in the Bureau. The other positions, to which my hon. friend from Leeds referred, is that of Superintendent of Printing. The salaries are the same as these gentlemen formerly received plus the increases they are entitled to automatically.

Mr. HAGGART. Last year for the same service, there was only $75,000 required, and this year you require $81,000. Why this increase?

Mr. MURPHY. There have been no increases except the statutory increases under the new Act.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Will those amount to $6,000?

Mr. TAYLOR. There is $1,000 in Deputy Minister's salary.

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, that is a statutory increase.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. The total amount required for the outside service taken in is $31,000. The total amount expended last year for the inside service was $31,000. That makes $75,000 and you are asking $81,000, or an increase of nearly $6,000. How much would the statutory increases amount to? What increases were given the different officers, who are they, and why were they entitled to an increase?

Mr. MURPHY. I could best explain that by going over the list of the gentlemen brought in.

Mr. HUGHES. Start with the Deputy Minister.

Mr. MURPHY. The Deputy Minister is Mr. C. H. Parmelee and he receives an increase of $1,000, which is a statutory increase.

Mr. HUGHES. Who is the first assistant to the King's Printer?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Wm. McMahon. Then in the first division, subdivision A, the gentleman whom my hon. friend from North Victoria inquired about was placed in that division.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not see any vote for 1908-9 for an assistant to the King's Printer?

Mr. MURPHY. That is a new title given Mr. McMahon, the Superintendent of Printing, and he receives $2,900 per year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I understand that this Printing Bureau is paid for all the work it does for all the other departments at current rates?

Mr. MURPHY. That is my understanding.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Yet notwithstanding it shows a deficit of from $40,000 to $50,000. Why should it not be self-sustaining?

Mr. MURPHY. I do not challenge the statement, but shall inquire into it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Printers throughout the country cannot understand why a bureau which receives contracts from all the other departments at fat prices should not be self sustaining. I am told that a lot of the work is duplicated. For instance, the work of setting up English is frequently given to French printers who are not very conversant with the language, and the setting of French work is given to English printers, who suffer under a like disability, and consequently the work of each has practically to be done over again. This has been brought to my attention by several practical printers, who do not understand how this department needs a vote when it has good fat contracts for the printing of the several departments of the government.

Mr. MURPHY. I have not before heard the complaint to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. A. Currie) gives currency. I shall make inquiries, and, perhaps, at a later stage, I shall be able to inform the hon. gentleman and the committee definitely as to whether the statements made to the hon. gentleman have any foundation in fact. I may, however, point out that the Printing Bureau does a great deal of work outside of the departments for which it is not paid—the issuing of 'Hansard', the printing of special reports, and a great many other things of that kind and these may possibly represent the amount to which the hon. gentleman refers. As to the duplication of work of which the hon. gentleman has heard, I think that in all probability on inquiry it will turn out to be in large measure unfounded.

Mr. SPROULE. What becomes every year of the money we vote for 'Hansard'.

Mr. MURPHY. It is true there is a vote for 'Hansard'.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Then, why try to give the impression that this item is virtually to pay for 'Hansard'? If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Murphy) will ascertain from the foreman of his printing department how much money was expended for straight setting and how much for corrections, he will soon ascertain whether I am correct or not. And I will ask him to bring that information down before we pass the item. For there is not a newspaper man in Canada who is not interested in this matter, especially those who run job offices. They would like to have a share of the government's business, and cannot see why the government maintain a bureau at great expense to do work that might as well be done outside.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. I do not know that I clearly understand the explanation the hon. minister tries to make. The amount voted for 1908-1909 was $44,475. The amount asked for next year is $81,299.50. The hon. minister says that he is paying out of this vote amounts which formerly were paid out of outside votes and that he is paying the exact amount of salaries that those taken in from outside had on September 1 last. The foot-note shows that the votes for those in the outside service for 1908-1909 was $28,722.83, with increases under the Act from September 1 1908, to March 31, 1909, of $1,154.78. The statutory increases only amount to $1,200. So, we have a deficiency still to be accounted for something like $6,000, of which $1,200 is taken up as the minister says.

Mr. MURPHY. No, $2,354, as appears in the estimates.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Does that include the $150 proposed to be added to the salary of each civil servant?

Mr. MURPHY. No, nor does it include $1,000 increase to the deputy minister under the Act of last year.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Then, there is still $3,000 left.

Mr. MURPHY. Speaking subject to correction as to the exact figures, my understanding is that whatever difference there may be is represented by increases to these gentlemen brought in.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the hon. minister kindly point out to me in the Auditor General's Report the details of expenditure for last year in this department?

Mr. MURPHY. I have not the report at hand.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I have two volumes of it here.

Mr. MURPHY. Unless they appear in those volumes—

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. They do not, and that is one reason why I think the item should be allowed to stand.

Mr. CROTHERS. Will the minister give us the name of the officer for whom this $2,900 is provided, and tell us whether he was in the service before or not? If he was in the service, from what position did he retire and what salary was he receiving? If he was not in the service, what special qualification had he that he was given this prominent position over the heads of others?

Mr. MURPHY. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. J. Haggart) has asked me with regard to the position for which the amount of $2,125 is provided. That is for the unfilled position of Superintendent of Printing. Until I am satisfied that some person is required in that position, there will be no appointment. The position was held by Mr. McMahon until last month, when he was promoted to be assistant King's Printer, his salary being represented by the item of $2,900. He has been in the Bureau since its organization, and was in the employ of the contractors for government printing before that. He has special qualifications for the office. He received a salary of $2,800, and this additional $100 represent the statutory increase.

Mr. SPROULE. Of what department is the deputy minister here referred to a deputy?

Mr. MURPHY. My knowledge of that is confined to what I have learned from the statute. The law creating the Department of Public Printing and Stationery provides that it shall be attached to the Department of the Secretary of State, who is given administration of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Heretofore there has been no deputy?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes, the former deputy was Dr. Dawson, who was superannuated on account of failing health and age.

Mr. SPROULE. But $1,000 was added for the new man, who, it happens, was a member of this House.

Mr. MURPHY. That $1,000 was added by the statute of last session which fixed the salaries of certain deputies at $5,000.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has any application been received for the unfilled position?

Mr. MURPHY. A great many, but each applicant has received the stock answer that the minister in charge is not satisfied that it is necessary to make any appointment.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) is a practical printer, and if the Secretary of State will apply to him he will recommend him a good man.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. There will be a reduction in the outside service vote to correspond with the increase in this?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What is the amount of the reduction?

Mr. MURPHY. I have not the particulars, but when the item is reached I will have the information.

Fumigation stations, $5,000.

Mr. FISHER. I have been doing this work for some years, and it is going on satisfactorily. There is one station at St. John, N.B., one at St. Johns, Que., one on the Niagara frontier, at Beechburg, I think, one at Windsor, one at Winnipeg and one at Vancouver.

For the enforcement of the 'Gold and Silver Marking Act, 1908,' $4,000.

Mr. FISHER. This is a new item. Last year we passed an Act providing for certain markings on gold and silver ornaments or plate, which are being sold, and we have been appealed to by the trade to appoint an inspector to enforce the Act. I thought at one time there would be no necessity for an inspector, but I have been informed that the Act is being violated, and the trade has appealed to us strongly to enforce it.

Mr. BLAIN. Who is the officer?

Mr. FISHER. He has not yet been appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand you are providing $4,000 for an officer. How do you provide for his travelling expenses?

Mr. FISHER. And expenses for prosecution, if there are any. We hope that the $4,000 will cover everything. I have not fixed the salary yet.

Mr. STAPLES. What will be the qualifications?

Mr. FISHER. I hope to get some one who is acquainted with the gold and silver trade.

Tracadie and D'Arcy Island Lazarettos, and leprosy generally, $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. There is an increase of $2,000 due to the fact that we have been trying to deport Chinese lepers in British Columbia. As a rule these men are quite willing to be deported and sent back to China, and the authorities there have no objection to their being landed in China. Unfortunately, we are finding more of this class than we had expected, and we shall probably require a larger sum.

Mr. SPROULE. Would not that properly come under the immigration expenditure?

Mr. FISHER. It has been managed by us, because we have control of the leprosy stations at Tracadie and D'Arcy island. Some of these people have been in British Columbia for years and could not be deported by the immigration authorities.

Mr. SPROULE. Then if the time has passed which allows their being deported under the Immigration Act, what authority have you for deporting them under any other Act?

Mr. FISHER. No authority except their being willing to go, we paying the expenses to send them.

Public Works Health Act, $8,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that for the purpose of paying inspectors of public works to see whether the general precautions regarding health are being carried out?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How many are employed for that work, and how are they engaged—by the year?

Mr. FISHER. They are engaged by the year and they travel about and examine public works wherever they are being constructed. I had only one until about fifteen or eighteen months ago when I found the work was very heavy and increasing, especially in the west, and I had to appoint another. That gentleman resigned a couple of months ago and I have not yet appointed a successor,

Mr. SPROULE. What salary do you pay?

Mr. FISHER. Either $1,500 or $1,800 a year and travelling expenses.

Mr. STAPLES. Who is the man who resigned?

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Chamberlain. He was working in the west.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the inspector from time to time visit the works or does he only make one inspection during the season?

Mr. FISHER. He must visit them once in three months.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who is the inspector now?

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Fisher. He has been the inspector since the commencement of the work.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has any person taken Dr. Chamberlain's position?

Mr. FISHER. Not yet. I expect to appoint some one. During the winter there is not such a large amount of work going on.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is about a year since Dr. Chamberlain resigned?

Mr. FISHER. No, not later than last summer.

Mr. J. D. REID. I think it was about June.

Mr. FISHER. I think it was later than June, but I am not positive.

Mr. PORTER. Suppose the inspector finds the conditions unsatisfactory, what is done?

Mr. FISHER. The contractor is notified and if he does not immediately comply with the law he may be prosecuted. I do not remember that we have had any case of prosecution. The moment complaint is made the inspector is ordered to go, even if he has been there a month ago, to examine into the facts of the case and make a report.

Mr. PORTER. Do I understand that there have been complaints?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. In one case where the complaints were partially well founded the contractors were notified that they must remedy the grievance. The Act and the rgulations specify what provision must be made for he employees and what precautions must be taken. The rule is that contractors are allowed to take a small sum, I think fifty cents a month, from the wages of the employees to cover the expenses.

Mr. PORTER. Is that duty imposed upon the contractor by reason of his contract or by reason of the Public Health Act?

Mr. FISHER. By reason of the Public Health Act.

Mr. PORTER. There is no clause in the contract in regard to that?

Mr. FISHER. Not necessarily. There might or might not be.

Mr. SPROULE. For what purpose is that fifty cents a month taken from the employees?

Mr. FISHER. For the purpose of giving them medical attendance.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a different thing altogether from the inspection of public works.

Mr. FISHER. It has nothing to do with the pay of our inspector. It reimburses the contractors for the outlay they are obliged to make in the interest of their employees in providing hospitals and medical attendance. It is very much in the nature of an assessment in a union or organization of any kind for the purpose of insuring the members of that organization medical attendance.

Mr. SPROULE. That has been the common practice for thirty years?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, and that Act simply provides that certain requirements shall be complied with in consequence of holding back that amount of money.

Pensions—Mrs. Delaney, $400.

Mr. HUGHES. That is for Mrs. Delaney, whose husband was shot at Frog lake?

Mr. PATERSON. I think it is.

Mr. HUGHES. I support the item very strongly, but I want to draw the attention of the government to the fact that the men who, while defending their country, were shot down at Frog lake have never had their graves decorated or cared for in any way. I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) last year and I would be pleased if the Minister of Customs, who is leading the House to-night, would take it into his serious consideration and have the graves of the late Messrs. Delaney, Gowanlock and Gilchrist looked after. I beg to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to it. These graves should be put within a little railing. It would not cost much; it would be a matter of courtesy, and I am sure that the soldiers throughout the country would appreciate it very much.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will make inquiry about it.

Pensions payable on account of the Fenian Raid, $2,000.

Mr. JAMESON. I noticed the other day that when the veterans were before the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia and Defence it was said by some of them that there had been no recognition of the services of those who had served in defence of their country upon the occasion of this raid other than those who received wounds and were disabled. There was a certain recognition.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia). There was not only a recognition of those who were wounded, but if my hon. friend had been present at that meeting he would have seen that there was a recognition of the services of every man who turned out in defence of the country at that time, because he would have seen the evidence of it on the left breast of each man in the medal which he wore and which is the very highest recognition that can possibly be given by any country.

Mr. PORTER. Last year a pension was granted to the widow and children of the late Lt.-Col. Hallowell who was wounded at Batoche and died last year. Is that a pension that would require a vote?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, that is statutory under the Militia Pension Act.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FISHER. It is private members' day, but if we reach government orders we will go into Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. What department?

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say.

Motion agreed, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 10,1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at 2 o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. W. B. NANTEL (Terrebonne) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 54) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The Supreme Court of Canada has given judgment reversing and infirming a decision of the Court of King's Bench (appeal side) of the province of Quebec. The decision of the Supreme Court is that the Superior Court of the province of Quebec has no jurisdiction to compel railway companies, under the Railway Act, to make farm crossings and other similar work for the benefit of farmers whose lands are intersected by a railway, but that such jurisdiction belongs to the Board of Railway Commissioners. I wish to amend three sections of the Railway Act, sections 252, 253, and 254, and have it declared that the Superior Court of the province of Quebec has jurisdiction in such cases.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

MAIL AND STAGE ROUTES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG—by Mr. Blain—asked:

What is the total number of existing mail and stage routes in Canada and the total number of miles covered by such routes?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

Upon 31st March, 1908, the end of the last fiscal year, there were 8,091 mail and stage routes in operation, the travelled mileage on which amounted to 17,102,214 miles.

POST OFFICES AT GREENWOOD AND GRAND FORKS.

Mr. BURRELL asked:

Were any options secured from property owners in the towns of Greenwood and Grand Forks, for post office sites?

2. If so, from whom, what were the dates, and what are the other particulars?

3. Have the options been allowed to lapse?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Greenwood:

Two sites have been reported upon: (a) the Pioneer Hotel property situate on lots 20, 21 and 22, Block 5; (b) site on corner Copper and Deadwood streets; lots 13 and 14, Block 4 (50 by 110 feet), owned by F. W. Hart, option price $2,000, until February 15, 1909; lot 15, Block 4 (25 by 110 feet), owned by estate Thos. Miller, option price $750, making a total for the three lots (75 by 110 feet) of $2,750.

Grand Forks:

Site owned by S. A. Hall, situate lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6 in Block 16, bounded by Bridge, Main, Third and Fourth streets, option price $3,000, to expire November 20, 1908.

3. Greenwood: No.

Grand Forks: Order in Council passed to purchase property for $3,000 November 6, 1908.

HALIFAX POST OFFICE.

Mr. CROSBY asked:

1. When were instructions given for the reconstruction of the post office at Halifax? and when was the work commenced?

2. Is the work being done by contract? If so, when were tenders called for?

3. What was the amount of each tender, and who were the tenderers, respectively?

4. What length of time is allowed for the completion of the work?

5. Does the contract contain any penalty clause for the completion of the work within a certain time? If so, what is the penalty?

5. What is the total revenue to the government from Welland canal feeder, including water-power rentals for five years, 1903 to 1908?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Three men are permanently employed on the feeder of the Welland canal.

2. Total amount paid in salaries to permanent employees on the Welland canal feeder per annum, $1,760.
3. Total amount paid in repairs on Welland canal feeder during the past five years, 1903 to 1908, $50,500. (This includes wages and material.)
4. Seven hundred boats passed through the Welland canal feeder during the past five years, 1903 to 1908.
5. Total revenue to the government from Welland canal feeder for the past five years, 1903 to 1908, $830. (This is the actual revenue received, and does not include rentals which are in arrears).

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH, MONTREAL.

Mr. GERVAIS asked:

1. Has the government entered or is it about to enter into any agreement with any company, person or persons, with regard to the construction of a branch line between Montreal and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, under which the subsidy which was voted by Act 7 and 8 Edward, section 1, or 49, will be paid such company or persons?
2. If so, what are the names of such companies or persons, and what are the conditions of such arrangements?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). No.

DREDGING MOSSY RIVER.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked:

1. How much money has been voted for the purpose of dredging Mossy river?
2. When was such appropriation first made?
3. How much has been expended?
4. In what way has such money been spent?
5. Who have been the recipients?
6. What has delayed the carrying out of this work?
7. Is there a separate estimate for lowering Lake Dauphin? If so, what is the amount?
8. Is it the intention of the government to go on with this work this coming spring?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):

1. $33,500.
2. First vote was for year 1902-3.
3, 4 and 5. During the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908, the sum of $21,640.91 has been expended by day's labour and covers payments made to crew of departmental dredge 'Priestman' and sundry persons who furnished fuel, &c., for dredge and casual repairs to same.
6. The necessity of constructing a new plant, the dredge, tug and dump scow which the department has now on Lake Winnipegosis being entirely unsuited for the class of work required.
7. Yes, $10,000.
8. A vote of $5,000 has been included in the main estimates for 1909-10, at present before parliament, to enable the work to proceed.

LAKE NIPISSING FLOODED LANDS—CLAIMS OF SETTLERS.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

What is being done with reference to claims of settlers around Lake Nipissing, and the flooded lands?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works): Claims have been examined and reported upon and are now in course of settlement.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—ENGINEERS DISMISSED.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. How many engineers, divisional or otherwise, have been dismissed from the service of the Transcontinental Railway in Ontario and Quebec since November 30, last?
2. What are their names and the reasons for dismissal or suspension?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):
1. Eight.
2. Frank Moberly, E. P. Goodwin, G. F. Hanning, M. J. Leatherdale, E. Irvin, K. R. McLennan, C. H. Morse, H. R. Wade. Dismissed because their services were not required; as the work in that part of District 'D' was suspended for a time.

STURGEON FALLS AND SUDBURY—PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

Is it the intention of the government to build public buildings this year at Sturgeon Falls and Sudbury, and has land for that purpose been secured?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works): Lands to serve as sites for public buildings at Sturgeon Falls and Sudbury have not yet been purchased; matter under consideration.

DRILL HALL AT BELLEVILLE, ONT.

Mr. PORTER asked:

1. Did the government erect the drill hall at Belleville, or a portion of it, upon land not belonging to the government at the time? If so, to what extent and how did the same occur?
2. Has title to any such land been since acquired? If so, when, how, at what price, how was the price arrived at, and to whom paid?
3. Has the drill hall been taken over from the contractor, and what has been the total cost of building and ground complete?
4. Do the officers' quarters at Belleville, part of the former drill hall, belong to the government, the city of Belleville or the contractor for the new drill hall?
5. Is there any dispute as to the ownership of these officers' quarters? If so, what and between whom?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):
1 and 2. Settlement was made with the city by which $1,600 will be paid, this being the difference between the purchase price of the hospital lot and the city's contribution to the new site.
3. (a) Yes.
(b) $126,078.08 less $2,500, amount contributed by the city.
4. To the government.
5. To be answered by Department of Militia and Defence.
6. No.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). In answer to section 5 of this question, so far as I know there is no dispute. I will make further inquiry, however.

PORT BRUCE HARBOUR.

Mr. MARSHALL—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. What was the amount of money expended on Port Bruce harbour, including dredging, for the last four years, viz: for 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908?
2. Is it the intention of the government to spend any money in Port Bruce harbour in the present year 1909, on the dock, to extend the piers or for any other purpose?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):
1. The expenditure including dredging:

In 1905-06	$ 4,947 76
1906-07	4,999 83
1907-08	665 11
1908-09	5,846 25
Total	$16,458 95

2. Matter under consideration.

POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES WHARF.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. What was the amount payable under contract by the government for the construction of the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, in the county of Portneuf, province of Quebec?
2. Who was the contractor and who was the lowest tenderer?
3. Were tenders for the said work or construction called for publicly through the newspapers?
4. What amount has been claimed by the said contractor for extras and what amount has been paid under the said head to said contractor?
5. What was the nature of the said extras?
6. Who were the superintendent, the engineer and the inspector of said work?
7. What has been the revenue derived from said wharf since the construction?
8. Who is the guardian of said wharf and what is his salary?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):
1. $22,490.

2. Onésime Poliquin.
3. Yes.
4 and 5. No claim to date.
6. Engineers, Thomas Breen and A. R. Décary; inspector, R. Plamondon.
7. No revenue has been received.
8. No guardian has been appointed.

GUYSBOROUGH COUNTY PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. RHODES—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. What portions, if any, of the following appropriations voted last session for public works in Guysborough county, Nova Scotia, have been expended, namely:

2. If any money was expended, for what, and upon what item or items was it expended?
3. Does the government intend to proceed with these works this year?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. Out of the appropriation of $1,400 for Guysborough public buildings, the sum of $412.17 was expended for lighting. No expenditure upon any of the other appropriations mentioned.
3. Matter under consideration.

ROYAL NORTHWEST MOUNTED POLICE —BARRACK GROUNDS AT CALGARY.

Mr. McCARTHY asked:

1. Have any applications been received by the government for the transfer to any railway corporation or corporations, or person, of the grounds now occupied by the Royal Northwest Mounted Police in connection with their barracks at the city of Calgary?
2. If so, from whom have such applications been received for the transfer of the same?
3. On what date and for what portion of said property?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The answer is: No.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CONTRACTS.

Mr. AMES asked:

1. To whom have the contracts for sections 8, 12, 13, 16 in D, 16, 17, 19 in E, 19 in F, and 20, of the Transcontinental Railway been let?
2. What is the estimated cost per mile and the total cost in respect of each of these subdivisions?
3. Where is the point of intersection where the North Bay branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific is expected to connect with the main line?

Mr. GRAHAM.

Hon. GEO P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1 & 2.

3. The Department has no information.

FISH HATCHERY—LAKE WINNIPEGOSIS.

Mr. CAMPBELL asked:

1. What amount has been expended on the fish hatchery in Winnipegosis?
2. How long has it been in operation?
3. What quantity of spawn has been hatched and put in the lake each year respectively?
4. How much in bulk of spawn was secured during the past season?
5. How many men are employed at the hatchery, and at what salary each?
6. Who is in charge and at what salary?
7. What qualification had he for the position, and what official position had he under the government previously?
8. If he was dismissed, why?
9. Was he a returning officer under the Greenway government of Manitoba previous to his appointment on the Dominion Civil Service list?
10. Had that anything to do with his appointment, and who recommended him to be fish inspector?
11. By whom was he recommended to be overseer or manager to the fish hatchery?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $17,809, including construction and equipment of hatchery, caretaker's cottage, wharf and piping, and general maintenance.
2. Short period last fall.
3. None; hatchery only completed last fall.
4. 16,000,000.
5. Two. Officer in charge, $1,000 per annum. Assistant, $2 per day.
6. A. J. McPherson, $1,000 per annum.
7. Experience gained whilst fishery overseer on Lake Winnipegosis. Fishery overseer.
8. He was not dismissed.
9. Not to the knowledge of this department.
10. No. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.
11. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

TARIFF ON HOGS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BLAIN asked:

Is it the intention of the government at this session to increase the tariff on hogs coming to Canada from the United States, in accordance with the request of the Dominion Swine Breeders' Assocation?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I am sorry to say, my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will have to wait for the delivery of the Budget Speech for an answer to this question.

HEALTH OF ANIMALS—EXPENDITURE.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. What was the total expenditure in each of the years 1904 to 1908 in connection with the health of animals, including inspection, compensation for animals slaughtered, &c., &c.?

2. How much of this in each year was on account of bovine tuberculosis?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Expenditure—

1904-5	$ 190,253 27
1905-6	421,993 50
1906-7	276,667 99
1907-8	320,538 10
Total	$1,209,452 86

2. Owing to the peculiar nature of the disease in question and the difficulty, under existing conditions, of dealing with it in a manner similar to that followed in the case of most of the other communicable diseases of animals, slaughter of affected animals is not ordered by this department, and no compensation is therefore paid. While the officers of the Health of Animals branch test pure bred animals for breeding purposes and milk production sold for export to the United States, owing to the fact that such officers are on the salary list of the department and such testing forms but a portion of their duties, the expenditure in connection with the same cannot be accurately arrived at.

Tuberculin is supplied free to owners making application to the department and complying with certain specified conditions. This tuberculin is prepared in the biological laboratory of the department, is of a uniform potency, its present manufacture costing less than one-third of that of the commercial product.

During the years 1904 to 1908, inclusive, tuberculin has been issued from the biological laboratory as follows:

	Doses.
1904-5	3,145
1905-6	1,967
1906-7	3,430
1907-8	5,935

doses at an approximate cost of $900.

Experiments have been conducted during the years 1907 and 1908 in the application of the open air treatment to a number of cattle known to be affected with tuberculosis, though not in an advanced stage, with a view to ascertaining to what extent it may be possible to cure the malady or at least check its progress. With this end in view a number of animals so affected have been kept on an experiment station in the vicinity of Ottawa, at an approximate cost of:

For year ending—

March 31, 1907	$4,727 69
March 31, 1908	3,252 31

These experiments have not yet been concluded.

INSPECTORS OF CANNING FACTORIES.

Mr. MARSHALL—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. How many inspectors of factories, canning fruits and vegetables, are appointed for the several provinces; what are their names and what salary does each receive?

2. How many inspectors of meat canning establishments are appointed for Ontario, and what are their names and the salary of each?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Under the Meat and Canned Foods Act, inspectors are not appointed for particular provinces. Their services are available for the whole Dominion as they may be required.

For the inspection of establishments putting up fruits and vegetables, two appointments have been made, viz., Russell Bowlby and F. E. N. Boulter. Each receives a salary of $1,200 per annum.

2. The inspectors at present serving in the province of Ontario under the Act and their salaries are as follows:

Bone, D. R., V.S.	$ 900
Brown, Dennis	900
Brownridge, G. C. V.S.	1,200

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—OUTSIDE SERVICE AT OTTAWA.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What is the name, position and salary of each clerk or other employee on the outside service of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa who received increase of salary on and after April 1, 1908; what is the amount of the increase or increases, the date on which it was granted, the date it became effective and the date or dates on which these increases were paid, and date of appointment?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). In answer to the hon. gentleman, I must say that the return would be so voluminous that I would prefer that he put his question on the Order Paper in the form of a notice of motion, and I will bring down the information.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the minister's attention to this fact, that when he brings down the return in answer to a Notice of Motion, it is not available to all the members of the House. If the information is given as an answer to a question, as was the case in the Department of the Minister of the Interior, it is put in the 'Hansard' and every member of the House is immediately seized of the information. So if it is not more trouble to the minister —I do not see that it would be—it would be a great convenience to the House if it were given in answer to a question.

Mr. FISHER. Then I will say that on Friday I will ask to have it put into the 'Hansard.' But I could not undertake to read the whole thing over.

NEW EXPERIMENTAL FARMING STATIONS.

Mr. LAPOINTE asked:

1. Where does the Department of Agriculture intend to establish the new experimental farming stations, for which a credit of $30,000 is asked in the estimates of 1909-10, under the number 52?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). 1. A portion of this vote will be used to complete the establishment of the Experimental Station at Rosthern, Saskatchewan. It has not yet been decided where the balance will be expended.

MILITIA DEPARTMENT—ARMOURIES.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE asked:

1. How many officers of the Militia Department in Ontario supply at their own expense armouries for storing the property of the government?

2. Has the government any settled policy in regard to supplying armouries at company headquarters of infantry regiments? If not, why not?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. None. There are, however, 188 commanding officers of the squadrons or companies in Ontario, who are paid an allowance for the care of arms, and who are required to provide out of that allowance the necessary accommodation for the storage of arms, equipment and clothing issued to them in their capacity as commanding officers.

2. It is the policy of the government to eventually provide armouries at headquarters of companies or units, but in carrying out this policy it is necessary to have regard to the needs of the different localities and to the parliamentary appropriation available for new armouries.

QUARANTINE BUILDINGS AT GRETNA.

Mr. WM. H. SHARPE asked:

1. What was the total cost of the quarantine buildings at Gretna, in Manitoba?

2. What was the price of the land for the said building, and from whom was the land bought?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1. $3,085.50.

2. The land on which the building is erected was not purchased, but was leased from the Midland Branch of the Great Northern Railway at a nominal rental of $1.00 per year.

NEW RAILWAY STATION AT TRURO.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

Is it the intention of the government to erect a new railway station at Truro, Nova Scotia? If so, when does the government propose starting such work?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). It is the intention to build a new station at Truro, but it may not be possible to undertake the work this year.

MAIL CARRIAGE—LONDONDERRY STATION TO GREAT VILLAGE.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. Who has the contract for carrying mail from Londonderry Station to Great Village, and what remuneration does the contractor receive?

2. How many trips does he make each day, and what trains is he expected to meet?

3. What time are the mails made up for these different trips at the Great Village post office?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The contractor for carrying the mails between Londonderry station and Great Village is Mr. A. S. Kent. Under the terms of such contract he is obliged to make four trips each day, meeting the following trains:

Passing west at 6.07 p.m. and 10.10 a.m.

Passing east at 3.48 p.m. and 7.24 p.m.

His remuneration is at the rate of 35 cents per trip. It is the postmaster's duty to prepare mails for despatch from Great Village within such time as to admit of the courier making the necessary train connections.

DAMAGE TO PROPERTY AROUND STONY LAKE.

Mr. SEXSMITH asked:

Has the government paid any property owners in or around Stony lake damages caused by the raising of water? If so, who were they, and what was the amount?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). This will be a pretty voluminous return, a great many names in it. I would ask my hon. friend to move for a return, and I will bring down the information in that way.

WHARF AT BIRDSALS LANDING, RICE LAKE.

Mr. SEXSMITH asked:

1. What is the cost of the wharf at Birdsals Landing on Rice Lake?

2. Was it built by contract or day labour, when was the work commenced, who was in charge of the work, and what was the amount paid?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. $3,731.89.

2. (a) Day's labour.

(b) 1st September, 1908.

(c) George Payne, foreman under J. G. Sing, resident engineer, Toronto.

(d) $3,731.89 as above.

BY-ELECTION COMOX-ATLIN, CARLETON, ONT.

Mr. BURRELL. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Prime Minister to a discrepency between a statement made by him in answering a question, and the statement of the Secretary of State. On February 2, the Prime Minister, in answer to a question by the leader of the opposition stated:

The writ was issued yesterday for Comox-Atlin, and will be issued to-day for Carleton.

Then on February 8, the Secretary of State, in answer to a question by myself said that the writ issued for the vacancy in Comox-Atlin on the 22nd of January, 1909. I wish to be informed which statement is correct, that of the Prime Minister or that of the Secretary of State.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The error may be mine. Perhaps I had in mind the writ for Carleton. I will look into it.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing the names of all officers, accountants, superintendents and employees in general of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Construction Commission; the place of residence of each of them at the time of their appointment; the salaries paid to each of them; their place of employment, and the names of persons who recommended such appointments.—Mr. Gervais.

For a return showing the quantity of summer-caught white fish and the value; the winter-caught whitefish and the value; the pickerel, quantity and value; the sturgeon, quantity and value, exported to the United States for each year respectively, during the years from November, 1893, to November, 1908, from the Manitoba ports.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a return showing the number of seizures made by the Department of Customs during the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908; the date of seizures; by whom seized; what the seizures consisted of; amount realized by the sale of such material seized, and how the seized material was disposed of.—Mr. Barr.

For a copy of all correspondence, papers, reports, estimates, orders in council, &c., in connection with the surveys of and boring in, and called for tenders for dredging or excavation in the St. John harbour and Courtney bay or either of them during the year 1908; a copy of the advertisements, names of the papers in which they were inserted, the tenders received and dates, the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender; which tender, if any, was accepted, the deposit required and in which bank it is deposited.—Mr. Daniel.

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, papers, reports and valuations of officers or experts, and orders in council, in connection with the purchase, removal and repairing of the dredge 'Industry' and parts thereof, including scow, boilers and parts.—Mr. Foster.

For a copy of all correspondence, papers, orders in council, advertisements, tenders, contracts, &c., in connection with dredging in the harbour of St. John, N.B., covering the area dredged by Gershen B. Mayes, the Dominion Dredge Company, John Moore, or other parties, during the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908; the quantities dug under each contract, the amounts paid to each contractor, the date of each payment, and to whom made.—Mr. Daniel.

For a return showing since the constitution of the Railway Board in how many cases they have ordered protection of highway railway crossings, (a) by separation of the highway and railway, (b) by gates, (c) by other means, and the method adopted in each case; how the proceedings were initiated in each case; what order was made as to the expense of the work or service in each; at what points separation of highway and railway was ordered, and the actual or estimated cost in each case; in how many, and what, cases applications were refused.—Mr. Lennox.

For a return showing how many officials were appointed in the year 1908 to the various departments and brought from the outside service into the inside service under the Civil Service Act, with their names and salaries; and what addition to the various staffs have been made thereby.—Mr. Samuel Sharpe.

IMMIGRATION TO UNITED STATES AND REPATRIATION—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR AND COLONIZATION SOCIETIES.

Mr. PAQUET (L'Islet) asked: (Translation.)

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and documents between the Department of the Interior and the immigration agents in the United States; and between the Department of the Interior and the colonization societies since the 1st of January, 1908.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I ask for a copy of correspondence between the Minister of the Interior and the colonization societies, between the Minister of the Interior and the immigration agents in the United States ; in order to study the work of repatriation.

The solution of this social problem is the most important in the interest of the Canadian people ; I recognize the value of the work done in the past. I do not desire to raise a tablet to the methods adopted, and on the ruins erect new systems. We must preserve such things that meet our requirements, social and economic, but at the same time, improve and consolidate them and bring them to perfection. Our object is to quicken the work of repatriating the Canadian descendants of the races that civilized France and the British isles. In this work, too complete and too imperfect, I desire especially to study the repatriation of the French Canadians.

In the days of the French administration, we see our ancestors already on the shores of lake Champlain, in the plains of the west and on the banks of the Mississippi.

The French missionaries and discoverers left the St. Lawrence valley and overran the American territories, implanting Christian civilization as they went. They did so to discover new lands in the interests of France, of civilization and of religion. Successive generations of Canadian birth ploughed the English colonies of our continent.

With respect to the causes that have influenced the immigration of our people to the United States, permit me to cite our historian, Mr. DeCelles. 'A law of the English parliament allowed a colonial minister and the Canadian government to dispose of the vacant lands of a province to their favourites at a nominal price. At times the Government made use of its powers over the public domains to coin money and increase the revenues. Mr. Rouillard, in his work, 'The Province of Quebec' said, 'Already, long before the distribution made to the loyalists, the colonial executive had commenced to grant great stretches of the public domain still remaining in an uncultivated state to monopolists without compelling them to make settlements under penalty of confiscation for failure to do so. Thus the British American Land Company received for its share 600,000 acres. From 1773 to 1811, more than three million acres of public lands were distributed among 200 favourites, of whom some had as much as 60,000 to 80,000 acres each. The Governor, Mr. Milnes, took for his part, 70,000 acres.

From that time the monopolists had but one object in view, namely, to wait for the increased value of their lands and watch for speculative developments. In this way, the Domains, debarred from cultivation and preserved in a wild state, served as a barrier, preventing the settlers from penetrating further into the interior of the country. It was no rare spectacle to see the agents of the public lands seeking, in the face of the colonizing movement everywhere, presenting itself, to oppose it under the pretense that the timber trade outweighed the interests of colonization. Hence, great was the number of the French Canadians who took the route for the United States.

The English bureaucrats, from 1760 to 1848, by informal persecution, by exile, by the scaffold, by plundering laws, by the confiscation of patriots' belonging, prevented clearings, paralyzed commerce and industry, and restricted to the narrowest proportions the developments of the French population, and thus opened the way to the disastrous emigration of the French Canadians to the United States. French Canadians were found in the armies of Washington.

After the troubles of 1837, a more extensive emigration took place towards New England. These families fled before fire, iron and proscription. As one orator said: 'Honour and gratitude to the magnanimous Martin Van Buren, the president of the American nation, who offered to our unhappy exiles land, employment, and the protection of a generous people.'

From 1760 to 1848, the Anglo-Saxon bureaucracy showed no intention to favour colonization in the province of Quebec for the advantage of a race that it wished to humiliate, to denationalize and perhaps to destroy.

As regards the French Canadians, it was an era of ostracism. Instead of encouraging French colonization, the Government disposed of the crown lands in favour of speculators.

From 1845 to 1849, 20,000 French Canadians quitted their native soil.

From 1848 to 1854, these figures rose to 40,000

From 1840 to 1848, the Canadian parliament voted $300,000 to promote the settlement of Lower Canada. The same parliament supremely unjust with regard to our province, voted two millions at the same time for colonization roads in Upper Canada.

No doubt improvidence and extravagance led some families to the United States, to become the servants, if not the slaves of American capitalists. But a great number of our compatriots owe their abandonment of their country to the persecutions of the English bureaucrats, and the indifference of governments that exhausted them in unhappy struggles when they should have united their forces and created a national industry.

To cite the Rev. Father Hamon: 'The emigration en masse only began after the civil war in 1860. Then the industries of the east witnessed a prodigious development. They devoted themselves to the construction of manufactures, and the Canadians came in great numbers looking for work. The flood of emigration overcame all obstacles, swept over all the dams, and, animated with resistless force, invaded the towns and villages of New England. In a few years, thousands and thousands of the cultivators of the soil had exchanged a rural existence for the lives of workmen in the immense manufactures of the United States. The labour of these vast works is to a large extent in their hands.'

This great Canadian emigration to the United States dates form the close of the civil war. Then arose in all directions those varied industries that soon covered the eastern states with gigantic manufacturing establishments, and the French Canadians in great numbers went there in pursuit of easier conditions in industrial pursuits.

The expatriated French Canadians have worked, without counting the days, without measuring the effusion of their sweats, for the glorification of their race and of their Gospel. The Franco-Americans, to the number of 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 are accomplishing a splendid work on the soil of the United States. They have known the proofs required from strangers; but did not at that time ask from the national societies the cohesion indispensable to assert their imperishable rights and save their ancestral traditions from shipwreck. Without deserting the flag of their nationality they have never betrayed that of the new country. They know how to prove their loyalty to the institutions of the Republic while still remaining attached to their faith, their language and their customs. Our compatriots are with energy making the conquest of a large place in the politics, the commerce and the industry of their new country. In the annals of the great Republic, the French Canadians rave with pages alike original and illustrious. On November 8, 1908, they effected a remarkable achievement: our compatriot, the Honourable A. Pothier, was elected Governor of Rhode Island. As a journalist writes: 'It is the natural crowning of a work accomplished by persistence, and for years, for the advancement of his fellow-citizens, and for the prosperity and good name of his State.

The expatriated French Canadians display the strength, tenacity, courage and heroism of the French race. They struggle against the assimilation of their race and elaborate the future in preserving the language of their ancestors and remaining faithful to the flag of that virile and generous democracy that astonishes the world with the boldness of its conceptions and its triumphs in all the spheres of human activity.

It would be unpardonable treason, undignified abdication, real national suicide not to make every effort to bring back to Canadian soil such a generous population.

As far back as 1848 the bishops of lower Canada exhorted the clergy and the people to do all in their power with a view of favouring the settler and of improving his social condition. Bishop Turgeon said: 'Let all French Canadians contribute according to their means and without delay to the work of colonization, and every difficulty will disappear.' The bishop deplores the departure of so many excellent Canadian families who are casting their lot in a foreign land far from the alters of their youth and their native land. Patriotic suffering is perhaps the most bitter of all moral sorrows. In the face of this alarming emigration of our compatriots, Lafontaine, together with the civil, religious and political authorities, worked strenuously in favour of the expansion of the French-speaking population on Canadian soil.

Colonization and repatriation societies were at that time founded to promote the interests of agriculture and of repatriation. In Lower Canada these colonization and repatriation societies were generously endowed.

It is impossible to think without emotion of those thousands of Canadians toiling in the factories of a foreign land. Their labour, energy, talent and patriotism enrich the ajoining republic to the detriment of Canada.

Our countrymen, no doubt, play a noble part in the United States, where they have been attracted by an extraordinary era of commercial and industrial prosperity; they are becoming there the representative of French civilization. But in order to fulfil our mission on Canadian soil, and if we would save the prestige and preserve the influence of that ancient race who civilized our land, it is necessary that the French Canadian family should sustain no loss.

Reverend Father M. Martineau, in his pamphlet: 'Projet de Colonisation,' says: 'If the three millions of French Canadians sprung from the 60,000 souls who formed the Canadian nation in 1760, resided, if not all, in the province of Quebec at least within the limits of Canada, would we not be in a much better position to protect and defend our rights, our language and our faith and to lend a helping hand to the feebler groups of our countrymen living among people who are often hostile to them?'

We ardently desire the return of 'our people' in order to increase the prestige of our nationality and to contribute our full share to the prosperity of the Dominion.

The work of repatriatoin is a great national work, but we understand that it is a difficult one. As a public speaker once said: 'Repatriation has got beyond the domain of official literature' it is going on every day with increasing success. Thanks to the work of colonization societies, to the help of the railways, to Governments' grants, to the good will of public men and to the active and disinterested help of the public at large, the final results are no longer uncertain.

Statistics furnished by the Department of the Interior are encouraging. From 1901 to the 1st December, 1907, 31,644 Canadians have returned to Canada.

Our immigration agents in the United States report favourably in this respect. Mr. D. Gauthier writes as follows to the Minister of the Interior: 'It is everywhere recognized that Canada is the land of the future, offering as it does exceptional advantages for the settlement of numerous families and an excellent field for the investment of capital. As a rule, Canadians living in the United States favour the idea of returning to Canada. They intend and before long they will do so. We have sown the seed in fertile soil and may reasonably expect an abundant harvest.'

On the 11th July 1905, Rev. Father Vachon wrote: 'I have continued the work begun some years ago and I am pleasd to be able to report good results as to the quality and the number of settlers.'

Mr. Scott reported, 7th July, 1906: 'The repatriation of French Canadians has occupied the attention of the Department since some years past and considerable progress has been made.'

Mr. PAQUET.

Mr. White, inspector of agencies in the United States, wrote on the 15th April, 1907: 'Part of our work is being done among French Canadians.

Besides the agents already mentioned we have opened an office at Biddeford. Our prospects are very good.'

In the work of repatriation it is necessary to show our progress.

Our trade and our progress attract the attention of civilized nations. A great economist, M. Pierre Leroy-Beaulieu declares that Canada is to-day the country offering the greatest inducements to immigrants, its development being the most rapid, especially as regards agriculture.

We may well expect the return of a certain number of our own people when we consider that Americans, recognizing the value of the lands and the industrial future of Canada are selling their establishments in the United States for the purpose of casting their fortunes on our side of the border.

In 1906, 57,000 immigrants came to us from the United States. This is a recognition of the vast resources of Canada. Colonization and repatriation societies have laboured fruitfully at the task of repatriation. They have organized colonization and repatriation congresses in which have been discussed the best means of securing our national development. Our fathers rallied round these associations as around a banner protecting our national future.

Some of them, helped by Government subsidies, now maintain agencies in New England for the purpose of promoting the return of our countrymen.

With very small financial means, colonization and repatriation societies, thanks to the zeal of their directors, have done much good work. They have favoured colonization and secured the return of a considerable number of Canadians. They retain the services of able and practical lecturers in their effective propaganda throughout New England.

The governmnt formerly granted an annual sum of $4,000 to the Lake St. John Colonization Society. This has been discontinued and M. Réné Dupont appointed immigration agent. I would like to know what induced the minister to stop that grant.

Allow me to read an extract from the report of the Mutual Colonization and Repatriation Society for the year 1907. 'Fifteen thousand booklets and maps have been recently distributed among the Canadians of New England and the agricultural clubs of the province of Quebec, over and above our monthly distributions, by means of our agents in the United States, of a number of publications in the French and English languages, of pamphlets on western farm lands and those of Ontario and Quebec.

We have inserted advertisements in the French newspapers of New England calling upon our fellow-countrymen residing there to return to Canada where they will obtain farms and be well provided for under the care of the Montreal Colonization Sosiety. The statistics embodied in this report establish the truth of the statements therein contained.

The funds at the disposal of colonization and repatriation societies do not allow them to carry on their work with sufficient energy. Their grants should be increased so that the New England repatriation agencies might be multiplied.

We have several emigration agents in the eastern states ; Mr. Laurier and Mr. Tessier are at work in Michigan. Would it not be in the interests of Canada to have a few more French Canadian agents in Minnesota, Illinois and Montana, in the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis where there are important French Canadian groups? Should we not at least have agents speaking both official languages in all our immigration offices of Western America?

Franco-American national societies are playing an effective part in New England The directors and members of these different associations are in close contact with every class of French speaking Americans. Our immigration agents, through the officers and members of these national societies, might reach those families who are not satisfied with economic conditions in the United States and perhaps secure their return.

We call upon the federal government to vote larger sums for the purpose of advertising our wealth and our resources in New England. We ask them to distribute our pamphlets and publications carefully and actively in the Franco-American cities: Fall River, Nashua, Lewiston, Salem, Woonsocket and Lowell.

During the fiscal year 1906-7 we expended $56,000 in advertising Canada in the United States. We have no intention of blaming this expenditure. But, according to the Auditor General's Report, printing in the French language took up a very small portion of this somewhat large amount. Let us demonstrate to Franco-Americans by means of the press, by the voice of public lectures, by colonization literature, the marvellous progress of Canada. They will then gladly return to become active tillers of the beloved soil of their native land.

The authorities have adopted, with respect to agriculture in the province of Quebec, a policy favourable to the work of repatriation. This is explained in a letter written by Mr. Réné Dupont to the directors of the Canadian Press Association, which I will read:

Sir,—With a view of promoting settlement in the province of Quebec. the Department of the Interior has authorized the establishment of an information branch respecting vacant farm lands, so that persons desiring to make a purchase may obtain all requisite data. In the past no agency of this kind existed and we were unable to give satisfactory replies to the numerous requests we received. This agency will be available for all persons desirous of purchasing farms in any part of the country and also for those who have farms for sale. I inclose for your information a blank form which we send to all those having farms for sale and I would be much gratified if you would devote some of your valuable space to the work of explaining this to our compatriots.

RENE DUPONT.

The policy is commented upon in the following manner by a Franco-American journalist:

'A list is being at present prepared of vacant farms in the province of Quebec, with a view of offering them to Canadians residing in the United States. Nothing could be better. Had this been done ten years ago, the results, we feel sure, would have been important. At present, the difficulties to be overcome will be greater, yet practical results will certainly be obtained, especially if in the list are included farms situated along the long frontier line, near which, but on the American side, are to be found numerous and flourishing Franco-American colonies.

'Those who direct the colonization movement in the province of Quebec have hitherto given but little attention to the repatriation of French Canadians. Certain efforts have indeed been made to induce them to return, but the results obtained were such as to confirm the promoters of colonization in the idea that the problem could not be solved. Recent events and the splendid spirit of enterprise of some of our Franco-American countrymen have placed the matter in a different light and the practical solution seems at hand.

'We allude to a new national institution, the 'Crédit Foncier Canadien,' the object of which is to collect into one general fund the savings of the French Canadian population of New England. This institution is earnestly labouring in the work of repatriation. The Franco-American syndicate has already begun important colonization work in the township of Escourt. A large number of our people are returning under the guidance of enlightened men. This, says 'La Revue Franco-Américaine,' is an instance of the happy results to be obtained by association.

'In New England and more particularly in the States of Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts, the work of the Crédit Foncier Canadien is attracting attention among our countrymen. This interest has been increased by the action of the president of the association, Hon. Judge Brochu, who goes from place to place preaching the gospel of the emancipation of Franco-American capital, and explaining to enterprising men the immense field opened to national energy by the undeveloped wealth of the province of Quebec, of which English speaking people alone have hitherto taken advantage. It is in some sort a revendication of the rights of the race to that portion of the soil discovered, colonized and developed by our fathers ; it is a practical and an active implementation of the wise advice once given us : Take possession of the soil ! No doubt our Franco-American friends are not preparing to come over in a body. But this assuredly means repatriation, so far as it can be accomplished.

There are at present in the United States 100,000 Canadians desirous of returning to Canada if they may do so with advantage to themselves.

It may be useful to listen now to the judicious remarks of a friend of repatriation. 'Of the possibility of carrying the work of repatriation in a certain measure, there can be no doubt, provided appeals are made to those who, living since some years in the United States, have not succeeded there and are willing to make another attempt to better their condition. These are numerous enough to deserve attention. And yet, if you speak to the younger members of these families, you will perceive that it will be difficult to make settlement on a farm one of the conditions of their return. Even if they consented to farm, they would prefer going to the Canadian West, now one of the objective points throughout the republic, and one to which thousands of Americans remove every year. You would be astonished at the amount of Franco-Americans who have settled since ten years in the new provinces.

Whatever may be the importance of the repatriation movement to-day, the number of those who have returned is insignificant compared with that of those who remain. We may in any case consider it certain that the return en masse of Canadians established in the United States is impossible. The majority of those who do return have no intention of becoming farmers.

It would be just as easy to induce Canadians from American cities to settle on farm lands as to persuade citizens of Quebec or Montreal to colonize the unexplored townships of Temiscaming or Lake St. John.

Years of strenuous labour will be needed to accomplish to any great extent the work of repatriation. We understand the difficulty and we know, as a public speaker expressed it, 'that a large Franco-American contingent must remain ever on foreign soil."

In the interest of Canada we should encourage the return of a French population important on account of their traditions, heroic in their past and present efforts and sufferings, strong in numbers and steadfast in their ancestral faith. We should encourage their return by the development of transportation, of colonization, of agriculture and of industry. Waterways, railways and colonization roads should be so improved as to secure access to new markets. Our colonization policy should be progressive and enlightened. We should encourage agriculture and adopt scientific methods of cultivation. Every day we behold American farmers settling in the Canadian West with remarkable success. Important Franco-Canadian groups may settle in the West and unite with the first French contingents who civilized Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. They will honour the French name and the Canadian name by prospering among foreign groups. If we would keep the sons of the soil and promote repatriation we should develop industry. French Canadians have sought in the United States that intense industrial life which our neighbours enjoy. As one of our countrymen has said: 'Industry has attracted our people to the United States, industry, prosperous industry will induce them to return.'

With technical education and the development of our agricultural, mining and forest wealth, Canada will become a great industrial country. Industrial development will be specially favourable to repatriation. With industrial progress the national spirit will awaken. Let us erect numerous factories to minister to the requirements of the growing west. Let us establish industrial schools where young men may be trained. Such schools have transformed German industry within the last half century. Our countrymen both at home and abroad develop great taste for all industrial arts. The development of industry appears to me the best way of favouring repatriation.

In this work, we should never forget form in the great republic a group of two millions of men with social organization not inferior in many respects to that of the province of Quebec and in some points even superior.

In certain important centers, Franco Americans control capital, they have good commercial establishments and take an active part in public business. Their property represents millions of dollars. Their ownership of real estate, naturalization, the establishment of French Catholic schools and of the parochial system attach them to the soil of the republic and render repatriation difficult. A large number of our countrymen are kept there by their interests, their marriage connections and the positions they occupy. In spite of such difficulties, our progress in agriculture and industry lead us to hope that a considerable number of them may return.

Among our immigrants, Franco-Americans occupy the post of honour. Their feelings, ideals and aspirations are the same as ours. Let them then return, they will work with us and to the French Canadian people, to the Canadian people a still more solid foundation upon which may be built up an edifice of material, moral and intellectual greatness.

Hon. Mr. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General and Minister of Labour). (Translation.) I have no intention of speaking at any length upon the question raised by my hon. friend from L'Islet. I have listened with much interest to his eloquent appeal in favour of the repatriation of our countrymen. It is a matter which must always be of considerable moment to the French Canadian minority in the Dominion.

What has been the policy of the government since they assumed the direction of affairs in 1896? It would be useless to refer to what took place before that time. It is well known that we were then deploring the exodus of our countrymen to the United States. This has been going on since a number of years, and in spite of the National policy, as it was then called, our fair Quebec parishes were being alarmingly depopulated for the benefit of New England.

Liberals at that time contended that a different fiscal policy might stop the outward flow of population. And what happened when they assumed power? Has the present government succeeded in keeping the people in the country? I refer here more particularly to the province of Quebec. The member for L'Islet may read the statistics published by the Census Bureau and he will find that with the exception of the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the province of Quebec alone has maintained and increased her population. It is due to this that the Ontario membership in this House has diminished by five or six seats.

To what are we to attribute this result? Precisely to the attitude of the government. The government altered the fiscal policy of the country in such a manner as to secure the development and the full expansion of national industry which remained stagnant not only in Quebec but in every province of the Dominion, until 1896. Never before, Mr. Speaker, had the industries of Quebec flourished as they have in the last ten years. We have maintained and increased the population of our great cities of Montreal, Quebec and Sherbrooke so much so that Montreal occupies to-day the whole of the island of that name, the labouring population having built up all the outlying ground.

Farm lands in the province of Quebec were being rapidly deserted; to-day, thank God, they are in full cultivation, and when they become too congested the people no longer cross the line, they remove to farms in the western provinces. The member for L'Islet cannot have read the eloquent letters published last year by Abbé Bérubé, in which he calls atention to the number of French Canadians who have settled in Saskatchewan and Alberta since five or six years, in spite of the tempest which certain parties sought to raise concerning the new constitution. This is so true that in certain western parishes peopled, until quite recently by foreign emigrants, our French speaking countrymen will soon be in a majority.

It may therefore be contended that the government has not only checked the flow of emigration and kept the people in the province of Quebec, but that the population of that province has so increased as to furnish settlers to the western fertile belt. The government did even more—I quite recognize that the member for L'Islet was perfectly sincere in his remark—they repatriated all our countrymen residing in the United States who so desired it.

Will my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier tell me how many immigration agents we had in New England before 1897? There was not a single one. The government of that day had not deemed it advisable to appoint a single French speaking repatriation agent.

Since 1896, under the direction of Hon. Mr. Sifton—a man most unjustly spoken of in the province of Quebec—and at the request of Liberal members, the Department of the Interior appointed a certain number of agents, and among them certain clergymen, to undertake the work of repatriation. I make this declaration, Mr. Speaker, not in a spirit of animosity, but because, in Quebec, our opponents have never ceased to proclaim that our policy was hostile to repatriation. I have not before me the names of those agents, but I know that there are twelve of them, with clergymen among them, at different points in the New England states.

The member for L'Islet has stated that the best method of promoting repatriation would be to develop transportation especially as regards waterways. He also referred to the necessity of establishing industrial and technical schools, in order to keep our population in the province of Quebec. You know, Sir, that such foundations are placed not under Dominion, but under provincial authority.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) I simply wished to state that we should establish technical schools to develop national industry. I knew quite well that such establishments do not come under federal authority.

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation.) I will say to the hon. member that since ten years in the province of Quebec, that is to say, under the present provincial government, industrial and technical schools have so developed that the government has expended half a million on them alone. It is even proposed to form a large agricultural university.

All this tends to show that the Liberal party have done their duty by our countrymen settled in the United States, that not only has the population of Quebec increased, but that it has made headway in Ontario and in the west. If any special point be chosen to give praise to the Prime Minister, who so ably directs the government of this country, it may surely be mentioned that it was he who decided to build the Transcontinental Railway, a gigantic national enterprise, of which, I am happy to say, my hon. friend from L'Islet has approved. The Prime Minister has, by this means, opened to settlement both New Ontario and New Quebec, and if room be lacking in the valleys of the Richelieu, of the St. Lawrence or the St. Francis, our countrymen may confidently rely upon finding there the necessary space for their development.

As for colonization societies, the member for L'Islet is aware that the government has subsidized those of Lake St. John, of Montreal and of Ottawa. The grant to the Lake St. John society was discontinued, because its members appeared to have more taste for politics than for colonization, and the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay is in a position to funish, on this point, some interesting facts.

My hon. friend from L'Islet is well aware that repatriation is not as easy a matter as he would have us suppose. He has himself mentioned several obstacles, such as the parochial organization deeply rooted among the French Canadian groups of New England. I will say to the hon. gentleman—it is sometimes useful to state home truths—that the most serious opponents of repatriation are to be found among the clergy. When a French Canadian priest has founded a mission in the United States and that that mission has become a parish, with church, college, convent and schools, all handsome, as may be seen at Lowell, Holyoke and elsewhere, when such a place has become in some sort a continuation of the province of Quebec, it is natural enough that the pastor of the parish should not desire to see his flock dispersed even though it be to return to old Quebec.

As for myself, I am far from being indifferent to the fate of those French Canadians who strive to maintain our national traditions on foreign soil. I know that a great number of them desire to return to the province of Quebec ; that has been established. Their elders have remained on the land. In the counties of Berthier and Soulanges, for example, and on the banks of the Richelieu, the farms became too small to contain the numerous French Canadian families. The sons left and settled in New England ; their intention was always to return later on. I met during the last election a cousin of my friend the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot), who has made a fortune in New England, and who had returned to reside in his native parish. This is an instance among a thousand. A great number of them return home of their own accord and without solicitation on the part of the federal government.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the Department of the Interior, under the direction of Mr. Sifton, and under that of the present minister (Mr. Oliver), has done its duty with respect to repatriation.

Mr. F. D. MONK. (Jacques Cartier.) (Translation.) I think, Mr. Speaker, that we owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for L'Isle, for the interesting and absolutely impartial speech he has just delivered on the question of repatriation. Our friend has treated the question from a high standpoint, and with warmth. His remarks were dictated by no party consideration, and I think that the House will admit that he is the first member from the province of Quebec—at least since I have the honour of sitting here—who has raised that question.

Who among the members sitting on your right has ever, since twelve years, made a speech to point out the means which should be adopted to put a stop to that evil, the effects of which the member for L'Islet has so eloquently explained ? The evil he speaks of has since many years been causing to Canada and particularly to the province of Quebec, most serious and painful economic losses. Yet I never heard the gentlemen opposite mention it. I myself have spoken of it two or three time though not in a special manner. But at the present moment, during the opening days of a new parliament, when immigration questions are about to become of burning interest as stated by the hon. minister, who has just sat down, it was right, I think, that a representative from the province of Quebec should rise in this House to draw our attention, not to the Yellow Peril of which he cannot bridge, but to the peril resulting from the weakening of national life in the province of Quebec.

Notwithstanding the eloquent tribute paid by the Postmaster General to the member for L'Islet, I cannot think that he has rendered him entire justice. The hon. minister began by stating that since 1896, the exodus which is causing so much harm to many of our countrymen has been checked.

Mr. TALBOT (Bellechasse.) (Translation.) That is true.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) It is false, it is untrue, for the movement is continuing. It is not as intense to-day as it was in the beginning, by reason of circumstances ably set forth by my hon. friend from L'Islet, but it is continuing all the same. Have the parishes formerly deserted been repopulated? When we journey through the province of Quebec and see the closed houses and abandoned farms, do we find that any of them have been taken up by others among our countrymen ? Not at all.

I may say that in my own constituency where the evil referred to by the hon. member for L'Islet has not been felt to the same extent as in other localities, owing to the nearness of a great city, these houses have nevertheless remained closed. There are also closed houses in the county represented by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. A friend of mine living in that county was telling me last summer that in Rouville, houses closed as a result of that exodus have since been left unoccupied.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). (Translation.) Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question? I think I have a fairly good knowledge of what is going on in my county and I am in a position to state that the hon. member's statement is unfounded. He would oblige me greatly by naming the place where he found such a state of things.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) My hon. friend wishes me to point out the range, the hill, the very neighbourhood where a house abandoned fifteen years ago has since been left unoccupied. He knows very well that I am not able to do that off hand.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Will the hon. member be so kind as to give the name of the parish?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) The house situated in the parish of which the hon. minister himself is a resident. My informer stated: That is the result of the exodus. And why should we endeavour to pander with the truth? There was a time when people were leaving this country in large numbers. The flow of emigration has diminished since. It is pretty well known that perfect happiness is not to be found in the United States, that milk does not flow in their rivers, nor gold for that matter, that prosperity has some drawbacks in that country. That is why the flow of emigration has diminished, but it has not ceased. I am satisfied that statistics might be found in support of that statement.

Two or three years ago, I went to Philadelphia in company with the hon. Postmaster General. We were invited to a banquet and there we were met by a large number of English speaking Canadians, of great ability no doubt, who had come there from the Maritime Provinces. It is that same exodus which has depopulated the Maritime Provinces which has also drawn away from Canada so many of our French speaking Canadians. Who can deny it? Young men in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, being unable to find at home a wide enough scope for their activity, have gone to the United States and have remained there.

The statement that the hon. member for L'Islet has made in reference to the people of the province of Quebec, of a more or less industrial character, who have emigrated to the United States, might be extended to the remainder of Canada . That exodus has been going on in all parts of the country, and is still going on.

It seems as if the Postmaster General had considered as a reflection on the government as a vicious attack on his party, what was an entirely unprejudiced statement of fact. It refers to a state of things which claim just now our whole attention; but the hon. gentleman has thought fit to throw that red herring across the track and view it as a reflection on this government and his party.

Do hon. members know by what magic at a certain time in 1896, when there was a change of government, that evil which the member for L'Islet has just pointed out came to an end. The Hon. Postmaster General has told us. Some hon. members must have been surprised to hear him make the statement: it is the new tariff policy of the government put in force in 1896. How can that be made to agree with the statements made in public by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr.Sifton), whose authority the Postmaster General appeals to just now, and whom he eulogizes in the strongest terms. Such change of position is rather surprising to those who have not forgotten that at the time that minister resigned the French party organs of the Postmaster General bitterly attacked that ex-minister.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU (Solicitor General). (Translation.) Who said so?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) It is the Prime Minister's organ which made an onslaught on the ex-Minister of the Interior at the time he resigned, stating that he had been treacherous to the French Canadians and Catholics. Is that true or false? Does my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) challenge me to lay that article before the House?

Mr. BUREAU. (Translation.) Certainly.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) He has been slow in answering, and he knows that I am unable to take up his challenge just now.

The hon. Postmaster General has referred to the tariff question. He is well aware that his party has held fast to the policy which we had started in 1878, when a protective tariff was established. Only slight changes have been made to it by the Liberal party. What was the statement made by the ex-Minister of the Interior? Did he not state in this House that practically the tariff had not been changed and that consequently the fiscal question was no longer a party question? How then could the changes effected in the tariff policy have put a stop to the exodus of our fellow citizens to the United States? I leave to the Postmaster General the task of answering that question.

We should not blink at the facts. The Postmaster General stated that in 1886 we had not a single emigration agent among our French speaking fellow-citizens in the eastern states. That is true. I am not aware, at any rate, that we had any at the time. Any one familiar with the management of public affairs knows what was our immigration policy in 1896. We spent barely $125,000 for immigration purposes.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) Whose fault was it if more was not spent?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I was about to remark that such a moderate expenditure redounds to the credit of the Conservative leaders, who had not lost their heads on that immigration question as the Liberal party have done. To-day we are reaching up in the millions. Did my friend the hon. Postmaster General, or did any of these hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec, in 1896, dream of appointing agents for the purpose of inducing our fellow-citizens in the eastern states to return to Canada? Did any one dream in 1896, of carrying on work of that kind in the direction pointed to by the hon. member for L'Islet? By no means; there was not a single agent appointed, neither in 1897. The hon. Postmaster General was at the time Solicitor General. Did he accomplish anything in that direction? I am waiting for an answer. Here is what occurred—and there is nobody better aware of it than the Postmaster General himself—the then minister of the Interior had taken it into his head to inflict on the western country and heterogenous people, to fill up that country without care or discrimination. His sole ambition was to fill up the west, a queer notion, which had to be discarded pretty soon, owing to strong complaints made to our government by the United States authorities, regarding the class of people we subsidized. These European immigrants to whom or on whose account we paid bonuses would oftentimes find their way to the United States and flood that country with diseased and undesirable persons, who, on being shut out from the neighbouring republic, returned to Canada and remained a burden to us. How much did we spend in 1897-98 to bring here the first 7,000 Doukhobors? $48,000 to begin with. Will hon. gentlemen in this House who have taken an interest in this question and have studied it claim that the government has acted wisely in spending such an amount for the purpose of bringing here people of whom their fellow-citizens in Europe were glad to get rid; inflicting on the Northwest Territories the presence of 15,000 or 20,000 persons who go about naked on the prairie in quest of the Messiah.

We continued bringing here numbers of people who have been sent west; but after a while, owing to protests forthcoming from the United States, and from this side of the House, it was deemed necessary to adopt stricter regulations. At one time, a few members became indignant at the fact that we were spending over one million dollars a year advertising, after the Preston method, in the west, in Europe, in Germany, in Norway and in the British Isles, while abstaining from all active work in the eastern states. A move has been made with which probably the Postmaster General has had something to do—for I willingly acknowledge his patriotism and good intentions—a move has been made against that policy. In the eastern states, it was urged, there is a desirable quota of settlers to be obtained and nothing is done to enlist them. You have no agents on the spot, your endeavours in that direction are nil; complaints are beginning to be voiced in that regard, try and do something. Was there, yes or no, pressure exerted on the then Minister of the Interior? I have not in mind the present minister, but his predecessor in office the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton). At all events, after many and long continued exertions, met with stubborn resistance, the appointment of a few agents was granted. The Postmaster General states that he has to-day two such agents.

I remember the time—and my friend from L'Islet must remember it also—when there were on the spot only a couple of poor, though zealous priests working not in their own interest, but in the country's interest. receiving a modicum of about $600 per year, and whose accounts for expenses were audited and scrutinized in a gingerly way.

It may be that in the meantime the number of agents has been increased; but do we find entrusted with that important work of repatriating our own people any of those fine gentlemen, who, closely seated in their offices, draw on us at the rate of $6,000 or $7,000 a year, as are to be found in western Canada, in Michigan, or any other of the western states. Insignificant amounts have been voted for the purpose of repatriating our people, as compared with the hundreds of thousand dollars spent for the purpose of enlisting by improper methods—and I shall ever brand them as such—immigrants from various European countries, with the object of settling our lands and helping to build up a young nation; the whole work being carried on recklessly, without anything like the care required under the circumstances.

And what do we see to-day? While we have spent a million and a half in bonuses and salaries to agents spread through Europe for the purpose of bringing here 260,000 immigrants, what have we accomplished towards solving the problem brought to our attention by the member for L'Islet? We have in the United States a million and a half of our fellow-citizens, a number of whom are still British subjects; they still retain that fine feeling which prevents them from giving up their character of British citizens. They are well fitted for farm work, speak both languages, are inured to our climatic conditions. Why should we not carry on in their midst a systematic campaign for their repatriation, instead of continuing to send in their midst incompetent agents, simply because they happen to be the friends of some member, connections of some minister, and are in need of a job. I say that it would be possible for us without difficulty, to enlist 25,000, to say the least, of these admirable settlers who are desirous of returning here. It has been objected, if they are desirous of coming back, should send for them and extend to them those facilities at least which we offer to the Doukhobors, when enlisting them in the back yards of Europe.

The plan proposed by the hon. member for L'Islet is a good one. We should have recourse to those associations having for their object the repatriation of such of our fellow-citizens as are desirous of returning to Canada and settling on farms. I have no information as to what has taken place in the case of the Lake Saint John Colonization Society; but as a rule, our colonization societies are made up of disinterested men, in whose eyes money is no object, their whole aim being the country's good.

If by means of some organization managed on business lines, we succeed in repatriating 25,000 or 30,000 of these good people, and have them take up lands either on the Western praries, or in British Columbia, or in Northern Ontario, or in the province of Quebec, wherein there are still large areas of vacant lands, I say that will be money well spent.

The question of immigration has never been taken up in this House as a truly national issue. We have gone into a system of bonusing the great transportation companies, which were offering inducements to their booking agents in the older countries of Europe for the purpose of recruiting immigrants and sending them to the Northwest. Then that system was extended for patronage ends, by the appointments of immigration agents, former members, or cousins or nephews of influential people, thus enabling them to live at the expense of the Government. I contend that it is time we should take up as a national issue the work of bringing back to Canada our fellow-citizens settled in foreign lands.

There is not only the Northwest to fill up. We have fertile lands still unoccupied in all the provinces. It should no longer be our object to frame our immigration policy with a view to directing westward an heterogenous population which can only be a source of embarrassment and difficulties. Such a problem should be viewed in all its bearings and solved as a whole.

To my mind, that question of the repatriation of our fellow-citizens has been very well set forth by my friend from L'Islet; and I hope the House will give due consideration to his remarks on the subject.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for L'Islet should be congratulated for having called the attenton of the House to that important question of the repatriation of the French Canadians settled in the United States. I certainly would have no criticism to offer of his speech, had it not recalled some utterances of his on the same subject, delivered during the last electoral campaign. That question is worthy of consideration, and it is my excuse for taking part in this debate.

My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has made a speech wherein party feeling is more in evidence than in the remarks made by the hon. member for L'Islet. It seems as if he had taken occasion of this debate to cast reflections on the policy followed by the government. For instance, I notice he has resorted to the Doukhobor cry. Some of our opponents in the province of Quebec have this as their stock argument at public meetings, that a certain number of Doukhobors hailing from Russia have settled in the western country. That is the crime for which our government is taken to task. However the member for Jacques Cartier has forgetten apparently the statement made by his chief, the member for Halifax (Mr. R. L. Borden), leader of the Opposition, who, in the course of his recent journeyings through the West, highly eulogized the Doukhobors and Galicians.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) What is my hon. friend's authority for such a statement?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) The statement was made in this House last year, the leader of the opposition was present, and it is not to my knowledge that he contradicted the statement. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier denies that the leader of the opposition has eulogized these people, of course I am bound to accept his statement; but, what I have heard of the debate last year is evidence to me that the leader of hon. gentlemen opposite has used such language, since he has not contradicted the statement. That statement, as I am informed, by the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) is recorded in Hansard for 1907-1908, pages 1396 and 1397, wherein will be found the proofs in support of my contention, and I presume that in the course of this debate these utterances will be quoted anew word for word.

Moreover, the question should not be considered from the point of view of the partisan, and I very much regret that the member for Jacques Cartier should have thought fit to take such a stand, he who as a rule discusses these questions solely as to their merits.

The member for Jacques Cartier has made an extraordinary statement which, I am bound to say, is wholly without foundation.

Nobody can deny that for many years, people were going from Canada to the United States. This emigration began about 1840. It became more general after the reciprocity treaty of 1854, and was at its highest point, about 1870 and the succeeding years, until 1896.

That emigration from the province of Quebec and the other provinces was very large, as the fact can be proved by the statistics of the American government. From a report that has just been handed to me, I gather that in 1850, the year of the census, the number of Canadians that had emigrated to the United States was 147,711; in 1860, 249,970; in 1870, 493,464; in 1880, 717,154; in 1890, 980,938, and in 1900, 1,179,807.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has laid great stress on the emigration of French Canadians. I see that since a certain number of years, the emigration of the French Canadians, instead of being in the ascension, has rather decreased.

I can see by the American census of 1880 that there was at that time 980,938 Canadians in the United States; out of that number, 678,442 were of English origin and 302,496 of French origin. In 1890, there was an increase and, of a total of 1,179,207 Canadians, 784,741 were of English descent; so there was an increase of over 100,000, while the number of Canadians of French descent had passed from 302,000 to 395,000. We can see, then, that the emigration of French Canadians had proportionately decreased.

Mr. MONK (Translation). What is the minister quoting from?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR (Translation). These statistics are to be found in a memorandum published by the Trade and Labor Bureau of Washington. They are official.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). Is not the American classification of immigrants different from ours? Would not a Franch Canadian be classified as a Frenchman?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). My hon. friend is mistaken; formerly the Canadians were entered without any mention of origin, but since 1890, a new classification has been adopted, and a distinction is made between French and English Canadians.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). Will my hon. friend let me have this paper, when he is through with it?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). Certainly; with pleasure. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that the emigration from the province of Quebec has been going on since 1896 and that it is quite as numerous as formerly.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). I did not say that; what I said was quite the contrary.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). I accept my hon. friend's denial, but he said that emigration to the United States was still very large and that a great number of farms were deserted. He mentioned Rouville county and made a reference to the parish of Saint Hilaire. There is not another parish that I know more about and I can say to my hon. friend that when I was a candidate for the first time, in 1891, I travelled through the county, and in the parishes of L'Ange-Gardien and Saint-Paul I saw concessions after concessions where the farms were deserted and the houses closed. What do we see to-day? Conditions are changed. Go through these same parishes and you will not see a single house closed.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). Have those people returned?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). Certainly. They have returned and they are prospering, thanks to the agricultural development that has taken place since 1896, and thanks, above all, to a progressive policy in the dairy industry, which is giving handsome profits to those who are engaged in it. That is the real situation and I have no doubt that my hon. friend has made that assertion without due consideration.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). I will find out the exact locality and concessions.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). I am sure that my hon. friend is mistaken. He may have seen some houses closed, but here is the explanation: the farmers are so well off that they sometimes buy the farm of a neighbour and close the house.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). It is in what is called the 'rang des Trente.'

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation). Here again my hon. friend is wrong. The matter is of no importance, but I simply wished to put my hon. friend right on that point.

Now, has the government done something for the repatriation of the French Canadians? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier has candidly admitted that the government of which he has been a strong supporter before 1896, had never appointed a single agent to that end. He must give us credit for having appointed, not one, or two, or six of such agents, but twelve.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). Will the hon. Minister give us the names of these agents and the places where they are operating?

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) Certainly. They are: Réné Dupont, Quebec; J. B. Carbonneau, Biddeford, Maine; C. A. Laurier, Marquette, Maine; Romuald Laurier, 114 rue Dudley, Foxburg, Mass.; Damase Gauthier, Laurentides, Que.; O. Tessier, Saginaw, Mich.; W. H. Beaudry, Mass.; Alex. Ayotte, Great Falls, Mont.; M. L'abbé L. P. Gravel, Gravelburg, Sask.; M. L'Abbé E. E. Gauthier, Pawtucket, R. I.; M. L'Abbé J. A. Ouellette, Montreal, Que.

It must be remembered that the address of some of these agents is in Canada, but that their field of action is in the United States.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier says that we have no agents in the eastern states. If he will refer to the report of Mr. Damase Gauthier, he will be convinced of the contrary.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) What is Gauthier's salary? It must be at least $400.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) At least $1,200.

Mr. MONK. (Translation). Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) My hon. friend has given many denials; he can afford to give one more. Let us see what is said in the report of the Rev. M. Blais for the year 1902-1903, page 145:

Besides the repatriation of a large number of our people, I have succeeded in moulding the opinion of the leading class to the advantages of the Canadian west, in interesting them in my work, which will make it easier for me with a large number of persons who think seriously of coming back to Canada.

In his report Rev. M. Vachon, says:

I have continued during the last year the work taken up in previous years, that is, of lecturing in the western states among the most prosperous French settlements in farming districts. The result, I am pleased to say has been satisfactory with regard to the quality and quantity of settlers. Those emigrants formerly from Canada form a very desirable class of settlers, as they are men who have acquired fortune and experience in farming in the United States. I may say that the interest in the northwest is increasing among the French people; this is evidenced by the numerous invitations sent to me from different parts of the country to lecture on Canada. One of these invitations came from as far as Butte City, Montana; I took advantage of this invitation tendered to me to go and lecture in several French settlements of Montana, and not without effect, as it is noticed that the large percentage of French settlers from that direction is higher this year than previously.

Let us look, now, to the report of Mr. Ridout, for the year 1904-1905, page 87:

I must say that through the eastern states that I have visited the majority of the French population is anxious to come back and see our new settlements in Canada. During my lectures I have called the attention of my audience to the advantages that can be found on the settlements in New Ontario, districts of Nipissing and Algoma, Northern Timiskaming and county of Pontiac, province of Quebec.

And the report of Mr. John Hoolahan :

It is a satisfaction to be able to state that the repatriation of French Canadians goes steadily on. While many of these return to their old homes in Quebec and eastern Ontario, a large percentage now turn their steps to the Northwest.

Mr. O'Corbeil says:

I went to Nashua, Manchester and Concord, where the French Canadians are in large numbers and are asking for more information. As a result on that trip, the numerous letters that I receive and the numerous applications that are coming in for literature are good proofs that the repatriation of French Canadians is larger than ever, and is still increasing on account of these people being better informed as to the Canadian west.

Mr. Carbonneau in his report says:

The prospects for this bureau, which is chiefly concerned in the repatriation of the largest number of French Canadians, are most encouraging. During the financial year I have delivered certificates for 405 persons representing 134 families, whose intention are to settle in western Canada or in the province of Quebec, and whose aggregate capital is $48,000.

It can be seen by these reports that our agents have done much for the cause of repatriation, not only in the eastern states, but also in the west. It is a well known fact, that there are a great many Canadians in the western states, and the work done in these parts of the country helps also the repatriation in the east and directs the Canadians from the American west to the Canadian west

I will give some statistics to prove my contention. If the hon. member for Jacques Cartier will look at the report of 1903-04, he will see that 4,432 Canadians have returned to this country. In 1904-1905, 3,613 have returned.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) What is your authority for that ?

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) The official reports. The proportion in 1904, was 9·8 per cent.; in 1905, 8·3 per cent.; in 1906, 5,000, or 8:6 per cent.; in 1906-7, 2,502, or 7·3 per cent.; in 1907-08, 5,160, or 8·8 per cent. The total for the five years was 20,707 repatriated Canadians, or 9 per cent.

I will now give extracts from the report of the Colonization Society of Montreal.

In 1898, 68 Canadian were brought back from the United States, thanks to the efforts of that association. In 1899, we had 31. In 1900, 92; in 1901, 102; in 1902, 149; in 1903 ,119; in 1904, 228; in 1905, 295; in 1906, 310; in 1907, 330. So, in the ten years, 1,715 Canadians left the United States and have settled in the new parts of this country, thanks to the good work of this association. These statistics are taken from the report of the secretary, dated March 3, 1908.

Have we not in these reports the proof that the government have done their duty towards the cause of the repatriation of the French Canadians living in the United States, and that my hon. friend was entirely mistaken when he said that we have done nothing for our fellow-countrymen. I think I have established that the Conservative government have done nothing, while the Liberal administration have appointed agents and subagents in the United States to bring back our fellow-countrymen to this country.

My hon. friend ought to know, that the time is no more when one could raise the racial and religious cry about immigration. His friends from the Pacific coast devote their time to denounce oriental immigration and his friends of the province of Quebec are chiefly concerned in creating racial prejudices against the government, with that same question of immigration.

M. PAQUET. (Translation.) What justification has the hon. minister to say that the friends of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier are endeavouring to create racial prejudices about immigration? Have I done so in discussing this question the way I have discussed it this afternoon?

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) I say that in the province of Quebec and in British Columbia, the racial cry is being raised about immigration. In British Columbia, they went as far as forging telegrams to create the impression that the head of the Conservative party was totally opposed to oriental immigration. Can my hon. friend deny that? What does he think of his friends who resort to such means?

On the other hand, in the province of Quebec, they are trying to stir the prejudices of the French population under the pretense that the federal governement are not doing their duty.

I think I have established, figures in hand, that the government and the Minister of the Interior, have done all in their power, not only for the repatriation of our fellow-countrymen, but also to attract to this country the greatest possible number of desirable immigrants.

M. NANTEL (Terrebonne). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I confess that I had no intention of taking part in this discussion. I can say further, that I had not the least suspicion that the academic speech of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Paquet) would be followed by such an animated debate. I am inclined to think that politics are not always the best of things. The discussion started on lines acceptable to all and it seems to me that there should be only one way of thinking on this question. It is quite clear to my mind that the government must take the means of settling this immense country of ours.

They are in duty bound to direct immigration from the best sources, to lay the foundations of a great Canadian nation. Then, can they go at a better source, than in endeavouring to bring back to this country those who have left it? The government have done good work in that direction; they are entitled to our felicitations for it. I hope they will continue in the same strain.

The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) said that within ten years, 1,700 Canadians had been brought back to this country. The result is not amazing.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) By the Colonization Society of Montreal, alone.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) But, may I ask how many strangers have been brought in this country, for the last few years that will never become assimilated and will be a lasting menace for the Canadian race, be it in the east or in the west? I do not care to mention any race in particular, but nobody can deny that the danger exists.

The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said that the government have attracted a large number of American citizens in western Canada. I know that, and I am inclined to think that, on principle, it is not a desirable immigration. I do not suppose that these immigrants will ever become strongly attached to Canada. They come here to operate the great natural resources of the country, to make money with the preconceived idea of returning to their former homes. For those who do stay, they will always think more of the stars and stripes than of the Canadian flag.

The same thing cannot be said of the French Canadians who have emigrated to the United States. They are favourably disposed towards us. They are people of the same blood. They will become patriotic citizens, always ready to stand by the flag.

I repeat that the government have done a good deal, but that they can do much more and I am bound to say that if politics were eliminated from the question, it would be an easy task to direct towards this country a large number of desirable immigrants from the republic to the south.

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Solicitor General). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House very long. I simply wish to make a few remarks on the speeches delivered by the hon. members for Jacques Cartier and Terrebonne. As to my hon. friend from L'Islet, it seemed to me as if I was listening to some of the speeches he had already delivered during the last elections, I do not think there is any condemnation of the government policy in the words he has uttered. He has recalled to mind the struggles of the French Canadians, the wrongs they had to suffer and from whom the latter came.

The discussion of this question has taken a new turn when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier rose on his feet. This question of repatriation is one which deserves serious consideration and which every one of us has at heart. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier said a while ago that it is always timely to discuss that question, and he asked: who are those who look after it? In answer to him, I may quote the old saying that actions are more eloquent than words. If we have not raised this question it is because we were taking action. As the hon. Minister of Marine said, we have appointed immigration agents in New England to bring back the French Canadians from the United States, and thereby a new movement was determined.

We all agree upon one point: we all want the French Canadians to come back in this country. The hon. member for L'Islet said he did not intend to criticise the government policy, but simply wished to state that the amount spent for French immigration literature is very small indeed. I hold in my hand a statement prepared from the records of the Immigration Department which shows that last year there were printed and distributed, at a cost of $7,935, about 257,000 French pamphlets in order to encourage the French Canadians to come back to this country.

The only means suggested by the hon. member for L'Islet is to start a concerted action intended to cause such a prosperity as would bring back our compatriots. For him it seems useless to send agents in the United States in order to have the country advertised by the means of lectures on our fertile soil and valuable lands.

I do not think this government can be charged with not having changed the conditions since 1896. Moreover, the Postmaster General has stated a while ago how matters were standing in spite of the contrary statements made by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier who in order to support his theory is willing to see in the closed summer houses of those who go and spend the country-season on the shores of the Richelieu river a proof that French Canadians are moving to the United States.

My hon. friend has a sensible soul and a great heart, but whenever he is in need of arguments, his imagination is quick at work. In 1900 or 1903, I took part in a by-election in Argenteuil caused by Mr. Christie's death: there I met the former member for Beauharnois, Mr. Bergeron, and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. The latter was deploring in every respect the presence of Doukhobors in Canada; such was his hobby and he could not get rid of it. He was denouncing the government and it was a great sight indeed to see him raising his arms to heaven while calling attention to that dreadful thing. He came back to it today; that was unavoidable. As to the remedy suggested by the hon. member for L'Islet, I do not think that it would better the situation in any respect.

Before I resume my seat I have just one word more to add. The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Nantel) has just said that we must be very cautious in the selection of immigrants. He said amongst other things that certain immigrants he did not wish to designate were a danger for Canadians. Speaking of Americans from the west who come and settle in Canada, he gave us to understand that their coming was entirely dangerous for the future of the country.

Let me tell him that under the Conservative government, before 1896, I was, like many others, obliged to go and earn in a foreign land the living I could not earn in this country. I have lived in the west, I have known personally the western Americans, and I must say that there are no more loyal, honest, energetic, and intelligent men in the world than these Americans. I wish that the lands of Canada could be peopled with Americans coming from the west. I assert positively that the man working in the Dakota plains or in the Minnesota mines is not inferior in any respect to French Canadians or any other nationality. I am sorry the hon. member for Terrebonne has thought fit to offer such remarks.

Having made these few observations, Mr. Speaker, I resume my seat and congratulate my hon. friend from L'Islet for his admission that the government have done their duty.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse).—(Translation.)—I can only congratulate the hon. member for L'Islet at least for the form of the speech delivered by him this afternoon.

This question of immigration is one that is discussed throughout the country, and is particularly important for us, from the province of Quebec, who have a large number of our campatriots in the United States contributing to the increase of our neighbours' welfare.

Like the hon. Solicitor General, I have, together with six brothers of mine, been compelled by the Conservative policy to go and earn in a foreign country the living we could not find in our native land. Those who had to gain their living that way know how hard it is, when the mind is suffering from the absence of a home left behind. The constant thought of those who live in the United States, a great many at least, is to come back in their native country.

I can only congratulate my hon. friend from L'Islet for the form of his speech; but I regret the turn the statements made by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier have given to this debate. Did we not hear enough about the Doukhobors during the last federal elections? From north to south, the echoes of the mountains in the province of Quebec are still resounding with the speeches made by the Conservative candidate. The hon. member for L'Islet himself took delight in representing these Doukhobors as fanatical and insane people looking after Christ through the plains of the west.

Every one of us can remember the famous tour made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden). In Valleyfield, the hon. gentleman uttered certain words the hon. member for Jacques Cartier calls in question. He asked for the proof of such words. I am going to quote for his information the speech the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) delivered in this House on the 15th January, 1908, and wherein may be found the remarks made by the hon. leader of the opposition. The words in question are found in pages 1340 and 1341 of 'Hansard':

Speaking at Valleyfield, in the province of Quebec, the leader of the opposition criticised certain peoples that were coming into the great northwest. On the 2nd of September last. as reported, not in any Grit paper, but by his own organ—sometimes—the Montreal 'Gazette,' he said:

'Between the east and the west there is a vast stretch of territory that could be peopled, and there was danger of the two sections of the country becoming antagonistic to each other. Under these circumstances he thought it most unwise to crowd into the west as the government was doing a class of undesirable immigrants, Galicians, Bohemians, Doukhobors, &c., who did not understand our customs and did not readily assimilate either with the French or English elements of Canada.'

And Mr. Johnston added:

I heard him, I think the next night in Montreal, after I had read this report of his speech and I listened attentively to see whether or not he would correct the report of his speech in the 'Gazette' of that day; but he did not, on the contrary he went on to address himself to the people in Montreal in very nearly the same way.

Winding up his great journey through the western country, how did the leader of the opposition express himself, he who had reviled the Galicians, Doukhobors and Bohemians? Let us see what Mr. Johnston says:

The next day Mr. Borden made a statement in the Winnipeg 'Telegram' as follows—and I want the House to pay particular attention to his words:

'While I am in the west——

He had left the west and had still hope that what he said in the west would not be read in the east.

'While I am in the west I wish to say that in respect to the question of immigration, the report which is attributed to me as referring to certain nationalities as undesirable is quite inaccurate.'

The interview was reported by the Winnipeg 'Telegram,' of the 8th of September last, and it is exactly in the words I have placed before the House. It is worth while calling the attention of the country once more to these words.

It will thus be seen that the leader of the opposition expressed himself one way while in the east and another way when in the west. The member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) stated that there were still in the province of Quebec unoccupied houses. I belong to a county which has been for years and years depopulated by emigration. The flower of its youth have departed to the United States, as farming was no longer remunerative for poor husbandmen burdened with numerous children. All that these good people could say to their boys was: How can you expect me to lend you a hand in acquirement of a farm in the new districts, when myself on the old family homestead, I am unable to provide the requisite education and the necessary clothing.' What inducement was there to bring back to Canada those whom the policy in force at the time had caused to depart? To-day farming is in such a prosperous condition, that the head of a family will not suffer his boy to depart, and provides him with land at a cost of four or five thousand dollars. The sheriff at Quebec informed me not very long ago that for three months previous there had not been a single compulsory sale in his district. I have been a farmer myself, and had the sorrow of seeing my property sold by the sheriff. What was the cause of it? At the time there was no sale for the products of the farm. In one of the newly settled parishes of my county, a farmer was telling me a short time ago that formerly he was in debt four or five hundred dollars, while at the time of his speaking he had five or six hundred dollars in the bank. There is one other circumstance which the member for Jacques Cartier, did not mention: That while there may still be some houses unoccupied, it is not on account of their owners having gone to the United States, but because they have taken up their abode in large cities such as Montreal or Quebec. I make this statement without fear of being contradicted, as for every Canadian going to the United States, there are five coming back.

The member for L'Islet knows by what means he has succeeded in winning at the polls. He has been unceasing in his encomiums of the government; especially has he made the welkin ring with the five votes cast by him for the government, and above all the vote in favour of the French treaty. He has been untiring in his vindication of his spirit of independence. In the speech which he has just delivered to-day, and which is perfect as to form, I detect the same practice of resorting to insinuation.

Mr. PAQUET.—(Translation.)—Is the hon. member in a position to point out to a single error appearing in my speech?

Mr. TALBOT.—(Translation.)—There is no error for me to point out; I congratulate the hon. member on having paid his respects to the government.

I have a word to say in answer to the member for Terrebonne, in reference to the exodus from the United States to the Canadian west. These settlers are among all others particularly intelligent and energetic. If the member for Terrebonne will look into the statistics, he will find that in the interval of two years, about 200,000 have entered Canada, bringing with them capital to the amount of more than $100,000,000 in cash, stock and personal property. They are very desirable immigrants who will continue accumulating wealth and will contribute to our country's prosperity.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright).—(Translation.)—I have listened with a great deal of attention and pleasure to the speeches delivered this afternoon. It must have been highly gratifying to you, Mr. Speaker, to hear those speeches in the beautiful tongue of your ancestors, the tongue of Molière, and I feel that it would be unbecoming on my part to break the harmonious flow of this debate by using another tongue than the French for the few remarks I wish to make. Many things of practical interest have been said this afternoon, but I expected something more from the mouths of the hon. members for L'Islet and Jacques Cartier. It seems there is not a single Conservative member in this House apart from these two gentlemen who is in favour of a scheme for the repatriation of French Canadians.

During the general election, particularly in the province of Quebec, a great deal has been said about immigration and especially the Doukhobors. I must admit that I am not in favour of bringing here from the continent of Europe immigrants of the class we have had coming to this country, who are of nomadic habits, and, under the pretense of religion, put us to shame. But, on the other hand, it should be acknowledged that when a government is doing every thing in its power to bring about the settlement of those immense territories of Alberta and Saskatchewan, it is not always an easy matter to select only desirable settlers among the thousands and thousands of immigrants who present themselves. I heartily endorse the opinion expressed by the hon. member for L'Islet and by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in reference to this matter of repatriation.

I am in favour of forwarding the repatriation of French Canadians settled in the United States in preference to bringing here immigrants from the continent of Europe. I think we should spend large amounts towards developing transportation facilities in order to enable Canadians to take up lands in the Northwest. It should be admitted that there are great difficulties to be overcome by the government especially when they have to deal with such an important question as that of immigration. Many are the hindrances in the way; every one should have his due, and credit be given to the government whenever the occasion requires.

Only a few weeks ago I had the pleasure of visiting the government offices in Paris. I had a very interesting interview with their agents, particularly with the commissioner, Mr. Fabre, and Messrs. Wiallard and Geoffrion. I got an insight into the work they are carrying on to induce French immigration. I also had an interview with Mr. de Coeli, the Canadian agent in Belgium, in connection with Belgian immigration, and I was favourably impressed with the interest he shows in his work.

The member for L'Islet referred to the establishment of agricultural colleges. He stated that the Dominion government should help in the establishment of such colleges. I hope the member for L'Islet will cross over the interprovincial bridge and visit the property owned in former times by the Conservative ex-representative of the county, the late Alonzo Wright. He will find there one of the finest colleges in the province of Quebec, essentially agricultural, established by the fathers of the Holy Ghost, for the purpose of imparting a knowedge of farming to our French-speaking young men.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House, although this question is one of interest, not only to the people of Quebec, but to the whole of Canada. Knowing that the government are doing all they possibly can in the way of repatriation, I have ventured to open my mouth with the sole object of encouraging to the best of my powers the government in the national and patriotic work they are carrying on, now that we have at the helm the greatest and most distinguished of the French Canadians. I am anxious to show to our French Canadian friends that the Irish are in sympathy with them and that the Liberal party is anxious to promote at all times their welfare.

Mr. C. ROY (Montmagny.)—(Translation.)—Mr. Speaker, being a new member I hope I may be permitted to say a few words on the question of repatriation, a matter which has been brought to the attention of the House by the representative of the county adjoining my own constituency. I refer to the member for L'Islet. It is the first time I have the honour to address the House, and I must acknowledge my surprise at finding that, in reference to a question concerning which there seems to be no room for difference, hon. members are nevertheless at variance. I did not expect to find politics mixed up in a question of such national importance.

I should congratulate my neighbour the member for L'Islet, who has confined himself to dealing with the question of repatriation. But what side of the House is responsible for introducing politics into this debate? I must say that it is that side of the House where I occupy a seat, where I have been relegated as a result of the last election; but it should not be inferred from that that I shall be often in harmony with the majority of those who sit on this side of the House. The member for L'Islet has not shown any prejudice, but I am unable to pay the same compliment to the member for Jacques Cartier, who I believe has confused the question of immigration with that of repatriation.

The object the member for L'Islet had in mind was to draw the attention of the House to that national work, the repatriation of our brethern living in the United States. The member for Jacques Cartier, in answer to the Postmaster General, stated that the Conservative government, prior to 1896. had done something towards bringing about repatriation. He wished to give credit to his party to having sent $110,000 towards promoting immigration. For the sake of fairness he should have credited the Liberal government with having increased the amount expended on repatriation as well as on immigration.

Reference has been made to abandoned houses in Rouville county. My constituency adjoins that of L'Islet; I am just as familiar with the county of Bellechasse as with that of Montmagny, and I may say right here that for the last ten or twelve years there has not been any abandoned houses whose owners had been constrained to leave the country and settle in the United States. True, as stated by the member for Bellechasse, there are still to be seen abandond houses, but they are more a matter of congratulation to the government, since the owners of these houses have emigrated to our cities where, owing to the policy pursued by the government, they are enabled to make a living instead of settling in the United States.

The member for Quebec west (Mr. Price), owner of a large saw-mill in the county of Montmagny, will be able to support me when I say that if the population of the town of Montmagny has considerably increased, it is owing to the fact that the inhabitants of Saint Thomas have left their homes to take advantage of the rise in salaries paid to mill hands.

The hon. member from Terrebonne said that it was better to have the Canadians coming back to this country than to receive foreigners. It would be better to have our poor fellow countrymen back from the United States, if they so desire, because the opportunity of doing so was given to them as agents were appointed in the United States. If there were no agents as there are, thanks to the policy of the government who undertook to make Canada known at the various exhibitions, not by sending there bands of Indians nor by any other similar doings capable of stirring curiosity but by displaying exhibits of such a character as to draw the attention upon Canada, they would still attain their end by the important display of our products.

The hon. member from Jacques Cartier found fault with the government because they intended to exercise their patronage in the appointment of their immigration agents; then he asserted that the wages paid to the agents in the United States were too low. If those wages are too low, as the hon. member from Jacques Cartier says, what becomes of his pretension that the government wanted to have a little patronage to exercise ? That is an inconsistency which I am unable to understand and which shows that the hon. member is not in earnest.

I shall say no more. As a French Canadian, first, and as a Canadian without any other qualification, I sincerely wish that our brethren from the United States come back in larger numbers than heretofore.

In concluding, I shall say that the government cannot be blamed, that they fulfilled their duty by appointing agents and that every year the number of our fellow-countrymen who have come back has increased.

Mr. J. A. ETHIER (Two Mountains).—(Translation.)—Mr. Speaker, the hon. member from L'Islet has seen fit to put upon the orders of the day a notice of motion for the production of papers which virtually summarize the different questions he has asked during the last parliament. Whether he has voluntarily or unvoluntarily forgotten the answers given by the Minister of the Interior, I do not know, although I am bound to congratulate him upon the tone of the speech he has delivered to-day. Had he omitted the insinuations which we have detected in his remarks, they would have been brought forward by the hon. member from Jacques Cartier. As the Postmaster General says, those innuendoes having been repeated by the hon. member from Jacques Cartier, the remarks of the hon. gentleman from L'Islet have lost a good deal of importance.

The hon. gentleman from Jacques Cartier has contradicted to a certain extent the statements of the hon. member from L'Islet. It is not my intention to go over every detail, but I cannot help recalling to these two gentlemen what happened in 1907. Here is what I find on page 6930 of the 'Hansard' of that year :

Generally speaking, the exodus towards the United States has perceptibly decreased, if it has not entirely come to an end, since ten years in New England. There is still here and there an exodus towards the United States, but as I have said, the number of our people going to the United States is considerably less.

Now, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was contending a moment ago that the exodus of our fellow-countrymen towards the United States was still going on. I assert that those words of the hon. gentleman from L'Islet which I have just quoted are inconsistent with the statements made to-day by the hon. member from Jacques Cartier. We have it from the member for L'Islet that the exodus towards the United States has come to an end ten years ago, still the member from Jacques Cartier holds otherwise.

I understand that the hon. member from L'Islet in moving for a copy of all correspondence, returns, and documents between the Department of the Interior and the immigration agents in the United States, and between the Department of the Interior and the colonization societies since the first of January, 1908, seeks information which has already been given to him. In any case, it is a matter of colonization and repatriation relating to Canada and the United States, and to the province of Quebec especially, not to Doukhobors and Galicians to whom the member from Jacques Cartier has referred to his speech.

As the hon. gentleman from Bellechasse says, the member from L'Islet during the last elections gloried in having sometimes voted with the government, and in the statements he had made in the House; he held that as a token of his independence. But now he finds fault with the policy of the administration as his friend from Terrebonne has also done. My opponent at the last election was flying the same colours, repeatedly saying and asserting on every husting that the government was sacrificing the French Canadian for the sake of the Doukhobors and the Galicians who, in his opinion, were nothing but low debauched people that ought to be driven away from this country. Such was the attitude of those gentlemen and such is the way in which the member from L'Islet behaved to further his own interests.

Mr. PAQUET.—(Translation.)—Mr. Speaker, has the hon. gentleman the right to say that I have acted in this House so as to further my own interests?

Mr. ETHIER.—(Translation.)—I made a mistake; I meant his political interests.

The immigration policy of those gentlemen has always been double-faced. They had a policy for the province of Quebec and another policy for the west. Thus, the hon. leader of the opposition had a different policy on immigration during his electoral tour on the eve of the last general elections, a policy reprehensible in Valleyfield and quite acceptable in Winnipeg, as far as foreign immigration goes. It was the same thing as in 1896, when Sir Charles Tupper had a double platform on the school question, one for Quebec and the other for Manitoba. I shall now come back to the question. Here is what I find at page 710 of the Hansard of 1908:

Mr. PAQUET asked:

1. What amount of money has been paid by the federal government, since January 1, 1900, to the Colonization and Repatriation Society of Montreal?
2. What amount of money has been paid by the federal government, since January 1, 1900, to the Colonization and Repatriation Society of Lake St. John and of Quebec?
3. What amount of money has been paid by the federal government, since January 1, 1900, to the Lake St. John Railway Company for the encouragement of repatriation?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $25,300.
2. $22,000.
3. $34,000.

Giving a total sum of $81,300.

Therefore the hon. member from L'Islet has already had from the Minister of the Interior that information he asks for to-day.

These being the facts, they dare say that the government has done nothin~ for the repatriation of our fellow-countrymen in the United States.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) The answer only covers that period ending January 1, 1908. I now ask for the statement relating to the time which has elapsed since January 1, 1908.

Mr. ETHIER. (Translation.) The hon. member from Jacques Cartier has referred to vacant houses. I am the representative of one of the princiual farming constituencies in the province of Quebec. There are no manufactures in our county ; every one is a farmer. The same thing may be said of Terrebonne, save for St. Jerome, where there are a few industrial establishments. The hon. member from Terrebonne no doubt recalls that a great number of young farmers from the north used to leave their families to go to the United States. They went awav in order to earn their daily bread which they could not get in their own country, and these things happened under the administration of those gentlemen. Now, what do we see to-day? Rich and prosperous farming communities. No more farms are sold by the sheriff, as it has been pointed out a moment ago by the hon. member from Bellechasse when he was referring to the Quebec district.

If you enter the registration office at St. Jerome for the county of Terrebonne or at Ste. Scholastique for the county of Two Mountains, you will notice that the mortgages are paid off and the discharges numerous ; the farmers pay their debts.

Besides the agents already appointed, the government have established special intelligence officers and we gather from the report of the Minister of the Interior that the United States government are getting alarmed on account of the results :

Here is what the report says:

It is impossible, the Deputy Minister of the Interior observes, in an essay on repatriation, to leave out statistics referring to the American immigration, one-tenth of which is represented by former Canadians.

Everything shows that the government of the United States is becoming alarmed at the return of our former citizens and the emigration of the Yankees from the west towards the rich plains of Canada.

Statistics as well as facts prove that the government did not forget nor sacrifice the French Canadian as it was hinted in the province of Quebec during the last elections, and that the man who to-day would say that their interests are disregarded for the sake of the Doukhobors and the Galicians would not be believed by the readers of Canadian newspapers any more than he was believed by the electorate on October 16 last. And when the public shall hear about this discussion it will be once more proven that under the protection of Canada's greatest son the interests of our fellow-countrymen are as safe as any other.

Mr. JOSEPH DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if I intend to say a few words upon this question, it is not because the hon. member from Jacques Cartier has apparently reproached the Liberal member for not having spoken before about repatriation. It may have been that we have not discussed that matter but the government have taken measures and deeds are worth more than words.

The hon. member from Jacques Cartier, it seems, has made a poor reply to the statement of the Postmaster General who said that since 1896 the government had put a stop to our fellow countrymen towards the United States. The minister, the hon. member says, should not make that statement because he had himself noticed that the houses vacated before 1896 in the counties of Jacques Cartier and Rouville were still unoccupied. That reply is not conclusive.

We have never contended that he had caused every Canadian to return from the United States. In order to make a satisfactory reply the member from Jacques Cartier should have been able to assert that a great number of houses have been closed since 1896 on account of the departure of the inmates for the United States, a statement which would not have been founded on facts.

So far as the member from L'Islet is concerned, I do not think that he was actuated by the unworthy desire of attacking the administration, but we have heard so many accusations against the policy of the government, so many reproaches about the lack of a policy that I think the Postmaster General was in duty bound to put the facts in their true light so as to dispel the erroneous impression which it was sought to create among the people.

By his motion the member from L'Islet asks for:

A copy of all correspondence, returns and documents between the Department of the Interior and the immigration agents in the United States, and between the Department of the Interior and the colonization societies since the 1st of January, 1908.

I am at a loss to understand how we could deny such a request. On the contrary, we should grant it for I believe that the hon. gentleman, if he carefully peruse those documents, will be enlightened and have a better opinion of the government policy on that matter. He will be able to notice what the government have done and to amend his ideas as to their desire as far as our fellow countrymen are concerned.

For several years past our government has made with foreign countries arrangements with a view to restricting immigration, and by restriction of immigration the return home of our fellow-citizens is not at all meant. If we are bound to congratulate the government for having thus restricted foreign immigration, we are also bound to congratulate them for the inducements extended to our fellow-citizens in order to bring about their return to Canada. We are in need of more men with strong bodies and large brains to help in the development of our great national heritage, and I am aware that no better settlers will ever be found than the sons of Canada, though unfortunate circumstances may have compelled them to emigrate to the United States.

Let us hope that the government will not depart from the policy they have been following heretofore in the country's greater interest.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi).—(Translation.)—Mr. Speaker, in the course of the remarks which have just been made on that very interesting question brought up by the hon. member for L'Islet, reference was made to the cutting off of the subsidy of $5,000 paid during a certain length of time by this government to the Lake St. John Colonization and Repatriation Society, and there was evinced a disposition to blame the government on that account. I witnessed the beginnings of that society while I had the honour of being a member of the Quebec legislature. I took a hand in its organization and it was at my request that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) agreed to pay the first grant of $4,000, subsequently raised to $5,000, to help it in carrying on its work, which was in good faith deemed practical and beneficial to the country. Subsequently, in view of certain well established facts, I took the responsibility, after consulting public opinion in my district, of recommending to the Prime Minister that the subsidy be no longer paid, and that a trial be made of some more practical organization, or of one at any rate as would secure more satisfactory results to the government. Papers concerning that transaction, which I shall request the government to lay on the table of the House, will set forth the facts which brought about the government's action in the matter and evince its wisdom under the circumstances.

Meanwhile the Prime Minister has approved of the appointment of a member of the clergy as lecturer to visit the principal Canadian centres in the United States, expound the advantages now offered by Canada to those willing to settle on its lands ; and at the same time he has appointed more agents to supervise the repatriation movement among Canadians there. The policy followed by the government heretofore has met with my approval, and I have yet to find anything which I would be inclined to blame; far from it.

To my mind, repatriation is a question of political and social economy, and to such an extent that the work which has been carried on by the government for a number of years has never given very satisfactory results. Hence an inclination to believe that the policy followed has been a wrong one. I am earnestly of the belief that who ever is dealing with this question is desirous to give every one his due, should of all necessity do away with all spirit of partisanship, considering that repatriation is an entirely patriotic move, to which all should be glad to lend a hand, if a result satisfactory to all concerned is to be arrived at promptly. I have had the honour at different times to go to the United States and address at times numerous meetings in Canadian centres. I have met there considerable numbers of Canadians who had not taken out their naturalization papers in the United States, who were anxious to return to Canada, but who deemed it a necessity to remain just where they were, being satisfied that on this side of the frontier they would not be in a position to procure for themselves and their families the same comforts, nor to effect savings to the same extent. The same reason was invariably given: 'In case we returned to Canada, what would become of our daughters and of our boys who find here throughout the week employment suited to their strength, at reasonable salaries, which enable us to live comfortably and even to lay money aside? Were we to be deprived of those daily returns which is coming to us, we would all of us be left without means of living comfortably, and, of course, no savings could be effected.'

So then in the eyes of a great number of Canadian fellow-citizens who are now living in the United States, farming in Canada, despite all we may say to the contrary does not give sufficient returns to induce them to give up a sure thing over there and run the risk of settling down in Canada. As a result, there is a need of persistent canvassing in the midst of those people, who are not sufficiently in touch with what is going on here to appreciate as they should be appreciated our publications and lectures on the subject, and therefore cannot be persuaded that it is of immediate and undoubted interest to them to return to Canada. To fully realize the difficulties in the way of bringing about repatriation, it is necessary to have acquired experience in the matter through reading and listening to anti-Canadian literature and utterances, spread in the form of correspondence and speeches by prominent men. It is all very well to wax eloquent as regards the development of our navigable waterways and of our transportation facilities, as means of facilitating the success of such a movement. That, to my mind, is no answer at all to the question which is put to us on all sides: What means of livelihood have you to offer to our girls and boys, who contribute daily, however small the quota, to the support and comfort of the family. Such facts as these show what difficulties the government has to cope with in its work. I for one am content of what has been accomplished in the past, and I know that the Prime Minister and his colleagues are anxious to take all the possible measures at their disposal to bring about in a practical way and in a way beneficial to the country, the settlement of that repatriation difficulty. I am aware that they are always glad to receive suggestions from whatever source, provided they are of a nature to promptly bring about the results expected from the moneys spent yearly for that purpose.

In a matter of such great moment, let then each one of us consider it as his duty to contribute his quota of advice and endeavour, and very shortly the House will have the satisfaction of noting a change for the better. I do not wish to detain the House any longer, and I now resume my seat, with the hope that this question will be further discussed later on in the course of this session, and that a greater number of members will then be in a position to give us the benefit of their thoughts and researches in reference to that important matter.

Mr. PAQUET. (Translation.) I am in sympathy with the remarks just made by my hon. friend from Chicoutimi. He has dealt with the question from the social point of view and not from the standpoint of politics. I hope the House will grant an order for the return asked for, which will enable us to judge what changes the government should effect.

I for one have dealt with the question from the social viewpoint, and with an earnest desire to help on the work of repatriation, and accordingly I have set aside all political considerations.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow if we should reach government orders?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take penitentiary estimates, and if it is convenient to the other side we may take the Civil Service resolution.

Mr. OLIVER. Do I understand that the motion was passed?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I regret that I did not understand that because I was under the impression that my hon. friend was willing to amend it.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

Mr. GIRARD.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the British Columbia Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Cowan.

Bill (No. 56) respecting the Canada Life Assurance Company.—Mr. A. H. Clarke.

Bill (No. 57) respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.—Mr. J. D. Taylor.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. R. Smith.

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Victoria and Barkley Sound Railway Company.—Mr. R. Smith.

QUESTIONS.

UNITED STATES SILVER CURRENCY IN CANADA.

Mr. BEATTIE asked:

1. What amount of silver currency has been coined for Canada for each of the years 1905, 1906, 1907, 1908?
2. What profit accrued to the Dominion Treasury from such coinage in each year?
3. What amount of United States silver currency has been in circulation in Canada during each of the years above mentioned?
4. What steps, if any, has the government taken to limit the circulation of United States silver currency in Canada?
5. Is the government aware that United States silver coinage is being used by the officials for the transaction of business in the post offices throughout Canada?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Finance):

1 and 2:

	Coined.	Profit.
1904-5	$100,000	$ 55,492 87
1905-6	862,000	445,452 53
1906-7	984,000	476,654 14
1907-8	600,000	284 288 20

3. The government is aware that United States currency in considerable quantity is in circulation in Canada, but has no means of ascertaining the amount.

4. In 1905-6, under an arrangement with the Canadian Bankers' Association, $580,224.16 of United States silver was exported from Canada, and in the estimates now before parliament an appropriation has been asked for a similar purpose.

5. The regulations of the Post Office Department forbid postmasters accepting United States currency, but it is understood that in many cases local business conditions make it difficult to carry out this regulation.

DREDGE ON LAKE WINNIPEG.

Mr. BRADBURY asked:

1. Is the government aware that the tug and dredge operating on Lake Winnipeg late last fall is said to have gone to the east side of the lake and worked for some days getting the steamer Mikado off a sandbar?

2. If so, what was the expense incurred at this work, and did the owners of the Mikado pay same? If not, is it the intention of the government to collect the account?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (for Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. (a) $393; (b) No.; (c) Yes.

SOULANGES CANAL EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BOYER asked:

1. What is the number of employees on the Soulanges canal, and what are their names, salaries and duties?

2. What is the auxiliary staff, and what are their names and salaries?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I would ask that this question stand as notice of motion for a return.

SPECIE RESERVE.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

Referring to the specie, amounting to $61,674,578.70, held by the government on December 31, 1908, as a reserve in connection with the Dominion note issue and the savings bank deposits, at what time was the last inspection and actual count of this specie made, and by whom?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Finance). The specie reserve is held at the offices of the assistant receivers general. These offices were inspected and specie counted as under:

Place.	Date.	Inspectors.
Montreal	June 15, 1908	F. Grierson.... J. E. Rourke..
St. John	July 7, 1908.	G. W. Hyndman
Charlottetown	" 10, 1908.	G. W. Hyndman
Halifax	" 20, 1908.	G. W. Hyndman
Toronto	Sept. 1, 1908.	G. Lowe..
Victoria	Dec. 8, 1908.	G. Grierson....
Winnipeg	" 16, 1908.	F. Grierson....

NOTE.—A small anount of specie is held at Ottawa under joint control of the Auditor General and Comptroller of Currency. This amount was last verified on the 19th November, 1907.

MAIL CARRIAGE—RAILWAY STATION AND WINNIPEG POST OFFICE.

Mr. BRADBURY asked:

1. Who had the contract for carrying the mails between the railway station and the post office at Winnipeg last year?

2. Has any change been made? If so, who now has the carrying of said mail?

3. Were tenders invited for the work? If so, who were the tenderers, what was the amount of each tender, and did the lowest tenderer receive the job?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Mark S. Peacock during January and February and Matthew Peebles from March 1, to December 31, in each case the work being performed under temporary agreement.

2 and 3. Tenders were invited for a permanent contract to take effect as soon as the new post office building was being used for post office purposes. The following tenders were received :

M. S. Peacock, 54 cents per single trip; Wm. R. Sinclair, 55 cents per single trip; Matthew Peebles, 55 cents per single trip; E. W. Green, 70 cents per single trip.

These tenders being considered excessive the chief post office superintendent was instructed to open negotiations with a view to obtaining more favourable offers with a result that a contract has been made with Mr. Matthew Peebles at the rate of 43 cents per single trip.

SURVEY ON THE NORTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER.

Mr. McCARTHY asked:

1. What is the average cost per mile of survey of base and meridian lines south of the North Saskatchewan river west of the fourth meridian?

2. What is the average cost per mile of survey of base and meridian lines north of the Saskatchewan river west of the fourth meridian?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The answer to this question requires an examination of the surveyors' accounts for the last thirty years and an investigation of their reports and field notes in order to ascertain what proportion of their time was spent upon the lines referred to. An accurate answer could not be prepared in less than two months, but the following is submitted:

1. The recent surveys of base lines and principal meridians north of the Saskatchewan river between the fourth and fifth meridians and their cost are as follows:

1902, L. E. Fontaine, 16th and 17th base lines (survey includes subdivision work), $35 per mile; 1906, R. W. Cautley, 17th base line, $63 per mile; 1906, A. W. Ponton, 18th base line, $67 per mile; 1907-08, A. W. Ponton, 5th meridian, $153 per mile.

2. The cost per mile of surveys of base lines and principal meridians between the fourth and fifth meridians and south of the Saskatchewan river has not been calculated, but the surveyor general thinks that it would average something like twenty dollars per mile.

FISH HATCHERY AT BANFF.

Mr. McCARTHY asked:

1. What, if any, representations have been made to the government as to the necessity or expediency of establishing a fish hatchery at Banff or in the vicinity thereof, when were such representations made, and by whom?

2. Has any action been taken upon such representations, and is it the intention of the government to establish a fish hatchery at Banff or in the vicinity thereof? If so, when will the work be proceeded with?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Representations were made during 1908 by the Calgary Board of Trade ; the Fish and Game Protective Association of Alberta; the Calgary branch of the Provincial Fish and Game Protective Association; and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

2. Matter still under consideration.

VISIT OF CHARLES OLIN TO SWEDEN.

Mr. GOODEVE—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. What was the total amount paid Charles Olin for services in respect of his visit to Sweden during the winter of 1907-8?

2. Of this amount how much was for expenses?

3. What were the dates of leaving and returning?

4. What, if any, practical results have followed his visit?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $651.34.

2. $351.34.

3. Left on or about December 9, 1907. Returned about May 20, 1908.

4. Some effective immigration advertising in the Scandinavian countries; that being the main object of Mr. Olin's visit.

POSTMASTER AT ST. JOHN.

Mr. DANIEL asked:

1. Who at present is the postmaster at St. John, New Brunswick, and how long has he occupied his present position?

2. Has he passed the civil service examination? If not, why not?

3. What disposition was made of his predecessor?

4. If superannuated, was it at his own request? If not, at whose request was it done?

5. How long was he in the position of postmaster, and what is his superannuation allowance?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Mr. Thomas Benjamin Hanington is postmaster at St. John; has occupied that position since 25th April, 1891, but is to be retired upon 1st April next, his superannuation allowance being $1,116 per annum. Mr. Hanington's retirement was considered to be in the public interest. As, therefore, there is no actual vacancy at present, no appointment of a successor has been made.

SPEED OF MAIL TRAINS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. EMMERSON asked:

1. Have any instructions ever been issued by the Department of Railways or by the management of the Intercolonial Railway, with reference to the speed of special mail trains, so-called? If so, what were such instructions?

2. Is it true that orders were issued at any time to the effect that such trains should run at rate of speed not less than fifty-five miles per hour, and is the rate of speed authorized inclusive or exclusive of stops at stations and for taking water?

3. At what rate of speed was the special mail train which recently met with disaster between Dalhousie junction and Campbellton, when one of the locomotive engineers of the train was killed and others injured, running?

4. Was the speed in accordance with the instructions or regulations in such cases?

5. Whose duty is it to direct as to the average speed to be maintained in such cases, and is it optional with the train hands in charge of such trains, or any of them?

6. Is it true that any engineers or conductors of such special trains have been penalized for maintaining a certain average rate of speed, inclusive of stops, or exclusive thereof?

7. Were any instructions issued as respects the average rate of speed to be maintained by the train referred to? If so, what were they, and by whom issued?

8. Do the regulations, if any, provide for any difference to be made in the average rate of speed to be maintained by such trains as between winter and summer roadbed and rail conditions?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. No instructions were issued by the department as to speed to be made by the English mail special. Reports were supplied and all delays that appeared to be undue ones were inquired into.

The engineer of maintenance, November 11, notified all the superintendents:

I have a letter from the general manager, stating that the 'Empress of Britain,' the first of the mail boats, delivering mail at Halifax, N.S., will arrive at that place on the 13th instant——

Until further instructions, trains on your division can make the following rate of speed:

Halifax to Moncton, 45 miles per hour running time.

Moncton to Campbellton, 45 miles per hour running time.

Campbellton to Ste. Flavie, 40 miles per hour running time.

Ste. Flavie to MacKenzie, 35 miles per hour (on old rail).

McKenzie to Chaudière, 45 miles per hour running time.

Chaudière to Daveluyville, 40 miles per hour running time.

Daveluyville to Ste. Rosalie, 45 miles per hour running time.

Will you please notify the trackmasters as nearly as possible the time that these mail trains will run on their division in order that they may notify sectionmen.

Please acknowledge,

(Sgd.) T. C. BURPEE,
Engineer of maintenance.

Circulars in conformity therewith were issued by the several superintendents, of which the following is an example:

Bulletin No. 658,

To conductors and enginemen,
English mail special train.

This is to advise that the engineer of maintenance under date the 11th instant, has sanctioned a speed per hour for these trains, over the districts from Ste. Flavie to Ste. Rosalie Junction, as follows:

Ste. Flavie to McKenzie, 35 miles per hour on old rails.

McKenzie to Chaudière, 45 miles per hour running time.

Chaudière to Daveluyville, 40 miles an hour running time.

Daveluyville to Ste. Rosalie, 45 miles an hour running time.

The rate of speed as per the above must on no account be exceeded.

Please note and be governed accordingly.

(Sgd.) W. A. DUBE.
Superintendent.

This was amended by a subsequent bulletin dated December 5, 1908, No. 664, sanctioning speed of the trains from McKenzie to Rivière du Loup, 35 miles an hour, and from Ste. Flavie to McKenzie, 40 miles an hour.

2. No such orders were issued.

3. From Halifax to Truro, 32 miles per hour; from Truro to Springhill, 36·0 per hour; from Springhill to Moncton, 32·2 per hour; from Moncton to Newcastle, 39·3 per hour; from Newcastle to McLeod siding, where accident occurred, 43·6 per hour.

4. It was within the allowed speed on the section.

5. It is the duty of the superintendent and the despatcher to keep tab on these trains, and the duty lies upon the whole train crew to conform to the instructions contained in the bulletin regulating the speed.

6. No.

7. See No. 1.

8. The regulation for the special trains as to speed limits are enumerated under No. 1. The engineer of maintenance of way modified the rate of speed on all trains from time to time, according to conditions of the track.

WHARFAGE DUES IN PORT OF MONTREAL.

Mr. GERVAIS—by Mr. Lavergne—asked:

1. Has the government promised or is it about to promise, to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, that its by-law or by-laws or decrees providing for the increase of 50 per cent or 75 per cent or less of the wharfage dues in the port of Montreal, will be approved of or confirmed by the Governer in Council?

2. Is it to the knowledge of the government that it is asserted that any such increase would prove detrimental to the harbour of Montreal?

3. Is it the intention of the government to dispose of any such by-law?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1, 2 and 3. No by-law has been received from the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal providing for such increases.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL AND EMPLOYEES.

Mr. GERVAIS—by Mr. Lavergne—asked:

1. Is the government aware that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal are said to be giving, or are about to give notice of dismissal, without cause, to all of their officers, foremen or employees?

2. Has any such course been approved of by the government?

3. Is it to the knowledge of the government that such a process would prove very detrimental to the workingmen and their families, as well as to the interests of the public of Canada, and especially to the efficiency of the work of the port of Montreal?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1, 2 and 3. The government has no information on the subject.

BY-ELECTION IN COMOX-ATLIN.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Before the orders of the day are called—with reference to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), I have to inform him that I made a mistake in the date of the issue of the writ for Comox-Atlin. The answer of the Secretary of State was correct. The writ was issued on the 22nd of January.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Civil Service Commission made its report as required by law? I have not heard of any yet. It was required to be laid on the table within fifteen days after the opening of the session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand that it has not been made.

Mr. FOSTER. I call the attention of the First Minister to that. It is a very grave omission for a commission commencing a work like this.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—EMPLOYEES AT HALIFAX.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to ask the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to page 695 of the 'Unrevised Hansard,' where will be found an answer of the minister, giving a list of permanent and temporary employees in the Department of Marine and Fisheries in Halifax County. The question asked was:

What was the number of permanent employees and temporary employees in the service or employment of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the county of Halifax upon the first day of each month, the fifteenth day of each month, and the thirty-first day of December in the year 1908?

Taking the month of January, under the heading of 'permanent,' the answer is 66, and under the heading of 'temporary,' the answer is 84. I do not know whether the reference is to the first day of the month or to the fifteenth day of the month. Then, under the next two heads 'first day of the month' and 'fifteenth day of the month,' the answer is 64 and 62 respectively. I do not know whether this has reference to permanent or to temporary employees, nor do I know whether the 64 or 62 refers to temporary or permanent employees. By referring to the question the minister will, no doubt, see my difficulty.

Mr. BRODEUR. I gave the answer as I received it from Halifax, but I will be glad to bring to the attention of the officers who prepared this answer the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden). I am under the impression that in the columns headed 'permanent' and 'temporary' are intended to be given all the permanent and temporary employees during the month. In the next two columns is given the information with regard to the number of officers employed on the 1st and 15th of the month. But, it may be that at those dates some persons who were employed during the month were not employed on these two dates. I suppose that is the explanation, but I will make inquiries.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—PRINTING OF REPORT ON BRANCH LINES.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to ask if any provision has been made with respect to printing the report laid on the table today by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) in regard to the branch lines. I notice that the report seems to be voluminous and it would seem to me to be in the interest of the members of this House to have it printed.

Mr. GRAHAM. This report was not laid on the table in compliance with an order of the House, but simply at the request of my hon. friend. Let it stand until to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER.

MARINE DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATION.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the Miniser of Marine and Fisheries if he has brought down the communication that was made to Mr. Justice Cassels in reference to the abolition of the patronage list in his department?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, I laid it on the table the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I wonder where it went. We shall have to hold the Minister of Marine and Fisheries responsible after what has occurred in this House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I find by reference to the Votes and Proceedings, page 90, the following:

By leave of the House.

Mr. Foster moved that an order of the House do issue to the proper officer for a copy of official communication, addressed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to Commissioner Cassels, respecting the abolition of the patronage system in the Department of Marine and Fisheries; and the question being put, it was agreed to and the order issued accordingly.

Mr. Brodeur presented,—Return to the foregoing order.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it will go to the Record office.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT VOL. II.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any information as to when the remaining volume of the Auditor General's report will be ready?

Mr. MURPHY. Next week.

REPORT OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. U. WILSON. I beg to ask the hon. Minister of Interior (Mr. Oliver) when we may expect his report? We have been waiting for it.

Mr. OLIVER. The Interior report is in the printer's hands and will be distributed early next week.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 6) to amend the Railway Act.—Mr. Lancaster.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 32) to amend the Railway Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this Bill I would like to remind the House that last year I explained the object of the measure and, although there are many new members who were not in the House then, I do not intend to trespass at any great length upon the time of the House on the present occasion. The object of this Bill is to facilitate the crossing of railways by lines or wires for telegraphs or telephones, or for conveyance of light, heat, power, or electricity, and by water mains, conduits, and sewers. As the law stands at the present time, in order to extend any of these public utilities across a railway, it is necessary for an individual or company to make application to the railway authorities. In many cases great delay is caused. I do not believe it is necessary that such should be the case, but those who are interested in these crossings often experience delays in receiving an answer from the railway companies of from one to four weeks. When the answer comes back it usually is that permission will be given to cross on payment of $5. I think this is all wrong. I have on every occasion objected to the suggestion that the people should be compelled to pay anything for a crossing which they have a right to. Hon. gentlemen are aware that in 99 cases out of 100 these crossings are on the public highway in towns and villages, or on side roads and concessions in the rural districts. The railways do not own these highways. They belonged to the municipalities long before the railways were built, and it seems to me to be an outrage that the people should be asked to pay $5 for what belongs to them. The railways have no power over these highways. All they possess is the right, obtained from the charter granted by this House, to cross these highways under certain restrictions. The provisions of this Bill are that an individual or company asking to be allowed to cross a highway shall give notice to the railway authorities, to the station master, or if there is no station master in the municipality, to the official most convenient. If the company do not take action within fifteen days the individual or company making application may cross the railway according to regulations laid down by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

In this there could be no hardship so far as the railroads are concerned. The instructions from the Railroad Board protect the railroads by requiring that a certain kind of wire shall be strung and that the arms and poles must be in acordance with the rules and regulations. Thus there could be no reason for not granting this Bill.

As to sewers, viaducts, conduits and water pipes which pass under the railroads, I have provided in this Bill, in accordance with the direction of the Railway Board in a number of cases, that in the event of municipalities or individuals crossing a railroad by water pipes or sewers, &c., the engineer of the railway company must approve of the method of crossing and must be paid by the party making the crossing, the charge not to exceed $5. This is the amount awarded in several cases in which I was interested, and as the engineer's time would not generally be occupied for more than an hour, it seems to be a fair charge.

This Bill has been demanded by the people in every part of Canada. When I introduced it last year it was printed in the Municipal Journal and I had many letters from every province, a few of which I read to the House, approving of the Bill. Since this Bill was printed I have received a number of letters which I shall not trouble the House by reading. Hon. gentlemen are aware that in cases of crossing railroads with water pipes, &c., the railways demand not only the $5 but also a lease of $1 a year for all time to come from the municipality or individual, which appears to me to be ridiculous. We have had demands of that kind in the village of Shelburne; we refused to accede to them and application was made to the Railway Commission; but the commissioners were busy at the time and we were delayed for some six or seven months.

The telephone is a utility whose use is increasing very rapidly. In the four years during which the Railway Commission has existed the number of applications for crossings by telephone lines was 2,411 and the number granted 2,328. None were refused, showing that the railroads should have granted those crossings without putting the applicants to the trouble and expense of an application to the Board. During last year there were 1,025 applications of this character to the Railway Commission and I submit that if this Bill goes through it will take a great deal of work off the Railway Commission, which we have heard is overworked. At the time when farmers are building their telephone lines, the Railway Commissioners are usually on their holidays and by the time they return to their offices a large amount of work has accumulated so that there is unnecessary delay to the farmers in securing permission to cross the railroads. Then an application to the Railway Commission entails great expense, particularly upon the small companies which are threading their telephone throughout the country. The telephone has done a great deal for this country. It has united the cities, towns and villages with the country and has made country life much more easy, much more fascinating to the young and rising generation and has had the effect of keeping many young men on the farms who would otherwise not remain there. Under these circumstances I think we should facilitate as far as possible the building of those telephone lines. I had hoped that the time would not be far distant when the telephone lines would be taken over by the provincial or Dominion government. The province of Manitoba has taken over the Bell telephone lines there and I was glad to see the announcement of the Prime Minister of Manitoba that during the past year their telephones have been a paying asset to the province and that they are determined to push the work as rapidly as possible and build telephones throughout that province. If Manitoba can make the telephone a paying speculation, there is no reason why other provinces should not do so and why it should not be a still greater success if the Dominion parliament should take hold of it and operate it. Some years ago, after weeks of personal investigation before a committee, Sir William Mulock stated that it was the intention of the govenment to bring in a Bill the following year to take over the telephones and run them in connection with the post office. If we had a telephone in every post office and in every farm house where they desired to pay a reasonable price, it would be a great boon to the rural population of Canada. That project did not materialize but whilst we have not these advantages, whilst we are not advancing as rapidly as the province of Manitoba in this respect, I hope that the good example of Manitoba will be followed by other provinces.

While that is the case I submit that it is our duty to facilitate the building of these telephone lines as quickly as possible. In connection with these 1,025 crossings during the last year, if the railway companies had been able to carry out their designs, they would have pocketed over $5,000 of the people's money. I think that should be prevented, and I have a clause in the Bill prohibiting the railway companies from demanding any money from the people on this account. There is no reason why they should. In every case of such a crossing the people are put to considerable expense. They have first to make their application to the Commission, then they have to send a duplicate of the plans and specifications, and in some cases they have to employ a lawyer or some other person to take the necessary proceedings. All this should be avoided. There is no reason why they should be put either to delay or to expense. Under these circumstances I would ask the government to allow this Bill to have a second reading and then to go to a committee, as was agreed to last year—either the Railway Committee or some other committee; and any improvements that can be made to the Bill I can assure you I shall be glad to give careful consideration to, so that it may be made as perfect as possible. I think I have stated the case fairly enough to show beyond a doubt that there is a grievance and that there should be a remedy, which can easily be worked out, and I think this Bill fairly meets the requirements of the case.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, this Bill, as my hon. friend has remarked, is not a new one; it has been in the House before, but as this is a new parliament and there are a large number of representatives who have not been here before, perhaps the House will bear with me while I say a few words upon it. My hon. friend has discussed the question of the provinces or the Dominion taking over the telephone lines. That is a large subject, and I have no objection at all to my hon. friend impressing it upon his friends in the provincial legislatures or upon my friends where they have the supremacy in the provinces. The policy adopted by the Parliament of Canada has been government control through the Board of Railway Commissioners over telephones, telegraphs, express companies and railway companies; and this year that power is to be extended along another line. A year ago I had the honour to introduce an amendment to the Railway Act, which brought telephone companies under the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and that part of the Act was brought into force by order in council. It was not brought into force at once owing to some representations having been made to me which appeared to satisfy the House on that point. That order in council was passed some little time ago, and to-day telephone companies are under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners. The gist of my hon. friend's Bill is that any company, either a telephone company, a telegraph company or a municipality, can, without any reference to the Board of Railway Commissioners or to the company concerned, string their wires across a railway or run their pipes under the track. Now, I submit to the House that that is a very serious proposition. At the present moment the question of the safety of the people travelling on our highways is engaging the attention of this House and of the country, and we must be very careful to do nothing to increase the danger to the travelling public either on the highways or on the railways. I have discussed this matter very thoroughly with some men who ought to know, and they tell me that it would be a very great source of danger if every person who thought he knew how to string a wire were allowed to string wires across a railway track near the wires of the railway company, without the supervision of some competent person to see that it was done properly. A great many accidents from fire are said to be caused by the improper wiring of houses, and a great deal of danger might be caused by the improper placing of a wire by inexperienced people across a railway track, where it might come in contact with the wires already there, or, if loosely strung, with the trains.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Cannot any farmer measure six feet?

Mr. GRAHAM. We might ask the same question about the insulation of wires; but there is a proper way and an improper way, a proper place and an improper place for stringing wires. This matter has been placed in the hands of the Railway Commissioners, who are the servants of the public, and there it ought to be left. My hon. friend will not say that during the past year he had to wait six months for any reply to his communication. My hon. friend said that it occurred a year ago, so that it must have been the same case that he referred to before; it could not have occurred within the past year. I think all such matters have been dealt with promptly within the last few months, and they will be in the future. With regard to pipes under the railway tracks, I am not an advocate of the railway companies at all, but on behalf of the public I think this is a case in which the greatest care ought to be exercised. The railway companies ought certainly to be notified in every case, and if they have something to say as to whether an application should be granted or not, they should have an opportunity to show where and how the pipes should go. Several cases of this kind have been brought to my knowledge. In some cases it is sought to put pipes under railway tracks where the ground is springy, and consequently where the roadbed might be seriously affected and an accident caused to the travelling public. These are reasons for leaving the matter under the control of the Railway Commissioners, in whom we have confidence. I have no objecion to the Bill going to the committee, but nothing has been said to change my mind or I believe the mind of this House as to the importance of exercising the utmost care in allowing wires to be strung across railway tracks or allowing pipes to be put under them, and this care can best be exercised by the men we have appointed for the purpose, that is, the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph lines.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of the report made by Charles Olin to the Department of the Interior, of his visit to Sweden for this department in 1907-8, and of all correspondence leading up to his appointment to make such trip, and in any way relating thereto.—Mr. Goodeve.

For a copy of all communications, accounts, reports and other papers received by the Department of Public Works from A. Edgar Hansom, E. T. P. Shewan, or other person or persons, relating to the survey of the St. John River channel between Fredericton and Woodstock, and of all letters, instructions, &c. from the department to Mr. Hansom, Mr. Shewan or other person or persons in connection therewith.—Mr. Crocket.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY BRANCH RAILWAYS.

Mr. EMMERSON. With the permission of the House I would move:

For a copy of the report of the Commissioners appointed by the government to inquire into, examine and report on the branch lines of railways connecting with the Intercolonial Railway. Also for a copy of the report of the Commissioners appointed by the government of the province of New Brunswick to inquire into, examine and report upon the branch lines of railways within the said province to connect with the said Intercolonial Railway.

He said: I make this motion with the view of having the papers already laid on the table brought in their order so that they may be considered with respect to having them printed.

Mr. GRAHAM. They will be a very lengthy printed document. The only part which would be of much benefit to the House would be the report of the commissioners themselves. The statement as regards the number of locomotives, the condition of the ties, the repairs of the road and all such details are in the report of the Minister of Railways. The documents we are asked to order will be so lengthy that we are not likely to get them this session.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What means has this government of producing the report of the government of the province of New Brunswick?

Mr. EMMERSON. It is on the table.

Mr. SPROULE. Why then move for a return? I thought the intention was to move that it be printed.

Mr. EMMERSON. I made the motion in order to put it in order for printing. While the papers are already on the table, they are not regularly so with the view of having it printed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM moved that the rules be suspended and that these documents be ordered to be printed forthwith.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 19) to amend the Post Office Act. —Mr. Lemieux.

SUPPLY—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY NEW STOCK.

Mr. PATERSON moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Before the motion carries, I would like to ask the Minister of Railways if he is prepared to tell me now whether that reference alluded to by the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in 1902, when he said there would be a reference to the courts to ascertain the actual cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has ever been acted on?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have referred that to one of my colleagues who has the matter in hand and is hunting up the exact conditions. I expect to have an answer in a short time.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman bring down the order in council itself which was made in 1902 and which corresponds with the order in council increasing the capital stock?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the minister remember whether there was a provision in the order in council that the effect would be the same, as regards the percentage of earnings, as the Bill which was introduced by the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick)? In other words, is it provided that the 10 per cent should be calculated only on the original stock issued, namely, $65,000,000?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the last order in council I have brought down, and it does not affect in any way the original condition regarding percentage.

Mr. MACLEAN. There are four orders in council since 1902 dealing with the same question. Will they be brought down also?

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend desires I will bring them all down.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Pension to Mrs. Elizabeth Wilmot, $54.75.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This is a new item and the pension was granted under these circumstances. Constable George Ernest Wilmot, Royal Northwest Mounted Police was murdered while on duty at Frank, Alberta, on the morning of the 12th of April, 1908, by some person or persons unknown. Up to the present time no clue to the murder has been obtained. During the first days of April, 1908, a number of burglaries took place in Frank and Sergeant Haslett arranged with constable Wilmot to patrol the town at night to try to capture the criminals. On Saturday night April, the 11th, Sergeant Haslett came off duty at 12.30 being relieved by constable Wilmot and about 7 a.m. the following morning constable Wilmot's body was found lying in an alley-way behind the hotel at Frank. There were gaping wounds on the neck and chest caused by gun shot. Mrs. Elizabeth Wilmot, mother of the deceased, is a widow residing in England and she applied for compensation for the loss of her son on whom she was entirely dependent for support. There is evidence that the deceased was in the habit of sending her money from his police pay. She has two sons living, one of whom is married and has a home of his own and the other is an inmate of an epileptic home. These facts were sworn to before a Justice of the Peace. Following the usual practice in existence since 1885, and, it being a most deserving case, we granted to the mother a pension of one-half constable Wilmot's pay.

Mr. HUGHES. Surely Constable Wilmot was paid more than $108 a year ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is based on 365 days' pay at 30 cents a day.

Mr. HUGHES. Is no cognizance taken of the value of his rations and uniform ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I followed the rule that has been in existence since 1885.

Mr. HUGHES. And that is all the pension the poor woman gets ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The rule followed by private corporations which grant pensions is to take into consideration the value of house rent and fuel where such allowances are made and to add their value to the salary. These things are always taken into consideration in granting a pension to the family of a deceased officer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not dispute that nor do I say it is not a sound rule, but I found this rule in the department and I adhered to it.

Penitentiaries, $507,350.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this intended to cover all the expenditure on penitentiaries for the year 1909-10 ?

Hon. J. BUREAU (Solicitor General). It is supposed to cover all the expenditure for the year.

Mr. DANIEL. There is quite a large increase in the expenditure for Dorchester penitentiary.

Mr. BUREAU. That increase was caused by the installation of an electric light plant in the penitentiary.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this be a permanent increase ?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. Was this plant installed by the government itself; is this amount simply for the cost of wiring ?

Mr. BUREAU. This is the difference in price between lighting by coal oil as formerly and lighting by electric light. It costs us $1,000 more to light by electricity than by coal oil.

Mr. RHODES. What arrangement was made between the government and the electric light company as to installation and electric wiring and so on.

Mr. BUREAU. The wiring and installation was done by the convicts and there was no charge for outside labour. We pay 8 cents per kilowatt for the light. There is $1,000 for increase of salaries and the other $1,000 increase is for electricity.

Mr. RHODES. I would like to find out, if I can, what was the entire cost of the installation of the electric lighting.

Mr. BUREAU. We purchased the material and the labour was done by the convicts.

Mr. RHODES. Perhaps the solicitor general would bring the information down at a later date ?

Mr. BUREAU. The Auditor General's Report will show what supplies were purchased and I will have to get information as to the number of hours the convicts worked on the job and the estimated value of their labour.

Mr. RHODES. May I ask what the arrangement is for the electric light the company has to supply ?

Mr. BUREAU. 8 cents per kilowatt.

Mr. RHODES. Can you make it as little as you choose, or as much as you choose, or does the contract call for the acceptance of any quantity they may choose to give you?

Mr. BUREAU. We take it by meter.

Mr. RHODES. You can stop the service any time you choose?

Mr. BUREAU. There is a contract for five years, but there is no minimum or maximum amount we are bound to take. We take only what we consume.

Mr. RHODES. Then you are not bound to take any.

Mr. BUREAU. Except what we consume.

Mr. RHODES. Can you cut off the service any time you choose?

Mr. BUREAU. No, we have a five years contract.

Mr. RHODES. Are you bound to take a certain quantity of electricity from the company in any event?

Mr. BUREAU. I told my hon. friend that there was no minimum amount that we were bound to take, and no maximum amount either. We take what we require, and pay for what we take.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the estimated cost of lighting the penitentiary per year?

Mr. BUREAU. $1,700.

Mr. DANIEL. What was the previous annual amount for light before you installed electricity?

Mr. BUREAU. $700, and we add $1,000 more for electricity.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the committee please confine their attention to the first item, $3,000 for the general vote?

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Solicitor General explain the decrease of $9,000 in that general vote?

Mr. BUREAU. There are two inspectors, a parole officer and one architect, that are mentioned in the estimates. Last year their salaries totalled $8,400. These are transferred from penitentiaries to civil government.

Mr. FOSTER. How do you propose to expend the other $3,000?

Mr. BUREAU. The expense of the parole officer is $1,700, assistance to paroled and discharged convicts, $300, for office contingencies, $1,000.

Kingston penitentiary, $151,200.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I ask the minister to look at the items mentioned in the Auditor General's Report L—17:

Frontenac Lumber & Coal Co., Kingston: cement, 152 barrels at $2; cartage on same, $12.90; hemlock lumber, 10,005 ft. at $22.50; cedar posts, 100 at 20c.; cordwood, 21 cords at $4.50; oak, 10 ft., 80c.; total, $657.32.

Were all these goods purchased by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. They were not purchased by tender. Quotations were asked from various dealers, and these were the lowest figures that were offered. We have no patronage list in the Department of Justice, and never had.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Then I want the Solicitor General to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that here at Ottawa where cement is made, he got 86 barrels for his work on the astronomical building and paid $2.50 for it; and the Minister of Railways purchased his at Montreal at $1.65

Mr. BUREAU. The Minister of Railways bought by the carload, and got it cheaper

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. That shows how political friends have a pull. At Kingston they only get $2 a barrel; here at Ottawa they get $2.50. I do not see why the government should not make a rule, and pay the same price all round. Then turn to page L—18, and the minister will find a purchase from Alphonse Racine & Co., Montreal, amounting to $2,436, principally for dry goods. Were these purchased by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, those were purchased by tender. Public tenders are asked for through the press.

Mr. WM. R. SMYTH. At Kingston the minister paid $22.50 per thousand for hemlock lumber. Is he not aware that hemlock lumber is not worth more than $13?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose it all depends on the lumber.

Mr. WM. R. SMYTH. It all depends upon whom you buy it from.

Mr. BUREAU. This was dimension lumber that was required for the repair of a wharf, and that is the reason that we paid a little higher price for it.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. For dimension lumber it ought to be a great deal less. For repairing a wharf you simply need square pieces. I have had a good deal to do with wharf building.

Mr. BUREAU. In these cases prices were invited, and that is the best price we could get. The prices were invited from the local dealers, friend and foe.

Mr. BARR. If there were no advertisements in the paper, only the friends could know.

Mr. BUREAU. We send them a notice asking for prices.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the Solicitor General say that notices were sent to all the local dealers inviting them to tender.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed there are only three or four dealers in Kingston, and the notice was sent to each of them. Anyway, we gave instructions to ask the dealers for prices.

Mr. CROCKET. I find that our friends the McAvitys of St. John are down for quite a large order for supplies for the penitentiaries. Were tenders invited from them?

Mr. BUREAU. Quotations were asked from the hardware merchants, Robertsons of Montreal, who have a house in St. John, and the McAvitys. The McAvitys prices were the lower, I am informed by the inspector.

Mr. CROCKET. What other firms were invited to tender in St. John outside of the McAvity firm.

Mr. BUREAU. Jas. Robertson & Co. and McAvity were the only two from whom prices were asked.

Mr. CROCKET. All the other hardware dealers in St. John and New Brunswick were not asked?

Mr. BUREAU I am informed not.

Mr. CROCKET. And yet the Solicitor General says the Justice Department has no patronage list.

Mr. G. TAYLOR.

Mr. BUREAU. There is none.

Mr. CROCKET. I notice you are dealing with the same bunch as the other departments.

Mr. BUREAU. These are two of the largest houses in the Dominion, and the prices quoted by smaller houses could not be any better.

Mr. FOSTER. I think this is an opportune moment for finding out, if we possibly can, what the government means and whether it is playing to the gallery and concealing what it is actually doing. In the last two or three weeks an impression has gone broadcast, through the publication of Mr Justice Cassels' report, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had done away with the patronage system. I am not sure that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries anywhere said that he did away with the patronage system. The communication, as I find it, is that he had instructed that the present patronage lists be done away with. That has gone broadcast through the country and the press supporting the hon. gentleman opposite are heralding it as a great and important reform, that now the government, seeing the error of its ways, has determined to do the square thing and have no more of this system of patronage. I looked at the communication which was sent by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to Judge Cassels, through Mr. Watson, and it was accorded a very prominent place in the report, for what reason I do not know, and the essence of it, boiled down, is simply that the minister had instructed that the present patronage lists should be dispensed with. Now, we ought to have the same method of dealing by the government through all its departments. I think my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will bear me out in that statement. On the question of public policy what one department does the other department ought to do. If the patronage system is wrong and something else should be substituted in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the same method of dealing should hold in the other departments. I do not think the right hon. gentleman will controvert that statement. The Solicitor General has, by a concrete instance, shown that the patronage list is not abolished in reference to his department. He has not even gone as far as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BUREAU. That was a year ago.

Mr. FOSTER. This is one of the items that we are discussing now, and in this particular case only two firms have been asked for tenders in the city of St. John.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was a year ago.

Mr. FOSTER. One in St. John and one in Montreal.

Mr. BUREAU Robertson is in St. John also.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, there were two in St. John.

Mr. BUREAU. That was last year.

Mr. FOSTER. That was last year? That is the patronage list. The Solicitor General says there never was a patronage list in the Justice Department. There seems to be a patronage list. I know, of my own personal knowledge of St. John, a number of excellent firms that are engaged in dealing in hardware. I think we ought to have now a declaration of the policy of the government and I think I can bring it out by two questions Will the Prime Minister tell us that, by the abolition of the present patronage lists in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that department has abolished the patronage system? That is one question. The other question is: Are the reasons which led the Department of Marine and Fisheries to abolish the patronage system if he has done so good enough to base the action of other departments of the government upon? Is the whole government, in the purchase of these supplies, going to abolish the patronage lists and the patronage system, one or the other, or both? The Solicitor General's reply is that in so far as the work is concerned which he is explaining, they have not abolished the patronage list or the patronage system.

Mr. BUREAU. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) takes advantage of this item to say that we have been exercising very little discretion in our purchases, but, looking over these items, purchased from McAvity & Sons, I find that they are all for very small amounts, that they were purchased at various times, and that the total is $1,109 for the year. I see that there were 150 feet of asbestos pipe covering at 15½ cents per foot purchased from that firm. Does my hon. friend mean to say that we should ask tenders through the press, or from every dealer, whenever there is a small repair to be made or a small quantity of anything required? I am informed by the inspector that these houses of Robertson and McAvity are two of the strongest houses in Canada and that getting prices from them would be a fair indication of the lowest prices that could be got from any one. These small purchases were made from time to time as occasion required. Prices were asked from Robertson and McAvity, and McAvity's prices being the lower, the purchases were made from them.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General has taken care not to answer at all the question that I asked. I am not going to lay up against him as a crime the bad practice of the past, but will he tell me if, for the future, the department whose estimates he is explaining now will do away with the patronage list and the patronage system as it has been carried on in the past?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I would like to ask my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) what system he would suggest adopting in the case of small purchases. In the case of the Department of Marine agency at Halifax some few weeks ago a list of the supplies wanted during the current year was made up. The public were asked to tender in some cases for one fog horn or one paint brush. There were numerous instances where but one article of a particular class was required How would the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) deal with purchases of this kind unless he leaves the matter to the judgment of some officer or agency of the department? Surely he would not insist on public advertisements for such supplies. I think the department has adopted a very good and businesslike method, where the quantity is so small, in asking two reputable business houses to furnish prices, and where the quantity is large in asking the public for tenders.

Mr. FOSTER. I shall answer my hon. friend (Mr. A. K. Maclean), who seems to occupy the place of the devil's advocate in this, after the answers have been given by the minister who is explaining the estimates. I never knew a system or principle of any kind that could not be reduced to an absurdity by applying it to one paint brush or box of pins. The general principle remains the same, and I would ask the minister to reply to my question.

Mr. BUREAU. I explained that we did not ask for tenders from any one but McAvity and Robertson, because the purchases were small and scattered, but the Department of Justice, when a large purchase is to be made, invites prices from the most reputable houses and the storekeeper is responsible in all cases for paying the lowest market price. The instructions are to take good care not to pay over the market price.

Mr. FOSTER. The answer is not satisfactory; where does he draw the arbitrary line between large and small purchases?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose the answer my hon. friend wants is that we have a patronage list and will stick to it; then he could sail in and abuse us. If we were buying a hundred sacks of cement or a few barrels of flour we would ask for prices——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By tender?

Mr. BUREAU. By circular from the best houses in the line. I see my friend smiling; that is what we do.

Mr. LENNOX. That is what you ought not to do.

Mr. BUREAU. No. If we followed your policy we would not do it, but we do it in spite of that. We ask all houses for prices——

Mr. FOSTER. All houses?

Mr. BUREAU. All houses reputed to be good houses. We take the best houses in the line and ask prices and take the lowest price.

Mr. FOSTER. Take the Kingston penitentiary. Will the Solicitor General say that general tenders are asked for supplies from all reputable houses and that circulars are sent to them irrespective of their party politics?

Mr. BUREAU. In speaking of one hundred bags of cement I was simply using an illustration. The articles principally used in the penitentiaries are as follows, and before buying them we invite competition by public advertisement in the newspapers.

Mr. CROCKET. For a year's supply?

Mr. BUREAU. For a year's supply, the contract is for a year. The list is as follows:

Fresh meat, pork, bacon, coal, coal oil, cordwood, milk, blankets and prison clothing, grocery staples, grocery sundries, sole leather, leather findings, hardware sundries, hardware staples, dry goods sundries, dry goods staples, oil, tinware, fish, drugs.

Next year we will add cement to this list.

Mr. FOSTER. Lumber?

Mr. BUREAU. We cannot specify in advance what lumber we will require.

Mr. FOSTER. That is satisfactory. I always had an idea that the Justice Department was kept pretty clear from the evils of the patronage system, but I began to get suspicious when I heard the answers of the Solicitor General. I understand it is intended to add other articles to the list next year and that the department will advertise and take the lowest tender. That is a perfectly intelligible and businesslike basis, and if that is the system adopted, I am very glad to know it and to know that it is being lived up to in that department. I would like to have from the First Minister a statement whether that is the system which is to be adopted by the government as a whole? The country is interested in this.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it is the system which is followed in every department, but to be doubly sure I shall reserve my answer until I make further inquiries, and I shall give the information the next time we go into Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the minister who tendered for these dry goods, which he says were purchased by tender, and if samples were given to the different tenderers?

Mr. BUREAU. When tenders are called for, they are accompanied by a sample. The tenderers were: Lewis & Patterson, Montreal; P. Garneau, Fils & Cie., Quebec; Hodgson, Sumner & Co., Montreal; and A. Racine & Co., Montreal, who were the lowest.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend must know that there are in Kingston some of the largest wholesale houses in Canada, and why were they not invited to tender? Why go to Montreal and pay larger prices than the goods could be purchased for in Kingston?

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend is under a misapprehension. These tenders were called for by advertisement in the newspapers. He does not expect us to go to Kingston and press his friends to tender. They had an equal opportunity to do so with the others, and every article mentioned in the Auditor General's Report was not bought on the schedule price given in the tender.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Will my hon. friend say in what newspapers the advertisement for these tenders appeared?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not the information, but can bring it down.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Was it published in any newspapers besides those of Montreal?

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly—in Kingston, St. John, Toronto, Montreal, Quebec and Halifax.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there a patronage list of newspapers?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose my hon. friend would expect the department to consider the interests of this country and to advertise in papers having the largest circulation and most read by the people. Therefore he can draw his own conclusion.

Mr. BLAIN. In answer to that, I may say that last year I directed the government's attention to the fact that they had spent $600 in advertising for tenders for a small post office in a town in western Ontario, and the advertisement went into Reform newspapers only. I gave the circulation of the London 'Free Press,' in the very centre of that district, which has a larger circulation than any other newspaper, and strange to say, it was not on the patronage list.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. It ought to be.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from Essex sees the importance of what I say.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Do I understand the hon. Solicitor General to say that lumber is not to be on the stock-list for future purchases?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I think it should be, because I find on page L—17 of the Auditor General's Report that for hemlock $14 a thousand was paid to W. C. Edwards & Co., and $22.50 a thousand to the Frontenac Lumber & Coal Company, a difference of $8.50 a thousand.

Mr. BUREAU. The difficulty is that we cannot ask for any definite quantity of lumber as we can of flour or coal, because we do not know what kind or dimensions we may require during the year, and the quantity is not very great. I will try to find out the reason for the difference in price.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would thank the hon. gentleman to bring down the schedule of prices of the different articles of dry goods in the tender of Messrs. Racine & Co.; because I am certain that McInnis & Co., of Kingston are prepared to compete with any house in Montreal if they had the opportunity.

Mr. BUREAU. Does my hon. friend think we used any means to prevent the Kingston people tendering? They were as much at liberty to tender as any others. I will bring the schedule of prices

Mr. BRADBURY. The practice followed in every great city is to call for tenders for millions of feet of lumber before they know what they want. They get the prices for dimension lumber and dressed lumber, so that if you want 10,000 or 20,000 feet of dimension lumber, you know exactly what you are going to pay for it.

Mr. BUREAU. The suggestion of my hon. friend is worth considering and we will see whether we can work it out or not.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH (East Algoma). Will the hon. minister give us the dimensions of the lumber he paid $52 per thousand for ?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not the information here.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH. We ought to have it.

Mr. BUREAU. I said I could not account for the discrepancy but no doubt it was due to the season or other conditions.

Mr. BEATTIE. The worst feature is that you buy 1,000 feet at $14 and then you buy 10,000 feet at $22.50. There must be great discrepancy in the quality.

Mr. BUREAU. I am not an expert in lumber and cannot account for the difference in price. It may be due to difference in grades. I shall however get the information.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. But a few minutes ago the minister said it was used for wharf repairs.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, but I did not know the size of it.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. It is well known that Georgian Bay district practically fixes the price for lumber, and those well posted know that mill run hemlock sold for $14 per 1,000 f.o.b. and that lumber from 16 feet to 18 feet was worth a dollar more, and over 18 feet, two dollars more. To these you would have to add the freight and the dealer's profit, so that the prices would be reasonable.

Mr. SMYTH. If you will come to Algoma we will give you the lumber at a good deal less than $14 per thousand feet.

Mr. MILLER. Will the hon. gentleman say that the price of hemlock was the same then as to-day ?

Mr. SMYTH. You can get any amount at Algoma considerably under $14 per 1,000 feet.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. Lumber is selling at four to five dollars a thousand feet less than a year ago.

Mr. FOSTER. As this is a discrepancy which the minister cannot understand, he might ask his officer to get the information and let us come back to the item again.

Mr. J. ARTHURS (Parry Sound). In view of the declaration by the minister that tenders were called for, how is it that we find several firms supplying similar goods at different prices ?

Mr. BUREAU. In the case of each penitentiary, we call for tenders.

Mr. ARTHURS. I am quoting from page L—17 and 18 of the Auditor General's Report re Kingston penitentiary. Take James Crawford, Kingston.

Mr. BUREAU. He has the contract for supplying groceries.

Mr. ARTHURS. But we also find groceries supplied by A. McLean, Kingston.

Mr. BUREAU. He supplied bacon and barley and pork.

Mr. ARTHURS. He also supplied groceries. In dry goods, I find the same thing. I find dry goods bought from Hodgson, Sumner and Company, Montreal, and from Racine and Company, Montreal and from J. Tweeddell, Kingston.

Mr. BUREAU. Hodgson, Sumner and Company have the contract for sundry dry goods and Racine and Company for staples.

Mr. CROCKET. Take Dorchester penitentiary. F. M. Leblanc of Memramcook supplied 2,124 pounds of beef, at $5.87 per hundred-weight, and you paid Charles McKenzie, of Sackville, 7½ cents per pound for 26,442 pounds of beef. I thought that in the case of beef, tenders would be invited for a year's supply, and I cannot understand this discrepancy.

Mr. BUREAU. Leblanc tendered at $5.87 per hundred-weight and supplied some beef at that price before signing the contract. Then he found he had tendered too low and refused to sign a contract, and we gave the contract to the next lowest tenderer.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). The minister made the statement that Hodgson, Sumner and Company had the contract for sundry goods and Racine and Company for staples. How it is then that the same lines of goods are charged in both accounts? In the one case 104 dozen shirts and drawers are paid for at $4.50 and in the other 12 dozen shirts and drawers are paid for at $4.75. He bought from Mr. Mills, his friend in Kingston, straw hats at $1.25, and from Hodgson and Sumner straw hats at $1.10. It would appear that the same kind of goods are divided up piecemeal between Hodgson and Sumner and Racine and Company. If McInnis and Company of Kingston who are large wholesale men got an opportunity for tendering they would be able to supply these goods if they were not shuffled out of the contract.

Mr. EMMERSON. Are they Conservatives?

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. They happen to be Tories.

Mr. BUREAU. Tenders are called for publicly through the press and everybody has an opportunity of competing. What my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) calls a discrepancy is explained by the fact that these goods are given to the convict when he is discharged from the penitentiary.

Mr. HODGINS. If I understand Mr. Taylor's contention it is that the patronage should be given to some one in the city of Kingston.

Mr. TAYLOR. All other things being equal.

Mr. HODGINS. If I am rightly informed there is only one wholesale house in Kingston, and therefore there would be no competition if tenders were invited only from firms in that city. Racine & Co. and Hodgson, Sumner & Co., of Montreal, are firms of high repute, and as I have some knowledge of the value of dry goods I can say that the goods are supplied by these firms at fair prices.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I cannot understand why clothing supplied to the prisoners while serving their term is classed as staple articles and tenders called for in respect of same, while clothing supplied to all prisoners, when leaving the prison is not classed as staples and no competition asked in purchasing same.

Mr. WHITE. I see by the Auditor General's Report that you paid $44 for street car tickets. Were these for the convicts?

Mr. BUREAU. The penitentiary is quite a distance from the city, and these tickets are given to officers who go to the city on official business.

Mr. FOSTER. Do all officers get them?

Mr. BUREAU. Only the accountant and storekeeper, and occasionally the engineer.

Mr. FOSTER. You have made a reduction of $40,000 in the binder twine item; what is the explanation of that?

Mr. BUREAU. That is because we are not buying any hemp this year. We have on hand 850,352 pounds of twine and 210,516 pounds of fibre.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been the average manufacture of twine for the past two or three years?

Mr. BUREAU. About 400,000 pounds a year.

Mr. FOSTER. Was more manufactured last year than usual?

Mr. BUREAU. The sales were not up to the average last year.

Mr. FOSTER. For what reason? last year was a great wheat year.

Mr. BUREAU. We sent circulars last year as usual to the Farmers' Associations, and to every one who had purchased from the department previously and we gave the same publicity as in former years.

Mr. FOSTER. Was the twine of inferior quality or was the outside competition greater?

Mr. BUREAU. The main reason is that we require cash with order, and all other manufacturers sell on time.

Mr. FOSTER. But you have always required the cash?

Mr. BUREAU. Money was scarcer last year than the year before, and as we required cash that may account for the difference.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the report of the department give that as a reason or is that mere theory?

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector informs me that there was a heavy demand made for binder twine last year if we would sell it on credit, but as we required cash they would not buy from us.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you purpose varying your method in future so as to sell on credit when you get sufficient guarantee? The twine industry was started at Kingston to give healthy employment to the inmates and is it not better to adopt a prudent credit system rather than let the industry die out, and leave the convicts without employment?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed by the officer that shortly after the system was installed at Kingston, they sold some of the twine on credit, and they had any amount of trouble in collecting the money that was due for the twine. Perhaps the hon. member for Toronto may be able to suggest some better plan, but for the present we propose to continue on a cash basis.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I will suggest this plan to the Solicitor General. Some years ago the Minnesota State Binding Twine Institution found that they could not sell their twine for cash, and they had to take orders for twine from the farmers, on their note. Eight or ten farmers jointly signed a note for the twine they wanted for the year, each being responsible for the whole amount. As soon as the harvest was over and the grain was marketed, they had the money in hand to pay for these notes. I suggest to the department whether that plan might not be worth consideration, that eight or ten farmers should join together and each be responsible for the whole. I do not see that there would be any danger then. Before harvest very few farmers, in some parts of the country, have ready cash.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The minister stated a little while ago that a tender for staple dry goods was given to Messrs. Alphonse Racine & Co., and for sundries to Messrs. Hodgson, Sumner & Co. Turning to page L—17 it appears that he purchased lines of the same goods from Messrs. P. Garneau Fils & Co., of Quebec, for $1,545. In that order were shirts and drawers, 15 dozens at $4.50, 20 doz. at $6, and 20 doz. at $6.25. Other parties had tendered for supplying these goods, and yet the department go down to Quebec and give an order there for $1,545 without tender.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed by the officer that in respect to shirts and drawers there was a shipment made by Garneau & Sons to finish up a contract they had in the previous year, and it was paid out of the appropriation for this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Were potatoes considered a staple article of groceries for which tenders were called?

Mr. BUREAU. No. They grow their own potatoes at the penitentiary, and they buy only when they are short in their crops.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If there is anything of a staple character I should think it would be potatoes. But I find that you paid six different men for potatoes at varying prices. Would it not be better to advertise and get a price for potatoes for the year? Did you call for public tenders for flour?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How is it, then, that flour is purchased from two or three different individuals at varying prices? You purchased flour from James Cummings, 410 barrels at $4.90; from Higham and Ramsay, Stonewall, Manitoba, you purchased 1,548 bags of flour at $1.80, and 410 bags at $2.45, less freight, $256. If the minister calls for tenders for flour at the lowest prices, how is it that he paid these varying prices?

Mr. BUREAU. Last year no tenders were called for and no contracts were given for flour. Generally we do call for tenders, but last year the market was so unsettled that the officers of the department thought it was better not to advertise for tenders, and they did not call for tenders. But that is only one year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do you call for tenders for molasses? I find molasses appearing in three different places. Molasses appears in the Crawford account and in the Maclean account, at different prices.

Mr. BUREAU. Tenders were invited for this year and we have let contracts for the current year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Were they invited last year?

Mr. BUREAU. Last year they were not invited, for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Molasses appears in the Crawford account, 438 gallons at 35 cents, and in the Maclean account, 93 gallons at 36 cents. What is the explanation?

Mr. BUREAU. The Crawford account was under contract. In regard to the Maclean account, the officer explains that it may be an overlapping of the previous year.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that all?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know; I will have to find it out.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister might look at this item: Brown sugar, 8,000 pounds, at $3.85 per cwt., bought from Mr. Maclean. Surely brown sugar is a staple article, or was the market unstable there also ?

Mr. BUREAU. I am not in a position to give the explanation just now. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has asked for the schedules; I will bring them down and then my hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) may satisfy himself.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The schedules will not satisfy one on that point.

Mr. BUREAU. You will see by the schedules what we got prices for and what the prices were.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the tenders were accepted that is the man from whom the goods should have been purchased.

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN. But they were not purchased from him.

Mr. BUREAU. They may have been classed as staples and sundries. One man might tender for grocery staples and the other for sundries.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Are these items staples or sundries?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I take from the list, potatoes, flour, molasses, beans, butter, barley; all these are purchased from different individuals. If these are not staples one would be at a loss to understand what staples are. Is there anything the minister considers a staple article of groceries which staple article he has purchased by tender from the lowest tenderer and from that man alone?

Mr. BUREAU. I stated just now that all these things are purchased from the lowest tenderer.

Mr. MEIGHEN. From that man alone?

Mr. BUREAU. There might be various contractors for the different institutions.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They may not be the lowest tenderers.

Mr. BUREAU. I admit I cannot explain this. When I get the schedules down we can again take up the matter and see why these things were purchased from two different parties.

Mr. STAPLES. The minister said that the flour market was unsettled last fall?

Mr. BUREAU. Not last fall, but a year ago last fall.

Mr. STAPLES. The price of wheat was pretty steady last fall.

Mr. BUREAU. Last October we had to ask for tenders, but it was a year ago last fall—October, 1907—that I had reference to.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is just when the elections were on.

Mr. MEIGHEN.

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. You said you asked for tenders in October last?

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly we asked for tenders in October last, but we did not ask for tenders because the elections were on.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Last year wheat was very cheap and yet they paid $4.90 for flour.

Mr. BUREAU. I will have to retract. I am informed by the inspector that tenders were called for in the public newspapers after the elections.

Mr. FOSTER. That is explained in this way: The year before there was a pretty definite idea that there would be an election here; it was considered that the markets would be unsettled and, therefore, no tenders were asked for. Is that it ?

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask my hon. friend if there is any other kind of work done at the penitentiaries than the making of binder twine?

Mr. BUREAU. We make our own clothing, boots and shoes, and we work for other penitentiaries. We have in the penitentiaries eight instructors for the purpose of training convicts in various trades—carpenters, stonemasons, quarrymen, brickmakers, &c.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do you make any shirts or drawers?

Mr. BUREAU. No, we buy them; we make pants and coats though.

Mr. MONK. Is there any of the product sold outside of the penitentiary?

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. MONK. Or given away?

Mr. BUREAU. There is nothing given away. I am informed by the inspector that sometimes some of the goods manufactured by the convicts are sold outside. There are articles of furniture which are manufactured in the penitentiary for the officers and paid for by them. Of course, they are manufactured by the convicts, who are being taught their trade at the same time.

Mr. MONK. I think that if there are articles of furniture manufactured there and sold to the officers it might give rise to abuses. The case I referred to more particularly was this one: A complaint was sent to me about 96 church pews that had been manufactured at the penitentiary at St. Vincent de Paul, sent up from there to some church in Ottawa and sold for the sum of—I do not exactly remember the sum —but $100 or so. These pews were large and commodious, capable of accommodating six people and were worth $960 at a low valuation. I would like to know exactly what occurred in regard to this transaction.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that there were some pews made by the convicts for a church at Ottawa. The lumber was supplied by the members of the congregation and the sum of $106 was paid for the labour which was used in making these pews by the convicts. That is the only instance.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the church put up an election subscription?

Mr. EMMERSON. It was not that kind of church.

Mr. BUREAU. It put up the prayers.

Mr. MONK. Was the lumber sent down from Ottawa and through whom was that transaction carried out?

Mr. BUREAU. The lumber was sent down from Ottawa and the transaction was carried out through Mr. Dawson, inspector of penitentiaries. He thought it was a good thing to give our apprentices in the carpenter shop some work. The inspector gave them the lumber and saw that the cost of the labour that was put on this work was paid by the congregation.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Dawson at liberty to do that generally? There are a great many churches that would like to get pews at that rate. I think it is the most extraordinary transaction I have heard of in a long time.

Mr. BUREAU. I understand that this has been done on other occasions. One precedent is the supplying of cut stone for a church at Portsmouth, where Sir John Thompson paid the money and furnished the material.

Mr. HUGHES. Sir John Thompson had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BUREAU. He paid for the cut stone out of his own pocket.

Mr. HUGHES. After it was discovered that it had been furnished from the penitentiary.

Mr. BUREAU. I did not say when he paid it.

Mr. HUGHES. He said it should not have been done at the expense of the people of Canada, and he paid for it out of his own pocket when he found the work had been done at the penitentiary

Mr. BUREAU. It was not paid for in this case by the people of Canada; the $106 did not come from the people of Canada, but from the congregation.

Mr. MONK. That is not exactly the point of view to take. The question is, what kind of operations can be carried on in a general way. My hon. friend knows that there is serious conflict between prison and outside labour, and if this sort of thing can be done in one instance why can it not in another? My information is that at the penitentiary I have mentioned there are serious disorders of that kind. As I have no precise facts that I can establish I do not wish to refer to those disorders in a general way, but this particular case goes to show that the inspector has the right to order work to be done for outside parties for remuneration in money, and I think that is at least opening the door to very serious abuse. It is not fair. If our convicts in the penitentiary can be employed, for instance, on public works, there is a great deal of work that can be done without their labour competing with that of outsiders. That competition we should not encourage. It cannot be allowed to take place.

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector has just explained to me that the work was done at his request for himself; he says it was his contribution to the church I take issue with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when he says that at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary there are disorders of that kind. I want to register a protest. Last year he made charges against the officers and administration of the penitentiary. I spent a week there and made the most minute investigation, but found there was no foundation for the charges made against the officials there.

Mr. MONK. What are the charges against which he protests?

Mr. BUREAU. You say there is great disorder in that line in that penitentiary.

Mr. MONK. When did you hold an investigation?

Mr. BUREAU. Last year after you and the then member for Laval made your charges against the warden and officials of the penitentiary

Mr. MONK. I find it extremely singular that the Solicitor General should have held an investigation there of charges I made without giving me an opportunity of appearing before His Worship to establish the charges. I do not think the investigation was of a very serious character. The only charge I made was that the prefect of the penitentiary took an active, open and violent part in elections. If the Solicitor General went down there and found that the prefect took no part in the elections I cannot say that I think much of his investigation, because it is well known there that Mr. Beauchamp took a very violent part in every election in that county since 1896. That was the only charge I made at that time, but I am making another one now. My hon. friend seems to become terribly indignant because we offered criticism—

Mr. BUREAU. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. What are we here for, to burn incense before my hon. friend?

Mr. BUREAU I wish you would.

Mr. MONK. I thought we were called upon to point out defects to criticise, and I say that I have had reports that the inspection is not properly done there, that work is done, articles are manufactured there and taken out of the penitentiary.

Mr. BUREAU. And paid for.

Mr. MONK. No, but I have no other instance, but that one about which there is no doubt whatever. An order was given for the manufacture of furniture, worth $960, for which $104 was paid. I take the view that it is unfair; if you open the door to that kind of thing you could have a furniture manufacturer getting furniture manufactured there, you can have prison labour in opposition to free labour. My hon. friend need not get indignant. We on this side of the House will not stand for protest and indignation because we offer fair criticism and bring facts to the notice of the government.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER The item before the committee deals with Kingston penitentiary; shall this carry?

Mr. MONK. Yes, but upon that item I raised the question of penitentiary labour. If I am out of order I will abide by your ruling, but I think that in voting $50,000 for Kingston penitentiary, I am at liberty to raise the question of prison labour.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Two questions have been brought up. The last point is a reasonable one and I think might come under this item, whether or not it is proper and advisable that prison labour should be sold outside of the penitentiary. That is a very old question of debate in this House. But there was another the hon. member (Mr. Monk) did not exactly state, but he insinuated that something had been done which was not absolutely correct, that these pews had been sold to the congregation at a lower price than their real value. As I followed the discussion I think he is satisfied that there has been no dishonesty and nothing wrong whatever, whatever the wisdom of the policy might be. As I understand, the material was furnished by the congregation and the labour, which was supplied by the penitentiary, was paid for by the congregation. Under such circumstances it seems to me there is nothing wrong and that matter should more properly come up when we are discussing the votes for St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. In the meantime my hon. friend has suggested a larger question whether or not the labour of the convict should be permitted to compete with the ordinary labour. That is a question which has been discussed again and again in this House for the last thirty years. I do not know that anything has been done to assert a principle one way or the other. Generally it was supposed that the labour of the convict should not come in competition with free labour and if this is the only instance, it seems to me to be not worth while discussing it.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true to a certain extent; I think both governments have gone on the principle of not allowing the convict labour to come in competition with ordinary labour. It seemed to be felt that some useful and steady employment could be found for the prisoners, and the compromise was the establishment a good many years ago of the binder twine manufactory which has been carried on ever since in Kingston. But that is different from a general policy announced by this government of not coming into competition with the general labour of the country. That is different from the general policy which has actuated both governments, of not allowing prison labour to enter into competition with the general industries and employments of the country. I do not agree with my hon. friend, however, in treating this matter so cavalierly. I think it is not only unwise, but wrong. I would like to ask whether the department authorized this particular instance or not. It was asserted by my hon. friend that Sir John Thompson had done the same. Will he make the statement in this House that Sir John Thompson, as Minister of Justice, or as premier, authorized that to be done? Or, was it not a matter which, when found out, was not approved of by Sir John Thompson, who took as manly a way as he possibly could of getting out of it? But I think you go a long way into competition with the ordinary trades and labour of the country when you allow the inspector of penitentiaries to furnish a church with $900 worth of furniture for $104.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is not a fair way of putting it.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that pews which were worth about $900 were got by the church.

Mr. EMMERSON. They furnished the lumber.

Mr. FOSTER. I know. The church produced the lumber for making the pews and got the labour for almost nothing. If they had to go into the general market and thus had given employment to the trades in that line, they would have paid a great deal more, and the trades would have got the advantage. In this case, while the whole country is keeping up the penitentiary, this one particular church gets that advantage. I do not think that ought to be allowed, and I would like to hear whether or not the minister of the department gave his authority for that transaction.

Mr. BUREAU. The minister never gave any special authority to the inspectors. The inspectors took it upon themselves to do this. While on my feet, I may correct an error of the hon. member for North Toronto, who is under the impression that 96 pews were furnished. There were only 42. The lumber was sent to St. Vincent de Paul, and the time was put in by the convicts. It is true, the whole country supports the convicts, and if any church gets the advantage of the cheap labour, every other church should have the same; but still this was a special case. The worthy inspector tells me that it was done in perfect good faith.

Mr. MONK. I do not know what church is in question, and I have no doubt that the object for which these pews were ordered was an excellent one; but I object to the principle. I put a question on the subject to the House the other day, and I believe the answer was that there were 63 pews. Now the number is stated to have been 42. The information sent to me was that there were 96, the value of which was $960. If you open the door to that kind of thing, it means the employment of prison labour to the detriment of outside labour; and I believe that both governments have agreed that that should not be done. In that letter there was an insinuation, as my right hon. friend says, that this was more or less of a practice at St. Vincent de Paul. If so, I think it is important that it should be put a stop to. In connection with Kingston penitentiary I find that there was a revenue of $10,646.93 outside of the binder twine industry. The farm contributed $3,402.41, the tailor $2,579.20, stone $598, and so on. Was this revenue derived from sales made outside, or what is the nature of it ?

Mr. HUGHES. While the hon. Solicitor General is looking up the answer, I wish to make one statement in justice to the memory of Sir John Thompson. As soon as he found out that those articles were purchased from the penitentiary, he instituted an inquiry, the result of which was that condign punishment was inflicted upon the subordinate officers who caused the transfer of the work from the penitentiary to the church authorities, and he saw that the country did not suffer to the extent of one dollar by paying the money himself.

Mr. BUREAU. The revenue from the bakery represents bread sold to the officers; that from the blacksmiths' shop represents work done for other penitentiaries; that from the tailor represents contracts executed by the penitentiary for the Department of Indian Affairs and the Department of the Interior. That is the largest amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any of it from work done for outside parties ?

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that this was done by the inspector on his own mere motion. Is it part of the inspector's duty or right to make contracts with outsiders for prison labour ?

Mr. BUREAU. The inspector, as I said just now, gave the work himself. The inspector gave out the work himself.

Mr. HUGHES. To what church does he belong?

Mr. BUREAU. St. Matthew's. Is that my hon. friend's church? The lumber was sent in to the inspector, and he ordered the work to be done as if it were for himself. Being a member of that church, that was his contribution. The time was kept of the labour making the pews, and he paid for that labour at the rate charged for penitentiary work.

Mr. FOSTER. He did that as an officer?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, and I do not want my hon. friend to understand that I approve of the policy. It is one that is open to question.

Mr. SPROULE. I would think that an inspector of penitentiaries has certain duties to perform, and that outside of these he has no authority to become a contractor for churches or any one else.

Mr. BUREAU. That is hardly putting the case fairly. It has always been the custom for penitentiary officers to have their furniture made by the convicts, and they pay the usual penitentiary rates. This gives employment to the convicts. The inspector did not act as a contractor but as a member of the church, and he availed himself of his privilege as an officer of the penitentiary to have work done for the church as he would for himself, paying the same rates. It was done for a good purpose, and the country lost nothing, and on the question of putting an end to that question I am not ready to pronounce.

Mr. FOSTER. I should have hoped that my hon. friend would have been ready to say no and say it at once. This case arises out of the fact that you give to your officers a perquisite in that way, and that leads us back to the consideration whether an officer should have any perquisites of that kind at all. Why should any officer have the right to get his furniture cheaper than an outsider? The country is paying him a proper salary or it ought to do so; and this is one of the perquisites, many of which were abolished, and I do not know why this one was allowed to remain.

Mr. BUREAU. How will you keep your convicts busy?

Mr. FOSTER. You should not say that in order to keep them busy, you will allow perquisites to your officers. There are other ways of keeping your convicts occupied. Pay each officer his wage and give him no favours. I would ask the leader of the House what estimates will be taken up after six o'clock? We are at a loss by not knowing five minutes ahead what is to be gone on with. That makes it more difficult for us and the ministers as well. If we knew a day in advance, we would be better prepared to facilitate the business, and the minister himself might be prepared to expedite it if he would only take counsel with his officers before he comes to the House.

Mr. PATERSON. What ought to be going on to-day is the work of the Opposition, but instead they allow their motions to stand on the order papers, and then expect the government to take up its business.

Mr. FOSTER. What will we go on with to-night?

Mr. PATERSON. With these penitentiary estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. And what after?

Mr. PATERSON. I am glad to hear my hon. friend give indication of such diligence in expediting business. We shall, probably, go on with the Indian estimates and Interior Department.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BRADBURY. I find that the department paid $3.60 per barrel for 724 barrels of flour purchased from Higham & Ramsay, of Stonewall, and that the department also purchased from a man named Cummings 410 barrels of flour at $4.90 per barrel. What is the reason for this great difference in the price. Every one knows that the flour made in Manitoba is the best flour in the world, and no better flour can be found any where than that made in the Stonewall mills in my constituency. How did you come to pay Mr. Cummings $4.90 when you only paid $3.60 to Messrs. Higham & Ramsay? While on my feet I may say that I was rather surprised at the statement of the Solicitor General to the effect that the question of employing convict labour in competition with free labour was open to discussion. I believe that every member in this House will agree with me that the principle of allowing convicts to make $900 worth of pews for a church at a cost of some $120 is a wrong principle. It brings convict labour into direct competition with free labour and it should not be tolerated. The Solicitor General, in what I consider a rather flippant manner, said that he did not endorse the principle but he thought it was open for discussion. I say that it is not open for discussion; it is absolutely a wrong principle.

Mr. MILLER. The hon. gentleman ought not to say that pews worth $900 were furnished for $120. I do not say that the principle is right, but it is only fair to say that the parties who got the pews furnished their own lumber.

Mr. BRADBURY. That does not alter the principle at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. It alters the fact.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is no doubt whatever that the pews were made by convict labour and furnished at a much less cost than if they were made by free labour. It is the old story of convict labour coming into competition with free labour and the principle is wrong.

Mr. BUREAU. I do not say that the principle is right in this particular case, and while I do not want convict labour to come into competition with free labour, yet, these prisoners are learning a trade and it is rather difficult sometimes to draw the line. The officers of the penitentiary are allowed to have certain articles made by convict labour and they pay for them.

Mr. J. D. REID. Does the Solicitor General approve of that system?

Mr. BUREAU. I did not say that I did, but the question having been raised I said it was worth considering.

Mr. BRADBURY. What about that difference in the price paid for the flour?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the price of flour varied last year and that the current market price was paid at the time the flour was purchased.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Selkirk may not be aware that Mr. Cummings who got the high price for the flour was the Liberal candidate in Brockville some time ago.

Mr. BUREAU. That would not make any difference. Does the hon. gentleman say that more than the current market price was paid?

Mr. MEIGHEN. How is it that if, as we are told, tenders were called for staple articles and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer and the goods purchased from him, that these same staple goods have been purchased from so many different parties.

Mr. BUREAU. That was in the case of molasses and sugar.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The explanation given by the Solicitor General was that potatoes were not purchased by tender because it was only when more potatoes than were grown on the penitentiary grounds were required that potatoes were purchased; but as some 1,500 barrels were purchased during the year surely the department could have made a nearer estimate as to its requirements than that. The Solicitor General told us that as the price of flour fluctuated last year tenders were not called for, but he gave us no explanation with regard to the prices paid for molasses, and barley, and beans, and cheese, and butter. Is the minister prepared to give that information now?

Mr. BUREAU. The officers leave the department at six o'clock and any how I had not time to go there.

Mr. MEIGHEN. We can rely on getting that information to-morrow?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will we get the information before these estimates are passed?

Mr. BUREAU. We can do it on some other item. I will leave an item open.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understood the minister to say that they considered it inadvisable to sell twine to the farmers on credit. Can he tell me what was the length of credit, as a rule, asked by the farmers?

Mr. BUREAU. They asked until after the harvest to pay for the twine, those who asked for credit.

Mr. BRADBURY. Is it not a fact that in the case of Higham and Ramsay they actually tendered for that flour? Were tenders called for in any other case?

Mr. BUREAU. I have explained this afternoon that we did not invite tenders a year ago on account of the unsettled condition of the flour market. These gentlemen had been supplying the penitentiaries before, and we bought from them. They were a reliable firm who had been doing business with us before.

Mr. BARNARD. I understood the minister to say that the officials of the penitentiary were allowed to purchase things that were made in the penitentiary, such as furniture. I see a large amount of revenue here derived from the tailor. Are the officials entitled to get anything in the shape of clothes, or anything from the shoemaker's shop?

Mr. BUREAU. They get clothing and shoes for their families and themselves. The greater part of the revenue from the tailor is owing to the fact that we take contracts with the Indian Department; all the tailor work required on the Indian reservation is done in the penitentiary at Kingston, and we charge it up against the Indian Department.

Mr. BARNARD. On what basis is the price fixed for these goods, and who fixes the price?

Mr. BUREAU. The price is fixed by the accountant of the penitentiary, and by the instructor of the particular branch in which the work is done, upon the basis of 30 cents for labour, the cost of material, and also the cost of supervision.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. Turning to L-18, I find that you purchased from Geo. E. Maybee, of Napanee, castile laundry soap, 2,114 lbs. at 5 cents. Who is Mr. Maybee?

Mr. BUREAU. Mr. Maybee is a manufacturer's agent.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. gentleman is misinformed. Mr. Maybee is a commercial traveller who visits our town, and I have known him for many years.

Mr. BUREAU. He represented himself to us as a manufacturer's agent.

Mr. CROTHERS. Who would be responsible for buying supplies that were not advertised for by tender for the penitentiaries?

Mr. BUREAU. In such a case a requisition is made by the storekeeper, then it is handed over to the warden, and if the warden approves of it, he turns it over to the inspectors, and if they approve, the purchase is made. Of course it goes before the minister.

Mr. CROTHERS. I see that 1,700 bushels of potatoes were bought in that way. For some, 60 cents a bushel were paid; for others, $1 a bushel, to the same man. No doubt if a staple like that had been advertised for you would have got the whole quantity for 60 cents a bushel.

Mr. BUREAU. That might be, but we could not take delivery of the whole quantity at once. These were bought at different times when the prices varied.

Mr. BARNARD. Could the minister give us a detailed statement showing how much of this revenue was derived from the sales of goods, altogether apart from the government and the penitentiary; also, showing what proportion of it is sold to the officials?

Mr. BUREAU. I could get that information, but it would take some time to prepare it. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman put a motion on the order paper for a return. It would give us a better chance to get the whole of the details out.

Mr. EDWARDS. Were tenders called for the sand that was supplied?

Mr. BUREAU. No.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to know whether or not you grow your own potatoes at the penitentiary in Manitoba and whether you are carrying on the farming industry in connection with that institution?

Mr. BUREAU. We try to grow them.

Mr. STAPLES. Does the minister mean to insinuate that we cannot grow potatoes in Manitoba? If they made an attempt at all there is no doubt that they would succeed in growing them.

Mr. BUREAU. We did grow them, too.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to know whether or not they have been able to supply the demand there or did you go out in the open market to purchase them?

Mr. BUREAU. There were no potatoes purchased in Manitoba, as appears by the details of the penitentiary report, page 168. They were all grown there.

Mr. EDWARDS. The reason I asked the question a few minutes ago as to the purchasing of sand for the penitentiary is this: In the county of Frontenac there are three persons engaged in the sand business. Two of these are strong Liberals and the other one is a strong Conservative. In getting sand for the Rockwood asylum, which is under the provincial government, tenders are asked for and the two Liberals have an equal chance with the Conservative to supply that sand. But in getting sand for the penitentiary apparently tenders are not asked for and a fair chance is not given to all parties. I hope this system will be changed in the future in fairness to all persons engaged in this business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BLAIN. I think my hon. friend is entitled to an answer as to whether sand will be purchased by tender.

Mr. BUREAU. He expressed a hope. We do not know the quantity of sand that we will require.

Mr. EDWARDS. You required in the neighbourhood of 200 cubic yards last year.

Mr. SPROULE. This seems an unreasonable evasion. You must be buying sand in large quantities in future. The question is whether it will be bought by tender.

Mr. BUREAU. We only bought $189 worth.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not give the information. The question which has been asked is this: Is it the intention to purchase these articles, where they are obtained in large quantities, by tender or by private advices to men in the business?

Mr. EDWARDS. The Conservative that I referred to and who is engaged in the sand business has been distinctly told on more than one occasion that there was no need of him tendering or thinking of supplying sand to the Kingston penitentiary because of his politics, and I am asking if that sort of thing is going to be allowed, or if you are going to give everybody a fair show as is done in buying sand for the Rockwood asylum?

Mr. BUREAU. I think it is only fair to know by whom the hon. gentleman was told that. If any officials said that to the hon. gentleman's friend they certainly ought to be reprimanded. It might have been told to the hon. gentleman by one of his political friends for the purpose of using it in the House for all I know.

Mr. EDWARDS. In our portion of the country we do not consider that reprimands would do much good. In election time these officials go out and work as actively as any person in the county.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the reprimand you speak of mean an advance in salary?

Mr. THOBURN. As a Canadian manufacturer I have an important question to ask. By reference to page L—18 of the Auditor General's Report I find that there were 88 hats bought from a Canadian firm at $1 each. Turning to page L—17 of the Auditor General's Report I find that there were six dozen hats bought from Hicks & Son, London, England, at $1.25 each. As a manufacturer of Canada I would like to know if Canadian manufactured hats are not good enough for those penitentiary chaps at Kingston?

Mr. BUREAU. I am told that the hats that were bought in England were for the officers, being portions of their uniforms.

Mr. THOBURN. It does not say so in the Auditor General's Report. Even if they were, why could not they have been manufactured and purchased in Canada?

Mr. BUREAU. In the minister's report the whole thing is stated.

Mr. EDWARDS. Might I ask for an expression of opinion in regard to the purchase of sand for the Kingston penitentiary? Is it to be done by tender or not?

Mr. BUREAU. We will be glad to ask the hon. gentleman's friend for a tender if he will give us his name.

Mr. EDWARDS. I am young at this business, but I do not think that is an answer to my question.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, I think it is. The hon. gentleman wants to find out whether we are going to purchase from the same party without inviting tenders——

Mr. SPROULE. Whether by tender or by private agreement.

Mr. BUREAU. We are going to ask for prices.

Mr. EDWARDS. I will be satisfied if the hon. gentleman will give me the assurance that when they want sand they will ask for tenders.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend does not mean to say that if we want a load of sand we are going to advertise for it. If my hon. friend will give us his friend's name we will send him a circular and ask him for prices.

Mr. SPROULE. That is begging the question. You bought during the past year a large quantity of sand, and it is likely that you will buy a large quantity in the future. The question of the hon. gentleman is: Is it the intention of the government to buy by public tender or by contract with private individuals? He is entitled to an answer to that question.

Mr. BUREAU. It is not the intention to buy by private agreement with private parties.

Mr. BLAIN. At page L—36 of the Auditor General's Report, under the heading 'Twine returned into stock,' I see 88,260 pounds, valued at $10,149.90 and 24,050 pounds valued at $2,654.50 put down as having been returned. May I ask the minister if this twine was sold, found unsatisfactory and returned to the department?

Mr. BUREAU. The Canadian Society of Equity were overstocked, they had 88,260 pounds left on their hands and asked us to take the twine back; we did so and refunded them the money. The same thing applied to the 24,000 pounds.

Mr. BLAIN. Where is this firm ?

Mr. BUREAU. It is not a firm, it is an association of farmers in Alberta, for the whole province of Alberta. They club together and give their order but they had this on their hands after the crop was in and asked the authorities to take it back.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the freight paid on it to the penitentiary ?

Mr. BUREAU. It was taken to the penitentiary at Edmonton and is stored there.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. My hon. friend is mistaken. In the next item he will find that the Alberta Farmers' Association returned only 7,200 pounds. The minister should be careful and read the documents in his hands and give answers in accordance with the facts. The facts in this case are that some society of equity returned over 112,000 pounds but the Alberta Farmers Association returned only 7,200 pounds.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the Canadian Society of Equity is an association in southern Alberta but the Alberta Farmers Association operates principally around Edmonton.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $114,000.

Mr. CROTHERS. The farmers will be glad to know that they pay $1.50 a bushel for barley, and $2.50 for peas down there.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that this grain was for seed.

Mr. STAPLES. How many bushels ?

Mr. BUREAU. 25 bushels.

Mr. CROTHERS. They paid $5.30 for flour to the Campbell Milling Company but at the next page I see they got Manitoba hard at $3.60.

Mr. BUREAU. The market was fluctuating at that time. That year the flour market was very variable and it was decided not to advertise for tenders but to buy from time to time as we required it. That is the only year tenders were not asked for.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I see that a saddle horse was purchased from Alfred Charbonneau for $245, a generous price.

Mr. BUREAU. We have a certain number of horses there, some for the farm and others for the mounted patrol. My hon. friend will admit that the patrol must have good horses if they are to be of any use. If a prisoner should escape on one of the farm horses the patrol could not overtake him unless he had a better horse.

Mr. CROTHERS. Were the turnips for which you paid $1.10 a bushel for seed?

Mr. BUREAU. I suppose they were bought when the price of turnips was high or they might have been larger turnips.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I see that Robert R. Creighton a clerk at Ottawa was paid $232.79 for two trips Ottawa to Montreal and return.

Mr. BUREAU. That charge is right. Mr. Creighton was paid that amount. He is the accountant of the branch and was making an audit of the books, and that is for his travelling expenses.

Mr. BRADBURY. I see at L—21 a purchase:

Kinsey Boyden, Cincinnati, Ohio, 9 ply jail bars 23,184 pounds at 8¼ cents, 24,185 pounds at 8½ cents, 1,182 pounds at 9 cents.

Could these bars not be got in Canada?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that this steel bar, which is tool proof, is not made in Canada.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to draw the attention of the Solicitor General to the fact that the Nova Scotia Coal and Steel Company roll steel bars of any shape and dimensions.

Mr. BUREAU. Do they roll tool proof steel in Nova Scotia?

Mr. MADDIN. I do not think they do.

Mr. BUREAU I may inform the hon. gentleman that there were inquiries made before it was bought to ascertain whether or not it was manufactured in Canada, and it was found that it was not.

Mr. BRADBURY. I notice at page L—22 that spur gears were bought from the Platt Iron works Co., of Dayton, Ohio. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if it is the policy of the government to buy these things outside of the country when they can be bought in the country?

Mr. BUREAU. These were duplicate parts of a machine which came from there, and therefore they had to be obtained there.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman was good enough to give us a list of the goods supplied to the Kingston penitentiary on public advertisement. Will he give us a list of the goods supplied to this penitentiary? For example, is coal supplied by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, it is. There were two tenders—the T. F. Moore Co. and Cohen & Son. The tenders were called for by public advertisement in the newspapers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why was it that the price of coal in Montreal was over a dollar a ton more than it was in Kingston—the same grade of coal?

Mr. BUREAU. I cannot account for that. When we advertise in the newspapers for tenders, all we can do is to accept the lowest tender, which we have done.

Mr. J. D. REID. What newspapers?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not got the list here. I will bring it down.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page L—22, he will find that Alphonse Racine & Co. furnished goods. I want to know if they tendered for supplies there, and if so, what supplies?

Mr. BUREAU. There were tenders called for frieze, and theirs was the lowest tender. There were seven tenders put in.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. They supplied shirts and drawers, 127 pairs, at $4.50 per pair, whereas at the Kingston penitentiary the price was $4.50 a dozen. Surely there is a rake-off there.

Mr. BUREAU. That is a printer's mistake. The word 'dozen' is omitted before the word 'pairs.' It should be 127 dozen pairs, at $4.50 a dozen.

Mr. THOBURN. At page L—21 there is an item of $2,173 for lumber, which ranges all the way from $20 to $55 a thousand. Will the minister kindly tell us what kind of lumber was bought at $55 a thousand, and was it bought by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not the details of that item, but I will get them from the department and bring them down.

Mr. J. D. REID. With reference to this coal purchase from L. Cohen & Son, will the minister tell me what quantity of coal was asked for in the advertisement, and did it specify screenings; also what were the names of the parties who tendered, and the prices of the tenders per ton.

Mr. BUREAU. The tender of Cohen & Son is for soft screenings at $3.75 a ton. 1,500 tons were asked for. The other tender, that of Moore & Co., of Montreal, was at $4.75 a ton.

Mr. J. D. REID. When was the advertisement for tenders published ?

Mr. BUREAU. The supplies of the year 1907-8 were advertised to be tendered for up to March 18, for the various penitentiaries.

Mr. J. D. REID. And only two tenders were received.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Were the parties invited to tender for all the penitentiaries ?

Mr. BUREAU. It was optional for them to tender for one or for all the penitentiaries.

Dorchester penitentiary, $70,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the department still buy its hardware from the firm of McAvity & Sons, of St. John, New Brunswick?

Mr. BUREAU. Lewis Brothers of Montreal are the contractors for the hardware, both sundries and staples, for the year 1907-8.

Mr. CROCKET. In the Auditor General's Report, I notice that upwards of $1,000 of hardware was purchased from McAvity & Sons.

Mr. BUREAU. These were plumbers' supplies and steam fittings, small orders given at different times, when the things were wanted quickly.

Mr. CROCKET. Without public tender or competition. Is the Solicitor General aware that the head of this firm is George McAvity, the gentleman who got away with a rake-off of $35,900 in connection with the Mayes contract? If that firm has any account against the government it might be well to set it off, so far as it will go, against that rake-off, seeing that the department is unwilling to take proceedings to recover back the $35,900. In connection with McAvity & Sons, I find that they received $2.45 per barrel for 120 barrels of Portland cement, but I notice that cement was purchased for the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary at $1.85. It might be interesting to the Department of Justice to know that the Public Accounts Committee of New Brunswick had occasion to investigate the accounts of McAvity & Sons some years ago when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) was in the government of that province, and it was found that they were charging two prices in many instances.

Mr. BUREAU. The penitentiary at St. Vincent de Paul is right close to the market where they deal in cement, which may account for its being cheaper there. I do not know if there are any cement factories in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, and the difference in freight may explain the discrepancy. If you buy from Hull, you will have to pay more freight.

Mr. CROCKET. Would the freight account cause such a difference?

Mr. BUREAU. The purchase may have been at different times and larger quantities may have been required for St. Vincent de Paul than for Dorchester penitentiary.

Mr. ARTHURS. I find that 235 barrels of Portland cement were bought from J. H. Hickman at $2.45.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, the same price as from McAvity & Co.

Mr. CROTHERS. The chaplain at this penitentiary receives $200 a year less than at St. Vincent de Paul. Is that by reason of his inferior capacity or less onerous duties?

Mr. BUREAU. Less onerous duties, on account of the population being less in Dorchester than in St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. THOBURN. I find on page L—22 of the Auditor General's Report that the government purchased from T. Prefontaine & Co., Montreal, lumber commencing at $20 and running up to $75 per 1,000 feet. Unless this lumber was made into mahogany chairs or things of that kind, the price seems a fabulous one.

Mr. BUREAU. The $75 per 1,000 feet was paid for oak.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Could the minister say how much of the items for salaries and retiring allowances at St. Vincent de Paul and Dorchester penitentiaries is for each separately?

Mr. BUREAU. Last year there were $38,606.48 for salaries and $2,077.76 for retiring allowances.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The retiring allowances ought to be put separately in the estimates so that we might know them.

Mr. BUREAU. We cannot tell in advance what the retiring allowances for the year will be.

Mr. CROCKET. How many convicts in Dorchester penitentiary?

Mr. BUREAU. 245, an excess of 51 over the previous year.

Mr. HUGHES. Were tenders called for the installation of a power plant at Dorchester?

Mr. BUREAU. We have no power plant; we are buying the electricity.

Mr. HUGHES. Was an estimate made of what it would cost to run your own power plant?

Mr. BUREAU. It was estimated that a plant would cost $10,000 and salaries of officers to run the plant $3,500 a year.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Sackville Hay & Feed Company were paid $6.10 per barrel for some flour; $3.15 for other flour, and $4.85 per barrel for other flour. What is the explanation?

Mr. BUREAU. They were different grades of flour which were mixed together so as to lessen the cost.

Manitoba penitentiary, $60,350.

Mr. BRADBURY. I notice by the Auditor General's Report that Scott & Stratton, of Stonewall, were paid $4,652 for various lumber supplies. Were these supplies bought by tender? Does the Solicitor General know that this is a very small firm doing business at Stonewall? Where there is such a large amount of lumber required would it not be cheaper for the department to buy from a wholesale house in Winnipeg rather than from these small dealers?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed the purchase was made after inviting prices. They tried to get the same goods in Winnipeg but they found they could not get as good service.

Mr. BRADBURY. That explanation is hardly in line with what are the facts. Stonewall is about 8 miles from Stoney Mountain and Stoney Mountain is about the same distance from Winnipeg. There is a first-class train service from Winnipeg to Stoney Mountain, so that if the lumber were bought in Winnipeg it could be delivered much easier at Stoney Mountain than from Stonewall. There is something wrong in that explanation.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed this firm took the order and shipped to Stoney Mountain. The inspector tells me he does not know where the lumber came from.

Mr. BRADBURY. Were public tenders asked for, or was the contract simply given to these people?

Mr. BUREAU. Prices were invited from these people and from parties in Winnipeg, and the prices of these people were lower than the prices we got from Winnipeg.

Mr. BRADBURY. Don't you see at once that when you invite tenders from only two or three people you leave room for that collusion which must have taken place in this case. A firm doing business like Scott & Stratton, in Stonewall, could not sell as cheaply as a large firm in Winnipeg. A small firm like that outside of Winnipeg would have to buy from the Winnipeg firm, and resell it at a higher price to the government.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. What firms were asked to tender for these supplies?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not that information. The prices were asked by the penitentiary officials.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. You will get that information?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know. It is asking a good deal of the officials to send us down copies of all their letters. They were instructed by the inspectors to ask for prices, and give the contract to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Were their instruction given from Ottawa?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. You will bring down the instruction that was sent by the inspector who to buy it from.

Mr. BUREAU. There is a standing instruction to all the purchasing agents of the various penitentiaries that they are to buy at the lowest market price.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman knows who the firm of Stratton & Scott are. Stratton is the president of the Liberal association of the county of Selkirk; I think that explains the whole position.

Mr. BUREAU. Does my hon. friend claim the prices are excessive?

Mr. BRADBURY. I think they are, in some cases.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I find an item of $48.40 for advertising for tenders for supplies. Was a tender asked for dry goods, and was the lowest tender accepted?

Mr. BRADBURY.

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Who was the lowest tenderer?

Mr. BUREAU. For dry goods special, J. M. Garland Sons & Co., of Ottawa. They received the contract for all the articles that are mentioned under the heading of dry goods special for all the penitentiaries in Canada. Dry goods staples for Manitoba went to Racine & Co.; there were four tenderers.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How do independent tenderers know that they may procure contracts? Unless the tenders are taken and accepted only as advertised, and for the articles advertised, then tendering is of no use to the country.

Mr. McCOLL. I think my hon. friend does not understand the matter correctly. If he would read the advertisement carefully he would see that in a general way it calls for tenders for certain supplies, with a form of tendering, and stating that particulars can be obtained on application to the warden. Then if he looks over the tender form, that would specify in detail the different kinds of groceries, and the different kinds of clothing, and so forth, required. One tenderer may be lower for one kind of clothing, and another lower for another kind, and that accounts for the contracts being given to different parties and not all to one.

Mr. MEIGHEN. There is no mention of that in the advertisement. The advertisement says that parties may tender for one or for all of the different public institutions, but it does not say that parties may tender for part of the dry goods, or for part of the groceries, or for anything else under any one heading. It simply invites tenders for one institution or for all. Consequently the public in general would not know that they could go to the department and divide up the tenders for part of the dry goods or part of the groceries; there is no hint of it in the advertisement. I think I understand the advertisement as well as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. McCOLL. If my hon. friend would refer again to the advertisement he will find that it states: 'Forms of tenders can be obtained, with particulars, from the warden'. Has my hon. friend ever seen one of these tender forms? Take a tender for different kinds of clothing for instance. One tenderer puts in a certain price for one class of goods, and another tenderer puts in a price for another class of goods, and so on. A third tenderer may be lower on one class of goods, and higher on another, and the department in each case gives it to the lowest tenderer for the particular kind of goods that is on the list. There is no patronage in the matter at all.

Mr. BUREAU. The specification is contained in the blank form of tender. By applying to the warden of the penitentiary he who desires to tender gets a form, and on that form every article is mentioned under a special heading. Here, for instance, is a tender for dry goods special, enumerating particulars of weight, colour and quality. They put their prices on the different articles. One may tender for blankets, another for prison clothing. The specification is on the tender. They apply for this from the warden, and they get an enumeration of all the various articles required under the special heading.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister can accept the tender as to one item, and reject it as to another. Is that not so?

Mr. BUREAU. In the form of the contract they say that samples or tenders will be considered item by item. Suppose a man is lower on blankets we will award him the contract for blankets and not for other things upon which he may not be as low.

Mr. CROTHERS. I am afraid my hon. friend is neglecting the spiritual welfare of some of the inmates of this institution.

Mr. BUREAU. Where?—in Manitoba?

Mr. CROTHERS. Yes. I see there are five chaplains who receive $688 and one who gets $1,000.

Mr. BUREAU. What page?

Mr. CROTHERS. L—26. I would like to know if these five were all in service at the time or whether they were serving periodically, turn about?

Mr. BUREAU. They were serving periodically, turn about.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to direct the attention of the hon. gentleman to page L—27.

Higham & Ramsay, Stonewall: bran, 1 ton $18; Imperial flour, 620 bags at $1.55; sundry items, $3.90, $982.90.

A while ago the hon. gentleman stated that the tenders were called for after the general elections. If my memory serves me aright the contract was let for this flour in Selkirk about ten days or two weeks before the elections.

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the tenders were called for in November and the contract let in the same month.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would bring the tender down, because this is a disputed point. It is in my own constituency, and I happen to know the circumstances. I am not complaining of Higham & Ramsay getting the contract because they happen to be friends of my own, although my opponent was bidding high to get them as the public accounts will show. Two weeks before the election Higham & Ramsay received some assurance that if they had not obtained the contract they were going to obtain it. I would like to know whether that is a fact, and I would like the hon. gentleman to bring down the tender.

Mr. BUREAU. I have the tenders under my hand and I have a letter dated Winnipeg, Man., November 26, and addressed to the Inspector of Penitentiaries at Ottawa, as follows:

Dear Sir,—Inclosed we beg to hand you our tenders for the supply of flour at the penitentiaries at Stony Mountain, Sapperton and Edmonton.

The tenders were sent in on the 26th November.

Mr. BRADBURY. What about Stony Mountain?

Mr. BUREAU. It was sent in on the 26th November, 1908.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the date of the tender?

Mr. BUREAU. There is no date on the tender, but here is the letter transmitting the tender.

Mr. BRADBURY. Is that the tender for the supply of flour for the Stony Mountain Penitentiary?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. BRADBURY. What is the date of the tender?

Mr. BUREAU. The 26th November, 1908.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Who is the tender addressed to?

Mr. BUREAU. The Inspector of Penitentiaries, Ottawa.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Who is it mailed by?

Mr. BUREAU. I have not the name of the office boy, but it was signed by the tenderers.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Who signed the tender?

Mr. BUREAU. The Ogilvie Flour Mills Co., Ltd., by R. Dobell.

Mr. BRADBURY. What about the tender of Higham & Ramsay? That is the one I am asking for.

Mr. BUREAU. It is here. It is with the others that were put on the list in the month of November and the contract was awarded, I am told, in the beginning of December. Do you want to see it?

Mr. BRADBURY. That is satisfactory; I will take your word for it.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Are these tenders ever dated?

Mr. BUREAU. It all depends upon the man who fills it up. These are not dated. They generally inclose their tenders with a letter.

Mr. THOBURN. At page L—28 I see that Windatt & Co., Winnipeg, supplied 79·7 tons of coal at $9.20. The quality is not specified. Would the hon. gentleman tell us what the quality was and if it was bought by tender?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes, that coal was bought by tender after public advertisement. It was egg coal.

Mr. BRADBURY. The tender sent over here looks all right, but there is no signature and no date. This only confirms the suspicion I have that this was all arranged before my election because it was street talk two weeks before the election that Higham & Ramsay had the contract to furnish the flour.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend will understand we could not let the contract before we had the figures. They were the lowest tenderers. We have accompanying letters showing that they were mailed on the 26th and the 24th of November.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Does that not show the time they were transmitted to Ottawa?

Mr. BUREAU. Here is the Campbell Milling Company tender dated November 28 and not signed. Here is the tender of Cumming, of Lynn Lin, dated November 28. All these people were on the list and the contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer. All these being on the list there could not be any game, because we did not know who was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BRADBURY. I am quite satisfied to take the hon. gentleman's word for it, but it looked peculiar.

There is an allowance to school district 294, Stony Mountain, in lieu of school fees of $250. It is a great hardship to the residents of that district to have this amount so small; the government should allow that district at least $500. The settlement is very small; they have kept up the school; the larger number of pupils attending it are children of the officials, and the government are not bearing their fair share of the burden.

Mr. BUREAU. The matter deserves consideration. There was a time when they were getting nothing and the $250 was fixed at their request as compensation for the extra cost of the children of the officials of the penitentiary.

Mr. BRADBURY. The hon. gentleman realizes that the staff in the penitentiary is increasing and the children are increasing.

British Columbia, $56,500.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. At L—29 of the Auditor General's Report it will be seen that there was an unusual number of retirements last year. Would the minister explain?

Mr. BUREAU. Seven officials retired from the British Columbia penitentiary, Atkins, Bourke, Burr, McKee, McNeill, McNiven and Whyte. McNiven and Burr have since died. McNeill was suspended, but after investigation it was found that the suspension was not justified and he was awarded his retiring gratuity. They are paid one-half month salary for the first five years' service and a full month for each subsequent years in the service.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Is that the only explanation of the extraordinary number?

Mr. BUREAU. Atkins retired on account of physical unfitness for service; Bourke retired after the investigation into the escape of certain prisoners; Mr. Burr retired on account of ill-health and died since; Mr. McNeill retired, as I have explained, and Mr. McNiven and Mr. Whyte on account of ill-health.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister's explanation is not so full as we might have expected. In addition to those to whom gratuities were paid, some permanent guards retired without gratuity. Is there any special reason for the retirement of T. B. Anderson.

Mr. BUREAU. The other guards retired voluntarily, because they thought they could do better outside of the penitentiary.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Do I understand the minister to say seriously that that was the reason for the retirement of Mr. Anderson and Mr. Theroux ?

Mr. BUREAU. I cannot assign the particular reasons. They were not asked for their resignations and were not dismissed by the department, but resigned voluntarily.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Well, I live at New Westminster and have considerable acquaintance with the affairs of the penitentiary there, and I have very positive information that Mr. Theroux did not retire voluntarily, and that there were very special circumstances connected with the request for his retirement. I would like the minister to inquire, before we proceed further, whether some of these incidents cannot be recalled now.

Mr. BUREAU. The only information we have in the department is that he forwarded his resignation, written by himself, to the minister, and that it was accepted.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Well, all I have to say is that the department is far from being fully informed. Among these gratuities I notice that Mr. Bourke, who is shown by the report of the Minister of Justice to have been a very long time in the service, receives a retiring allowance of only $279.23. The circumstances must be very special to have him so niggardly dealt with.

Mr. BUREAU. That is for the period mentioned there, from July 23, 1886, to October 13, 1892. After fifteen years' service in the penitentiary, he becomes entitled to a superannuation allowance, which he is now getting, in addition.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It is a fact, is it not, that Mr. Bourke has an application now before the department for a more substantial retiring allowance ?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. May I ask what the claim is ?

Mr. BUREAU. He wants us to add ten years to his service.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. There is another interesting item on this page :

Canadian Detective Bureau, Vancouver: expenses searching for escaped convicts, $2,485.85

I would like some explanation of that.

Mr. BUREAU. This was paid for the services of those who were employed in connection with the Bill Miner escape, and those who escaped with him.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like the minister to supplement that by stating whether there were any results from their search ?

Mr. BUREAU. We heard about a month ago that they would probably be apprehended before long.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. According to an answer given in this House the other day, Bill Miner escaped on the 8th of August. Might I ask when this detective bureau were instructed in this matter.

Mr. BUREAU. They were instructed on the 15th day of August. The letter of instructions left on that date.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. What was the reason for the delay ?

Mr. BUREAU. We wanted to get Bill Miner's portrait printed, so that they would not be working at random. We had a lithograph made, and when it was ready, we sent it with the instructions.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. On page L—31 I find this item:

Lieutenant-Colonel A. P. Sherwood, commissioner of police, Ottawa: detective services. $150.

Was that also in connection with the Bill Miner case ?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the commissioner of police was instructed when?

Mr. BUREAU. On the 12th day of August, the day we heard in Ottawa that Bill Miner had escaped.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The hon. minister is in error there, because that does not agree with the answer given the other day, that the department heard on the 9th of August that Bill Miner had escaped.

Mr. BUREAU. They heard on the 8th that four convicts had escaped, and on the 12th they learned that Bill Miner was one of the four.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. In the annual report of the minister we read this at page 2:

The unusual number of escapes is a matter of extreme regret. All occurred at British Columbia penitentiary, and were due to general lack of discipline and to disregard of the prison regulation. The staff of the penitentiary has been reorganized, and several subsequent attempts to mutiny and escape have been frustrated. The tendency of some officers to act upon their individual judgment, in defiance of the established regulations, which are the product of decades of experience, invariably leads to disastrous results. The superior officer who disregards the instructions and regulations by which he is governed cannot enforce obedience from subordinates who naturally exercise the same right of private judgment in the discharge of their duties. The successful commander is he who has first learned to obey.

This paragraph charges general insubordination and neglect of duty or worse in the British Columbia penitentiary. I submit that when we are called upon to pass the estimates for the support of that institution, we are entitled to have a serious explanation from the minister in charge of it, and I ask him now to make a fuller explanation than has been made respecting the condition of affairs shown by this report to have existed in that institution.

Mr. BUREAU. I understand that at the time of the escape of Bill Miner, Bourke, the deputy warden, was acting as warden, and did not keep the discipline he ought to have kept, and it was for that reason that the escape took place. Now Mr. Bourke has disappeared, a new warden has been appointed, and the reorganization is complete.

Mr. BURRELL. I do not think that is exactly a satisfactory explanation. The case of Bill Miner was a specially notorious one in British Columbia, and indeed in the whole of western Canada. The man had held up railway trains, his exploits had attracted unusual attention on the other side of the line, and flattering references were made to the expeditious way in which justice was meted out to this man. Yet he escaped on the 8th of August and the department responsible for the penitentiary did not know until the 12th of August that he had escaped, and did not take steps to recapture him until a week afterwards, when it was practically impossible to catch him.

Mr. BUREAU. When the officer in charge of the penitentiary wired of the escape he did not mention any names. He just said four prisoners had escaped. It was only on the twelfth that we had the name of Bill Miner mentioned in any despatch to the department. Immediately we gave instructions to try and recapture him if possible.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. When the inspector reports upon these penitentiaries, to whom does the report go? Does it go to the Solicitor General or to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. BUREAU. It goes to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It is the Minister of Justice who would be informed of this, if any minister were informed?

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am sorry to take up the time of the committee but I am afraid I must supply some of the details as to which the persons responsible for reporting these matters to the department have been so reticent. It has been common report in British Columbia for a long time that Bill Miner did not escape in the ordinary way, that his departure from the British Columbia penitentiary was connived at by persons high in the service of this country. That remained as a matter of mere report until very lately when this arraignment of the officers of the British Columbia penitentiary appeared in the report of the Minister of Justice. The retort to this was the statement by Mr. Bourke, the late deputy warden who had been retired, that he had in this connection some sensational and far reaching disclosures to make, and he added in a subsequent interview that Bill Miner did not escape from the British Columbia penitentiary but was virtually handed out, and that the other three prisoners were permitted to escape in order to cover up the Miner transaction. This statement has been made in the public press by Mr. Bourke, the late deputy warden. It was made a subject of inquiry by me in this House on the 1st of February, and the answer to my question was an intimation that the inspector had written to Mr. Bourke asking him to make the sensational disclosures which he indicated. But here is where the weak point of the procedure comes in; when we turn to Mr. Bourke's statement we find that the very man who asks him for the report is the man whom he charges with knowing something more about this affair than has been communicated to the department. I read in the New Westminster 'Columbian' of the 28th of January this statement said to have been made by Mr. Bourke:

Editor 'Daily Columbian.'

Sir,—Under the heading 'Dispatch from Ottawa gives wrong information,' appears an item in a local paper of to-day. Wrong impressions, where the escape of Bill Miner is hinted at, seem to be in order. Indeed right impressions of anything connected with the penitentiary service are about as rare as angels' visits; for, if a few good men were to retire, truth might be reckoned there among the lost arts.

It was my hope that when I tendered my resignation justice would be done me. It was also my hope that I would be allowed to spend the balance of my days in comparative quietness. These hopes are vanished. Justice has not been done me in the matter of my retiring allowance, and there is evidently a desire to pursue me into retirement with a spirit worse than vindictive. The secrets that I intended to keep must therefore become public. I have written to Ottawa for a report of the Minister of Justice, and if I find the reports to the press of this province correct, I shall open up a new field for moral reformers in which the evils, as compared with those in the old fields will be found as 16 to 1, that is, if moral reformers have courage enough to investigate.

He then proceeds to refer to some other matters which I need not read.

Mr. Bourke returned to the charge on the 3rd of February.

Mr. D. A. GORDON. Who is the editor of that paper you are quoting from?

Mr. HUGHES. That is immaterial.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. For the information of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gordon) I may tell him that I, when I am at home, am the editor of that paper, and that I am not ashamed of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HUGHES. And it is Bourke's own statement you are reading?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Certainly, these are Mr. Bourke's statements, and I think the merriment of the hon. gentlemen opposite is very much out of place in the midst of an indictment like this.

Mr. BUREAU. Where is the indictment?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. 'Where is the indictment?' asks the Solicitor General. What have we to hope from such a department of government when the second highest officer in the department having heard the charge that Bill Miner did not escape but was handed out from the penitentiary of New Westminster, returns the answer: Where is the indictment?

Mr. BUREAU. Bourke was in charge when he was handed out.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Bourke returns to the charge in this way:

I have just received the blue book and find your quotation as given in the 'Columbian' a few days ago——

Mr. BUREAU. Will my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) allow me a question?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. BUREAU. Is this the Mr. Bourke who was in charge of the penitentiary at New Westminster at the time of the escape of Bill Miner?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Yes, sir, this is the same Mr. Bourke who was in charge of the penitentiary, and he is therefore in a position to know what went on within the walls of that institution.

Mr. BUREAU. And he is a man who was under oath to keep good guard of the prisoners in the penitentiary.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. If the Solicitor General will kindly permit me to proceed without interrupting me I think I shall be able to show before I conclude that there is good ground for him to believe that persons who are nearer to him have also been disregardful of their oaths in this connection. Mr. Bourke proceeds to say in this second statement:

I have just received the blue book and find, your quotation, as given in the 'Columbian' a few days ago, correct. The die is now cast. The inspectors have left me no choice. I must remain under the cloud which they and their satellites have generated over me or appeal to the public. It may be said I should ask for an investigation. The value of an investigation depends entirely on the character and honour of the man conducting it From long experience and close observation of penitentiary investigations I am sorry to have to say I have not to-day one shred of confidence in them. A penitentiary investigation appears to me as a man clothed with authority to find out certain facts. He goes to work with a whitewash brush in one hand and a tar brush in the other and seeks diligently for everything but the facts required. If by any chance he finds these facts he applies the brush—the whitewash to those he likes, the tar to those he dislikes.

I have another objection to such investigations. I am strongly of opinion that their frequency and methods connected with them are largely responsible for the demoralized condition of that service.

Then he proceeds to moralize, which it is not necessary for me to read, and he concludes in this way:

The Bill Miner case alone would not give this opportunity. It is but an incident. I shall begin at once to collect and arrange my facts and when this is done which will probably be in a few weeks, I shall hand all to the press.

I submit that this statement by Mr. Bourke, which seems to have been brought to the attention of the department here, calls for a serious report to this House regarding the facts connected with this occurrence in British Columbia and as to what the department knows about it. The current report at New Westminster—for which I do not vouch because there is no way by which we can verify it except by the department giving us the facts in its possession—has been published in the press from time to time, as current news of this kind usually is, and that current report is to the effect that Bill Miner in his first train robbery—because he committed two in British Columbia—secured a quantity of valuable securities, and that the owners of these bonds endeavoured to induce him to state what he had done with them, but that he refused to make any communication unless he was released. Further, that certain persons, presumably detectives, were permitted to visit him in the penitentiary on several occasions before he escaped, or appeared to escape; that these persons were still in New Westeminster when he did escape, and that a few weeks before his escape his hair and moustache were allowed to grow, and at a later period he was allowed freedom from the interior of the prison, where criminals of his character are confined, and given the comparative liberty of the brick yard.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM. Did Mr. Bourke state or insinuate anything of that kind?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I think I am making a statement so serious that I should not be interrupted. Mr. Bourke did not say that, so far as I know, but I say that it is common report.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM. Mr. Bourke will not say so.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It is common report, and if the hon. gentleman has any further information it is his duty to disclose it. Before I have done with this business I propose to ask for an inquiry, and if that inquiry is granted, I shall see that the hon. gentleman is summoned as a witness. But in the meantime I would ask him not to interrupt the proceedings. The current report is that the very afternoon Miner escaped the fact was wired to the department at Ottawa and when the next day no answer was received, another message was sent to the department urging it to give a prompt reply and asking that a liberal reward be offered for his recapture. Not only one, but three, four, five and six days passed before the department at Ottawa was heard from and before a reward was offered; and when a reward was offered it was the paltry sum of $500 for the recapture of a desperado known all over the North American continent and whose liberty would be cheap to him at ten times that sum.

Mr. TALBOT. And his moustache was so grown you would not recognize him.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Apparently the hon. gentlemen who sit behind and support those responsible for the Justice Department see nothing but a subject for a slim joke in the circumstances I have related. I ask these hon. gentlemen who treat this as a joke if there be any crime in the calendar which they would condemn, when they treat as a matter for merriment the allegation that by the use of a golden key you may unlock the door of a penitentiary and allow to escape a criminal who had committed an offence so grave that pardon for it was out of the question. I am surprised that this matter should be treated in a spirit of levity by any one in this House. This escape of Miner is unique in this respect, that he was the only prisoner who ever got away from British Columbia with the exception of two halfbreeds who escaped from Wright's island, and one of them was recaptured a few days ago. Before this episode, such a thing as a clean getaway was unknown, because escaped prisoners were always caught again. We have in these rumours, all of which have found their way into the press, and in the personal statement of ex-Deputy Warden Bourke that Bill Miner did not escape, but was handed out, sufficient grounds for an investigation, not only into the management of the penitentiary, but into the connecting links between the Department of Justice and the penitentiary at Westminster, and we are entitled to be informed how it is that grave incidents connected with the visit of the inspector previous to the departure of Bill Miner were not reported to this department.

Mr. BUREAU. Does the hon. gentleman make the statement that shortly prior to the escape of Bill Miner there was a visit of the inspector to the penitentiary?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I have it in the Auditor General's Report here, which gives the date of the visit

Mr. BUREAU. I am not disputing the statement. I did not understand what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I verified it from the Auditor General's Report before mentioning it in this House. The reason I asked if there was any particular incidents connected with the retirement of a couple of the guards shortly prior to Miner's escape, is because the story is current that one of those guards was found to have addressed to him a communication for Bill Miner, enclosing money, and that in consequence of this discovery he was told to resign; yet we are told now this man resigned voluntarily and his resignation was accepted.

Mr. BUREAU. Does the hon. gentleman know the name of the guard?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. His name was Terroux and I have personal information as to the cause of his retirement. A close friend of his came to me, as a newspaper man in New Westminster, and begged that if we heard anything about his retirement we should not publish it because the poor fellow had been caught in the indiscretion of doing a little for a prisoner and was told he should resign. Later on it was alleged that he was acting as the go-between between some one on the outside of the penitentiary and Bill Miner. My information was that when the Terroux incident was reported, the inspector was actually present in the penitentiary, and that was what led me to ask in this House the other day whether the department had any knowledge of any communication from outside the penitentiary with convict Miner prior to his escape. The answer given me was 'No,' which would indicate that this incident of a receipt of a money letter by Miner was not communicated to the department; that the report was wrong that detectives were permitted to go into the cell and interview Miner there.

The answer I have received gives the contradiction to the story of the detectives which I have mentioned here to-night. I am aware of the discrepancy between this statement and that of the late deputy warden of New Westminster. But I say the situation is so grave, the whole chain of circumstances connected with Bill Miner's escape was so suspicious, even before that ex-deputy warden came forward with his extraordinary statements, that there is serious ground for some kind of inquiry so that this matter may be disposed of. I think the Minister of Justice cannot afford to let an incident like this be dismissed with a laugh on the part of his supporters. I do not think the Minister of Justice could have had the slightest suspicion of any thing of this kind having occurred without taking drastic measures immediately. I have confidence in the integrity of the head of that department. But the answer I have received here, and on a former occasion, leads me to believe that his subordinates have not conveyed to him the information which he should have received. Therefore I ask the minister, as the responsible head of the department to take steps to make a full inquiry and to see that the inquiry is conducted by some other person than the inspector who is now writing to Mr. Bourke, but who stands arraigned on the grave statement of Mr. Bourke to the public press.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I shall not attempt to make an answer to the observations of the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor), as I have not been able to hear them. But I welcome the opportunity to make to this committee a statement of the circumstances connected with the escape of this particular convict. I should say first that it was not only the only escape that had taken place that summer from this institution. The warden, Col. White, a gentleman who had been in charge of the penitentiary in British Columbia for many years, was at that time unable to discharge the duties of his position, from a serious illness which not only confined him to his room and his bed, but made it impossible to communicate with him on matters of business, and which afterwards turned out to be his final illness. In consequence of that illness the care and charge of the institution had devolved upon the deputy warden. Mr. Bourke had been an official in the service from 1886; he was a man, at all events of long experience, who had gone from the penitentiary in Manitoba to the penitentiary in British Columbia, and was a trusted official of the public service. There had been more than one previous escape that summer under circumstances which, at all events, seemed to indicate that there was a looseness of discipline, a lack of care, an absence of proper instructions to the guards in such a responsible position, and having charge of men of the character of convicts. After these previous escapes had taken place I was not a little taken aback, I am willing to admit, when, on the evening of 8th of August, 1907, a telegram was received from Mr. Bourke stating that four prisoners had escaped, giving no names, giving no particulars, and no indication of what was being done, or could be done, if anything could be done, to effect a recapture. The inspector, Mr. Dawson, was at that time upon official duties in Kingston, Ontario. The other inspector, Mr. Stewart, was in Ottawa; and he and I consulted with reference to what should be done with regard to the condition of things which appeared to exist in British Columbia. We did not doubt that without any instructions from Ottawa there would be at once every possible effort made by the acting warden, and by the guards and officials in charge of the institution, in so far as guards could be spared, to scour the country in every direction, and to make every possible effort to effect a recapture. I do not doubt that that was done. I did not doubt, upon the reports which subsequently were received, that every possible exertion was made by Mr. Bourke and those who were acting under him, to discover traces of the escaped prisoners and to effect a recapture. And I attributed to the excitement that such an occurrence necessarily would cause, and to the efforts which were undoubtedly made by all who were in charge to secure the recapture of the prisoners, if possible—I attributed I say, to that circumstance the fact that no additional communication came from Mr. Bourke on the subject until the 12th of August. But the extent of the message which then came, and which for the first time gave the slightest hint that Miner was one of those that had escaped, was a telegram which Mr. Bourke despatched on the 11th of August. When it reached Ottawa it was not addressed, as it ought to have been, and as I understand Mr. Bourke says his original message was addressed, to the inspectors, but it was addressed to Mr. Dawson individually. On receipt at Ottawa, instead of being delivered to me, or to Mr. Stewart, or to the department, it was repeated to Mr. Dawson at Kingston, and for that reason there was a delay in the delivery of that telegram of some hours, over night, and possibly some portion of a day. But immediately on that telegram being sent by Mr. Dawson to Mr. Stewart, and upon its reaching Ottawa, and upon my becoming acquainted with the fact that Miner was one of those that had escaped, I sent for Mr. Sherwood, the commissioner of Dominion police, and directed him at once to offer a reward for the apprehension of Miner, and to communicate immediately with a man who had recently been in the service, Mr. Chamberlain, of the Dominion Police, who had a few months before gone to Vancouver, and who was there in the position, I think, of chief of police for that city. That was done. Col. Sherwood acted with promptness, and without loss of even one hour. From the time when the first intimation came to us at Ottawa that Miner had escaped, every possible exertion was made, in the offer of a reward, and in securing the services of the best man we knew who could be obtained for the work, Mr. Chamberlain, to endeavour to assist the officials of the penitentiary to discover some traces of the escaped prisoners. These efforts turned out to be unavailing, the prisoners who escaped on that afternoon have not been found up to the present time. A reward was offered, the search continued until it was useless to search longer. Looking back after the event, and with the memory of the depositions which afterwards were taken, and of the exertions which were afterwards made by the officials, I am not able to see in any respect how any thing more could have been done after the escape had taken place by any of the officials of the penitentiary or of the department, in the effort to retrieve the misfortune which had fallen upon the institution and upon the country by the escape.

Mr. Dawson was sent at the earliest moment he could be spared from his duties in Eastern Canada to New Westminster to take charge of the institution. He arrived there on the 27th August. At once, in his capacity as inspector, he assumed charge of the institution. He remained there until some time in the following December endeavouring to put that institution upon a more satisfactory footing in matter of discipline, in the matter of reorganization, and in endeavoring to find out by a long, patient, painstaking investigation what the trouble was and what was the explanation of the numerous escapes which had taken place during that summer. That investigation was conducted by Mr. Dawson under oath, exercising the powers which the Penitentiary Act confers upon him. The depositions of the witnesses were forwarded to Ottawa, were carefully examined by myself and are on the files of the department. As a result of that investigation in which a most careful effort was made to ascertain the whole truth of this matter, and to find out if possible, where the blame lay, it was thought that there must be some change in the management of the institution. Four prisoners scarcely walk out of a penitentiary or escape through a hole dug under the palisade in open daylight under the very eyes of guards or officials without there being somebody to blame. Mr. Bourke now speaks of the use of a whitewash brush or of a tar brush in every investigation, and speaks as if it were a question as to which had been applied to the officials in this case. I can only say that certainly no tar brush was applied to Mr. Bourke. He was the man in charge, the responsibility rested primarily and to a greater extent upon him than upon any one else. I do not mean that his eye was watching when the escape took place, but it was his duty, his business, his power and right, to assign the different gangs of convicts to the different guards about the institution. It was he who directed where the men were to work upon any given day, what guard, or guards, were to be in charge, who stationed the officials and who was, in that sense, responsible. Mr. Bourke's resignation was not demanded. Mr. Bourke was not dismissed. Mr. Bourke was allowed to retire and was given his retiring allowance calculated upon the full basis of his service. He thought that the rule which, in some instances, had been, years ago, applied to officials in the service by which, in calculating the amount of their superannuation or retiring allowance, ten years was added to their actual period of service, ought to have been applied to in his case. He asked that ten years should be added to his years of service for the purpose of computing his superannuation or retiring allowance. I had to tell him that that had never been done by this government, that, as a matter of policy, I, at any rate, was opposed to the whole pension system and that in so far as his proposition was concerned I could not recommend the granting of what he asked. Mr. Bourke, in his letters to the newspapers on this subject says, according to one of the clippings before me, that his quarrel in this matter—he calls it his quarrel—is with the inspectors. He says:

> My quarrel is with the employees and the officials of penitentiary service, not with the government or Minister of Justice.

Mr. Bourke has a grievance. Mr. Bourke complains that ten years was not added to his service in addition to the actual number of years that he had served in computing his retiring allowance or superannuation. I can only attribute to his feeling of not being dealt with as he thinks he ought to have been the course which he has recently seen fit to take in regard to this matter. He takes offence, or he objects to the remarks which have been made by the inspectors in their annual report, and which have been referred to. That language is, as it purports to be, the language of the inspectors themselves. They say in their report to me:

> The unusual number of escapes is a matter of extreme regret. All occurred at British Columbia penitentiary, and were due to general lack of discipline and to disregard of the prison regulations. The staff of the penitentiary has been reorganized, and several subsequent attempts to mutiny and escape have been frustrated. The tendency of some officers to act upon their individual judgment, in defiance of the established regulations, which are the product of decades of experience, invariably leads to disastrous results. The superior officer who disregards the instructions and regulations by which he is governed cannot enforce obedience from subordinates who naturally exercise the same right of private judgment in the discharge of their duties. The successful commander is he who has first learned to obey.

I did not pen these words. I read them, they were put before me, I approved them then and I approve them now. I think the circumstances called for at least that amount of comment. But, Mr. Bourke, seeing these statements or comments in the report of the inspectors, appears to have rushed into the newspapers; in fact, if I am to credit the statements which he makes in either an interview or a signed letter published in the Daily 'Columbian' of New Westminster on the 3rd of February, he is appealing to public opinion to right him in this matter. I can only say that, seeing as I did on the 29th of January, in the Eastern Canadian newspapers, a telegraphic item that Mr. Bourke stated that he was in a position to make sensational disclosures, I immediately, upon my reaching Ottawa, having read this statement on the train coming to Ottawa, instructed the inspectors to communicate with Mr. Bourke and to demand—to demand as a right—that he should put the department in possession of any information whatever which he had. It is true that Mr. Bourke gave evidence in this matter while the occurrences were fresh. Mr. Bourke was examined at great length before Mr. Dawson in the investigation which took place in the fall of 1907 and while the events were fresh in the minds of everybody. His evidence is upon file in the department and he was sworn not only to answer the questions that were put to him, but to tell the whole truth in regard to this matter. If, notwithstanding his duty as an official of the department and the oath under which he was testifying, he kept back material circumstances which he did not then disclose, it seems to me the disclosure of those circumstances now will come from him with far less weight than if he had told them when under oath to tell the whole truth. Mr. Bourke was written to on January 30 in these terms :

Dear Sir,—An item appeared in a few of the Ontario newspapers yesterday stating that you are in a position to make disclosures regarding the escape of Bill Miner on August 8, 1907.

For the information of the minister will you please furnish us at once with a statement of any information you may possess regarding the matter, that you have not already disclosed?

That letter has not yet, I suppose, had time, in the course of post, to produce an answer here; at all events no answer has yet come. But Mr. Bourke in the meantime has not thought fit to keep silent; he has communicated to the newspapers in the way indicated and yesterday copies of the British Columbia newspapers of February 3, containing the substance of interviews with him or articles written by him reached Ottawa and were seen by me. I refer only to one thing in the communication which the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the committee has in part, or possibly in whole, read. Mr. Bourke speaking of investigations, says:

I have another objection to such investigations. I am strongly of opinion that their frequency and the methods connected with them are largely responsible for the demoralized condition of that service.

I do not know to what Mr. Bourke refers in speaking of frequency. I had not been in charge of the Department of Justice much more than a year when this investigation took place in the fall of 1907, but I have asked those who have been connected with the department for many years in regard to the frequency of investigations referred to by Mr. Bourke and I am told that for more than twelve years there had never been a single investigation in the penitentiary of British Columbia, or occasion for it, until these repeated and numerous escapes in the summer of 1907 called for investigation and inquiry. In these circumstances I am at a loss to understand what is meant by this allusion to these frequent investigations, and I can only say in regard to the attitude which Mr. Bourke has seen fit to take in this whole matter, that if he had communicated directly with the department, either upon the occasion of the escape itself, or upon the occasion of the subsequent investigation, or upon the occasion of his application for a retiring allowance and superannuation or at this date, and before he had resorted to the newspapers for his vindication his representations would have received the most careful attention and consideration which it was in my power to give.

Allusions are made, hints are thrown out, I do not know but statements have been made, it may be that it has been in so many words charged that this was no real escape on the part of the malefactor Miner, that this was something connived at, something assisted by some one in connection with the institution, or some one of the authorities. I can say nothing in that respect except what I know. When a general charge is levelled at everybody at large and it is said that somebody connived, somebody assisted, somebody helped, I do not know who is meant. I can speak for myself at all events and I think I can speak for the officials of the penitentiaries branch of the Department of Justice and repudiate any such insinuation and say that there is not one word, one breath, of foundation for it. Reference is made I understand, to some rumour or story or canard to the effect that there were bonds hidden, stolen property, the secret of whose hiding place was known to Miner and that there was some arrangement, understanding, proposition or suggestion that if there were disclosure of that secret by him his escape would be winked at, he would be allowed to go. There was some allusion to such a thing by some witnesses in the investigation to which I referred. An effort was made to trace the thing up to find if there was the remotest ground or reason under the sun for thinking that any such thing had taken place. It was investigated, so far as was possible to investigate such a shadowy vague and unsubstantial rumour, and it was found to be exactly what I described, absolutely unfounded. If Mr. Bourke has information in regard to the existence of any such understanding, I wish certainly that he would make it known. It is my desire, it must be the desire of every member of this committee, it must be the desire of every citizen of this country who has its welfare or the enforcement of its laws at heart that if there be the slightest reason for supposing even that such a thing is a fact, those reasons should be known and the matter should be put before this House and before the public. I hope at any rate that if Mr. Bourke is possessed of any information whatever which he has not already disclosed he will respond to the demand which has been made upon him and give us the benefit of that information at once.

There has not been on the part of the department here or of the inspectors or of myself or any one in authority at Ottawa, any delay any laxity, any resting on our oars ; from the very hour when the first knowledge that action was taken and everything was done that could be done in the effort to find the man and to restore him to the institution from which he had gone.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to contrast the very interesting and important statement just made by the minister with the manner in which we were endeavoured to be put off by the Solicitor General when I raised this question an hour ago. I would like to put it to the committee if the statement just made by the Minister of Justice does not warrant the course I took in insisting that we should have an explanation upon this subject. If it does not condemn the attitude of the Solicitor General, who must have known the facts which have just been stated to the House by the Minister of Justice and yet deliberately concealed them from this committee when challenged and invited over and over again by me to give an explanation on this subject——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not use the term ' deliberately conceal ' in the House.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. If I have gone beyond the bounds of parliamentary decorum, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the term ' deliberately concealed ' from the House, but I wish to say that when an hon. minister is entrusted with the duty of putting estimates through this House, and gives answers as of his own knowledge to questions put to him by a member of the House, he should at least be posted; and that we are entitled to view with distrust other statements when we find him deliberately disposing of a great question like this with the statement that there is nothing in it, in view of the fact that the answer of the Minister of Justice a few moments afterwards shows that there is a great deal in it, and that the department was fully informed on it when the Solicitor General was not. I would like to correct the hon. Minister of Justice on one point. He says that this was not the first escape from the British Columbia penitentiary, but was only one of a series of escapes. That is an error. The report of his own department shows that there were only six escapes during the year—these four and two subsequently from Wright's Island near the New Westminster penitentiary. There were no previous escapes from that penitentiary, so far as I know, or as indicated by the report. To that extent the minister appears to have been misinformed. I would like to call attention to the fact that the most grave passages of the story which I have related to this House have not been dealt with. For instance, the current report in New Westminster is that the guard Theroux was dismissed or ordered to resign because he was found passing communications from the outside to Miner. That has not been dealt with at all, and I submit that we are entitled to an answer as to that. There is also the further report that certain detectives were interviewing Bill Miner. That is either so or not so; I do not know; it is currently reported in New Westminster and that too has not been answered. If we had the positive assurance of the minister that the department never gave permission to any person to go in there and interview Miner, it would do a great deal to clear up the cloud that hangs over this transaction. We have also heard nothing from the hon. minister as to the suggestion that there should be an impartial inquiry into this affair, because, as we have seen, the only answers that have been made so far have been made by the inspector, the very person whom the ex-deputy warden accuses; and therefore, even if he is as innocent as an unborn babe, even if this charge of the ex-deputy warden is simply from pique that his demand for a greater gratuity is not acceded to, it is not proper that the inquiry should be at the hands of the person accused. We should have some statement as to what course the department intends to take, and therefore I would suggest that this item should stand until the minister can read ' Hansard ' and learn what has been said here, post himself on the facts and make a statement to this committee.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not be disposed to attach too much credit to statements such as have emanated from Mr. Bourke, seeing that he has had an opportunity already of giving evidence upon oath and making known any of the alleged facts to which he alludes in his recent statements to the newspapers. The Minister of Justice in speaking of the communication to Mr. Bourke, said that he had demanded from him, not as of grace, but as of right, full information respecting the facts to which Mr. Bourke had made allusion. When we heard the letter read, it did not seem to me that it quite bore out the view of the minister in that regard, because it was couched in the terms of a very polite request rather than of a distinctly stern demand upon this man to make known matters which must have come to his knowledge as an official of the government of this country, if at all. It was: ' Will you please give information to the department of any of these matters to which you are alluding?' It does not seem to me that this is the way in which the government of this country should deal with a man who had made statements of that kind. He was the deputy warden, the acting warden, in charge of this penitentiary at the time the escape took place. Mr. Bourke has said either too much or too little, and I think the answer that ought to be given to him by the government as those responsible to this parliament, would be to summon him at once before a committee of this House to tell upon oath all he knows of this matter. That is the only way to deal with a man who has made the very grave statements that apparently he has made in the newspaper press. This is due to the government, the parliament and the people of this country; because so long as statements of this kind go abroad and remain uninvestiagted or are treated with indifference, they are bound to bring the administration of justice—and the punishment of offenders is strictly a part of it—into contempt. I therefore suggest to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General that they should take at once into their grave and serious consideration whether this man should not be brought before a committee of this House, and the statements which he has made so frequently in the public press tested by a thorough strict and stern examination of him upon oath in order that he either withdraw or make good.

Mr. BUREAU. Replying to the hon. leader of the opposition, I may state that his suggestion will have careful consideration. He knows my position and the position of the Minister of Justice. I do not form part of the Cabinet, and if he will allow me to confer with the minister, I have no doubt the request will be granted. As to my hon. friend, who is the editor of a paper in New Westminster, I am surprised at the attitude he takes when he says I deliberately concealed information which I had from the House. He has no ground for that statement. He asked for the reasons why So-and-So was retired. I gave the information as I had it from the officer in charge of the institution. I have no apology to make for my conduct to this House. I have never tried to conceal or hide anything. Whatever answers I gave were true answers, giving the information that was conveyed to me. As to the details of Miner's escape, the hon. member never asked me to go into the history of it or tell him what passed between the government and the officials. To the questions put I gave the answers. He asked if we had heard any news about Miner. I told him exactly the information as conveyed to me by the inspector. He asked what the money was used for. I stated for the purposes indicated in the Auditor General's Report. The hon. gentleman comes with bad grace to claim that we are trying to conceal anything or that we are not true to our trust before the House when he takes common report from the streets, when he takes the stuff he fills his paper with.

The hon. gentleman takes common rumour and sets that against the statement of a man examined under oath. He does this to suit his purpose, and it comes with bad grace from one who will do this, to throw suspicion on the honesty and the loyalty of those who represent the Department of Justice. My answer to questions on the estimates, I admit, may not be as clear as they should be, and I admit that I may at times weary some members of the committee by asking them to repeat their questions, but my hon. friend must not forget that when I am talking English I am not talking my mother tongue, and I think that there is sufficient patience and courtesy in this House to bear with me under the circumstances. At times I may make use of a word which is not technically correct, but when I do so, I do not think that warrants any hon. gentleman in taking advantage of my lack of knowledge and saying that I have given an offensive answer or have tried to deceive the House. And when my attention is drawn to any slip I may inadvertently make, I think I can rely on the kindness of my neighbour to tell me what is the proper word to use. The hon. member for New Westminster tried to throw a cloud over an official of the Department of Justice, the inspector, Mr. Dawson. The hon. gentleman insinuates that there must have been some connivance between some officer high in authority in the administration of our penitentiaries and the convict Miner. But how could there be any connivance between the authorities in Ottawa and the officials in New Westminster? How could there be any plot and conspiracy except by writing or wire? I submit further to the fairness of this committee, who would have been the man at the other end of the line, on the Pacific coast, to hold the strings and be the chief medium in any connivance with the officials in Ottawa? It would certainly be the man highest in authority in the administration of the penitentiaries, Mr. Bourke. And if Mr. Bourke knew that the officials in Ottawa were not doing their duty, if he knew that they were trying to have Miner escape, and did not disclose that when under oath, why does not Mr. Bourke—who wants now to take the public into his confidence and show them how badly he was treated by the department—and what a rascal is the inspector of penitentiaries—why does he not now produce those letters published in my hon. friend's paper? I suppose the reason is that he has not got them. There can be no other reason. I am sure he has not got them. I know, from the knowledge I have of the administration of the Department of Justice, that not a shadow of suspicion ought to be cast on Mr. Dawson the inspector of penitentiaries. There is no man in the whole service who stands higher in the esteem of his chief and of all concerned with the administration of the department than does Mr. Dawson, and I repeat there is no ground for the suspicion cast upon him by the hon. member for New Westminster to-night. If the hon. gentleman has any charges to make, let him make them. It is his duty to do so. If he has any proof, it is his duty to make a charge, and show that among our officials, in whom we have every confidence, there are men who are betraying their trust, and in this way he will give us an opportunity to inquire into the facts and see that justice is meted out.

The hon. gentleman said that just shortly prior to Miner's escape, one of our inspectors had visited the penitentiary. Well, it was the time for his yearly visit. It was in the month of June, when he went to New Westminster to inspect the penitentiary, as he does in that month every year. During that time, the hon. gentleman insinuates, Theroux had letters and money for Miner.

In this way the hon. gentleman tried to convey the impression that the inspector was in connivance with all those people to procure Miner's escape. And all his insinuations are based on what he calls public rumours. In this way he tries to connect the inspector of penitentiaries with what he says was not an escape but the handing out of a prisoner.

The hon. gentleman insists upon the fact that there were detectives who visited the convict Miner shortly prior to his escape. Well, I am informed that there were, but what was the reason? Miner was arrested for the Kamloops hold-up. The detectives wanted him to give evidence on the Mission hold-up because they thought he knew something about it, and in fact was the guilty party. In this attempt to seek information and discover the culprit, I see nothing reprehensible. That is done in every penitentiary when we believe that convicts can give important information which will lead to the discovery and arrest of criminals.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When did the visits of these detectives take place?

Mr. BUREAU. During the twelve months that proceeded Miner's escape, I am told by the inspector that there were several visits made to him, but that convicts are not allowed to see any one alone. Consequently in every one of these visits the detectives were accompanied by the warden or deputy warden. In this case Mr. Dwight was present with the detectives who visited Miner.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What was the date of the last visit?

Mr. BUREAU. I cannot say definitely. The information is given from memory only. But the last interview between Miner and the detectives was in the presence of the warden Dwight; and as he was ill quite a few months prior to Miner's escape, I could not give the exact date.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would my hon. friend be good enough to give any information with regard to another fact which was mentioned, and which seems to have some significance, if well founded. I refer to the dismissal of a guard for the alleged offence of having been the means of communication between persons outside and the convict Miner inside the penitentiary?

Mr. BUREAU. As far as the department is concerned, the only information we have is the letter of Theroux and there is nothing in that letter stating that his resignation was asked. He sent in his resignation. There is nothing on the files, nor any letters showing that his resignation has been asked for. He had sent in his resignation.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was that during Mr. Bourke's regime.

Mr. BUREAU. I cannot tell from memory; it was sent in in June or July and it was accepted at once.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is important to know whether it was when Mr. Bourke was in charge.

Mr. BUREAU. I am not as familiar with this matter as is the Minister of Justice, and I will confer with him and get all the information I can and convey it to the House. I do not want to have it believed, as my very kind friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) has insinuated, that if the thing was sifted to the bottom the Solicitor General would be found to have connived at the escape of Bill Miner. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) need not stay awake about that. If the Solicitor General has not conveyed any further information to the House it is due to the fact that the Solicitor General has no further information to convey. There never was on my part any idea of deceiving the House or withholding information from it. I want to say further, that so far as the Department of Justice is concerned, and so far as the Minister of Justice is concerned—and upon that subject I know his views, because we have conferred very often on the question of the officials—there is no man who stands higher and whose character is more above suspicion than Mr. Dawson the inspector who my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) has been trying by insinuation and innuendo to connect with this escape.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be important that the Solicitor General should confer with the Minister of Justice about that particular incident.

Mr. BUREAU. What incident?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The incident with reference to the guard Theroux.

Mr. BUREAU. I will try and find out the exact state and get all the information available as to why he was permitted to resign.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. And whether or not at the time of his resignation it was known to the department here, or to Mr. Bourke, or whoever was in charge of the institution, that he had been guilty of some offence of this character.

Mr. BUREAU. I will get all the records of the department and bring them down.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If necessary it would justify communication by telegram with the authorities of the penitentiary in British Columbia.

Mr. BUREAU. I will do it.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to correct the Solicitor General in his impression that I attributed to him any knowledge of these circumstances. In fact, I was careful to ask him very early in my remarks whether these reports if made would be made to him or to the Minister of Justice, and he replied that they would be made not to him, but to the Minister of Justice, and, therefore, as I thought, he escaped from the situation altogether. I wish to say also that the Solicitor General is very unjust to me when he insinuated that in any sense I reflected on the manner in which he addressed this House or upon the language he used.

Mr. BUREAU. You said I deliberately concealed what I knew.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am sure that in no remarks I have made to this House have I been guilty of rudeness to any hon. member and much less have I been guilty of so gross an offence as to venture to criticise the English of the Solicitor General whose mother tongue is French and who speaks our language so beautifully. I would like to point out that there is still another point not cleared up in this transaction—and if the Solicitor General would try once or twice more to forget his resentment towards me in that I have drawn from him the very interesting information that we have at last succeeded in extracting—if he would forget that and deal with some of the points I put before him it would be very much more to the purpose. There is this other matter on which I would like to have information, and that is whether or not Miner was prepared for departure from the institution prior to his escape. It is the practice in these institutions that when a convict is about to end his term his hair and moustache are allowed to grow. The story current there is —and I have never heard it denied and it has not been denied by the Solicitor General to-night—that Miner was prepared in these two particulars to remove all traces of a convict from him. We knew nothing of the bonds before, until the Minister of Justice told us that came out in the investigation. The Solicitor General could not tell us that. The report of the visit of the detectives was only a street rumour before, and now the Solicitor General tells us that also is correct. Then we come to this other feature of the story, and I ask whether or not Miner was prepared for departure from the penitentiary two or three weeks before he actually got out. I renew my suggestion that full information respecting all these things should be given before we pass this item.

Mr. BUREAU. The information at our disposal is a sworn statement from the officer in charge that Miner's hair was less than three-quarters of an inch long when he left the penitentiary.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. As a preliminary to this discussion I put this question to the government a short time ago:

Q. Had the department any knowledge of communication from outside the penitentiary with convict Miner prior to his escape.
A. No.

The statement to the House to-night is that detectives visited him on a dozen occasions in the year preceding his escape.

Mr. BUREAU. I explained that.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. How did you explain it?

Mr. BUREAU. These detectives when they go on official duty are not considered strangers; they are on special service.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. That reminds me that the minister stated to this committee that these detectives had gone to Miner to ask him whether or not he had committed the Mission hold-up. There was no doubt at all in the mind of any person in British Columbia about that; there was the fact stated that Miner was recognized and was well known as the man who did commit the Mission hold-up. Even if it were not known, I submit to any lawyer in this House whether it is a rational statement to be made that detectives would be permitted to go into a cell to interview a convict to obtain evidence from him to incriminate himself That evidence could not be used against him afterwards.

Mr. BUREAU. The name of the detective is Bullock and he was trying to get information about the Mission hold up. My hon. friend says it was common knowledge in British Columbia that Miner was the guilty one in that. Why did not my hon. friend produce that evidence before the the tribunal which tried him.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He was not tried on that charge.

Mr. BUREAU. He was not tried because they did not have the evidence. Why did you not give to those interested in the administration of justice the evidence as to that?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He was not tried on that charge.

Mr. BUREAU. They could not try him unless they had the evidence.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. He was tried for an offence committed a year later and convicted for that offence and sentenced to life imprisonment. What more could you do to him?

Mr. BUREAU. But he may not have been alone in the Mission hold up.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The story is that these bonds were stolen in the Mission hold up and the Solicitor General bears that out.

Mr. BUREAU. Certainly, they were trying to know what had been done about it; they were trying to get evidence. If we folded our arms and did nothing the hon. gentleman would say: look at the Department of Justice, it is doing nothing, our lives are not safe on the street, and the 'Columbian' would have come out with a warning to the people to carry revolvers and daggers to protect themselves because justice was not administered. But when we try to get information, then we are doing wrong, we are guilty of a connivance with wrong. That may be the hon. gentleman's view, but I do not agree with him.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister stated just now, as I understood him, that these bonds were supposed to have been stolen at the Mission hold up, and he said that certainly we were trying to get information about them. Am I correct?

Mr. BUREAU. I am informed that the object of the interview with Bullock was to get information from Miner about the property that was stolen, he went to the same source of information as my hon. friend. He is informed by common rumour that there were Australian bonds among that property, and they were trying to get from Miner whether he had any knowledge of what disposition was being made of the property.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Solicitor General says, as I understood him, that these detectives were admitted because they were officials.

Mr. BUREAU. No, I did not mean that, I said they were on official duty, going there to seek information.

Mr. BUREAU.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did they go there at the instance of the government of Canada?

Mr. BUREAU. Speaking from memory, these people were trying to investigate this matter at the instance of the railway company, who were then held responsible for the loss by the express company. They were acting on behalf of the company to get all the information they could about the property.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There seems to be more in the suggestion than one would have gathered from the remarks of the Minister of Justice. We understood from his remarks that this had been investigated and that there was absolutely nothing in it.

Mr. BUREAU. Among the officials of the penitentiary.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I gather from the Minister of Justice and from the Solicitor General that the whole blame for the escape of the four prisoners is cast upon the deputy warden. In view of that, and in view of the strictures laid upon that gentleman by the commission, in which they say there was an unusual number of escapes due to that gentleman's lack of discipline and lack of enforcing the prison regulations, acting in defiance of the instructions of the department—in view of all that, I would like to ask the department if they still intend to superannuate that gentleman, and give him the same treatment as would be given to any man who was retired without any stain upon his record. I understand that superannuation can only be given to a man who has discharged his duties satisfactorily and maintains his reputation for integrity and honesty.

Mr. BUREAU. There was no charge against his reputation. He was accused of being slack in the observance of penitentiary discipline, but that was nothing against his character.

Mr. BURRELL. As representing a constituency in which this robbery took place, I would like to say one word. I want to express the very strong feeling there was throughout the whole of the province at the desperate character of this man's crime, and to ask hon. gentlemen opposite not to treat this whole matter as if it were one in which we were trying to take a party advantage. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to assume that I am trying to make party capital out of an incident in regard to which I value the standard of public justice in Canada more highly than I do party advantage. The feeling in that community was of so grave a character that it was participated in by all men regardless of their party affiliations, and I say that we ought to consider this matter as involving the good name of the whole Dominion, and to appreciate that there is a general desire to clear it up in the interest of justice. That in broad daylight so notorious and so desperate a character as Miner was allowed to escape, and apparently, as has been pointed out by my hon. friend, there is evidence to show that that man's hair was allowed to grow in an unusual way, that he was allowed to escape in broad daylight from a penitentiary equipped, as this was, when the moral effect of his capture and his sentence had been so salutary throughout the whole of British Columbia, then I say the matter is sufficiently grave to require that it be probed to the bottom by the department. I do not know this man Bourke, but I agree with the leader of the opposition in saying that either Bourke has said too much or he has said too little.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. Does the hon. gentleman mean to insinuate that any of the officials of the department were privy to the escape of Miner ?

Mr. BURRELL. If the hon. gentleman can construe any word that has come out of my mouth to-night in such a way as he suggests, he does not understand the King's English. I am speaking on behalf of my constituents, and expressing the moral effect of this whole affair in British Columbia. I say again that this man Bourke has either said too much or too little, and that the matter is so grave that it should be probed. I think the hon. gentlemen opposite should realize that there are many of us in British Columbia who value the standard and reputation of Canadian justice more than we do party advantage.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. Referring to the statement of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) to the effect that Mr. Bourke said too much or too little, did that hon. gentleman come to his conclusion from the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). I wish to put a question to the hon. member for New Westminster. Will he undertake to say that Mr. Bourke suggests in any way whatever that the escape of Miner was due to any negligence, improper conduct or connivance of any of the officials of the penitentiary in British Columbia ? I am not here to defend Mr. Bourke. I know Mr. Bourke, or I know of him as a Tory of the Tories. I realize that hon. gentlemen opposite have placed Mr. Bourke in a false light, and I rise for the purpose of protesting against the aspersion which has been cast upon his character. An aspersion has been cast upon his character by reason of the assertions which were made by hon. gentlemen opposite which assertions have been referred to as if they were expressions of opinion by Mr. Bourke himself. The hon. member for New Westminster went on to explain how it was that Miner had escaped. He read extracts from interviews and letters published in newspapers, from Mr. Bourke and the impression that would be conveyed to the mind of any ordinary hearer is that Mr. Bourke has made these charges. I venture, for one, to say, that Mr. Bourke never made any such charges, that the charges that the hon. member for New Westminster has referred to are charges which were found in the newspaper of which he has been the editor or with which he is connected.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I ask, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Chisholm) is in order in stating that the letters which I read to the House as letters of Mr. Bourke were not letters of Mr. Bourke but fabrications of that newspaper.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. I never said anything of the kind. The point of order is entirely too premature. The impression which was conveyed to the House by the remarks of the hon. gentleman was that the sentiments which he expressed were the sentiments of Mr. Bourke.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I ask your ruling, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not hear the hon. gentleman's point of order. Would he kindly state it again?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman stated that whereas I had read to this committee, as statements of Mr. Bourke, the extracts which I did read here, they were not the statements of Mr. Bourke but they were statements of the newspaper with which my name is connected. I say that is a reflection upon my honour as a member of this House.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. The hon. gentleman——

Some HON. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wm. Chisholm) has the right to explain before the decision is given on the point of order.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. The hon. member for New Westminster objects that I should ascribe certain sentiments to him. I did not ascribe them to him at all, but what I did state was that the remarks that he made in explanation of the escape of Miner, would, under the circumstances convey the impression that Mr. Bourke had given expression to these sentiments. Now, what I said is that he misled the committee —not intentionally——

Mr. TALBOT. You cannot tell that.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. I am willing to grant that it was not done intentionally. But, he misled the committee by quoting from interviews and letters written by Mr. Bourke, not finding fault in a general way, but interviews and letters which did not contain one single iota of a charge against the penitentiary in any way, shape or form, and then the hon. member for New Westminster supplemented that by a statement of his own.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask if this is speaking to the point of order or if it is pressing an argument on another question. We should have the ruling.

Mr. WM. CHISHOLM. If I have trespassed against the rules of the House I certainly withdraw anything I have said of that character. But the point that I am endeavouring to make is that I know Mr. Bourke, and that whatever may be his faults in so far as discipline is concerned, whatever may be his weakness, I know him to be a strong Conservative, a man of honour and integrity, and it is on that ground that I rise up to protest against the impression that is sought to be created in the minds of hon. members of the House by reason of the remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am quite sure that Mr. Bourke will exclaim 'save me from my friends' when he reads 'Hansard' to-morrow. The hon. member for New Westminster said that a friend of Mr. Bourke came to the newspaper office and suggested that this thing should not be ventilated in the press.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not what I said.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM. Mr. Theroux had said that he did not want to have this thing ventilated in the press, but right at once Mr. Bourke goes to the press himself and supplies the series of articles that appeared in the paper. Let any man read those articles and tell me if he can find in them a single charge against the penitentiary. All that these articles do is to ventilate the grievance of Mr. Bourke because he did not receive superannuation. It is true that Mr. Bourke believes that he is entitled to superannuation. It is true that he says that under a previous administration there is a precedent for granting him the superannuation. That is a debatable point. It may be that morally he is entitled to it. But, as the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) pointed out, there is no case within his knowledge in which such a procedure had been adopted. The whole point is whether they could add time to the time he had already served in order to entitle him to superannuation. Mr. Bourke does not say that he has been treated unjustly or unfairly, but he does say that he is entitled to superannuation, while the Department of Justice say he is not. Whom are we to follow in this matter? Whom are we to suppose right in the matter? We must come to the conclusion that the Minister of Justice and the government are right. I merely rose for the purpose of protesting against any aspersion being cast on the character of Mr. Bourke. Whatever may be his weakness as a disciplinarian and as an officer he is a thoroughly honourable man.

Mr. BUREAU. I was going to ask hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, as there will be considerable discussion upon this point, to let the item stand as it has been agreed and go on with the items for Alberta. There is only one other item left outside of British Columbia. We can leave that and it will bring us back to the discussion of this matter.

Some resolutions reported.

Hon. Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the leader of the House kindly tell us what will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. PATERSON. If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) returns to-night from the Forestry Convention in Toronto, the resolution standing in his name, dealing with the Civil Service, will be taken up first. If that is disposed of, it will be followed by the estimates of the Indian and Interior Departments. If the Minister of Agriculture is not here then we will go into supply at once on the Indian and Interior estimates of the Railway Department.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.40 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 12, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT—INJURIES DUE TO MOTOR VEHICLES.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 60) to amend the Criminal Code respecting injuries to persons due to motor vehicles.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). Explain.

Mr. LEWIS. This Bill proposes to deal with a class of offences upon our highways caused by vehicles that were not in common use at the time the Criminal Code was introduced, I refer to automobiles. While I understand that this parliament has no control over the King's highway, still persons in the rural districts who built the highways for their own use are now very much troubled by automobiles. This Bill proposes to punish drivers of automobiles who are reckless, and who violate the law. It is modelled on the Bill introduced last session in reference to the same matter. I trust that the government, if they do not see fit to allow this Bill to pass, will at least add an amendment to the Criminal Code providing the needed legislation and place on crown officials the duty of finding and prosecuting drivers who break the law. It is true that the owner of an automobile has to keep his vehicle numbered, but when you are tangled up in the ditch with a frightened horse, there is little time given to find the number. I have here an item from the Toronto 'Mail and Empire.' which says that automobiles coming round the corners and dashing through crowds are becoming a menace to people travelling on the streets of Toronto.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES.

House again in committee to consider the proposed resolution granting an increase of salaries to civil servants.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). This resolution has been before the committee for some time, and I do not know whether any further discussion is required. A Bill will be introduced founded upon it, but in the meantime I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. FOSTER. I made an objection to a certain part of this resolution the other day, and asked the minister to look into it:

That all sums of money voted by parliament for the financial year ending on March 31, 1909, and applicable to the payment of salaries or increase of salaries of persons in the inside service shall be applicable to the payment of increases of salary granted under the Act to be founded in this resolution, so far as such sums are not required for the specific purposes for which they were granted; and during the said financial year there may be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada such moneys required for the payment of increases of salary hereunder as have not been voted by parliament.

I did not see why it was necessary to have that now when parliament was assembled and it would be quite possible to name the exact amount which is necessary, to bring down an estimate and vote it in the regular way. I pointed out that it is an altogether irregular way of arranging for expenditures—to take the whole consolidated revenue and dip into it as is necessary. The whole basis of parliamentary appropriation is a specific request for a specific purpose.

Mr. FISHER. The question is one of convenience in the payments. I do not think there would be any difference at all in the amount which would have to be paid out. This statute, when passed, will define clearly and distinctly what moneys have to be paid out. It would be a mere question of going over the lists of the Civil Service and calculating how much each one would receive and what the aggregate amount would be. It is hoped that this Bill will pass before long and that the payments will then be available for the civil servants. If the procedure of my hon. friend were adopted we would have to have a supplementary item in the estimates, a special item, probaly, put through for that purpose. I would not have any objection to it if there was any particular object to be gained, but I have not seen any object in it. The statute will define what the amount will be in conjunction with the lists which have been presented and which are before the House of all those who are eligible for this increase. I have had statements made up, copies of which I will lay on the table if desired, showing the exact amounts payable to practically every civil servant. Of course my hon. friend might say that with these copies we might at once make up an estimate. But if the Bill passes the money can then be paid over to the Civil Service without any further delay or waiting for a supplementary estimate to be passed. That is the only view I have in regard to the matter. I am not quarrelling at all with my hon. friend's suggestion, but we think that this is the better and the simpler way and the way that would most promptly give that relief to the Civil Service which is the object of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, what my hon. friend says, if it has any force in this case, would apply with equal force to every appropriation that is made for every part of the service.

Mr. FISHER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think so. He says it will be more convenient because you would not have to come to parliament and ask for it. He says at the same time that he has exactly the amounts that are necessary.

Mr. FISHER. As far as I know.

Mr. FOSTER. If the minister has the amounts that are necessary, or, if he has not them and can get them, certainly the basis of parliamentary appropriation is plainly contravened if he receives a general power to take out of the consolidated fund the gross amount that is necessary What I think is objectionable is that there should be any break from what is the acknowledged system and basis unless there is necessity for it. There was a necessity last year because you could not tell what

Mr. SPROULE. If it is only a matter of convenience why do you not make your statute extend to the whole Civil Service instead of asking us to vote money from year to year to pay their salaries? It would be more convenient to vote it by statute and not discuss it at all. But, that is not the wisdom of parliament; the wisdom of parliament is to have the money voted from year to year. While we annually vote a portion of the salaries another portion is paid by authority of statute. I do not think it a good principal. I think it is a very bad one. We do pay the judge's salaries by statute, but that is a different thing entirely. Judges are appointed for life and they get a certain specific sum, but we have never allowed the same principle to prevail in relation to votes by parliament for the Civil Service as far as I know. It is a departure from what has been the established custom and I think the minister is not justified in asking the House to assent to it.

Mr. FISHER. I appreciate fully the difference between this Bill and the Bill of last session and I also appreciate what the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has said, that we ought not to depart from the usual practice of voting specific sums for a specific purpose unless there is very good reason for it. I am not set by any means against the proposition of my hon. friend. I only wish to discuss it a little and see whether we can work it out properly and satisfactorily. Would my hon. friend consider that we would have to specify all these several items or only take one lump sum to serve the purpose for the whole Civil Service? I suppose, to follow the general practice, we would have to state that so much was needed for the Department of Agriculture, so much for the Department of Customs and so on. If that line is adopted I think it would be quite unnecessary to go into the details of each individual salary although in our ordinary civil government estimates we come very close to that. It hardly seems to me that it will be at all necessary. The general principle of the addition to the pay of the service is laid down definitely and clearly in the statute and it cannot be departed from. The only question that arises is whether there will be 25, or 50 or 100 men who shall get $150, whether there will be 200 or 300 who shall get $100, whether so many others shall get $50 and so on. I would like, before coming to a conclusion, to go into that a little and see whither it is going to land us. At the same time I recognize the justice and force of what the hon. gentleman says with regard to this Bill as being different from the situation of the last Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister sees the whole difficulty. If you make it a mere matter of the Act and allow the minister to go into the consolidated revenue fund you put it outside of all criticism by parliament. It is true that we adopt the principle of giving a flat increase, but that does not mean that the House is, therefore, giving up all its right to criticise where the money goes or to object if in a certain particular instance it thinks the whole $150 should not go to a certain individual. There is a scale under which some will get $150, there are other cases in which $150 will not be got, and in some cases no increase will be got. This is a matter that the House ought to have under its own purview and should be able to criticise. A statement should be submitted to the House for each department showing what the department is getting under this resolution. While nine-tenths of the cases will not call for any criticism, there are instances—I could name some—where we might wish to suggest that a less amount than $150 should be given.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to cavil at what my hon. friend has said, generally it is quite correct; but if this statute is passed the estimate based upon it would be very much of the nature of a statutory estimate and the House could hardly refuse it. Of course, the Bill says that payments may be made on the report of the deputy minister, and it may be that some individuals are of such a character that the deputy minister would not feel justified in recommending this increase. The only way of carrying out my hon. friend's suggestion would be to have an estimate based on the reports of the deputy minister, and if the deputy minister had reported that so and so was entitled to this increase, I do not think that under the statute he could well refuse it.

Mr. FOSTER. I should be sorry to have to vote a lump sum and then have it said that it shall be expended on the judgment of the deputy minister without any chance for a member of parliament to criticise that judgment. In discussing the Bill I will be prepared to mention some cases in which the payments should not be made.

Mr. FISHER. It has been suggested to me that a schedule might be attached to the Bill setting out the payments.

Mr. FOSTER. If that were done we would have a chance to criticise the schedule.

Mr. FISHER. Then we will leave that open and discuss it later. I suppose a schedule giving the amounts for each department or each branch of a department would be quite sufficient?

Mr. FOSTER, That would be acceptable. When we come to discuss it, the question would be, how did the minister arrive at the schedule? The minister would explain and his judgment would be a matter of criticism.

Mr. FISHER. It would practically be the same as an item in the estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. With that understanding, I for my part will let the resolution pass, but it is not to be understood that I agree with the resolution itself; for convenience and in order to get the Bill before the House I shall make my critisicms when the Bill itself is up.

Mr. FISHER. If we drop out this part of the resolution we may have to insert something else, for we would have to have another resolution. We would be glad to make as much progress with the resolution as possible, and if any hon. gentlemen wish to bring up points that would require investigation before answering them, it would be an advantage to have them do so now.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been more busy gathering information than by digesting it. I have not all the information from all the departments yet. I find this a very complex and knotty question, and I do not know whether we will ever get at the bottom or basis of it. When the resolution is finally passed there will be a basis from which to start; but it is a terror, as the boys say, to get at it in all its bearings. The returns from the minister's own department are explicit. I will pay my hon. friend the compliment of saying that when his clerks send down a return, one can see what it means; but I cannot say that for some of the others, because if there is any way on God's earth for them to make it difficult to find out what they mean, some of these departments know how to do it and do it most religiously.

Mr. FISHER. I have tried to make mine plain.

Mr. FOSTER. For instance, my hon. friend had a very large number of persons in what is sometimes called the outside inside service and he loyally, I think, to the principle of the new Civil Service Act, transferred these men into the inside service at the salaries they were then enjoying. He did not go to the outside list and make preferences and give to scores or hundreds of them increases of salary just prior to their being transferred into the permanent service. I do not want to say any thing harsh, but the assumption was that the men in the outside service were getting what the government thought was a fair provision for their needs—if they did not get that it was the fault of the minister—but, it does not seem to be carrying out the spirit of the Act that just prior to the fateful September 1, one or more ministers should take the officers of the outside service, give some of them $500 or $600 or $700 increase on their salaries and then throw them in a great heap into the new permanent service. I think that proceeding ought to have been carefully considered, and I think that what has been done by some, at least, of the ministers is open to criticism. Most of the departments took the spirit of the Act in the proper sense and brought in the officers of the outside service at the salaries they enjoyed up to that time, and therefore they did not raise salaries in special instances by amounts more or less large so as to put these particular officers on a footing which they otherwise would not have had. I do not think any government can afford to have a sense of injustice spring up amongst its employees. The Prime Minister is the guardian of his different departments and I do not think he can make it conform with his sense of justice that one department should do for its outside employees that which another department does not do. In this case one department has adhered religiously to the spirit of the Act and the discussion in parliament and it has brought in the outside civil servants at the salaries they previously had, but another department puts 200 or 300 of its outside men on a more favoured basis just prior to the 1st of September and brings them into the permanent service. Two injustices are done by that. In the permanent service there were men who for years had performed their duty well; they received none of these increases and they therefore were placed at a disadvantage in having the outside men drafted into the inside service and placed over them. They do feel that is an injustice which ought not to have been perpetrated. Then there is an injustice as between the outside servants themselves. For instance, in the department of the Minister of Agriculture he thinks he ought not to increase the salaries of his outside servants before they come into the permanent service so that they might have higher salaries on the permanent basis. The outside men in that department are discriminated against in favour of the outside men in other departments in which a different course was followed. As I say, a double injutsice is perpetrated. On the face of it it looks like an injustice and no doubt the ministers who have taken this course will give their reasons for it. Then another thing was done. Just prior to the 1st of September new men were appointed to the outside service without any reference to the conditions of the Civil Service Act. They were appointed a few days prior to the 1st of September and then they stepped right in to the permanent service at the salaries allotted to them a few days previously. That does not seem to be fair. To the minister who thought there was absolute necessity for the appointment of these men three days before the 1st of September, it may be said that the service would not have been hurt if he had waited for three days longer and had these men appointed in accordance with the spirit of the new Civil Service Act. I am sorry to say there are a great many of these examples and it does not seem to me that they can be justified on the principle of equal justice to all. There is another point, and I present it more especially to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. He is in a sense an employer of labour ; on one side of the street he has a number of men working for him, and on the other side of the street he has in his employment a number of equally good men. The men on both sides of the street are doing the same kind of work for him, they are living under the same conditions, the increased cost of living bears as hardly on one class as on the other, and as an employer of labour how does the First Minister justify himself in raising the salaries of the men on one side of the street and in leaving the men on the other side without any consideration? My right hon. friend increases the salaries of men in the inside service but the men in the outside service who are working for him and under the same conditions get no alleviation of their condition. If it is worth while to do a thing at all it is worth while to do it right. This government has money enough, and had money enough, to enable the men in the outside service to cope with the more stringent conditions that have arisen on account of the increased cost of living, and the government should have treated all its employees alike and done even justice to all. There is a sense of injustice which must rankle in the breast of every man who sees his fellow provided for and who finds himself overlooked in that way. These are things that must be taken into account, and when the proper time comes I shall cite individual instances to show what was done. Then, in the case of these outside men whose salaries were raised and dated back in some cases for months and months involving a largely increased expenditure, I would like to know out of what fund this was done. Surely we cannot raise a man's salary unless we have an appropriation therefor, and I have been unable to discover where these appropriations existed. This seems to have been done by order in council and whether in the case of the outside men it goes before the Treasury Board or not I do not know. But at all events there seems substantial ground for criticism and I shall criticise that in detail at a later stage of the Bill. These are some of the points of criticism that I would like to bring to the attention of my hon. friends in general. We can go into them in detail later.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad my hon. friend has taken this opportunity of saying what he has said, and I thank him for the compliments to myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Compliments to your clerks.

Mr. FISHER. I have tried to do what he suggests although there are but few cases in which I have been doing that which he has indicated. Let me explain one or two which may be taken as samples of the others. I have had for a good many years, cerealists at the experimental farm who are scientific men. There is Dr. Charles Saunders, who has qualifications very rare in Canada, and who was appointed on that account. My officers at the experimental farm, under Dr. Saunders, were, I thought, of a character which entitled them to the place in subdivision B of the first division, in which the minimum salary is $2,100. Dr. Charles Saunders, who was in receipt of a lower salary, should go, I thought, under the reorganization, into that subdivision at $2,100. Consequently I raised his salary by order in council shortly before the change, and I raised it for that express purpose, to $2,100. If I had not done so, I would have been hampered by the provisions of the Civil Service Act, because they would apply to a gentleman, who, before this Act came into force, was not in the inside service, and therefore had not the laws, regulations, and restrictions of the inside service applied to him. Before the 1st September last I could, by an order in council with my colleague's consent, raise Dr. Saunders' salary in any way I liked without being hampered by any statute. His salary was paid out of the lump vote for the experimental farm, as were all the salaries there, from Dr. Saunders down. My hon. friend asked where the money was got. That is one of a great many instances in which the salaries were paid out of lump votes, and if those lump votes were sufficient in the year to pay an increase, the increase could be given by order in council, or in some cases, by ministerial order. A good many in the outside service were appointed by ministers, and their salaries could be and were raised at different times by minister's order. This particular instance is one of a kind which has occurred in other cases and which I am prepared to justify as perfectly fair and just. I have no doubt whatever that many ministers, having had the control and the power to raise the salaries in the outside service in Ottawa, took a good deal of pains and trouble, since the coming into force of the Act of last session to go into the adequacy and relative amounts of the salaries of the men who are paid out of these lump votes, knowing that after the first of September last they could not raise the salaries which were paid out of these votes, and which they thought they were justified in raising, without increasing others, because the new Act applied the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Act to those who before the first of last September did not come under those restrictions as to their salaries or appointments.

No doubt whatever a good many instances of that kind occurred. I have not examined the reorganization sufficiently in detail to know what my colleagues have been doing, but I know that in my own department there were some instances in which I did that.

My hon. friend has spoken of another class of employees, a class, he says, of employees who are working across the street but not in the same offices, and who did not get the benefit of these increases. That is quite right. There has also been brought to our attention the case of other men in other cities who say that they are in the public service just as much as the civil servants, so called, who are in Ottawa, and that they ought to receive the same consideration and increase. It is only the inside service at Ottawa whose salaries, increases, and classification are regulated by statute. In the vast majority of the other cases, those outside of Ottawa, the officials are either regulated by order in council or ministerial orders, and in most cases are paid out of large votes which are under the control of the minister and the department which utilizes these votes. These votes may be increased any time parliament chooses or whenever the minister brings down an estimate and parliament chooses to pass it. With regard to the inside service at Ottawa, a minister might bring down a vote and parliament might pass it, but if the vote were not in accord with the provisions of the Civil Service Act, unless the individual officer is specially excepted by these magic words we used to have so often, and which I hope will not appear again in the government estimates, namely, 'Contrary to the Civil Service Act,' no salary could be increased except as provided by that Act. Since the first of September all the officers who were in the outside service at Ottawa, and who previously were eligible for promotion or change or increase in salaries, according to the opinion of the minister, were put out of the vote given by parliament in a lump sum to pay those officers and for other purposes too very often. Those officers will now come under the Act subject to its restrictions and regulations, and their salaries can only be increased under a definite statutory provision.

My hon. friend is not aware—never having looked into the matter, I suppose, from that point of view—of the great amount of increases which have already been given the outside service in the way I have indicated. There have been large votes taken in parliament, increases of lump votes out of which those outside services were paid, which have amounted in some cases to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the salaries of the outside services of the country have been increased from time to time fully as much, if not more,—in some instances decidedly more,— than this Act is going to increase the salaries of the inside service at Ottawa. I have here a statement prepared by the Finance Department, in which I find that in the aggregate, in the last five years, the outside service have had increases given them on their salaries amounting to $1,409,000:

Marine and Fisheries Department..	$ 47,038
Inland Revenue	5,350
Customs	345,222
Northwest Mounted Police ..	50,000
Indian Affairs	9,300
Railways and Canals	647,000
Printing Bureau	50,500

These are the increases which have been voted at the request of ministers, in lump sums, out of which the salaries of these outside officials were paid.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is that the total amount for a period of years, and, if so, what period?

Mr. FISHER. That is the total of the increases that have been given at different times during the last five years. These are increases which, when once given, go on every year. If they had been given five years ago, there would have been five times that amount paid out of the public chest to the outside service; but that is not the case. In some instances they have been given by general votes. For instance, I think that two years ago the Minister of Customs got a vote of $100,000 extra for his outside service, and some years ago the Post Office Department got a large sum to increase the pay of the outside service in that department, the aggregate of which amounted to about $250,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the aggregate increase for the Customs Department?

Mr. FISHER. $345,000 in the last five years. I think I am safe in saying that these are increases which were made at certain times, and they have been going on every year since.

Mr. BURRELL. Are these actual increases to officials, or do they apply to the natural increase in the outside service resulting from the increasing needs of the country?

Mr. FISHER. I asked that question and was told that they were increases to existing officials' salaries, and not increases to the number of offices or officers.

Mr. SPROULE. There are two ways of increasing salaries. For instance, postmasters got 40 per cent of the revenues of the office, and if the revenues of the office went up, their salaries went up correspondingly.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed that their salaries were increased apart from that. If there was an increase to 50 per cent, that would be included in these figures. Now, I take for granted that to the Post Office Department and the Customs Department would apply my hon. friend's description of a public servant in the city of Ottawa doing work for the government on one side of the street, and another doing work for the government on the other side of the street, and one getting an increase and the other not. I have not details to show how much the clerks in the city of Ottawa Post Office have had their salaries increased during the last five years, but as the Postmaster General has been giving increases throughout the country, I have no doubt the city of Ottawa post office has had its share.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Allow me to explain that the increase to which my hon. friend refers has not been applied to the clerks in the outside service, properly speaking. That is covered by the increase which I obtained from parliament for postmasters some years ago. The House may remember that Sir Wm. Mulock, when Postmaster General, obtained an increase in the salaries of small postmasters from $12 to $25. and three years ago I obtained a further increase to $35. That acounts for most of that increase. The clerks who are under the statute receive their statutory increases, but there has been no special increase in the salaries of the outside service of the Post Office Department.

Mr. FISHER. These figures indicate that a very great improvement has been made in the pay of the general outside service. There may be portions of the outside service which have not reaped the advantage, while there are other portions which have reaped a very great advantage The figures do not indicate how many there are in each category; but they show that the government has not been unmindful of the needs and desires of the outside service. I want to point out that these increases were possible without an amendment to any particular statute, and are consequently in an entirely different position from the increases made to the inside service, which are made by a definite statute. That is why in this particular case we have introduced a statute and asked parliament to pass it, while in the other case we do not require to do so, as an annual vote in the estimates of each department will accomplish the result desired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the Minister of Customs inform us whether the $345,000 included in the statement read by the Minister of Agriculture represents an actual annual increase to the outside officials of his department?

Mr. PATERSON. On that point I cannot speak positively. When I take an extra vote, as I did this year, a certain amount of it we hope to use in increasing the salaries of the men in the service, and a certain amount we estimate may be required for new offices. Therefore, I cannot tell positively. I would have to inquire.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Perhaps the minister would be good enough to inquire. I know there have been substantial increases, but I do not think they amounted to so much as the sum mentioned in the statement of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FISHER. I have here a copy of the Labour Gazette, which states that the increase of wages granted in 1907 to various employees of the Customs Department amounted to $160,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is quite possible that the person who compiled the figures for the Labour Gazette may have taken the whole $160,000 to represent increases, while a portion of that may have been utilized by the Customs Department for the payment of new officials.

Mr. FISHER. I am informed not.

Mr. PATERSON. There was one year. two or three years ago, when we took an extra amount of $250,000. I remember we took a very large amount; so it is possible that is correct.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Those amounts have been continued after once being taken?

Mr. PATERSON. If they have been given to the same individual. If one died, for instance, and a new man came in, sometimes we started him at a little less.

Mr. FISHER. To show that what I said was correct, here is another item with regard to the Department of Indian Affairs.

It gives the actual number of employees; it says: 39 had their salaries increased by from $60 to $300 per annum and aggregating $9,360. That refers altogether to the outside service, it gives the number of the employees and the increase of their salaries.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is another point to which I would like to direct the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the Governor General. Section 8 of the Civil Service Act of last year reads as follows:

8. As soon as practicable after the coming into force of the Act, the head of each department should cause the organization of his department to be determined and defined by order in council, due regard being had to the status of each officer or clerk as the case may be.

2. The order in council shall give the names of the several branches of the department, with the number and character of the offices, clerkships and other positions in each, and the duties, titles and salaries thereafter to pertain thereto.

3. After being so determined and defined, the organization of a department should not be changed except by order in council.

It does not seem to me that that has been done by many of the departments; apparently it has been done to some extent by the Department of Inland Revenue; it may have been done by some other departments. It is a statutory provision, it is imperative in its language. It declares that the head of each department shall cause the organization of his department to be determined and defined by order in council, and that the order in council shall set forth the duties appertaining to each office, clerkship and other position. The provisions of this statute seem to have been almost entirely disregarded in the various departments. I would not like to assert positively that ministers of the Crown who have disregarded it have been guilty of a criminal offence, although there is a law upon the statute-book that any person wilfully disobeying a statute is liable to indictment. Of course I have regard to the language of the statute, which is that this work of reorganization shall be done as soon as practicable after the coming into force of the Act. I am ready to concede that if a minister could show that he had devoted every available portion of his time to this work, and had not completed it, he might be able to escape criminal liability. But as it is, I think there would be a good case at least for calling him before a grand jury on a preliminary investigation. At all events, it is a matter that requires explanation. I consider it a very important part of the provisions of that section. You are to define, not only the salaries, not only the character of the offices, clerkships and other positions, but what is absolutely important to a thorough organization of the department, you are to make known by the terms of an order in council the duties which each clerk is called upon to perform as a public servant of Canada. That has not been done; there has been little pretense of doing it. I would again invite the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture to that, and ask him to explain why the provisions of the statute in that regard have not been complied with.

Mr. PATERSON. I have just 'phoned the accountant of the Customs Department in reference to that matter. He tells me that it was he who gave those figures, and that those are the actual increases granted to the men who were in the service, and do not include new offices.

Mr. FISHER. I remember well the remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition which he made with regard to this matter before, and I have looked up a little the orders in council. Perhaps the orders in council might be more full than they are. I have just sent for a copy of the order in council in my own department, and I would like my hon. friend to follow me a little, and I will show him what we have done, which I think is fairly fulfilling the intention of the Act, though I grant that we might go a little further in an elaborate description of the work of a good many offices. Beginning with the first division of subdivision A: Dr. Montizambert, Director General of Public Health. I do not know that I could define much more particularly what the duties of Dr. Montizambert are. I might go on to say that he is in charge of the quarantine service of Canada, and give other particulars and practically transcribe the order in council appointing him, but I do not think that is intended or desired.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would say that where the order in council appointing an officer has prescribed his duties fairly well, the statute would be sufficiently complied with if reference were made to that order in council; in other words, the duties of this officer shall be those set forth in the order in council appointing him on such a day.

Mr. FISHER. Then I pass over Dr. Saunders, Mr. Blue, Dr. Rutherford and so on. We come down to the first division of subdivision B. Dr. James Fletcher, Entomologist and Botanist, Central Experimental Farm; Mr. Shutt, chemist of experimental farm; Mr. St. Denis, secretary of the Census and Statistics office. I should think that was a fairly fair description of the duties of the offices which these gentlemen hold. J. H. Grisdale, agriculturist, Central Experimental Farm. As a matter of fact, in the Treasury Board the descriptions of the officers at the experimental farm are just the same as they are put in the order in council. Dr. Charles Saunders, cerealist. Perhaps that requires some explanation to most people, but it defines the office of the individual. When you come down further to the lower subdivisions, as a general rule, they are simply clerks, sometimes perhaps doing one thing, and sometimes another. I do not think in most of the lower orders of the service we can do much more than define them as clerks, unless they have some particular work. I have here Mr. C. Martin, assistant editor of the Archives. He is the gentleman who helps to edit the bulletins and publications that go out from the Archives. D. Drummond, live stock inspector; Mr. McRae, live stock inspector; Mr. McMurray, French correspondent, experimental farm. Then here is Mr. Watson, stenographer; Mr. Nolan, patent examiner. I hardly think it could be expected that we should go much beyond that. I confess I did think in so doing that I would be free from any likelihood of prosecution under the Criminal Code for dereliction of duty. But would it be well to encumber the orders in council with more graphic descriptions of the work done?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In some departments the reply is that there is nothing whatever. For example, in the Department of Justice there is no information available of the nature asked for in this address. The Auditor General reports the same thing; other departments report the same thing. The Minister of Inland Revenue seems to have complied with the statute and to have done his work in this connection far better than any other minister, with the exception possibly of the Minister of Agriculture, whose records I have not examined very closely. He has absolutely defined the duties of the heads of each branch and has given a fair indication of the duties of the various officers in the branch. For example, take his organization of the Department of Inland Revenue:

Deputy Minister—The duties of the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue shall cover the general supervision and administration of all branches of the Inland Revenue Department.

Then he names his clerks, stenographers and typewriters.

Secretary—The duties of this officer shall be to attend to all correspondence, other than of an administrative character, have charge of all records and supplies, and to have general supervision over the correspondence and supply branches.

Then he goes on to deal with the various officers of the secretary's branch. Dealing with the chief accountant he says:

The duties of this officer shall be to have general control and supervision over all work connected with revenue and expenditure, the work of the statistical branches of all services and the preparation of the financial and statistical reports.

Mr. FISHER.

Then he goes on to deal with subdivision A of the first division and proceeds:

The number and character of the officers in the Accountant's branch to be as follows:

1. Assistant accountant—To have particular charge of accounts relative to receipts and expenditure, to record each deposit of revenue, to have charge of the general journal and ledger and to replace the chief accountant when absent from any cause.

And so on with reference to every important office of his department. Then he has taken up the laboratory branch and dealt with it in the same way very thoroughly. I understand from my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster), although I have not seen the organization of the Mines Department, that this has been done equally well. The other departments should have devoted the same attention to the statute and observed the same particularity and definiteness in prescribing the duties of the various officers that we find in the organization carried out by the Minister of Inland Revenue and Mines. Otherwise, a great part of the advantage from this statute will be lost.

Mr. FISHER. I perfectly agree with my hon. friend that so far as it is possible and consistent with conciseness the intention of the Act was to indicate these things in the classification. I think it probable that when another classification is issued that will be done to a greater extent.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to prolong the discussion but there were two points that might be considered as being assented to, made by my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture, if they were not noted. In the first place he seemed to argue that if the minister had a lump vote he could make any addition to the salaries of officers out of that lump vote that he chose. I am not sure but that he has the absolute power to do it, but I do not think he has the right. For instance, he comes down with a lump vote, presents it to parliament and says this is to pay officers' salaries. How many officers have you?—so many. What salaries are they getting?—so much. It goes down in 'Hansard'. It is discussed here and parliament says: Yes, that vote is all right, because we know those officers are in the service, we know what they are getting and we think it is not unreasonable. I doubt very much if the minister has the right, after having made that compact with parliament, to go out and, three months afterwards, raise those salaries to any amount he chooses. I do not think parliament will cavil at a reasonable addition if cause is shown but I should not like to let the theory go unchallenged that a minister has the right after having made the compact with parliament which he did, to add, out of that lump vote, to the salaries of his officers whatever he chose. The other point is in regard to the elasticity of the Act. This new Act is elastic in this respect that specialists under it can be appointed and may be promoted. I am not at all sure but that my hon. friend would have kept better within the spirit of the Act if he had allowed Mr. Saunders to come in at the salary which he did and then taken the means at his disposal under the Act. If the requirements were reasonable parliament would have assented. I myself, after his presentation of the facts, would have raised no objection to the salary being increased. That could have been done under the Act because we must have the provisions sufficiently elastic as to allow such singular and notable case to be provided for.

Mr. FISHER. They are provided for, no doubt. In my organization I was going to put certain officers in a certain classification, which, in my judgment, those officers ought to occupy and I did raise all those salaries to the minimum of the class in which they would come in the exercise of the power which I had. I think my hon. friend is putting an extreme case when he says that a minister, having made a compact with parliament, should not violate it. I quite agree with him but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred there has been no such compact. A lump vote, it is understood, is going to pay for the service. Part of the payment for the service must be salaries. The distribution of the amount in salaries has never come before parliament and there has been no compact.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. FISHER. Excuse me, there has been no compact of any kind. The minister is obliged to keep within the vote but judgment is left to him as to how he shall spend that vote. He gives the usual explanations and if he went contrary to any of these explanations he would break the compact. There are a number of instances in which the salary of an individual is asked for and voted and under these circumstances it would not be fair to make a change in that person's salary. I do not think it would be consistent with the rights of parliament. But, in a general way, the details of these salaries never have been passed by parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg my hon. friend's pardon. We have the Auditor General and the Auditor General puts upon the pages of his book which comes before us the name of every officer who receives a salary, and when we are going over the estimates, my hon. friend knows that the Auditor General's Report and the estimates go side by side and that we criticise the estimate with the Auditor General's Report in our hands. If we find any officer whom we think is getting too much we make a protest. I am not going to say it is an actually signed contract, but it is an implied compact. One more point; I have drawn it to the attention of my hon. friend and the other ministers. Is it business-like to take a lump sum of $200,000, $300,000 or $400,000, covering a dozen different things, and put that through without any itemizing at all, a portion of it for salaries, a portion of it for other things and no division at all as to that amount which is properly referable to salaries or as to the amount which it is properly referable to other operations and other things? In my time we had some lump votes, but I would like my hon. friend to take an estimate of 1890, or from that up, and compare it with the estimate now and he will find that the tendency has been to give lump votes. The whole trouble in connection with the North Atlantic Trading Company business that we discussed so much arose from the fact that it was covered up in a lump vote and that the actual contract was entered into under a lump vote that covered a very large contract as my hon. friend will admit. If the vote had been divided as it ought to have been that could not have happened in the first instance. I do hope, although it may be too much to hope for, that succeeding estimates will show more sub-division so that we can define things a little more accurately. The ministers ought not have too much power. It is a great temptation. If your back bencher comes to you and wants something and you can show him you have a special vote for that and your vote will not allow it you have an answer, but if he shows you a vote of $400,000 out of which you can take whatever you like for any purpose, you are shorn of an argument that I am sure the Minister of Agriculture must often want to have.

Mr. FISHER. I can asure my hon. friend I am glad to have that answer whenever I can get it. In bringing the outside service in Ottawa under the civil government we have taken a long step in the direction of what my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has said.

Mr. FOSTER. That is one of the best features of it.

Mr. FISHER. I think it is quite likely we will take other steps in the course of time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. FISHER. In accordance with the agreement we had better rise and report progress and I will bring down the information.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY.

LIFE INSURANCE BILL.

Hon. WILLIAM PATERSON (Minister of Customs) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). Last year a Bill on insurance was submitted to parliament and referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce where it was considered at many sittings, a great many people from all over the country having attended to give their evidence. In the speech from the Throne an insurance Bill is again promised for this session. The Bill introduced last session was based very largely on the report of the Insurance Commission, which adopted in great measure the provisions of the Armstrong Act in the State of New York, and which in its operation since that time has been found to have many defects. This is a question in which the insurance men and the people generally of the country take a great deal of interest. If we are to have such a Bill this session it ought to be brought down immediately and not left to the close of the session when it cannot be properly considered. I give notice that on Monday next before the orders of the day are called I shall question the government as to whether they will bring down an insurance Bill this session and when they will submit it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In his speech from the Throne it is promised that we are to have legislation with regard to naturalization. That Bill we also should have as soon as possible.

Mr. FISHER. I will inquire of the Minister of Justice about that.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Indian Affairs—salaries, $96,762.50.

Department of Indian Affairs—contingencies, $12,550.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). We have the same staff as last year with the addition that we are asking provision for the appointment of a law clerk and a messenger. The increase in the vote is caused by the statutory increases and the transfer of certain members of the outside service to the inside service.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have you no law clerk now?

Mr. OLIVER. We have not had one for some years, but we find the need of one and we propose to appoint a law clerk at $2,100.

Mr. FOSTER. What changes have been made in your permanent list?

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. OLIVER. We are making provision for promoting the following officers to sub division A of the second division.

Name.	Present salary.	Proposed salary.
J. W. Shore..	$1,487.50	$1,600
G. M. Matheson..	1,470.00	1,600
R. B. E. Moffatt..	1,400.00	1,600
S. W. Hobart..	1,237.50	1,600
P. J. O'Connor..	1,337.50	1,600
R. M. Ogilvie..	1,335.00	1,600
G. L. Chitty..	1,500.00	1,600

Mr. Chitty was in the outside service until he was brought in by the operation of the Act on September 1.

Mr. FOSTER. How long have they been in the service?

Mr. OLIVER. Their records are as follows:

Mr. Shore was appointed March, 1884, as third-class clerk; promoted to second-class clerk, July, 1899; at the promotion examination he obtained sufficient marks for a chief clerkship; he has had 24 years' service.

Mr. Matheson was appointed June, 1888, as third-class clerk; promoted to second class January, 1903; he has had 20 years' in the service and has been in charge of the records since December, 1898; he has a number of clerks under him and his position is a responsible one.

Mr. Moffatt was appointed as an extra clerk in September, 1890; he was promoted to the third class in September, 1891; to the second class at $1,100 in January, 1903; he has been in charge of the special work for the Privy Council, and is an expert stenographer.

Mr. Hobart was appointed temporarily to the Interior Department in January, 1900, at $400; made second-class clerk in December, 1903, at $800; transferred to the Department of Indian Affairs in 1907, and promoted to second class on May 23, 1907.

Mr. FOSTER. His rise has been very rapid. What are the reasons for it?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason assigned is that he was competent and deserving, in the estimation of the heads of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. In that department there are many clerks who were in the service long before 1900 and who have presumably performed their duties well. It would seem that other things being equal the official of longer service should get the promotion. This clerk's rise was very rapid; the salary increased from $400 to $1,600 in eight years and he is now put at the minimum of a class that allows him still further range at the rate of $100 a year. Is the minister very sure there were no other older employees who might have had claims to that promotion? On what principle was this man jumped over the others?

Mr. OLIVER. The only answer that it is possible to give is that his work has been found satisfactory and he has been given work of a character that when properly performed entitled him to this increase of remuneration. My hon. friend, of course, knows that it is impossble to absolutely give every man in a large department the same opportunity of showing the good there is in him; the work of one section is not as important as that of another, and the man whose fortune it is to be in the section of less important work, even although he may be a good man, has not the same opportunity to show his ability as the man who, by fortune, has been placed in the section of the department requiring a higher class of work. I presume that this man was fortunate in being placed in the section of the department requiring the greater ability and that he showed the ability and received the remuneration.

Mr. FOSTER. I concede that the position of a minister is sometimes difficult; he wants to advance a deserving clerk and at the same time he wants to avoid any injustice to equally deserving clerks in his employ. It would seem, however, that the minister should be able to ascertain the relative capacity of the clerks even in different sections of his department. It is not good for the morale of the department that there should be any sense of injustice among the employees; they want to see a fair deal, and if one clerk is advanced very rapidly, others may feel that they are being treated unjustly. I presume that the minister is pretty sure that he has not done an injustice to any older clerks in that department.

Mr. OLIVER. In this particular case, I am informed that this gentleman is senior in his class, that is to say he is not being advanced over any one in his class.

Mr. FOSTER. All I can do is to call the minister's attention to it, he is the boss after all.

Mr. PERLEY. I see an item providing a salary for a timber inspector. What are the arrangements in regard to timber inspection that you engage an inspector by the year?

Mr. OLIVER. A great deal of the value of the Indian property in the northern part of the province is in the timber on their lands and in order te get the best results for the Indians, it is necessary that we should employ some one responsible to the department who has a knowledge of timber to make the necessary inspection. Mr. Chitty is the gentleman who discharges that duty.

Mr. PERLEY. The department has sufficient work, I suppose, to keep him practically busy all the time.

Mr. OLIVER. The amount of timber held by the Indians in the northern part of the province is very large and there is ample work for him to do.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend explain the two remaining clerks to be promoted ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. O'Connor was appointed February 15, 1898. He was promoted to a second class clerkship July 1, 1905. He is employed in the Lands and Timber branch and came in at $400.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the particular excellency there—two years longer in, that is all ?

Mr. OLIVER. The work in his branch of timber and lands has greatly increased during the past two or three years owing to the amount of Indian lands which have been surrendered and sold, and in that increase of work this gentleman has borne his part very creditably, and we felt warranted in promoting him from time to time.

Mr. FOSTER. How many in his branch?

Mr. OLIVER. Eight.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he superseded any who are older than himself ?

Mr. OLIVER. In that branch there are a number of ladies, and we have not given them that promotion to the higher branches which possibly the merits of their actual work would warrant, because it is not considered that, in the nature of things, they are able to take the higher positions for which we have to train men and promote them. But aside from that point, Mr. O'Connor has the seniority in that branch.

Mr. FOSTER. How many ladies in that branch ?

Mr. OLIVER. Four.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry to hear the opinion expressed by the minister that, in these days of equality, equal merit in a lady does not entitle her to equal payment with a man. He will have to fight that out with the four ladies in that department and may have a pretty hard time. Will the hon. gentleman explain the next one ?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Ogilvie entered in 1904 as temporary clerk; he was made permanent second-class on August 25, 1905. He got on entering $1,000. He is an architect and does drafting and arranging for the buildings for the department. He is a trained architect.

Mr. FOSTER. And Mr. Chitty ?

Mr. OLIVER. He came in at $1,000 in 1893. His salary was increased to $1,200 on July 1, 1898 and to $1,500 on July 1, 1905. He is a timber inspector.

Mr. FOSTER. Does that account for all the increases in the outside staff ?

Mr. OLIVER. These are the only increases outside of the statutory.

Mr. FOSTER. No other new clerks except the law clerk and promotions?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like an explanation with regard to the twenty brought in. Were they in the employment outside and for what period ?

Mr. OLIVER. They were all old employees.

Mr. FOSTER. Did they all come in at the same salary they were getting before?

Mr. OLIVER. Two received increases on July 1. Mr. Reid's salary was $1,800. It was increased to $2,100 on July 1, 1908. Mr. Fabien had $1,200. It was increased to $1,400 on July 1, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. Were these the only increases ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Why were Reid and Fabien increased ?

Mr. OLIVER. The increase was given Reid on the ground that his professional work entitled him to it and Fabien on the same ground. Fabien was the chief draftsman and Reid the senior surveyor.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Mr. Reid been at work?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Reid was employed in 1900, and Mr. Fabien in 1905.

Mr. FOSTER. What did they get when they first came in?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Reid at first got $6 a day; in April, 1903, he was appointed at $1,600, and on the 31st of January, 1904, his salary was increased to $1,800. Mr. Fabien was appointed on the 11th of August, 1905, at $1,000; his salary was increased to $1,200 on the 1st of April, 1907, and to $1,400 on July 1, 1908. Mr. Fabien is the chief draftsman of the department.

Department of Indian Affairs—contingencies, $12,550.

Mr. FOSTER What is the explanation of these?

Mr. OLIVER There is a net decrease of $3,825. First, there is a decrease of $4,825 by the transfer of extra clerks to the inside service. Then, an addition of $1,000 for occasional clerical assistance, as provided by the Civil Service Amendment Act, and an increase in sundries of $2,000 to cover travelling expenses of officials of the outside service, whose expenses heretofore were paid out of expenses generally.

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the minister pretty well satisfied that the department is insufficiently manned?

Mr. OLIVER. It is usual to have provision for additional help, if it is required. Under the former Civil Service Act there was provision made for taking on extra clerks. Now we think it is desirable to have at least $1,000 available for that purpose.

Indians, Ontario and Quebec—relief, medical attendance and medicines, Quebec, $6,400.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was spent on that last year?

Mr. OLIVER. The expenditure for 1907-8 was: relief, $5,385.56; medical attendance and medicines, $4,558.47; seed, $102; total, $10,046.03.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no seed included this year?

Mr. OLIVER. There was a supplementary vote for seed taken last year.

Relief, medical attendance and medicines, Ontario, $6,450.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a slight increase here.

Mr. OLIVER. This arises from the transfer of an item for Moose Factory, heretofore voted in the Northwest Territories, because Moose Factory is in Ontario and comes within the limits of treaty No. 9.

Blankets and clothing, Ontario and Quebec, $500.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister get any of this clothing made by any of the government departments?

Mr. OLIVER. We advertise for tenders in the newspapers, and everything is bought by tender. The contract for 1907-8 was $1.95 for 5-lb. blankets. The contractors were Horn Bros. of Lindsay, Ont.

Schools, Maritime provinces, Ontario and Quebec, $73,225.

Mr. FOSTER. What makes this increase?

Mr. OLIVER. It is made by the transfer of five schools from the former vote for Manitoba and the Northwest Territories to the vote for Ontario. The schools for Albany, Moose Factory, Abitibi, Moose House and Fort George. That makes $1,500. The balance is for new school buildings at Restigouche and Tobique.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the school in Tobique?

Mr. OLIVER. At Pointe a la Garde, near Campbellton. The Indians are Micmacs. The old buildings became useless, and this is for new buildings—$2,000 for Restigouche and $2,060 for Tobique.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the number that gets the advantage in the school of each of these now? Would the minister inform the House shortly as to the progress that is being made through the expenditure upon our schools, and the progress that is being made by the Indian children in the way of education? It is a matter which we have often discussed in this House, and it is well to have a report upon it each year. We would like to know what progress is being made, and whether any change is being introduced in the system of education, and generally, as to the results of the money we are expending.

Mr. OLIVER. The average attendance at Restigouche is 42, at Tobique 22. Answering the questions of the hon. gentleman, it is not possible to give an answer that would be considered satisfactory. The difficulties of an Indian's education, the difficulties of making an Indian into a white man, were not thoroughly appreciated at the time the work was undertaken. There have been grave difficulties met with that were not expected, and only recently are coming to be realized. While a great responsibility has been incurred, and a fully considered effort has been made to discharge that responsibility satisfactorily, it must be admitted that the expectations that were entertained when the present system of Indian education was undertaken, have not been realized. It is not that the Indians are incapable or even disinclined to education, as we understand it, but the fact is that the environment, the necessary environment, of the Indian in a large majority of cases after he leaves school, is such that the education which he has acquired in the school is not of that benefit to him that was hoped or expected. It is not that our system of education has failed to educate, but the conditions surrounding the Indians are still such that I think it must be admitted that the education is not so beneficial to them as at one time we had hoped. At the same time the burden of the work of Indian education which was assumed jointly by various churches concerned in missionary effort, and by the government, has been found hard to bear by the churches who have undertaken the enterprise. It appears that in the light of the experience of the past twenty years some readjustment of the conditions surrounding Indian education will have to be shortly made, with a view to lightening the burden and to achieving better results, that is to say, results which will tend rather to improving the condition of the Indian as an Indian, than to making the Indian into a white man.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the average attendance at these schools for which we paid some $70,000 last year, and how many children have passed through the schools?

Mr. OLIVER. The average attendance at all the Indian schools the last fiscal year was 6,451, and the total attendance was about 10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How many Indian children are there altogether in the various provinces?

Mr. OLIVER. As we find in the annual report, the Indian children from the ages of 6 to 15 years inclusive, numbered 7,665 males and 7,252 females.

Mr. FOSTER. Then it would seem that about two-thirds of them pass through the schools, and a little over one-third are in average attendance. Can the minister give us an idea as to the trend of this education now? Is it in the larger proportion tending towards education in the trades, what will be useful in after life, or is it the three R's that are being taught?

Mr. OLIVER. The idea of education in the trades which had such a strong hold a number of years ago is not maintained today. If the Indian who had acquired a first-class trade, such as that of carpenter or blacksmith, did not sever himself entirely from his home associations he had no future in that trade as the opportunity to employ the education that he had acquired did not exist. At the present time there is not so much of an effort to inform the Indians with regard to trades as to give them the rudiments of an ordinary education, to teach the Three R.'s, and where the opportunity exists, as at industrial and boarding schools, to give them education in the line of agriculture. The idea is to make the children acquainted with farm life and farm work.

Mr. A. HAGGART. I understand that the environment of the Indians nullifies the effect of the school in a large measure, that the effect which the school would have depends entirely on the character or qualifications of the teacher or master. Are there any standard qualifications for the teacher or master?

Mr. OLIVER. Some of the schools are under the direct control of the Indian Department, but the large majority of the schools are missionary enterprises which are assisted by the government. As far as our control goes, we require a third-class certificate which we think is a sufficient educational standard for the work that is on hand. Our association with the churches in the work of Indian education is because of the expectation and belief that the character of the people who are engaged in Indian education will be such as it ought to be, looking to the betterment of the character and mind of the Indian.

Mr. BARR. Are the children brought and placed in the boarding houses or are they just gathered in from the wigwams? What is the policy of the government? Have they boarding houses in connection with those schools in which they keep the children?

Mr. OLIVER. These vary in different places. There are three classes of schools —the industrial school, the boarding school and the day school. The industrial school contemplates taking a child absolutely away from his home surroundings, from any connection with his parents or friends and placing him in an establishment where he will live as the white child will live, learn what the white child will learn, and, therefore, it was hoped become as the white child when he has grown up. The boarding school is a school established on or adjacent to the reserve from which the pupils expect to be drawn. In that case connection between the child and his parents is not broken and it is not intended to be broken as it is in the case of the industrial school. Provision is made for the accommodation of the children permanently during the term in the boarding school, but they are visited by their parents from time to time, and, I presume, are allowed to visit their parents as well. Then the day school is just as any day school would be ; the children come to the school and live at home. The number of day schools is very small because it is only an occasional reserve on which the Indians live close enough together permanently to give a regular attendance to the day schools.

Mr. BARR. To what age are the children allowed to remain in the industrial and boarding schools ?

Mr. OLIVER. Until they are 18.

Mr. ROCHE. When the minister spoke awhile ago about the effects of the education of the Indian being largely rendered nugatory by their drifting back to their former environment, did he refer merely to the boarding schools, or did he discriminate between boarding and industrial schools in that regard?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the condition is the same as far as that is concerned.

Mr. ROCHE. Does not the minister think that some scheme might be evolved by means of which those Indians would be placed in some employment and thus utilize the education given by the state rather than that they should drift back to their reserves where conditions became worse than they formerly were, because work on the farm becomes undesirable to them. I would imagine that if the efforts of the department had been directed towards utilizing this education, if the department had gone to the extent of placing them in employment, a great portion of this education would not be lost, but that they would be rendered more valuable citizens.

Mr. OLIVER. Some efforts have been made along the line that my hon. friend suggests. There seems to have been a very satisfactory measure of success achieved by the experiment of settling pupils in a self-supporting colony under the supervision of the agent. They have, up to the present time, made a very satisfactory showing. This is only an experiment, and as it succeeds it will no doubt be extended. But as to taking a grown up Indian and placing him here, or there, or yonder, if that is the suggestion——

Mr. ROCHE. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. —that, of course, could not be done, especially when we consider the nature of the Indian. It is not that the Indian will not submit, but he cannot submit. He cannot continue to live under a condition of restrain. He must have liberty of action or he ceases to exist.

Mr. ROCHE. I would not suggest that the state should force the Indians into any particular trade or employment, but if they were afforded opportunities of utilizing this education and not allowed to go back to their reserves it would be in their interest as well as in the interest of the country. I would not force them into any particular employment, but I would have the means afforded so that they could utilize their education if they desired. The trouble is that many of these Indians, after they graduate, if I may use the expression, see nothing in store and they probably have not sufficient ambition to look around for themselves and secure employment. When the minister speaks about many of these trades having been done away with, I would like to ask him if his remark applies to industrial schools or has the teaching of the various trades outside of agriculture been done away with in western Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. In the industrial schools we still teach some of the trades, but there is not the same stress laid on that teaching as formerly, our effort being to get the boys to go out on the land to farm.

Mr. FOSTER. The question of the education of our Indians is a mightly difficult one, and of late years we seem to be in a condition of drift with reference to it. It is only once a year that in parliament we can devote half an hour to a talk on the Indian question when these estimates are being considered. I do not think there is any improvement in the last ten years; if improvement there has been it has not at all been comparable with the progress made by us in other respects. We spend about $400,000 a year upon Indian schools and that for forty years makes a very large sum of money, for which in the balance we can find no good result. You bring the young Indians to these industrial schools ; you teach them and they seem to make progress whilst they are in the school, but when they leave they do not make servants and as a rule they go back to the wild state. In very many cases I fear they are worse than if they had never been in the industrial school. We are spending an immense amount of money and we are doing little good with it. If there is anything that gets in to the Indian it may be a little percolation of religious teaching through the missionaries who build up their moral character somewhat, but when they go back amongst their own people, it is difficult to keep any supervision over them, and I am afraid that even permanent results in that respect are pretty hard to measure. Is it not time we did something else for the Indian? Should we longer spend half a million dollars a year without results? Should we not get some active agency at work to investigate this whole question and give us the result of ripened experience, pointing out our mistakes in the past and blazing out a pathway for us in the future? Unless we can educate our Indians in a line towards strengthening an esprit de corps among them and opening up a future career for them for which they are adapted, it seems to me it is almost better that we should leave them their natural state where they do a little hunting and a little fishing and a little agriculture and pass their lives in as good a way as they do now after all the money we spend on their education under our present system. It seems to me it would be better for us to leave them as they are in their simple habits and prevent them from being imposed upon by the white man, or else that we should adopt some other system which after they leave the school may fit them for useful occupation. You cannot make a white man out of an Indian and there is no use our trying that. Give the Indian boy a fair education, instill something of purposes and ambition in him and offer to him some sort of useful career. They ought to make splendid fire rangers and forest rangers and scouts. Is there any inherent disability in the Indian character which makes it impossible for them to do that kind of work? Is there no kind of police duty they can do? In the United States they do utilize the Indians in various ways, they make men out of them, not white men it is true, but they instil in the Indians a good deal of nerve and verve and they are fairly successful in several spheres. Is it not time that Canada should do something? The Indians are our wards it is said, and we should do the square thing by them. But, we ought not go on spending a lot of money, pretending to do something and really doing nothing, and coming around this table every year and nodding to each other and all acknowledge we have failed. I would go in very strongly for appointing a commission, not a partisan commission, but the very best men we can get, to inquire into and to recommend to us the best means for the moral, mental, technical, and industrial education of our Indians. Canada will find the money for that; Canada has never balked at doing her duty by the Indians. We may have taken their lands, sometimes when we should not, but we have always protested our intention to treat them fairly and I believe we have endeavoured to do so.

he is more adapted to work on the land than to any other. I have spoken of the colony we have where there has been a very gratifying amount of apparent success. We cannot tell yet whether that is permanent success, but it is apparent success and we have hopes it will be permanent. Again in the case of the Indians of southern Alberta, on the Blood reserve, which is the largest reserve in Canada and of which the Indians were notoriously the most warlike and generally intractable in Canada, we have made very substantial progress. The Indians have irrigated a very considerable tract and in addition to that they are cultivating the ground, raising stock and providing for themselves by cutting hay and working at manual labour for wages amongst the outside community. My own impression is that the progress we are making on the Blood reserve is perhaps more substantial than the progress we are making in the colony of which I spoke, because it is progress that is in the Indians themselves. That is to say they have not lost their individuality and initiative. These qualities are being cultivated or developed and although the progress may be slow, it seems to me that this is the course that will produce the ultimate good result. We are therefore not blind to the necessities of the case. We are using our endeavours on various lines of experiment which must necessarily vary with the varying conditions under which we find the Indians and under which we have to deal with them. While the results of the expenditure have not been such as was anticipated when the policy was first inaugurated, still I believe that we are well warranted in continuing the expenditure to provide education for the Indians, and the Indian Department while it does not profess to have solved a problem that has been found to be impossible by everybody else in the world, are dealing with the problem, and we are making some progress, probably as much progress as is being made anywhere else if not a little more. We are using the knowledge that we have obtained in the past for the purpose of improving our methods and increasing our economy for the future.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister practically admits that the education of the Indian is a failure. I think that can be accepted as a fair interpretation of what he has said.

Mr. OLIVER. That is hardly a fair statement. I do not want to be understood as saying that the Indians have not been educated. They have been educated, but the result which was hoped from that education has not been achieved. So far as the education is concerned, there is no question that it has been imparted to the Indians, but parliament and the country had hoped that education would amount to civilization. Unfortunately the event has proven that that is not the case.

Mr. SPROULE. I was about to elaborate what I meant by education. I did not mean simply education by book knowledge, but civilization and education of habits as well as knowledge. Education of the Indian as a whole has been a failure so the minister admits. That being the case, we naturally look into the subject to ascertain what is the explanation and whether any method can be devised that would better accomplish the object. We have in view three objects, first, the civilization of the Indian; second, their education so far as knowledge goes, and, third, the inculcation of habits that would enable them throughout all time in the future to put that knowledge into practical use. It is a pity it has not been as great a success as we had hoped. Could the minister tell us what percentage of the Indians who have been trained in church schools and what percentage in secular schools? Has the minister made any effort to ascertain the comparative success in each?

Mr. OLIVER. There are something like 315 schools altogether and not more than ten per cent are non-denominational. Most of these are day schools. The boarding and industrial schools are almost entirely under the administration of some religious body, and so there is no opportunity to make a fair comparison.

Mr. SPROULE. There must be thirty-one day schools, and there ought to be some data which would enable us to ascertain whether their work has been a success or not. There may be something in the educational system which would account for the failure and which might be avoided by our adopting a better system. You might change the educational system entirely and make a great success of what is a failure now. It would be worth while for the minister to have some of his officers prepare information which would enable us to institute some comparison.

Mr. OLIVER. I would be glad to give such information as we may be able to secure. My belief is that there is not very much difference in the result in the one case and the other. The differences are due more to other conditions than to the difference between a teacher under the direct control of the department and one under the control of a church. The principle of co-operation between the Indian Department and the churches was accepted by the country some twenty or twenty-five years ago, and I believe wisely, because when the educational institution is under the management and responsibility of a religious body, we have a guarantee in the character and standing of that religious body, that the teachers will set a good example in conduct and demeanour to the pupils, and thereby be most likely to advance them towards civilization.

Mr. BARR. What percentage does the government pay in connection with the industrial schools and the boarding schools which, we are informed, are under some religious bodies?

Mr. OLIVER. The payment is not by percentage, but so much per pupil. The government pays so much per pupil to the church which takes the responsibility of carrying on the educational institution, and the church has to provide whatever other money is required. The Elkhorn industrial school is carried on at the direct cost of the Indian Department. The other industrial and boarding schools are carried on by the various churches, and we contribute so much per pupil. I think we are in this way contributing from 50 to 60 per cent of the cost of carrying them on.

Mr. BARR. Can any religious body open up those schools and carry them on, or must it first get the government's sanction?

Mr. OLIVER. As we have conducted the business of Indian education so far, whenever any religious body had a mission established amongst the Indians or had acquired authority among them and was sufficiently interested and strong enough to establish a school, they would get permission to do so and they would get the grant per pupil just the same as any other.

Mr. SMYTH. Might I ask if it is the intention of the government to allow the construction by the Ontario government through the Indian lands of a trunk road between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury? The hon. minister will remember that last year a large deputation from Sault Ste. Marie interviewed the government on this subject. The Ontario government have spent a large sum of money already in the construction of that road, but they cannot pass through the Indian reserve lying between Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury. I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to enable the Ontario government to complete that much-needed work by giving them the right to pass through the Indian reserve?

Mr. OLIVER. A number of the municipalities interested in the construction of the trunk road through Algoma interviewed the government on the subject last year, and it was explained to the deputation that it would be necessary for anybody desiring to build this road to let us know by a survey where they wanted the road to be, and that when we were informed on that point, we would take the matter up with the Indians with a view to securing a right of way through the reserve. So far as I am aware, we have never yet been furnished with the information that would enable us to take the matter up with the Indians, who of course are the owners of the land, and must be dealt with as any other owners would be for a right of way across their property.

Mr. SMYTH. As a matter of fact, I know that the surveys have been made, and I understood that the Minister of Public Works of Ontario had been in communication with the Department of Indian Affairs and had sent them the survey and plans of the right of way. Perhaps I have been misinformed.

Mr. OLIVER. So far as I am aware, we have not yet received the plans. As soon as we receive them, we shall be prepared at once to take up the question with the Indians and if possible secure the right of way. I shall be able to say on another day whether we have received the plans or not.

At six o'clock House took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADIAN WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 11) to incorporate the Canadian Western Railway Company—Mr. Pardee.

On section 7:

Mr. HERRON. When this Bill was in committee yesterday I omitted having a clause inserted which will make a very slight difference to the conditions of the Bill. I beg to move:

That in subsection (a), line 5, after the word 'meridian' there be added the words 'passing through the town of Pincher Creek.'

This has been agreed to by the promoters of the Bill and a marked Bill has been put in the possession of the chairman, agreed to and initialled by them. Pincher Creek is two and a half miles from the railway station and in exact line with the contour of the proposed railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the promoters of the Bill have agreed I have no objection.

Mr. HERRON. They have agreed.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will remember that we discussed it a little yesterday, and one of the gentlemen interested said that he was willing to leave it to the Minister of Railways. I have no objection.

Mr. HERRON. The solicitor in charge has initialled this amendment and it is agreed to by all parties concerned.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. HERRON. I propose that the word 'Pincher' be substituted for the word 'Cowley' in the 7th line and that the word 'Cowley' be substituted for the words 'Pincher Creek' in th 8th line. This road is to extend from the boundary line north. But, although Cowley lies north of Pincher they insert Cowley first. It does not alter the provisions of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. You want Cowley and Pincher transposed ?

Mr. HERRON. Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. GRAHAM. We struck out the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Railway Act.' But it has occurred to me that if we were to strike out the words 'along any highway, street or other public place,' we would be taking chances of striking out a street which, although it might not be used at present as a highway, might nevertheless be laid out as a street. Would there be any danger of that?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. A street is a highway.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thought we had not the exact words we put in the Bill of last year. I thought possibly that a street might be laid out and dedicated for a street, but not yet used as a highway, and we might get into trouble by striking out the word 'street.' I think it can do no harm to leave it in, and it might do harm to strike it out. I move that the words 'street or other,' wherever they occur in the original Bill, be reinserted.

Motion agreed to.

On section 11,

Mr. HERRON. Will there be anything in this amendment to prejudice our local telephone system that was spoken of today in the committee? I thought the minister assured us that this was the usual form of clause on the conditions of telephones—or is it something new?

Mr. GRAHAM. The question was raised in committee as to the connections between this line and some other line. The point I made was that any company chartered by this parliament was under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and the board could make them connect or do whatever they liked, but they could not control another company that was not chartered by this parliament, nor could they compel it to connect on their side. But they could compel this company to connect with the other company if they are willing.

Mr. MAGRATH. Before this Bill is finally disposed of, I wish to place on record a few words in connection with what has taken place in the Railway Committee. I represent a section of country through which this railway is supposed to go. We want the railway; we want all the railways we can get in that country. But, as I said in the committee, I do not wish to go back to my constituents and say that the promoters blandly told me in committee that they were going to spend $2,000,000 and build 200 miles of railway; I think my constituents will expect from me something more definite than that. I want it placed on record that the promoter said his company was going to build this railway without waiting for the connecting road which he spoke of from the United States, which was to come up to the international boundary. I want that on record, because I expect these gentlemen will be coming back to this House. I am not particularly concerned as to whether the telephone lines should be carried underground or overhead; it is railways that we want, on the ground, and not on paper. It occurred to me that when gentlemen come here and tell us they are prepared to spend $2,000,000, they should be prepared to put up 5 per cent as a guarantee of their good faith. I mention that now, as I mentioned it in committee. But my object, as I said, is that if these gentlemen come back I shall have something to say to them if I am in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The chances are that you will have the opportunity.

Mr. GRAHAM. I guess your prognostications will turn out to be correct.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indian schools, maritime provinces, Ontario and Quebec, $73,225.

Mr. SPROULE. Before six o'clock I asked the minister to furnish us with information as to the number of day schools, the number of pupils attending these schools, the location of these schools; the number of the church schools, the number of pupils attending these schools, and the location of these schools.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). At page 60 of the annual report of the department the information is given out that out of 315 schools 49 are undenominational, 111 Roman Catholics, 93 Church of England, 44 Methodist, 16 Presbyterian, and 2 Salvation Army.

Mr. SPROULE. I was trying to get information as to whether the denominational schools are more successful in civilizing the Indian than what might be called public or secular schools.

Mr. OLIVER. I will have collated from the annual report the information in the form in which the hon. gentleman asks for it.

Surveys, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you doing any survey work on the Indian land?

Mr. OLIVER. This is for surveys of reserves under the new treaty in the northern part of New Ontario. We intend also to pay the cost of subdividing small Indian reserves and resurveying old reserves where the land marks have become obliterated and when the Indians interested have no funds of their own.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you carrying on any surveys in the islands of the Georgian bay?

Mr. OLIVER. No, but we had a revaluation made last year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Who is the surveyor?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Sing was the surveyor; the work was finished three years ago.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH. Is it the intention of the department to continue leasing or selling the timber on the Indian lands?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH. Has the department issued a letter to certain parties in my riding stating that the department would discontinue allowing them to cut timber. I refer to the Indian lands near Cutler on the Sault Branch in the district of Algoma?

Mr. OLIVER. I am unable to reply at the moment. Speaking generally, we intend to sell the right to cut timber on the Indian lands from time to time as it may be in the interests of the Indians to do so.

Mr. W. R. SMYTH. There is a firm in the district of Algoma which heretofore has had the privilege of cutting timber on the Indian lands on the reserve near the village of Cutler, and I saw a letter written by some official in the department informing them that that right would be discontinued. I may say that the gentleman to whom I refer has been heretofore a very strong Liberal, but in his wisdom he saw fit to help me to be elected to this House, and immediately after the elections were over he got a notice from the department that permission to continue cutting timber on this reserve would be discontinued. When this notice was received, the Indians, as I understand, got up a petition asking the government to continue the right to this gentlman to cut the timber. I wish to ask the minister if he has ever given instructions to any of his officers to send such a letter?

Mr. OLIVER. I have no recollection of any sale of that kind, and would have to look over the records before I could give a definite reply. There are many circumstances in which it would be quite proper to give these instructions, but I can hardly understand how any firm would have a standing license to cut timber on any land.

Mr. SMYTH. Their right to cut this timber has always been admitted heretofore. Would that come before the minister or the deputy minister of the Indian Department?

Mr. OLIVER. It would depend on the circumstances. If it were a matter of detail, it would come before the deputy, but if it were a matter of policy it would come before me. I cannot say which it was without knowing the facts.

Mr. SMYTH. You are not in a position to say that notice has been given by the department to this firm that their license will be cancelled on April 31 of this year?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not just now, but will be able when I have the opportunity to refer to all the files. There will be an opportunity later on.

Mr. SMYTH. Who is the deputy superintendent of Indian Affairs?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Frank Pedley.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the hon. minister explain what becomes of this money, the grant to land managing funds? To whom is it paid and who disburses it, and in what way and what does the item mean?

Mr. OLIVER. There were two funds which existed previous to confederation out of which the charges of management of Indian lands were paid. After confederation these funds, which were taken over by the Dominion Government, became, in some way or other, improperly depleted, and the Dominion was indebted to them in a certain amount. Later on means were taken to recoup the funds from the Dominion treasury at so much per year, so that in fifteen years the Province of Quebec fund and in twenty years the Land Management fund will be restored to the position in which they would have been, had they not been improperly drawn upon.

Mr. DANIEL. Who are the trustees of the funds and who operates them?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian Department became the trustee at confederation, and what are now considered to have been improper charges on them began in about 1880 and ran on until the funds were exhausted. Then the matter was reconsidered and it was decided to place the funds back where they were originally.

Mr. DANIEL. Then the minister's department is the one that operates the funds now?

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the disposal of the rights to cut timber on Indian lands, could the minister tell us what is to be his policy in the future. We have had several instances brought to our notice of large quantities of timber having been cut on these islands by particularly favoured friends of the government who got that right very cheaply. Had these timber cuts been put up to public competition, no doubt they would have realized a great deal more for the poor Indians. The government might very wisely adopt a different policy from that of disposing of these timber cuts to their private party friends by private sale. When there is timber to be sold on an island or an Indian reserve, that sale ought to be publicly advertised and be made to the highest bidder. That method would realize more for the Indians, whose property it is we are handling in trust, and also give greater satisfaction to the timber trade. What took place on Hope Island was a notable instance given the House last session of this abuse of trust, and there were several other instances of the same kind in the Georgian Bay district. Would the government give us any assurance that they will adopt a better policy in the future?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that it would be profitable to discuss the method of disposition of the timber on Indian lands, as it has been followed during the many years that the Indian lands have been under the administration of the Indian Department. It has followed very much the system of disposing of timber on ordinary public lands. Long ago when timber was of little commercial value it was more important that the timber on public lands should be cut than that a high price should be obtained for it. But as timber got more valuable the system of disposition was changed on Indian lands as well as on public lands. As to the present policy of the department with regard to timber on Indian lands, I can give no better illustration than the sale of timber on the Dokis Indian reserve on the French river, which took place late last winter or early last spring, when we sold the timber by public auction at the Russell House, after survey, estimate and advertisement, for something over $800,000, besides the dues of $2 per thousand feet.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How much timber was sold this year besides that?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the returns are in the annual report, but, answering off-hand, I would say that was the only sale during that year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I wanted to know whether there was any sale since that return was published. The return comes down to last March. I want to know if anything has been sold since then?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot give that information from memory. It will have to come at a later time. In regard to the questions asked by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Smyth) as to the carrying of a leading road through the Indian reserves north of Lake Huron, our records show that on January 31, 1908, we addressed a letter to the secretary of the advisory union of Algoma municipalities, one paragraph of which is as follows:

> Before we can take up the question of the surrender with any degree of satisfaction, it is considered that a plan or sketch should be prepared and forwarded to the department, showing in a general way where the proposed road would enter and leave the reserves in question. If this were done, we would be able to meet the Indians with a fairly definite proposition. Without it, it is considered that much valuable time would be wasted.

That is the last communication we have in regard to the matter.

Mr. SMYTH. Has there been any communication between your department and the Department of Public Works of Ontario?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware of it. Our communications were direct with this union of municipalities, and we, of course, understood that their communications were with the provincial government.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I want to know definitely from the minister whether he will before all his items are passed give us the information as to what timber lands were sold and what rights to cut timber were given since the publication of the blue-book.

Mr. OLIVER. I will give the information on the next sitting day.

Grant for Agricultural society, Munceys of the Thames, $90.

Mr. BEATTIE. That seems to be a very extravagant grant to the Munceys of the Thames to encourage them in agriculture. I think it might be increased.

Mr. OLIVER. This is a small sum given for the purpose of supplying prizes for the agricultural show which these people hold on their own account. They are self-supporting and are well advanced towards civilization, and this is merely a small contribution towards the purchase of prizes.

Mr. BEATTIE. There happen to be two societies which hold two fairs a year, and $45 to each society would not encourage agriculture very much. Out of the large sums granted by the government I should think a larger sum than $90 might be granted for that purpose.

General legal expenses, $13,500.

Mr. HENDERSON. $13,500 for the lawyers and $90 for the farmers! I wonder what the Minister of Agriculture will say about that. During the last election he went through the province of Ontario explaining why cities should represent county municipalities, and why Conservative members representing rural districts should be deposed and somebody living in a town should be put in their places. I am afraid that he has been extending to the Department of the Minister of the Interior his policy of doing everything for the lawyer and nothing for the farmer. I wonder that the Minister of the Interior does not stand up for his own rights and the rights of his own wards and not let the Minister of Agriculture have too much to say in a matter of this kind. It seems to me an explanation is due to show why there should be such an enormous amount of legal expenses in connection with this band.

Mr. OLIVER. The reason that the grant to the Munceys is so small is that they don't need a large grant. There is, I believe, a principle laid down that to him that hath shall be given. But, in the administration of the Indian Department, it is given to him that hath not. It is to those who need that we give, and to those who don't need we don't give. The Munceys are not in need, and therefore there is no large appropriation for them. I think nobody will suggest that the amount expended in prizes at a small exhibition should be very large.

Mr. ALEX. HAGGART. I want to put the lawyers right on this item. We would like a little explanation. Does it include the enforcement of the Indian Act all over the Dominion, and the prosecution of parties for trespassing upon Indian surveys, and taking charge of the Indians generally as against the white man? I find in the Auditor General's Report, on page I—9, under the very same heading 'General legal expenses' payments made to several lawyers amounting to $1,093. I do not know whether that is intended to cover all the legal expenses for the last year—sums paid to lawyers in Ottawa, and in Ashcroft, British Columbia, and other places. A little explanation of that would let the lawyers out.

Mr. OLIVER. This vote is to pay legal expenses necessary in defence of what we believe to be the rights of the Indians in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, not in the Dominion at large. The reason the amount here appears large is because this year we have had an effort to settle a case which has been celebrated in Canada for many years, and we are in hopes of bringing it to a settlement; I refer to the Oka Indian case. Outside of that $10,000, the expenditure in 1907-8 was $1,093.95. That is a normal expenditure. But we estimate a cost in regard to this Oka case, of about $10,000. When we consider that that case has been a source of irritation during so many years, I think everybody will agree that it is desirable to secure a settlement, if we can, by expending this amount.

Mr. BARR. It seems very strange that we should have this item of $1,090 for legal expenses appearing year after year. Are the lawyers employed by the year? Are they on the list like civil servants? I understand this item has been going on for a number of years just the same. There has been one big lawsuit going on for the last twenty years. Do they do the same work year after year, or how is it that we have to pay so large an amount for lawyers' expenses? We know that the Indians are a very peaceable people. I think this is a sum, to a great extent, put down there to be divided amongst the lawyers. If we could increase the agricultural grant and decrease the legal expenses, we would be doing the right thing.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister give us any information with regard to the present stage of the dispute in the Oka Indian case, and along what lines does he hope to succeed in effecting a settlement?

Mr. OLIVER. I need not go into the merits of the dispute in the Oka case. But the Indians take the position that they want their rights defended and carried to the highest court, that is the Privy Council in England, and whatever the highest court may decide they are willing to abide by. But they say they will not abide by anything short of that, and they will accept nothing less than a judgment by the highest court in the empire. A test case has been entered, and proceedings are now in progress in the city of Monreal, and will be carried forward to a finish.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the test case proposed by the government? Is the case based on what the Indians claim is an infringement of their rights?

Mr. OLIVER. It is a case arranged by the government, but the case is founded upon an alleged infringement of the rights of the Indians. It is a concrete case, and is in the Superior Court of Quebec before Judge Hutchinson.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister has made a reference to the Oka Indian litigation. Was anything paid on that account last year? I find no reference to it under general legal expenses in the Auditor General's Report, although last year $13,500 was asked for legal expenses. The only expense charged in the Auditor General's Report was $1,093. It seems strange that with only $1,000 of expense the minister should be asking for a vote of $13,500. And the same way last year. If this litigation has been going on for several years one would expect to see some charge or payment relating to it in the Auditor General's Report. Has the minister any explanation in regard to the matter? There is nothing in the Auditor General's Report with regard to any payment for the whole year for litigation in connection with the Oka Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. I have already said that the $3,500 in the vote is the amount estimated for ordinary legal expenses. In addition to that the $10,000 that was taken last year was taken with the expectation that we would have been able to get the case forward last year, but the circumstances were that is was not possible to get the case forward last year or to make an expenditure beyond the amount that my hon. friend has mentioned. It was only possible to get the case to court quite recently. When I spoke of the case having been in progress for many years I meant to say that the dispute in regard to the Oka reserve was of many years' standing, but this particular case in court by which we hoped to get a final settlement has only had its beginning within this last year. It is a new case although it is an old dispute, but we have actually now got to trial. Of course, there will be an appeal and it will be carried to the highest court.

Mr. S. SHARPE. How much of the $13,500 did you use last year?

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. That is the year before last.

Mr. OLIVER. In the year ended March 31, 1908, we expended $1,093.95.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. How much have you expended in 1908-9?

Mr. OLIVER. We have about the same expenditure for this year as for last year up to date.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is there also litigation pending in reference to the Indians of the Grand River reserve? The Brant Indians have been claiming for many years that they were unjustly dealt with in that the government invested their funds in some Welland canal bonds, or something like that, and lost their money.

Mr. OLIVER. A claim is being spoken of as being made by or on behalf of the Six Nation Indians with regard to a transaction which took place some time in the 1830's, I think. That matter is under the consideration of the department at the present time.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Any hope of doing Justice to these Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The facts are historical, I may say.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, this department only takes responsibility to do justice with regard to what rests upon it, and it does not take the responsibility of doing justice with respect to that for which it is not responsible.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Quite right.

Mr. SPROULE. In this Oka Indian dispute, is the government supplying counsel for both sides of the case and paying the cost out of the Indian fund? Who are the counsel on behalf of the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. The government is paying the whole of the costs in order to get a decision that will be satisfactory to the Indians and, it is presumed, equitable. The government is paying the cost of both sides to the suit.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you not think it is a great injustice to the Indians? The Indians claim that these others are trespassing and the litigation is to determine the question between the trespasser and the original owner. That the costs of the litigation should come out of the fund belonging to the Indians seems to be unfair to the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not very familiar with this case myself, but my hon. friend and some of the older members of the House will remember it as a case which has been very celebrated and of long standing. It has been the cause of a great deal of acrimony, and I am sure they will agree with me that it is for the good of the country as well as for the Indians that a settlement shall be procured if possible, and that the price paid for the settlement is not too great if only a settlement can be secured.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that makes it right. I have some remembrance of this case. It has been going on for a great many years. The Oka Indians were given land in Algoma in lieu of this land as an inducement to move out, but when they got there they did not like the land. They claimed that they were unfairly dealt with. A portion of the band never left the reserve and refused to give up the land. But those who were negotiating to get possession of the land still held on and insisted on taking the land from them. That trouble has gone on for a long time. The Indians still contend that the land is theirs and that they had no right to give it up. The others went to law. Now then, the trespasser comes in, according to the Indians' claim, and, because it is desirable to settle the dispute between the Indians and the others, the government says it is justifiable to take the poor Indians' money and pay the cost of the litigation for the trespasser as well as for the Indian. I am not contending that the Indian is right or that he is wrong because I do not know, but as a matter of principle it would seem to me that if the expenses of the Indians' side were paid out of the Indian fund that would be proper. I cannot see any justifiable reason why the expenses of the trespasser should be paid out of the Indian fund as well, because the portion that is paid for this litigation is taken out of the Indian fund and the Indian loses to that extent. It seems scarcely fair to the poor Indian.

Mr. OLIVER. Unfortunately the money is not being taken from the Indian but it is being taken, by this vote, out of the treasury of the Dominion of Canada and the taxpayers who are on one side of the dispute possibly claim that their share of the cost should not be taken to provide counsel and pay the costs for the Indians in trying to oust them from active possession.

Mr. SPROULE. The money that we vote for Indian purposes we are supposed to have got out of the property that we originally got from the Indians. The country was recouped for it and now we are voting it because the Indians are the wards of the government. We are voting money for the cost of litigation where the Indians are on one side and the trespassers on the other. To vote money to pay both sides is not fair.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked the minister a question which he has not answered yet. Who are the counsel for the Indians in the case?

Mr. OLIVER. Messrs. Wainwright & Davidson are representing the Indians for the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the suit entered in the Superior Court of Quebec now?

Mr. OLIVER. The court was sitting yesterday and the day before on that case with Judge Hutchinson presiding.

Mr. SPROULE. It will be appealed from that to the Supreme Court and then to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Annuity and administration, treaty 9, $21,200.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There is a decrease.

Mr. OLIVER. That is accounted for by the transfer of the salary of the inspector from the outside service vote to civil government.

Indians, N.S.—relief and seed grain, $3,200.

Mr. DANIEL. What proportion of this was for seed grain and what for relief?

Mr. OLIVER. There is between $700 and $800 for seed grain.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. How many Indians in Nova Scotia?

Mr. OLIVER. 2,129.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. You are asking $3,000 less than you did a year ago; are there fewer Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. In that year there was a larger expenditure for relief and land was purchased for the Indians at Colchester to the value of $1,300.

Nova Scotia Indians, medical attendance and medicines, $3,700.

Mr. RHODES. What services are required from these medical officers?

Mr. OLIVER. They are expected to visit the reserve on the call of the agent or to prescribe and furnish medicines to the Indians if they call at their office.

Mr. RHODES. I do not think there is an Indian reserve in my county.

Mr. OLIVER. There are Indians settled in the county of Cumberland, but there is no Indian reserve in that county.

Mr. RHODES. Is this salary to the medical officer intended to cover the full cost of medical attendance to the Indians in a particular county?

Mr. OLIVER. The division is not by counties. Certain reserves are allotted to a certain medical man and he is expected to attend on the Indians at the call of the agent or to prescribe for the Indians of this reserve, or I presume any Indian, who may call at his office, and to give them the medicine his prescription requires.

Mr. RHODES. Is the medical officer supposed to do all the medical work within the territory allotted to him?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. RHODES. Then there should be no outside charge for medical services. There is a rather peculiar condition in my county, because the Indian agent is also the medical officer and at page I—13 of the Auditor General's Report there is an item showing a payment to Dr. F. A. Rand of $16 for medical attendance upon the Indians. Dr. Rand is the agent as well as the medical officer. This is a small item, but I feel it my duty to bring it to the notice of the minister. At I—13 there are items for medical attendance, F. A. Rand, M.D., Parrsborough, $200 and $16. Dr. Rand, the medical officer for that district is also the Indian agent.

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot at the moment give my hon. friend an explanation, but at a later date I shall do so. Dr. Rand is medical officer for certain reserves for Indians and receives a salary of $200 as medical officer.

Indians, New Brunswick—salaries, $1,458.

Mr. DANIEL. How many reserves are there in New Brunswick and how many Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. Nineteen reserves and about 150 scattered Indians, 1,861 Indians in all.

Mr. DANIEL. There appears to be a similar arrangement in regard to medical attendance in New Brunswick to that existing in Nova Scotia. There are eighteen or twenty medical officers who apparently receive about $200 a year apiece, and then the same medical officers make individual charges for medical attendance. If they are paid an annual salary for medical attendance why is the extra charge put in as well?

Mr. OLIVER. I am in the same position in regard to this question as to the questions relating to Nova Scotia. It may be that these medical men make charges for attending Indians of other reserves.

Mr. DANIEL. Where a medical man attends an Indian from another province a charge is specifically made for it and printed in the Auditor General's Report. I should be very glad to get an explanation in regard to those cases.

Mr. RHODES.

Prince Edward Island Indians—medical attendance and medicine, $650.

Mr. DANIEL. How many Indians on the island?

Mr. OLIVER. Two hundred and seventy-six.

Mr. BARR. How many medical men required?

Mr. OLIVER. One.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Auditor General's Report, page I—15, shows fifteen or twenty medical men employed. No doubt the reason is that the government has quite a number of political friends there whom they make medical advisers to the Indians and to whom they give from $25 to $50 each. To one they give $200. It looks as if the government were giving these fees to those who will vote for them.

Mr. OLIVER. I must correct the statement that there is one medical adviser. The call may be given to one or another, as the case may be, but they are paid by calls at so much per call.

Mr. BARR. No regular doctor?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

To provide for erection of wharf, Lennox island, P.E.I., Indians, $1,200.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Why is this not done by the Department of Public Works? That department is building wharfs all over the country, why not build one for the Indians? I suppose it is because the Indian does not vote.

Mr. OLIVER. This vote is standing from last year. The expenditure was not made, and we are asking for a re-vote. I cannot say why it is not done by the Department of Public Works, but I think there are many cases in which the Indian Department handles its own work with the view of employing the Indians and giving them some little advantage in that way.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. This is the first time I ever saw a vote taken in the Indian Department to build a wharf for the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. In this case the Indians are living on an island and require some accommodation to get over to the mainland. We had a vote for a ferry to enable them to get to the mainland a year or two ago.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. We never criticise the Indian vote very much, but this seems very irregular. We have voted money to the Public Works Department to build wharfs to accommodate private citizens, and they should do it here just as well as ask the Indian Department to do it.

Mr. OLIVER. In that work we can give the Indians employment and probably the Public Works Department could not do that.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Why not?

Mr. SPROULE. The minister said some time ago that this expenditure comes out of the consolidated revenue of the country. Is there any account in which the expenditure for the Indians is chargeable against what we get out of the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. An exact account is kept of the money which comes from the sales of Indian lands, or other moneys upon which the Indians have a special claim; but that has nothing to do with the votes we are asking. In cases where the Indians have not money of their own to carry on their business or meet their requirements, we ask for money from the consolidated revenue for this purpose. Where the Indians have money of their own we administer so as to meet their requirements as economically as possible.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the case now in litigation, have the Oka Indians no money of their own?

Mr. OLIVER. The capital of the Oka band amounts to $4,000. It is so small that it is not of any advantage and would not be sufficient to carry on their suit. In the case of the Oka Indians it is the ownership of the lands themselves which is in question. These Indians have not had the opportunity of acquiring a fund. Should they succeed in their suit, they would shortly be in a position to have a substantial fund, but until they establish their rights they have not that source of revenue.

Mr. SPROULE. There are roads made in the Manitoulin Islands over what is at present Indian reserve. Application has been made to the department, and I understand that they have granted certain sums for making and improving these roads. Would that not be taken out of the Indian fund?

Mr. OLIVER. The Manitoulin Island was all Indian land, and of course the Indian fund gets the benefit of any sales of that land. Therefore it was considered reasonable that the fund should bear the charges of the development of the land by the construction of roads.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that different from the erection of a wharf in Prince Edward Island? In the latter case, would the money be taken from consolidated revenue regardless of the source it came from, while in the former case it would be taken from the Indian fund?

Mr. OLIVER. That is the position exactly. The Indians of Prince Edward Island have no fund; therefore we have to come to their assistance for what they require and what we think they should have. But in the case of the Manitoulin Island the Indians have the benefit of the sale of large tracts of the island, and they still hold considerable tracts which are for sale; so that they have money available for these works. We do not come to parliament for that, but take it out of the fund that belongs to the Indians themselves.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Has the construction of that wharf in Prince Edward Island been begun yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Is it the intention to build it this year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Indians—Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—annuities, $173,200; increase, $12,005.

Mr. ROCHE. Is this increase due to an increase of the Indian population ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is due to the adhesion to treaty of the Indians of the territory lying between Manitoba and the Hudson bay, which adhesion was taken last year.

Mr. ROCHE. Is the Indian population in these three provinces stationary from year to year ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is about stationary at the present time.

Implements, tools, &c., $8,432; increase, $3,867.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of that increase ?

Mr. OLIVER. It is occasioned by provision being made for a larger number of Indians, who formerly lived by hunting, turning to farming, especially on the reserves near the North Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAKE. Might I ask the minister as to the responsibility in which the department stands when an agent gives orders to a merchant to sell agricultural implements or other goods to Indians? This is a question which I know has created a good deal of interest amongst local merchants. Usually, when they come at first, they begin to sell to Indians without orders, and as a rule they lose their money. When the Indians bring the orders, does the department assume full responsibility for paying for the goods, and paying for them at an early date ?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The department does not assume absolute responsibility; but the order is issued in good faith, and it is the business of the agent to use all reasonable measures to collect the money. That is to say, if the Indian has money passing through the hands of the agent, it will be the business of the agent to see that the order is paid. But if it should be that the Indian has no money passing through the agent's hands, it would not be possible for the agent to make the payment, and of course in that case the government would refuse to take the responsibility.

Mr. LAKE. Then I understand from the minister that it is the duty of the agent to take it from the annuity of the Indian ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the agent has no right to stop the annuity, but he can take any money earned by the Indian or obtained from the sale of his produce.

Mr. LAKE. Or from the sale of his land?

Mr. OLIVER. No, the Indian cannot sell any land.

Mr. LAKE. I understand that, but portions of the reserve are occasionally sold by the department on it being surrendered by the Indians, and a certain portion of the money received from these sales is, I understand, distributed to the Indians themselves. I have had some accounts put into my hand, two of which have written across them: 'to be paid from land moneys.' Am I to understand from the minister that the agent cannot stop any of these moneys ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, he cannot. When the agent gives orders, he is presumed to have knowledge or belief that the Indian will, at the proper time, have money available to pay the debt, by reason of earning wages or selling produce or stock of his own. The agent has the right to stop that money from going to the Indian, and to pay it to the person who presents the order; but he has no authority to stop annuity money or money accruing from the sale of Indian lands from being paid to the Indian and to pay it to the creditor, except on the order of the Indian. The Indian may order the agent to pay his annuity to the creditor or money coming from the sale of the land to the creditor, but the agent has no authority to take their annuity money, or land money, and pay it to creditors, even though the agent gets an authorization from the Indian who incurred the debt.

Mr. LAKE. There must be many cases in which the money the Indian is to receive for the sale of his produce or his work will not pass through the agent's hand at all. No money coming to them ever passes through the agent's hand. Then if an agent has any order in a case of that sort, all he can do is to exert a moral pressure upon the Indian, he cannot force him in any way to pay the money. In cases of that sort, I should consider it inadvisable that the agent should give orders at all.

Mr. OLIVER. I am stating the actual position, not as a matter of policy, but as a matter of legal right. Of course an agent, in giving orders or authorization, should be sure that the Indian would be both able and willing to pay, or he should not give the order. If it should be within my hon. friend's knowledge that many such orders have been given and are not being paid, by any particular agents, it would be an occasion for us to take the agent to task.

Mr. ALEX. HAGGART. On this item of implements, tools, &c., I find that $68,000 worth of implements and tools were distributed amongst these twenty agencies in Manitoba and the Northwest. Is there any general instructions given to the agents as to where they shall purchase these tools and instruments? Can the agent buy when and where he likes, and give such prices as he likes?

Mr. OLIVER. The garden seeds are bought in bulk by tender by the department here, but the implements are bought by the local agent, and their orders are to buy at the lowest trade prices.

Mr. BARR. Are tenders asked for these implements?

Mr. OLIVER. No, not as a rule. The implements are sold at the standard price. Throughout so large an extent of territory the price may vary according to locality.

Seeds, field and garden, $2,177.

Mr. ROCHE. While I notice there is a considerable decrease in this item from last year, from $11,000 down to $2,000 odd, still, after so many years of voting seed supplies, even garden seeds, is it a fact that none of these reserves are self-sustaining, and that after getting government assistance for so many years, they cannot even produce their own garden and field seeds?

Mr. OLIVER. There is a vast extent of territory and a great variety of conditions. Some of the reservations are able to provide their own seed, and some are not. The reason for the large purchase last year was of course the general crop conditions which affected some of the Indian reservations as well as other localities. This year that condition does not exist, therefore we ask for a much smaller vote. The reserves which require assistance to supply seed during the coming year are what might be called the outside points, which are on the verge of cultivation, Norway House, Fort Francis, Clandeboye. There is wanted at Birtle 200 bushels of oats, at Portage la Prairie, garden seeds to the amount of $5; at Clandeboye, $35 for garden seeds and 150 bushels of potatoes.

Mr. ROCHE. The minister says oats are wanted at Birtle. I presume he means the Birtle agency. That I think consists of several reserves; they are in my own constituency. The district is an oat growing district. Does the minister know what particular reservation this is for?

Mr. OLIVER. It is for the Cree reservation.

Mr. BRADBURY. It is a singular thing that you have to buy potatoes for the Clandeboye reservation, in a district where they raise hundreds of thousands of bushels, one of the finest potato districts in the world.

Mr. OLIVER. There are 150 bushels wanted at the Clandeboye agency. I cannot say why it is wanted. But it does not follow that because some Indians may have seed the others have it.

Live stock, $6,960.

Mr. ROCHE. Is this expenditure purely for the purpose of improving the stock?

Mr. OLIVER. For the purpose of keeping up the stock and increasing it, with an eye to improving it. They are killing stock from year to year, as permitted by the agent. The stock is increasing and improving.

Mr. LAKE. I notice that very large prices are paid for stock which is sent to some of the reservations. I notice one person at Guelph has apparently been shipping up bulls to some of the reservations at an average price of $115. Quite a number of cattle have been sent up by him. I am sure that in the old settlements nearer these reservations, bulls of equally good quality could be got at much lower prices. In fact I notice that many of the reservations are supplied by the local associations. For instance the Alberta Stock Association appears to supply a number at $60 and $70 a piece. The Manitoba Stock Association appears to have supplied some at about the same price. That, I think, is about the price at which good bulls could be got in that country. In the district where I live it has been difficult to dispose of thoroughbred stock. Even yet there is good stock to be got at a much lower price than $115 at which a good deal of the demand appears to have been supplied.

Mr. OLIVER. I believe in years past there have been some purchases of stock from Mr. McRae at Guelph. I believe he is one of the few breeders of Galloways in the country and it was thought well to experiment with a breed of cattle, that, being supposed to be particularly hardy, would be more likely to do well than other breeds under the possibly not high-class attention that they would receive at the hands of the Indians. But during the past two years the large majority of the thoroughbred horned stock that has been purchased has been bought at the stock sales at Calgary, Regina and Brandon, each province being supplied from the purchases at its own stock sale. We have found that very satisfactory and propose to continue it, provided the sales are continued successfully.

Mr. ROCHE. What is the name of the agent at Portage la Prairie?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Logan.

Mr. ROCHE. I noticed his name figuring in the Auditor General's Report for the sale of a great quantity of stock to the Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. OLIVER. In last year's report ?

Mr. ROCHE. Yes, in the report ending 31st March, 1908.

Mr. OLIVER. What page?

Mr. ROCHE. I noticed one item, page I—20, in connection with the Birtle agency. It says: 'Logan, R., agent, Birtle.' He is not the agent at Birtle. Mr. Wheatley is the agent. I have seen Mr. Logan's name in several places as disposing of stock in the Portage la Prairie agency to the amount of several hundred dollars.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not understand the item, but I will inquire into the meaning of it as it appears in the Auditor General's Report, and let my hon. friend have whatever explanation there is in regard to it.

Mr. MAGRATH. There is a feature in connection with two reserves, with which my hon. friend is familiar, which has been brought to his attention before and which I propose to refer to now briefly. One is the Blood Indian agency and the other the Blackfeet Indian agency. I presume this is about as favourable an opportunity to speak of it as I cannot see any item particularly dealing with agencies. The situation of the Blood agency is this: They hold about 345,000 acres of land. They had a population, according to the last report, of 1,178, and the excess of births over deaths in the last year amounts to 10. But by going back to 1897 I find that the population on that reserve was 1,300, or a decrease of practically a little over a hundred. So that these reserves are becoming depopulated as time goes on. Looking over the returns I find that they have 3,100 horses and 5,500 head of horned stock, or about 8,600 head altogether. We know that that amount of stock will not require more than 150,000 acres and these Indians have 345,000 acres. The Indians are disappearing and I believe, and I am satisfied the hon. gentleman himself believes, that there should be something done with a certain amount of the surplus land so that the Indians who are there to-day may get some benefit from it. There happens to be, as the hon. gentleman knows, a settlement on the south boundary of that reserve which cannot extend in any direction except on to the reserve, and I believe the hon. gentleman has made some efforts to get the Indians to release a certain proportion of their land. I hold probably the same view as the minister that the trust is sacred to the people of Canada. The Indians are our wards and we have to protect them, but I take the position that if they cannot use the land for the reserve and if the disposal of the land would result in the development of the country, the land should be disposed of. I also realize that the Indian has to be controlled. I cannot say that I endorse the methods which are employed in the handling of the Indians. I do not know much about the subject, but I think it is a mistake to try to educate the head and allow the Indian to continue as a savage in the treatment of his stomach. I think that if we worked the other way we would make more of the Indian. However, I do not suppose the minister wants to listen to my theories on that subject. Does the hon. gentleman believe with me that it is in the interest of the settler, and that it is in the interest of the Indian as well, that the land should be sold? I understand the hon. gentleman to say that we cannot sell Indian reserves. That is quite true, but the Indian is an individual that can be controlled. He can be advised as long as he has confidence in the people that he is dealing with. That has been my experience with the Indian. I do not hold to the opinion that a good Indian is a dead Indian. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he has not made efforts to get these Indians to dispose of some of that land? I understand that he has, but if he would, when he is in the country, endeavour to make it possible himself to see the Indians, I believe that it could be accomplished. There is no use sending a boy on a man's errand to the Indian. He likes to get hold of the chief muck-a-muck of the country when he is going to do anything. I think that if the hon. gentleman would take that into consideration and if, when he is in that section of the country, he would let us know we would endeavour to meet the Indians and see whether that cannot be accomplished. The hon. gentleman goes as far as I do in believing that a portion of this land might be sold and that the settlers should have the opportunity of buying it and paying a proper price for it. I do not believe in taking advantage of the Indian, and I do not believe anybody in Canada wishes to do so. But there is the settler starving for land; there is the Indian without the means of occupying more than probably one-third of his land; he is dying off, and as time goes on, unless we can get the Indian to sell some of his land, he will disappear without having received any benefit from his property and it will revert to the government. I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman has to say with regard to this proposition. As far as the expenditure is concerned I have nothing to say.

Mr. OLIVER. As the hon. gentleman has said, I am fairly familiar with the conditions connected with the Blood and Blackfeet reserves, the two largest reserves in the west, the best situated and of the very greatest value. I am entirely at one with the opinion expressed by my hon. friend that it would be very much in the interest of the Indians that a very considerable portion of these reserves should be disposed of, the money made available to the Indian and the land made available to the man who would use it. That is the policy I have been carrying forward to the best of my ability and in pursuance of which we have secured a number of very substantial surrenders of Indian lands, to the benefit, I think, of the Indians who surrendered, and, of course, to the benefit of the settlers and of the country by reason of the land having become productive, whereas it would have remained unproductive had it remained in the hands of the Indians. We have undertaken to secure surrenders of part of the Blood reserve, and we have had some discussion in regard to the surrender of part of the Blackfoot reserve. We have not been successful in securing the surrender. I do not know that it is a thing that will be advanced very much by being spoken about.

Mr. MAGRATH. The Indians do not read 'Hansard.'

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians are apt to hear what is said and to translate into it their own ideas and possibly to get exaggerated views of their own situation. So far we have found them indisposed to sell at any price; I may say they have practically refused to consider the matter. That of course is the result of the domination of certain individual men of influence in the band and any one who knows the persistence of the Indian character will believe that so long as these men remain it is going to be a very difficult matter to get their assent. An instance of this persistence on the part of the Indians is the case of timber on the Dokis reserve which was sold last year. Here was a reserve small in area, of absolutely no value to the Indians, and yet they held it for years and years while its value was in danger of being absolutely destroyed by the timber being burnt. But although they lived in poverty while they were rich in the value of that reserve, yet for years they would not listen to a proposition of surrender. At long last we secured the surrender of the timber and this little band of 83 Indians at once came into wealth to the amount of over $800,000 in cash, and not less than $1,000,000 in dues when the timber is cut and sold. When you consider that perhaps all the Dokis band were really not thoroughbred Indians whereas the Bloods and the Blackfeet are not only thoroughbreds but have the reputation of being the most intractable Indians on the North American continent, except perhaps the Apaches of New Mexico, you will see the difficulty. I do not want to say that the task is impossible, but I do want to impress upon the House that it is one of very extraordinary difficulty. I quite appreciate the compliment my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) has paid me in suggesting that if I should undertake the work I might be successful. I beg to assure him that if I had as much faith in myself as he has attributed to me I would lose no time in undertaking to secure the surrender. Unfortunately I have not that confidence in my own persuasive ability and I am afraid I might fail as others have failed. However, it is the policy of the department as at present administered to secure the surrender of Indian lands when these lands are of no present value to the Indians and when they would be of present value in adding to the productive wealth of the country. That is our policy; we have carried it forward very successfully during the last few years. It is our policy in regard to the Bloods and the Black Feet as it is in regard to all the reserves in the country.

Mr. MAGRATH. Has the minister any objection to state whom he sent to try and get the Indians to release. I think Mr. Markle was one and possibly the Rev. John MacDougall went also.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. MacDougall was negotiating with the Sarsees, but I do not think he went to the Blackfeet or Bloods. Mr. Markle had been trying to deal with the Blackfeet with whom he was well acquainted because he lived for a number of years on the reserve, and I think Mr. James Wilson the former agent on the Blood reserve attempted to get a surrender in the first instance but that attempt was made before I came to the department. Mr. Markle has made one or two attempts but without success.

Mr. MAGRATH. I believe it would be in the interests of the people of that locality if the Minister of the Interior as head of the Indian Department would go to these Indians himself. I have more faith in the hon. gentleman in that respect than he apparently has in himself, and I believe that the Indian wants to be approached by the head man. I find that the income of these Indians according to the last annual report amounts to about $31,000 which on the basis of five to a family gives them $130 a year each, and the expenditure in connection with these Indians has amounted to something like $37,000, which is very considerable. In connection with the Blackfoot reserve I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that there is an irrigation enterprise being extended in the country adjoining that reserve. There is only enough water for 15 per cent of the semi-arid country either in Canada or in the United States, and if you could make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway to apply water to that land now is the time to do it as it is perhaps the only opportunity you will ever have. If the water is applied to other lands now it will preclude the possibility of the portion of that reserve along the railway ever receiving water.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to ask the minister if anything has been done with regard to the surrender of a portion of the Peigan agency. I believe the department has had applications for the surrender of a portion of that reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not recall that there have been any efforts with regard to the Peigan agency, at all events they have not been so persistent as with regard to the Bloods and the Blackfeet, if there is a prospect of succeeding we are prepared to undertake it.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. Have the Indians of Swan Lake surrendered all their land?

Mr. OLIVER. No, only about half of it. They had two reserves and have surrendered the whole of their reserve in the Battleford district. The surrendered lands are in process of being surveyed and offered for sale.

Supplies for destitute Indians, $121,105.

Mr. ROCHE. The minister stated that the medical men in Nova Scotia attending schools and hospitals and reserves were paid when called upon or when any Indians waited upon them for medical attendance at their offices. Does this hold good in regard to this vote as well? For example, there is a hospital in the Birtle agency. It is attended by a Dr. Wright of Russell. I notice in the Auditor General's Report, page I—20, that he drew $973 last year for attending at that hospital. Was he paid only for the trips he made when sent for or does he make periodical trips whether sent for or not, in addition to prescribing at his office?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand he is paid to make a monthly visit whether called upon or not and has to answer calls as well.

Mr. ROCHE. Does he get anything in addition to his mileage and regular attendance fees for operations?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that this covers all services.

Mr. ROCHE. Can the minister say how far Dr. Wright lives from the hospital?

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to say. Perhaps my hon. friend could.

Mr. ROCHE. Dr. Wright has to travel fully twenty-five miles to this reserve, and there is located in the town of Rossburn, within three or four miles of the hospital, another physician, Dr. Evans, of equally good professional qualifications, and it would be much less expensive for the department to employ the physician living nearer the hospital, besides being so convenient in case of emergency. If the two physicians lived in the same town, I would not object. Dr. Wright, who was the Liberal candidate in the last election, is able to hold down the job, which is looked upon by his fellow-practitioners as something of a snap; but I do not think it is at all fair to the other medical man in this district.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not familiar with the circumstances. Russell is an old town and very likely Dr. Wright was practising there and was given this work before there was a Rossburn, and it is quite possible that Dr. Wright is giving satisfaction and that there is a desire not to make a change.

Mr. ROCHE. Since the facts have been laid before the minister I presume he will take them into his consideration and try to save the department as much as possible. I would also refer to another old friend of the minister, Dr. Lafferty of Calgary. The Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Aylesworth) when filling the position of Postmaster General, laid down the principle that no postmaster whose salary was sufficient to maintain him should engage in other business in competition with the business men of the town. This principle was applied in Cannington when it was only suspected that a postmaster had an interest in a grocery business. Why is that principle not applicable to medical men? Dr. Lafferty is practising in Calgary and the other medical men are handicapped by reason of the subsidy he gets from the government for attendance on industrial schools and Indians. He draws the following amounts for attendance of this kind: Indian school at Calgary, $345; Calgary Industrial School, $200; Sarcee Agency, $350; Blackfoot Agency, $654; Stoney Reserve, $443; or altogether, by way of salary and expenses from this department last year he received $2,000 in round numbers, in addition to his general practice in Calgary. Again I would not object if he was upon all fours with competing medical men in Calgary. It is well known that he is the director of ceremonies in Liberal matters in Calgary. But other medical men are located nearer the reserves than he is. The Blackfoot agency is forty or fifty, perhaps seventy, miles from Calgary, and still Dr. Lafferty is brought all that distance to attend the reserves. Dr. Lafferty is taken all the way out there and is running up expenses in connection with his trips, whereas there are two medical men right at Gleichen where the agency is located. I do not think it right to import a medical man from Calgary to attend the Indians there whose services I do not suppose would be valued any more highly than those of the two medical men who reside at Gleichen and who, by reason of their convenience as well as professional attainments, would give as good satisfaction, to say the least, as Dr. Lafferty. Stoney reserve is some twenty-five miles from Calgary, and for his services and expenses at this reserve Dr. Lafferty drew $443. The Minister of Agriculture laid it down the other day as a principle that in cases of quarantine, where there was a local veterinary surgeon in the locality affected, he should be employed to look after the quarantine. And in one instance in which it was pointed out that there was a local veterinary in the locality, he said he was not aware of that fact or he would not have sent a man there, and he would see that that was not done again. If that principle is applicable in the Agricultural Department, it should be equally applicable in the Department of the Interior. I would ask the minister if he does not think it is rather unfair to give Dr. Lafferty $2,000 practically of a subsidy for attending these four reserves when there are medical men right in the immediate neighbourhood of each?

Mr. OLIVER. The case of Dr. Lafferty is much the same as I suggested was probably the case with Dr. Wright. At the time Dr. Lafferty was appointed, I do not think there was any question that he was as conveniently situated as any other medical man for carrying on the work. True, since then other medical men have come in who are no doubt more conveniently situated, but the House will appreciate the undesirability of displacing a man who is giving satisfaction and has been long employed.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will be saving money for the country.

Mr. OLIVER. I think that the employment of a medical man is on a somewhat different footing from the employment of other officers, and that in the case of the Indians, the employment of a man who has their confidence, who has had long experience among them and who takes great interest in his work is very desirable. I think it would be a mistake to let such a man go for the difference in cost. As to the impropriety of Dr. Lafferty practising in Calgary and at the same time attending the Indian reserve, I can only say that if he is able under the circumstances to retain any practice in Calgary it must be because of his very superior qualifications.

Mr. ROCHE. How often has he to visit those reserves?

Mr. OLIVER. He has to make a regular visit once a month to each, and has to go on call as well, so that his Indian work must take up a good deal of his time.

Mr. ROCHE. I notice in the Auditor General's Report an item for the expenses of a trip of Dr. Lafferty to Ottawa, $160.85. What business had he of a public nature that brought him to Ottawa and entitled him to charge up his expenses against the department?

Mr. OLIVER. There was a medical convention held here with regard to tuberculosis, and as Dr. Lafferty has had special opportunity of studying that disease in the course of his practice on the Indian reserves, it was thought in the public interests that he should be given the opportunity of placing his information at the disposal of the convention.

Mr. ROCHE. Is this an annual event?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say, but if it be an annual event I should certainly think it proper that the convention should have the advantage of Dr. Lafferty's experience in dealing with these diseases.

Mr. ROCHE. In looking over the reports of this convention, I fail to see any important part taken by Dr. Lafferty in laying his views on this most important subject, before the convention.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister is laying down a very extraordinary principle. We have many medical experts in this country, whose experience and knowledge would be as valuable at that convention as Dr. Lafferty's. If it be in the public interest to pay Dr. Lafferty's expenses to that convention, should not the government pay the expenses of these other men as well?

Mr. OLIVER. I would think that Dr. Lafferty's experience in dealing with tuberculosis among the Indians would be of considerable value to the convention, and I am bound to suppose also that the experience of other men interested in the same subject would be of considerable value to Dr. Lafferty in his work among the Indians. Even if you say that the information he had acquired was of no value to the convention, I still hold that the information to be there gathered would be of value to Dr. Lafferty and consequently to the Indian Department, and worth all it cost.

Mr. SPROULE. Turn the convention into a school for the purpose of improving medical men.

Mr. OLIVER. I take it that was the purpose of the convention.

Mr. SPROULE. If that argument be sound, would it not be equally fair and just to pay other medical men, say those coming from the maritime provinces, where their professional experience brought them much more knowledge of that kind probably than Dr. Lafferty would have? Would it not be fairer that they should be paid than he, because they gave their professional knowledge, not only to the world at large, but to Dr. Lafferty to make use of when he goes back to attend the Indians? It seems to me unfair to pay one and not the other.

Mr. OLIVER. The difference is this: Dr. Lafferty is working amongst the Indians for the Indian Department, and the Indian Department through the Indians gets the benefit of any additional information he secures, whereas the Indian Department has no interest whatever in the amount of information the other gentlemen get. I do not think there is any person in all Canada who has the same opportunities that Dr. Lafferty has for studying this particular trouble, or who may be presumed to have the opportunity of using to advantage any information that he might acquire; having in charge three Indian reserves, one of them having, if not the largest, the second largest Indian population in the country, and the others having a very considerable population, and with the decreased Indian population which my hon. friend from Medicine Hat has spoken of, everybody must realize that there are very remarkable and melancholy opportunities for studying that particular disease under the notice of Dr. Lafferty.

Mr. SPROULE. There may be, and there may be other localities where there are five or ten deaths from consumption to every one there is in that country; and suppose a very eminent medical man comes from one of those localities and gives information which Dr. Lafferty would use for the benefit of the Indians and the Indian Department, would it not be reasonable for the country to pay him as to pay for Dr. Lafferty? If it is pretended that Dr. Lafferty is an expert in that line above dozens of other medical men in the country, or has any greater opportunities for studying the disease or treating patients afflicted with it, that may pass with men outside of the profession, but it will not pass with men in the profession who are doing perhaps twice or three times the practice of Dr. Lafferty in the same line.

Triennial clothing, $4,645; increase, $1,969.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the cause of this increase? If the Indians are dying off so rapidly, how is it you want more clothing?

Mr. OLIVER. This clothing is supplied every three years, and a larger number happened to come in for their clothing this year than the number that came last year.

Indian schools, $276,541; decrease, $9,051.

Mr. ROCHE. If my memory serves me correctly, Dr. Bryce made a rather uncomplimentary report—in fact, rather severely reflecting upon the sanitary arrangements of many of these schools which he inspected a year or so ago. Can the minister give us any information as to whether steps have been taken during the past year to remedy the condition of affairs complained of by Dr. Bryce?

Mr. OLIVER. It is true Dr. Bryce did make a comprehensive report in regard to the health conditions of the Indian schools, and there is no doubt that it was not altogether complimentary. These schools were built many years ago before very much attention was given to this particular trouble, which affects the Indians more especially, and which requires, above all other diseases, the best housing conditions. The buildings were constructed without due regard to what we have so fully in mind today, and of course as time went by they were getting older and less suitable, and it was with a feeling of that fact that we had Dr. Bryce make an examination and report. Since the report has been made there has been some substantial improvement in the conditions, but to put the buildings on a proper footing would require the larger number of them to be absolutely renewed. Therefore, the improvement of the conditions up to the point it is desired to reach is necessarily comparatively slow. Besides, only part of the buildings were constructed by the Indian Department or by the government. The capital expenditure upon a very considerable number of the schools was made by the different missionary societies, but latterly the department has been from time to time assisting these societies to improve the sanitary conditions of the buildings and generally to bring them up to the modern standard.

Mr. MAGRATH. Who are the inspectors of Indian schools? Is there more than one?

Mr. OLIVER. The inspectors of agencies inspect the schools.

Indian surveys, $15,000; increase, $4,000.

Mr. ROCHE. Where have the surveys been principally carried out during the past year?

Mr. OLIVER. That part of the survey work was done on St. Peter's reserve, on the Red river below Winnipeg. We secured a surrender of the reserve, and it was necessary to make a new survey of it in order to provide for selling the land. Swan Lake, on which we secured a partial surrender, was surveyed, and I believe the reserve Sturgeon Lake.

Mr. ROCHE. What is the necessity for the $4,000 increase?

Mr. OLIVER. Because we have secured several surrenders of reservations, and require to subdivide them in order to sell.

Mr. MAGRATH. Are those surveys performed by contract or day work?

Mr. OLIVER. The surveys are done by two salaried surveyors of the department, Mr. Reid and Mr. McLean.

Grist and sawmill, $637.

Mr. LAKE. Is the department thinking of giving up the maintenance of these grist and sawmills?

Mr. OLIVER. Where the conditions have changed, or where settlement has changed the conditions so that it is not necessary to keep up saw or grist mills, I suppose we would dispense with them; but where conditions remain as they were when the mill was established, we intend to maintain it.

Mr SPROULE. How many grist and saw mills have you running now?

Mr. OLIVER. About six. They are portable mills.

General expenses, $222,324.

Mr. ROCHE. I would like to ask the minister if there is anything in the press report of a week or so ago about Mr. J. J. McKenna, Assistant Commissioner, being about to receive another appointment, and to be succeeded by Mr. S. Jackson, the ex-member for Selkirk.

Mr. OLIVER. In regard to that, I may say that for some time it has seemed to the department that the necessity for the Commissioner's office in Winnipeg, at least the necessity which existed in former years, had practically come to an end, and that the staff now employed in the commissioner's office might be employed with some advantage in other parts of the department's work. It is proposed that the office be dispensed with, abolished, and to employ the members of the staff there in other branches of the department.

Mr. ROCHE. Without making any addition?

Mr. OLIVER. There will be no office to make additions to.

Mr. ROCHE. On page I—30 of the Auditor General's Report there is an item:

Ben Rush, Melfort: amount charged on account of increase in cost of material between the time of submitting and awarding contract, $200.50.

This is part of an item of $2,839. It struck me as peculiar that the contractor should be allowed $200 for increase in the cost of the material after the contract was submitted. That, I presume, means the time between the date when the tenders were asked for and received, and the time the contract was signed. The effect was to raise the amount of the tender by $200. It seems a somewhat unique principle to act upon. I wonder whether, if the material had diminished in value in the meantime, the contractor would have consented to diminish his contract by that much.

Mr. OLIVER. I scarcely think the hon. gentleman can consider the latter suggestion seriously. If he wishes, I will have an inquiry made, and bring the facts to the House.

Mr. ROCHE. And bring the other tenders too.

Mr. BRADBURY. I cannot find an item in the Auditor General's Report regarding a boat used on Lake Winnipeg. I know the Indian Department have a boat there, but I do not find an account in this book.

Mr. OLIVER. When an agent is making his annuity payments he must travel by boat, and my information is that he hires a boat when he requires to make payments. We have not a boat of our own.

Mr. BRADBURY. That is not the boat I refer to. There was a fisherman's boat employed by the month. The boat was employed for three months, and after the time expired it was engaged again for two months until after the election was over. It was used for election purposes. My opponent used that boat on Lake Winnipeg for two weeks.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the use of that boat would not appear in the Auditor General's Report for this year, it would appear in the next one. The boat was employed in connection with the surrender of the St. Peter's reserve. Part of the terms of the surrender was that the Indians should be aided in removing from the old reserve at St. Peter's to the new reserve at Fisher river, and the boat was employed for some months in that work going back and forward between the two reserves.

Mr. BRADBURY. I desire to call the attention of the minister to some facts regarding the surrender of St. Peter's reserve. There is great dissatisfaction over the manner in which that surrender was conducted. There are men who take a great deal of credit for having secured the surrender of the reserve. I am led to understand that the manner in which the surrender was secured was very questionable. I know the nature of the Indian and I heard the hon. gentleman explain how hard it is to deal with him. When they called the chiefs and council together to secure their consent they refused, and there is a report current in Selkirk since the surrender was made that the surrender of the chief and council was purchased and that these men were bought to sell the band. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction existing to-day amongst the band with the manner in which the surrender was made. I might call to the attention of the minister the manner in which the land was handled. I heard the minister say a few minutes ago that the Indian had no right to sell land. I have always understood that the Indian, being a ward of the country had no power to convey, but this surrender was unique inasmuch as it made the Indian a land owner. The department gave the Indian sixteen acres of land to dispose of as he saw fit. The consequence was that this land immediately dropped into the hands of a few speculators and about 25,000 acres of land which should have netted the department or Indian from $10 to $15 per acre has been purchased by a few friends of the government because none but a political friend of the agent at Selkirk dare take the chance of purchasing this land because there was no guarantee, when he had negotiated with the Indian for this 16 acres of land, that he would be able to obtain a title. He was at the mercy of the Indian agent. Consequently, the land fell into the hands of friends of the government. The Indians have disposed of the land and have received not more than $3.50 to $4 per acre. There is a great deal of discontent, not only among the Indians but among the people of Selkirk who feel that there was a deal in this transaction. Of course I do not suppose that the minister will believe that possible. I am not blaming the minister for it. I am trying to draw his attention to it. But, a deal of this kind did take place at Selkirk. I have a petition from the Ojibways who occupied part of the reserve asking that they be granted another reserve. They are not satisfied with the reserve which you have given them at Fisher river.

With regard to the boat that the minister spoke of, it was in commission for, I think five or six months of the year, and in addition to that another steamer was engaged for taking the Indians out. While they had the 'Fisherman,' the 'Mikado' was commissioned to take out Indians and supplies. The 'Fisherman' was in active commission by my opponent Mr. Jackson travelling up and down the lake; he was using it for canvassing purposes. I did not object to it, but I do not think that a boat paid for by the people should be used for political purposes.

With regard to the officials of the department, I understand that there was an order issued by the government that no official was supposed to take part in a political campaign. There is not a government appointee in Selkirk that was not actively engaged in the campaign from the Indian agent down. This practice is deplorable and something ought to be done to stop it.

Mr. OLIVER. The hour is getting late but I might make a statement in regard to this particuar reserve that may be of some interest to the committee. But, principally I want to draw the attention of the committee to the difficulties which appertain to the position which I at present happen to hold. A few minutes ago the hon. member representing Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath) voiced the opinion, and voiced it well, that the department should use every endeavour to secure the surrender of a certain reserve or parts of two certain reserves. Now my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Bradbury), in whose district the department was successful in securing a surrender last year, complains strongly of the method and of the results of the surrender. The surrender was negotiated by a gentleman who is now the chief justice of Manitoba. He was appointed as the sole commissioner to secure the surrender because of his prominence, of his standing and of his legal ability. It was thoroughly understood that the question was a most difficult one, that it was most complicated, that the surrender could not be secured by any ordinary negotiations, and therefore a gentleman in whose legal ability, as well as in whose character, I presume, everybody had confidence, was selected. He carried the surrender through with a great deal of difficulty, after many hitches and after it appeared that it had become impossible. However, he did secure the surrender and it certainly contained many peculiar terms. I do not suppose there ever was a surrender like it before, and I fervently hope that there will never be one like it again. One of the terms was that the Indians should be given title to some part of the reserve. It was a remarkable condition but I place it before the House as an evidence of how far the department is willing to go in order to meet the Indians and in order that the land may be turned to beneficial use. The Indian would only sign the surrender of the reserve as a whole when he got this particular piece of land as his very own to do with it as he pleased, and when he got it as his very own we had no control over him as an Indian Department or as a government. He could dispose of it as he pleased and the buyer who wanted that land had to buy it from him under such terms as might be agreed upon and took such chances as any man must take who deals with another man who has not been used to ordinary legal responsibilities in business transactions.

Mr. ROCHE. Was it upon Mr. Howell's recommendation the department granted these 16 acres?

Mr. OLIVER. It was not on his recommendation; it was in accordance with one of the principal terms in the treaty which he made with the Indians, and the term upon which the whole surrender hinged. I regret it should be said that improper means were used to secure this surrender. I cannot imagine that the gentleman who is now Chief Justice Howell would be a party to any improper proceedings.

Mr. BRADBURY. I did not say so and would not like to have it inferred that I did.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend did not say it. I say that the surrender was on the responsibility of the present Chief Justice Howell. and I do not think that he would be a party to anything of that kind. The Indian Department certainly had no knowledge of it because the matter was placed absolutely in Mr. Howell's hands. I regret that the Indians concerned are not satisfied, because in my humble estimation, the Indians got a great deal the best end of the bargain, and if I had been transacting the business in person they certainly would not have got as good terms as Mr. Howell gave them. However, if my hon. friend knows the Indians as well as I do he will know that the fact that an Indian is not satisfied with his bargain is not evidence that he did not get the best of it. I had hoped all along that in securing this surrender it was for the benefit of the Indians themselves, and for the benefit of that part of the country. I believe the Indians will be better off on the new reserve and that the town of Selkirk and the surrounding country will be very greatly benefited by the fact that the surrender was made.

Mr. BRADBURY. I do not want it to be inferred for a moment that I intended to cast any reflection on Chief Justice Howell. What I said was that these rumours were circulating around Selkirk and I have it from one of the head men that they did receive from that commission four or five times more land than the average Indian received. In addition to that, these men were kept constantly in the employment of those who were purchasing this land. I know one man who told me himself that he paid the chief and council $2 per day for attending at his office and helping to negotiate sales. I have a letter here from Chief Prince's son which bears out what I state, namely, that the chief and council received some inducement for agreeing to make that settlement; an inducement which the band knew nothing at all about but which they have since found out and of course they are very much dissatisfied. I think I know the Indian pretty well, as I have lived among them for 27 years. I know there is a great deal in what the minister has said, that once an Indian parts with something he wants to get it back again. The point I was trying to impress upon the committee was that there could have been a much better settlement made with the Indians in the interest of the Indian himself and in the interest of Selkirk. The surrender itself was a good one, it was what the people of Selkirk wanted, but I do not think the interests of Selkirk were taken into account in the details of that surrender. We had three or four hundred Indians living along the river, some of them fairly well off and every one of them a wage earner and they spent their money in the town of Selkirk. Now this land has passed into the hands of large owners, the capitalists have got it, and they are holding it for a very high price so that the land will lie idle along that river for many years to come, and when it is settled there will not likely be one settler where there were 100 before. While I am on my feet, I want to say that the minister knows we have on Lake Winnipeg a number of Galicians settled on land which is utterly unfit for any human beings to make a living out of. To my mind the wise policy of the government would have been when they secured that surrender to sell the reserve on 20 year or 30 year payments to these Galicians. These people are developing into an excellent class of settlers and they would have been a credit to that part of the country, and a great help to the town of Selkirk. I regret very much that the surrender was put through in the manner in which it was, and I think if the minister had to put it through again it would not go through on the same lines.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fisher, House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 15, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of the Interior for the year ended March 31, 1908.—Mr. Oliver.

FISHING BOUNTY.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. CROSBY. I beg to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) if it is not a fact that all the fishing districts in the county of Halifax are without the blank form required to be filled up in making application for the fishing bounty for last year, that the money should have been paid before this?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know anything about the matter, but I will inquire from the officers of the department and inform my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister should find that there has been delay, such as my hon. friend from Halifax has mentioned, would he be good enough to inform him as to what is the cause of the delay?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. These blanks should have been filled in between April and August last but they have not yet been supplied and information is desired as to the cause of the delay?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will get the information and give it to my hon. friend.

REMOVAL OF PLANKS FROM HIGHWAYS.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if the report in the western papers is true to the effect that the Board of Railway Commissioners has issued an order forbidding railways, during winter, to remove planks from the public highways at crossings ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have heard nothing whatever about it.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is reported in the Winnipeg newspapers.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. PERLEY. I would like to ask the right hon. the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether they intend to bring in an Insurance Bill this session, and if so, when; as I think it is very necessary that we should know as quickly as possible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is expected that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will be here in a few days and then perhaps I will be able to answer the question of my hon. friend.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask if the Civil Service Commission have presented their report yet, as required by the Act ?

Mr. FISHER. That report does not come down until the end of the fiscal year, and the report of the commission as to their operations this year will not be due until next session.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems that, having been appointed on the 1st September, 1908, they ought to give their report as required by the Act.

Mr. FISHER. I should take it that the report would cover the fiscal year, that it would be presented to the government like any other departmental report and would be laid on the table in accordance with the Act. As no report can be made to parliament this session it would be presented at the next session of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps the Prime Minister would look into the matter.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have already looked into the matter. The other day, when my hon. friend inquired for the report of the Civil Service Commissioners, I sent over at once and asked the commissioners to come to my office, which they did. When informed of the request of my hon. friend they did not anticipate that they were called upon to make a report. I cannot express any opinion on the matter but I asked Mr. Shortt, and Mr. Larochelle whether, according to their interpretation, of the Act they were bound to put such a report on the table this session.

POST OFFICE RETURNS—RE-APPOINTMENTS, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy) to call the attention of the Post Office Department to the fact that they have sent in an incomplete report in answer to an order. The Post Office Department must be bigger than to have made only twelve appointments, no promotions, and only one transfer.

Mr. LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). During the year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, according to the report.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will inquire into it.

BRAZILIAN ELECTRO STEEL AND SMELTING CO.

House in committee on Bill (No. 10) respecting the Brazilian Electro Steel and Smelting Co.—Mr. Pardee.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me to be a bad policy for this parliament to incorporate companies designed to operate in foreign countries, and to give them powers which they are to exercise subject to the laws of the country in which they operate. I have always thought this was one of the devices adopted by a certain class of people to raise money out of their friends at home to be invested in foreign countries where it is quite impossible for the parties who furnish the money to have any intelligent oversight of its expenditure. We have two or three Bills on the Order Paper to incorporate such companies at the present time. They are first incorporated under the Joint Stock Compnaies' Act, then they come here for an Act of Incorporation, and without a very close analysis of the measure we do not know whether we may or may not be giving them power which it is unwise to give them. It seems to me there ought to be some one connected with the government who would look into these Bills very carefully, because I am afraid their effect is very often to mislead innocent public who are induced to put money into these enterprises and who sometimes lose their money. These companies should be incorporated in the countries in which they are going to operate.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have generally referred these Bills to special committees and have accepted their reports. The suggestion made by the hon. gentleman may be very proper, and I have no desire to combat it at the moment, but I have no doubt all this will be looked into by the committee before the Bill is allowed to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. I was on that committee for a considerable time, and I remmber that the committee paid little attention to these Bills because it was contended that when such a Bill got a second reading the principle was adopted and that all that remained for the committee was to consider the clauses.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is undoubtedly true with regard to a public Bill, but it is certainly not so in the case of a private Bill. The first question put on a private Bill is whether the preamble shall pass, and that is the first thing the committee has to deal with.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 15) respecting the Mexican Land and Irrigation Co.—Mr. Pardee.

LAKE SUPERIOR BRANCH GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

Mr. TURRIFF moved the second reading of Bill (No. 30) respecting the subsidy from the Ontario government to Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. TURRIFF. This is a Bill to confirm an agreement made between the Ontario government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and contained in chapter 18 of the Ontario statutes of 1904. Section 21 of that Act provides that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company shall come before this parliament and get an Act to confirm the agreement. This Bill is introduced at the request of the Ontario government and to carry out that arrangement. It applies particularly to sections 3 and 22 of the Ontario Act.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What is section 3?

Mr. TURRIFF. It is as follows:

1. In addition to the provisions of the Railway Act with respect to tolls, to be taken or levied by the said companies it is hereby enacted that there shall be no secret special rates, rebates, drawbacks or concessions to favoured shippers nor any act or thing that will affect or prevent free competition in any line or lines of trade.

2. Each of the said companies shall be obliged, upon the request of any township or county, municipality through which the line of railway passes, to carry road making material, gravel or stone, required for improving any of the road within any such municipality, at the cost of handling and carriage.

Section 22 provides that in the event of the Dominion government taking over the road, the subsidy given by the Ontario government shall be returned to them by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. These two clauses are being confirmed in the Bill which I am now asking to be read the second time.

Mr. CONMEE. I have sent copies of this Bill to the city of Port Arthur, which is interested in it, because the subsidy granted by the Ontario government was granted upon condition that the road should come to the shores of Thunder bay. I do not say that this Bill would relieve the company of that obligation, but it might do so. In my opinion the road as constructed is six or seven miles from Thunder bay.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) oppose the Bill?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I am only asking that it stand until I have an opportunity of hearing from the representatives of the city of Port Arthur. I had an interview this morning with one of the gentlemen connected with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and I understood from him that the Bill was to stand until the solicitor of the company came here to discuss the Bill and I desire to hear from Port Arthur. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. GRAHAM. This Bill seems to be a peculiar Bill. If I understand it correctly, it is to carry out an arrangement made between the Ontario government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. To begin with, I can hardly accept the policy that any other government and any company can get together and make an agreement which will commit us to pass any Act. It may be all right or it may not be all right. There may be some things in the Bill which it would be perfectly proper for us to confirm in order to protect the Ontario government against any acts that might be done by the company in default; but there is another part referring to rates which to my mind is not in accordance with our Railway Act. While one portion of the Bill insists that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company must not give any special rates or rebates to any person, another portion says that it must give special rates and rebates. To my mind these provisions are contradictory, and we are asked to confirm them both. The Board of Railway Commissioners having been adopted by us as the means whereby we control rates, for my part I want to adhere to that policy, and I would not wish to assent to any Act that would take the control of the rates to be charged by a company chartered by this parliament away from the Railway Commission. There may be some things in the Bill that it is necessary for us to confirm, but there are two or three things in it which at present I do not think we ought to confirm.

Motion for adjournment of debate agreed to.

ONTARIO AND MICHIGAN POWER COMPANY.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Thunder Bay and Rainy River) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 34) to incorporate the Ontario and Michigan Power Company.

Mr. BOYCE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to give some explanation of this Bill, as I believe it is practically the same as the Bill that was introduced last year.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not think it necessary to take up the time of the House in discussing the Bill before it went to the committee. I think hon. gentlemen understand the Bill fairly well. It is practically the same Bill as was introduced into the Senate last year, and practically the same as was carried in the Senate two years ago, with this difference, that in the previous Bill provision was made for the storage of water on the rivers mentioned, and in the first Bill reference was made to the Sturgeon river. All reference to that river and to storage of water upon either of the streams or the tributary waters has been removed from this Bill. The hope of the promoters was to simplify the Bill in order to remove criticism. It does not differ at all from a large number of Bills that have passed this House in recent years. I may say that the Ontario legislature has passed Bills similar in character to this, but with less safeguards. If it were necessary for me at this stage to discuss the Bill specifically, I think I could satisfy hon. gentlemen that no Bill that has come before the House within recent years has had better or more specific safeguards to protect the public interest. I would suggest that the Bill be allowed to go to the committee, where it can be discussed in all its details.

Mr. BOYCE. This is the third session during which we have had discussion on the principle of this Bill. Last session my hon. friend endeavoured to secure the passage of the principle of the Bill under this name and the preceding session under another name, but in each case he has met with a reverse, either in the Senate or in this House. The first Bill was defeated in this House, while the second was thrown out in the Senate committee after a somewhat lengthy debate. The objections to this Bill are serious, and I do not want to have it thought I am endeavouring captiously to take up time. By the Bill certain private rights are sought on two rivers flowing into Lake Superior, the Pigeon and Nepigon rivers. It is sought to acquire the use of the water-power on these rivers, accompanied by the right to acquire such lands, privileges, &c., as are necessary to carry out the operation of those water-powers. The Ontario government has laid out with considerable care a power policy for the development and control of power and the regulation of rates in that province. That power policy has been twice approved by the people of Ontario. It involves the very principles of control over water-powers of which this Bill endeavours to rob the province. Therefore, if this Bill were objectionable in nothing more than its invasion and violation of the principles of provincial rights, it should not be allowed to receive its second reading. I would point out in this connection the provisions of section 14, which are as follows:

In case of any dispute or difference as to the price to be charged for power or electrical or other energy, for any of the purposes in this Act mentioned, in use or to be provided for use upon the Canadian side of the international boundary, or as to the methods of distribution thereof, or as to the time within which or as to the quantity to be furnished, or the conditions upon which they shall be furnished for use, or as to the value of any lands, timber or other material, or the exercise of any of the provisions of this Act, such dispute or difference shall, notwithstanding the provisions of section 17 of The Railway Act, be settled by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada on the application of any user of or applicant for power, electrical or other energy produced by the Company, or upon the application of the Company.

One of the chief provisions of the Ontario Power Act is the control with regard to the user of the power and the regulation of rights which this section 14 would take away from the province. I do not want to discuss the Bill clause by clause; I am merely pointing out objections to its principle. The Senate committee was very emphatic in its condemnation of the Bill owing to its invasion of the rights of the province, counsel for the province being present and objecting to it. I hope, therefore, the House will not allow the Bill to receive its second reading.

Mr. BOYCE.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I would not for a moment take the ground my hon. friend does that it would be wise to negative the motion for the second reading. For my own information I would ask if these streams are boundary waters?

Mr. CONMEE. The Pigeon river is an international water and the Nipigon is a navigable water, and in my opinion also international in character because it forms a source of the lakes and connecting channels which are international. A case arose which makes that point quite clear in connection with the Rainy river. A company developing a power at Duluth undertook to divert a portion of the waters from the watershed of the Rainy river to the St. Louis river. The Canadian section of the Waterways Commission objected to that proceeding. There is a report upon that subject, the result of which was the Duluth Company were prevented from diverting portions of the water from flowing into Rainy lake, the source of Rainy river. The same conditions exist at Nipigon. Certain of the waters flowing into the Nipigon can be diverted very easily—I am speaking from personal knowledge of the ground—to the Albany river. There are very few points at the head of most of the large rivers on the north shore where that cannot be done, and there is a question as to where the line should be drawn as to what is international and what is not. These streams certainly form the international waters of the great lakes, and if we read correctly in the press, the recent treaty provides that the jurisdiction of the commission shall extend not only to the basin of the lakes but to the area of drainage. It is quite apparent that there must be a regulating power somewhere. In some respects the question of international waters are just as much an issue in the one stream as in the other.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the hon. member base his claim in reference to the Nipigon river on its being an international water?

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all, that is only incidental; it is a navigable water.

Mr. BOYCE. For what distance?

Mr. CONMEE. No dam or bridge can be constructed across any navigable stream without the consent of the federal authority. There is a case in point. A Bill has been passed by this House relating to the development of water-power at Fort Frances by the Ontario and Minnesota Power Company.

Mr. BOYCE. That is an international water.

Mr. CONMEE. Certainly, so is the Nipigon river, to a certain extent at least, in my opinion.

Mr. BOYCE. Not seriously?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I am quite serious, and I am quite prepared to back up my opinion with sufficient evidence.

Mr. FOSTER. On what do you base it?

Mr. CONMEE. On common sense.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have a chunk of it.

Mr. CONMEE. I know my hon. friend would perhaps be the better of a little of it. I was trying to enlighten him, if I could. I won't say at this stage that I will undertake to satisfy my hon. friend that I am right, but if he will tell me where he can draw the line between what is international and what is not international water, he will give me some information that I would like to get. The Pigeon river is an international boundary,—there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. PERLEY. For what distance is it an international boundary?

Mr. CONMEE. Perhaps three hundred miles.

Mr. BOYCE. Oh, no. Do you include the lakes?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, the Pigeon river and the lakes in that water route extend from Lake Superior to the north west angle of the Lake of the Woods, a distance of nearly three hundred miles. If I understand correctly the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite, the question of jurisdiction would be a fair subject for legislation. I have read some newspaper articles in which it is declared that there is no more right in this parliament to grant a charter to deal with an international stream than there is to deal with any navigable stream. Perhaps some of the hon. gentlemen on the other side will enlighten us upon that point. I was referring to the Bill that passed this House in connection with the Rainy River Development Company—the Ontario and Minnesota Power Bill. That Bill did not afford sufficient protection to the public. Local interests petitioned parliament for and obtained sweeping amendments to the Bill providing for the distribution of electricity, for the outflow of the water through the waste weirs, for the establishment of the works on the Canadian side of the international boundary,—for if these waste weirs were not on the Canadian side of the boundary how could this government control the flow of the water? and how could navigation be protected below the dam if the company could hold back the waters for a week, or, as they might do, for months? For the area of Rainy lake is very great, and it would take a long time to raise its level greatly even though all the water were held back. By exercising this power, the company could destroy navigation on the river below. I do not need to argue that question very much. But it is to the interest of a power company to hold back the flow of water until the period of low water, and then to draw the level down gradually so as to maintain their power at their power station. The result of this policy might be to make a difference of twelve or fifteen feet in the level of the lake—I am speaking of Rainy lake. I have seen differences in the level of that lake varying from six to twelve feet, the result merely of natural conditions, the precipitation and the nature of the season. These are matters that must sooner or later be provided for and dealt with by some authority; and I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite if they think the provincial authority has power to regulate it. I believe it has not, for it has no power over navigable waters. It is said that because the province owns the land over which the waters flow they have paramount control.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask a question? Does the hon. gentleman contend that if, in a river three hundred miles long, there is a portion fifty miles long that is navigable, therefore the Dominion has control over the whole stream?

Mr. CONMEE. It certainly has control over that portion that is navigable. I am not going to draw so fine a line as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) has in his mind.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill takes over the whole stream.

Mr. CONMEE. No, but one point on the stream. In my opinion 'navigable stream' means not only the river itself, but also the tributaries back to the watershed of the river. For, if that were not the case, it would be an easy matter to dry up the stream. I can give the hon. gentleman a case in point. In the United States the control of navigable waters is in the Secretary of War,—as these waters may be needed for purposes of defence, they are put in control of that department. The Fox river, in Wisconsin, which is the outlet of Lake Winnebago, enters Lake Michigan at Green bay. It is in about a similar position to the Nipigon. The distance from the mouth to the source of the Fox river is 45 miles. There are established along this river at Appleton, combined locks and at other points, some of the largest pulp and paper manufacturing industries in the United States. These power companies, in order to secure water for their works, had control of the lake by a dam. They drew the water down to such a level as to destroy navigation. The wharfs at the villages along the lake shore could not be reached by boat because of the low water. The federal authorities of the United States closed the outflow, and compelled these companies to maintain the lake at mean level. It is as inevitable as anything can be that this parliament must, some day, grapple with these questions. But these questions are not raised in this Bill. The hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) says that this Bill was defeated in this House. That is not the case.

Mr. SPROULE. He said it was defeated in the Senate.

Mr. CONMEE. He said it was defeated in this House too. It passed the Senate two years ago, but did not come to a vote in this House. And the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) knows very well the reason why it did not come to a vote—he obstructed it, and so the Bill was not reached. This is a very much improved Bill. I said that I did not propose to discuss the Bill on this occasion. But I am willing to discuss it, and seeing that discussion is forced upon me, I will say a few words concerning it. I would ask hon. members, what is there in this Bill that interferes with provincial rights? I ask the hon. member who has already spoken and others who are yet to speak to answer that question.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps I may be permitted to say a word at this point. Suppose that on a certain stream, three hundred miles long, there is navigable water for a distance of fifty miles, and that on the rest of the stream there are many available water-powers. Now, these water-powers are regarded by the province as their asset, and they propose to work them and control them. This Bill interferes with that right.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member, (Mr. Sproule) is entirely mistaken. The Bill takes away no rights from the province. The river is not three hundred miles long, but about forty-five miles long, and it is navigable throughout its length except at the several falls. If my recollection is correct, there is a total fall of over three hundred feet on the river, and there are seven or eight points at which about 25,000 horse power can be developed. This Bill asks for but one. Hon. gentlemen must bear in mind that it is not in the nature of a monopoly. It has been so represented, and I fear, notwithstanding the explanation of the fact, it will be still misrepresented. But there are seven or eight other points on the river at which an equal amount of power can be developed, that is, the same volume of water and the same head can be obtained at different points. This Bill asks for one. Now I may ask, does the province own the stream? I am told by very eminent legal men that there is no ownership in water, and that if there is in this case, it certainly does not belong to the province. As I stated a moment ago, it is more or less international in character, because it is a feeder of these international waters that divide the two countries; there can be no question about that. The Bill merely gives this company power to go on and construct works. If the province of Ontario own any land, any rights, if they own a water privilege, why, they must be paid for it; it cannot be taken for nothing; they will have to be dealt with and their rights satisfied.

Mr. BOYCE. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the Ontario government to-day is claiming jurisdiction over this very river, the Nipigon river, under its power law?

Mr. CONMEE. I am aware that the province of Ontario is objecting to all these Bills. They have an agent here and have had for the last four or five years, yet the Bills have gone through just the same.

Mr. BOYCE. Not this one.

Mr. CONMEE. They had an agent here objecting to this Bill.

Mr. BOYCE. But it did'nt go through.

Mr. CONMEE. There are good reasons why the Bill did not go through. The hon. gentleman stated that it met defeat in this House. That is not true. It did not meet defeat. The hon. member from the Soo, speaking at first, said the Bill was defeated in this House.

Mr. BOYCE. It did not get through this House.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman said it met with defeat here. He is not correct, it was not reached.

Mr. BOYCE. I was correct in saying that it was defeated by the Senate committee, am I not, this same Bill?

Mr. CONMEE. It was defeated by the Senate committee last year. There are several reasons why the promoters of this Bill are within their rights in coming to this parliament to ask for this legislation. In the first place, they say that the legislature of Ontario has no constitutional authority to clothe them with the powers they require. The British North America Act, I think, bears that out. Under section 92, reference is made to the exclusive powers that the legislature can exercise, and one of them is subsection 11 to charter companies for purely local objects, local enterprises confined within the province. Then, section 91 defines what subjects are within the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal parliament. It includes the navigation of navigable waters, railways, telegraphs, and that class of legislation. It includes other things—but I do not want to take up the time of the House by reading them, because I assume that hon. gentlemen are fairly familiar with the Act. It includes all questions not specifically assigned to the legislatures. Now perhaps some hon. gentleman will point out where, in the constitution, there is any power assigned to the legislature of Ontario or any other legislature to confer on companies the powers which this company require to carry out their undertaking. I cannot find it, I do not think it is there. I am well aware that it may be argued that certain powers do follow; but it can be argued with a great deal more force that a company seeking powers having other than provincial objects have a right to come to this parliament, and this parliament alone can give them power to carry out their undertaking. I am fortified in that. When the Minnesota and Ontario Bill relating to the Rainy river came before this House, His Honour Judge Fitzpatrick, was then Minister of Justice. That question came before him, and he wrote a letter to the then Minister of Public Works stating his opinion that this parliament had a right to grant the legislation. His opinion went a great deal farther; I have not got it under my hand at the moment, because I did not expect to discuss this question. But it went this far. Certain amendments were proposed, to the Bill, by a petition on behalf of the town of Fort Francis, and the minister's opinion went so far as to say that in granting legislation, or in certifying to plans, the parliament of Canada had a right to impose the conditions asked, or such of them as were in the public interest, some ten or twelve amendments were made to the Bill, as I have already pointed out, guarding the public interest in that respect. Then I may say that the present Minister of Justice wrote a letter last year upon this very matter; it was read, and is on record before the Senate committee, in which he stated that as the objects of this company were not confined to provincial purposes only but were also international and interprovincial, the parliament of Canada was the only power that could give them the charter they were asking for. So under these circumstances I do not think it should be treated lightly. If the interest of the public is going to be prejudiced, if the interest of Ontario is going to be prejudiced in any sense, I could understand it, but that is not the case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On what ground was it that the Senate rejected the Bill last year?

Mr. CONMEE. That is a pretty difficult question for me to answer. In the first place, I would answer it in this way, that some of the senators did not take the trouble to understand the Bill, some of them were absent, some of them had the opinion which, I fear, some hon. gentlemen opposite entertain, or profess to entertain. I see my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) shaking his head, and I think he may hold the opinion I am about to mention, namely, that this Bill is an invasion of provincial rights. Now I take issue with that opinion. I need not refer to the British North America Act to establish the fact that this parliament has the right to pass any legislation that, in its opinion, is necessary for the order and good government of Canada, or to pass any legislation it may choose to pass that is for the general advantage of Canada. I have the section under my hand, but I will not take up the time of the House to read it. It is admitted that they have the power. I do not think that any hon. gentleman will deny that. The constitution specifically confers upon this parliament the power to pass this legislation, it has the constitutional right to deal with the subject and the legislature has not the right to deal with it. No where in the constitution is there a specific provision that would give the legislature that power.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Is there anything in the Bill which gives the company the power to expropriate?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, the company will have the power to expropriate certain lands.

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Mr. CONMEE. Let me just explain that for a moment. In other provinces this company would have the right to build these works without coming here for this right, but in Ontario land sold under the Mining Act is subject to a provision which reserves a chain as a road allowance. Along the margin of rivers, where municipalities are organized, these roads pass under the control of the municipality and become highways. In this case there is no municipality. Therefore, the control of that chain reserve is in the Ontario government, and it is to overcome that difficulty that powers of expropriation are necessary. There is also the question of the bed of the river.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Have we the right to give the power to expropriate from the Crown in the province?

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has been a member of this House for the last twenty-five years or more, and hardly a session has passed but what he has voted for granting just that power. He has conferred it upon company after company all his life, and now he is asking me a question. He had better look at his own record first. I answer: Yes, we have the right. I go further and say it is our duty to do so because it is a public enterprise. The hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) asks me if I am not aware that the Ontario government has a policy——

Mr. BOYCE. No, I asked if they did not apply that policy to the Nipigon river and the hon. gentleman said : Yes, they did.

Mr. CONMEE. Well, I will take it that way; so far they have not applied their policy to the Nipigon river.

Mr. BOYCE. They claim to have applied it, but there is no power developed there.

Mr. CONMEE. I can put the hon. gentleman right. Some three years ago the city of Port Arthur requested the Ontario government to give them the use of 3,000 horse-power. They could have taken it from the Nipigon river, the Kaministiquia river, the Pigeon river, the Mackenzie river or a dozen other rivers, but they did not do it. Now, it has taken the Ontario government about six years to make up their minds that they are going to do something at Niagara. I am not now discussing their policy; I am not objecting to it, nor am I approving of it, but if there is any excuse for it, any justification, it is that they were going to do something with that power. I would ask the hon. gentleman how long it would be before they could spread that policy to other sections of the country. The company own the land on both sides of the river. In the case of Pigeon river, the land has long since passed from the Crown. Nevertheless the Crown may have rights in it. There was no chain reserve because the lands were patented previous to the provisions in the Ontario law. Nevertheless, the Ontario government may be said to have an interest. I believe they have. I am not disputing that. Maybe they have an interest in the bed of the river, but it is not an interest that is paramount; it is subject to the control of the Federal authority. I do not think that will be disputed. With respect to the Nipigon, or any navigable river, this parliament has the right to charter a company to improve navigation, to build dams, to build channels, to divert the water over the foreshore, to do anything of the kind, or it might go on and do it itself, and it has done it time and again. Where is there an invasion of provincial rights? These questions were not raised, I presume, in former years. It might be that the value of such undertakings was not as well understood in those days. If the province has rights we cannot take them away. There is no power in this parliament to take from the province that which it possesses. This Bill does not propose to take anything from the government or any individual. The company must first pay for what they get, so that I do not think the province is in any way injured. I noted an article in the 'World' newspaper and another in the 'Globe', in which it was urged that the measure was depriving the province of revenue. I cannot see that. If the province has any rights there it can exact a sum of money for them, it can exact an annual rent for them, or it can protect itself by getting the value of that which it possesses whether it be an easement, or whether it be a title to the land itself. It is just recently the vessel men have called the attention of the government to the fact of the interference with navigation by power companies on navigable streams. I presume that they refer principally to the Niagara river. That fact illustrates my contention that the question is one that must be dealt with in this parliament and that it must be dealt with in some authoritative way. I have read statements of what are said to be the terms of the treaty recently entered into or about to be entered into, and I was discussing it to-day with a member of the Waterways Commission. His understanding of it is that it extends to the watersheds, not alone to the basin of the lakes but to the source of the lakes. I take it for granted that that would be a necessary condition, and I understand that the treaty makes provision for that. So that, we have this question to deal with. Now, I submit that no good purpose can be served by holding the Bill back to be discussed in this House. The best plan is to let the Bill go to the committee. There is nothing in the Bill which is not in lots of other Bills. The Bill is subject as well to amendment. I may say to hon. gentlemen on behalf of those for whom I am acting that I shall fight as hard as I can for the principle of the Bill. If defeated, we will take defeat, but we must be defeated fairly. The Bill has never been discussed on its merits in this House or ever in committee, and I do not want hon. gentlemen to assume that because I have referred to the Bill to-day that in the rambling remarks which I have made, I have grappled with the questions or discussed them in all the fulness with which they should be discussed. I do trust that hon. gentlemen will allow the Bill to go to committee and then we will get at it in the regular way.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I do not intend to discuss the principle of the Bill now, but in justification of a statement I made with reference to it I have to offer a few remarks. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) is applying for a charter to utilize the waters of the Nipigon river, not for navigation purposes, but for power purposes, and he tells us the Nipigon is an international river between Ontario and the United States. What right has this House to give any company the right to dam a navigable river for the purpose of utilizing its water-power? That river is navigable form Lake Superior to Lake Nipigon, and I remember that the hon. gentleman himself had a measure before us the object of which was to navigate that river and in connection with a rail haul to carry freight for the building of the Transcontinental Railway. I asked the hon. gentleman did he ask for powers of expropriation and he expressed much surprise that I should ask such a question. I ventured mildly to say that we were not in the habit of giving expropriation powers to private companies and he retorted that I ought to know better. I can tell him that we never do give such powers to any company that is not declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. CONMEE. This Bill declares that it is for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. If it does, then that is still more objectionable. If by merely declaring a work for the general advantage of Canada that is all that is necessary to give a private company power to utilize the waters of a boundary river and to expropriate property belonging to the Crown in Ontario, it is time there was an end put to that kind of thing. These local companies with local objects should go to the provinces for their power. Why, if all you have to do is to say in a Bill that it is for the general advantage of Canada, you might over-ride every provincial right. Surely some reason must be given to show that such a work is for the general benefit of Canada beyond our mere ipse dixit in an Act of this parliament.

Mr. C. A. MAGRATH (Medicine Hat). As one of the young members of this House, I find it somewhat difficult to follow the legislation which is brought before us. This Bill has only come to my attention within the last few moments, and while I shall not refer now to the interference with provincial rights which may be involved, yet I see another principle incorporated in this Bill which as a young Canadian I strongly object to. My objection is not so much to what this Bill says as to what it does not say. I hold the belief, Sir, that the water system of this country is the most valuable asset we have, and I asume that the water-power which this Bill seeks to monopolize belongs to the people of Canada. We had a gentleman of some eminence in this city a few days ago and he told us that the future of the American continent was dependent upon its water-powers, and to that question I shall briefly allude now. Section 13 of this Bill provides that this company shall at all times be prepared to furnish for use in Canada one-half the water-power it develops. Here we are, a people of about 7,000,000 adjoining a nation of nearly 100,000,000 with immense means to develop international waters for power purposes, while we are not in a position at present to keep pace with them in that respect. I object to the principle of allowing power to be sent out of this country to develop another country, until at all events we know that we have power sufficient for the purposes of Canada for all time to come. If hon. gentlemen opposite can assure me of that, then I would not be selfish about it, but I do not want to see this country put in the position that in the future we will have fifty per cent of our power exported to the United States, while lacking sufficient for our own purposes. Vested interests will be created on the other side and trouble will come if, once having allowed its export, we should attempt to keep our own power in our own country for our own development. I feel strongly about this matter and I regret that I had not the opportunity to go more fully into the Bill. But I thought I should present these views so that I might ask the House to proceed cautiously with legislation of this character.

Mr. GEORGE H. PERLEY (Argenteuil). I entirely support what has been said by my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath). The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has made out a very good case why this Bill should be thrown out. Something may be said to support the contention that the Pigeon river is an international river, but any gentleman who will stand up in this House and in cold blood argue that the Nipigon river is an international stream ought to be laughed out of court. The Nipigon river is entirely within the province of Ontario, and whether it is a navigable stream or not is another question, but for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) to ask us to declare that the Nipigon river is an international river is asking us to swallow too much. The hon. member (Mr. Conmee) has told us that we have in this parliament passed many charters similar to the one he now asks for, but surely we ought to learn wisdom as the years go by, and if we have passed legislation containing any improvident provisions, that is no reason why we should continue in our wrong-doing. We are only now beginning to learn the real value of our water-powers in Canada; we are told that water is to be our coal in the future, and that being so we should safeguard this natural asset in every way. To pass a Bill with such sweeping provisions as this, allowing these private individuals to expropriate property from the province of Ontario and to control the water in two of the great streams of that province, would be a huge mistake.

This Bill was thrown out in the Senate last year, and I assume that there was good reason for that. At all events, it seems to me that we ought not to give it even a second reading when on its face it claims to relate to a work for the general advantage of Canada. That language is absurd, as it relates to a purely local undertaking. The hon. member for Rainy River has challenged us on this side of the House to point out in the British North America Act where power is given to the local legislature to grant a charter of this nature. One would suppose that the hon. member had been studying the British North America Act night and day, and had it by heart; but I find no difficulty in pointing to a clause in the British North America Act giving the Ontario legislature power to deal with this matter. Subsection 10 of section 92 mentions, among the other powers of the local legislatures, that with reference to 'local works and undertakings other than such as are of the following classes;' and these exceptions are limited to 'those which connect the province with another province or extend beyond the limits of the province.' In other words, the local legislature is distinctly given power over works such as are proposed on the Nipigon river. At all events, I for one would certainly be opposed to this Bill getting even a second reading, while it has section 2 in it.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). This is a discussion of a very old subject. I think it was at the last session that a very lengthy discussion arose with respect to a Bill entitled 'An Act to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company.' I raised the question on that occasion of not so much the power but the advisability of this parliament attempting to deal with the subject. I deprecated the idea of the parliament of Canada incorporating companies which might properly be incorporated by the legislatures of the respective provinces, and I think it was pointed out that any company seeking such powers could secure them from the provincial legislature. The necessary powers in connection with the damming of streams or the construction of other works on streams or the control of water would necessarily be obtained from the Minister of Public Works, to whom this parliament has in a measure delegated these powers by the Act relating to Public Works and navigable waters; so that a company securing from the provincial legislature power to build dams and construct other works could only do so after obtaining permission from the Minister of Public Works. The Act incorporating the Saskatchewan Power Company was passed last session, and the strange feature of that Act was that there was no declaration in it that the work was to be one for the general advantage of Canada. Moreover, we gave the company power to expropriate land, on the ground that the Dominion government owned the lands in the western provinces, and controlled the navigation of the Saskatchewan river. Now, it seems to me that if this parliament was justified in incorporating the Saskatchewan Power Company, it is much more justified in incorporating this company, inasmuch as it relates to an international stream.

Mr. Sproule. The Nipigon river is not an international stream, though the Pigeon river is; but they seek power to deal with both.

Mr. EMMERSON. So far as the Bill relates to an international stream, the power should be sought from this parliament; and I go further and say that the provincial legislature would have no power to deal with it. Therefore the object of this Bill carries with it the implication that this parliament must deal with this subject, and that the promoters of the legislation could not secure the necessary power from the local legislature. We did not refuse to send to the committee the Bill to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power Company, and I think it would be fair to send this Bill to the committee. There the provisions of the several sections could be dealt with, and those which properly come under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature could be removed from the Bill.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). I listened very attentively to the remarks made by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), and one of the reasons he advanced in appealing to the House to allow the second reading of the Bill, was of such a startling nature that the House had better be careful of the legislation on which it is entering. He gave as a reason that one of these rivers, while not itself on the international boundary, flowed into one of the great lakes, and therefore became an international stream.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. member will pardon me, I did not make that statement. I stated that because it was a tributary of the great lakes, as the question of the right of international waters extended to the watershed, it more or less became a question in issue in this case in regard to that river. I did not go beyond that point.

Mr. NORTHRUP. The hon. gentleman has gone a good deal farther than I stated, for he would not only include such a stream as that, but all other streams which might flow into it. It is very easy to lay this down as an abstract principle, but when one lays aside the superlative wisdom which only would justify a man in moving the second reading of a Bill like this, and comes down to ordinary everyday life and thinks applying the principle to our own province, say to the city of Toronto, we would find that the Humber and the Don were two international streams, and that it would be necessary for this parliament to legislate in regard to any works that might be proposed to be constructed on those two rivers. The hon. gentleman seems to be so consumed with the importance of those works which are stated to be for the general advantage of Canada that they have obscured his vision altogether and he cannot see that they are not for the general advantage of the country.

Mr. CONMEE. Is the hon. gentleman aware that this government has exercised power with regards to the works on the Don?

Mr. NORTHRUP. Very possible under certain circumstances it might, but I do not think it has ever laid down that it would be proper for this government to give a company power to construct a dam 10 to 15 miles up the Don on account of its being an international stream and the dam being for the general advantage of Canada. I do not think that the House has up to the present time gone as far as that. Not only is there the objection to the principle laid down, but there is a very strong objection to allowing a Bill to go to its second reading with this objectionable clause in it. I venture to say that when the British North America Act was passed it never entered into the contemplation of the legislators of the old country who framed section 92 (10—C):

> Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after their execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.

That this clause was intended to be other than such a clause would be in the case of a parliament similar to that which passed the British North America Act; it was taken for granted that there would at least be some conscience in a parliament dealing with these questions. It was never contemplated that the Dominion parliament would declare the most contemptible, insignificant, little piece of work to be for the general advantage of Canada. It was never expected that this House would declare something that was obviously untrue, and thereby bring such little pieces of work within its jurisdiction. I have no hesitation in saying that this House would be departing entirely from the principles of good government if it allowed the passage of such a Bill. I suppose the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) thought he had simply to insert the second clause declaring this to be for the general advantage of Canada and every member of this House, from Nova Scotia to British Columbia, would leap to his feet to secure this valuable work which would contribute so much to the happiness and prosperity of his constituents. When we come to deal with it in the spirit of common sense I do not think the hon. gentleman himself would advance any particular reason why this paltry enterprise should be declared for the general advantage of Canada. If the clause stated that it was for the general disadvantage of Canada I could understand it being inserted in the Bill. One has only to look at the clause allowing the rivers to be dammed and consider what the hon. gentleman says about one river being navigable and the other international to see that it is an imposition on the common sense and good nature of this House to ask for the passage of the Bill.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Quite apart from the question of the general advantage of Canada is it the hon. gentleman's opinion that under the constitution, by which navigable rivers are placed under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, such a river could be barred or impeded in any way by an Act of a local legislature; in other words, that the local legislature can give authority to bar or impede a navigable river?

Mr. NORTHRUP. I certainly think not; I think the local legislature would not have power to give a company authority to bar the navigation of a navigable river, but at the same time I think if the water-power were sufficient to justify works being constructed, the local legislature of Ontario could do as they have done at Niagara and give power to a company to extract power from the water, although not the power to dam the river.

Mr. CONMEE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPEAKER. I allowed the hon. member for Rainy River to speak the second time in answer to a question.

Mr. CONMEE. I think I have the permission of the hon. member who had the floor. I wanted to answer one or two questions. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Magrath) stated that he was opposed to granting permission to export a portion of this power into the United States. That is the general law. The power at Niagara has been exported for many years. We have an Act of parliament governing it, and that clause was put in as a protection so that half the power might be always at the demand of the Canadian people. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) calls this an insignificant piece of work. It is a work involving the development of 35,000 or 40,000 horse-power. It is proposed to extend the lines into various parts of Canada as well as to the United States, and yet the hon. gentleman chooses to sneer at it——

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think I can allow the hon. gentleman to proceed on this line.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think my hon. friend ought to be permitted to speak as often as he likes upon this Bill, because it certainly requires all the efforts which even so able a gentleman as himself can present to convince this House that it should be passed. The Prime Minister has asked the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Northrup) a question which indicates, perhaps, that he has not considered the Bill very attentively. The Bill does not give any power of damming the river. So far as I understand, even if this Bill passes, the company would still be obliged under the provisions of chapter 115 of the Revised Statutes to obtain the consent of the Department of Public Works before it could put a dam upon the river. If the legislature of Ontario chartered this company for the purpose of developing water-powers generally, or upon any river, naming it, that company would be obliged to come to the Department of Public Works before it could obstruct the navigation of any river of the character mentioned. This company will be obliged to do the same thing, and, therefore, the argument that this is a navigable river is no argument whatever in favour of the passage of this Bill by the parliament of Canada.

This Bill has to be considered in the first place from the standpoint of the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada to enact it, and in the next place upon the point of expediency. If we have jurisdiction, is it expedient that we should enact this legislation?

So far as jurisdiction is concerned, I would be prepared to concede that, in respect of international waters, the company must come to the parliament of Canada and to the parliament of Canada alone. I would say that, speaking off-hand. But, so far as navigable waters are concerned, it would seem to me that a company possessing general authority to develop water-powers in the province of Ontario could carry out its undertaking even upon navigable waters, although it would be obliged to come to the Public Works Department of Canada before it could have power to obstruct navigation in any way. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill must rely in respect of Pigeon river, upon the fact that these are international waters, and, in respect of the Nipigon, upon the declaration in the Bill that the undertaking is one for the general advantage of Canada. I consider that parliament has been altogether too prone in the past to make a declaration of that kind upon insufficient grounds. Over and over again, gentlemen who believe, for some reason, that a particular Bill would not pass the provincial legislature have come to this parliament, and have had Bills introduced which, without that declaration, would obviously be within the power of the provincial legislature alone, and have asked the parliament of Canada, without investigation, and without any clear right or authority, to pass these measures and in that way assume jurisdiction over the matters in question. That ought to be corrected. It has, in the past, led to the invasion of provincial rights and of the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures. I believe that no such declaration ought to be made by the parliament of Canada, except after the most careful investigation, at which the provincial authorities should have the right to be heard; and it should be made only in cases where it is perfectly clear that the undertakings are really for the general advantage of Canada. In what respect should this undertaking be declared to be 'for the general advantage of Canada'? How will it advantage the province of British Columbia, or the province of Prince Edward Island, that this particular water-power should be developed on the Nipigon river? Such an undertaking is obviously not within the class contemplated by the provisions of the British North America Act to which I have called attention. So far as jurisdiction is concerned, it does not seem to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) has made good his case, with respect to the Nipigon river at least. Over and over again, we have seen instances in this parliament of men coming to parliament with particular undertakings in their minds, affixed to these undertakings being something else which is really within the jurisdiction of this parliament of Canada although the main part of the undertaking is not within our jurisdiction. Whether that is the case in this instance or not I do not know. But in every case where there is suspicion that this is being done, parliament should give the most careful attention to the undertaking and should see to it that parliament is not imposed upon by constructive fraud of that kind.

As to the expediency of passing the legislation, I wholly concur in the cogent observation of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath). Mr. Gifford Pinchot, in his very illuminating and instructive address delivered in Ottawa not long ago, pointed out that the astutest and most far-sighted men in the United States, possessing wealth and influence, are already seizing upon the water-powers of the United States with an eye to the conditions that will exist twenty-five, fifty, or a hundred years hence. Why should we not look to the same conditions that are likely to obtain in the future in this great country? Why should we enable any man, or set of men, to create in this country the beginning of a monopoly in respect of matters of this kind? As my hon. friend (Mr. Magrath) has well said, these water-powers will be of infinitely greater importance twenty-five years hence than they are to-day, and they ought to be preserved and retained, as far as possible, for the benefit of the people of the whole country, and not given away for the purpose of creating ten, fifteen, or twenty millionaires of the future. As to this question of expendiency, I am ready to concede that we cannot well debate it now. If parliament is to be assumed to have the jurisdiction, the matter of expediency can best be considered in committee. If it does go to committee and if the committee is called upon to consider it in that aspect, then I think very careful attention should be given to the observations of my hon. friend from Medicine Hat, as well as to those of my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), and we should have good reasons indeed from the promoters to justify us in passing such legislation as this, which confers upon them that which, though nominally not so, may become, in substance, a monopoly.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has put the vital points in the proposition now before the House. One is: Have we the right to pass this legislation? The second is: Granted that we have the right to pass this legislation, ought we to pass it? Of course, it is conceded that a great many things that men as well as parliaments have the right to do may wisely be left undone. I am not saying that that is the case here, but it is a point for the House to consider. The question of provincial rights is one that is now before the public, and will be so long as we are a community divided into provincial and federal jurisdictions. I have always endeavoured very carefully to protect the rights of the provinces in their spheres, and I am prepared to continue to do so. On the other hand we must not be so careful about protecting the rights of others that we give up rights of our own. The line of demarcation is sometimes difficult to draw when you come to a question of this kind. Here we find one stream, an international one. and another one in respect of which the point raised is navigation. I will not discuss the question of expediency, because, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) says, we can better discuss it in committee. This much, however, might, in fairness, be pointed out in reply to my hon. friend, and in support of a measure, it is debatable whether it is wise to refrain in all cases from developing a power merely because part of the energy developed will have to be exported. It may be that the demand in Canada, at present, is not sufficient to warrant capital in developing the power at all. Would it be wise to allow Canada to remain for years without her share in that development, or would it be better to allow it to be developed so that Canada could get the share that she can use leaving the remainder to be exported? It is a fine point to argue. I think that, in some circumstances, we would be warranted, in order to secure the development ourselves, to allow part of the power to be exported, if the denial of this right would mean that we could not get capital sufficient to develop the power. Then there is the question my hon. friend from Medicine Hat (Mr. Magrath) has brought up, and which has been referred to by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. It is well known that this question of our water-powers, the preservation of our forests and reforestation are live questions, and they are so interlinked with one another that you can hardly discuss one without dealing with the others. The denuding of our forest areas means the destruction of our water-powers; and this question is of such magnitude that, as hon. members are aware, a conference is being opened in Washington this week in which the United States, Mexico, and Canada are taking part for the discussion of the general subject of conserving our natural resources, including these which we have been discussing to-day. I earnestly hope that something will develop from that conference that will give us some light in dealing with these matters; because if there is one thing more than another that means a great deal to the Dominion of Canada at the present time, I think it is this question of water as a transportation medium, and water as a power developer. These two things are of vast importance to Canada, and to conserve them as far as possible for our own benefit I think ought to be the study of all men who take an active part in public life.

Now the Bill before us raises, as I have said, the question of provincial rights to a certain extent. I am not sure just to what extent it is raised. I have listened with a good deal of attention to my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), and the way he has put his case. If the paragraphs in the Bill contain bona fide statements, then it becomes an international work and ought to be dealt with by this House; and if it be truly an international work it could not be dealt with by any other power than this House. My hon. friend has referred to the innocent yet powerful paragraph saying that this work is for the general advantage of Canada. I am afraid—and I am comparatively free to say so, and can afford to criticise—I am afraid that this parliament perhaps for many years gone by has been quite a sinner in that regard. Looking at this question from the standpoint I have occupied for the last eight or ten years—excepting the last two years—I have often thought these words were placed in Bills when they had no right to be there, and that charters were issued to railway companies and other companies by Dominion authority that should have been left to provincial authorities. My view point has not changed in that respect. I believe that there is a sphere which truly belongs to the provinces and which we should not interfere with; on the other hand, we have our own sphere that we should jealously guard. I have just been looking at it, because I hardly expected it would come up to-day—and without committing myself to this Bill at all on the second reading, there may be portions of it that ought to go through and others that ought not. As the leader of the opposition says, those representing the provincial side of the case could be best heard before the committee. With that understanding, and so as to give all parties, including the province, a right to be heard, I have no objection to the Bill being sent to the committee, reserving the right to oppose the Bill in committee, and not committing myself at the present stage to any points in the Bill.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton). I have listened with a good deal of interest to the leader of the opposition discussing this very interesting question of constitutional law, because after all the interesting parts of it are the constitutional phases which are raised. I think it is conceded that we have a right to pass a part of this Act of incorporation, and if there were no other authority for that than the statement of the hon. leader of the opposition, as a Nova Scotia man, I would be quite prepared to accept it. But I would not have said anything if the leader of the opposition had gone a little further and dealt with the question of what I would call the smaller streams. This international stream may not be the larger one, but I take it for granted that it is the larger one, and that the other streams mentioned are the smaller ones. I think the legal gentlemen of the House will agree that the law has been found to be that if this House has a right to grant a charter for the main purpose—and I think the main purpose to be to control, or to do something in the way of controlling, an international stream—if that right is in this House; if then it becomes incidental to carrying out that main purpose to grant the further power, we have the right even if, in principle, and on the face of it we have to transgress provincial rights. That statement is in accord with the decisions of the Privy Council on this point. Then if it is necessary to control this Nipigon river or other small streams, if it is necessary in order to carry out the purpose of this charter to control these small streams to expropriate land, or do anything else that may be necessary to carry out the main purpose of the company, then there is jurisdiction in this House under the decisions of the Privy Council, to grant a charter and to extend the powers to the necessary extent. I think the legal gentlemen of the House will agree with that proposition. It would appear to be largely a question whether the acquiring of these smaller streams is incidental to the main purpose or not. Now as to the general proposition, as to the ownership of the streams in the older provinces, Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, where the land is vested in the provinces, I think it will be conceded that the property in the streams is in the local government, subject to rights of navigation. I think that is the law. But in Manitoba and the west generally, where the land is not vested in the provincial governments, that doctrine, of course, would require some modification. Whether it can be stated as a matter of law that the right in a stream is in the provincial government when they do not own any land at all? I am not expressing an opinion on that point.

Mr. SPROULE. This is in the province of Ontario entirely, except the portion that is near the international boundary.

Mr. McKENZIE. So far as I know anything about it, I would say that so far as smaller streams are absolutely within the province of Ontario, the right to the land and the right to the bed of the river is in the provincial government, subject to rights of navigation. But as I said before, if interfering in any way with the smaller streams is necessary to the carrying out of the main purpose of this charter, then the right is in this parliament to grant and control those rights, if it is incidental to carrying out the main purpose of the character.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not understand that this was the case of a large stream which is an international stream, and smaller ones ancillary to it, but they are two absolutely distinct streams.

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, that does not affect my argument. Even if it is a smaller stream, if, in order to carry out the purpose for which the charter was granted, it is necessary to have something to do with the smaller stream, the right is vested in this parliament to grant that right.

Mr. SPROULE. These are both large streams, and they are hundreds of miles apart.

Mr. McKENZIE. They may be, but what I say is clear. I see the hon. member for North Toronto, who is no doubt a distinguished lawyer, laughing and shaking his head. But it has so happened that even distinguished constitutional lawyers like himself have agreed and laid down the principle which I simply reiterate, that if it is necessary to transgress provincial rights in order to carry out the main purpose of a charter which we have a right to grant, that right is vested in this House. That is a principle which I merely reiterate. It is a question of fact and not a question of law whether the acquisition of rights over these smaller streams in the province of Ontario is incidental to the main purpose or not. If it is not incidental to the main purpose, I certainly say that I do not think there is any jurisdiction in this House to interfere with it unless clause two of the Act is accepted.

Mr. LANCASTER. What about the exercise of a right in a case like this?

Mr. McKENZIE. What I said is clear, I said that so far as an international stream is concerned, we have the right, that is, conceded by every lawyer in this House, and to interfere with what may be regarded as provincial rights so far as that is necessary to carry out the purpose of the main charter.

Mr. LANCASTER. What about the justice of so interfering?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is a question of fact. I do not know the facts and I am not going to state any opinion. I am dealing with the question of law.

Mr. LANCASTER. No one disputes that we have the power.

Mr. McKENZIE. I say we have not the power unless the interfering with the smaller streams is necessary for the carrying out of the greater project over which we have the greater right. As far as the conserving of the water power is concerned and keeping it within our jurisdiction, I agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) to this extent that it is not an easy matter to say that we shall always hold this power in reserve, not touching it and looking for some future development or necessity. The government of Nova Scotia, some time ago, made a new departure in connection with the granting of lands and water-powers. They do not grant absolute rights to any person with respect to these franchises or properties. They have adopted the policy of leaseholds, and I think it would be the better policy in this case. I do not think it is wise to grant an absolute right or power with respect to water or water-powers any more than it is wise to give absolute control over coal lands. In Nova Scotia we only give leaseholds for coal properties and for many years, when persons have come to the local legislature looking for powers with respect to streams, we have adopted the course of giving them a lease subject to the absolute control of the government and subject to cancellation. In cases where the Dominion government part with control over these resources, or permit the exercise of these powers, I think a policy similar to that adopted in the province of Nova Scotia would be advisable, and in that way keep these resources under the control of the government, so that if in the future the necessity arises for a change in the conditions such change can be made. In so far as the constitutional question is concerned, that is the view I take and I would not have said anything at all if the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) had dealt with these incidental powers which are vested in this House provided the exercise of them is essential to the main purpose of the charter.

Mr. BRODER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Conmee) who is promoting the Bill, what his estimate is of the water power on the Nipigon river? I understand him to say that it is 80,000 horse-power on the Pigeon river. What has he estimated for the Nipigon?

Mr. CONMEE. It is estimated that the Nipigon river has about 200,000 horse-power. This one point would cover perhaps 20,000 or 25,000 horse-power.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Nipigon river is 100 miles away from the Pigeon river and they have nothing whatever to do with each other. There is another matter which has not been touched upon and which ought to be mentioned. Nipigon lake and Nipigon river possess the best trout fishing in the world. There should be nothing allowed to be done to interfere with this famous fishing resort. There are a great many tourists coming from New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other places to fish in Nipigon river and lake. The hon. gentleman says this is a navigable river, but he will not say that it is continuously navigable. You can navigate it by canoes which enable you to get around the rapids, but you cannot navigate it with any other craft. You get the finest speckled trout in the world in Nipigon lake, which has a coast line almost equal to that of Lake Ontario, and I think that this House and this committee, before adopting this Bill, should obtain the fullest information as to the proposal of this company and the condition of these waters. The Nipigon and Pigeon rivers have no more to do with each other than black has with white. I think the hon. gentleman has simply hitched the two together to get them both through because the power of the Nipigon is more valuable than that of the Pigeon. He had in his Bill of last year the Sturgeon river. There is not as much power on the Sturgeon river as on the Nipigon river, but there is a good deal. I do not think that a Bill granting such wide powers should be allowed to go through this House in the interest of American capitalists. The hon. gentleman has just enough Canadians in it to give colour to it. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) presented to the House an argument in favour of the development of this power because the people want to use it, but when there is need for the power there is no question but that capital will come in to develop it. This is a question that this House ought to consider very seriously before taking the step proposed by the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill. I have been up both of these rivers by canoe and I know something about them. The House knows very little about them. If this Bill is permitted to go to the committee there should be the fullest information available with reference to maps, the location of these rivers, their navigability and the value of the water powers upon them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, the sense of the House seems to be that this Bill should go to the committee, not permitting our own judgment to affirm the principle but simply to have the matter dealt with and investigated, both as to jurisdiction and policy. With regard to the question of jurisdiction of this House, I think, for my part, that the jurisdiction is certainly in this House and not in the local legislature. The local legislature has been jealous, and naturally so, that their powers should not be interfered with by any action of this House, and in so far as this view of theirs is concerned I would be disposed to respect it in its entirety. But, I would lay this proposition before the House: With regard to one of these schemes, suppose that this work should be necessary, that it would be to the advantage of the public and that parliament, representing the people of Canada generally, should be of the opinion that this work should be constructed, who has the power to create the entity which brings this work into being? As to one of these streams, the Pigeon river, everybody is agreed that the parliament of Canada alone has that power. I think there is no question as to that. That was stated by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). But, if I understood my hon. friend, a moment ago, he stated also with regard to the Nipigon river that as it is altogether situated in the province of Ontario, and that although it is a navigable river the province of Ontario would have the power to create the entity which would be necessary to be created in order to carry out the work and not this government. But, he qualified his contention by the statement that whilst the local legislature has power to create the entity, still the power which is vested in this new entity would be exercised only by coming to the Minister of Public Works and obtaining authority to deal with a navigable river.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Just as this company would be obliged to do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I doubt that. I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to the fact that in so far as a navigable river is concerned the local legislature has not the power to create a corporation which would exercise any rights over a navigable stream.

Mr. BRODER. This river is not navigable at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Assuming it is navigable. The argument is that they have the power although it is navigable.

Mr. BRODER. It is not navigable without public works being constructed.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That may be, but the argument is that it is navigable and therefore we have the power here to deal with it. But my hon. friend the leader of the opposition stated that if it be a navigable river the legislature of Ontario would have the power to create a corporation which could be given power to deal with the waters of the streams, except that it could not exercise the powers vested in it by the legislature unless it came to the Minister of Public Works to have its powers ratified. As I read the law my opinion would not coincide with that of my hon. friend. The law in this respect is chapter 115 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, an Act respecting the Protection of Navigable Waters.

2. In this part, unless the context otherwise requires,——

(a) 'Work' includes any bridge, boom, dam, aboiteau, wharf, dock, pier or other structure, and the approaches or other works necessary or appurtenant thereto;

(b) 'Lawful work' means any work not contrary to the law in force at the place of the construction thereof at the time of such construction.

This is broad enough to cover the opinion of my hon. friend, but there is this qualification in section 3:

3. Except so much of this part as relates to rebuilding or repairing any lawful work, nothing thereinafter in this part contained shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of the parliament of Canada or of the legislature of the late province of Canada, or of the legislature of any province now forming part of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof.

So it seems that the power to deal with navigable streams is confined to the parliament of Canada or to any province of Canada, provided it was passed before such province became part of confederation. Since a province became part of confederation the power seems to be taken away from it to deal with navigable waters.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it not the other way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I read it in the way I have interpreted it. It says:

3. Except so much of this part as relates to rebuilding or repairing any lawful work, nothing hereinafter in this part contained shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of the parliament of Canada or of the legislature of the late province of Canada, or of the legislature of any province now forming part of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof.

Mr. LANCASTER. Does not the restriction apply the other way?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I assume it is not in the power of a provincial legislature to give authority to create any work interfering with a navigable river, but power is given to the Minister of Public Works to pass regulations with respect to works which are authorized. The Minister of Public Works cannot give authority to a thing which is illegal in itself, but he supervises the exercise of the power granted by this parliament. If this parliament gives power to construct a bridge or any work over a navigable river, the authority to which this power is given must go before the Minister of Public Works to have its plans approved. I do not know that it goes any further than that and, therefore, I would assume that the authority to deal with a navigable river is left exclusively with this parliament. I do not give this as a final opinion; I simply throw it out for consideration. I am very glad this Bill will go before the committee because I am not at all sure as to the power, and on the question of policy I have very serious doubts that we should pass this Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). If the right hon. gentleman looks at section 3 he will see that the effect of it is that while the statute contains provisions against any interference with navigable waters it says:

Except so much of this part as relates to rebuilding or repairing any lawful work, nothing hereinafter in this part contained shall apply to any work constructed under the authority of any Act of parliament of Canada or of the legislature of the late province of Canada, or of the legislature of any province now forming part of Canada, passed before such province became a part thereof.

That exactly lets in the exception I have referred to. For example, in the port of Halifax if any one should desire to extend his wharf so as to interfere with navigation he would apply to the Minister of Public Works for permission and he might get it.

Mr. LANCASTER. He need not get incorporated himself.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is not a question of incorporation at all. A private citizen owning some land bordering on the harbour and perhaps owning some land under the water may desire to improve his property by building a work which will interfere with navigation and he must get authority to do so. If he sells his land to a company incorporated by the provincial legislature and that company desires to do the same thing, it must come equally to the Department of Public Works for permission before that work can be lawfully constructed. If that permission is not obtained then the work is a public nuisance. That whole subject was gone into in a case argued before the Supreme Court of Canada about 20 years ago. A man had constructed a wharf out into the harbour of Halifax without obtaining permission and a vessel ran into it and there was negligence on one side or the other, and the wharf owner lost his case, if I remember correctly, for the reason that the wharf was a public nuisance at the time inasmuch as this permission had not been obtained. My point was simply this: That if a company in the province of Ontario is authorized to develop water-powers generally, without naming any river —and a river or stream need not be named —it would require to come to the Department of Public Works in respect to a navigable river and obtain permission to interfere with navigation, and, inasmuch as the Bill does not authorize interference with navigation this company would have to do the same thing. Therefore, the argument that it is navigable water falls to the ground, because the question of interference with navigable water has already been dealt with by the parliament of Canada in such a way as to enable a company whether incorporated by the provincial legislature or by the parliament of Canada to interfere with that navigation, but only under certain conditions and with the authority of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CONMEE. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly, two.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman referred to section 92 which provides for the approval of plans by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No, I referred to chapter 115 R.S.C.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood the hon. gentleman referred to section 92.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I never mentioned it.

Mr. CONMEE. That section does provide for the ratification of plans, and I am not particular whether we take that section or the other section referred to. Will the hon. member say that these sections give the Minister of Public Works jurisdiction to regulate a structure in the sense of stipulating what flow of water shall pass through a dam and in what seasons of the year so as to maintain navigation either above or below? Does the section go that far?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a very well known principle of law which I have no doubt is familiar to my hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) because he has looked into these matters very thoroughly.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am saying it quite seriously because the hon. gentleman has displayed evidence of a great deal of research. It is a well known principle of law that when power is given to grant or withhold permission, that implies power to grant subject to conditions. Therefore, as there is power in the department to withhold permission, there is also power to grant it subject to prescribed conditions.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word with regard to this matter because I have noticed that in the Railway Committee——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have your name on the list as having spoken.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 57) respecting the Vancouver, Fraser Valley and Southern Railway Company.—Mr. J. D. Taylor.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company. —Mr. R. Smith.

QUESTIONS.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

Mr. MEIGHEN asked:

1. What is the total of the appropriation made to date for Hudson Bay Railway survey?
2. What has been the total expenditure of such survey?
3. How many persons, officers and workmen, have been employed on such survey?
4. What has been the total number of days of employment to date of all employees?
5. On what date did the first actual work commence, and is the work in actual progress now?
6. When is it expected the survey will be completed?
7. Does the government propose constructing the road as surveyed under the appropriations asked for in the estimates immediately as such surveys are available for construction purposes? If so, on what basis as to providing for cost of construction?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. $100,000.
2. Expended to January 25, 1909, $61,567.-72.
3. The number of men employed on surveys, since they were fully organized, about October 1, 1908, has averaged about 110.
4. The total number of days of employment of all men, till January 31, is 15,352 days, including Sundays.
5. The first actual line was run by Party No. 1, at Frog river, about 35 miles, from the Pas on September 14, 1908.
6. It is expected that the survey will be completed between the 1st March and the 15th, 1909, from the Pas to Fort Churchill. The work is still progressing.
7. No decision will be reached pending receipt of estimates and reports upon the completion of the survey.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY.

Mr. AMES—by Mr.Perley—asked:

Have the Commissioners of the National Transcontinental Railway furnished the government with any memorandum of more recent date than that prepared by Mr. Schrieber, dated 31st May, 1908, in respect of the cost of the National Transcontinental Railway? If not, is it the intention of the government to ask for a revised statement?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The estimate given by the engineer of the Transcontinental Railway Commission on April 3, 1908, was $63,427 per mile for the government portion of the line between Moncton and Winnipeg and a memo. dated 12th February, 1909, confirms that estimate.

COAL OIL EXPLOSIONS

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

1. How many deaths have occurred in the past four months in Manitoba through coal oil explosions?
2. What effort did the Department of Inland Revenue make to fix responsibility for those fatalities?
3. What investigation, if any, has been made by the Dominion government officials, and what was the result of these investigations?
4. Has the department any information that would indicate the identity of the parties responsible for the adulteration of coal oil in Manitoba?
5. What steps, if any, has the department taken to prevent further adulteration of coal oil?

6. Did the Attorney General of Manitoba advise the employment of detectives in connection with the coal oil explosions? If so, was his recommendation acted on?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (for Minister of Inland Revenue):

1. Eighteen, so far as the department is aware.

2. On the first appearance in the press of an account of one of these explosions, instructions were issued to the officials of the department in Winnipeg to investigate and report all the circumstances in connection therewith.

3. The officials of the department who conducted the investigations inquired as to the names of the persons from whom the coal oil which exploded was purchased or obtained, the names of the firms by whom it was originally supplied, and the manner in which it was being used at the time of the explosions. Samples of the oil which exploded could not be secured, but samples of similar oil in the possession of persons from whom the oil which exploded was purchased were, in every case where possible, obtained and tested. Numerous samples of oil in the hands of different dealers and oil merchants were also tested.

The results of these investigations show that in every case (except one, which was due to the explosion of a lamp), the accidents were caused by the pouring of coal oil on smouldering fires in order to hasten the burning of the fuel; that in some instances the oil was fully up to the standard required by law, that in other instances it was below, and that it is extremely dangerous both to life and property to pour coal oil on a fire no matter how perfect the quality may be.

Two dealers who had sold coal oil which exploded, and which was not up to the standard, were prosecuted and condemned to the penalty provided by section 24 of the Petroleum Inspection Act.

4. The department has information indicating fairly well a source from which defective coal oil was obtained, but it would be impossible to say who would be responsible for any adulteration of such oil which may have taken place.

5. No steps can be taken which will effectively prevent the mixture, by error or inadvertence, of gasoline with coal oil, as these liquids are similar in appearance and are both kept in stock by nearly all dealers in either. As gasoline has the higher commercial value, no one is likely to adulterate coal oil with it intentionally.

6. The Attorney General of Manitoba telegraphed suggesting that the department should engage some extra men for detection work in connection with the coal oil explosions referred to, but there seemed no advantage in taking that course, as the regular officers of the department appeared to be sufficient in number for the work, and necessarily more experienced and better equipped for the carrying out of the provisions of the Petroleum Inspection Act than new men could be.

THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What is the name, position and salary of each clerk or other employee on the outside service of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa who received increase of salary on and after April 1, 1908; what is the amount of the increase or increases, the date on which it was granted, the date it became effective and the date or dates on which these increases were paid, and date of appointment?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture): I have the list here, which at the hon. gentleman's request I lay on the table for 'Hansard':

LAKEFIELD WHARF.

Mr. SEXSMITH—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How much has been spent to date on Lakefield wharf?

2. Was the work done by contract or by day labour, when was work commenced, and is the wharf completed?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The amount voted for this wharf was $4,050. Expended to date $3,421.76. The balance of this appropriation, $728.24, will be expended this spring in filling in approach.

2. This work was done by day labour. The work was commenced in the month of October, after navigation had closed. The work could not have been started any sooner owing to the dock being used by various steamboat companies. The last work done on the dock was in December. The dock is completed excepting the filling in of the approach.

Mr. FISHER.

WHARFS ON STONY LAKE.

Mr. SEXSMITH—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. How many wharfs have been built on Stony lake since 1900?

2. When and where were they built, what was the cost of each wharf, and were they built by contract or day labour?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Only one wharf was built at Stony lake since 1900.

2. Juniper island, last year (1908). The appropriation for the work was $1,500. The total amount was expended. It was built by day labour.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What sum was voted for the outside service of the Department of the Interior in Ottawa, salaries of clerks, for the fiscal year 1908-9?

2. What was the total number of clerks employed in the said outside service of the Interior Department at Ottawa on April 1, 1908, and what was the amount required for the payment of their salaries for the year 1908-9?

3. Will the Minister of the Interior lay on the table of the House the orders in council by authority of which the increases of salary detailed on pages 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 563 and 564 unrevised 'Hansard,' 1909, were granted?

4. Was the question of these increases submitted to the Justice Department or to the Treasury Board? If so, will the minister table the decision arrived at by these?

5. What was the total amount involved in the increases granted as above as a charge against the consolidated fund?

6. What was the total amount involved by the new appointments as detailed on pages 564 and 565 unrevised 'Hansard,' 1909?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. $394,122.50. The salaries of the seven temporary clerks employed on the 1st April, 1908, in the School Lands branch amounting to $6,250, have not been included in the above sum, as the amount required to pay their services is not voted by parliament, but paid out of the School Lands funds.

2. 416; $381,292.50.

3. The information will be brought down on a motion for a return.

4. No.

5. The total amount of the increases as detailed in 'Hansard' is $41,760; but, through a clerical error, one name, that of Mr. G. B. Dodge, was omitted from the list so that the total amount involved is $42,510.

6. $31,580.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I ask the hon. minister if he would not revise his answer on part 3, and bring those down without formality of a notice of motion?

Mr. OLIVER. It would require a little time to prepare them.

Mr. FOSTER. It is merely to forward the business, because we must have them before we can do much with the Civil Service.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Make the motion now.

Mr. FOSTER. I move for an order of the House for what is asked for in question number three.

Motion agreed to.

SIR P. LAKE'S SPEECH.

Mr. TALBOT—by Mr. Calvert—asked:

Has the attention of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence been drawn to reports which have been published in the press of an address stated to have been given by Major-General Sir P. Lake to the members of Toronto University Rifle Association on February 4, 1909, in one of which reports the following appears:

'The warning of General Lake.

'Western ideas and western civilization must be imposed on the Orient, said the General, and if we can't put it up to them by mere argument we must force it, and be prepared to fight if necessary.'

And has he any information to give to the House upon the subject?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). Yes, Sir P. Lake himself called attention to the matter and stated that the Press reports of his address had been so condensed, and so much matter omitted as to convey a misleading impression of what he had actually said; he had not referred in any way to present day Canadian political questions, nor made any statement which would in any way be offensive to Japan; he showed me full notes of his address, and from them it was evident that nothing had been said to which exception could fairly be taken. The remark attributed to General Lake in the extract quoted—that 'Western ideas and western civilization must be imposed on the Orient'—is so absurd as to carry with it its own refutation.

EMPLOYMENT OF BUSH CAMPBELL.

Mr. S. SHARPE asked:

1. Is there an official known as Bush Campbell employed on the Trent canal, Lake Simcoe division? If so, what are the terms of his employment?

2. Does the government allow him a sum for rent of house? If so, what is the amount?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. There is no official by the name of Bush Campbell employed on the Trent Canal. There is on the Lake Simcoe-Balsam Lake Division of the canal a bridge-tender and caretaker of dam, named Donald Campbell.

2. Donald Campbell is paid $30 per month and is allowed $6 a month for house rent.

REFUSAL OF LAND SCRIP TO NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. What are the reasons advanced by this or any preceding government, for refusing land scrip to members of the Northwest Mounted Police who served during the Northwest rebellion of 1885?

2. Is it the purpose of the government to recognize even at this late date the claims of those who were members of that force during the rebellion of 1885?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I answered a similar question by the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Claude Macdonell) a few days ago and I have now to repeat that reply as follows:

1. When the subject of rewards for services during the Rebellion of 1885 was under consideration by the government of that day, a distinction was made between the Mounted Police, whose ordinary duties of maintaining law and order were within the limits of the disturbed districts, and the militia, who were called upon to leave their homes and occupations, at great personal inconvenience, resulting in many cases in serious embarrassment to themselves and families.

This distinction was marked by excluding the police from participation in the issue of scrip.

In 1893 the Legislative Assembly of the Northwest Territories passed a resolution praying that the Dominion government would grant scrip to the Mounted Police, and on several occasions members have asked questions in the House. The reply has always been adverse to reconsideration.

PAYMENT OF ELECTION OFFICERS.

Mr. WRIGHT—by Mr. Elson—asked:

1. Under which department of the government rests the responsibility for the payments of the accounts of the returning officers, deputy returning officers and other officials in connection with Dominion elections?

2. Have the election expenses of the above officials for the election held in October last been paid by the government?

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY (Secretary of State):

1. The office of the Auditor General.

2. Partly.

Accounts completed and paid..	64
Accounts in process of settlement, part of which have been paid..	123
Accounts not yet received..	12
Accounts received in part..	9
Accounts received within last two weeks, which have not yet been examined..	10
	218

Muskoka accounts received on 19th January.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANK INTEREST.

Mr. SHARPE asked:

1. What rate of interest on deposits in the Government Savings Department have prevailed, and what are the dates of the various changes of said rate?

2. What is the total number of depositors?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. Government savings banks (including post office savings banks): From 1873 to October 1, 1889, 4 per cent; from October 1, 1889 to July 1, 1897, 3½ per cent; from July 1, 1897 to present time 3 per cent.

2. Total number of open accounts, 197,746.

LOCKMASTER AT FENELON FALLS.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. What pay does the lockmaster at Fenelon Falls receive?

2. Is he allowed rent for his dwelling? If so, how much, or has he a dwelling provided by the government?

3. Is he allowed to keep an assistant? If so, what allowance for wages is made him by the government?

4. Does the lockmaster get paid for lost time when out through the country purchasing fowl?

5. Is he allowed by the government to go through the country during elections speaking for the Liberal candidate?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Lockmaster at Fenelon Falls is paid the sum of $30, a month as lockmaster and caretaker of dam; he also receives an additional $100 a year for his duties as statistical officer.

2. Up to the 1st February last, he has been allowed $6 a month for house rent. The government has just completed a house for the lockmaster at Fenelon Falls, which will now be occupied by him, in lieu of the $6 per month he has in the past received in this connection.

3. No.

4. No.

5. No.

PNEUMATIC TUBES AT MONTREAL.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Perley—asked:

1. What was the quantity and value of the pneumatic tubes purchased for the use of the Post Office Department at Montreal?

2. When were these bought, from whom, and how delivered?

3. Where are the said tubes at present in storage, what has been the storage cost to date, and what is the present rate of storage per month?

4. Is it the intention of the government to make use of these tubes in Montreal or elsewhere? If not, why not?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. 8,007½ lineal feet at $1.45 per foot; $11,610.88.

2. Date of contract, February 9, 1905; from R. Maclaren & Company, of Glasgow; to be delivered in Montreal.

3. (a) On the government property, corner St. James street, St. Felix street, and Imperial avenue.

(b) $2,940.88.

(c) Nothing.

4. No. It is not the intention to proceed with the installation of the pneumatic tube system.

WHARF BETWEEN LONGUE POINTE AND POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES.

Mr. C. A. WILSON asked:

Has the government received any requests, either from private individuals or industrial and commercial companies, for the construction of a new wharf at places situate almost half-way between the villages of Longue

Pointe and Pointe-aux-Trembles? If so, is it the intention of the government to build a wharf at that place?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

(a) Yes.

(b) An appropriation of $5,000 was included in the current year's Appropriation Act.

DREDGING IN RIVER JESUS.

Mr. C. A. WILSON asked:

1. On what date was the dredging of the River Jésus commenced, in that part of the river from Bout-le-L'isle and Charlemagne as far as Terrebonne and Sault St. François de Salles?

2. Who has been and who are the contractors for this dredging?

3. What amount has been appropriated for this dredging?

4. How much has been expended up to the present time?

5. What is the length, width and depth of the channel on that part of the river where the works have been carried on up to the present time?

6. Up to what point are these works to reach?

7. Is it the intention of the government to continue in the spring?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

As dredging has been done on River Jésus between the above named places since 1881, I would ask that this stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

INCREASES TO CIVIL SERVICE SINCE APRIL 1, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What was the name and date of the first appointment, position and salary at time of increase of each clerk or other employee in the outside service of the Department of Public Works at Ottawa, to whom any increase of pay was given on and after the 1st of April, 1908, the amount of such increase or increases, the date on which increase was granted, the date it became effective, and the date on which the increase was paid?

2. The same question is asked of the following departments Militia and Defence, Marine and Fisheries, Railways and Canals, Customs, Inland Revenue, Public Printing, Indian Affairs, Auditor General, Finance, Mines and Post Office Department?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I would ask to have this stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for a return.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I have the answer for the Militia Department.

Mr. FOSTER. As I stated before, an answer laid on the table and published in the 'Hansard' would be immediately available to every member of the House. A big return such as that would be when brought down becomes unuseable by any except the mover and one or two others for a good deal of time and consequently does not come before the House, but I thought this was so important a matter it would be well to have it published in 'Hansard.' I already have the information for the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture, which are the two largest, down as answers.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Mine is there now.

EXPENDITURE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

What amount of money has been expended by the government of Canada for purely agricultural purposes during each of the fiscal years 1900 to 1908, inclusive?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). In preparing the answer the expenditure under the following appropriations was taken: Experimental farms; printing the bulletins and reports; fumigation; aid to agricultural societies; dairying, seed, &c., including cold storage; health of animals; one-fourth of civil government salaries.

1899-1900	$297,191 56
1900-1	309,088 57
1901-2	406,668 57
1902-3	444,324 75
1903-4	459,595 47
1904-5	554,565 79
1905-6	747,184 02
*1906-7	566,010 11
1907-8	762,589 89

*1906-7 fiscal year only 9 months.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY TERMINAL SITE, WINNIPEG.

Mr. A. HAGGART asked:

1. Who conducted for the government or the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners the negotiations for the purchase of the Winnipeg terminal property for the railway, from J. H. Kern and F. C. Mathews?

2. Was the price agreed upon by the agent conducting the negotiations laid before the government before closing the purchase?

3. What inquiries, if any, were made by the government, the Railway Commissioners or the officials as to the actual value of the property?

4. Was it known to the government that the vendors, Kern & Mathews, had become registered owners a short time previous at less than half the price asked from the government?

5. Did the officials, agents or solicitors acting for the government or the Railway Commissioners inform the government or the department that over $100,000 was the profit of the vendors?

6. What reasons existed for not ascertaining the price of the property by expropriation proceedings?

7. Is the government aware now that an extravagant price was paid for the property?

8. Is there any truth in the rumour that there is a probability of abandoning the property and acquiring more suitable land for terminal purposes nearer the city of Winnipeg?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The commissioners themselves, also through their agent Mr. T. L. Morton, Winnipeg, and their solicitor, Mr. T. H. Johnson, and the chief engineer, Mr. Lumsden.

2. Report of the transaction was submitted by the commissioners to the government before purchase was completed.

3. The commissioners in company with their land agent and chief engineer personally examined and inspected lands in the vicinity and decided that among those available were two properties, but the one purchased was more suitable than the other for divisional yards, although cheaper. The other was held at $3,000 per acre, but afterwards reduced to $2,000. Kern & Mathews asked $300 per acre or upwards, but after negotiations by Commissioner Young, the land agent and the solicitor, Mr. Johnson, it was reduced to an average of $277.50 per acre which was considered a low figure in comparison with the price asked for adjoining lands. The chief engineer approved of the purchase in the public interest, and the matter was closed accordingly.

4. No.

5. The commissioners have had no knowledge of the profits and gave no information to the government.

6. Based on the report of their officers and the opinion and recommendation of their chief engineer, coupled with the ascertained value of lands in the vicinity, the commissioners considered that the property was obtained at a much lower figure than if expropriation proceedings had been taken, and further the commissioners pursued the policy of railway companies by not giving publicity as to their intentions about divisonal yards, so as to avoid a rise in values.

7. Property was really bought at a low figure for reasons aforesaid.

8. No.

PAYMENTS TO NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

Mr. McCARTHY asked:

Have any moneys been paid to the North Atlantic Trading Company, or to any person on their behalf, since the date of the cancellation of said contract between the company and the government? If so, what sums and upon what dates?

Mr. A. HAGGART.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Yes.

March 14, 1907..	$24,333 33
November 30, 1907..	36,901 50
November 29, 1907..	5,215 10

The last mentioned amount was a refund of the £1,000 deposited with the government as a guarantee of good faith and security for the due fulfilment of the contract, and the interest accrued thereon from the 14th April, 1902.

ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. On whose recommendation or authority was the Ross rifle accepted and adopted by the government as the national arm of Canada?

2. Is the Small Arms Committee responsible for the adoption of this Rifle by the government?

3. If so, did the committee report in favour of the rifle, and on what date?

4. What was the composition of this committee when the report or recommendation was made?

5. Was the report of the Small Arms Committee unanimous?

6. If not, did any member report recommending the rifle? If so, who?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. The rifle was adopted on the recommendation of the Minister of Militia and Defence after it had been reported on by a board of expert officers. A copy of the report of that board has been laid on the Table of the House. Subsequently, after a considerable number of rifles had been manufactured, its use as one of the service rifles of Canada was authorized by General Order 104, June, 1906.

2. The Small Arms Committee was not organized until March, 1908.

3, 4, 5 and 6. Answered by No. 2.

CONTROL OF TELEPHONE COMPANIES BY RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. MACLEAN—by Mr. Calvert—asked:

1. Have any Canadian telephone companies been placed under the control of the Railway Commission?

2. If so, what is the date of the order in council?

3. To what telephone companies does such order in council, if any, apply?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.

2. No order in council placing under jurisdiction of board, but by Act of Parliament, chapter 37, Revised Statutes of Canada, amended by chapter 61 of 1908, Part I of which was declared in force, under authority of an order in council, dated February 1, 1909, on and from February 8, 1909.

3. To all Canadian telephone companies chartered by the parliament of Canada.

CABLES TO VANCOUVER ISLAND AND ALONG PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has application been made by any person, corporation or government for permission to lay a cable under the waters between Vancouver island and the mainland, and their extension northward along the coast of British Columbia?
2. If so, by whom, and what action has been taken on such request?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1 and 2. No request has been made for permission to lay a cable under the waters between Vancouver island and the mainland.

The Governemnt of the United States of America asked permission to lay a cable through Hecate strait and Dixon entrance, these being Canadian waters—and the permission was granted. This cable duplicates a part of the outside cable already established between Seattle and Alaska.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CHILLIWACK, B.C.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has any property been purchased, or are there in progress negotiations for the purchase of any property in the city of Chilliwack?
2. If so, from whom has such property been purchased, what is its extent and location, and at what date was the purchase made?
3. For what purpose was any property so purchased required?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. An order in council passed August 31, 1908, to purchase site on Young and Victoria streets, 80 feet frontage on each street by 115 feet deep between streets, from J. H. Henderson, for $3,000.

3. For the erection of a public building.

INTERNATIONAL FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Mr. BORDEN—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. Who are the members of the International Fisheries Commission appointed under the provisions of the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America, signed on the 11th day of April, 1908, and relating to the fisheries?
2. Have the commissioners prepared a system of international regulations as contemplated and provided by the terms of the said treaty?
3. What has been done under the provisions of the said treaty?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The Canadian Commissioner is Professor Edward E. Prince, B.A., F.L.S., F.R.S.C., Commissioner and General Inspector of Fisheries for Canada.

The United States Commissioner is Dr. Jordan, President of the University of California.

2. Not yet.
3. The commissioners have been appointed, and have made some progress in the preparation of international regulations

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT—SALARY INCREASES.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

Will the Minister of Public Works lay on the table of the House the orders in council passed from the 1st of May, 1908, to January 31, 1909, authorizing increase to the employees of that department?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Yes, on motion for a return.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask leave to move that resolution.

Motion agreed to.

WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. When did the government first receive a copy of the recent Waterways Treaty as it was signed by the plenipotentiaries of the high contracting parties thereto?
2. On what date was the treaty signed?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. 29th January.
2. 11th January.

NIAGARA RIVER—WATERFLOW OVER THE FALLS.

Mr. MAGRATH asked:

What is the amount of water in the Niagara river annually discharged over the Horseshoe and American falls, respectively?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). At mean water of Lake Erie, the International Waterways Commission report for 1906, page 250, gives the discharge over the American Falls as 27,800 cubic feet per second, and over the Horse Shoe Fall 194,600. More recent determinations by the United States Lake Survey give 26,600 and 186,400 or in the proportion of 1 to 7.

At low water stage, these figures would be reduced, in the first instance, to 22,300 and 157,500 respectively and to 21,500 and 150,000 for low water stage Lake Erie.

PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

1. Has the government decided upon the boundary lines between Manitoba and Ontario on the one side, and Ontario and Quebec on the other, under the resolutions adopted last year with reference to the boundaries of these provinces?

2. If so, when will the Bill giving effect to such resolutions be submitted to the House?

3. Will such Bill be submitted to the government of the province of Ontario before it is introduced into this House?

4. Does the government intend to include a harbour or harbours on the Hudson bay, in the portion to be allotted to the province of Ontario?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The boundaries of the extension of the province of Ontario were decided by resolution of this House passed last session. It is expected that the Bill will be introduced at no distant date.

2. No exact date can be given to-day.

3. The Bill will certainly be submitted to the province of Ontario before it is introduced in this House.

4. The government will give the province of Ontario the shore which has been determined upon by the resolution of last year.

PUBLIC DEBT—LOANS OF DECEMBER, 1907, AND OCTOBER, 1908.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Perley—asked:

1. In connection with the loan of December, 1907, of £1,500,000 of four per cent debentures, due October 1, 1912, (a) what was the amount of the full six months' interest payable by Canada on April 1, 1908; (b) reckoning the interest at four per cent, what would be the total amount of actual interest earned to that date on the sums paid in upon the subscription dates?

2. What is the same information regarding the loan of October, 1908?

3. Is this interest bonus added to the debt, or is it regarded as a distributed annual charge during the duration of the loan?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Finance):

1. (a) £119,100 the loan of December, 1907, were converted into 3 per cent of 1938 before 1st January, 1908, and consequently on the 1st April, 1908, interest charged for this loan was on £1,380,900 amounting to £27,618.

(b) £12,098 17s. 4d.

2. (a) £87,500.

(b) £26,178 1s. 7d.

3. As a distributed annual charge during the duration of the loan.

CLAIM OF ALFRED DICKIE.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Rhodes—asked:

1. When was payment of $442 made to Alfred Dickie, Lower Stewiacke, for damages by fire on April 5, 1905?

2. Was payment ever refused? If not, why so long delayed?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1 and 2. $442 was paid Alfred Dickie in settlement of his claim for fire damages, on May 23, 1907. The department is not aware that the claim was ever declined; but Mr. Dickie refused for a long time to accept less than the full amount of his claim which was $542.

MILEAGE OF RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

Between the period from 1888 to 1908, inclusive, what was the total mileage of railways authorized to be constructed under charters granted by the Dominion parliament, inclusive of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The reply to this will be so voluminous that I would ask it to stand as a notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPROULE. I would make the motion now, by permission of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is no necessity for that, I think. The order of the House provides that, in such circumstances, the question stands as a notice of motion. But, of course, this can be carried.

Mr. SPROULE. But the motion is often moved by consent, and it has been done three or four times already.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

LOBSTER LICENSES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. FRASER asked:

1. How many licenses to fish and pack lobsters in the coast waters of Prince Edward Island have been issued by the Dominion government since January 1, 1904, to this date, and to whom were same issued?

2. Has the government received any petitions, requests, or correspondence from any person or persons, or corporations since January, 1, 1904, asking for licenses to fish and pack lobsters in said province? If so, who were the applicants?

3. Is it the intention of the government to issue any new licenses during the present year?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The answer to this will be so voluminous that I will ask the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) to move for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand as notice of motion for a return.

40TH BATTALION HASTINGS RIFLES.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. George Taylor—asked:

Has the government considered the advisability of setting apart the officers' quarters of the old drill hall in Belleville for use of the 40th Battalion, Hastings Rifles? If so, what is the determination?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This information has already been furnished to parliament this session in reply to a previous inquiry by the honourable gentleman (vide 'Hansard', unrevised, page 701).

RURAL MAIL DELIVERY IN PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. Has rural mail delivery been established in Prince Edward County, Ontario?

2. Has anything been done towards establishing such rural mail delivery? If so, what, where and at what expense?

3. Has there been any refusal by any mail carriers to collect or deliver mail in Prince Edward County? If so, by whom, when, and for what cause?

4. Is the department aware whether any letters have been mailed in any such rural mail boxes and allowed to remain undespatched owing to refusal of carriers to collect the same?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

The department was informed, through the Chief Post Office Superintendent, that twenty-four rural mail delivery boxes had been erected on the Picton and West Lake mail route, but that the contractor, Mr. Alfred Mills, refused to serve these boxes, it being understood that he was not satisfied with the remuneration offered. Tenders are therefore being invited for a new contract to convey the mails between these two points, such contract to also include collections and deliveries from rural mail boxes established or hereafter to be established. The department has no information that letters have been mailed in the boxes now erected.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—BRANCH TO ORILLIA.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Perley—asked:

Has the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company filed with the government any plans or report as to the line specified in Section 11, subsection 5, of 6 Edward VII., chapter 99, connecting a point on the National Transcontinental Railway between the eighty-third and eighty-fifth degrees of west longitude, with the town of Orillia? If so, what is the estimated length of said line, its cost and the probable date of its completion?

Hon. Geo. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). No such plans have been filed in the Department of Railways and Canals.

ZINC IN ALBERMARLE TOWNSHIP, ONT.

Mr. BEATTIE asked:

1. Is the government aware that an extensive ore body of zinc blende has been discovered on lot No. 30, 3rd concession of Albermarle township, county of Huron, Ontario?

2. Has the government taken any measures by the granting of a bounty or otherwise to encourage the zinc mining industry in Canada?

3. In view of the fact that the development of this industry will require the investment of a large amount of capital, is it the intention of the government to take any such measures?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. The Department of Indian Affairs has no knowledge as to zinc on lot No. 30, con. 3, township of Albermarle. This lot was sold on the 28th of February, 1900, by the Department of Indian Affairs, to Stephen Irwin, and patent issued therefor on the 12th of August, 1908, to Thomas Lindsay, of London, Ont., who acquired the interest of the original purchaser at a tax sale.

SUBSTITUTE FOR A VOLUNTEER.

Mr. HERRON asked:

1. Can a volunteer become a substitute for another volunteer, and perform the homestead duties on both grants?

2. Can a volunteer or his substitute reside on his homestead and do his resident duties under his South African scrip if the scrip is located within nine miles of his homestead?

3. Can a South Africa land warrant pass through the possession of more than one substitute?

4. Can a volunteer or his substitute obtain his patent without residing on the land by getting his improvements done by another party?

5. Can any person other than a veteran, hold and locate and obtain patent for more than one certificate?

6. Can a volunteer or his substitute obtain entry for a South Africa land warrant, and for the homestead and pre-emption adjoining at the same time, and fulfil the homestead duties on both by residing on one quarter only, either the scrip land or the homestead?

7. Can a South Africa certificate pass through the possession of more than one substitute before locating it, and after it has been located by a veteran or his substitute, can they transfer their rights before obtaining patent?

8. Can a South Africa scrip be located on two quarter-sections that corner each other?

9. Can two veterans or their substitutes locating on the same section obtain their patents by residing together?

10. Will a veteran or his substitute have to commence residence within six months from the date of locating his land warrant, or within six months from December, 31, 1910?

11. Is there any way by which a veteran or his substitute can obtain patent without residing six months in each year for three years in succession on the land?

12. Does the government intend to make amendments to the South Africa Land Bill of last session?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes, provided he can perform the necessary residence in each of three years, with the required cultivation upon each half-section.

2. No.

3. No.

4. No. Residence must be performed personally by the locatee, though there is nothing to prevent him having the improvements made by some one else.

5. Yes. A person may be the substitute of two volunteers, but it rests with him to perform the required duties upon both half-sections.

6. No. The duties required on the homestead must be performed in accordance with the Dominion Lands Act, and residence spent on the half-section secured under South Africa land warrant cannot be counted, neither can residence performed on the homestead be counted to the advantage of the military homestead.

7. See answer to question 3. A substitute may be appointed either before or after entry is made by the grantee, and if the settlement duties have been partially performed by the grantee they may be completed by the substitute.

A patent must be issued either to the volunteer or his substitute.

8. No.

9. No.

10. Residence must be commenced by the locatee within six months of the location of the warrant.

11. No.

12. No.

WHARF NEAR LISMORE, PICTOU COUNTY.

Mr. RHODES asked:

1. Has the government constructed or repaired a wharf at or near Lismore, Pictou county, Nova Scotia, within the last three years?

2. If so, what was the total cost of the wharf?

3. Are there any unpaid accounts outstanding? If so, for what, what amount, and to what persons are they due?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. $4,277.67.

3. Pay-list and accounts for October-November, amounting to $1,105.77, are now in the hands of the departmental paymaster, who wires that he has made an appointment to meet the men for payment to-morrow, 16th instant.

DEBT OF CANADA ON JANUARY 31, 1909.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR asked:

1. What was the amount of the net debt of Canada on January 31, 1909?

2. By what amount did the net debt increase during the twelve months ending January 31, 1909?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (for the Minister of Finance):

1. $308,226,027.11.

2. $48,721,413.42.

These amounts only represent the results based on the receipts and payments which passed through the books of the Finance Department up to the last of January of each year referred to.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—EMPLOYEES IN COUNTY OF HALIFAX.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Some days ago the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) asked a question as to the number of employees, temporary and permanent, in the county of Halifax. The question was as follows:

1. What was the number of (a) permanent employees and (b) temporary employees in the service or employment of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the county of Halifax upon, (a) the first day of each month, (b) the 15th day of each month, and (c) the 31st day of December in the year 1908?

2. What was the total amount of the payroll of the said department in the county of Halifax during each of said months?

3. How many temporary employees or labourers were engaged or employed in said county between the first day of September and the first day of November, in the said year 1908?

My hon. friend drew my attention the other day to the fact that the answer was not very clear, and I recognize that it was not. The answer did not show specifically whether the one or the two columns referred to the temporary employees or the permanent employees. I must say also that I think there was a mistake in the last answer, which stated there were 508 employees, whereas the correct number is 208. I append the revised answer in full.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence between Rothwell, Johnston & Stubbs, lawyers, of Winnipeg, and the government, or the Transcontinental Railway Commissioners respecting their instructions in regard to the purchase of the Winnipeg terminals from Kern & Mathews, and in respect to the legal services rendered by them for the government, and passing of titles of the property, and a copy of the solicitors' bills of cost, charges and correspondence arising therefrom; and of all correspondence between the government and the Railway Commissioners and the vendors, Kern & Mathews, from the commencement of the negotiations; and also showing what steps, if any, were taken towards expropriating the property, or obtaining judical determination as to the value of the said property.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a copy of all orders in council, regulations, reports, correspondence, documents, and papers under, relating to or touching the several treaties of April 11, 1908, between His Majesty and the United States of America, relating to or touching any action, proceeding, appointment, reports or other matter made, had or undertaken under or pursuant to the said treaties or either of them.—Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a copy of all orders in council, correspondence, reports, documents and papers relating to the recent waterways treaty, so-called, between His Majesty and the United States of America.—Mr. R. L. Borden.

At Six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

A BUREAU OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. J. B. BLACK (Hants) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the time has arrived when the government of Canada should perfect organization whereby present scientific knowledge would be made practically available for the suppression of preventable diseases.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is exactly the same motion that I made last year. I have several reasons why I thought it best to introduce it again this year. One was that last year it was introduced on a Wednesday afternoon and there were only four of the hon. members who were able to speak on the question, while there were some fourteen or fifteen who desired to do so. I thought it better to bring in the motion again this year in order that every one, if possible, who had nothing to say upon it last year might speak now and also that those who did speak upon it last year might have the privilege of doing so again. Another reason is that I, as well as other medical men, consider this if not the most important, one of the most important questions that could be introduced into the parliament of Canada. This question affects not only the lives and health of our people, but the prosperity of the country. It affects the Finance Department, the Labour Department; it affects the prosperity of the country now and its future greatness. Thirdly, I introduced it again because it is the wish of the medical profession and many of the laity. In introducing this resolution, Mr. Speaker, I may say that I represent not only many laymen interested in improving the health of the people, but I represent 6,000 medical men in the Dominion of Canada. I may say that this is not my question. As you well know it is not my resolution, but it is the motion of the medical profession of Canada. I happen to be one, although at the present time, at least, disengaged from the activities that claim the energies of nearly the whole of the 6,000 medical men, and you all know the hard, busy life of the medical man. He would give greater public utterance to his views upon this question of public health had he more leisure. His time of work extends not only from morning till night, but from morning till morning sometimes, and again from morning till night without any let-up for rest. He has not only to provide for a family, for those dependent upon him, but for the welfare of innumerable sick who take the most of his thoughts and his time. For that reason we do not hear, as often as we otherwise would, the voice of the medical man on this question of public health. Nevertheless he is thinking of it; nevertheless, he is acting about it. When medical men meet in annual association, as we do for the whole Dominion once a year, and for every province once a year, and for every county sometimes as often as once a month, this question comes up very prominently. It is more before the medical profession to-day than it ever was; it is more before the public of Canada to-day than it ever was. Those of the medical men who have been reading the public addresses of presidents of medical associations, and of medical men before the Canadian clubs or other bodies throughout Canada will agree that, for the last two or three years, the burden of these addresses has been 'the public health.' Formerly, at the annual meeting of the medical association, some subject of disease or its treatment, some surgical operation, was usually introduced by the president in his annual address. Now, I have observed, year after year, the presidential address is on some such subject as Public Health, State Medicine or Hygiene. This subject has taken such a hold in the neighbouring republic than a committee of one hundred laymen has been working steadily for the last four or five years to induce the American government to consolidate their various federal boards of health into one single bureau of public heath. And this is the course we hope to see taken in Canada.

Such a hold has this question taken in the United States that Columbia University, one of the first universities on this continent, has taken the lead and established a chair of Public Health, the first of the kind in any medical college in the world. Heretofore medical colleges have contented themselves with teaching how to cure diseases—to the making of people well. Now, Columbia University, in the city of New York, is in the advance guard, teaching medical men how to teach the public to keep from getting sick. It is rather anomalous that we should be engaged in spoiling our own business. But there are a great many men—the great majority—in the medical profession who are willing to sacrifice themselves for the benefit of others rather than consider their own selfish profit.

Some Hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLACK. Two or three laymen say, 'hear, hear.' I am glad to hear them say it. I am now in the ranks of the older men of the medical profession; I have practised alongside two generations of them down in that province by the sea; and I would like to say that I do not believe that in any profession or business in this country, or any other country that I have ever known, can be found a more self-sacrificng, unselfish, generous body of men than the medical men whom I have known and practised along side of. And I take them as a sample of those to be found all over Canada. I also had another reason for introducing this to-day, because, though, last year, I got a speech into the heads of the government, I want, to-night, if it is within my power, to get it into their hearts. I want them to dream dreams and see visions of this subject, until a bureau of public health for the education and instruction of the people shall be established here I do not think we have any right to wait to see what other countries are doing. We are forming here one of the latest, and, as we hope, one of the greatest nations in the world. We are the 'heir of all the ages,' and we can pattern by the mistakes and sins of omission and of commission of other countries. And as we are, man for man, the best educated country in the world—and I say that advisedly, and can quote one of the best authorities in Canada in support of my statement—we should lead in this question of public health for the sake of humanity.

I plead this cause of a bureau of public health for several reasons. I plead it because Canada is suffering enormous losses of people yearly from diseases that could be prevented. I plead it because we are suffering not only loss of people, but loss of enormous money values. I plead it because this loss is unnecessary—because there is no reason why it should continue.

I plead it because the government can and ought to institute a bureau that could teach the public how to live. The government have taken the lead in teaching farmers how to farm. They have taken the lead in teaching them how to make cheese and butter, and have achieved great results thereby. They are teaching the people with a view to awakening an interest in the preservation of our forest trees. They have taken a deep interest, and done a great work, in protecting the lives of our domestic animals. Now I do think it is time that our government should institute a bureau to educate our people to stop dying before they ought, to stop dying until accident or old age overtakes them. Now, some may think that death comes from Providence, that we all must die, and, therefore, to talk of preventing death is to talk of that which is not feasible. Of course the fiat has gone forth that all men must die, and I am glad we must. I think there is no man who has arrived at old age, who has done his duty by his family, by his country and his God, but should be willing to depart this life for a better one. But it is uncalled for, and unnecessary that our people should die in their childhood in their youth, or in middle age. We are losing about 81,201 of our people every year. The estimate of scientific men who have studied the question of public health is that one-third of that number die of preventable diseases—die while yet wage earners, die while yet of value to the state; and their value as citizens adding to the wealth of the country is lost, needlessly, uselessly, and without recall. At this estimate the country is losing every year 27,066 people that we should not lose. Looking at this loss merely from the monetary point of view, and putting the value of a man's life to the state, as it has been estimated over and over again, at $1,000, we are losing every year $27,066,000 from lives sacrificed without any sense or reason and without any need of the sacrifice. The heaviest tax paid in Canada to-day is the tax for funerals, for burials, for the unnecessary sacrifice of human life. I am saying nothing unguardedly, Mr. Speaker; I am saying nothing on the impulse of the moment; I am saying nothing that I have not studied out for years, and that I am not prepared to prove by facts and statistics. Of all the unnecessary and inhuman deaths in Canada, the slaughter of little children, of the babies, is the most unnecessary. We are losing every year 31,347 children under five years of age, most of them done to death by bad milk. It is the estimate of those who have studied the question of sanitation that while one-third of the adult lives we are losing can be saved, one-half of the lives of these children can be saved by proper care and by protection.

We have heard a great deal of righteous indignation against the slaughter of our people at level crossings, and there has not been a word too much said in that regard. In the last five years, I think, there have been 270 people killed at railway crossings —an unnecessary number. Nobody should have been killed there; but what is the effect of the slaughter at railways crossings compared with the 27,066 people who die in Canada every year of preventable diseases? One is just as unnecessary as the other. I have here an extract from a Toronto paper headed 'More ruinous than the drink evil,' and almost every word that it says can be applied to the unnecessary slaughter of little children and adults from preventable diseases:

In connection with the order given by Hon. G. P. Graham that the Railway Commission conduct an investigation into the level railway crossings, a comment in this week's issue of the 'Canadian Churchman' is interesting. It classes work in this direction saving human life as more urgent than labour for the temperance cause. It says :—

'We are told of the horrors of war, and a goodly proportion of our people spend much time, money and labour in what is called the temperance cause. There is an ample field for benevolent enterprise and expenditure in devising means for averting the calamitous railway accidents that are all too frequent. Why not have a guild or society of earnest men and women band together, whose humane and beneficent bond of union would be the endeavour to bring about the abolition of the deadly 'level crossing.' Surely if the lessening of sudden deaths, the prevention of intense bodily suffering to individuals, grief to families and the constant loss of valuable lives to the community, offer motives for action, it is time that combined and organized effort undertook this urgent reform. In the last analysis it is a question of money versus human life.'

If a religious newspaper can write with that energy and earnestness with regard to the loss of 270 lives in five years at level crossings, with how much more energy and earnestness should the press of this country speak out against the unnecessary slaughter of 27,066 people in Canada every year from preventable diseases?

Now, the great practical question that presents itself, after all, is: are there any diseases that we can prevent? Science answers that question most emphatically: yes. May I read some remarks that I made last year:

Let us consider the question of typhoid fever alone. There are cities and towns in Canada that have their cases of typhoid every day in the year, any one of which is preventable. Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University, says:—

'Typhoid fever can be practically abolished by the prevention of the pollution of the rivers and other sources of water supply and by improving our milk.'

Medical writers of undoubted authority have said that it is a disgrace to any community to have an epidemic of typhoid fever. I have seen cases where the cause was so apparent, the filth so near, that the result, as well as the conditions, admitted of no other word than disgraceful.

The fact is now beyond controversy that typhoid can be wiped off the face of the earth. If we attend to the purification of our water and milk supply typhoid fever will be prevented. It is not only a disgrace for a city to have typhoid fever but I believe it is a crime. If the driver of an engine or the conductor of a train is guilty of culpable negligence through which that train is thrown off the track and lives are sacrificed, there is a legal claim against the railway company for damages and there is a criminal charge of manslaughter against the officers of the train. I would like to ask what difference there is in degree between the carelessness of the trainmen and the carelessness of a city not one thousand miles from Ottawa which to-day has 1,000 cases or more of typhoid? If our people were sufficiently educated do you think they would for one instant tolerate the administration of a city council that would allow the pollution of its water supply to continue day after day and year after year? I am not a lawyer but I maintain that the municipal government which allows its people to drink polluted water is as blameable for the loss of lives as the train officials by whose negligence a train is run off the track. I find that cases almost parallel with this have come before the courts in England and have been decided there. In the case of Brown vs. the Three Counties Asylum of Bedfordshire, a widow sued for the loss of her husband who died from typhoid caused by the impure water served by the asylum authorities and she got a verdict of £650. It occurs to me that if some widow in the city I have referred to would bring action against the city council for the loss of her husband by typhoid fever it would be the means, more than anything else, of educating the people on this question. If the city had to pay for the loss of the breadwinner of a family the municipal authorities would probably begin to think about the propriety of establishing a filtration plant to supply pure water to the citizens. I want to say it again, that the supervision of the water supply and proper supervision of our milk supply would banish typhoid fever from the land. Smallpox has been pretty well banished, and it would have been completely banished if the present regulations were properly carried out. Medical science has discovered means for the abolition of many diseases that formerly scourged the earth. To-day medical science has become so exact that scientific research has traced the cause and the prevention of these diseases to a certainty, so that we no longer doubt that we can put an end to typhoid, to scarlet fever, to measles, to whooping cough, to mumps, and other kindred diseases. No medical man will deny that. The question then remains, should not Canada undertake as quickly as possible measures to prevent these diseases which carry so many of our people to an untimely grave? Let us admit that these diseases can be prevented, and having admitted that, we can reduce the deaths amongst adult population by one-third and we can reduce by one-half the number of deaths among our infant population. The next question is can we afford to take measures to that end? My answer is, yes. From a monetary point of view alone it would pay us. As I have shown we lose annually by certain diseases alone what would represent $27,066,000. Spend a fraction of that in educating our people how to avoid the disease and in teaching these cities which are now scattering typhoid all over Canada how to prevent typhoid, and how much of this $27,000,000 a year would be saved? Therefore, I say that from a monetary point of view alone we can afford to take active and energetic measures to prevent typhoid, and we will be richer in the end for it. Is it the duty of the government to embark in this good work? I think so. This government admits it is their duty to teach the people to conserve our natural resources and to protect our forests; they consider it their duty to protect our domestic animals from disease. This government very wisely expends half a million dollars a year and they employ 107 veterinarians to protect the lives of our domestic animals. Is not a man worth more than a sheep; is not a human being worth more than an ox? And if it is the duty of the government to protect the lives of our domestic animals is it not one-thousand-fold more their duty to protect the lives and the health of our own people? There is a little story told by Dr. Hurty, so short and so much to the point that I will venture to repeat it to the House.

A little mother under 25 years of age was told by her physician that she had the beginnings of consumption. She was told that it was curable, that the government had sanitoria to cure it. She wrote to the government saying: I am told that I have consumption in its early stages and can be cured by outdoor life, continued rest and plenty of food. I do not want to die; I want to live. I think I am of value to the State; I want to raise my children, to make them good citizens. Where can I get well?

The reply was to this effect: This great Christian country has not yet risen to the mighty economy of saving the lives of its people or its little mothers from consumption or any other disease. At the present time, so far as we are concerned, the only place you can go to is the grave. The little mother died of consumption, that preventable, that curable disease; the home was broken up and the children were taken to the orphan asylum.

That is the first part of the story—this is the second:

A big fat hog one morning found that he had a pain in his stomach. He squealed loudly and the farmer came out of his house to see what was the matter. The hired man said: He has got the 'hog cholera.' So the farmer telegraphed to the Secretary of the Veterinary Department of the government, and the reply came quick: Why certainly I will send you a man right away. And sure enough the man came. He said he was a D.V.S.—that is, a Doctor of Veterinary Surgery, and he was, too. He had a government syringe and a bottle of government medicine in his hand bag; he went for the hog and the hog got well.

Now here is the moral—be a hog and be worth saving.

Mr. Speaker, if hogs can be saved, men can be saved; if it is worth the while of the government to save a hog, it is a million times more worth while to save the lives of human beings. I do want the government to get it into their heads that the lives of the people can be saved and must be saved. Of course it costs money, but is it not worth the expenditure? From a monetary point of view only, is it not worth the expenditure? I do not want to touch upon the sentimental side of this question, although there is a sentimental side to it. There are tragedies from the ravages of disease which, if pictured in better words than I can command, would bring tears to every eye in this House. When we consider the needless loss of so many people, when we consider the enormous death rate, the suffering and the agony of little infants who have died from poisoned milk, we stand aghast. No medical man who has attended a case of cholera infantum, infantile diarrhoea or acute indigestion, all coming from poisoned milk—and when I say poisoned milk I mean milk that is brought from the country in the ordinary way into the city to be sold, not a drop of which is pure unless it is pasteurized or sterilized, —no medical man who has looked on the faces of these suffering children and felt his own inability to save their innocent lives, has been free from bitter heartache. Any medical man can picture to you the dying agonies of men and women in the prime of life who have left their families helpless, all for want of proper knowledge. Much has been said of tuberculosis and much has not yet been told. We can say the same things of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, and all the other unnecessary and preventable diseases that are sweeping our people off the earth needlessly. It is simply because we have been used to these things, that our fathers and our forefathers have been used to them for generations, that we passively allow this dreadful waste of life. If laymen could see as clearly as medical men the needlessness of this loss and suffering, I do not believe we would wait a year or a month to take the first steps to remedy this terrible evil.

I do not wish to speak in detail of what a federal bureau of public health should do, but I take it for granted that its first step would be education—educate the people, teach them how they can avoid preventable disease, teach the cities how they must avoid disease, for there is where the great slaughter comes. I have been told by some in authority that this is the work of the provinces. So it is the work of the provinces; it is the work of the cities, it is the work of the villages, it is the work of every individual. But I maintain that a federal bureau of public health would not interfere with the health departments of the provinces, but would rather be an educator to them, would be a stimulus and a guide to them. Such a bureau would teach the whole people more effectively than any provincial organization could do. But so far as my knowledge goes this question is as much a question for the federal authorities as for any of the provincial authorities. In the British North America Act, although among the fathers of confederation was one doctor—and he was a good doctor in his day as well as a pretty good politician—there is very little reference made to public health. I find only two clauses. The first section dealing with it defines the power of the federal government in this regard. They are to have charge of quarantine and the establishment and maintenance of marine hospitals. The Act assigns to the provinces:

> The establishment, maintenance and management of hospitals, asylums, charities and eleemosynary institutions in and for the province other than marine hospitals.

In practice most of this work has been left to the provinces by the federal government, but I hope better days are coming and that the federal government will take hold of these things. There is much, Mr. Speaker, that a federal bureau of public health could do. As I said, its functions should be, for years to come, educative. Teach the people by literature, by public addresses, in every way possible, how to stop dying before their time. It is hardly worth while to go into details, there are so many of them I might mention. But the conditions in our factories all over the country, the unwholesome conditions in which men, women and little children work in our factories, are such as to require immediate attention. The provinces, at least the province of Nova Scotia, have deemed it wise to appoint government inspectors of poor houses and prisons to see that sanitation regulations are carried out. Now, if a criminal's life is worth watching, how much more is the life of the bread earners worth watching, the men, women and children in our factories. Go into them to-day, go into them at any time until the summer heat and you will find many of them in the most unsanitary condition. Go into some of the Canadian mills, and you will find that the protection of the workers has never been considered. This is one of the very important things that a bureau of public health could look after. The school houses are unsanitary to a degree all over the country. They are a little better in the cities, but they are unsanitary to a degree in the country parts where I have known and seen them. We should provide for the examination of children in schools, the proper examination of our water supply, both in towns and country, for typhoid arises almost as frequently from the farm house well as from the river or lake supply of the city. Most people do not know this. I may say from experience in regard to the water supply in the towns of Nova Scotia, taking the stretch of country known as the Annapolis valley from the town of Windsor to the town of Annapolis, little less than 100 miles, in which there are from 12 to 15 towns and villages, that every doctor calculated on his autumn supply of typhoid fever arising from well water. In the last twenty years all those towns have been supplied with a magnificent water system from the mountains. On each side of the valley a pure supply of water comes into all those towns, and in those towns typhoid fever is unknown except that which is brought in by those who go to visit their country cousins, who have taken it from the farm house well. There is very little typhoid in the towns and villages except that which has been imported. Now, I say all these matters should be under the supervision of an official of the government, and the people should be instructed where to put their wells and how to keep them clean. I might go on and tell you what a board of health could do, but it would take me all night, and I would not be half done.

I said in the beginning, Mr. Speaker, that this question was a most important one. The medical profession have given the matter a great deal of earnest attention. If I did not fear to weary you I would like to run over what has been done by the medical associations of Canada and the appeals they have made to this good government of ours, for it is a good government. I would like to show what has been done by the Canadian Medical Asociation since 1902.

I do not know what was done before that, but I hold in my hand a record of what has been done since 1902. In 1902, at the thirty-fifth annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association, the largest and most representative meeting of the medical profession up to that time, was held in the city of Montreal on the 16th, 17th and 18th of September. The following resolution was proposed by Dr. E. P. Lachapelle, Montreal, and seconded by Dr. J. R. Jones, of Winnipeg:

Resolved, that in the opinion of the Canadian Medical Association, now in session, the time is opportune for the Dominion government to earnestly consider the expediency of creating a separate department for public health, under one of the existing ministers, so that regulations, suggestions and correspondence, on such health matters as fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government, may be issued with the authority of a department of public health.

In 1903 a similar resolution was passed. I notice it is stated that the deputation that waited on the Prime Minister in 1903 was most courteously received. I am sure that could be said of the Prime Minister, not only in 1903, but in every year since he has been in public life. They reported that he listened patiently to the sentiments set forth, and finally authorized Dr. Roddick to place a resolution on the order paper with a view to having a discussion in parliament before the Privy Council took up the matter in earnest. Sir Wilfrid Laurier also stated that in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, who was familiar with the whole question, he would not willingly go into the matter at a greater length with a view to legislation in the minister's absence. In 1904 there was another deputation, and a committee was appointed. In 1907 I had the pleasure myself of forming one of another deputation from the Canadian Medical Association that waited on Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Now, Mr. Speaker, I only mention these things to show that this is no new matter, the medical profession has been asking it for years. I feel sure that the reform will come, and that it will come soon. The finances of the country ask for it, the prosperity of the country requires it, suffering humanity demands it, dying men and women who have no need to die demand it. If we as a Christian people have caught the genius of Christianity, surely, in God's name, this reform will come and come soon, and I hope to see it before another year.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM (East Huron). I wish to say a few words in support of the very important resolution which has been so ably and fully discussed this evening by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black). I must admit, however, that it appears he has left very little for me to say, and that little more should be required to be said.

He has treated the question so thoroughly, so correctly, and so exhaustively, that I think he surely must have made an impression upon the government. It seems to me that the government, after hearing the facts he has stated, and after listening to the fund of information he has laid before the House, and the pointed, not to say alarming statements, he has made, should lose no time in taking action. He has clearly shown us that delay in a matter of this kind means to the Canadian people a loss not only of millions of dollars but also of thousands of lives. He has told us that 27,000 people die in Canada every year from preventable diseases, and he might very well have added that ten times, if not fifty times, that number are compelled afterwards to go through life struggling, handicapped with weakened constitutions and to suffer the immense losses in time and in money which preventable sickness has entailed upon them. Preventive medicine has made such rapid progress during the last five or six years that perhaps those members of the government who are not medical men should be excused for not keeping themselves abreast of the times and not properly posting themselves in a matter of this kind. But, after to-day, they will scarcely be able to plead excusable ignorance in regard to this matter. If they would investigate and post themselves with regard to the works of the great masters in this line, of Prof. Koch, of Germany, and Pasteur, of France, they would very soon realize how very far behind the people of Canada are with regard to the question of preventive medicine. These great men, paid by their governments large salaries and furnished with well-equipped laboratories and assistants, have devoted their lives to this study and they have practically revolutionized the whole practice of medicine. They have pointed out to us not only how a great many diseases can be entirely prevented, especially those diseases that have their origin in germs, but they have also shown how, by a certain scientific line of treatment, people can be made immune to certain diseases. They have taught the medical profession that their first duty, as my hon. friend from Hants has said, is to keep the people well, is to keep them from getting sick, and they have shown them that there is truth in the old French adage that the best way to keep well is not to get sick. When we consider that nearly all the diseases which have their origin in germs can be prevented and that many others can be so managed that people would be immune to them, the government certainly have a very serious duty to perform in connection with the matter. We are spending $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 a year to prepare to meet an enemy that may never come to us; that is war or something of that kind.

It is nearly a hundred years since Canada was engaged in any foreign war and we are spending this large amount of money to meet an enemy that, if it did come here, would spare at least the poor children, women and old men. But there is an army invading our country at the present time that is taking away our people, that is slaughtering 27,000 every year and impoverishing a great many others. Are we going to make no effort to oppose this army? What we propose is that there should be a bureau of health established by the government, that it should be placed under the control of some well educated young Canadian, that he should have youth and a thorough education and that he should be competent to take the position as head of the department and conduct it in such a way as to ensure its success. He should be an enthusiast in his work and try to make for himself a name that would rival that of the great men of Europe. It should be his particular duty to study the particular diseases that are peculiar to this country and to instruct us in the best ways of avoiding them. It is scarcely fair that we should get all our information and all our benefit in this respect from France and Germany. These people are heavily taxed and still they put their hands in their pockets and pay these men to conduct these very necessary and useful experiments.

In the first place, the Dominion government have already certain departments of medicine established and all we would ask is that they be consolidated and that a proper head be placed over them. The Minister of Marine, as we have been told, looks after the marine hospitals; the Minister of the Interior looks after the inspection of immigrants; the Minister of Agriculture has his department of quarantine, and the Minister of Inland Revenue looks after the quality of our food; so that the Dominion government have already admitted that they have certain duties to perform in this matter. If these different departments were consolidated and the people were properly instructed, beneficial results would follow. They should be taught to use what God has given them; that is sunlight, and they should be shown what great advantage can be derived from the proper use of sunlight. If you go into many houses you will find that they are darkened, and if you ask the people why they will tell you that they do not wish to have flies in the house. The flies have more sense than the people; they will not stay in a darkened room. All these things could be pointed out, such as the advantage of pure, uncontaminated water and pure air. We know that there is a prejudice in the country against the open air. We know that although it is one of the principal things that are to be used in the cure of consumption, people who are troubled with lung disease have a special prejudice against the open window. This should be all explained to them, and the injury resulting from the use of contaminated air should also be pointed out. The government have already taken the responsibility of sending out a very useful pamphlet with regard to the spread of tuberculosis. It was prepared by our good friend, Mr. H. H. Miller, M.P., and the government took the responsibility of having it printed and of having a large number of copies circulated through the country. This action of the government is calculated to do a great deal of good. Why have they not sent out other pamphlets on these lines? Why have they not sent a pamphlet telling the people that it is absolutely unnecessary that people should have typhoid fever? Look at the number who are dying all over the country as the result of typhoid fever. This disease as the hon. member for Hants explaind, is entirely unnecessary. If the dejecta from every typhoid fever patient were at once cremated or disinfected in a proper manner we would very soon have no typhoid fever in the Dominion of Canada. Similarly in the case of smallpox. I remember very well, in 1848 and 1849, when the famine was in Ireland and Scotland, that there was an immense immigration into this country, and I remember, although I was only a small boy, that I noticed that the older people who came from the old country were covered with pock-marks. It was supposed that every person should have smallpox at some time in his life; yet, see how few people have it now. It is not more than 200 years since a slave was advertised to be sold in Montreal and one of the principal recommendations in regard to that slave was that he had had the smallpox. We know that there is a feeling abroad in the country that every child must have scarlet fever, whooping cough and measles at some time. Yet, it is not necessary that children should have any of these diseases. These diseases are all absolutely preventable. There is another class of disease which is just as easily preventable, and the people should be instructed in regard to them. I refer to the diseases resulting from improper dieting and the improper use and mastication of food. People should be taught that food is the fuel consumed in the human system and that therefore it should be carefully regulated according to the amount and quality of the work to be done. They should be carefully instructed and told that men who are engaged in heavy, active, out-door manual labour require much more food than those who are engaged in inside sedentary employments.

You may go along any back line in the country and you may come to some wayside cheese factory or saw-mill and if you ask the old engineer there he will tell you that if he continued to add fuel to the fire after the machinery had ceased to work he would very soon ruin the engine or burst the boiler. People seldom exercise so much good judgment in regard to their own systems. The wealthy and those who have least to do often take the most food and of the richest and strongest kind. They can afford it; it looks aristocratic and it pleases their taste and their appetite, but medical men can tell them that very often the consequences are disease and death. When more food is taken into the system than can be assimilated or is necessary for the nourishment of the body, the surplus simply goes to decay and turns to poison in the stomach and intestines. Nature makes an effort to get rid of these poisonous materials through the bowels, the liver, the kidneys, the skin and other excretory organs; but if this over indulgence is continued for many years as it often is these excretory organs become exhausted; they gradually fail to do their duty, the blood and the system become loaded up, with effete, and worn out, and poisonous material and the foundation is laid for many dangerous and fatal diseases. Therefore the people should be instructed as to the quality and quantity of the food they should take. More, they should be carefully instructed also that the food should be properly cooked and how to cook it. They should be told also that in every case food should be carefully and very thoroughly masticated and mixed with the saliva. In fact, in every case the food should be retained in the mouth until it is not only chewed into a pulp but until it is perfectly mixed with the saliva which is a highly important digestive ingredient. You often hear people say their teeth water when we know as a matter of fact that no water comes from the teeth, but we do know there is thrown out a fluid from the salivary glands of the mouth to assist in the very important act of digestion which is carried on in the mouth, a fact which is very often forgotten by people when they are taking their food. It should be represented to the people that even the softest of food such as porridge and mashed potatoes should be carefully and thoroughly mixed with the saliva before it is swallowed, and that the food should be moistened with the saliva which nature intended to moisten it. Tea and coffee, and even milk, and water, or any of these fluids have no digestive power, and if we insist in bolting our food in large chunks and washing it down with these or any other fluids we need not wonder if we are troubled with indigestion. The saliva is an alkiline fluid and it is necessary that it should chemically combine with the acid gastric juice of the stomach to set up and continue the proper and healthy process of digestion, and therefore the food should be prepared in the mouth before passing to the system. A morsel of food should be taken into the mouth and thoroughly mixed with the saliva and then well masticated before it is swallowed. The right quantity of fluid should be taken of course, but it should be taken at the right time. In the country, especially in the winter, I have found as a medical man that there is a great mistake made in regard to the amount of fluid that should be taken. There are two mistakes made by the people who are not engaged in heavy labour in the winter and this applies even to farmers; they take more food than they require and a great deal less fluid than is necessary. In taking this fluid it should be taken in a proper way. They may drink between meals or between bites if they choose, but a person who is troubled with dyspepsia or weakened stomach trouble should never take fluid into his mouth while food is there. Then again, starchy foods and meats should be particularly well chewed. If they are not, they simply rot and go to decay in the inside, and what more dangerous material could you have internally than rotten meat or fermenting and decaying vegetables? And if we persist deliberately in thus making graveyards of our stomachs is it any wonder that we find our own way to the cemetery? Then again I would neither advise nor recommend that we should give the children in the schools and the people throughout the country a course in anatomy, nor yet that we should give them much more than a mere indication, as I have given you, of the information that may be given to them in regard to digestion. But we can teach and publish pamphlets that will convey to them some idea about the functions and the care of the human system. There is no more important study in which men can engage than an investigation of the proper and healthy workings of their own bodies. I think there are few people who will deny that. Is it not strange then that we can find many who thoroughly understand the most intricate workings of other machinery but who at the same time appear to know or care little about their own systems; about the necessity for a rigid and faithful observance of the simple laws that govern the healthy action of their own bodies. Farmers and mechanics and others appear to know well that by taking proper care of their agricultural implements and other instruments of labour, these can be made not only to work better but to last longer. Every engineer knows distinctly that he must thoroughly understand a locomotive before he is allowed to take charge of one on a railroad. Even the boy with a bicycle is well aware that it must be regularly oiled and cleaned and cared for or its usefulness will soon be gone and ultimately it will be ruined. Let us take another example—that of the fashionable and fastidious young man who drives his own touring car through the country and who becomes so enamoured of and interested in its workings that he forgets all about his costly clothing and so utterly disregards appearances that you will see him lying prone on the road, on his back, gazing upwards to see what has gone wrong with the machinery of his automobile. In all probability he regards that machine simply as a toy to be laid aside without profit at the close of a summer holiday, and yet, foolishly we think, he gives it his very best attention and his very best care, while one-half the earnest attention given to the study of the structure and workings of his own body might add many years to his life and save him from an immense amount of disease and suffering. The human machine is an automobile far more valuable and important than the most elaborate touring car that ever was conceived and perfected. Yet, notwithstanding all this every human being, every man and woman in the country, is compelled to take charge of and run a machine, their own bodies, that is far more complicated and interesting and far more difficult to manage than any of these I have mentioned. Few fit themselves properly for the task, and the result is, what the member for Hants indicated this evening, that after spending a whole lifetime in the practice of medicine I state here that in my opinion most of the sickness and far more than one-half the deaths which occur in this country before sixty years of age are due either directly or indirectly to ignorance of the laws of health and of nature or to carelessness in applying them. Now, this study could be made interesting to the public. The people could be instructed in regard to the functions of their own bodies; they could be shown that the human machine is a wonderful piece of mechanism and the wonderful working of it could be pointed out to them in an attractive new way. It could be demonstrated to them that by having even a partial knowledge of the peculiar functions of the human body they might extend their lives for many many years. I happened to notice in a paper yesterday that some insurance company is proposing to send out literature to those it insured, and it makes the statement definitely that the period of human life could be extended by fifteen years.

As I have said, the human machine is a wonderful piece of mechanism. Its beauty, symmetry, elasticity, strength and adaptability are so perfect that the result is simply amazing. If a man constructs a great number of machines for a certain purpose, they are usually so much alike that one cannot be distinguished from another. But that is not the case with nature's great Master Mechanic. There are said to be over four hundred millions of people on the earth's surface. Each one of these has an organism of his own; and yet no two of them are exactly alike. Notwithstanding this wonderful variation, the structure of the human system is so perfect that if it were run in every case in accordance with the dictates of common sense and the law of nature, I believe that it would, barring accidents, last about a hundred years. But in many cases not only are the dictates of common sense ignored, but the laws of health and of nature are so neglected and violated that the result is simply appalling.

The study of the human system might do our people good in more ways than one, because I cannot understand how any man who becomes familiar with its structure and operation can believe that it took its present form by chance or accident or even by gradual development. There are so many evidences of design in it that there must have been a designer, and that the designer must have been able to create. For my part, I cannot comprehend how any man can thoroughly apprehend the wonders of his own body, and be an unbeliever or an atheist. For, after all, the greatest mechanical achievements effected by mankind have been simply poor imitations of nature and of nature's great Designer, Creator and Controller. For example, the telegraph is supposed to be a recent invention but it has been long in use in the human system. The brain is, as it were, a central electric station, from which the mind, with wonderful accuracy and rapidity, sends forth its messages to every part of the body. Think of a lady at a piano, think of the rapidity of her fingers and the accuracy of the sounds produced, and reflect that her performance is governed by a little electric cell located in the brain. Some doctor has said that the human brain occupies less space in proportion to its capabilities than any other machine ever invented. It sends forth a nerve to every ultimate fibre of some five hundred muscles, to every pin-head area of the various glands which keep the machine oiled and heated and cooled. On the surface of the average human body there are sixteen square feet of skin, which is so completely covered with nervous fibre, that the point of a pin canot find a spot unguarded. Similarly our ears are nature's perfect telephone, and Bell's is only an imitation. The telephonic switchboard of the brain is remarkable for its accuracy and completeness. Then, again, the telescope is only an enlarged representation of the eye of man or an animal. Just stop for one minute and consider if some little chance or accident had entered into the location of the eye. Consider how its delicate mechanism is guarded by the brows, the lids, the lashes and the solid bony structure around it. Think how inconvenient it would have been if our eyes had happened to be located in the soles of the feet. How liable the delicate structures would have been to injury or destruction; and think how humiliating and annoying it would have been to our young men if they had been compelled to sit down and take off their shoes and stockings and hold up their feet every time they wanted to look at a beautiful young woman or some other interesting object. Then, suppose, our mouths had happened to be located in the backs of our necks. Food would have reached the gullet just as well, but it would have been very inconvenient to have been compelled to carry the porridge and milk and the toast and tea of our breakfast around to that part of our body in the morning. The old saying that there is many a slip between the cup and the lip would in that case have been still more appropriate. Then, consider how inconvenient it would have been if our ears had been located on our elbows or under our arms. I might go on with illustrations of this kind to show that the human body is not the result of chance or accident. There are evidences of design in every part of it. Every organ not only adds to the beauty and symmetry of the system, but is so located as to be in the best possible position to do its duty easily and effectively. Think, for example, of the way in which the human system is guarded in the matter of food. First, we have two sharp sentries, the eyes, so located that they can see everything that enters the mouth. The food has to pass their scrutiny first. Then, as it enters the mouth, its savoury or unsavoury condition is challenged by two other sentries, the nostrils. Next the lips test its hardness or softness. Then it is met by thirty-two sturdy sentries, all clad in white and drawn up in battle array; these are the teeth, which subject the food to careful examination lest some foreign or deleterious substance may be covered up in it and thus smuggled into the system. While they are doing their duty, there stands behind them another sentinel, the sense of taste. But it is quite possible that the food, having passed these guards and undergone these examinations, might still contain some little invisible germs that succeeded in passing through after all. These are searched out by the saliva, which is thrown out by six other sentinels three on either side of the mouth. It is well to remember that the saliva is poisonous to these germs, that if it is well mixed with the food, it will destroy even typhoid germs, but when the food is taken rapidly into the stomach, the saliva does not have a chance to do its full work. Then, if something deleterious should succeed in getting past all these guards or sentinels, the very moment it reaches the stomach, a telegraphic message is sent from the brain ordering that the dangerous intruder shall be ejected. I or any other medical man in the House could go on and give examples to show how this kind of literature could be made interesting to the public and do a great deal of good. It should be made readable, and it should be free from Greek or Latin phrases and from technical terms. It should be given in simple language and in a common sense way; and if the people were instructed in this way, I am satisfied that they would be greatly benefited. This is the kind of work that should be taken up by a bureau of health. I could go on all night describing the beauties of the respiratory system, the circulatory system or the secretory system.

In every branch of the subject we find equal wonders and equal perfections. This would be the work of a Bureau of Health and I do hope the government will turn their attention to this matter and adopt an intelligent and aggressive policy. They can at least prevent ignorance, and it is ignorance that is causing the death of so many of our little children and of our grown up people. Much has been done in the prevention of tuberculosis, but it is a pity that this work has been left too largely to private subscriptions and private enterprise. I am sure that when the government consider and fully understand this matter, they will bring honour to themselves and great benefit to the country by instituting a federal bureau of health. As to the argument that the provinces will take it up, there is work for the provinces, work for the cities, work for the county councils, for the township councils, and for the school sections. There is no place where more can be done than right in the school, as I have said. The schools should be inspected, the children should be instructed, and diseases should be checked in the school room in their inception. I am convinced that if we expect to become the great people we should on this continent, the dominating people as I am sure we ultimately will, we must be a healthy people. All we can ask the government to do is to vote just one half the amount of money spent each year in unnecessary funerals in Canada; if they will do that we will have a bureau of health that will astonish the world. If they will vote for this purpose one-fourth of what they spend in bringing immigrants to Canada, we will fill the places of these immigrants with healthy Canadians. I would ask that they would take some action in this matter without further delay. I have great pleasure in seconding the motion so ably moved by my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Black). I am sure he did it in all unselfishness, and I would be glad if he and I, in our old days in the profession, could be the pioneers in securing this great good for the country before we leave our places in the House and in the profession. I hope the young medical men, the clergymen, the newspapers and every man in this House will preach this new gospel of sanitation and press on until we have in Canada a thoroughly healthy and prosperous people.

Mr. D. H. McALISTER (King's and Albert). Mr. Speaker, I listened with great pleasure to the addresses of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) and the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. T. Chisholm) who have so ably proposed this resolution. But, Sir, I was surprised indeed to notice how little attention was paid to the subject by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. It is one of the most important questions that have been discussed in the House this year or that will be,. yet gentlemen left the chamber, one half of those who remained went to sleep, and one quarter did not pay attention. If I cared to do so I could make half the members now here leave the chamber and could empty the galleries by saying there are millions of microbes in this chamber. Suppose there is a consumptive in the gallery to-night, as I have quite strong reason to believe there is, and if that lady should expectorate once on the floor, how many germs do you suppose would be put into circulation? One million.

The object of the resolution we are discussing is to enlighten our people along these lines, to prevent the people with that disease coming to a place like this, and to teach them how to take care of their sputum and to sterilize that which would cause infection. It may be said that this is not a matter for this government. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of tremendous importance. I am sorry to say there are too many people in Canada who are not aware of the dangerous germs that are in existence. Pathologists have proved beyond a doubt that all diseases are transmitted by germs. When I had typhoid fever some 19 years ago, it was not known that that disease was caused by a germ, but since then it has been proven beyond a doubt that it is a germ disease. What are these little germs like? Like the little pollywogs in the water. It would be interesting, if time would permit, to describe the development of these germs in the water, their entrance and the great battle which takes place between this germ, the typhoid baccillus, and the lencocyte in the blood. This conflict generates a poison called a potomaine, which in many instances creates sufficient constitutional disturbances to cause death. The hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) told you of the number of deaths from typhoid fever, and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of his figures. He could have told you there are thousands and thousands dying of tuberculosis today, from a disease caused by germs, and that the death of these people was unnecessary, that the disease could be banished from our country if certain precautions were taken. That is what the government should realize, they should become seized of the idea that this thing can be done, and as my hon. friend says the time has come when it must be done. As an illustration of the manner in which typhoid can be checked, in our little town of Sussex, I myself had as many as eleven cases of typhoid at one time before the installation of a waterworks system. I was myself almost ignorant how these people were being infected by the bacilli, and I am safe in saying that not three per cent of the inhabitants realized what was causing the disease. They were using water from wells which were contaminated from cess pools, &c. Every year we lost from three to six people from that little town. Some six years ago the waterworks were installed, the water was taken from a river that was perfectly pure and was run into a filter. Since then there has not been a case of typhoid in the town. That shows that typhoid fever can be done away with if the proper precautions are taken and it is the duty of the government, I believe, to prevent the pollution of our rivers. Take Montreal, for instance, where they have a great epidemic of typhoid. I believe the federal government should take that up and force the city of Montreal to instal a filtration system. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. M. Martin) who is an alderman of the city of Montreal, tells me they are going to spend $2,000,000 this year in trying to escape from that dreaded disease typhoid. I presume they will seek to do this by installing a filtration plant.

It does not matter about the cost; it is not a matter of money at all, it is too serious a proposition for that. We are very careful, as has been nobly said by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black), that the dumb animals should be protected and half a million dollars a year is expended to protect them. Why, then, should not human beings be protected? They ought to be. I confess that I myself am afraid of the bacillus tuberculosis. I feel that I have in my constitution appropriate soil for its growth. Some claim that tuberculosis is not hereditary. I know it is hereditary, in this sense, that, while a child may not be born with consumption, it may be born with a delicate mucous membrane of the air passage, inherited from father or mother, associated with a weak resistance, so that when the germ comes it grows like an oat in soil that has been prepared for its reception. Medical men know that patients come to them sometimes and say that they have a cough, have not felt well, associated with emaciation and night sweats. These symptoms date from a cold. The cold did not give them consumption; it only prepared the mucous membrane of the air passage, so that when the germ was taken in it took root and grew and formed a nucleus for the dreaded disease. We spend thousands of dollars a year in bringing foreigners into this country to become citizens and live under the dear old flag. It is estimated, as the hon. member for Hants has shown, that the average male inhabitant, able to keep himself and others, is worth $1,000 to the country under whose flag he lives. We must bring in immigrants because we are not prolific enough to populate this country otherwise. If we are bringing in others, why not protect those we already have? Thousands of our people are dying every year who could be saved from dying; we want this government to show the people how to live. I am not looking for a job myself, and I do not want to go around the country lecturing, but I do not see how a better thing could be done by this government than to employ one or both of the hon. members who moved and seconded this resolution to speak to public audiences, to instruct the people in the germ theory, teach them how to be careful of their health, explain to them, if they have a consumptive in their house, how to destroy the sputum, and so on. It is wonderful what can be accomplished in this way if we take the necessary means to do it. We do not expect the government to do everything—and it would be a bad thing for us young doctors if they did. I am not surprised to hear these statements from the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) and the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Thos. Chisholm), for it seems to me they will not be practising medicine very much longer—I think they expect to remain in politics for the rest of their lives; they must be looking for a senatorship, or they would not talk as they do. If the government will do what these gentlemen ask it to do they will accomplish one of the greatest reforms ever accomplished in Canada. The hon. member for East Huron made a remark on which I would like to enlarge. He said that we eat too much. There is no doubt about it. More people in the Dominion of Canada and the United States, and all over the world, die of overeating than of overdrinking.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McALISTER. That may seem a bold statement to make, but I mean it and I am ready to stand by it. The hon. member for East Huron explained that when people take too much into their stomach it lies there and causes poisoning. But I propose to go further than that. If the stomach is in good condition it will digest far more than the system requires. The little glands or ducts take up more than is necessary and thus it is carried into the circulation. The human system is a machine and requires only so much to keep it going. If more than is needed is forced into the circulation it causes dilatation of the circulatory system which is made up of capillaries, veins and arteries. These are muscles like any other. If you exercise the muscles of your arms for half an hour a day, development will take place. If too much of the products from food is forced into the capillaries, veins and arteries, the arteries are going to become enlarged. They do not become stronger as the muscles of your arms become stronger with exercise, but they become weaker, and that makes an old man out of a young one. A man is as old as his arteries, not his years.

However, that is a little aside from the subject and is more than I intended to say. In fact, I am not prepared to say very much on this subject and I will not trouble the House for more than a few moments longer. In conclusion, I would say that this subject should receive the earnest and sincere consideration of every member of this House. I am not saying that because I am a medical man. But I am a firm believer in the germ theory. I was taught that in old McGill, by Professor Adami, who is an excellent authority on pathology, and I have proven it for myself in my own practice that practically every disease is associated with some germ. Of these there are three we should particularly ward against, the tubercular bacillus, the typhoid bacillus and the diphtheria bacillus. And in that fight we should have the assistance of the federal government. Just how this is to be done, of course, is a matter to be worked out by the government itself. I hope that both sides of the House will see their way clear to support this resolution. And, in that connection, let me call attention to the fact that these germs attack Liberals and Conservatives alike.

Mr. JOHN WESLEY EDWARDS (Frontenac). It is not my intention to take up much time discussing this resolution, so ably proposed by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) and so exhaustively dealt with by the hon. member for East Huron (Mr. T. Chisholm) and the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. McAllister). The resolution calls upon the government of Canada to perfect an organization whereby present scientific knowledge would be made practically available for the suppression of preventable diseases. I observed that the hon. gentleman who preceded me dwelt upon scientific methods to be used in preventing disease. I think that probably enough time has been taken up in impressing the members of this House of the wonders of the human body, and of the desirability of preventing disease so far as we possibly can.

Certainly I think this question is one deserving the most careful consideration on the part of every member of this House. Let me mention particularly one argument made use of by the hon. gentleman who so ably proposed this resolution, I mean the figures he gave showing the number of deaths which occur annually in Canada from preventable diseases. Mr. Speaker, those figures reveal a serious condition of affairs, and I would ask this House to consider them carefully. I think that was the strongest point in the argument made by the hon. member for Hants. If, not 27,000, not 20,000, not 5,000, but if only 1,000, persons in the Dominion of Canada die annually whose deaths could be prevented by any Act of this legislature, certainly you will agree that it is the duty of this legislature to try to prevent that loss of life. We are well acquainted with the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. I think we all subscribe to that statement. While medical science has done a great deal in the past to lengthen the span of life, and we have been furnished by certain departments of this government with the facts proving that in the last 25 years the average length of human life has been increased, the facts that have been brought to our attention tonight must have convinced us that still more can be done in the same direction. If it is a good thing to cure disease, it is a far better thing to prevent it. I feel convinced that before the end of this century men will occupy the seats we are filling today who will look back to the early years of this present century and wonder that the parliament of Canada was so apathetic over a matter of such great national importance.

Mr. J. BARR (Dufferin). I agree with much that has been said by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House as to the importance of the question which has been brought to our attention by the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black). We have been told how much medical science has done in late years to prolong human life, but it is sad to reflect that medical men themselves have not been the greatest beneficiaries of the increased discoveries in medical science. The farmers of our country, and the members of the learned professions other than the medical profession, have benefited from the advances made by medical science more than the members of the medical profession themselves. Now when we come to consider the resolution calling upon this government to take action, we are led to inquire whether the fathers of confederation were wise in relegating to the different provinces the subject of public health, giving them charge of that most important question. We are led to ask ourselves whether the Dominion government are better constituted to deal with that question than are the provincial governments. While I do not wish to differ from hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, I am still doubtful whether we could do more towards accomplishing the object we all have in view by asking the Dominion government to deal with this matter than by leaving it to the provinces. For my part I am of the opinion that the provincial governments can work out this problem better than the Dominion government. We know that in several provinces the local governments have made great strides in the past few years in the direction of improving public health. Take for instance the province of Ontario, with which I am best acquainted. We all know what great strides that province has been making in that direction the last few years. In every municipality they have a health officer; the municipal council appoints a health officer, and generally chooses him from amongst the best medical men they have. It is the duty of this officer to visit every person that is infected with disease, to examine into the environment, into the water supply, which we all know is one of the greatest sources of disease. It is his duty to look into the milk supply, and to ascertain if possible the cause of every outbreak of contagious disease. Now do you think that a Dominion health bureau could accomplish more than is being done by the provincial health bureau? Is it not possible that there might be an overlapping of duties, that there might be friction between the two bodies? What more can be done than is being done at the present time? We are making rapid strides along that line already. We know that every house has to be placarded in which there is infectious disease. If the average length of human life has been prolonged twenty or twenty-five years, I believe it is due to the provincial machinery, to the work that is accomplished by the health officers in the different provinces. Therefore, before we ask the federal government to appoint a federal health bureau, we should consider this question very carefully. Of course I would not suggest for a moment that any medical man wanted a federal bureau appointed for the purpose of getting an office. So far as medical men are concerned, I believe they are far above any monetary consideration whatever. But this is a question which we should consider before any more steps are taken along that line. It is possible for us to make that machinery more perfect and it is wise for us to do so. That machinery is being made more perfect each year. As far as Toronto is concerned, we have probably, at the head of the bureau, a number of the best medical men in Canada, and I believe they are accomplishing great work, a work that could not be accomplished by other bureaus in Canada. Any outbreak is immediately reported to them and if necessary they send experts. We have not only that, but we have, in connection with our agricultural societies a woman's institute. They come around and deliver practical lectures in connection with cooking. They bring with them material and in the presence of our wives and daughters demonstrate the advantage of cooking in relation to the health of the community. They show how food can be more easily digested and they tell the people the kind of food that can best be taken in. That movement is both useful and practical. I can come to no other conclusion than that the fathers of confederation were wise in their day in leaving to the provincial authorities to work out this problem. I believe that much has been accomplished and that much can yet be accomplished for the good of mankind. We may say that every life we can save is a matter of great importance, but there is another side to this question. We might ask ourselves the question, what the Dominion government has done since confederation as compared with the work of the provincial boards of health, and I submit that the achievements will not stand comparison, that the provincial government have done much more along this line and that the Dominion government, in so far as they are working out the problem, have not accomplished what they should have.

Mr. BLACK. Does the hon. gentleman take into consideration that there are other provinces outside of Ontario making up this Dominion?

Mr. BARR. I might tell the hon. gentleman something that he probably does not know and that is that there is not a province in the Dominion of Canada that I have not visited, and that there is not a provincial board of health whose work I have not looked into. I must say that while some are not up to the province of Ontario with respect to the promotion of public health, they are doing an important work. But, if my hon. friend's province is not up to the standard he should turn his attention to that and bring it up to such a standard that it will be capable of dealing with this important question. I think they are dealing in a fairly effective manner with this question in all of the provinces, but I think Ontario is the banner province in this respect. Our hospitals are year by year becoming better equipped. and the officers of these institutions are doing their work well. The trained nurses throughout the country have accomplished probably as much as the medical profession have. These two, the trained nurses and the medical profession, working hand in hand, have accomplished a great deal of good. Now, we might ask ourselves the question if the marine hospitals under the control of the Dominion government are better than are the hospitals in the cities and towns of the different provinces. I have visited one or two marine hospitals and I have been unable to find any superiority in them although the work they are doing is very good.

Now, let us turn our attention to the question of the medican inspection of immigrants coming in to this country. I have travelled in other lands, I have visited the older countries, I have watched the course pursued by the medical men with respect to our immigration, and I must say that their methods are perfectly outrageous. I was surprised not long ago at what I saw at one of our ports. A boat came in with a large number of immigrants. The health officers stood there and passed those immigrants at the rate of from seven to eleven a minute. I took the time. There were immigrants passed that were a curse to this country. I saw these officers passing men who were not healthy. We have had immigrants admitted to this country affected by a certain disease of the eye, they have brought that disease into Canada and it has not been stamped out. Yet, the medical health officers looked on while these people passed. Their instructions were that they must not impede the landing of the immigrants. They had only a given time and the result was that men, women and children passed these officers who ought not to have been allowed to come into this country and would not have been allowed to enter the United States if they had attempted to go there. Is it possible that medical men can examine two or three hundred immigrants at the rate they were passing off the boat which was under my observation. There were those that were not healthy in many respects, men, women and children afflicted with diseases that had been handed down to them from their fathers and grandfathers and yet they were allowed to become citizens of this country. Go to our hospitals and compare the number of immigrants that are in these institutions with the number of patients drawn from our own population and you find there are ten immigrants to one native born, proving beyond a doubt that a large amount of the disease that we have in this country is traceable to immigrants who are coming in from Europe and even from England, Ireland and Scotland. If this parliament would inaugurate a good system of inspection it would be a good thing for the country. First, before the immigrants enter the boat they should be submitted to a careful examination by competent medical men and then, when they land in this country, they should be carefully gone over once more and every man, woman and child, should be turned back who is not healthy. If we adopted this system we would accomplish more for the health of the country than we could hope to accomplish by the creation of such a bureau as has been proposed, which would probably clash with the health departments of the different provinces and accomplish very little good. If the government and the medical men of this country would turn attention to that question, they would accomplish more than they could by the formation of a bureau of health as far as the Dominion is concerned. Under these circumstances, I think the first thing to be done will be to take this question into consideration and until it is demonstrated that we can accomplish more than the provincial boards of health have done we had better leave the question to be dealt with by them.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, since I took a seat in this House thirty-one years ago this important question has from time to time engaged its attention. We have discussed it over and over again and yet it seems to me that in all that time we have made but very little headway. It has been claimed by some that we have made a good deal of headway lately. While we have done some things that are commendable we have left undone, in my judgment, many things which we might very well have done. The hon. member who moved this motion (Mr. Black) spoke of the number of people who die annually that might be saved, the number being stated at over 20,000. Every member of the House, whether he be a medical man or not, will agree that it is desirable to reduce the death rate, and we agree also that it is in our power to reduce the death rate from preventable diseases. The professional science of the age has given us the means to prevent consumption, typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox, and other such diseases if we only use the right means. On the possibility of stamping out these diseases, the medical profession is unanimous and I think it will be admitted they are competent judges on that point. One hon. member instanced that if a lady in the gallery who might be infected with tuberculosis should expectorate down on the floor of this House millions of bacilli would be liberated, causing danger to every member in this chamber. That illustration brought home the danger to us in a very forcible way, but I wondered at the time if he thought of the 'germane' that was on that side of the House all the time and to what danger gentlemen over there were exposed, not to say anything about those on this side. One of the gentlemen on the other side told us that the great thing was to educate, educate, that if we put our present day knowledge into practice we would attain the end we desire. But, as I understand we are met right here in this parliament with an insurmountable difficulty and that is that our constitution does not give the federal government the power to establish a bureau of health, I remember that about thirty years ago a very important deputation waited upon the government of that day and represented the importance of establishing a bureau of health. Those who take the trouble to read the debates of the period will see that the ground was intelligently covered by many eminent medical men who were then members of this House. The government desired to do something in the direction of mitigating the evils pointed out by the deputation, but, Sir Charles Tupper, and Sir John Macdonald and I think the Minister of Justice drew attention to the fact that while we could deal with quarantine and marine hospitals, anything further in that direction would be infringing on the rights of the provinces. That deputation pressed on the government the wisdom of amending the British North America Act so as to give the federal government the power, and it seems to me that until we do amend the British North America Act we cannot do any very effective work. In my judgment it would be an easy thing to amend the British North America Act if we brought together representatives of the different provinces, and of the boards of health throughout the Dominion, and of the medical association, and agreed to present a petition to the Imperial parliament to amend the constitution. I think, Sir Charles Tupper did make representations to this end to the home secretary of that date, but he left political life in Canada at that time and we were deprived of his valuable services and everything seemed to drop just then. But what was done was not all lost. There was a sum of money voted by the federal parliament for the purpose of supporting a health journal which was published for a great many years and which had an important, educative effect. We went further and provided for the collection of mortuary statistics and endeavoured to so tabulate them that the percentage of deaths from the various diseases could be ascertained. But what has always been the mystery of my life is that while we think it is justifiable to spend millions of dollars a year bringing immigrants to our shores we deem it necesary to vote only $500,000 for the purpose of endeavouring to reduce the death rate amongst our own people who are our most valuable citizens. There is where I think we have been short-sighted and parsimonious. I notice Sir, that while former motions of this nature called for the establishment of a board of health, this motion simply states that the time has arrived when the government of Canada shall perfect organization whereby present scientific knowledge would be made practically available for the prevention of preventable diseases.

If that is all we ask the government, they have no excuse. They cannot say that it is not in our power to do that. There is no obstruction from the standpoint of the British North America Act; there is no interference with the rights of the provinces. We can do that by voting money enough to educate the people, to distribute this knowledge, to publish all the pamphlets and fly sheets we like. But I think we should go further than that. I think we should have a department or bureau of health, and we could very well have it without in any way coming in conflict with the important work that is being done by the various provinces. What is more, I think we should have some such conference as was suggested a few years ago, that would enable us to pass a law that would bring every medical association and teaching body in Canada under one medical clause, which would give a medical man power to cross the boundary line from Quebec to Ontario or from Ontario to Quebec or from Ontario to Manitoba, wherever it was necessary to save life and promote public health. I regret that when that attempt was made, many members of this House prevented it being accomplished. Does it not show a narrow-mindedness and selfishness on our part that we are not desirous of doing all the good we can in this respect? If medical men have not the liberality to do this, we simply show the world that our profession has not attained that importance that it ought to have attained long ago. But leaving that aside, what can the federal government do? It can do all that this resolution asks. It can grant the money to educate. It can use its own machinery for issuing and distributing the pamphlets, papers, fly sheets, and everything else necessary to educate, without infringing on the rights of any province or any portion of the country. It is said that great forces move slowly. Well, parliament must be a great force, for it certainly moves very slowly in regard to this subject. I have not taken the interest in it of late years that I did in my early life in this House, because it seems to be almost a waste of time to discuss it here, so little attention is given to it. I have noticed that when it is discussed, most of the members leave the House. At the present time there are only about 10 on the other side of the House and a few more on this side. If that is an indication of all the interest that parliamentarians in this country take in this important question, I do not wonder that parliament moves slowly. If we were unanimous in our desire and aim and stood by each other in our effort to obtain it, there is no government in the world that could refuse us, especially if we asked only what is asked in this resolution. Even if we went further, and asked the government to try to get an amendment made to the British North America Act conferring on the federal parliament the right and authority to deal with this subject, we could get that without very much trouble. We do not seem to be as sincere and energetic and unanimous as we profess to be, or we would accomplish very much more than we do. I can only say that I agree with everything that has been said on this subject to-night, and it has been a mystery to me why we have not made greater progress than we have. The government have done something, but they could do a great deal more, and I hope the day will soon come when they will take up this important subject and do something not only for the benefit of the present generation but for the benefit of posterity as well.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I wish to congratulate the mover of this motion not only on the spirit which prompted him to bring the question to the attention of the House at this early stage of the session, but also on the large-heartedness which has induced him to study the question and show such a complete mastery of it as he has done to-night. We might reasonably expect this from a doctor in a large practice, who has given so much of his life to the care of humanity. It is essentially a question which the medical fraternity can discuss in its details and in its professional aspect much better than those of us who are only laymen. But still it is a question which affects and interests every one in the Dominion, whether lay or professional. It comes very closely home to the family life of the country, and there is no doubt in Canada to-day a vast mass of ignorance in regard to the commonest precautions against disease, the dispelling of which is very important to the economic progress and welfare of our country. As my hon. friend who has just sat down says, this is an old question in the House of Commons. It is a complicated question, because it interferes to a certain extent with the constitutional rights of the provinces. We have discussed these time and time again. I will not go into any details with regard to them to-night, because most of us are familiar with them. I will only point out that several of the questions brought up to-night and put forward as arguments in favour of a motion of this kind are so evidently connected with that portion of the public health which is directly relegated to the provincial legislatures, that we cannot touch upon them all. One gentleman spoke of sanitation and drainage. My hon. friend who moved the resolution spoke of the way in which typhoid fever is disseminated by wells. This is a question which is entirely local in its character, entirely within the purview of the municipal and provincial authorities as a question of public health. It does not come within our purview in any way whatever, and nothing we could do in a legislative or legal way could touch it. One hon. gentleman, I think the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr), spoke of the health officers all through the country, in the province of Ontario especially. That is true, and it is also true of other provinces, I suppose of all the provinces. I can say myself, from knowledge of the province of Quebec, that in all the municipalities and parishes of our province there are health officers whose duty it is to look after the public health and to carry out the sanitary regulations provided for under the provincial laws. My hon. friend who has just spoken expressed his desire to have the whole medical profession and practice assimilated, so that a medical man in one province, having obtained his degree in medicine, should be entitled to practise in all parts of the country. My hon. friend will remember that not many years ago this House discussed that question, and an Act was put upon the statute-book entitled, I think, 'The Medical Council Act.' So jealous were the members of the medical profession themselves of their rights in each province and so fearful was this parliament of overstepping the bounds of provincial rights and prerogatives, that we were obliged to say that the Act would only apply and come into force in any province when the province itself had adopted it.

Mr. SPROULE. It could only come into force when all the provinces had adopted it.

Mr. FISHER. Still worse. And up to the present time, although it is six or seven years since the Act was passed, it has not come into force, evidencing that this is a question which is hedged about by very difficult problems. It is one which we cannot deal with lightly and if we deal with it in any way that I can conceive of, we would run the risk of very soon treading upon the privileges and prerogatives of the medical profession or those jealous of provincial rights; and the likelihood is we would be stopped in a great deal of our work.

I confess myself to have so much sympathy with the motives of those who urge this and with the importance of the work itself, that I would be very glad indeed if we could organize some office or officers here who would be able to spread information through the country in regard to human medicine in the same way as we in my department distribute it to-day in regard to the health of animals and other agricultural matters. But I fear the difficulties and do not believe that it would be possible for us lightly or easily to overcome those difficulties. I would be glad to do it. I know that some of my colleagues at all events are in sympathy with me in this, but it is so important a question, so difficult a question, that I do not consider we would be justified at the present moment in adopting this resolution in a thin House, on such a day as this, and I would therefore ask my friend to allow me to adjourn the debate in order that we may have it more thoroughly threshed out and have the opinion and views of more members of the House and that the government can have an opportunity of seeing whether there is any possible way of accomplishing what is here aimed at. I beg therefore to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—YARMOUTH HARBOUR BUOYS.

Mr. FISHER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CLARENCE JAMESON (Digby). Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I beg to call the attention of the government to the fact that two of the buoys or aids to navigation near the entrance to Yarmouth harbour, the northwest buoy and the southwest buoy, have been out of position for some time, the former for several days, and the latter for about three weeks. In this connection I may read a short extract from the Yarmouth 'Times' of the 12th instant:

> Officers of ships navigating the port of Yarmouth camplain bitterly to 'The Times' that two of the most important navigation aids off the harbour have been allowed to remain out of position for a long time. It is about three weeks since the south west buoy was found adrift and was towed into Abbott's Harbour, yet it appears that no effort has been made to replace it and this in spite of the fact that the department was promptly notified. Similarly the north west buoy was found adrift some days ago and towed into Yarmouth and although the 'Lansdowne' has been sent to restore it to its position and has been in port for some days nothing appears to have been accomplished. We are informed on good authority that the whole system of navigation aids along the coast is in a deranged condition. In the meantime lives and property are at a great risk and mariners are navigating their ships under a strain which they should not be called upon to bear. We repeat that a government steamer during the winter months should be constantly patrolling the coast between Yarmouth and Halifax.

Yarmouth is a very important port. Apart altogether from the large number of merchant vessels ordinarily visiting such a port there is a large fleet of fishing vessels which are constantly in and about that port. There are also the steamers of the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company which ply between that port and Boston, making several trips each way every week and carrying many passengers and valuable cargoes. The lack of proper aids to navigation may cause a serious loss not only of marine property but also of much more valuable life. The large expenditures which the Department of Marine is making in connection with the aids to navigation should, it seems to me, assure the most ample protection which could be afforded. However that may be, it is incumbent upon the government to make the most ample provision for the proper maintenance of aids to navigation, not only in the Bay of Fundy, but also along the southwest shore of Nova Scotia, and anything short of such a provision, which will safeguard the lives and property of those interested, will leave the government responsible in the event of any disaster which may result from deficiency in these aids.

Mr. FISHER. This matter now comes to my attention for the first time. I shall draw my colleague's attention to it, and I have no doubt the information required will be given.

Mr. SPROULE. What work will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FISHER. First of all one or two minor Bills, then the resolution on the Civil Service, and then Supply, continuing the estimates of the Minister of the Interior.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 16, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, before the business of the day is proceeded with, I desire to raise a question of privilege. During the discussion of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), yesterday, I attempted to speak but you ruled that I could not as I had already spoken. I maintained at the time that I had not spoken, but had simply interrupted to ask a question. I wish to vindicate the correctness of my memory from 'Hansard.' My first interruption was to ask:

Does the hon. gentleman contend that if, in a river three hundred miles long, there is a portion fifty miles long that is navigable, therefore the Dominion has control over the whole stream?

The hon. gentleman replied to that. Later Mr. Conmee said:

I ask the hon. member who has already spoken and others who are to speak to answer that question.

Referring to the fact that we had contended it was an interference with provincial rights. Then I said:

Mr. JAMESON.

Perhaps I may be permitted to say a word at this point. Suppose that on a certain stream three hundred miles long, there is navigable water for a distance of fifty miles, and that on the rest of the stream there are many available water-powers. Now, these water-powers are regarded by the province as their asset, and they propose to work them and control them. Does not this Bill interfere with that right?

The hon. gentleman replied to that. That was all that was said on this question. I merely refer to the fact to vindicate what I said because I had intended to say a great deal more on the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may state in answer to the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that I kept a note during the debate, writing down the names of the different members as they spoke and I placed the name of the hon. member for East Grey on that list. Of course I had no intention of preventing him from speaking as he had a right to do; if I did so, it was because I was under the impression at the time that he had already spoken. If I did him an injustice of course I am quite prepared to apologize to him.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 61) respecting the Burrard, Westminster Boundary Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. Ralph Smith.

Bill (No. 62) to incorporate the Prince Albert and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Neely.

Bill (No. 63) to incorporate the Royal Canadian Accident Insurance Company.—Mr. Ames.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways to an item in the Evening 'Citizen' of yesterday in connection with level crossings. The minister will recall that on January 25 an order was made for information to be brought down to the House concerning the number of accidents at level crossings, and on subsequent occasions I inquired of the minister about it and I think I had virtually his promise that the return would be facilitated and brought down at the earliest possible moment in order that this question might be discussed. It has not yet been brought down but I see that the information has been given to the press before it has been given to this House. While it is very desirable that the press should have knowledge of these matters, the first to be acquainted with them should be the members of this House. The article in the 'Citizen' would indicate that the information contained in it had been in the possession of the Railway Board all the time. It says so in fact, and so I suggest to the minister that it is hardly treating us fairly not to bring this return down and present the information to the House before it goes to the public. This is in a sense a repetition because a little while ago we had it in the press that the minister was taking certain action and that correspondence had passed between the minister and the Chairman of the Railway Board. I requested the minister to bring down the information he had, but the minister thought it was not wise to do so. I hope this return will be brought down to-day as I wish to discuss this question at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is right; information of this kind when asked for as a return should come to the House first. This return has been prepared and it is somewhere between the Secretary of State's Department and the House. I thought we would have it this afternoon, but we will have it to-morrow at least. The other matter to which my hon. friend refers was not information that I obtained from the board but a private letter from the chairman of the board.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It would be a convenience if it could be brought down at a later stage of to-day's sitting as it is desired to discuss this to-morrow.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is the first intimation the hon. gentleman gave me that he was going on to-morrow.

Mr. LENNOX. I was going on yesterday but the information was not here.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall ask the Secretary of State to telephone his department and have the return brought down as rapidly as possible.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 21) to amend the Railway Act—Hon. Geo. P. Graham—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before we take up the Bill clause by clause, the minister will perhaps give an explanation of the Bill as a whole, so that we may the better understand it as we take up each section.

Mr. GRAHAM. The first section, 360a, is for the purpose of giving the Board of Railway Commissioners power to regulate the rates for electrical power developed by companies to whom we may lease water-powers. There are some peculiar instances in which it would be impossible to provide for this in the contract, but wherever it is possible, in case of any dispute, the rates are to be submitted to the board. The other clauses are in reference to returns to be made by the different companies. Section 370 of the Act provides for annual returns. The forms approved by the department vary considerably, and we want to furnish forms on which the returns shall be made, as some of the old forms are really valueless. Then, we are extending the time for the returns from July to August. The companies complain that they cannot get all their information compiled by the first of July. The remaining clauses of the Bill are designed to secure more complete returns, to get them in better shape, and to compel the companies to give them to us within the time specified.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does this Bill cover a case in which the government have formerly leased water-power without specifying the purpose for which it was to be used?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have a great reluctance to doing anything to interfere with existing contracts. I do not think we could do that very well. For instance, a company owns at present a large share of water-power, and under their contract they have the right to sub-let without any hindrance. We take over all their property and re-elect the power to them; but we cannot interfere with the contracts they have already made. But wherever possible we make provision in contracts that the Board of Railway Commissioners shall regulate the rates.

Mr. HAGGART. In a great many railway charters, the company is given power to develop water-power along its line of road, and power to let for commercial purposes the surplus water-power over that used by the railway. Does this apply to that case?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not really the object of this Bill, though possibly the Bill might apply to a case of that kind. In all the railway charters we give now, containing that power, we are providing that these matters must be referred to the Railway Commission. I do not wish however to put anything in the law to interfere with existing contracts.

On section 1—in disputes between lessee of water-power and applicant for electricity, the board may fix price.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As I understand this section, it imports into the Railway Act a new clause conferring upon the board the statutory power to determine rates where under lease from the Crown of water-power to a private corporation, the rates charged by such corporation are, according to the terms of the lease, to be determined by the board. In other words the board in such cases already has a quasi jurisdiction by virtue of the contract between the Crown and the lessee. It is desired to implement that by this statutory enactment, which declares that the board shall have its usual power in respect to the adjustment of rates in such cases.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, that is the object, clearly stated.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Take, for instance, a company or an individual which has leased from the government water-power to run a saw mill or for any purpose other than the development of electricity. They have a perpetual lease, or a lease for a long period, but they have ceased using this power for mill purposes. Would they require to go to the government and get a new lease in order to entitle them to use that water-power for the development of electricity, and would this section apply to them?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would depend upon the conditions of their contract. If their lease was limited to certain purposes, I suppose they could not go outside those purposes; or if they did, their lease might be cancelled or a new lease executed.

Mr. SPROULE. Why not apply this to all leases from the Crown of water-power, and not leave it so that if that provision was omitted from the lease, the board would not have jurisdiction?

Mr. GRAHAM. I explained when we went into committee that, owing to the very technical conditions arising and which will continue to arise every day with reference to powers that are being increased by public works, such as the building of the Trent canal, it is impossible, in some cases, on account of existing contracts, for us to apply this provision without interfering with these contracts. But in all new contracts where we at all have the power, we are putting this in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Ordinarily speaking, this condition should go into all new contracts, but the minister explains that some contracts, which might be regarded as new, are in reality merely a continuation of old contracts, although the new contracts may give an increased amount of power. Then inasmuch as that description of new contracts merely continues old conditions, and as the old conditions include contracts already made between the lessees and other persons—for instance between a town or a village and its inhabitants—the minister has not found himself able to include this new condition in new contracts of that description for the reason that to do so would seem to interfere with existing vested rights under contracts created years ago. But except in those cases, this condition is included in all new leases or contracts for the use of water belonging to the Crown.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the case stated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Sam. Hughes) inquired whether in these cases the lessee gets more power. I understand from the minister that, in some cases at least, he does. Inasmuch as a new contract includes the old power, which is already under lease to private individuals, he does not want to interfere with that contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a difficult situation to work out exactly. In a great many cases the policy we are trying to adopt is to take over the property altogether of these people and re-lease them certain powers. It is a matter of arrangement. Where they have subleases with which this provision would interfere, we cannot very well apply it, but in every new lease we do.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Here is a company which has the right to develop 100 horse power, but under the changed conditions, the water develops 1,000 horse power. Does that company get the 1,000 horse power for the same sum as it did the 100?

Mr. GRAHAM. It might become possessed of all the power, but it would have to pay a good deal more. We take over its rights altogether and make a new contract, but we have to protect any contracts which are existing under the old lease.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case of contracts now running and which are terminable at a certain time, if you renew that contract, do you regard it as a new contract and insert this provision?

Mr. GRAHAM. Most of the leases are for twenty-one years and renewable. The conditions are generally retained when the leases are renewed, but the prices may be changed; and I assure my hon. friend that if I had a new lease to make, unless I were precluded altogether on account of existing contracts under the old lease, I would put this clause in the new one.

Mr. PORTER. Take the case where a municipality has already, under lease from the Crown, acquired certain rights, such as the case of the town of Trenton. I can quite understand why the provisions of this Bill should not apply to the conditions existing under that old lease. But, if I understand the minister correctly, by the work that is going on in the Trent canal the power will be developed to a greater extent and the municipality of Trenton will be able to generate a greater amount of power than under the old conditions. While clause 1 of the Act should not apply to the municipality of Trenton to the extent of the power they developed under the old condition, why should it not apply to the extent of the additional power that is generated under the new conditions. In other words, the town of Trenton will be getting an additional amount of power to sell to their customers—say in the city of Belleville or the town of Trenton—and they will be under no control at all. They can impose any terms they like, and having control of that power they can use it very much to the disadvantage of the people surrounding if they should be so disposed. It seems to me the clause might be made to apply to the extent of any additional power generated under the new conditions.

Mr. GRAHAM. As I have explained several times to deputations, I have had it in mind that where we could assist the municipalities by giving them the power under a fair arrangement we were rather inclined to do so. I have never thought of putting any restrictions directly upon the municipality in dealing with its own power, particularly as Trenton has acquired rights there that we have to get before we can proceed with our work. Unless expropriation proceedings were taken in a great many of these cases, it has to be a matter of arrangement, and it is a good deal better for the department to make agreements than it would be to expropriate. The town of Trenton has acquired rights in the stream, and speaking from memory the arrangement is that we should take over all the rights they have and re-lease to them at a certain rate the power that will be developed.

Mr. PORTER. But not the supply of power in excess of the old power?

Mr. GRAHAM. All the power, and mark you, we have to get the consent of the town of Trenton to release to us the title to what they now have. There are two sides to it; they concede us that and we concede to them the right to the use of all the power at a certain rate. In a lease of that kind it was not my intention to put any restriction on the municipality.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with the minister and I approve of the Bill so far as the municipality of Campbellford is concerned. I do not think that any municipality who owns the water-power, or has leased the water-power, or had any rights upon the Trent river previous to the building of the canal should be interfered with. I think these municipalities should be allowed to sell their power within their own limits at whatever price they saw fit. With regard to developing a greater number of horse-power, we must not forget that the lessees are only entitled to the surplus water and we never can tell exactly how many horse-power will be developed because the waters in these rivers are not always the same height, and in a dry season there will be less water and less power developed than in another season in which there may be rain I agree with the Bill in so far as it restricts the lessees of power from the Crown forming a combine as to price. Under this Bill they cannot combine to put the price up high, and therefore those making applications for power will not be prevented from establishing industries in a municipality. I approve of the clause which puts the lessees under the Railway Commission and I approve of the Bill as a whole.

Substituted section 372, semi-annual return of accidents.

Mr. FOSTER. 'Every company, if required by the minister so to do,' shall make a return of accidents and casualties. Why should not that be compulsory? That should not be left discretionary with the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am inclined to think there is something in that. The return is only made every six months. With the consent of the committee—it is quite a radical change in the Bill—I move that we drop that section. In that case the old clause will stand.

Motion agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

ILLICIT OR SECRET COMMISSIONS.

Bill (No. 31) to prevent the payment or acceptance of illicit or secret commissions and other like practices.—Mr. Aylesworth—read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2: Definitions.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) why this Bill is confined to secret commissions. Suppose the consideration were given in the way of a bonus or in some other way and not as a commission, would it then be outside of this Act? There are many ways in which you can give a consideration.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The reason why this is limited to secret commissions is that a commission which is open and disclosed, known to the principal, is not an illegal thing. If any person chooses to pay to my agent a commission and I am aware of it there is no offence on the part either of the agent who receives such commission or of the man who pays it. The whole offence is in the secrecy of it and in the betrayal which would therefore probably be caused of the interests of the employer.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the feature of it that I am referring to. It is the question whether you could not give something in lieu of a commission, say a bonus, that would be a consideration the same as a commission would be and do it secretly.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The definition of 'consideration' is that it 'includes valuable consideration of any kind.'

On section 3,

3. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable upon conviction on indictment to two years' imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding two thousand five hundred dollars, or to both, and, upon summary conviction, to imprisonment for six months, with or without hard labour, or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to both, who,—

(b) corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward or consideration to such agent for doing or forbearing to do, or for having after the passing of this Act done or forborne to do, any act relating to his principal's affairs or business, or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person with relation to his principal's affairs or business; or

(c) knowingly gives to any agent, or, being an agent, knowingly uses with intent to deceive his principal, any receipt, account, or other document in respect of which the principal is interested, and which contains any statement which is false or erroneous or defective in any material particular, and which, to his knowledge, is intended to mislead the principal.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this the exact language of the English statute?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The language is not identical, but is practically indistinguishable and is certainly indistinguishable in meaning. I cannot point out the exact differences very well without comparing the sections line by line, but in substance the wording is identical.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would the minister read the English corresponding section?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Yes, I will read the English section.

If any agent corruptly accepts or obtains or agrees to accept or attempts to obtain from any person for himself or for any other person any gift or consideration as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do or for having, after the passing of this Act, done, or forborne to do any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation to his principal's affairs or business.

And so on.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. FOSTER. May we have the English section corresponding with paragraph (b)?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The corresponding section in the English Act is in these words:

If any person corruptly gives or agrees to give or offers any gift or consideration to any agent as an inducement or reward for doing or forbearing to do, or for having, after the passing of this Act, done or forborne to do any act in relation to his principal's affairs or business or for showing or forbearing to show favour or disfavour to any person in relation to his principal's affairs or business——

&c.

Mr. PORTER. If I may be permitted to go back to the first clause of section 3; do I understand that the offence under this Act is punishable either upon indictment or by summary conviction? I notice that section 3 provides, in the first place, for punishment upon indictment and that the latter part of the same clause provides for punishment upon summary conviction. If an offence under this Act can be tried by a police magistrate or justices of the peace and punishment inflicted, why make the same offence punishable upon indictment? Why have these two provisions instead of one?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The intention was that the offence, when it took place, might be prosecuted either upon indictment or by way of summary conviction, depending, of course, upon the seriousness of the offence. If, for instance, I find that my butcher is paying a few cents daily to my cook for the sake of securing my business that would scarcely be an offence which would be thought serious enough to prosecute upon indictment. On the other hand, if it were in larger matters of business, it might be ridiculous to proceed by way of summary prosecution, and the intention was, in framing the Act, that either course might be adopted according to the judgment of the prosecutor and of the tribunal before whom the prosecution might come for hearing. If the magistrate having the defendant summoned before him, upon investigating the circumstances, found the case, in his judgment, so serious that it would not be met by the lesser punishment which is provided in the section of imprisonment for six months, or a fine not exceeding $100, or both, he would decline to proceed and commit the person charged for trial upon indictment. On the other hand, if a person was found guilty and indicted for an offence which under the circumstances seemed comparatively trivial, the judge would no doubt sentence to the punishment which might have been imposed on a summary proceeding.

Mr. PORTER. The objection I see is that no provision is made for determining, and by whom, whether the prosecution shall be on an indictment or in a summary manner. Would it not be possible to provide that certain offences shall be tried by summary process and others more grave by indictment? It is now left to the discretion of the magistrate as to whether he shall try an offence or not, no matter how grave that offence may be. If the complainant should stand in with a magistrate the magistrate might try the case and dispose of it in any way he saw fit, whereas if it were taken to the Superior Court on an indictment it might be dealt with in an altogether different way.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It would be quite practicable to frame language which would draw a hard and fast line and make the place where the prosecution should be dependent upon the amount of money involved, but I think that would not be desirable. The more trivial offence graduates into the more serious by imperceptible degrees. It would be scarcely possible to lay down any definite rule as to amount which would govern every case that might conceivably arise. I would think it would be preferable to leave that to the sound sense of the magis trate or judge before whom the prosecution might come. It would be, in the first instance, for the good judgment of the prosecuting attorney or those before whom the charge is laid, and it would be a no more important duty to determine that than it would be to determine the amount of punishment which ought to be imposed.

Mr. CROTHERS. Are there any general provisions in the Criminal Code which would assign cases of this kind? Surely it is not intended to leave it open to have such charges brought before an ordinary justice of the peace? It should be defined whether a police magistrate should try the case or whether it should be tried before a county court judge or in the high court. Other crimes are assigned by the code to one court or the other. If a case comes before an ordinary justice of the peace in the country and objection is taken that he has not jurisdiction to try it, where is there anything to determine whether or not he would have the right?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There are already provided for in the Criminal Code many classes of offences which may be tried either upon indictment or upon summary proceeding. I do not think there has been any practical difficulty in administering the law, and this would be of precisely similar character. The magistrate would have jurisdiction undoubtedly, and if he wishes to misbehave—if magistrates ever do misbehave—I suppose there would be nothing to prevent his trying a very important case and nothing but public opinion to correct him if for a very serious offence he imposed a very trifling punishment.

Mr. PORTER. When we can guard against that why should we not do so? It seems to me that the amount involved in a transaction of this kind ought not to determine the question of jurisdiction. A man who fraudulently cheats a widow out of $2 is just as much a criminal as the man who cheats the government out of $2,000, and the magistrate might think he would try the widow's case but not the other. It seems to me it would be wise to define it now.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The imperial statute is precisely in the same shape as this. The proceedings there are either upon indictment or upon summary prosecution with a slight difference in the amount of punishment. I have not heard of any practical difficulty that has been met with, and it did not occur to me that there was any occasion to differentiate this legislation from our general laws on the subject.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Have there been any cases tried under the imperial statute which would throw any light upon this?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There have not been many, but some. A very interesting article appeared on the subject in the 'Times' newspaper in which reference is made to the number of cases. I cannot exactly say how many prosecutions there have been under the imperial statute, but in the two years during which it has been in force I do not think there have been altogether as many as a dozen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the minister aware of what special interpretation or significance has been given to the word 'corruptly' in these cases? Has the meaning of that word been brought into question at all? The statute provides against any person who corruptly accepts any gift or consideration, &c., and the use of that word coupled with the possibility that a very important case might be tried before a magistrate (and perhaps brought before that magistrate having regard to the imminence of proceedings of another character), would seem to indicate that some little care should be taken in the consideration of the language which we should employ. It might be quite possible that more attention should be given to the exact language of the statute in this country than in Great Britain. I am not sure that would be the case, but possibly it might, having regard to the qualifications of persons who might be called upon to adjudicate in such matters.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. A great part of the debate on this Bill in the imperial parliament was on the absence or presence of the word 'corruptly.' After very full discussion and consideration it was thought better to retain it in the clauses, and I have retained it in the Bill now under consideration. As I understand the significance of the word from a legal point of view, it can perhaps be best paraphrased by the expression 'intending to do that which the Act means to forbid.' It carries with it the idea certainly of an evil intent as opposed to an innocent transaction, and requires, to satisfy this meaning, that there shall have been conduct by the person accused which proceeded from a wicked intention, an evil mind, an intention to do the thing which the law forbids. I do not know that I could state in better language what I understand the meaning of the word to be. It is a word of very general use in similar legislation. All our election legislation against bribery is accompanied by the use of the word, and in that connection it has been much discussed by judges, both in the old country and in Canada. I think it would be preferable to retain the word; no harm can be done by retaining it; because if there could be an infraction of this legislation which does not proceed from evil intent, it ought not to be punishable.

Mr. CARVELL. It seems to me that the objection urged by the hon. gentleman opposite is well taken. I have no fault to find with the principle of this Bill. I think it is good. Unfortunately, the justices of the peace all over Canada are not appointed as they are in England. We have in the different provinces a large number who are appointed for political reasons, and we have many whom I do not think the Minister of Justice would want to sit in judgment over him or over any person in whom he had any interest. I am glad to say that we have very many excellent justices of the peace all over Canada. Now, you could easily imagine that an unfair justice of the peace might take upon himself jurisdiction to try a very serious offence, and impose a very slight punishment for it; or, on the other hand, a very trifling offence might be treated by him as a very serious one, and he might send the accused up for trial. In my opinion, there should be some election provided for the accused, because he must be considered innocent until he is proven guilty. Therefore, I think we should follow to some extent the idea laid down in the Criminal Code of Canada regarding assaults of a serious nature, that is, that the accused shall have the right to elect whether he shall be tried summarily by the magistrate, or go before the grand jury. I am not sure whether or not the right of appeal would be allowed the accused in case the magistrate tried him summarily. But it seems to me that we are giving too much power to an unscrupulous justice of the peace in leaving the section as it is. I am not saying this for the purpose of finding fault with the Bill, but only with the view of making it perfect. If the Bill passes as it stands, I think a great deal of injustice may be done in working it out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can understand that the word 'corruptly' has been left in the English statute without any definition, perhaps for very much the same reason that courts of equity have always refused to undertake an exhaustive definition fraud. But there is a difference, as the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) has just pointed out, when a word of such wide interpretation must be construed by a justice of the peace, very often without very much legal or technical knowledge. I entirely agree that a great many of the justices of the peace are very capable of dealing with these matters, but you occasionally find those who are not. I remember in my own province some years ago of a justice of the peace undertaking to administer the criminal law of Canada, and the only information he had at his command was that contained in an obsolete volume of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia of about 1857; but he was quite confident in his power to administer the criminal law of Canada under the forms and instructions contained in that volume. Then, there is another consideration, the converse of that mentioned by the hon. member for Carleton. Suppose that a very serious offence had been committed against the provisions of this statute, and that proceedings were imminent to indict the person accused. Suppose that person, through the intervention of some friend, had proceedings instituted before a magistrate, who might not be bound by any very definite authorities as to the manner in which he would construe the word 'corruptly.' It seems to me quite possible that by means of that kind a person who really had been guilty of a very serious offence against the law, might escape with either no punishment or a very light punishment. I do not understand from the Minister of Justice that there is any especial duty cast upon the magistrate to declare that the offence is of so serious a character that he shall not proceed. In fact, I am not sufficiently familiar with the present procedure to know whether it is possible for him, after information has once been laid before him for the purpose, to decline to proceed. I think there is a good deal in these considerations which requires the attention of the Minister of Justice and of the committee before we pass the measure in exactly the form in which it is now presented.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Of course, this legislation is along the line of the criminal law. It might, without any impropriety, have been introduced by way of amendment to the Criminal Code. The intention was always that the general provisions of the Criminal Code, as to procedure and as to every point which would have application, should govern under this statute, and there is no objection to a clause being introduced providing that the general provisions of the Code shall apply, or that this Act shall be read as a part of the Criminal Code. So far as the retention of the word 'corruptly' is concerned, I certainly would attach a great deal of importance to it. This legislation would prevent, for instance, any secret present which might be given by a tradesman or a customer to any person in the employment of another with whom he was dealing. It is a common enough thing, I suppose, for customers of the Bell Telephone Company to send a pair of gloves or some other trifle by way of a present at Christmas to the operator who receives their messages in the central office. If that is done secretly, with the corrupt intention of securing favours thereby at the expense of the company or at the expense of other customers, it is an improper thing. But if that is done openly and above board, there is no impropriety in it. Perhaps the best idea can be conveyed by an illustration, of the meaning to be attached to the word 'corruptly' in the statutes. If the butcher wants to make a present to the cook of one of his customers, and the customer is aware of it, there is not the slightest impropriety; but if he does that secretly and for the purpose of securing custom, then it becomes a transaction of an entirely different nature. With regard to the gravity of different transactions, let me refer to the article to which I have already alluded in the London 'Times', which gives some instances of prosecutions under the imperial statutes. A fine of one pound was imposed upon a warehouse clerk for having given money to a carter to carry parcels. Of course I am giving a mere statement of the case, as I have not the details, but that was the case of a very trifling offence punished by a fine of one pound. A butcher for sending meals to a cook was fined two pounds. A traveller, for offering a bribe to a hotel keeper for the names of visitors, was fined five pounds —and so on, in increasing severity, according to the gravity of the offence. After all, in the administration of all statutes, a good deal must depend on the good judgment of the official who determines the case, whether he be a justice of the high court or a justice of the peace. It may very possibly happen that justices of the peace are not always men of the soundest judgment, but, when all is said and done, a judge is a judge, and a justice of the peace, no matter how illiterate, may be called upon to pronounce an Act of this parliament ultra vires. We have to take things as we find them, and it would seem impossible to guard beforehand, by any device of legislation, against the possibility of some one who lacks sound sense and judgment being called on to act under this statute. I may say further that, so far as public officials are concerned, this is no new legislation. We have already, in part four of the Criminal Code, general provisions against bribing or attempting to bribe officials of the government or municipal councils by any form of transaction. Those offences are similar in character, whether committed against the public interest or merely against private individuals. The object of this legislation is not to declare transactions of the character of those struck at illegal. They were always illegal. They were illicit and improper and contrary to the law, but the purpose is to make them punishable as criminal offences in cases between individuals as well as in transactions in which public officials are concerned.

Mr. CROTHERS. Speaking from memory and without having the Criminal Code before me, I do not think there are any provisions in it which give a single justice of the peace acting alone, jurisdiction to impose punishment to the extent of six months in prison. There are several provisions in the Criminal Code providing for jurisdiction in such cases by two justices of the peace or a police magistrate, but I cannot think of any which gives such power to a single justice of the peace. I would suggest, as a proper safeguard, that some few words should be added after the words 'summary convictions' which would limit the jurisdiction to a police magistrate or two justices of the peace or a judge of a higher court. We know that there are several sections in the Criminal Code which provide for the jurisdiction being in the hands of two justices of the peace or a police magistrate, and some such provision should be inserted here. I also quite agree with my hon. friend for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell) who spoke in favour of their being some provision for bringing the case before a jury instead of leaving it within the power of a justice of the peace, acting singly, to send a man to prison for six months.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. To the suggestion that these cases should come before two justices of the peace I make no objection. There would certainly be some security in that if it be thought that this legislation is so much more drastic than ordinary legislation that it requires to be safeguarded by exceptional provisions. I think that today one justice of the peace, in many cases, tries just as important charges as some might be under this legislation; and it has always to be borne in mind that this is peculiarly the kind of prosecution in which it is quite possible charges may be made out of some vindictive feeling and where the public interest is not the motive actuating the accuser.

Mr. CARVELL. Notwithstanding the concession made by the Minister of Justice, it does not seem to me to go far enough. No doubt, in his very distinguished career, the Minister of Justice has had the good fortune, to a greater extent than many of us, of dealing with judges rather than justices of the peace. I make no distinction between a justice of the peace and a police magistrate, although I know there is a distinction in the statute. I have in my mind police magistrates appointed to certain courts, who are not half as well qualified as some justices of the peace. A police magistrate is appointed under exactly the same influence as an ordinary justice of the peace, and we will be going a long way towards jeopardizing the liberty of the public if we place the trial of so important a matter either in the hands of a justice of the peace or a police magistrate. I submit further that the accused should have the right to elect whether he shall be tried before a police magistrate or a jury. From my experience as a lawyer, if you get a case before a jury of twelve men, who must agree on a conviction, you are pretty sure to have a common sense decision, for there is a good deal of common sense in average humanity. If a prisoner has the right to elect for trial by jury, he can have no fault to find if he be found guilty, and he is not likely to be convicted unless the finding is justifiable. I hope that the minister will consent to have some safeguard thrown around the accused and not leave him simply to the tender mercies of even a police magistrate.

Mr. AMES. If that phase of the question is exhausted, here is another question I would like to ask, and that is whether this Act would cover the case of a government employee who undertook to solicit subscriptions, let us say, for campaign purposes from persons who are either selling supplies to the government or have contracts with the government, and to whom these officials represent that a lively sense of favours to come or recognition of favours passed, should be sufficient reason to cause them to give subscriptions. Even supposing these subscriptions were used for proper purposes, would they still, under this Act, be a crime?

Mr. CONMEE. Will the hon. gentleman not include the agents of the opposition who would write to certain persons that if they wanted appointments or favours or certain measures passed, they could only gain their object by taking a certain course. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will include such agents in his motion.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I would think that any such transaction as the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) has referred to would be very thoroughly covered by our present legislation without reference to whether or not it would be covered by the Bill now under consideration. In the Bill under consideration the presence of the word 'corruptly' might relieve that man from the punishment of this particular statute if the benefit which he was offering was not to go to the person who received it but to some other person and was for perfectly legitimate purposes. But under the existing law, section 158 of the Code, the word 'corruptly' is not used and any man who > Makes any offer, proposal, gift, loan or promise, or gives or offers any compensation or consideration, directly or indirectly, to any official or person in the employment of the government, or to any member of his family, or to any person under his control or for his benefit, with intent to obtain the assistance or influence of such official or person to promote either the procuring of any contract with the government for the performance of any work, the doing of anything, or the furnishing of any goods, effects, food or materials, the execution of any such contract, or the payment of the price or consideration stipulated therein, or any part thereof, or of any aid or subsidy payable in respect thereof;

> Is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, and not exceeding one thousand dollars, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year and not less than one month and in default of payment of such fine to imprisonment for a further time not exceeding six months.

That definition it seems to me would cover entirely the case the hon. gentleman puts. It would not be any the less on offence, for instance, to give money to a government official in order to procure favours from him because it was a stipulation that the receiver of that money should use it not for his own purposes but for some other purpose. If it is given for the purpose of securing a favour which that official is in a position to bestow it is in itself an offence against the provision of the code I have read.

Mr. AMES. The minister has not dealt with the case I had in mind. He has taken an instance where the contractor approaches an official to induce the official not to do his duty, for a consideration. The point I had was where the official approaches the contractor in order to secure from the contractor a contribution which he will not use for himself but will pass on to other parties but which those men who subscribed understand is a subscription given because they have been faithful in the past or will be in the future.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I possibly misunderstood the hon. gentleman's question but under the statute not only is the giver but the recipient liable to the punishment I have mentioned. The statute goes on in a separate subsection to provide that any one is liable who

Being an official or person in the employment of the government, directly or indirectly, accepts or agrees to accept, or allows to be accepted by any person under his control or for his benefit, any such offer, proposal, gift, loan, promise, compensation or consideration.

Mr. CARVELL. This latter discussion only emphasizes the point I have been trying to make. The minister takes it for granted that somebody must decide whether or not this is a corrupt act. In that I agree, the difficulty that I see is leaving the decision in the hands of an illiterate country magistrate to make that distinction. If the country magistrate makes up his mind that he is going to try such a case summarily, and as I read the Bill he has the power to do this, he may send the accused to jail for six months. There is no appeal, and according to the practice in that portion of Canada from which I come his only recourse would be by certiorari and as a rule certiorari only goes to jurisdiction and if the justices of the peace have jurisdiction as they have under this section the defendant certiorari is of no use to him and he goes to jail and stays there six months. If the defendant has the right to full election and he goes before the jury he may be convicted by that jury but you have a judge who charges the jury and must state the law and if he misstates the law there is an appeal to the higher court. So the discussion here about the meaning of the word 'corrupt' &c., emphasizes the necessity of giving the defendant the right to say whether the matter shall be tried summarily or whether he will go to the grand jury. I hope the minister will at least consider this before asking to have the legislation passed.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think it would be very dangerous to give to the accused an absolute right of election which would ensure his being tried perhaps before a friendly magistrate. The effect of such a provision would seem to me to be that if there were magistrates who were willing to lend themselves to the purposes of the accused, care would always be taken to have a prosecution of that sort arranged and disposed of before any other charge could be laid. After all, while the danger of trial before a man who may not be qualified undoubtedly exists, as my hon. friend points out, is that danger any greater in the case of an offence struck at by this measure than under the existing law? In that part of the code which deals with summary trials by magistrates we have all manner of minor offences covered and there are already every day in the week all over Canada cases being disposed of by magistrates which are of very great practical consequence to the individuals concerned. I suggest to my hon. friend whether if these clauses appeared in the code or if the proposition to legislate here were in the shape of a proposed amendment to the code to insert this clause, it would occur to him that there was any greater danger in regard to prosecutions affected by this legislation than with regard to transactions covered by existing legislation.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not think there would be any greater danger. I think there is too much danger already and if this parliament has in the past enacted legislation which has perhaps been ill-advised and ill-considered, that is no reason to continue that condition of affairs; if it can be pointed out that this is a case that should be treated differently, around which greater protection should be thrown, I think it is the duty of this parliament to throw protection around the accused in this case. I would not think for a moment that the accused should have the right to say that he shall be tried either summarily or as on an indictable offence, because I would leave some discretion in the hands of the magistrate. But I would go so far as to say that if the accused says he wants this matter to be tried as an indictable affair, then he should have the right to have it tried in that way. But if he says, I want it tried summarily, and the magistrate says, no, it is too grave a matter, of course the magistrate should have the power to send him up for trial. But when I use the word 'election' I mean that he cannot be forced to take his trial at the hands of an illiterate magistrate, perhaps, but he ought to have the right to appeal to a higher court where he can get justice.

Mr. LENNOX. It is always understood that he has the right to go before a jury.

Mr. McKENZIE. I think it will be conceded by lawyers that uniformity in procedure is highly desirable, and that in all criminal matters, as the criminal law is uniform in Canada, is the only statutory law perhaps that is purely uniform, we should have a uniform procedure. I think therefore that so far as procedure is concerned—and it is procedure we are discussing now—the code of criminal procedure should be made in its entirety to apply to this law, which is a criminal law. If the Minister of Justice will make the procedue of the code apply absolutely and unequivocally to this law, I do not think that the lawyers in this House, particularly those who are versed in criminal law, would have any fault to find. I have had something to do, both as a lawyer and a little as a judge, with the administration of the criminal law, and I have not heard much fault found with the present conditions of the criminal law, as laid down in the criminal code. I think it is conceded by all criminal lawyers that the accused is sufficiently protected, that he has every right that he could possibly expect to a fair trial, if he has a right to elect in some instances to be tried before a magistrate. It is only in very rare instances that he must be tried before a magistrate on a criminal offence. There are a few cases, I think, which apply distinctly to sailors and other parties who commit offences, and who are about to leave the town, and must leave the town, in a short time; I think there are a few cases in which they must be tried before the magistrate, and the jurisdiction of the magistrate is absolute. Apart from these, there are few instances indeed where you can force a man to be tried before a magistrate without his consent. I think, therefore, the procedure, so far as this Bill is concerned, should be in every particular the same as the procedure applying to every section of the code, no more and no less, and great care should be taken that no ingenuity can show that there is any difference, because this is really a thing that should be a part of the code, and to which of course all the safeguards of the code should apply. If this is a criminal offence, it is certainly not the intention of the Minister of Justice that a man caught under this law, should have less protection than a man who is caught under some section of the code. If therefore, we have absolute certainty of a uniform procedure, and that the same safeguards are provided under this law as under the code generally, I do not think the profession or the country will have any fault to find.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Perhaps the best course to meet the views of hon. gentlemen would be, before the preamble is put to the committee, that the committee should rise, and in the interval before the Bill is taken up again, clauses can be framed to meet the suggestion which has been made.

Progress reported.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES.

House again in committee to consider the proposed resolution to grant an increase of salary to certain members of the Civil Service.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State). When this resolution was last before the committee, an understanding was reached between the leader of the opposition, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), that the resolution would be amended so as to cover the suggestions that were then made regarding the manner in which the moneys to be paid under this Bill, when finally adopted, should be provided. The Minister of Agriculture is obliged to be absent for a short time, and he has asked me to present the amendment which meets the views that were expressed when the discussion, to which I have referred, took place. I may say that in order to give full effect to the suggestions of my hon. friends opposite, it is proposed to prepare schedules detailing the expenditure that will be detailed under this Bill in each department. These schedules will be printed with the Bill, and will form part of the Bill; so that full information will be afforded, and thus the views expressed by the hon. member for North Toronto will be fully met. I understand it is not intended to do more to-day than move this amendment and ask that the resolution as amended be reported. I therefore beg to move that the resolution be amended by striking out all the words following the word 'granted' in the nineteenth line and substituting therefor the following:

And during the financial years ending March 31, 1909 and 1910 respectively, there may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada such further moneys as may be required for the payment of increases of salary under the Act to be founded on this resolution, as have not been voted by parliament, the whole not to exceed the amounts as set forth in the schedules to the Act to be founded on this resolution.

the government a sum of money equal to $150 for each clerk employed or each official under the present Civil Service Act. These clerks are divided roughly into three classes as they are combined now and have been since the first of September. There is the class of outside insiders, who were not part of the permanent service but who, under this Act, were drafted into the Civil Service and became thereby permanent with all the rights and privileges of the permanent service. There was also a class of official possible of creation by appointment and paid out of lump votes and civil government contingencies who, being appointed previous to the first day of September, became thereby eligible to be transferred into the permanent list with all its rights and privileges. There was the third class, the old permanent civil servants, who, of course, remain in the Civil Service. What this resolution does is this: It puts no bar to the class that I have mentioned, who were formerly the outside insiders, paid for out of lump sums or out of civil government contingencies, receiving, each one, the flat increase of $150 even though three days previous to the time set for the Act coming into force, the first day of September, a person in this class may have received an increase of $100, or $200, or $500, or $700. There is no bar; each one of these may have the $150 flat increase. There is no bar also to the person who was a late new appointee and who, being appointed late, stepped over into the permanent list as it is organized and established under the provisions of the Civil Service Act amendments. These also are not barred from receiving the $150 increase. But when you come to the old permanent service, those who had to scratch gravel to get into the service, who had to pass the examination, and had to submit themselves to all the rules, you find there are bars. What are these bars? They are these: First, if it so happens, under a set of circumstances, that the old servant was within less than $150 of the maximum of his class, whatever his class might be, say for example that he was within $50 of his maximum, he cannot receive the $150 increase. He can receive only the difference between the $150 flat increase and his unappropriated maximum which, in the case to which I refer, would be $50. Here is, to my mind, the injustice. There is the man who was in the outside inside service who, on the first of September received his increase of $200 or $300, or $500 to compensate for hard times, straightened circumstances and the increased cost of living. There is no bar to him, he gets his $150 out of this sum that we are going to vote, but the man who had been in the permanent service, who got in by passing the examination, who submitted to the regulations, proved himself fit and who struggled up for fifteen or twenty years under these conditions of increased cost of living gets none of this flat increase if he is at his maximum and gets only $50 if he is within $50 of it, according to the circumstances. That does not appeal to me as being fair, and it is against that that I protest. There seems to be an undue preference given to the outsider and the man who has borne the heat and burden of the day as regards the principle of the Act, who has submitted to its regulations and rules, is discriminated against in the manner that I have stated. When we come to the second reading of the Bill, I intend to adduce a great many instances of this kind and to try and plead with the House for some amelioration of the condition of those whom I consider are worthy servants and are being used somewhat unfairly, under the arbitrary principle which has been introduced into the resolution.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I understand the criticism of my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) but I do not understand the remedy which he has in his own mind. I do not know whether the remedy which he suggested was that we should decrease the bounty given by parliament to those in the inside outside service, or whether we should increase the bounty given to the permanent servants. I take it that his suggestion is that he should increase the bounty given by parliament to the permanent regular service, that is to those who have reached the limit of their class and that we should in some way compensate them by giving them more than they would receive under this measure. I am not prepared to express any opinion at the present time, but I suppose we shall have to examine the criticism of my hon. friend in due time, but I would like to know from my hon. friend as to the schedule to be attached to this Bill. I understood that it was the intention of the Minister of Agriculture that the schedule should provide for each department the maximum or the total amount which it is intended to give.

Mr. FOSTER. It does.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Agriculture stated also that he expected to have a list of the names of those who received additions to their salary. That is not the way we prepare our estimates; we say so many in each class and so on. It is immaterial to me how it is done, but I understood that the totals were to be given in the schedule, the details being communicated to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I intended to say. I made my criticism so that my right hon. friend and others could think it over. If there was an injustice there is some way by which it can be remedied.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. And when we come to the second reading of the Bill, we will probably have wisdom enough to know how it can be remedied.

Resolution reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians, British Columbia—Salaries, $26,020.
Relief of destitute Indians, British Columbia, $9,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. In the settlement of St. Peter's reserve, was there any arrangement made by which minors could transfer the land. My reason for asking that question is that a number of young men under twenty-one years of age, some only eighteen years of age, have sold their land and I have several complaints from parents regarding that matter.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am informed that the land did not go to the minors; it went to the parent and the parent had the right of disposition.

Mr. BRADBURY. There is some mistake in that, because these young men have parted with their rights. I know of one case in particular where a young man twenty-one years old had the patent issued in his name, as I understand, and he sold his land.

Mr. OLIVER. The terms of the surrender did not provide for grants being given to minors, and if there are any such transactions they are outside of the arrangement and are of course of no effect.

Mr. BLAIN. This is rather an important item and the minister should give some explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. Assistance is given to the hospitals at the rate of $1 per day for Indians, only up to 1,000 days and 75 cents per day over that number. The expenditure for 1907-8 was $26,989.43. Medical and hospital attendance and medicines are provided for Indians who cannot afford to pay. The physicians are either upon salaries, which represent a fair remuneration according to the number of Indians and for services and medicine supplied, or, when paid by accounts, they are allowed the lowest possible charges made to poor white cases. Medicines are supplied to medical missionaries and distributed to Indians under their charge. The following are the hospitals and the amount granted : Lytton $1,500 ; Kincolith, $1,500 ; Port Simpson, $2,000 ; Hazelton, $2,000 ; Bella Bella, $2,000; Clayoquot, $1,500; Telegraph Creek, $2,000 ; Alert Bay, $1,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these private hospitals?

Mr. OLIVER. They are supported jointly by the department, the province and the mission.

Mr. BARR. How do the missionaries distribute the medicines if they do not understand drugs?

Mr. OLIVER. The medicines are supplied to medical missionaries. Only those who have medical qualifications are permitted to distribute the medicines.

Mr. BARR. I have been up through that country, and I have not found among the missionaries any who have medical qualifications.

Mr. SPROULE. Who control the hospitals with regard to determining their efficiency for the purpose intended and what fees shall be charged? And are these hospitals inspected?

Mr. OLIVER. These hospitals were originally missionary enterprises, but they draw support from the province and the Indian Department. We have our own medical men upon whose certificate as to the hospital and its work we make payments. We make no payments without such certificate.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the Indians are charged a smaller fee than white people?

Mr. OLIVER. When physicians outside of the hospitals are called to treat the Indians, we pay them the lowest scale that is allowed in the case of poor white patients. The hospitals are free to the Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. What proportion does each contribute approximately to the support of these hospitals?

Mr. OLIVER. The basis of payment on the part of the province and the department respectively is not the same, but we pay approximately about the same amount.

Mr. AMES. In the general hospitals in British Columbia, I suppose the Indians are paid for by the government at the rate of so much per day ?

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian hospitals are free to the Indians. In the hospitals which are not Indian, we pay the ordinary charge, which amounts to about a dollar a day.

Mr. AMES. You pay, then, only for what you receive?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. AMES. You pay no subsidy to these other hospitals at all?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. AMES. And those of which you have given the list are exclusively Indian hospitals?

Mr. OLIVER. Not exclusively. In the beginning they were for the most part missionary enterprises, intended especially for the benefit of the Indians, but they do not absolutely exclude white patients.

Mr. AMES. I understand, then, that there are two kinds of hospital care given to the Indians. One is in general hospitals in centres like Victoria and New Westminster, where the regular rate of a dollar a day is paid for each Indian patient, and the other is in these missionary hospitals at different points which are subsidized by the government without reference to the number of Indians in them.

Mr. OLIVER. No. We pay in them the same rate of a dollar a day until the total number of days reaches one thousand, and after that we pay 75 cents a day.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister state what denominations own or control these hospitals and the amount each received last year?

Mr. OLIVER. Two of them are Church of England—Lytton and Kincolith; Hazleton, Bella Bella, Clayoquot and Port Simpson are Methodist; Telegraph Creek is Presbyterian. Then there is Alert Bay, B.C., Coast Mission, which is practically in connection with the Church of England. The amounts which we estimate we will require are practically the same as the amounts we have paid in the past year.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the minister will turn to pages J—59 and 60, he will find that the expenditure in connection with the Northwest Coast and West Coast agencies of British Columbia totals $20,751, but that out of that amount there has been paid $11,571 for salaries to agents and travelling expenses, leaving only $9,180 to the poor Indians. How does he explain that?

Mr. OLIVER. The figures of expenditure represent the amounts which have to be paid to the officers whose names are given in the report, and the remainder is what the Indians receive. The Indians of British Columbia do not receive any annuity payments. Our dealings with them are simply in the way of supervision and direction and not in the way of support as in the prairie country or under some of the treaties in eastern Canada.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. It appears to me there is a good deal more going to the agent than to the Indians?

Mr. OLIVER. We are paying the agents of course to direct and protect the Indians.

Schools, $93,000.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister give us some general idea of what has been the result of our educational efforts among the Indians of British Columbia?

Mr. OLIVER. The conditions in British Columbia differ somewhat from those prevailing in the prairie provinces, both as regards the surroundings of the Indians and the nature of the Indians themselves. The consequence is that the Indians there derive more benefit from education than do those in the prairie provinces. There is, however, a very large Indian population in British Columbia. By reason of the nature of the country, that population exists in small communities widely separated from one another, so that although we have quite a large number of schools and although we expend on them a large sum, we still reach only a small proportion of the total population. Owing to the conditions, our educational efforts have been more successful in British Columbia than in the prairie provinces, but have not been applied to nearly as large a proportion of the population.

Mr. SPROULE. In what respect have our schools been more successful in British Columbia? Is the educational work there different?

Mr. OLIVER. The education is pretty much the same but in British Columbia, where the Indians are compelled, by the force of circumstances, to adopt to a considerable extent the ways of civilization, living close to civilized communities, restricted to very much the same means of livelihood as white people would be, they are brought to a great extent in line with the conditions which would govern a white settlement. We find in the Indian settlements of British Columbia that the people live in very decent houses and that the men are employed in useful labour and frequently are very well dressed and show the evidence of civilization very much the same as their white neighbours do.

Mr. AMES. What proportion of the known Indian population comes under educational influence?

Mr. OLIVER. Possibly fifty per cent.

Mr. BARR. Would not the climatic conditions have considerable influence? In British Columbia the temperature is so mild that the Indians do not die off so fast as in the prairie provinces, where they suffer to a far greater extent from cold and hunger during the severe winter, and consequently cannot give the same attendance to the schools. They could also attend the schools in winter in British Columbia more readily than in the prairie provinces.

Mr. OLIVER. The British Columbia Indians certainly live under more advantageous circumstances than those on the prairie.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the British Columbia Indians of the same tribes as the prairie Indians and are their schools conducted on the same lines?

Mr. OLIVER. The schools are of the same classes as in the prairie provinces, industrial, day and boarding schools. The British Columbia Indians are of different tribes from those on the prairies and of somewhat different disposition and character. They take more naturally to the ordinary ways and conditions of civilization; they will take employment to a degree that the prairie Indian will not and are of course more likely to benefit by education. The Indian of the plains is essentially an aristocrat; he looks upon labour, as we understand it, as beneath him, as degrading. That is his essential idea of life and it takes generations to cause him to break away from that idea; whereas the Indian of British Columbia has always been able to secure his livelihood while living in communities and under conditions which, while they required labour did not require labour of a severe or exhausting character. It was, however, sufficient to make the Indian of British Columbia take more naturally to civilization than the prairie Indian. On the prairies civilization absolutely kills off the Indians whereas in British Columbia they survive it much better.

Mr. BARR. Are the Indian tribes of British Columbia increasing or decreasing? I saw a statement that the Siwashes are increasing.

Mr. OLIVER. In British Columbia the Indian population as a whole is about stationary; on the prairies it is decreasing.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister give us any information as to the percentage of Indian children educated in the different classes of schools, so that we may judge if there is any difference in the schools which would account for the practical failure of education among them, of which the minister spoke the other night and as to which most of us are inclined to agree with him.

Mr. OLIVER. We find as I said that there is practically no difference in results. The results are not the fault of educational effort but the consequence of the nature of the Indian and of his environment.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Last year we voted $97,300 and this year the vote is $93,000. How much of that vote was expended last year?

Mr. OLIVER. $85,700.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The minister is taking a vote for salaries of $26,020. The same vote was taken last year but I find from the figures at page I—65 that the salaries for the different Indian agencies in British Columbia amount to $56,975, so it would look as if money voted for other purposes had been used for salaries.

Mr. OLIVER. The Auditor General has not made the distinction between salaries of officials and salaries paid to medical attendants and to teachers in schools.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Medical attendance is all separated.

Mr. OLIVER. As I read the item on page I—66 the Auditor General gives the salaries of agents, and then the salaries of medical attendants and then the salaries of teachers, and all these together give the figure my hon. friend read. This bears out what I say. We are asking for a vote separating the salaries and medical attendance, and the schools.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I notice in the item the names of a number of teachers, so I fancy that some of the moneys voted for schools have gone on salary account. We ought to be able to trace how this $85,000 spent last year has been paid. The accounts are mixed.

Mr. OLIVER. The totals are not made up that way. But if my hon. friend will look at page I—66, Northwest Coast Agency, the first lines give the salaries of agents, then follow other lines giving the salaries of medical officers. Then in the balance of the paragraph appears the salaries of teachers. They are all there, but the classifications are not totalled.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I think the minister ought to have them classified so that we can check the expenditure. It is very misleading as it is now.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman's experience in parliament must convince him that the Auditor General is a law unto himself. We cannot compel him to give figures in any other way than he chooses.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I presume he keeps the accounts as he gets them from the department.

Mr. OLIVER. On page 164 Part II of the report of the Department of Indian Affairs, the figures are classified just as we are asking the House to vote them.

Surveys and Reserve Commission, $2,500.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Would the minister give us some information of that item?

Mr. OLIVER. This amount is to provide for delimiting the boundaries of the reserves and for the expenses of the commissioner who is employed on that work.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Might I ask the minister if there has been a conference between the Dominion government and the provincial government regarding the disposition of the Indian reserves?

Mr. OLIVER. The question as to the rights of the Indians is under discussion between the Indian Department and the government of British Columbia, and has been under discussion for some time. The latest phase of the matter is that the government of the province saw fit to take the case into the provincial courts to decide the jurisdiction of the province. That is as far as the matter has gone.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Could the minister state whether the Dominion government was represented in those proceedings, or what is the attitude of the Dominion government?

Mr. OLIVER. This government was not represented at those proceedings. The attitude of the Dominion government was that it would be necessary, in order to reach a satisfactory conclusion, that both parties should come to an understanding as to the questions to be submitted to the courts. The provincial government, for reasons of their own, saw fit to submit a case prepared by themselves, and of course we had no part in it.

Mr. BARNARD. Was not this government notified that a case was going before the courts?

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that the Justice Department was notified by the provincial government that such action was being taken. But I am informed that the Justice Department viewed the case as I have stated.

Mr. BARNARD. If the minister would look up the files in connection with this matter I think he would find that there are one or two communications from the provincial government, dating some time back, which have not been replied to. He will find at least one communication from the Chief Commissioner of Lands in connection with this matter, now several months old, and which has not yet been replied to. It was dated before the proceedings taken by the provincial government.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the Justice Department handles legal questions. If our department received such a communication I presume it was transferred to the Justice Department to take action. I am not able to give my hon. friend any further information in regard to it.

Mr. BARNARD. As a matter of fact, I think the minister will find that there is an agreement practically ratified by order in council between the province and the Dominion, which provides that the reserves should be decreased as the population of the Indians decreased, proportionately; that the provincial government has taken up the question with the Dominion government and has shown them that the population of the reserves has decreased, and has asked them to release certain lands which are now contained in the reserve. Has not such a communication been made to the department?

Mr. OLIVER. The question my hon. friend mentions has been under consideration. But preliminary to any action being taken upon that question, it was felt by this government that it was necessary, first, to know what the rights of the Indians were, which rights were the subject of dispute between this government and the government of British Columbia. The provincial government took the position that the Indians had no right except the right of occupation. The government, which is the trustee and guardian of the Indians, could not admit that proposition and could not go into any discussion as to whether the Indians had too much or too little land until it was decided whether they had any rights or not. That is the question that it is the desire of this government to have settled by a higher authority. It is something more than a year ago that the proposition was made by this government to British Columbia that there should be a submission of this question as to what right or title the Indians had. Up to the present time the government of the province has not agreed to that and therefore no progress has been made.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Pending the decision of the larger question, I would like to invite the attention of the minister to the possibility of dealing with some individual instances. I have in mind particularly the case of the Indian reserve on Maria island in the riding of New Westminster closely adjoining Agassiz. The area of land suitable for agriculture in that valley is very small. A large tract is taken up by the experimental farm and other large tracts are monopolized by Indian reserves, held in the names of Indian tribes that are almost extinct, at least in so far as these particular reserves are concerned, where they carry on no agriculture and give very little sign of occupation. It has been urgently represented to me that the government should be moved to take into consideration the inconvenience it is to settlers to have the settlements so circumscribed as they are by the fact of these large Indian holdings and there is a very great desire that the government should take possession of this land and put it up for sale. I may say that there are people willing to pay good prices for the land in question with the idea of bringing in a larger number of families, making their community stronger and enabling them to handle local affairs more efficiently than they can be handled at the present time. I would like to ask the minister whether he thinks it at all feasible for such a proposition to be entertained in advance of a general settlement.

Mr. OLIVER. There is hardly time to deal with the question before six o'clock.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MONTREAL TERMINAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GEOFFRION—by Mr. Proulx—moved the second reading of Bill (No. 48) respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway Company.

Mr. J. D. REID. Explain.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Geoffrion) is not present.

Mr. J. D. REID. We cannot pass it if it is not explained.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. COWAN—by Mr. Taylor—moved second reading of Bill (No. 55) to incorporate the British Columbia Life Insurance Company.

Mr. SPEAKER. Mr. Cowan being absent this order will have to stand also, on the same principle.

CANADA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

On the order being called for the second reading of Bill (No. 56) respecting the Canadian Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Clarke (Essex).

Mr. SPEAKER. This will also have to stand for the same reason.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Idians, British Columbia—Surveys and Reserve Commissions, $2,500.

Mr. OLIVER. When the committee rose at six o'clock the hon. gentleman from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) was asking for an expression of opinion from the department in regard to making special arrangements for the surrender of an Indian reserve situated in the valley of the Fraser near the experimental farm at Agassiz, and close to the Canadian Pacific Railway line, and in what might be called the very heart of the best agricultural district in British Columbia. He was anxious to know if special arrangements might not be made in regard to the surrender of this reserve, while awaiting a decision on the general question of dealing with reserves throughout the province. The Indian Department is very well aware of the conditions surrounding this particular reserve. One objection to making a special case of this reserve is that it is almost identical in circumstances with many other reserves throughout the province, and that so far from being a special case it is rather a specimen case. In the opinion of the department it is not desirable under such circumstances to make special arrangements in regard to a single case when that arrangement cannot be made applicable to all similar cases. The natural conditions in the province of British Columbia are such that in securing lands for the settlement of the Indian bands in that province and permitting them the right of selection, it has come about that in almost every valley, and adjoining almost every white settlement in every valley, and it might almost be said adjoining almost every point at which there is white settlement in every valley, there is an Indian reserve. This comes about by reason of the topographical conditions which naturally separated the Indians into small bands, each band being resident in a single valley or in a single part of a certain valley. And so, we have in the province of British Columbia, 1,000 Indian reserves scattered about through the valleys and naturally quite as numerous in the parts of the province that are occupied by white settlers as in the parts which are not. This question of the Indian reserves in British Columbia is of paramount importance in the development of that province. It will be understood that in a country so mountainous as British Columbia the valleys have special value, and so it is that where these reserves are situated, at the present time (within the last few years particularly under the development that has taken place) these lands have become of extra special value, so that while there was a question arising about the location of these reserves a few years ago that question has now become a burning one and I might say a dominant question in the development of the province. It may seem strange that such a small area should be so very important in a province with such a stupendous total area, but when you take that area and split it up into a thousand parcels and place each of these parcels in a locality which has been selected by those who knew the province best, you have certainly a very serious bar to the settlement and development of that province. The tenure of Indian lands in British Columbia is somewhat different from that prevailing in other parts of Canada. In all other parts of Canada the Indian is held to be the absolute owner of the land; he is the absolute proprietor not as an individual but as a community. In British Columbia, however, that is not the position as it has been understood. I need not go into any lengthy explanation at the moment, but in the case of Indian reserves in British Columbia until the administration of this government, up to a certain point it was understood that while the Indian owned the land he occupied, and while that land was administered by the Dominion government as the guardian and trustee of the Indian, the government of the province had what was called a reversionary interest in all those Indian reserves.

The Indian Department recognized this as being the position; and so, in any disposition that was attempted to be made of Indian lands for the benefit of the Indians, the reversionary interest of the province of British Columbia was always considered. What the value of that reversionary interest might be was not a matter that could very well be settled; but it was always recognized and kept in view in any transactions in Indian lands. Therefore, Indian lands in British Columbia had not the same value to the Indians that they would have had had they been held under the same tenure as lands in the northwest provinces or in Ontario. But it was always considered that the interest of the Indians was paramount to that of the province. Now, recognizing the desirability of bringing those lands which were not in use by the Indians into profitable occupation, and at the same time securing for the Indians the full benefit of their interest in them, which is in accordance with the principle of administration of Indian lands observed by the Canadian government ever since it undertook to handle Indian lands—when an application was made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company for a certain part of the Metlakatla reserve for the purpose of a terminus for the railroad on the Pacific coast, the Indian Department approached the Indians occupying the reserve, and negotiated a surrender of their rights in some 13,000 acres of the reserve, for which the Grand Trunk Pacific Company paid something like $100,000, which is at the credit of the Metlakatla Indian band. In the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, it was especially stipulated under seal that the reversionary interest of the province of British Columbia was not in any way prejudiced by this transfer of Indian rights. The Indian Department, I may say, believed that the transaction was in the interest of the Indians, in the interest of the province, and in the interest of all Canada, as well as in the interest of the railway company; and believed that to such a degree that before entering into the arrangement with the railway company, the Dominion government asked the province to waive its reversionary interest in those lands, believing that the province would benefit sufficiently by the proposed transaction to warrant it in doing so. The provincial government, however, in their wisdom declined to waive the reversionary interest, and so the sale was made subject to that reversionary interest. A little later certain communications passed between the government of the province and the government of the Dominion in regard to this particular transaction, and in regard to the general question of dealing with these Indian reserves, with a view of getting the question into such a position as would enable the Indian Department to dispose of unused or unneeded Indian lands for the benefit of the Indians, and for the benefit of the settlement of the province. In the course of the correspondence, the government of British Columbia saw fit to take a position which had not previously been contemplated—a position different from that which it formerly held, as we understood it; and in an order in council dated the 28th of February, 1907, the provincial government states its position in these words:

> It follows, then, that the Dominion government has no right or power to make or grant a lease or transfer of any Indian reserve, or portion of a reserve, in this province, and that where any lease or transfer has been made, the reserve or portion of a reserve so leased or transferred now belongs absolutely to the province. It would appear that in at least three instances transfers or leases have been made by the Dominion government of portions of Indian reserves, namely 3·21 acres of the Myuke reserve in Kootenay, 7 acres of the False Creek reserve in Vancouver, and 13·567 acres of the Port Simpson reserve. These lands now belong to and should be claimed by the province.

That is to say, the provincial government, instead of claiming a reversionary interest, claimed an absolutely proprietary interest in the lands, declaring that the Indians were merely the occupants, and not in any sense the owners of the lands. It must be evident that this declaration on the part of the province absolutely prohibited the Dominion government from taking any further action in regard to the alienation of Indian lands. The Dominion government could not undertake to dispossess the Indians without securing value to them for their interest, whatever it might be. I presume that the committee will recognize that as being the correct position. It is the traditional position of the British government in Canada, and has been the unaltered position of the Canadian government ever since it has been handling Indian affairs. Therefore the Indian Department, in undertaking to deal with Indian lands in the province of British Columbia, could only be a party to their alienation when assured that the Indians were receiving full value for whatever interest they had in the lands. It must be evident that unless a title can be given for the land, no man will pay his money for it. The position therefore is this: A cloud is placed on the title to Indian land by the government of the province of British Columbia which prevents any one from investing his money in it, and thus causes a tie-up in the situation unless the Dominion government is prepared to take the ground that the Indian has no right in these lands.

Mr. SPROULE. Where the Indians abandon their reserve, as they did around Kaien Island, and the reversionary right brings that back to the Crown, you could not interfere with the title then.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indians did not abandon their reserve, but sold a part and retained the remainder.

Mr. SPROULE. As long as the Indians were settled on that land and the tribe remained, it was theirs, but if they vacated it and went away, it reverted to the Crown; and the contention was that the band abandoned their reserve and went to the United States. Afterwards, however, a portion of another band came and squatted on this reserve and took possession of it, but the province, under the reversionary right, owned the land and pretended that the others were only squatters.

Mr. OLIVER. The province did not make any pretention with regard to abandonment, but simply claimed that if the Indians either sold the land or ceased to occupy any portion of the reserve, it became vested in the province. I am not arguing the question of the validity of that contention, but I am saying that such a declaration by the British Columbia government necessarily tied up the land and prevented this government disposing of it and at the same time discharging its trust to the Indians. That being the case, and we did not in any way wish to take any action which would bring us into conflict with the province, but still, not considering that we would be warranted in acceding to their position, we stated that we would be willing to facilitate a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction. It seemed to us that by reference to the proper court, we would obtain a decision either acknowledging the rights of the Indians or stating that they had no rights, and in the latter case relieve the Indian Department of all responsibility in the matter. We have not since been able to come to an arrangement with the province for the submission of the matter to the decision of the courts, and consequently the land is absolutely tied up, and the Indian Department is prevented from dealing with it with the view of releasing such portion to settlement as is not needed by the Indians, and giving the Indians the benefit of whatever legal rights they have in the property. The fact that an arrangement has not yet been come to is not due to any laxity on the part of this government. On September 24, 1906, the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs wrote the premier of British Columbia making a certain suggestion as to the settlement of the dispute. On December 5, 1906, no answer having up to that date been received, another letter was sent asking a reply, and on March 13, 1907, the following reply was received by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs:

Adverting to your letter of Dec. 5, 1906 and other correspondence with reference to the Indian reserve question in this province, I beg to state that the action of the federal government in connection with the Indian reserve in British Columbia has been so unsatisfactory of late that this government does not intend to enter into any further arrangement with the Dominion authorities.

Yours truly,
WM. McBRIDE.

It is only fair that the House should be made aware of the facts in this case. It is of the highest importance to the province of British Columbia that where these reserves are not beneficially occupied by the Indians, they should be available for disposition, so that they could be occupied by those who would turn them to good account; but the responsibility for the present position rests absolutely with the province of British Columbia and not with the Indian Department, as the latter has not shown any lack of legitimate and persistent effort to bring about a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. WRIGHT. Was there any dispute between this government and the province of British Columbia prior to the correspondence just read?

Mr. OLIVER. There was always a question between the two governments with regard to these Indian reserves. It will be easily seen how such a condition of affairs will exist, the tenure being so different in British Columbia from what it is in any other part of the country. The government of British Columbia took one view and the Dominion government an entirely different view. There was always more or less conflict of opinion, but in 1876 an arrangement was arrived at. In the carrying out of that arrangement there was of course room for differences of opinion, which occurred from time to time. And it was because there was more or less friction that the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs wrote the provincial government in March, 1906, in order to secure a working arrangement which would enable these lands to be dealt with.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a fact that when the lands for the terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific were sold to that company the federal government took the ground that they and they alone had the right to sell the land and that the provinces had no right in them? That contention was continued for some time, and I think it was said in this House by some one representing the government that they and they alone had the right to sell and the province had no right to refuse.

Mr. OLIVER. I think there was an impression in the minds of some members of the House that the government had taken that position; but the government never took that position. Their position was stated in the House, but in order to make the matter perfectly clear, I shall take the liberty of reading an undertaking given by the Grand Trunk Pacific before the government would undertake to deal with the Indians for this land. The undertaking reads:

KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS

That we, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, Ltd., are jointly and severally prepared to accept letters patent from the Dominion government to the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, Ltd., for the lands in Kaien island, Digby island and Tsimpsean peninsula, applied for by the G. T. P. Railway Company upon the terms contained in letter of June 27, 1906, addressed to Mr. D'Arcy Tate, assistant solicitor of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company (which last mentioned company by instrument dated June 18, 1907, did assign, transfer and set over all its right, title and interest in the said lands to the Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, Ltd.), that is the patent to be issued and accepted without recourse against the Dominion in case of the establishment of any claim on the part of the province of British Columbia to the said lands or any interest therein.

In witness whereof, each of the said companies has hereunto set its corporate seal, countersigned by the proper officers in that behalf, June 24, A.D., 1907.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company,
(Seal G.T.P.R.Co.),
FRANK W. MORSE,
Vice-president and general manager.
HENRY PHILIPS,
Secretary.

The Grand Trunk Pacific Town and Development Company, Ltd.

Vice-president.
HENRY PHILIPS,
Secretary.

In the presence of: D'Arcy Tate.

Mr. WRIGHT. The minister took the ground that there had been a change of base on the part of the British Columbia government As I understand, the government of British Columbia have claimed the inherent right in the property, they still take the same position and I fail to see any change of base on their part.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not as it is understood here. Of course I am not suggesting that the government of British Columbia has in its own knowledge changed its position, but its position has been changed as we understood it. Formerly we understood, as I have already said, that the Indians owned these lands subject to the reversionary interest of the province of British Columbia, that is to say that the Indians had the right of occupation, the right to use, lease or sell the lands, subject to that reversionary interest.

Mr. WRIGHT. How did it come about in the first place that the position of the Indians in British Columbia is different from their position in the rest of the Dominion?

Mr. OLIVER. The reason is that in the greater part, at any rate, of the rest of the Dominion the lands were acquired by treaty from the Indians on certain fixed terms. It is true that some lands in British Columbia were acquired in the same way by treaty, but as far as the greater part of the province was concerned, no treaty was made with the Indians, the right of the Crown was asserted without regard to the rights of the Indians and occupation was taken of the lands by the white people without treaty with the Indians, except in a limited number of cases in the early part of the British occupation.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not British Columbia by an Act of the legislature, cede these lands to the Indians or for the Indians, inserting in their Act a provision that in the event of their abandoning occupation or transferring it to others the reversionary interest of the province in the lands would bring them back to the province?

Mr. OLIVER. I think that is right. When the provincial government was organized, I think they passed an Act of parliament taking authority to set apart certain lands for the occupation of the Indians; the difference was that it was not by treaty with the Indians as was the case here in Ontario and in the prairie provinces; it was an Act of dominant authority. There are some lands in British Columbia in regard to which a treaty was made with the Indians, but that is only a small part.

Mr. A. HAGGART. From the explanation of the minister I understand that the government have practically given a quit claim to the G. T. P. Railway Company; they have given no obligation or covenant to furnish title.

Mr. OLIVER. That is it.

Mr. A. HAGGART. If you had given a quit claim, is it not entirely a matter between the railway company and the local government?

Mr. OLIVER. Entirely.

Mr. A. HAGGART. We would be out of it then?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. A. HAGGART. And you have the $100,000 consideration?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Well that should not concern this House very much.

Mr. OLIVER. No. That question is settled, that deal is closed. My hon. friend, as a member of the legal profession, will see that when the Grand Trunk Pacific came forward and paid their $100,000 for the right of the Indians in those lands and then had to buy the lands from the province of British Columbia, they had practically thrown away their $100,000, which we have to-day in the treasury for the benefit of the Indians, and that experience is what I am trying to emphasize to the House. Certainly no other person having money would go through the same experience. It absolutely prevents the sale of any more land.

Mr. BARNARD. Would not the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company paid a considerable sum of money for this reversionary interest of the province of British Columbia in addition to giving them a 25 per cent interest in the townsite, suggest to the minister that the legal advisers of the Grand Trunk Pacific had come to the conclusion that the Grand Trunk Pacific had a pretty strong claim.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I desire to express my appreciation of the courtesy of the Minister of the Interior in making his interesting explanation of the position of the Indian lands in my province. Until I heard him to-night I had not understood that it was the fixed policy of the Dominion government to reduce the areas of the Indian reserves whenever the condition of affairs with respect to the title to the lands would warrant them in so doing. I am sure the announcement of this policy will be received with a great deal of pleasure all through British Columbia, where, as the minister has informed this committee, the fact of so large a quantity of land being locked up in Indian reserves is the cause of a great deal of annoyance. I think his announcement ought to stimulate the movement in the province for arranging an amicable settlement of this question. I had understood that the provincial government had made a bona fide attempt to submit a case to the courts in which the Dominion government were invited to join issue with them. We had the impression that the Dominion government were disinclined to put the matter to the test. But the statement made to the committee to-night encourages us to believe that the hon. the minister, recognizing how important it is for us that this matter should be settled, will use his best endeavour to facilitate such a settlement as the province desires to make. There is one more question I would like to ask, to come back to my starting point. In the event of the people of Agassiz being able to arrange with the provincial government with respect to a disposition of Maria island, will the Department of Indian Affairs here facilitate the sale of that island?

Mr. OLIVER. It depends entirely on the character of the arrangement. We would very much prefer to have the question settled as a whole rather than deal with it by piecemeal; but for the reason I have already mentioned, there are so many cases practically alike that we would certainly be accused of favouritism or unfairness if we undertake to deal with one here and one there rather than with the whole of them together.

Mr. BARNARD. Do I understand from the remarks of the minister that the government is ready to sell any land on these reserves in cases where the reserve is larger than is required? According to the agreement made with the province in 1876, that could be done provided an arrangement could be made with the provincial government. If that is the case, I think this matter might be arranged without much trouble.

Mr. OLIVER. Our policy is to bring into use the land that the Indians are not now using, and to secure to them the financial benefit from the transfer of the land.

Mr. BARNARD. According to the basis of the agreement which was made between the provinces of the Dominion in 1876, and which was set forth in an order in council by the Dominion government, and accepted by the provincial government.

Mr. OLIVER. There appears to be a wide difference of opinion between the province and the Dominion as to the purport of that agreement, and I do not wish to say anything further than that we would be glad to secure a settlement by the highest authority.

Mr. BARNARD. Then would it not be advisable for the minister to take some part in this discussion that is going on before the courts at the present time? That might facilitate a settlement.

Mr. OLIVER. As I understand the matter, when there are two parties to a dispute and a settlement before the courts is desired, a stated case is agreed upon by the parties for submission to the courts. But as I understand this matter, the British Columbia government did not give us an opportunity to unite with them in stating the case. They stated a case of their own and submitted it to their own court, which, of course, they had a perfect right to do. But unless we had an opportunity to agree to the statement of the case, we could hardly be considered as parties to the decision.

Mr. BARNARD. There must be some misunderstanding. The minister has read some communications between the two governments with respect to this matter. Would he bring down all the papers in connection with it, because the information I have is that there are communications later than those referred to by the minister from the provincial government to this government which probably would throw some light on this question. If the minister will bring them down we would be in a better position to understand the situation. It is a matter of great importance to the people of British Columbia; it is a question which I think all parties are anxious to settle.

Mr. OLIVER. The papers, as I have said, are in the Justice Department and not in my department. The hon. gentleman is aware of the means he must take to secure them. It is not within my power to bring them down.

Mr. BARNARD. The minister has thrown out the suggestion that the government is anxious to sell these lands that were not required on the reserve. Does that apply to all the lands reserved for the Indians or only a portion of them?

Mr. OLIVER. The principle applies to all the reserves in every part of the country.

Mr. BARNARD. I understood the minister to make a distinction between some Indians who had what he called treaty rights and others.

Mr. OLIVER. No, I did not make any distinction between them in discussing this question. But in regard to another matter I said that some Indians were under treaty and the balance were not. But so far that point has not been raised in the discussion, although no doubt if a case came before the courts it would be raised.

Mr. BARNARD. Is the department of the opinion that it could sell the lands on any of these Indian reserves, putting the provincial government altogether aside, for the sake of argument? Could the department dispose of the Indian lands? If not, is there any distinction between the different reservations?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to be drawn into a statement that I have no proper authority to make. Given the condition that there was a reserve which was the result of a treaty between the British government, we will say, and the Indians, then whatever the terms of that treaty were of course they would prevail. I do not know whether there are any such cases, but that is the case in this part of the country, and possibly it is the case in some parts of British Columbia. I may say that we have never raised that question at all. We have assumed in all our discussions with the provincial government that they held a reversionary interest in all the Indian lands.

Mr. BARNARD. I read in one of the coast papers a reference to the fact that a reserve close to Vancouver, if not actually within the limits of that city, that situated at Greer's beach, or Kitsilano, had been transferred to the city of Vancouver. Can the minister tell me if he knows of any transaction of that kind?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that reserve has not been transferred to the city of Vancouver. Seven acres of the False Creek reserve at Vancouver were, some years ago, leased to a lumber company and that is one of the cases that the British Columbia government takes exception to holding that the land belongs to the province.

Mr. BARNARD. What I want to get at is whether or not quite recently the Kitsilano reserve has been done away with, and whether the land has become the property of the city of Vancouver or any body besides the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. BARNARD. I would like to know if the minister can tell us anything about the Songhees reserve situated in the city of Victoria. That is a burning question at Victoria. These Indians own 112 acres practically in the middle of the city of Victoria. They have half of the water frontage on the harbour and the land held by them is practically of no use. It increases the cost of municipal administration very considerably by reason of the fact that roads and telephone poles have to be built around this reserve and very seriously retards the development of the city. I would like to know if the minister can hold out any hope of a settlement of this question.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian Department has a very vivid remembrance of the Songhees reserve. Everything that my hon. friend has said in regard to the Songhees reserve is on the records of the department. There have been several attempts made to secure a surrender of this land. In 1897 a commissioner went out and negotiated with the Indians, and again in 1906 the present deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs went with the fullest possible powers to negotiate a surrender. He made satisfactory arrangements with the British Columbia government with regard to their reversionary interest, but he found it impossible to secure the surrender by the Indians. We quite appreciate the desire that exists to procure it from every point of view, and we have exhausted every effort to secure the surrender of the reserve. I am sure my hon. friend knows what the difficulties are and it is not necessary that I should detail them to the committee but they have so far been impossible to overcome.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why does not the department exercise the rights of the Crown, expropriate this land and settle this difficulty?

Mr. OLIVER. That is a matter for consideration but I presume parliament would only consent to that being done as a last resort. Certainly, as a member of the government I would not advise that the government should undertake the responsibility; because it would be so radical a departure from the accepted and traditional policy of British rule in this country that it should not and would not be undertaken without the fullest sanction of parliament which would have to take the responsibility. I am not prepared to say whether such a proposition may be submitted to parliament or not but in such a case I would certainly say that parliament would have to take the full responsibility.

Mr. BARNARD. I think the minister will admit this is very nearly a case for the last resort. The minister said that the department had exhausted every effort to settle the question. I am not blaming the department because I think they have made some effort to settle it, but it is a matter that must be settled in the near future.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (Simcoe). Is it not a fact that a portion of British Columbia was taken possession of by the Crown and that any rights the Indians have to that portion of the coast are not sovereign rights in any sense of the term but that the Indians are simply occupants, leaseholders or users of the soil? We have had cases in Ontario where the sovereign rights of the Crown were exercised, a man's property was taken away from him and the court decided that the Crown could do no wrong. If this property is within the city limits of Victoria, if it is necessary that the Indians should be moved out and if provision is made by which they will receive a sufficient amount of land elsewhere, suitable to their habits, condition and mode of life, why should not the government transfer them to another location? Is it not a fact that the government have removed Indians from several reserves to other reserves in order that the lands occupied by them might be made available for a white population? Would it not be possible to assist the city of Victoria to introduce a Bill into this House making provision for the disposition of these lands, letting any money benefit accrue to the department for the Indians, or to the province when the matter is settled?

Mr. OLIVER. As far as I am aware the government has never done as my hon. friend has suggested. We have secured surrenders from the Indians and we have secured exchanges but always with the consent of the majority of the band. That has been a fundamental principle and the suggestion that my hon. friend makes would be a departure from the traditional policy. I do not say that it should not be done but I am pointing out that it would be a departure from the traditional policy and it would require to be very carefully considered before being undertaken. With regard to the tenure of the land, as far as the greater part of the area of British Columbia is concerned it is in the position that my hon. friend has stated, but I am informed that this particular reserve happens to be subject to a treaty between the Crown and the Indians. I may be mistaken but I am given to understand that such is the case.

Mr. BARNARD. With the Hudson Bay Company?

Mr. OLIVER. With the Hudson Bay Company as representing the Crown.

Cleansing Indian orchards, $1,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Have they the San José scale there?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not think it is the San José scale but it is a fungus pest.

Yukon Indian Schools, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many Indians in the Yukon?

Mr. OLIVER. About 3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of school age?

Mr. OLIVER. It is impossible to tell the number of children of school age, but there are schools at Moosehide, Carcross and Selkirk.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a large expenditure for a few pupils.

Mr. OLIVER. We took a vote last year but we did not expend the money and this is a revote. We wish to erect a small boarding school at Carcross which is a Church of England mission, with a view of doing the best we can for the Indian children. The bands are small and scattered over an immense area and a boarding school is practically the only way in which to give any of the Indians education.

Timber inspector and valuator, $1,200.

Mr. WRIGHT. Who is the timber inspector and where is he located?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. John Fraser, of Gore Bay, Manitoulin.

Travelling expenses and clerical services for inspectors, $2,700.

Mr. WRIGHT. I call the attention of the minister to some of the items included in these travelling expenses. For instance, there is a Mr. J. D. Ramsden, inspector, for whom we bought a travelling bag at $11.25, a coat for $6, and one pair of shoes for $10.50. For a gentleman named Stewart we bought a pair of boots at $10.50. Again, we find that there was purchased an air bed at $30, three pairs of boots $25, sundry clothing $20.30, kit bags $29.50, dunnage bags at $8.50, blankets and so on. I protested last year very strongly against the government buying clothing and boots and travelling bags for these officials. I think they are pretty well paid. We let them travel just as comfortably as possible in Pullman cars; we furnish all the help that is necessary at high wages, and we pay all their expenses of every kind. I protest against the department continuing the system of buying travelling bags and trunks for men who go out for a week or two. I don't think we should buy a $30 bed for any of these officials. I suppose these things become their personal property and that we never see them again. I would suggest that the minister should consider the matter and see if he cannot cut out some of these items.

Mr. OLIVER. These inspectors are employed in the treaty which lies to the north of the height of land in northern Ontario, towards Hudson bay. The trip they have to make is altogether out of the ordinary, and it requires an extraordinary outfit in the way of clothing and camp equipment. As these men only receive the same salaries as the men who do their work under ordinary conditions it has not been thought unfair to the country that they should get in addition the special camp appliance and special clothing they require for this extra service.

Mr. WRIGHT. I draw the attention of the minister to the fact that a large number of these Indian reserves are not above the height of land, but in Northern Ontario. I think we paid out for this one trip to the Indians, nearly $8,000 in expenses of one kind and another. It seems to me that the amount of money spent in this way is altogether too large and that it might be cut down very considerably if it is looked after.

Mr. SPROULE. Does Mr. Fraser report on the value of Indian land timber in the Georgian bay district when it is about to be sold?

Mr. OLIVER. His work is inspecting and valuing on the Manitoulin Islands and along the north shore of the Georgian bay.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it Mr. Fraser who valued the timber on Hope Island a couple of years ago when it was sold?

Mr. OLIVER. That was valued by Mr. Chitty.

Mr. WRIGHT. What reserves are being surrendered by the Indians on the north shore of the Georgian bay ?

Mr. OLIVER. All the bands on the north shore of the Georgian bay have surrendered large areas of their lands, and it is in carrying on the sales of timber and lands that these men are employed.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Is it the policy of the government to induce the Indians to surrender their lands in settled parts of the country, and move further back to the unsettled districts?

Mr. OLIVER. It is our policy, not so much to induce the Indians to move away, as to induce them to surrender lands which they are not using and which other people would use, securing for the Indians the difference in value.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Does not the experience of the minister show that the Indians do not follow agricultural pursuits to any advantage, and that it is better to move them from settled municipalities back to unsettled districts where there is hunting and fishing? For instance, we have a band of Chippewa Indians in North Ontario whose presence is complained of as retarding the progress of the municipality in which they are settled. Would it not be better to get them to exchange their lands for lands in the unsettled portions of the country? Does the government contribute anything towards the upkeep of the roads in that municipality?

Mr. OLIVER. It is our policy to secure the removal of the Indians, but it is also our policy to recognize the sacred right of the Indian to his land. He has an absolute right to the ownership and occupation of his lands just as any other proprietor; and while we are quite willing to use what inducements we may to secure his removal, we do not recognize any responsibility to secure it and are not deserving of any blame should they not be removed. In regard to the contributions by the Indian Department, I think there is in the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman a reserve which is very peculiarly situated, in which the Indian land is intermixed in some way with land of ordinary occupants; and representations were made to the government that this resulted in an unfairness to the settlers. Therefore a small contribution was made on behalf of the Indians towards the roads of the municipality. But that was an entirely extraordinary condition, which I do not think exists anywhere else.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the department made any attempt to induce the Indians to take up their individual holdings and assume the responsibilities of citizenship? I think an effort should be made in that direction wherever the Indians manifest sufficient progress. In the riding which I represent, we have a small band of Indians, part of the Oka tribe, who came up there a few years ago and took up individual holdings. These Indians are becoming fair average farmers, some of them doing as well as the average white man and becoming very good citizens. We see very little difference between these Indians and their ordinary white neighbours. The Indians in my district do not participate in the government grant, and therefore exercise the franchise, and I believe they exercise it as well as other people. I believe that wherever there is a reasonable hope of inducing the Indians to take up their individual holdings and assume the responsibilities of citizenship, the government should make the attempt to induce them to do so.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Are these Indian lands liable for municipal rates or statute labour?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Will the hon. gentleman say whether it is the policy of the government to continue these grants in my constituency or not? Are they to be annual, or periodical, just on the eve of an election? I am afraid that the hon. gentleman allowed political considerations to influence him in making the grant, because it was made in September or the beginning of October last. About $2,000 was put into the hands of active political workers on the assumption that it was payment from the Indian Department to this municipalty; and these political workers spent the money for the advantage of their own political friends, for upbuilding roads and bridges in the municipality. I am not objecting to the grant at all. I am calling the minister's attention to the extraordinary circumstances that it was made on the eve of an election, and I understood him to say that it was the only grant ever made to a municipality by his department. I ask the hon. gentleman to say whether it is the policy of the department to continue such payments, and whether we may expect the bounty of the government to be bestowed on this municipality in the future.

Mr. OLIVER. I am afraid that we can hardly promise it annually, or even periodically; my hon. friend had better say semi-occasionally. There have been grants made on two occasions; and though my hon. friend connects the election with the payment, I think the fact is that when the need for roads or bridges has become pressing, then the money has been contributed. If there was any election work in the handling of that money, it was not on the part of the Indian Department, either directly or indirectly, but by the officers of the municipality, to whom the money was paid, and who had its entire expenditure.

Mr. CROSBY. As the item for travelling expenses and clerical services for Messrs. Boyd and Fraser amounts to $2,700, I would like to ask the hon. minister how often these gentlemen leave their homes, how long they are away from their homes, and who draws the money for the clerical expenses?

Mr. OLIVER. I can bring down a detailed report of the amounts paid to these men if my hon. friend wants it, but I suppose it will be sufficient for me to say that they are travelling the greater part of their time and that the greater part of this amount is for travelling expenses. The amount for clerical assistance is only a small part of the whole, and is for the making up of the reports which they have to forward to the department from time to time.

Mr. CROSBY. It does not seem to me it makes much difference what salary you give a man if you give him all his expenses and all the money for clerical expenses he makes on you, and if he makes more than double his salary in travelling and clerical expenses. I would like to know how long they are away on those journeys. Are they away long enough to wear out an $8 pair of boots every trip they make?

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. member desires a detailed statement I can easily bring it to the House, but cannot possibly furnish it at this sitting. Speaking generally, these men are employed for the purpose of travelling, and are travelling practically the whole year. If they were not travelling, they would not be doing the work they were hired to do. Of course when men are travelling their expenses are paid besides their salary; and if they travel enough it is not to be wondered at if their expenses should be as much as or more than their salary.

Mr. CROSBY. If the minister will bring down a statement I will be satisfied.

Mr. SAM. SHARPE. As the hon. minister says that these agencies in my constituency are peculiarly situated, and practically acknowledges the liability on the part of the government to assist in keeping up the municipal roads and bridges, would it not be advisable to open up negotiations in order to induce the Indians to exchange their lands for lands further back? There is a great deal of complaint on their score. They retard progress and do not contribute towards the roads. Would it not be better for the government to get rid of the liability by having them change their lands and go further back?

Mr. OLIVER. That is quite in line with our policy, but we do not undertake to exercise compulsion. The most we can do is to exercise persuasion.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. minister promised the other evening to bring down a statement of the Indian lands which had been placed under lease or sold or the cutting rights given on them since March last.

Mr. OLIVER. I have the statement here. The following sales of timber were made by the Indian Department since the last report published:

Dokis reserve, French river, 8 berths, namely:—

4 and 6	$265,000
1	178,000
3 and 5	126,500
8	102,000
7	131,000
2	69,000
	$871,500

Chiefs point, Georgian Bay, burned timber:

Prices tendered by Mr. N. D. Seaman, of Sauble Falls, Ont.:

Hemlock	$ 7	per M. ft.	B.M.
Pine	10	"	"
Elm	8	"	"
Birch	6	"	"
Ash	8	"	"
Tamarack	7	"	"
Cedar	7	"	"

These prices are over and above Crown dues at tariff rates.

Kettle and Stony Point reserves, Lake Huron, burned timber.

Prices tendered by Mr. T. W. Mitchell, Arkona, Ont.:

Hemlock, tamarack, soft elm, maple, beech, birch, black ash, $4 per M. ft. B.M.
Basswood, $6 per M. ft. B.M.
White ash, $10 per M. ft. B.M.
Cordwood, 15 cents per cord.
And Crown dues at tariff rates.

Giants Tomb island, Georgian bay.

Timber sold to Mr. C. Beck, Penetanguishene, for $3,750 and Crown dues at tariff rates.

Permits issued to Indians to cut and sell timber were authorized as follows:

Cape Croker Band.

Sold Kastner and Newman, Wiarton, Ont., at prices tendered, namely:

Maple	$10.25	per M. ft.	B.M.
Beech	7.00	"	"
Elm	12.25	"	"
Basswood	13.25	"	"
Hemlock	10.00	"	"
Cedar	11.00	"	"

Quantity estimated about 500,000 feet in all. Sold George Niebergall, Wiarton, the previous year about 1 million feet, B.M.

The Indians only furnished about half the quantity and they are to supply the difference this season; the prices tendered by Mr. Niebergall are as follow:

Maple	$10
Beech	6
Elm	11
Basswood	13
Hemlock	9
Cedar	11

Garden River Band.

Railway ties sold Harris Tie and Timber Company, Ottawa, at shipping point, cedar and tamarack ties 25 cents each; hemlock ties, 20 cents each; on right of way Canadian Pacific Railway, cedar and tamarack ties, 33 cents each; hemlock ties, 28 cents each.

Shesheguaning Band.

Sold to B. S. Graham, Silverwater, Ont.

Cedar ties, No. 1, 32 cents each; cedar ties, No. 2, 16 cents each; posts, 6 cents each.

West bay band.

Ties, No. 1, 30 cents each; ties No. 2, 15 cents each; posts, 5½ cents each.

Sold to Rixon, Ainslie and Stoddarts:

Oak, $10 par M. ft.; basswood and elm, $8.
Manitoulin island, unceded part:
Ties sold to Wm. J. Pulling and Co., Windsor, at 34¼ cents each.

Watha reserve.

Sold to F. McGibbon and Sons, Penetanguishene, about 150,000 feet B.M., of burned hemlock, at $1.71 per M. ft. B.M., and Crown dues.

Mr. SAM. SHARPE. Would the minister be good enough to take into consideration the desirability of giving some annual sum in payment of our liability to the municipalities instead of making large grants, as he says, semi-occasionally. That would meet the necessities of the case and relieve the department of the suspicion of political partisanship and, as my hon. friend beside me suggests, of the worry of pull. Two thousand dollars in one municipality cannot be spent to advantage in one month, and we had some $1,500 spent in the four weeks just prior to the elections. If an annual sum were distributed to this municipality they could spend it to much greater advantage and that would be also in the interests of the department.

Payments to Indians surrendering their lands under provisions of section 70 of the Indian Act, which will afterwards be repaid from the avails of the lands, $50,000.

Mr. LAKE. What are the arrangements for payments to the Indians out of the money obtained from land surrendered by them?

Mr. OLIVER. Roughly speaking an upset price is placed upon the lands. That is, the Indians agree to surrender the land for sale provided the land is not sold at a less figure than that agreed on, which of course varies in different reserves. On signing the surrender an arbitrary sum of so much per head is paid down to bind the bargain. Then a certain percentage of the total price received, varying from 20 per cent up to 50 per cent, is paid to the Indians as it is received. That is for every dollar that is paid in on the purchase price of the land 50 cents may be paid direct to the Indians. From that 50 cents of course, is deducted the first payment made to bind the bargain. The balance, 50 cents, is funded and the interest on that is paid to the Indians each year, generally speaking at the same time as the treaty payments, an equal amount per head.

Mr. LAKE. What interest is paid?

Mr. OLIVER. Three per cent, the government rate of interest. That is 3 per cent annually, on 50 per cent of the total price for which the reserve has been sold.

Mr. LAKE. I had a letter suggesting that interest is not being paid to the Indians on the Assiniboine reserve.

Mr. OLIVER. I fancy that in that case the annual payment has not yet accrued. The interest does not begin until the land is sold.

Mr. LAKE. I think the land was sold some time ago. There are moneys credited in the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. OLIVER. My impression is that the first payment of interest upon the sales in that reserve is not yet due.

Mr. LAKE. Have all the lands which were surrendered been sold yet, and if not, what proportion still remain unsold?

Mr. OLIVER. I cannot say just how much, there have been two sales and some of the land is still unsold. I shall obtain the information and give it to the hon. member.

Relief to destitute Indians in remote districts, $10,000.

Mr. CROSBY. How much was spent last year, how long has this vote been running and is it increasing or decreasing?

Mr. OLIVER. Last year $9,900 was spent. This is for the relief of Indians outside the treaty limits in the far north, practically in the Mackenzie River country, in Keewatin and in the Yukon. A grant of this character has been made fer the last fifteen or twenty years and the tendency is for it to increase rather than decrease.

Mr. CROSBY. Could the minister say how much of this is spent in getting the money into the Indians' hands?

Mr. OLIVER. This is to pay for supplies actually given to the Indians. I presume the reason of the difference between the amount of ten years ago and the amount to-day, is that ten years ago when the season of scarcity came the Indian simply died, whereas now his life is preserved by the relief he gets.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. In that item is there included any relief money expended in Northern Ontario?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. I think that is one of the most humane items in the whole estimates, and every member of the House should be well satisfied to let that item go through, and even to increase it. I had occasion a few days after the election to wire the department about an Indian woman and some children who were starving in northern Ontario, and I want to thank the minister publicly, and the department, for the prompt manner in which they wired back to have relief extended to these starving people. I was struck with the generosity and promptness of the department at the time, and I have much pleasure now in endorsing this item and would be glad indeed to see it increased.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian items now being passed, I wish to say that on Friday last a number of questions were asked me and I promised to bring down the answers. Some of the gentlemen who asked the questions are not here, but I have the answers ready. First, I have an answer to the question of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). The item for a bull shown in the Auditor's Report as being purchased for the Birtle agency from 'R. Logan, agent' has not been detailed properly. It was, together with others, purchased at the Brandon sale of bulls out of funds advanced for the purpose, and Mr. Logan, who is the agent at Portage la Prairie, accounted for the money advanced. Nine bulls were bought at this sale; three for the Birtle agency (one charged to cattle vote and two to bull fund) from the Cattle Breeders' Association, whose receipt is held by the Auditor General, at a cost of $261.20, delivered at Birtle, including transportation and other charges, and six for Portage la Prairie agency for $619.40, including transportation.

Then the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Rhodes) asked a question about the payment of $16 to Dr. F. A. Rand, medical officer for the Indians of Cumberland county, N.S. This was due to an outbreak of small-pox amongst the Indians. The payment was for special services rendered by the doctor in vaccinating the Indians at the different places where they are located in the county, viz.:

1907, Jan. 7. To visit to Halfway River 10 miles to vaccinate Indians.....	$5 00
1907. Jan. 7. To vaccinate fourteen Indians at 25 cents each..	3 50
1907, Jan. 11. To visit to Springhill Junction to vaccinate Indians (25 miles) and vaccinating four at 25c..	3 50
1907, Jan. 30. To visit to Southampton to vaccinate Indians (20 miles) and vaccinating nine at 25c.	4 00
	$16 00

Mr. RHODES. That reply simply means that it is not the duty of the officer to attend small-pox cases.

Mr. OLIVER. Where they are not on the reserve. I understand these Indians were scattered about. There is, of course, a difference between small-pox and an ordinary disease. This is a special allowance for vaccination, but it is not the treatment of disease.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Is the medical officer paid on a yearly salary?

Mr. OLIVER. Some are and some are not.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. In connection with the Chippewa Indians of Rama township in my constituency, there is an item of $250 to Dr. McLean, 12 months; another item, hospital attendance, Dr. McLean, $61, in I—84.

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. McLean gets $300 a year, $250 from the appropriation and $50 from the funds of the band. The special claim mentioned there is, I think, a bill for attendance on some Indian who was not a member of the band.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Then there is another item: Medical attendance, Dr. A. P. Ardagh, $25; Dr. W. A. Henderson, $47.

Mr. OLIVER. I assume those are for medical attendance on Indians who are not members of the band, but who have come into the district and require medical attendance. Then I have another answer to a question of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche). In regard to the payment of $200.50 to H. B. Rush, over and above the contract price for the erection of buildings at Kinistino reserve, the facts are that the department called for tenders in July, 1906, and Mr. Rush's tender was the lowest received. The contract, however, was not awarded at that time as a question had arisen as to whether it would not be advisable to erect the buildings at Nut Lake reserve instead of Kinistino, and this question was not decided until too late to build that year. The following spring, on March 15, 1907, Mr. Rush was notified to proceed with the work and almost at once, on May 4, he drew the attention of the inspector to the fact that prices had increased and that he would like to be allowed the difference. Upon completion of the work, he put in a claim of $200.50 to cover the difference between the advance in the cost of materials between the date of his tender in 1906 and when he was notified to proceed with the work. The matter was referred to Mr. Inspector Chisholm for his report (copy of which is attached hereto) and payment was made upon his recommendation, as it was considered the contractor had a just claim, according to the facts and figures submitted.

The Auditor General made some inquiries in regard to this payment and the facts were placed before him. The tenders were as follows: A. N. Claggett, $3,780; W. Wortley, $3,575; H. B. Rush, $2,600.

Then, a question was asked with regard to the notice given to the lessees of a timber limit that their license would be terminated.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That is the question of the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Smyth).

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. The Indians of the Spanish river reserve petitioned the department in November, 1907, to terminate the license as the licensees had held it over twenty-one years, that they were only cutting small quantities annually, that it is contrary to agreement to hold the limit indefinitely and allow timber to become merchantable which was not merchantable when the license issued, but has since grown to be merchantable, that no bonus was paid for such and it never was surrendered for sale, that the licensees do not employ Indians and only work the limit with one contractor, and they have had ample time to remove the timber. The matter was referred to the Department of Justice, which replied that the surrender of the timber by the Indians only included timber that was merchantable at the time and not what became merchantable since; that the license is confined to timber then licensed and the licensees may be required to remove what remains of the timber covered by the license within a reasonable time at the end of which the license will be determined. The licensees were advised accordingly, on November 24, 1908, and notified that as ample time had been given for the removal of the timber actually covered by their license, the department is obliged to terminate it on April 30 next.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the Indians of Manitoulin island the right to lease land for the purpose of boring for oil?

Mr. OLIVER. They are the absolute owners of the reserve and of the minerals and natural resources as well. Therefore, I think there can be no question that they have the right to lease. Of course, the Indian Department, as their guardians, negotiates the lease so that any lease that is made is subject to the consideration and approval of the department. The Indian Department is responsible for the lease being in due form and provident.

Government of Northwest Territories—Salary of Geo. D. Pope, as accountant to the Commissioner, $300.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these all the salaries that these people get or have they salaries from another source?

Mr. OLIVER. This is for a very small service.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they under the Civil Service Act?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. The Civil Service Act provides that where a civil servant receives a salary from one source he is not entitled to receive anything from any other source unless subject to the provision 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary.' You are paying a salary from two sources, contrary to the Civil Service Act.

Mr. OLIVER. I understand that under the Civil Service Act all that is necessary is that the persons receiving these salaries shall be named in the estimates.

Miscellaneous—Maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Springs reservation, near Banff station, Alberta, $45,000.

Mr. SPROULE. You just continue the same amount from year to year?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the amount voted last year all spent?

Mr. OLIVER. It is not all spent yet, but it will be during the year.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the intention to connect Banff and Field by a driveway? It would be a good idea to have that work carried out.

Mr. OLIVER. That is a very good idea, but it is quite expensive. At present we are connecting the prairie with Banff by a road and we will no doubt continue it to make the connection my friend speaks of.

Banff water works and sewerage, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that to complete?

Mr. OLIVER. We will spend $10,000 the current year and this is a revote of $10,000 to complete the works.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the government any plans regarding proposals to develop these springs for curative purposes?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. HUGHES. We know that the Spas in the Old Country are visited by hundreds of thousands of people and if we develop these resorts in the mountains, while it would primarily benefit the railway companies, it would indirectly benefit the country to a certain extent. Perhaps it is not one of the functions of the government to undertake this, but I am surprised the railway companies have not done more.

Mr. OLIVER. The number of visitors to Banff and other resorts has greatly increased in recent years, and I think we have reason to congratulate ourselves on the progress made, considering the distance these resorts are from the centres of population. No doubt the flow of travel will increase as the time goes on.

Costs of litigation, $11,000.

Mr. ROCHE. How much was expended last year for this purpose?

Mr. OLIVER. About $9,000 will be spent during the current year.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Does the government employ local solicitors?

Mr. OLIVER. The Justice Department engages the solicitors, and we pay the law costs.

Mr. S. SHARPE. You pay solicitors fees out of this vote?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. S. SHARPE. What are the functions of the Solicitor General? why does he not take charge of the litigation for this department?

Mr. OLIVER. Although the Solicitor General is very competent and versatile he is not able to cover all the ground.

Mr. HUGHES. Is he a lawyer?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. If we reach government orders to-morrow, what business will be taken up?

Mr. PATERSON. I cannot say exactly, but possibly the items in the Department of Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 17, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Two o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAY EMPLOYEES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What was the number of (a) permanent employees, and (b) temporary employees respectively in the service or employment of the government upon or in connection with (a) the Intercolonial Railway, and (b) the Prince Edward Island Railway upon (a) the first day of each month, (b) the 15th day of each month, and (c) the 31st day of December, all in the year 1908?

2. What was the total amount of the pay roll of each of the said railways for each of the said months?

3. Were salaries or wages raised or lowered for either permanent or temporary employees during the said year upon the said railways or either of them?

4. If so, on what occasions and to what extent on each occasion?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

The only change in salaries, besides those that are provided for in the different schedules and which are made from month to month as the employees become entitled to them by length of service, was an increases granted in May, 1908, to the telegraphers, and which was made to date from April 1; this for nine months from April to December, inclusive, aggregated $22,500.

THE MAYES DREDGING CONTRACT.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

1. Was Mayes' first tender for dredging at St. John 50 cents a cubic yard, and was it refused because he could not comply with the condition as to Canadian dredges, or why?

2. Was the condition removed at the instance of Mayes, or parties acting for him?

3. Was the contract without this condition, awarded to Mayes at 55 cents a cubic yard?

4. Were tenders called for again, by advertisement, between the time of Mayes' first and second tender?

5. Having regard to statements made and documents read by Mr. Hazen at a public meeting at St. John during the last general election, the discussion of the Mayes-McAvity incident by the press during and since the month of October last, as well as the alleged connection of the Minister of Public Works with that transaction, and the allegations recently made upon the floor of this House, all to the effect that the condition above mentioned being removed, Mayes was about to repeat his tender at 50 cents a cubic yard, but was induced by George McAvity, not to do so, but, instead, to tender at 55 cents a cubic yard, the extra five cents per yard to go to McAvity as a rake-off or reward to him for exerting his influence with the government to increase the number of yards to be dredged and to secure the contract for Mayes, and the allegation that McAvity actually received the extra five cents a yard, amounting to the sum of $35,933, and having regard to the exceptional importance and gravity of the matters charged, will the government take measures to have this matter of the Mayes tenders and contract and the alleged transactions and dealings in connection therewith, fully inquired into and ascertained? If so, when and how?

6. Is the government of opinion that they can and should recover this $35,933, if the facts are substantially as alleged?

7. Has the government consulted the legal department as to his right to recover this money, and will they do so? If not, why not?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention, as well as the attention of my hon. friend, to this allegation in the 5th part of the question: 'as well as the alleged connection of the Minister of Public Works with that transaction.' I am not aware that there has been any allegation, that has been persisted in, in any quarter, in regard to any 'alleged connection of the Minister of Public Works' with the Mayes-McAvity transaction. I would say that the question was improper on that ground. I may say that I would not object to the question, though it is irregular, if under your honour's interpretation of the rules of the House I would be permitted to answer it fully.

Mr. SPEAKER. Would you prefer the question to stand until it can be looked into, to see whether it is properly put?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just as your honour decides.

Mr. LENNOX. It has stood now for a long time, and I am prepared to take the Speaker's decision on the matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. So am I.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then, let these words be struck out: 'as well as the alleged connection of the Minister of Public Works with that transaction.'

Mr. PUGSLEY:

1. (a) No, it was $8.90 per cubic yard for material described in the specification as class 1 and 49 cents per cubic yard for material of class II, being all other material than was embraced in class I.

(b) Yes.

2. The information in the department is that the condition was not removed at the instance of Mayes, or parties acting for him, but that it was removed because the next tender, that of M. J. Haney and Roger Miller of Toronto, who were prepared to comply with the condition, named a price of $3.50 per cubic yard for material described as class I and $1.25 per cubic yard for material described as class II, and as most of the material to be excavated was of class II, it was considered that the tender of Messrs. Haney and Miller was too high, and more than the department would be justified in paying for the work. It was made evident by the first call for tenders that there were very few Canadian registered dredges available to do the work, and it was considered most probable that by striking out the restriction and calling again for tenders more competition would be secured.

3. At $8.60 per cubic yard for material of class I, being 30 cents per cubic yard less than his previous tender, and 55 cents per cubic yard for material of class II, being six cents per cubic yard more than his previous tender, it was so awarded to him as being the lowest tenderer, the other tenderer being again Haney & Miller of Toronto, whose tender was $3.25 per cubic yard for material of class I and $1.00 per cubic yard for material of class II.

4. Yes.

5. The government, through the Department of Public Works, has already fully inquired into the awarding of said contract, with the result that it appears to have been awarded to the lowest tenderer in the usual and proper manner, after public advertisement calling for tenders, Mr. Mayes' tender, being $8.60 per cubic yard for material for class I as against $3.25 per cubic yard by Haney & Miller, and 55 cents per cubic yard for material of class II, consisting of silt, sand, &c., as against $1.00 per cubic yard by Haney & Miller.

It does not appear to the government that there would be any public advantage in making further inquiry into the matter, and the government has no present intention of making further inquiry.

6. No.

7. For the reason that if there was no collusion between the then Minister of Public Works, or other officials of the department, and Mayes and McAvity in connection with the tenders, which has not been alleged, and the contract was awarded in good faith to Mayes, as being the lowest tenderer, any person of ordinary business knowledge and without having a legal training, would know no right of action would exist to recover back any portion of the amount paid under the contract so awarded.

MR. THOMAS COSTELLO.

Mr. WORTHINGTON asked:

1. Was a man named Costello, or any other individual, sent to Bradford, England, or any other place, at the instance of the Department of Customs, or any department of the government, with a view to ascertaining and reporting on the condition of the English woollen industry, and the cost of manufacture, as having a bearing upon the question of higher Canadian import duties or other changes in the tariff?

2. If so, has the report been received, and what is the nature thereof? If not, when may it be expected?

3. Has the government any information regarding the presence in England on behalf of the United States government of United States Government Agent W. Graham Clark, who was also gathering information looking to tariff changes on woollens imported into the United States?

4. If so, what is the nature of his report, and how does it compare with that of Mr. Costello?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. Mr. Thomas Costello, a Special Officer of Customs, was sent by the Department of Customs to England, in 1908, for the purpose of gathering general information respecting the woollen industry in that country and with the view of aiding in the appraisement of woollen goods at their fair market value for duty purposes, under the Customs laws, when imported into Canada.

2. Yes. The report deals with the cost of the production of woollen goods in Great Britain.

3. The Government has no information respecting a report by W. Graham Clark on the woollen industry in England.

AMERICAN PORK, &c., ENTERED AT KINGSTON.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

1. What quantities of pork, bacon, lard and other animal products were entered at the port of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States for home consumption during the fiscal year ending March 1, 1908?

2. What were the respective values thereof, and what amount of duty was paid upon the same according to different classification?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1 and 2—

	Quantity.	Value.	Duty.
Lard, lbs.	28,147	2,224	562.94
Lard compound, lbs.	90	12	1.80
Canned meats	1,000	116	31.90
Extracts of meats		$423	$116.34
Preserved meats, N. O.P., lbs.	100	16	2.00
Total		2,791	714.98

AMERICAN HAY, &c., ENTERED AT KINGSTON.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

1. What quantities of hay, oats and other farm and garden produce were entered at the port of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States, for home consumption during the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1908?

2. What were the respective values thereof, and what amount of duty was paid upon the same according to different classification?

3. How many horses under three-years old, horses over three-years old, cattle under three-years old, milch cows, sheep, lambs and pigs were brought into Canada by way of Kingston, Ontario, from the United States during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908?

4. What were the respective values thereof and the amount of duty paid upon the same, according to different classification?

Hon. Wm. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1 and 2—

	Quantity.	Value.	Duty.
Oats, bush.	53	$ 41	$ 5.30
Pease, bush.	1	7	0.15
Melons, No.	1,270	104	38.10
Potatoes, bush.	29	28	5.80
Sweet potatoes, bush	60	50	6.00
Tomatoes, fresh, bush	7	15	4.50
Vegetables, n.o.p.	..	363	108.90
Total		$608	$168.75

3 and 4. Information is not available from Customs Returns as to value and duties on horses and cattle, separately by classes under and over 3 years old.

DRAINAGE OF NATION RIVER.

Mr. BRODER asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to assist the people interested in the drainage of the Nation river, in the townships of Matilda and Winchester, in the county of Dundas? If so, when?

2. Did the engineer who visited the locality traversed by such river during the summer of 1908 report in favour of such work being undertaken by the government?

Hon. Wm. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. Although this would seem to be a class of work coming within the province of the local government, on representations made to the Public Works Department an engineer visited the locality, and, as a result of his examination into existing conditions, reported that until a proper and comprehensive scheme was devised, which would require further careful consideration, there would be no object in proceeding further with the work which would undoubtedly entail a very large expenditure.

PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES.

Mr. ARTHURS asked:

1. What amount has been expended to date upon each of the following public works for which the following appropriations were voted last session:

Byng Inlet—Improvement	$10,000
Callendar—Extension of wharf	1,000
Kearney—Wharf	1,000
Magnetawan—Wharf	1,200
Parry Sound—Extension of wharf.	5,000

2. Have contracts been let for any of the above works? If so, which and when?

3. Have any of the above works been commenced by day labour? If so, when?

4. Does the government intend to proceed with these works this year?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Byng Inlet $ 26.82 for printing
   Callendar 1,118.23
   Kearney 482.27
   Magnetawan wharf 571.57 for purchase of wharf
   Parry Sound 4,001.54

2. No.

3. Callendar commenced September 1, 1908 (completed).

Kearney commenced October 5, 1908 (completed).

4. Parry Sound commenced October 14, 1908 (completed).

Byng Inlet and Magnetawan. No further vote has been included in main estimates 1909-10 for either of these works.

QUEBRACHO EXTRACT.

Mr. ARTHURS asked:

1. What quantity of Quebracho extract has been imported into Canada for home consumption in each year from 1900 to 1908, inclusive?

2. Is the government aware that this extract is used as a substitute for hemlock bark?

3. Has the government been requested by petition or otherwise to place a duty upon Quebracho extract?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. Quebracho extract is not separately enumerated in the Customs classification of imports, so that the answer to this question cannot be given without a special investigation, which would take a long time to complete.

2. The government is aware that Quebracho extract is used for tanning purposes.

3. The Department of Customs is not aware of any application made to place a duty on this extract since the present tariff came into force.

BILLS OF LADING—RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. ROBB asked:

1. What jurisdiction has the Railway Commission or the government of Canada over the Bills of lading or forms of Bill of lading issued by the vessels plying on Canadian waters?

2. Is the government aware that in the unanimous resolution adopted by the Dominion Marine Association which provides that a new Bill of lading for vessels carrying grain out of any Canadian port, there is the following clause: 'provided that the vessel shall not be responsible for shortage exceeding one-half bushel for one thousand bushels carried?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. It is a legal question, on which it would not be advisable to express an opinion.

2. The department has not been so informed.

LAND WARRANT AND WARRANTS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES asked:

1. Is it possible for one man to enter for the land upon more than one land warrant, under the South African veterans' land grant? If so, how many may one man make an entry for?

2. Has a man having bought several such land warrants the privilege of entering all or any (a) in his own name, or (b) in the name or the names of others?

3. In case one enters for land on a South African land warrant, can the right be disposed of to another during the three years required for settlement duties? If so, under what conditions?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes. A settler may acquire and locate two South African land grants, but can only hold them by performing the duties upon each of the two half-sections strictly in accordance with the homestead conditions of the Dominion Lands Act.

2. The purchaser of a warrant cannot locate it unless he is the duly appointed substitute of the original warrantee. (a) He cannot otherwise locate it than in his own name. (b) He cannot locate it in the name of others.

3. A substitute may be appointed either before or after entry is made by the grantee, and if the settlement duties have been partially performed by the grantee they may be completed by the substitute.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many can the purchaser of a warrant locate?

Mr. OLIVER. He can locate as many as he holds assignments for, but he can only prove up on his location on a maximum of two at a time.

Mr. HUGHES. I think the minister hardly answered the second part of part 1 which says:

If so, how many may one man make an entry for?

I wish to know if it is possible for a speculator or a gentleman interested in the purchase of these land warrants to enter for half a dozen or 100 of them in his own name?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes. There is nothing to prevent any person who chooses from buying as many of these warrants as he pleases and taking assignments of them to himself, which assignments would be registered in the department and the warrants themselves could be located by him. But as the right expires in 1911, that is within three years, and as he would require the full term of three years to prove up on a maximum of two, and as they are not transferable a second time, he would lose all the money he invested in the remainder of the warrants he had purchased.

HOMESTEADS AND PRE-EMPTIONS IN MANITOBA, ALBERTA AND SASKATCHEWAN.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. How many acres have already been taken up in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by homestead and pre-emption, by railway lands, by Hudson bay lands; by other corporations or persons; by waste, swamp or mountainous land unfit for tilling; by lake areas, including Winnipeg, Winnipegosis, Manitoba, Big Quill, Brick and Beaver?

2. What is the area in square miles of each province above named?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). It would take about a week to prepare this information, and I would ask the hon. gentleman to let this stand as a motion for a return.

Mr. HUGHES. Why not adopt it as a motion for a return?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It will stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. HUGHES. We passed a dozen such the other day, which were put as questions and allowed to be adopted as motions for returns.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Those had reference to the Civil Service Bill which is in the public interest, but it is not convenient to extend that precedent to other questions.

Mr. HUGHES. Some of them had no reference to the Civil Service Bill, and I object to any invidious distinction. I must insist on the precedent being applied to this question or I shall object to its application to any other. The word 'brick' in the question should be birch.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am informed that the procedure was irregular before, and it can only be taken by the consent of the House. This will stand as a notice of motion.

DREDGING ST. JOHN HARBOUR, N.B.

Mr. FOSTER—by Mr. R. L. Borden—asked :

How much money has been paid by the government for dredging the harbour of St. John, New Brunswick, for each year since January 1, 1904, the persons or companies to whom payments have been made, the amount to each, and the sums, if any, yet due and to whom due, for any work done up to that date?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

Payments.

1905, paid G. S. Mayes		$ 98,600 00
1906, paid G. S. Mayes		111,160 00
1907, paid G. S. Mayes	$195,201.30
1907, paid city of St. John	25,000.00
1907, paid Dominion Dredging Co.	338,521.53
		558,722 83
1908, paid G. S. Mayes	$84,782.33
1908, paid Dominion Dredging Co.	35,637.67
		120,420 00
1909, paid Maritime Dredging and Construction Co.		919 50
Total amount paid		$889,822 33

Balances still due.

To G. S. Mayes (contra claim under action)	$ 5,091 80
To Maritime Dredging and Construction Co.	14,285 66
Total amount due	$19,387 46

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—AMOUNT PAID FOR CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What was the total amount expended by the government in connection with the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway during the twelve months ending 31st of January, 1909?

2. What was the amount so expended in each of the twelve months during the said period?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (for Minister of Finance):

1 and 2.

February, 1908	$ 1,562,921 19
March, 1908 (including payments made in April and May for fiscal year 1907-8)	4,144,015 46
April, 1908	15,513 62
May, 1908	1,338,177 29
June, 1908	1,823,511 06
July, 1908	2,272,287 76
August, 1908	2,993,204 62
September, 1908	2,317,944 70
October, 1908	2,712,637 68
November, 1908	2,364,645 31
December, 1908	3,055,237 18
January, 1909	1,501,452 02
Total	$26,101,547 89

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

What is the total amount which has been expended by the government up to the present date in the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (for Minister of Finance). $48,265,129.77 up to and including the 15th day of February, 1909.

ESCAPE OF BILL MINER.

Mr. MEIGHEN asked:

1. On whose authority were the outside detectives admitted to the cell of or in private conversation with Bill Miner in New Westminster penitentiary prior to his escape on August 8, 1907?

2. How was such authority conveyed in each case to the warden?

3. What were the dates of such visits, and who accompanied the detectives into Miner's cell on each visit, if any one did?

4. Were two or more detectives ever permitted to talk to the prisoner at the same time?

5. Were the objects of the detectives' visits made known to the department prior to said visits? If so, what objects were so made known?

6. When did the department first become aware that the purpose of the visits of the detective or detectives was to locate or secure information as to certain bonds and other property believed to be within the knowledge of Miner?

7. Did the department get its information as to the said bonds from the detectives or from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, directly or indirectly? If not, from whom?

8. Was the detective or detectives wholly or partially in the pay of the government in this matter? If so, what were they paid?

9. What was the amount of said bonds, if known? If not known, what is the best information the department has as to the amount of same?

10. Since the escape of Miner has the department taken any steps to ascertain whether such bonds have been located, or the disposition of same? If not, does the department purpose doing so?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1, 2, 3 and 4. The only interviews which, so far as the department is aware, took place with convict Bill Miner while he was in imprisonment in the penitentiary at New Westminster are the following: 1. 12th June, 1906, in the warden's office and in his presence and hearing with Alex. D. McIntyre, of Kamloops, barrister, who had acted as Miner's counsel or solicitor at his trial. 2. 12th January, 1907, in the guard-room, in the presence and hearing of the deputy warden, with John H. Stanton, of Portland, Oregon, said to be a detective. 3. 9th February, 1907, in the warden's presence and hearing, with R. E. Bullick, of Vancouver, said to be in special service of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and one Jake Terry. 4. 28th May, 1907, in the guard-room, in the presence and hearing of Keeper Stewart, with G. R. Murray, of Victoria, B.C., a provincial police officer. 5. 27th June, 1907, in the brick yard, in the presence and hearing of Keeper Stewart, with Chief Constable McIntosh of the New Westminster city police force, Detective Waddell, of Vancouver, and Sergeant Wilson, of the R.N.W. Mounted Police, the officer by whom Miner was apprehended.

Penitentiary regulations authorize wardens to permit members of the family of a convict to visit him at stated intervals; all others are required to obtain permission from the Minister of Justice before they can visit any convict. In admitting Mr. McIntyre and Messrs. Bullick and Terry the warden acted on his own responsibility. In admitting the others above named the deputy warden (who was at the time in charge) acted on his own responsibility. Permission was not obtained or asked in any of the cases from the minister or the department. No visitor was at any time admitted to convict Miner's cell.

5. Neither the minister nor any one connected with the department in Ottawa ever heard of any of the said interviews till after Miner's escape, and no authority to permit any of the said interviews was ever given to anybody by the minister or by any official of the department at Ottawa.

6 and 7. During the investigation conducted by Inspector Dawson after Miner's escape and on 13th September, 1907, Instructor MacKenzie stated in his evidence that after the interview with Bullick and Terry, Miner had told him that Bullick said Miner would be pardoned if he would surrender to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company certain Australian bonds which the company believed he (Miner) had taken from their express car on the occasion of the robbery at Mission. MacKenzie further deposed that he had reported Miner's statement to the warden, who said he knew about it. No record of the interview of Messrs. Bullick and Terry with Miner is entered in the convicts' visitors book; the other four interviews mentioned above are duly entered. In view of the evidence given by Instructor MacKenzie and the absence of any mention of this interview in the visitors' book, Mr. Inspector Dawson wrote to Mr. Bullick asking a statement of all interviews had by him with Miner (alias Edwards) in the penitentiary, and received a reply dated 5th November, 1907, in which Mr. Bullick says:

> I might say the only time I visited Edwards in the penitentiary was on the 9th of February last (1907) in company with Jake Terry. The late warden, Colonel Whyte, was present all the time. The visit was merely to see if Terry and Edwards knew each other, as they were both in the San Quentin penitentiary together. There was a short conversation between Terry and Edwards in reference to the Mission hold-up September, 1904.

The department has no information except that above stated as to the bonds referred to, or whether any such bonds were stolen or ever existed, and if Mr. Bullick ever made to Miner any such statement as Miner said he made, neither Mr. Bullick nor anybody else had any warrant or right whatever to do so.

8. No.

9. The department has no knowledge or information whatever except that Miner told Instructor MacKenzie that Bullick spoke of them as valued at £50,000 sterling.

10. No.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY—CONSTRUCTION MILEAGE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. How many miles of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway are completed and in operation?

2. What amount has been paid to or received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company out of the proceeds of bonds guaranteed by the government in respect of such mileage so completed and now in operation?

3. What amount has been paid to or received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company out of the proceeds of bonds guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company in respect of such mileage so completed and in operation?

4. What was the average cost per mile of the mileage so completed and in operation?

5. What was the net price received for the bonds mentioned in the second and third paragraphs respectively of this question?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. 667 miles. The other portions of this question relate to the Finance Department.

Mr. SPEAKER. The portion of the question not answered stands.

COAL AND TIMBER LANDS IN SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. What is the approximate area of coal and timber lands, respectively, in each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta; (a) owned by private individuals or companies; (b) leased by the government to private individuals or companies; and what is the approximate area in each province on which mining or lumbering operations are actually being carried on?

2. What was the approximate amount of revenue collected by the government between January 1, 1906, and December 31, 1908, on account of (a) payments for coal lands; (b) coal royalties; (c) bonuses and rentals on timber lands; (d) timber dues; (e) hay lands; (f) grazing lands; and (g) irrigation areas within each of the above provinces?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I am informed it will take about ten days to prepare the matter required for this answer, and I would kindly ask the hon. gentleman to let the question stand as notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for a return.

CAPTAIN OF DREDGE 'RICHELIEU.'

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Was the captain of the dredge 'Richelieu' removed last autumn? If so, upon what grounds?

2. By whom has said captain been replaced, and upon whose recommendation?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. All men (including the captain) were paid off when the dredge was laid up for the winter, excepting the caretaker, C. Bissonnette.

2. No appointments will be made until next spring.

CONSTRUCTION OF HOPPER SCOWS.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. What is the purpose of the construction of the two centre Hopper dumping scows at St. Johns, province of Quebec, for which tenders have been called by the Department of Public Works, on the 8th February, instant?

2. At what particular place are the said scows to be constructed?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. To replace worn out scows as tenders for dredge 'Richelieu.'

2. As the contract has not yet been awarded, it is impossible to say where the scows are to be constructed.

RICHELIEU IMPROVEMENT OFFICE.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Has an office been opened at St. Johns, province of Quebec, in connection with what is known as Richelieu river improvements?

2. What do these improvements consist of?

3. Under whose supervision locally are said improvements being carried out?

4. What are the names and salaries of officers employed in and about said office of improvements, and what is the rental of the office?

5. How much has been expended to date on said improvements?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.

2. Dredging, blasting and construction of a movable dam.

3. Paul Paradis, engineer-in-charge.

4. Paul Paradis, engineer-in-charge, $1,900 per year; Albert Gosselin, assistant engineer, $3 per day; Edmond Papineau, rodman, $2.50 per day; rent of office, $20 per month.

5. $18,918.97.

INTERNATIONAL TUBERCULOSIS CONGRESS.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. Did the government send any delegates to the International Tuberculosis Congress, held in Washington, last fall?

2. If so, who were the delegates, and what was the total expense connected with the same?

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY (for Minister of Agriculture):

1. Yes.

2. F. Montizambert, I.S.O., M.D. Edin., F.R.S.C.E., D.C.L., director general of public health.
   J. G. Rutherford, H.A.R.C.V.S., veterinary director general and live stock commissioner.
   Rev. T. H. Boyd.
   Total expenses $744.95.

POSTMASTER AT BROPHY'S.

Mr. MADDIN asked:

1. Who is the postmaster at Brophy's post office, Antigonish county, Nova Scotia?

2. Has any change been made during the past eighteen months? If so, when did it take place, and what was the reason therefor?

3. Who is the postmaster at the said post office at the present time, and when was he appointed?

4. What are the circumstances in connection with any change which has been made in the postmastership?

5. To whom was the last payment of salary made?

6. Who was postmaster at said post office one year ago?

7. How long has he been acting as such, why was he dismissed, and when?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX. The present postmaster at Brophy's is Thomas Brophy, but some time ago the post office, having been placed under quarantine, the mails were delivered at the house of the mail contractor, who has since been acting as postmaster.

RAILWAY CAPITALIZATION AND RATES.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, as orders of the day will not be reached, might I ask the indulgence of the House to make one or two inquiries? I would first ask the Minister of Railways whether or not there has been any ruling of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada which would indicate that the amount of stock capitalization of any company, whether excessive or otherwise, is taken into consideration in the regulation or fixing of rates, instead of the actual cost of the road?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). My hon. friend had given me notice of this question and I have the following memorandum from the Board of Railway Commissioners:

I know of no case in which the board, in fixing the tolls, has had regard to the capitalization or stock issue of the company rather than to the cost of construction, &c. You will remember that in Klondike Mines Railway Company's application for approval of its proposed standard freight tariff, after a hearing and upon the report and recommendation of the chief traffic officer, the board approved the tariffs of this company up to the distance of thirty miles from Dawson, and directed that the company should be notified that before applying for approval of further standard tariffs, it should furnish the board with returns showing the cost of construction and equipment of the company up to that time, and its running and operating expenses, to enable the board to determine the rates that should be allowed for further distances.

FISHING BOUNTY APPLICATIONS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask whether there is any information in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Halifax as to the delay in sending out papers necessary to make application for fishing bounties. As I understand, those which should have been sent out and filled in between April and August last year have not been sent out and the fishermen have therefore not been able to prepare their applications.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sorry to say I have no information to give to my hon. friend. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) has been engaged in an important conference with gentlemen from different provinces, but I shall call his attention to that matter.

PUBLICATION OF WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would ask the Prime Minister whether or not his attention has been called to the publication of what purports to be a copy of the recent Waterways Treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America in the 'Evening Telegram' of Toronto; my attention has been directed to it in that newspaper. I do not know whether it has been published in any other. I do not know whether the terms of the treaty are correctly set forth, but if they are correctly set forth I would ask the Prime Minister whether or not there is any special reason why the treaty should not be laid upon the table of the House. It seems rather unnecessary to keep up the pretense of secrecy when this treaty, through some means, I do not know what, is being published in the press of the country. If it is being correctly published then there seems no reason why it should not be laid before parliament. If it is not being correctly published, I invite the attention of the Prime Minister to what purports to be an accurate copy of the treaty in terms, and I think it ought to be stated that that is not a correct copy of the treaty if the alleged publication is not founded upon fact. There would seem to be no good reason why the parliament of this country should be kept officially ignorant of the terms of the treaty when it is being published in the press of the United States and Canada and in the press of Great Britain, because a very full summary of it appeared in the London 'Times' of January 28 last.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have seen from time to time in the newspapers of this country reports which pretended to be copies of the Waterways Treaty. Some were fairly accurate and some were not so accurate. I have not seen the publication in the Toronto 'Telegram' to which my hon. friend refers. If I understand him aright, the publication purports to be a verbatim copy of the treaty. It may or it may not be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It purports to be a copy of the message of President Roosevelt to the Senate conveying to the Senate the terms of the treaty in absolutely accurate form.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that it is not, but if it is I am quite sure that it has not reached the public by the permission of the United States authorities. It may have come to the newspapers in some surreptitious manner. I can only say to my hon. friend that I quite agree with him and that I see no reason why the treaty should not be made public immediately.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the Prime Minister to suggest to the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee the importance of calling meetings of that committee with a reasonable degree of frequency? We have now entered upon the fifth week of the session and up to the present time there has been no meeting of the Public Accounts Committee for the transaction of business. There was a meeting for organization at which some business was transacted. It is not usual that any business should be transacted at the first meeting. There have been no further meetings. I have asked that a meeting should be called for to-morrow. It may be that the delay in calling a meeting may be due to the absence of the chairman. I would suggest that the chairman of an important committee such as the Public Accounts Committee, whenever he finds it necessary to be absent from his duties in this House, should place matters in the hands of some other member of the committee so that there might not be the slightest delay in the transaction of the business of such an important committee as that. I am doing that in the interest of all of us, because there is a certain amount of business that must be transacted by that committee. The Prime Minister will realize that as well as I do. If that committee is delayed the prorogation of the House will be delayed in order that certain business may be brought to a conclusion. I think it is very important, in the interest of an early prorogation, that we should have more frequent meetings of that committee and a word from the Prime Minister would mean a great deal towards the accomplishment of that very desirable object.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Does my hon. friend want a meeting for to-morrow?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes; I think a meeting has been arranged for to-morow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Clarke, the chairman, is away just now. My hon. friend will agree that he is a very painstaking gentleman and appreciates the importance of the office which he occupies. I will call attention to the remarks of my hon. friend.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no adverse comment to pass upon Mr. Clarke. Indeed, he may have taken the precaution to which I have alluded. But, I merely say this by way of precaution and I hope that no further delays will occur.

ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. WORTHINGTON moved:

For a return, subsequent to the bringing down of similar papers, of all correspondence, reports, memoranda, &c., between any officer, non-commissioned officer or man of the permanent force, Royal Northwest Mounted Police, Militia, Canadian Bisley Team, or Civilian Rifle Club, relating to the Ross rifle, its merits or demerits, or any accident that may have happened in connection with the same.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). I have no objection with the understanding that purely confidential papers shall not be brought down. I understand the hon. gentleman wishes papers similar to those which have been laid on the table in continuation of the return of last year. I have no objection to that.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and papers of every description treating of or in connection with the application of or grant to Francis Percival Aylwin, of the city of Ottawa, of a tract of land in the province of Alberta for irrigation purposes. — Mr. Magrath.

For a return showing what amounts the government has paid property owners in or around Stony lake for damages caused by the rising of water, and who they were. —Mr. Sexmith.

For a return showing what amounts the government has paid property owners for damages caused by the holding up of water in the Otonabee river between Hastings and Peterborough, and the names of the parties receiving settlements.—Mr. Sexsmith.

For a copy of all correspondence between J. H. Davis and the Department of Marine and Fisheries referring to the fisheries of Manitoba; and of all petitions and correspondence from the Fisherman's Union, Gimli, Manitoba, to and with the said department.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a return giving detailed items of the sum of $10,646.93, being revenue received from Kingston penitentiary other than from sale of twine, as shown on page L—36 of the Auditor General's Report, and stating what proportion of such revenue was derived from sales to officers of the penitentiary, with the names of such officers, and the amounts and nature of the goods purchased by them.—Mr. Barnard.

For a return showing particulars of the places where the expenditures mentioned in column 365, unrevised 'Hansard,' for wharfs in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia, where made, together with amounts expended in each instance for construction and repairs, respectively.—Mr. Barnard.

For a return giving a list of railway charters granted since January 1, 1900, other than to the Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway Companies, showing those whose powers have lapsed, and the length of each of the proposed roads and branches, the date of charters and renewals, if any, the total mileage constructed, the capital stock authorized, subscribed and paid up.—Mr. Magrath.

For a copy of all correspondence or petitions received from F. W Colclaugh, while he was inspector of fisheries for Manitoba, referring to the operations of commercial companies and others.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a return showing the amount of money paid by the government, including all branches of the service, from January 1, 1897 to January 1, 1909, to the Logberg Printing Company, Winnipeg.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a copy of all correspondence respecting the improvements made in the Assiniboine river near Portage la Prairie, in September and October, 1908; and of all papers, vouchers, orders, resolutions, returned cheques, etc., in any way relating to the said work or to carrying out of same.—Mr. Staples.

For a copy of all lists of voters as prepared by the enumerators and completed by the deputy returning officers for the several polling subdivisions in the electoral riding of Qu'-Appelle, and used in the recent general election for the House of Commons; also for a return showing the boundaries of the said polling subdivisions, and the names of the enumerators, deputy returning officers, poll clerks, candidates' agents or scrutineers who acted for each poll.—Mr. Lake.

For a return showing the number and the names of all persons who were entitled to receive patents, and did receive patents, under the treaty made by Mr. H. M. Howell for the surrender of St. Peters' reserve, Manitoba.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a return showing from whom the wood working machinery was purchased for Intercolonial Railway shops at Moncton or elsewhere since January 1, 1908, how much from each and the prices paid; from whom the iron working machinery was purchased for the Intercolonial Railway shops at Moncton, or elsewhere, since January 1, 1908, how much from each, and the prices paid; the dates, (a) of purchase, and (b) of delivery—Mr. Clare.

For a return showing 1. How many copies of documents were printed for distribution to the public by the Department of Agriculture for the years 1904-5-6-7-8.

2. How many copies of such publications were distributed to the public in each of the said years.

3. The method of distribution adopted.

4. What mailing list is used, and when revised.

5. The cost of printing, translation and distribution of such publications for the said years.

6. The same information as in numbers 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 as applied to the distribution of the evidence taken in each of the said years before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, despatches, memoranda, &c., between the imperial government, or any member thereof, and the Governor General, government or any member thereof, relating to or bearing upon the question of Canada contributing to the support of the British fleet, or purchasing ships of her own, or assisting in any way in maintaining with the mother country the supremacy of the seas.—Mr. Worthington.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

ESCAPE OF BILL MINER.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence passing between the Department of Justice and the officers of New Westminster Penitentiary or other persons whatsoever, relating to the visit or proposed visit of detectives to Bill Miner during his incarceration in said penitentiary; also of the report of the Inspector of Penitentiaries after investigating the circumstances connected with Miner's escape, and of the evidence on which such report is based; also a copy of telegram sent from the said penitentiary to the department or its officers respecting Miner's escape, and of such telegrams as received and of telegrams sent and received in answer within two weeks from such escape.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). There is no objection to bringing down the return asked for by this motion, but I think I should take this occasion to state that there are upon our files communications which are of a confidential character and which I think it would not be in the public interest to bring down, relating to the efforts made to recapture Miner after his escape, the reports of various detectives and others who were engaged in the effort to find the escaped prisoner and the details of the information and of the assistance they received from different individuals. I mention that merely in order that there may be no misunderstanding about the matter when the return is laid on the table.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY LEVEL CROSSINGS.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved:

That in the opinion of this House, the appalling number of accidents at level crossings demand that the matter of railway crossings throughout the whole of Canada should at once engage the earnest consideration of the people's municipal and parliamentary representatives.

2. This imminent, and increasing peril incident to the present method of railway construction and operation may, by slow degrees, and in isolated instances, be mitigated by the exercise of powers vested in the Railway Board, but can never reach the thousands and thousands of cases crying out for safeguards, and cannot reach even a tithe of them within any reasonable time.

3. The question of railway crossings from ocean to ocean is a matter of supreme importance, and urgent to the last degree. The toll of sacrifice increases with the multiplications of lines and the increase of speed and traffic, and no sensible improvement can be hoped for so long as the initiative for redress is left to casual and individual action.

4. The rule, and the presumption from the acceptance of a charter, should be separated, or protected crossings elsewhere, with the onus upon the company of establishing a justification for exceptional treatment in exceptional cases.

5. It is the duty of the government early this session to deal with the whole question of railway crossings in a thorough and comprehensive way and with a view of eliminating, as far as reasonably possible, the level crossings from our system of railways, and where this cannot be done, the adoption of such other methods and devices as will secure, in as great a degree as is possible, the safety of the people using the highways.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to move this resolution I realize that it is a very broad and a very difficult question, and that there are many members in the House who would present it in a more efficient way than I may be able to. I realize too—and I hope I shall be understood as expressing that opinion throughout any argument I may use—the very important services rendered by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) upon one phase of the question, namely, as regards that portion of the railway crossings on highways in Canada situated within the limits of thickly settled portions of cities, towns, and villages. I shall on this occasion endeavour to enlist the sympathy and attention of the representatives of the people on the broad question of the elimination of railway crossings on the level of the highways as far as our circumstances and conditions will permit, having regard to the vast extent of our country and to the enormous expense involved in a complete separation of railway and highway grades. In presenting this motion I hope that I shall perhaps have the satisfaction of having it accepted by the government without opposition, and I may say that last year, of two resolutions which were so accepted by the government I had the honour of presenting one. I do not propose this resolution in any political sense, and consequently I trust that in its support I will have the united action of all members of the House. Last night I obtained a return as to the number of accidents on railway crossings during the last five years. That return does not give us complete information ; in fact the scarcity of information and the delay in obtaining it is not exactly suggestive of energy in devising a remedy which will prevent these accidents. The Minister of Railways has recently indicated that this session he intends to take some action in the matter, and I give him my assurance that I will endeavour so far as I can to co-operate with him in securing the best possible solution of this question. The return of the accidents which have occurred at railway level crossings for the last five years ought to be sufficient to arouse the government to action and to cause them to follow the example of the government of the United States and of other countries in announcing a definite policy.

We have in Canada 15,000 level crossings. Of these it is said that 3,115 are already protected. The nature of the protection has not been stated, and I think it is very important that we should know whether or not as a matter of fact we have that number of crossings actually and effectively protected. In perusing the returns I would be inclined to think not, for I find that a good many accidents have occurred at crossings said to be protected. Now, no sensible man will imagine that we can have all the railway crossings from one end of Canada to the other—15,000 at the present time, and more being constructed from year to year—made absolutely safe for the people using the highways. I realize that. I realize that there are thousands of crossings, on the western prairies and in other parts of the Dominion, where there is an open view of approaching trains from either side, and where the highway is also visible to those operating the trains—which require no artificial devices in order that people may be reasonably safe. On the other hand, I feel that there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, which should have some protection in the nature of a gate. There are highway crossings which, however sparsely settled the locality may be, may operate as a trap; for instance, where the railway is cut through an embankment, and where the highway approaches the railway through a cutting, so that a person passing along the highway cannot see an approaching train until it is almost upon him. All these should have protection of some kind, and I believe it will be found that they should be provided with gates. Then there are undoubtedly, not only in the crowded centres but also in the rural parts of the country, scores and perhaps hundreds of cases where, at a reasonable expenditure of money, the highways could be separated from the railway, being placed either above or below the railway.

The returns for five years show that in Canada during that time there have been 270 deaths at level crossings and 350 injuries, making a total of 620 casualties. The returns are from the Railway Board, the Intercolonial Railway and the Controller of Statistics in the Railway Department. It is a peculiar fact that in all the enormous number of crossings there are not a very great many where accidents have occurred, and there are some which have been great offenders. For instance, the Grimsby accident of the other day followed a great disaster of some time ago ; and a little precaution would have prevented both. Dunnville is in the same category. Last fall a Mrs. Miller and her child were run down by a train at this crossing, and perhaps a little precaution on our part would have prevented that accident. Kingston has been the scene of a good many accidents. There, on the 20th March, 1905, a man was killed; on the 6th of October, 1906, a man was killed at Princess street; again, on the 19th of December, 1907, another person was killed at Montreal street. Toronto, too, has been in a condition which would have suggested a remedy for a long time. There a person was killed on the 16th of January, 1905; another on the 3rd of November, 1905; another on October 16, 1906; on January 7, 1907, one was severely injured; in March, 1907, a person was killed, and at another crossing a person was severely injured. That something should have been done is made plain by the fact that three of these accidents occurred at one crossing, namely, that at Brock avenue.

As I have said, we have not very detailed information in this matter, in connection with the operation of our railways in Canada, but we have important statistics with regard to a country very similar to ours, that is, the United States, and a brief examination of the conditions there may be helpful to us in determining what we should do. In 1888 the State of Massachusetts took the lead and appointed a railway commission. The report of that commission brought out a somewhat startling fact, which has been further demonstrated and emphasized in recent years; that is, that a greater number of people are killed at railway crossings than there are of passengers killed on the trains. The report of the Massachusetts Commission showed that in 1890, of the total number of people killed, 7 per cent were passengers, 33 per cent employees, 47 per cent trespassers, stealing rides or walking along the railway track, &c., and 11 per cent were people killed at highway crossings. This fact is more than borne out by the statistics of the United States since that date. From 1900 to 1906 inclusive, the number of people killed at level crossings exceeded the total number of passengers killed on American railways by 85 per cent. The deaths in each year up to the 30th of June were as follows:

Year.	Passengers killed.	Killed at crossings.
1900..	214	558
1901..	257	619
1902..	305	519
1903..	320	624
1904..	400	607
1905..	502	622
1906..	304	667
Total..	2,302	4,256

The numbers of those injured at crossings is enormous as well:

1900..	1,093
1901..	1,112
1902..	1,063
1903..	1,234
1904..	1,239
1905..	1,308
1906..	1,666
Total..	8,715

Mr. LENNOX.

Making the total number of victims at railway crossings, during those seven years, 12,971. Take the wonderful contrast we find where there is a separation of the railway from the highway. We have a striking instance of this in the case of the Columbian exhibition. Shortly before the exposition began, the Illinois Central Railway elevated some eight or nine miles of its tracks in Chicago. It did that at its own expense with the assistance of the Columbian exposition. Not a dollar was paid by the State or contributed by the city, although the expenditure was over $3,000,000. During the six months of that exhibition that railway company handled—largely by reason of having the streets and its railway lines separate—19,500,000 people without the loss of a single life. Other countries are doing something, and I ask my right hon. friend 'what are you going to do about it.' That we ought to do something, I am sure he will admit. Mr. Borden D. Whiting, a railway commissioner on the New Jersey Board says:

> Grade crossings must not be tolerated on crowded public thoroughfares and must be abolished before they are soaked in blood.

In my resolution I speak of 'imminent and increasing peril.' Why? Because the danger increases in proportion to the increasing number of trains and so on. And in the Dominion at present we are increasing in all those matters which go to make up danger. What is it that determines the number of accidents at level crossings? It is the number of trains and tracks, the speed of the trains, the character of the crossings and the extent of the highway traffic. Each one of these elements is an increasing quantity and contributes more and more to the danger as the years advance. I ask the Minister of Railways and the leader of the government what should be our great object in Canada to-day in connection with this railway question. We have had great railway problems to solve, but none so important as the one which now confronts us. Go into the library and you will find a dozen books upon the railway problem, and I venture to say that the heart of that problem for us is the protection of our highways and the providing of reasonable security for those who use them. Our object should be safety, in the first place, and then moderate tolls, speed, frequency of service and comfort. But the paramount object we should have in view is the public safety; and safety to the degree we hope to have it, cannot be obtained until we have grappled with this problem and endeavoured to solve it by eliminating grade crossings, wherever possible with reasonable expenditure; and, as an alternative, in all other cases where the crossings are concealed or otherwise dangerous, by having gates and other devices for the public protection.

The ideal system is of course to be found in Great Britain. Britain was the first country to grasp the proper way of dealing with this question. In fact, I think I am right in saying that it is the only country which did realize at the outset the folly of sacrificing the highways in order to secure the railways. Germany has at present a magnificent railway system from the point of view of security and otherwise, second only perhaps to that of Great Britain. But the difference is this. Britain began right and preserved her highways while building her railways, whereas Germany sacrificed her highways to build her railways and then had to pay enormously in order to reclaim her highways and obtain the security for highway traffic which she now enjoys. But of course that security has only been obtained at an enormously increased cost and such will be the case in Canada, as it has been in the United States, when we come to reconstruct our system. In that regard we shall have to pay enormously more than we would have had to pay if we could have begun as Britain did.

Speaking on this question, I might say—and it is of interest now when we have the question of government ownership of railways coming up from time to time—that this subject is very closely connected with the question of the nationalization of railways. Germany has been enabled to separate the highways from the railways with greater facility by reason of the nationalization of her railways; and as a cognate proposition, just in proportion as we see to it that the companies afford a reasonable protection for all people having occasion to use the highways, shall we be postponing the day of the nationalization of railways in Canada.

Mr. Seth Low was speaking quite recently on the question of the Hepburn Bill. He pointed out that while the prediction had been made that that Bill would be a failure, one year's operation of it had shown that the vesting of larger powers in the Railway Commission in the United States, had been an eminent success, not only because the measure was operating well by reason of the machinery conferred upon the board, but because the railways had immediately volunteered to carry out the provisions of the Act so that the Board of Commissioners were under no necessity to take action against them. And no doubt whenever you frame adequate laws for the protection of the public, you will have those to whom these laws are to be applied volunteering to carry out the orders of the board without waiting for action to enforce the law. Therefore, we may be encouraged in Canada, if we can form a policy on this great question by the belief that it will not require to be enforced in many instances, by the Board of Railway Commissioners, but that the railway companies will be on the alert to carry out the provisions of the law.

I have referred to the English system, and I wish to read a clause or two of the English statute as being the most concise way of expressing exactly what the law is in Great Britain. I realize that in Canada we cannot expect, except in our cities and large towns, to carry out the English system in anything like its entirely for many long years to come; but there can be no good reason advanced why we should not begin to eliminate the grade crossings. The English statute says:

If a line of railway crosses any turnpike road or public highway, then, except where otherwise provided by the special Act, either such road shall be carried over the railway or the railway shall be carried over such road by means of a bridge, and such bridge with the immediate approaches and all other necessary works connected therewith, shall be executed and at all times thereafter maintained at the expense of the company.

Provided always, that with the consent of two or more justices in petty sessions, as after mentioned, it shall be lawful for the company to carry the railway across any highway, other than a public carriage road, on the level.

Now, we have this condition of things that, even with the enormous railway system in Great Britain, there can be no level crossing, except by special Act of parliament, upon any road where driving is done.

The next section provides for the maintenance of gates where the railway crosses a carriage road on the level, which gates are to be kept closed except when in actual use by persons crossing the railway—the exact opposite of what we adopt in Canada, though I am not prepared to say which is the better of the two—and providing that there shall be men in attendance, as we have here. But the lowest order of protection in Great Britain, from one end of it to the other, is gates, with a house in which a man is to be lodged and the other appliances for the safety of the public, such as devices for lighting, the ringing of bells and other means of helping to safeguard the public.

Now, it should be distinctly understood, also, that every dollar of the expense of these works in Great Britain is borne by the railways. In saying that, I do not want to be unreasonable. We have to recognize that the railways are a great factor in the development of Canada. I do not want to be a crank and say we can do the same here as is done in Great Britain. All I say is that the fact is as I have stated, and it is a fact that should be kept in mind as one of the elements in the case. There is another provision in the law of Great Britain, and if we had had that here the Grimsby disaster could not have occurred. It is as follows:

Where the railway crosses any turnpike road on a level adjoining a station, all trains on the railway shall be made to slacken their speed before arriving at such turnpike road, and shall not cross the same at any greater rate of speed than four miles an hour.

In Grimsby we have the highway in the neighbourhood of the railway station. With all the safety devices they have in Britain, so mindful are they of the wisdom of preserving human life, they compel the railway trains to slacken speed to not more than four miles an hour. You may be sure that under these conditions not many level crossing accidents occur in Great Britain.

I have already said that the English railways pays for all these works. But that is not all. They pay taxes as well, and very heavy taxes. They pay the ordinary taxes, and also what is called a government passenger duty. In 1901 these taxes on 22,078 miles of railway amounted to £4,331,334, or equal to about $1,000 of taxation per mile of railway. Nor is even that all. In Great Britain when the railway company has observed all the statutory conditions, it must provide specially for special cases. Therefore, when there is necessity for special devices not described by the statute, the railway company must, at its peril, provide such special devices and take such special precautions as are adapted to the conditions prevailing at the point concerning which the question arises.

The result of all this is that Great Britain is a model for the world, the wonder of the world, not only as to the safety of railway travel, but as to the absence of accidents at railway crossings. As regards railway travel, the safety is so great that from 1st October, 1900, to 31st March, 1902, a period of eighteen months, not one passenger was killed upon the English railways. Let me give one or two other comparisons in reference to this matter. Here is a line from Mr. Franklin B. Locke, an American, writing in the 'Century Magazine,' comparing the American system with the English system, that is, comparing a system that is similar to ours with the English system.

In this connection a few broad comparisons are significant. In the city of Buffalo, for instance, it was reported, a few years ago, that sixty-one fatalities occurred at grade crossings in eighteen months, being two more than the number reported for the whole of Germany for the previous five years. Again, in the report of the Terminal Commission to the Mayor and Common Council of Chicago, it was stated that over two hundred people lost their lives at the grade crossings in that city in 1891. This is nearly as many fatalities as occurred in the whole of Great Britain and Ireland from the same cause during the succeeding five years. These figures seem to indicate that these two cities afford from three to five times as many fatalities of this class as the whole of Great Britain and Ireland and Germany combined.

Mr. LENNOX.

In reference to this matter I find an interesting comparison in 'Hazell's Annual,' referring to the year 1904. It shows the proportion of passengers killed and injured to passengers carried.

Passengers Killed to Passengers Carried—1904.

	In England.	In United States.
Killed..	..1 in 199,758,000..	..1 in 1,622.267
Injured.	..1 in 2,244,472..	..1 in 78,523

It is only fair to say that the American railways carried their passengers much longer distances on the average. That is an element to be taken into consideration. But when we compare one in practically two hundred millions with one in one and a half millions, the comparison is certainly very startling. In other words, the death rate for railway passengers is 123 times greater in the United States than in England. Then he gives the proportion of employees killed and injured to the total number employed.

Proportion of Employees Killed—1904.

	In England.	In United States.
Killed..	.. ..1 in 10,144..	.. ..1 in 357
Injured....	..1 in 748..	.. ..1 in 19

And Mr. Frank Dixon, writing in the 'Atlantic Monthly' in 1907, and carrying the figures down to 1905, said that of the total number employed in United States railways 1 in every 133 was killed and 1 in every 9 injured in that year. Coming to the next great railway country, France, I shall read a clause from their law.

Except in the case of local obstacles sufficiently serious in the opinion of the government, any railway intersecting national highways or departmental roads shall pass above or below such highways or roads.

A gentleman dealing with this says:

Level crossings are tolerated only on rural or private cross-roads.

I find on further research that when a railway passes a highway or public path on a level it must have a gate of specified style, it must have a man in attendance; a cottage is provided at an expense ordinarily of $1,000 and all the expense entailed is borne by the railway company. In that connection we must not lose sight of the fact that in France not only is all the expense borne by the railway companies but the railways revert to the state after a period of ninety-nine years.

To speak briefly of the conditions in the United States, I want the government to follow me in this idea. The governments of many states in the United States have adopted the principle of defining what shall be the prevailing conditions in reference to the construction of railways over highways and this has also been, as you have perceived, the policy of Great Britain, Germany and France, and I think of European countries generally. Be that as it may, the closest analogy you can get to our conditions is in the United States and they have adopted a definite policy as regards the features of railway construction which I am now discussing. I want to urge upon the government that they should and should now at this session enunciate the policy that we shall have, as far as possible, as to the existing roads a separation of the highway from the railway, that we shall in other cases wherever necessary have a protection by gate or other properly approved device, that that shall be the policy of the law of the country and that its working out only shall be left to the railway board.

Massachusetts I think was the first state in the field. Their law provides that there shall be no new railway constructed on a grade crossing until the board has investigated the matter and has ordered that it may be so

Then as to the existing roads, the general law provides the policy that shall be adopted for reclaiming the highways by separation of the highway from the railway. The general law is that the railway pays 65 per cent, the state pays 25 per cent or more and the municipality pays 10 per cent or less. That is to say there is 35 per cent of the cost to be borne between the municipality and the state and the board may order any proportion of that 35 per cent to be paid by the state, but cannot order the municipalities to pay more than 10 per cent. Expenditure by the state is limited to $500,000 in any one year and to $5,000,000 in all. Then they have special statutes by which they eliminated a great number of grade crossings at certain points, notably Boston, Brocton and Newton. In reference to these cities the state paid 31½ per cent, the cities 13½ per cent and the company 55 per cent.

New York attempted to adopt the Massachusetts law with regard to the expenditure. The railways were not exactly opposed to the abolition of the grade crossing in the state but they were opposed to the allotted proportion of the expense. Let me say that I do not understand that the railways will put up any organized hostility to the proposition that we are making but may object to the proportion of the expense they are to pay. The railways realize that in the interests of the traffic which they wish to handle, the desire for rapidity, the desire for safety and the elimination of that much vexed question of the cattle guard in many instances, it is to their interest as much as possible to separate the highway from the railway crossing, and to have protection at other points. New York therefore was not able by reason of the strong organized opposition of the big railway interests to pass a law as favourable to the people as the Massachusetts law, and the law there is that the company shall pay 50 per cent, the state 25 per cent and the municipality 25 per cent. Their law provides:

All steam surface railroads, hereafter built except additional switches and sidings, must be so constructed as to avoid all public crossings at grade, wherever practicable so to do.

And as regards the division of expense:

Whenever under the provisions of section 60 of this Act new railroads are constructed across existing highways, the expense of crossing above or below the grade of the highway shall be paid entirely by the railroad corporations.

It then goes on to provide for conditions such as the extension of a new street where none before existed, across an existing railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. Where the railway has possession of the territory first does it make any difference as to the cost ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, it does. The section reads:

Whenever, under the provisions of section 61 of this Act a new street, avenue or highway is constructed across an existing railroad, the railroad corporation shall pay one half and the municipal corporation wherein such street, avenue or highway is located shall pay the remaining one-half of the expense of making such crossing, above or below grade; and whenever a change is made as to an existing crossing, in accordance with the provisions of section 62 of this Act, 50 percentum of the expense thereof shall be borne by the railroad corporation, 25 per cent by the municipal corporation and 25 per cent by the state.

In the case of a new railway the railway pays the whole of it; if it is the change of an existing grade, where the highway was in possession first then the railway pays 50 per cent, the state 25 per cent, and the municipality 25 per cent. In Maine they have practically the Massachusetts law where they want to change the grade with regard to an existing highway and an existing railway. Then, the statute provides that for a new railway there shall be a separation of grade unless the Railway Commissioners, after notice, authorize the crossing on the level, the elimination of level crossings being the rule, the cost being borne entirely, I think, by the company, although, as to that, I am not positive. The state of Michigan has pretty drastic laws as to this question. It puts it into the power of the Board of Railway Commissioners to order whatever they like as regards the protection of railway crossings. The elimination of level crossings, the separation of grades, the providing of gates, the providing of flagmen or whatever they think necessary they can order if they think fit and the entire cost is charged to the railway company. In Ohio the company pays 65 per cent, or more if so ordered.

Mr. LANCASTER. Who pays the balance in Ohio?

Mr. LENNOX. The balance is paid either by the state or by the municipality; I am inclined to think that it is the state that pays the 35 per cent. As regards Connecticut, the commissioner may order of his own motion the separation of grades. In that case the company pays 75 per cent, and the state pays 25 per cent. Then, there may be the case of the application by a railway company for the elimination of a grade crossing. In that case the company pays the entire cost and, in that connection, I may say that they are bound by statute to apply for the elimination of one level crossing every year. Each company must apply for the elimination of at least one level crossing each year for every sixty miles of their railway, and the result has been that in ten years they have cut out 549 level crossings out of a total of 1,526, leaving 977 to be provided for in the state. They have also a provision as to the case where the application is by the municipality and where the railway existed before it was crossed by the highway. Then, as to new railways to be constructed after the passing of the Act, they are to have separate grades constructed at the cost of the company. There are other states, many of which have been referred to in the public press, and it is not necessary for me to deal with further illustrations. They enunciate clearly enough the policy of the United States with regard to this matter. They show clearly that they have come to the conclusion that it is not wise to leave it entirely to the Railway Board, but that the representatives of the people should define, within general limits, what shall be the policy as to this great and important matter.

As to the question of cost, that is, of course, a matter for the government to consider, but they are always anxious to have some idea from us so that they shall not go wrong. I have clear ideas as to some portions of this question and not very clear ideas as to others, but I would like to give the government the benefit of my consideration as far as it has gone. How are we to meet the expense? As to new roads, as to any charter that we shall grant during this session, I submit to the government that we should make it the law that the railway company shall separate the highway from the railway, or that they shall provide gates as a good alternative, unless they show that in particular instances the separation or the gates are not necessary, and that they should pay the entire cost of the work. I would recommend that policy with reference to all new railways, unless, having regard to any peculiar local conditions, such as the extending of the railway through a sparsely settled portion of Canada, we should, for good reasons, see fit to exempt them from that liability by the statute by what they shall be chartered. As to the question of municipalities contributing towards the expense, I shall leave to the city municipalities the fighting out of that question for themselves, but as to the rural municipalities I do not feel that there should be no portion of the expense charged up to them. I might interject just here, with great respect to the Railway Board, that I am sorry that in the matter of the Grimsby crossing, they did not observe that rule. I claim that in every case where the highway and railway cross upon the level and where the highway was one of the original highways which existed at the time the railway was built, the company should be at the total charge of providing and maintaining all the appliances for safety that may be ordered by the railway board. As to the further question of expense as to existing roads that we have to deal with, that are in existence to-day, reclaiming our highways in that regard, I do not feel that perhaps I am very competent to pronounce a judgment upon that, but as I feel at present, I do not think it would be unreasonable that Canada should contribute something to the expense. The railways helped to make Canada. It was absolutely impossible at the time some of these roads were built that the precautions which were taken in Great Britain and the older countries of Europe could be taken here, and I say that to put these railways upon a proper basis as regards these crossings, it does not appear at the present time to be unreasonable that the Dominion government should contribute something towards the change of grade. As to the sources of income available to the country there is this point to be kept in mind by the government and by parliament in dealing with this question: England taxes her railways to the extent of $1,000 a mile and the United States tax theirs to an enormous extent. We nominally are beginning to tax ours through the provinces. This tax is very little and I would not be sorry if I could see an arrangement made between the Dominion and the provinces by which the provinces would forego the taxing of railways if the money were diverted to securing a better condition of things as regards railway crossings. In the United States the lowest amount at which any railway was taxed in 1906 in an organized state was $107 per mile, and the highest was $1,683 per mile, an average of $349 per mile for all the railways in the United States. Pennsylvania alone paid in 1906, as railway taxation, $6,982,973. The United States collected from all the railways in that year $74,602,171. If Canada collected on her railways at the same rate at which they impose taxes on railways in the United States, a revenue of from $8,000,000 to $9,000,000 a year would be obtained.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART. Do you know what the federal taxes on the United States railways amount to?

Mr. LENNOX. I have not got that separately. I was suggesting to the government that probably some adjustment should be made in reference to the taxation, which obtains in Canada now whereby the burden upon the railways in changing grades would be lightened. It should be borne in mind too, that we have contributed very largely towards railway building, at a much higher rate than the United States have. The United States never have a cash subsidy to a railway and they have not given a land grant since 1871. Mr. Blaine estimates that the total contribution to railway building in the United States by the various municipalities and governments amounted all told to $1,000,000,000, and had they aided railways as liberally as we in Canada have it would amount to three or four billions, instead of one.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any federal taxation on railways in the United States?

Mr. LENNOX. I should judge from what I was reading that there was, but I did not ascertain the amount.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then there would be federal, and state, and municipal taxation on the railways of the United States.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes. I am merely suggesting that we are taxing our railways very little in the first place, and in the second place that probably some distribution could be made in the line of diverting existing taxation to this very desirable work. In conclusion, I may say I have every hope that at last—not much behind the rest of us, but a little behind the rest of us—the government has come to realize the importance of this subject. I am not too sanguine as to what the government may do. Some things would indicate that they are not prepared to do much just at present. It does not look as if the government had considered the question for any length of time; we had no indication of it in the speech from the Throne; we had a very hesitating acceptance of the Lancaster Bill, but we have got it and I hope the government has put the Senate into proper order with regard to it.

Mr. FOSTER. What, what?

Mr. LENNOX. We had no data a month ago and what is now brought down after a month of delay is very meagre. There was a hurry up order by the Minister of Railways a little while ago upon the railway board and there was a response, but that response has not been divulged to us. There was another hurry up order on the board when the Lancaster Bill came on, but that I understand, was not responded to.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would my hon. friend tell me what that was?

Mr. LENNOX. When the Lancaster Bill came up for third reading, I understood the minister to say that he had written to the chairman of the railway board, that he expected an answer from him, and that he would like the matter to stand over. I do not say, however, that it concludes the matter that there was no response to that hurry up order.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a stretch of imagination.

Mr. LENNOX. I only mean to show that the Minister of Railways has awakened to the necessity of there being some protection. He did not think of it until we brought it to his attention, but that is no reflection on him if he does the right thing now. Of course it is for the government to formulate their own policy, but I would suggest to the right hon. the leader of the government that on this question it would be wise to consult the municipal representatives of the people, and I would like to see him bring to Ottawa representatives from all the county councils and municipal councils, and as it is a matter for the general advantage of Canada and for the general advantage of the railway companies and for the unbounded advantage of our people, I would like to see them get the railway companies to transport these gentlemen free of charge to Ottawa. If he did that he would have the benefit of the advice and suggestions of the immediate representatives of the people. I would also urge the great necessity for getting information upon the subject. We know the number of railway crossings there are in Canada, but that is about all we do know. With all respect for the railway board, I believe it is impossible for them to grapple with this question, unless they have greater assistance than they yet have. I believe the first thing to do is to employ competent men to collect material throughout the country and to bring in a general report as to the condition of all railway crossings in Canada, classifying them and saying: at this point the crossings require no protection, at this point certain protection is required and at this point the level crossing shall be abolished. Let the railway companies be heard and let the people locally interested be heard and let a determination be come to as to what remedy shall be adopted in respect to existing railways. I also urge upon the governemnt that they should make a declaration of policy upon this matter and that there should be a law made by parliament to guide us. It is not enough that we have six competent members of the railway board; we have a parliament here of more than 200 members and it is the wisdom of parliament, centered if you like in the government, that should pronounce upon the policy of Canada in this matter. We have been drifting along and in a little while we will have our court made law made by the railway board. I am here to say that I do not think it is wise that we should have that condition of things. It is for the courts to construe the law and to enforce it, not to make it, and I do not distinguish between the railway board and other courts in that regard. What I suggest is that we should adopt a Canadian policy declaring that all the King's highways shall be safe—I mean reasonably safe, not absolutely safe, but relatively safe—that in future railway construction the safety of the highways should be guarded and that a remedy shall be applied where safety under existing conditions is absent.

Then, as I have said, and as the resolution more concisely indicates, the presumption should be protection everywhere—that every railway company shall prima facie be bound to protect the interests of those who cross the railway on the highway, and in order to be exonerated in any particular case, it must show the railway board that there is needed either no protection or only a certain kind of protection.

These views are very inadequately expressed, I know. I feel that this is a very difficult but at the same time an engrossing and all-important matter. I know that I have had the very complimentary close attention of the right hon. leader of the government during my imperfect discussion of this matter, and for that I am exceedingly grateful. I recognize just as fully as anybody that the desire of protecting the people does not belong only to one side of the House; I recognize that we are all at one in the desire to do what is in the best interests of the country. But I have urged this matter to some extent also from a knowledge that railway companies have powerful influence, and that they exert this powerful influence upon the government benches, as they will endeavour, I suppose, to exert them upou us at no distant date. And so I have at some length ventured to urge very strongly my views on the government. May I put the matter in another form? I think our primary law should be that the highway and the railway crossing should be separate, the one above the other; that our secondary law should be that where that condition cannot obtain, there shall be the protection of a gate wherever there is anything in the nature of a trap or shut-in crossing and that the railway company can always escape an undue burden by showing to the railway board that in the particular instance referred to the need of safeguards does not exist. In that way we shall have what will be fair to the people, and, what is of equal importance, just to the railway company.

In concluding, let me refer to what has been said across the floor of the House, on one occasion at least. Some gentleman on this side of the House said to the distinguished leader of the government that he had had some rare opportunities of distinguishing himself during the time of his administration. The right hon. gentleman admitted that he had had some opportunities of distinguishing himself in regard to the great problems that confront us from time to time in this House. Whilst he has had many such opportunities in the past, he has had no better opportunity of distinguishing himself than he has now in dealing, in a large, broad, comprehensive, statesmanlike way, with this great and imminent problem now confronting us. He has not only an opportunity of distinguishing himself, but what is far better, an opportunity which I hope he will embrace, of doing lasting good to the people of Canada in the solution of this great question.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the House has listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of my hon. friend. They have shown that he has paid a good deal of attention to this question and has devoted considerable research to ascertaining the conditions that exist in other countries. I may say in the outset, that I think there is not much difference of opinion between us as to the end we all desire to attain. Possibly later on there may appear to be not much difference as to the means necessary for attaining that desired end. My hon. friend, of course, with his usual sense of humour, could not refrain from interjecting a joke concerning what he called my hurry-up order; but he did it with such good nature and so obviously with his usual humourous intent, that I forgive him.

Mr. FOSTER. He knew you would appreciate the joke.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. I am glad to see that the question of the Railway Commission is one on which there is no difference of opinion. We agree that they have done good work, are doing good work, and will probably do good work where we give them that work to perform. This question of railway crossings opens up the great question of transportation in one or two aspects. We must concede that unless Canada's trade is to stand still and she is to be outstripped in the matter of transportation, fast trains must be run, and run daily, both for passengers and freight. For years we have tried to attain that object; because it must be remembered that in this country the public carriers have not the advantages that they have either in the old land or in the United States. As I have said time and again, it is the density of population that makes traffic. Some of the states referred to by my hon. friend have so much greater traffic than we have in this part of the world, that the conditions are not similar in so far as the burdens carried by the railways are concerned. I admit with him that the conditions in the old land—in Great Britain, Germany and France—are ideal conditions. But if he will compare those countries with Canada in regard to density of population, he will see that Canada cannot be compared with them as to the conditions of transportation. Canada is a new country, and it has been our endeavour, both in Dominion, provincial and municipal boundaries, to encourage the improvement of transportation facilities. It may be possible that we have carried this encouragement to a larger extent in all these spheres than some at this date may think we should have done. But we were dealing with the transportation problem in its earlier stages, and I believe the people of Canada, the people of the provinces and the residents of municipalities would under similar conditions do the same thing again for the improvement of transportation. Now, as I have said, these fast trains must be run. The question of income to the people who work on the farm and in the factory is largely tied up with the transportation problem. The prices they are to obtain depend not wholly on the quantity or quality of the goods they produce. They might produce goods in large quantities or of excellent quality; but unless transportation facilities were provided to get their goods to the markets of the world quickly and in good condition, they might as well not have produced at all or in as great quantities or of such excellent quality. The price of the goods depends on the quality that exists when they reach the market, and that quality sometimes depends on the speed with which they are taken to market. Now, in whatever is done or decided to be done in Canada, this must be borne in mind, that the interests of the people and the interests of the railways are one in the matter of bringing the producer as closely as possible to the consumer, or, in other words, to the markets of the world. In Great Britain the conditions are ideal. As my hon. friend has pointed out, in the construction of their railways they provided against level crossings. But, as I have said before, the conditions, even in the construction of these roads, perhaps were not as ours are.

My hon. friend mentions another thing which I think worthy of note. He said that the United States have not in recent years given any aid to railways. That is true, I believe. But this must be remembered in making a comparison between the two countries. The United States had no rival practically in the development of their trade, so far as this continent was concerned, whereas Canada has to build up a commercial position and develop her trade side by side and in competition with a country like the United States whose population is ten times greater than ours. It is like building a main street through a great many of our towns and villages. Scattered along it on both sides are inhabited and vacant lots, but the village or town is not compact, and it costs large amounts of money in many of our municipalities to build such streets and sidewalks which necessarily extend over a large territory. That is exactly the condition in Canada. We have a territory as large as the United States, but a population twelve times smaller. If we had not given any aid to our railways, we would not to-day have the Canada we have. Canada has taken the position she enjoys in the markets of the world because people have been safe in going to any part of our new country in the hope that within a reasonable time they would be furnished with railway facilities to carry their products to market. That has been the principle which has guided the governments of Canada and the provinces and our municipal councils in giving aid to railways.

My hon. friend pointed out that the conditions of the crossings should be examined into. That is true, but in his own remarks he gave us a fairly accurate answer. He said that, in the experience of the last five years—which is the best experience we can have as it brings us through the time when we have had the most rapid transportation—the dangerous crossings in Canada have been practically located and have been confined to a comparatively few localities. Of course I would not pretend to say that there are no dangerous crossings where no one has been killed, but the more dangerous ones would naturally be where accidents have taken place. Some two years ago the Board of Railway Commissioners proceeded to ascertain the location of the various crossings in the Dominion and asked the railway companies to give them schedules or plans of these crossings. There are a great many of these plans in the possession of the board at present and others are constantly coming. Of course, it is a little difficult for the Railway Commissioners, with the engineering staff at their command, to get them all in the order and condition they want, but they are getting them as rapidly as possible. I did urge the board a few weeks ago to make an examination of the dangerous crossings so that we could have some reliable data, and a return has been brought down which gives us a pretty good idea of these crossings and their results. I find, in looking over the return, that there were killed in Canada during the last five years 270 people at level crossings. That is a loss of life which is deplorable, though, I admit, not as large as I thought it would be when I asked for the information. My hon. friend quoted one railway on which no loss of life occurred last year at level crossings. I might say to him—and it may be something in favour of government management of railways—that on Prince Edward Island no fatal level crossing accident has taken place during the last five years. On the Intercolonial Railway, during the last five years, fifteen fatal accidents have occurred at level crossings, but this may be incidental to the country and location, because, of course, all level crossings are not dangerous.

I now come to a difficulty which does not confront any state in the union in dealing with this question. In Canada as in the United States we have our federal authorities and we have our provincial authorities as they have their state authorities, and we each have our municipal authorities. In the United States the railways are largely under the control of the state unlike Canada where they are under the control of the federal authorities. If my hon. friend will study the question of railway commissions in the United States he will find that the states have boards of their own in most cases, while in Canada we have the one board which controls the whole country. A state legislature can say what a municipality must do. These legislatures control the highways through the municipalities, but the Dominion of Canada cannot say what a municipality must do, speaking in general terms, as it does not control the municipality and it does not control the highways, the highways being under the control of the municipalities, and the municipalities in their turn being governed by the provincial authorities. So that it is easier for the state authorities to deal with the whole question, municipal and provincial, than it is for the Dominion. And my hon. friend will have noticed that in the division of expenditure, it was not between the United States federal authorities, the municipalities and the railways, but between the state legislatures, the municipalities and the railways. There is that difference, but it is not insurmountable, and I am prepared to say now that while it is more difficult to work out in Canada than in any state in the union, still the difficulties are not such that we need despair of being able to overcome them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Did not the Board of Railway Commissioners make a division of the expenditure in connection with the proposed viaduct in Toronto?

Mr. LENNOX. And Grimsby?

Mr. LANCASTER. That is a level crossing.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There must be some way of working that out.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the distinction is this, that where the municipality has asked to have it done, then the board can impose part of the burden on the municipality, but under the state jurisdiction, the board can impose it no matter who asks. And in the city of Toronto, I think that the city itself asked the board to make a ruling. At Kingston the board did make a ruling, imposing part of the expenditure on the county, part on the county and part on the railway, but that was done at the request of the county if I remember rightly.

Mr. BRODER. They make an agreement previously, I think, and that agreement is carried out by an order of the Railway Commission.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think at Kingston there was an order of the board on the application of the county.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think the hon. gentleman is right. Where the municipality makes an application the Railway Commission may grant the application subject to conditions.

Mr. LANCASTER. Our statute does not say it is a condition precedent that the municipality must make the application. The jurisdiction is general. Under sections 237, 238, 239 the board may act on its own motion without application from any municipality.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Will my hon. friend read the section?

Mr. LANCASTER. Section 237, subsection 2:

> The board may, by order, grant such application upon such terms and conditions as to protection, safety and convenience of the public, as it may deem expedient or may order that the highways be carried over or under the railway, or be temporarily or permanently diverted, and that such works be executed, watchmen or other persons employed, or measures taken as under the circumstances appear to the board best adapted to remove or diminish the danger or obstruction arising or likely to arise therefrom.

That is where the railway is originally being constructed. Then comes section 238:

> Where the railway is already constructed upon, along or across any highway the board may order the company within a specified time to submit to the board a plan and profile of such portion of the railway, and may upon such submission, make any order in respect thereof, as in the last preceding section provided.

If the board can make an order under section 237, making it impossible for the company to have a level crossing, surely they can, under section 238, order a company already existing to take away its level crossing?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure that that touches the point. They can make the order, but that does not apportion the expense. All the orders, whatever the powers, have been made under the conditions stated. I may be wrong, but that is my recollection. The question has been raised how far the jurisdiction of the board can extend over a municipality. There is the principle of law which, roughly stated, is that, where parliament has the right to pass a certain Act, it can pass any other law in order to enforce the original one, even if the second Act is not altogether within its jurisdiction. In that relation it has been held that they could impose the amount of costs or even a penalty on the municipality. However the difficulty then arises, as the hon. member will understand, that we in this Dominion parliament have not the control of the municipalities as the states have to which he is referring. But, as I said a moment ago, that does not mean an insuperable difficulty. If there is to be a comprehensive measure dealing with level crossings in a satisfactory way, it cannot be attained by doing anything to make a division among the people, either as to municipalities, provinces or in any other way. We must agree to some measure which, while it may impose burdens that otherwise would not be imposed, will be in accordance with the conditions which exist in Canada. It is a difficult problem to work out. I have spent not minutes, but hours and days in trying to solve it, and have come across difficulties too numerous to be detailed to the House. It is a large problem, and yet has many small details which are difficult to work out. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) touched one. I think, perhaps, he is wrong; but he has touched this side of the question, which, no doubt, is a popular one to touch but may not be practicable in working out the question that no rural municipality should be asked to pay. He leaves the cities to fight out their own battles. I am afraid we should not succeed if we approached the question in that way. If we are to eradicate the danger of level crossings, somebody must bear some burden; and the people who have helped to create the condition, no matter who they may be, will have to be asked to bear a reasonable share of the burden of removing the condition which they themselves have helped to create. How far that principle ought to be carried I do not know. But let me point out—and I would call my hon. friend's special attention to this point—that in every state he mentioned the principle which he said he would not adopt has been adopted. That is, the municipalities have to pay a share, though a minor share, of the expense.

Mr. LENNOX. Many, but not all.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend is quoting these states as examples for us to follow, but drawing a line at that point. Perhaps he is right. But I submit that if we are going to make a success of getting rid of the level crossings, we must not say anything that would create lack of harmony, and we must all be ready to bear a fair share of the burden that must be borne in order to bring about the result. We have all contributed to bring about the present condition. My hon. friend pointed out that a new provision is laid down for railways yet to be built. That is quite true. The Dominion has contributed to the conditions which now exists because, for years and years, we have allowed railways to be built under charters granted wthout any great restraint as to how their crossings should be constructed, or even how their entrance into cities should be made. Of recent years, and as the traffic has grown greater and railways have become the more numerous, the conditions under which railways are to be constructed are made more stringent, and greater care is taken than was thought necessary years ago. I submit that the provinces have contributed their share as to the present conditions. Not a few of the railways now under federal jurisdiction received their charters and powers of construction, and were actually constructed, under provincial authority. Some of them are still under provincial control, though comparatively few. I believe I am not putting it too strongly when I say that all railways doing more than a merely local business would better serve the people, and be better controlled, under our jurisdiction. However that may be, the provinces, in granting these charters and allowing the construction of railways under their jurisdiction have assisted in bringing about present conditions in relation to grade crossings. The municipalities have also contributed. I have belonged to at least one municipal council, and have travelled a good deal throughout the province, and am aware that in years gone by, every municipality that was asked to contribute a bonus, even for the shadow of a railway, was ready to give it. They do not grant these bonuses to the same extent now. But, in years gone by, they have allowed railways to cross even their main thoroughfares on the level and to run through the busiest parts of their towns without let or hindrance. This applies not only to rural municipalities, but also to towns and even cities. So, these conditions have been allowed to arise with the consent of us all, and I submit that we are all more or less bound, if we are going to make a success of the undertaking, to contribute, though possibly in a very small amount, to do something to get rid of this difficulty which we have helped to create, and in the removal of which we are so deeply interested. The Dominion might grant aid, and the provinces might grant aid. And let me call my hon. friend's attention to another point, which, perhaps, will come up later on, and which is worthy of consideration. Presuming that the board has jurisdiction to fix the amount to be paid by a municipality, how is the municipality to raise the money? Speaking of the province of Ontario, it could not, under the provincial laws, pay that money without submitting a by-law to the people.

Mr. LANCASTER. Or getting provincial legislation.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am coming to that. They must submit it to the people, or else go to the legislature for a special Act. This brings me back to the idea I have expressed, that, in order to make this a success, it will be necessary for all parties concerned to take concerted action. First, the Dominion ought to consider well what it should do in this case. We cannot say what any province will do, but in order to be successful the federal authority ought to communicate with the various provinces with an idea of coming to some amicable arrangement by which they would assist, so far as possible, and pass legislation that would enable the municipalities to do their share if they were asked to under an order of the board.

No one would reasonably argue that the great share of this cost should not be borne by the railways themselves. Whatever division might be made among the rest of us would be a minor division. I would not like to enact that the state, municipality or province should be compelled to pay up to a certain limit; there might be cases where they should not pay up to the limit fixed, and if I were drafting a law to-morrow I would ask that they should not be called upon to pay more than a certain amount and it would be in the jurisdiction of the board whether they should pay a less amount or pay anything.

Looking at the accidents that have taken place during the last five years and the reports that have been given of those accidents at level crossings by the officials of the Board of Railway Commissioners, this peculiar fact stares us in the face, that if ordinary care had been exercised by the traveller on the highway, 90 per cent of these accidents would not have taken place.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where do you get the evidence of that? That is the statement of the railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, it is the statement of the officials handed to me by the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. LANCASTER. They get their information from the railways, the railways are the real authorities for that statement.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that is not correct. Every accident that has occurred since the board was appointed has been investigated by an officer for that purpose and his report goes to the board and on these reports, I understand, this information has been furnished to me.

Mr. FOSTER. That I suppose is a very small proportion.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think that wherever an accident takes place they send an officer to investigate the cause of the accident.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the report shows only 180 of that class out of a total of 270. There are a great many of which no particulars are given.

Mr. GRAHAM. I repeat the statement that from the information I get I think 90 per cent of the accidents would not have occurred if the travellers had exercised due care.

Mr. LENNOX. Does that make any difference?

Mr. GRAHAM. It possibly may not, but my hon. friend will understand its bearing when I complete my statement. It may not and does not alter the fact that if the railway crossings had not been there the accidents would not have taken place, nor does it alter the other fact that governments and parliaments have to keep in mind that the public often have to be protected against their own carelessness. This is a case where all are united in agreeing to protect the public against what may be their carelessness, but I submit to the judgment of the House that where the public are to be protected against accidents by public enactment, they ought to be asked to do something to help themselves. I refer my hon. friend to a law or to a practice that has become law through judgment of the courts, in Pennsylvania, that every traveller upon a public highway must stop before he crosses a railway track. A sign is placed at each crossing reading: 'Stop, look, listen.' The railway is compelled to put that sign at every crossing and the public are compelled to stop and read that warning or forfeit any claim to damages if they are injured; but I think the onus of proving that they did not obey that injunction is cast on the railway and my hon. friend will agree that it is difficult for a railway to prove such a thing so that any burden put upon the people is offset by the onus being placed on the railway. If something could be placed in the law or the regulations which would infuse into the minds of the people obedience to such a mandate, if it did not compel obedience, that they ought for their own safety to stop before approaching a railway crossing, eight out of ten of the fatal accidents would never occur and the danger of level crossings would be reduced to a minimum. You ask how to do that—I do not know. I am not prepared to say and we might come to the point that this parliament had no jurisdiction, that we might be guilty of an interference, as lawyers say, with the civil rights of the individual, if we endeavoured to interfere and say how the individual was to travel along the highway when the highway belongs to the municipality and can only be regulated by the municipality or the legislature.

In order to make this successful we must have the co-operation of all classes interested. I may frankly say to my hon. friend that I have not been idle on this question, I have been studying it with all the care I could exercise during a busy session and for some months before, and I am impressed as thoroughly as any man in the House can be impressed with the idea that it is time we had some systematic effort to protect, as far as possible, the lives of the people on the highways crossing the railways. It is not a question that can be settled off-hand or in a moment. I am free to take my hon. friend and the House into my confidence and say that I intend to bring this matter to the consideration of my colleagues in a very few days. I might go further and say that but for the absence of the Minister of Finance, I would have discussed it weeks ago. I have been holding it in abeyance in order that there might be a full discussion on it, and I have a policy in mind concerning it which I wish to lay before my colleagues. That having been said and with the full understanding that we are all in sympathy with the idea of eradicating as far as possible the level crossings, I know that my hon. friend will be satisfied not to press his motion until we have discussed it further. The conditions now existing as to railways that we may have helped to create may not have been our fault, but the conditions on railways hereafter created will be our fault. If we allow them to be built as they have been in the past. I take it for granted that this House would be prepared to support a measure which would in principle say that on any railways to be in future chartered by this House, except in the case of extensions for switches, terminals or something of that kind, the greatest care should be taken to avoid this danger. If, when these railways are constructed, it should be found by the Railway Commissioners that level crossings have to be removed or protected in any way the railways should be required, in that case, to bear all the burden of such removal or protection. They would then know what was before them when they construct a railway. They would have it constantly in their minds that if they did not protect these crossings when they were constructing the railway they would only have to go to the expense of protecting them a little later on and that no municipality, province or Dominion would help them. I have detained the House longer than I had any desire to do, but this is a pretty broad question, a question with regard to which we are all of one mind. a question to which there is no political or party side and one in regard to which it ought to be the endeavour of the House to come to some arrangement by which the lives of the people may be protected, and even if in working out that scheme we may not all have our ideas carried out to the fullest extent, I believe the people of Canada will expect parliament to do something in order to bring about the desired result.

say that their rights in regard to that matter are very much exaggerated. We gave them that permission for the sole purpose of securing the building of a railway outside of the provincial jurisdiction, and that railway, of course, became a work for the general advantage of Canada. It established a connection between one province and another, between one part of Canada and another, and became a national railway in that sense. As far as it was necessary for them to cross highways, we gave then that jurisdiction because otherwise we would not have had power to allow them to cross highways at all. In giving them that jurisdiction we were permitting them, for their own profit, and to encourage them to invest in the hope of the profit they would get, but still for their own profit, to use the King's highway for the purpose of their track, for the purpose of transporting from one part of the country to another. We must not forget also that we must look at the conditions which existed when we gave that easement or right; that is to say that the railways ran not one-half as fast as they run now, that they ran upon a single track and that the number of trains was probably 25 per cent of what it is now. People did not contemplate that within a few years the danger would be very much multiplied, as it has been by their running upon or across the highways in that way. It is only fair when we speak of our having contributed to the condition of danger upon the level crossing to say that when we gave these railways the right to use these level crossings we did it in contemplation of things as they were then, and when nobody supposed that there would be the danger that has arisen since because of the acceleration of speed, the multiplication of trains and double tracking. So that, when the people say that they think the railways which created the danger should pay the cost of removing it they are not unreasonable. When they say that this danger is increased at the instance of the railways because of conditions that were not contemplated when we gave them permission to cross the highways upon the level I say they are not unreasonable. And they are equally not unreasonable when they say that the cost of protecting against this great danger should be borne by the creature which causes the danger. The danger is not in the railway running its trains slowly enough or infrequently enough, but the danger is in the multitude of trains and in the rapidity with which they are run. None of these accidents in which people are killed are caused by slowly running trains. These accidents occur because the train does not stop or slow down either because there is no station at the crossing or because it is an express train which does not stop at that point. It is the rapidity of the train that kills the people. In cities, towns and villages, but more particularly in villages and small towns, are these deaths occurring. Why? Because trains running from city to city, or from city to large town, or large town to city, run through villages and small towns at the rate of sixty miles an hour, and it is these trains that are causing the deaths and injuries. The rapidity is such that people cannot avoid the train in time. That was never contemplated when permission to cross highways was given some years ago. So that when we speak of contributing, I want it distinctly understood that in so far as I am concerned I can see no possible ground or excuse whatever for any contribution being made by the people of the state, municipalities, or provinces to render nugatory the great dangers which our railways cause while they are running upon the level crossings. That is why I say we should divide the question into these two subjects. The danger is entirely the creation of the railway because of the action of the railway in multiplying the number and increasing the rapidity of their trains. They are doing this for their own profit and properly so. We want them to make as much profit as they can, to carry as large a quantity of goods as they can and as many people, but while they are running these trains in the interest of the country they are running them for their own profit. At the same time by virtue of the carrying on of their business they create a danger upon these level crossings which was never contemplated when we gave them permission to cross them.

I have given this matter a good deal of consideration, and speaking for myself, I cannot see any just ground for saying that anybody other than the railways should contribute to the expense of protecting the level crossings. Of course the total abolition of level crossings is the ideal condition but as we know that is so expensive as to be prohibitive in many cases. The abolition of the level crossings, that ideal condition, would be more or less interfering with the easement which you gave to these railways when you permitted them originally to cross on the level. You said to them that in order that they might raise capital to build their railways at a moderate cost they might use the King's highways, and therefore in fairness to them—and I want to be fair to the railways—we should, I think, contribute to some extent to the cost of bringing about that ideal condition. But we would not be the only gainers by that; the railway companies themselves will save thousands of dollars a year because it will then not be possible for them to come in contact with any obstruction on their track which would impede and endanger their trains in operation. Such a condition would also save them an immense amount of money in maintenance, and before the special committee which some years ago considered that Bill which has now for the third time gone to the Senate, the representatives of the railway companies admitted that if they had the means they would prefer crossing under or over a highway, but the expense made it out of the question. The railways always admit that the expense of maintenance is comparatively trifling once you have the level crossing done away with and the grades separated. Therefore, when we take from them the right or the easement to run upon the level which we gave them in their original incorporation, it is worth something to the people and the people should contribute. This question is very much allied to who should contribute, and here I differ from the Minister of Railways. Why should the province or municipality pay? Has not this parliament of Canada taken under its wing all the railways of the country that are of any moment and given them to the control of the Dominion Railway Commission to the exclusion of all provincial authority. This question is very much allied to the question of subsidies to railways. We grant a subsidy to a railway to develop the country and to furnish transportation facilities, and if in doing that we find the railway ought to be constructed more expensively by eliminating level crossings, I suppose the subsidy would be increased. I am not saying that we should not in some proportion contribute to the cost of eliminating level crossings, but I can see no reason why it should come out of any other purse than the Dominion exchequer. Why should the small town or village in which these accidents occur be made to contribute. It is not they who get the benefit of the fast running trains; it is the larger cities. I would not agree entirely with my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) that the cities should be put on a different plane.

Mr. LENNOX. I did not quite say that. When I said I would leave the cities to take care of themselves I meant that the cities having a large number of able representatives in this House, they should deal with that question for themselves.

Mr. LANCASTER. In view of that explanation I do not differ from my hon friend (Mr. Lennox) as I thought I did, but of course the cities must allow a member of this House who represents a rural constituency to give his ideas on the general question, and I quite agree with the Minister of Railways that we should approach this in a broad and general way and not from any local standpoint. And, if there is going to be any general principle laid down, what better general principle can you have than that the state should pay. The city pays more taxes to the Dominion than the village does, and why therefore not let the city through the Dominion exchequer, and the town and the village through the Dominion exchequer contribute their share. The municipality, unless it is a large municipality, gets no benefit from these fast running trains and my contention is that unless you put the burden upon the Dominion entirely you are not going to do substantial justice. I do not think there is any question but that a very great majority of the people of this country while they would be willing to be taxed in some way for the elimination of level crossings, would, 95 per cent of them say, that there is no fairness in taxing either the province or the municipality for providing protection upon crossings where the trains are to continue to run upon the level. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the municipality creates the traffic. Is that quite a reason for saying that the municipality should pay the cost of protecting the level crossings? The municipality creates the traffic for the profit of the railway. The more the municipality prospers, the more goods are shipped on the railway and the more it contributes to the profits of the railway; but the municipality gets no part of the profits of the railway. The railway is making that much more profit from the people; the people are that much better customers of the railway. But the people have no opportunity to share in the profits of the railway, and of course cannot have, unless there is government ownership. If the people contribute to increase the traffic of the railway, more people are liable to cross the tracks on the highway, and therefore there is greater liability for accidents. That seems to me to be no argument for saying that the people ought to pay more for the protection of the highway. I would put it the other way, by saying that the railway ought to pay more, because it is creating more danger and because it is getting more traffic.

I wish to say a word or two in regard to what has been done by this House on this matter. I said several years ago in this House that so long as the railways cross the highways on the rail level, they should protect the highways at their own expense. It took this House some years to come to that conclusion. Bills which I had the temerity to introduce for several years, five years ago, four years ago, three years ago, did not pass; but the combined wisdom of this House put the Bill into shape that it passed three years ago unanimously. I did not get all I contended for. I did not get the principle of protection so that the railways would have absolutely to protect and be at the mercy of a court or jury in some particular case. But this House concluded to send up to the Senate a Bill which required the Railway Commission to decide what protection should be necessary in the thickly settled parts of cities, towns and villages, and provided that this protection should be afforded at the expense of the railway. The decision was not left to the mere whim of any jury, but was submitted to the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners, who were to decide what protection should be afforded for any particular crossing or class of crossings, and were to impose on the railway only what expense would be fairly necessary to carry out their order. Of course, that decision of this House in regard to level crossings does not touch the question of contribution to the cost of abolishing level crossings. That question, as the Minister of Railway says, has never really been dealt with by this House. The Act passed three years ago by this House and sent to the Senate would not apply to any case where there is a subway or an overhead bridge, and where the railway goes either under or over the highway. Although I am open to conviction, having no other object than the Minister of Railways, which is to eliminate this terrible evil from the country, I am bound to say that I am more than ever of the opinion that the principle adopted by this House for three years was a salutary principle; that is to say, that while the railways continue to run on the level across highways, they must put in some protection, to be determined by the Board of Railway Commissioners in every instance, and that if they do not do that, they must slow down their trains to ten miles an hour.

If we come to the conclusion that we have to eliminate level crossings, I am with the Minister of Railways that there should be some contribution. So long as we do not eliminate, I am dead against, and I believe the people of this country are dead against, any municipality or the province or the Dominion contributing in any way to the protection of level crossings by the railway, which creates the whole danger and has multiplied it greatly since it got permission to run on the highways. But when we eliminate level crossings and make the railways, as some of the states have done, remove a certain number every year, I am in favour of the people contributing a certain portion of the cost. I am not prepared to say what would be a fair proportion; we would have to go into certain calculations as to what it would cost in different parts of the country. Perhaps a fair contribution would be from 15 to 25 per cent. I am not going to commit myself to any particular proportion; but certainly it should not be over 25 per cent; and I believe the contribution should come out of the Dominion treasury, and not from the provinces or municipalities, because the Dominion has usurped the jurisdiction of the provinces with regard to railways, and has taken away from them the power to put any restrictions upon them or to control them in any way.

Mr. LANCASTER.

In conclusion, I might point out to the Minister of Railways that if these statistics of the number of deaths, which have been given to him, are correct—and I do not doubt that he believes them to be correct—I am very much surprised; because I have for five or six years kept track of the accidents at level crossings, and though I may have lost some, my records show fully 25 per cent more than the number of deaths shown by those statistics. My records show that, instead of 270, over 400 people were killed at level crossings during the last five years. But, assuming the figures given by the board to the minister, and no doubt believed by the board to be correct, the board has no knowledge that they represent the actual number of people killed, because it gets the information from the railways. It is true the information has to be sworn to by some officer of the company, but he does not run the trains or see the accidents. He gets his information from the reports sent in to him, and he has not the evidence of the man who knows; he has only hearsay evidence, coming through a lot of sub-officers down to the men on the trains, and the minister will readily understand that if the railways can attribute an accident to anything that will exonerate them, they will do so. Therefore, although the number of deaths may be correctly stated in their reports, the cause of death is not always given correctly. I say this because I know that the Railway Commission wants to serve the people properly, and if they will take the warning that they ought to have the statistics furnished them by the railway companies carefully looked into and not rely on them entirely, it will do no harm. The proportion, even if correctly stated by the Minister of Railways, is one to each 425 miles in Canada, while in the United States it is 1 to 660 miles, and the difference is due to the fact that the legislation in the United States is more advanced.

I shall not, in view of the discussion that has taken place, trouble the House any longer. I trust that anything that I have said will be accepted in the spirit in which it was uttered. My sole object is to assist in enacting legislation which will eliminate this terrible evil. If my Bill which has again gone to the Senate be found after a year's experience not sufficient, we shall have to try and improve on it. And as regards the elimination of level crossings, with which the Bill sent to the Senate does not deal, I shall be glad to assist the Minister of Railways in every way possible, to put into practical legislation the protection of the people. But in my opinion the contribution, if any is required to be made by the people, should not be attempted to be levied on the provinces or on the municipalities at all, but be paid entirely by the federal authorities.

Mr. J. W. EDWARDS (Frontenac). I wish to preface the very few remarks I intend making on this subject, Mr. Speaker, by expressing my gratification at the unanimous concurrence of the House in the Bill of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), and I hope that, in dealing with this question of level crossings, which is recognized by members on both sides as of vast importance, we will find equal unanimity. I would not have risen at all to address you, sir, did I not consider it my duty to place the county of Frontenac right before this House. In reply to an inquiry which I had on the paper regarding the accident down near Kingston at the Montreal street crossing some time last month, the Minister of Railways made the statement that the Grand Trunk Railway showed a willingness to go on with the building of the subway, but that the county of Frontenac and the city of Kingston objected on account of the expenditure. As the hon. minister had not the opportunity to get the facts, his error was excusable, but I wish to put the position of the county of Frontenac in that matter correctly before the House. As far back as 1898, Mr. D. D. Rogers, who then represented the county in this House, took steps to have the railway crossings in the county protected. In 1902 the county sent a deputation to Ottawa which waited on the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. That deputation asked that a subway be built at the outer station near Kingston. True the city of Kingston did raise the objection that as the station was outside the city, they should not be asked to bear any part of the cost. However, the request of the county of Frontenac was granted by the Railway Committee and that commission issued an order placing the cost of the approaches on the county and city jointly and calling on the Grand Trunk Railway to proceed with the work. Nothing however was done, despite the protests of the county of Frontenac on several occasions against efforts made by the city of Kingston and by the Grand Trunk Railway system to prevent the subway from being built. Despite these protests nothing was done until February 17, 1904. The county council then sent a letter to Mr. Hayes, of the Grand Trunk Railway, asking him to go on with the work as ordered by the Railway Committee, and in June, 1904, at a special sitting of the Board of Railway Commissioners the Grand Trunk applied to have the former order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council amended. This request was not granted, but the Board of Railway Commissioners, at the request of the council—and I want to emphasize that—approved of the order of 1902, and asked the Grand Trunk Railway to go on and construct the subway. No steps, however, were taken by the Grand Trunk Railway to build that subway or protect the public from June, 1904, to July, 1905. At that time it came to the knowledge of the county that a somewhat similar case was pending in which the city of Toronto was interested, and in July, 1905, the county of Frontenac expressed its willingness to allow the matter to stand until that case was finally decided. These facts clearly show a disregard by the Grand Trunk Railway of the order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, in the first instance, and then of the subsequent order of the railway board, as well as a disregard for the public. Throughout this whole matter for the last ten years, there has been no lack of effort made by the county of Frontenac to have the subway built and certainly no effort made to prevent its construction. In spite of the opposition in the adjoining municipality of the city of Kingston and of the Grand Trunk Railway, the county of Frontenac has been continually persistent in its endeavours to have the subway constructed and the public protected.

I have here a memorial addressed to this House by the council of the county of Frontenac, calling attention to the number of accidents at that level crossing and asking this House to take such steps as will insure the protection of the public. This petition is signed by the warden of the county and every member of the county council. It has been said that since the Dominion and provincial governments have contributed by bonus or other substantial aid to the construction of this railway, they are accessories to the danger created. I cannot see the matter in that light. If we go back to the time when the Grand Trunk Railway was constructed, we can understand that the municipalities were deeply interested in having that railway built, but they had no idea that, as the years went by, the danger would become so great as it is, owing to the speed of trains and other causes. Let us take the position of the Grand Trunk Railway in this matter and I am going to confine myself almost entirely to the conditions in my own county. Let us take this crossing, popularly called the Montreal Street crossing. There have been a number of deaths at that crossing. It has been said by the Minister of Railways that a good many accidents are due to individul carelessness. I do not think that could be contended as regards deaths occurring in that place. I believe the railways should be held responsible so far, at least, as that particular crossing is concerned. And I will give my reasons: When the railway was first built, there was only one track. Later, they laid another track in the course of double-tracking their system. But, more than that, they made a railway yard or shunting ground right across the highway. I submit that when the Grand Trunk Railway laid six tracks across the highway there, they did so with an utter disregard of the convenience of the travelling public, and with a criminal disregard of the lives of the people using the highway. So far as expense in making that crossing safe is concerned, I think the responsibility should fall upon the Grand Trunk Railway Company which created the danger.

I am not going to attempt to lay out a plan whereby these dangers can be obviated. But I believe that something can be done with regard to the hundreds, perhaps thousands, of these crossings that will lessen the danger—done quickly and at comparatively little expense and without waiting for the more general action under which all crossings may be dealt with. There are many crossings in country places where the trees or bushes approach close to the railway on either side of the highway so that a person travelling on the highway cannot see the train approaching until he is on the track, and so cannot take means to avoid danger. I think many members of this House who have travelled through the country will agree with me that by simply cutting down the bushes or trees which obstruct the view of the people travelling on the highway, much might be done to remove danger at these level crossings. Again, I think that in laying out new towns or cities, danger might be greatly lessened by making it obligatory to build streets running parallel with the railway track into which the streets running at right angles would run. In this way the crossings could be merged into a few and danger greatly lessened, and that at comparatively little expense.

I have no intention of going into this subject on broad lines. It has been very ably introduced by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) who has contributed to the debate many facts and figures, which, I am sure, we shall all consider carefully and with great interest. My object in speaking was simply to place my own county in a proper light before this House, so far as these level crossings are concerned. The people of the county of Frontenac have not asked what their share of expenses would be to get rid of these level crossings. They have asked that the danger be removed. Up to the present time at least, there has been no cavilling on their part at the expense. I trust this matter will receive the attention of both sides of the House, and that it will be dealt with thoroughly and in a way to prevent the fatalities which we all so much deplore.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I merely wish to add a word to this very interesting discussion to express to the House the great interest that we in the province of Quebec take in the very important question raised by my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox). I had not the advantage of hearing all that was said by that hon. gentleman in support of his motion; but reading the motion I find that it expresses exactly our feeling upon this subject. I have not seen the report showing the number of accidents that have occurred, but I think that we have had, in Quebec, about the same number of these distressing fatalities as have happened in the province of Ontario—some that we have had during the past year being of a most appalling character. We have not, in the past, taken as much interest in the discussion of this subject as has been evinced by our colleagues from Ontario. Indeed, these hon. gentlemen have persistently brought this matter to the attention of the government. It is also a very urgent question for us in the province of Quebec. I was glad to hear the declarations made by my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham), that the government was going to take up this subject without delay and see if something could not be done to diminish the number of fatalities. I listened to what was said by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), and I quite agree with him that, so far as making the level crossings safe is concerned, there should be no contribution by anybody but the railway companies themselves. But when you would propose to eliminate a level crossing altogether, I must say that I feel some embarrassment in holding the same conclusion. I do not know if I understood my hon. friend to say that he thought that no contribution ought to be made except by the federal government.

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, I say so—as distinguished from the municipality and the province.

Mr. MONK. It may be that my hon. friend is right. He has given a great deal of study to this question, which I have not. But I incline rather to believe that not only the government should contribute, but there should be some mode by which the municipality should contribute in a proportion which I am not prepared to designate at the present moment. The elimination of level crossings by the railway company with a contribution only by the government would give rise to a great deal of difficulty, I think, because it involves interference with the roads. I think it would be necessary—and I think it would be fair as a general rule—that the municipalities should contribute something, and that they should be interested and co-operate in the elimination. I do not think the province should be called upon to contribute—I do not see any reason why such a contribution should be called for. In Montreal at least, we have found that the urgent necessity for the elimination of these terrible death-traps arises from the growth of municipalities around the crossings, making a great artery of the road which crosses the railway, and thus making it far more dangerous. This and other reasons, I think, might be adduced as reasons why the municipality should become interested in the work and contribute in some small proportion. I think that in Toronto the work of substituting other crossings for level crossings was contributed to by the municipality under special agreement

In Montreal we concluded an agreement with the Grand Trunk for the elimination of level crossings by contributing, I think, the sum of $1,000,000, and I would be inclined to say that not only the municipalities interested in the elimination of the crossings but also the government should contribute something. I would be inclined to place the initiation of that elimination with the municipalities. Of course any scheme of that kind would, under the present conditions, necessitate enabling legislation by the provinces empowering the municipalities to take action and to have recourse to what is in reality a Dominion tribunal established to regulate our federal railways and, having had recourse to that tribunal, to be bound by its directions. I think it is only fair in some instances I have in mind to ask that the municipalities should contribute something, and that the Dominion government should contribute a fixed proportion determined in advance, but not an arbitrary proportion, a percentage of so much which would be defined by legislation.

This motion entirely meets with the views and desires of the province of Quebec and I hope the promise made by the Minister of Railways will be fulfilled as promptly as possible.

Hon. J. HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, in supporting the very excellent resolution of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) I wish to compliment him upon the research he has made and on his very excellent speech in support of his motion. The subject is one of the most important that comes before this parliament for consideration. It is associated with the subject of transportation, and transportation is, after all, the highest politics and the vital question for the parliament of Canada to consider. Anything in reference to transportation ought to be considered carefully and well by the people of Canada. It is all-important to us that the transportation of passengers and freight should be rapid in order to compete with other countries. If we have speed and level crossings we must have danger to the people of the country. The figures brought forward by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) in support of his resolution giving the number of accidents which occurred among railway employees on this continent in comparison with other countries where they have better provision for safeguarding public crossings were appalling. I had no idea the death rate was so high. We are suffering from the effects of early conditions in this country. We were bound to have railways, but we could not have them if we imposed European conditions upon them. We had to submit to all these difficulties and dangers which now accompany our railways in order to get them. We are getting out of that position now. What ought we to do? We should do as the Minister of Railways has suggested and impose upon railways to which we grant charters in future certain provisions in reference to crossings. I prefer the manner suggested by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), that these conditions should be statutory and the enforcement left either to a court or to the Railway Commission. But the time has arrived when we must do something not only in the interest of the people of the country themselves, but in the interest of the railway companies. They are anxious to have the Commission make inquiry into these crossings for the purpose of arriving at some plan or other by which these dangers should be either gradually eliminated or in some way guarded against. The amount that a railway company pays in the shape of damages for loss of life, in pensions to injured employees and destruction of material would to a great extent offset the cost of doing away with the level crossings or guarding them. I was struck with the law of Connecticut mentioned by the hon. member providing that each railway line in the state shall eliminate one of these dangers for every 60 miles of road each year. That would be a gradual improvement in the conditions.

I realize the difficulty of an arrangement between the federal and provincial governments and the municipalities as to contributions towards the elimination of these crossings. My contention is that the power vested by the British North America Act in the federal government with respect to railways covers everything incidental to the charter which we give them. If it is necessary to cross a highway, jurisdiction over which is in the province, we do not need to get legislation from that province in order to regulate the manner of crossing. The very power given to us to grant a charter for a railway gives us everything incidental to it. I am not going to give any opinion of my own, but I am going to state to the House that I have listened to the biggest lawyers that were ever in this House, to Ministers of Justice to whom the question had been submitted, and they were all of the opinion that where power was given to the federal government to do a thing everything in the slightest degree incidental to it, although the province would otherwise have had jurisdiction, was also given to the federal government. What practical legislation can we enact on this question? It would be unwise and unfair to pass legislation to say that a crossing shall be overhead or underground. In Great Britain that is the law except in very exceptional cases. As my hon. friend says, a level crossing is permitted perhaps in the Highlands of Scotland. where there is not much travel over the road, and then a gate is required to protect it. We cannot adopt such a law as that in this country at the present time. We could not get railways built, but we must gradually go in that direction. One of the primary objects that we must keep in view in our legislation in reference to railways is the protection of the lives of the people, and our legislation should have that tendency as long as it does not act as a detriment or as a bar to the development of our transportation facilities. A well considered scheme may be thought out, one that would apply to the future and also have regard, to a certain extent, to the past. I prefer not giving powers to the Commission to be exercised arbitrarily as they think proper. I prefer the suggestion of my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) that there should be a well thought out scheme adopted by the parliament of Canada and that it should then be placed in the hands of the Commissioners to be carried out. Whatever scheme is adopted its guiding principle should have in view greater protection to the public at level crossings.

Mr. F. F. PARDEE (West Lambton). Mr. Speaker, just a word in connection with the resolution which is now before the House. As has been so well said by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) who has just taken his seat, transportation is perhaps the very greatest question that this country has before it and in connection with that I just wish to differ from the remarks of the hon. member for Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) regarding the question of the cost of the elimination of level crossings. There can be no doubt in the mind of the members of this House that level crossings are a menace to the lives of the people. They are a menace to every one who has occasion to travel upon the highway, and, taking that view of the matter, it lies with this House to devise some means in order that protection at level crossings may be provided. The hon. member for Lincoln, however, takes a view with which I am not inclined to agree. He starts out with the premise that the railways, at the time they obtained their charters, in years gone by, did not have the idea that fast trains would ever be run upon these roads, and upon this ground he bases the remark that the fault is the fault solely and wholly of the railways by reason of the multitude and rapidity of the trains. He further makes the remark that the fault is the fault of the railways only by reason of their desire to make more profit by the running of fast trains. As has been said by the hon. member for Lanark the transportation question is foremost in the minds of the people of Canada to-day. If, to-day, you were to eliminate these trains, if you were to take away from the freight and passenger service which you have by these trains to-day, if you were to have no fast trains, if you were to cut out these trains both for passengers and freight, I submit that the first people to find fault with you and to say that you had done absolutely wrong and that the railways were utterly to blame would be those who are to-day enjoying this service. Therefore, I think it is plainly evident that that argument will hardly hold water because you cannot take away from what you have got, and you have only got what you have now by reason of the increased demands of the people. If that is so should it be said that the fault is absolutely that of the railways? I take the position that it is not. If it is the fault of the railways it is because the demands of the people have compelled the railways to do what they are doing at the present time in the running of their trains. But now, the other question comes up. If the railway crossing is to be eliminated, in what way shall it be done? My hon. friend from Lincoln says that he thinks they ought to bear the whole cost. If the Dominion is to bear the whole cost of the elimination of crossings, when you take into consideration the fact that there are in the Dominion of Canada to-day upwards of 12,000 level crossings and when you come to take into consideration the further fact that it may cost a few hundreds of dollars to make them, some of them, overhead or underneath, while others may cost millions, would it be fair to say that when the people themselves are being protected through the various provinces and municipalities, the Dominion as a whole should bear the cost? If you allow the municipalities to get out of their share of the burden, I would ask the hon. gentleman how he would arrange such a scheme as the viaduct in Toronto?

Mr. LANCASTER. What I say is that if the municipality and the province pay in addition to the Dominion, then the municipality is paying three times over and the province twice. The man in the municipality pays his taxes to the province and the man in the province contributes the revenue to the Dominion.

Mr. PARDEE. What the hon. gentleman says may be true, but I would ask him if the municipality and the province to-day receive their share of the taxes from railways, is it not fair that the municipality and the province should bear some of the burden?

Mr. LANCASTER. Yes, but they should not pay three times over.

Mr. PARDEE. The railways are paying to the municipalities and the provinces large sums in the form of taxes, and under these circumstances it is not an unfair argument to ask that they should be required to pay something towards the elimination of these crossings. I did not intend to get into an argument with my hon. friend regarding this point. I agree that this is a big, broad question. that it should not be approached in any spirit other than in that of endeavouring to, in some way, lessen the danger, to get rid of the crossings, and it should be done in the most equitable way that can be devised by this House. If it is approached in that spirit, as it will be, then I think that some scheme will be worked out whereby the demands of the people will be satisfied. There can be no doubt about this point that a scheme cannot be formulated in a day or in a week. It is a matter that will have to be carefully considered so that justice may be done to all. This is a question that the government ought to take into consideration because it is a burning question with the people of the country. It is something that should be taken into consideration at once and it is something in regard to which some decision ought to be come to as rapidly as possible. It will not do to say that in so far as the railways are concerned they are the people to blame because the people who built the railways are simply carrying out what they are bound to carry out under their charters; that is to do the best they can for the people and to improve the service as much as the service is required to be improved. In the doing of this they are running trains; they are running faster trains and they are perhaps putting the people in the way of more danger than heretofore. But they are only doing what their charter calls on them to do, and they are doing it in the public interest and for the service of the people of Canada.

Mr. LENNOX. In reference to the suggestion of the Minister of Railways that this debate should not be continued in the absence of the Minister of Finance he has been good enough to say to me that he will afford another opportunity to the gentlemen who wish to speak on this question if he does not introduce a Bill this session as he intends to do. It being six o'clock I thought I would mention that that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. GRAHAM. Would the House permit me to offer a thought for consideration in reference to the question as to municipalities and provinces contributing for all the crossings? If whether they are in my municipality or in my province the Dominion would contribute, then when my province and my municipality get the additional benefit of having a level crossing eliminated in their borders should they not contribute something more?

Mr. LANCASTER. Is it a benefit?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it is a great benefit. I have no idea at all of trying to choke off discussion, and if I produce a Bill it will give opportunity for full discussion to every person. If such a calamity should overtake me that I should not be able to introduce a Bill I assure my hon. friend that the government will see that he will have every opportunity to further discuss this resolution.

At six o'clock the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 18, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The clerk of the House has received from the clerk of the Crown in Chancery a certificate of the election and return of the Hon. William Templeman, member elect for Comox-Atlin, British Columbia.

FIRST READING.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 64) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: This Bill is to correct what appears to have been an error which crept into the Bill as it passed last year. When the Dominion Lands Bill was before the Senate on July 17, 1908 —three days before the closing of parliament—an amendment was there moved to the following effect as appears by the minutes of the Senate:

The order of the day being read for the third reading of Bill (No. 181) entitled an Act to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the public lands of the Dominion, as amended, the Hon. Mr. Scott moved, seconded by the Right Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, that the said Bill, as amended, be now read a third time. The Hon. Mr. Lougheed in amendment, moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Perley:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time but be amended by restoring to section 42 in the 6th line thereof before the word 'schools,' the word 'public' so as to read 'public schools', as now in the present law respecting Dominion lands. The question of concurrence being put thereon, the same was resolved in the affirmative. The question of concurrence being again put on the main motion, the same was resolved in the affirmative. The said Bill, as further amended, was then read a third time accordingly. The question was put whether this Bill as further amended, shall pass. This was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, that the clerk go down to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that the Senate have passed this Bill with several amendments to which they desire their concurrence.

The message was taken down to the House of Commons on the same day, as appears from the Votes and Proceedings, July 17, 1908, page 1454. The minute is as follows:

A message was received from the Senate agreeing to the Bill (No. 181) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the public lands of the Dominion with an amendment which is as follows:

Page 8, line 21—after 'provide' insert the following as subclause 9 of clause 15:

'Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years imprisonment, who buys, trades or sells, or professes to buy trade or sell land, or any interest in or control of land open to homestead entry, or for which homestead entry has been granted, before patent therefor has been issued.

The House then adjourned at 1.55 o'clock a.m. until 11 o'clock a.m. this day.

It will be seen that the amendment moved by Senator Lougheed and adopted by the Senate did not appear in the message sent to the House of Commons and therefore that amendment did not come before the House for concurrence. Who was responsible for this omission, and whether it was the result of accident or design is to me unknown. In any event it never came before this House. This House agreed to the one amendment sent down, as appears from the following entry in our Votes and Proceedings of July 18 last, page 1464:

The amendments made by the Senate to the following Bills were taken into consideration and agreed to, namely Bill (No. 189) to amend the Civil Service Act, and Bill (No. 181) to consolidate and amend the Act respecting the public lands of the Dominion.

The result is that the clause, as it now stands, in the statutes of 1908, materially changes the law, as the word 'public' is omitted and the words now are: 'organized and carried on in accordance with the law of such province.

That was a material change in the Act. And, right here, I wish to draw attention to another thing. When the first Dominion Lands Bill was brought down, it had explanatory notes after the several clauses. The clause to which I now refer contained an amendment which appears in the Bill of 1908, and the note at the foot of it refers only to another amendment of the law which was properly brought to our attention by that explanatory note. But, when the Bill of the succeeding year was brought down, which purports to have the same explanatory notes at the foot of each clause, and where this important amendment was made in that clause, there is no reference to it in the explanatory note, but there is a reference to another change which was made in that clause. It was clause 42. In the Act of 1906-7, the clause is practically the same as in the old law and provides as follows:

All moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands should be invested in securities of Canada to form a school fund and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, should be paid annually to the government of the province within which such lands are situate toward the support of public schools therein.

The explanatory note says:

This provision is the same as in the present law, except that the words 'or territory' have been struck out, as the territory referred to has been divided into the new provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and there are no school lands beyond.

In the Bill of 1908, in which the important amendment I have referred to is made, there is no explanatory clause, except the one in the former Bill which I have just read. It makes no reference to the other very important change introduced into this Bill of 1908. Therefore reading the explanatory notes, as one naturally would, and finding no statement to the effect that this important change was to be made, in all human probability, a few of the members, when the Bill was going through, read the clause as it is now in the law. The Bill which I now introduce is to amend the Act so as to make it read as it was heretofore. The section now reads:

All moneys from time to time realized from the sale of school lands should be invested in securities of Canada to form a school fund, and the interest arising therefrom, after deducting the cost of management, should be paid annually to the government of the province within which such lands are situate, towards the support of schools organized and carried on in accordance with the law of such province.

The words of the old law were:

—toward the support of public schools therein.

My amendment would restore the wording of the original clause before this amendment was made in 1908.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 65) to amend the Railway Act. He said: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is, word for word, the Bill I promoted in this House last year. The Bill, after being introduced and read the first and second times, was sent to the Railway Committee, and there amended into the shape in which it now is. It passed the Railway Committee and came to this House, but was so late in getting through the Railway Committee that the session ended before it could be reached. The Bill provides that every railway company that receives a charter from this parliament shall be compelled not to spend fifteen per cent within the first two years as provided by the present law, but shall be compelled, if the railway is under 250 miles in length, to build ten per cent of the mileage during the first two years, an additional ten per cent in the third year, another ten in the fourth year, and to complete the road in five years as at present; if the road is over 250 miles in length, the company shall be compelled to build at least one-twentieth of the mileage in the first two years, an additional one-twentieth in each of the third and fourth years, and to complete in five years as at present. I believe that something along this line is absolutely necessary. I speak with some experience of how these matters work out, in the western country at all events. The constituency I represent is an old-settled constituency—settled since 1882—and there are many settlers in that country who have been waiting year after year for a road to be built; charters have been granted eight or ten years ago, and yet nothing has been done toward extending these lines of railway. The companies come before this House and before the Railway Committee, and, on one excuse or another, they get an extension of time. We have seen it this year in the Railway Committee that, almost every time an effort is made to force a railway company to build so much of its line each year, the excuse is made: You cannot pick out one railway company and treat it differently from the others. I agree with that; it would not be fair to treat one differently from the others. But I believe that it would be in the interest of the country generally, and especially of the west, that all railway companies should be compelled to build a certain proportion of their roads every year or forfeit the charter. It has been stated, time and again, that the possession of a charter does not prevent another road from getting a charter and going on and building. That may be well enough in theory, but it does not work out that way in practice. When one big company has the charter, it can play the dog in the manger to the fullest extent, not building its own proposed road and yet preventing other railways from building. We have had that to contend with for years in my own constituency. One of the big companies, the Canadian Pacific Railway, has a charter. They will not build the road, but the moment the Canadian Northern, or the Grand Trunk Pacific, gets a charter, and proposes to build, the Canadian Pacific Railway will go on and grade a few miles. Only yesterday, in the Railway Committee an hon. member from British Columbia gave us an instance in which one of the big railway companies—the same company—in order to keep out the Jim Hill system graded a portion of the road and laid the rails, but as soon as they had shut out the building of a competing line they not only ceased working, but actually took up the rails they had already laid. Is that a state of things we ought to tolerate in this country? I claim that the time has come when some change ought to be made. The railway companies are doing exactly as they like. We have no say as to where they shall build the branch lines; in the western country at all events they do not consult the wishes of the people, but build with a view to cutting out competing companies. What we want is a law that will compel them, when they get a charter, to go on and do something with the road. I have understood my right hon. friend the leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to state on several occasions that whenever the Railway Committee take a certain line of action, it is not his policy or the policy of the government to go contrary to the wishes of that committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) should confine himself to an explanation of his Bill as is customary on the first reading.

Mr. TURRIFF. Well, those, Mr. Speaker, are the reasons I have for introducing this Bill, and those are the provisions of the Bill. If it is thought desirable to send it to the Railway Committee. I have not the slightest doubt that the Railway Committee will do again this year as it did last year, pass the Bill and send it back here to be dealt with by the House.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

CANNED MEATS FOR THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. Has the attention of the government been drawn to the announcement that the British government has contracted for large quantities of canned meats for the army and navy, with firms in foreign nations?

2. Were efforts made by the British government to have these supplies furnished by Canada, Australia or South Africa?

3. Is it the custom of the British government to favour foreign nations with whom it wishes to cultivate friendship, and persons other than those loyal to Britain and her institutions, to the detriment and exclusion of those loyal and true to Britain and her institutions?

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. The attention of the government has not been drawn to the fact that the British government has contracted for large quantities of canned meats for the army and navy with firms in foreign countries.

2. On this the government has no information.

3. The propriety of this question seems to be questionable, as it implies a censure on a matter which is not of the competence of this House. But this government has no doubt that in any business relations the British government would, wherever possible, favour British countries in preference to foreign countries.

COST OF WORK ON THE ASSINIBOINE RIVER.

Mr. MEIGHEN asked:

What was the actual cost per yard of the work on the Assiniboine river, near Portage la Prairie, done in September or October, 1908?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). Twenty-two cents and a half per cubic yard.

IMPORTATIONS OF HICKORY AND ASH HANDLES.

Mr. ELSON asked:

1. How many hickory and ash handles for pitchforks, axes, hoes, hammers, etc., have been imported into Canada during the year ending March 31, 1908?

2. What were the quantities entered at the different ports?

3. What numbers of dozens, and the values of same, were imported by manufacturers on which the export drawback has been allowed?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). I regret that we are not able to answer all the questions on the paper. I have had a statement prepared which gives all we are able to afford in the way of reply. As it involves a great deal of detail, perhaps the hon. member will consent, with the permission of the House, that I hand this in to the 'Hansard.'

ISSUES OF POST OFFICE ORDERS AND POSTAL NOTES.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

What is the total number and amount of post office orders or postal notes issued in Canada payable in Great Britain and in Europe, during the calendar years 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908, respectively?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General): The following statement relates to money orders only, as postal notes issued in Canada are not negotiable in Great Britain or Europe.

TARIFF ON WOOD AND WOOD PULP.

Mr. JAMIESON asked:

1. Have any negotiations taken place or are any pending between the governments of Canada and the United States of America, contemplating the reduction of the American tariff on ground wood and woodpulp upon conditions prohibiting the imposition of an export tax upon such products by the government of Canada?
2. Is the government considering the imposition of an export tax upon ground wood and woodpulp?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister):

1. No.
2. The government are not considering the imposition of an export tax on these articles.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has the government received from the government of British Columbia a resolution adopted by the legislature of that province, praying that application be made to the Imperial government for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the circumstances in connection with Oriental immigration into British Columbia?
2. If so, what was the date of receipt, what acknowledgment was made, and what action has been taken?
3. If no action has been taken, is it the intention of the government to deal with the matter?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State):

1. No.

It is not in the public interest to disclose the amount of each tender, as the matter has not been disposed of.
3. The matter is under the consideration of the government.
4. $3,077.91.
5. It is the intention to begin the work.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS TREATY —FISHERIES IN NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. J. W. DANIEL (St. John City). I would like to call the attention of the government, and especially of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a statement which I see in the St. John 'Globe' of February 17. This is the statement:

In an Ottawa despatch to the Fredericton 'Gleaner' the position of the New Brunswick government is defined. Hon. Mr. Grimmer, Surveyor General, who represents this province at the conference, says:

'While he had no official knowledge of the nature of the proposed regulations he had been given to understand that they were applied to spawning grounds in the waters of Grand Manan and Petit Manan, and other points in New Brunswick sea waters which were fifteen miles and more from the international boundaries. He could not see how these could be described as international waters, and could see no reason for Canada's handing the management of them over to a commission in which the United States had any say.'

But this is the part to which I wish particularly to call attention:

In the original draft, as he understood it, it was proposed to give to the fishermen of each nation the right to come in and fish in the waters of the other nations as they were covered by the joint commission. He did not know how far this had been modified by the later changes in the regulations, but if it were put in force in that form it would hand over to Americans the best fishing grounds in Canada, while the American waters which were thrown open to Canadian were not worth mentioning. What he objected to was the principle of declaring waters to be international which were nowhere near the boundary line.

I would like to know from the government whether it is a fact that the treaty, and the regulations which are to be made under it, will permit American fishermen to enjoy the privileges of our inland fisheries in any of the waters which are embraced in this treaty; because if it does, it would allow American fishermen to come into the harbour of St. John and carry on fishing operations there, and fish all the way up the St. John river, notwithstanding that the harbour and the greater part of the river and many miles away from the boundary. I think it very important that the public should know whether that is the intention or not.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). In virtue of the treaty which was signed last year, it is provided that the fishery regulations of some of the boundary waters shall be uniform and under the control of a joint commission appointed by the Canadian government and the American government. This commission is composed of Dr. Jordan, as was stated the other day, on the American side, and Dr. Prince on the Canadian side. They are now at work preparing the regulations. I understand that a draft which has been prepared by the American commissioner got abroad and was published. I do not know whether the draft as published is correct or not. I am inclined to believe that it is not correct. At all events this draft has not been accepted by our commissioner and the regulations are the subject of negotiations now between the American and Canadian commissioners.

Mr. DANIEL. If the minister will excuse me, I think he did not answer the question which I asked whether the treaty, or these regulations would permit alien or American fishermen to fish in Canadian waters which are included in the treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. I missed that point. It is formally stated in the treaty, if I remember it aright, that Canadians will have the exclusive right to fish on the Canadian side and Americans on the American side.

Mr. DANIEL. That is a very important statement, and if that is so I presume that Americans will have the right to come into St. John harbour and fish——

Mr. BRODEUR. No, no.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the other way.

Mr. BRODEUR. No, my hon. friend did not understand me aright. I said that Canadians would have the right to fish on the Canadian side and Americans on the American side. There is no proposition, and I understand it will be contrary to the treaty for the Commission to give to American fishermen the right to fish in Canadian waters.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the minister one further question as to who will have the ultimate ratification or approval of these regulations made or to be made by Professor Prince and Mr. Jordan?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The two governments.

Mr. FOSTER. With or without the knowledge of parliament?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I cannot say as to that, but I may state that some fifteen or sixteen years ago the American and Canadian governments had a commission to make regulations for the preservation of fish in boundary waters. They made a report suggesting certain close seasons and joint regulations to be approved by both countries. This report never was acted upon by the American government, although we are prepared to act upon it. The object of the present commission is to have a system of joint regulations applicable both in the United States and in Canada so far as close seasons and other matters are concerned, but neither country has surrendered its rights within its own waters.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask as to whether this treaty goes into effect without being presented to the Canadian parliament?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it does.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) a question which I must preface by a few words. I noticed by the press yesterday that regulations are now being framed under the provisions of the Waterways Treaty, and I understand that these regulations simply refer to international waters. Under the decision of the Privy Council in the fisheries case some years ago, or by virtue of that decision, there has occurred and is occurring a conflict between the federal and provincial governments respecting their several jurisdictions. Some year or two ago, I think, the government appointed one Mr. Bastedo, of the province of Ontario, as a commissioner to negotiate with the provinces and to obtain, if possible some settlement or understanding as to the extent of the jurisdiction of the provinces and of the federal authorities. I noticed by the press lately that Mr. Bastedo was removed from this position and that Professor Prince was appointed in his place. I would like to know if Professor Prince is carrying on the negotiations with the provincial governments, if he has reported progress and what, if any, information the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can give us. It is an extremely important matter and it is a very unfortunate thing for the fisheries of this country that, by reason of the decision of the Privy Council, there exists a conflict of jurisdiction. As far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned, I am sure it would be quite willing to abandon any rights it may have as a province under that decision and transfer them to the Dominion government. I believe that in that province we would go as far as to amend the British North America Act to make it absolutely plain——

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the hon. gentleman is exceeding the limits of a question.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am just finishing—make it absolutely plain that the control of our coast fisheries is absolutely within the control of the Dominion parliament. The question I desire to ask is what progress has been made with the negotiations with the provinces respecting this matter?

Mr. BRODEUR. There have been no negotiations with the provincial governments concerning the question of the fisheries except in a casual way in a conference which took place a few days ago between representatives of the New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario governments and myself. As there may be some misapprehension with regard to that conference, I may inform the House as to what has been done and as to the circumstances under which that conference took place. This conference had nothing to do with the Waterways Commission, as my hon. friend has stated, but it was held for the purpose of discussing with the provincial governments interested, that is to say, the governments of New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, the regulations which are to be the subject of negotiations between the Canadian and American commissioners. I thought that before the Canadian commissioner should meet more formally the American commissioner he should have the benefit of the views of the provincial authorities. The three governments in question were, with the exception of the government of British Columbia, the only ones which were interested in the regulations which are to be made under the treaty. The treaty provides for joint and uniform regulations in Passamaquoddy bay and in the St. John and St. Croix rivers in the province of New Brunswick; in Lake Memphramagog and Lake Champlain, in the province of Quebec, and within the great lakes and connecting rivers in Ontario, including the north channel. I thought that before Professor Prince should meet the American commissioner he should have the opportunity of meeting and consulting with the provincial authorities as to the regulations which should be accepted. The conference took place; while I am not at liberty to state what has been the result of this conference, I must say that it was conducted in the most harmonious way, and that we were very glad to have the benefit of the views which were expressed by the provincial governments.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That is hardly an answer to my question. What I want to know is this: Some two years ago the government was in conference with the provincial governments as to the question of jurisdiction——

Mr. SPEAKER. The rules only allow the hon. gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. BRODEUR. There were no negotiations with regard to the question of the jurisdiction of the provincial authorities except in a casual way at the conference which took place the other day.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Are the negotiations still going on?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to ask the minister if, under the terms of the treaty, all the waters of the St. John river and its tributaries are placed under the control of the International Commission, or is the jurisdiction limited to the portion of the waters which constitute the boundary line?

Mr. BRODEUR. If I remember aright, the treaty includes the whole of the St. John river; the part in Canada as well as the part in the United States.

Mr. CROCKET. And all its tributaries ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The tributaries are not included.

Mr. FOSTER. As the minister has given us an opinion on two or three occasions as to what the treaty really means in certain points, I would ask him whether it is not competent for the government to make all the members of the House quite as wise as himself by laying that treaty on the table of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. It was laid on the table of the House last year.

Mr. BRODEUR.

Mr. FOSTER. With reference to the regulations which are to be made by Professor Prince and Mr. Jordan and on which the minister has asked the views of representatives from the provincial governments, would he take occasion to consult with the members of the House before these regulations are finally adopted?

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be very glad to have the benefit of the views of the members of the House who take an interest in the matter; in fact I have already asked some hon. gentlemen to give me their views.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The regulations to be made would cover the whole of the St. John river ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the finding of these commissioners would not require to be ratified by parliament. Will the government have power to accept or reject that conclusion if they think fit ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In view of the observations made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) a moment ago I think my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will have every opportunity to look at the treaty and we will know what he has to say about it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not a copy of it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has been before the House for the last six months.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). I wish to call attention to what appears to be an inaccuracy in the reply given to-day to question No. 20 on the Order Paper. I asked whether this government had received from the government of British Columbia a certain resolution, and the answer was, no. I have in my hand a report of the proceedings of the British Columbia legislature on the 2nd inst., in which appears this communication from the secretary of the Lieutenant Governor of the province:

The 28th day of January, 1909.

At the Government House, Victoria, B.C.

Dear Sir.—In reply to your memorandum, of the 27th inst., with regard to a resolution having reference to oriental immigration, which was forwarded by His Honour to Ottawa on the 16th March last, the only correspondence thereon received from the Secretary of State was a letter dated the 23rd of March, informing His Honour that it had been submitted to His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

In view of this I would like to ask if the Secretary of State would be good enough to inquire further into the matter and give me a more complete answer to the question.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I presume that the Secretary of State answered from the information given him by his department, but I have already asked my private secretary to look through the correspondence of the Privy Council Department and I presume it may be found there.

FISHERY BOUNTIES.

Mr. ADAM B. CROSBY (Halifax). I want to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries a question which was put by me on Monday and Tuesday last, and which was put by the hon. the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) on Wednesday. Why is it that the fishermen in a number of the districts in Halifax county have not yet received the blank forms on which to file their claims for last year's bounty? This is an important matter and I wish an answer.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I was engaged on Tuesday and Wednesday at the conference with reference to the fishery regulations and was unfortunately unable to be present in the House, but I can answer the hon. gentleman now. Formerly the bounty claims were collected by Mr. Ogden who was in charge of the Bedford fish hatchery and who resigned in July or August last. These bounty claims are generally collected after the fishing season which would be about the end of November. I do not think the appointment covers the whole county of Halifax, but there was delay with regard to the district between Bedford and Nine Mile river in which Mr. Ogden formerly collected the claims. On the 3rd of December I made a recommendation to council for the appointment of another man, at a small salary, I think $75, to look after the collection of these claims. That recommendation had to go to the treasury board and unfortunately it was lost between the Privy Council and the Treasury Board. When my attention was called to this later on I made a new recommendation, and the new man has been appointed and I am informed the collection is being made. All those who have claims for bounties will be paid as promptly as possible.

Mr. CROSBY. Am I to understand that this gentleman is in his office now and collecting claims? I am informed by some fishermen that they have not yet had an opportunity of filing their claims.

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Venning informs me that Mr. Christian was fully instructed as to his duties and supplied with the necessary forms.

Mr. CROSBY. But they have not yet got to the fishermen?

Mr. BRODEUR. The fishermen will of course be paid later on.

INQUIRY FOR REPORTS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When will the concluding volume of the Auditor General's Report be brought down?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State). I expect it will be ready to-morrow.

Mr. H. R. EMMERSON. When may we expect the report of the Department of Railways and Canals?

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Early next week; it is in the hands of the printer.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public buildings, chargeable to capital—Ottawa, new departmental buildings, $125,000.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). This sum is asked to make provision to complete payments for the purchase of properties on Sussex street and Mackenzie avenue as a site for the new departmental buildings. I gave very full information at the last session in regard to the cost of the land.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any additional land been bought since?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and we have expropriated the remainder. Between the first of April, 1908, and the 31st of December there was paid $49,394.30. I cannot give the actual dates of the purchases.

Mr. FOSTER. These are payments which were made in carrying out the purchases which were agreed upon, and which were explained to the House last session?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Has all the land been purchased and paid for that is necessary for these buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not all paid for, because with respect to some of the properties, we have not been able to agree with the vendors, and proceedings have been taken in the Exchequer Court to obtain a valuation.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the total amount paid so far?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the 31st December, 1908, $459,900.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimate of the amount required to secure the whole?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected that the present vote will cover the entire purchase.

Mr. FOSTER. That will make about $600,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just about.

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done with reference to the buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing has been done with regard to the erection of the buildings beyond obtaining the plans; but I think it is not unlikely that in the very near future a start will be made, not for the erection of all the buildings, but for the erection of a wing to afford much needed accommodation. As the estimated cost of the buildings is very considerable, we have not thought it well to proceed with the whole scheme at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $4,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Is any portion of this to be devoted to building purposes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not quite sure. It is just possible that if the expropriation valuation is not completed at a fairly early date, we may enter into a contract for the erection of a wing; and, if so, we will use part of the money for that purpose. I may say we are greatly pressed by the Board of Railway Commissioners for additional accommodation, and, instead of renting premises in Ottawa, we have thought it might be well to erect what would serve in the future as a wing of these buildings. I am not quite sure whether we shall do that or not; it is now under consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my hon. friend would do well to add the words, 'purchase of site' to this vote, so that he would not use a portion of it to commence a wing. Let it stand for what it is intended for. What does my hon. friend think the wing will cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not yet had an estimate of the cost of the wing prepared. The chief architect is considering the matter. I may say that it is only within the last two or three weeks that it has been pressed on my attention by the Board of Railway Commissioners. They are greatly cramped for room, and they have asked us to rent a building to give them more accommodation. In considering what would be the necessary rental, I have thought that a good deal of money could be saved if we made a start by erecting a wing to afford the Railway Commissioners the accommodation they require, and to let the larger building stand for perhaps a few years. But this is entirely tentative. It will be some little time before the chief architect can give us the plans and estimates of cost of the building.

Mr. OSLER. Are the plans being prepared by the government architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Plans have been received, as the result of public competition, but they are being revised by the government architect, and we are considering whether we might not, with great advantage and economy, erect a wing which could be used for the Board of Railway Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend cannot build that out of this appropiation. He cannot really take anything out of this appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We could let the contract.

Mr. FOSTER. Could you let a contract without having a sufficient amount of money voted, at least to carry on the operations for the year? The explanation of my hon. friend was that this would barely suffice to pay for the ground. We should have some definiteness if possible in our estimates. If this is for the purchase of a site, let it appear, and if my hon. friend proposes to go into the erection of a department building let him come down and ask for an appropriation. He may think it would be economy to build a wing, but I think he will admit that there are some other considerations to be looked at which might make it less desirable to go into any other large expenditure.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have given every consideration to the matter. To arrange for the erection of a suitable building would mean the erection by a private company of a building suitable for the purpose, and that would mean engaging to rent the building for a term of years, to which I am opposed as it would not be economy to do so.

Mr. FOSTER. For what department is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the Board of Rail-Commissioners. They are very much cramped now. Several clerks occupy one room, and some are in rooms which are very dark. Mr. Scott, the assistant chief commissioner, has a room entirely unsuitable, and I think the demand is reasonable. What I thought might be done is this. It is possible that these properties, in regard to which proceedings have to be taken in the Exchequer Court, will not be required to be paid for until next year. If we have this vote, we could erect a suitable wing, or a part of a wing suitable for the accommodation required for $100,000, and it might be economy to let the contract and have the building completed next year.

Mr. J. D. REID. When the minister was arranging for the building of these new departmental offices, did he consider the advisability of securing the block between the Post Office and the Langevin block? That is a block which the government could secure, and make that street opposite the parliamentary buildings all government property. In a few years that property will be much more valuable than now. I would like to see that building out there, or at least as much as could be used for a public building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have thought of that property, but as the government has such a large amount of property on Sussex street and Mackenzie avenue, I did not feel justified in entering into negotiations for its purchase at present.

Ottawa Parliament Buildings—additions and alterations, $93,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for buildings during the coming year, the works in connection with the additions and alterations of the parliament buildings, such as the new wing and additions.

Mr. CROCKET. How much will that make the total cost of the new wing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything, $447,732.94. That will include the original contract, also the elevators, heating, plumbing, furniture, electric wiring, etc.

Mr. AMES. What was the amount of the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $237,433.

Mr. AMES. And the extras amount to as much more?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are not extras. They are things which were not provided for in the original contract. They include taking down walls, cementing walls, the renewal of wings, lumber, hardware, elevators, $17,-150, alterations and improvements in the different buildings, switchboards, radiators, etc.

Mr. AMES. Were not tenders invited for these additions? Were tenders invited for the elevators?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we decided that it is very much better to instal the Otis-Fensom elevator, as we believe their system to be the best. We have had some experience calling for tenders in elevators, and it was very unsatisfactory.

Mr. AMES. Which of these items, not included in the original contract, were given out without tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might give those for which tenders were called, which will no doubt suit my hon. friend's purpose. Alterations to window frames, $1,011.79; Speaker's quarters in the House of Commons, $4,567.19; additional work, $18,458.63; Tile and Marble work in the tiled rooms, $4,794.-92. I find, however, I am mistaken. My memo. says, 'tender accepted.' There were no public tenders invited except for the original contract.

Mr. AMES. Then all the other $237,000 were given out without tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Without public tender.

Mr. AMES. What line of action was followed in deciding to whom these should be given?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contractor for the building was asked to tender for the different works. It would be very much more convenient for him to do the other work; and upon his tender being received, the chief architect was instructed to go carefully into the cost, and on his certifying that the tender was reasonable it was accepted.

Mr. AMES. Are we to understand that this example is a fair indication of the manner in which government buildings are constructed? The original contract is let by tender for one-half the value, and the remainder given at prices arranged between the government and the contractor. Here is a building costing nearly $500,000, and the original contract let was for only $237,-000. The extras, subsequently arranged for with the contractor, amount to a sum equal to the original expenditure. There was no competition for about one-half the entire expenditure on the building. Is this the regular method adopted by the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not the regular method. It depends on the circumstances and the kind of work to be done. My hon. friend, who has had a good deal to do with the erection of buildings, will realize that if the contractor is a reliable man, and will do the extra work required at a price certified to by the architect as reasonable, it is better to give him that work, as it is likely to be much better done than if there were independent contractors for the different classes of work

Mr. AMES. The minister is correct, in some respects, in saying that I have had experience in connection with firms that have had large building contracts. But we have found no difficulty, when we wanted a large building, in finding an architect who would draw in advance the plans which would cover the whole building, so that it could all be let by tender and contract, and the extras would not exceed ten per cent of the whole. In this case, you have extras practically dollar for dollar of your original contract, which, I need hardly tell the minister, is a wholly indefensible proportion.

Mr. CROCKET. Were the plans drawn by the architect of the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this amount include furnishing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Were separate contracts given for the furnishing ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. With respect to a good deal of the furnishing, tenders were invited from the different firms.

Mr. FOSTER. What firms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give them at the moment, but I will undertake to send my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) a memorandum of them.

Mr. FOSTER. Were tenders called for by letter or by circular, or were public advertisements issued?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By letter.

Mr. FOSTER. What does the bill for furnishing amount to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the memorandum before me there is an item for renewal of windows, lumber, hardware, furniture, &c., $40.555.04. There is also an amount due for furniture, glassware, silverware, &c., $9,000.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Was the original contract let on schedule prices?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it was a lump sum contract.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Then, how could it be extended ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not extended.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I understood the minister to say that the work was given to the original contractor, which means, I take it, that the contract was extended.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not use the word 'extended.' When the plans were originally prepared, it was not known, and, I suppose, could hardly be known how the rooms would be divided up to accommodate the officials and members of the House. As my hon. friends know, there has been a good deal of difficulty, even since the opening of the session, in making this division. The contract did not provide for the partitions to divide up the rooms.

Mr. AMES. What did the original contract include?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish I had the contract here.

Mr. AMES. But the minister can give it to us in a general way.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that it included the walls, the roof, the floor, the stairs and such interior walls as were necessary to carry the roof and floors.

Mr. AMES. And were the subdividing walls, the tiling, the windows, and everything of that kind, which ordinarily goes to make a house—the plumbing and heating apparatus also—considered as extra and given out afterwards without tender or contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The tiling was included in the original contract. The plumbing and heating were done by the staff of the department. The subdividing walls were not included, because it could not be known with accuracy how the rooms were to be divided.

Mr. AMES. Messrs. McGillivray & Labelle, the original contractors, had a contract for $237,000. How much did they receive, all told?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They received, altogether, $381,507.52.

Mr. AMES. That is, about $150,000 was paid to the contractors in addition to their original contract for work which they did under arrangement with the department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I make it about $140,000, but my hon. friend (Mr. Ames) is substantially correct.

Mr. AMES. I think the minister will see that that method, if generally followed throughout the Public Works Department, is one open to very considerable abuse. The ordinary tenderers in competition tender with the expectation that they will have to do what their contract calls for, and that that will end the matter. If a tenderer expects to have $150,000 of extras besides, he can afford to figure low on the first estimate, in the expectation of being able to get a large margin on the balance. In that way, other tenderers competing against him who might aggregate something less, are shut out. The method is open to great abuse.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I quite agree that the method is one that ought not to be followed, and it is not followed. But this is an exceptional case. We did not know, at least I suppose my predecessor did not know when the contract was let nor until the building was pretty well erected, what would be required. My hon. friend from North Toronto I trust is reasonably well satisfied. The chief Conservative whip of course was consulted as to the number of rooms which we required.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Conservative whip was not consulted until everything was laid out, and then he had simply to walk through and see what was done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Was not my hon. friend consulted last session?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. After the work was all done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was not done last session.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The partitions were all up before I was taken into the confidence of the government at all. Then I walked through the building with the ex-Speaker, and he told me what he intended to do about allotting these rooms.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understood that last session before the partitions were finally erected, the late Speaker was consulted, and I think he consulted with the leader of the opposition, and I think also with the the chief whip of the opposition; and it was after careful consideration that instructions were given as to the laying out of the different rooms.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The partitions were all up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They were not all up before the late Speaker was consulted.

Mr. CROCKET. When was the original contract signed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the 9th of January, 1907.

Mr. CROCKET. When was the arrangement made with the contractor for additions?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From time to time as the work went on and we knew what was required. I could give the dates to my hon. friend. One was on the 10th of September, 1908, one on the 22nd of October, one on the 3rd of October, one on the 10th of April.

Mr. CROCKET. They amounted to $150,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $140,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount chargeable to alterations or additions in the arrangement made on April 10?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will read the items. Taking down walls, and cement for walls, $4,990; renewals of windows, lumber, hardware and paint, $40,555.04; elevators, $17,150; alterations and improvements for ventilation, including motors, $32,516.75. That takes in the old building. Then radiators, $5,505.95; rubber tiling, $7,565.65; printing and advertising, salary of clerk of works, $3,924.87. The total expenditure up to the 31st of January was $314,038.94.

Mr. FOSTER. What did the extras amount to on the 10th of April?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To the difference between $314,000 and $201,830.

Mr. FOSTER. There does not seem to be anything in all these items which occurred gratuitously, or which could not have been foreseen, which were not in what you might call the stock parts of the work of constructing the building. Can my hon. friend point out any that were not? I do not see anything there that the late Speaker interfered with, as to what partitions should be put up, what rooms should be made, how many upon a flat, or anything of that kind. Can the minister point out anything which was done from the interference of the late Speaker, or of the whips, or of any member of parliament?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend has misunderstood me. I did not say that the late Speaker interfered, or that the chief whip interfered. What I tried to say was that when the original contract was let some of the plans for the laying out of the interior of the building did not appear to be feasible. The then Speaker was consulted with regard to that. I think the leader of the opposition raised a question as to the apportionment of the rooms, as to who would probably have to do with it, and it was the general opinion of the House that it should rest with the Speaker and the Minister of Public Works. We received some suggestions from the late Speaker. With regard to these items I am no table to point out any, where the suggestions of the Speaker would have changed the cost one way or the other. I am not able to say as to to what part of these works might have been provided for at the outset. Taking down the walls, that is a class of work which would ordinarily be done by the day. Then renewals of windows, lumber, hardware and paint—that was in connection with the old building, and would probably be done by the day. Then take furniture, carpets, matting, as to which prices were obtained from different trades.

Mr. AMES. Are we to understand that furniture, carpets and matting are included in the cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the cost which I gave.

Mr. AMES. And are charged to capital account?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is all charged to capital account.

Mr. AMES. Does it not seem strange to charge carpets and matting that wear out in the course of a few years, to capital account?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has been the practice, I believe, ever since confederation to charge the original furnishings of buildings at the capital, to capital account.

Mr. AMES. A bad precedent need not necessarily be followed. I think a better business method could be introduced.

Mr. PUGSLEY. When I have to do with the erection of a building under my own administration, I will carefully consider the suggestion of my hon. friend.

Mr. CROSBY. I want to find out how this thing happened to be constructed. Why was it constructed at all?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was constructed with the authority and with the approval of parliament, which made an appropriation for the work two or three years ago.

Mr. CROSBY. Did they know what they wanted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume they wanted additional accommodation.

Mr. CROCKET. Am I to understand from the minister that these additional works that he has mentioned were not made the subject of a specific contract and that the contractor was simply directed to go on and perform these works without any arrangement being made as to what they were to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say that. I said that public tenders were not called but that the contractor was invited to give a price at which he would do the work and, upon the chief architect going over the matter and certifying that the price was fair and reasonable, a contract was entered into for most of this work.

Mr. CROCKET. First there was a price obtained before the contractor was directed to proceed with the work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, in most cases.

Mr. AMES. Were any others asked to give figures for the same work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, only the contractors.

Mr. AMES. So that the prices of $150,000 worth of work were arranged between the department and contractor without competition of any kind?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is entirely right.

Mr. BARR. Was the same plan followed with regard to the carpets and heating; that is the chief architect got prices and made arrangements with whomever he chose, no tenders being asked?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No public tenders were called. Boilers, radiators and things of that kind were purchased at market price. The chief architect has had large experience in these matters and he would know whether the contractor's price was reasonable or not. In general my hon. friend is right; no public tenders were invited, but the chief architect satisfied himself in every case that the price was fair and reasonable.

Mr. BARR. If there is open competition there is always likely to be a reduction. In this case it seems that such was not the case. Evidently the contractor had it all his own way, or, at least, in so far as he and the architect were concerned, they could fix things up to suit themselves. No outsider had any opportunity of tendering.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister has given the details of the work that was arranged for on April 10. How many other arrangements of that kind were made?

Mr. FOSTER. What was the next one?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give them in the order of date. There was one on the 10th of September, 1908, the amount being $1,011.77.

Mr. PUGSLEY

Mr. FOSTER. What for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For alterations to window frames in the speaker's quarters and several other changes.

Mr. CROCKET. When was that arranged for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the 22nd of October, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. What did that include?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That included certain changes in the work. They were very considerable in the Speaker's quarters, necessary by reason of the addition which was made. Certain windows were blocked up and other accommodation had to be given to the Speaker. Then there was another contract on the 3rd of October, 1908, for additional work amounting to $18,548.63.

Mr. FOSTER. What was included in that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry I cannot give that to my hon. friend at present.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a very large one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, quite large. The chief architect tells me that is principally for division walls.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there a plan of the divisional walls drawn by the chief architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Everything was specified?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes in the contract entered into.

Mr. FOSTER. And it was entered into without competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Then there was certain tile and marble work in toilet rooms and in the kitchen.

Mr. FOSTER. What date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry the date is omitted.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the amount?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $4,794.92.

Mr. CROCKET. This all went to the original contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Then, on the 10th of April, 1908, there was a contract for a balustrade which was carried along the edge of the roof on the outside and which was necessary to give uniformity to the building.

Mr. FOSTER. Was not that foreseen in the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOSTER. What did that amount to?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $4,439.69. Of course, I am making a statement of what took place before I became minister, and the chief architect is my authority for this information. Then there was alteration to steel work and cutting floors and walls for plumbers' work and heating pipes amounting to $10,802. As to that there was no contract. Bills of cost were rendered by the contractor. The contractors have not been paid in full yet but $381,507.22 covers the original contract and also this additional work. Is there anything else you would like to have?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not get exactly what the furnishing cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not that separated; it is included.

Mr. FOSTER. There is none of it included in the items we have had?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but it is included in my memorandum. For lumber, hardware, furniture, carpets, glassware, &c., there is a total of $40,555.04. I can get the cost of the furniture and give it to my hon. friend later on. There is $9,000 which is due for furniture, glassware, &c. I have not given the items which make the total of $447,000 yet. I was stopped. Perhaps I had better give them now. I gave the figures of the total expenditure down to 1909 as $314,028.94. The amount due on contract, additional work, is $79,617; due on elevators, $9,150; due for heating and plumbing, $9,308; due for furniture, glassware, silverware, &c., $9,000; due for electric wiring and fixtures, $3,180; due for fitting up the Speaker's quarters, $6,000; due for painting, $5,000——

Mr. FOSTER. What do you mean by fitting up the Speaker's quarters?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Painting, decorating, furniture, &c.

Mr. FOSTER. Who did the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The department did some by day labour with its own staff.

Mr. FOSTER. Who did the chief work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Bell, of Montreal.

Mr. FOSTER. How much was paid Mr. Bell?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has not rendered his account yet. The chief architect tells me that the account will, including some of the furniture, be about $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there any contract with Mr. Bell?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Was he given carte blanche?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. He was held under strict supervision.

Mr. FOSTER. By whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By the chief architect.

Mr. FOSTER. In what way?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He was told to do so and so, and the prices were fixed for the different things.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister say that prices were absolutely fixed for the different parts of the work done by Mr. Bell? That there were plain and definite specifications and that Mr. Bell was instructed just what to do and not to do any more?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me there was a description of the work and the price was fixed as closely as possible in work of that character.

Mr. FOSTER. That specification is in writing?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me they have the price of practically everything in writing.

Mr. CROCKET. Were the arrangements for the additional work approved by the minister before the contract was closed between the architect and the contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The authority was from the outset for the chief architect to make arrangements with the contractor if he would do the work at prices which he certified to be fair and reasonable. These were his general instructions. It was a departmental matter and the judgment of the chief architect in such things would prevail.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it the practice of the chief architect to make contracts involving such large expenditure without obtaining the approval of the minister or consulting him?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was consulted and gave the architect authority to make this arrangement provided the prices were fair and reasonable in his judgment.

Mr. CROCKET. Before the arrangement was closed would the approval of the minister be asked?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take the chief architect's certificate as to the price.

Mr. CROSBY. Did the government have any estimate made of what this was going to cost; did they have any idea of that as a business man would have?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the work was undertaken the chief architect estimated that it would cost for the building—which would not include the heating or the furnishing, or this work done in the old part—$275,000.

Mr. CROSBY. Surely the government knew what they were going to build and must have had an estimate made. Did the architect give an estimate merely for the bare walls without any heating or lighting or any props except a few props to keep the roof up? The people of Canada should know how it is that we came to spend half a million dollars on a new wing to this building, and I want to know all details from the minister so that I may be able to tell my constituents about it. If I tell them the story I am hearing to-night they will not be satisfied.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect estimated for the walls of the building, for the principal partitions which were necessary to support the roof, and the floors, and——

Mr. CROSBY. And the doors I suppose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, exactly, for what was included in the contract. He estimated $275,000 and the lowest tender was $237,000, or about $40,000 less. If the hon. gentleman desires I will bring down the contract.

Mr. CROSBY. What was his estimate for the balance of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect tells me that at the time his estimate was that the partitions, and the plumbing, and the heating, and the electric lighting, and everything of that kind, would cost about $125,000 more, without the furniture.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. My recollection is that when the late Minister of Public Works decided to make the improvement he laid on the table of the House a plan, and that plan showed all the rooms as they exist now. I do not see why the tender did not cover the completed building. It was known then that heating and plumbing would have to be provided for. The contractor went on with his work, and then the Public Works Department sent their men on to undo what the contractor had done, and to put in water pipes and heating pipes. Any business man would have attended to these in the first place; but with the department they were an after consideration, and the result was to increase the cost by 50 per cent. My recollection is that the first plan included everything.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, my hon. friend is in error.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. We had the plans on the table here, and they showed the building divided into rooms.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that the plans simply showed the main partitions, but not the layout of the rooms, because I suppose the minister at that time did not know how the rooms would be divided up.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the partitions made of?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Terra cotta. The building, I should say, is as near fireproof as it is possible to make it.

Mr. DANIEL. I understood the minister to state just now that the architect had told him that the probable cost of this new wing, all completed, would be about $400,000. I wish to read to the minister and the House what the minister stated with regard to this matter last year. The estimate was: "Parliament buildings, additions and alterations, $150,000;" and the minister said:

The note which I have from the officers of my department is that this vote of $150,000 is asked to make provision for continuing the works placed under contract in connection with the additions and alterations to the parliament buildings, which consist in extending the northwest wing northward and the residence of the Speaker of the House of Commons westward, the construction of a new upper story and roof on the tower which forms a portion of the residence, the cubic contents being 745,000 cubic feet; also for alterations to the parliament buildings in accordance with the sub-joined estimate submitted by the chief architect. The amount paid to the contractors is $76,970; renewal of windows, furniture, carpets, matting, lumber, paints, labour, $7,300.30; alterations and improvements to ventilation system, speed motor, switchboard, Nernst lamps, &c. $21,567.75; contingencies, printing, advertising and salary of clerk of works, $1,939.92, making a total expenditure up to the 31st March, 1907, of $107,777.97. Then I have further information. The amount due on the contract work is $160,463; heating and boilers, $5,000; electrical wiring and fixtures, $5,000; furniture, $10,000, &c. The total probable cost of the additions and alterations to the parliament buildings is $322,247.97.

Now, the minister told us this afternoon that the architect had assured him that the probable cost was $400,000. Which of these statements is correct, and what will be, not the probable cost, but the actual cost when the work is finished?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend misunderstood me. I did not state that the architect had told me that the probable cost would be $400,000. He informed me that that was the estimate which he had given to the then minister. The statement that my hon. friend has read would be correct at that time, according to the progress of the work up to that date. I suppose that in the statement I gave there may not have been included certain things, such as the alteration and improvement of the ventilating system, the radiators, the elevators, the tiling and rubber tiling.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister's statement is this:

The total probable cost of the additions and alterations to the parliament buildings is $322,247,97.

The total cost, as I understand it, must include everything.

Mr. CROCKET. Did not the minister state that this $93,000 which he is asking for now is to complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the chief architect tells me that that will complete the work as outlined.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister said that would make the total cost of the building, including the furniture, $447,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, and including upwards of $30,000 in connection with the old building—$447,432.90.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to know if, after the contract was let, there were any alterations made in the original plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing of any consequence.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that, as I have listened to this discussion, there are two lessons that we may draw from it. One is as to the peculiar way in which the government carries out the principle of constructing public works by public tender and contract. Every possible rule with relation to that principle has been violated in this instance. The minister's first excuse was that there were so many complex, abstruse and unexpected things imported into this work that it was impossible to ask for tenders, and that consequently the only thing to do was to ask the contractor what he would do them for, and arrange with him to do them. But when he read the estimates, the moment he read them, we found that these added things were really stock articles, with the exception of taking down some old partitions and making some cuts between rooms, which could not be foreseen and provided for, and therefore I suppose could not be done otherwise than by day's work. With these exceptions there was nothing that could not have been put in specifications, and for which tenders could not have been asked. If there were any other things they were so very small that we might leave them out entirely in discussing the matter. Heating, electric lighting, plumbing, elevators, all these different stock things in the construction of a building are as well defined and as easy to be estimated and put in the form of specifications as any other part of the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have led my hon. friend astray. Through an unfortunate error of the typewriter, the amount as paid to the contractor is put at $381,000 instead of $281,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we have a good deal more to account for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it makes the contractors paid only $281,000, and the total paid was the difference between $237,000 and $281,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend will take back some of his arguments ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will have to take back some of his criticism.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I have criticised on the statement of the minister. If only $45,000 to $50,000 is to be accounted for, he must account for the difference between that item of $281,000 and the $450,000, and he accounted for the difference between $381,000 and $450,000. But his statement remains that there was no competition for this difference, and that these extras were given the contractor without tender. Am I right or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. His second point of refuge was that there were a lot of unexpected things imported into the matter by the whips and the ex-Speaker (Mr. Sutherland). Well, the ex-Speaker shakes his head and declares he is guiltless. The whip on the Conservative side, on whom we can thoroughly rely, declares that he had nothing to do with it until he came here and found the partitions all up, and then he had to endeavour to get a little accommodation for members on the Conservative side, though the other side having pretty well taken the whole thing before he appeared on the scene.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Conservative whip was well pleased.

Mr. FOSTER. So we have to eliminate certain partitions in the division of the room and that we might agree to, but they were all plain and simple, done by terra cotta work, easily put into specifications with their dimensions, and could have been as easily put up to competition as a wall on the outside of the building. In all those cases, we have had a denegation of the principle of tender and contract, as applied to a construction which has cost the people nearly $500,000. The next lesson to be learned from this is that, under the same Minister of Public Works and the same department and staff of architects we are going to undertake the building of great public edifices on a site which has been got at a very large expenditure. What will those cost, if this system is to be continued, which we have heard with astonishment described by the minister, with his architect by his side, as the one under which public buildings have been constructed in the Dominion during these past years. In the Public Works Department which has been putting up buildings costing about $10,000,000, this has been the system carried on. Of that there cannot be any doubt, and there can be no doubt that this expenditure of $500,000 of the people's money does not show that value, judging from what we see in these rooms and this parliament building. No man would put $500,000 for himself into a construction which would show no more value than is shown here. Is that the way under which we are proceeding with our public works? I thought that the business of an architect was to draw plans and look after the construction, but the minister says that he is practically the man who arranged the terms upon which these things are done. I do not think that that is any part of the architect's branch. It is unwise and unfortunate that the architect's branch should be mixed up in the least with a department of the government which has to see what prices are to be paid and what amount of money expended. An architect is for the purpose of advising and having the specifications properly drawn and the plans properly made and putting information into the hands of the proper officers to call for tenders and award them. The advice of an architect is always good in these matters, but I do not think he should have been put in the position of making the best terms with the contractor. Here you have an original contract for $237,000 and a building when constructed costing $500,000, and practically the contractor has had, without competition, every bit of extra work at his own prices. Anybody knows, who has read the proceedings of the Cassels' Commission, that an officer of the department has no show for his life when there is a question between a contractor and the minister. The officer is used as the buffer, but the contractor gets about what he wants, and the architect and the officers who stand in between the two ought not to be placed in the position of the responsible minister who has to see what prices should be paid. That, however, has been the case during this transaction. Will the minister tell this House what we have to show for that $500,000 of the people's money?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I admire some of the qualities of my hon. friend and often wonder at the vast amount of information which he possesses. But as regards the construction of a building, he is deplorably ignorant. He says that, with regard to the prices for these different works, I should not have relied on the architect at all, but have fixed the prices myself. I venture to say there is no private individual who has ever erected a building, in connection with which he has had, during the progress of the work to do certain things not specified in the contract. It is the architect who makes out the estimates and specifications at the outset and fixes the prices. Why? Because his knowledge and experience enable him to form a judgment as to what are fair prices, and all contracts provide that if payments are made from time to time they are to be made on progress estimates certified to by the architect. It is the architect on whom the owner places reliance ; and I can well understand that if a minister had made certain payments to the contractor, without having the information from the architect as to what that work is worth, my hon. friend would have justly complained that the minister had no business to do that but should have relied on his architect.

Now, he has made the suggestion that the Cassels' inquiry has shown that the officials of the department have no independence, that they cannot exercise an honest judgment, but are obliged to do whatever the minister wishes them to do. He must know something of the character, reputation and standing of the chief architect of the Department of Public Works. That gentleman was appointed in 1871, some thirty-eight years ago, and I would not like to be the minister who would ask the chief architect to vary his figures by one iota to satisfy me or any other member of the government. While I have been minister—and no doubt, the same remark would apply to my predecessor, both of this government and of previous governments—the judgment of the present chief architect could be relied upon with a great deal of confidence. At all events, he is a man who will exercise his own independent judgment, and will not be influenced by any minister under whom he might serve. I have already called attention to an unfortunate error in the figures furnished me which caused me to overstate the amount actually paid to the contractors by about $100,000. The amounts paid to the contractors beyond the original contract were as follows:

Under the contract of Sept. 10, 1908.	$1,011 77
Contract October 22, 1908..	4,567 19
Contract October 3, 1908..	18,458 63
Contract for tiling and metal work (date not given)..	4,794 92
Stone balustrade..	4,439 69
Work done by McGillivray and Labelle, for which bills were rendered and certified by the chief architect..	10,802 00

That makes the total amount of additional work, including these partitions, about $44,000 instead of $150,000 as I unwittingly led by my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) to believe. I am sure that, looking over these figures, the hon. gentleman will see that, in view of the class of work to be done and the difficulty which, apparently, the former minister, Mr. Hyman, had in determining what partitions were to be erected, and determining how the rooms were to be laid out, it was not unreasonable that the work should be done upon prices given by the contractor. And he will see that it could not be done by a separate contract that might be given to an outsider, because, in that case, the work of the two contractors would be likely to clash. The important question is whether the chief architect could be relied upon to determine what were fair and reasonable prices.

Mr. FOSTER. Then how does the minister explain the increase of $169,000 over the $281,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will find that the figures I have given do not alter the total previously given, $447,732.

Mr. HUGHES. If the minister will pardon me a moment, there is one matter of detail to which I would like to call attention. The room which has been allotted to the Conservative members is supposed to have upper double windows. If the minister will step around to that room, if he cannot give the architect a suggestion, I shall be surprised. The windows should be on hinges; bolted, they are no use.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief architect will make a note of that point.

Mr. CROSBY. The building will cost $447,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including the furniture. I understand my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) to ask, 'What have you to show for it?' One has only to go through the building, including the upper stories, and to view the magnificent restaurant and the different rooms set apart for the accommodation, and I think any one of experience will say that we have received good value for our money.

Mr. CROSBY. It seems from what we have been able to ascertain from the minister that there is a difference of nearly $100,000 between the estimated cost of the building as made by the architect, and the actual cost. This is a very large difference. I understood the minister to say in answer to my hon. friend from North Toronto, that the architect was the man that did everything. But does any man in this country putting up a building allow the architect to make whatever arrangements he likes with the contractor? The man who furnishes the money does not allow the architect to go to the contractor and say he may do just as he likes. Of course, everybody knows that we must rely a good deal upon the architect, but not to the extent that has been done in this case. I am satisfied to spend a good deal of money in Ottawa, but I do not want to see all the money of the Dominion of Canada spent here; I want some of it spent in other parts of the country.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the minister say what amount of space or what number of rooms provided by this expenditure, has gone to the accommodation of officers of the House?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has all appeared in the 'Hansard,' to which I would refer my hon. friend.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I think the officials have more space than the members. I want to say in connection with the allotment of rooms to the opposition, that just before the prorogation of parliament last year the late Speaker invited the chief government whip (Mr. Calvert) and myself to go through the building, and he gave us what his plan was at that time, giving comfortable quarters to the leader of the opposition in old No. 6, also where he proposed making the Premier's room, and then a room for the whips. His plan was to give a certain proportion to the government side and a certain proportion to the opposition side. But that arrangement was not carried out. When I came down here after the allotment was made, I found that the plans of the late Speaker concerning a room for the opposition leader and the Conservative whips had been carried out. Then after some negotiations, we secured quarters for the balance of our contingent in the rooms that had been occupied previously by members supporting the government. According to the returns brought down, I think we got our fair share of the space, but we have not got our fair share of the new quarters.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In what I had to do with the matter I tried to make it as convenient as possible for our hon. friends opposite. There is some dissatisfaction among them, and there is dissatisfaction among our own friends, who feel they have not got the accommodation they would like. Even a minister of the Crown came to me not long ago and complained. But we tried to satisfy everybody who had claims for accommodation.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. An application is in and I hope it will be carried out soon, to give us Conservative members better seating accommodation. We have a lot of old dilapidated chairs there which ought to be stored. When we had a caucus this morning we had to send into the room of the Minister of Finance to get chairs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chairs have been ordered.

Mr. BARR. It is a notorious fact that officials of this House are better provided for than the members, so much so that some of the officials are renting rooms.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What official is renting rooms?

Mr. BARR. Right downstairs there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to deal with that matter when my attention is called to it.

Mr. BARR. I know that was the state of affairs formerly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it must have been some time ago.

Ottawa Royal Mint, refinery, $30,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have put in this item at the request of the Minister of Finance, who says it is urgently needed. The building is expected to cost $30,000. Nothing has been done yet. It is intended to erect a building 35 x 60 feet, one story high, on stone foundations, fireproof throughout, and with strong vaults.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this include the refining machinery?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only the building.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the minister prepared to state what the plant will cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a matter for the Finance Department rather than mine, for the officers of the mint.

Mr. DANIEL. What will this make the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure to the 31st of December last was $520,233.88. That includes the site for the building, the wiring, the machinery, tools and everything.

Mr. AMES. How much did the fence cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We heard so much about that last session that I hoped my hon. friend would not refer to it again. But my hon. friend forgets about the guard-rooms, there are very substantial guard-rooms embraced in the cost.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What size?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Go down and look at them. The total amount for this high iron fence, with the granite foundations and guard-rooms, was $43,529.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. When are the members going to be taken through the mint?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any time they wish, when an arrangement can be made.

Mr. AMES. Were tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No public tenders, it was done by contract.

Mr. AMES. How was the arrangement arrived at by which the contractors charged that expenditure of $43,529 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Plans were prepared for the work to be done and a tender was asked from the contractor. He submitted a tender which the chief architect thought to be fair and reasonable, and upon his certificate the contract was let.

Mr. AMES. So that no one else was given the opportunity to compete for the work although plans were prepared beforehand?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were no public tenders called.

Mr. AMES. This is in no way a part of the building itself. There was no reason why the work of erecting a fence and inclosing the property could not have been put up to public tender and contract. What possible reason was there why this work was not thrown open to competition?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was all arranged for before I became minister, but I am informed that the contractor had all his plant there, encumbering the ground, and it was thought inconvenient to bring in another contractor. The Master of the Mint was pressing for the erection these guard houses, and it had to be done as quickly as possible because they would not open the mint until these things were provided, and that is the reason why it was not put up to public competition.

Mr. FOSTER. Has anybody ever got over that fence?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is pretty difficult; he would have to be quite a jumper.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there one contract for the fence and the guard house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. One contract.

Mr. CROCKET. $43,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $43,529.

Mr. CROCKET. The question was asked a session or two ago and the statement was made that the fence cost $29,000 and the guard house $13,000 or $14,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was one contract.

Mr. CROCKET. Was not the price fixed separately for the guard-house?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it was one price.

Mr. AMES. In this work we have a repetition of what we had in the other case. While the contractors, Messrs. Sullivan & Langdon, have a contract calling for $263,000, the total payment to them is $325,000, so that we have these contractors receiving $60,000 over their contract price without any tenders being asked or without any opportunity for competition on the part of others. That is the same thing repeated in connection with the Mint that we have in connection with this addition to the parliament buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is something I would not justify unless there were very special reasons for it, and in this case there were special reasons.

Mr. CROCKET. There are always special reasons.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It apparently was not anticipated that a fence and guard-room of this character were required. It had been announced that the Mint would open at a certain time and the Imperial authorities required that the fence and the guard-houses should be built before they would allow the Mint to be opened. It was work which was very urgent, and it was deemed very much better to allow this contractor, who was a most reliable contractor, to do the work at what the chief architect thought was a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not a fact that the law states that the Minister of Public Works shall not expend any amount over $5,000 without calling for tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but there is an exception to the law. The law provides that he cannot do it except in cases of emergency.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was a case of that kind.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the minister where there is any condition about an emergency in the statute? I think not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is in the statute.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. The statute provides that an order in council, signed by His Excellency and setting forth the emergency, shall be passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am quite aware of the fact, and in this case the grounds of the emergency were set out and the order in council passed.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there an order in council passed in each of the cases in reference to this new wing in which work was given without contract or tender amounting to more than $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, as to the elevators, which I think is the only one that is over $5,000.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one of $10,800 and another of $18,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell as to other amounts over $5,000, but I know that in the case of the elevators that was done.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister would not violate the law ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He would not intentionally.

Mr. FOSTER. Did he not know what the law was?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And it has been violated?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My practice has always been in every case where it is over $5,000 to have an order in council setting forth the grounds of emergency.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister see if in these three cases there was an order in council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Will the minister bring down the order in council because it certainly will be a curiosity to place before the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the guard-house and fence? I will be glad to.

Mr. FOSTER. And then afterwards we may take a vote to send it down to the archives.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to ask the minister if the plan which has been prepared for the refinery provides for the complete building or just for the walls?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This estimate is for the complete building, but not for the refining plant.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I understood the minister to say that the emergency arose out of the fact that the Imperial government insisted that this guard-house and fence should be built before the Mint was opened. I would ask the minister if the Mint was not opened before the guard-house and fence were constructed? The guard-house was not finished before we went away from here last year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information was that the fence was completed.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. The fence was, but not the guard-room.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps my remarks should be limited to the fence.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Then you broke the law with regard to the guard-room?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Possibly they are separate.

Mr. CROSBY. I would ask the minister to bring down all the orders in council or all the amounts that have been expended over and above $5,000 without tender and contract upon the new wing as well as upon the building under discussion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated to the committee that I thought there was one providing for the purchase of the elevators from the Otis-Fensom Company, but I was not sure whether there were any others. If there are I will bring them down.

Mr. CROSBY. If there were not, the expenditures would be contrary to law.

Ottawa, Victoria Memorial Museum, $400,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Many hon. gentlemen are familiar with this building. The vote is $400,000 and this is to continue the erection of the Victoria Memorial Museum. The chief architect estimated this building would cost $1,250,000 but the actual contract is only $950,000. It was let to Mr. Goodwin who is a very experienced contractor at some $300,000 less than the chief architect estimated. The contractor has gone ahead very satisfactorily with his work and I am much afraid he will not make much out of it.

Mr. CROCKET. How much has been expended up to the present?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Altogether, up to the 28th of December, $786,056.73 including $75,000 cost of site.

Mr. CROCKET. How much is required to complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including the site, furniture, fittings, elevators, &c., it is supposed that the total cost to complete and equip will be $1,312,143.15.

Mr. BARR. When do you expect it will be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In fifteen months or eighteen months.

Mr. AMES. Are you asking for this $400,000, expecting that it will completely finish the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect it will cost $100,000 more.

Mr. AMES. How much do you consider the building will have cost at the end of the present fiscal year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The actual expenditure will be about $812,000.

Mr. AMES. Then you only expect to spend $26,000, for the remainder of the fiscal year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Perhaps I had better give the figures: Paid for site $75,000; incidental expenses, surveying, printing, advertising, clerk of works salary, &c., $13,306.73; laying of drain $4,500; paid to the contractor up to the 28th of December, $693,250; total expenditure to 28th of December, $786,056.73; amount due on contract work when contract is finished, $256,750; heating apparatus, boilers, &c., (estimated) $50,000; electric wiring, fixtures, (estimated) $25,000; elevators (estimated) $40,000; fittings, furniture (estimated) $100,000; carving (estimated) $15,000; superintendence, &c. (estimated) $29,000. That makes the total including, site, furnishing, fittings, &c., $1,312,143.15.

Mr. AMES. Is any of the money at present voted to go to other portions of the work that are not included in the contract of George Goodwin?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister give us his assurance that there will be proper competition, and opportunity given to other people besides Mr. Goodwin to tender in connection with this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I would not like to give my hon. friend that assurance and I will tell you why: Mr. George Goodwin is as reliable a contractor as there is in Canada. He has taken this contract at about $300,000 less than the chief architect's estimate.

Mr. AMES. Did he build the Laurier tower which fell down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that. Mr. Goodwin is a splendid contractor and everybody will say that he has done a thoroughly good job on that museum. His tender was I think $275,000 less than the next lowest tender, but Mr. Goodwin is a man who is prepared to carry out what he undertakes. Now, my own view would be that there are advantages, in the case of a building like that, in having the contractor do the heating, and plumbing, and work of that character, and if Mr. Goodwin is prepared to do that work at a figure which the chief architect is prepared to say is fair and reasonable I will say frankly, that I would be disposed, if it can be done, to give that work to Mr. George Goodwin, the contractor. I do not say it will be done but I am not prepared now to give my hon. friend the assurance that it will not be done.

Mr. AMES. Here we have a distinct avowal in advance that once a contractor is in possession of the four walls and the roof of a building he practically has the absolute refusal of all the remaining work. He can do it without tender and by a simple arrangement between himself and the architect. That is just the way to pay the highest possible price for the additional work required on the building. If that is the fixed policy of the department we must expect to pay very high prices and oftentimes in excess of the real value of the work. That is not the way public establishments do their business, at least such as I have had to do with. Further, it is not fair to other contractors if it is understood that if a contractor secures a contract even at a low figure he will have an opportunity of making very large returns upon his extras. If the government is favourable to the contractor he is given the opportunity to continue the extra work at a price to be arranged between himself and the architect and if the government is not favourable to him he is deprived of that chance to make money.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a general proposition the contracts for all work on a building should be let by public tender and I have asked the architect in future, as far as possible, to let the contract in the first place including heating, and wiring, and all these things so far as that can be done.

Mr. FOSTER. That is fair.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But here is a very large and expensive building, one which has been built with great care and in the most satisfactory way by the contractor. As he is rushing along his work towards completion, it might cause great dissatisfaction to put in three or four sub-contractors, each acting independently and under no one control. Therefore, if I can be assured by the chief architect that Mr. Goodwin is prepared to do this work at a fair and reasonable price, I would have no hesitation myself in recommending His Excellency in Council to give the work to the contractor.

Mr. CROSBY. If I take the architect's estimate of the cost of this building, $1,250,000, and then take the contract price at which we are getting it built, $950,000, does it not mean that the architect is very extravagant in his estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Take the next tender.

Mr. CROSBY. I am speaking of the estimate of the architect. I do not want to say anything against him, but it strikes me that it is not safe to allow him to name the price of anything that goes into that building.

Mr. SPROULE. We have had some experience in the past of architects and engineers certifying that prices are fair and reasonable. I could give a number of instances, but I need only mention the lighting of the Cornwall canal. When a dispute arose between the Auditor General and the party who was paid for the service, the account was cut down from $52,000 to $29,000, because the Auditor General would not agree to it, even though the engineer had certified that the price was fair and reasonable, and recommended the payment of the money and the Minister of Railways and Canals had assented ; and then the Auditor General declared that it was $10,000 too high still. We have brought a great many instances of this kind to light during the last few years. Is it any wonder that we should be a little suspicious in passing this matter over to the tender mercies of any architect ?

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If I understood the minister aright, the contract for this building covers only the building proper, and other arrangements will have to be made for the fittings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the case of the Victoria Museum, the contract did not include heating apparatus, electric wiring, elevators, fittings and furniture and carving.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I also understood that it was the intention of the minister to give the contract for these works to the gentleman who had the contract for the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said I was not prepared to give an assurance that that would not be done.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. We gathered from the debate that that would probably take place.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Possibly.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If that principle were generally accepted, a contractor could well take his contracts at a much reduced rate, with the expectation and strong probabilities of making good out of these later contracts. I presume that the heating, wiring, and so on will cost $100,000, and probably more?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The estimate is $85,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Then, it is not difficult to believe that they will cost $100,000. This is a principle to which I very much object—that a contract should be made for so large a building as this, with what looks like a full intention of giving the contracts for the fittings to the same party without tender. I do not think that is a businesslike way or one that will satisfy the people. I do not see why others should not have the opportunity of tendering if they desire to do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Schaffner) understood me correctly that I would not give assurance that this would not be done. And my present view would be that, if the contractor is willing to undertake the work at a price that the chief architect, in whose judgment I have the greatest possible confidence, certified to be fair and reasonable, I would be disposed to recommend to my colleagues, under the circumstances, that the present contractor should have the contract. My first reason is because of the low figure at which he undertook the work of the building, and because I am satisfied that he has lost money, his tender being $300,000 below the estimate of the chief architect, and $275,000 lower than that of the next lowest tenderer. Another reason is the very satisfactory way in which he has done the work. Another reason is that it would be much more satisfactory to have the work go on under one contractor than under a separate contractor.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. That may all be very true, but it is not a very good reason for the course which the minister suggests. The mere fact that the contractor has taken the contract at what is supposed to be too low a figure and has lost money is not sufficient reason for taking this particular means of making that money up to him.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Can't very well make up $300,000 on a contract for $85,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. If the trimmings cost as much more than the estimate as the building has done—

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is costing much less than the estimate. The architect's estimate was $1,250,000 and the contract is $950,000.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. It is not finished yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was the estimate of only that part which was contracted for. It did not include the heating apparatus, the electric wiring, elevators, fittings and furniture and carving.

Mr. CROSBY. And, if I understood the minister correctly, he wants to throw $200,000 or $300,000 to this contractor, whoever he may be, because he took the contract at too low a figure—

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Crosby) does not wish to misunderstand me. The total estimate for these fittings is $85,000. I certainly am not throwing $300,000 to him.

Mr. CROSBY. The minister's anxiety concerning the contractor arises from the fact that the contractor is supposed to be losing money by this contract. There is just as much reason for us to conclude that the architect was out in his estimate. The very fact that he estimated $1,250,000 for the construction of a building, and that a contractor whom the minister describes as one of the best contractors in the Dominion offers to construct that building for $950,000 is strong reason why this committee should not accept him as the final authority in these matters when he is so extravagant in his estimates. I, for one, am not going to sit in this House and vote in favour of contracts being given in this way. Unless there is some indication that this work is going to be let by tender and contract, I shall not agree to such a vote without registering my strong protest against dealing with the public money in this manner.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. When we were discussing the last item, the minister said, as I understood him, that it was an exceptional case, but that if he had had control from the beginning, he would not have let the contract in the way in which it was let. But now, when we come to consider this item, the minister acknowledges that he is going to do exactly the same thing as his predecessor did; that is, notwithstanding that the original contract was let after tenders called, he intends to give the contract for the remaining portion of the work to the person who has received the contract and without calling for further tenders. This completely justifies the complaint that the opposition is making against a contract of this kind. Once a party tendering knows that when he gets a contract for a certain portion, he will get a contract for the balance of the works without tender that eliminates the principle of competition. It puts the other parties who tender, and who do not know that the one whose tender would be accepted was bound to get the balance of the work without competition, at a disadvantage; and it enables the one who knew this, to tender at a lower figure than he otherwise would, relying on increased profits in the additional work which he would secure without tender, so that in reality he is not the lowest tenderer. Whenever a vote is asked for an appropriation, the minister should be in a position to let us know what the work will cost altogether and call for tenders for the entire work, so that all who tender may be on an equal footing. It is not fair to the country to let a portion of the contract by tender and then give the balance without competition to favoured friends of the government. The minister tells us that the reason why he grants the remainder of the contract to the one whose tender is accepted is because his tender was the cheapest, but the reason why this man tendered at the lowest figures may have been because he knew that the minister was going to do what he has told us tonight he intended doing.

Mr. SAM. SHARPE. Who is the clerk of works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. B. Cantlie.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Has he had any experience in supervising the construction of public buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About ten years.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is he the gentleman who was the clerk of works on the Laurier tower?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think it is possible to have a more vicious system than that which the minister has just explained to us. We know what it has led to in the department which has been under investigation and which is the only one in which there was a little lift of the curtain. This system of giving contracts for part of the work to one man, after inviting public tenders, and then giving him the balance without tender, is bound to result in great loss to the country and public scandal. I do not think we can condemn it in sufficiently strong terms, and I hope the minister will see his way to giving us the strongest assurance that no such method will be followed by the government in the future. I would ask him whether his architect has an absolutely free hand in giving the extras to whom he likes, or whether he must give them to those who are on the patronage list?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The patronage list has been abolished in my department and there is no question of patronage here. It is simply a question as to whether public tenders shall be invited for the fittings, or whether an arrangement be made with the contractor, provided he is willing to do the work at a price which our chief architect considers fair and reasonable. Some little time ago, after I became minister—and it has been impressed on my attention more recently because of the consideration I have given in this building and one or two others—I came to the conclusion that it is desirable, as far as possible, to provide in the original contract for all the different classes of work. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken that it is better to do that, and that is my intention. As far as possible, in letting contracts in future, I intend that the original contract shall provide for everything which can be reasonably foreseen.

An hon. MEMBER. Why not do it now?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot do it in this case because the building is nearly completed. Here is a very expensive building which, although not completed, is pretty well on to completion, and the wiring and heating ought to be going on simultaneously with the finishing up of the work. My experience is that if we have an honest contractor and can fix a reasonable price with him, it is infinitely better for him to do the work than have two or three sub-contractors whose men will be quarrelling together as to how the work will go along.

Mr. OSLER. Was the contract let without reservation on the part of the government that they could let other workmen into the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course we can.

Mr. OSLER. Better delay the completion of the building for six months and let us have an honest tender for the work not under contract and remaining to be done, and not have the very grave suspicion aroused which a system of this sort is bound to excite.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think anybody can have any suspicion.

Mr. CROSBY. I am going to vote against this item unless we have some assurance from the minister that the work, not let by contract and yet to be done, will be open to public competition.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very sorry if the hon. gentleman votes against it.

Mr. CROSBY. There will be a time when the minister will have reason to be sorry.

Mr. GOODEVE. What are the duties of a clerk of works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. He has to be on the spot constantly and see that the contractor carries out the plans and specifications and also the instructions and the directions of the architect.

Mr. GOODEVE. It seems to me that a man who will work for $3.50 per day is hardly capable of doing that work. When you let a contract involving a million dollars and then hire a man at $3.50 per day to pass on the technical work and stand between the contractor and the government, I should say that a man who will work for that wage is not capable of fulfilling these duties. If he were, he would command higher pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have an experienced architect on our staff who is there constantly in addition to the clerk of works.

Mr. GOODEVE. In that case the clerk of works is not required at all. Either he is capable of overseeing the work or he is not. If he is, you do not require an architect there with him; and if he is not, he is no use there at all.

Amherst, public buildings, Nova Scotia—improvements, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for the purchase of a tower clock and its installation and also for the re-wiring of the entire building. I may say that at the last session of parliament there was voted $2,500 for this purpose; of that amount $809 was available on the 1st of February.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. How big does the town have to be before it gets a town clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some cases have been brought to my notice where towers have been erected on the various buildings intended for a clock; in some cases towers were erected ten or fifteen years ago for the purpose of a clock. In the case of Amherst, my attention was called to the fact that the building had an unfinished appearance, was unsightly, and I gave directions to have a clock put in the tower.

Mr. OSLER. I would ask the minister whether his attention has been drawn to a fact that quite recently a judgment was given in England against a man who had put up a public clock. As time went on the clock was neglected, it was not wound up, and some citizens sued the man, and I think got damages for misleading them as to the time of day. It was held that a public body who erected a town clock for the public good was bound to keep the clock in order. Now the minister sees the posibility that the government may be sued if it neglects to keep these town clocks in proper order.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We will take the chances of that.

Bridgewater, public buildings, $6,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make provision for continuing during the coming years the construction of a public building in the town of Bridgewater. It is to be two stories, on a stone foundation, and intended to provide accommodation for post office, customs house, etc. The total amount of the contract is $23,500.

Mr. AMES. How much has been already expended on the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been paid to the contractor already $23,710. There has been some extra work.

Mr. AMES. After having paid the contractor the full amount of his contract, why do you want this $6,000 more?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The explanation of that is that subsequently to the contract being awarded it was decided to put a clock in this building, and to erect a tower for the purpose; consequently the contract was changed, and it was agreed to pay the contractors for that $2,882.

Mr. AMES. Where is the rest of the $6,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give the whole statement. Amount paid for site, $5,500; for legal expenses, survey of site, printing, advertising and clerk of works, $1,042.62. There was paid on account for heating apparatus and for boiler, $594, and there is still due for heating apparatus, $656. Due on electric wiring and fixtures, $1,000; fittings, furniture, lock boxes, the estimate is $4,000; sidewalks and fences, $1,000; contingencies of various kinds, $2,000. The total estimated cost, with the site of the building, heating, electric wiring and fixtures, $14,539.80. The total expenditure to the 31st of December was $30,846.80. Assumed expenditure from 31st December last to 31st March, $2,692. The population of Bridgewater is nearly 3,000.

Mr. McCALL. Is it the intention of the minister to put a clock in every public building where there is a tower constructed for that purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no settled policy. I have put clocks in several public buildings where it has been represented to me that they were desirable. But I cannot say that I will do it in every public building.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister gave as a reason for putting a clock in the public building at Amherst that there was a tower erected for the purpose, and it was unsightly without a clock. But in this case he seems to have decided to erect a public building without a tower, and afterwards changed his mind. Now when did he reach the conclusion that it was wise, after the contract was let, to change the plans and specifications and erect a tower and put in a clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That was decided along in the spring of 1908. I may say that by reason of the location of the building at Bridgewater, it was strongly represented to me that a tower and clock would greatly improve the appearance of the building, and as the expense would not be great I yielded to the representations. I have plenty of precedents for that. When our friends opposite were in power many public buildings were erected in some of which clocks were placed, and others were left unsightly without clocks.

Mr. SPROULE. I have a distinct recollection that the principle of supplying clocks was strongly condemned by the hon. gentleman's friends when in opposition. It was declared to be extravagant, wrong and unjustifiable. Now the hon. gentleman, supported by his friends, comes forward and does the very thing which they so strongly condemned. Two wrongs can never make a right. If it was wrong for the hon. gentleman's predecessors to do it surely there is no justification for him repeating that wrong because, from his intelligence, he must have known better.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You would say that it was right then.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. In explanation of the purpose of putting a tower on this building, I may say that the building belongs to a new design introduced by the Department of Public Works about a year ago. It is a flat-roofed building. The appearance of the building is rather low and there were very strong representations made on behalf of the people of the town to alter the exterior appearance of the building by placing a tower upon it, or by making some other change. It did add a little to the cost, but I may say that if any hon. gentleman saw the building he would feel that the department was strictly justified in putting on this tower.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did the tower and clock cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The tower cost $2,882 and the clock will probably cost $1,500 or $2,000.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. Is this a post office building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Post office and customs house.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. Have the government any settled policy as to where buildings of that description should be erected, having reference to population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No rule has been laid down as to the exact number of people required in a place in order to justify the erection therein of a public building. Population does not always govern. Something may depend upon the trade that is done in a place, upon the customs receipts, upon the existing post office accommodation, upon the possibility or otherwise of renting suitable buildings for public purposes and sometimes upon whether it is a county town or not. There has been one rule laid down, not as a fixed rule, but it has been recognized and, I think, it was so stated by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and that is that this government will be disposed to favour as rapidly as might reasonably be done, the erection of one public building in a county, that public building to be in the county town. But, of course, it can be seen that that rule cannot always be adhered to, because it sometimes happens that the county town may not be the most important town in the county.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. You think there should be one in every county?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that should be the ultimate aim to which we should look forward.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. Is Bridgewater a county town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think it is.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is and it is not. There are two towns in the county of Lunenburg, each of which regards itself as a county town because each is the seat of courts. It is rather an important town, and I do not think that any gentleman can make any valid objection to this expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the population?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. About 2,000.

Mr. OSLER. What is the post office revenue?

Mr. WRIGHT. It was not large enough to be incorporated when the census was taken.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The post office revenue is $5,590, the customs duties, $4,448; money orders issued, $59,000, and money orders paid, $21,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I just came in a few moments ago and I understood that the discussion was centring on public buildings in county towns. I desire to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that there is a county town in the county which I have the honour to represent and during the recent election campaign my opponent gave a very strong promise that a post office would be erected in the town of Milton, the county town. He gave a very strong assurance of what he would accomplish when he came here. Unfortunately for the people who wanted a post office, he did not come, but I trust it may not be so unfortunate after all, because I believe that if the Minister of Public Works made the promise that he would erect a post office in that town he would not hesitate to do it even if the gentleman who conveyed that promise to the people should not have been elected.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the population?

Mr. HENDERSON. The population, I presume, is 1,700 or 1,800.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you favour erecting one there?

Mr. HENDERSON. Certainly, I would favour the erection of a post office in Milton. We had the strong assurance of the government candidate during the election that a post office would be erected in that town. I can hardly assume that my opponent made that promise without having had some guarantee from the minister that the promise would be implemented, and I do not think the minister would go so far as to give that assurance only on the condition that my opponent would be elected. I believe he is too honourable. I think that if he gave the promise at all it should be implemented no matter who was elected. All I ask is that the promise may be implemented by the erection of a public building in Milton. We have no public building in the county of Halton. There are some five towns and villages about the same size as Milton, not one of which has a public building, and I do not think I am asking too much when I ask the minister to carry out the pledge which was given by my opponent to the people of Milton that a post office should be erected there in the event of his return. I would like the minister to say whether he made that promise and, if so, is it his intention to carry it out and give us a public building during the current year ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that I do not call to my mind at the present moment whether I was communicated with on the subject of a public building or not. I do remember my hon. friend presenting, at the last session of this parliament, the claims of Milton so strongly that I am inclined to think that he almost persuaded me that Milton should have a public building, but I can say to my hon. friend, and it may do for the whole of this discussion in regard to public buildings, that he will not find that I have ever, since I have been Minister of Public Works, made a promise, or authorized anybody else to make a promise for the erection of a public building conditional upon the election of a supporter of the government. Wherever I have made a statement that a public building will be erected it is an unqualified statement. If I have made any promise with regard to Milton or with regard to any other public building it will be carried out at the very earliest opportunity. I can tell my hon. friend that so far as I remember there are no amounts in the estimates this year for public buildings other than those in respect of which tenders have already been called. In view of the state of the revenue we have felt obliged to postpone for another year the erection of a great many public buildings for which appropriations were made last session and which we have not felt in a position to go on with at the present time. I am afraid that the public building at Milton, if one is to be erected there, would have to stand over the same as the rest.

Mr. HENDERSON. There has been a discussion as to the erection of a town clock; may I ask the minister if he intends to put a clock in the Conservative members' room?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Considering the youth and character of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) I think we should put a 'watch' there.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of the Bridgewater building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Including everything to complete, it is estimated to cost $42,539.80.

Glace Bay, public buildings, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete this building providing accommodation for post office, custom house, inland revenue, examining warehouse, weights and measures. The total cost including the site, heating, electric wiring, &c., is estimated at $54,859.85.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the population of Glace Bay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 7,000 by census of 1901. I am informed it is probably 15,000 now.

Mr. MADDIN. What is the estimated cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $45,000.

Mr. MADDIN. What was the contract price and how much has been expended to date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract price $24,000; expended to 31st of December, $41,540 which includes $11,599 for the site.

Mr. MADDIN. Will this vote complete the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect it will.

Mr. MADDIN. Will this building have a tower and clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. MADDIN. It would appear to me that the necessity for erecting towers on these public buildings and providing them with clocks becomes very pressing on the eve of an election. For instance, there was no clock on the Sydney building for a great many years, but on the eve of the 1904 election a stipendiary magistrate Mr. A. G. Maclean and a jeweller by the name of Fred. Lighter were appointed a committee to go to the old country to select a clock. The jeweller might have been a very good man for the purpose but I doubt the qualifications of the stipendiary magistrate; anyhow the clock has never given satisfaction. I suggest with all deference to the minister that instead of providing these buildings with towers which in the case of Amherst cost $2,800, and clocks which cost from $1,500 to $3,000, it would be much better to dispense with these luxuries which are much like the fifth wheel on a carriage, and to apply the money to the Postmaster General's Department towards giving a better mail service to the people in the scattered districts of Nova Scotia.

Guysborough public buildings, improvements, $1,200.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to complete the installation of a clock and to provide an acetylene gas plant.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON. What is the population of Guysborough?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 1,500 last census.

Mr. GORDON. What will these improvements cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $2,000.

Halifax, Dominion building, improvements, repairs, etc., $75,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This vote is for the purpose of remodelling the whole interior of the Halifax Dominion building, making it fire proof and fitting it for post office purposes and assistant receiver general's offices The customs, examining warehouse and inland revenue offices have been removed to the new customs building, and it is found necessary to remodel this building to fit it for post office purposes.

Mr. AMES. It is being done by contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. AMES. Who has the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Keefe.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this vote complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it will require $70,000 more. The total probable cost including everything is $165,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the contract let for $165,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the contract, including the wiring, is let for $94,000. In addition, the heating and boilers, it is estimated, will cost $15,000, electric fixtures $1,500, fittings, furniture and lock boxes $25,000, vault lining of doors $10,000, contingencies and superintendence $19,500; total estimated cost $165,000.

Mr. AMES. Is this remodelling an old building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROSBY. When is this building to be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the 18th of March, 1910.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Was the contract let by public tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Who are the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mr. Keefe, of Halifax.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What is the amount of his tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $94,000. The other tenderers were for $114,000 and $145,000 respectively.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How much is the total work to cost, all completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $165,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Is it the intention of the minister to let the difference between the contract and the total cost, amounting to $70,000, by tender or to the present contractor?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My intention is to let that by tender, as far as we can do so.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How does the minister propose to let this addition of $70,000 by tender and not the addition for the museum?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have endeavoured to explain that there are special conditions with respect to the museum which do not exist with respect to this building. At all events, I do not know any special reason why we should not ask for tenders for this work, as we have ample time to do it.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I fail to see what the special conditions are. The minister has given us no special logical reason why he should not let the remainder of the museum work by tender. In the construction of all large buildings there are many contractors for different trades working at the same time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman object to my letting this by tender?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. No, but I am asking why the minister has not done it in the case of the museum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are now discussing the Halifax public building.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I am asking the minister if he can give me any special reason why he adopts the principle of letting the remainder of this work by tender when he does not adopt that principle in the case of the museum.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have already answered. The hon. gentleman will find it all in 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPROULE. Is there provision in this contract for other contractors to occupy the building at the same time, in the event of letting other portions of the work to other contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Halifax—Immigrant Detention Building—Hospital, $2,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a revote. It is to provide for the erection of a stable in the immigration detention grounds at Halifax. It has been requested by the Superintendent of Immigration, and the estimated cost is $2,500.

Mr. AMES. Does that complete the entire outfit at the Halifax immigration detention building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

New Glasgow public building—improvements, $1,000.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works what the nature of these improvements is and at whose request they are made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This amount is for some alterations to be made in the building, and also for the purchase of a clock to be placed in the tower. The chief architect tells me that the Customs Department have applied for these changes.

Mr. AMES. From whom does the government purchase these Nova Scotia clocks?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Most of them are obtained in the old country; none of them are made in Canada.

Mr. S. SHARPE. How many public buildings in Nova Scotia have been supplied with clocks? I think the hon. minister is showing partiality to Nova Scotia. Only one was promised in Ontario—that was in Berlin.

Mr. MADDIN. Is the hon. Minister of Public Works aware that the 'Eastern Chronicle,' published in New Glasgow, and the organ of this government in East Pictou, last month commented editorially on this expense, pointing out that it was altogether unnecessary and uncalled for, and that, as the editor had seen the alterations, they were calculated to weaken the building by the cutting of rafters and beams? I would like to know whether the Minister of Public Works is aware that that is the stand taken by the organ of the government in East Pictou.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of the stand taken by the paper referred to, nor am I aware that it is the organ of the government or that this government has any organ.

Mr. MADDIN. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) would hardly agree with the minister there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expenditure is not very great. The total is only $3,000. The clock will cost $1,200 and the alterations of the building $1,495.

Mr. MADDIN. The amount may not look very big, but it is sufficient to supply a daily mail to Bauline, which has now only one mail a week, and it would give it a daily mail for two years.

Pictou Public Building—Renewals and repairs, $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of this amount, $1,500 is a revote. It is to make provision to replace the old galvanized iron roof, which was found leaking, also to re-cover the roof and repair the gable. The tender was for $1,900 and the contingencies $100, making a total of $2,000.

Shelburne Public Building, $19,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was placed under contract February 12, 1908. The building is of stone. It is 39 by 54 feet, two and a half stories high, with a turret three stories high. It is required for a post office and custom house. The total estimated cost, including site, heating, wiring, etc., is $35,158.77.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. What is the population of the town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is one of the oldest towns in Nova Scotia. Its population was 1,445 seven years ago. Since then it has been connected by railway with other parts of the province, and is now progressing.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Was it in February, 1908 you decided to build that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was entered into then.

Mr. CROSBY. What is the revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The postal revenue is $1,669, customs duties, $1,471, money orders given, $29,439, money orders paid $19,000. The exports are $33,174.

Mr. CROTHERS. That amounts to $25 per head for every man, woman and child for the total population.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. That is a very expensive building for such a place with such a small revenue. I presume that the minister, as a business man, must have some kind of system governing the erection of these buildings in different parts of the country. I would like to know if other places with an equal revenue are equally entitled to a public building, and if places which have a revenue three or four tmes that amount will be given public buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Places with the population and of the importance of this would have very strong claims on the government. That is as far as my hon. friend can expect me to go.

Mr. HENDERSON. In whose riding is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that of the Minister of Finance.

Westville Public Building, $5,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. How big is this place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It had a population of about 2,300 in 1901 but has increased a good deal since. It is quite a mining centre.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the estimated cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building site heating, electric wiring, &c., will cost $25,605.

Mr. MADDIN. From whom was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Acadia Coal Company.

Mr. STANFIELD. Is it the intention to put a side-walk along the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If a side-walk is required, I would favourably regard the suggestion.

Georgetown Public Building, Prince Edward Island, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building was purchased at a low price, and this amount is required for alterations to fit it for a public building.

Mr. DANIEL. When was it purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In March 1908. The price for building and site was $2,500.

Mr. JAMESON. From whom was it purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From E. B. Hessian.

St. John Dominion Building, New Brunswick—improvements, repairs, &c., $4,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to make repairs in the St. John Post Office and Custom House and West Side Post Office.

St. John Drill hall, New Brunswick, $12,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is estimated sufficient to pay for the property which the Crown is expropriating as a site for a drill hall. We do not intend this year proceeding with the building.

Mr. CROCKET. Why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In pursuance of the policy of postponing for a short time the works with regard to which tenders were not called before the decision was arrived at.

Mr. DANIEL. What negotiations have taken place with regard to any expropriation of land in St. John for drill hall purposes?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Instead of negotiating we thought it better to file a plan of expropriation. In that locality many of the titles are somewhat uncertain, and it is not known who are the owners. It is thought better to file a plan of expropriation, and then negotiate afterwards. If we cannot arrive at a fair arrangement, we can let the Exchequer Court determine the value.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it the intention of the government, or the department, to put through these expropriation proceedings this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Public Works—Chargeable to Income—Public Buildings, Quebec—Cookshire Post Office, $15,000.

Mr. AMES. Would the minister please tell us the particulars of this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is being erected on a lot of land given as a free site by the municipal council of the town. It is a fine lot with a frontage of 100 feet on Main street and a depth of 125 feet. The building will be two stories high, and will be of brick on a concrete foundation. The building is required for post office, customs and inland revenue. The total estimated cost, including heating, electric wiring, fittings and furniture, is $23,053.55.

Joliette Armoury, $15,000.

Mr. AMES. We would like some information about this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site upon which this building is to be constructed has a frontage of 100 feet with a depth of 100 feet. The bulding will be of two stories, of brick, on a stone foundation, with stone trimmings, the size being 56 feet by 47 feet. The total estimated cost, including heating, fixtures and furniture, but not including the site, is $21,719.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Has the contract been let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When was it let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the date here, but it was let quite recently. Six tenders were received in answer to an advertisement, the tenders ranging from $13,500 to $15,395. The lowest was accepted on authority of an order in council passed on January 18 last. But there was some delay in letting the contract.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That was subsequent to the determination of the minister not to proceed with any public works for which contracts were not let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not subsequently.

Mr. MEIGHEN. That is to say, then, the minister's policy on this subject was adopted subsequent to January 18 of this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders had been called for this building in 1908, and the decision that we arrived at was only arrived at in December.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Why the delay in deciding on the tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will make inquiries. I think we called twice for tenders.

Mr. MEIGHEN. When was the last call for tenders?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy tells me that I am in error in saying that there were two calls for tender. There was delay while we were making inquiry as to the responsibility and experience of the contractors.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How large a place is Joliette?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Seven or eight years ago it had a population of 4,200.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is it about the same yet, or is it larger?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told that it is about 6,000 population now.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. minister will remember that in his estimates last year an appropriation was made for an armoury in the city of Portage la Prairie, a city with a population larger than even the population estimated by the minister for Joliette. But I do not see any appropriation this year for that armoury although it was promised by the candidate who opposed me in the last contest that an armoury would be erected in the city of Portage la Prairie. The reason I asked the minister when that policy was decided upon is that I would like to get at what the reason was for calling for tenders for certain of these public works immediately prior to, or immediately subsequent to, the election, and not calling for tenders for others equally necessary or more necessary for the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A large number of buildings were provided for in the Appropriation Act of last year. My directions to the chief architect were to proceed as rapidly as possible to get the plans and specifications ready and to call for tenders just as soon as this was done. But the hon. member will realize that this work takes time, and that plans and specifications for all these public works could not be gone on with at the same time. No selection was made of one place more than another, so far as I am aware. The chief architect went on in the regular way, intending to get out plans in reasonable time and to call for tenders for all these works. The decision arrived at with regard to dropping a large number of the public works was arrived at when we began to prepare the estimates for this session, some time in December, and I think the latter part of December.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Many tenders were called for subsequent to the 26th of October and prior to the date in December when the policy of the minister was decided upon. Then, I can quite understand what governed the department in calling for tenders in some cases and not in others.

Mr. AMES. What military corps will probably use this Joliette armoury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is headquarters for the 83rd Joliette Regiment and of A company.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. The minister tells us that the chief architect had instructions to make up the plans and specifications, but that all could not be made up at once. What system is adopted to decide which should be first? Did he commence in the west and go east, or in the middle, or how? Is there any system?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The practice is to follow the estimates that are voted, taking one after the other. Of course, we must first see that sites are obtained. Sometimes it happens that urgent representations are made by a member asking that the site be purchased as soon as possible, otherwise the option might be lost; or he might urge the erection of a building, and his representations would be heeded. In some towns the necessity of a public building is more urgent than in others. In some places there may be no accommodation for a post office or custom house. All these considerations necessarily weigh in deciding the action of the department.

Mr. AMES. To whom was the contract given for this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Simoneau & Dion, of Sherbrooke.

Mr. STANFIELD. After the Public Works Department has completed an armoury, how soon afterwards is it handed over to the Militia Department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In ordinary course it would be passed over to the Militia Department immediately on completion.

Mr. AMES. Who were the other tenderers, and what were the prices?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the names. There were six tenders, ranging from $13,500 to $15,095.

Mr. AMES. When was the land purchased, and from whom?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the name here, but I will get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Am I correct in understanding that in the matter of calling for tenders the minister exercises a discretion as to what public buildings tenders shall be called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I repeat what I have said, that in the ordinary course the chief architect takes the votes as they appear in the appropriation. But sometimes it occurs that a member writes to me urging me to proceed as rapidly as possbile with the erection of a building in a certain place for which there is an appropriation, urging that it is very much needed. I would send a memorandum to the chief architect to hurry along the plans and specifications for the building in such and such a place.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If it is left to the chief architect, and he simply follows the appropriations, I do not think the government would be justified in adopting such an arbitrary line as has been adopted, namely proceeding with such buildings as tenders have been called for and leaving others; because it would result in this, that those provinces that happen to be first in the estimates would secure practically all their public buildings, and those that happened to be last would get none at all. Am I correct in understanding that many tenders were called for subsequent to the 26th of October, and prior to this day in December when the policy of the ministry was decided upon that has borne so harshly on many constituencies throughout Canada?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I had made myself plain. In a number of cases I have been urged to see what was the cause of the delay in getting out plans and specifications. I have urged the chief architect to hurry along the work and the plans and specifications, but I never interfered with his proceedings or plans. He had a free hand for all buildings for which appropriations were made at the last session of parliament. Quite a number of tenders were called for during the summer. Parliament did not rise until the 20th of July; that accounts for delay in respect to a good many buildings. Later on when we came to consider the estimates and to weigh the revenue and expenditure for the coming year, we decided that in the public interest we would be obliged to drop a large number of public works. Now if I had undertaken to go through the list of buildings throughout Canada and determine which building should be carried on and which should be stopped, it would have been a very difficult task indeed, because when I put the items in the estimates of last year for these buildings I thought they were all necessary in the public interest, and that remark applies as well to buildings in constituencies which were represented by hon. gentlemen opposite as to buildings in constituencies which were represented by our friends. We thought the better way would be to draw the line as clearly as possible between buildings in regard to which tenders had been called for before we reached that decision, and those in regard to which tenders had not been called for. We did not feel that any great injustice was being done to those places with regard to which we were leaving buildings out of the estimates this year, because it did not mean, and does not mean, an abandonment of those buildings; it only means, as we hope, a postponment of them until next year. Parliament will meet in the ordinary course next fall, and then provision can be made, we hope, for the erection of buildings which were left out of the estimates for this year. I am sure that upon reflection my hon. friend, as other hon. members of this House, will see that we have adopted the wisest course. I was compelled, in yielding to the views of my colleagues, particularly my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, to drop some $8,000,000 from my estimates. I was sorry to do it. It has disappointed our hon. friend on this side more than it has disappointed my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. We had to do it. We thought we were doing it in the public interest and the public will justify it. We felt that the public would recognize that in taking this step public men are showing their willingness to meet conditions which have come temporarily upon us and which, we hope, will soon pass away. We feel that the financiers of the world will approve of the course which we have taken because it shows a determination on the part of the government to keep the expenditure within the revenue, and I trust my hon. friend will accept this explanation and allow this item to pass.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I quite understand the explanation of the minister, but that is no answer to the question I put to him. The question I put was: Were not many of these tenders called for subsequent to October 26, and prior to this date in December, when the policy of the minister was decided upon?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told the hon. gentleman that some were, but I cannot tell how many.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I hope the minister will not think we are captiously taking up time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Because I, in common with many other members, four years from now, will be called upon to explain to the electors how it is that we did not succeed in getting these public buildings that were already in the estimates before we were elected, and when we say that the ministry decided upon a policy of economy owing to the diminution of the revenues they will answer us by saying that these revenues diminished a year ago. They will ask: How was it that the policy of the ministry was decided on one year after the condition existed, and when it should have been decided upon? I would be in a quandary to explain that decision to the electors. We would like to be able to offer some reasonable ground, but I am afraid that the explanation of the minister will be resented, because if the policy were adopted in December there was far more reason for it being adopted before any of us were candidates for the House at all, namely, a year ago.

Mr. BURRELL. Is it the intention to proceed with the construction of some of these buildings for which tenders were asked after October 26?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, as to some of them, but not all.

Mr. AMES. What principle has the minister followed in deciding what ones shall be gone on with and what ones shall not be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. With regard to those in respect to which tenders were called we also considered very carefully as to whether we might not postpone some of them until the following year, and that is the principle upon which we went. Those which we thought were absolutely urgent we have proceeded with.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the principle?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The public necessities.

Mr. AMES. The minister has admitted that he found it necessary to strike out a great many items from the estimates providing for work that he would like to have done. On what principle did he proceed in deciding that certain items should be retained in the estimates and that certain items should be struck out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought I explained that.

Mr. AMES. Not very clearly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. On a certain day we came to the conclusion that we would have to make a large cut in the estimates.

Mr. AMES. In December?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I think it was in December that we began to make up the estimates, and we decided to drop a very large amount. I decided to recommend to my colleagues in the first place to drop those public works for which tenders had not been called irrespective of their necessity. That rule was followed possibly with one or two exceptions. Then that left to be considered all those works in regard to which we had called for tenders. We went through the list again, applied the pruning knife and considered as to whether or not there might not be a few of these which we might drop. We also considered as to whether they were really of such urgent public necessity that they could not stand over for another year. In the case of some public works we concluded that they might stand over and we dropped them even though tenders had been called.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister give a concrete instance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I can give one. There was the case of the Naufrage Pond, in Prince Edward Island. The constituency had been asking for this for a considerable time, but the amount was large, and although we had asked for tenders we concluded that we might allow that to stand for another year. The matter was referred to the chief engineer and he reported that he did not think the public interest would suffer if it were allowed to stand for another year.

Mr. FOSTER. What work was that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was a breakwater.

Mr. AMES. The minister has been unable to satisfy us yet as to the definite principle upon which he based his decision. Consequently, the only way we can determine that principle is to use our own powers of thought. I would like to ask the minister if he would be good enough to submit to the House a list of those works that were struck out in his first pruning and of those that he struck out in his second pruning in order that we may determine for ourselves what the principle was upon which he proceeded.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend, who has won a reputation for industry, will not allow that reputation to be lost by asking me to do what the hon. gentleman can easily do himself. If my hon. friend would take the estimates of last year and compare them with the estimates of this year he will see what has been struck out. Then I can give him the list of the others.

Mr. AMES. We cannot tell what items were on this original list which he says has been pruned so industriously to the extent of $8,000,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that the items on my original list were not new at all. They were only the works for which provision had been made at the last session of parliament.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister at least give us a list of those public works for which tenders had been called and which it was decided would not be gone on with this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Now that is business; I will do that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister also give us the assurance that those public buildings which were in the estimates last year and which now are unfortunately discontinued will be preferred and gone on with before other public buildings of a similar kind are initiated?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that is a very fair question. I feel that is the course that I should pursue as Minister of Public Works and will certainly recommend to my colleagues. Of course there may be cases arise, such as a public building being burned down or a wharf being carried away, which might create an exception, and we might have to include these new works, but as a general principle I am and would be committed to those works which parliament was asked to sanction last year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I am very glad to hear that answer, and I hope that principle will be extended.

Mr. JAMESON. Does that apply to breakwaters and wharfs as well as to public buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. Of course if I were convinced that any work was not necessary I would have to think the matter over, but as at present advised I would adopt that course.

Mr. JAMESON. I am referring to the items which were in the estimates last year and which are stricken out of the estimates of the present year and which of course would not be placed in the estimates last year if the ministry did not consider they were justifiable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As at present advised I do not see any reason for changing my mind that all the works provided for last session are necessary public works. I think we are committed to them, and by every principle which ought to bind a public man I think I should recommend to my colleagues that they should be placed in the estimates next year or whenever the opportunity arises.

Mr. AMES. We may then take it as an expression of definite policy on the part of the minister that the items which have once been voted by this House but not proceeded with shall have priority in the estimates for public works next year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Speaking as a general principle, yes.

Knowlton Public Building, $12,000.

Mr. AMES. What is the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total probable cost, including everything, is $26,866.76.

Mr. AMES. Knowlton is a place of 800 inhabitants?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is not a large place but it is a place of considerable importance.

Mr. AMES. Is there any special rule followed as to the size and magnificence of a public building in comparison with the size and importance of the town?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where the place is small we try to give a comparatively small building.

Mr. AMES. When the town is represented by a cabinet minister does it have a large and better building than otherwise?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not as a rule, but of course it shows a higher standard of intelligence on the part of the people.

Lachute Public Buildings, $7,000.

Mr. PERLEY. What is the total cost of the building and will this vote complete it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is supposed to complete the building. The total estimated cost is $26,774.69. It is in the constituency represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Perley).

Mr. PERLEY. Perhaps the Minister of Customs will tell me whether he intends to make Lachute a port of entry seeing that he has now a building there to accommodate his officers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. What do you say about the necessity for this building?

Mr. PERLEY. The building is a very good building, but it was put in the wrong place, and were I to speak about that it might take considerable of the time of the committee. When this building was first spoken of I went to Mr. Hyman, then minister, and begged him to erect it in the part of the town where it ought to have been put, but unfortunately he thought that political considerations forced him to erect it on its present location. Later on I may discuss the question from that point of view. However, for the present I merely say that I had the pleasure of speaking to the Minister of Customs on one occasion about making Lachute a port of entry and I now press my request on him again in view of the fact that this public building is specially designed to accommodate the customs service. Does the Minister of Customs propose to make a port of entry of Lachute?

Mr. PATERSON. We have not arrived at a definite conclusion as to that. After we have the money voted and see what we have on hand we will consider the necessities of the different parts of the country in that respect. In this year of economy we have not been able to meet the wishes of everybody, but the fact that quarters have been provided for customs in Lachute adds additional weight to the claim. The difficulty is that there are other towns asking for similar facilities which are not so well off as Lachute, but the matter will be given consideration.

Mr. PERLEY. Lachute is exactly in the same position as Alexandria, being half way between Ottawa and Montreal. It is a town of about the same size and yet Alexandria was made a port of entry some years ago. The minister told me then that one of the great reasons why Alexandria was made a port of entry was that a public building had been erected which contained accommodation for the customs. I hope the hon. gentleman will not permit the customs offices in the Lachute public buildings to go untenanted.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not ask to have accommodation for the customs in the Alexandria building, but it was done and it made it more difficult to refuse the demand. Otherwise I would have asked the Alexandria people to wait a little longer. Of course, the fact mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Perley) gives a little more strength to his request with regard to La-chute, but should I yield, it will be a double argument for some other place and so I will need a little time to think it over.

Mr. FOSTER. The stable was built before you bought the horse.

Magog Public Building, $14,000.

Mr. AMES. What is the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost including everything is estimated at $35,626. It will be used for post office and customs house.

Montreal Eastern Postal Station, $10,000.

Mr. MONK. Is this a new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of my hon. friend I will tell him that the site of this postal station is on St. Catherine east. The amount paid for land is $33,000. It was bought from Mr. Jeannotte, a good Conservative.

Mr. MONK. I think I must ask this item to stand until the Postmaster General is here to tell us what he intends to do about the reorganization of the postal service in Montreal. A great commercial city like Montreal is entitled to the fullest consideration of parliament with respect to matters of this kind, but we should know what policy the government intends to pursue with respect to granting postal facilities. I heard Sir Wm. Mulock, when Postmaster General, state in this House that the government would provide a postal station about midway between the great railway stations in Montreal in order to forward promptly to the central post office the mail matter arriving in the city. He gave reasons for declaring this as the policy of the government, but nothing has ever been done in that direction. But we find applied in the city of Montreal a principle which prevails everywhere, and which I think should be put a stop to. That principle is this: A man is elected to this House, and his sole object seems to be to have a public building erected within the limits of his constituency. I say without fear of contradiction that in the majority of cases he is a man we see very little of either in the general work of the House or in the very important work of the committees of the House; but he seems to think that if he gets a public building for his constituency that will make up for all his shortcomings; and that public building is erected to suit his caprice, very often in the wrong place, very often, we must admit, unnecessarily, and very often where the money might be spent more advantageously in a different manner. Take, for instance, the city of Montreal, the commercial centre of the Dominion, which contributes one-fifth, if not a larger proportion, of the total revenue of the country. While spending lavishly, if necessary, in that city, we should apply the money in the best possible way. We have in Montreal a port by far the most important of all the ports in the Dominion. Its income exceeds by an immense amount the income of any other port. For some years we have had there three excellent harbour commissioners, who are doing the best they can for the money they have, and for five years we have had before us the report of the Transportation Commission recommending, as among the foremost necessities of the country, the nationalization of the port of Montreal and the construction of a dry dock there as absolutely essential and urgent. That report, it is true, mentioned other ports which should be nationalized, but the chairman of the commission, in a letter sent subsequent to his report, insisted particularly on the urgency of the case in Montreal. We find at present—and the papers in the last few days have been full of it—that very far from Montreal becoming a free port, or the announcement being made by the government that the recommendation of that most important commission would be carried out, nothing has been done; and in order to carry out the improvements that are absolutely required in the port of Montreal, large indebtedness has been incurred, and to-day the commissioners find it impossible to continue their work without adding to the burdens of the port. Not only the people of Montreal, but I believe all the people of the province of Quebec, and very many people who are interested elsewhere, would say, if they were questioned on the subject, that the very first expense to be incurred should be in the direction of carrying out the recommendation of the Transportation Commission and making the port of Montreal a free port. With the competition of the American ports, the idea of adding to the burdens of the port of Montreal, embarrassing commerce and putting us on a retrograde march instead of enabling us to go forward, would be condemned by everybody. Quite lately the Board of Trade of Montreal has taken the matter up exactly as I have stated it to the House. The government seems to be indifferent to that very question. Therefore, it is important for us to know if the construction of all these postal stations is necessary. If it is, I have not a word to say. But this policy varies entirely from the policy of the government as I heard it laid down not many years ago by Sir William Mulock, speaking in this House on behalf of the government. In Montreal we have a somewhat strange phenomenon. The postal revenue of that city, the largest in the Dominion, is considerably less than that of the city of Toronto. What is the reason of that unexplained difference? To my mind it is attributable to this: That our postal system in Montreal requires reform and requires additional expenditure. Our post office is properly manned. Our officers, whether the superior officers or those who have charge of the delivery of letters, perform their duties well; but they are absolutely insufficient in number; they are scandalously underpaid and they have not the means of giving us a proper service. I have made suggestions already, and I will make them again when the postal estimates come up, because I believe that if we applied ourselves to correct these deficiencies, and if we had in Montreal such a postal delivery as there is in other large cities—in London, in Paris, perhaps in Toronto—so that if a letter is put in a postal box at a certain hour it is sure to be delivered at a certain hour, the revenue of the Montreal post office would swell by leaps and bounds, and would soon equal if not surpass that of the city of Toronto. There is not that confidence at the present moment. Therefore, I ask is it wise for us to expend such a large amount of money in building postal stations, and could not the money be better applied in other ways? I think we should be informed by the Postmaster General if this way of spending money is the result of a settled policy of the government—the policy of erecting public buildings for the satisfaction of members representing different constituencies, in order that they may have the opportunity to show their electors that they have done something for their respective constituencies. It would be wiser for us to improve our postal system than to build large postal stations without improvements.

I think, in view of what is happening to our harbour commission, in view of the very large amount—an amount which I cannot understand, and which appears to be highly excessive—which we are spending on the central post office—a sum which, when we have finished with that post office, will amount to over $700,000—in view of these expenditures, it is wise for the committee to pause and ask the Postmaster General if this is the result of a policy and if we cannot make better use of our money than to build a larger number of these postal stations. What is essential to a postal service is not to build postal stations unless absolutely necessary in order to insure what is absolutely required in a commercial city like Montreal, namely, an efficient postal service.

Mr. M. Martin. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to answer with a few words to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who has said a moment ago that the erection of a postal station in the constituency of St. Mary was perhaps to suit the caprice of the deputy representing that division. We have to bear in mind that this question is pending since about fifteen years, and that this postal station was required by all the electors of that constituency, whose number exceeds 48,000 inhabitants.

In that part of the city the postal business are of great importance. I will only mention the case of Mr. Filion, an apothecary, living in the north part of St. Mary's division who last year has made $93,000 in a small office of some square feet in size.

St. Mary's division forms one of the most commercial wards in the city of Montreal. St. Catherine street, from east to west; Notre Dame street from east to west, Ontario and Craig streets are nearly exclusively filled up with commercial firms. The large manufacturers are situated in that constituency.

Let me mention by the way, Sir, a few of those manufactures which are built there: A great number of breweries, some manufactures of shirts and glass works. We count also a manufacture of oilcloth, another one of engines, two of caoutchouc, a part of cotton mills, a manufacture of paints, without reckoning the largest tobacco manufacture of our Dominion, the Macdonald manufacture, and also the Dominion Tobacco Company. We have a few others more. A sugar refinery, some manufactures of cigars, thread, biscuits, shoes, sash and doors, with many others whose enumeration would be tedious.

If I have used every endeavour to obtain a postal station in that constituency it was not for the purpose of making easy my re-election, because the hon. member knows the majority which I won in 1906. If I have attempted to induce the government to give us that postal station it was because I knew it was indispensable. If the revenue of Ontario is considerably larger than that of Quebec—I mean the postal revenue—it is because the first one is better provided with postal stations which afford more facilities to the citizens in view of transacting postal business. I think my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has been mistaken when he said it was a caprice of the member for St. Mary's. I will repeat again that I did not want that postal station in order to be re-elected. I have given sufficient proof of that. I want to add that the Conservative members are always ready to object to some estimate of the province of Quebec. It is not the same thing about the estimates of the province of Ontario.

Mr. AMES. (Translation.) Will the hon. member give us an idea about the site of that postal station?

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation.). Yes. It shall be situated on the corner of St. Catherine and Plessis. The owner of the land is Mr. Jeannotte, a good Tory. We could not buy other land without paying $45,000 or $50,000. The hon. member ought to know the amount paid by the government when the land was bought for the post office on St. Catherine west.

Mr. AMES. (Translation.) Is it not true that a post office is now situated on Notre Dame east, No. 281? Another in St. Mary's ward and a third one on Ontario street, No. 1241?

Mr. MARTIN. (Translation.) They are auxiliary branches established in shops. As I have said a moment ago, Mr. Filion, an apothecary, on Fullum street north, has made $93,000 in postal business last year and there are fifteen or twenty others doing the same thing.

If I have endeavoured to get that postal station, I say again, it is because the citizens were urging for it and not myself, because I was not in need of it.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend entirely misapprehends me. He gives as reasons for the construction of these post offices that the division is a business one, that the land was bought from a Conservative, and that when we are asked to vote money for the province of Ontario, there seems to be no objection on this side. I do not think there is anything in the remarks I made to the committee which can give rise to such an interpretation. I am speaking for Montreal. My hon. friend entirely loses sight of the question I put to the Postmaster General, as to what his policy is regarding the expenditure of public money in that city where so much is required. My hon. friend from St. Mary's, who is unduly irritated, seems to think that that is not a fair question to ask. Well, I have given good reasons for it. I know St. Mary's division well. I know the whole eastern part of Montreal. I have lived there, and I know there are many important business interests and factories in that division and that it is a most important section of the city. But what I say is that what the people require in that part of the city is an efficient postal service. What they want is that the city should be properly equipped to fulfil the role it has to play in the Dominion; and if they were given their choice between a public building, not absolutely required, and the completion of those improvements, which have been time and again asked for from the government, they would not hesitate a moment. We have not at present as efficient a postal service as we should have. The fault is not with the authorities in Montreal, because their postal service is not sufficiently manned and the postal officials are not adequately paid. At certain times of the year it is impossible to carry out the work effectively because of the lack of sufficient hands to do it. Therefore, after what I have heard stated here by Sir Wm. Mulock, when he was Postmaster General, we are entitled to know, in virtue of what policy we are building these postal stations. And if my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin), and St. James Division (Mr. Gervais) will give us that policy and demonstrate that the money is absolutely required for that purpose and that all other purposes, however urgent, must give way to it, even though the failure to supply them places us in a very inferior position, I shall be perfectly satisfied. I am not asking that the money should not be voted; but when we are asked to vote nearly one quarter of a million dollars, I am surely entitled to ask whether that money could not be applied in a wiser manner to far more important wants, and surely it is not necessary to say that we are opposed to public expenditure in the province of Quebec. That is absurd. It is no answer to say that the site for the post office has been bought from a Conservative. Such arguments are childish.

Mr. GERVAIS. I agree with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier in quite a number of the remarks he has made. We have been in great need for the last 15 or 20 years of large expenditure on improvements in the central post office and in great need of sub-postal stations in the eastern part of Montreal. My hon. friend from St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames) will admit that the construction of a postal station in the heart of his constituency added a great deal of revenue to the postal department within the city of Montreal.

Mr. AMES. I do not object to sub-post offices that will add as much revenue as does sub-station A.

Mr. GERVAIS. Since then, I have succeeded in getting a sub-postal station, at a total expenditure of $5,000, which was built on the corner of St. Catherine street east and Amherst street. In the two or three years since that sub-station was established, I think, about $25,000 has been added to the revenue of the central post office in Montreal. I believe that when the government can see its way clear to construct two or three more postal sub stations, scattered over the eastern part of Montreal, fully $100,000 will be added to the general revenue. I admit with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that modern postal facilities have not yet been given to a large part of the city of Montreal. But I hope that within a few months—a couple of years at most—the best ten postal facilities will be given to the whole eastern section of the city. With regard to postal sub-station B, at the corner of St. Catherine street east and Amherst street, I may say that it affords all of the postal facilities to be had at the central post office. Letters are posted and received; letters can be registered; the business of the money order and post office savings bank branch is carried on; and there is a special and late delivery. I believe that this proposed expenditure of

Mr. PUGSLEY. That plan was not carried out in Toronto.

Mr. GERVAIS. I believe that that is a policy that should be followed out. Well, at any rate with a special horse service, or a special electric car service between the central post office and the sub-stations, communication would be greatly facilitated. These sub-post offices which have been mentioned, and which are supposed to serve a large number in Montreal, are not of very great use. To improve our postal facilities, what we need to do is to build postal sub-stations. Hon. members understand that there is a great difference between a postal sub-station and a sub-post office. A sub-post office is a place where you can buy stamps and post letters. But a postal sub-station affords all the facilities of the central office. If, in Montreal, we can build five or six more sub-stations—not sub-post offices—you will probably add to the exchequer of the department about $150,000 of yearly income. I do not think the Dominion of Cainada is in such need of money as not to allow this House to vote that small sum of $25,000 for the purpose of building sub-postal stations on the corner of St. Catherine and some other street.

I admit, with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), that something should be done to make the port of Montreal a free port. For ten years we have been speaking of Montreal as the great national port of Canada. But it can never be a truly national port until it is made free, as Boston, Portland and Quebec are free. Instead of imposing new wharfage dues, or fresh pilotage dues, on those who wish to do business in and around the port of Montreal, we should try to abolish all these imposts. On that point I concur in the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. Several sessions ago, I declared myself against our present policy. I am aware that some railway companies are giving premiums and bonuses to shippers for the purpose of diverting trade from the port of Montreal to the benefit of Portland or Boston. That's a cold fact. So, instead of working for an increase of the wharfage dues, we ought to join hands to have those dues abolished once for all. I think that something should be done in this direction during the present session.

Mr. MONK. I am glad that my hon. friend from St. James, Montreal (Mr. Gervais), agrees with me in a good many things. He has, at any rate, absolved me from the very cruel imputations of my hon. friend from Montreal, St. Mary's (Mr. Méderic Martin). We would like to get more information. Is the delivery of postal matter in the city of Montreal started from any of these postal stations?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes. From sub-stations A and B there is every kind of delivery just as from the central post office. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) knows very well that many manufacturers are establishing themselves near Craig and Amherst streets. They have been receiving, lately, from six to eight daily deliveries of letters. Private postal boxes have been established at Amherst street sub-station, University street sub-station, and Chaboillez Square sub-station. I repeat that every possible facility is given at these sub-stations that can be given at the central post office.

Mr. MONK. I would like to know whether there are different districts for delivery in Montreal. Do the sub-postal stations serve as centres of mail delivery?

Mr. GERVAIS There are three kinds of districts; there are the remote districts, which are supposed to get three deliveries per day; then there are the sub-postal station districts which are supposed to receive four to six daily deliveries; then there is the commercial centre of Montreal properly speaking, which is bounded by Craig street, the river, Wellington street and Bonsecours market, which district is supposed to get about an hourly delivery, that is about eight deliveries per day. In the northern part of the city, in St. Jean Baptiste ward, the neighbourhood of Mile End, and Mount Royal ward, I think there are at least three deliveries per day.

Mr. MONK. I do not quite understand my hon. friend. Are these sub-postal stations main centres from which delivery is made? I mean by that, is the postal matter conveyed from the central station to the sub-stations and there handed over to special carriers?

Mr. GERVAIS. Exactly. For example, in each sub-postal station there are headquarters for letter carriers. There are three groups of letter carriers. One will start every hour or two from the central post office; then from each of the sub-postal stations another group of letter carriers start about every hour, with the mail matter which has to be delivered over one-third of the city of Montreal; and there is another group serving the remote districts.

Mr. AMES. I think we are entitled to have some expression of definite policy given us in respect to these sub-delivery stations in the city of Montreal. At present it would seem as if these stations were built purely by favour, instead of the department endeavouring to take the entire city and district it, and then giving to each one of those separate districts one of the distributing sub-stations. So far as I can see, there are at least two of the three sub-stations to the east of St. Lawrence Main street, and now it is proposed to build a third east of St. Lawrence Main street; while the whole portion of the city lying to the south and west, including St. Ann's ward, St. Joseph's ward, and all that section, has no sub-station at all. Am I right?

Mr. GERVAIS. No.

Mr. AMES. Then why should the government at this particular time build a third distributing station in that part of the city which at the present time has the best possible facilities of that kind? You have only to look over the mails that come in from different postal stations throughout the city to understand something of their relative value. There are no less than fifty-two different stations under the control of the Post Office Department in the city of Montreal and the immediate suburbs.

Mr. GERVAIS. Postal stations and sub-post offices.

Mr. AMES. There are no less than 52 different places where work is done for the government, and which the government pays some one to do.

Mr. GERVAIS. $50 a year, on an average.

Mr. AMES. Various prices. For example, sub-postal station 15, of which the hon. member has spoken gave a revenue last year of $135, while the expenditure is $93.65. But the point I want to make is this, that if it is good policy to have in the city of Montreal, say, four or five sub-stations from which postmen shall distribute mail matter, then I think we ought to know just how the city of Montreal is divided, and when it is the intention of the government to build the remaining stations that will put the whole city, outside the immediate business centre, upon the same basis. For example, we have heard from the hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) of the great advantage that comes from that Fullum street station, and yet the revenue for the last fiscal year was only $3,165. Now down on Chaboillez Square in the heart of a great business centre, there is a building being temporarily used, and the revenue derived there is $13,968. Now if we are to put up another building in St. Mary's division at the demand of the hon. member for that division, where the revenue is only $3,165, what about that great portion of the city served by the Chaboillez Square station where the revenue is four times as much? Even the station which the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Gervais) has been telling about, station C on Amherst street, only gives a revenue of $11,108. So the government, in building these sub-stations, is not building them in accordance with the needs of the district or with the revenue of the district, but simply by political favouritism, and in those sections of the city which need them least. My protest is this, that there should be adopted a regular and definite plan, and that where the business is greatest and the need is greatest, there a building should go up first, and that the other outlying sections with less business should not be served until the most important sections are served. I now enter this request of the minister and of the government generally, to the effect that if you are to endow the different sections of the city of Montreal with these postal distributing stations, the first district to be endowed should be the Chaboillez Square district, which gives to-day the second largest revenue of all the 52 stations.

Mr. GERVAIS. The question of distance for distribution is a very important one. What is the distance between Chaboillez Square and the central post office? Not more than three-quarters of a mile. We have some sub-postal stations that have only been in operation for one year and a half. I think it is a proof of its necessity if, after one year and a half we are getting now a revenue of over $11,000 from a sub-post office. Let me tell my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) that his constituency has been princely served, because the total cost of sub-postal station A, right in the heart of his constituency, has cost over $200,000. I may say that before a couple of years are past, the revenue of the sub-postal station B, in St. Catherine street and Amherst street will exceed the revenue of the sub-postal station in the district of the hon. member for St. Antoine.

The hon. member for St. Antoine will, I suppose, concede that there is a tremendous amount of business being done daily upon St. Catherine street, between Visitation street and St. Lawrence Main. The grand total of the business in St. James division is as great as that on St. Catherine street within the boundary of St. Antoine division. The hon. member for St. Antoine should not expect to have his protest considered very seriously by this government. I do not know at whose request he has been enjoying the good will of the government to the amount of a quarter of a million dollars without any more benefit than the government is getting from the sub-station building at Amherst and St. Catherine streets. I understand that the government is not paying more than $1,500 rent for the building used as a sub-postal station at Amherst and St. Catherine streets, which is not to be compared with the interest which the government is paying on the quarter of a million it has spent for the building of the monumental sub postal station at University and St. Catherine streets west. I think, therefore, that this committee can well disregard any protest made on behalf of the hon. member for St. Antoine.

Mr. DOHERTY. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the whole question is a question of distance from the central post office and that the business to be attended to has nothing to do with it?

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes, it has.

Mr. DOHERTY. How does the hon. gentleman explain that this rented establishment that produces this income of $13,000 a year is to be treated as of less consequence than an establishment that produces $3,000 a year? He tells my hon. friend from St. Antoine that the government has spent $200,000 in his division. Does the hon. gentleman know that this particular post office producing this large revenue is in the division of St. Ann and will he tell us what monumental generosity the government bestowed upon that division?

Mr. GERVAIS. In St. James division the government has not spent more than $5,000 per year for the maintenance of Amherst street sub-postal station, although that sub-postal station has given as large a revenue as the Chaboillez Square postal station. The distance between Amherst street sub-postal station and the central post office is about double the distance between the sub-postal office and Chaboillez Square in St. Ann's division. I am not against the establishment or maintenance of a postal station on Chaboillez Square. I am in favour of the establishment of as many sub-postal stations as possible, taking into consideration the question of business and revenue.

Mr. AMES. Just one word more and that is to ask the minister if he will be good enough, in the course of this present year, and before he comes to the House again with further estimates for additional sub-postal stations in Montreal, to give to this matter of the sub-postal stations in our city some serious consideration as to where they should be placed, and determine that their location may not be based simply upon the needs of a single constituency or upon the demands of two or three members of this House. All that we ask is that the minister shall look upon the city of Montreal from a business point of view. Here lies a city stretching four miles in one direction by three miles in another. In the centre is the main post office. If we are going to have sub-distribution stations how many should we establish, three, four, five or six, or whatever number is necessary to meet the needs of the case? If we decide that we are to establish four, where shall we place them? Let there be a definite policy, so that it may be understood when we are building this one to-day that one will be built to-morrow, this one a year after, and that one in a subsequent year; so that we may feel that the entire city of Montreal, having an equal claim upon the government, is equitably treated and a complete system is evolved in consequence. Otherwise, we find that it becomes the practice for a member representing the division, particularly on the government side, to make before the electors great promises as to securing them a post office, and then, having secured the appropriation, he endeavours to put that post office in a place that will be most useful to that particular entourage without reference to the interests of the city as a whole. These post offices should be placed not with reference to ward boundaries, but with reference to the needs of the districts which they are to serve, and I hope the minister will take that matter up with the expectation of giving the city of Montreal four or five suitably situated postal sub-stations.

Mr. GERVAIS. That has been the policy of the government.

Mr. AMES. No, they have got them all in this half of the city.

Mr. GERVAIS. Because the business is there, always going more and more to the east of Montreal.

Mr. AMES. No, while they have done that the largest revenue with one exception comes from the Chaboillez Square section.

Mr. MONK. These stations are all built on the recommendation of the Postmaster General by the Department of Public Works, and that is why I think it would have been more satisfactory if we had had a statement of a general system adopted by the government and an explanation of a plan applicable to the whole city of Montreal from the Postmaster General, because the Minister of Public Works is not in a position to give us that information. As far as Montreal is concerned there is no idea whatever of differentiating between the east and west. The hon. member for St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) will, I think, admit that readily. What we want is an efficient postal system. I think that in Toronto, they are more exacting upon that point. Our only desire is that we should have our rights in this matter. We ask that in the city of Montreal you will give us an efficient postal system with sure and certain delivery. Although the employees do their very best, and although they are most efficient, there is no certainty that a letter posted at an important business place in the eastern part of the city, at the Angus shops, for instance, will reach its destination in time.

Mr. GERVAIS. They have a sub-post office there.

Mr. MONK. There is no certainty, I say, that the letter will be delivered at Point St. Charles at a certain hour. The hon. member for St. James (Mr. Gervais) knows it very well. There are drop letter boxes and there is something marked on the boxes as to the hour at which the next collection will be made. That mark is almost always obliterated from the box. I have never seen it so in the city of Toronto. It is important, when you drop a letter in the box, that the signs should be there in order that you may know exactly when the last collection was made and when the next one will be made. These things appear to be trifling details, but my hon. friend knows they are very important and if we have a service there equal to what they have in Toronto you will see an increase in the postal revenue in Montreal which will carry us far beyond the revenue at present obtained in Toronto, which is the largest revenue in the Dominion. Does my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Martin) think it is unpatriotic to plead for that?

Mr. M. MARTIN. They are doing it in the province of Ontario through Mr. Ross and in Quebec now.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to hear that. With regard to postal stations I may say that a suitable and ornamental sub-station could be erected cheaper than is the case under the present system, and if we are to have many of these we should see that they are all of the same model as is the case in the United States where you can recognize the sub-postal station buildings from afar. It should not be the rule that the building in St. Mary's division should be a very fine and costly one because the member representing that division is an influential and big man, and that another division just as important though not so influentially represented should have a smaller building. If the minister gives me the occasion to tender I will undertake to build such postal stations as I have suggested for far less money then he is now spending, and I shall be able to retire with a competency.

Mr. GERVAIS. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) is always eloquent but he has not explained the conditions in the central post office in Montreal. That post office has practically been doing the postal business of the greater part of Canada, and the officials there have been sorting the incoming European mail to the advantage of the employees of the Toronto office. Should the plan be carried out of sorting the European mail on the ocean steamers the officials of the Montreal post office will have more time to attend to local business. I think myself that the Toronto office should do the sorting and distribution for Winnipeg and the west.

Mr. MONK. Then there is something wrong in the system.

Mr. GERVAIS. I have no right to speak for the government, but from my point of view I think the present system is not a perfect one and can be improved.

Mr. MONK. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) is qualifying for the office of Postmaster General.

Mr. JAMESON. I was in Montreal last Sunday and I desired at six o'clock to mail a letter for the train which leaves Windsor station at 7.25, but I was informed that the mail had been closed.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that under the new Sabbath Observance law it is forbidden even to the officials of the government that they should work on Sunday, except on very urgent business.

Mr. AMES. Will the minister lay on the table of the House at his earliest convenience a statement showing the boundaries of the districts to be served by each of the two sub-stations for which a vote is asked in these estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to ask the Postmaster General for that.

Mr. GERVAIS. We must have a horse before we build a stable and the Post Office Department must wait for the business to grow before it erects post offices, so that it is idle to ask for a plan of what may be done in the future, in districts of the Montreal Island where there is no business today.

Montreal General Post Office—Enlargements, additions and alterations, including fittings, furniture, &c., $127,000.

Mr. AMES. Who has the contract for that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Peter Lyall & Sons.

Mr. AMES. How much was the original contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $487,537.

Mr. AMES. How much has already been spent on that contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure to the 31st December, 1908, was $640,302.70. This includes $200,000 paid for the site to the Montreal 'Gazette'; printing, advertising, supervision, architect's commission, $11,400; paid city of Montreal for right of passage over Fortification lane, $14,592, paid on account of heating apparatus, $2,700; blue stone side walks, $620; contractors, $410,990. The total probable cost, including the site, will be $780,554.70.

Mr. AMES. How much will be needed to complete the contract work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No more; this will complete everything.

Mr. AMES. What extras have been paid to Mr. Peter Lyall in connection with the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were no extras at all.

Mr. AMES. There will be many of them before you are through.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no indication of it.

Quebec Post Office—Elevators, improvements, repairs and fittings, $13,000.

Mr. JAMESON. Is there a contract for that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders have been called for and the order in council drafted recommending the contract, but I do not know that it is signed.

St. Johns Public Building, $6,000.

Mr. AMES. What is that for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A post office.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Does this complete it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Sherbrooke Drill Hall, $45,000.

Mr. AMES. When will that be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected to be completed, under the terms of the contract, on the 2nd of November, 1909.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Worthington) wishes to know whether this drill hall will be large enough to accommodate the new company which is being organized there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not being the Minister of Militia I cannot say, but I assume that it would.

Three Rivers—New Public Building—To replace building destroyed by fire, June 22, 1908, $40,000.

Mr. AMES. Does the government place any insurance on any of its buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. PATERSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. PATERSON. The first will be the Bill that stands in the name of the Minister of Justice. Then we will go into Supply, and continue with the estimates of the Public Works Department.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 19, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Department of Railways and Canals for the year ending 31st of March, 1908—Mr. Graham.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 66) respecting the Abitibi and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Geo. Gordon.

Bill (No. 67) respecting the Alsek and Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. Wilbert McIntyre.

Bill (No. 68) respecting the Athabaska Railway Company.—Mr. Wilbert McIntyre.

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Fort Erie and Buffalo Bridge Company.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 70) respecting the St. Mary's and Western Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. G. H. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 71) respecting a patent of Thomas L. Smith.—Mr. Bickerdike.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Nanaimo) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 72) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The object of this Bill is to reduce and fix the hours of labour for telegraphers and despatchers on railways.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). In what way?

Mr. RALPH SMITH. At eight hours a day.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT INSPECTION OF VESSELS.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 73) to provide for the government inspection of vessels. He said: This Bill is to apply to vessels not now inspected under the Dominion Inspection Act. At present, all well found vessels are inspected, but barges, which have no motive power, are not inspected. Clauses 6 and 7 of this Bill provide that the present Inspection and Equipment Act shall apply to small steam vessels over five tons. The matter has been discussed by the divisional court of Ontario, as will be found in 120 Ontario Reports, page 154, Sturgeon vs. Port Burwell Fishing Company. The representatives of a man who was drowned were not able to recover from the steamer notwithstanding the fact that there was no boat or axe on board. The life buoy was fastened too securely for quick use. Had this vessel been equipped as others must be under the law, the life of the man would have been saved. Clause 8 of the Bill is to provide that vessels towing shall carry a rocket gun. At present, steel boats cannot get within reach of their tows which have broken loose, where the sea is very high. The American Steel Trust require all their vessels to carry rocket guns, not because it is provided by law, but for the protection of the Trust's own interests. Ocean vessels are required by law to carry these appliances. The cost is very small.

Mr. DANIEL. Would this apply everywhere?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, all over the Dominion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RULES OF THE HOUSE—ADDITIONAL STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That Rule No. 10, Chapter 2, of the Rules of the House of Commons, be amended by adding after the words 'on Agriculture and Colonization' the words 'on Marine and Fisheries.'

He said: This resolution is designed to carry into effect the decision of the House reached some days ago on motion of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair). It simply gives legal form to the resolution proposed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. How will the rule read then?

Mr. BRODEUR. Rule 10, chapter 2, provides:

At the commencement of each session a special committee, consisting of five members, shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, List of Members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House, for the following purposes—

These, of course, include the Public Accounts, and others. It is proposed now that after 'Agriculture and Colonization,' 'Marine and Fisheries' be added.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). According to the understanding I had the other day on the motion made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, I shall move to amend the resolution by adding the following words: 'Mines and Minerals, Forests, Waterways and Water-powers.' That is, we shall have besides the committees already provided for, committees on Marine and Fisheries, on Mines and Minerals and on Forests, Waterways and Water-powers.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolution.

Resolution reported as amended and read the second time.

Mr. BRODEUR moved that the resolution be concurred in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The committees will be appointed this session?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Motion agreed to.

ASH WEDNESDAY ADJOURNMENT.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved that when this House adjourns on Tuesday next it will stand adjourned till Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LENNOX. Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to ask the Minister of Public Works when we may expect the return as to the expenditure in the riding of Bonaventure. The order of the House was passed on the 1st of February, and nineteen days have now elapsed since it was passed. We desire to get it as early as possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the ordinary course the return would be prepared, but I am not able to say at this moment when it will be ready. But I will make inquiry.

Mr. LENNOX. I would also like to ask the Minister of Railways with reference to a return to be made of the proceedings of the Railway Board, in reference to railway crossings, applications for improvements, alterations, and probable elimination. The order was made about the same time. The minister I think will appreciate the advisability of bringing it down soon.

Mr. GRAHAM. About what date did it pass ?

Mr. LENNOX. I have not looked up the date, but judging by the order of events, I think it would be about the 1st of February. I will look up the date and give it to the minister.

Mr. AMES. Now that the Minister of Finance has returned, I would ask him if he will be good enough to hasten the production of a certain return asked for on the 26th of January last. The order was for a return showing to date the statement found on page 15 of the budget speech of 1898.

Mr. FIELDING. I will be glad to draw the attention of the officials to it, and endeavour to expedite the presentation of the return.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would ask the Minister of Railways when I may expect the return I moved for on the 1st of February, and which was put on the paper on the 28th of July. The minister said on the first occasion it would require a motion for a return, and the motion was passed on the 1st of February. It was in reference to wire fencing on the Intercolonial.

Mr. GRAHAM. It takes longer to produce the return in that case than if we had the information in the department, because we have to send to Moncton to get a good deal of it. The order was sent the next day. I will make inquiry.

SUPPLY.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY NEW STOCK.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Before that motion is carried and in view of the orders in council that were brought down yesterday in connection with the issue of capital stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I must again trespass for a short time on the forbearance of the House. It is now apparent from those orders in council that the capital issued under the original charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway was $65,000,000; that in 1902 under the Act of parliament embodying an order in council, its capitalization was increased by $20,000,000; and in an Act of parliament, and in the order in council, provision was made, first, that the issue should not be for less than par; second, that the money was not to be used for any purpose other than contained in the resolution of the shareholders; and third, that this issue was to be excluded from the operation of what is called the ten per cent clause in the original charter. In 1904 another order in council was passed, increasing the capital stock by $25,000,000; that order in council was put through council by the present Minister of Finance, but for some reason or other the order in council is somewhat different. It provides certainly that the stock shall not be issued for less than par, it also provides that the proceeds of that stock shall not be issued for works outside of Canada; but it does not provide that that stock shall be removed from the application of the ten per cent clause. So far as I know, no Act of parliament was passed confirming the issue. In 1906 the stock was increased by $40,000,000. A provision for its issue at not less than par is in the order in council, and that the money shall not be used outside of Canada is in the order in council, it is also in the order in council that the stock so authorized shall not come under the ten per cent clause. Now in 1908 another order in council has been issued for an increase of capital stock by $50,000,000, making the total issue by this company of capital stock of $200,000,000. In other words, within the last six years the capital stock has been increased by $135,000,000. I cannot say whether in that time any bonds have been issued. But the significant thing is that within the last six years after the road had practically been constructed, after its transcontinental character had been assured, and when that had been done on $65,000 000 of stock, they have in the last six years increased that capital stock by $135,000,000, an annual increase of about $15,000,000 a year. If this stock is issued at par, as it has been, and it would bring on the average, as it would have brought, 165, or 65 premium, we have allowed the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway to distribute a bonus equal to $9,000,000 a year for the past six years, besides the dividends they have paid. If this is sound financing, this method will be continued, and year after year, we will have this great company issuing this stock, and 'cutting these melons,' as it is called, and distributing besides their dividends, over $9,000,000 a year among the shareholders.

Now let me explain to the House and to the country how these things work out, what follows on an order in council of this kind. The shareholders' capital was, until this last order in council passed, $150,000,000, and they were allowed to issue $50,000,000 of new stock. Now what takes place is this: As soon as they have this authority, this permission the Canadian Pacific Railway treasurer, or other official, sends a letter to every shareholder and says that in view of the recent authorization the capital stock has been increased by $50,000,000, and that the shareholder is entitled, has a right to one new share for every three old shares. So if a shareholder happens to own three hundred shares of old stock he has a right to take up an additional one hundred shares at par, and this document which he receives from the railway company is technically called a right. And what must the shareholder do who has this right?

Does he go to the treasurer's office and say: I am entitled to this 100 additional shares and here is my cheque for $10,000? He hardly ever does that, he runs to his broker and says: Here is my right entitling me to 100 shares of Canadian Pacific; sell it for me to-morrow. The broker sells the piece of paper entitling the shareholder to 100 shares for from $6,500 to $7,500; the shareholder puts that money in his pocket, he does not pay even the par value of the stock, but the man who buys the right, after paying the $6,500 for the benefit of the shareholder, has to go to the treasurer's office and pay the $10,000 par value of the shares. Thus these documents, these rights, secure what is called the cutting of the melon and that apparently is the new kind of railroad financing we are to have in Canada in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that every year or at the most two years, there is to be this melon to be cut, this increase of capital stock, this dealing in rights; and apparently it has been so profitable to the shareholder of the Canadian Pacific Railway that now they have ceased issuing bonds when they require capital for the purposes of their railroad and issue stock in this way, sell the rights and reap enormous profit from the transaction. To whom is this distribution, this $35,000,000 free gift made? Does it go to Canadians? No, most of it goes to men outside of our country, and Canada presents a spectacle of every year making a free bonus gift of $9,000,000 to shareholders in one of our propositions, most of whom live out of our country. We this year have only $100,000 to give to the sufferers in Italy, but every year we have $9,000,000 of free cash bonus to give to the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway. If this is good policy and can be justified, it will probably be continued. If there is nothing wrong about it we ought to continue it. No wonder the reputation of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the monetary centres of the world is very high. Any one's financial reputation can easily be maintained in that way if this kind of financing is allowed.

I wish now to go back to the original basis of the authorization of capital stock to railroads and see whether this practice, which has recently been introduced into Canada, is one that can be justified. My view of the position is that whenever and wherever parliament charters and grants a franchise to a railway company, it grants to that company certain powers for the purposes of the undertaking, either expressly or by implication. Among the powers so given is the right to issue securities such as stocks, bonds, debentures, &c. This power of issue is a trust that must be honestly and faithfully administered for the purposes of the undertaking and for all parties interested, including the public who are to be served by the railroad. In other words if we have created a railway company and given it power to issue certificates there is implied in the charter an understanding that these certificates shall be issued only for the purposes of the undertaking; these certificates are not to be used as a bonus for the people who happen to own the shares of the railroad. I say that is the underlying principle which should govern the incorporation of these companies, and I think parliament will still hold that view when it is brought clearly before them. Parliament undertook to regulate the amount and mode of issue of the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the original charter granted in 1881. In 1892, while the Conservatives were in power, the company was empowered to issue further shares of capital stock for any purpose for which the company required new capital, such issue being first approved by order in council, and the fourth section of the Act of 1892 provides:

> The proceeds of each issue of shares of capital stock shall be applied by the company exclusively to the purposes for which the shareholders authorized such issue.

In other words it is expressly provided in one of these Acts that the whole proceeds—and by proceeds I mean all that the security will bring—must be applied expressly to the object for which it was voted, for the furtherance of the undertaking, whatever it may happen to be. My contention is that the Governor in Council, as trustees for the people and for parliament, were bound before they approved of any issue of stock, to see that it would be issued to the best advantage of all parties concerned, the public included. That is to say, if the stock to be authorized would bring more than par, it should be so stipulated in the order in council. It was well known that these securities would bring more than par and that the underlying principle of parliament regulating and authorizing the issue of securities is that the proceeds of them must go to the undertaking. If that is so a mistake has been made, a wrong has been committed; this wrong ought to be righted and certainly it ought never to be allowed to occur again in this country.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend say that there is any evidence that the proceeds from the sales of these shares were not applied in the interest of the undertaking or the development of the enterprise?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Technically the hon. gentleman gets around my point, as the proceeds of the share may be really the $100 the man pays for it after the right has been melted and the $65 has been put in his pocket, and my hon. friend may have a nice point in arguing that the proceeds of the issue are only what goes into the treasury. I say the proceeds of the issue are everything that could be got out of it, and it ought all to be consecrated to the undertaking.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Does my hon. friend mean to say that he has any evidence that the proceeds of these shares were not applied for the regular purposes and in good faith in the interest of the organization?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, I undertake to say that for every share of Canadian Pacific Railway that has been sold in recent years, while $100 went into the treasury, anything from $60 to $70 went into the pockets of the then owners of shares.

Turning to the question of tolls and capital actually expended in the road, the original charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway provided for the regulation of the tolls on that road. It also provided for the regulation of the profit and net revenue of the road. Clearly parliament provided for the regulation of tolls and this was based on what is called the 10 per cent clause. In other words, in the original charter, while parliament theretofore had reserved to itself the right to say that no railway shall earn more than 15 per cent on the capital invested, they said; in view of many concessions to the Canadian Pacific Railway we shall make a provision that its profits shall not exceed 10 per cent on its capital stock, and the moment it does exceed that somebody can step in, (then the Railway Committee of the Privy Council) and reduce the rates charged by the railway. And so parliament in the original Act expressly provided for the regulation of the rates and stipulated that in no case should the rates be such that the net profits of that road exceed 10 per cent on the money actually expended on the construction of the road.

The first great question to be determined in dealing with a railroad of this kind is whether the time has yet arrived for reducing the tolls which may be charged, and as far as I can gather nothing has yet been done although, according to the statement of the late Minister of the Interior, made in this House in 1902, an order in council was at that time passed for that purpose. I have asked the Minister of Railways to bring down that order in council, but so far I have not been able to get a copy of it.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Is the last order in council not down?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Not the one passed in 1902. The orders in council increasing the capital have been brought down, but the order in council mentioned by the late Minister of the Interior providing for an immediate reference to some tribunal to ascertain the capital actually expended in the road has not yet come down.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not understand my hon. friend to ask for that order in council. He asked me about it and I told him I would make inquiry of the Minister of Justice concerning the situation of the case referred to the Supreme Court. If such order in council exists it can be brought down quite easily.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Then we may get it later on if the minister cares to give it. If the railway could show that it was not earning a fair return on the capital expended it could complain of any attempt to reduce its rates, and I am not arguing just now that the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to be reduced, but I do propose to assert that in view of that original provision we should know how much money has actually been expended by this road, notwithstanding the fact that the operation of that clause has been removed from a number of these recent orders in council. I go on the assumption, therefore, in order to secure the lowest possible tolls to the public who use the road, it is of prime importance that parliament or the Governor in Council who authorized or approved of the issue of capital (whether stock, bonds or other securities), should see that any and all 'capital actually expended in the construction of the road' is raised in the least expensive manner, is raised in the most provident manner; that not an unnecessary dollar of debt is incurred or of high interest-bearing obligation is issued as against a low interest-bearing obligation wherever possible, and that the highest possible value is obtained for any such security, and that the entire and highest possible proceeds of any such issue goes into the treasury of the road for the purposes for which it was authorized—that on no pretext whatever shall the best possible proceeds of these issues be diverted. To divert any of them is, I hold, criminal; it is to be guilty of malversation of funds, is a breach of trust and a violation of the sacred obligation on the part of the company to give the best possible and cheapest service in consideration of the many valuable things given it by the state, in the way of lands, money, exemption privileges, &c. If, therefore, $30,000,000 of stock issued at $165 would produce what it will produce in the open market, namely, $50,000,000, and if the proceeds go into the treasury, the government was bound to authorize only that amount and to stipulate that it be sold at the highest amount it would bring. In other words the $50,000,000 could be got for $30,000,000 stock, the tolls charged on which could not exceed 10 per cent or $3,000,000 a year. Instead of this it will be on this last issue 10 per cent on $50,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year, or an unnecessary tax of $2,000,000 on the people of Canada. In other words $30,000,000 of stock issued at the market price would have produced $50,000,000, and as the dividend which would be allowed to the company would be 10 per cent on that $30,000,000, it would amount to only $3,000,000 a year, instead of which you have allowed them to issue $50,000,000 which is entitled to earn 10 per cent and which means $5,000,000 a year.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him this question?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. In the face of the order in council which says absolutely that the 10 per cent shall not be calculated on this amount at all, how does the hon. gentleman argue that it is to be calculated on that amount?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I am coming to that. The tolls of the company are limited to 10 per cent on its capital, and as a matter of fact to-day the tolls of the company are 10 per cent;—the net earnings of the company to-day are 10 per cent on the capital stock and the company is going to see that it always will be 10 per cent on the capital stock as long as it has the right to do so.

Mr. GRAHAM. On the original capital stock?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes. Now I come to the minister in this: That the company is entitled to a fair return on its stock issue or on any money put into securities of the road, and if $50,000,000 is to be earned upon, when $30,000,000 would do, I say an injustice is done to the people who use the road. That is a point I make against the minister; not so much that he has that provision in the statute as that I shall show that the charges upon the traffic of the road would have been much less if that stock had not been sold at par. But, before the government authorized the issue of any further capital I contend it was bound to do two things: first, to scrutinize the reasons advanced and the objects given for the request for additional capital, and second, to examine the treasury of the company and its resources with a view of ascertaining whether it could not provide for the new undertaking out of any resources then in hand, and any unexhausted portions of the immense money and land grants given to the company by the state, or out of the bond-issuing powers of the company as provided or as might be provided by law. Before ever they should have allowed the issue of additional stock, I say it was the duty of the government to examine into the purposes for which the money was to be used, but still more important to examine the treasury of the company and to see whether it had any other resources which could be applied to the object in hand. And the land, and the money grants which were given to the Canadian Pacific Railway were given for the purposes of the undertaking and are so set out in the original documents and were so stated in parliament. They were not given to be used as a hoarding or as a great reserve fund for the road, and they were not given for the purpose of injuring another company. And when the company asked for these powers to issue additional capital they should have shown to the government that they had little or none of these grants in hand. The fact is, on the contrary, they had 13,000,000 acres of land worth at least $150,000,000, and they had bond-issuing powers for a large amount at low interest, or they could get them. I do not know that the government made any such examination. They passed the request of Sir Thomas Shaughnessy on the mere stipulation of a stock issue at par. Now the company at that time, as I have said, had these 13,000,000 acres of land; they had a full treasury, and before they were allowed to issue the stock the government should have said to them: Have you exhausted the resources that parliament has given you already; if you have what have you done with all that money; what have you done, especially with that land? But the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were not asked for that; they were allowed to issue this new stock and to-day they are cutting this melon and they are dividing these profits amongst themselves, when at this very moment they have 13,000,000 acres of land out of their original land grant which have not been used. What are they keeping this land for? First of all they are keeping it as a reserve fund, which is improper, and they are using it—

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Before my hon. friend leaves that point—does he seriously intend to argue that the order in council should provide for the disposition of stock dependent upon the fluctuating value of the stock market which might be below par one day and above par the next?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, I will come to that and I will give several specific instances. For instance, in the city of Toronto we have the so-called Consumer's Gas Company which undertook to be a partner with the city in the old days and gradually got away from that, but some time ago the city said to the legislature: Inasmuch as the charges this Gas Company imposes upon the public are to be earned on the basis of 10 per cent on the stock issue, we want you to see that the stock is sold for the highest possible amount that it will bring in the open market. And legislation was passed to that effect, and it has worked out in this way, that whereas a few years ago the company used to sell its stock at $185 it is now selling it and sold it the other day in Toronto at over $200, which is a premium of $100 on every $100 share. That could be attained in Canada in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I venture to say that if you put an advertisement in the financial papers of London to morrow that bids would be received for $50,000,000 of Canadian Pacific Railway stock you would get 160 for the whole $50,000,000.

The government were bound for other reasons to investigate the use or lack of use of the land grant. This great Canadian Northwest, which now has ten members from Saskatchewan, seven from Alberta and ten from Manitoba, has been coming to this House year after year and making complaint of two things. It has been complaining first of the exemption of the lands from municipal taxation for twenty years after the Crown grant unless the lands are sold. None of these Canadian Pacific Railway lands in the west have to pay municipal taxes unless they are sold or until the twenty years have expired. As a consequence, the municipalities all over the west complain of this harsh treatment as a great grievance of the people. Another complaint made in the west against the Canadian Pacific Railway is that it is to-day refusing to sell the lands which it owns alongside of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern, in order that these two roads, which are intended to serve the country, shall have no local traffic to assist them in carrying out their undertakings. If that is true—and I leave it to the members from the Northwest to say whether it is true or not—that the Canadian Pacific Railway has still an immense amount of property under exemption and is refusing to sell its lands because these rival railroads might be benefited, it is the duty of somebody to see that that condition of affairs is removed. My contention is that not only should the company be compelled to sell these lands in order to raise money for its own needs, but that the government should have used that opportunity to compel it to sell them in order to do away with this exemption clause and prevent this refusal to sell lands because their sale might benefit the two rival roads. That is a question on which the people of the Northwest are the judges. So far as I can gather—I cannot quite gather it in this House—the people of the west believe that, before any power to increase the capital stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway should have been given, the company should have been compelled to exhaust whatever resources it had in its treasury for the construction of new lines, and should also have been compelled to sell these lands because that would remove the exemption clause and promote settlement along the new lines of railway.

I am not going into the political issue further than to say that I have read within the last two or three days a summary of the history of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as narrated in a book written by Mr. Willison; and it is set out there that one of the greatest grievances of the people in the west was this exemption clause and the hardship it brought upon the poor settler, in the fact that he was for ever tied up not only to a monopoly but to an unjustifiable system of exemption.

I contend still further that the government was bound to have ascertained, if money must be got for securities to be issued, what kind of securities would bear least on the traffic—bonds or debentures. Bonds can be issued at 4 per cent; and my contention is that if the company had to get money after it had exhausted its resources, then it was bound to obtain that money on securities which would have the least possible incidence on the income of the company. In other words, if freight rates must be regulated by the fixed charges, then it is the duty of parliament to see that the fixed charges are of the lowest kind and the charges that are of the lowest kind in connection with railway construction, especially in the case of a successful railway like the Canadian Pacific Railway, are bonds or debenture stock, and not common stock. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company can get all the money it needs at 4 per cent. Instead of that, it is issuing stock that can bear 10 per cent, and at the same time it is distributing $9,000,000 a year as a bonus among its shareholders.

But, some gentlemen say, bonds must bear their interest, and this must be paid, whether the road succeeds or not. There is something in that in the case of a new road; but in the case of an old road like the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is paying its dividends and fixed charges every year, and which can pay 10 per cent on its common stock, surely it can pay 4 per cent on bonds. Fifty million dollars of bonds would have provided the money needed. These would have required $2,000,000 a year for interest, whereas $50,000,000 of stock at 10 per cent requires $5,000,000 a year. The difference is therefore $3,000,000 a year, an unnecessary and perpetual charge on the public, which could be capitalized at $75,000,000. That is rather a serious loss to the people of this country who use the railroads. If this stock issue is justifiable, we ought to continue it; and it is evidently the policy of the company to quit the issue of bonds, to withhold the sale of its lands, to cut a melon as often as the government or parliament will permit. If the government is right, it ought to have no hesitation in not only justifying what it has done, but declaring that it will repeat the authorization to-morrow, without condition, examination or departure from the past. What company will issue bonds that can cut a melon on stock every year in addition to a 7 per cent dividend? In other words, there is now 7 per cent interest on the stock and $9,000,000 a year as a bonus distributed among the shareholders. If that is right, it should be continued, and there should never be another issue of bonds on the road. but only common stock. And the surprising thing is that when the company is allowed to issue common stock in this way, how much it wants to issue. For many years it got along with $65,000,000; but $135,000,000 of additional stock has now to be taken care of by the traffic which goes over the road.

Another thing I want to point out. It has been in the newspapers, and a great deal of dust has been tried to be thrown in the eyes of the public, in the attempt to show that there is some connection between this issue of stock and the 10 per cent clause in the company's charter, and that therefore the exemption must be allowed to continue. There is no connection between the 10 per cent clause and the authorization of the issue of stock. The only stock that was authorized was the $65,000,000 in connection with the 10 per cent clause. That has long ago been exhausted, and the Act of parliament of 1892, under which this stock is issued by order in council, can be repealed to-morrow. It does not apply to the charter at all; and my question to-day is: Is that Act of 1892 to be repealed, and is this process of issuing stock in this way to be continued, or is it to be stopped; and is it to be laid down as the policy underlying the conduct of parliament hereafter, that the issue of all stock shall be a matter of trust and that it will be the duty of parliament or of somebody to see that the character of the security issued shall be such as will carry the lowest interest and therefore be the least burdensome on the traffic? If we can cut down the interest charges on the capital of railways to four or five per cent instead of ten per cent on a lot of it, can we not reduce their passenger and freight rates? If we tell the great Canadian Pacific Railway that they must sell all their land before they are allowed to issue new stock, they will have to sell those lands to the people and in this way we will get rid of these tax exemptions. If they are ordered to sell the lands they own, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern will have settlers all along their lines in localities where there is at present not a settler for miles, but the Canadian Pacific Railway refuse to take $20 per acre for land alongside the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern. We must not forget that this Canadian Pacific Railway charter is not altogether a holy thing which cannot be touched. It has been changed a good many times in this House under conditions of one kind or another. The principle was laid down in this House some years ago and with good reasons, that if concessions are to be given the Canadian Pacific Railway, some concessions ought to be exacted from them in return. If they are to be allowed to increase their capital stock, why should they not be ordered to sell their land, and why should they not be compelled to give the people of Canada a two-cent per mile transportation rate, just as they give it to the people of the United States and to the traffic over their lines which originates in the United States? If they give that concession to Americans, why should they not not give it to Canadians as well? But there is to be no two-cent a mile rate for Canadians, who have to sweat in order that millions should go every year to the foreign shareholders, and that will continue just so long as the people of Canada are willing to submit to that kind of thing. Any one who wishes to get further history of the finances of the Canadian Pacific Railway and how they were handled, had better read this book to which I have referred? Mr. Blake was able to point out in this very House, in one of the early discussions on the charter, that of the $65,000,000 of the capital stock issued, only $31,000,000 was realized by the company. And of their $31,000,000 $24,000,000 was paid back to the shareholders in dividends before a dollar had been earned by the road. In other words, Mr. Blake describes how these original owners of the Canadian Pacific Railway got for many a year twenty-four per cent and then twenty per cent on their investment in that original stock.

That stock had to be sold at less than par. It was sold for fifty per cent less than its face value. Why then, in the name of all that is just and fair, when that stock has gone to a premium, when every $100 of it can be sold at $170, should not that premium go into the Canadian Pacific Railway treasury and be there used for the reduction of its tolls instead of being given to the shareholders for their own aggrandizement. If the original stock was sold at this sacrifice, surely it is fair, when the tide has turned and the road proved a great success, that the whole proceeds of any new stock issued should go into the Canadian Pacific Railway treasury for the benefit of the undertaking.

I am not prepared just now to say how much further I shall go into this matter until I see this order in council which has been referred to. In a certain sense, it does not bear on the issue. We are under no obligation, by the original charter to continue this practice of allowing this great railway corporation to distribute these bonuses among its shareholders, but I would like to see it settled once for all what the money actually expended, under the original contract, amounted to. The day has come when we ought to reduce railway tariffs. The Canadian Pacific Railway can now afford to reduce them and ought to be compelled to do so. The day has come when the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to be compelled to give up these exemptions if it can be made to do so. The day has come when public policy ought no longer to tolerate this company holding its lands in the west and refusing to part with them or refusing to allow settlers to settle on them. Certainly no further privilege should be given it until it abandons that policy. My contention is that both these things are against the public interest and if new concessions are to be given, other concessions on behalf of the public ought to be exacted in return.

I have spoken already three times on this question and have tried to find out what is the feeling of the west with regard to it. So far I have not been able to ascertain that feeling from anybody in this House, but I have read the newspaper opinion in that country, and the opinion, as voiced by the three newspapers in Winnipeg, is altogether against the Canadian Pacific Railway being allowed to issue its stock at par. The people of the west are of the opinion that as long as they are allowed to do this, the extra tariffs of the company entailed thereby must come out of the people who use the road. If money can be obtained by the company by the sale of low interest bearing securities instead of by the issue of new stock, the company should be compelled to take the former course; or if the company be allowed to issue new capital stock, the market price of that stock should go into its treasury, instead of the advanced price at which it may be sold above par going into the pockets of the shareholders. If that should be done, the amount of capital stock would be kept down, the fixed charges reduced, and that would enable the company to lower its tariff rates. The people of the west and also the people of Ontario and throughout Canada are of the opinion that this practice of issuing new stock at par to the shareholders should not be allowed to continue. If that, however, be not a good practice, let us do away with it. If it be a good pratcice, let us wipe out the right to issue bonds which we now give to railway corporations, and tell the great Canadian Pacific Railway that parliament has no interest in this issue of new stock, as we have been told in this House. That is not the opinion in the United States where the people have a great transportation problem on their hands. Wait until the fourth of March and see if there will not be a deliverance from the new president of that country to the effect that the day has come when the regulation and control of the capitalization of railway companies is of great importance as bearing on the rates of traffic which these companies may charge. The two questions go together. If you keep down the capitalization and restrict the railway companies to the issue of securities bearing low interest instead of allowing them to issue new capital stock at par, you will be able to reduce their tariff charges in proportion. There is an intimate relation between the two, and therefore I contend that it is the duty of parliament to scrutinize every security issued in connection with our railways in order to see that they shall only issue them on such terms as will secure to the Canadian people, who have to pay the traffic rates, the best possible treatment. We hear a great deal about this company which raises money and does this, that and the other thing for our country. Well, I give it all the credit to which it is entitled. I have no antagonism to these great companies, but I do raise my voice against the man who uses these railways being charged a cent more for that use than he ought to pay. And you cannot keep the tariff rate down unless you keep the capitalization down for the benefit of those who use the road. I shall leave the companies here for the present. I have extended my argument somewhat further than I did on the two occasions I spoke before, and may have a little more to add when we get that other order in council to which I have already referred.

I think I am doing a public duty in standing up here, even if I stand alone, to say that the day has come when we must stop this practice of allowing the great Canadian Pacific Railway Company, at least, to issue securities at par when those securities can be sold on the open market for a premium of almost 75 per cent. It is not in the interest of the public, it is not in the interest of the great Canadian Pacific Railway itself. People say we are turning to socialism in this country, and they denounce socialism and the socialists. But these are the things that are producing this public calamity, if it be a public calamity. To use the words of President Roosevelt, the public ought to get a square deal. I stand here for the square deal for the people of the Canadian west and the Canadian east. I stand here to protest against this distribution of bonus stock amongst the shareholders that is about to take place, and such as has taken place in the past. I want to see this stopped once and for all. And, if I succeed in this, I shall have justified my presence in this House.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (Assiniboia). The question brought up by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) is, in my judgment, the most important question that will be discussed in this House during the present session. At all events, so far as the western prairie provinces are concerned, there will be nothing discussed here that will be of equal interest to the people. While we want lower duties when we can get them, the question of duties and tariffs fades into insignificance as compared with the question of freight rates, so far as the people of the west are concerned. Representing, as I do, a large, old-settled, well-populated district in the province of Saskatchewan, all clear, open prairie, where a great deal of wheat is produced and where many of the settlers are a long distance from a railway, I may be excused for taking up a small portion of the time of the House in discussing this matter. When the question was brought up some time ago and publicly discussed, different reasons were advanced why this order in council should have been passed authorizing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to increase their capital stock by the issue of $50,000,000. One reason given us was that it was the best managed railroad on the face of the earth. Another was that it was necessary to keep the credit of the railway company in good standing. Another was that if the company made a further issue of bonds it would have a bad effect, probably, on the stock that has already been issued, and holders of that stock might find that it was not worth so much. Let us look for a moment at these reasons to see whether they justify in any respect the course that is proposed. Nobody was objecting to the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think it is a fairly well managed company, taking it all round. I do not think its management is ideal; in some respects, in my opinion, it is anything but well managed. If the other companies are all worse managed than the Canadian Pacific Railway, then I can only say God help the others. Take, for a moment, the question of building branch lines. I do not want to be understood as making any attack on the Canadian Pacific Railway in particular, for the Canadian Northern is just as bad, and the Grand Trunk Pacific, I expect, when they are a little older, will get on to the ropes and will do as the others have done. I am not saying that there is any choice in that respect. But what do the Canadian Pacific do about the building of branch lines? Do they consult the interests of the people of the country? No, they consult their own interest only, and that not in relation to the earning of dividends, but with a view to cutting out their opponents. While the people may be suffering fifty miles from a railway, they will build a line within five or ten miles of an existing road, where they think they can cut out traffic from the Canadian Northern or the Grand Trunk Pacific. In that respect, I say, the Canadian Pacific Railway is not a well-managed line. If, as has been said, we are, in a sense, partners in this great railway enterprise, then I think we ought to be given some consideration in deciding where these branch lines should be built. In my own constituency, as an example, we have the spectacle of two railroads paralleling each other for eighty miles at one end of my constituency, so that it is almost unsafe for a man to go in there so strong are the objections of the settlers to these railways having been allowed to do that sort of thing; and, in the other end of the district, the farmers are suffering through being forty or fifty miles from the railway and having to draw their wheat for that distance to point of shipment. And I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and to tell the members of this House, that no man can grow wheat at a profit and draw it with horses forty or fifty miles to a market. And there are dozens and hundreds of settlers in that country who, if some remedy is not found, if railways are not compelled to toe the mark better in the future than they have done in the past, will surely pull out of that country. Has this House no responsibility in this matter? I say there is no possibility of this government or this House of parliament divesting itself of its responsibility. In the future we may rail at the railway companies, but we shall not be able to say, if this sort of thing is allowed to go on, that the railway companies are to blame; the blame must be put where it belongs, on the shoulders of this House of Commons. The railway companies of the past have been doing simply what they liked to a very large extent. They have been walking over us. But when they come to this House and want consideration, they should be dealt with at arm's length and made to give concession for concession. The question of the land grant of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been discussed by my hon. friend (Mr. W. F. Maclean). Every word he has said on the subject is absolutely true. He could have gone further and still have been within the mark. We have in that country the spectacle of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with millions of acres of land that was given them for nothing as a bonus to build the original Canadian Pacific Railway, ready to sell that land at a moderate price where it is tributary to their own lines, but, where it is tributary to the Grand Trunk Pacific, assuming a wholly different attitude. And, remember, the Grand Trunk Pacific is being financed by this country, by this parliament——

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And queered in London by the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. TURRIFF. We are helping all the way through, and the Canadian Pacific Railway is holding them up, playing the dog in the manger, retarding the development of the western country and injuring the credit of Canada just as much as if the country owned the Grand Trunk. Have they any right to do that? I say that it is the duty of the government and of this House, when the Canadian Pacific Railway come here for special permission legislation, as they have done in this case, to say to them: If we grant you the privilege you are asking, you must give us privileges in return. And what better opportunity could there be to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway: 'Give up your right to exemption for twenty years.' If it were not for that right of exemption do you think the Canadian Pacific Railway would put a flat price of $25 an acre on their lands, or, in some cases, withdraw it altogether from the market?—simply because by settling that land it would give trade to the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Canadian Northern. Do you think they would dare to do that? Do you think they could afford to do that? If the school districts and municipalities were able to get at them and tax their land at the same value and at the same rate as the farmers tax themselves, that land would be put on the market, to come under cultivation; the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern would get traffic, and the people would go in and settle on these lands. They do not do it. Not only do they hold that land up, but they also hold the homestead lands up, because men will not go into a part of a country where the odd sections cannot be brought under cultivation and settled on, for the simple reason that they cannot have as good facilities for organizing school districts and giving their children an education as they can in other parts of the country where the odd sections are available for purchase, as they ought to be, and at a fair price. So this is a golden opportunity to say to them: Put that land on the market at a fair price, or at all events, give back your right of exemption from taxation for the balance of the twenty years. If they do that, the rest will follow.

Now as to the argument that their credit would suffer if they sold some additional bonds. Well, I think that any one who advances that argument has not looked very closely into what the Canadian Pacific Railway has been doing of late. Why, only last week I saw an advertisement in the paper that they were paying half yearly dividends of 3½ per cent, 7 per cent per annum. They were paying all the fixed charges, paying everything that should be paid, paying a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, and in addition they would put to the credit of their rest account, for the six months only, over $4,880,000—enough money to have paid dividends at the rate of 12 per cent. The Canadian Pacific Railway could to-day, out of their earnings, pay 10 per cent per annum on their stock, pay 12 per cent on their common stock, after paying all fixed charges, and still have a reasonable sum to augment their account. Is that not doing well enough? But it is said that by issuing bonds they would reduce the value of the present stock. Carry that argument to its logical conclusion, and what does it mean? It means that the Canadian Pacific Railway, who can borrow its money at 4 per cent at the highest, cannot put that money into branch lines in the prairie country—because the reason is given that this stock is issued more particularly to build branch lines in the western country—it means that they could not put that money into branch lines in the west and earn 4 per cent on the cost of these lines. A more absurd statement could not be made. They can earn 4 per cent, and double 4 per cent by building branch lines, if they would build them where they ought to go in reference to the needs of the country and where they would get the most traffic, if they chose to eliminate from their ideas the building of branch lines to cut out opposing railways. Sir, I do not think that the reasons given for allowing them to sell this stock at par are good reasons.

It might be well for a moment to consider what the Canadian Pacific Railway got originally. They got $37,000,000 worth of completed road handed over to them; they got 25,000,000 acres of land handed over to them; they got no less than six or seven million acres of land in connection with the charters for the branch lines that they purchased; and they got $25,000,000 in cash as well. So when you come to consider the capital on which they had to earn, you must bear in mind that they did not put all the money into that railway that built it; this country put in a great part of it. Therefore, why, on an occasion of this kind, when they are coming for special favours that they cannot get without the authority of this parliament, why should they not be made to toe the mark and do the decent thing for once? When the original orders in council that my hon. friend read to-day were passed, and it was stipulated that they should not sell their stock at less than par, stock was not selling at 175 to 200 in those days. Why should they be allowed to sell that stock at par to-day to their shareholders? Here is one thing that follows, to my mind: The Canadian Pacific Railway do not want to pay over in cash the immense dividends that they are earning to their subscribers. Why? Because the moment they do that, the people of this country would understand the question a great deal better than they understand it now, and there would be such a howl and a kick put up from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that they would be forced to reduce their freight rates and their passenger rates. Therefore they take this method, as my hon. friend has pointed out, to divide up $9,000,000 a year in an extra bonus over and above the 7 per cent per annum that is paid on their stock. And remember, Mr. Speaker, that a great deal of that stock on which the 7 per cent is paid, was sold to the men originally connected with it, at 25 cents on the dollar; so that in the years past they have been drawing 24 per cent to 28 per cent on their money not 7 per cent; and their stock to-day is worth several hundred per cent higher than when it was when they bought it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, don't you think that is doing well enough? Don't you think that is fair enough? Don't you think they have got enough. Why should we turn to now and hand them over between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000 to be divided up among their shareholders? Because, though you may argue it this way and argue it that way, the fact remains that you cannot argue away, that when you issue that stock the people of this country who pay passenger rates and freight rates, one way or another, have to pay and provide the dividends to pay for that stock, the proceeds of which do not go into the coffers of the company, but go directly into the pockets of the shareholders, and the people of this country will be compelled to pay extortionate rates to pay these extra dividends that should not be paid at all, and do not need to be paid. Why should this $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 be taken out of the funds of the company? Why should it not go into the treasury of the company? Think what this extra $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 would do. It would build 1,250 to 1,500 miles of railway in those prairie provinces; it would equip those lines thoroughly well, and at the same time would earn dividends to a legitimate extent for the shareholders. Therefore, why should the money be surreptitiously taken out of the funds of the company and put directly into the pockets of the shareholders?

We have heard a good deal in the past about the Jim Hill system. It is very close to us up there in my constituency. The Hill system comes up to within a couple of miles of the boundary. What is the result, Mr. Speaker? Thousands and hundreds of thousands of bushels of wheat every year are drawn across the boundary line and sold in the American cities. Do you imagine, or does any one in this House imagine, for a moment that when a farmer goes across into the United States and sells his wheat and gets the money for it, he does not buy his goods there to a large extent? If you imagine that, you are mistaken. They do it every day of the week. From one little town of 700 or 800 inhabitants in my constituency, last fall 150,000 bushels of wheat tributary to that town went down into the United States; and the merchants lost the traffic, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company lost the freight hauling, and the country lost the business. Why? Because the Canadian Pacific Railway has another charter there that they have held the last seven or eight years; and when I tried my utmost two or three years ago to have a clause put in their charter compelling them to build 25 miles each year, I was not listened to.

They have not built the road, and I do not believe they will until it suits them unless they are compelled to. In the meantime the country is losing the traffic and the business, which is going down into the United States. If this sort of thing continues every man in the country will welcome an extension of the Hill system all through the country, even if it involves the diversion of traffic through the United States rather than longer tolerate the existing conditions. I do not agree with the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) in his advocacy of government ownership and operation of railroads. I have never agreed with that; I believe that any company that is running a road in Canada can do it better than this or any other government. I believe the railroads of this country should be built and operated by companies. But I want to warn the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway companies and the government and this House that if there is no better control over the railroad companies in future than we now have the people of Canada will be driven to government ownership and operation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. TURRIFF. I think it would be a mistake, but something has got to be done, and here is an opportunity such as we may not have again. It would be well worth the while of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways to go over this matter again, to look into it very closely and to find out what the people of the country think about it. If the people of Canada understood this question, no parliament would dare to give the Canadian Pacific Railway authority to issue that stock at par. The trouble is the people do not understand it, they do not understand what bonuses, what dividends are being drawn by the holders of the Canadian Pacific Railway stock. If they did there would be a change. The minister should thoroughly examine the whole situation and see if something cannot be done to improve the existing conditions.

Let us consider what we might get if the $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 did not go directly into the shareholders' pockets, but went where they should go, directly into the funds of the company.

First, we might get a lower rate of freight all around.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. TURRIFF. The railroads could cut their freight rates 25 per cent all round if they had this $25,000,000 to use for the benefit and interests of the country.

Second, we might get a lower passenger rate. I had some little part, some two or three years ago, in securing a reduction in railway passenger rates; we succeeded in having the rates reduced from 4 cents and 3½ cents to a flat rate of 3 cents per mile on every mile of railroad from the Rockies east to the Atlantic. What was the argument of the Railway Commission? That in some cases higher rates possibly were necessary. We have a Railway Commission who deal with these matters; they are doing first-rate work, and we are giving them plenty of work to do, but there is one point we should not forget, that we cannot shelve all our responsibility on that Railway Commission. This Commission will not take into consideration many subjects that we have to deal with in this parliament, they will take matters as they come before them, and, as a rule, they do not go over the country and order this or that railway to lower its rates. What they do is to take up any matter of complaint that comes before them. There may be one hundred cases of overcharging of freight rates for one that is brought to the notice of the Railway Commission. We have a good commission; it has its work to do; it is doing its work and doing it well, but we cannot divest ourselves of our authority and our responsibility in this matter.

Third, we might obtain the abolition of the exemption from taxation of lands held by the railway. If their lands were not exempted it would not matter what price they put upon them, they would have to sell them, because the higher price they put on the land the more they would be taxed by municipalities or school districts.

Fourth, we might secure the right to say where they will build roads instead of leaving them the discretion they now have.

Fifth, the $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 would rid the country from one end to the other of the deadly level-crossings of which we have heard a great deal.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. TURRIFF. Why should we not make them do it? I say it is up to the House to make these railway companies treat the public fairly. The Canadian Pacific Railway is not the only sinner; in many respects the Canadian Northern is a great deal worse, and I intend to take a turn at them later on, but at present we are dealing with this company, which is no worse than others. I do not think that under any circumstances a company situated like the Canadian Pacific Railway should be allowed to issue stock at par. Would any railway company in the old country situated as this sell their stock at par?

Mr. LANCASTER. The directors would go to jail if they did.

Mr. TURRIFF. They would not dare. Look at our banks. They sell their stock at market value and put all the money into the treasury. That is all we ask these people to do. Is it any hardship to compel them to put their money into their own treasury and expend it in building their roads? It must be remembered that while Canadian Pacific Railway is to-day selling at from $173 to $175 it is intrinsically worth at least $200, and the man who has 300 shares and is awarded 100 shares of new stock is in reality getting 100 per cent of a bonus on the stock he holds—and we are the people who are allowing this to be done.

These are some of the reasons why I agree absolutely with what the hon. member for York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) has said—and in voicing these sentiments I have the absolute certainty that I voice exactly the sentiments of 100 per cent of the 40,000 people whom I represent in this House—there is no exception. So I say it is up to this government and parliament to do something to bring about a better state of affairs. If they do not take some action they will be taking the very best course in the world to force the people of this country to go in for government ownership and operation of railways.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). As some of the questions which have been under discussion are matters with which I have some acquaintance, I may be permitted to make some explanations in respect to them in the hope that those who are interested in these questions, at all events in this House, will have an opportunity of knowing more accurately what the facts are.

I ought to premise, I suppose, that I do not consider myself any defender of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; I do not speak in that capacity at all. I am not financially interested in any way in the undertakings of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; I do not consider that I or my political friends owe that company anything politically. I am one of those who think that the bargain which was made with that company, as contained in our statute-books, was a bargain so advantageous to the company and so disadvantageous to the Dominion of Canada that it ought not to have been entered into. But while I say that, I think none the less that a contract is so sacred a thing that those who have the advantage of a good bargain are entitled to that advantage and entitled to have that contract carried out in its entirety and according to its true intent and meaning.

The question of authorizing an increase of the capital stock of this company is presented for consideration. Now, the question whether that increase ought to be sanctioned, whether the increase of money which the company is hoping to raise by this means is money that the company needs; and the question of what disposition is to be made by the company of the new stock in order to raise the funds they want, are two entirely different questions, and ought not to be confused. With regard to the first question, which was presented to the Governor in Council for consideration when the company came applying for sanction to its proposed increase of stock, I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maclean) who opened this discussion would not contend that there was anything wrong, illegitimate, against honesty or good morals, in the company if it needed $50,000,000 more of money for its lawful undertakings and for carrying on its operations in this country, proceeding to obtain that money by means of increasing its capital stock and disposing of that capital stock in open market. That is a fair, a proper, a legitimate way by which any company may raise additional capital if it needs additional capital. And in this case, although the capital which the company already had reached the enormous amount of $150,000,000, the very needs of the country which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turriff) who has just taken his seat has so eloquently discussed, demonstrate the propriety of putting that company into a position where if by an increase of its capital stock it can obtain the necessary additional funds it needs, it certainly should not be prevented from doing so by the government of the country refusing its sanction to the desired increase. The increase of the capital stock which was asked seemed to be needed in the interest of the country quite as much as in the interest of the company, and the purpose for which the money to be raised by this increase of capital was to be required was a legitimate and laudable purpuose, viz., the extension of the company's lines, the constructing of new branches and of new works, betterments in every way, to increase the facility with which the company can do its work of transportation. Every object for which this additional capital was needed was a legitimate and a laudable object in regard to which if there had been obstruction thrown in the way of the company it would have been a step which the parliament of this country would have condemned rather than have approved. If I understand correctly the newspaper discussions which are taking place in certain parts of the country on this question and the objection which is being brought forward by the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean), the only thing of which complaint is made in regard to the increase of the capital is the disposition which the company proposes to make of the additional number of shares by distributing those shares among their shareholders at a figure less than the present market price of Canadian Pacific Railway stock as bought or sold by the public. Now, that is a question in regard to which it seems to me unnecessary that I should express any opinion one way or the other. I shall not discuss it beyond stating this: That no device of this nature which a company can apply to its financial affairs will enable that company to increase the amount of its wealth. It has a certain amount of property before the increase of the capital stock, and it has that same property in specie, in railway real estate, or in whatever shape you please after the increase of its capital stock. Before the last increase the capital stock of the company amounted to $150,000,000; there were so many shareholders of the company, each holding his share of $100 par value, and the proposition is to increase the capital stock of the company to $200,000,000 and to increase correspondingly the number of shares. It is the property of the company which it had before the increase that is represented by the number of shares which existed before the increase, and it is that same property plus whatever is paid for the new shares which the company has after the increase, and the company is neither richer nor poorer after the increase except by the amount which it receives for the additional number of shares. Now, take the position of any individual shareholder; he receives of course a benefit if he is permitted to purchase for every three shares which he held before the increase one share of the new issue at any figure less than the market price. Assuming that the value in the market of Canadian Pacific Railway shares before the increase was $170, every three shares would be worth, to buy or sell, $510. If a man bought three shares, paying out $510 for his three shares and then being entitled to one new share for $100 paid his $100, he would have become possessed of four shares for $610, and the four shares would have cost him $152.50 each. That measures exactly the extent of any benefit which this proposition of issuing one new share at par to each holder of three shares, gives to that shareholder; he makes $52.50 on the purchase of his new shares if the market price before the increase was $170. The shares of the company decrease in value immediately upon the issue of new stock being put upon the market and decrease in value exactly in proportion to the number of new shares which it issues, and the property which these shares represent has not been made either more or less by the transaction. So that what we have as a result of this transaction to the individual shareholder comes simply down to this: that each owner of three shares, if the capital stock was worth $170 in the market, has made on his three shares $52.50 by the transaction, or in other words, he has got a special dividend of seventeen and a half per cent. Well now, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or if any company, instead of adopting that means of giving to each one of its shareholders a special dividend of seventeen and a half per cent had had the funds to distribute among its shareholders, had had the property in money or in money's worth, and had chosen to declare a special dividend to that amount, I do not suppose the newspaper editors of the country would have thought there was any such highly immoral or improper transaction as that which in this other shape the railway company is proposing to enter into and which is now being so vigorously denounced. If any company is in a position, if it has made money so that it is able by its operations to pay a special dividend of seventeen and a half per cent and it does it, it is simply a distribution of the assets of the company in which the public as a whole is in no manner or way concerned.

Now, that is as I understand it the position of any ordinary trading company, any company incorporated for the purpose of gain. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any other company operating or enjoying a public franchise is by that circumstance under an obligation to the public which precludes it from taking a course it otherwise might wish to take with regard to its shareholders, that is an entirely different story. If the bargain which this company made with the country, when it undertook to build this railway, has so bound its hands that by reason of the privileges which it then obtained and which it still enjoys from the people of Canada, it is not in a position to deal with its shareholders as a company which was free from such obligations might see fit to deal with them, that is an entirely different story, and the whole question of the morality or the immorality from a business point of view of what is proposed seems to me to bring itself down simply to the question whether or not the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is living up to its contract. If it is, then I cannot see how any man in this country has any right whatever to complain of the course the company is taking. If it is not, then it ought to be compelled to do so. I fully agree with any view which my hon. friend may express or which any other member of this House may hold, that if the company is not carrying out its obligations to Canada it ought to be made to do so. In this regard let us remember for a moment just what the measure of its obligation is. It is a bargain; it is a contract which parliament in 1881 sanctioned. It was debated enough at that time, it was entered into by the country with the eyes of the country wide open, and this is the letter of its terms—the general Railway Act at that time provided that no railway company might earn, one might say, more than 15 per cent upon its capital cost of construction without being liable to have its rates reduced by the parliament of the country. When the Canadian Pacific Railway presented its contract to parliament that 15 per cent limitation was lowered to 10 per cent and the obligation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was to that extent so much the more burdensome upon the company. The limit which the parliament of Canada provided by the general Railway Act was altered to such extent that the tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway should not produce more than 10 per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway, instead of not less than 15 per cent, as generally provided.

The question, then, which fell to be considered when the company was proposing to increase its capital stock in 1902, was whether or not its revenue produced 10 per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway. An order in council was passed in January, 1902, authorizing the increase of the company's capital from $65,000,000 to $85,000,000. It was an express stipulation in that order in council that the $20,000,000 extra stock which was then being sanctioned was not to affect the cost of construction of the railway upon which the 10 per cent was to be calculated under the terms of the contract. The interests of the people of this country were safeguarded by the presence in the order in council of that provision, and the $20,000,000 of increase which was then authorized was not to be taken into account one way or the other in fixing the actual amount expended in the construction of the railway for the purpose of calculating the 10 per cent. In the discussion which then took place, the desire was expressed in many quarters that the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada should be taken on the question whether or not the amount of capital actually expended in the construction of the railway had yet reached such a figure as had made the time arrive when the rates of the company were liable to be reduced, and it was thought better that that should be referred to the court. In the January and February of 1904, the matter was placed by the then Minister of Justice in my hands on behalf of the government, and I was engaged for some two or three months in almost daily conference with the late Mr. Christopher Robinson, who was counsel in that matter for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the effort, which ultimately was successful, to arrange the terms of this reference to the Supreme Court. It was a very troublesome, difficult piece of work. There were a great many considerations to be taken into account, and the outcome was satisfactorily reached only after many propositions and counter propositions; but ultimately we succeeded in getting to an agreement as to the terms of the reference which was to be made to the Supreme Court of Canada. The case was entered for hearing at the May, 1904, term of the Supreme Court, and it was ready for argument, and no doubt would have been argued but for an arrangement which as counsel for the government I at that time understood had been entered into with the railway company. This was a piece of litigation upon which, if one were going to enter, it would behoove him to count the time and the cost. It was a case of such magnitude and importance, and such difficulty as well, that certainly it was not to be expected that either party would be content without an appeal to the Judicial Committee. After the principles upon which the accounts between the company and the public were to be taken had been settled by the decisions of the courts, the trouble would begin—the actual taking of the accounts, the actual going to work and determining, before some officer of the court, in the light of the decisions which the courts might have pronounced upon—I was going to say the almost innumerable points involved—upon the dozens of questions which were raised to be considered, what had been up to that time the actual amount expended in the construction of the railway. This would certainly have been the work of years. From the standpoint of the practising lawyer the prospect was certainly a charming one. Here was the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the one side and the Dominion of Canada on the other, engaged upon an inquiry to ascertain what amount of money had actually been expended in the construction of the railway during what was then 25 years or thereabout. That would have been, as I say, undoubtedly the work of years, and it would have been undoubtedly a very expensive operation. The late Mr. Christopher Robinson, the Hon. Edward Blake, and other counsel of distinction in this country were representing the railway company. It would have been something in regard to which there would have required to be a very substantial expenditure of money on the part of the company as well as on the part of the government. Next there is to be considered what would have been the position if the government had succeeded to the full in its contention at the end of a long taking of accounts. If the government, at the end of a long litigation, had succeeded in demonstrating that the revenue of the company amounted to more than 10 per cent on the capital actually expended on the construction of the railway, what then? Why, then, the rates would fall to be reduced. If the government failed, if the company showed that it was not making 10 per cent, then of course the government would have lost its case, and would have been out of pocket whatever it had invested in the inquiry. If it succeeded, the full extent of its success would have been to show that it was entitled to have the rates brought down to a figure which would make the income of the company not exceed 10 per cent on the amount actually expended in construction; and if that were the case, how would the actual amount of those rates fall to be settled? We had then not long before established the Board of Railway Commissioners, a board charged with the duty of deciding just such questions of rates in regard to other railway companies, but not having that control over the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which it would have secured if at the end of the litigation I have described the government had succeeded in demonstrating that the 10 per cent limit was being exceeded, and that the rates of the company would therefore have to be considered by this tribunal. In that position of matters the company came forward to the Minister of Justice of that day, saying: This prospect of litigation is terrifying, and rather than go on with that reference, we propose to leave the case standing entered for argument before the Supreme Court, in a position where it can be resumed at the wish of either party any day; and leaving it standing there as it is, we propose to submit ourselves, for the present at any rate, to the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners, and leave them free to control our rates. That was done. The company has from that day to this gone on allowing its rates to be controlled by the Board of Railway Commissioners, submitting itself to their jurisdiction in regard to its rates in exactly the same way that any other railway company in this country is obliged to submit itself. In the meantime the interests of the country have not suffered in any respect, so far as the litigation in question is concerned. It stands exactly where it did in the month of May five years ago. It is entered for hearing before the Supreme Court. Either party can take it up at any term of that court; and if it be the will of this House that that litigation should be entered upon, it is in no worse position than it was when it stood over in May, 1904. It can be taken up at once exactly where it was dropped and can be pursued to the end. But when it is at an end, when ultimately, after the expenditure of thousands of dollars and of years of time, the litigation is decided, and if the government prevail in its contention, the position, so far as the company is concerned, will be identical with that which it occupies now. What object there can be, in those circumstances, in pursuing that litigation, so long as the company continues to submit its operations and tariff to the decision of the Board of Railway Commissioners, I am entirely unable to understand.

But one word more with reference to the different increases which have taken place in the capital stock of the company since 1902. Starting with the capital stock of $65,000,000, that was increased by $20,000,000 and then there was another increase of $25,000,000 in 1904. In 1906 there was a further increase of $40,000,000, and in 1908 a final increase of $50,000,000. In each of these three cases an order in council was passed. In the latter two cases 1906 and 1908, the order in council contains exactly, in each instance, the same protecting provision as the order in council of 1902, namely, that the increased capital which the company was being authorized to expend in the way of construction should not be taken into account, either in favour of the company or against it, in computing the cost of construction upon which the ten per cent profit was to be based. The order of 1904 did not contain that provision, through some inadvertence or lack of attention apparently in the preparation of it. There was at all events the assurance given by the solicitors of the company, that the omission, so far as they were concerned, was entirely due to inadvertence; and I have in my hand a letter from the solicitor of the company, written with authority, he says, in which the company's solicitor undertakes, as he had previously stated to me by word of mouth, that that order in council of July, 1904, should, for all purposes and at all times, be considered as though it did contain the ten per cent clause in the same language as the other three orders.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. What is the date of that ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is of recent date, but the conversations which preceded it stated exactly the same thing as the letter does. I asked that the assurance should be put in writing and the letter is dated the 15th February inst. There never has been any other position taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway from first to last; and so far as the disposition of the proceeds is concerned, so far as regards what has been done with the various increases of capital from time to time—this statement is given by the president of the company, the accuracy of which we have no reason to doubt—not one penny of the capital authorized in excess of the $65,000,000 is to be taken into question in estimating the cost of construction under the terms of clause 20 of the company's contract with the Dominion government. And although it goes without saying, (Sir Thomas Shaughnessy adds) that these vast expenditures for increased facilities and greater developments are very great factors in the growth of the company's net revenue.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I have been very much interested in the discussion and particularly in the speech made by the hon. the Minister of Justice. In that speech the minister says that the original bargain between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian government, which has entailed so many hardships on the people of the west, is sacred and that so long as the company carries out faithfully its side of the compact, we have no right to interfere with it. He also assures the House that the ten per cent on the stock is not a hard and fast rule to day, but that the company, in the revision of its rates, has to take the ruling of the Board of Railway Commissioners. That is an assurance which will be very well received by the House and the country at large. But there is one thing on which I would like to have a little light and that is what the Board of Railway Commissioners would consider a fair basis on which to reckon the contract rate. In other words would they not take into consideration the fact that in the extra issues of stock the rate of interest has been materially reduced. I am not saying that it binds them down, as in the original bargain, to ten per cent interest on the stock, but I ask whether, in all fairness, it would not be reasonable to suppose that they would take into consideration the amount of stock issued and the interest thereon.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. But if we must leave that out of the question, if the issuance of the extra stock does not interfere in any way with the rates of the company, if competition and the control of the Railway Commissioners are to bring about a better state of affairs, there is one thing which must be evident to everybody. When the Canadian Pacific Railway come to this House, they must be coming for favours; and when they are coming for extra favours, it ought to be the duty of this House, in view of certain hardships that are entailed on the country by the original bargain, to see that these hardships are in some way relieved.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Hear, hear.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. If they ask us for one favour and another. if they want us to put them in the position of watering stock to some extent or issuing it at par, then let us curtail some of the enormous advantages they have secured over the public in western Canada. Of all the questions that give rise to the most irritation concerning the Canadian Pacific Railway and its operation to-day—and I have no fault to find with the Canadian Pacific Railway and its operations, I will go as far in my admiration of the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway as the Minister of Railways, and admit that it operates as well as and perhaps better than any railway in the world—there are certain conditions in that original contract which our people most resent and which it is the duty of parliament to use every legitimate means to have done away with, and of those things the main one is that the lands of the company may be held by them exempt from taxation.

If I may be pardoned, I will go briefly over the history of this arrangement. In 1881, the bargain was made that the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be selected from a twenty mile belt and should be exempt from taxation for twenty years. But the railway company came back here and asked for additional favours. They did not like the land within the twenty-mile belt and they were given free selection throughout that western country. In my constituency, whose extreme southern boundary is a hundred miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for all practical purposes every odd section was selected by the company. The twenty years of exemption would have expired in 1901. But the Canadian Pacific Railway patented its land only as it was sold. And, in 1901, when the provinces said: Now your exemption has expired, their answer was: Our exemption extends from the patenting of the lands twenty years. And they were asked to select their lands. A great portion of that land was not selected until 1906. Twenty-five years from 1881 and twenty years from 1906 make forty-five years' exemption for which these settlers in the west must pay. I ask any man in this House who is fair-thinking how the people in the older provinces would like it if they had to pay taxes not only every man on his own farm, but on the farm adjoining.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And the Canadian Pacific Railway cutting up melons of nine millions a year.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Apart from that argument, I would ask any hon. member: How would your constituency behave if your people had twice the taxes to pay that they should pay? How would they like it if no improvement was going on on the land adjoining theirs? But that is not all. We have a provincial law in that country that the maximum taxation per acre for school purposes is ten cents. Schools sections are formed, and, though the settlers are struggling with the difficulties of pioneer life, they want their children educated. They form their school section, but the odd sections of land are in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Placing on the maximum of taxation they attempt to build the school. They issue debentures, they make short loans for furniture, and they pay their teacher. But the second year comes. Now, their short loans come due, the payment of interest on the debentures comes due, and the teacher's salary is no less than before. I have two instances in my constituency where these people found that, even with the maximum of taxation, they could not possibly support their schools in the second year. I ask any hon. member here: What would your constituency say if they had to close up their school when paying maximum of taxation, leave the building standing idle and no opportunity afforded for the education of their children? Don't you think that this would become a burning question. Don't you think you would make such a noise in this House that the government would have to act? And if the Canadian Pacific Railway came here for a favour, don't you think the first question would be: What are you going to do about that exemption? This question is, in my constituency, a burning question. These lands bear no taxation for roads, but the expense of improvements must be borne in its entirety by the owner of the adjoining land. The settler goes in there. He has no money to buy the land. He tries the best he can to improve the roads, but he gets no help from half the land there. He is increasing the value of the Canadian Pacific Railway land with every improvement he makes, and with his efforts improving the productiveness of the country. Yet he gets no help from the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. And they cutting a melon every year.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I say that, when this matter comes up for consideration before the government, it is the duty of the government to ask favour for favour; when the Canadian Pacific Railway ask for one favour, the government should demand a favour in return. If you will take away the exemption, and compel the Canadian Pacific Railway to sell their lands, you will settle one of the most vexing questions with which we have to do. It is said, this bargain is a sacred one, that we cannot set aside the bargain for the company have carried out their side of it. I do not know anything about law, but I will leave it to the judgment of any man here, if, when that bargain was made in 1881, it was not the intention of parliament that that bargain should expire in 1901? I say we are paying taxes for twenty-five years beyond that bargain, and, dear only knows, the bargain was bad enough in the first instance. This bargain is a sacred one; but the duty that we have to perform is also a sacred one. We are here to represent the people. The company have vested rights, but so have the people. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wishes to go through certain territory, the laws of this country are such that they can take the land from the man who has the patent for it on giving him a fair price. It seems to me that if this bargain is sacred, we should use every possible endeavour to do away with what is one of the greatest evils of our country, and one that is retarding the settlement of western Canada to-day.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Did I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilbert McIntyre) to say that the bargain was a sacred one, and that the government were compelled by that bargain to authorize all these issues of stock at par when the stock is selling at a higher rate?

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. I will put my point in one sentence: When the Canadian Pacific Railway comes to us to ask for favours, we should try to relieve the friction points by asking them to grant us the favour of doing away with these restrictions.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the House for a few moments to certain reports which have come to hand of statements made in the Senate of the United States with regard to the ratification of the Waterways Treaty now under consideration between the two countries. I refer particularly to despatch in the 'Montreal Star' of 17th instant:

New York, Feb. 17th.—A Washington despatch to the 'Tribune' says: The prospects for the ratification of the Canadian Boundary Waters Treaty at this session of Congress are growing constantly less, and it now seems inevitable that the convention will have to go over until next session. Even then it may be amended.

And further on:

At the hearing which the Committee on Foreign Relations gave to Senator Smith, of Michigan, yesterday, he made a clear-cut argument in support of his contention that the treaty ought to be amended so as to ensure to his state as large a portion of the waters of St. Mary's river as it now enjoys, while his presentation of his contention that the treaty would deprive his state and this country of a part of those waters made considerable impression on the members of the committee.

Senator Smith maintained that the treaties of Ghent and Paris and the Webster-Ashburton treaty all defined the boundary, and that during all the intervening years it had remained undisputed. He maintained therefore, that the argument made against his contention—that the committee provided for in the pending convention would have power to fix the boundary—fell to the ground.

He argued further, that the treaty ratified last year did not alter the boundaries, but merely authorized a commission to erect the proper physical monuments. He said that at present two-thirds of the water of the St. Mary's river ran on the Michigan side of the river, while under the treaty pending the commission would unquestionably divide these waters equally between the United States and Canada. This, he maintained, would be a serious injustice to his state and to the United States.

Following that, we read in the newspapers to-day that it is impossible, on account of objections that have been raised by Senator Smith, of Michigan, on these grounds, that the convention treaty can be ratified during this session of Congress, the consequence of which will be that it will have to go over to another year. Now, I do not desire to enter upon a discussion of the terms of that treaty. Unfortunately, by a mysterious procedure, and one which does not commend itself either to the Prime Minister or the leader of the opposition, we are practically in the dark in this House with regard to the terms of the treaty. But this we do know, that we had an International Waterways Commission, which commission was constituted and endowed with certain functions and powers. It went to work at considerable expense to investigate our water supply and our waterways, the commission being composed of representative gentlemen appointed by both governments. The report of that Waterways Commission was, with regard to the St. Mary's river, that the power from those falls should be divided equally between the two countries. That report has been adopted so far as it could be adopted by this House. That report is fair in every respect, and has been made after examination by the commissioners of all the water supply and the water sheds on both sides of the river.

Now, I desire to urge upon the right hon. gentleman who leads this House that there should be no disturbance of the conditions on the boundary between Canada and the United States, as found to exist by that independent report of a joint commission appointed by both countries, and that the efforts of the hon. senator for Michigan to block the treaty in order to get better terms, to get encroachments on the boundary, to get water franchises of a very valuable nature properly belonging to Canada, found to belong to Canada, known to belong to Canada, conceded to belong to Canada, and vested in Canada by treaty rights for many years, enjoyed and possessed by Canada to-day—that that hon. gentleman shall not be permitted, by holding up the ratification of that treaty in the United States Senate, to wrest from Canada something which Canada has a right to keep, and which I protest, as a Canadian representative against Canada giving up at all. What is to be the result, I leave it to the right hon. gentleman who leads this House to say. I do not know what negotiations, if any, are taking place. But I now rise for the purpose of setting forth the situation and placing it before the government, namely, that the people of Canada, and especially the people who are immediately benefiting by the water supply from the St. Mary's river as well as those benefiting by the supply of the Niagara river, shall not be deprived of their rights, and that the right hon. gentleman shall see to it, in further negotiations, that there is no leverage made by the blocking of that commission to take away from Canada that which belongs to Canada. There was a lamentable incident in connection with one of our treaties with the United States, so far as territorial boundaries were concerned, there was an arrangement whereby, at the last moment, by a lamentable circumstance or coincidence, a portion of that territory which we honestly belived to belong to Canada, was taken away from Canada by measures which we did not approve, and which the people of this country did not approve. I therefore urge upon the right hon. gentleman to keep a watchful eye on the proceedings of the United States, and to see that no leverage, no holdup, is made by any one on the other side of the line in order to wrest from Canada any part of our waterways, or any part of our territory which has been agreed upon and found to be Canada's by right, and that the treaty shall not be varied or changed to our disadvantage by gentlemen in the United States Senate.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I do not think that there is any cause for misapprehension on the part of my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) by reason of what has transpired, so far as we know, in the Senate of the United States. The newspaper reports which I have seen, I believe, are not very accurate, and in those reports two treaties are confounded the one with the other. The treaty which is now before the Senate, the Waterways Treaty, is eminently fair to both countries. The fact that objection is taken to its terms by a senator in the United States Congress, a gentleman interested on the other side of the line, is perhaps evidence that after all the treaty cannot be objectionable to the people of this country. I would not prejudge it at all. There is another treaty which was passed last year, and which referred to the international boundaries, as to which a commission has been appointed to fix, not new boundaries, not to determine new boundaries, but simply to fix the boundaries already existing by treaty, which has now been in existence for forty or fifty years. The commissioners have no power to depart in any way, under that treaty, from what has been in existence, and is now in existence; their task is merely to confirm metes and bounds, marking present boundaries, and nothing else. It is premature, I think, to discuss that treaty, or the treaty which is now before the Senate committee. As I understand, it has now been put over to another session. I may say that I have the authority of His Excellency the Governor General to state that we are endeavouring to get authority from Great Britain to lay the treaty before parliament as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Public Works—Ontario—Belleville Armoury $60,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the Ontario buildings there are no new items. These votes are simply to carry on to completion buildings regarding which provisions were made in the last parliament. I spoke to the chief Conservative whip and he was good enough to say that he would be able to arrange to save the necessity of giving details as to these different buildings because the officer who prepared the estimates was not quite ready with the details. He asked to have the Toronto buildings stand. I undertake that if any hon. member wants specific information in regard to any building I shall furnish it.

Mr. J. HAGGART. The minister promised to bring down an order in council yesterday.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I have it here.

Mr. J. HAGGART. If the minister would just read the part setting forth the urgency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is with reference to the fence around the Mint. The clause in question reads:

That the Deputy Master of the Mint has on behalf of the Imperial authorities, called the attention of the Department of Public Works to the absolute necessity for the erection of a fence around the Mint building, before minting operations are proceeded with. That this was a matter quite unforeseen by the Department of Public Works until the demand of the Imperial authorities was made. It is submitted therefore, that this is a case which may quite reasonably come within the exceptions provided for in the Revised Statutes, chapter 39, section 36 (a) of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interests, and that the Minister of Public Works may properly dispense with the calling for public tenders.

That the Chief Architect of the Department of Public Works has prepared plans and a specification which were submitted to, and approved by Dr. Bonar, Deputy Master of the Mint, upon which, the contractors for the Mint building, Messrs. Sullivan and Langdon, were asked to give a price.

Mr. J. HAGGART. That is not the one.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the one.

Mr. J. HAGGART. In connection with the addition to the House of Commons the minister spoke of an order in council setting forth some urgency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend not remember that he was speaking of the contract given to Contractors Sullivan & Langdon for the fence and guard-house at the Mint. I promised the hon. member for North Toronto to give the order in council.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Was there an order in council for the expenditure in connection with this wing setting forth an emergency?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only as to one of the elevators in regard to this building. The $44,000 paid to the contractors in that case is made up of different items of work done without an order in council.

Mr. BLAIN. Could the minister furnish the committee with a list of Ontario public buildings for which estimates were passed last year, but which do not appear in the present estimate ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated yesterday that by comparing the estimates of this year with the Appropriation Act of last year it will be seen what has been omitted. Then I was asked if I would prepare a statement of the buildings or works in regard to which tenders had been called, but which had also been omitted, and I said I would do that. I have that list here. It is as follows:

Works for which tenders were called and received but on which no action was taken, it having been decided to defer their construction for the present. Three Rivers Coal Dock; Ste. Emilie, P.Q., wharf; West Advocate, N.S., wharf; Devil's Island, N.S., wharf extension; Vancouver, dredging; St. André, P.Q., wharf extension; Long Point, P.E.I., breakwater; Providence Bay, wharf; St. Alexis, Ha! Ha! Bay, wharf; Michipicoten, wharf; Vernon, B.C., public building; Tenecape, N.S., wharf extension.

Mr. BLAIN. In the general election held in October the estimates passed at the last session of parliament were used on behalf of government candidates in many counties in Ontario. It was pointed out to the electors that if they supported certain candidates these buildings would be erected and large amounts of money expended in certain counties.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did I understand my hon. friend to say it was pointed out that if the electors elected certain candidates this would be done?

Mr. BLAIN. Yes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to give the name of the gentleman who referring to what had been placed in the estimates made it a condition that the candidate would be supported?

Mr. BLAIN. I do not propose to be put in the witness box by my hon. friend on details, because I could very well put my hon. friend in the witness box and refer to special cases in his own constituency.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In my own constituency there was no promise of any kind or description which was contingent upon the government candidates being supported.

Mr. BLAIN. If we wish to broaden out this discussion there is a gentleman sitting within my hearing whose opponent published a list of the amounts of money that were expended in his county and because of that argued that they should return him again to support the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is another matter. My hon. friend said that the promise was made by candidates that if they were returned these works which were provided for in the Appropriation Act would be undertaken, but making it a condition that such and such candidates would be returned. I asked my hon. friend to point to a single instance in which that was done. Then he referred to St. John, and I told him that in no case was any promise or assurance in regard to the carrying on of a public work made contingent on the election of a particular candidate.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend will not venture to say that his government did not adopt the policy of using the promise of public works with the electors to induce them to support their candidates. I could give specific instances, if I chose but I shall not. Perhaps the minister would like me to, so that he could instance some county and point out some member of the opposition who objected to it and was anxious to bring the case before parliament. In last year's estimates were found a great number of items for the construction of public buildings and public works; on these no money was expended last year and they have disappeared from the estimates this year. What I want to know from the minister is the cause. Last year the minister told us there was no fear that the revenue of the country would continue to increase, but he now tells us our revenue has decreased and that the government is short of money. I want from the minister a list of the public buildings in Ontario which were provided for in the estimates last year and on which no money was spent and which are not to be proceeded with under these estimates.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will entail some clerical work which I will have done and I will submit the result to the hon. gentleman later. As I have already explained we cannot save eight million dollars unless we cut off public works here and there and we have done so all over the country without distinguishing between constituencies represented by supporters or opponents of the government. I do not expect that this postponement of public works will last long. The works were provided for last session in good faith and as we deemed they were necessary in the public interest, I shall consider it my duty at the earliest possible moment to have these works reinstated in the Appropriation Act so that they may be proceeded with.

Cornwall Public Building—Alterations to fittings, $1,400.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. What are these alterations and who has the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. These are for ordinary post office fittings, new steps to the building, &c. The Berlin, Ontario, Hardware Company has the contract.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Is there pressing public necessity for these alterations ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would not have undertaken them were it not that the Post Office Department made an urgent request.

Mr. DONNELLY. In the estimates of last year there was an item of $5,000 for the erection of a post office at the town of Chesley. I suppose that the same reason that the hon. minister has given for striking out the other items would apply to the striking out of that item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The same reason would apply, but I may say that we have decided to purchase the site, so that we shall be ready to proceed with the construction of the building as soon as the necessary provision is made.

Mr. DONNELLY. Did the hon. minister or his department send any official or agent to Chesley during October last for the purpose of purchasing or arranging for the purchase of a site for the proposed post office building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave instructions to the inspector to go there for the purpose of looking into the question of the site, but just when he went there I do not know.

Mr. DONNELLY. Then the hon. minister did send an inspector just previous to the election?

Mr. G. TAYLOR. That looks suspicious.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A little bit, but things are not always what they seem.

Mr. DONNELLY. I may say that during the recent election campaign considerable capital was endeavoured to be made for the government candidate out of the fact that the people of the town of Chesley were to receive a new post office building, and the argument was freely used that it would be suicidal policy on the part of the electors not to elect a supporter of this government, as the result might be that no post office would be built. Now, the result appears to me to show that the parties who advanced that argument must have had good ground for it. I would like to have the assurance of the hon. minister that in striking out the item for the building of a post office at Chesley, he was not influenced in any way by the fact that the riding did not return a supporter of the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can give my hon. friend that assurance in the most positive terms. I may say that in leaving out the public buildings in regard to which tenders had not been called, we drew the line irrespective of whether a supporter of the government or an opponent of the government had been returned.

Mr. DONNELLY. I would like to call the attention of the minister in a general way to the fact that the people of the inland constituencies of western Ontario, being large purchasers and consumers of imported goods, contribute largely to the revenue of this country, while they receive a very small return in the way of the erection of public buildings. I wish to say to the hon. minister that the town of Chesley is a thriving and progressive town, fast becoming quite a manufacturing centre, and I would like to have his assurance that, as soon as the finances of the country will be in such shape that he can go on and erect public buildings, he will then take up the matter of the Chesley post office, and have it provided for in the estimates at an early date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can hardly be expected to give that assurance in respect to individual buildings; but I give it to my hon. friend in general terms, which ought to be satisfactory. I may say that when the gentleman who formerly represented the constituency in which Chesley is situated, urged its claim for a public building, he used the same argument that my hon. friend does now, in regard to its being a thriving and progressive town and it was in consequence of his very strong representations that provision was made for a building in the town of Chesley. The item was put in the estimates in good faith, and it is in exactly the same position as other items which have been held over. But I can assure my hon. friend that as early as possible the buildings provided last year will be proceeded with, including the building in the town of Chesley.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Was the site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site has been purchased.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would like to ask the minister if this work will be gone on with before the next election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That depends on when the election will take place.

Glencoe—Public Building, $26,000.

Mr. BARR. Is this a post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A public building, including a post office and custom house.

Mr. BARR. What is the size of Glencoe?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1901 the population was betwen 1,000 and 1,100.

Mr. BARR. It is not any more now; it is going back; and yet we find $26,000 voted for a public building there. Was the promise of this building the reason it gave the government the big majority it did? It looks very much like it. We find that $1,250 was paid for the site, although land is very cheap there. Were any other sites offered?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there was an opportunity to purchase several others, but this was regarded as the best and the cheapest.

Mr. BARR. What is the size of the lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 100 feet by 165. It is a corner lot.

Mr. BARR. I find that the legal expenses in connection with the purchase amounted to $33.02. Will this finish the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to finish the building.

Mr. BARR. Has the contract been let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BARR. Is there a tower and a clock to be put on that building? I have it on good authority that these were promised before the election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, there is to be a small and somewhat pretty tower on the building.

Mr. S. SHARPE. When were the tenders advertised for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some time last fell.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In what month?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is one of the particulars I have not got. The contract was let on the 11th of September. Tenders were called probably a month before that.

Mr. BARR. Can the minister tell us how many tenders there were?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not that with me.

Mr. BARR. Was this the lowest?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This was the lowest.

Mr. BARR. I would like to know who were the parties who tendered?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have that this evening.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. In the list of tenders asked for and given by the minister, I did not hear that tenders were invited for the dam at Montreal river. Is it not a fact that tenders were asked for the construction of a dam at Montreal river last fall previous to the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will come up on harbours and rivers, when I shall give full details.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. Was there a tender for the dam at Latchford?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will find a sum in the estimates for the dam at Latchford.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o clock.

EDMONTON AND SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE (Strathcona) moved that the House go into Committee on Private Bills.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to say a word about this first Bill, respecting the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company. I recognize that it will not result in any immediate action being taken; at the same time I want to put distinctly on record the position taken by some of us with respect to Bills of this character. This is a Bill for the renewal of a charter granted many years ago. The first clause provides that it shall have five years for the completion of the railway. I have no objection to their having five years for the completion of the railway, but, in the Railway Committee, I objected to having it so put that they shall have five years in which they may actually do nothing We have a pretty well recognized rule that whenever a company applies for a renewal of a charter, there should be a provision that they shall commence and, within two years, spend at least 15 per cent of the capitalization, and shall complete the road within five years. It was alleged that, in the case of this particular company, something had been expended upon the railway——

Mr. WILBERT McINTYRE. Over 15 per cent.

Mr. LENNOX—but nothing had been expended for as much as two years. I submit that the fact of expenditure having been made two years ago has no great bearing upon the matter of a renewal of charter, and that we should at least insist upon the ordinary condition that they would expend not less than 15 per cent within two years.

As I say, I recognize that I cannot make this effective at the present time. But I enter this as a protest against this measure, and the same step will be taken as to the renewal of a charter considered in this House the other day. The difficulty is that these things are quoted as precedents, and we are compelled very often to abandon the salutary rule which we adopted some time ago.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into Committee on Private Bills.

Bill (No. 24) respecting the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company.—Mr. Wilbert McIntyre—reported, read the third time and passed.

SALISBURY AND HARVEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Salisbury and Harvey Railroad Company.—Mr. Emmerson.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) in charge of the Bill to change the name of it. I understood well why this is called 'Railroad' company instead of 'Railway' company, because they are using the franchise of a company which is extinct by insolvency, and they want to have a difference between the two institutions. But I would point out to the hon. gentleman that the word 'Railway' in the Railway Act has a special construction put upon it by the interpretation clause, and it is very bad legislation for us to use the word 'Railroad' and expect the courts to determine that it means the same as 'Railway', when this latter word is given an interpretation which, in certain cases, manifestly, 'Railroad' does not have. I would suggest that it be called the 'Great Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company,' or the 'Eastern Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company,' or anything else you like. The word 'Harvey' might be omitted, and some other name used. It is important that we should not have the word 'Railroad' in the Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. There is much force in the point taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) and I concur in his views. So strong has been my feeling with respect to the matter that I wrote to the parties in the city of St. John who are interested, and made a suggestion as to a change in the name. I think, under the rules of the House, the title of a Bill can be changed on its third reading. Therefore, I would suggest that we might put the Bill through the committee leaving the question of the name open.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought this was the time to mention it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Of course, the use of the term 'railway' is uniform in the statute, and the Railway Act is framed and phrased with the idea that all companies of that nature shall be termed 'railway' companies, and not 'railroad' companies. It would not be well to have an exception.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would suggest the striking out of the word 'and' and the inserting of a hyphen. Make it 'Salisbury-Harvey Railway Company.' That will distinguish it from the old company.

Mr. EMMERSON. Having submitted the matter to the parties interested, I feel that we ought to give them an opportunity to select the name. From my knowledge of the geography, I would say that a better name would be the 'Salisbury and Hopewell Railway Company,' for these are the two points connected. As a matter of fact, Harvey is not connected with Salisbury by this railway.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is no object in keeping it in then.

Mr. EMMERSON. No material object, but the railway as first operated, under legislation of this parliament, went by the name of the 'Salisbury and Harvey Railway.' I think they wish to retain the word 'Salisbury,' and perhaps it would be more agreeable to them to retain the name 'Harvey' also.

Mr. LANCASTER. You might call it the 'Great Salisbury and Harvey.'

Mr. EMMERSON. But it is no greater than it was. You could not impress the public with that.

Mr. LENNOX. Let it go through committee except as to that point, and remain in the committee for further consideration.

Mr. EMMERSON, I think that would be better.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 13) respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Pardee.

Bill (No. 26) respecting the Kootenay Central Railway Company.—Mr. Geo. Taylor.

LAKE SUPERIOR BRANCH GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

House resumed adjourned debate on proposed motion of Mr. Turriff for the second reading of Bill (No. 30) respecting the subsidy from the Ontario government to the Lake Superior branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Possibly we might let this Bill go to committee. I notice that there has been a good deal of comment on it. Hon. gentlemen who have looked through it will see that it contains several clauses which I think will need a great deal of discussion, possibly we will not be able to pass them. It strikes me from reading the Bill over that they will interfere with our control of Dominion railways. It was an Act passed by the Ontario legislature giving this company some aid, to which certain conditions were put in, and one of the conditions was that the company should endeavour to get a Bill passed by this House confirming the agreement which forms part of the Act. The agreement contains one or two clauses as to rates and another clause as to amalgamation. I am afraid that these clauses of the agreement would conflict with the jurisdiction that we ought to have over our own roads. However, I think it will be well to send it on to the Railway Committee, because there may be some parts of the Bill that we ought to confirm. It is with no desire at all to do anything that would permit the railway company to get out of keeping its agreement, but it is with the sole object that we do nothing in this House to pass any railway that is chartered by ourselves out of our own jurisdiction by confirming an agreement with any other body. I have no objection to its going to the committee. We will prune it down, and if there is anything in it that we can confirm, we will be glad to do so.

Mr. LENNOX. I think the minister is right in allowing it to go to the committee. But it appears to me that this Bill will have to be confirmed or passed in its entirety, or not at all. It is simply an agreement between the provincial government and the railway company, and there will not arise any question about it on the part of the railway company, because they do not get any money unless they obtain the sanction of this House to this agreement. However, we can discuss all that. There are some advisable provisions in this Bill regarding the carriage of road material for municipalities on certain favourable terms.

Mr. GRAHAM. Discriminating against other townships, which is against the law.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not think so, for the reason that they must carry for all municipalities that are upon the line of railway. Of course they can carry it beyond the line of railway. I do not suppose the local legislatures are very particular. They have their money yet and must either have this agreement or retain their money.

Mr. GRAHAM. The situation is that they have not their money.

Mr. LENNOX. They ought to have.

Mr. GRAHAM. The other people have most of the money. They have a portion of their money which has not been paid over, but the neglect of this House to pass such an Act does not prevent the company from keeping its agreement.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to have them bound.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. The per contra of the minister's argument might be that there are companies chartered in Ontario who have obligations with municipalities there; these companies come here under the jurisdiction of the federal authorities and try to evade these obligations and if something can be done to define the spheres of the federal and provincial governments so that these obligations whatever they may be could be preserved, it would be a good thing. Perhaps that will come up in this case.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is our railway.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Glencoe Public Building, $26,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. In making the purchase of the site for this building was an agent of the department sent to get options on lots or how was the site purchased ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell exactly, but if my hon. friend desires I will get the information. My recollection is that the usual course was pursued, that is we send our representative, a very experienced man, to the town, he looks over the different available sites, gets the prices, makes an examination of the lots, endeavours to ascertain at what prices they changed hands in recent years, according to his instructions from the department, and makes his report to the department. I think I can assure my hon. friend that that was done in this case.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister states that he has abolished the patronage system in his department. Does this apply to advertising for tenders for public works? I mentioned last year that in calling for tenders for the construction of a post office at St. Marys, Ontario, the department advertised in 33 papers in that section of the province at a cost of $607.35. I pointed out then that the department advertisement was not inserted in the leading newspapers in that section of the province.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No change has been made so far as advertising is concerned. As I said to my hon. friend last year, we are careful to see that ample notice is given so that all likely contractors would have the opportunity of tendering for public works. In asking tenders for smaller contracts, such as furnishing supplies, or erecting buildings costing $2,000 or $3,000, we do not advertise as widely as with respect to important public buildings. We would not go to as much expense as for a more expensive work. We endeavour to select newspapers that have considerable circulation, but I have not yet felt bound to ignore the rule which has prevailed that we give a preference to papers which are friendly to the administration.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman continues to advertise in newspapers supporting the government and in no others.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not exactly, there are some exceptions.

Mr. BLAIN. I have here 33 newspapers containing advertisements for tenders for the work at St. Marys, and I would like my hon. friend to say if any of these are not supporters of the present administration?

Mr. PUGSLEY. You are pretty nearly corect.

Mr. BOYCE. You have abolished the patronage system?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not as to newspapers.

Mr. BLAIN. In western Ontario an advertisement goes into 33 different newspapers for tenders for a small work to be done at St. Marys, and the newspaper with altogether the largest circulation in that section of the province, the London 'Free Press,' is not included.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the 'Advertiser' of that city had it.

Mr. BLAIN. It has a much less circulation than the London 'Free Press.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the Toronto 'Globe' had it also.

Mr. BLAIN. I think the Toronto 'Globe' would be on the list. A little change in that particular would be in the interest of the public, and I am sure it would be along the line of diminishing the patronage list. Does not the minister think that in this case too much money was spent in advertising for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work was not so very small. The cost was between $25,000 and $30,000. The amount for advertising was considerable, but if we were obliged to insert the advertisement in the opposition papers as well the cost might be double.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the need of so large an expenditure for a public building in such a small place as Glencoe, which, I believe, has a population of about one thousand souls? There is equal necessity for the establishment of public buildings in other towns of larger population and of more commercial importance where there are less facilities than in this interesting and no doubt progressive town of Glencoe. For instance, there is the town of Steelton, near Sault Ste. Marie, where there are very many important industrial works, and where the population are now suffering for the want of those public facilities which it is the duty of the minister to supply. The minister said to a representative deputation from Sault Ste. Marie, Steelton and that district that the strongest possible representations had been made in regard to the interests of that place and that it must be taken into the serious consideration of the government. That place has no postal facilities commensurate with the needs of the population. I would therefore ask the minister why he discriminates in this manner and establishes a public building at an expense of $26,000 to serve a small population like this, and leaves a town of wider commercial importance with practically no facility at all notwithstanding the fact that he has admitted publicly that the strongest possible representations have been made as to the necessity for increased accommodation.

Mr. D. A. GORDON. After hearing the numerous complaints from the other side of the House, one would suppose that they have all the grievances upon their side. In that regard I think they are entirely wrong. The minister in his wisdom has seen fit to deny us one or two buildings that are very important and on the whole we are inclined to give the government credit for using good judgment in this matter and trying to keep house within their resources. The town of Dresden has not adequate postal facilities and although an appropriation was made for a post office in that town it was deemed wise to not build one there for the present. The hon. gentleman from North Lanark (Mr. Thoburn) referred to a town in his locality that wants a public building, but I may say that there is a town in my district that has probably contributed more revenue to the Dominion exchequer during the past two years than his little town has contributed since confederation, and we have absolutely no adequate postal accommodation there. I, however, shall feel disposed to press the minister quite as strongly as some of the other hon. gentlemen a little later on, and I hope with success. I express myself as being more than delighted to see that the government are practising a policy of retrenchment, and I hope that when they feel they can spend money generously again, a policy will be pursued that will make appropriations something in keeping with the needs of the various communities, and that the small communities will not get double what they ought to have and the larger ones much more than is necessary.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Did the hon. gentleman plead with the government for retrenchment when he sat in the House last July, as he pleaded to-night ?

Mr. D. A. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am delighted at the remarks of the hon. gentleman from East Kent (Mr. Gordon). Did he not come from a town where they manufacture sugar to such a large extent I would scarcely have expected such a very sweet speech. He has been able to congratulate the minister and to find fault with him at the same time, and he has sat down fully satisfied that he has done justice to his constituency. There is no doubt a very large revenue derived from the town the hon. gentleman lives in and when the minister comes to know of that he will no doubt meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman and do it with as much grace as my hon. friend (Mr. Gordon) has shown in the manner of his asking.

Mr. BOYCE. I was not speaking jocularly and I would be obliged to the minister if he would give me an answer to my question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We were pressed very strongly to provide a public building for Glencoe. It was represented to us that Glencoe was the centre of a very rich agricultural district, an important railway centre that several industrial concerns have recently located in the town, that the population was increasing, that the post office and customs office was inconvenient and entirely inadequate, and that Glencoe was the headquarters of a company of the Middlesex Light Infantry which had no place to store its arms and accoutrements, and that a room should be provided in the public building for that purpose. We yielded to these representations. The plans were prepared shortly after parliament rose last summer, tenders were called for and the contract entered into before we arrived at the conclusion we would have to cut off a great many of these items.

Mr. BOYCE. The contract was let just before the election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It had to be let before the election if it was to be done at all last summer. Just one other word, and I say this for the information of our friends on this side of the House whose feeling has been so well expressed by the hon. gentleman from East Kent (Mr. Gordon). There was an appropriation for a building in the town of Grand Falls in my own province put in the estimates last year on the strong representation of the hon. gentleman who represents that constituency and we have omitted it this year although the constituency of Madawaska and Victoria gave to the government candidate a majority of 1,500. Fairville, in my own constituency, is a very thriving and prosperous town adjoining the city of St. John, and it gave me a splendid majority, but I have dropped the appropriation for it from the estimates also. In the city of St. John I have postponed the building of a drill hall which has been promised for years.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. They wont give you a majority next time.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes they will, because the people of St. John appreciate our efforts to curtail at the present time and they know we are doing the right thing in the public interest. In Kings and Albert where a victory was won by my hon. friend (Mr. McAlister) which was surprising to a great many of our friends opposite we had an appropriation for the thriving town of Hillsborough and that has been stricken from this year's estimates also. I mention this to show that we are treating constituencies which returned government supporters in the same way as we are treating those constituencies which returned Conservatives. Last session we provided for a good many public buildings and wharfs throughout the country which we thought were necessary, and for that policy we were criticised by hon. gentlemen opposite very strongly. The lieutenant of the leader of the opposition in the province of Quebec took the ground last year, as he took it only yesterday, that many hon. members apparently come here with the sole idea that they must get a public building for their constituents. I hope that remark will not apply to my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce). The same gentleman told us also that those gentlemen who are asking for public buildings are never found in the committee rooms doing the work which devolves properly on members of this parliament, but that their sole object appeared to be to get a public building. I trust that remark does not apply to my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce). I take a different view altogether; I believe that gentlemen who represent the great cities of Canada ought to look with a favourable eye upon the efforts of the government to give public buildings costing reasonable sums of money and affording ordinary accommodation to the smaller cities and towns throughout the Dominion. That was the policy which the government recognized in submitting the estimates last session. I can tell my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that if I remain Minister of Public Works I shall regard the claims of Milton favourably, as I shall regard also the claims of other cities and towns to which my attention has been called. But we cannot do everything at once. We find our revenue is limited this year and we have been forced with great reluctance to curtail expenditure. I have been constrained at the instance of the Minister of Finance to cut off the very large sum of $8,000,000 which I had hoped would be placed in the estimates for the purpose of carrying out the obligations entered into last session of parliament when these appropriations were made. I trust this declaration will be sufficient for our hon. friends and that they will recognize the sincerity of the statement I make again, that so far as I know not one of these items was placed in the estimates last year for the purpose of influencing the electors.

Mr. CROSBY. No one would not think of charging that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We placed the appropriations in the estimates because we believed these works were necessary in the public interest. Will any one of these hon. gentlemen rise in his place and say that any one of these public buildings is not reasonably required in the public interest? The most hon. gentlemen opposite do is to say: If you are erecting a building in that town give it to the town I represent. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) whom I am always glad to hear, pleads for a public building in Milton and properly so, and when the time comes, as no doubt it will come, when we can give a public building to Milton my hon. friend will be able to say to his constituents: See what I obtained for you as your representative, send me back again to Ottawa in order that I may get further favours for my town.

Mr. HENDERSON. I cannot allow these pleasant remarks of the Minister of Public Works to pass without notice. I must congratulate him on the admirable statement he has made with regard to his general policy. It is extremely plausible on its face; it certainly seems to be extremely fair and unbiassed. The difficulty is that when the hon. gentleman comes down to particulars, he departs entirely from his general policy. I agree with him very largely on his general policy; but when he tells this committee that the village of Glencoe, of which I have some knowledge, having been there time and again, is entitled to a public building because it is in the midst of a rich agricultural country, I ask, what better agricultural country can you find than that surrounding the town of Milton? He says Glencoe is a railway centre. I believe there is one line of railway passing through it, with a spur to another village. But both the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific pass through the town of Milton. He says Glencoe has some industries. So has Milton, some very important industries, and it has recently added others. In the village in which I live, in the same county, there is one industry employing 300 men, and another employing from 100 to 150 persons, and it has a population nearly double that of Glencoe. But these minor considerations, to which the hon. gentleman made reference, do not seem to weigh with him in deciding the location of a public building. The special reasons assigned on behalf of Glencoe are applicable to very many towns throughout the province of Ontario, and I have no doubt to very many towns in other provinces which have received no consideration from the minister. However, in this instance I suppose we shall have to allow the general policy to prevail, because we know that the majority in west Middlesex on the 26th of October was very small indeed.

Mr. COWAN. I have listened in vain for an answer from the minister to the question put by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce); but while I was listening I was delighted to a certain extent to hear from the minister what we may consider to be a specimen brick of the political virtue of himself and his party. I am learning the business of politics. I find that the proper policy is to make an appropriation immediately before an election ; and when the minister gets a large majority, as he did in certin constituencies in New Brunswick, he tells us with unctuous declamation that he withdraws that appropriation, intending of course to use it again at the next election. I have picked up this little piece of general information as to the political policy of himself and his party, but I have waited in vain for an answer to the very reasonable question put by the hon. member for Algoma : why is Glencoe to be accorded a building at the cost stated, although it has a population of only 1,000, while a place like Steelton, with a population of 3,000, whose claims the minister recognized before the election, is discriminated against? Steelton is entitled to say that the minister is bound to recognize its claim if he is not distributing the public moneys for the purpose of doing favours instead of advancing the interests of Canada. Why is Algoma not treated as it is entitled to be treated because of the solemn promises and representations made by the minister?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There were no promises.

Mr. COWAN. Strong representations he has made here to-night. I heard him say that he led that delegation to suppose that they had made a good claim. Another place without nearly so good a claim is given a public building. I have heard no answer justifying this discrimination. I have only heard that the public moneys of Canada are being played with by the party opposite for the purpose of its political advancement in the constituencies.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How often has this public building been promised to Glencoe before the election? Is this the third or fourth time? In how many elections before has it been promised?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of any.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is another question. The question of advertising which has been raised by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) is a very serious one. When this matter of advertising arose and the question was asked the minister, why he did not distribute his advertising amongst the papers of both parties, he said with a great show of rectitude that he had abolished the pernicious patronage list. Why does he not follow the example of the Tory government in Toronto, and distribute the advertising among both the Reform and Conservative papers? How can he expect the people of this country to believe his solemn assurance that the patronage list is abolished when any one who picks up a Reform paper and a Conservative paper will see a government advertisement in the one and not in the other? He must necessarily come to the conclusion, if he has any eyes or judgment at all, that this story of the abolition of the patronage list is mere moonshine.

Mr. ARTHURS. I would like to call the attention of the minister to the necessity of providing at the earliest possible moment a public building for the town of Parry Sound. I heard him announce that the policy of the government was to provide for those towns which had a certain population and whose necessities were most pressing. The town of Parry Sound has a population of between 3,000 and 4,000. It is one of the principal ports on the Georgian bay, is a large manufacturing centre, is the county town of the county, and has a large postal revenue. According to last year's returns, the postal revenue of those towns in Ontario which have been favoured with public buildings is as follows: Renfrew, $6,919; Parkhill, $3,364; Glencoe, $2,871; Leamington, $4,833; Markham, $2,143; Simcoe, $7,908; Whitby, 4,320; whereas the town of Parry Sound had a revenue of almost $9,000. Then in the matter of post office orders, I find that the total amount issued by these seven towns, which have been so favoured is $132,000 while those issued by the town of Parry Sound alone amounted to $290,000. I find also that the customs revenue for Parry Sound amounted last year to $53,567, which is much larger than that in any other of the towns for which we have been asked to vote an appropriation. And when this matter is brought before the minister, I would ask him to consider very carefully the claims of this town—a town which has three railways connecting with it and the finest harbour on Georgian bay, and which has been neglected to the present in this respect.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the cost of the land?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,250.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What was the total of the successful tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Geo. A. Proctor, of Sarnia, tendered for $16,228, which was the lowest tender and he was given the contract.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. When did the work begin and when is it likely to be completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contractor has to begin in the spring. The contract has been let and the building must be completed the first of October next.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Will the amount of the contract cover the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will be fittings and heating and lighting in addition.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. What is the estimated total cost of the building and the fittings ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $27,000.

Mr. BOYCE. I have no desire to obstruct the hon. gentleman's estimates, but when questions are asked him which are reasonable we are entitled to a satisfactory reply and consideration. The answer he gave the proposition I submitted was most pathetic and unctuous but not all satisfactory. In it he deprecated the lavish expenditure of public money on public buildings, especially just before the elections, and desired that his followers should be more moderate in their aggressive demands on his department. What a contrast to one of his predecessors who, when criticised for his very lavish expenditure replied : 'Wait until you see what we will do next year.' But after the pathetic appeal of the present minister, one cannot help concluding that it must indicate a decline in the power of this government, since it admits that the means by which it has held power is shrinking in its hands. The minister stated that as our revenue began to decline. so should our expenditure on public works. But he knew that last session. Why did he not then practice that policy? Of course the elections were then at hand. And how is he expending the money he asks us to vote? As a Minister of Public Works, he is bound to see that the expenditures are made where they will do the greatest good to the greatest number; and if any cutting down be necessary, it should be done at the expense of the least important and not of the most important centers. But he has followed the opposite policy. He has starved the important centers and expended immense sums on public works where he thought they would most benefit his party, regardless of the principle I have just expressed and which no one can controvert. He has been extravagant in the smaller places and starved the more important ones. Take for instance the town of Steelton, which is of much greater importance than the town of Glencoe. It has a population three times as large. The capital employed there is 25 to 50 times that invested in Glencoe, and representations were made to the government as to the urgent necessity of a post office in Steelton long before there was any question of building one in Glencoe. Yet we have the minister telling us that although he found it necessary to cut down expenditure because of our declining revenue, and although there was not enough money to go around, he has decided that there must be an appropriation for the town of Glencoe, small as it is, and the claims of Steelton are to be utterly disregarded. What can be the reason? How is it that we find this utterly unjustifiable discrimination made by a minister who tells us he has abolished the patronage list? The reason is no doubt that the county of West Middlesex has elected a supporter of the government for two or three parliaments and is expected by the minister to do so for still another parliamentary term. What the minister was looking to was political expediency and his object was to expend the public money where it would benefit his party most, regardless of public necessity. Consequently what the hon. minister thought was a reasonable demand on the part of the town of Steelton before the 8th of June last, he now utterly ignores, and finds it necessary instead to benefit the town of Glencoe, and in this way help his supporter, the hon. member for West Middlesex, to keep his seat.

Now, I wish to say to the Minister of Public Works that his unctuous utterances with regard to retrenchment will not satisfy the people of Canada that he has done, or is endeavouring to do, that which is absolutely square in the expenditure of these appropriations. Where he does see the necessity for retrenchment—where he finds his government crippled by a falling revenue—he must see that the only way to win the public confidence is to show the people that he is capable of presiding over his great department with fairness and impartiality, which he should exercise absolutely without regard to political exigencies, and taking account only of the public demands and necessities. In that case, the town, irrespective of the political complexion of the member from the district, should receive the expenditure of public money according to the needs of the public service. At the risk of taking up the time of the committee, I think I am entitled to more reasonable and fair answers than the hon. gentleman has so far given. I would like the hon. gentleman to say whether or not he subscribes to the proposition I put, that, when he finds himself in the pathetic position in which he is, and in which he has asked for the sympathy of the House and of the whole country—the position of not being able to supply all the public works he led the people to expect—does he not think that he should supply first those of greater necessity? And let him then say, if he can, having regard not only to his utterances, but to his correspondence, that he would prefer, from the point of view of the public convenience, public interest and public demand, to give that appropriation to the village of Glencoe instead of to the town of Steelton.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Stripping his question of verbiage, will the hon. gentleman be good enough to repeat it?

Mr. BOYCE. Apparently, from being unctuous, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) thinks he can get over the question by being jocular. I have stated my proposition three times. But perhaps he wants time to think over his answer. I ask the hon. gentleman this: Whether, when, as he has stated, he is called upon to retrench and as he calls upon the members who follow him to accept retrenchment, he does not think he should make curtailments where expenditures are less needed in the public interest rather than where they are more needed in the public interest?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am glad to answer the hon. gentleman's question. I think he refers to certain representations which were made to me with regard to the town of Steelton. First, I made no promise to the representatives of the town of Steelton that I would place in the estimates an amount for a public building there. They made very strong representations to me.

Mr. BOYCE. That is not answering my question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to explain this before proceeding further.

Mr. BOYCE. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Pugsley) pardon me if I interrupt? Does he mean to say that he never made representations that there would be an amount in the estimates for the construction of a public building at Steelton?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If the hon. gentleman says I made such representations, no doubt he is correct. I would like him to produce the letter—does he say they were made in a letter?

Mr. BOYCE. I have asked the hon. gentleman a question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not recall at present having made such representations. If my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) says I did make them, I should feel bound to accept his statement as a member of this House. All that I can recall to mind with regard to Steelton is that I was waited upon by certain gentlemen who urged very strongly the claims of the town in regard to better postal accommodation in the erection of a public building. I was much impressed with their claims, and my recollection is that I told these gentlemen that I would take the matter into my careful consideration. I think that is as far as I went. If the hon. gentleman has a letter containing anything stronger I should be obliged if he will produce it. In the last session of parliament a large number of buildings were provided for. The claims of various towns and cities were pressed upon my attention. No doubt Steelton was not provided for because it was felt that we could not ask for further appropriations. No doubt its claim stood over for full consideration later on. I have no doubt that such is the case. Last session we all hoped that the falling off in the public revenues would be but temporary. For my part, I did not dream that there would be such a falling off during the present fiscal year as there has been, that during the eleven months of the present fiscal year there would be a falling off of $10,000,000 or $12,000,000. When, in December last, we were called upon to determine what retrenchments we would bring into effect, as I stated yesterday, and, I think, repeated to-day, we drew the line sharply between those public works in regard to which tenders had not been called for and those in regard to which tenders had been called for before this decision was arrived at. Glencoe was one of those in which tenders had been called for. Parliament had voted the money, and it was up to me to proceed according to the authority of parliament and engage in the work. I could not, in December last, choose as between Steelton and Glencoe, because there was no appropriation for a public building at Steelton. I think that is the best answer I can give my hon. friend, further than to say that, as a general rule, there is no doubt that the cities and towns having a larger population are more entitled to public buildings than those of a small population. But that rule cannot always prevail. In some towns and cities considerable federal expenditures have been made for other purposes than public buildings. It may be that wharfs have been constructed, or harbours have been dredged. In others the construction of a public building would involve the only federal expenditure likely to be made there. As a general proposition, the larger towns are entitled to the first consideration. But it must be borne in mind also that the places in regard to which appropriations were made were pressed very strongly upon my attention by the members of parliament. They came to confer with me and to present the claims of the towns situated in their constituencies. I cannot recall that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) pressed the claims of Steelton on my attention on more than one occasion. He may have done so, but I do not recollect it. And hon. members on the other side were rather disposed to resent an appropriation for public buildings in different constituencies and to suggest that the construction of a public building was an attempt to bribe the constituency. It may have been—I do not say that I recall that it was—my tender solicitude for my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) that prevented me looking towards his constituency, fearing that it would be represented as an unworthy attempt to bribe his constituency and prevent his election as a member of this House.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to devote this $8,000,000, which he is retrenching this year from the public expenditure, to the erection of new buildings and new wharfs instead of those that were promised last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I made a statement on this subject last evening, perhaps the hon. member was not present. I said that when these estimates were submitted to parliament they were submitted in good faith, and in the belief that these various works which were provided for were necessary in the public interest. In leaving the amounts out of the estimates this year we had not the slightest idea of abandoning those works, but simply of postponing them for a short period. Speaking as a general rule, I would say that the works which were provided for by parliament last session, should I be the Minister of Public Works next session and the revenues are in a good condition, as we expect them to be, I would regard it as my duty to propose that provision should be made for the various works which were provided for at the last session, but which are not provided for in the estimates of the present session.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Is it the policy of the minister to grant post offices costing about $27,000 to places where the population is only 1,000 or so, as he did in Glencoe?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope to get the expenses for public buildings in small towns cut down to a sum considerably below that.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister has stated that last December he came to the conclusion that it would be necessary to retrench the expenditure to the extent of some $8,000,000. To-night he has gone a little further and says that it was by reason of certain representations made to him by the Minister of Finance. Now, the Minister of Finance, speaking in July last, said that he expected a continuous fall in the revenue for some time to come, and that for the following year the people would have to face a falling revenue. Therefore, the conditions existed in July, and even prior to July, which would necessitate retrenchment. Now I want to ask the Minister of Public Works whether anything in the nature of a collapse or an accident happened to the finances of this country in the fall or immediately prior to that date in December when this government decided on this retrenchment, or was it simply a continuous fall in the revenue such as was predicted by the Minister of Finance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can say to my hon. friend that so far as I am concerned, speaking as the Minister of Public Works, I did not expect so large a falling off in the revenue as has taken place. I hope that the turn has come now.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I asked if anything had taken place in the nature of a collapse or an accident?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister will remember that when asked in this House last July where he would procure the money with which to erect all these public buildings that he was dangling before the electors, he made reply that there was no need for concern on that point; his information was to the effect that there was no need at all for concern. In volume 7 of last year's 'Hansard,' page 13330, my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) asked this question:

How does the hon. gentleman propose to get all the money to pay for these public buildings? I notice that the revenue is falling off at the rate of a million a month.

Mr. PUGSLEY—My information is that we need not have any fear on that score; but if by any accident the money is not available, the work will not go on.

Now the minister assures us that there has been no accident, simply the falling off in revenue that was anticipated. In July that same condition of affairs existed, and was pronounced by the Finance Minister as likely to continue for many months to come, so that the country has no reasonable explanation why the retrenchmet was made in December. Now, the attack of the opposition is directed, not so much against the fact that appropriations have been made, or that retrenchment has been adopted, it is against this state of affairs, that two or three months before the elections last year the minister proposed various appropriations of money throughout the country, and led the country to believe that these buildings would actually be erected, and by reason of those appropriations which he dangled before the electors, the government was able to carry the country. The minister assures us now that no intent existed in his mind, or on the part of the government, of carrying constituencies by those means. I wonder with what anguish of soul the minister must have witnessed his own candidates in the last election so utterly and so basely misrepresenting the motives of the government throughout this country when they appealed to the electors to vote for the candidates of the government because of these very appropriations that had been promised. Will the minister deny that either he or other ministers of the crown stood on platforms in this country and faced wide streamers requesting electors to vote for the Liberal candidate and a post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never heard of such a thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister could not hear the streamers but he might see them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never saw them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Will the minister deny that some of his colleagues in the cabinet did not speak in the presence of streamers of that kind, without protest and without correction and without any effort on their part to represent those pure motives of the government so innocently portrayed by the Minister of Public Works to-night. It may possibly be that the government has acted fairly between the parties in the matter of appropriations for buildings that have been gone on with and those which have not, but the minister knows and the country knows that the government very discretely allowed two months to elapse between the date of the elections and the date of this determination, so that they had two whole months within which to adjust the bounty of the government to met the exigencies arising from the vote of October

26. In the third place, I would ask the minister to submit to the committee a list of the advertisements that were published for the first time between the 26th of October and the present date.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Do I understand that the minister will not answer my other two propositions ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have answered them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the minister thinks that he has said anything which would lead one who desires frankness, to think that he has reconciled his reply to the hon. member for Peel on July 16, 1908, with his statement to the House to-night, I am afraid he is greatly mistaken. It will not satisfy me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am very sorry.

Mr. MEIGHEN. If the minister would be kind enough to come to my constituency next election I will show him it will not satisfy the people there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have heard something similar to that before.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The minister declines to answer my first two propositions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I don't want to be discourteous to the hon. gentleman but I have answered them.

Mr. MEIGHEN. No one on this side of the House complains of the discourtesy of the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you mean to complain of my want of courtesy.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Not at all, but we are gradually coming to the conclusion that the minister is a very astute politician.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that a compliment or otherwise.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understand that the minister will bring down a list of all the advertisements that were actually published after the 26th of October, with the amount opposite each one of the appropriations for this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Kingston—Royal Military College—Additional accommodation, $57,000.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is that for ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quarters for the subordinate staff.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The departmental report of the minister says "Servants Quarters." Here, the government has built sixteen, five room cottages at a cost of $77,000. Is not that extravagant ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Public tenders were called and the work was awarded to the lowest tender. I cannot believe that the price was excessive because the competition was quite keen. I think there are more than five rooms in each dwelling.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Your own departmental report says there are five rooms in each dwelling. These servants who are drawing from seventy-five cents to $1.25 per day are supplied with houses worth $5,000 or $6,000. There are a great many workingmen in this country who would like to be treated as well as that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am free to say that I never was thoroughly satisfied that the expenditure for these buildings ought to have been so large as it is, but the plans and specifications were prepared before I became Minister of Public Works. The requisition was made upon us by the Militia Department for these quarters. They are not for what might be called servants but for the subordinate staff; the instructors and teachers in connection with the military college and school. The plans do provide for quite nice dwelling houses, and I am rather inclined to think that it would have been better had plans of a more simple design been prepared. I cannot but believe that the cost of these buildings built as they are is reasonable. I remember I had some hesitation in regard to the matter and I provided that half of them should be erected last year and half during the present year. There is no way to get out of it; the buildings are completed and this amount is to pay the balance. It may be, as I have said, that if the design of the buildings had been more simple, a few thousand dollars might have been saved; but we have good apartments for the staff, the buildings are substantially constructed, and we have received good value for what we have paid.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If my hon. friend will allow me, I will read the description of these buildings in the report of the Department of Public Works, at page 22:

On January 15, 1908, a contract was entered into for the construction of two buildings, each 167 feet long by 33 feet broad, placed on two opposite sides of a square, facing outwards, with yards in rear; each series separated by a lane which bisects the square.

Each block consists of eight dwellings of two stories in brick with stone dressings and on a stone basement.

The division walls, the partitions in basement, the lining of basement walls and the chimneys are of brick; the partitions, floors and stairs of first and second stories and the roof are of wood; the floor of basement and verandahs in rear are of concrete, and the front entrance steps are of stone.

Each dwelling has, in basement, a cellar, a laundry and a store-room; on the ground floor a living room, a kitchen, an entrance hall, a vestibule, a stairway hall and a verandah, and, on the first floor, two bed-rooms and bath-room.

These are the rooms of an ordinary everyday five-roomed or six-roomed cottage, which could have been built, I should judge, from my knowledge of building, for about $1,500 apiece; and yet we find that the minister has paid the sum of $55,000 last year and $57,000 this year for these paltry terraces. If there were modern fortifications hidden away in the basement, or something of that kind, we could understand the item; but no one who knows anything about the ordinary building trade would justify such an enormous expenditure for two small blocks of five-roomed cottages. I would like to have some more satisfactory explanation of this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. All I can say to my hon. friend is that the requisition was made by the Militia Department and that plans were prepared by the chief architect's department. When my hon. friend says that these buildings could be erected at a cost of $1,500 for each dwelling, my answer is a perfect answer—that tenders were called for by public advertisement widely circulated in the various newspapers, that four tenders were received, and that the lowest was $77,939 and the highest $85,000, for sixteen dwellings in two terraces, eight dwellings in each.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Why do you ask for $112,000 if the buildings cost only $77,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is for the buildings alone. Heating, boilers, electric wiring, fixtures, furnishings, sidewalks, &c., are in addition.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the hon. minister might gracefully accede to our request to let the item stand, and bring down the plans and tenders. I supposed, from the statement of the minister as to the cost of these buildings, that they must have been trimmed inside with marble, the walls frescoed, and supplied with electric chandeliers and all modern improvements; but now I find that the improvements are extra.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection at all to bringing down the plans and specifications and the tenders for the information of the committee. The item may stand.

Mr. PRICE. May I ask where these sixteen servants were housed before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are members of the subordinate staff, part of the permanent force. They were in Toronto, and were brought from there to Kingston, as I am informed.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I live in Toronto and have a knowledge of military matters there, and I never heard anything of that kind in regard to the Toronto garrison.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that was the statement of the Minister of Militia last year.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Why should the servants be in Toronto while those they were serving were in Kingston?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume they must have been doing the work in Toronto.

Mr. GEO. GORDON (Nipissing). I am glad to find the hon. minister so candid and frank in stating his policy, and I am glad that that policy is that public buildings should only be erected in places where the revenue is overflowing and where such facilities are most urgently required. The reason I say that is because in the district of Nipissing foundations have been laid for five of the greatest cities that we shall perhaps have in the Dominion of Canada and they conform in every respect to the condition stated by the minister in regard to both population and revenue. The first of these young cities is Sudbury. I need not mention its population, because it is increasing every day; but I might mention that it has a suburb with a population of over 3,000 inhabitants and one of the greatest nickel works in the world. Yet Sudbury has not a public building fit for any person to go into. A friend of mine remarked not long ago that he had gone into the post office and could not turn around to come out, but had to back out. The next young city is Sturgeon Falls, the population of which is probably greater than that of any of the towns to which public buildings have been given to-night, with the exception of the cities. It has a very large water-power and immense paper mills and a fine agricultural country around it. Then, going up to Cobalt, we have there the foundation of one of the largest cities that Canada will perhaps ever see. If the hon. minister has not already been there, and would go up with me and see silver being practically shovelled into cars, he would I am sure come to the conclusion that a place which possesses such wealth should not be left with the insignificant little shanty it has for the people to do their public business in. Going north a little further, we have another young city called Haileybury, which is in the mining country and is doing an immense business, and where the revenue and population are up to the requirements of the minister. Right within three miles, we have the town of New Liskeard, which is also in the same class and in the midst of a very important agricultural country; and I should judge, from the policy the minister tells us he intends following with regard to public buildings, that he will see the propriety of giving to each of these places a suitable public building.

Mr. PRICE. I understand the Minister of Public Works has stated that these houses will cost $87,000. I notice that a vote was asked last year for $55,000 and that we are now asked to vote another $57,000, making $112,000 for these 16 houses or $7,000 a piece. Is that correct?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the estimate now.

Mr. PRICE. Who are to occupy them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The subordinate staff.

Mr. PRICE. I presume that means the sergeants and officers' servants?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Principally the instructors.

Mr. PRICE. The sergeant-major and sergeants—how many?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Sixteen.

Mr. PRICE. And these subordinate instructors are to have houses built for them at a cost of $7,000 a piece. I call that disgraceful and ridiculous. I am surprised that the Minister of Public Works, after protesting this evening his desire to take the greatest care in expending the public money, should sanction an expenditure of this sort. I am a new member, this is my first session in parliament, and possibly I am more surprised than I will be later on that such utterly absurd and extravagant expenditure should be allowed by any minister of this government.

Kingston—Royal Military College—Barrack accommodation for stables, $15,000.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). I would like to point out to the minister that Kingston is a fortress which has existed for years and has accommodation for these men. When the fortress was first built, accommodation was provided for some 3,000 or 4,000 men, and I cannot understand why we should require to spend $15,000 for stables. How many horses will have to be lodged in these stables?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is 35 feet by 41 feet and two and a half stories high.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What is the one and a half story on the top floor for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot say at present. Public tenders were invited and it is expected that $15,000 will be required to pay the balance due on the contract and also for the necessary fittings and furnishings.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How many horses will the stable accommodate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the absence of the Minister of Militia, I cannot give the information.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The minister has had the plans and his staff should know. It is he who is asking for the money and not the Minister of Militia.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I said before recess, I am taking up the Ontario items without having the full details, as the gentleman who prepares them is not quite ready. By the indulgence of the committee I was allowed to go on. I am willing to allow this item to stand and the Kingston veterinary hospital and will later give all the information.

Leamington—Public Building, $23,000.

Mr. BOYCE. When were representations made as to the necessity for this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a petition in 1907 urging that there should be a public building there.

Markham—Public Building, $10,000.

Mr. WALLACE. When were tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The date of the contract is May 20, 1908.

Mr. WALLACE. What was the cost of advertising? I see that $633 was the amount voted for advertising in the case at Glencoe.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total amount of legal expenditure, printing and advertising was $133.21.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the population of Markham?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 5,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. Not at all, it is only about 1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The statement given me says 5,000. It is probably an error of the typewriter.

Mr. WALLACE. When were the plans prepared? And is the minister aware that in December, 1907, the plans for that public building were exhibited throughout that constituency by Mr. Archie Campbell, who then represented it? Did he do this by the authority of the Minister of Public Works or on his own responsibility? He had the plans of the post office in 1907.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That might be.

Mr. WALLACE. Was that done as a bribe by Mr. Campbell and with the authority of the Minister of Public Works?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know nothing about it.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the total cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The original contract for the building was $6,900. Taking the cost of the site, the heating, fittings, including letter-boxes, sidewalks, &c., the total cost was between $15,000 and $16,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection to the expenditure, but only to the way it was brought about, by Mr. Archie Campbell going into the constituency after he had resigned from this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He may have been consulting some of the people——

Mr. WALLACE. Was he authorized by the minister to go there in December, 1907, with a plan of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Never heard of it.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there to be a clock in this post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BLAIN. While we are on that question, I would direct the minister's attention to the fact that special men are employed to look after these clocks where they have been put in. For example, at Ingersoll we paid for the care of the clock for one year $25. In London, we pay $50. And it appears that we paid for the same gentleman who takes care of the clock, for cleaning and repairing, $100, besides the year's salary. In Hamilton, Thomas Lee is paid $65 per annum for the care of clock. Each of these buildings has a caretaker at a reasonable salary. As these are eight-day clocks, could not the caretaker wind them up without employing a special man at $50 or $60 a year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the hon. gentleman is misinformed as to the salaries of the caretakers. The salaries paid those who take care of these small buildings amount to $300 or $400, and nobody would say that was a large salary. We have found it necessary to make payments to persons to look after the clocks in these buildings, and the salaries range from $25 to $50, as a rule. The clocks require careful looking after.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Would it not be better to increase the salary of the caretaker and have him spend ten minutes every week in winding the clock?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In some cases we do allow the caretaker an extra amount for his services. I have in mind now such a case. No doubt, it is desirable, where the caretaker is able to do it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Where a public building has been erected, I do not think it is asking too much of the municipality to bear the expense of taking care of it.

Mr. BEATTIE. The minister is right. The caretaker, as a rule, is not competent to wind the clock. The clock has to be wound and cared for by a practical clockmaker. In London, since the man who had it in charge refused to wind it, the clock has been allowed to stop. There is no use in the government putting in good clocks and not looking after them, and to pay a man $50 is not too much for that service. I have listened to a good deal of talk on this side of the House this evening. Part of it was with regard to Glencoe. Glencoe is in Middlesex county, which is one of the very best counties in this country, and it is the one I have the honour to live in. One hon. member said that Glencoe had only one railway. I did not want to contradict him, but, as a matter of fact, they have the Grand Trunk, the Wabash and also the Canadian Pacific Railway. Glencoe is a smart little town in one of the best districts in Ontario. Glencoe is deserving of a post office. And I understand it is to have the military building also in connection?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. member who made reference to Glencoe is not in his seat. But the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) must not forget that the minister has already stated that the policy of the government is, in many towns, to employ the caretaker and increase his salary by a few dollars.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said that was done in a few cases where the caretaker was competent.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman said it required a competent clockmaker.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the kind of man we do employ.

Mr. BLAIN. As to the salaries of caretakers, I do not wish to say they are excessive, but, in the average town of 3,000 or 4,000 population, the caretaker of the public building is paid $500 a year. In my own town, for instance, the salary is $500, with free house, free heating, free lighting and some other things I could mention. And the caretaker took an active part in the elections.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How large a town is it?

Mr. BLAIN. About 4,000 people.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the smaller towns, the salary is from $300 to $400.

Mr. BLAIN. I have a list before me, and if the hon. gentleman will look at it, he will see that the figures are correct. I am directing attention to this one case. The caretaker of this place is an active politician, so active that he drove around and collected the ballot-boxes in my county after the election was over.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. Did not they store the boxes in the post office?

Mr. BLAIN. They occupied a room in the post office—that is correct. But that has nothing to do with the caretaker. I did not assume that his duties were to drive to every polling subdivision in the county to gather up the ballot-boxes. If it is so, we would all like to know it. The policy of the government has been stated to be, in accordance with the resolution of this House, that these employees may vote, but are not to take an active part in the elections. May I ask the minister, on the clock question, whether it is the policy of the government to engage competent watchmakers to wind up these clocks?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that is the policy. I had in my mind the case of Moncton, where the caretaker has been engaged to do that work. I think there are other places where the same thing is done. But the general rule is to employ practical jewellers.

Ottawa—Building for testing of fuel by Department of Mines, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This building is for the purpose of testing the commercial value of peat for producing gas. The machinery is being brought from the old country, and is being installed under the direction of Dr. Haanel. A requisition has been made upon my department by the Minister of Mines for the erection of this building. We have purchased a site, and we now ask for $15,000 for the purpose of completing the building. Of this $15,000, $8,000 is a revote.

Mr. PERLEY. Where is the building to be put?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have bought a lot of land, about half an acre, on Concession street, in the southwestern part of the city.

Mr. PERLEY. I suppose that when a demand is made on the Department of Public Works by another department the minister has nothing to say, but he must grant the request.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could refuse, as Minister of Public Works, but the hon. gentleman will see that it is my duty to pay the greatest respect to a requisition from another department. I wish to reply to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) with regard to these caretakers. In Amherst we pay $400, in Antigonish $400, in Annapolis 400, in Arichat $150, in Baddeck $250, in Canso, $350, in Dartmouth, $250. Another is $400, another $50.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any higher than $400?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some are as high as $500, in two or three instances they run up to $700.

Mr. BLAIN. Where a salary of $400 is paid, does that include a house, heating and lighting?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. PERLEY. How much does the minister expect this new building for testing peat will cost, including everything?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect $15,000 will cover the entire expense, not including machinery.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I was going to suggest to the minister to let this item stand. I would like to discuss it at some length, but the hour is getting late, and I have to leave at 11 o'clock. I wanted to enter my protest against this expenditure being made at all, because it is a well known fact that in Europe people have been using peat successfully as fuel, and to produce gas, for the last twenty years. There is nothing new at all in this suggestion of the director of the Bureau of Mines. There is no need for this government to be paying out good money to repeat experiments that have been going on in Europe for years. I would like to have information as to what the government wishes to do in this matter, how they are going to expend the money; I would like full details.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This question could more properly be discussed when we come to the estimates of the Minister of Mines. The hon. gentleman will then be afforded full opportunity.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There are 500 gas producing plants now at work in Canada. I do not wish to let the item go through without full discussion. I think the government should strike that item out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are committed to this. We have bought the property, and we must ask the item to pass.

Mr. PERLEY. It seems to me my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has a perfect right to ask that this item be allowed to stand if he objects to it, and wishes to discuss it later. Surely that is what this committee is for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman can go right on and discuss it now if he wishes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I am asking for some information.

Mr. PERLEY. If the hon. gentleman requires information about this matter, surely he is entitled to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Parliament has already expressed its approval of this enterprise last session, without a dissenting voice. The land has actually been purchased, the machinery has actually been purchased, and I presume it is now in Ottawa ready to be placed in the building. Therefore my hon. friend must see that no matter what might be his persuasive powers, I would have to ask this committee to pass the vote because we are already committed to it. I would again suggest to my hon. friend that he can discuss this question when the estimates of the Minister of Mines are taken up, or he can discuss it this evening.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) asks for some information that the minister has not in his possession at the moment. I would like to know who is responsible for that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not want to be unreasonable about it. How long would my hon. friend like the item to stand?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Until Monday.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am willing.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I intended asking many questions about gas producer tanks and other things that the minister might not understand and it would be an advantage if he had all the information.

Mr. TODD. This $15,000 is for use in the testing of a system of gas peat production. The question of obtaining a cheap fuel has been a live issue in this country, especially in Ontario, for many years. Many attempts have been made to manufacture peat into fuel, and it was discovered that a German inventor has the best producer gas plant for using peat known. This government, I am glad to say, has already purchased one of these producers and this $15,000 is to erect a building for it. The machinery is all ready, and I think this will be one of the best investments that Canada has made in many years. I feel that in a year or two through these experiments we will find the means of obtaining cheap power and fuel in this northern country where we have no coal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the hon. gentleman will investigate the workings of Mr. Haanel at the head of the Mines Branch he will think that he is rather an expensive man, judging from the propositions he makes in connection with new inventions and processes, and that it might be well to allow the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) to put his numerous questions and see whether there is any wisdom in taking up this proposal. We have had some very expensive propositions of this gentleman taken up which it might be worth while discussing in this parliament.

Ottawa—Departmental Buildings—Fittings, &c., $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for fittings for the departmental offices. It is about the same as for other years. Latterly we are endeavouring to put in steel fittings which are fire proof and very much safer. This appropriation is likely to be continued until the last trumpet shall sound.

Mr. PERLEY. The fittings appear to be nearly all supplied by one or two companies. Are tenders called?

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Only two firms in Canada manufacture these goods. The chief architect made inquiry at Washington, where they have adopted these very generally, and acquainted himself with the price there, and from time to time tenders have been invited from these two companies for the different fittings. Prices have been got from them and they have been accepted where the chief architect from his experience thought they were fair and reasonable.

Ottawa—Departmental Buildings—Improvements in lavatories, plumbing, &c., $10,000.

Mr. PERLEY. Why is not this in item 138?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is rather special work.

Simcoe—Public Buildings, $20,000.

Mr. CROTHERS. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. A. McCall)has asked me to inquire as to the cost of the site and building here.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site cost $2,050. The whole lot is 80.3 feet by 102. It seems very moderate. The estimated total cost is about $38,000.

Mr. CROTHERS. Is it intended to erect a tower and put a clock in it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think not; it is not intended to do so.

Mr. CROTHERS. Why is it that the people in Nova Scotia in these little places, Amherst, Bridgewater, Guysborough and New Glasgow, all require towers and clocks, and in Ontario they do not seem to require any?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In some towns they want one class of buildings, in others a different class. The people of Simcoe desired a building of a classic design; it is one story building with cut stone trimmings, and they did not ask for a tower.

Mr. CROTHERS. Is it the policy of the minister to erect these buildings in whatever style some people in a town suggest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a rule we confer with the member representing the constituency and with the leading men who take sufficient interest to come to Ottawa to make representations. We are glad to receive suggestions from any respectable citizen. Of course where we have a large lot and the building can be set back from the street it may be desirable to adopt a different design from that which would be adopted if the building were built close up to the sidewalk. All these things must be taken into consideration.

Mr. CROTHERS. I dont see why you require a clock and a tower in one place and why you do not in another

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you ask for a clock on this building ?

Mr. CROTHERS. Can you tell me what person in Simcoe suggested there should not be a tower and clock on this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Do you complain there is no clock ?

Mr. CROTHERS. I am asking you the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I don't know.

Whitby—Public Buildings, $28,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How much did the site cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $5,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Is not that a high price for a lot in a small town like Whitby ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lot is exceedingly well situated with a frontage on one street of sixty-five feet and on another of 150 feet. The inspector made a very careful inquiry and interviewed citizens on both sides of politics and his information was that $5,000 was a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. WRIGHT. What will be the total cost of the Whitby building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $33,000 estimated.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister bring down a list of the newspapers in which an advertisement was inserted for the buildings in the towns of Welland, Whitby, and Simcoe, with the amount paid to each paper ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall.

Mr. BLAIN. Would he also state what are the politics of each paper.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will leave that for you to judge.

Some resolutions reported.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Part O of the Auditor General's Report. —Mr. Fielding.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 22, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

WIRELESS TELEGRAPHY ON SHIPS.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 74) respecing wireless telegraphy on ships.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). Explain.

Mr. LEWIS. The Bill is very simple, and provides that ships of over 500 tons carrying passengers, shall have a wireless telegraph apparatus on board, and an officer who can manage it, and a freight ship of over 1,200 tons shall be similarly equipped. Bill applies to sea-going and coasting vessels registered in Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ASIATIC EXCLUSION—FALSIFICATION OF A TELEGRAM.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I rise to a matter of privilege that I have already mentioned to this House. I promised the House that if any further information came to me from the 'Colonist' newspaper of British Columbia, touching the alteration of a telegram, sent by me to that paper on the 24th of October last, I would communicate it to the House. The following document has been sent to me by the management of the 'Colonist,' to whom apparently it has been delivered by the Bishop of British Columbia. It reads as follows:

To whom it may concern,—

After hearing a full statement in the nature of a confession from the man who altered a telegram sent to this city by Mr. R. L. Borden, so that the telegram was read to the public and published on a basis of untruth, I have been requested by this man to make public the fact that this telegram was handed to him by the telegraph editor of the 'Colonist' to be delivered at a public meeting;

That instead of going directly to the meeting he went into an office, copied out the telegram as altered by him, and destroyed the original, and had this altered telegram sent to the meeting, passed on to the platform where it came into the hands of those in charge of the meeting, and was read to the public and published.

The man guilty of the act had no confederate or confidant. No one knew of his act, or had any reason for suspecting him, and the only reason for making this public is to remove all suspicion from the management of the 'Colonist' newspaper and from members of the executive of the Conservative party, at whose meeting the telegram was read. It was an individual act arising from misguided political zeal, and not due to any incitement or persuasion.

W. W. COLUMBIA.

February 5, 1909.

CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES RE FISHERIES.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). I desire to ask the government when the proposed convention between the United States and Canada respecting a reference to the Hague tribunal, will be laid on the table. I understand it has been approved by the United States Senate.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I have no information to give my hon. friend. It will have to pass through the usual process, and go through the foreign office before we receive it.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call the attention of the ministers to the fact that the Public Works orders in council and the Interior Department orders as to increase of pay to civil servants, have not yet been brought down, and that a similar request which was put in the form of an order for a return of all the other departments has not been honoured. I hope the Secretary of State will get after his colleagues, and have that information brought down.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State). Has my hon. friend inspected the last return that was handed in ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, all that have been handed down. The Postmaster General still remains delinquent.

Mr. MURPHY. The Postmaster General has supplied a supplementary.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). I laid a statement on the table the other day.

Mr. FOSTER. I expected to get these through the records office. They have not come there.

POSTAL FACILITIES AT GOW GANDA.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to ask the Postmaster General what is being done with reference to postal facilities in northern Ontario, in what is called the Gow Ganda region. I think the subject has been mentioned before, and I only mention it now because I have been requested to do so by a gentleman who is interested in that region, and who says that post office facilities are very much needed. I have no doubt it has already engaged the attention of the Postmaster General.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). Yes, it has been engaging the attention of the department for several weeks. The absence of roads to Gow Ganda has delayed the formal appointment of a postmaster and the establishment of a post office. But I hope to be able in a very few days to inform my hon. friend that the postal facilities have reached Gow Ganda.

QUESTIONS.

CARILLON AND GRENVILLE CANALS.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. What was the average number of men employed in every capacity in the working, maintenance and repairs of the Carillon and Grenville canals during each of the following months: July and August, 1906 and 1908, September and October, 1907 and 1908?

2. What was the total outlay for wages and salaries, and also the total expenditure of every kind in connection with the said canal during each of those months?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). If my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) will make this a motion for a return I will have it brought down without delay.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a motion for a return.

INTEREST AND SAVINGS BANK DEPOSITS.

Mr. T. CHISHOLM asked:

Is it the intention of the government to increase the interest on the money deposited by the Canadian people in the Government Savings Bank until said interest will be equal to that paid by the government to others?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I had intended dealing with this question in the Budget Speech, but as the honourable gentleman has put the question, I shall state at once the view of the government. The question implied, I think, a misapprehension as to the actual state of affairs. The government does not borrow any money from others on the conditions which apply in the case of savings bank deposits. Therefore there can be no fair comparison between the two classes of transactions. The 3 per cent paid to depositors does not represent the full cost of the money to the government. Something must be added for cost of management, and account must be taken of interest on the gold reserve which the government holds against savings bank deposits. The rate paid by the government to others varies from time to time, being sometimes above the savings bank rate and sometimes below it. It is not the intention of the government to increase the rate of interest on savings bank deposits, which are practically money on call. But the government is arranging that any depositors who wish to do so may convert their deposits into Dominion stock bearing interest at a higher rate. I may refer to the matter in the Budget Speech.

PURCHASE OF WOOD ALCOHOL.

Mr. MILLER asked:

1. What number of gallons of wood alcohol did the government purchase during the last fiscal year, from whom, and at what prices?

2. What percentage of wood alcohol does the Department of Inland Revenue use with grain alcohol in the manufacture of denatured alcohol and sold by the department for commercial and other purposes?

3. What is the actual cost per gallon to the department for the manufacture of denatured alcohol, in addition to the cost of the material?

4. What prices did the Department of Inland Revenue pay for grain alcohol during the last fiscal year?

Hon. W. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. 20,891·89 proof gallons—12,405·37 standard gallons at $1.29 per standard gallon. Bought from A. D. Gall, Montreal.

2. In the manufacture of a special grade, supplied to hospitals, 10 per cent. In the manufacture of grade No. 1, supplied to varnish manufacturers and other persons engaged in the mechanical arts, 25 per cent. In the manufacture of grade No. 1, when containing benzine, 10 per cent and 1 per cent of benzine. In the manufacture of grade No. 2, 10 per cent; but in this case it contains a large percentage of aldahydes and other impurities.

3. 14½ cents per proof gallon.

4. 25 cents per proof gallon, or about 41 cents per standard gallon.

DREDGING AT INDIAN POINT, MAQUAPIT LAKE, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. CROCKET asked:

1. What was the total cost of the dredging done at Indian Point, Maquapit Lake, New Brunswick, last summer and fall?

2. Who was the contractor and what was the contract price per cubic yard?

3. Did the Department of Public Works have an estimate before letting the contract of the cost of the work? If so, what was the estimated quantity of material to be removed and what was the estimated cost per cubic yard?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Paid contractors..	$48,247 68
Paid inspector..	528 96
Total expenditure..	$48,776 64

2. (a) The Maritime Dredging Company.

Scow measurement—
Rock or boulders exceeding 2 cubic yards, $17.00.
Other materials, 50 cents.

Material cast over—
Rock or boulders exceeding 2 cubic yards, $19.00.
Other materials, 50 cents.

3. (a) Yes; (b) 65,385 cubic yards in situ; (c) No estimated cost per yard, as work was to be let by public tender.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. How many miles of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway are completed and in operation?

2. What amount has been paid to or received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company out of the proceeds of bonds guaranteed by the government in respect of such mileage so completed and now in operation?

3. What amount has been paid to or received by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company out of the proceeds of bonds guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company in respect of such mileage so completed and now in operation?

4. What was the average cost per mile of the mileage so completed and in operation?

5. What was the net price received for the bonds mentioned in the second and third paragraphs respectively of this question?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). In reply to this question, my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) will remember that a few days ago I gave an answer to No. 1 which has disappeared from the Order Paper. I wish to correct that answer and enlarge it as follows:

1. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company are operating under construction that part of the line from Winnipeg to Wainwright, a distance 667 miles, but no part of the western division has been finally passed by the government engineer as completed.

2. The government has paid out of the proceeds of the 3 per cent government guaranteed bonds on account of the prairie section the sum of $10,335,482.92.

3. The proceeds of the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company on account of the prairie section known as 'series A' and which were authorized to be issued to the amount of £2,100,000 par value, are exhausted.

4 Answered by No. 1.

5. (a) Government guaranteed 3 per cent bonds, 92½ per cent; (b) Grand Trunk Pacific 'series A' 4 per cent bonds: £646,000 at 95 per cent; £454,000 at 90¾ per cent.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BONDS.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What amount of bonds has the government guaranteed in respect of the construction of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway?

2. What amount of such bonds has been actually sold or issued?

3. At what net price were such bonds sold or issued?

4. What are the net proceeds of such sale or issue?

5. How and for what purpose and to what amount have such proceeds been used or disposed of?

6. What amount of bonds has the Grand Trunk Railway Company guaranteed in respect of the construction of the western division of the National Transcontinental Railway?

7. What amount of such bonds has been actually sold or issued?

8. At what net price were such bonds sold or issued?

9. What are the net proceeds of such sale or issue?

10. How and for what purpose and to what amount have such proceeds been used or disposed of?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. £3,200,000.

2. All.

3. 92½ per cent.

4. $14,385,600.

5. The sum of $10,335,482.92 has been paid on account of work done on the prairie section; $2,150,852.30 on account of the mountain section; and the balance, $1,899,264.78, is deposited in bank to the credit of the Receiver General.

6. In respect of the prairie section 'series A' bonds to the amount of £2,100,000, and in respect of the mountain section 'series B' bonds to the amount of £1,354,000.

Certain debenture equipment stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company has also been guaranteed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

7. Prairie section, series A bonds, all.

Mountain section, series B bonds, £1,354,000.

8. Series A, £1,646,000 at 95 per cent, and £454,000 at 90¾ per cent.

Series B, £1,354,000 at 90¾ per cent.

9. Series A, £1,975,705.

Series B, £1,228,755.

10. The whole of the proceeds of the 'series A' bonds, viz.: £1,975,705 have been expended in connection with the construction of the prairie section.

The sum of £128,662 out of the proceeds of the 'series B' bonds has been expended in connection with the construction of the mountain section.

DETECTIVE H. A. JUDGE.

Mr. BEATTIE asked:

1. Is one H. A. Judge, a detective, still in the employ of the government?

2. When was he employed by the government, where did he come from, what was his salary and the nature of his duties?

3. Was the said Judge convicted of an offence under the Indian Act in supplying liquors to Indians on the Muncey reserve?

4. If so, who were the convicting magistrates and what was the punishment imposed?

5. Is there a right of appeal from any such conviction? If so, did the accused avail himself of it?

6. Was the said Judge afterwards committed to prison? If so, how long after conviction? If any, what was the delay?

7. Was the said Judge released from prison? If so, when and upon what grounds?

8. Is it the intention of the department to pay the cost of the prosecution and the share of the fine imposed, payable to the prosecutor?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. No.

2. Judge was never employed by the government. In August last the Department of Indian Affairs had reason to believe that the Indians of the Caradoc and Oneida reserves were being freely supplied with intoxicating liquors and authorized a detective agency in Toronto known as The International Detective Bureau to make investigation and endeavour to ascertain the guilty parties. The department is informed that one A. J. Judge was sent by the International Detective Bureau to do this work, but has no knowledge where Judge came from or what was his salary.

3. On complaint of one of the Indians, Judge was convicted on two charges of bringing and supplying intoxicating liquor into the Oneida Indian reserve.

4. W. H. Chittick and John Hodgins. $50 fine and costs on one charge; $100 fine and costs on a second charge and in default six months' imprisonment with hard labour in each case.

5. (a) Yes. (b) No.

6 and 7. The department is not informed, but payment of the fines and costs were remitted.

8. No.

SOULANGES CANAL—WHARFS AT ST. ZOTIQUE AND THE CEDARS.

Mr. LORTIE asked:

Referring to the wharfs at St. Zotique, in the river Beaudette, in the villages des Cedres and La Pointe aux Cascades, in the county of Soulanges,—

1. What amounts have been spent in repairing the said wharfs?

2. What is the name of the person who superintended these works in each locality, respectively, above named?

3. Who was charged with selecting the men employed on these works in each place?

4. What salary was granted to the superintendent or foreman, and what was the pay of the men?

5. During what months were these works carried on?

6. Is the government aware that these works lasted during the whole period of the last federal election, and that they were stopped exactly on the next day after the voting?

7. Is there in possession of the department a report of the operations above named, and a detailed statement of the cost of these works and the price of the materials used?

8. What is the name of the engineer who had charge of making the plans, estimates and specifications of these works?

9. If there was one, has he made a report of his operations?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1.—

St. Zotique, $3,053.31.

Cedars, wharf on Soulanges canal, $970.84.

Cedars, wharf on River St. Lawrance, $578.25.

River Beaudette, Pointe aux Cascades—No work done at either of these places.

2.—

St. Zotique—Foreman, Alfred Bissonette.

Cedars (Canal wharf)—Foreman, Trefflé Poirier.

Cedars (River wharf)—Foreman, Trefflé Poirier.

3. Resident Engineer, J. L. Michaud.

4. Wages of foremen in each case, $2.50 per day. Wages of mechanics in each case, $2.00 per day. Wages of labourers in each case, $1.50 per day.

5 and 6. St. Zotique, commenced October 1, suspended December 29, 1908. Cedars (Canal wharf), commenced September 18, ended November 28, 1908. Cedars (River wharf), commenced June 26, ended July 31, 1908.

7. Yes.

8. Resident Engineer, J. L. Michaud.

9. Yes.

COINAGE AT CANADIAN MINT.

Mr. MACDONELL—by Mr. Worthington—asked:

1. What was the last year in which Canada imported silver coinage for circulation in Canada from the Royal Mint?

2. What was the amount of such coinage?

3. From what date has the Canadian Mint been coining silver?

4. What was the total amount of silver coined at the Canadian Mint during the year 1908, and what is its capacity?

5. What is the estimated circulation of American silver in Canada at the present time?

6. When was the order in council passed for deportation of American silver, how long was it in force, and what was the reason for discontinuance?

7. What is the estimated profit to the government, having regard to the present value of silver, on the coinage of each dollar of silver circulation, making the estimate as reasonably near as possible, and having in view the issue of 5-cent, 10-cent, 25-cent, and 50-cent pieces?

8. What is the estimated profit of the American government on the present silver circulation of American coinage in Canada, making this estimate on the estimated circulation in Canada, and having regard to the present value of silver, and what would be the profit to Canada if this silver was coined at the Canadian Mint?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. 1907-8.

2. $600,000.

3. The first silver coin was struck January 2, 1908. The general striking of silver coins commenced on February 19, 1908.

4. $313,338.35. The machinery in the Mint is capable of producing 20,000,000 coins per year.

5. There is no data available upon which an estimate can be based.

6. July 6, 1905; in force until June 30, 1906. The appropriation provided to meet the expenses of deportation was exhausted, and, as it was thought the quantity then remaining in circulation was not large, no further appropriation for the purpose was taken. An item appears in the estimates now before parliament to provide for further operations of this kind.

7. Approximately 49 cents.

8. In view of the answer to No. 5 this question cannot be answered.

WINNIPEGOSIS FISH HATCHERY.

Mr. CAMPBELL—by Mr. Bradbury—asked:

1. Up to date and for all purposes, including cost of construction, supplies of all kinds, wages of all officials and men employed, fish spawn, &c., what has been the total expenditure on the Winnipegosis Fish Hatchery?

2. Were supplies for the hatchery bought by tender? If so, from whom, and who were the tenderers? If not, why not?

3. What has been accomplished for this expenditure of money?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $18,754.56.

2. Supplies were bought by tender from the General Supply Company of Canada.

The tenderers were: The General Supply Company of Canada, McKenzie, Milne Co., Sarnia. Where small quantities required, supplies were bought through the purchasing branch for the lowest prices obtainable.

3. An up to date hatchery, with all fittings, caretaker's cottage and a dock, have been constructed.

FISHERIES LICENSES, MANITOBA LAKES

Mr. CAMPBELL—by Mr. Bradbury—asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to renew the fishing privileges granted under lease on lakes Cedar, Moose, Clearwater, Cumberland and Namew?

2. Is it the intention to allow fishermen to fish in open water in Lake Winnipegosis this coming summer?

3. Is it the intention of the government to grant any special fishing privileges on Lake Winnipegosis to any firm or firms this coming summer?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Not as at present advised.

2. It is not the intention to make any change in the fishery regulations for Lake Winnipegosis this season.

LAKE WINNIPEG, INDIAN DEPARTMENT STEAMERS.

Mr. BRADBURY asked:

What steamboats had the Indian Department employed on Lake Winnipeg during the summer and fall of 1908, names of boats, from whom hired, what amount was paid for each boat, and what services were they supposed to render?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). The steamer 'Fisherman' was chartered from the Dominion Fish Company, Limited, for a period of five months and three days at a cost of $4,964.02. The company supplied the boat, crew, fuel, sleeping accommodation and board of four government officers for that time. The steamer was used for annuity payments in the Norway House agency and in connection with the removal of the St. Peter's Indians to the new reserve at Fisher river transporting supplies, &c.

LIGHTS, LAKE WINNIPEG.

Mr. BRADBURY asked:

Does the government realize the great necessity in the interest of life and property, that a light should be placed on the docks at Gimli, Hiransa and Gull harbour, Lake Winnipeg, and is it the intention of the government to furnish lights for these docks?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). This matter is receiving consideration.

Mr. BRODEUR.

CENSUS AND STATISTICS BULLETIN. FRENCH TRANSLATION.

Mr. BOYER asked: (Translation).

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER asked:

1. What sum was voted for the outside service of the Department of Agriculture in Ottawa for salaries to clerks for the fiscal year 1908-1909?

2. What was the total number of clerks employed therein on April 1, 1908, and what amount was necessary to pay their salaries for the year 1908-9?

3. What was the total amount involved in the increases granted since April 1, 1908, to these employees and also, for new appointments made thereto prior to September 1, 1908?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State):

1. No sum was especially voted for the outside service of the Department of Agriculture in Ottawa for salaries to clerks for the fiscal year 1908-9. Such salaries were paid out of the general appropriations made to the several branches in which such clerks respectively served.

2. 193, including 21 paid out of Civil Government contingencies, $206,450.

3. $8,364.50. The total amount of the annual salaries attached to appointments made between April 1, 1908, and the 1st September, 1908, is $9,600. During this interval one of such salaries was increased $200.

RAILWAY CATTLE GUARDS.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE asked :

1. Is the government aware that the railway companies have failed to erect suitable and sufficient cattle guards as required by subsection 3, of section 254 of Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 37?

2. Is the government aware that the uniform pattern of cattle guards now in use on all railways, viz: slanting slats in a frame placed on the ground, is absolutely useless for preventing cattle and other animals from getting on the railway?

3. In view of the great destruction of cattle and other animals in Canada by railways resulting from the want of suitable and sufficient cattle guards, is it the intention of the government to take proceedings before the Board of Railway Commissioners to compel the railway companies to comply with the law in respect to this matter?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals:

1. The board has no information on this point, other than special complaints have been made from time to time in regard to the failure of railway companies to supply suitable guards, and when such complaints have been made, has had the matter investigated and compelled the company to comply with the requirements of section 254 of the Railway Act.

2. The board has no special information to give in reply to the inquiry. All that subsection 3, of section 254, requires is that the cattle guards shall be suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals getting on the railway. No particular form of cattle guard has been adopted as far as the board are aware, the matter being left to the company to select whatever cattle guard it thinks best suited for the purpose, subject to the requirements of subsection 3, of section 254 of the Act.

3. The board has no answer to make to this question other than to refer to the requirements of subsection 3, section 254, of the Railway Act.

CAUGHNAWAGA-IROQUOIS INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

What returns of fine for wood stealing, and infraction of the liquor law, have been made by Indian agent John Blain, in connection with the Caughnawaga-Iroquois Indian reserve, during the years 1906, 1907 and 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Indian Agent John Blain made return of the following fines for the year 1908: $5.00 liquor fine imposed on Michael Jacob; $20.00 for stealing wood, imposed on James Taylor; no returns were made by Agent Blain for 1906 or 1907.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. What portion or portions of the Caughnawaga Indian reservation has been disposed of for church purposes, and when were the grants made respectively, and for what consideration?

2. Has title been granted by the government for the portions of land so occupied or conveyed for church purposes? If so, when and to whom?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER Minister of the Interior):

1. No Crown grants have been issued for any portion or portions of the Caughnawaga Indian reserve for church purposes.

2. Answered by No. 1.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. Is St. Nicholas Island included within the territory and limits of Caughnawaga-Iroquois Indian reserve?

2. If so, is this island still held by the government of Canada in trust for the Indians of that band?

3. If not, when, how and to whom, for what consideration and upon what terms was it disposed of, and for what reason was disposition made, and by whom?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. St. Nicholas Island is claimed by the Department of Indian Affairs as forming a portion of the Caughnawaga Indian reserve.

2. The island is still held by the government in trust for the Indians.

3. Answered by No. 2.

THE 97TH ALGOMA RIFLES.

Mr. BOYCE asked:

1. Have the regimental headquarters of the 97th Algoma rifles been removed from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury? If so, upon whose representation, for what reason, and at what date was the removal affected?

2. Is the government not aware that all the exigencies of convenience and national defence require the maintenance of the regimental headquarters of this force at Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. Yes, on the recommendation of the officer commanding the regiment and of the officer commanding the western Ontario command, and it was authorized in general orders on April 1, 1908.

2. In the selection of the location for the headquarters of the 97th regiment, it was considered that, as compared with Sault Ste. Marie, the balance of advantages was, from the points of view both of defence and convenience, in favour of Sudbury, where, it may be added, the commanding officer resides.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

Mr. NORTHRUP asked:

1. How many men are now employed in the Ross rifle factory at Quebec?

2. On what principle are the rifles now inspected, and what is the seal standard rifle, written instructions, value as weapon, &c.?

3. How many have been rejected in inspection in the past year?

4. Where are the bayonet scabbards inspected, and by whom?

5. How many, if any, have been rejected?

6. Has the government taken any steps to prevent an action or to reduce the damages in an action should one be brought by the Ross Rifle Company for the improper rejection of rifles?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1. The Ross Rifle Company state that the number of their employees is about 325 at present.

2. (a) Rifles are inspected with the aid of specifications, drawings and gauges as heretofore.

(b) The original sealed standard rifle was Mark 1; but rifles have been manufactured in conformity with a model tentatively agreed upon and known as Mark 11.

(c) The specifications.

(d) A board of expert officers has reported that the Ross rifle has features which are a positive advantage over the Lee-Enfield.

3. This information has already been furnished to parliament this session in reply to a previous inquiry by the honourable gentleman, (vide revised 'Hansard' of February 1, 1909, page 329).

4. The scabbards are inspected, so far as the leather and work thereon are concerned, by Lieutenant-Colonel Brown, inspector of harness and Saddlery at Ottawa, and in the finished state, by the inspector of small arms, Quebec.

5. No scabbards have been rejected as a whole. When a scabbard does not pass inspection when first presented, it is returned for correction and then again presented for inspection.

6. A complete record of the inspection of all rifles, is carefully kept by the inspector of small arms.

EMPLOYMENT OF H. E. VAUTELET.

Mr. NORTHRUP asked:

1. What sums have been paid to H. E. Vautelet, architect, for professional services in each of the past five years, and for what services were such payments made, and the amounts of each?

2. What payments have been made him for plans or for travelling expenses to enable him to prepare plans for works not yet commenced, or for works in which the part for which his plans were prepared has not yet been commenced?

3. When were such payments made, what amount has been paid in each of the past five years for plans, to whom were such payments made, and what amount was paid to each?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

So far as the Department of Railways and Canals is concerned, the answer is as follows:

1. In so far as the Department of Railways and Canals, is concerned Mr. H. E. Vautelet, civil engineer, was appointed to the position of chairman and chief engineer of a board of engineers acting under the department for the purpose of re-designing and preparing the working drawings for the re-constructions of the Quebec bridge. 1. Yes. Appointed temporary agent in Wales at a salary of $100 per month, for three months.
2. Is allowed travelling expenses for himself only.
3. Is now en route to Wales. Salary dates from 17th February, 1909.
4. The government has no knowledge as to this.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY AND PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY EARNINGS AND EXPENDITURES.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Perley—asked:

1. What were the earnings and expenditures of the Intercolonial railway and of the Prince Edward Island railway for each month during the calendar year, 1908, and for the month of October, 1907?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

MONTREAL HARBOUR DUES.

Mr. AMES—by Mr. Perley—asked:

1. Is it a fact known to this government that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal intend to increase the harbour dues of that port?
2. What amount of interest is due by the said commission at the present time, and has the government recently made any demand upon the commissioners for the payment of said interest?
3. What sums are due, as interest due and overdue, by the Harbour Commissioners of the ports of Quebec and Three Rivers?
4. What measures is the government taking to secure the payment of the moneys referred to in paragraph 3?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. We are aware that the matter is being discussed in the press, but we have no official information.

2. To 31st December, 1908, $525,871.63. Under date of 7th January, 1909, a statement of interest due was forwarded to the secretary of the commission at Montreal.

3. Quebec Harbour Commission, $2,786,-368.77; Three Rivers Harbour Commission, $91,104.04.

4. No specific measures are at present being taken.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY STAFF.

Mr. C. A. WILSON—by Mr. Talbot—asked:

1. Is the government aware that the number of prisoners in St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary is to-day said to be over five hundred?

2. What is the number of employees in the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, including officers, foremen and guards?

3. Does the government consider that the present equipment is sufficient for the good administration of the institution?

4. Is it the intention of the government to increase the personnel of the administration of this institution?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice):

1. Yes.
2. 77.
3. Yes, for the present.
4. Not at present.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN SQUATTERS.

Mr. SCHAFFNER asked:

1. What are the names of the squatters who have been removed from the Turtle mountain timber reserve?

2. To what point have they been transported?

3. What amount was paid by the government by way of compensation to the squatters, and the amount paid each squatter, removed, and by whom the amount was paid?

4. Have all the squatters been removed?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Mrs. Wm. Foster, Benjamin Pagels, Wm. Hunter, Jas. T. Tomlinson, Wm. Cox, Frank Chisholm, John Kelly, J. W. Foster. There were also a number of half-breeds as follows: Alex. Mann, Louie Mann, Jerome Morreau, Wm. Gosailin, Joseph Lizotte, Rousselin Pelletier.

2. Wm. Cox was taken to township 19, range 10, west of the 1st meridian; the half-breeds went to Wood mountain, and the remainder to Lake Benito district in townships 34 and 35, ranges 30 and 31, west of the 1st meridian.

3. Mrs. Wm. Foster, $540.05; Benj. Pagels, $110.10; Wm. Hunter, $309.69; J. T. Tomlinson, $316.30—advances of lumber, building material and provisions supplied through the immigration agent at Dauphin. Wm. Cox, $200—paid by A. Knechtel, inspector of forest reserves.

4. No.

VANCOUVER POLL CLERKS.

Mr. COWAN asked:

1. Have the persons who acted in the recent Dominion elections as poll clerks in Vancouver City electoral district, all been paid for so acting?

2. If not all, how many, and why have the others not been paid?

3. Have the persons who acted in the recent Dominion elections as deputy returning officers in Vancouver city electoral district, all been paid for so acting?

4. If not all, how many, and why not all?

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY (Secretary of State). On the 10th October, 1908, an advance of $1,000 was made to the returning officer. No accounts have yet been received from the returning officer.

CUSTOMS DUTIES IN HULL.

Mr. DEVLIN asked:

1. What amount of customs duties are collected yearly from importers in the city of Hull?

2. Have representations been made to the government of the necessity of a custom office in the city of Hull? If so, has the government any intention of establishing such office?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. From a compilation made last year it was ascertained that the values of imports entered at Ottawa by residents of Hull, for two years ending 30th April, 1908, were as follows:

	Value of imports year ended April 30, 1907.	Value of imports, year ended April 30, 1908.
Dutiable goods....	110,609	146,282
Free goods..	54,849	60,969
Total..	$165,458	$207,251

As there are in this year $146,282 dutiable goods imported, the duty will probably be in the neighbourhood of $40,000.

2. Representations have been made for opening a customs office in the city of Hull, but in view of the proximity of that city to the customs house at Ottawa, the government has not as yet decided to establish a customs office in Hull.

PROVINCIAL TELEPHONES—CONTROL BY RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. DANIEL asked:

Has the Railway Commission any control over the rates and tolls of a telephone company working under a provincial charter? If so, to what extent?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). This seems to involve a question of law about which it would be inadvisable to express an opinion.

SANDY COVE BREAKWATER.

Mr. JAMESON asked:

1. What amount has been paid by the government towards the construction of the breakwater at Sandy Cove, in the county of Digby, Nova Scotia?
2. Has the government released the contractors and returned the deposits? If so, when, and what amount was so returned?
3. Is the government aware of any amount yet owing to the contractors for labour and for materials? If so, how much, to whom, and when did the government first learn of it?
4. Has the government paid any sum beyond the amount of the contract on account of labour or materials? If so, when and how much?
5. Is it the intention of the government to pay the outstanding liabilities of the contractors? If so, when?
6. What was the estimated cost of the work?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $13,829.48.
2. Security deposit of $800 released 3rd December, 1904.
3. For labour—

Chas. Beyea and 30 others..		$1,221 77
For materials—
D. G. Kirk..	$2,085 51
22 others..	637 80
		2,723 31
Total..		$3,945 08

On 28th March, 1905, the contractors admitted liabilities greater than the balance due them; on 20th June, 1905, two claims were filed; others followed at various dates down to 21st October, 1906.

4. Nothing beyond the amount earned by contractors, including contract and extras, viz., $13,829.48.
5. The matter is under consideration.
6. $14,200.

SEED WHEAT FOR SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE asked:

1. How many bushels of seed wheat were bought for Saskatchewan and Alberta for the season 1908, who was it bought from, at what price, and what grade was it?
2. Was the wheat so bought cleaned for seed?
3. Was the wheat so bought all used as seed? If not, who was it sold to, and at what prices?
4. What was the total lost in connection with the wheat so bought?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I would like this question to stand as a notice of motion for return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

Mr. DANIEL.

SEED OATS FOR SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE asked:

1. How many bushels of English oats were bought for seed in Saskatchewan and Alberta for the season 1908, and at what prices?
2. Were the oats cleaned before or after they were bought?
3. Were these oats all used for seed? If not, who were they sold to and at what prices?
4. What was the total loss in connection with the oats bought in England, and was there any complaint about them?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). I would like this also to stand as notice of motion for a return.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as notice of motion for return.

PROPOSED ORGANIZATION OF IMPERIAL GENERAL STAFF.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT moved:

For a copy of orders in council, correspondence, letters, despatches, memoranda and communications, between the Imperial and Canadian governments relating to the organization of an Imperial General Staff.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). So far as these papers are not confidential, they will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing how many heads of stock there are on the respective experimental farms, and what they consist of; the estimated value of the different kinds, and for what purposes they are utilized; how many acres there are in each experimental farm; how many acres there are under cultivation on each farm.—Mr. Staples.

For a copy of all papers, letters, telegrams, and communications, with reference to the complaint against and conviction and fine of F. Macdonald Jacobs, of Caughnawaga reserve, for cutting cordwood upon territory occupied by him on the reserve and to have refund of dues or fine.—Mr. Boyce.

1. For a return showing the approximate area of coal and timber lands, respectively, in each of the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, (a) owned by private individuals or companies, (b) leased by the government to private individuals or companies; and the approximate area in each province on which mining or lumbering operations are actually being carried on.

2. The approximate amount of revenue collected by the government between 1st of January, 1906, and the 31st of December, 1908, on account of (a) payments for coal lands; (b) coal royalties, (c) bonuses and rentals on timber lands; (d) timber dues; (e) hay lands; (f) grazing lands, and (g) irrigation areas within each of the above provinces.—Mr. Lake.

For a return showing the final estimates on the contract entered into on August 22, 1906, between J. D. McArthur and Smith & Pren-dible on the National Transcontinental Railway, for work from station 9370 to station 9480; and the contract entered into on November 21, 1908, between the same parties on the same railway for work from station 9260 to station 9370.—Mr. Alexander Haggart.

For a copy of all evidence, reports, correspondence, writings, papers, and documents in possession or control of the Department of Inland Revenue, including all correspondence and written statements between the department or its officials or agents, and the government of Manitoba, or the Attorney General or other officials or agents of that province, in reference to the quality of coal oil sold in Manitoba, and accidents caused by coal oil there during the year 1908, and connected with recent investigations into the cause of these disasters.—Mr. Schaffner.

For a copy of the treaty between St. Peters' Indians and the government; and of all correspondence, papers, instructions, and documents relating to the aforesaid treaty.—Mr. Bradbury.

For a return showing how many acres have already been taken up in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, respectively, by homestead and pre-emption, by railway lands, by Hudson Bay lands; by other corporations or persons; by waste, swamps or mountainous land unfit for tilling; by lake areas, including Winnipeg, Winnipegosis, Manitoba, Big Quill, Birch and Beaver; and the area in square miles of each province above named. —Mr. Hughes.

For a copy of all correspondence, documents or other communications whatsoever, since the 28th of January, 1908, between the government or its representatives, and the railway, telephone and telegraph companies or their representatives, respecting the use of French equally with English in the province of Quebec, for services of public utility, under the supervision, direct or indirect of the government.—Mr. Paquet.

ABOLITION OF THE SENATE.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved:

That a humble address be presented to His Most Gracious Majesty the King, as follows: MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY:

We, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave most respectfully to represent—

That in the year 1867 by Act of your Imperial parliament commonly known as the British North America Act, the then existing provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were federally united and formed into one Dominion under the name of Canada, and the constitution of the legislative authority of such Dominion provided for and the nature of its executive government declared, and since the said Act other provinces in British North America have also been federally united to the said Dominion and now form part thereof, with representation in this House of Commons, pursuant to the provisions providing therefor in the said British North America Act and amending, and other, Acts subsequently enacted;

That by the said British North America Act the executive government and authority of and over Canada is declared to continue and be vested in Your Majesty and Your Heirs and Successors, Kings and Queens of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and Your Majesty is represented in Canada by a Governor General;

That by the said British North America Act there is also a council to aid and advise Your Majesty, styled the King's Privy Council for Canada, the members of which council are from time to time chosen and summoned by Your Majesty's said Governor General and may be from time to time removed by the said Governor General;

That by the said British North America Act the Parliament of Canada consists of Your Majesty, and upper House styled the Senate and the House of Commons, but with powers not to exceed those at the passing of the said Act held and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland;

That by the said British North America Act it is also provided that Bills for appropriating any part of the public revenue or for imposing any tax or impost shall originate in the House of Commons and that no such Bill or vote, resolution or address for such appropriation or tax or impost shall be adopted or passed that has not been first recommended to that House by message of Your Majesty's said Governor General in the session in which such Bill, vote, resolution or address is proposed;

That by the said British North America Act it is also provided that where any Bill passed by the House of Parliament is presented to Your Majesty's said Governor General for Your Majesty's assent he shall declare according to his discretion but subject to the provisions of the said Act and to Your Majesty's instructions, either that he assents thereto in Your Majesty's name, or that he withholds Your Majesty's assent, or that he reserves the Bill for the signification of Your Majesty's pleasure, and that where he assents to a Bill in Your Majesty's name if Your Majesty in Council within two years after receipt thereof by the Secretary of State thinks fit to disallow the Act such disallowance shall annul the Act, and that a Bill reserved for the signification of Your Majesty's pleasure shall not have any force unless and until within two years from the day on which it was presented to Your Majesty's said Governor General for Your Majesty's assent he signifies to the Houses of parliament or by proclamation that he has received the assent of Your Majesty in Council;

That by the said British North America Act legislatures for the various provinces constituting the said Dominion of Canada are also established, each governed by a lieutenant governor appointed by Your Majesty's said Governor General in Council for five years, and whose salaries are required to be fixed and provided by the parliament of the Dominion of Canada and such provincial legislatures are empowered exclusively to make laws in relation to a large number of matters and subjects of great importance, subject to disallowance by Your Majesty's said Governor General in Council within one year, but not in any way subject to consent also by the said Senate;

That in regard to all matters and subjects not within the said exclusive power of the said provincial legislatures it is provided by the said British North America Act that all laws to be made by the said parliament of Canada must be consented to and passed by both the Senate and the House of Commons, before being presented to Your Majesty's said Governor General for assent and the members constituting the said Senate are appointed for life and not subject to election or rejection by the people, and the members of the House of Commons are elected by the people every five years or at any less period at which Your Majesty's said Governor General may dissolve the parliament;

That during the forty years since the said British North America Act has been in force much dissatisfaction has been caused from time to time to Your Majesty's loyal subjects in Canada by the actions of the Senate in regard to matters dealt with by the House of Commons and the rejection of laws sought to be made by the people through their representatives in the House of Commons and passed by the House, and by reason of the heavy expense and burden of taxation placed upon the people to provide the maintenance of that two-fold system of dealing with the making of laws by the parliament of Canada;

That in view of the many other provisions heretofore referred to for guarding against and disallowing any ill-advised or improper legislation which might by any possibility pass the said House of Commons, and of the aforesaid dissatisfaction of the people and heavy burden of expense involved and of the great advance made in education by the whole people of Canada since the passing of the said British North America Act, this House is of the opinion that the Senate is no longer required or advisable for the properly carrying on of responsible government in Canada, or safeguarding of Your Majesty's full rights and prerogatives; and that the abolition of the said Senate would greatly conduce to the welfare of the Dominion of Canada and promote the interests of the British Empire.

We therefore respectfully pray that the said British North America Act be so amended as to provide for the abolition of the said Senate.

He said: Although the form of the motion is new, the subject dealt with by the motion cannot in any sense be said to be new. At the outset, let me say that my object in making this motion is that the matter may be discussed freely, fully, and in a way entirely untrammelled by considerations of party politics. There is no reason why this should be dealt with as a party question; there is every reason why it should be dealt with in the very opposite way. It is a matter in which the interest of all Canada is involved; it is a matter upon which the leaders of all political parties ought to try to agree. Even the most humble member of this House should try to find a solution of what is known to be a serious difficulty and great embarrassment in this country. Therefore, I ask every hon. member who is in the habit of voting with me on party questions not to feel bound to do so on this question, but, if he speaks upon it, to declare what he freely thinks the best interest of the country demands. Likewise, I ask my hon. friends on the other side—who are in the habit of thinking, more or less, that the proposals that I bring forward are suspicious or not to be adopted by the party now in power—to forget that to-day, and if they are really in favour of this resolution, not to be afraid to say so, so that the matter can be dealt with in a manner entirely free from party politics.

Now, Sir, dissatisfaction with regard to the other Chamber ns no new thing in Canada. I will briefly mention some of the evidence of dissatisfaction. Fifteen years ago this dissatisfaction had reached such a point that one of the political parties in this country, the one now in power, put into their platform, upon which they appealed to the country, a demand for the reform of the Senate. That party attained power, and from time to time public men on both sides of the House have raised the question of reforming the Senate. We were very much indebted to a supporter of the government, in the year 1906—I refer to the present Deputy Speaker of this House, the member for South Perth (Mr. McIntyre)—for a very able address and the discussion which followed his address, calling for a reform of the Upper Chamber. Again last session we were treated to discussions of this kind by other members of this House. The member for South Perth brought in a measure for the reform of the Senate, the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Miller) also brought in a motion, which practically agreed with the motion I am about to make.

The hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Lewis) also brought in a motion having the same object in view, but in a manner less direct than my motion. All these gentlemen brought forward much useful information, they showed a lot of research and care in endeavouring to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion in regard to the matter. But their motions and addresses all ended in nothing, that is to say, they were followed by no concrete action on the part of this House. In this respect my motion differs from all others that have been brought forward. My motion is a practical motion and leads to some action if adopted. The other motions, if I may be allowed to say so without offence, were merely academic, they were merely discussions of the question, and accomplished nothing. Even if they had been adopted, they would have not brought us any further on our way towards the desired goal. Therefore I have had the temerity, in drawing this motion, to ask this House to vote for a practical resolution, a matter of concrete action, that goes right to the foot of the Throne with a petition to the King, asking that the British North America Act be amended by the Imperial parliament so that the Chamber known as the Senate of Canada may be abolished. Of course if we are ever to have an abolition of the Senate, this is the only course that we can take. We must apply for an amendment of the British North American Act, which Act constituted the Senate as it now exists. If any of these preceding motions had been carried, or if we could agree upon a measure of reform, even then we must have an Imperial Act of parliament passed to change our constitution. So it is absolutely necessary to approach the Imperial parliament, and I know of no better way of doing so than to petition the King in the words of this motion.

Now in the course of these discussions that have taken place I have noticed the absence of one very important point, which has never been mentioned so far as I know. Hon. gentlemen who have discussed this question have all assumed that the Senate of this country bears the same relation to our House of Commons that the House of Lords bears to the House of Commons of Great Britain. I cannot see the matter in that way. Hon. gentlemen seem to have forgotten that the constitution of this country provides for a veto power ultimately vested in the King in Council, whether you have a Senate in this country or not. It is generally assumed that we have the same safeguard in this country against hasty legislation by the Commons, as there is in Great Britain against hasty legislation by the Commons there. But there is a considerable difference. If the Lords and Commons of Great Britain agree on any legislation, it seems to me that His Majesty the King would find himself in a serious constitutional difficulty if he did not assent to that legislation. That is not so here. If the House of Commons and the Senate of Canada, or if the House of Commons alone, assuming we had no Senate, pass a legislative measure, and that measure receives the assent of His Excellency the Governor General, even then the measure may not finally become law, because it is subject to the veto power of His Majesty in Council, who may disallow any Act of the Canadian parliament. So that we have a veto power that may be exercised by the King in Council, even though we had no Senate in this country. For instance, supposing the Senate were abolished, that we had no second Chamber to pass upon our legislation, and supposing a piece of legislation was passed in this House which a large body of people in this country, or very important interests in this country, contended was injurious to them, they would not be without a remedy, even if we had no Senate, because they could appeal to the King in Council and ask that that legislation be disallowed. They would be doing no strange thing, they would be simply acting within the provisions of the British North America Act. There is therefore in the British North America Act a distinct limitation, that after His Excellency has agreed to any measure passed by the parliament of Canada, still it does not become binding if the King in Council chooses to disallow it within two years. So I say that if any interest in this country or any portion of our people felt aggrieved at legislation passed by this parliament, they would still have no need to bemoan the absence of a second Chamber, supposing we decided to abolish it; they would not be remediless, for they could approach His Majesty in Council by petition and might be able to get a disallowance of the Act. This, at least, is my opinion, and before this debate closes hon. gentlemen will perhaps discuss that particular point and enlighten me with their views upon it, if they do not agree with what I am saying, namely, that the Senate in this country does not exist as the sole necessary check on hasty legislation, and is not, in the last resort, a protection of minorities or any other interest that may feel aggrieved, because such minority or such interest will have a remedy by appeal to Great Britain within two years, and there would be no wrench of the constitution given us by the British North America Act.

Some people say that it is all very well to be wise after the event, but I ask every hon. gentleman in this House, in discussing this matter, or before he votes for or against this resolution of mine, to seriously ask himself the question if he were one of the fathers of confederation, or if he were making suggestions to Great Britain for the re-drawing of that Act, if he would seriously say that a second chamber was necessary. I do not wish to be understood as saying that if, forty years ago, I had been assisting to make that constitution, I would not have made it as it was, and I am not saying that our forefathers did not do what they thought best in the interests of the country. They had no experience in Canada to guide them. They naturally would look at other constitutions and it probably occurred to them at once that as there was a House of Lords in England over the Commoners to check their legislation, it would be a good thing to have a similar body in Canada. But while I might at that time have thought that, if those very able politicians and public men who had a lot to do with the formation of the constitution, who were known as the fathers of confederation, and who were doing the best they could for the future of the country, had had forty years of experience in the government of this country and could have known then all that we know now, I believe that in view of the great safeguard I have mentioned—the veto power of the King in Council—against any hasty legislation, they would have said that in the beginning of the twentieth century it was not necessary to have a second chamber. There are great differences between the country as it was then and as it is now. Take, for instance, the question of education. Would any one seriously say that the commoners elected in this country are not now as well educated as the senators are? Would any one seriously say that any constituency does not produce and does not insist upon electing the highest types of men obtainable in the country? Forty years ago education was sparse, so to speak in this country. The fathers of confederation, forty years ago, might very well entertain the thought that they could not always be sure that the House of Commons would contain a majority of members sufficiently well educated to conduct the affairs of the country properly without any check upon them at all. They might have been afraid that some matter of emotion or some radical movement might arise in the country and that from want of a higher standard of education, such as exists to-day, they would not be safe in entrusting this work to an elective body at the mercy of the great body of voters throughout the country. Am I not justified too in saying that the education of the people of the country to-day is of itself a safeguard against improper legislation by this House? What would happen if any solid interests in this country were affected by legislation passed in this chamber, assuming that there was no Senate? Has it not happened here over and over again, within the memory of every one who sits in this House, as it has happened during the last eight years to my own personal knowledge, that business men would come down to Ottawa, that those interested would send delegations here, that representations would be made, that the case would be presented in the ablest manner possible, and has it not occurred that legislation proposed in this House has been amended because of the representations coming from various intelligent interests in the country? Is any commoner going to be returned when he goes back for re-election if he has been merely sitting here and has not been attending to the interests of the country? If he takes an extreme position upon any question, if he becomes unreasonable and if he does not protect the interests of the country and of his constituency, is he not at once set aside by the electors as being unfit to represent that particular constituency because he is not broad or big enough for the job? In my humble opinion if the standard of education as we have it to-day had been equally as high forty years ago, I do not think that the fathers of confederation would have thought it necessary to have a second chamber, call it a Senate, or anything you like. That, of course, is only my own opinion and I submit it to the House for what it is worth.

The next matter I would point out is this: Supposing the commoners are hasty, supposing that they make mistakes, supposing that their judgment is poor, supposing, in other words, that they are not up to the mark demanded by the intelligent electorate, the electors may punish them when they return for re-election inside of five years. If they have been unreasonable in their conduct or judgment they are at the mercy of the electors every five years or less. But, supposing the Senate makes a mistake. Supposing the Senate refuses to consent to a Bill which is manifestly in the interests of the country, what happens? They block legislation. Can anybody reach them? There are no electors, there is no power that can punish them or that can make them account for their wrong-doing, or exercise any discipline over them. So that we have this position that an elective body representing the people to whom the government itself are responsible, can have their will thwarted by the Senate and the Senate need not care whether they are on the popular side of the question or not. The right hon. gentleman leading this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) last session, when the motion of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. McIntyre) for the reformation of the Senate was being discussed, pointed out, in line with what I am saying, a very serious trouble as the matter stands, or a trouble that might arise at any time. The right hon. gentleman pointed out that if the Senate refuses to pass a supply bill which the commoners have introduced there may be a deadlock in the country and there is no remedy under our constitution for it. I agree with him and what the right hon. gentleman said is in itself a strong argument in favour of my motion. But, I say that that very matter standing alone ought to be some reason, at all events, for some amendment to the constitution and, in the absence of a better one, for the abolition of a body that can cause such havoc in the country. A supply bill cannot be introduced anywhere but in this chamber. I am not saying that the right hon. gentleman said that last session or not, but I apprehend that he will not dispute that that is so. What the hon. gentleman pointed out was that if there was a deadlock in regard to the supply bill there is no remedy under our constitution for it. Although the British North America Act puts it out of the power of the Senate to introduce such a bill, although it is a bill that must emanate from the Commons, yet, if they refuse to pass it, they can prevent all business being carried on, and there is no remedy under our constitution for that state of affairs.

Manifestly then something must be done; manifestly if we could agree upon some measure of reform which we could submit to the Imperial authorities as an amendment to the British North America Act, we ought to agree upon it. For forty years and more, particularly the last few years, the people of Canada have shown that they are opposed to the Senate as it is now constituted, and we are in the peculiar position that there are probably not two public men in the country who agree upon any remedy as suggested. If the people all insist that the Senate is defective and is not working properly, while public men all admit that this is so, then if we cannot agree on a proper remedy the next best thing would be to have it abolished, because if an institution is defective and we cannot devise and agree upon a remedy, surely it would be best for the country to abolish it. The Senate themselves of late years have realized and admitted that their House is not what it ought to be and stands in need of reform. We know from the newspaper reports that the ex-Secretary of State, the Hon. R. W. Scott, has publicly stated what he believes to be the proper remedy for the existing unsatisfactory conditions. His opinion cannot be regarded as extreme; it is the admission of a senator of many years' standing, of a cabinet minister and a student of constitutional matters. Whatever reform is agreed upon an amendment to the constitution must be made, some petition must go to the Throne in Great Britain. If we cannot agree as to the proper remedy to apply, but admit that a remedy is necessary, we ought at least to petition the imperial authorities to inquire into the matter and pass such an amendment as they in their opinion, assisted by our advice, think would be best for Canada.

Personally, I believe there is no longer need of the Senate in this country. There may have been a need for it thirty or forty years ago, but there is not to-day, and I believe the majority of the Canadian people are of the same opinion.

The Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in a very instructive speech last session upon the motion made by the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. McIntyre) told us his views. He said that the only remedial measures he would suggest were the reduction of the number of senators and the term of their tenure. What good will it do to reduce the number and to place the veto power over the acts of 220 commoners elected by the people and in close touch with them in the hands of fewer men than it is now? The commoners come in close touch with the people who are developing the country; during their elections they hear the grievances and the ideas of all classes and all sections, and I would think, with all humility, that the argument in favour of reducing the number of those who hold the veto power would logically lead to the abolition of the Senate.

The Prime Minister also contended last session, and in this I agree with him, that it would not be wise to have senators appointed by the legislators in the same manner as the American Senate is chosen. The hon. member for St. John city (Mr. Daniel), who also spoke last session, took the same view, and I quite agree with both of them. From the nature of our constitution the question of provincial as opposed to federal rights must always be a delicate and difficult one. If we should have our senators appointed by the provinces, and the House of Commons of Canada felt obliged, in carrying on the affairs of this country, to insist on federal rights contrary to the wishes of some provinces, then the Senate could be used by the provinces to completely override the will of this House on federal matters. This would be a most dangerous, improper and unfair condition. I would refer also to a speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1896, just before the Liberal government came in power. He then declared in Toronto that the Senate, in his opinion, was a millstone around the neck of the Canadian people and he prayed Providence to remove it soon. He maintained that the Senate was so mendacious and contrary to the interests of the people that he prayed for its removal. The hon. gentleman I believe is still of the same opinion. I understand he has lately admitted that he does not think the Senate is what it ought to be, and that he more or less sympathizes with my motion to have it abolished.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. More or less.

Mr. LANCASTER. Or less or more. However, the Minister of Trade and Commerce is an eloquent and able man whose knowledge of Canadian history and affairs is not excelled, and we have that hon. gentleman saying lately that the Senate was still liable to great danger and capable of great harm, and he a member of the Senate for several years.

One more witness I will call, and then I will sum up upon that evidence. The late much-respected Sir Oliver Mowat in 1903 said:

> We are agreed as to the necessity of fundamental reform of the Senate, if for any reason it must or should be retained.

He qualified his opinion that the Senate should be reformed by saying that that was always on the assumption that it must or should be retained. If you want an argument or an opinion in favor of abolition expressed in plain and simple terms, you have it there. I agree with that statement of Sir Oliver Mowat—the first thing we should ask ourselves before we trouble ourselves about the way we should reform it, is: Is it necessary to have the institution at all? With that mass of testimony, with expressions of this kind from that array of public men, with the fact that one of the two great political parties, representing about one-half of the people of the country, in going before the people and asking them to put them in power to carry on the affairs of the country, pronounced in favour of the reform of the Senate fifteen years ago, with these various opinions in the same direction expressed since that time, with no measure of reform brought forward in the meantime, with no petition sent to the British government to ask for any particular measure of reform, and with no evidence of the institution having worked properly in the meantime, what might we as practical ment be expected to do, except to petition the King to abolish the institution as not being necessary? I put the question to any man of common sense in any walk of life. If he were a manufacturer and had some expensive machine in his factory which was not working well, and which no inventor or patentee could improve upon but which all admitted was deteriorating the quality of the goods sent out, what would he do? The answer is obvious: he would put the machine out of the building and use it no more. If there were any possibility of improving the institution and making it useful by reform, I would agree to it; but as we cannot find any measure for reforming the Senate that can be agreed upon by thoughtful men in this country, we ought certainly to ask the home authorities to amend the British North America Act, and have it removed. The hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre), the present deputy Speaker of this House, in discussing this question last session, made use of an expression that caught my attention. I took no part in the debate of last year, nor did I in the debate of 1906, and I do not mind telling the House the reason. I had pretty strong opinions on this question, but I did not want to declare them until I felt sure that I was right. I wanted to feel absolutely certain in my own mind that abolition was the proper thing before I expressed myself upon it in this House. Therefore, I sat still for instruction, and I was instructed. I obtained a lot of information from the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre), the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. H. H. Miller), and the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. E. N. Lewis), for which I thank them; and having listened to the speeches of these hon. gentlemen and others, and having cogitated upon them, I was confirmed in my opinion that the only practical remedy which can benefit the country and the remedy that the country wants is abolition. The hon. gentleman for South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) used the expression that the Senate must be either amended or ended. No practical suggestion has been made for mending it; and although the hon. gentleman himself, as he told us, was not in favour of abolition, he gave no good reasons in support of his view that abolition was not the proper remedy. At the same time, he did say, you must either mend it or end it. Now, no step has been made to mend the Senate; and, applying the alternative of the hon. member for South Perth, are we not in a position to-day to petition the home authorities to end it, instead of indulging in merely academic discussions as to the proper form of mending it, when no two men can agree as to what that proper form should be? The hon. member for South Grey, I have no doubt, will vote for this motion Last session he expressed his opinion that abolition was the proper remedy, and he, more than any one else in the House, convinced me of that. It is true, I was willing to be convinced; but the hon. member for South Grev advanced so many sound reasons that he confirmed my opinion that abolition was the proper remedy. The hon. member for West Huron, however, came the nearest of any to a practical result. His motion was for a plebiscite. The other motions made heretofore have only been academic. They have only been motions brought forward for the purpose of discussion, and, even if carried unanimously, would lead to nothing. They would only express the opinion of the House, and bring no concrete result. But the motion of the hon. member for West Huron was that a plebiscite should be taken, and that the people should be asked to vote on two questions—whether they were in favour of or against abolition, and whether they were in favour of or against reform. His motion was not voted upon, the debate having been adjourned. The motion of the hon. member for West Huron sruck me as being the only practical resolution of those three, because he was advancing a step towards attaining some result. If he had got a plebiscite, it would have been a long step towards getting the government in power to approach the Imperial Parliament to get the will of the people as expressed in that plebiscite carried out. Of course, a plebiscite can be of no good unless the government in power is sympathetic with it. If the government would put a question before the people in the form of a plebiscite, that might be taken as an evidence that they were sympathetic with it, and to carry out the will of the people as so expressed. We had a plebiscite once before, and the government, for reasons satisfactory to themselves, saw fit not to carry out the vote of the people. But if there was a strong pronouncement on the part of the people in favour of the abolition of the Senate, we would naturally expect that the government in power, whatever government it might be would carry if out.

Before we can do anything with a plebiscite, we must have the sympathy of the government in favour of what the people would happen to vote for. Unless the government declared itself in favour of that it is useless to talk about a plebiscite. But the House of Commons as a body, apart from party, entirely untrammelled by any question of party loyalty or disloyalty, has the right to petition the King. It has that right as a concrete body, and the members of that body also have it as individual members, and the essential thing to do is to petition the King to amend the British North America Act by abolishing the Senate, because, after all, as far as plebiscites go, that in itself would be a pretty good plebiscite. Nothing could be done at once. Every one knows that even if such a petition were voted by a large majority of this House or even unanimously, it would not be acted on hurriedly. Other representations would probably be made, but sooner or later, probably in a few years, the petition would come to a concrete result. No decision would be come to hastily, and the members of this House would find out very quickly, if they voted in favour of this motion of mine, whether they had made a mistake and had not thereby properly represented public opinion in their constituencies. I am not posing as an authority on that point.

I do not profess to know the popular opinion of one-half of the country; but so far as I can understand the will of the people, so far as I have had communication with them, so far as I have come in contact with them in travelling through the country—I am not now speaking of my own constituency of the public opinion in which I claim to be a fairly good judge—my impression is that the vast majority of Canadians are in favour of the abolition of the Senate. However that is something which we would soon find out by voting on this resolution. If any one should vote to petition the King to have the Senate abolished and if in so doing he did not carry out the opinion of the majority of his constituency, they would soon make him aware of that after this session is over. So that practically, we would in course of a year or two have in this way the equivalent of a plebiscite. The question is one of such significance in some parts of the country and of such interest all over the country that every constituency would take care to tell its representative in this House whether he had voted as the majority desired he should. In that way therefore we would practically anticipate a plebiscite, and would know, before any action were taken in Great Britain, whether the course we adopted had the support of our people or not. But it might be said, suppose we voted for this resolution and then found out on our return home, that our constituents expected us to vote differently. Well, that is not at all likely to happen. Members on both sides know pretty well what their constituents want in this matter, and there is a very small portion of the electors in any constituency who would be at all likely to find fault with the vote their representative would give. There has been so much discussion on this question during the last eight or ten years in this country that the people have practically told all of us what they think about it, and but a very small proportion of the members of this House run any risk whatever of voting differently from what their constituents want, if they apply their own judgment and common sense to the matter.

There is another argument in favour of abolition, which I have not heard discussed in this House. Possibly that was due to my not having noticed any such argument, but certainly, I have not heard it advanced. It is this one. Under our constitution our government is responsible to parliament. Nevertheless it had the appointment of the whole of one branch of parliament. That certainly is not responsible government. The people elect the members of the House of Commons and the government is responsible both to the House of Commons and the Senate; but the government which has a majority in the House of Commons ratifying what it does, knows that it is doing right. The people, who express their will through the House of Commons, are thus supporting the government. Then the government needs fear no trouble in the Senate, because that body is appointed by them. But suppose the representatives of the people in the House of Commons reject any measure of the government. They have as much right to reject it as to approve; and should they reject, the government are bound to carry out the will of the people as expressed by parliament and change their policy, but the Senate, composed of men who are the appointees of the government, might veto that change. They might refuse to vote for the change called for by the House of Commons. What a ridiculous state of affairs ! It is on a par with that condition of which the right hon. the leader of the House spoke last session when he pointed out that it was quite possible for the Senate to throw out the Supply Bill and starve the country, and thereby force the Lower Chamber to do something to which it was opposed although, being the creature of the people, it knew that the action of the Senate did not meet with the popular approval.

Let me now point out that, as a matter of practical result, the Senate does not originate legislation. We find that body every session adjourning from time to time, for a month or so, and the reason given is that it is waiting business from the House of Commons. The only legislation practically which it initiates is the divorce Bills, and that could be done by the Commons if necessary. And I notice, by the way, that my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) has upon the notice paper a resolution asking this parliament to pass upon the question of establishing a divorce court. Personally I am opposed to divorce; but if we are to recognize it at all, much better have divorces granted by the courts in a proper and regular way than by any legislative body. However that is not the issue to-day, but I simply wish to point out that on the Order Paper there is notice of a motion which, if adopted, would take from the Senate the only legislation they really initiate.

The question of protecting minorities is the only one which has given me any trouble in this matter. The argument is frequently made that a Senate is needed for that. Everybody admits that the Senate must be reformed, and the only difficulty is whether you need it for the protection of a minority. Well, I have looked back into history and I cannot find that the Senate has ever given any protection to minorities in the last forty years. You may perhaps say that that is no argument because it might be called upon to do so at any moment. But how could there be any protection to a minority if the majority insisted on carrying out something to the disadvantage of that minority. The strongest argument ever made in that connection is that some little province, having its representation in this House decreased according as population increased in the other provinces, would need some counterbalancing representation in the Senate which would give force to their argument and protection to their rights. But practically what could the Senate do? The smallest province would have the smallest number of senators. The other senators would come from the other provinces and, applying all the rules of human nature, would not be likely to support the smallest province against what they considered was for the general good of the country. Would they not represent the territory from which they come? Would there not be the same tendency of senators to vote against the senators from the small provinces? And would not that merely mean that the appeal of the small provinces would be beaten in two Houses instead of in one? The argument that the Senate is needed for the protection of small provinces seems to me to be one quite without foundation. The real protection, as I have said, is in the power given by the British North America Act to go to the King in Council in Great Britain for a veto of the legislation complained of. Those who complain of injustice can thus go to the very fountain-head of justice for the empire and plead the merits of their case. And all this can be done without any need for amending the British North America Act as it now is. I contend, therefore, that the abolition of the Senate would bring about the very strongest protection of minority, a much more effective protection than that which can be afforded by any second Chamber.

Now, I desire to make one newspaper quotation—from the 'Daily Star' of Toronto. That newspaper, to use the ordinary expression, has not much use for me as a politician, but it has made a nice argument in favour of my motion, and I am going to quote it. On January 23, 1909, the 'Star' said:

Lancaster, M.P., would abolish the Senate. And this is all the stranger because in ten years Mr. Lancaster may be wanting to go to sleep himself.

The 'Star' evidently thinks that the Senate is not a place to work in, but a place to go to sleep in. It seems to me that is the strongest argument in favour of my resolution. I must say that it seems to me the 'Star' might have given me more credit for sincerity than it has given. At least it might have assumed that if I could not provide for myself, or if my children could not provide for me, a nice place to go to sleep in, the good people of Lincoln would provide such a place for me without making it necessary for me to seek a place in the Senate for whose abolition I move in this year of grace 1909. While the 'Star' evidently wants to have a little fun at the expense of the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) it still, consciously or unconsciously, presents the very strongest argument in favour of the abolition of the Senate. On February 14 the 'Star' followed up its first utterances. We all know that the 'Star' is not capable of being hasty and that it supports the government loyally and is not politically friendly to me. This is what it said:

As the matter now stands, the Senate is simply an addition to the patronage in the hands of the government. Patronage in the Civil Service we have learned to endure through custom, but surely it is unwise to extend the system of patronage to the appointment of those who make the laws of the land. Responsible government means the responsibility of the government to parliament, but who can speak seriously of the responsibility of a government to a portion of parliament appointed by the government itself?

The plan laid before the Senate by the Hon. R. W. Scott is good in so far as it proposes to substitute election for appointment. An elected Senate dealing independently with the measures sent up by the House of Commons, including government measures, might occasionally serve a good purpose. It is doubtful whether such a body could work in harmony with a system which requires that the government of the day should have a parliamentary majority for the support of its measures, but if it were found unworkable it would probably be a half-way house on the road to abolition, which, to many, seems to be the logical solution of the problem.

I commend that to the gentlemen who are in the habit of reading what they think are words of wisdom in the Toronto 'Star.'

Now, this institution, the Senate, costs something. The cost of maintaining the Senate would be no reason for the abolition of that body if it were doing good work, and would not then be an argument even though it cost ten times as much as it does. But when we find that it is very doubtful that the Senate is needed in the present state of things, the question of what it costs is one to be considered in the public interest. I find by the Auditor General's Report for the last year that the indemnity and transportation of members of the Senate cost $209,000, and salaries and contingencies, $94,000; Speaker, $4,000. This makes a total of over $300,000. This amount does not represent all that the Senate might have cost, or even all that it probably will cost this year. There were twenty-six senators who were absent for more than fifteen days. Had they been present the expenditure on indemnities would have been increased by $9,000; making a total of $317,000. Thus we see that in ten years the Senate will have cost practically three and a quarter millions of dollars. That would do a lot toward providing a better postal service. It would do a great deal towards nationalizing and improving the telephone and telegraph service. And, last but not least, it would pay a pretty good share to help the railways to abolish the deadly level crossings that kill so many people in this country. I put the question squarely to this House: Here is an institution that costs this much money, and here are these other matters, which, it is admitted, are of importance to the people; it is doubtful if the taxpayer can easily find at present all the money to cover these expenses. Not for a minute would I say that if the institution cost even ten or twenty times as much as it does that alone would be sufficient reason for abolishing it. But when we know what can be done with that money, we ought to consider seriously whether the expenditure upon this institution should be continued. An hon. friend near me points out that there is expense for printing and other matters which I have not included. Of course, there is much of this that would not be saved even if the Senate were abolished, because the printing would still have to be done and the clerks would have to be hired. The amount to be saved in that way may be open to argument. I have given a minimum.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have spoken longer than I generally do upon any matter in this House. My apology for doing so is the importance of the matter as it appears to me, and has appeared during the last five or six years, and my desire to do my duty as a representative of the people.

Mr. E. W. NESBITT (North Oxford). In considering the resolution moved by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) I desire to consider for a moment the necessity of a second chamber in this country. We know that frequently agitations arise in the country and are carried on, both by newspapers and by the people, that are of sufficient weight to influence members of this House, and to be embodied in legislation. There is therefore the possibility of hasty legislation, and that is I presume, why the fathers of confederation provided for a second chamber. I have carefully searched to see whether there is any instance, either under a constitutional monarchial or a republican form of government, where a second chamber does not exist, and I have failed to find any such instance. Now, the first question we have to decide is whether we require a second chamber or not. These popular agitations I have spoken of are usually not carefully thought out, they are often found to have no sound foundation, and if it were not for a second chamber the probabilities are that the members of this House might pass a measure in obedience to a spasmodic agitation that would not really be in the public interest. Of course we do the best we can, but we are all liable to be swayed by the popular opinion of the moment. In the comments I propose to make I wish to say nothing in disparagement of the House of which I am a humble member. At the same time, we must not pride ourselves on knowing everything, we must not be too sure that we are the only people that are capable of passing wise and proper legislation.

The hon. member for Lincoln has told us that even if we did abolish the second chamber, that is the Senate, the people would still have recourse to the King in Council. Now I am not much of a lawyer, in fact none at all; but at the same time, does not the King in Council perform the same functions as our Governor General in Council? After all, is the King in Council not the Imperial Cabinet, like our Governor in Council? I think it was Chief Justice Marshall of the United States supreme court, who, in comparing the British constitution with the constitution of the United States, said that the reason why the United States constitution would last longer than the English constitution was that under the United States constitution every person was protected by law, that no person or corporation could be interfered with except by due process of law, and due compensation whereas under the British constitution parliament was supreme, and could do anything. That want of protection that the United States constitution has, as against our constitution, is a very serious fact. If parliament is supreme then it is all the more necessary that we should have a second chamber for the protection of the individual or corporation. The hon. member who just sat down said that we had recourse to the King in Council, but, even if it were not true that parliament is supreme, how long would we, as Canadians, submit to our legislation being interfered with by the King in Council? Would not that raise a very dangerous question in this country? I do not think that we can consider that because it would be too dangerous an expedient to try.

Why is this cry raised against the Senate? I think that nearly all those sayings we hear against the Senate are largely thoughtless. People do not consider after all of whom the Senate is composed and what the Senators do. You remember that all sorts of quips and quibbles are indulged in with respect to the mother-in-law, and likewise, all the quips and quibbles are in order as far as the Senate is concerned. I, myself, when I came here, was prejudiced against the Senate because I had always heard that it was no good, that it was useless. Some people call the senators old ladies. If they were supposed to be good old ladies I do not know of anything that could illustrate their perfection of character more than to make use of that term with regard to them, because, if there is any one who represents all that is desirable in humanity it is a good old lady. But some people may say that they are not good old ladies. I remember very well the story of the Yankee who came over here to visit a friend belonging to the House of Commons. The friend was showing him the curiosities of this Ottawa of ours, and he said: Now, I will show you our great system of wax works, and he showed him the Senate. He said: This is the most wonderful thing you ever saw; you would actually think they were alive. The Yankee stood looking at them for a while and then said: Upon my word, you are right; they are wonderful; I would have thought they were alive. I came here imbued with just such thoughts as I have referred to, but as I met members of the Senate singly and collectively I began to ponder over the question as to whether there was any basis of truth in the criticism of the Senate. When you come to consider the personnel of the Senate what do you find? Some people say, again reverting to the old lady story, that they are too old. I am one of those who have always had a profound respect for men of older age than myself. I have got to an age when I consider how little I know and how much less I knew twenty-five years ago. I have great respect indeed for men of older age. What is the use of growing old in years if we do not grow old in knowledge? I do not wish to make distinction as between members of the Senate, but, for the purpose of showing you the kind of men who belong to the Senate I propose to name a few of them. Take Senator Cox, Senator Ross, Senator Dandurand, Senator Jones, Senator McKay of Montreal, Senator Wm. Gibson, Senator Kerr, Senator Edwards, Senator Jaffrey and Senator Cartwright as illustrations. Could we pick out in this House, which wants to rule everything, names as honoured in this country as are those which I have mentioned? I think not. Supposing that one of us desired to organize a great corporation and wanted to select directors for the same; do you think that we would go to any other place in Canada, or do you think we would come to this House for our directors? Do you think we would go anywhere in Canada and find a board of directors as capable as could be taken from that Senate of ours? When you talk about abolishing the Senate remember what it is composed of. I have great respect for men of older age, but in addition to that these are men who have had experience. The mere fact of introducing this resolution is a reflection upon this House itself for the simple reason that a great many members of the Senate were educated in this House and they are men who grew old in experience in this House. It is a reflection upon the House itself to say that men could grow old in experience here and still know more than when they entered it. I hope that in a year or two from now I will know more than I do to-day, because I realize how little I know now. As to appointments to the Senate, I have no quarrel with the present system. I do not want to reform the appointments to the Senate particularly. It is said that it is politically appointed. Why should it not be? I ask you in all fairness, why should it not be? When you say it is politically appointed, and you mean that the party in power appoint its members from their political followers, why should they not? When you come to look over the field you want a man who is capable, a man who has merit. Do you not suppose you could find a man who is qualified and a man who has merit in the Liberal ranks as well as in the Conservative ranks? Supposing the situation were changed and our hon. friends on the other side of the House were in power; do you mean to tell me that they could not find just as well qualified men in the Conservative ranks as in the Liberal ranks? I think they could. There is no great difference after all between the abilities of men in either party. I do quarrel with the appointments to the Senate for purely political rewards. That is a political exchange, as it were, for party service rendered without regard to the qualification and merit of the individual. I do quarrel with that type of appointment, but that is not what I call a political appointment because the political appointments I mean are those that I have just described. I do not see why we should change the source of appointment.

As to the Senate itself I quite agree with the hon. member for Lincoln when he says that they should not take these long adjournments. I quite agree that they should attend to their duties. I think also there are many things they could initiate in the Senate. They could initiate one Bill, for instance, that we want very badly in this country, and it is a general corporation Act, a general company Act, and where could it be better initiated than in the Senate composed of men such as I have named? They could also, I think, initiate a general bankruptcy Act for which there is great need in Canada. They could devote a great deal of time to work of that kind in place of taking a holiday during the time they are not engaged with business sent to them by this House.

But I think this House could take an example from the Senate with great advantage. This Senate of ours, which we are so fond of abolishing, would go through more work in a day than we would in a week. They would revise the work we do in a week in a day or half a day. Why is that? Because of the irrelevant questions and discussions in this House and its committees, because of the practice of talking to constituencies and to the newspapers in this House. That the senators do not require to do and that fact strengthens my objection to an elected Senate. An elected Senate would be no better than ourselves in this respect, and surely there is a great deal of talk here that we could do without and still obtain just as good results. The Senate take up a question as the board of directors of a business corporation would. How long would it take us to pass much of our legislation if we went at it like business men, like a board of directors worthy of the name? We would find out weaknesses in any proposed legislation and strike them out in a moment.

Another reason why I oppose the abolition of the Senate is that I believe it to be a protection not only of the minority in this country but sometimes the majority from themselves. There is always a danger of sensational legislation being rushed through this House. I do not claim to be any better than any one else, but I believe that measures are adopted by the Commons that might be very wisely opposed by the Senate. There has been no serious complaint against the Senate for blocking legislation that has passed through this House. I do not think that they have done any harm in forty years of our national existence, but I believe they have done a great deal of good. The Senate is composed of very capable men, and I believe they should reform themselves to the extent of doing more work which they could probably do more capably than we could in this House. I think the abolition of the Senate would be a national calamity and I for one will not vote for it. If any little reforms are required in the Senate, such as a change in the method of appointment, we have in our beloved leader the Prime Minister (Rt. hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a man strong enough, capable enough and courageous enough to bring them about.

Mr. O. TURGEON (Gloucester). Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to follow the hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) in the arguments which he has advanced in support of his motion for the abolition of the Senate. I have admired the language and the tone of his address and would have expected, knowing as I know the strong convictions which the hon. gentleman always displays in this House, that he would have made perhaps stronger arguments or used stronger language in his endeavour to abolish one part of the representation of the Canadian people in the Canadian parliament. I was surprised that he did not dwell more strongly upon the usefulness of the Senate as a protection for the smaller provinces and for minorities in this country. I lay stress upon this point to show my people and this House my consistency to the expressions I have already uttered in reference to the British North American Act. Last session I expressed my profound admiration for our constitution, and I uttered the hope that its fundamental principles would never be altered, more particularly in reference to representation in this parliament which I believe to be the base upon which this parliament has been erected and without which there would have been no confederation. When I consider the position of the Senate in reference to the protection of minorities and of smaller bodies in the Dominion of Canada I realize that it has made possible the confederation of which we are so proud, and the parliament of Canada, both House of Commons and Senate, of which every Canadian is proud. If we were to abolish the Senate to-day the people of the smaller provinces as well as the minorities would not have the representation in parliament to which they have been given the right by the fact of their coming into federation. If it had been proposed that the parliament of Canada should consist of the House of Commons alone with representation by population, confederation could never have been brought about. The representatives of the smaller provinces of the east, the maritime provinces, would never have consented to the framing of the constitution upon such a principle. They would not have found in one House with representation by population, the protection to which they are entitled, owing to the preponderance of the west, of which they were as sure then as we are now and therefore we must retain, for the protection of the smaller provinces, smaller bodies and minorities, the Senate which to a great extent has been created for that purpose, or at least so framed as to meet that particular purpose with others.

I do not say it has been created simply and solely for the minorities, but I do say that the constitution of the House of Commons, such as it is to-day, would not have been accepted by the people of the smaller provinces had not the fathers of confederation given them protection in the Senate, against the dangers by which they would be faced in the future in the House of Commons, and a guarantee of permanency of this constitution in the future. The representation of the Canadian people is not solely representation in the House of Commons or in the Senate, it is a dual representation connected together by the terms of confederation in which the minorities or bodies not able to get the necessary protection in this House have been shown and told they would get it in the Senate. The fathers of confederation, Sir Leonard Tilley himself, who represented New Brunswick and brought it into confederation on the condition that the Intercolonial Railway was built, would have come back from Quebec and London without the Intercolonial Railway if representation by population had not been qualified by equal representation in the Senate.

My hon. friend from Lincoln says that we are not better represented in the Senate than we are in the House of Commons, but it is a fact that the smaller provinces have to-day as much representation in the Senate as the larger provinces. The fathers of confederation gave the maritime provinces twenty-four senators, the same number that they gave to the large province of Ontario and to the province of Quebec; and if you abolished the Senate you would deprive the smaller provinces and the minorities in this country of that representation and protection. For that reason, and that reason alone, I would stand firm for the retention of the Senate. I would not say that some reform of the Senate may not be necessary, but the reforms that are generally proposed by the newspapers and by a certain section of public opinion do not commend themselves to my mind. It has been proposed that the Senate should be made elective rather than appointive. I believe the appointive system is the only system which can properly and judicially express the desires and sentiments of the fathers of confederation. It is the only system to ensure having in the Senate a body of men in whom sentiments of wisdom and charity can be found combined. Make the Senate elective and you will call upon the people to have elections every two or three years instead of every three or four years as at present. The views of the Senate would then be subject to the opinions and sentiments of their electors as well as the views of the House of Commons. We could not then expect from the senators the same wisdom and mature judgment that we can from men who are not subject to the sentiments of their constituents. My hon. friend seems to have sufficient confidence in his own judgment to propose a radical change in our constitution, but I consider, Mr. Speaker, that the constitution that governs the Canadian people to-day is the result of greater wisdom than the constitutions of many nations with much greater population, and I say again that if you make the Senate elective you do not meet the wishes nor the designs of the fathers of confederation, nor do you meet the requirements of the country for the future.

Again, in making the Senate elective, you do away with the very object the fathers of confederation had in view in establishing the Senate, namely, the protection of minorities and of the smaller provinces. It would be difficult, in an elective Senate, to obtain representation of the rights of minorities by the very men who could best represent those rights; whereas under the present system that power and responsibility rests upon the government. It seems to me that it is better to leave that burden upon the government of the day than it would be to place it upon the people, and thus avoid cause for the discussion of questions of race and religion during the elections when the people should be called upon to elect the best men as their representatives without consideration of such questions. It would perhaps be impossible under the elective system to secure a Senate in that happy position with reference to the representation of minorities that our present Senate has reached. I remember some years ago reading a very happy speech of Sir Richard Cartwright, Minister of Trade and Commerce, in which he spoke of the representation of minorities, and explained that up to that moment the province of Ontario, with a large Catholic minority, had never been able to send to the House of Commons a sufficient number of members to represent that minority with dignity and justice, but that the government, by means of their appointive power, had been able to give the Catholic minority of the province of Ontario that representation, and, therefore, that protection to which they were entitled in the Senate. If you made the Senate elective, the minority in Ontario and the minorities in other provinces, as well as the smaller provinces of the Dominion, would be deprived of the representation and the protection which we are now striving to maintain. I do not wish to occupy the time of this House further than simply to make that point, that if only for the protection of the smaller provinces and the minorities in this country, I shall certainly have to vote against the resolution of my hon. friend.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I propose to make only a very few remarks upon this question. I do not intend to argue either for or against the resolution to any great extent, beyond expressing my own personal views after an experience of some years in parliamentary life. The question which we have before the House to-day is one which has been discussed more than once in this chamber, but I have always noticed that the principal speakers who take part in the discussion have been the younger members of the House. The question of the reformation of the Senate has been discussed in the Senate more than once, and a great deal of valuable information has been collected and put on record there, which I think might be read with interest by the members of the Commons and by the people of the country as well.

The hon. gentleman said that his resolution led to something. No doubt it does. It leads to death, to extinction, to abolition, to annihilation. But we all learn by the experience of the past; and if history has taught us anything in the last two or three centuries, it has taught us that every intelligent, civilized country in the world, which enjoys constitutional government in any form has two legislative bodies. That, to my mind, is a very strong argument. At the time of confederation, even in my early youth, I regarded the institution of the Senate as one of the best features of our Confederation Act. Take up any of the treaties on this question and what is the information you will there find? Take the list of those countries which have two Chambers. We have first Austro-Hungary, undoubtedly a great country. Then we have Belgium, Denmark, Germany and the principal states of the German empire. Then we have Italy, the Netherlands, Portugal, Roumania, Spain, Sweden and Norway, Switzerland, France—that ancient and chivalrous country—the United States and practically the British empire, including the Dominion of Canada. Of the countries which are an example to the contrary, there are only one or two. Surely such an array of leading countries, with the wisdom of centuries crystallized in parliamentary government, ought to have some weight. Surely their example ought to appeal to us with some force as an argument in favour of a form of government such as the one we have adopted, and which during the past forty years has been apparently a great success. It has been said, and correctly said, that our Senate has not fulfilled all that we expected of it. But that, to my mind, is not an argument for its abolition. Many of the best laws on our statutes have not accomplished the objects for which they were enacted. But would that be a reason for abolishing them? Not at all. It is a reason for amending them and making them adequate to meet the situation, and that is the course we should follow in this instance. Why not do the same with the Senate? Why not reform the Senate and bring it in conformity with the spirit of the age and the sentiment of the country? Let us apply ourselves to the amending rather than the abolishing of the Senate. The hon. gentleman said he was rather attracted by the trite saying given utterance to in the Toronto 'Star': 'Either mend or end.'

Mr. LANCASTER. I did not take it from the 'Star.' It was said by the hon. member from South Huron.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, that has rather a uphonious sounding poetical rhythm, and appeals to us as does an attractive musical symphony, but it certainly cannot appeal to any one's sound judgment. My hon. friend is in favour of a plebiscite. To my mind, a plebiscite is contrary to the very spirit of the British constitution. The plebiscite supposes that the parliament does not represent the people, but that there is outside of parliament a people which is hostile to it and which may be appealed to on every act parliament does at any moment during the parliamentary term. To my mind that is a reversal of the principle of constitutional government. We in parliament represent the people during the term for which we are elected, and no one has any right, outside the constitutional limits, to set parliament aside and appeal directly to the people on any issue. The principle of plebiscite has never been recognized in the British form or monarchial form of government. Once the people send their representatives to parliament, then it is the duty of the government to submit its policy to the representatives of the people in parliament, and the decision of parliament is that of the people, who have given them their mandate, and there can be no appeal to the general body of the electors, except as provided by the constitution.

We are told that the sentiment of the country is opposed to the Senate. Well, the Hon. Mr. Blake said once in this House that a plebiscite would amount to very little unless it were accompanied by such arguments, information and collection of data as would enable the electors to pronounce a reasoned judgment on the question at issue. But what have we from the country to-day? We have not a reasoned judgment, we have but the accidental expression of opinion due to one incident or another, and not a matured judgment following out a well understood line of reasoning. The more I see of the conduct of the Senate, the more I am convinced that what is required is not abolition but reformation in order to bring it into harmony with present conditions and the needs of the situation to-day. What has been the greatest objection to the Senate from its inception? It has been its tendency to yield to the exercise of party influence, to be a political rather than an independent body. The Senate is valuable in proportion as it leaves politics out and gives its impartial judgment, regardless of political leanings or feelings. And to the extent that it fails to do this, its usefulness is destroyed. When the senators take part in party caucuses, when they unite with their political friends in this House in devising ways and means to defeat the other party, they are helping on their own destruction. We should keep the Senate entirely distinct and separate from any party affiliations with this House. As soon as a member of this House or a gentleman in any walk of life has been called to the Senate, he should cast aside his party politics and exercise his best judgment to work out the problems of state, without regard to the political party to which he was formerly allied. Hon. gentlemen who to day represent the government, were wont to declare years ago that the Senate was a useless body and that when they got into office, they would either reform or abolish it. Surely the right hon. the leader of the government is strong enough and capable enough and sufficiently resourceful to amend the Senate so as to make it useful. I can only say that, while he told the people twelve years ago that he would do that, he is very slow in proposing his remedy, especially considering that he has shown the absolute need of it and is declared to be so able and so resourceful. It is no wonder that there is a clamour among the people for the abolition of the Senate, when they find that the great man, with all his satellites around him, is unable to propose an adequate remedy for existing evils. These hon. gentlemen themselves are responsible for the present position of the Senate in public esteem. They have appointed only politicians to the Senate, and very poor ones at that. As soon as politicians on that side have been discarded by the people, as soon as they have been declared unworthy to represent the people in this chamber, they are thrust into our Canadian House of Lords. And this hon. gentlemen opposite call 'reforming the Senate.' If we can find no better use for the Senate than to make it a refuge for politicians discarded by the people, it would be better to abolish it altogether. But I am very far from accepting this view: I believe that we can reform the Senate and make it a useful and a popular body. After watching the Senate carefully for thirty-one years from a place in this House, my strong conviction is that it would be an unfortunate day for Canada when the Senate was abolished. What we need is to reform the Senate so as to bring it into harmony with public sentiment and fit it to meet the needs of the country. When this is done, there will be no more clamour for the abolition of the Senate.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. H. H. MILLER (South Grey.) A little over a year ago, in this House, I placed upon the Order Paper a resolution in favour of the abolition of the Senate, and spoke to that resolution. When I thus spoke I did not do so thoughtlessly, but after having given to the matter a great deal of careful consideration. I had listened attentively to every argument and expression of opinion that I had been able to hear, either within this House or without from men of great experience, from wise men, and from men with perhaps less experience and men not so wise; I had read everything easily obtainable in the newspapers or in books bearing on the subject, and weighing carefully all the arguments pro and con, I concluded that it would be to the profit, to the advantage of the people of Canada to do away with our second chamber. Naturally a subject in which I took so much interest at that time has not been absent from my mind in the year that has intervened. I have thought of it considerably since then, and I am to-day of the opinion, as I was a year ago, that it would be to our advantage to do away with the Canadian Senate. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) speaking to-night, said that with his long parliamentary experience he had observed that the members of parliament who from time to time have advocated either some reform of the Senate or its abolition, have been among the younger members of the House of Commons. That may be true, yet I call the attention of that hon. gentleman and of the members of this House generally, to the fact that the Hon. John Bright, in Birmingham in 1884 speaking upon this matter, said:

> When I was young I read books on this question and was strongly in favour of two Houses. I confess that without now having a very strong opinion one way or the other, I am not so bound up with the belief in the necessity of two Houses.

There we have at least one illustrious exception to the rule that it is the younger and inexperienced men who are in doubt as to the necessity of a second chamber. I think it will be generally admitted that we are not in favour of the Senate as we have had it since confederation, and as we have it to-day; I think it is the general opinion of the Canadian people that the Senate ought to be amended, if not abolished. But is it not somewhat significant that no two persons seem to agree to-day upon the method that should be employed in amending the Senate? They may agree that there ought to be an amendment, that there ought to be some change, but no two persons seem able to agree upon what change should be made. Nay, I can go further than that, I think that no one person appears to advocate any method of reforming the Senate with any degree of assurance and confidence. Falteringly, hesitatingly, men will come forward and suggest some amendment, not guaranteeing, in so far as men can guarantee, any thing of the kind, that it will be satisfactory, but suggesting it as something that may perhaps be better than that which we have. Men seem to go rather upon the principle that we ought to choose the lesser of two evils, and that possibly what they suggest may prove to be better than that which we have.

It may be said, it has I think been said to-night, that the Senate is all right constituted as it is, if those who have the making of the appointments would be more careful than they are in their choice. I will admit that perhaps appointments to the Senate are not always the best that could be made. I am willing to admit that sometimes perhaps men are appointed to the Senate under the present system that are not the best available men. I am not here to-night to show any feeling of animosity either towards the Senate or the senators, and I am not here to say that any large number of the senators are incapable men, or men that ought not to occupy places in that House, if there is to be a second chamber. I was very glad to listen not long ago to a speech from the hon. the leader of the opposition in which that gentleman, while finding fault with some of the appointments that have been made under the present government and the present administration, agreed that the large number of appointments had been of gentlemen eminently well qualified to fill the positions to which they were called; in fact, I think he said that he agreed that the majority of the appointments that had been made had been good appointments. I think that if the Senate is objected to today, it is not largely, or in the main, because of the character or qualifications, or lack of qualifications, of the persons appointed.

If we to-day are not satisfied with the Senate as we have it, it is equally obvious that in Great Britain they are dissatisfied, and have long been dissatisfied, with the second chamber they have. It may be said that we ought not to act rashly, hastily, in this matter, that we have only had a Senate for some 42 years, and that 42 years is after all a short time in the life of a nation. That is true. Yet having had a Senate for that length of time, having been able to watch them at work, having been able to weigh their acts, we ought surely to be able intelligently and in a sane way to come to a reasonable conclusion as to whether the Senate has been to us an advantage or a disadvantage, whether it has been to us a profit or a loss. As I have remarked, if we are dissatisfied with our second chamber as we have it, in Great Britain they are equally dissatisfied, and have been for many centuries, with the upper chamber they have had. I noticed two or three days ago a despatch in our Canadian newspapers under the heading, 'To abolish the Lords,' and it reads:

> Plymouth, Feb. 13.—Mr. Pease, Chief Liberal Whip in the House of Commons, in a speech here last night announced that the government would appeal to the country before many months for a mandate to abolish the veto of the House of Lords.

It goes without saying that if in Great Britain they abolish the veto of the House of Lords, they abolish the House of Lords itself, in so far as it is or can be a factor in the government of the country. I think it means much that the chief whip of the Liberal party of Great Britain announces in a public speech that the great party to which he belongs, the party entrusted for the time being with the government of the country, is contemplating an appeal to the people by whose votes they are in power, for a mandate to abolish and do away with the House of Lords.

But I am told that the second chamber in Great Britain, the House of Lords, is very different from our Canadian Senate. It is true, there are some points of difference. Yet I contend to-night, and I think I am right in saying, that the points of similarity between our second chamber and the second chamber of Great Britain are much more striking than the points of difference. The hon. gentleman for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) speaking to his resolution to-day, pointed out one difference. He said that if we should do away with our second chamber there is still a check upon the House of Commons, that there remains the veto power in the King in Council in Great Britain. I do not attach very much weight or very much importance to that argument, while I agree in the main with the hon. member for Lincoln. It is true that theoretically and upon paper there is the veto power existing in the Sovereign of Britain.

But that veto power has not been exercised in the past to any extent and it would be better, safer and wiser that it should not be very much in evidence in time to come. I point out, however, that there is another difference between our second chamber and the House of Lords in Britain, as I pointed out in a speech on this subject that I delivered a year ago. There is more elasticity in the House of Lords than there is in our Canadian Senate. If a measure pass the House of Commons in Britain it may be possible for the House of Lords to thwart the will of the people and check the legislation of the House of Commons, as it is possible with our Senate to do the same thing in Canada, only that in Britain they have this source of relief that they can increase and add to the number of their peers in order practically to make them carry out the will of the people and concur in whatever is done in the lower House. I cited an instance when I spoke on the subject before. Let me cite it again. In 1832, when the Reform Bill was before the British House of Commons, Earl Grey, then Prime Minister of Great Britain, refused to assume the leadership of the party to which he belonged and to take control of the Commons until the sovereign, His Majesty the King, then reigning in Britain, had given him the assurance that he would, if necessary, give his consent to the addition to the number of peers until the House of Lords would concur in whatever the House of Commons would do in the matter.

I have said that the points of similarity as between the Upper Chamber here and the Upper Chamber in Britain are greater than the points of difference. Mr. Charles G. D. Roberts, in his history of Canada, says:

> In the constitution of the Senate it was sought to make it correspond with the House of Lords as far as was possible in a purely democratic country like Canada.

I have no doubt, in fact, I think it is conceded, that the fathers of confederation tried to give us a Canadian Senate as nearly as possible the counterpart of the British House of Lords.

If then, there is a general discontent and dissatisfaction with the Senate as we have it, what shall we do? Obviously we can do one of three things. We must retain our Senate as we have it, or we must seek to reform it if we can and if it is impossible to reform it the only thing remaining for us to do is to do away with it altogether.

We, as sensible, progressive men, having the interests of the country at heart, if we conclude that the Senate as it is is not as it ought to be, will seek to end it or mend it. Shall we end it? Shall we do away with the Senate? If the decision of the matter were left to the vote of the people unquestionably the people would vote for the abolition of the Canadian Senate; but again I agree with my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that unless we have an educational campaign in which this whole question would be argued before the people they would not be in a position to intelligently vote upon the question. I anticipate that a majority of the members of this House will not to-day vote, if we are to have a vote, in favour of putting an end to the Senate. I believe that the vote to-day will be in favour of retaining the Senate; and why? I spoke a few days ago to one of the most experienced, to one of the most intelligent and to one of the most honest members of this House, if there be any degree of honesty among members of the House of Commons, and he said to me: I must admit that I am too much of an old Tory to advocate the abolition of the Senate. I spoke to another member of this House, not of quite such great experience, but a man of just as great intelligence, a man of just as great honesty, and he said: I am not radical enough to vote for the abolition of the Senate. Now, Sir, is it not true that whether we call ourselves Grits or Tories, Conservatives or Liberals, the real reason why so many of us will vote against the abolition of the Senate is that old feeling of Toryism, whether we placard ourselves as belonging to one party or the other, that old feeling of conservatism, that dread of letting go the things we have had and of replacing them by things that we have not tried? If we amend the Senate, how will we seek to amend it? Will we seek to amend the Senate by making it less active than it is; surely not. I do not agree with those people, with those newspapers that say that the Senate is a place in which people may comfortably go to sleep. I do not believe in the remark which, I think, is, may I say, a silly remark, that the Senate is composed of a lot of old women. I think that is not an argument, that these are not expressions that the facts warrant. Yet, I think, that no one will argue that there should be less of activity and more of lethargy than there is in our present chamber. If we then will not seek to amend the Senate by making it less active shall we seek to amend it by making it more active, by giving to it more life, more energy, more vim and vigour and shall we undertake to amend the Senate by giving to it a greater consciousness of the power it possesses or greater power to be conscious of? I hope that no rearrangement or reform of the Senate will be a reform along that line. Let me quote the opinion of the late Hon. Lord Salisbury in that connection. Lord Salisbury said:

> It is because most of those who sit in the House of Lords do not themselves select the profession of politics as a thing which they love but come to it by the operation of external causes, that we have a body that brings to the consideration of political matters a feeling which is described as one of languor, but which I would describe as one of good nature and easy-going tolerance, which enables them to accommodate themselves to the difficult part of playing second to the House of Commons.

As I have said before, it may be contended that the House of Lords in Great Britain differs considerably from our Canadian Senate, but that does not make any difference to the argument. The state of affairs in one chamber is exactly similar to the state of affairs in the other; that is, there is in each one of these second chambers that feeling of languor, described by Lord Salisbury as a feeling of good nature and easy going tolerance that enables the Upper Chamber in either case to play second to the House of Commons. Realizing that to be the case, what did Lord Salisbury advocate? Did he advocate a reform by which there should be an Upper Chamber, the members of which Upper Chamber should be imbued with greater life, greater energy and greater activity? No, on the contrary, he deprecated any such change and advocated a continuance of things as they were. Listen again to his words when he said:

Depend upon it, if you ever succeed in so altering the character of this house that it consists of determined politicians, who always attend all debates and attach the same weight and importance that are attached to their opinions by those who sit in the House of Commons, you will have pronouced the doom of our present system of government, you will be imposing upon the House of Lords a place in the constitution which will be fatal to the constitution as it exists.

I beg humbly to concur in this opinion expressed by so experienced, so able a parliamentarian as the late Lord Salisbury. I say that if you amend the Senate to give to it a greater degree of energy, of vigour and of life you create a second chamber that is not enabled longer either by good nature or otherwise to play second to the House of Commons and you will then have two chambers that will be actuated by a feeling of rivalry, a feeling of jealousy, each one endeavouring to take precedence over the other and you will have them as combatants.

But, it is said: We will reform the Senate by electing the senators rather than by appointing them for life.

The fathers of confederation have been spoken of to-night. As we review the history of the past forty-two years we cannot but admire the sagacity, the intelligence, the forethought, the wisdom, the political ability of the fathers of confederation. How little there is in all the great work they did which we can adversely criticise? The constitution of our Canadian Senate was considered by them with great attention. It is true that some of the fathers of confederation, notably Hon. Edward Blake, were opposed to life appointments, and yet, after giving grave and careful thought and attention to the whole question, the fathers of confederation decided that we would have the best possible upper chamber if its members were appointed rather than elected and the appointments were for life. It is now sought to have this House declare that the framers of our constitution were wrong in this conclusion, and that it would have been better to elect than to appoint members of the Senate. Let us consider well before making such a change. What benefit will we achieve by it? You tell me it will be better to elect than to appoint our senators because then they will be responsible to the people. But, Sir, I believe the idea of the fathers of confederation was to create a Senate that would not be responsible to the people, and I believe that one and the main thing that has led the people of Canada to look with whatever degree of favour they have looked on the Canadian Senate was the very fact that the Senate was independent of the people, and they have been happy to believe and to think that, we have in the Canadian Senate a body of men not responsible to the people but independent of them and that if any sudden gust of popular passion, any great and sudden wave of public feeling should precipitate legislation that might perhaps afterwards turn out to be rash and unprofitable, we would have this great independent body between the public and ourselves, legislating for that which would perhaps not be acceptable for the moment but would be best for Canada in the long run. Elect your Senate and you take away that last remaining vestige of strength, that last remaining virtue in the upper chamber as a part of our constitutional system. Again you elect your Senate and your House of Commons; you have one body sitting in one chamber and another in a separate chamber and these two elected bodies are to make our laws. They are elected by the same people, why then place a partition between them? Why not put them in the same chamber? They have power and position from the same source, it seems a strange inconsistency to maintain the two chambers similarly situated and deriving their being from the same source of life. But you say we will elect the senators not for four or five or even ten years but for fifteen years and from larger constituencies. If it be better to elect members of your Senate for ten or fifteen years, why would it not be better to elect the members of the House of Commons for a longer term, for ten or fifteen years. But then you say we will elect them for larger constituencies. Again I ask what benefit will result from that? And of necessity, if you are to elect your senators, you must elect them from larger constituencies or you will have the same number of senators as members of the House of Commons. which would not be tolerated. It is said that there is a great deal of corruption attending the election of members to the House of Commons. I refuse to believe, I do not believe that there is anything like the amount of bribery and corruption in our elections that we are sometimes told and that many people believe. I believe that by far the larger number of members on both sides of the House secure and retain their seats not as the result of corruption, bribery or dishonesty, but as the result of the wishes and honest votes of honest people, honestly given. But, be that as it may, we will admit that there is some degree of corruption sometimes and in some places in the election of members to the lower House; it is not necessary for the sake of my argument to decide whether that corruption be more or less, but if there be any corruption in the election of members of the House of Commons is it not likely and does it not follow as a matter of course that in electing members for ten or fifteen years for larger constituencies, you would open the way and create temptation for a much greater degree of corruption and bribery? A man seeking election to the House of Commons, be he never so bad, is limited in the amount that he can spend corruptly because he knows that if he remains in public life he will have to run another election in four or five years. But if he is seeking election for a term of ten or fifteen years, he knows that if he wins one election he will not have to submit himself to the votes of the people for a much longer period; he will know what his indemnity or emolument will be for the longer period and will be so enabled to spend a great deal more than he would in an election for a shorter period of time. Again in a large constituency the man or men seeking the votes of the people will necessarily not have the advantage of a personal acquaintance with the people and the people will not have the advantage of personal acquaintance with the candidate. Wherever there is a less acquaintance there is less interest, and where there is less personal interest in the candidates the people are much more susceptible to the influence of corruption.

But, Sir, I see a greater possible evil from larger constituencies. Be a man never so honest, be a man never so inclined to run his elections with perfect honesty, as a matter of necessity he must be a man with large leisure and means who can afford to carry on an election campaign in a district three or four times as great as the constituencies for the Commons, and as a result we would have a Senate composed almost exclusively of wealthy men. I have no feeling of antipathy to wealthy men. I believe it is essential that we should have in the House of Commons and the Senate while we have a Senate a certain number of men of large means. I think it well that in either chamber we should have some men who are able to look upon every question from every standpoint. We have in this chamber men who are able to look at questions from a certain standpoint because of locality, others able to look at them from another standpoint because of their vocation, others from a different standpoint because they are men of moderate means; and it is necessary also that we should have men in our law-making bodies who will be able to look at certain questions from certain standpoints because they are men of large means. There is a personal experience and knowledge that can come to men only from the fact that they have made and taken care of and invested large funds of which they are the possessors. But if we have a second chamber composed exclusively of men of means, class legislation must inevitably be the result. The man of wealth, I care not how he acquires his wealth, whether by inheritance, the sweat of his brow, or the labour of his mind, is by the very possession of his wealth removed from and kept out of touch with the man of moderate means, the ordinary citizen. The man of large wealth is a man of different interests, of different sympathies from the ordinary citizen of Canada, and therefore I say it would be a disaster and a calamity if we should resort to any means of establishing a Senate composed exclusively or almost exclusively of men of large means.

It has been suggested that our senators be appointed by the legislative assemblies of the different provinces. Again I ask, what advantage would result from making that change? It is sometimes said that our Senate is too partisan, that party feeling is too evident in our upper chamber that our Senate ought to be judicial in its character and our senators ought to bear more the character and the demeanour of judges than of partisan politicians. I admit that under the present system of appointing senators, men as they pass into the Senate do not divest themselves of the feeling of partisanship that has characterized them in their earlier life. But I would like to know how this would be remedied by having senators appointed by the various local legislatures. A legislature in which the Reform party was in power would be likely to appoint Reformers or a majority of Reformers, and a legislature in which the Conservative party was in power would be likely to appoint Conservatives or a majority of Conservatives; and these men would carry with them the same partisan feeling as the men appointed to the Senate under the system we have to-day. It is true, we are not likely to have at any one time the legislatures of all the provinces of one political complexion. We are likely to have some with the Liberals in power and some with the Conservatives in power; and under that system we would not have so large a partisan majority in the Senate as we have to-day. But that would make little or no practical difference. Have your senators elected by the local legislatures, and you will still have partisans and a partisan majority. Though the majority may be smaller, the party feeling will only be more intense and acute than it is to-day.

Again, if you appoint your senators through the local legislatures, you will create and perpetuate here at Ottawa, in connection with our federal government, a provincial feeling. Sometimes in this House of Commons, and it may be sometimes in the Senate, we are divided too much along provincial lines; we become too provincial. It is better that we should come to realize that we are more than a bundle of provinces, that we are a federacy, that we are a great Dominion, and that provincial feelings should be as much as possible subdued. But we should be perpetuating that very provincial feeling which we ought to avoid by appointing our senators through the provincial legislatures.

It has been suggested too that we should appoint some of our senators from the universities. I have no doubt that if we did so, we should secure some very excellent men; and yet I ask if there would not be a danger that such men, while very excellent theorists, would fail as practical men of affairs.

It is urged again that we require a Senate for the protection of the weaker provinces and for the protection of minorities. The hon. member for Lincoln pointed out that never in the history of Canada since confederation could we cite an instance of the Senate having been a protector of the rights either of minorities or of the weaker provinces. I will go further and say that not only have we no instance of the Senate having acted as such a protection, but it is impossible, utterly impossible, that the Senate, constituted as it is to-day, or constituted in any way that I have heard anybody propose to amend or reform it, could protect the rights of minorities or the rights of the weaker provinces. I say again that the protection of the weaker provinces and of the minorities in this country must be found in that spirit of fairplay which commonly prevails in the House of Commons—British fair play, or Canadian fair play,—which is composed of exactly the same elements as British fair play.

Why do we want a Senate? One member of this House with whom I was talking on this subject a few days ago, said: 'I would vote at once for the abolition of the Senate if it were not for the fact that every other civilized country in the world has an Upper Chamber;' and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), to-night, in the short speech which he addressed to the House, gave that as the strong point of his argument. I think the hon. member to whom I have referred was right. When we begin to investigate and consider this great subject, it behooves us to realize that every other civilized country has an upper chamber, and for that reason we ought to approach the subject with great caution. We ought not rashly to conclude to do away with an upper chamber in this country while other civilized countries retain theirs. And yet, if after 42 years of knowledge of the effects of our Senate, we investigate this question through and through, from side to side, from top to bottom, we ought to be able to come to a reasonable and logical conclusion as to whether or not the Canadian Senate, on its merits, has been of advantage to us or not, and should not be guided in our action by what other countries have or have not done. I would be willing, Sir, that this Canada of ours should sometimes lead, and not always be content to follow. I am willing that Canada shall sometimes set an example rather than always seek to follow the example of some other country. If we lead in this matter, it will not be the first important matter in which Canada has led and set an example to the world. On the great question of the abolition of slavery, Canada set the example to Great Britain and the United States so long ago that I believe only a small proportion of our people are aware that slavery ever existed in Canada.

It is said that we require a Senate as a wholesome and needed check upon the hasty legislation of the House of Commons. I ask again the question which was asked by the hon. member for Lincoln: what is there that makes the Canadian Senate competent to put a check on the hasty legislation of the House of Commons? If we are rash, if we are hasty in the laws we pass, what advantages do the members of the Senate possess to make them competent persons to revise and improve our work, to make perfect our imperfect legislation? Have they any superior merit, by reason of birth, of the greatness of their possessions, or of education, to give them the right or the competency to amend the legislation passed by this House? I am glad to be able to agree on this point with so eminent, shrewd and sagacious a statesman as the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, who in a recent speech delivered in this Chamber said that he attached no importance or very little importance to the Senate as a needed check on the legislation of the House of Commons. I believe that the abolition of the Canadian Senate, if that would make any difference at all, would tend to make the House of Commons more careful. If we realized that there was no check by virtue of the Senate over us, no excuse, no blame which we could attach to any other body, and that we alone were responsible for the laws we enacted, that would be a great incentive to greater care in our legislation. Mr. Willison, in his biography of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, says:

'Moderation is the keynote of all his career and the secret of all his achievements. He learned at the threshold of his public life that a statesman must resist popular clamour and stand impervious to momentary gusts of popular passion, and that all enduring achievement must be based in the reason rather than in the emotions of the people.'

I submit that a leader of the government, having his characteristic moderation, his fairness, his force of character, enabling him to resist any sudden gust of popular passion and clamour, is a greater protection against hasty, rash and unwise legislation than we can possibly find in a second chamber; and I trust that whatever party may be in power, it will be the good fortune of Canada to have a man of these characteristics, this ability and strength of character, to lead the government. But the strongest check we can possibly have upon hasty legislation in this House must be the strong check of public opinion. And that is more potent against hasty, rash and unwise legislation to-day than it ever has been at any previous time. Public opinion will be a more potent check a year hence than it is at present, just as it is more potent to-day than it was a year ago. Why is it a more effective check to-day than it was in years gone by? First, because of the superior education of the people, because of the better system of public schools, because our people are growing more prosperous and financially stronger, because the fathers and mothers of the boys and girls of Canada to-day are able to send their children to school more regularly and for a longer time than in previous years. We have to-day not only our young men and women better educated than were their fathers and mothers, but we have public libraries in every large centre and circulating libraries in almost every neighbourhood and in connection with almost every public school. With a better education of the people, with a ready access to printed books and newspapers more widely read than ever before, cheaper in their subscription price and more common in their distribution ; with greater transportation facilities and a better mail service, what happens in the House of Commons to-day is known and discussed by the people at their breakfast table to-morrow morning. All these things tend to arrest public attention and to create public opinion and make it the most healthy and potent check we can possibly have on hasty and unwise legislation.

I am not going to say that the Senate has never accomplished anything for good, that it has never done anything for the weal of the Canadian people. It would be an unwise and untenable position to take, to say that a Senate composed of some eighty or ninety men of education, experience and ability, and enjoying all the power they do, can have accomplished nothing for the good of the people. That is not a contention I would make, but what I simply say is this, that the benefits we have obtained from our Senate have not corresponded with the cost and disadvantage of maintaining it. Let me not be taken to mean that I am putting the financial cost of maintaining that body against the good we have received from it. I do not take that ground, because if, as a result of the existence of a second chamber, it can be clearly and unmistakably proven that we have better laws on our statute-books for the protection of the rights, liberties and privileges of people, the better guarding of life and better protection of property, the question of cost is one comparatively insignificant. When you tell me that we have better laws but that it has cost us so much to make them better, and then ask me to point out what is the profit or loss balance, I say that is too difficult a problem for any one to undertake. If you prove that, aside from its financial cost, the Senate has been a benefit to the country I have nothing more to say, but when we show that it has not been of any advantage, then we have the right to consider the matter of its financial cost.

In the arguments to which I have listened in favour of a second chamber, I have heard no one say: Look at what the Senate has acomplished; look at what it will do. The arguments in its behalf consist mostly of this: Think of what might have taken place if we had not had a Senate, and think of what may possibly take place in the future if we do away with it. These people appear like a cowardly man, afraid to take a journey in the dark lest something evil might cross his pathway. He knows of no such evil. He knows of no enemy whom he is likely to meet, but he hesitates lest some misfortune might overtake him, without having the slightest idea whence or how it might come. It seems to me that such is the position we take when we fear to abolish our Canadian Senate. I suggested, when I spoke on this question twelve months ago that we do not abolish our Senate by one fell swoop, but that we make no further appointments until the number of senators decreases by death or resignation or otherwise until the number should be reduced to say fifty. Then abolish that body completely and allow the remaining senators to retain their title for life with an annuity of say $2,000. That, however, is a mere question of detail. It seems to me that we are in the position of a boy on the brink of a stream. He hesitates to take the plunge. He knows the exhilirating, wholesome influences that will follow, but rather than take the plunge he stands shivering and faltering on the bank. In like manner we suffer injury while we stand halting and shivering instead of taking the plunge which will be to the people of Canada a decided benefit.

There are certain arguments which appeal to me in favour of continuing the Senate. They are the pleasant faces and the fine characters of some of my friends on this side of the House and on the other, some of whom I would like to see enjoying the honours and privileges of a seat in that body. These sentiments appeal to me, not only because of mv friends on both sides of the House but because of many men outside who have fought the battles of their country, who have suffered, it may be, for their country's sake, who have lost their business connections and made great sacrifices for their country. Such men as these I would like to see enjoying the honours, profits and privileges of a place in the Canadian Senate, but to harbour such thoughts and be influenced by them, I would be allowing my feelings and sentiments to get the better of my judgment; and considering the matter carefully, weighing all the arguments pro and con, I am strongly and decidedly in favour of the resolution for the abolition of our second chamber.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin). Mr. Speaker, the question now under discussion is one which has attracted the attention of parliament almost since the time of confederation. There have been times when it seemed that it would be possible for us to accomplish something in relation to this matter, but at other times there has been little prospect of accomplishing anything. But, as we had this agitation in the last parliament, and as it seems probable that it will continue in the present parliament, I think it is the duty of the representatives of the people to place themselves on record that their constituents may know where they stand. I venture to say that no question to come before the House during the present session will attract more attention than the one which we now have under discussion. This question was agitated not only during last parliament, but during the recent election, and it is the subject of general discussion in the country at the present time. The people believe that the Senate has not accomplished the work that was expected of it at the time of confederation. Holding that view, a view I have held for a long time, I am entirely in accord with the mover of this resolution. I hope the hon. gentleman will stand to his guns and that all hon. members will be ready to declare their position, if not by voice, then by vote, that the electors may see their record and know what position they hold on this question.

The fathers of confederation showed great wisdom in handling the problems with which they had to deal. This is proven by the fact that only in two or three respects would we alter the British North America Act, even if the duty were committed to us of enacting it again at this time. I believe that it should be provided that parliament should run for five years, thus depriving the government of the power to bring a parliament to an end at a time to suit their own interests regardless of the interest of the country. Of course, safeguards would be required in case of a government not being able to carry on the administration of public affairs for the full term of parliament. In such a case the Governor General should have power to dissolve the House. I believe that this could be done without danger to the public interest. Our political experience shows that it is not the strong Liberal or the strong Tory, the man who votes according to his party, whose influence dissolves the House; it is the independent voter whose influence decides these matters. Therefore, I believe it would be better that we should petition the Imperial parliament to so amend the British North America Act as to provide for a full five-years' term for parliament. Another change required is in respect of our second chamber. At the time of confederation the great statesmen who prepared our present constitution—and I think we may safely say they were all great statesmen—differed widely in their views on this question of a second chamber. George Brown, the advanced reformer, believed strongly in an appointive Senate. Mr. Blake and many other reformers held different views. The Conservatives also were much divided on this question. After much deliberation a decision was reached in favour of an appointive Senate. I believe that, if we review the record of the Senate, we can come to no conclusion but that that body has not met the requirements of the situation or come up to the expectations formed by the people of the Dominion. I believe that if the work were to be done over again, opinion would be overwhelmingly in favour of trusting our affairs to one chamber composed of men elected by and responsible to the people. I believe that the people to-day regard the decision reached by the fathers of confederation in relation to the Senate to have been a mistake. We are told that practically every civilized nation has a second chamber. I can well believe that; in the older countries of Europe it was thought wise to have a chamber whose members could be trusted to be true to the Throne and which would be less easily moved than the majority of the people. I can imagine that even in Canada, nearly half a century ago, a second chamber might have seemed necessary. But I believe that the people as a whole are quite satisfied to-day that the affairs of the country would be safe in the hands of a legislature composed of only one chamber. They believe that if the people were left to elect their representatives they would be more careful, and, as a result, we should have better legislation, legislation better fitted to meet the requirements of the mass of the people than we have today. If we look at the history of the Houses of Lords in England we find that reforms have in many cases been wrung out of that second chamber by the representatives of the people. We find that many measures which were opposed at the time by the Lords are to-day the laws of the land, proving beyond a doubt that the people can be trusted. So I say that to-day it would be an evil if the Senate of Canada were to be in a position to make laws to govern this country, and if the Senate could not with advantage rule the country, then they are not necessary, and should be done away with.

Looking back over the history of our country since confederation we find the political parties changing their position with regard to the Senate. There was a time when the Liberal party at present in power were very much opposed to the Senate, there was a time when one of the chief planks in their platform was the abolition of the Senate. Some years ago when I had the honour of a seat in the provincial house, and when I took part in elections, I found that the representatives of the Liberal party at that time made the abolition of the Senate almost their entire stock in trade. In every county they denounced the Senate as unnecessary, as something that was out of date, as one of the mistakes of the fathers of confederation. But a great change came over that party when they reached power, and to-night we have heard that the Senate might be a very good thing, that it might be a great advantage to the country if we could only eliminate politics from the appointments. But I want to say that if political influence is ever eliminated from the appointments it will be in the dim and distant future. We have been told to-night that it was forty-two years since the Senate came into existence. Has there been any progress in eliminating politics from appointments to the Senate? Decidedly not. When Sir John Macdonald was in power I think he did appoint one Senator that was not a Conservative, a Mr. McDonald, of Toronto. Since the present government came into power they have appointed a large number of Senators, and not one of them has been a Conservative.

Now I ask the question, what will the result be in a short time? When the present government came into power the Senate was largely Conservative, and there was a conflict. There is danger of a conflict at any time. When the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie ruled the destinies of Canada there was a conflict between the Senate and the House of Commons. The Senate vetoed a Bill passed by the Commons in connection with a railroad in British Columbia. The proposition was made by Mr. Mackenzie to increase the number of senators in order that he might appoint a number of Reformers and thereby get a majority in that body. That proposition however was not carried out, fortunately I think for the country. Now here is the position we stand in to-day. We find to-day a very small number of Conservatives in the Senate. It is very unlikely that this government will remain in power after the next election; all signs point to their defeat when the people have another opportunity of pronouncing their opinion. Now when a Conservative government comes into power and finds an enormous Liberal majority in the Senate, is there not great danger of a conflict? The Senate will then stand as a menace and a danger to the country. The result would be that Bills passed by the popular chamber would be rejected by the Senate, and consequently an agitation would spring up throughout the country in favour of a drastic reform of the Senate, or its abolition. Under these circumstances, therefore, I think it would be wise on the part of this government to take some steps to redeem the pledge they made when in opposition to reform or abolish the Senate. They have redeemed one of the pledges of their famous platform in connection with the voters' lists, and I think they might now well redeem their pledge regarding the Senate.

Now the question arises, shall we amend or end the Senate? As I have already said, every decade the Senate costs this country over $4,000,000, and I believe the country is of the opinion that we receive no value for the money. It has been suggested that we give the people an opportunity to express their opinion on this question, and I think that is the proper thing to do. Let the people be asked, first: Do you approve of the Senate? Second: Would you abolish the Senate? and thirdly: Do you desire a reform of the Senate? I believe that scarcely a corporal's guard would vote to retain the Senate; I am of the opinion that a vast majority of the people would vote to abolish it altogether.

We will not only have the saving, but if we do not feel that we are properly represented we can increase the number of representatives as we have done in the past and as we will be forced to do whether we keep the Senate in operation or not. I am aware that probably the eastern provinces will oppose the abolition of the Senate, because, under the agreement by which the representation in the various provinces in this House is fixed, the basis being sixty-five representatives for Quebec and the other provinces being represented proportionately, the lower provinces find that their representatives have been decreasing every decade and they feel that they have not been receiving justice. The Senate remains the same and some of these little provinces have as many representatives in the Senate as they have in this House. They may be, afraid that with the abolition of the Senate they may not receive justice at the hands of parliament. But, we might ask the representatives of these provinces what the Senate has done for them? The people of Prince Edward Island claim that, according to the British North America Act, they are entitled to the construction of a tunnel connecting with the mainland, and I believe they are if it can be built for any reasonable amount of money. But, what have the four senators from Prince Edward Island done or attempted to do for this province? What have these other provinces received from the Senate? Their representatives in this House obtained several concessions from the government, but they did not feel that they had received all that they should have obtained. But what have they received from the Senate? Go over the records of that body and you will find that the senators from these provinces have, like those from other parts of the country, been asleep to a great extent, that they have accomplished very little and that the Senate is of no advantage as safeguarding the interests of the lower provinces.

But, the representatives of the people can be increased in number and with one body composed of 220 representatives the Dominion of Canada is perfectly safe without a Senate. At confederation the question was raised as to how many of the provinces should have a second chamber. The second chamber was advocated by a number of the fathers of confederation. It was proposed that Ontario even should have one, but Ontario was opposed to the second chamber and it has got along very well without it. But, we know that other provinces have a second chamber, and we know that they have had great difficulty in abolishing the principle of the second chamber, that it has only been by appointing men who are pledged to vote for the abolition of the second chamber that any progress along that line has been made. Quebec has one at the present time, but it could not have remained in existence in Ontario for five years if the principle had been established there. If Ontario, one of the largest provinces in the confederation, having almost half the representation in this House, sees no advantage in its second chamber, and if it is not deemed advisable to establish it in other provinces, must we not come to the conclusion that it is not a necessary part of the parliament of Canada? I believe that if the problem of confederation were to be worked out again to-day there would be no Senate, that the people would be quite willing to leave the legislative power to their representatives in the House of Commons, and I can assure you that with the intelligent voting population that we have in Canada to-day this Dominion and the provinces which compose it would be perfectly safe. We have, every four or five years, a Dominion election and the people can change their representatives at any time they choose to do so. That is the greatest safeguard that any people could have, and I believe that the Senate has been a curse rather than a blessing. I do not believe that appointing younger men to the Senate would be an advantage nor do I believe that the appointment of more aggressive, active and energetic men to the Senate would commend itself to the wisdom of the country. It has been said that the government have been very careful in the selection of senators and the argument has been advanced that one of the greatest safeguards was that the government had not appointed aggressive men, but, mild, quiet, easy-going men to occupy seats in the Senate. It is true that there are some brilliant lights, but usually the men selected for seats in the Senate are those who have been rejected by the electors or who have not been called upon to run again and, if we look at the last appointment, we must say that there is not much hope of improvement. There we find that the gentleman who was appointed to the Senate was not able to secure the convention of his party. It was necessary for him to give way to another candidate in order that the government might carry the election and he received his reward in the shape of a senatorship. He never was any bright or shining light in this House such as we might expect to be called upon to fill that position. The Senate is also utilized as a means of finding places for ministers of the Crown that do not succeed in obtaining a seat. If such a state of affairs continues we have no hope of any reform. I believe the best course we can pursue is to abolish the Senate. One of the strong reasons why I hold that belief is this: We have a Senate to-day such as we never had before, in that a large number now occupying seats in the upper chamber are prepared to change the constitution of the Senate and assist the Commons in carrying out the wishes of the people in that regard. We have heard leading men, many of whom have grown gray in the service of their country, and men who, I believe, are conscientious in what they say, stating publicly and openly that they believe the time has come for either abolishing or amending the Senate. We have that old statesman and politician, the Hon. Mr. Scott, coming out with a scheme which probably would be a good one, and which, at least, would be a great improvement on the present state of affairs. That is to continue the appointment of one-third of the members and have two-thirds elected by the people.

That would give something in the neighbourhood of fifty-four or fifty-eight representatives of the people. I admit the objection to these large constituencies, but even that would be small compared with the existing disadvantages and dangers. So long as we have representatives of the people, by the people and with the people, the country is comparatively safe, but if we had a conflict between the Senate and the House of Commons confederation might be in danger and with two-thirds of the Senate elected that danger would cease. The other third might be appointed. I believe to-day that if our Senate was altogether composed of politicians who had long served their country it would be better and more in accordance with the interests of the people. The greatest danger is the younger element put in in the hope that they would live long after a change in popular feeling shall have brought in a Conservative administration. If we are not to abolish the Senate we should amend it in a way to give the provinces a voice in the elections. Suppose that one-third of the senators were elected as at present, one-third elected by the different provinces and one-third by the electors, the objection of the last speaker is in my opinion one of the strongest points in connection with this legislation. It is that probably no time will occur in the history of Canada in which all the provinces will belong to one political stripe, whether Conservative or Reform. It is true that now over two-thirds are Conservative, and from appearances they are likely to remain so for some time unless this government should mend its ways in connection with graft and other things of that kind. But suppose they were of a different political stripe from this House would that not be a strong argument why a number of them should be appointed by the different provinces. We would then have continued mixing and no matter whether a Conservative or Reform government were in power, we would always have a number of the opposite party appointed which would greatly help to solve the problem. It is admitted that one great danger in Canada is the encroachment of this government upon provincial rights. Unfortunately at the time of confederation questions which are now of vital importance and whose solution presents the greatest difficulty were comparatively trifling. I refer to such matters as water-power, gas wells, &c., which in the near future will be of great importance to provinces. This House has been encroaching upon the rights of the provinces. It is unfortunate that these questions are not all settled, but if we had these different provincial governments making appointments to the Senate to the extent of one-third of its membership, the wishes and desires of the provinces would be represented in the Senate and they would see that justice was done to the provinces. By such a system we would have a mixture of politics in the membership of the Senate and have a much safer body than now. I must therefore come to the conclusion that no better solution than the one suggested can be found and I should be pleased to endorse it. It has been suggested that the work of parliament should be divided between the two Houses, and that senators should carry through one-half of the legislative programme, which would come to us for revision as our work now goes to them. But we must not lose sight of the fact that we the representatives of the people, coming from the people, being of the people, know the wants of the people better than the senators do. We have all noticed that Bills coming from the Senate are in many cases of such a character that they would not pass this House if originally introduced here and subjected to the criticism of our committee. Bills favouring corporations and granting charters to companies that would not be accepted in this House have in the last four years been introduced in the Senate and have then passed through this House without receiving the degree of consideration they otherwise would. The result is that many Bills have slipped through this House that would not have passed if they had been introduced here. All the bad Bills that we have had in the last four years have emanated from the Senate. It is well known that the Senate favours corporations more than this House does because the senators have not their constituents to consider, and the result is that railroads and corporations have more faith in the Senate and in this way dangerous legislation has been passed. Under these circumstances I hope that if we are to have a Senate it will not be an aggressive Senate. I believe that a sleeping, quiet Senate such as we now have is not dangerous. The general feeling throughout the country is that the principal work of the Senate is in connection with divorces, and I must say they do occupy a great deal of their time in that way and I have no doubt it amuses them very much. But if we look over the divorces granted we must conclude that the senators do not attach that importance to their decisions that they should and that in many cases applicants succeed in influencing the senators to a greater extent than they could influence the representatives of the people in this House. I am opposed to divorce and divorce laws if we can get on without them. But I believe a divorce law would be preferable to the existing system. These Bills emanate from the Senate and when they come here no consideration is given to them. Would not a judge be much more capable of weighing the merits of a divorce case, and better able to judge right from wrong than the senators if we are to measure their future by their past decisions. If we take away from the Senate the trial of divorce cases, which my hon. friend proposes to do, what is there left for them to accomplish? I believe the time has come when we could do without the Senate, and by so doing save a large amount of money to the country year after year.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal). Mr. Speaker, I have been for a great many years looking for an opportunity to join in such an important debate as the one that is going on to-night. I know quite well a number of senators who have been for a long time waiting for a ticket of leave for they have been thinking, not of the Notre-Dame or Beechwood Cemetery but of reforming that upper house which is called the Senate of Canada. I am not unmindful of the great role which has been played all over the world by upper houses of legislation. For the last four centuries, in about every country in the civilized world, except in Hungary, an upper house and a lower house have been in existence and are still in existence. Mr. Speaker, you know quite well, that three great social interests—the aristocracy of wealth, the aristocracy of knowledge, and the aristocracy of lineage—have been instrumental in establishing and maintaining those houses which are styled by social writers upper houses. It is not my desire to-night to give my views on the usefulness of maintaining our Senate. It is a moot question whether or not our Senate could be reformed in any shape or form. I am not prepared to-night to say just what degree of concession should be made to those who demand the reformation of our Senate, because I have not yet gathered all the necessary information or data. I am waiting for this information and data to come to me, both by cable and by mail, and until I get it, I do not feel able to give to this House the benefit of my views on this great question. Before resuming my seat, I must say that while listening to this debate, which evidently was inspired by some remarks already made in the Senate, I could not help recalling the old fable, 'when the devil was sick, the devil a monk would be.' Might I quote here, as a word of advice, the phrase, 'let the dead bury the dead,' and the living govern the living. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

THE GOVERNMENT ICE-BREAKING STEAMERS.

Mr. A. B. WARBURTON (Queens, Prince Edward Island), moved:

For a copy of all reports, memorials, documents and correspondence in possession of the government with regard to the superannuation and to making provision for the superannuation of officers and members of the crew of the winter or ice-breaking steamers owned or in the employ of the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put, I would like to say a few words on behalf of a very deserving class of men in the employ of the Government. The Government of Canada at the present time, has, I believe, five ice-breaking steamers in its employ. Of these the two which are perhaps the best known, because they have been the longest in the service and have been most often mentioned in this House, are the two engaged in the ice-breaking service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The other three are now and have been for some three or four years in service in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I refer to the 'Montcalm,' the 'Lady Grey,' and the 'Champlain.' The officers and men on board of these vessels are engaged in a most arduous and difficult employment, in which they are subject to much exposure and hardship. I have no personal knowledge of the conditions which prevail in that service in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, but I have a somewhat intimate acquaintance with the hardships connected with the work done by the 'Minto' and the 'Stanley,' which are engaged in the winter service between the mainland of Canada and my own province of Prince Edward Island. The senior captain of those vessels, Captain Finlayson, has been in that employ for nearly thirty-five years. He was in command of the first steamer owned by the Dominion government which was put on that route, the old 'Northern Light.' He has been in command of the 'Stanley,' which is still there, and later has been in command of the 'Minto,' the last vessel built for that route, and still employed there.

Captain Finlayson has been in the service nearly thirty-five years, Captain Brown for 10 or 12 years, and it is difficult for any member of this House to form an adequate idea of the difficulties and hardship these men have to undergo. The ice-boat service is hard enough as we have it in Prince Edward Island, but it begins in the morning and ends at night, and the men rarely have to work more than seven or eight hours at a time. In the case of these steamers, however, it frequently happens that they are tied up in the ice and in the straits for weeks at a time. Some three or four years ago one of these steamers got into a jam and drifted up and down the straits during sixty days. She lost her propeller blades; the other steamer had to go to her assistance, and she also lost one of her propeller blades, and it was only after sixty days that they got clear. The captain had of course to stand by his ship. I do not know that there was any special danger, but the experience was a very trying one and a severe test on the nerves of the strongest men. Captain Finlayson has been nearly thirty-five years in this trying service; he has to fight his way through ice floes and rafted ice, as I know of my own experience, for I have crossed some fifteen or twenty times on such occasions and found the experiences very trying ones. I have seen that vessel stuck on the ice off Pictou for thirty-six hours at a stretch. I have seen one of these steamers stuck inside the harbour for 59 days while the other was shut outside. And during all that time these captains were responsible for the management of their ships and men and subjected to the most unreasoning and querulous criticism from the people and from a portion of the press which ought to have known better. I am using as strong language as I can because I have seen a lot of this kind of thing and I sympathize deeply with these men. What do these men get? Captain Finlayson, who is the senior captain, gets, after this long experience, but $1,500 a year, which is but a little less than the pay of a second-class clerk who has not quite reached the maximum of his class. And this man has been only receiving this salary the last few years. During a great part of the period he has been in the service he received less than $1,000 a year, but gradually worked up to $1,200 a year, and finally a few years ago he got $1,500. This pay for a man holding that responsible and nerve-destroying position is utterly inadequate. However, that is not the chief point I want to bring before the House. It is well known that when men are employed in very trying positions they cannot stand the wear and tear for any length of time. I am not a railway man, but I am informed that in our great fast railway service, in which the express trains are run at great speed, their conductors and engineers cannot stand the strain for more than four or five years, and no company will keep them longer in these positions because even the strongest among them are bound to give way. But what are we to think of a man in the position of Captain Finlayson, who has been thirty-five years in charge of a steamer going through the ice, having the responsibility on his hands of the lives of his passengers and crew during the winter season, in all sorts of stormy weather, through heavy rafted and floating ice and harbour ice, under perhaps the most difficult conditions which prevail in Canada, receiving such small compensation. And besides, what is still a worse feature, these men can make no provision for the future, for it must be evident to every one that no man in Captain Finlayson's position can save out of his pay any kind of a competence for the future. If there were anything to look forward to, the case might not be so bad. But here you have a man over seventy years of age who when he retires, as he must before long, will have no superannuation allowance to fall back on. Surely if a judge of the land is entitled on retiring from the bench to a pension, or a clerk who has served in a comparatively easy service, such as in these buildings, or in the outside service of the government, and who, at the end of a number of years, when he is still perhaps in the prime of life has the privilege of retiring on an allowance sufficient to keep him in at least moderate comfort, surely the men who conduct the difficult service to which I have referred ought to be entitled to at least as much consideration. Surely these men, when the time comes when they must retire from the service, should receive some superannuation so as to keep them in comfort during the remainder of their days.

My object in moving for this correspondence is to bring this matter to the notice of the government and hon. members on both sides, feeling sure that when they recognize the position in which these faithful and devoted servants of the people are placed, they will judge their case favourably and take some steps to remedy this anomalous state of affairs. In the British service, in the army and navy, every man has the hope of retiring on some allowance which will at least support him, but there is no such hope for the men who go into the ice-breaking service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland and also in the river and gulf of St. Lawrence. I have said, Mr. Speaker, sufficient to bring the case of these men before the government and the House. This is a matter in which I have for years taken a great interest. Ever since I began to cross in these boats and have seen the work these men have to do, I made up my mind that if I ever should have a seat in this House I would bring their case before it, and in doing that, I believe I am only doing my duty.

Mr. A. L. FRASER. (King's, P. E. I.) The subject which is now before the House is one of deep interest to a large number of people in the province from which I come. Captain Finlayson, to whom the hon. member from Queens (Mr. Warburton) has referred, has been in this difficult and dangerous service for thirty-five years. During a great part af that time he received a very small salary and is now receiving but $1,500 a year. He has devoted his whole life to this service, perhaps the most dangerous on the North American continent, for certainly the most difficult and dangerous navigation to-day is that of the Straits of Northumberland. During all this time he has conducted this navigation without an accident, without the loss of a life or anything else. This alone ought to entitle his claim to the favourable consideration of hon. members on both sides. If there is any man in the Dominion who has well earned his superannuation, it certainly is Captain Finlayson. This man has shown himself to be well qualified for the position. The other captain is not so long in the service, and I do not know so much about him, but he also bears a good reputation. We of Prince Edward Island, when crossing in the boats, know that all that prudence and care can do to ensure our safety will be done by the two captains in charge of the winter boats. And though we may sometimes feel that the boats are delayed, we feel also that our lives are safe with Captain Finlayson and Captain Brown. That is one of the reasons why I think they should receive the favourable consideration of this House. And I have no doubt that when the government takes this matter up and considers what Captain Finlayson especially has done during the last thirty-five years in the navigation of the straits, it will see its way to recompensing him as he should be recompensed.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). I may say to the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Warburton) that there is no objection to the papers being brought down. I am not aware whether there are any papers in the hands of the department or the government concerning the superannuation of the two officers whose names he has mentioned, Captain Finlayson or Captain Brown, or of the captains of the other ice-breakers run by the government. I am aware, however, that there are memorials which have been presented to the department in relation to the captains of Dominion vessels generally. I shall be glad to bring down these papers also because they touch upon the question under discussion. I am glad to avail myself of this opportunity to add my voice in support of the sentiments expressed by the two preceding speakers concerning the services rendered to the country by Captain Finlayson and Captain Brown. Captain Finlayson has been in the service for many years—I believe the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Fraser) stated, more than thirty years. It would be impossible to eulogize these captains too highly. The services they have rendered to the country are meritorious services. They have discharged their duties faithfully. We are glad to know that during their long service no accident has happened to any vessel under control of these captains. The work they have to perform in the Straits of Northumberland is certainly most difficult work, but because of their caution and because of their skill in the discharge of their duties, they have been able to avoid accidents, a result which has been very satisfactory to the department. The question of superannuation of the officers on government vessels is one which is engaging the serious attention of the department. We have adopted in the department the plan of making appointments in the service by promotion. For the last year or two all appointments of officers made, with the exception of one, I believe, have been made by the elevation of men from the ranks. The results of this policy, I am sure, will be good. At the same time, it may be opportune for us to consider very seriously whether we should not give to these captains some gratuity or superannuation. Last year, we had an old officer, Captain Graham, who had been on the 'Osprey' or some other of our vessels for many years, and who, on account of his age, had to be retired. No superannuation allowance could be given him, and we had to give him some little employment in the dockyard at Halifax in order to show our appreciation of the services he had rendered. This question should be dealt with not in connection with the officers on the ice-breakers alone, but in connection with all the captains in the service of the government. I can only repeat what I have already said that this question is engaging the serious attention of the department.

Motion agreed to.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take the Bills on the paper and then go into Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What Supply ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Public works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 23, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

REPORT PRESENTED.

Report of the Auditor General, 1908, Vol. II.—Hon. Mr. Paterson.

OFFICAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (Montreal, St. James) moved:

That the first report of the Select Standing committee on debates be amended by striking out of the third part the words 'deferred until the close of the session,' to be replaced by the following words, 'to be printed and published as usual' and that the said report as amended be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the object of this report which is being made by the Debates Committee is to do away with the criticism which has been made against the committee with regard to the delay in the publication of the French edition of our 'Hansard.' Complaints have been made since 1893 against the delay in the publication of the French 'Hansard.' One of the causes of the delay arises from the fact that the French edition of the 'Hansard' has to be made up from the revised English edition. The consequence was that nobody could obtain a copy of the French edition of the 'Hansard' until fifteen days after the unrevised edition of the English 'Hansard' had been issued. These complaints were well grounded because, as a matter of fact, the newspaper men in the province of Quebec, as well as the French speaking citizens of Canada, have been deprived of what they are entitled to, that is, the French edition of the 'Hansard' at the same time that the English edition is issued. More especially have the members of the House of Commons complained of this delay. The object of this report is to go back to the condition of affairs that was in existence in 1893 when the French version of the 'Hansard' was made from the daily or unrevised edition of the English 'Hansard.' By adopting this report the result will be that, within twenty-four hours after the issue of the English edition of the 'Hansard,' everybody who wishes to have the French edition will be able to have it because the French 'Hansard' will then be out. The revised edition both of the English and French 'Hansards' will be published as usual at the end of the session and everybody will receive bound volumes. By the adoption of this report the House of Commons will get rid of many of the criticisms and complaints that have been made against the Debates Committee. I might assign as another cause of the delay some unwillingness on the part of certain officials of the Printing Bureau to facilitate the publication of the French edition of the 'Hansard,' an unwillingness which has proved to be, as regards one portion of the population of Canada, offensive and sometimes oppressive. It is to do away with that condition of affairs that this report is presented to the House. Now, let us examine the question of expenditure. There will be practically no increase of expenditure, except, perhaps, that the committee will have to appoint another translator, involving an expenditure of $2,100 a year. That is the total expenditure which will have to be incurred should this report be adopted by the House. The translators will have to work from 8.30 a.m. until late in the evening, as they do now. The two proof-readers now employed will be quite sufficient to do the proof-reading and extra assistance will not be necessary. The daily unrevised edition will be published every morning as usual and the translators will make their translation from that edition so that the printing of the French edition can be done during the next day or during the night. Therefore, twenty-four hours after the issue of the English 'Hansard' the French edition will be circulated and the French speaking members of the House will be quite satisfied with that. It is proposed to increase the issue of both the French and English edition of the unrevised 'Hansard' and no extra expenditure properly speaking will be entailed by that. The King's Printer and Mr. Shipman, the able foreman of printing, as well as the very clever chief translator, Mr. Larose, attended the last meeting of the Debates Committee and they assured us that work will be carried out as I have explained, that the present printing machinery is sufficient, and that satisfaction would be given to the French-speaking community in this respect. I trust the House will adopt this report without any further delay, and when it is adopted there will be no further complaints against the Debates Committee.

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains). I see that it is proposed to amend the report by substituting the words 'be printed and published as usual,' for the words 'deferred until after the close of the session.' I was not aware that any meeting of the Debates Committee had been called since the adoption of the report at which this amendment was agreed to, and this is the first intimation I have had of this amendment. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Gervais) what is the real meaning of the words 'be printed and published as usual.' If I understand it aright it means that we will have an issue of the unrevised French 'Hansard' and also of the revised French 'Hansard.' If that is so I have nothing to complain of, but I do not think it was the intention of the committee to impose that burden upon the Printing Bureau, or upon the translators, or upon the finances of the country. If the idea is to publish an unrevised edition of the French 'Hansard' as well as a revised edition, as at present, I will concur in it notwithstanding that the amendment has been somewhat of a surprise to me.

Mr. GERVAIS. When the report of the committee was presented, some of the English speaking members said that it might cause a delay in the publication of the revised English edition of the 'Hansard.' I admit that was the case, and in consequence of their representations the report of the committee was amended in the direction I have indicated. The amendment will remove any cause of fear on the part of the English-speaking members that there will not be an expeditious publication of both editions of 'Hansard.'

Mr. SPROULE. There are serious objections to the proposals contained in this report and I do not think it should be concurred in by the House. One proposal is that instead of the English revised edition being distributed to the public and the press as at present, a sufficient number of copies of the daily unrevised edition should be circulated. To this I take exception. It is not proper to hold members responsible for what appears in the unrevised edition of

'Hansard' when they have had no opportunity of correcting any errors which may have crept in from one cause or another. This proposal means that the unrevised edition uncorrected will be circulated and published in the press of the country, and that members may be held responsible for statements which were never made by them. That is an injustice to the members and it is misleading to the public. That system has been found in the past not to work well, and I do not believe it should be resorted to again. The report also says that the debates be translated into French from the daily unrevised edition which means that the errors in the unrevised English edition will be translated into the French edition. That would be very unfair to the French members, and it would be unfair to the English members.

Mr. GERVAIS. I may assure the hon. gentleman that the French members will be quite safe and satisfied with the adoption of the report. Let the French-speaking members manage their own business. They are ready to relieve him from the care and trouble of protecting their own interests.

Mr. SPROULE. If they are satisfied the English-speaking members still have a very strong objection to it because if the unrevised edition is translated they might be made to say in the French edition many things which they did not say, but which would be used against them in the country. It is bad enough to hold a man responsible for what he did say, but let him have an opportunity of confirming the record of his utterance and do not attribute to him something he never said. It would mean the translation of an incorrect copy and that would be bad for both parties, bad for the House, bad for parliament and misleading to the country. As to the proposal to defer the publication of the revised version in English and French until after the close of the session—

Mr. GERVAIS. I am doing away with that objection by the amendment I am now proposing to this report.

Mr. SPROULE. That amendment I now see omits the provision deferring publication and declares that a revised edition shall be printed and published as usual. That does away with the objection I raised to that part of the report, so of course I have nothing further to say upon it. I understand there is another proposal in it to appoint another translator.

Mr. GERVAIS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. As I understand we may create an office, but neither the committee nor the House has any right to report in favour of any particular person to fill an office because that will be the duty of the Civil Service Commission in the future. Therefore it seems to me it would be quite out of place to recommend it here.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. The committee were induced to make this report owing to the continued cry from our French friends that they were not in possession of the debates for a week or ten days after the occurrence of a debate in the House, and after consulting with the officials of the translating staff and the King's Printer, we came to the conclusion that we could not provide them with a daily 'Hansard' without adopting the course recommended, and by adopting this course our French friends will get the speeches within twenty-four hours after the English edition is delivered to the English-speaking members. To meet that view of the case we decided to report as we have done.

Then the revised edition is what now goes out to the public press. I consider this simply a waste of money because there is not a newspaper that makes any use of it; they get the revised edition when it is a week or ten days old, and if you go into any newspaper office in the country you will find the 'Hansards' in the waste basket. If they are supplied with any report of the debates let them have it fresh from the House, the day after it is published. That was the view I took and the view taken by the committee generally. The revision of speeches will go on as usual, the members will make corrections inside of twenty-four hours; the revised edition will then be printed, but the bound volume will not be printed until the close of the session. I think the course adopted is the best in the interests of the House and the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the unrevised edition is concerned, it is perfectly clear that up to the present time there has been practically no French edition whatever. As both languages are used in the House it seems to be a fairly reasonable proposition that there should be a French unrevised 'Hansard' as well as an English, and from that standpoint I would be inclined to concur in the report of the committee. So far as distribution to the press is concerned there is something in what my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has urged, that some hon. member may occasionally be put in an unfortunate position through the inadvertant alteration by the 'Hansard' reporters of something that he has said. For example, he may have used the word 'not.' It may happen in the hurry of debate, in the confusion that very often arises in the House, that word may escape the attention of the reporter and in that way he may be made to say precisely the opposite to that which he did say. However, I would think difficulties of that kind would be only very occasional and I would suggest to the Committee on Debates that when the unrevised 'Hansard' goes out to the press and the country—as a matter of fact it goes out to the press and the country to-day because every enterprising newspaper gets a copy of the unrevised—but when it goes out in this formal way it might be worth while to put a note at the commencement of each day's 'Hansard' explaining that it is subject to correction and has not been revised by the different members who have spoken. If that were done it would probably minimize the objection of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 75) respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Pardee.

Bill (No. 76) to incorporate the Imperial Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. A. Haggart.

Bill (No. 77) respecting a patent of the Submarine Company. Mr. Proulx.

Bill (No. 78) to incorporate the Superior and Western Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Conmee.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE moved that the Public Accounts and Volumes 1 and 3 and section O of the report of the Auditor General for the fiscal year ended 31st March, 1908, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Acccounts.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. I understand that Volume 2 of the Auditor General's Report was laid on the table of the House to-day and I would suggest that the motion be amended so as to include it.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. I would be very glad to include everything that is before the House.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

ILLICIT OR SECRET COMMISSIONS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 31) to prevent the payment or acceptance of illicit or secret commissions or other like practices.—Mr. Aylesworth.

On section 3,

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice.) When this Bill was in committee, a week ago, its various provisions were considered, and the question now remains of the preamble. Since then I have had the opportunity of giving some consideration to the views that were expressed by various members, and I must say that my ideas with regard to the procedure under this Bill, should it become law in its present shape, are entirely in accord with those expressed by my hon. friend from North Cape Breton (Mr. McKenzie). I think that the provisions of our Criminal Code, as regards the procedure of all criminal cases, would apply to the procedure under this measure, without any necessity for special mention; but there can be no objection to that being made abundantly clear if, in the opinion of the committee, or of any hon. member, that is desirable. That can be accomplished by adding to the Bill a section providing that this Act shall be read as if its provisions formed part of the Criminal Code.

With regard to the responsibility which the Bill casts upon a single magistrate in case a prosecution for an infraction of it were to be disposed of summarily, my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) seemed to think it would be an anomaly to give power to a single magistrate, on summary conviction, to sentence for even six months. But if reference is had to our Criminal Code, it will be seen that there are many offences, specifically mentioned in that Code, as it has stood now for nearly seventeen years, of at least equal importance to minor offences under this Bill; and some of the offences that I have in mind in the Code are of even greater importance than perhaps a serious infraction of this measure would be, with respect to which the same provision is made as to the method of trial, namely, either upon indictment or upon summary conviction. Let me refer to one or two, and there are at least a dozen, as showing what important matters have been dealt with and what serious punishments have been, in some instances, imposed under these provisions, without, so far as I am aware, any one considering that any danger has been incurred. Under section 409 of the Criminal Code, any one who is guilty of personation at an examination for the Civil Service is liable, either on indictment or summary conviction, to one year's imprisonment or a fine of $100. There you have power given to a single magistrate anywhere in Canada, on summary conviction, to sentence an offender to one year's imprisonment. My hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Crothers) was under the impression that in no case had a single magistrate the power to inflict imprisonment for a longer term than six months, but I have cited one instance in which he may, in his discretion, impose imprisonment for twice six months. Then there are several instances in the Criminal Code in which offences, such as in this Bill may be punished on summary conviction, may be tried before one magistrate only. For instance, section 208, prohibits the production upon the stage of immoral performances, and every one guilty of such an offence is liable to punishment on indictment or summary conviction; and if convicted on indictment is liable to one year's imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or a fine of $500 or both; and if on summary conviction, to six months' imprisonment or a fine of $50 or both. That is an offence against public morals at least as serious as a minor offence would be under this Bill. Section 440 is another instance of several in which the punishment is prescribed, in the same language as in this Bill, upon indictment or conviction, and where one magistrate may try the case and has power to impose six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour. That is the section which makes it an offence to buy or deal in seaman's property, where the danger, I suppose, is that it may not be the property of the seaman himself, so that these are at all events, two instances in which for years past we have had legislation in identical words with those in this Bill, and with regard to which I have not heard any complaint or suggestion of amendment. I would think therefore that we could adopt this Bill as drawn, but I am not wedded to the exact language used; and if in the opinion of hon. gentlemen it would be better that we should not allow a summary conviction under this measure to be proceeded with before a single magistrate, it is easy, by inserting two or three words, to secure that there shall always be two magistrates sitting on a prosecution under this Bill.

I have no objection to that being done if it is preferred. But with regard to the difficulties which were felt by my hon. friend from Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell), I must say that I do not see how we could properly upon the face of any legislation undertake to discriminate between magistrates. The fear that my hon. friend expressed was that a prosecution under this statute might be brought before some magistrate who was not really qualified, who ought not to have been appointed and that the interests of the person charged might therefore suffer. Well, I am afraid that that might be the case with any other charge levelled against a man under the Code as we have it. It is not the function of the central government to appoint magistrates throughout the Dominion, and we must, I think, give credit to the local authorities that they will only appoint as magistrates men who are qualified for the discharge of their important duties. As I said a week ago, a judge is a judge, and a magistrate is a magistrate; and if he has been placed upon His Majesty's commission of the peace, and has qualified himself to act in accordance with the requirements of the local laws, I do not see how it is possible for us to discriminate between individuals or to place upon the statute-book of the Dominion any legislation which would seem to imply that there may be magistrates acting in the country who are not properly qualified by education or by common sense to discharge the important duties of their office. If we require that a prosecution under this statute be heard before two justices of the peace, we have at least the additional guaranty that two would give, and the chance that one of them at least may not labour under the disqualification which my hon. friend from Carleton is afraid of.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to inquire from the hon. minister whether he has considered the suggestion made to him of amending this Bill in such a way as to give the accused the right to select the form of his trial—whether before a justice of the peace, or upon an indictment before a jury?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I expressed my views as to that when the Bill was last in Committee. I would not think it desirable that the accused person should have any greater right of election as to the manner of trial upon a charge under this Act than he would have under the general law. Under the general law he has certain rights, and, if he prefers to go before a jury, he would have identically the same rights under this statute.

Mr. CROTHERS. When this matter was before us last week, some of us had not looked carefully into it, and amongst that number seems to have been the Minister of Justice himself. I was speaking at that time from memory, and I think now that the sections to which my hon. friend has reference, to illustrate cases that could be tried by a single justice of the peace, are modified by other sections in the Act. Perhaps my hon. friend has not looked at section 707, which provides:

> Every complaint and information should be heard, tried, determined and adjudged by one justice or two or more justices as directed by the Act or law upon which the complaint or information is framed or by any other Act or law in that behalf.

So that if this Bill were left as first presented to us, one justice of the peace under that section would have jurisdiction to determine the question. However, if my hon. friend is right, that under these other sections one justice of the peace could dispose of the matter, I submit that we should not extend such cases. I do not approve at all of giving an ordinary justice of the peace the right to determine a matter of so much importance as this, involving a sentence of six months' imprisonment. If the committee will allow me, I would like to say a word or two on the general principles of the Bill. I understood my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to say the other day that this Bill was not at all necessary for the protection of the government; and I think he was quite right in that. As long ago as the year 1891, very extensive provisions were made in the Criminal Code for the protection of the government in such transactions. Then, is the Bill necessary in any transaction? I do not suppose my hon. friend would claim that this section ought to be applied in a case where a vendor of goods induced an agent of a purchaser to purchase from him at regular prices and of as good quality as he could get from any one else, the bread, say, that he might need for a year, and gave him a present of five or ten dollars at the end of the year. That would not be corruptly done, I fancy, because the employer would not in any way be defrauded or lose anything. The only case that occurs to me in which this Bill might be applied in private transactions would be where the agent entered into an arrangement with the vendor to pay him say a cent a pound more for bread or meat or any other articles than he could buy it for elsewhere, agreeing to pay him a certain sum of money if he would carry the arrangement out. But this Bill is not necessary at all in a case of that kind, because that would be a conspiracy between the agent and the vendor, for which there are ample provisions in the Criminal Code today. So that, as this Bill is not at all necessary for the protection of the government, and as it meets no case between private individuals which is not already met by the provisions of the Code, this Bill is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Of course, whatever effect section 707 of the Code has upon other sections of the Code, exactly the same and the like effect it would have upon the provisions of this Bill, because this Bill is to be read as a part of the criminal law. The subsection of section 707 to which the hon. gentleman has referred is simply a provision that if there is no special direction in any Act requiring a complaint to be heard before more than one justice, then it shall be heard before one justice. That is what I have been pointing out. I am quite content, if my hon. friend from Elgin thinks it would better this legislation, to insert in the Bill a provision that a summary prosecution under the Act shall be heard only before two justices. That can be secured at once by inserting the words 'before two justices' after the word 'conviction,' in the fourth line of section 3. All one has to do is to add the words 'before two justices' and he accomplishes that purpose. Otherwise, certainly one justice would have jurisdiction. I do not see any danger myself in allowing one justice of the peace to try an information under this Bill, but I am quite content that it should be limited to two.

Mr. CROTHERS. What would my hon. friend say as to the necessity of the Bill at all?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As to the necessity for this legislation, I had thought that every one in the House and out of it was well agreed, and I suppose the fact that it has passed its second reading is a very clear intimation that this House considered the principle of the Bill unobjectionable, if not necessary. I might say to my hon. friend, since the question has been raised, that I have had, I think, at least half a dozen applications from wholesale manufacturers and wholesale firms of long standing in the business community of this country, since the Bill was under discussion here a week ago, asking for copies of the Bill, and expressing in every instance their strong approbation of the principle of the measure, and their hope that its language might be made wide enough to extend to cases of commercial immorality or dishonesty which, in their view, tended to lower the standard of ethics, if that word is not inappropriate, in the trade of the wholesale dealer or manufacturer. I think there is every necessity for legislation of this character, and that the insidious effects of secret commissions are permeating every business and every trade and calling in this country. I can only say to my hon. friend that even the honourable profession to which he and I have the pride to belong, is not entirely free from the effects of just this sort of thing. I have in memory at the present time a case where a man to whom a little advertising had been given for a client, in the course of the legal business with which I had been for a good many years connected, came to the office with two bills for his advertisement, one substantially larger than the other, and offered to take payment of the smaller, producing the other as the one that should be shown to the client and charged up against him. I think any man guilty of that sort of thing was simply offering a bribe, and that the man who would be willing to accept such an offer to the disadvantage of his client, ought to be punishable under the criminal law.

Mr. CROTHERS. Would not that case be fully covered by section 444?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend refers to a section making it an indictible offence to conspire to defraud. I think my hon. friend's experience will agree with mine that a charge of conspiracy is a flexible kind of charge which sometimes it may be convenient enough to bring, but which, generally speaking, is difficult enough to establish. I would not be willing to leave to a prosecution under a general section relating to conspiracy to defraud, the kind of thing I have just been referring to.

Mr. MADDIN. I commend the object of this Bill in every particular. But I would like to draw to the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice the fact that in 1892 the criminal law of this country was consolidated and codified. Under the present administration in 1906 all the amendments to the criminal law of this country were revised and brought down to date. This is only as it should be, in order that the whole criminal law of the country may be found in one volume. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he could not find it convenient, instead of introducing a Bill such as he has here, and in regard to the operation of which some members of the committee anticipate some difficulty as to whether a case should be tried before one justice of the peace or two—could not the minister, instead of introducing this Bill, attain his object by adding one single section, namely, section 3 of this Bill? If that were done, the Criminal Code would be complete with regard to the machinery for administering the law, and there could be little uncertainty with regard to it which would be a preferable course to taking one section, and putting it in the statutes apart from the Code, where magistrates and justices of the peace whose duty it would be to administer this law, might have some difficulty in finding it. For instance, if the Minister of Justice will look at section 158 of the Code, under part 4 'offences against the administration of law and justice' subsections (e) and (f) of that section provide for the punishment of this identical offence where it is committed against the government of the country. Now, if the Minister of Justice would add this section 3 to that section, or would put it in as section 158a of the Code, then it would serve the purpose while still preserving the consolidation of the criminal law, and we would have the machinery in that identical volume for its administration. There is another aspect of the matter. It seems to me that there is an element of uncertainty in regard to the enforcement of this Act as it is now proposed. Section 3 says:

> Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, upon conviction on indictment, to two years' imprisonment.

It does not say that the offence is an indictible offence, but is an offence, and the person is liable. Further on it says 'and on summary conviction.' Now if the minister will look at section 707 which was read by the hon. member for Elgin, where power is vested in one justice of the peace to try under summary conviction, and if he will then look at part 16 of the Code which is entitled 'Summary trial of indictable offences,' there may be some difficulty for a justice to determine whether he should proceed under part 15 of the Code or under part 16, whether the summary conviction referred to in section 3 of this Act would have reference to summary conviction under part 15 or to summary conviction under part 16. I submit that a conviction made under either one of these conditions would be a summary conviction—one a summary conviction, of that which would not be an indictable offence, and the other a summary conviction of what would be an indictable offence. Under section 16 of the Code the jurisdiction is vested in the court absolutely in certain cases which are outlined there. This may be made one of those cases so that the accused would not have the privilege of electing as he has the privilege of electing under that section if, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, the prisoner should not have the right of electing. Unless such a provision were made he could, under section 778, have the right to elect if they were proceeding against him by indictment.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it would be wisdom on the part of this committee to add a section to the Criminal Code instead of having a small Bill of this kind stuck into the statutes of 1909, and which will not find its way into the Criminal Code until the next revision. It will mean that every time a prosecution is brought under this Act every justice of the peace will be obliged to have a copy of the statutes of 1909. As the matter stands now, when amendments are made to the Code, notice of the amendments is sent to justices of the peace and stipendiary magistrates in different parts of Canada. If this were put in as an amendment to the Code it would preserve the consolidation and solidarity of the criminal law and it would be incorporated in one volume so that the tribunal which had the administering of it would know where to put its finger upon it when the occasion arose. With regard to the objects of the Bill, I think, with the Minister of Justice, it is wise that the provisions of it should go through. Section 444, as quoted by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Crothers), would not cover the case outlined by the Minister of Justice, because there would have to be two persons charged with the offence in order to convict of a conspiracy and unless both were convicted you could not convict either. I think that is a matter of law that is well recognized.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have no doubt that if this legislation had been a part of our law at the time of the revision of the statutes it would have been placed by the revisers in the Criminal Code as an additional subsection to section 158. When considering the shape which it would seem best to give to this legislation before introducing the Bill that view presented itself and was one of the things to be taken into account. There would have been no harm certainly, and I think identically the same legal effect would have been accomplished, if this Bill had been introduced as an amendment to the Criminal Code by inserting in it the provisions of section 3 immediately after the present section 158. But, in my own mind, I thought the course which I have adopted was the better. This was a measure which was passed in England a few years ago after long discussion and after attracting a great deal of public attention. It was considered there so important as not only to be the subject of a special or a separate Act but also to receive rather extended notice in the speech from the Throne. I thought it certainly would do no harm to follow the same course in this country and that it would have at least this good effect that it would attract more general public attention to the legislation than possibly it would have received had it been introduced amongst a number of other amendments to the Criminal Code. If the Bill is to be read as part of the Code, as I think should be the case, and as I am proposing now as a special enactment, the legal effect will be precisely the same as if it had been introduced by way of amendment, and when the law comes next to be revised this Act will no doubt be incorporated in the Code by those who are revising it.

Mr. DOHERTY. I understand that even with the additional clause providing that this Act is to be read as forming part of the Criminal Code, and that all the provisions of the Criminal Code as to the trial shall apply, still there would be nothing in the provisions of the Criminal Code that would operate to give to the accused any option under any circumstances as to the tribunal which would try him. He may be proceeded against under the provisions here by summary conviction. I understand that he may be tried under part XV of the Criminal Code by one magistrate. It would be only in the event of the magistrates determining to treat the matter as an indictable offence that it would then possibly come under the operation of part XVI of the Code and, if I understand it rightly, the only effect of that would be that if the magistrate were proceeding to treat it as an indictable offence the accused would be entitled to the option of being tried before the magistrate by his own consent. I am speaking subject to correction, of course, not claiming to have carefully examined the whole Criminal Code, but it appears to me that if this Bill passes in its present form there will be no option given to the accused by which he may avoid trial by the magistrate or a justice of the peace, or by two justices of the peace, if the Bill be amended to make two justices of the peace to be necessary. I might say that I do not feel that there is any great improvement in providing for a trial by two justices of the peace, because if the state of mind of this House is that one justice of the peace is not a person to be trusted to conduct this trial I do not think there is very much more guarantee in getting two gentlemen neither of whom is to be trusted to try the offence. But even assuming that to be an improvement, it does not seem to me that you are getting a situation where the accused will ever have any option by which he will secure a trial before a superior court of criminal jurisdiction, but that the matter will rest with the magistrate or justices of the peace and with them only. While I understand that the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) says that the passing of the second reading of the Bill implies the approval of the principle of it, it does seem to me that there are some considerations bearing directly on the desirability of the legislation, which should move us to be particularly careful in securing to the person charged under this novel legislation the advantages of a trial by a superior court. It is to be pointed out that the effect of this legislation is to make a criminal offence something which, in itself, is a violation of a contractual obligation, and therefore something which in its nature is a proper matter to be dealt with by a civil court.

I do not want to be understood as saying that there are never cases in which the violation of contractual obligations may take such form or be accompanied by such circumstances as to make them proper to be constituted criminal offences by legislation. But what I desire to point out is that when we take this thing which in itself is only a violation of a contractual obligation and consequently in its nature proper to be dealt with under civil legislation and by civil courts, and make it a criminal offence, we should at least be particularly careful to see that we entrust the trial of it to a tribunal which we can be absolutely satisfied will be competent to deal with the questions which may arise. I do not know that I need justify my proposition that the act itself, dealt with by this Bill is a violation of a civil obligation. If so, it were only necessary to point out that the reason the taking of the commission under the circumstances provided by this Act is objectionable at all, is because there exists between the person taking the commission and the person for whom he is acting the contractual relation of principal and agent. If that relation does not exist there is no offence under this Act. Therefore, as a first essential of this being a criminal offence there must exist a contractual obligation between the person taking the commission and the person in connection with whose business he takes the commission. Now, whether or not such a relation does in reality exist may become in any trial of this kind a very doubtful question. Those of us who have had occasion to know something of the litigation in civil courts, know that very frequently it is an exceedingly delicate question to decide whether or not the relation of agent and principal does or does not exist between two persons. Whatever the court that may be called upon to try an offence under this Act, it will have as a first question to decide whether or not the relation of agent and principal existed between the accused and the person in connection with whose business the accused received the commission. I do not at all dispute that in the great majority of cases that may be a very simple question, but cases may arise in which it may become a very delicate matter to decide, and in view of that we should take particular pains to make sure that if the accused and his advisers should feel that justice will not be done unless they are enabled to have that question passed upon by a court of superior jurisdiction, it should be within the power of the accused to secure that right. Personally I feel so very strongly impressed with the idea that such things should more properly be dealt with by civil law and by civil courts, that I am inclined to very seriously doubt the desirability of transferring them to the criminal courts at all. It seems to me that even though there may be a considerable evil existing in this connection, the providing of an adequate remedy might very well be left to the provincial legislatures which are charged with legislation on civil matters. Under the civil law the agent who takes a commission of this sort is already liable to his principal for the amount he receives, and I would think you would find an adequate remedy for this abuse by a provision of the civil law that would make the person giving the commission jointly and severally liable with the agent of the principal. Nor do I think you would be going beyond the scope of the civil law if you provided that as a penalty, or as a species of liquidated damages he should be made liable for a larger sum than the amount of the commission, say the double. If the civil legislation can find an adequate remedy it would seem to me that it is much more desirable that the matter should be left to be so dealt with. As a general principle it is not desirable to create or to invent new crimes. No doubt practices which up to a certain date have not been looked upon as criminal may very properly be made the object of criminal legislation when they become more prevalent and when they constitute a danger to society. I am not disputing that proposition, and I am ready to assume that the Minister of Justice has information which justifies him in considering that this particular offence may have reached that stage. But admitting that to be the case, when we come to create this new crime and when there are involved questions of the contractual relations of the parties towards each other, then I think that when we are transferring offences of this class over to the Criminal Code we should at least be careful to see that the persons accused under this legislation shall have an opportunity of having the matter passed upon by a tribunal which this parliament feels confident would be competent to deal with the very complicated questions which may arise.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I certainly entertain the most sincere respect for any opinion, especially upon a legal question, which the hon. gentleman from St. Anns (Mr. Doherty) would express. But I cannot agree with his view that the civil remedy which now exists, and which I suppose has always existed, would be adequate for an offence such as is struck at by this Bill. If my agent for the purpose of negotiating any business arrangement with another man receives from that other man a secret bribe, it is the law now, and I suppose it always was the law, that on my discovering that fact I would have by civil proceeding the right to compel my agent to hand over to me the amount he had so received as a bribe. It was always an illegal thing on the part of the agent to do such an act at the expense of his principal. But surely it cannot be seriously contended that recovery by the principal of the amount which his agent may have received as a bribe is any adequate punishment upon the faithless agent, or any adequate redress to the man whose agent has been bought and whose interests may have been sacrificed by that agent to many times the amount of the bribe. The whole purpose and intent certainly of this legislation is to make such conduct on the part of both briber and bribed a criminal offence. It seems to me very necessary that that should be done, and I can only say that I have assumed the House had unanimously concurred in that necessity in affirming the principle of the Bill by the passing of the motion for its second reading.

Bill reported, read the third time, and agreed to.

SUPPLY—TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). Before the motion for supply is adopted, I wish to make a few remarks on a subject of great importance and as a young member would crave the indulgence of the House in what I am about to say. The subject which I wish to discuss is the boundary treaty between Canada and the United States. It is not necessary for me to go at any great length into this question of treaties between this country and the United States. All students of history and the children in the public schools are well aware of the fact that since the War of Independence Canada has lost territory and ground continually. After that war Canada contained an area which is now a portion of the United States, consisting of the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Michigan. By treaty we lost this, the richest portion of the United States. It is unnecessary for me to discuss the various means and methods by which we have lost at various periods portions of this country by treaties. The result has been that there is a spirit of antagonism amongst Canadians against the negotiation of treaties on our behalf by Great Britain. Recently the treaty-making power has been vested in the Canadian government which has been consulted in the preparation of our various treaties. As soon as the treaty-making power was vested in the Canadian government that government proceeded to carry on and make treaties with other nations. One of the first treaties made was the Japanese treaty and it strikes me that this treaty was made rather hurriedly and that Canada suffered by its terms.

Another treaty that was concluded was the boundary treaty between Canada and the United States. There are still two treaties hanging in the air, the French treaty and the waterways treaty with the United States. My reference will be particularly to the treaty concluded with the United States with reference to the boundaries. I had an idea that possibly our government would be as shrewd and as wide awake in treaty making as the American government. We all know how we have been 'euchred' in respect to these various treaties, how by tricks of phraseology and terms and the substitution of maps in the making of treaties, we have lost territory. It struck me as very strange indeed if on this occasion the same thing had not occurred if we had not been gold-bricked in some way. A close perusal of the drafts of the treaty discloses to me the fact that we have been gold-bricked. The first draft, November 26, 1907, in article 5, contains a reference to the boundary between Canada and the United States from the mouth of the Pigeon river to the Lake of the Woods. You will find there that the boundary shall be a water line and shall not intersect islands along its course. That is identical with the wording of the Ashburton treaty. When the Ashburton maps were prepared, a line was drawn on the map by the commissioners of the two powers. One side of this line was shaded red and the other blue, and there was a matter of give and take in regard to the islands along this boundary line. The first draft of this treaty of 1908 followed the idea and spirit of the Ashburton treaty. The second draft treaty was prepared on March 9, 1908, and that second draft is identical in wording with the first draft in providing that—

The line shall not intersect islands lying along its course.

The reason for the provision that the line should not intersect the islands was that there is one very large island, probably twice the size of the county of Carleton, which occurs in the river along this boundary line, Hunter's island. About fifteen years ago the state of Minnesota set up a claim to this island. Prospectors and diamond drill operators had ascertained that it is very rich in iron ore, being a continuation of the Vermilion range, one of the richest in the United States, and it is also rich in timber. Minnesota claimed that as the river ran around this large territory the island or at least a portion of it should belong to that state. At that time the public discussion went as far as Washington and the Washington authorities, on consulting the Ashburton maps, ascertained that the boundary line was south of Hunter's island. Now we find in the last draft of the treaty, a copy of which I have here printed by order of this House, that the word 'not' has been dropped from that clause of the treaty which now reads:

The line shall intersect islands.

The result is that about one county of this province will be given to the state of Minnesota or to the United States. The consequence will undoubtedly be dissension and trouble. I do not see why there should be this wild rush to negotiate a treaty with the United States about the boundary. The Ashburton treaty should have been the last word on that question. As far as we are concerned, we should have as little to do with the United States in the making of treaties as possible, because any loss we have made has been incurred by virtue of such agreements. What I would like to find out from the right hon. the leader of the House is whether the intention of this treaty is to be found in the exact wording of it as published in the sessional papers, and whether it is the intention to change by this treaty the Ashburton line, to make the boundary line intersect these islands, and give a vast and valuable portion of the province of Ontario to the state of Minnesota and the United States?

I am not in favour of treaties being made by this government for the reason that when we enter into diplomatic negotiations with other countries, we must do so without having at our disposition men who are trained in the highest art of diplomacy. Had we men who knew their business, had we men fitted to conduct these negotiations, such deceptions, as we have been forced to submit to, would not have risen, and we would not have found this country rushing madly into trouble as it has been doing during the past four or five years. We all regret the treaty we made with Japan, but we forgave the government for that because we felt that they were inexperienced or would do better the next time. But now we have a treaty under which this country is going to lose a vast amount of territory, if the wording of that treaty, as published in the sessional papers, be accurate. I have nothing further to say except to express the hope that the published version of that treaty is not correct. In my opinion, when the treaty lines are drawn, we will have no difficulty with the United States whatever. We do not wish to have any difficulty with the United States or Japan, because those of us, who watch the current of public affairs, know that the mother country has at present the shadow of a great war hanging over her, and we, as loyal Canadians and sons of the empire, should do everything in our power to facilitate peace between Great Britain and every other nation for the next four or five years at least.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend will permit me to express my regret that he did not give us any notice of his intention to bring this question before the House. He will readily understand that when no member of the government has had the opportunity of looking at this treaty for the last six or seven months, it will not be possible to give an answer to the question he has put, but I shall have an opportunity of refreshing my memory and looking over the documents on another occasion and then be able to give him the information he seeks. But let me tell him that I think his criticisms are not warranted by the facts. Had he been here last session he would have remembered that when we made the treaty with Japan we had an understanding about immigration, which was for the moment forgotten, but which, when brought to the attention of the Japanese government, was at once accepted and has been lived up to ever since. Under the circumstances his criticisms are hardly warranted, and no one regrets our treaty with Japan supplemented by this understanding. That treaty has preserved to us the trade of the countries and has given to our friends on the Pacific coast what they are looking for, namely, a restriction of Japanese immigration. With regard to the waterways treaty, that treaty has to a certain extent leaked out, and the public is now pretty familiar with its main provisions, and it will be found, I believe, in the opinion of all impartial men, that it is a fair and reasonable treaty, not an agreement in which one party has tried to take advantage over the other, but in which each has endeavoured, as far as possible, to give even justice to both. On a later occasion I shall endeavour to give my hon. friend the information he has sought.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Ottawa buildings for testing of fuel by Department of Mines.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). I have some information furnished me by the department which is rather interesting. It is a memorandum re fuel testing plant, by Dr. Haanel, and which, with the permission of the Committee, I shall have published in 'Hansard.' The memorandum is as follows:

Ottawa, December 9, 1907.

Memorandum re Fuel Testing Plant.

The high prices of imported coal in the middle provinces of Canada, the depletion of our forests together with the increasing value of the forests for other purposes and the suffering induced on account of scarcity of fuel in recent years consequent upon labour conditions, are causes which have again prominently brought forward the question of utilizing our peat bogs and lignite deposits for the production of marketable fuel and other purposes.

The estimated area so far reported distributed over the different provinces of the Dominion is 37,000 square miles. The following table shows the areas covered by peat bogs in the different provinces:

	Square miles.	Depth. feet.
Nova Scotia	250	8 to 10
Prince Edward Island ..	10	8 to 10
New Brunswick	250	8 to 10
Quebec	500	8 to 10
Ontario	10,450	5 to 8
Manitoba	500	6 to 10
Alberta and Saskatchewan..	25,000	5 to 10
British Columbia and Yukon Territory..	No data.
Approximately ..	37,000 sq. miles.

Further investigation will undoubtedly prove that this estimate represents but a fraction of the total area of available peat.

The comparative fuel value of coal and peat is: 1.8 tons of peat are equal to 1 ton of coal, and a peat bog one square mile in area and of six feet depth, if all were suitable for peat fuel, would make about 774,000 tons of peat fuel, equivalent to 430,000 tons of coal. The province of Ontario alone, if all its peat bogs were suitable for the manufacture of peat fuel, would yield an amount equivalent to about three billion tons of coal.

The recent improvements in gas producers and gas engines have opened up a new field for the utilization of peat and lignite. Fuels which have proven very inefficient when burned under boilers have given excellent, economical and efficient results when used in a gas producer for the production of gas for power purposes.

The diagram below will serve to show the many uses to which producer gas can be put:

- General uses of Producer Gas
  - Power purposes
    - gas engines
    - firing steam boilers
  - Firing kilns
    - brick kilns
    - tile "
    - pottery "
    - muffle "
    - lime "
    - cement "
  - Metallurgical operations
    - forges
    - steel furnaces
    - muffle "
    - glass "
    - roasting "

Although several attempts have been made to manufacture peat fuel, especially in Ontario, they have as a rule resulted in failures, due principally to lack of knowledge. The successful working of peat bogs and manufacture of the raw peat into marketable fuel depends on:

1st. The proper classification of the different peat bogs, since the peat occurring in one bog might be suitable for peat fuel manufacture while that from another might not be.

2nd. The treatment of the raw material and the apparatus used for its combustion either for domestic or industrial purposes.

These facts, upon which the whole success of the industry depends, can be determined only by experiments carried out on a commercial scale and in an intelligent manner.

In several European countries peat and lignites are largely used both for domestic and industrial purposes with satisfactory and economical results and as conditions in Canada are quite as favourable for the manufacture of peat fuel and the use of lignite, there is no reason why, with the employment of proper methods and latest ideas, peat fuel manufacture and the use of lignite cannot be successfully introduced into Canada.

To accomplish this, a government testing and experimental plant should be established where the values of these fuels could be demonstrated and investigations made as to the machinery and apparatus best suited for their utilization.

This plant should be under the supervision of special officers who can give to this work their undivided and continuous attention. The functions of such a plant would be:

1st. The determination of the best methods and machinery to be employed in working in the different bogs.

2nd. Investigation of the most efficient means of manufacturing the raw peat to be used for domestic or industrial purposes.

3. The investigation of the most economical method of using peat and lignite for domestic or industrial purpose.

4. To make complete analysis and fuel value determination of the different peat bogs and lignite deposits.

5. To distribute the results obtained.

Upon the completion of the tests now being carried on at McGill University on about fifty Canadian coals, this plant, which is the property of the government, will be transferred to Ottawa and will be used to test the new coals which may be from time to time discovered.

The United States government has established a fuel testing plant where all kinds of fuels are tested and their suitability for various purposes ascertained. This plan constitutes a branch of the Geological Survey, called the 'Fuel Division', and is under the supervision of special officers.

The investigations so far have demonstrated that an enormous waste of fuel takes place and that by suitable arrangements and the adoption of proper methods this waste can be materially decreased. So important is this question considered to be, that the United States government appropriated $250,000 to continue the experiments started at St. Louis during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition and for which work $60,000 were appropriated, making a total appropriation to date of over $300,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Assistance given to the peat industry by the different European Governments.

Sweden.

The coal production in Sweden is insignificant and the coal mined is of inferior quality. This country is, therefore, practically dependent on foreign nations for its supply of coal. The question of utilizing the peat bogs, which occur in abundance, has in later years received much attention from the government and the manufacture of peat fuel, moss litter and peat mull is steadily growing.

The government now employs one chief engineer, one engineer and two assistant engineers under the dirction of the Department of Agriculture. The duties of these engineers are to investigate and report on all new processes referring to the peat industry, to assist manufacturers with plans and investigations of peat bogs and to advise the government on the advisability of giving loans for the erection or enlargement of peat plants, or assistance to inventors of promising processes, in order to enable them to carry on experimentation. The Swedish Parliament in 1901 voted 100,000 kronor* to be used for the encouragement of the peat industry and in 1902 a fund of 1,500,000 kronor was established, from which loans on liberal terms are given to peat manufacturers. This fund was in 1907 further increased by 2,000,000 kronor. In order to find out the possibilities of manufacturing peat fuel in the northern part of the country, where the summer is short and drying conditions consequently less favourable, an experimental plant was erected at Koskivara, situated at a latitude of 66° 39'. The results were quite satisfactory. The government has also undertaken to make official tests with peat machinery, in order to find out the most suitable machinery and methods. Two such tests have so far been made in 1903 and 1907 and the results published by the Department of Agriculture.

The peat society 'Svenska Mosskulturföreningen' in Jönkoping receives a yearly grant of 20,000 kronor from the government and additional grants from the municipal boards.

The peat school established at Markaryd under the direction of Mr. A. Anrep receives a yearly grant of 7,000 kronor. The object of this school is to train and educate foremen and superintendents for peat plants. In large drainage works, which can benefit a greater area, the government as well as the municipalities concerned generally assist with a part of the cost.

In 1900-1901 a commission of two engineers was appointed to study the peat industry in Europe and the report* of this commission was published in 1902.

Norway.

This country possesses no coal deposits and the peat question is therefore of great importance. The government employs one engineer, who in 1901 was sent out to study the peat industries in Europe and Canada. The peat society 'Det Norske Myrselskab' in Christiania receives a yearly grant of 8,000 kronor.

Denmark.

This country possesses no coal deposits and very few forests. The use of peat fuel has, therefore, been introduced, and on account of favourable drying conditions and suitable methods of manufacture the peat industry in Denmark is on a good economical basis.

The society 'Hedeselskabet' in Aarhus received in 1901 76,500 kronor and 'Moseselskabet' (formerly Moseindustriforeningen) receives a yearly grant of 8,000 kronor.

Finland.

This country possesses no coal deposits but wood is still fairly abundant and cheap. The peat fuel manufacture has so far not reached any magnitude, but the consumption is slowly increasing. The society 'Finska Mosskulturforeningen' in Helsingfors receives a yearly grant of 36,500 f. marks† and employs one special engineer for investigation of peat fuel manufacture and its possibilities.

Russia.

Russia has the largest peat industry in the world, with some 1,300 machine peat plants in operation. The government itself owns and operates a number of such plants and also a large peat-coking plant erected at Redkino at a cost of 1½ million marks.‡

A committee presided over by the Minister of Agriculture decided in 1900 that:

1. Private persons should be allowed to work peat bogs owned by the government.
2. Assistance should be given for investigations of the peat bogs.
3. Instructions in the simplest methods of working the peat bogs and in the use of peat products should be given to peasants.
4. Assistance should be given to facilitate the transportation of peat.
5. The railway tariff for peat should be lowered.
6. A fund should be established from which peat manufacturers could obtain loans on easy terms.
7. Peasants should be allowed to work peat bogs owned by the government, paying a rent of 0.45-0.90 cents per square yard.

The Russian government, especially from a military point of view is anxious to make Russia independent of imported fuel and gives, therefore, to private persons or companies erecting peat plants in Russia a loan of 40 per cent of the cost of the plant. This loan can be paid back in peat-products. It is also stipulated that manufacturers of machine-formed peat can have their peat coked at the government plants at a cost of $1.37 per ton peat coke. The government buys, if desired, this coke at a price calculated on the basis of the fuel value of Newcastle coal at $4.42 per ton, so that the peat coke is paid for more or less according as it is inferior or superior in fuel value to this standard. The production of peat fuel in Russia in 1902 was some 4 million tons and it is increasing yearly.

‡1 mark=24 cents.

Germany.

In Germany the peat question is of less importance on account of its coal and lignite resources, but in certain parts of this country a very extensive peat industry is also established and much credit is due several German inventors of machinery and processes for the utilization of the peat bogs. The German government operates several experimental farms for moor cultivation and gives a yearly grant to the society 'Verein zur Forderung der Moorkultur im Deutschen Reiche' in Berlin. In certain districts the railroads have a special tariff for peat and lignite and in other districts canals have been built and cheap freights thereby made possible.

Austria.

The experimental farm at Vienna has since 1901 a special branch for moor cultivation and peat manufacture. Other experimental farms are established at Sebastianberg, Laibach, Klagnfurt, Admont, Sterzing, &c., where free education is given in moor cultivation and peat manufacture. The society 'Deutsch-Osterreichische Moorverein' has its headquarters at Staab bei Pilsen.

Holland.

In Holland peat fuel has been used for centuries and at present the production is over one million tons per year. The worked out peat bogs are excellent for agricultural purposes and annually about 1,000 acres of such land are gained.

During the last 50 years some 250 miles of shipping canals and 500 miles moor canals have been built. The cost of these canals has been $4,800,000 and for maintenance and improvements of older canals a further sum of $4,480,000 has been spent. The government has for these works contributed $2,891,600 and the provinces $4,369,200. In order to be independent of foreign nations for fuel the government has always a certain amount of peat fuel stored for military purposes in case of war, and also uses peat fuel in its buildings.

The cost of peat fuel in Holland is considerably higher than that of coal, which can be cheaply imported from England and Germany, but notwithstanding this fact peat is largely used for domestic purposes.

Ireland.

In Ireland the Department of Agriculture and Technical Education is encouraging the peat industry by giving assistance with investigations of bogs and information regarding new methods and use of peat products.

Memorandum re Fuel Investigation.

The fuel question, which every year is growing more important is at present receiving considerable attention from the department.

During 1907-1908 extensive tests with coals from the various mines in the Dominion have been carried out at McGill University. (See letter from Professor Porter or Durley.)

The question of utilizing the low grade fuels such as peat and lignites has also been taken up.

The first step was to investigate the status of this industry in countries where these fuels have been advantageously employed. For this purpose Mr. E. Nystrom was sent over to Europe, and the results of his investigations are published in his report 'Peat and Lignite, their manufacure and uses in Europe,' issued 1908.

A systematic investigation of the Canadian peat bogs was started last season, with a view of ascertaining their areas, depths and the qualities of the peat. The results obtained will be published from time to time and it is hoped that these investigations will help to place the peat industry in Canada on a sound basis and prevent the useless spending of large amounts of money, which in several cases already has been done on bogs more or less unsuitable for the purpose in view.

Parties desiring to have their bogs investigated, or the peat analysed, can have it done by applying to the director.

In order to demonstrate the practical use of ordinary air-dried or briquetted peat fuel for power purposes, a gas producer plant is now under erection in Ottawa. At this plant, which will consist of a 60 h. p. gas producer and accessory apparatus and a gas engine of Gebrüder Korting's type (see plan), interested parties can ascertain for themselves the suitability of such an installation.

Lately power plants combined with necessary apparatus for the recovery of by-products, especially ammonium sulphate, are coming to the front. Such plants, however, can only be run with a profit in large units and at the present time such an installation cannot be undertaken by the department.

The advisability of having an experimental plant for the production of the peat fuel itself in charge of the department has been strongly urged, and if satisfactory arrangements can be made the establishment of such a plant is probable. The object of such a plant will be not only the manufacture of sufficient peat fuel for the gas producer plant already under erection, but also for the testing of promising methods and machinery invented from time to time, and to ascertain their practical value.

In view of the enormous deposits of peat which exist in Canada, and in view also of the fact that it seems to have been pretty well demonstrated that it will be possible to utilize peat, lignite and other kinds of fuel which are not now marketable, even certain kinds of wood, for the production of gas, which can be used economically in the operation of gas-producer engines, the Department of Mines seems to have been moving in the proper direction. The matter was brought before parliament last session, and an appropriation was made for the purpose of procuring land and erecting a building for the purpose of these experiments. We have gone thus far that we have purchased half an acre of land on Concession street in the southern part of the city, and Dr. Haanel has purchased the plant, which is on the way to Ottawa and will be ready to be installed as soon as the building is constructed. I therefore hope that the committee will approve of the amount which is being asked to complete the building and to get it ready for the reception of the plant which the Department of Mines proposes to establish.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When this item came before the committee the other evening, I asked the minister to defer the discussion of it until the members had an opportunity to examine further into the question. I may say that every member of the House who has given the matter any study is satisfied that it is essential that efforts should be made by the government to test various fuels. The importance of the gas engine and the producer-gas engine is to-day greatly pressing itself upon the attention of the Canadian people, owing to the fact that fuel is becoming dearer all the time. The question simply resolves itself into this, whether it is better for the government to expend this money for an experimental plant to be operated by the Geological Department of the government, or whether it might not be more satisfactory for the government to use the money in having these tests carried on in the technical departments of some of our universities, such as Queen's and Toronto, or in the technical school of Nova Scotia. The government spent a large amount of money to test the question of the manufacture of steel by electrical power. That demonstration has been made possibly to the satisfaction of Dr. Haanel and his assistants in Ottawa; but these tests should be carried on for many years, and the best place to have the work done would be at one of the technical schools, where the machinery would be in constant operation, and where it would not cost the government anything to operate it. It is well known to everybody connected with fuel industries that peat has been used for the manufacture of producer-gas for many years in Germany.

There are two or three remarkable problems that remain unsolved in reference to the manufacture of producer gas, and it is becoming very important to Canada, with its vast areas of soft coal, that these problems should be solved. It is an easy matter to manufacture producer gas from hard coal. There are thousands of horse-power now in operation in England and in Europe, and also in Canada, operated by producer gas from hard coal. The difficulty is to eliminate the tar from the producer gas, made either from peat or from soft coal, and various devices have been suggested and are now in operation in Europe, whereby the tar is fixed and made into gas without any difficulty, and is used in engines, I have no doubt that the minister is doing what he thinks best, and that the government, with the best intention, is giving large sums of money to Dr. Haanel to squander on these experiments. To my mind they are useless, because an experiment conducted in this way must be useless to Canada, or to the working people who have to operate these plants. I would therefore suggest that if the minister—of course the item being in the estimates I suppose it cannot very well be withdrawn—but I would ask the minister to consider if it would not be better to have that machinery installed at the new technical school in Nova Scotia, and use it permanently there for testing fuel gas of various kinds, that would become useful to Canada as a whole. The Geological Department in Ottawa has a great deal of other work to do, besides spending money on these tests. McGill University, I understand, does a great deal of work for the government in connection with the Intercolonial, and I think the government could wisely extend its generosity to the technical schools by granting to each of them yearly $25,000 or $50,000 for experiments in connection with the various departments of scientific industry. One school might deal with experiments in electrical science; another might deal with fuel, and this school in Nova Scotia might be devoted to that purpose; another might deal with textiles and dyes, another with electrical apparatus, and other matters of that kind, that would help to improve the industrial condition of the people of Canada, and keep us up to date in technical science and knowledge with other countries. To my mind it is worse than useless to squander this large sum of money on experiments, and on a plant here in Ottawa which will be not readily accessible to students of technical science, except at large cost in fares coming here, and which, moreover, may prove a total failure. A cheap machine has not yet been devised to manufacture producer gas from peat or soft coal that will do this work successfully. Expensive plants can be built and operated to do the work. They are in operation, such as Monde plants, that can manufacture fuel without any doubt, and cheap producer gas from lignite, or from soft coal, or from peat, but they take a large sum of money for gas tanks and various other apparatus to clear the tar out of the gas. I have thought it necessary to make these criticisms of the proposals of the government to spend money for testing fuel, and I desire to remind the minister that if anything of this kind comes up again, to remember that we have technical schools and colleges in this country, attended by thousands of students, where any tests of this character would be beneficial to students and the money should be spent at these schools and not on the Geological Department in Ottawa.

Mr. BRADBURY. Before this item carries I would ask the minister if he is aware that we have a large peat plant situated in the eastern part of Manitoba? There is a plant thereon which I think the promoters have spent about $80,000. I do not desire to criticise this expenditure at all, I think perhaps it is wise that something should be done to make a test of this fuel. But I would ask the minister if it is not possible to give some assistance, by lending the services of Dr. Haanel or some one else, to go out there and advise them how to operate this plant successfully. There has been a large amount of money spent there, they have a large peat bed, and I think if a government official who is qualified and understands the manufacture of peat into fuel, was sent out there to lend his assistance, the minister would be doing a public service.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to bring the suggestion of my hon. friend to the attention of the Minister of Mines, on his return. I shall also be glad if, when the items for the Department of Mines come under discussion, my hon. friend will call the attention of the Minister of Mines to his present request. The suggestion is worthy of consideration, and I am sure, in view of the interest that is now being taken in the question of utilizing peat for fuel, the Minister of Mines will be only too glad to do anything he can to stimulate that industry in any part of Canada.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The suggestion which was made a few moments ago by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie) is well worthy of consideration by the Department of Public Works. It will be a difficult matter to make technical schools in Canada successful for some years to come, owing to the fact that there will not be sufficient original work for students to do, and it will be difficult for them to obtain opportunities to carry on original research work with advantage to themselves and the country. Nova Scotia will shortly be equipped with a splendid technical school, and if work of this character could be assigned to that school, I heartily concur in the suggestion that it should be done. It would be a considerable encouragement to the students, and the interest of the Department of Public Works would be as well served there I think as by making a separate and special expenditure at Ottawa.

Mr. AMES. I understand the minister has purchased a plot of land for the erection of this building. Would he tell us where it is situated, who was it purchased from, and at what cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was purchased on Concession street, in the southwestern part of the city, from the Ogilvie estate of the city of Montreal. I cannot give the price just now, but I think it was in the neighbourhood of $2,500 for half an acre of land.

Mr. AMES. Generally speaking, I think it is to be regretted that the government has not adopted the principle of laying out its buildings according to some fixed plan. The practice of purchasing sites all over the city of Ottawa, here, there and everywhere, on which to erect public buildings, is not calculated to make Ottawa, the capital of the north, from an architectural point of view such as we would like to see it. I hope the minister will tell us whether his department has in view any general scheme whereby the buildings that will be erected from time to time can be grouped in one locality, and so arranged as to make their cumulative effect and their general appearance a beautification to the city of Ottawa. We are spending a great deal of money in purchasing lots in different parts of the city and erecting buildings that no one who comes here ever sees unless he makes it a special point to find them out, whereas, if some such method as has been adopted in Washington, where a distinct plan is being followed year after year, and where with each succeeding year, the number of beautiful buildings that can be seen from a given point is increasing, were followed, we would be working for the future of Ottawa better than we are to-day.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am afraid that my hon. friend is rather influenced by a feeling, which, I am sorry to say, influences a great many of us; we are apt to think that things away from home are better than they are right here. My own idea is that the arrangement of public buildings in Washington is not one bit better than our arrangements here. I think that some of our buildings are more striking than they are in Washington. In Washington the buildings are not all grouped together; they are scattered over the city. Even the building which has been most recently erected seems to have been erected as if it were the only building there. It is by itself and does not form part of any group of buildings. But there, as here, regard must be had to the purpose for which the building is to be used. As far as this building is concerned, we could not put it near the parliament grounds. There were several things which we had to keep in view. In the first place we wanted railway connection. We wanted it to be right close to the railway so that we could have a siding where cars of peat could be brought at the least possible expense. As there would be considerable smoke, we wanted to put it in a part of the city where there would be the least objection from that cause. But, speaking, generally, I think that the buildings in Ottawa have so far been built and located with exceedingly good judgment. Nothing could be better than the location of this building. The same applies to the east and west block, to the Langevin block, and in continuation of these buildings a large tract of land has been purchased upon the other side of Major's Hill park. That building will have two fronts, one upon the park and one upon Sussex street. It will be quite convenient to the parliament buildings and to the other departmental buildings, and I am sure that the building, which is to be of a very superior character and of very handsome design, will add materially to the beauty of the capital. The Museum and the Mint might possibly have been brought nearer to the parliament buildings, but I am of the opinion that the location of these buildings is very good. With regard to the observatory, we could not very well have it anywhere else than where it is. We wanted to locate it where there would be plenty of room, where it would be separated from other buildings and where there would be a considerable elevation. I am inclined to think there is no good ground for criticism as to the past and I shall heed the warnings or suggestions of my hon. friend in future.

Mr. AMES. It seems to me that in this particular case the explanation of the minister is quite sufficient. The necessity for a railway siding and for putting this building where the smoke will not be a nuisance to the residential portions of the city may be a sufficient excuse for erecting this building where it has been put. But, speaking in a general way, I think there has been too much scattering here in Ottawa, not only with regard to some of the buildings which we own, but with regard to many of the buildings which we have rented, and I believe that it would add to the facility with which business could be carried on as well as to the beauty of Ottawa were the plan to be followed of as far as possible erecting new buildings in the same neighbourhood, keeping in view a general scheme, and the architectural features of the buildings themselves.

Toronto Drill Hall—additional accommodation for new corps and armouries, $25,000.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An addition was made some time ago to the large armoury in Toronto and this vote is to put in all the fittings.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will this complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is expected this will complete it.

Mr. U. WILSON. What is the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure up to the 31st March, 1908, was $203,000. It was then estimated to take $259,000 to finish it.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is that the new work or the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost of the extension. The contract for that was $218,994, and, in addition to that, there are heating apparatus, electric wiring and some other work of a minor character.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will the minister tell us to whom the contract was let and if tenders were asked for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract was let to the firm of Wm. Langdon and M. Sullivan, Kingston, on the 18th April, 1906. Then there were some additional contracts. There was a contract for heating apparatus let also to Messrs. Langdon & Sullivan; for additional heating apparatus to the same contractors, and for electric wiring to the firm of Keith & Fitzsimmons, Limited.

Mr. MACDONELL. Were tenders called for this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, for the large work.

Mr. MACDONELL. What was the cause of the delay in completing it? It is nearly three years since the contract was let.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The building is all completed and this is for the completion of the fittings. They had until the 15th August to complete their work. They are not very much behind.

Mr. MACDONELL. Have they finished it yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand the building is finished as far as their contract is concerned. The chief architect tells me they completed it before the 15th August.

Mr. MACDONELL. Were the subsidiary contracts for lighting, heating and wiring advertised, and to whom were they given?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the contractors were asked to give a figure. That was submitted to the chief architect and on his reporting it as reasonable the contracts were made. The amount of the first heating contract was $4,890, and of the additional heating contract $890. The contract for electric wiring was $3,579.

Mr. MACDONELL. Were tenders asked for these small contracts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders were asked for the electric wiring.

Toronto Meteorological Observatory, $44,000.

Mr. MACDONELL. Will this complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MACDONELL. Who were the contractors?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Brown & Love. Only one tender was received after advertisement and the amount of the contract, including heating and wiring, was $91,800.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is the building completed yet?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Toronto Military Buildings, Magazine, $1,500.

Mr. MACDONELL. The Minister of Militia is not present, but I would ask the Minister of Public Works if he is aware of the intention of the government as to the erection of the new barracks at Toronto? Just previous to the elections of 1904 we were promised new barracks and a site was purchased but nothing has been since done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am informed that the matter is under careful consideration by the Minister of Militia. I am unable to say just how soon the work will be undertaken.

Mr. MACDONELL. That is a very unsatisfactory statement. We have been told just the same thing since 1904 and we should now know if the government seriously intends to erect these barracks in Toronto.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot go on with the work when there is no appropriation.

Mr. MACDONELL. Is the minister aware that the government is spending more than $14,000 every year in renting temporary quarters at Toronto as barracks? The accommodation there is absolutely inadequate; it is not sufficient for more than half the force and the soldiers and officers are housed in private quarters throughout the city for which the government is paying a large rental. It is high time for the government to announce their intention in this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am told that the Minister of Militia is very desirous that this work shall be proceeded with at as early a date as possible. The expense will be quite large and as the hon. gentleman knows we are spending a good deal of money in Toronto in improving the harbour and other public works. My hon. friend must be patient.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think the government made any rash promises in Toronto this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think they ever made any rash promises.

Mr. OSLER. Oh yes, every previous election they made promises but they knew it was useless in Toronto last year.

Mr. MACDONELL. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works can tell us something about the new post office in Toronto which we were also promised before the elections of 1904?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend may possibly have some ground for the exercise of his imagination in regard to that matter, because it has been under consideration for some time. The idea was to erect a distributing post office close to the railway station. Since then the railway company has purchased the contemplated site and now there is some talk about utilising a part of the new railway station for postal purposes. I am not prepared to say whether that will come to pass or not.

Mr. OSLER. The post office will merely be a subsiduary office to the Grand Trunk station.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be a distributing office to facilitate the handling of the mail that comes by train.

Kingston Royal Military College—additional accommodation, $57,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the plans and specifications here with reference to these buildings. The tenders received were as follows:—M. Sullivan, Kingston, $77,930; Doran & Devlin, Ottawa, $78,500; McKelvey & Birch, Kingston, $83,000; Elliott Bros., Kingston, $85,000. The department accepted the tender of Mr. Sullivan which was the lowest.

Mr. EDWARDS. What was the tender of Elliott Brothers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $85,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are these the residences for the men which have cost over $100,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, my hon. friend can look at the plans.

Mr. LANCASTER. I don't want to look at the plans for I have seen the buildings themselves, and I think it would be a good thing for the country if the Minister of Public Works took a look at these buildings himself, for I believe he would come to the conclusion that not more than one-half of the money should have been expended. I know from repeated visits to Kingston that some buildings were required there, but to spend such a sum for sixteen little residences is altogether out of proportion to the value obtained. I saw them on Sunday afternoon, and while they are substantially built two story houses, no one would ever suppose they could have cost anything like $100,000. When I heard on Monday of the enormous cost of these buildings I was as astonished as I have been at anything this government has yet done. A dozen residences were required for non-commissioned officers, &c. If you got value for the $100,000 I would not find any fault, but when people are paying a price of $6,000 or $7,000 for a building they ought to have the equivalent of a building worth more than $3,000.

Mr. EDWARDS. Did the tenders of McKelvey & Birch or Elliott Brothers, of Kingston, include anything more than the building, the plumbing or fixings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing but the construction of the buildings, it was the same with all the contractors' tenders. I am glad my hon. friend admits the necessity for these buildings, that of course puts us forward a considerable distance. As to the cost, I do not know that we could have gone about any better way of getting the buildings constructed as cheaply as possible. We advertised for tenders quite widely, inviting the attention of contractors and received tenders from four different contractors, ranging from $77,000 up to $85,000. We accepted the lowest tender. We might have been severely criticised if we had made a private contract with any one of these firms to erect the building, but we went about it in the usual approved way and having received tenders that in the opinion of the chief architect were reasonable, we awarded the contract.

Mr. EDWARDS. The contract given to Sullivan was for $77,739, for a building which is to cost $112,000, the extra cost being to cover the putting in of the heating, &c. Was any of this $34,000 extra done by tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Tenders were called for the electric lighting and wiring. The work of heating was given to the contractor at a figure he furnished which the chief architect certified to be fair and reasonable.

Mr. EDWARDS. The minister said he would be open to censure if the work had not been given by tender, but according to his own statement a considerable part of it was not given by tender. I take the view that the tender of $77,000 was for a complete building. Sullivan, who had the contract for putting up the building, is a contractor. McKelvey & Birch and Elliott Brothers are hardware merchants and plumbers, and I am a little surprised that these men should put in tenders for this work if their tenders did not cover something along the line of their own business. I am also surprised at the cost of this building. I visited it last Saturday and was more astonished than ever. I would ask the attention of the minister to the cost of some of the prominent buildings in Kingston. The old Queen's Arts buildings, erected 30 years ago, cost $50,000. The new Arts building cost $60,000; Grant Hall, $45,000; Ontario Hall, $80,000, Fleming Hall, $50,000; new Medical Hall, $50,000. Here we have 16 cottages costing $112,000 to accommodate the civil subordinate staff. At P—61 of the Auditor General's Report it is said they are for servants' quarters. Either the Auditor General is wrong or the minister is wrong in his answer to me. I want to enter a protest against this reckless waste of public money. This is not the only instance we have had of reckless waste of money in the neighbourhood of Kingston for military purposes. You are asking $15,000 for stables and $15,000 for a veterinary college. You erected some three years ago a stable at the entrance to the Military College grounds and there has not been a horse inside that stable; it is standing there and the hinges are rusting on the doors. I think this extravagance should be condemned for it cannot be called anything else than reckless extravagance.

Mr. BRADBURY. The difference between the cost and value of these buildings is very striking. Has not the minister on his staff some official who makes an approximate estimate of the cost of a building when he calls for tenders? It is no use to say the contract is given to the lowest tenderer, as there may be collusion between tenderers. I presume the department is not bound to accept the lowest tender, and somebody in the department should be responsible for the cost of the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend may rest assured that in the Public Works Department, which has been established since confederation, we have men who do know the value of buildings. The chief architect has been there for 30 odd years under the various governments we have had during that time. He is a man in whose judgment I and my predecessors have had every confidence, and until I have something more than the opinion of gentlemen who, I suppose, have not been through these buildings and know nothing about the interior work and details, I shall continue to hold my faith in the judgment of the chief architect.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Did your architect estimate on the cost of this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, Mr. Ewart estimated the cost to be $96,000. That was before the contract was let.

Mr. EDWARDS. Is that for the building complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has the minister an itemized estimate there of material, &c., required?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not the items of Mr. Ewart's estimate, but I have no objection to bringing it down. My hon. friends sought to draw a comparison between this and certain buildings in Kingston, but you cannot compare one building with another unless you know something about the interior of the buildings, how many partition walls there may be, the number of bathrooms, heating apparatus, plumbing, &c. In some cases the chief architect thinks the lowest tender is too high and new tenders are called for, but in this case he considered that the amount for the building was reasonable and recommended that the contract should be given to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. BRADBURY. It appears that the cost of each one of these dwellings to the government will be $7,000 for a two-story building with only the end walls, so to speak, practically all one building. An ordinary man erecting such a building could not find any way of spending that much money in it.

Mr. EDWARDS. For the information of the Minister of Public Works, the buildings to which I referred were all in connection with Queen's University at Kingston, and as they are divided into a great many classrooms, &c., they are not an inexpensive type of structure. These dwellings, which cost $7,000 each, contain upstairs, two bedrooms and one bath-room, and down stairs a kitchen, living room, hall and vestibule. If you divide the number of rooms into the cost you will see that each room costs $1,500 or $1,600. The whole thing is indefensible and absolutely ridiculous. It is an evidence of the most reckless extravagance ever indulged in by any government in any civilized country.

Mr. CROSBY. I am not here to try to obstruct public buildings because I believe that public buildings should be constructed and we are here for that purpose; we are here to construct public buildings wherever we can. But it is our duty to see that the moneys of the country are judiciously and well spent. We have the statement made by the Minister of Public Works that the contract for these buildings, which were estimated by the architect to cost $96,000, are now costing us, under present methods, $112,000, or 16 per cent over the estimate. I am interested somewhat in real estate and I know something about the construction of ordinary small buildings such as these, and I say that $3,000 each would be a high price for these buildings. Reference has been made to the subject of advertising for tenders. The minister has stated that in this case the department advertised very widely, and perhaps they did, but while he said the other day that he had decided to abolish the patronage system, he said at the same time that he was going to continue to advertise in the Liberal papers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I said the best papers.

Mr. CROSBY. I suppose he will admit that the best papers are the Liberal papers. Is that what he means?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would admit that.

Mr. CROSBY. The minister has been driven into many corners, but he cannot get out of this corner in that way. I want to ask the minister a fair question. I am standing here as a representative from the eastern part of Canada trying to find out if I can how this country is being governed. I do not care how it has been governed in the past; I am here to look after the present and future. If the minister wants to give the country an intimation that he is going to abolish the patronage system he can do that in no better way than by advertising in all the papers, whether Liberal or Conservative. In that way he would show the public that he meant business, that he meant what he said. Everybody knows that in the city of Halifax the 'Morning Herald,' which is an independent paper, claims to have the largest circulation of any morning paper in Canada published east of Toronto, and would it not be wise on the part of the minister when he calls for tenders in that part of the country to have an advertisement put in that independent paper? Then, if the Minister of Public Works announced that he was doing away with the patronage system, the people would say: That is true, because he is advertising in other papers besides Liberal papers. I have no fault to find with him for advertising in the Liberal papers if he advertises in other papers as well. If that had been done in this case, we might have had better tenders for this work than the one we are discussing. I simply arose for the purpose of intimating to the Minister of Public Works that if he desired to inspire the people of Canada with confidence in his statement that he is going to do away with the patronage system, there is no better way of doing that than by advertising for tenders in all the influential papers in the various towns and cities, no matter what party they may support, and especially the independent papers.

Mr. PRICE. I really feel very sorry for the Minister of Public Works, because last Friday he informed us that he was not satisfied with this expenditure himself, but that he could not help it because the estimates had evidently been made under his predecessor. This discussion is rather hard on the Minister of Public Works, because we know from the speech he has made in this House, that he takes the greatest care of the money of this country. Not long ago there was a resolution before this House, introduced by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) in regard to the opening of tenders, and the Minister of Public Works told us then how carefully he would supervise the opening of tenders and what his subordinates would do. Here is one of those cases. These tenders may have been opened quite properly, but it appears to me that there is an appearance of collusion on the part of the tenderers. Here are sixteen houses built in two terraces, each house, without heating or lighting, costing roughly $5,000. Anybody who knows anything about the building of houses knows—he need not be a contractor—that $5,000 for that kind of house is simply absurd. Moreover, the cost of heating and electric lighting for these houses practically amounts to $2,000 per house. In other words, these houses are costing $7,000 apiece, and I believe we have not heard the end of them. I believe that next year we shall have a further item in the estimates, one for extras. It seems to me that estimates and tenders do not really amount to much, because there are always extras, and under the present regime what do extras mean? They mean a great addition to the cost, from the little I have seen. I want to say strongly here that the expenditure of $7,000 each for these houses, making up a total expenditure of $112,000, is a disgrace. It is something the government ought to be ashamed of. I think that in future they should look better after the expenditure of the people's money. We do not want to obstruct or impede these estimates, and if we felt that the people's money were being properly expended, there would be very little opposition to them. Nearly all the opposition to the government is due to the fact that we feel that the money of the people of Canada is not being properly expended. It is time for a change in this respect, and, by Jove, if there is not, you will see that your party will be out the next time.

Mr. BURRELL. I would like to ask the minister what rate of pay do the men get who are going to occupy these houses?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot say at the moment the exact rates of pay, but I am having a list made up, and this evening I will be able to give the rates of pay. I may say that the name 'servants' quarters' is altogether a misnomer. The people who are occupying the buildings are teachers and instructors, with the rank of non-commissioned officers, and some of them are civilian instructors in connection with the Royal Military College. These men are getting from $1,000 to $1,600 each, possibly some of them more.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall have the information to-night. But before we rise at six, I want to say that all the excavation for these sixteen buildings was made in solid rock. Kingston, as we know, is a limestone city. Then all the floors in the basement were cemented. In every dwelling part, there is a bath room, and the buildings were made as near fireproof as possible All the partitions are of solid brick, as the chief architect tells me, and the walls are nine inches thick.

Mr. EDWARDS. Are the division walls upstairs of brick as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the partition walls all the way up between these 16 different cottages are of brick, nine-inch walls. Then on the first floor there are many other walls similarly of brick, as the architect tells me.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is a distinction between the partition walls of the houses and the walls between the rooms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The partition walls between the rooms are not of brick.

Mr. AMES. I desire to call the attention of the minister to the fact that on the 18th of February he promised to supply us with certain information, which we have not yet received. As he will find in 'Hansard,' page 1348, he promised to give a list of those public works for which tenders had been called, and which it was decided would not be gone on with this year. Has the minister taken steps to procure that information?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave that on the very same evening I promised it, and that appears in the 'Hansard.'

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at 8 o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

SALISBURY AND ALBERT RAILWAY COMPANY.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Salisbury and Harvey Railroad Company.—Mr. Emmerson.

Mr. EMMERSON. This Bill stood over for the purpose of consulting those interested in it with respect to the title. I have a communication from the promoters in the city of St. John who have suggested the title of the 'Salisbury and Albert Railway Company.' I gave notice of an amendment, having filed it with the clerk. I would therefore move:

That in line 26 of sec. 1 the words 'Harvey Railroad' be struck out and that in lieu thereof there be inserted 'Albert Railway.'

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. You will have to change clause 8 because the name appears there again.

Mr. EMMERSON. Clause 8 should not be amended because it will be borne in mind that it was originally the Salisbury and Harvey Railway Company whose rights were foreclosed and were purchased by the incorporators under this Bill, who now seek to operate the railway under the title of the Salisbury and Albert Railway Company. They want to retain in this Bill the provisions which would enable them to exercise the rights, properties, privileges and franchises of the old company.

Bill reported, and read the third time.

Mr. EMMERSON moved:

That the Bill do now pass and that the title be 'An Act to incorporate the Salisbury and Albert Railway Company.'

Motion agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 66) respecting the Abitibi and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Gordon.

Bill (No. 67) respecting the Alsek and Yukon Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 68) respecting the Athabaska Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 70) respecting the St. Mary's and Western Ontario Railway Company—Mr. G. H. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 71) respecting a Patent of Thomas L. Smith—Mr. Bickerdike.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have here the information asked for the other evening by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) with respect to the advertisements for the public buildings in Whitby, Welland and Simcoe. It is a very long list and perhaps I might hand it to 'Hansard.'

Mr. BLAIN. So long as it appears in 'Hansard' that will suit me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will give it to 'Hansard' The following is the list:—

§ New Dredging Plant, (Ontario and Quebec.)

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Public Works stated the other evening that those public works for which an appropriation had been made and which had not been gone on with, would receive the first consideration of the government when it was felt they had money enough to proceed with the erection of public works.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Speaking as a general rule.

Mr. HENDERSON. Now, there is no doubt that a great many of these public works were promised for purely political purposes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, no.

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, yes. The minister cannot deny that; it admits of no denial and therefore we will take it for granted. Now that the elections are over and the purpose for which these promises were made served, I do not think it would be fair to give the preference to these buildings which were promised because of a reason which was not in the public interest. It would be only fair to disregard the fact that appropriations had been made to all these towns and commence afresh, placing those places for which no appropriation had been made on exactly the same plane as those named in the Appropriation Act. In that way we would have a better distribution of public money; if we left political feeling out of consideration we would find plenty of other towns larger, more important, and producing more revenue than the ones enumerated that would deserve consideration from the minister.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am surprised beyond measure at my hon. friend's ideas of political morality.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do not be surprised.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend, as an old and experienced member of the great Conservative party, intimates that in my position he would absolutely ignore the appropriations made last session, suggesting that these appropriations may have had an effect on the public mind and that we should not carry out the promises made by the Appropriation Act. If he were in my position I am sure he would not attempt to humbug the electorate in that way. I honestly believe, whether rightly or not, that every public work provided for in the estimates of last year was necessary and in the public interest, and I would be ashamed as a minister to say that no weight should be given to the fact that parliament last session made appropriations for these various works. As I have said I feel there is a solemn obligation resting on me to carry out these works for which appropriations were granted last parliament. In my constituency, and I think I can say the same thing for my friends throughout Canada in every constituency in which public buildings were promised, there was no contingency with respect to them; the public was informed, through the Appropriation Act and the estimates brought down to parliament, that these different works were regarded as reasonably necessary in the public interest and the good faith of parliament was pledged to the carrying out of these promises. Therefore I say, speaking as a general rule, that I would feel bound to continue the public works for which appropriations were made, regardless of the constituency in which they were situated. It may be that I may get further information. If my hon. friend knows of any work in his constituency that is unnecessary in the public interest, he might present his views to me. If any member thinks that a public work which has been provided for in his constituency should be dropped he has only to call my attention to the fact, and I will weigh carefully the reasons advanced.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have listened with pleasure to the jocular remarks of the minister, whose smiling countenance showed that he was merely seeking to create a pleasing impression. I thought a mistake was made when the minister was asked to carry out an undertaking which had been promised. It is all very well for the minister to say that the political exigencies are not considered in these matters. I do not think even his own political friends will give him credit for entire sincerity in that statement. No public buildings in my riding will be left out of consideration, even although he does not adhere to the rule laid down, because there were no appropriations for any, nor has a public building ever been erected in it, so I am absolutely free to speak on this matter. The minister may think my criticism was severe, but I am satisfied that members felt last session when these appropriations were going through the House, that many of them were made simply in view of the approaching election. I believe a fair plan would be that all appropriations dropped by the minister this year should be considered as having lapsed, and when the minister takes up the matter again and money is sufficiently plentiful to go on with the construction of public works, he should begin afresh, leaving out of consideration everything that had been promised before and giving all towns and villages throughout the country an equal show.

Mr. LALOR. Is it the intention to carry out a promise made by the government candidate in my county as to the erection of a post office in Hagersville? In that village a remarkable vote was cast for the government candidate, which was wholly attributable to the fact that he was able to promise a beautiful post office to be built on a beautiful site in the village of Hagersville. I am quite anxious that such a post office should be built there, and I hope the minister will carry out the promise made by the candidate in the last election. The site selected is an admirable one, nicely located in the centre of the town, which is a thriving centre, and I hope that my opponent in making that promise, did so with the assurance of the government that they would carry it out. No doubt the minister assured him that if he were elected, that a post office would be built, and now that the county elected myself as an independent representative of the people, surely he will not for that reason go back on his promise. The labouring men there are most anxious to get work on this particular post office, as they were told they would be paid very high wages, and for that reason they voted for the government candidate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Lest my silence might imply that any such promise was made, I rise to say that I have no recollection of it.

Mr. LALOR. It seems to have been the rule for government candidates throughout the whole country to make these promises. Are we to understand that they were made without any assurance from the government that they would be carried out? But if these promises were made by the candidates in good faith and not merely to deceive the electors, the government should carry them out, or else take the stand that they repudiate them and say that their candidates had no assurance whatever on which to base them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has not gone so far as to say that he is personally aware of any such promise having been made. He says he understands that it was. All I can say to that, so far as the government is concerned, no promise of the kind is registered in the Appropriation Act of the last parliament.

Mr. J. D. REID. I am about in the same position as my hon. friend who has just spoken. A promise was made by my opponent that a post office would be built in the village of Kemptville.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is in an entirely different position because an appropriation was made and the site purchased.

Mr. J. D. REID. I did not know that. It must have been done a short time ago, and I am very glad to hear it. I suppose I can assure the people that we will have the post office.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will not be necessary for you to give that assurance because the post office will be built any way.

Mr. J. D. REID. And I suppose at an early date?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As early as possible.

Mr. J. D. REID. And this year it will be in the estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not in the estimates of this year.

Mr. J. D. REID. As regards these public buildings, I can hardly agree with the department in the way it proceeds. I see that for the installation of electric works and heating, one firm in Ottawa last year supplied $106,949.49 worth of work on different buildings without tender.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Which firm was that?

Mr. J. D. REID. Ahearn & Soper. Here are some of the items. On page V-20 of the Auditor General's Report, for the Dominion Archives building, $808.69; V-23 and 24, Ottawa Royal Mint, $33,887.86; V-27, Ot- Parliament Buildings, $6,103.50; V-67, Ottawa Printing Bureau, $11,917.40; V-108, $25,083.78. And other items, V-143, $10,-428.20; and V-332, $3,898.20, a total of $106,-949.29. Had tenders been invited for the work necessary for any one of these items, the government would have had it done much cheaper. I am quite satisfied that had tenders been called for, there would have been $25,000 in the treasury to-day saved out of that $106,947. I do not see why tenders should not be called for these works just as for the building itself. As I understand it, the system has been to invite tenders for the building. Then the heating and electric work is extra, and word is sent to this firm to go and do this work. In this way it must cost a good deal more than if tenders were called for.

Mr. HERRON. I was rather surprised at the innocence of the present minister regarding the promises of public works. He is perhaps wiser in his day and generation than were some of his predecessors. In my former election, promises were made that certain works would be carried out in my constituency, but when I appealed to the department, I was deliberately told that it was only an election promise.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By whom were you told?

Mr. HERRON. By one of the hon. gentleman's predecessors in his own department.

Mr. PUGSLEY. A former minister?

Mr. HERRON. Yes, and I have witnesses to prove my statement.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He must have been a younger politician than I thought.

Mr. SAM. SHARPE. Are we to understand that all contracts in excess of $5,000 must be let by public tender unless you have the authority of an order in council?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As a rule, in the case of a contract which involves an expenditure of $5,000, tenders must be called for, or the facts submitted to the Governor in Council. I feel myself bound either to call for tenders or to submit the facts to the Governor in Council. But there may be cases such as the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D.

Reid) referred to, in which a number of small items amount in the aggregate to over $5,000. But the rule of the department is to call for tenders whenever the amount exceeds $5,000. I do not know that that applies to fittings, which perhaps can hardly be called a public work.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I understood that the minister promised to bring down the orders in council in regard to contracts amounting to over $5,000 in connection with the addition to the parliament buildings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What I told the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) I would bring down were the orders in council with regard to the building of the guardhouses and the fence in connection with the Mint. I then said that I understood that there was only one order in council with respect to the addition to the parliament buildings, and that was in reference to the elevators. I have made inquiry, and find that there was no order in council for any other work apart from the original contract.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister's statement in regard to what I said is hardly correct. Take this item of $33,887 spent on the Royal Mint. That was for the electric work on one building. In a case of that kind, I should think that tenders should be asked for, because the chief architect of the department must know that a very large amount of that work would have to be done, and various firms should be able to estimate what they would do the work for. In every case in which the cost of the heating and lighting is likely to amount to more than $5,000, I think tenders should be asked.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that I have been making inquiry into this matter, and I have given directions to the chief architect that when tenders are called for, they should as far as possible include plumbing, heating, wiring and everything else. I should say, in regard to the equipment of the Mint and the Printing Bureau with motors, that the master of the Mint selected a certain class of motor for the running of the machinery there; I think it was the Westinghouse, which is supplied by only one concern. In such a case it would be difficult to call for tenders, as the price would differ according to the quality of the machine to be supplied. There is a good deal more difficulty in that case than there would be in regard to plumbing, heating and electric wiring. At all events, the rule which my hon. friend thinks should be adopted, I also think should be adopted as far as possible, and I have already given directions to the chief architect in respect to new buildings, as far as possible, to have the specifications cover everything, so that when the contract is let we should know as nearly as possible what the work is going to cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. CROTHERS. The other day the minister read a long list of public works for which appropriations amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars were asked for last year. I want to ask one or two questions in respect to that. The first is: Did the minister, at the time he asked these appropriations, intend to proceed during the year with all the works for which they were asked? If he did not intend at that time to proceed during the year with all these works, did he indicate the works with which he did intend to proceed during the year, and those he did not intend to proceed with during the year? If there were any he did not intend to proceed with during the year, why did he ask for appropriations for them last year? If the answer be that he did intend to proceed with all these works, the next question is, why did he not proceed with them? If he did not proceed, was it because of the lack of funds? If it was because of the lack of funds, did he not know then that there would be a lack of funds for all these appropriations?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will have to put his questions in writing, because my memory, though pretty fair, is not equal to carrying them all.

Mr. CROTHERS. I will put them seriatim. The first is: Did you intend last year, when you asked for appropriations involving hundreds of thousands of dollars——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman will please take his seat. The hon. gentleman must address the Chair, and not any one in particular.

Mr. CROTHERS. I will then ask you, Mr. Chairman, did the hon. minister, when he submitted all these appropriations to the House a year ago, intend at that time to implement his promises? Did he intend at that time to proceed with these works, and with all of them within the year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I can answer the hon. gentleman. When those amounts were put in the estimates, it was intended to proceed with the works as rapidly as possible.

Mr. CROTHERS. Within the year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes; and proceeding with them meant acquiring sites, preparing plans and specifications, advertising for tenders, going along just as rapidly as the officials of the department could fairly proceed with the work.

Mr. CROTHERS. That answers the first question. The hon. gentleman has answered that a year ago; when he asked for those appropriations, he honestly and sincerely intended during the year to proceed with all the works for which appropriations were asked. The next question is: Why did the hon. minister not during the year proceed with those different public works? I could understand very well that the hon. minister could not perhaps proceed with the whole of them, but we have scores of them——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thought the hon. member wanted to ask a question.

Mr. CROTHERS. If you will please sit down, I want to address the Chair. The hon minister having said that at that time he intended to proceed with the whole of the wcrks, I now desire to ask him why he did not proceed with any of those in that long list?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The answer is that he did proceed.

Mr. CROTHERS. The hon. member gave us a long list of those which he asked appropriations for and did not proceed with. The hon. minister will probably admit that there is a long list of public works for which he asked appropriations, and in respect of which he has done nothing since.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy tells me that he does not think there is any work in respect to which something has not been done. In respect of some, the preliminary sketches have been dropped; in respect of some, the sites have been examined, and in many cases the sites have been selected and purchased. In some, plans have been prepared and specifications have been drawn up, so that we are ready at any time to ask for tenders. But in respect to all of them, preliminary work was done in the direction of calling for tenders, and in respect of others tenders were actually called for.

Mr. LALOR. When were these preliminary sketches made? Was it during the past year just previous to the general election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work was begun immediately after the prorogation of parliament, immediately after the appropriations were made. General instructions were given to the officers of the department to proceed with as reasonable speed as they could.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I think the minister has dealt very unfairly with the public, because for months many promises had been made throughout the country, and great expectations were raised among the people that these expenditures would be made, and merchants and others began to make preparations to meet the demand for carrying on these works. Now, people have a lot of material on their hands and the business of the country is gradually coming to a standstill. Now we are told that something is wrong. There is something undigested, apparently the Department of Public Works has not digested these supplies that were given to them by the last parliament. The result is disastrous to the country. Contractors were prepared to furnish material, manufacturers of various articles had begun to prepare them, and everybody was getting ready for the large expenditure that had been promised. And now for the government to reverse their policy and break their promises is a very serious matter to this country. A little over a year ago we passed through a serious crisis, and passed through it successfully. Now another crisis is at hand in the United States, and it is essential for this country that the wheels of commerce should be kept moving in some way. I do not think there is any public work that was suggested previous to the last election in which drawings were not made, and I trust that all these works will be gone on with this year.

Mr. CROTHERS. The Minister of Public Works has told us of the preliminary work that was done in connection with many of these projects. I would like to ask him if a promise made by a government candidate is considered one of these preliminary works.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I would like to ask the minister if a sketch was made of the Uxbridge post office in the county of Ontario, or what other preliminary steps were taken?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We purchased the site.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. When was it purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Previous to the election.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. When will the buildings be proceeded with ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When parliament provides the money.

Mr. HUGHES. I understood the minister to say that he had furnished the House with a list of the public works for which moneys were voted last year, but which are not to be proceeded with this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, for the province of Ontario.

Mr. HUGHES. Why are these expenditures not being proceeded with?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think I have stated half a dozen times the reason why they are not being proceeded with. Last December, when we came to consider these estimates, it was brought forcibly to my attention that it was desirable to cut down my estimates for the coming year to as low a figure as possible. The appropriations which were made for buildings were not sufficient to complete them, and if they had been gone on with that it would have been necessary to ask for further appropriations.

Mr. HUGHES. What was the object of cutting them down?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To do what every prudent man and every prudent government should do who wish to keep the expenditure within the revenue. It became necessary for me to cut off from the estimates of the Public Works somewhere in the vicinity of eight million dollars. Now, I was not prepared to go through these estimates item after item and select those which we should proceed with and those which we should drop, so I decided that the better way was simply to postpone the construction of a certain number of public works for another year; at all events, we drew the line sharply between those works in respect of which there has been no commencement, in regard to which tenders had not been called prior to the time we took this decision, and in that way we cut off this large amount from the estimates. Then we also cut off a number of public works in regard to which tenders had been called for, but in respect to which there did not seem to be great urgency for the present year. My hon. friend will find for the province of Ontario a list of those in respect to which tenders were called for, but the actual carrying on of which will have to stand over.

Mr. HUGHES. Owing to the hard times?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Owing to the revenue being smaller than we had anticipated.

Mr. HUGHES. Owing to the general business depression the minister has put off many millions of expenditure that were deemed proper a year ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say the depression; I said owing to the decline in the revenue.

Mr. HUGHES. The policy of the government then is still further to encourage hard times by turning a lot of labour idle on the labour market. Is that the policy of the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is an argument rather than a question.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the minister why so many thousands of men have been turned idle on the labour market by the government at a time when there is business depression, when the industries of the country are in a state of depression, and why is the government still further intensifying the depression by turning those men idle on the country?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is an argument. If my hon. friend will ask me a question of fact I will answer him.

Mr. HUGHES. I want to know why the government has seen fit to turn these men, these bread winners, idle at the present time, at a time when the business interests of the country are in a state of depression? Does the minister justify that policy? Does the minister justify that expenditure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is an argument which might appeal to some, but I know there are others who take a very different view. Whether rightly or wrongly the view which the government took was that the revenue having fallen off, it was the part of prudence to curtail the expenditures and endeavour to keep them within the income. Whether that is a wise course or not, my hon. friend, as well as others, must form their own judgment. My own opinion is that we did the wise and prudent thing and that the country will approve the course we have pursued. As far as our turning people out of work is concerned, we have not done that. We simply have not gone on with public works for which we did not feel we had the revenues available at the present time. We are sorry we have not been able to give more employment on these public works though it is not our fault. We are placed in a condition which we were required to meet in a proper and prudent manner and I submit that we have met it in that way.

Mr. HUGHES. Was the minister not aware last June when these estimates were voted that there would be a deficit?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I was aware that the revenues were not as buoyant as they had been, but the estimates of last session were made up before the close of the last fiscal year. I did not anticipate that the depression would continue as long as it has.

Mr. CROSBY. The minister has stated that plans have been prepared for certain public buildings for which appropriations were made last year and that is proof that it is the intention of the department to proceed with these works. I would like to know whether or not the preparation of plans is conclusive proof that the government will go on with certain work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not at all. The best evidence of whether we will go on with certain work is the fact that parliament has made the appropriation. If, as the result of the appropriation, plans are proceeded with, my hon. friend may rely with confidence, taking the appropriation and the preparation of the plans together, that it is pretty good evidence that we intend to proceed with the work and that in the ordinary course tenders will be called and contracts made.

Mr. LALOR. Is it the intention of the minister to build a post office at Port Perry, in South Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there is no appropriation for that.

Mr. OSLER. I am afraid I cannot very well agree with my hon. friend from Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) in objecting to the government exercising a little economy. They have committed themselves to such wild, reckless extravagance——

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is spoiling all you said before.

Mr. OSLER. No, I do not think so. I say I do not think I can blame the government for exercising economy now. They have in the past committed the country to such wild, reckless extravagance, without having looked forward to the possibility of a setback, that we are face to face not with a cutting down of the estimates for this year but, I think, that for years to come the pruning knife will have to be applied to meet the terrible outlays that the government are committed to. The government have been reckless to a degree. They have made promises in every possible direction and they have committed this country to wild expenditures. The minister is very profuse in his promises that in future contracts will be let so that the country may get the benefit of reasonable competition, but he refuses to apply his remedy when he has a chance. In connection with this museum in Ottawa a contract was let for the skeleton of the building. There is not very much more than half or two-thirds of the whole cost covered by contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. OSLER. What are the figures of the original contract and what is the building going to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract is $950,000, and the total esimated cost is $1,250,000. That includes fittings, furniture and everything.

Mr. OSLER. The public building here is what I refer to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The original contract for the new wing of the parliament buildings was $237,000, and the additional work that was given to the contractor was $44,000.

Mr. OSLER. What is the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost of the new wing including the improvements to this building, elevators and the ventilation system is $447,000.

Mr. OSLER. The minister is very pleasant and profuse in his mild condemnation of the way in which contracts have been let hitherto when the government let a skeleton contract and then left it open to permit inside contracts to be given by the department without tender. The minister condemned that system and said that he hoped he would let the whole contract to one contractor. In connection with these houses in Kingston we found the same thing. Four men tendered, of whom one was a builder and the others were plumbers.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an Ottawa firm—were they not contracors?

Mr. OSLER. I do not know who they were.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The firm of Doran & Devlin are contractors of large experience who have done a large amount of work.

Mr. OSLER. A contract was let for a skeleton building leaving it open to the department to let separate contracts for plumbing and heating not by public tender, but at the prices which the architect or the government gave to the original contractors. The contractor of the museum building took his contract at what the minister said was a very low price, namely, $900,000, and there is extra work amounting to $400,000 remaining to be done. We are told that this extra work is not to be tendered for. These are sub-contracts and it is in these sub-contracts where fraud is committed and where the country is robbed. There is no man of sense in this country who would carry on that work as the government proposes to do in this case. I do not care what the minister promises for the future; I say it is his duty to commence now by showing his good faith and by having all the extra work on the museum, not included in the first contract, thrown open to public tender and competition. If the minister does that he will give us some assurance that he is trying to reform his department which needs reform badly. The minister speaks of economy this year and he says he hopes that next year he will be able to go on with many of these public works, but I tell him that the chances are that next year he will have a harder time and that he will have to reduce his appropriations still further. On account of the exposé in the Cassels report the people of Canada are hoping that each department of this government shall be operated on purely business principles and that there will be no reason for accusation in future against the government or any of its employees as was the case in the Marine Department. I have very little confidence in the minister's promise of future reform unless he lets this extra work on the museum by public tender.

Mr. MARSHALL. Last session I brought to the attention of the government the necessity for a public building in Aylmer, in my constituency. We fully expected the minister would be up there during the recess to look over the ground and we were disappointed he did not come. I find that he proposes to build a post office at Glencoe with a population of 1,200, and in Leamington, which has a population of 2,500, about the same as Aylmer, and I would like to know why there is no appropriation for a post office in Aylmer.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did make inquiry into the claims of the town of Aylmer and I was impressed with what my hon. friend (Mr. Marshall) said and with the other information I obtained. I regret there is no appropriation for that purpose this year. It will have to stand over with others which are equally deserving.

Mr. HUGHES. I regret exceedingly that the member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) does not see eye to eye with me on the question of public expenditure under present conditions. I can tell the hon. gentleman that economy and retrenchment are two different things; and I can tell him also that extravagance in the expenditure of public money is not economy. On the assurance of the Minister of Public Works we solemnly voted a year ago large sums of money for certain buildings which were declared to be absolutely necessary in the interests of the country. It is sound policy, and it is the policy in England and in France and in every civilized land that when there is depression amongst commercial enterprises, the government which has the credit should come to the relief of the people by erecting public works. That is the policy that carried the Tory party through the stormy times of 1893 and succeeding years. There was a wing of the Conservative party then which went in for lopping off the mouldering branches but there was a stronger wing which held that in times of business depression the government should go on with public works and afford employment to the people. A time of stress is on us now and if these works are necessary in the interests of the country this is the time for the government to go on with them so as to afford useful employment for those who are out of work. That is a principle which will not stand contradiction for one instant among business men. If these public works were necessary before the elections, they are doubly necessary now and it is the duty of the government to go on with them and alleviate distress and suffering.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Publis Works misunderstands my position with regard to this matter. I did not ask him to abandon all the public works he has proposed; I simply asked that they should be put on the same level as to their necessity with other public works in other communities for which no appropriation had been made. As a member of the Conservative party, I desire to say, before I resume my seat, that I do not feel myself committed to the policy laid down by the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes).

Mr. PUGSLEY. I wish to say, in reference to some information which was asked by my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Currie), that it will take some days to prepare it and when it is ready I will give it to 'Hansard.'

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. We will have permission to discuss it at some other opportunity.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. EDWARDS. I understood from the minister that four tenders were received in connection with the servants' quarters. Two of these were from men in the contracting business, Sullivan and Doran & Devlin, of Ottawa. The tender of McKelvey & Birch could not be considered as a tender, as no cheque accompanied it. The tender of Elliott Bros. could hardly be considered a tender because they were not in a position to carry out the contract, not being contractors, and the specifications say that a contractor shall not assign or sublet this contract or any part of it. They were hardware merchants and plumbers and incapable of carrying out the work for which they had tendered. How much of the work represented by that $34,000 was for the heating and lighting fixtures?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not give the information at this moment.

Mr. EDWARDS. That is a large proportion of the total, $112,000. $34,000 of that is unaccounted for in the original contract. I think we ought to have some information as to the proportion of that amount that was tendered for.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will give me a memorandum of what he wants I will submit it at some convenient time and place it in 'Hansard.'

Mr. BURRELL. The Minister of Militia undertook to bring down the figures in connection with the salaries of these men.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have the information. The salaries were for instructors: One at $3.00 a day, one at $2.25; sergeants, one at $2.45, two at $1.35, two at $1.65, eight at $22.00 a month, one at $1.50 per day, one at $2.00 per day. Rations of course are in addition.

Mr. BURRELL. I have checked over these items in the Auditor General's Report. I understood that these people were the subordinate staff. Last year there were just 22 men on this list of the subordinate staff. The pay of five sergeant instructors averaged $2.03 a day. I understood the Minister of Militia to say that the pay of these men ran from about $1,000 to $1,600. One bugler gets $321 a year, one storeman gets $420 a year and one labourer gets $420 a year. Then we have twelve servants at $22 a month and two butlers at $35 a month. I must confess that that answer does not help the situation as far as the Department of Public Works goes, because we have here absolute evidence that a good many of these people inhabiting these $7,000 houses are of the servant class at $22 a month. In the western country we consider that a man is doing fairly well if he can build a $5,000 house and it seems extraordinary that people whose salaries average from $22 to $35 a month should have built for them by the people of this country houses costing $5,000 and costing as much for wiring and heating as we would require to build a whole house. I cannot believe it is anything but gross extravagance in the expenditure of public money and I think the people of the west will so regard it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope my hon. friend will not think me discourteous if I do not feel called upon to reply to his observations, because I have already said all that can be said. I have explained that the basement had been excavated out of the solid rock and the fireproof character of the building.

I shall now refer to the item of barrack accommodation for stables. That means accommodation for the 25 or 30 non-commissioned officers and men of the permanent corps who look after the horses provided for the cadets. The stables have already been built and this is for the accommodation of the men who look after the horses.

Mr. EDWARDS. This is a kind of annex to the servants' quarters.

Mr. HUGHES. Are the stable men to reside in this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Where are the buildings located?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the Royal Military College grounds.

Mr. HUGHES. How many horses has the Royal Military College attached to it for the present?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About twenty-five.

Mr. PRICE. What kind of a building is this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is built of brick—41 by 35 feet, two and a half storys high.

Mr. HUGHES. When were the horses added to the college?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are to be taken from the horse artillery.

Mr. HUGHES. What are the salaries of these 22 stablemen?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The sergeants about $1.65 and the men $1.50 per day.

Mr. BARR. Do they receive their rations?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Then there has just been a detachment of artillery moved to the barracks?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, with their horses, to instruct the cadets.

Mr. HUGHES. Will they be on the pay of the Royal College?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a matter for the Minister of Militia to decide.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not think that any opposition would be made to the erection of these buildings at Kingston if we were satisfied that they were intended for permanent barrack purposes and could be readily used at any time to accommodate from 500 to 2,000 men. But on looking over the plans I find that they have all been built with the view of the one purpose to which they are being put, and there is no reason why such expensive buildings should have been erected. I do not say that the Minister of Public Works is so much to blame because he has a lot to bear on his shoulders, but I trust that when anything of this description comes up again he will see that any building of this kind of a permanent character should be erected with a view of being utilized for general purposes of the barracks or police or quarters for the men. These are not intended for that purpose, but only for the one use, and while I would like to see the men have good quarters, I do not think the country should be charged to provide such luxurious quarters for men whose pay is so low.

Kingston Veterinary Hospital, $15,000.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Is that accommodation for the stables?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is a hospital for the horse artillery.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Are you building a mansion of $15,000 for this purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is what it costs.

Mr. BARR. Are we to understand that there are only 25 horses to be accommodated after all this outlay, and of course that $15,000 will not finish the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are about 300 horses in Kingston altogether, and this hospital is intended for those which are sick.

Mr. HUGHES. Is this to be an isolation hospital?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, but not necessarily so.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the Whitby public item been passed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. What was the cost of the site; who recommended its purchase, and is it not a fact that an area of ground on the opposite corner, fully as large, if not a little larger, with a splendid building on it, was purchased about the same time for less than the cost of that vacant lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It comprises part of lots 15 and 16. It has a frontage on Barclay street of 55 feet with a depth on Dundas street of 150 feet, and the amount paid was $5,000. We had it examined and it was reported very suitable. It would appear from the notes I have that the site was recommended by the Whitby Board of Trade. I have here a resolution of the board of trade which recites that a suitable site is available, and no doubt this is the site.

Mr. HUGHES. Do they recommend $5,000 as the price for it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They do not mention any price. It was purchased from Mr. Barclay.

Mr. HUGHES. Why does it not appear in his name in the Public Accounts? It appears in the name of the Society of the Sons of Scotland.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never heard that before.

Mr. HUGHES. I may tell the minister that a corresponding site on the opposite corner, better located than this one, and not a vancant lot, but having a three-story brick building upon it, was sold at about the same time for about half the money that this site cost; but it had not the same motive power behind it that this had.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. The minister will find the item on page V—74:

Purchase price of site—Sons of Scotland Benevolent Society, $5,000.

I wish to endorse what the hon. member for Victoria has said. There was an adjoining property, with a brick building on it, which was sold for less than half the amount this vacant property was purchased for. The department was certainly very extravagant in the price they paid for this lot. You could purchase nearly half the sites in the whole village for that price. It certainly was a most extravagant price to pay, and met with the condemnation of all reasonable men in that vicinity.

Mr. FOWKE. The hon. member comes from North Ontario, and is not in a position to know what the value of this site in the town of Whitby is. It is a matter of which I know something, as it is in the county town of the county from which I come; and I wish to say that it is the most eligible site in the town of Whitby, that it is a corner lot on the main thoroughfare of the town, that practically every business man in the town was consulted by myself in relation to the value of that property and its eligibility for the purpose to which it was to be devoted, and that Conservatives and Liberals alike said that if it were in their possession they would not part with it for the price which the government paid for it. I have this to say in addition, that the town council and the board of trade of the town of Whitby joined in affirming that opinion as being correct, and in declaring the site to be a proper site for the purpose, and said it was cheap at the price the government were paying for it.

Mr. HUGHES. I venture to say that the hon. member cannot produce one man in the town of Whitby, much less the board of trade, who will state that that was not too high a price. He cannot produce one honest man in the town of Whitby who will say that it was a proper price. We are not condemning the site, but we are condemning the exorbitant price which my friend engineered for it. He knows that the opposite lot on the same thoroughfare, with a three-story brick building on it was sold about the same time for about half the sum that the government paid for this site. My hon. friend is an adept at engineering prices. We shall have something to say later on of the Oshawa harbour deal, which was engineered by my hon. friend in connection with this same riding.

Mr. FOWKE. My hon. friend says that no honest man in the town of Whitby can be got to say that that was a proper price. I have only to say that perhaps the honesty of men there is not of the same quality as that of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. They are plain, blunt, honest men in the town of Whitby, who say what they mean and mean what they say. I went to them for information as to what would be a proper price in the circumstances, and I took them at their word. I took the board of trade at its word, and the town council as well; and I had the co-operation of private individuals and public bodies in saying that the government would be warranted in paying $5,000 for the site. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken came into my riding and made himself very industrious in opposition to my candidature, and no doubt made very good use on the public platform there of the representations which he has made here to-night, and the people expressed their estimate of his judgment and his opposition to myself by returning me with the largest majority given to any candidate in South Ontario since confederation.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I would like to ask the hon. minister by what authority the hon. member for South Ontario was parading around the constituency looking for lots for post offices and other public buildings for the department? It is only in accordance with the policy generally pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite, who took every opportunity to promise public buildings to the constituencies in order to secure a majority in this House; and it ill becomes the hon. member from South Ontario to show that assiduity in regard to corner lots in Whitby in order to put himself right with the electors of South Ontario. I would say, for the information of the Minister of Public Works, that the name of the gentleman from whom this lot was purchased does not appear in the Public Accounts at all. It is stated there that it was purchased from the Sons of Scotland. Why was not the name of the man from whom it was really purchased placed there? The reason was that he was an active political supporter of the hon. member for South Ontario, who busies himself with the voters' lists. In view of this fact, we can see why the government paid such an outrageous price for this vacant lot.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. member for South Ontario has referred to the honour of the people of Whitby. I again make the statement that I spoke to a great many of the prominent men in Whitby, and while they were delighted to get a post office, they one and all laughed at the price, and said that it was the result of a deal with my hon. friend from South Ontario, similar to the deal that had been made with him with regard to the Oshawa harbour, when the government were induced, by misrepresentations——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. HUGHES. Absolutely in order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order having been raised, perhaps I should rule of it. I do not understand the hon. member to be charging dishonour to any hon. member of the House, and in that case I do not rule him out of order.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman who now misrepresents South Ontario——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That I think is not in order.

Mr. HUGHES. The hon. gentleman who now represents South Ontario in this House induced this government to purchase the Oshawa harbour, and the charge was made upon every platform in the riding, and was not successfully contradicted, that he had done it by misrepresenting the tolls of the harbour which he controlled, and thereby induced them to pay a large price for it. As soon as he unloaded, instead of bringing his coal in through the harbour, he brought it in by rail to the town, and dumped the harbour on the government. That is the charge that is made by the electors of Oshawa, and throughout that riding. That is the charge, and the hon. member came up and went through the town of Whitby——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is wandering away from the subject, which is the Whitby public building.

Mr. HUGHES. I am speaking of that building. The hon. member came up to the town of Whitby and passed around from person to person, and everybody was naturally delighted to get a post office. But the board of trade have not stated that they endorsed the price paid for the site, the town council have not stated that they endorsed the price, nor has any public man in the town of Whitby. All of them look on it as a rake-off from start to finish.

Mr. LALOR. I would ask the Minister of Public Works who it was that constituted the member for South Ontario (Mr. Fowke) a commissioner to purchase a lot for this government in the town of Whitby. He was not then a member of this House, he was not representing the county; the county was represented by an enirely different individual. How came it that the present member for South Ontario went through that county picking out lots for this government? This post office was not the only one the member for South Ontario promised to the electors of that county, and did this government appoint him as a commissioner to make those promises? Why should he take it upon himself to buy a lot in the town of Whitby for this government, if this government had not appointed him for that purpose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend from South Ontario, I presume, as a public man and as a candidate, had a right to do what he did. When it was contemplated by the government to purchase a lot in the town of Whitby for a public building, he had a perfect right to inform himself with regard to the value of the different sites which were spoken of, he had a perfect right, for the protection of his own interest as a candidate of the Liberal party, to inform himself as to whether the price for this lot was fair and reasonable, and I commend my hon. friend for having taken the trouble to ascertain if the price was fair and reasonable. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to deal with rumours; it is all very well for people who are dissatisfied because they did not succeed in selling their property, to disparage the property that was sold. But we have the word of the hon. member for South Ontario, whose judgment, I for one am prepared to place great reliance upon; more than that, we have the report of our own inspector, a man of large experience. He went there, as I am informed, and examined the various sites, questioned people who had lots to sell as to what they would take for their property, and after carefully considering the relative values of the different sites, he recommended that this property should be purchased.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the minister kindly give the price recommended by the other inspector, and who was the inspector?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy informs me it was Mr. C. H. Hunter, a man of large experience in these matters. In the department we always adopt the course of requiring the most careful examination to be made into all the properties available. We asked our agent to find out at what prices properties had been recently changing hands for two or three years back, to get the assessed values of the properties, to furnish all the particulars which would enable the chief architect and the minister to form a correct judgment as to the propriety of purchasing a property which is recommended to the department.

Mr. LALOR. Do I understand the minister to say that he sent two inspectors there to value the property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An inspector, Mr. C. H. Hunter.

Mr. LALOR. I think this is a serious matter that the minister has brought up. He says he upholds the member for South Ontario, that he had a perfect right to pick out this lot. The member for South Ontario states that he was the man who selected the lot. As I understand, it was he who interviewed the different parties; he was, so to speak, the whole push in connection with the selection of this particular site. The minister lays down the principle that it is proper to place in the hands of a candidate for parliament the power to select lots for post offices. If that is the case, we should know it. That seems to have been the policy followed by the government throughout the country. They authorize their candidates to give promises of post offices wherever they like, and the member for South Ontario seems to have been favoured in that respect also. The principle is entirely wrong. If the member for South Ontario had any authority from this governmen we should know what that authority is.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister the report of the inspector on that site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not.

Mr. HUGHES. Nobody in Whitby condemned the site, the only thing they condemned was the rake-off in the extra price that was paid for this lot over and above the fair market value.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to know from the minister who was the owner of the property when the transfer was made to the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say to my hon. friend that this item passed some days ago, and as I did not suppose it would come up again to-night I did not bring with me the papers in connection with the site. But I could get the papers and bring them down for the information of my hon. friend. The real owner, I presume, would be the Sons of Scotland. Possibly Mr. Barkley had a mortgage, but the Department of Justice would attend to the title, that would not come under my supervision. When we decide to purchase a property we transfer the papers to the Department of Justice, and if the title is found good, the cheque is made out to the agent of the Minister of Justice to pay the owner. In this case I presume the Sons of Scotland were the owners of the property.

Mr. HUGHES. Who was the agent of the Minister of Justice ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Would the member for North Ontario tell us who was the owner of this lot?

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. My information was that it was a political supporter of the member for South Ontario, Mr. L. T. Barkley. Would the minister kindly say whether the member for South Ontario had any authority from the department, either to recommend or to inspect the various lots in the town of Whitby?

Mr. PUGSLEY. By looking up the papers I could ascertain if there was any communication in reference to the matter, but I have not the papers with me to-night. But so far as the action of the hon. member for South Ontario is concerned in this matter, I thoroughly approve of it. I approve of the hon. gentleman having taken an interest in securing a public building for the town of Whitby. I think it would be entirely within his right as a public man seeking the suffrages of the people, to interest himself to the extent of seeing that a suitable location was secured for a public building. I think he was entirely within his right in ascertaining the value of the various properties, and to satisfy himself that the price asked for the lot in question was a fair and reasonable price, so that the government might not be criticised, and that he himself as a supporter of the government might not be criticised, in respect to the purchase.

Mr. HUGHES. Would the Minister of Public Works give us the name of the agent of the government to whom this cheque was made payable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will be very glad to do it, but I cannot do it to-night.

Mr. S. SHARPE. I do not think this committee should agree with the principle laid down by the Minister of Public Works. That principle is a most vicious one, a most reprehensible one and one which is capable of the greatest possible abuse. If candidates for the government can be empowered by the different departments to go around towns and municipalities and represent themselves as the accredited agents of the government it is capable of the greatest possible abuse. I am surprised to hear the minister lay down a doctrine of that kind because it is demoralizing to the whole community. A practice similar to that was carried on in the town of Uxbridge in South Ontario. The day after the writs were issued we had an accredited agent of the department around with the friends of Mr. Grant, my opponent in the election, taking options on all the corner lots in the town, holding out inducements and raising the expectations of the electors that if my opponent were elected an expensive post office would be erected in the town. Now we have the minister allowing this option to lapse and doing nothing although there was $8,000 in last year's estimates for this work. The principle enunciated by the minister is a most vicious one and one worthy of the most severe condemnation.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Is my hon. friend old enough in politics to let us know what policy his party followed previous to 1896?

Mr. BLAIN. I would like the minister to read the communication from the Board of Trade.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the resolution:

Whereas a suitable site satisfactory to the whole community is at present available. The Whitby office is a distributing centre for a considerable and important district. Whitby is the county town of one of the richest counties in the province; and as the various court sittings and the sessions of the county council are held here the offices of the general government should be in keeping with the other public buildings.

If a government building were erected the customs and postal services could be combined under one roof, instead of being carried on as now in two buildings poorly equipped and a considerable distance apart.

The cost of constructing such a building would not exceed the capitalized rental of the present buildings.

The expenditure in the present case could be amply justified by the existing and pressing need as being in the public interest.

Be it therefore resolved that the attention of the Dominion government be called to this matter in the hope that steps may at once be taken to secure the erection of a new customs and post office, suitable to the present and advancing needs of the town of Whitby and that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Premier, the Postmaster General and the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. HUGHES. That is not the resolution that the minister referred to. We want the resolution endorsing this site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the resolution.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no site referred to there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It says 'Whereas a suitable site satisfactory to the whole community is available.'

Mr. HUGHES. That meant any site.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I told my hon. friend that this resolution did not name the site, but I presumed that it referred to this site.

Mr. HUGHES. The minister gave the committee to understand that a resolution had been passed by the board of trade endorsing the site selected by the hon. member for South Ontario. The minister inferentially lets the committee believe that they have endorsed the site and the price. They do not say so and the member for South Ontario finds himself in rather an unfortunate position.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I regret that my hon. friend's memory should be so fickle.

Mr. HUGHES. My memory is all right and 'Hansard' will bear me out.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend will remember that I stated distinctly that while the resolution did not mention the particular site selected, it referred to the fact that there was a suitable site then available and I presume that referred to the site which was actually purchased.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Does the minister say that Whitby is a customs port?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The application was for a customs house and post office as well. I am unable to state whether it is or not.

Mr. OSLER. What is the date of that resolution?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is dated March 6, 1907.

Mr. OSLER. By whom was it signed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. John Waugh, secretary.

Mr. OSLER. At what date was the purchase made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was an order in council passed on the 25th October, 1907, for the purchase and I presume the purchase would follow shortly after that.

Mr. OSLER. How much is the new building in Whitby to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am afraid I have not that information to-night. This item passed three or four days ago and I did not bring the papers back.

Mr. OSLER. I understand that $43,000 has been appropriated. It will cost about $50,000. The resolution says that the interest capitalized is not going to amount to more than the present rental. What rental is being paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At that time it was $330.

Mr. OSLER. Interest on $50,000 would be about $2,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the board of trade were rather within the mark.

Mr. OSLER. They were talking through their hats when they made that statement in the resolution.

Public Works—Chargeable to Income—Dauphin Public Building, $24,000.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like to ask the minister whether or not he has been able to carry out all the pledges that were made in the province of Manitoba? How many public works promised last session and voted have been dropped? If he will give us that list we will then be in a better position to discuss the items as they come up.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I take it that my hon. friend is not very busy at the present moment and if he will take the Appropriation Act of last year, then take these estimates and subtract one from the other he will see exactly.

Mr. STAPLES. I admit that I have not been very busy and that I have been sitting here listening to the discussion of these items. The minister took the trouble to make a list for Ontario and I am not asking anything more than he did in the case of Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will do it a little later; I cannot do it at this moment.

Mr. STAPLES. I think the minister should give us that information before we begin to deal with these estimates.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that there was an appropriation last year for a post office at Elmwood, Man. Previous to the election the county was visited by my opponent, Mr. Jackson, and he called a meeting of the Liberals of that town to select a site. I understand that a site was selected and I was told by the minister that the site was bought on the 6th October. The promise was given by my opponent, Mr. Jackson, that the building of a post office would be proceeded with immediately and I would like to ask the minister if it is his intention to implement that pledge? I presume that when the vote was made it was the intention of the government to proceed with the work. I also presume that my opponent, Mr. Jackson, had full authority to make the promise he made to the electors of Elmwood that a post office costing $40,000 would be proceeded with immediately. What has caused the government to change its policy in this regard, because I see that the vote for the Elmwood post office is dropped out of the estimates this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose I will have to explain it to my hon. friend again if he will not take the trouble to read 'Hansard.' The appropriation for the public building at Elmwood last year was put in the estimates upon the earnest solicitation of the late member, Mr. Jackson, and it having been voted by parliament Mr. Jackson would have perfect authority for informing the people that the government had decided to erect that building. The fact that a site had been purchased would I presume justify him in stating that it was the intention of the government to proceed with the building without delay. That was the intention of the government when the appropriation was made, but for the reason that the revenues have declined and that we feel it prudent in the public interest to keep our expenditure within our revenue there is no vote for the Elmwood post office this year. We have treated Elmwood no differently from scores of other places throughout the Dominion. We do not treat it differently because it has, shall I say the bad fortune or the good fortune, to have my hon. friend (Mr. Bradbury) as its representative. My hon. friend can rely that having purchased the site it simply means a postponement of the building for a reasonable time.

Mr. BRODER. I would point out to the Minister of Public Works that when these very items were being voted for public buildings last year the Minister of Finance had announced in his Budget Speech that he anticipated a falling off of $6,000,000 in the revenue, and in face of that announcement the government voted these appropriations.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are providing this year for dredging rivers and harbours and for the erection of a large number of public buildings, and in view of the shrinkage in revenue being double what the hon. gentleman says was anticipated, I think we are doing very well that we have kept over one-half of our estimates for public works in the appropriations for this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I quite understand that the Minister of Public Works has to answer the same questions over and over again, but if there were any consistency in the position assumed by him it would be less difficult for him to explain it. If we could discern a thread of logic running through his argument we would not be so insistent in our demand for information. As we pointed out last Friday evening, the Minister of Public Works stated in July last, in reply to the hon. member for Peel, that there absolutely need be no concern about the erection of these public works, and that there was no cause for alarm that any accident would interfere with their being proceeded with. The logical result of this statement was that these buildings for which appropriations were taken would be erected. On looking into the matter I find that the very month that the minister made that assertion to the House was the month in which the revenue of the country fell to the largest extent below the revenue for the corresponding period in the previous year. I find that for the four months of the fiscal year, commencing on the 1st April and ending with the month in which the minister made that statement, the revenue of the country fell off by some $6,789,589.35, or at the rate of $1,697,397.34 per month. Now, from the end of July to the end of the current year, the falling off in the revenue diminished, so that commencing with the 1st of August, 1908, and ending with the very month when the minister decided on a retrenchment of $8,000,000 the revenue declined at one-half the rate of the previous period, or $933,577 per month.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The hon. gentleman has called me to order, but I really think I am closer to the point than many hon. members on this side of the House have been, or than the minister himself has been throughout this debate.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has been discussed so often.

Mr. MEIGHEN. This has never been discussed before.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. This is the fifth or sixth time we have heard your speech.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. As the point has been raised, I think that in discussing Supply the opposition is entitled to a great deal of freedom and I have not felt that the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) are out of order on the vote for public buildings in Manitoba.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have endeavoured to show that the reasons given by the minister for the policy entered on by the government in December last are not logical, and particularly so in the light of the fact that in July last, when these estimates were voted, not only was July the month of the largest decrease in our revenue over the corresponding period of the previous year, but the fact stands out in strong contrast that the very month in which the ministry arrived at the decision that there must be retrenchment, namely, two months after the election, was the only month in the year 1908 in which the revenue exceeded that of the corresponding month for the preceding year. The revenue for December, 1908, was $7,183,355.94. The revenue for 1907 was $7,093,530.87, so that there was an actual increase in the revenue for December, 1908, of some $933,000, or about $3,000 a day over the corresponding month of the year before. Thus the logic of the minister amounts to this, that when the revenue is falling off at the greatest rate he has cause to assure this country that there is no cause for concern, that he will be able to erect all the structures that he dangles before the electors and just as soon as the revenue resumes its equilibrium and reaches or surpasses the revenue of the year before, the minister in his logic arrives at the conclusion that he must retrench. It will be difficult for the minister to convince the House that that is the real position or the real reason that animated him. The Minister of Finance apparently was the monitor. It was at his suggestion that this decision was reached in December, 1908. I am glad to see him at the right hand of the Minister of Public Works to-night. We are justified in concluding that if the Minister of Finance was the monitor in December, 1908, he was the monitor also in July, 1908. Some three months before that the Minister of Finance, speaking on the 17th of March, assured the House that he anticipated the revenues would fall off by some six and a-half millions and probably by more than that amount. By the time July had arrived the revenue had fallen off by more than that amount, so that if the Minister of Finance were the monitor in December and also in July he surely must have told his colleague that he was only deceiving the public by saying it was possible to go on with this work because the revenue had already decreased by over $6,500,000. On the whole there is every ground to question the reason which the minister has given to-night and other nights, every reason to look back and to say that it is to meet the exigencies of the election that these two months elapsed and that the minister just at the time he had the only reason he ever had to go on with these works, on the contrary decided that he would abandon them for this year at least. I cannot accept the reason of the minister at all and I do not think the country can. I asked last Friday for a return relating to advertisements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I brought that down this evening.

Mr. BRADBURY. From whom was the Elmwood site purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Would my hon. friend allow me to give him that to-morrow?

Mr. ROCHE. How much has been expended for Dauphin public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the estimate was made up $8,000 had been paid on the contract over and above the site.

Mr. STAPLES. I insist on the minister giving me a list of the works abandoned in Manitoba just as he gave a list to the members from Ontario. I think we are entitled to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I trust my hon. friend will not be unreasonable. He could not expect me, while going through with these items, to sit down and do what my hon. friend would be able to do, that is to take the account of last year and these estimates and subtract one from the other.

Mr. STAPLES. I presume the minister has that information?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, I have not it with me.

Mr. A. HAGGART. Would the minister give the particulars of this contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The contract price is $20,330, including the building, but not the heating, wiring, fittings or fixtures.

Mr. STAPLES. What did the site cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $6,000.

Mr. STAPLES. What will the building cost when completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $32,000. The lot is 75 x 132 feet on Burrows avenue.

Mr. STAPLES. Is it a corner lot?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think so.

Dominion Public Buildings, renewals, improvements, repairs, &c., $10,000.

Mr. BRADBURY. Will that item include the furnishing of the Selkirk post office?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect the furnishing to be finished before March 31 and paid out of the appropriation for the present fiscal year.

Mr. STAPLES. I would like an explanation about the public building at Emerson.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is being built on a lot 60 by 140 feet, required for post office and customs purposes. The site cost $1,000. Estimated total cost of building $34,000, including furnishing, fittings and fixtures.

Mr. STAPLES. Will this complete the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Winnipeg Customs Warehouse, $175,000.

Mr. ALEX. HAGGART (Winnipeg). In connection with the expenditure, I find in the Auditor General's Report, V—77, an item, 'purchase price of additional land for 'site. J. H. Kern.' The other day a question was asked regarding the terminals. Kern, it appears, was the man from whom these terminals were purchased. He was planted in there at a very convenient time between the former owner and the government, and the report was that he got a rake-off of $122,000. This man Kern is a very agile person. We find that he is transplanted here between the owner and the former owner of the land in the purchase of the site of this warehouse. Is this the same Kern mentioned in the other case from whom the land was purchased for the terminals ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that for the new examining warehouse?

Mr. A. HAGGART. Yes, he is a hotel-keeper at Moosejaw.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This land was bought before I became minister. My impression is it was purchased from Mackenzie and Mann.

Mr. A. HAGGART. There were two portions. This was for an addition to the site. The original portion was bought from Mackenzie and Mann.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There may have been a small piece bought from Kern.

Mr. A. HAGGART. $35,000 paid to Kern is a pretty considerable item. There will be a chance for a benefit to him here in addition to the benefit he got from the other transaction. When the government have such reliable inspectors and agents, it will be proper to call this matter to the attention of the inspector. I may tell the minister, for his information, that this Mr. Kern is not there for his sole benefit. The people of Winnipeg know, or soon will know that either the government or some friend of the government, or some mutual friend of the government and Mr. Kern succeeded in putting him in there as a stool pigeon for a certain purpose, and perhaps not the most laudable purpose.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman say that the price paid was too high?

Mr. A. HAGGART. I think that $35,000 for a little piece of land on a back street was a little too high.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How much land was there?

Mr. A. HAGGART. I do not know. We are here for the purpose of ascertaining that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information I have is that the land was purchased from Mackenzie and Mann for $88,125.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. How much was bought from the other man?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memo of land bought from any one else.

Mr. A. HAGGART. We would like this cleared up because it was the subject of very common conversation among the business men of Winnipeg.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is speaking of a different building altogether. There was some land purchased from Mr. Kern for an immigration building which is a different item. This is for a customs warehouse.

Winnipeg Post Office Building—Fitting up ground and first floors, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is an old building. We had built a new post office.

Mr. STAPLES. That brings to my mind the question of some litigation as regards the ownership of the old building. Now that you have vacated it as a post office, I have seen articles in the press stating it is going to revert back to the original owners.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have heard nothing about that. The building is still to be occupied as a public building for Customs purposes and Inland Revenue and Assistant Receiver General.

Mr. SPROULE. Would it be convenient to have that used as a custom house when the examining warehouse and the other buildings are so far from it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The examining warehouse adjoins the old post office building.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be at least a quarter of a mile from the present examining warehouse. Is it the intention to move all the customs business to that locality?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Customs Department have asked for this accommodation, and we are giving it to them. I do not know whether they intend to move the entire business there or not. I understand that the Department of the Interior will use the old customs house for a land office.

Mr. ROCHE. If the hon. minister looks up the records of his department, I think he will find that there are communications in reference to the matter referred to by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples). I remember hearing that matter discussed in the House in the time of the hon. gentleman's predecessor. I think a gentleman named Ballantyne owned the site in question, and donated it on the condition that it should be retained by the government as a post office site. When the matter was brought before the hon. minister's predecessor, he admitted that there were communications to that effect, and promised to bring them down at an early day, but failed to do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have the matter looked up, if the hon. member will call my attention to it at some later day.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not see any provision in the estimates this year for the post office north of the track in Winnipeg. Is that completed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be completed before the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. STAPLES. What did that building cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not the papers at present, and cannot say.

Mr. BRADBURY. Can the minister inform the House who are the contractors for the fixtures for the north-end post office and the Selkirk post office, or was a contract let? My information leads me to believe that a contract was let for the fixtures of those two post offices, and that a man very high in the service of the post office is a large shareholder in the company furnishing those buildings. I am told in Selkirk that that accounts largely for the delay in opening the Selkirk post office. Although the building has been completed for at least six months, I do not think it is furnished yet.

Mr. PUGSLEY. As I am not asking tonight for a vote for either of these buildings, I have not the papers with me regarding them. If my hon. friend will put the question in the House, I will with pleasure get the information in regard to both of them.

Mr. W. H. SHARPE. I would like the minister to explain why the appropriations for Manitoba are cut down to such a very large extent this year, while those for other provinces are not cut down nearly so much. The appropriations for Alberta, Saskatchewan and Northwest Territories are cut down by $305,000, while those for Manitoba alone are cut down $346,876.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend, on reflection, will see that, adopting the rule which I said we had adopted with regard to postponing public buildings, there might be an undue proportion cut off from one province as compared with another. For instance, take my own province of New Brunswick ; the appropriations for public buildings have been cut down from $134,100 last year to $21,500 this year. Those for Nova Scotia have been cut down from $282,300 to $132,600. The appropriations for Quebec have been cut down from $1,571,249 last year to $525,600 this year, only one-third of what they were. The appropriations for Ontario have been cut down from $1,453,175 to $605,367, a reduction of more than fifty per cent. So that there is no rule in regard to the matter.

Mr. A. HAGGART. There may not be the same inducement this year that there was two or three years ago, when it was said that a post office valued at nearly half a million was built as an annex to a large printing establishment on Portage avenue owned by an ex-minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The figures given by the minister in his answer should be taken in conjunction with the figures of the amount unspent in each province. If that is done, they show a marked disparity against the province of Manitoba.

Public Buildings—Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $252,000.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a very urgent case in my constituency. A very small amount was asked for in the estimates of last year to protect the town of Macleod. I have already spoken to the minister personally on the subject, and I would like to impress upon him the importance of that work.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that the protection work?

Mr. HERRON. Yes, the protection of the banks of the streams.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would ask the hon. gentleman to leave that until we come to the harbours and rivers. We are now on public works.

Lethbridge—Custom House and Dominion Lands Office, $4,000.

Mr. MAGRATH. In the estimates of last year there was $6,000 for this work. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why the work did not proceed. I happen to know that there was every reason for it to be gone on with, because the Dominion Lands office, which occupies part of that building, is sorely in need of further office room. The court house in the upper part of that building has been vacant for a year waiting these improvements.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the reason why it has not been proceeded with more rapidly; but $2,000 has been expended upon it, or will be before the close of the fiscal year.

Mr. MAGRATH. I do not think there has been any money expended at all. Up to the 10th of December, when I left, not a dollar had been spent.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We expect to expend $2,000 before the 31st of next month, and we are here asking for a revote.

Mr. MAGRATH. Does the minister intend that this work will be proceeded with in the spring?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MAGRATH. I would like some assurance, because, as I say, better facilities are absolutely required. In the Dominion Lands office there is only a space in front of the counter about the size of the table before us. People have to stand out in the street.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The engineers have instructions to push these improvements in the spring.

Mr. MAGRATH. I wish to bring another matter to the attention of the minister, although it is not in the estimates, and that is the necessity of a post office building in Lethbridge. I want to enunciate here the position I take in connection with the expenditure of public money. I do not believe that any town is ever going to make headway merely through the expenditure of public money therein. I do not think it means any advancement to a town to have government moneys spent there just for the purpose of getting a large building, and while I am in this House I do not mean ever to advance any such argument. I do not subscribe to the policy that is pursued in this country in reference to the erection of public buildings. Go through the country from one end to the other and you find post offices costing many thousands of dollars in small places where there is no necessity for such costly buildings, due, I suppose we may frankly admit, to political pressure. I hope that I shall not be found advocating expenditures with the hon. gentleman on any such ground. Lethbridge has to-day a population, I have been told, of 7,500, but I will call it 7,000. I have a letter from the Post Office Department which says in reference to a post office:

> Practically the only way the difficulty can be overcome is by the erection of a public building.

The post office there is in a rented building and the post office authorities know that the facilities are not at all adequate. As I am interested in the question, I have been looking up statistics, and I find that the Postmaster General last March stated that there were ten post offices built since 1904, and 31 post offices under construction. I made a list of some of these post offices, which I submit to the committee:

List of Some Post Offices Built Since 1904:

Place.	Population.	Postal Receipts in 1908.	Cost of Building.
Canso, N.S.	2,567	2,195	20,690
Hawksbury, Ont.	4,150	3,593	22,230
Wingham, Ont.	2,392	6,301	31,800
Prince Albert, Sask.	6,000	12,875	103,965
Sandwich, Ont.	1,450	1,392	20,043

List of Some Post Office Buildings under Construction in 1908:

Place.	Population.	Postal Receipts in 1908.	Contract prices of building.
Chicoutimi, Que.....	3,826	4,405	22,472
Lévis, Que.....	7,783	3,509	22,000
Knowlton, Que ...	760	2,156	26,000
Bridgewater, N.S....	2,900	5,500	23,500
Kincardine, Ont.....	2,077	4,239	29,000
Maple Creek, Sask...	1,500	3,911	32,000
Fernie, B.C.	6,000	9,933	43,750
Lethbridge, Alta.....	7,000	14,541	.....

I want to get these figures before the hon. gentleman so that there will be no question next year about making provision for Lethbridge. I find in the province of Manitoba that there are only three offices yielding a larger revenue than Lethbridge; in Saskatchewan, three; in Quebec, three; in Nova Scotia, four; in New Brunswick, three; in Prince Edward Island, one; in Alberta, two; in British Columbia, four. Between the great lakes and the Pacific ocean there are thirteen offices yielding a larger revenue than the place I refer to. I think these are very strong reasons why there should be some relief given to Lethbridge in the shape of a post office. If there was a building in the town sufficiently large that could be rented and used, then I would say let us have it. But I know of no building in the place that is suitable for that purpose. I sincerely trust that the hon. gentleman will give this matter consideration when he prepares his next estimates. There are two other questions I would like to refer to in connection with Medicine Hat. In the last year's estimates there was a sum of $40,000 for the Strathcona Horse barracks. I have heard the hon. gentleman's statement in reference to cutting off eight million dollars from the public works expenditures contemplated last year, and I appreciate the situation. I understand he is going to have all these various items brought in again, and that he proposes to go on with these works at some future time. I would like the hon. gentleman's assurance in connection with that. I also want his assurance in connection with another matter. I have here an extract from a paper printed in Medicine Hat referring to these barracks:

For the first time in the past five years the vote of '$40,000 for Strathcona Horse barracks' does not appear in the Dominion Estimates. For several years we had reason to believe that this vote was intended for buildings at Medicine Hat. Probably recent events have something to do with the withdrawal of this vote from the general estimates. When we have said we don't want these things, it is quite natural to assume that they won't be thrust at us—pressed upon us.

The insinuation being that because those people saw fit to send a representative here who is not a supporter of this government the governmtnt is not going to give them what has been promised for five years past. I have heard the hon. gentleman refer to similar questions before and he stated that he had not been guided by such influences. I would be very glad if he will say so with respect to this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not see that it makes it any stronger if I say so three or four times. I have made my statement to the committee. I cannot give my hon. friend any assurance with regard to any individual building. I have stated that I would recommend to my colleagues—there may be exceptions—that as a general rule public works for which appropriations were made last parliament should have precedence and be proceeded with as early as possible. With regard to the Strathcona Horse, we have omitted that amount of $40,000 from the estimates. But, I want to correct one misunderstanding under which my hon. friend seems to labour. He assumes that that is promised to Medicine Hat. That never was promised, in so far as I am aware, either by the appropriations or in any other manner. It was put in with the miscellaneous items in a general way and was not limited to any particular locality. It was supposed that the barracks, when erected, would be erected in the Northwest, either in Saskatchewan or Alberta, but the place where they would be erected was never agreed upon or stated in the appropriation.

Mr. MAGRATH. This paper——

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am speaking of the appropriation and not of any paper.

Mr. MAGRATH. This paper supports the party of the hon. gentleman. They make the insinuation that it was promised to them.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are in error.

Mr. MAGRATH. And that because they had sent me here they were not going to get it. Of course that is one of the features of an election that it is not agreeable to refer to, namely, those political wire pullers who travel through the country holding out features of that sort to the public to buy them with their own money, something that I do not endorse and something I am sure hon. gentlemen on either side of the House regard in the same way as I do. There is another question that is not referred to in these estimates but which I want to bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman. We are inviting people into that country and we should have proper means for taking care of them. Medicine Hat at one time had an immigration hall. I believe it was burned down. There is a necessity for such a building there to-day. I do not believe the matter has been brought very prominently to the hon. gentlemen's attention. It has been in the hands of the Minister of the Interior, but I want to bring it to the attention of the hon. gentleman now, and I trust that it will be kept in view when the next estimates are prepared. When we invite people into the country we must look after them.

Prince Albert—Saskatchewan penitentiary, $65,000.

Mr. ROCHE. Is the contract let ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet. We have bought the land.

Mr. ROCHE. Will the minister tell us from whom the various portions of land were purchased?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was all stated last year. There was a long list of the persons from whom the land was bought, and these purchases were made at a very low price, at the price almost of farm land although the land is situated within the limits of the town.

Mr. ROCHE. The list was not given when these items were up for discussion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can give quite a number of the names of those from whom land was purchased: R. S. Cook, 183·7 acres at $30 per acre; W. E. Gladstone, 165 acres at $47.50; Mrs. Montgomery, 125 acres for a lump sum of $5,500; S. McLeod, 174·72 acres at $60, making a total expenditure up to the 31st March for land of $29,430.80. After that we purchased 200 acres, less the reserve for cemetery the right of way of the Canadian Northern Railway and the highway, 190 acres at $55 per acre, and we also had to buy the buildings on the site, ten in number for $5,000.

Mr. ROCHE. How much was purchased from Gladstone?

Mr. PUGSLEY. 165 acres at $47.50 per acre.

Mr. ROCHE. He is a government official.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, I am sure. It seems to be a low price.

Mr. ROCHE. You do not know how long he owned it?

Mr. FIELDING. It is a good name—W. E. Gladstone.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up on Thursday?

Mr. MAGRATH.

Mr. FIELDING. The motion for supply will be made, and, in supply, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) will ask the attention of the House to his canal estimates. If these be disposed of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) will follow.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 25, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SPECIAL COMMITTEES ON NATURAL RESOURCES.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved:

That the Special Committee appointed to prepare and report lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House, and who have already reported, be revived and have power to prepare and report, with all convenient speed, lists of members to compose the Select Standing Committees of the House for the following purposes:

On Marine and Fisheries.
On Mines and Minerals.
On Forests, Waterways and Water-Powers.

And that that portion of rule 10 limiting the number of members of the said committee be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

NEW MEMBER.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificate of the election and return of Edward Kidd, Esq., for the electoral district of Carleton, Ontario.

Edward Kidd, Esq., member for the electoral district of Carleton, Ontario, introduced by Mr. R. L. Borden and Mr. Richard Blain.

QUESTIONS.

BUILDINGS LEASED BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. PERLEY asked:

1. What buildings or parts of buildings in the city of Ottawa are leased by the government, including the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, and all other branches of the public service, at an annual rental of over $1,900?
2. What is the rental paid by the government in each case, and how much does it amount to per superficial foot for the space occupied, excluding the halls, corridors, stairways and elevator space?
3. What amount of city taxes does the government pay in each case?

4. In which of these buildings is (a) the heating and attendance, and (b) the cost of running and taking care of elevator, paid for by the government, and what is the cost of the same in each case?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). The following contains the answers to Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4:

CARILLON DAM WATER-POWER.

Mr. BOYER asked:

1. By whom are sold or granted under any Act of parliament whatsoever the hydraulic powers furnished by the rapids and dam in the Ottawa river opposite Carillon and Point Fortune?

2. If these hydraulic powers are simply leased or in possession of one or more persons or companies, under any Act of parliament whatsoever, what are these Acts, and up to what time does the privilege extend?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The water-power available at the Carillon dam is under the control of the Department of Railways and Canals.

2. Leased under the usual conditions for a term of 21 years, renewable for two terms more of 21 years each, at $2 per horse-power, for all horse-power used.

POINTE-AUX-TREMBLES WHARF.

Mr. C. A. WILSON asked:

1. Is the government aware that the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, Montreal Island, is said to be in a very bad state of repair and ruinous condition, so that it is impossible for boats to tie up there and do any unloading whatever?

2. If so, is it the intention of the government to have this wharf immediately repaired, in order that it may be fit for use on the opening of navigation?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. When this question appeared on the Order Paper, inquiry was made of the department's engineer in charge, Montreal district, who reported that the wharf at Pointe-aux-Trembles, Montreal island, is in a very bad condition, estimated cost of rebuilding, $4,500; further that said wharf is the property of the municipality.

POST OFFICE INSPECTOR AT NORTH BAY.

Mr. GEO. GORDON asked:

What is being done with regard to the appointment of post office inspector at North Bay?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). The question is under consideration.

GRENVILLE-HAWKESBURY BRIDGE.

Mr. TURRIFF asked:

1. Does the government intend to assist in the building of an interprovincial bridge between Grenville, Quebec, and Hawkesbury, Ontario?

2. If so, when can the people of those localities expect the work to begin?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1 and 2. The government has caused an examination to be made for an interprovincial bridge between Grenville, Quebec, and Hawkesbury, Ontario. The engineer's report on the matter is not completed; a preliminary estimate of cost is now under study.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. TURRIFF (Assiniboia) asked:

1. What are the names and positions of the thirty-five members of the Civil Service who receive no increase of salary under the recent amendments to the Civil Service Act?

2. What is the reason that these gentlemen do not benefit from the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission, which were supposed to apply to all classes of the service?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State:

1. Department of Agrciulture. — Fred Montizambert, First 'A', $4,000; Wm. Saunders, First 'A', $4,000; A. Blue, First 'A', $4,000; J. G. Rutherford, First 'A,' $4,000.

Department of Railways and Canals—John Kerr, Third 'B', $800.

Privy Council—C. Schreiber, First 'A', $6,000.

2. All having been at or above the maximum salary of their respective subdivisions.

CANAL NEAR MONETTEVILLE.

Mr. GEO. GORDON asked:

1. What expenditure has been made on the proposed canal between Lake Nipissing and a small lake near Monetteville?
2. What is the estimated cost of this work, and is it being done by contract?
3. When will it be completed?
4. What draught boats is this canal proposed to accommodate?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $2,893.03.
2. (a) $6,300.
   (b) Day's labour.
3. With favourable conditions, work can be completed during the present year. Matter of further grant to complete the work is under consideration.
4. Six feet.

POST OFFICE PAYMENTS IN NEWMARKET AND AURORA.

Mr. WALLACE asked:

1. What is the salary of Thomas Somerville mail carrier, of Newmarket, Ontario, and what is the extent of his duties?

Mr. MURPHY.

2. How much did Thomas Fardy, of Newmarket, receive for repairs to mail bags for the past fiscal year, and how much since 31st of March, 1908, to date?
3. How much did William Willis, of Aurora receive from the Post Office Department for the last five years, and how much since 31st March, 1908, to date?
4. How much did Fleury & Sons, of Aurora, Ontario, receive from the Post Office Department for the years 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907 and 1908, and since 31st March, 1908, to date?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Mr. Thomas Somerville of Newmarket is not in receipt of a fixed salary from the Post Office Department. Contracts have, however, been entered into by him with the department for the performance of the following mail services: Newmarket and Pine Orchard, $1 per trip; Newmarket and Grand Trunk Railway station, $200 per annum; Newmarket and Sutton West, $1,000 per annum, and $1 per box per annum for making collections from and deliveries to seventy-five rural delivery boxes; Newmarket and Toronto and York Radial Railway, fifty cents per day; Glenville and Newmarket, $120 per annum.

INCEPTION OF GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

Referring to the Toronto 'Globe' of the 22nd February instant, in which is reported a speech made by Mr. Wainwright, of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, at the Board of Trade banquet, Montreal, it says:—'Other interesting inside information furnished by Mr. Wainwright was to the effect that the Grand Trunk Pacific idea originated in the brain of Mr. Charles M. Hays. When Mr. Hays returned from the Southern Pacific in 1902 he broached the subject to Mr. Wainwright. On Sir Wilfrid Laurier's return from England, Mr. Wainwright was sent by Mr. Hays to see Sir Wilfrid, and it was at this meeting that the subject was first brought to the notice of Sir Wilfrid.' Is Mr. Wainwright's statement of this matter correct?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The government has no information as to what may have passed between Mr. Wainwright and Mr. Hays. The project of the National Transcontinental Railway was first broached between the government and the Grand Trunk in the fall of 1902.

HALIFAX AND SOUTH WESTERN RAILWAY SUBSIDY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. Referring to a subsidy provided by the Acts of 1903, chapter 57, section 23, for a line of railway from a point at or near Caledonia to Liverpool, not exceeding 29 miles, has this subsidy lapsed or is it still available?
2. Has the government or Minister of Railways entered into a contract with any person, firm or corporation for the construction of this line of railway or any part thereof? If so, with whom?
3. If the subsidy has lapsed, when did it so lapse or cease to be available?
4. Have there been any negotiations with any person, firm or corporation respecting the construction of this line? If so, with whom, and what negotiations?
5. What has been done by the government in respect to the construction of this line of railway, or any part thereof?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Part of it was revoted in 1907.
2. Yes. With the Halifax and Southwestern Railway, which contract lapsed in 1905.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. No.
5. The usual subsidy was voted as above stated.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY FREIGHT CLERKS' REQUESTS.

Mr. STANFIELD asked:

1. What answer did the Minister of Railways make to the Intercolonial freight clerks' request for certain betterments, in view of the fact that the Committee of Conciliation representing both parties, reported unanimously, chiefly in the employees' favour?
2. Has the finding of the committee been put into effect? If not, why not?
3. If not, is it the intention of the department to put such recommendation into effect and when?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The finding of the Board was accepted, it is doubtful if the report was chiefly in the employees' favour, as it advised a reduction of the staff and suggested that if this were done the money would then be available for granting an increase to those retained in the service.
2. It is under consideration. The classified list of employees only reached the department recently, and the necessary action will be taken in due course.
3. Answered by No. 2.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

On the orders of the day being called.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the Finance Minister to a number of returns ordered by the House with reference to loans with a view to having them brought down as soon as possible.

Mr. FIELDING. I have already given instructions that the returns shall be expedited and hope they will be brought down without much delay.

Mr. FOSTER. I would call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the fact that in response to an order of this House I have received through the Secretary of State a return of the orders in council by which the increases spread over four pages in the 'Hansard' of February 4, 1909, were authorized. The return comprises nine orders in council but they take in a very small number of employees. Is the return defective or were these other increases made without the authority of order in council?

Mr. OLIVER. I will make inquiry. I could not answer at this moment.

SUPPLY—TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall avail myself of this opportunity to reply to the inquiry made by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. J. A. Currie) on Tuesday with regard to the treaty signed at Washington on the 11th of April last for the marking of the boundaries between Canada and the United States. The hon. gentleman stated that in the last draft of the treaty there was a departure from the wording of the Ashburton treaty. I have to say to the hon. gentleman that the parliamentary paper from which he cited contains a misprint. The article in the treaty says that :

> The line shall not intersect islands lying along its course.

These are the terms of the treaty as negotiated in 1900. In the parliamentary paper brought down on the 19th of May last, paper No. 54-A, there is a misprint. The word 'not' was dropped, but in all the other papers the word 'not' is included. Sessional paper No. 54-B with regard to the same question, brought down in June last, has the wording correctly. The word 'not' is in and the treaty reads :

> The line shall not intersect islands lying along its course.

That is exactly the wording of the treaty as it was signed at Washington and therefore all the apprehensions of my hon. friend are absolutely without foundation.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In connection with the Waterways treaty, which has not yet been presented to this House, although what purports to be a copy has been published in the press of the country, I would point out that the treaty seems to have been discussed by one of the commissioners instrumental in negotiating it, Mr. Gibbons, at a recent meeting in the province of Ontario. I observe by the Toronto 'Globe' of the 23rd inst., that Mr. George C. Gibbons addressed the Canadian Club at Toronto and in the course of his address spoke pretty definitely of some of the terms of the treaty. It does seem to me under the circumstances that the Prime Minister should expedite the presentation of that treaty to parliament. The terms of the treaty have been made public not only in the United States but in the press of our own country. In addition to that, one of the commissioners who negotiated the treaty feels himself at liberty to discuss its terms. It is little better than a farce that the treaty should not be presented officially to this parliament. I trust that there will be no great delay. I do not know that any great discussion in parliament will be necessary; I assume there will be some discussion, but I merely desire to emphasize the point that parliament ought to be in a position to discuss the treaty when it is being discussed in the press of the country and even by a gentleman who, acting on behalf of this government, was instrumental in framing its terms.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I can inform my hon. friend, by authority, that the treaty has not been communicated officially by the United States to Congress. It has been, of course, submitted to the Senate, which body, under the terms of the constitution, must pass upon it; but it has not been officially communicated to Congress itself. We have been pressing, as fast as we can, to have authority to put it at once upon the table of the House, because I agree with my hon friend in saying that there is no reason that I can see why this should not be done. But he knows that in this matter we are bound by certain rules which we must follow. We are pressing it and hope to have the matter decided at an early day.

Mr. FOSTER. How about Mr. Gibbons?

Sir. WILFRID LAURIER. He is discussing the treaty as he finds it in the press, I suppose.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to capital—Canals—Lachine canal—To complete wharf and basins, $150,000.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). This item was discussed at some length the other night. The money is to provide better facilities for shipment. The business men of Montreal, shippers and forwarders realize the necessity for it. The vote was taken last year, but only $40,000 was spent. The form in which the item appears in the estimates is a little misleading, as I explained the other night. This total vote of $150,000 is entered as a revote. The position is that $300,000 was voted last year, but only $40,000 spent as I have said. We expect to spend $150,000 this year. Some hon. members asked me for the names of the tenderers. They were as follows: Quinlan and Robertson, George Goodwin, Canadian General Development Company, Doheny and O'Brien and Michael Connolly. The contract is dated October 24, 1908. The lowest tenderer was the Canadian Development Company, $236,989.75. The expenditure for the current year $40,000 was all for cement. I was asked for the names of the tenderers for cement. They are as follows:

Lakefield Portland Cement Co.	1.27
International Portland Cement Co.. ..	1.40
Vulcan Portland Cement Co..	1.22
Belleville Portland Cement Co..	1.43
Canadian Portland Cement Co..	1.30
Schuster Cement Co., for Lehigh Portland Cement Co..	1.36 & 1.46 Net.

Mr. LENNOX. I would call attention to the statement made the night before last as we were adjourning. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) told us that we should go into Supply, and that the Minister of Railways and Canals would ask the attention of the committee to his canal estimates. I do not know whether other hon. gentlemen apprehended that as I did, but I understood that we should probably have the pleasure of listening to an address by the Minister of Railways and Canals on the subject of canals, and in that way, we should have the advantage of knowing, perhaps, what is the general, up-to-date policy of the department upon the development of our canal system and other matters connected with that general question.

Mr. GRAHAM. It has been the custom, I believe, for the Minister of Railways and Canals to make a statement concerning the Intercolonial Railway before we go into Supply. I am not asking to-day for any supply for the railways branch, and will not do so until I am prepared to make a statement to the House. Last year, in discussing the question of transportation, I dealt with the canals incidentally, and, in the few remarks I may make again, I shall mention them.

Mr. LENNOX. For years it has been customary for the minister to make a statement on the subject of the Intercolonial. But, the other night, the Minister of Finance specially spoke of the question of canals, and I thought a new departure had been made, and, as the question of canals in Canada is a very important one in connection with the whole problem of transportation, that the minister had determined, on this occasion, to give us interesting information as to what he proposed in reference to the canal system. There are some very interesting features in connection with that question, and some very large promises have been made. I do not know how the other members view the matter, but I should have been glad if the minister had made a general statement.

Mr. J. HAGGART. We must have a statement, especially as there is a recommendation by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals in regard to our canal transportation system. He tells us in this report what he thinks is the best system of water communication. We also had a statement from the premier when he was in Welland of what he intended to do in reference to canals, not only to deepen the Welland canal into Lake Ontario, but in the near future he was going to build the Georgian Bay canal. But the deputy of the department, no doubt voicing the opinion of the department, has proposed a policy. This may not be the proper time to discuss the statement of the minister, but certainly we may expect a statement of the policy of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. The House may remember that I gave at some length my opinion on the question of water transportation the other night when on some other estimates. It is well understood, however, that for the present at least, the policy of the government has been pretty well decided on, and it would be unwise to change it in reference to any new undertaking. Those works that are under way will be proceeded with. But I am not retracting from anything I have said as to the desirability of extending our transportation facilities by water. The policy of the government will scarcely be to undertake any new work this year which would mean a large expenditure of money. I may reiterate what every person knows to be true, that the great safety valve for our transportation is the development of our waterways. We have the best waterways in the world, and they are capable of the highest development of any waterways in the world. My own opinion is, and I have often expressed it in this House before, that with the Welland canal deepened or a new Welland canal, which would be still better, we can favourably compete with our friends across the line in the carrying trade from the west to the east and in a large measure from the east to the west. That is a large problem. The question of the Georgian Bay canal has been before the House for years, and while opinions are somewhat divided, there seems to be a strong opinion in important circles that that would solve the problem of the carrying trade from the west to the east. However, while I in no way detract from anything I have said, for the present at least the government policy will be not to undertake any of these great works that will call for a large expenditure of money.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that policy of progress for the future near at hand, or is it a little less remote than it was in October last?

Mr. GRAHAM. By the efflux of time it gets closer.

Mr. FOSTER. But the ministerial idea does not seem to be as clear as it was in October.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mine is.

Mr. BLAIN. The Minister of Public Works, when he was introducing his estimates stated that a new rule of economy was adopted in his department. I wanted to know whether that prevails in other departments, and perhaps my hon. friend will be able to advise the committee on that point.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Department of Railways and Canals has always been pretty economical so far as I know. As to details, I was not here when my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works made his remark. But the Department of Railways and Canals is conducted on the most economical lines consistent with the efficiency of the service and the interest of the country.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Minister of Railways has made an explanation in reference to the contract for cement. Will he explain how it comes that he paid, as shown by the Auditor General's Report, W—9, the Canadian Portland Cement Company, limited, for 5,000 barrels of Star cement at $2.62½; to W. McNally & Company, Portland cement, 2,500 barrels at $2.40. Were these purchased by tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. They were all purchased by tender. In our department no cement is purchased in any other way.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Has cement fallen so much in the last year?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think cement has never been so cheap in Canada as it is at the present time.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What is it worth?

Mr. GRAHAM. $1.12 to $1.20 net, when sold in quantities. By net I mean 10 per cent off when the bag is returned.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the minister abandoned the patronage list, like some of the other departments? I do not need to remind the House of the trouble we had last year in this regard.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have no recollection of trouble in my department about the patronage list. I think my hon. friend has got mixed up. As a matter of fact, in some instances we purchased from a list, on invitation by circular letter. We have notified our various branches that any person who desires is at liberty to tender for any of our goods. If any member of the House knows of any person that he would like us to ask to tender for any materials that we buy, where the amount is not large enough to warrant us to advertise, we would be delighted to give him a change to tender.

Mr. J. D. REID. When did that plan originate?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have always had on that list men of both political parties.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister intend to do his advertising only in Liberal papers, or in the press generally?

Mr. GRAHAM. As long as men are human—and I agree with Judge Cassels in this—everything being equal, it is natural to express confidence in those who have implicit confidence in us so long as the country gets full value for its money. That we insist on in every case.

Mr. BARR. Could the hon. gentleman give us one instance where a Conservative got a contract? It might be a relief to us if we knew of one case where a Conservative sold goods to the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can give my hon. friend one instance. Perhaps I should not take liberty with the name, but as he has asked me so pointedly I may say that only a week ago I got a verbal reminder that I had given a large contract for ties to a gentleman who ran against the hon. member for Westmoreland. He got the contract on strict business principles.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Who tendered for this cement on page W—9, where you paid $2.62 for 5,000 barrels?

Mr. GRAHAM. What work is that on?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Lachine canal. It seems strange that you would pay $2.62 when you could have purchased it for $1.85 in Ottawa.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not correct. $2.62 would probably be the gross price anyway.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Would the minister explain how it is that he requires $40,000 worth of cement on a $250,000 contract? It seems an enormous sum.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am advised by the engineer that that will not nearly do the work.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. In a $250,000 contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. A large share of the work is concrete work.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the minister will turn to page W—14 of the Auditor General's Report, he will find that he purchased from the Colonial Portland Cement Company 2,000 barrels of cement at $1.80, the same year, less 10 cents for sacks; from the Lakefield Portland Cement Company, 2,500 barrels at $2.30; from the Lakefield Portland Cement Company, 212 barrels at $2.30; and yet he paid $2,62½ at the Lachine canal, close to where the cement is made. It appears that this cement is all bought just on the job plan, no tenders being invited but simply a circular letter sent out to one or two of the friends of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will agree with me that a year ago cement was much higher than it is now, but I assure him that the cement is all bought by tender, and we give the contract to the lowest tenderer in every instance.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Who tendered when this contract was awarded at $2.62½?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a year ago; I will have to look it up.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. There was a purchase made at the same time at $1.80.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at the same time.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Within the same year.

Mr. GRAHAM. That may be.

Mr. BARKER. When the minister asks for tenders for a very large quantity of cement and gets bids, such as he got here of $2.62½, does he cause inquiries to be made whether other large buyers of that article are paying as much as the price mentioned in the tender that he has received, or does he go it blind and, when he gets four or five tenders, just take the lowest?

Mr. GRAHAM. The department keeps pretty close track of prices by watching the markets and making inquiries, and we think we are buying as cheaply or a little more cheaply than most people do.

Mr. BARKER. How are these inquiries made? For instance, you have a tender for $40,000 worth of cement; do you inquire what large buyers are paying at that moment, and, if you make these inquiries, are they made by letter?

Mr. GRAHAM. My deputy informs me that he makes inquiries from big dealers and contractors to see what they are paying; and that he keeps himself posted all the time as to the prices they are paying. He assures me that he is constantly buying cement as cheaply or cheaper than the large buyers.

Mr. BARKER. Are these inquiries made verbally, or are they made by letter, and, if by letter, has the minister any objection to the committee seeing them?

Mr. GRAHAM. My deputy tells me that he does not recall whether he has done that in writing or not, but he assures me that it is a fact.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Where is the Canadian Cement Company located?

Mr. GRAHAM. At Marlbank and at Port Colborne. The difference in freight charges might make some difference in prices.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will not the cement companies have uniform prices throughout Canada?

Mr. GRAHAM. Last year they did approximate closely to a uniform price, and I assured one of the large dealers and so informed the officials that if there was any evidence at all that these men are combining to charge us unduly for cement we would ask for tenders from outside; we would not be held up, but on investigation, I believe we are buying cement this year as cheaply as any one and perhaps a little cheaper.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. I suppose you are very careful to see that the cement is of the quality specified by the department?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, we have it tested.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. There was to be a reason given why these amounts were chargeable to capital instead of income.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is practically new work.

Lachine canal—To stop leaks on north bank at Côte St. Paul, $29,000.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. Is that a new wall or the repairing of an old one?

Mr. GRAHAM. A new concrete wall.

Soulanges canal—Erecting a fireproof building, $800.

Mr. GRAHAM. This will be built by our own regular staff.

Soulanges canal—Stopping leaks, trimming slopes, &c., $160,000.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. That may be necessary, but why charge that to capital after the work is finished?

Mr. GRAHAM. I might as well make an explanation. These banks have proved not to be entirely safe. What we are doing is practically making a new portion of the bank of concrete in order that it may be absolutely safe. We propose to put a concrete slab 18 inches thick in front of these walls. The break in the Cornwall canal has led me to say to the deputy minister and chief engineer to take no chances of such a thing occurring again if it is in our power to prevent it. Wherever we find that a canal bank has been leaking we put a slab of concrete along the bank to prevent such a thing happening again.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. Quinlan & Robertson, the contract price being $174,400.

Mr. J. D. REID. At schedule prices?

Mr. GRAHAM. Schedule prices.

Mr. J. D. REID. Was it advertised?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Were they the lowest tenderers?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. How was it that only one tender came in?

Mr. GRAHAM. The reason of that is that they are practically the only firm in the vicinity with a complete equipment to do this work properly.

Mr. J. D. REID. There must be other contractors in Canada qualified to do that work.

Mr. GRAHAM. They devised a plan for this particular work on the Lachine canal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the price so much per cubic yard, and if so, what percentage of cement is required per cubic yard?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend refers to the consistency of the concrete?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM. One of cement to three of sand and five of gravel.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no facing of cement; is it all the same?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is all the same.

Mr. SPROULE. How much is the price per yard?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. When was the contract made?

Mr. GRAHAM. On December 12, 1908.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Has the department taken any means of ascertaining whether the price is reasonable?

Mr. GRAHAM. We always insist that our own engineer shall make an estimate in order to ascertain whether the price is reasonable or not before we accept a tender. Our chief engineer is our authority for saying the price is reasonable before it is approved.

Mr. J. D. REID. When was this contract advertised and when were the tenders to be in?

Mr. GRAHAM. Advertised on 14th October; tenders to be in at 16 o'clock, Thursday, 22nd October.

Mr. J. D. REID. It looks suspicious to have all these tenders received two or three days before the election.

Mr. GRAHAM. We were trying to do this work at the close of navigation; it had nothing to do with the election.

Mr. BARKER. I should think the minister would be too busy about that time to attend to these matters.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as I am personally concerned I was.

Mr. BARR. The 22nd of October might be considered a bargain day for contracts.

Mr. J. D. REID. I should think the minister would be very busy at home just then.

Mr. GRAHAM. Not at home, but elsewhere.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the nature of the foundation?

Mr. GRAHAM. They make a trench in the clay bank and they fill in from that trench the 18-inch slab along the face of the wall.

Mr. SPROULE. The foundation does not go below the bottom of the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. Just sufficient to cut off any leakage.

Mr. SPROULE. Could not this work be done when the water was out of the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not like to say it too loudly, but it would be a very dangerous experiment to unwater the Soulanges canal; the chief engineer has reported it must not be done.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It is a clay bottom and when the water is out there would be danger of the clay coming up?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Chambly canal—St. Johns harbour improvements, $44,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. There were eight tenders; the contract is dated December 15, and it went to the lowest tender.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who was that?

Mr. GRAHAM. John G. Poupore & Co.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Will this vote finish the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is schedule rate; the approximate sum given in the contract is $35,282. The engineer would not be positive this will complete the work but he thinks it probably will.

Mr. J. HAGGART. I suppose the increased traffic from St. Johns on the Chambly canal necessitates this work?

Mr. GRAHAM. It has been asked for years. Complaint was made to me that the harbour was so crowded that they simply could not do the business they had to do. We had difficulty in getting a title to the property or it would have been done before.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Ontario—St. Lawrence canals—District office, $7,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is not the staff that has charge of the canal. This is the staff that has had charge of the construction of the new canals and improvements on the St. Lawrence river. N. L. Rheaume is in charge, and they have an office, with electric lights, telephone, &c., and they are making the final estimates.

Mr. J. D. REID. As I understand, the works on the St. Lawrence canals are practically through, with the exception of one little work at the head of the Galops canal. Yet this office has been kept there for years, with the same staff. How long will they be kept there?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have put all our men in this office. The winding up does seem to be an arduous process, but we hope shortly to get the final estimates made.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is this vote for building an office for them?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, we are not building any office. It is just for the salaries of the men.

Mr. J. D. REID. The final estimate for the Cornwall canal must have been made a year ago. All the works on the St. Lawrence canals must have been completed and paid for. There is only one work going on yet. I cannot understand what that staff is there for.

Mr. GRAHAM. It depends altogether on the meaning we attach to the term final estimates. What we are requiring of these men is to make not only a final estimate as to cost, but a record of everything in connection with these canals, consisting of drawings in full, detail of the finished structure, to which we can refer, and which will give us a clear insight into every part of these canals at any time in the future.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. minister knows that the men made these records from time to time as the work went along, and when the final estimate was made they had the plans and everything completed in the most minute way. In addition, I understand, the measurements were sent to the department here, where there are engineers making plans for future reference. I think that all the information the hon. minister refers to is here in the department.

Mr. GRAHAM. My deputy informs me that the plans are not all made here. The engineers use the plans and specifications in the construction of the work, and when that is done they are required to make re-drawings of the completed structure, which are put in bound form and sent to the department. For instance, in the case of the Soulanges canal, the men who were engaged on it are all dead and if we had not a complete record of that work in the form of the plans and specifications we would have been in a predicament now in regard to that canal. This is costing a little money, but we are getting a complete and accurate record of all these canals.

Mr. J. D. REID. I admit that it is absolutely necessary to have a complete record; but it should not take more than a year for that staff to make such a record as the hon. minister refers to. The Cornwall canal has been completed for three or four years, the Williamsburg canal has been completed for six or seven years, and the other canals have also been completed a long time. I am not finding fault with an expenditure for the purpose of getting such records as the hon. minister refers to. In that respect I believe he is absolutely right; but it is common talk along the canal that there are a number of men there who are really not required, and who are simply drawing their pay. I am not mentioning this for the purpose of having these men dismissed from the service of the government; but there are many places, on the Transcontinental Railway and elsewhere, to which they could be removed, and where they would have something to do to earn their salaries. If the minister told these men that they would have to get these records completed in three months, they would do it, provided they were sure of a position somewhere else in the department. But so long as there is nothing in view for them, so long will they remain where they are.

Mr. J. HAGGART. It must strike the hon. minister's common sense that it is somewhat difficult to explain the keeping on of engineers who have drawn the plans of works for which the contracts have been finished and the final estimates made. He is keeping a staff of five or six men after the work is completed, for what purpose? Recording the manner in which the work was constructed, or the plans or estimates for it? There is no necessity for it whatever. I am in a different position from my hon. friend. These parties have votes in his riding.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, they are not in my riding at all.

Mr. GRAHAM. They were, but they are not now.

Mr. J. HAGGART. They are very near it. I cannot understand the necessity for keeping these men on.

Mr. BARKER. I think the trouble arises from the misleading form of the item. This is not an estimate at all according to the minister. The work is all completed and this is a charge for making up a record of the work already done.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am inclined to agree that without an explanation the words 'final estimate' would not explain to the committee just what was meant. My deputy has visited the office in Cornwall on several occasions. It is a mistake to say that the work is all completed. Mr. Rheaume has charge of the work going on in the north channel as well as this, but has not been altogether engaged in this work. We hope to get it concluded and we are urging it as rapidly as possible.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the $30,000 asked for the removal of the shoal at the upper entrance a final estimate?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is difficult, as my hon. friend knows, to tell just when you are through with a piece of work of that kind. A boat finds another boulder and the work keeps going on.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is there any estimate for the dam at Adam's island?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have no estimate for that

Mr. BLAIN. What is the explanation of the entry at page W—92 of the Auditor General's Report, 'employees whose duties were materially reduced by the closing of navigation on December 5, 1907'?

Mr. GRAHAM. Some of the men engaged on the locks in the summer are dropped in the fall. They are not really permanent employees although they are all there every year. If we want a man for instance to watch a weir we utilize one of these men in the slack season.

Mr. J. D. REID. What are the duties of the collector of tolls on the Galops canal and what are his powers?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think he is called collector of canal tolls. The services of such men are utilized to keep complete records of the canal statistics.

Mr. J. D. REID. While they do not collect the tolls as formerly they still issue passes to steamers.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is his duty to be there all the time during navigation.

Mr. J. D. REID. This man is also collector of customs, and his office as such collector is two miles away. He is supposed to be in regular and constant attendance there. How can the minister expect one man to fill these two places?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know the particulars of the case referred to. This officer's work seems to have been done satisfactorily, for we have had no complaints. However, I will make inquiry.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. He is drawing two salaries and doing nothing.

Mr. GRAHAM. Both make one salary.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister knows that for forty years the two offices were at one point, at the locks. But lately the canal office has been moved up about two miles. Of course, a great deal of fault has been found in the county of Grenville at one man occupying two positions when it is impossible for one man to perform the duties of both. There is complaint especially among the Liberals who think that two offices for one man is too large an allowance. The minister says that the salaries are small. The collector of canal tolls has always had a salary of $750 a year, besides this the collector at Cardinal is allowed $1 a day for a horse to drive him up to his office, two miles away. This makes at least $250 a year additional. So, this collector has a higher salary than has been paid since the canal was built. There was another officer who had the position of subcollector of customs at a salary of $400. But when this subcollector of customs was superannuated, the man who held the office of collector of canal tolls was appointed to this office also. As the offices are two miles apart, there is no question that the duties of one position or of the other must suffer. I am not finding fault with the officer at all, but I think the minister should call upon him to make a choice of one office or the other.

Mr. GRAHAM. So far as the records furnished me show, the salary is $700 a year, and there is no allowance for horse-hire. It seems that this man was the officer of the Railways and Canals Department and that afterwards the other position was given him. It is not unusual, where the government has two small positions to appoint one man to fill them both. One salary, especially that from the customs would be rather small. I suppose the reason the canal office has to be further west than before is that the cut-off has been made into the river.

Mr. J. D. REID. Formerly, the boats had to go through the lock at Cardinal, but, since the new work was built, there is no lock now between Iroquois and the head of the canal. In the case of boats going down the canal, the officer is supposed to issue passes, and, to do this, he needs to be in his office. Otherwise, you do not get a complete record of the commerce through the canal. It can easily be shown whether the records in this respect have been kept in complete form or not. Every vessel from the west passing down to Montreal, and drawing fourteen feet of water, must pass through that lock. They cannot go through the Galops—at least they do not. Of course, a vessel going to Montreal, if no pass is issued at Cardinal, can have a pass issued at Cornwall. But I am satisfied that the work of both these offices is not being properly done. Either the government is losing money in the customs collection, or it is losing in the efficiency of its record of canal business. As to the question of horse-hire, for this officer, I am confident that I have seen it in the Auditor General's Report. I have not the figures under my eye at the moment, but I will look up the record and will refer to it later.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agree that what the department is interested in is having its work well done. It is only just to the official who has been referred to that I should say that there has been no complaint from vesselmen of any lack of attention.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course, even if the officer is not at the canal office when a vessel goes through, you will get the record at Cornwall, or, I suppose, it could be had at the Soulanges canal. At the same time, it should be taken at the Galops. I understood the minister to say that he was interested in seeing that the work only of his own department is well done. I think that he is interested as a member of the government in seeing that the work of all the departments is well done. I believe the minister should say to this officer: Either take the position under the Department of Railways and Canals, and drop the other, or else take the position in the Department of Customs and we will appoint another man to carry on our business. I would ask the minister to look into that, to have that matter put right, so that next session when it comes up again I will not have to draw his attention to the fact that there is one man filling two positions two miles apart.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are inaugurating a new system of keeping these records that I think will detect in a week any neglect of duty.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like the minister to promise me this: If he keeps the collector of canal tolls at Galops canal, he will see that the man is there in person while the canal is open. If he does that, the Minister of Customs will have to have another officer there; and, if he does, I will prove that the revenues will not be received right unless they have a proper officer there.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will promise to see that this officer does his duty faithfully.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it to be done by himself, or how?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not see how we could well do it by any one else. It does not make any difference whether you divide this office into two under one man, or give it to two men. I am only interested in seeing that this man gives us absolutely correct information and does the work for which he is paid. I cannot tell if he sends some one else half a mile or quarter of a mile to do anything for him; I will be satisfied if he does his work accurately.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want to call the minister's attention to page W—138: Lock at Cardinal, $1,041. This includes statistical officer, 12 months, $700; sundries, 534 hours at 20c.; conveyance to office, 229 trips at $1. There are 26 days in a month, that would be over eight months. I took it for granted you were allowing him $1 a day for driving two miles up to the office.

Mr. GRAHAM. My accountant informs me that he had in his hand the winter paylist when he gave me the information a moment ago. He does get a $1 a day for the summer conveyance.

Trent Canal, $1,000,000.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to ask the minister if the contracts that are being let by numbers on the Trent canal number from the south or from the Bay of Quinté end, north or west; that is, No. 1 contract would be at Trenton, No. 2 above, and so on. I would like to know to whom the contract for the construction of No. 1 division was first given.

Mr. GRAHAM. It is an English firm, I can get the name.

Mr. PORTER. I would like to know the amount of deposit made by that firm with their tender, and what was the amount of their tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not those papers here, I was using them for a return that the hon. gentleman moved in the House. But I have sent for them.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I would like to know if this million dollar expenditure on the Trent canal has anything to do with the North York extension, which is known as the Aylesworth canal, or the Mulock canal. Under what heading are the expenditures on the canal in North York made here?

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine the Newmarket canal is the one my hon. friend refers to, it is called the Holland River canal. This million dollars includes all the work on the Trent canals this year, and the Newmarket canal is a portion of the Trent valley work.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. What has North York to do with the Trent canal? Does it extend down to North York?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are few men, unless they have made a study of this question, who appreciate the extent and importance of the Trent Valley work. It not only involves the large project of constructing the canal but it includes branches leading from Lake Simcoe and from the canal. Notwithstanding that there is considerable fun poked at this feature of the work let me point out to my hon. friend that the whole Trent Valley canal scheme had as much fun poked at it as has this portion now. But any person who has seriously inquired into the Trent Valley project will agree with me that it is going to be a valuable aid not only to that section of the country but to the country as a whole. There may be differences of opinion as to the branch to which my hon. friend refers, but my engineer has made a report which indicates that even the Newmarket branch will be a very useful adjunct to the trade of the country.

Mr. J. D. REID. Where are you going to get water from?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are things we cannot see perhaps because we are not engineers, but competent engineers tell me that there will be a sufficient supply of water by storage and otherwise to make that branch of the Trent canal practicable. Persons living along the canal will understand that it is one continuous system of storage by dams in order to make a sufficient supply of water available for the canal.

Mr. WRIGHT. What portion of this vote is to be for the Newmarket portion of the system?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is a little difficult to make the division. We have certain contracts under way. We expect to continue the work now going on, and, except in a smaller degree, we will not undertake any of the larger works this year for reasons that I stated when I began.

An hon. MEMBER. There is no election on now.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, my hon. friend is mistaken about that. There is a difference of opinion as to whether we ought to curtail even in view of the financial position. The hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) is very strongly of the opinion that the government ought to branch out rather than curtail. However the policy of the government has been to not discontinue any work that has been undertaken, possibly to undertake some smaller ones, but as far as the larger expenditures are concerned not to launch upon any new ones this year. I think that business men will see the wisdom of that course.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think this estimate ought to have been put in separately. This is a separate work and entirely distinct from the Trent canal. Three hundred thousand dollars were put through originally for this canal, and what I want to get at is whether that has already been absorbed and whether more is being appropriated in this general vote for the Trent canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will give my hon. friend all the information as to the expenditure, contracts and everything else. We keep all the contracts separate, but we take one large vote for the Trent Valley canal, as all theese works are included in that system. You cannot very well make them separate works in a large undertaking of this kind. Now, in reply to my hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter), I will read a copy of an order in council as I think it will give him all the particulars that he requires. It is as follows:

Feb. 18, 1908.

On a memorandum dated Feb. 13, 1908, from the Minister of Railways and Canals representing that under the authority of order in council dated the 5th November, 1907, a contract for the construction of section No. 1 Ontario—Rice Lake division of the Trent canal, was awarded to Mr. Louis P. Nott,—

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What section is that?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is the section beginning at Trenton.

His schedule rate prices, extended on approximate quantities, aggregating the sum of $866,679; his tender being the lowest out of the six received by the Department of Railways and Canals, which ranged from $866,679 to $1,159,775; the superintending engineer's estimate of cost was $1,074,313. The minister further represents that on forwarding to Mr. Nott a draft of the formal contract to be entered into with him for said work in which was embodied a fair wages schedule, prepared as usual, by the Department of Labour, he has refused to sign it with the 'fair wages' schedule. The minister, under these circumstances, it being the settled policy of the government to require the insertion of such schedule in all construction contracts, recommends that he be authorized to accept the next lowest tender received, namely, that of Messrs. Larkin & Sangster, of St. Catharines, whose prices, extended on approximate quantities, aggregate the sum of $969,237.75, the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals having advised that they are experienced contractors, have the requisite plant and are sufficiently close to the estimate to carry on the work in a satisfactory manner.

The information would not be complete if I stopped there. The next step taken was this: Mr. Nott asked for the return of his deposit and I refused to return it.

Mr. PORTER. What was the amount?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will send for the figures. I refused to return the deposit.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Why?

Mr. GRAHAM. Because he put up a forfeit; he sent a marked cheque with his tender. I refused to return that, saying I believed he ought to forfeit that deposit for refusing to sign the contract.

Mr. PORTER. Was not that a condition of his tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, it was a condition of his tender that he would carry out the contract.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Was the fair wage clause also a condition of the tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. There was the cause of the difficulty. After certain communications, some written and some verbal, the Minister of Justice advised us that under the conditions we could not successfully withstand an action in the Court of Exchequer and that we had better return the cheque. Under that advice we returned his deposit. Why could not we keep the cheque or why did the Minister of Justice give us the opinion that we were not entitled to keep it? It was based upon the ground that the advertisement did not contain a clause saying that the contractor must accept the fair wage schedule in making his contract. That had never been inserted in any advertisement because all our contractors fully understand it. It has been in all our contracts and Canadian contractors understood that if they made a tender for any work they had to accept a fair wage clause in their contract. This being a foreign company they did not know of the requirement, and it not being set out in the advertisement the Department of Justice advised us we could not resist an action which had been taken in the Court of Exchequer, and we returned the deposit.

Mr. PORTER. Before his tender was accepted did he not have access to the form of contract required to be entered into?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. PORTER. The advertisement required the contract to be entered into upon the form prescribed by the department so that he had ample opportunity of seeing the form of contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was my contention that he had absolute opportunity to inform himself on that point; that it was his own fault if he did not, and that the cheque should not be returned. But he started his proceeding in the Exchequer Court, and the Department of Justice advised us officially that we could not resist it and that we had better return the cheque.

Mr. PORTER. Then we are to understand that although the contractor had full opportunity to know the conditions of the contract before tendering, and the Department of Railways and Canals believing, such being the case, that his deposit should be forfeited, the Minister of Justice in the face of these facts advised that the deposit should be returned.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is pretty nearly correctly stated except that we did not hold he had absolute knowledge; we held he had full opportunity to get the knowledge.

Mr. PORTER. He was willing to undertake the construction of these works for $866,000, and no objection was raised by him on the ground that he had taken the contract too low?

Mr. GRAHAM. Had he raised that objection it would not of course have been a legal excuse for getting back his deposit. My department is of opinion that he discovered his tender was too low and that that was the real reason why he refused, although technically another reason was given.

Mr. PORTER. Nott & Co. are a well known firm of English contractors and have ample means to carry out any contract they undertake?

Mr. GRAHAM. No doubt about that.

Mr. PORTER. The department had no fear on that ground?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. PORTER. Then the only objection was to the fair wage clause being in the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. The department believes that having found his tender was too low he sought for an available way to honourably get out of the contract, and he took the legal stand that the fair wage clause not being in the advertisement he could not be held. On that ground the Deputy Minister of Justice advised that we could not resist the action. I may mention that this tender was $200,000 less than the estimate of our own engineer, and having found that he looked for a means——

Mr. PORTER. To get out of his contract.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, to put it in plain English. He no doubt consulted some good lawyer like my hon. friend (Mr. Porter), who apparently discovered that he could legally get out of his contract on this plea and the Department of Justice upheld the contention. I may say that in future all advertisements will contain a paragraph saying that the contractor must accept the fair wage clause and hence difficulties of the kind will be obviated.

Mr. PORTER. When did the department decide to return the cheque?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know the date, but it was not returned until the Deputy Minister of Justice gave his opinion and I think that was after the action had been instituted.

Mr. PORTER. It was not returned until after the present contract had been accepted?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not sure as to that. Of course the only penalty we could impose was to keep the cheque when he refused to enter into his contract.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. There is $1,000,000 included in this item, and I would ask the minister to separate from that lump sum the amounts required for each section of the canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is great difficulty in dividing these items as the hon. gentleman suggests. We want to do the best we can, and if we voted a certain amount for a certain section we could not vary the estimate in any way, and we would not get the full benefit of the $1,000,000 which we intend to expend. If we were to spend two and a half million dollars as the engineers wanted me to do, the suggestion made by my hon. friend (Mr. Currie) would not be difficult, but perhaps on one section I would not want to spend all the money voted for it, and on another section I would want to spend more, and if the estimates were given in detail, as suggested, we could not do that. We will distribute the money as well as we possibly can, and we will not delay the work on any section more than is necessary.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. On what sections is it intended to do work? There is no use trying to cover a multitude of sins with one vote; let us get down to business.

Mr. GRAHAM. Sections 1, 2, 3, 5, and 7 are the sections on which we will do work.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Will the hon. minister designate the sections by name ?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. 1 runs from Trenton about three miles up the river. No. 2, the next section, runs up to the vicinity of Frankfort. No. 3 is from Frankfort to the foot of Bradley bay. No. 5, is the section above Campbellford running as far as Crow bay. No. 7 is from below Hastings to Rice lake. The Newmarket canal is called No. 1 of the Holland river section. The other is the Ontario-Rice lake division.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. So that the canal is divided into divisions—the Holland river division and the Ontario-Rice lake division.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Can the minister state how this vote is to be divided between the two divisions ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have expended this year to date on the Holland river section $182,795.18 and on the Ontario-Rice lake division $852,188.77. The work will be carried on next year in approximately the same proportions between these two divisions.

Mr. PORTER. Did the hon. minister ascertain the amount of the deposits of Nott and Company?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was an accepted cheque of $20,000.

Mr. PORTER. The advertisement required a certain proportion upon the tender, did it not ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They put in a certain amount with their tender, and the balance must be put up when the contract is entered into.

Mr. PORTER. Before the contract was let for the construction of No. 1 section, were tenders advertised for again ?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. We considered, as I think it was fair to do, that this man had not practically a tender in at all. We accept the next lowest, but would not have accepted it if it had not been approximately near to the engineer's estimate.

Mr. PORTER. Does it not appear to the hon. minister that that was not quite fair, when the tender of Nott and Company was accepted ? It was then known generally what the tender of each party was. Nott and Company, a very old and reliable firm of contractors, having tendered for the construction of this work for $866,000 odd, and having put up their cheque for $20,000, would it not appear to the hon. minister, under these circumstances, that it would have been wise to call for new tenders ? Does it not appear to the hon. minister that it would have only been fair to those who did tender to have the same opportunity of tendering as this first man, who practically had two tenders ?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, he had not.

Mr. PORTER. He had only one tender, but he had two chances, whereas the others had only one chance.

Mr. GRAHAM. No, they had only the one chance. The difficulty of that would have been that every person would have known what every other person's tender was. If I were building a house and called for tenders, and my architect told me confidentially that one of the tenders was too low, and if the tenderer backed out, I would not think of asking for new tenders if the next tender were from a reliable firm and were considerably lower than the estimate of the architect. In this case, there was so much diversity in the tenders that there could not possibly have been collusion. I want to correct the statement I made to my hon. friend. These people not only sent in their first cheque with the tender, but when they were notified that they had the contract, they sent in an additional amount making a total of $43,333.

Mr. PORTER. Before the second payment was made on their deposit had their attention not been called to the fair wage clause in the contract? I understand it had, that they had full knowledge of it at that time.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. GRAHAM. Of course we cannot speak from their standpoint, and I would not like to say that they had, but our opinion was that they had every opportunity of having full knowledge of it.

Mr. PORTER. Was that fact brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think all the facts in our possession were placed before the Justice Department?

Mr. PORTER. I understand that the Minister of Railways and Canals would feel bound to act on the opinion of the Minister of Justice. Does it not appear on the face of it that there was here every opportunity for collusion between these parties? Nott & Company, as the minister says, sought for some means of escaping from this contract, and after having tendered or agreed to enter into it withdrew and as the policy of the department was to accept the next lowest tender in such a case was there not every opportunity for Larkin & Sangster, the second lowest tenderers; to make a bargain with Nott & Company by which the additional amount of nearly $150,000 might be divided between them? Larkin & Sangster might be sure that they could construct this work for at least as small a sum as Nott because they were right on the ground with their plant established, old contractors. Would it not seem as if the wise course for the government would have been to call for tenders a second time and afford every tenderer an equal opportunity and thus protect the interests of the country? Is there any check on the contractors to see that they observe the fair wage clause?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, the fair wage officer of the Labour Department. The fair wage clause is included in every contract now and if the men employed make a complaint it is the duty of the fair wage officer of the Labour Department to investigate it and if possible adjust the difficulty.

In reference to the advisability of taking the next tender instead of advertising for new tenders, it would be only suspicion that there was any collusion, and after thinking the matter over I concluded that under the circumstances there was no collusion and it would be safe to do this. Our chief engineer gave an estimate of $1,074,000 while Larkin & Sangster tendered for $969,-237, so that their tender was away below what our chief engineer said the work would cost. If we took the view of my hon. friend that every tenderer knew what the others were bidding there would have been an opportunity for a great deal stronger collusion than before. The chances are it might have cost the country $500,000 more.

Mr. PORTER. But you were not obliged to accept any tender?

Mr. GRAHAM. But we wanted the work done and accepted the lowest tender. After consulting with the engineer we concluded that we would not get any lower tender, and as we had received another tender still many thousands less than our own estimate, we decided we had better accept the next tender.

Mr. PORTER. Some of these other tenderers who were higher than Larkin & Sangster think they were not treated fairly and that they should also have had two chances?

Mr. GRAHAM. Larkin & Sangster had only one chance. If the other contractors had been in their place one of them would have got the contract.

Mr. PORTER. The matter has been brought seriously to my attention by complaints of men in the employ of the contractors on section 1 of the construction work of that canal. I am told that notwithstanding the fair wage clause the contractors have been paying the men a less rate than would be considered a fair rate under this clause of the contract and less than men similarly qualified and employed were receiving on other portions of the canal. Although complaints were made no redress was given and when the complaint of the men became too strong for the contractors to stand, a large number of these men were dismissed from the work. It seems to me that if the fair wage clause in the contract is to have any effect and to be of any advantage to the workmen, the department ought to see that it is fairly enforced.

And, if the contractor is violating it, as I am instructed this contractor has done, it should not depend upon the men making a complaint; the Department of Labour should act, having an officer whose duty it is to see that in all public contracts this clause is fairly and properly carried out. One can readily understand that a man who is in the employ of another would hesitate before making a complaint that might have the effect of losing him his job. This provision was enacted by this parliament for the benefit and advantage of labouring men, and the onus ought not to be put upon them of seeing that it is carried out. The officer appointed by the government ought to make it his business, by visiting, consultation or in some other way, to ascertain the facts, and, if necessary, to bring proper pressure to bear upon the contractors to cause them to live up to this clause of the contract. I understand that, in this case, men living in the immediate vicinity of the works on No. 1 division, who were given employment in the first instance, were promised that, after the works got fairly started, the wages would be increased to the rates that would be considered fair wages under the contract. But when the elections were over, they were told they might go back to their homes and quietly remain there for the length of time it was supposed to be necessary to construct the Trent canal, because the contractors could get Hungarians and Italians to work for wages they wanted to pay. This is a direct violation of the contract, and the government should make serious inquiry into it; and, if the facts are as I have been informed they are, should take immediate steps to remedy this wrong.

I would ask the minister also if any policy has been laid down or any determination reached, as to how this canal shall be looked after when construction is completed? That is, will it be divided into divisions as it has been for the purposes of construction, and a superintendent placed over each division, or will there be one superintendent for the whole system?

Mr. GRAHAM. Of course, it is a little difficult to speak so far ahead. Not that I mean to say it will be a long time before this canal will be constructed, but it has been in progress ever since 1833, I believe, and if a man had been asked about the policy then——

Mr. PORTER. But everybody is in earnest now.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes; to be serious, my opinion now would be that one superintendent ought to be able to look after the canal as a whole, with one overseer of each division. I would not like to lay that down as a policy, but it strikes me that that would be sufficient.

Mr. PORTER. I may tell the hon. minister (Mr. Graham) for his own information—it may not be of much advantage to the government—that in October and early November last, in the town of Trenton, there were at least twenty-five individuals who were to become superintendent of No. 1 division of the Trent canal. I would like to know if the minister had authorized the candidate who opposed me in the election to make promises to these twenty-five or more men I have referred to?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am a very careful promiser.

Mr. PORTER. I have no doubt of it. But that does not alter the fact that the promise was made by the candidate of this government in the elections. Before concluding this inquiry, I would like to ask if there is any clause in the contract which compels the contractor to work continuously until the work is completed?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is not. Conditions might arise under which we could stop the contractor in his work. There is no clause compelling him to go on with his work continuously, but there is a time limit for completion of the work, and, as a matter of fact, we do keep him working continuously.

Mr. PORTER. The minister should see to it that candidates for election in support of his party are better instructed, for the promise was made, based upon the assertion that there was a clause in the contract which compelled it, that the contractor would work continuously and that work would be furnished to the labouring men around Trenton all winter. But, again, as soon as the elections were over, the work was stopped—to be commenced again in the spring, I suppose—and the men were laid off. I do not know whether that was the only inducement held out to these men to vote, but that was one of them in the last election.
