Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I should think that it was a misnomer in these estimates to speak of the appropriation for the work on the Holland river as part of the Trent canal. I cannot understand why it is not set out separately to show exactly what the intent of the administration is in going on with the construction of the Holland river section. I am sure that hon. members on this side were pleased to see the sudden change that came over the ministers in reference to the Trent Valley canal. Prior to 1896, the friends of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Graham) condemned the Trent canal on every platform on which they spoke. This expenditure on the Holland river is the most indefensible appropriation asked for in these estimates. I have the honour to represent a constituency adjoining that of the Minister of Justice, and I venture to express the opinion that if a cabinet minister had not been the representative of North York, there would have been no such expenditure in connection with the Holland river. Ministers, apparently, are vieing with one another in getting large appropriations for their several constituencies. Just before election, a large number of men were employed on this work merely 'from' considerations of political exigencies, and not because the work is a defensible one or is required in the public interest. If the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) has any regard for his reputation as a minister he will discontinue the expenditure on the Holland river canal. The work is meeting not only the condemnation but the derision of all men who have 'any' idea 'as to how' money should be spent in the public interest. I have a letter from a gentleman who resides in New York, at Newmarket, which is supposed to be the dead end of the canal. It is dated February 20. The writer says :

The only sensible thing which is said about it is that it would have been much cheaper if the government had presented William Cane & Sons with several hundreds of thousands of dollars, as they will be the only people who can possibly profit by the canal.

Now Wm. Cane & Sons are manufacturers in Newmarket, and are prominent workers in the Reform party. They desire an outlet to bring in some raw material in connection with their business, and were it not that Wm. Cane & Sons are prominent Reformers I do not think that this vote would appear in the appropriations, either this year or any other year. Not only are all reasonable men strongly against this expenditure, but the newspapers of the country condemn it, and laugh at it. Every newspaper you pick up, whether Conservative, Reform or Independent, condemns this as a useless expenditure of public money. I desire to direct the attention of the minister to an article that appeared in 'Saturday Night' just previous to the last general election. As the minister knows, 'Saturday Night' is a paper with independent leanings, neither Conservative nor Reform, and it is a pretty well informed paper. On September 12, 1908, it had this editorial:

It is almost a pity that the work on the new canal to Newmarket—the new canal which is almost to make Newmarket an ocean port—could not be screened off from view from the car windows until it is finished. Passengers on the trains discuss the enterprise with levity. They speak of it as a canal on which nothing but votes will be floated. They express doubt as to where the water will come from to supply the canal, until one passenger explains that the difficulty has been solved by an arrangement whereby it will be hauled in carts from Lake Simcoe. People who know nothing about engineering should not presume to discuss in this fashion a great public work, and in order to prevent this flippant discussion, a screen should be built to shut away the view from passing trains until the elections are over and the frosts of winter cause operations to cease for the present.

Now I appeal to the judgment of the minister if he does not think it proper in the public interest to discontinue an expenditure of this kind. It is absolutely useless. It is only put in the estimates for the purpose of fulfilling some pre-election pledges made on behalf of friends of the government. It does not serve any useful public purpose. Under these circumstances I cannot but condemn the appropriation. Then there is another newspaper in Orillia which deals with this matter. Orillia is situated on Lake Simcoe, and the paper has consequently accurate knowledge of the facts. The article is too long to read. I would refer the minister to this extract which appears in the 'Orillia Packet' of February 18, 1909 :

In answer to a question by Mr. Currie, the Minister of Railways submitted to the House a table of gaugings made at Newmarket in 1907 relative to the flow of water over the weir. The measurements had to do with the construction of the proposed canal, and showed that from July to November the average flow was about 540 cubic feet a minute. It ranged from 313 cubic feet in August to 885 in November.

When one remembers that the average water-wagon contains about 150 cubic feet, the terrific intensity of the roar created by this appalling cataract may be understood. The wisdom of the government in passing the appropriation for this canal before taking the gaugings cannot be too highly commended. Perhaps if the gaugings had been taken first the vote would not have been made and the political interests of North York would have suffered.

The mere fact that there is not enough water to fill the canal might be embarrassing to an ordinary administration, but the Laurier government is not ordinary. It laughs at impossibilities. Mr. Graham says that storage reservoirs will be required to utilize the spring freshets as a feeder during the summer months. How many storage reservoirs will be required no one says. But no matter how many, they must be built. The transportation requirements of the country demand that Newmarket be made a seaport, and the political requirements of the Minister of Justice demand a canal of some kind wherein the glad electors can fish for mudcats and meditate on the glories of the government.

This, no doubt, is a charming picture, but it is subject to amendment. Even with storage reservoirs the mud-cat might find the going rather hard. Some person might throw a salmon can into the canal and cause a shoal whereon many virtuous fish might run aground. A good deal may be said in favour of the Newmarket canal by those who do not know what they are talking about. It certainly will have one great advantage. No bridge will be needed. If a North York elector has occasion to cross this noble waterway he can put on his rubbers.

Now I say again, in view of these protests made, one by an independent paper and the other by a paper situated on Lake Simcoe, with full knowledge of the facts, I say the minister should satisfy himself of the urgency of this expenditure before he asks us to vote hundreds and hundreds of thousands of the people's money. It is a shame and a scandal that the public moneys of Canada should be spent in this way, in order to advance the political interests of a member of the government. I say further that an appropriation of this kind should not be allowed to go through. We do not know what expenditure is going to be involved on this Holland river division, nor on the Trent canal division. It is put in here under the broad heading of Trent canal, and has absolutely nothing to do with the Trent canal. And why they disguise the appropriation under the heading of the Trent canal, I cannot tell, except it be that the hon. gentleman is probably 'preparing' a way to defend past appropriations for the Trent canal. He says the Trent canal is a useful public expenditure. That is not what the hon. gentleman and his friends said prior to 1896. But now he is willing to defend this canal, and consequently he makes the Holland river division, or the Aylesworth division ditch, as it is called in that region of country, a part of the Trent canal in order to cover up the whole enterprise. I say the policy of the government is worthy of the severest condemnation of this committee, and it should not be allowed to go through without a division, in order that the government and their supporters may go on record. The minister does not say what the work is going to cost, he does not say where it is going to end. He laughs at the whole project, and says it was started away back in 1830 and he does not see an end to it. When are we going to see an end of the Holland river canal, or the Aylesworth ditch? Even the honest Reformers of North York are condemning this expenditure. There is not a reasonable Reformer in North York that would justify it. The Minister of Justice is losing his influence in consequence of his advocacy of this ridiculous expenditure. We find that there are men in every town in North York who have public contracts from the government in consequence of this expenditure; we find the government expending $300,000 or $400,000 in order to ensure the return of the Minister of Justice. I say the Minister of Justice is losing his influence in his own constituency in consequence of this expenditure. He came into my constituency and spoke on one occasion, with the result that his influence proved less than nil, because the Conservative majority was increased threefold, showing that he is losing his influence. Now I appeal to the good judgment and fair common sense of the minister to withdraw this appropriation for the Holland river division. I may say frankly that I have always had a great respect for the good judgment of the Minister of Railways and Canals. He is only inheriting the sins of his predecessors, because I do not think that he himself would have initiated a scheme of this kind. But he now feels it incumbent upon himself to continue an expenditure that was inaugurated by his predecessors. I would say with that gentleman who wrote that letter from Newmarket that the expenditure is unjustifiable, and it would be a good thing for the country if the government would hand over to Wm. Cane & Sons a bonus of $350,000, and stop this work. I submit that the minister should give us the details of what he proposes to expend on this canal next year, before he asks us to adopt this vote.

Mr. WALLACE. What is the estimated cost of this part of the Trent Valley canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. We spent about $183,000 on this portion of the canal last year, and we spent $800,000 on the other portion. I told my hon. friend that the expenditure this year would practically be in the same proportion. We are taking a small vote for the entire work, and I want to have every dollar available without absolutely tieing it up to any particular section. One contract is made for this portion and there are contracts for three other portions, and the money will be expended probably in the same proportion that it was last year. We spent a trifle over $1,000,000 last year, and the same amount of money will probably be expended this year.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to make a protest against this useless expenditure in North York. I agree with the remarks of my hon. friend from North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe); I think this item should be stricken out of the estimates. This is an absolutely useless expenditure, and I do not think the vote should go through.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The minister did not answer the question of my hon. friend from Centre York. What is the estimated cost of the whole canal when it is completed?

Mr. GRAHAM. Of the whole Trent canal?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Of the Newmarket section.

Mr. GRAHAM. The estimated cost is in the vicinity of $600,000, I think.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does that include storage dam and reservoir?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. How much of the $600,000 has been expended?

Mr. GRAHAM. About $200,000 has been expended altogether.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has the minister caused any inquiry to be made as to the possible tonnage on this canal? What is the tonnage arising from the town of Newmarket?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have no such report. We have no such report on any part of the Trent canal although we are spending millions upon it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Does not the minister think that in a case of this kind, where it is a branch of a canal, and not merely a link in the system, it would be advisable to ascertain the possible tonnage arising in that section ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have an engagement which will require me to leave after six o'clock. I thought that the hon. gentlemen would allow this item to go through and have any further discussion which they desire afterwards.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Let it stand.

Mr. PORTER. What is the length of this section of the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. About ten miles.

Mr. PORTER. Where does it start and end?

Mr. GRAHAM. It starts in Cook's bay, Lake Simcoe and goes to Newmarket. I suppose you will allow this item to go through?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think it is too serious to allow it to go through. I think the minister should allow time for further consideration as to the propriety of voting this money.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. If the minister will take the Brockville 'Recorder,' his own paper, and read the criticisms that were made with regard to an impovement that was made a few years ago on an important canal—the Rideau canal—when connection was made with the town of Perth he will see how determined was the opposition offered to that work. In the literature sent out every election reference was made to the expenditure on the Tay canal. It did not amount to half of the sum that my hon. friend proposes to devote to the digging of this ditch, and I am sure that when he comes to read his own paper and to reflect upon the speeches he has made condemning the government for having made that expenditure connecting the Rideau canal with the town of Perth he will withdraw this vote. If there ever was a useless expenditure proposed by the government this certainly is the most useless.

At six o'clock committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Residence of Yukon Commissioner, Dawson, $19,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to repair and to furnish the residence which was destroyed by fire some time ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much did it cost altogether?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $39,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How much of that for furnishings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $10,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Will this be let by contract and tender?

Mr. PUGSLEY. An estimate was made by the chief architect and it was thought better to have it done by days' work. There are not many contractors in the Yukon, I suppose, and besides it is difficult to let these repairs by contract.

Mr. LENNOX. Do we supply the Yukon Commissioner with a residence and furnish it for him, and do we pay him a living allowance in addition to his salary of $9,000?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not sure about the latter; I will inquire.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the estimate made by the chief architect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $21,000 for the reconstruction of the building, but that did not include heating and fittings of various kinds and plumbing and electric wiring.

Mr. LENNOX. There is not much discrepancy there. Did the chief architect visit the place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. Our representative who examined the buildings made an estimate of the probable cost and that was passed upon by the chief architect.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister think it is a proper principle to furnish the residence of such an official as this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared to say to the contrary.

Mr. LENNOX. Unless the minister can say that this is a proper expenditure, we ought not to be asked to sanction it. It seems to me that the principle of providing residences and then furnishing them for officials is a very bad principle, except perhaps in the case of the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Governor General.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Why except these?

Mr. LENNOX. As far as the Governor General is concerned, it is well enough. I am not going to say that I particularly approve of the other, but I am not going to object to it because I have not made up my mind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What about the lieutenant governors of the various provinces?

Mr. LENNOX. I am not going to branch off to that question. The question I now propound to the minister is whether we should build a residence and furnish it for this gentleman. I submit that we should not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If called upon to justify it, I would be quite prepared to do so, because it is in line with what has been the practice of this country ever since confederation. The lieutenant governors of all the provinces have been furnished with residences and also with the furniture for them. That applies to every province of Canada except New Brunswick, where it was the case until along in the eighties, when the provincial government, led by the Hon. Mr. Blair, did away with the government house as an official residence. When the provinces came into the confederation all the government houses were furnished, and the renewals from time to time have been provided, not by the lieutenant governors themselves, but by the respective provinces. When Manitoba came into the confederation, a government house at Winnipeg was erected and also furnished by the federal government. In the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta the government houses were also provided by the federal government. The Yukon is a territory of the Dominion, and in pursuance of the same line of policy the government house there was erected and furnished by the federal government. It must be borne in mind that a governor—and the commissioner of the Yukon is in the same position—holds his office only for a comparatively short period; and I presume that the reason for furnishing residences is that it would be a hardship on the governor to have to furnish a residence in the style in which he is supposed to live, because at the end of his term he would have to either sell his furniture or take it away with him, and his successor would have to furnish it all over again. I do not believe that I am called on to defend a practice which has always been recognized and held without question to be a reasonable and proper practice.

Mr. BARNARD. Did I understand the minister to say that the Dominion government built the government houses in Saskatchewan and Alberta?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, when they were territories.

Mr. BARNARD. Has that been the case in the maritime provinces and Ontario?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, they were all erected by the various governments before confederation. In Manitoba the government house was erected and furnished by the federal government.

Mr. BARNARD. Can the minister recollect the date when that was done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In 1881.

Mr. BARNARD. Has the minister any recollection of a new government house in Ontario and Quebec or in any of the maritime provinces having been built by the federal government since confederation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There have been no new government houses built in these provinces since confederation, so far as I am aware. The lieutenant governors are occupying the same residences that were built and furnished by the various governments before confederation.

Mr. BARNARD. The reason I am asking the question is that in the province of British Columbia the government house, which I think was in existence before confederation, was burnt down a few years ago, and a new government house was erected at considerable cost by the provincial government. Was any application made to the federal government in regard to that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware of any.

Mr. BARNARD. In the event of an application being made by the provincial government to the federal government to be reimbursed and to be put on the same basis as the other provinces in this respect, I presume that a deaf ear would not be turned to them? Do I understand that the minister does not wish to answer the question?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared to answer it.

Mr. LENNOX. It appears to me that the minister has not made a very strong defense of this item, in citing the cases of the lieutenant governors of the various provinces, and comparing them with that of a commissioner in a territory which yields a comparatively unimportant revenue.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Before proceeding with the reconstruction of this building the government made full inquiry, and I personally inquired as to the likelihood of the Yukon being a permanent mining district, and the information that I got was that owing to the very large expenditure which was being made by capitalists in introducing machinery for hydraulic mining and in view of the quartz discoveries, it was likely to be permanent, and that the wealth of the Yukon was very great. I conferred with Dr. Thompson, the representative from the Yukon in the last parliament, and he said that in his judgment, which I am sure would have great weight with those who knew him, from his knowledge of the country, he had not the shadow of a doubt that the district would be a permanent district, that there would be for all time a considerable population there and that it was in every respect desirable that the government house should be reconstructed. That had some weight with me, but it was not that alone which had weight, because I received information from other sources upon which I felt I could rely.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is the minister not prepared to admit that the revenue in the Yukon now, is only about 20 per cent of what it was in 1901?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know it has fallen off, but they are going into permanent mining, and it is expected that next year the output will approach the output of the most successful years.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister state the cost of the commission appointed to investigate into the cause of the fire? They reported that they were not able to ascertain the cost.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That report was made before I was minister and I have not the statement with me to-night. I shall be glad to bring it down.

Public buildings generally—construction of armouries, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a vote which it has been the practice to take every year for the construction of small armouries in various sections of the country, costing from $5,000 to $15,000, or perhaps up to $20,000 or $24,000. It is for armouries in regard to which there are no special appropriations.

Mr. G. TAYLOR. Where is the money to be expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Last year the contracts were: Medicine Hat, contract $16,000; Strathroy, contract $13,461; Durham, contract $6,000. These are the only ones which are now under construction which will be paid out of this vote. They are not completed and we will require $50,000 to complete them, and to undertake such others as the Minister of Militia may ask. It is expected the total amount will be expended by the 31st March.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any retrenchment along this line?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think there will be this year.

Mr. HUGHES. Why?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot answer more fully than I have done already.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister the list of armouries to be covered by this vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. HUGHES. What was this vote last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $80,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Why the reduction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because we are economizing.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Would the minister explain the general principle governing his department in the charging of items to capital or income?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All the public buildings in Ottawa are charged to capital account. That has been the practice since confederation and is convenient for purposes of comparison. In my department there are a few of what might be called national works, chargeable to capital account. Hon. gentlemen will see that a few of the harbour and river improvements are chargeable to capital, but none of the public buildings throughout Canada, except those in Ottawa, are so charged. The practice has been, in the past, to charge these others to income, and we have continued that practice. Perhaps, so far as works in some of the large cities are concerned we have gone further in charging the expenditures to income than we might have done. In Montreal, for instance, last year, for the examining warehouse, we bought a property costing $405,000, charging it to income. I think we might have charged that to capital, but it would be inconvenient for purposes of comparison, and so we have thought better to charge all these buildings to income account except the buildings at Ottawa. At page 58. hon. members will see a number of works are chargeable to capital, including Port Arthur and Fort William harbour, Quebec harbour, Red River—improvements at St. Andrews rapids—St. John harbour, Tiffin harbour, and Victoria harbour. These are very important works, connected with the national transportation system. For instane the works at Fort William and Port Arthur are part of the Transcontinental system, and it is upon that theory they are charged to capital account. The same is true of Quebec harbour. As to St. Andrew's locks, this is a very large work, running up to about $1,000,000. St. John harbour is the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its winter port. The business is very rapidly increasing; I think that last year, the tonnage in the port of St. John was second only to that of Montreal and about half the tonnage. The exports last year during the winter amounted to upwards of $20,000,000, and we expect this year they will probably run $25,000,000. Therefore we have felt that the port of St. John belongs now to the Transcontinental system of Canada, and expenditurs on that harbour are properly chargeable to capital account. The same is true of Tiffin and Victoria harbour. These harbours are being developed as a part of the national transportation system. They are not intended for the receiving of the grain of the west for local distribution, but as a means of forwarding the grain eastwards to the ports of the St. Lawrence for shipment in the summer and to the ports of the maritime provinces for shipment in the winter season. As a result of the great improvements being made there by the government in conjunction with the railway companies, we look forward to a revolution in the grain trade of the west. We expect that it will not be very long, after these harbours are completed and connected with the railways, when millions of bushels of grain which now go through Buffalo and Atlantic United States ports will be diverted to the ports of the St. Lawrence and the maritime provinces. The railways are providing the lines to connect with these harbours, one with a maximum grade of 3-10ths of one per cent, and the other with a maximum grade of 4-10ths of one per cent, thus making them almost level. We have felt, therefore, that these improvements, a part of the national transportation system, may be charged to capital. Other harbour improvements, dredging works, public buildings and other things of that kind, we have charged to income.

Experimental farms—new buildings and improvements, renewals and repairs and seed in connection with existing buildings, fences, &c., $10,000.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. How much of this is for the experimental farm at Agassiz?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am sorry, I cannot give that information. The practice has been to spend this $10,000 at the different farms as required. We have quite a large expenditure at Ottawa, which will be taken partly out of the vote for the current year and partly out of this vote. The balance of this vote will be distributed amongst the several experimental farms.

Mr. BRODER. What is the special outlay at Ottawa?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Additions to the museum and offices, mainly. The amount of that contract was something like $12,000. There is also $1,000 for heating, $1,500 for electric wiring, $1,000 for fittings and furniture, and $2,500 for contingencies and superintendence. Thus we have the total of about $18,000.

Mr. BRODER. I have been informed that the government intend to make arrangements to have the street railway system of Ottawa run out to the Experimental Farm.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has been provided for.

Mr. FISHER. It is done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I understand that is completed.

Mr. LENNOX. I notice that the vote under this head for the current year was $25,000 as against $10,000 for next year. I suppose that the government, pursuing the same general policy that has been referred to so often in this House, is cutting down the expenses as much as possible? I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is here, and he will be able to explan.

Mr. FISHER. For some years this vote has been $10,000. But, for the current year, we asked for $25,000, because we found it absolutely necessary to make considerable additions to the office buildings of the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa, the work of the staff there having greatly increased and there being urgent need of more room.

Mr. CROCKET. How many experimental farms are there?

Mr. FISHER. Five regular experimental farms. Lately, the policy has been adopted of establishing subsidiary stations for particular experimental work, but not called exactly experimental farms. Two of these have been established, and a third has just been acquired.

Mr. CROCKET. Any of them in New Brunswick?

Mr. FISHER. No; we hope that will come.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. To return to the experimental farm at Agassiz, in which I am greatly interested: I am sorry to hear that Ottawa is to monopolize the greater part of this vote as well as that for salaries. Has the minister considered the need of improving the housing accommodation for the staff of the farm at Agassiz?

Mr. FISHER. That has been under consideration once or twice. We have not reached any definite plan with regard to it. If there is a pressing need for it, the amount necessary will have to be taken out of this vote.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am glad to hear that from the minister, because there is a pressing need indeed for accommodation at Agassiz for the men employed on the farm. They now have to put up with the most temporary accommodation at a hotel, at great expense to themselves and considerable detriment to the community; because, while there is no accommodation for them on the farm you cannot get a class of labourers who would be willing to stay there such as you could get if the government would treat them as they do the employees at other places and provide them with comfortable houses in which to live. While I am on my feet, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works also how much of this vote for experimental farm buildings generally will be available for the new farm in Comox-Atlin?

Mr. FISHER. I will have to answer my hon. friend that the votes for new farms are a separate vote and will appear amongst the votes for arts and agriculture statistics which will come up later in the session. This vote is a vote on the part of the Public Works Department to prepare and deal with the buildings of existing experimental farms.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It has nothing to do with new buildings?

Mr. FISHER. No.

Rents, repairs, furniture, heating &c., $1,340,500—Ottawa Public Buildings—Elevator attendants, $24,000.

Mr. LENNOX. How many elevators have we, and how many attendants?

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are 30 elevator attendants now, and we are installing a new elevator in the Western Block which will require two attendants. We are also installing three new elevators in this block of which one is now running. The total amount of salaries of the elevator men now employed is $19,980. That makes a difference of something over $4,000 which will be required for the purpose of paying additional salaries. The highest salary we pay is $65 a month, but that is paid to only one man; the others get $55 a month:

Mr. LENNOX. This item, I suppose, represents the elevators in all the departmental buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. And the House of Commons, including the rented buildings.

Mr. LENNOX. Does it include in all cases two attendants a day, or only in some cases?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Generally we have only one attendant for each elevator. Here in the House of Commons, where parliament is sitting at night, we have to have two attendants at each elevator. In some other cases we have two where the hours are long.

Ottawa Public Buildings—Gas and electric light, including roads and bridges, $45,000.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the meaning of 'roads and bridges'?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have to light certain roads and bridges in Ottawa. We light the Chaudiere bridge, the road towards Rideau Hall, and the road to the experimental farm.

Grounds—Ottawa Public Buildings, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is an increase of $2,000. It has been found that the vote last year was not quite sufficient to cover the expenditure. The work is under the direction of a superintendent.

Mr. BLAIN. I would ask the minister if he does not think this is a department in which a little economy could be exercised, in these times of retrenchment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend that this is an item with respect to which all possible economy, consistent with the proper taking care of the grounds should be exercised. That economy we will exercise, but for the credit of the country we must keep the grounds in fairly good condition. We find that we cannot get along with a less expenditure than is provided for in these estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister will see that the economy does not show itself in the estimates and that is what the public are interested in.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I hope the minister will see to it that the grounds are better kept next year than they were last year. The grounds last year were a disgrace to the capital.

Mr. PUGSLEY. They became very beautiful a little later in the season after parliament rose.

Ottawa public buildings—heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $110,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does this include the heating of the new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. How is it that it costs $9,000 more to light the building, while it does not cost anything more to heat it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Coal is a little cheaper than it was last year.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. What was the price of coal last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give it to my hon. friend at the moment, but at present the price is $6.10.

Mr. HENDERSON. The minister, in these estimates, is making provision for the coming year. Has he a prospective idea of the value of coal in the next twelve months?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have to begin getting coal in for the heating after the 31st March.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Do you manufacture electric light.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, we purchase it from the Ottawa Electric Company.

Ottawa public buildings—Major's Hill Park, $8,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is there no reduction on account of the corner being cut out?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think there should be. Are we expected to care for the corner that has been cut off the grounds?

Mr. WRIGHT. Is the minister going to paint the other side of the fence?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not part of our work.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. In connection with this fenced off portion of Major's Hill Park, there is a monument inside of that fenced enclosure. I notice that there is a board fence put around the monument so as to entirely obscure the inscription and render it valueless for the purpose for which that monument was put there. When, during Paardeburg week, we are doing so much to celebrate what our militia men have done for Canada, it is particularly fitting that we should take notice of this fence and have same statement as to why it is permitted to continue there, as I understand it has continued for two years or more. I remember distinctly when that monument was placed there, the depth of appreciation felt in Ottawa with regard to the sacrifices of the volunteers who met death at Cut Knife in the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, and I am sure there was no person, who participated in the placing of that monument there, who anticipated that the time would come when, by the order of the government of Canada, in whose service these volunteers were, that stone would be obscured by the fence that is now allowed to exist and to blot out the monument from the public gaze for two years. This is something to which prompt attention should be given. I, for one, would like to see the Minister of Public Works give an order, which he certainly has authority to give, for the taking down of that fence forthwith.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The reason why the fence was put around the monument was that it might be protected from any defacement while the workmen were engaged in the construction of the new hotel. It was put there simultaneously with the fence which was put around the lot which we agreed to sell to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. There have been delays in connection with the construction of the hotel, but I understand that the company intend proceeding with the work of construction this spring. I may say that only yesterday I received a letter from the vice-president of the Grank Trunk Railway Company asking that the contract for the sale of the site of the hotel should be completed. There have been delays, for reason which it is not necessary to state to the committee, but I received that letter yesterday. My own view is, and I am sure that members of the committee will agree with me, that while the work of construction is going on it is desirable that the monument be preserved from any possibility of defacement, and every person will see that it is proper that it should be inclosed by a fence until the hotel is completed, when the fence will, of course, be removed, and when we hope the monument will be in as good condition as it is at the present time.

Mr. LENNOX. I am perfectly amazed at the statement of the minister, although he has made some very ingenious and remarkable statements within the last few weeks. That monument is inclosed within the enclosure in which the building is to be put up. That monument stands in that portion of the property that we are to sell to the railway company. It stands within the inclosure where the work is to be done and it is not fenced in, as the minister must know, for the purpose of protection. The minister must think we are very credulous or very easily deceived.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What do you suggest it is fenced in for?

Mr. LENNOX. It is fenced in because the park proper is to be shut off from that which we are selling to the railway company. It was explained here in the House of Commons during last session that the monument would be removed and the government have failed to remove it. It was to have been removed out of the position in which it stands and the company have put around a fence for their own convenience and they have not put it around for the sake of inclosing the monument.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, there is a separate fence around the monument.

Mr. LENNOX. No, I beg the minister's pardon.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it is a separate fence.

Mr. LENNOX. What does the minister mean?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a fence surrounding the whole lot and inside that is the monument and still another fence around the monument.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, but this fence is only around the portion that has been set apart for the company. We were assured six or eight months ago that the monument would be removed to another place and the government has neglected to do that. If the monument is to continue to stand where it is it should not be inclosed in the general inclosure at all and the minister knows that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not remember what was stated last session by others. Certainly I do not know that that was said by me.

Mr. LENNOX. I do not know whether it was said by the minister or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information given to me by the chief architect is that the monument will stand about fifteen feet from the hotel. It may be desirable to leave it there under an arrangement with the hotel company or it may be thought better to remove it to some other part of the park. But, in the meantime, it is desirable that it should be inclosed so that it may not be defaced while the work is going on.

Mr. HUGHES. When is this hotel going to be constructed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The information I have is that the company intend to commence the construction of the hotel this spring. I had a letter from the vice-president of the company waiving some objections which he had to a clause in the deed which has been prepared by the Department of Justice, and asking that the conveyance should be completed as soon as possible with the view of the company proceeding with the construction of the hotel.

Mr. HUGHES. There is a well-grounded rumour that the hotel is not going to be built by the Grand Trunk at all; has the minister heard any thing of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. HUGHES. He does not want to hear it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well I am indifferent one way or the other about hearing it.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Does the minister not think it a mark of disrespect to the memory of the volunteers, that this monument should have stood boarded out from the public view for over two years? Now that we have been trifled with so long by the persons who secured this valuable park for the purpose of erecting a commercial undertaking, does the minister not think it his duty to interpose and to see that at an insignificant expense—two or three dollars will do it—this fence should be taken down. This week when we are celebrating Pardeberg, I appeal to the minister to show that we are in earnest in paying respect to the memory of the brave men in whose honour that monument was erected.

Mr. HUGHES. I heartily endorse the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor). It may not be known that that monument commemorates the memory of the comrades of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) who fought in the Northwest rebellion in 1885; he himself being one of the men who took an active part in that campaign. The Minister of Public Works would do well to take into serious consideration the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. LENNOX. How much of this $8,000 voted last year has been expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the 20th of November the expenditure was $6,305.

Removal of snow, including Rideau Hall, $4,000.

Mr. LENNOX. Assuming that the average spent for this purpose annually is $4,000, on account of the climatic conditions this year I should not think that more than one quarter of it would be required. We have had such rapid thaws that practically there has been little snow removing to be done this year. I wish to have from the minister a memorandum of the details of this expenditure for this year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have that prepared.

Ottawa public buildings—repairs, including ventilation and lighting, furniture, &c., $175,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Does this include the cost of the chairs in the Conservative rooms?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are coming.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. How much of this vote was expended last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Up to the 1st of November, $21,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume that when the new building is furnished such a large vote as this will not be required.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is more or less furnishing to be done every year.

Mr. HENDERSON. The main building, the East, and West Blocks, and the Langevin Block originally cost about $5,000,000, can the minister say how much it costs every year to keep these buildings in re pair?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $175,000 year in and year out.

Mr. HENDERSON. A very considerable portion of this $175,000 is for ventilation, lighting and furniture; what I want to every year to keep these buildings in repairs to the buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for repairs to the furniture, ventilation, &c., and the chief architect tells me that taking one year with another the expenditure is about $175,000 for repairs to the buildings.

Ottawa public buildings—telephone service, $16,500.

Mr. DANIEL. I notice an increase of about $2,000 in this item over last year. Will the minister tell the House how many telephones there are in this building, and give us some idea of where they are placed? Are they all in the offices of officials, or are any of them in the private rooms of members, and, if so, how many ? The minister might give us some idea of the mode in which he has placed these telephones.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the whole telephone service of the various public buildings in Ottawa, including all the departments as well as the House of Commons. I am not able to say at this moment in what rooms telephones have been installed. They are in the rooms of different officials, the rooms of ministers, and I presume the rooms of the whips of both sides of the House. I do not think they are installed in the rooms occupied simply by two or three members of the House on either side. I have had no requisitions to have them so installed.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see by the Auditor General's Report, at page V—108 that the price charged the government for telephones is $35. I understand that the regular price in Ottawa is $25.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot tell the exact price; but I made inquiry last year, and my information is that the government gets telephones at the same price as private firms.

Mr. SPROULE. I should think that taking so many they would get them for somewhat less than private individuals. Besides, many of them are used only for a portion of the year.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where they are used only for a portion of the year I think there is a reduction.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that the price for a residence telephone in the city of Ottawa is $25.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the office rate ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I am speaking now of residences. I see that for a telephone in the residence of Mr. McDougald the charge is $35.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend quite sure that the Ottawa rate for the residences of private individuals is $25 ? Because if it is, I would insist on the telephone company refunding. I certainly would not consent to pay more. I will make inquiry as to that.

Mr. J. D. REID. My authority is a member who is paying that rate for a telephone in his residence in Ottawa, which he is using the whole twelve months.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information last year was the contrary of that, but my hon. friend having mentioned it, I will make it my business to look into it. I can assure the committee that we will not pay any more than is paid by private individuals.

Mr. BOYCE. Does the minister say that in paying out the public moneys of this country, he has never informed himself what rate the government is paying for telephones ? Does he have to ask members on the opposition side of the House what the rate is ? Instead of asking members what the rate is after he has paid the money, the situation ought to be reversed. The minister ought to be giving the House the information why he is paying $35 a year for telephones, apparently $10 above the rate any one else pays.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman know that ?

Mr. J. D. REID. I will assume the responsibility of saying that $25 is the regular Ottawa rate.

Mr. BOYCE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman; that is my own experience, and yet the minister pays $35 a year, and makes no objection. He asks us to pass the item and when it is questioned lifts his eyebrows and asks information from this side. I think the information should come properly from that side.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand the rate for telephones in Ottawa for private residence is $25, but if that private residence has one boarder it is $45. The charge for an office phone is $35. Undoubtedly they have arranged a rate for the government offices. There must be some reason for paying $35.

Mr. J. D. REID. Here is a case, Clerk of the Crown in Chancery residence, $35. I do not think the government should pay $10 extra for any boarders in the house of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Then Mr. McDougald, the Commissioner of Customs, pays $35. Does he keep boarders?

Mr. McMILLAN. It is $20 in a boarding house.

Mr. J. D. REID. I claim that the government should not pay more for phones in the residences of these officials than any private citizen would pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I quite agree.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister should see whether the government have been paying too much and make the telephone company refund.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has not told me yet of any individual resident in Ottawa who has one for less.

Mr. J. D. REID. Mr. Porter and Mr. Perley each pay $25. These officials all have regular salaries and why should we make these extra expenditures? For the residence of the Minister of Finance they charge $50. Are they charging $25 extra for boarders that he keeps? He must have a lot of boarders. For the deputy minister, who does not keep as many boarders as the Minister of Finance, they charge only $25. For the private secretary they charge $40; he must have a boarder or two more than the deputy minister. In these cases the telephone company are not treating the government fairly and the Minister of Public Works should see that if the government are paying too much a refund is made.

Mr. BARR. Could not the minister bring down the facts?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to produce a statement of the amounts paid for different telephones in discussing the item 'miscellaneous expenditures'. When my attention was called to requests for telephones after I became minister I had inquiry made as to the charges for residences in Ottawa and I was informed that the rate given to the government was exactly the same as that given to private individuals. Of course we know that if there is a duplication of the service, a wall extension or a table extension, there is an extra charge, and this may be the case at the residence of the Minister of Finance. I have a table extension which is necessary if I am to have a telephone at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year $14,888 was paid for telephones in Ottawa alone. The minister will see that, in every case, where there is a telephone in the residence of an official, the charge is $35 per annum, except in the case of the ministers, where it is $50. I refer to the Auditor General's Report, page V—108. I see the telephone in the minister's house is charged $50. I do not know whether he is keeping boarders or not. The telephone in his messenger's house cost $35; the same with the census branch, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and others—in every case the charge is at least $35. In a few cases, like the ministers, they may require a telephone and an extension, but that is not required in the case of the messengers or most of these other officials. It seems clear to me that the telephone company are charging $10 more than they ought to charge.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the matter is one that ought to be inquired into. I am glad that my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Reid) has called attention to it. I will allow the item to stand and make inquiries.

Mr. PORTER. Will the minister answer my inquiry as to the principle on which this payment is made at all. Why should a telephone be paid for in the house of an employee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The theory is that these officials are liable to be called up on public business, and that it is not undesirable to allow a certain class of officials telephones in their residences. I think everybody will agree that it is reasonable that there should be telephones in the residences of the ministers as well as in their offices. I think the same would apply to the deputies and to the secretaries.

Mr. J. D. REID. And the messengers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is a question. It is a convenient thing for a minister to be able to call up his messenger to attend to a matter of public business. My own view would be that this would apply to one messenger in the department who would be liable to be called up at any time, but not more than one.

Mr. PORTER. I should think the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery would not very frequently be called up out of office hours.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is hard to discriminate.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not want the item to be held up, but I would like to have it understood that on some other item the minister would explain exactly the position. And if I am right I want the minister to say that he will make the telephone company refund what it has been charging too much. And let us have the explanation.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will undertake to do that.

Mr. SPROULE. How can the minister undertake to make them refund money paid in connection with a business transaction entered into with them ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I did not say I would undertake to have them refund; I said I would undertake to give the explanation.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understood the minister to say that if he finds the Bell Telephone Company have been charging $35 for a residence telephone when they charge others $25, he will make them refund the amount.

Mr. SPROULE. He goes back on that.

Mr. J. D. REID. I want that understood.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy tells me that, in the case of offices they charge $45 but the government have a flat rate both for residences and offices——

Mr. J. D. REID. The office telephones are charged here at $50.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will undertake to have it looked into and get the information for the committee, and will give it when some other item is under discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN. I understood the minister to say, both early in the debate and recently, that he would make the company refund any overcharge. And I was pleased to hear it. I think he should do that, particularly if this charge has been assented to under a misrepresentation. I will be glad to have him take that plank of the Conservative platform and enforce restitution.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it appears, on full inquiry that the telephone company have charged more than they ought to charge, I think they ought to refund. I can only say I will look into it.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON. If any large corporation required as many telephones as the government do, I think they could get them at a more reasonable rate than the government seems to be paying. Since they promised to charge only $25, I think the minister will not be doing justice to the country if he does not cause them to refund the money. We have been held up in different parts of the country and told that public works could not go on, while money is being recklessly spent in Ottawa.

Mr. BLAIN. I find an item in the Auditor General's Report, page V—112, showing that taxes paid on buildings rented by the government is a little over $11,000. That seems to be a new item.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The government rents a number of buildings in Ottawa, and, up to quite recently, these were regarded as being free of taxation under the British North America Act as they were occupied for Dominion purposes. I do not say that that is the reading of the Act. The Ontario government recently passed a law expressly declaring that such buildings should be subject to taxation. Outside the statute altogether, I should have thought it proper that taxes should be paid on buildings occupied by the government. I do not see why if a building is subject to taxation being rented by a private individual, the mere fact of it being rented by the government should enable it to escape taxation. At all events, the Ontario legislature has passed a law on the subject, and we have recognized the validity of that law and are paying taxes.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not object to the principle; I rather agree with the minister that it is right. But, when the government is renting buildings in different parts of the city, merely because a change takes place in the law of Ontario, I do not see why the government should pay these large sums in taxation. It seeems to me the owners of the buildings should pay the taxes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman will see that the rental would be just that much higher.

Mr. BLAIN. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that, but I don't agree with him. Here are properties in this city receiving very large rents, a new law comes into force that puts the taxation on the owner of the building, and does the hon. gentleman say that the government are going to assume this taxation? I think that the government should see to it that the owners of these properties pay their own taxes.

Mr. SPROULE. On the other hand, if the government are going to pay the taxes, I think they ought to get the buildings at a less rental, because if the owner of the building rented it to any one else it would be taxed. The corporation of Ottawa is denied the privilege of that taxation. Now if the government commence to pay taxes it seems to me they should get a reduction in the rental.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That depends on circumstances. It seems in this case that the rental was fixed by the landlord on the theory that he would have no taxes to pay, he would charge so much as a net rent, based upon what he regarded as a fair return on his investment. That is usually the case. It is usually the cost of the property and a fair interest on the amount invested which govern rentals. We do not think it is fair to compel the owner to pay taxes, because it would mean that he was getting much less for his property than he bargained for when he rented to the government. In the case of some other properties we agreed that we should pay the taxes.

Mr. BLAIN. The law in the province of Ontario, I understand is that where the landlord leases a property and there is no mention of taxes in the lease he is compelled to pay the taxes, and I am quite sure that it is the case under the government leases. I do not think it is fair, I repeat, that these property owners in the city of Ottawa who are receiving enormous rents for their properties, and where the government is spending large amounts of money, as they are in some cases, fitting up these properties, and when a change of law takes place, the government should assume all the taxes. It is unfair to the government, and it is a charge against the minister for defending it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think in mose cases the lease expressly provides that the government should pay what taxes there may be.

Mr. BLAIN. Perhaps the minister will produce one of these leases?

Mr. CROSBY. In addition to producing the lease, it will be necessary to bring down the assessed values of the properties, and a statement showing the amount of rent we are paying on each property.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot bring down the assessed value of the property.

Rideau Hall — including grounds, improvements, furniture and maintenance, $35,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the full amount spent last year that was voted?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We anticipate it will be spent on the 31st of March.

Mr. EDWARDS. Would the minister give us some idea of the items that go to make up this $35,000, how much for furniture and how much for maintenance?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Plants, bulbs, trees, &c., $1,698.97; dry goods, linen, curtains, &c., $4,099.93; glassware, crockery, kitchenware, $3,562.66; lumber, $1,396.71; hardware, paint, glass, &c., $649.20; furniture, safe, flags, cleaning carpets, &c., $842.57; sand, cement, manure, &c., $93.90; paylists, salaries, &c., $17,226.21; sundries, $748.79.

Rideau Hall--allowance for fuel and light, $8,500.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. When we were passing the item of $110,000, I asked the minister how he was able to light the parliament buildings, including the new wing for the same sum as last year, and he replied that it was because coal was much cheaper this year. Now why has he not reduced this item for the same cause? Then I notice a little lower down a charge for heating last year of $90,000, and this year it is $125,000. Is the increase caused by the reduction in the price of coal?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some time ago it was thought better to make an allowance of $8,500 a year for the purpose of providing fuel and light to Government House, and if it costs more, His Excellency provides it himself. It was thought that would be about a fair allowance each year, and that is the usual allowance made by parliament. With regard to the heating of buildings, my hon. friend must remember that the number of public buildings is constantly increasing throughout Canada. Last year we had quite a number of new buildings, and that would account to a considerable extent for the increase. This item is for heating the buildings throughout Canada.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Have the public buildings in Canada increased 40 per cent since last year?—because the cost of heating has increased 40 per cent, though the price of coal has decreased. The minister is taking for at least 50 per cent more this year than he did last year, assuming that the price of coal was the same.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There has been a considerable increase in the number of new buildings, and we have installed modern systems of lighting and heating.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand the minister to say that we allow $8,500 to the Governor General for heating, and if it costs any more the Governor General pays it himself?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a new departure?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It has been the custom for some little time.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure that was not the information given us a few years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was the case ten years ago, with respect to lighting.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the Governor General been obliged to pay anything on that account?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, this is just an allowance made to him for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. If it costs more he pays it himself?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I hope the Governor General will not do as one of our Governors

General did before—go away and leave us with a lot of debts to pay.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no danger.

Dominion buildings—heating, $125,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. The minister must have had some criterion upon which he based this increase of $35,000—something more than a guess.

Mr. PUGSLEY. None of these things are guess work.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would ask him to name the buildings with respect to which this increase has been caused.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The actual expenditure to the 15th December, 1908, was $79,500. Then, there are accounts for coal not paid, $36,000 and contingencies, $9,500, making a total of $125,000. This estimate has been made up by the chief architect. The coal is all purchased by public tender, and we get it at the lowest price possible. Experience has demonstrated, with the new buildings which have been erected, and quite a number of new buildings have been erected during the last year or so, that it will cost $125,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. That explanation is not satisfactory to me. The new buildings which have been erected and which have caused this increase in the cost of heating, I suppose have been fitted up and supplied with furniture as well?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume so.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would ask the minister how it is that he asks for the same amount this year for fitting and supplies, $80,000, and the same amount for furniture, although he asks for 50 per cent more for heating the same buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The buildings are all fitted up out of special votes and this amount is for additional fittings, what may be called maintenance, being additional fittings and supplies after the buildings have been put up. These estimates are based upon experience. The chief architect applies for a certain amount each year. Frequently a supplementary vote has been taken. It may be that a supplementary vote will be necessary this year in addition to the $80,000 voted last year. The experience of the chief architect is that during the coming year he will require $125,000.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Take a concrete case. You have in your estimates a certain amount for building a post office in Owen Sound. Is there anything included in that estimate for fittings and furniture?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, fittings and furniture will be included in a special vote.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I think not. I am told by the contractors that it is not so.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not in their contract, but it is included in the special vote for the building.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Can the minister give me a satisfactory reason why the heating of these buildings should be increased fifty per cent. upon one year's increase in the number of buildings?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend did not hear the statement I made. My deputy informs me that there will be for this year an amount asked for in the Supplementary Estimates beyond that $90,000 voted last year. The chief architect has made up this estimate of $125,000 in the hope that that will cover the total expenditure during the coming year ending March 31, 1910.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. This $125,000 covers the supplementary estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, it has been found that $90,000 is not sufficient for this year.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister himself gave us items of expenditure for this year amounting to $125,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to say that he was over-spending his vote a great deal.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the vote is overspent and we will have to ask in the Supplementary Estimates this year for probably $35,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. I noticed that the minister, in answer to a question, stated that they were paying $42,000 rent for what is known as the Canadian building in the city of Ottawa, and in addition to that they are paying for the heating and the service of the elevator, making about $50,000 a year for the rent of the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, $42,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there is heating, taxes and so on. It costs about $50,000 for the rental of this building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, about that. That includes elevator attendance.

Mr. J. D. REID. Well, take $42,000. The owner of this building receives $42,000 as a revenue and has nothing to pay out of it.

Mr. SPROULE. No taxes?

Mr. J. D. REID. No, the taxes are paid by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I say.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is straight rent. I do not believe that the building would cost an awful lot more than two or three times—

Mr. PUGSLEY. What would you call an 'awful lot'?

Mr. J. D. REID. I estimate it in this way. Let us see what the property is assessed for. The assessors are sworn to assess these properties for what they are worth. I understand that property in Ottawa is assessed for its full value.

Mr. PUGSLEY. About two-thirds of its value I think.

Mr. J. D. REID. This property is assessed at $118,000 so that at the minister's own estimate it would be worth $150,000, and $42,000 a year is an enormous rent. I think property owners in Ottawa are generally satisfied to get a rental of from 10 to 12 per cent of the value. How did the minister come to pay such a rental for this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The lease was entered into before I became minister.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the term of the lease?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Five years, renewable at the option of the government.

Mr. BOYCE. When was it entered into?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Three or four years ago? The rental does seem high when you look at the total sum, but a fair way to determine its reasonableness is to remember that for this building you pay 56·14 cents per superficial foot and for the Trafalgar building which is owned by a private individual, 78·08 cents per cubic foot. It is true that for the Imperial building we pay 34·07 cents per superficial foot, for the building occupied by the Interior Department 30·06 cents per superficial foot, for the Seybold building 45·43 cents per superficial foot, but for the Corry building we pay 98 cents per superficial foot.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have not the least doubt that the minister will find, if he inquires, that the rental of similar buildings on the same street is much less than he is paying. If I rent an office down town I may pay 56 cents per square foot on the exact number of feet in the room, but when this building was rented to the government they measured the halls, the elevator shaft, and everything else around the building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. J. D. REID. It has been reported to me and the proof is that judging by the size of the building I do not believe you could figure out such a rental unless they measured the hall.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And the roof.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes, and the cellar as well.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has the unhappy faculty of assuming things to exist which do not exist in fact. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in saying that the corridors were included in estimating the area. We have the most correct measurement of every room in the building. If my hon. friend will inquire from any real estate man he will be told that 56 cents per square foot is a reasonable rent and very much less than is charged for other buildings. The building is equipped with elevators and modern conveniences and is fire proof, which is a very important consideration. I have it from the deputy minister whose duty it is when it is proposed to rent a building to inquire carefully into the rental value of other buildings, that the owners of the 'Citizen' building on Spark street get $1 per square foot from their tenants.

Mr. SPROULE. Look at the difference of the value of land on Sparks street as compared with its value on the street where this building is.

Mr. PUGSLEY. But look at the fact that nearly 100 per cent more is charged for space in the 'Citizen' building than this building on Slater street, and I am inclined to think that for office purposes Slater street is pretty nearly as good as Sparks street although of course it would not be as good for stores.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the taxes on this building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $2,943.61.

Dominion buildings—lighting, $125,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you over expending that vote this year and to what extent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The actual expenditure for the present year to December 15 is $87,500, and to complete the fiscal year we estimate that it will take $35,000, making $122,500, with contingencies of $2,500, so that the actual experience of the present year is that it will take nearly $125,000. In the Supplementary Estimates of the current year we shall have to ask for $30,000 to cover the expenditure, and we are asking for the same amount for next year in the hope of avoiding any supplementary estimate.

Mr. MEIGHEN. In regard to the buildings which are said to rent at one dollar per superficial foot, and so on, are they rented on the basis of the tenant paying for the heating, lighting, general fittings, furniture, and so on?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For that one dollar per foot the landlord does the heating and lighting.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Did not the government put in the elevators in this Canadian building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they were put in by the owner.

Dominion buildings—power for running elevators, stamp cancelling machines, &c., $12,000.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is this power for all the public buildings in Canada?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All except Ottawa.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. What are these stamp cancelling machines?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They are used in the post office.

Dominion buildings—rents, &c., $200,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This item includes rents not only in Ottawa, but throughout the Dominion. It happens that in a number of towns where there is no public building, and which have arrived at the stage in their population and importance to make it desirable to have a post office, we rent a portion of a building and have it equipped as a post office.

Mr. GOODEVE. In regard to this question of rents, while at first sight the manner in which they are calculated, according to the area of superficial feet, seems to be eminently fair, yet when we consider the comparisons suggested by the minister himself, we see how utterly unfair it is. In the one case we rent the room in the 'Citizen' building, and have it heated and lighted, and have elevator service. In the other case I understand the government rent the entire building, and supply every service—heat, light and elevator—besides paying the taxes; and the ground value of the land is very much less. So that in every particular the comparison which the minister has advanced is eminently unfair. The only way in which you can get at a fair basis for rental is the one suggested by the minister himself, that all that a landlord can expect is a reasonable interest on the money invested, and the only way in which you can get at that is by ascertaining the assessed value of the building. In this case it is stated to be $118,000, on which a rental of $42,000 per annum is certainly a very high interest.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend says that in order to institute a correct comparison we have to remember that the building on Sparks street, for which one dollar a foot is charged, heating and lighting are included. In order to make the comparison absolutely fair, I have added the taxes, heating, lighting and elevator attendance in the case of the Canadian building, and I find that it all amounts to only 71·36 cents per square foot, which is about 30 cents per square foot less than is charged for the 'Citizen' building on Sparks street.

Mr. GOODEVE. If the minister wants to make a fair comparison, let him take the value of the land in the two cases, and he will find that on Sparks street it will be 10 or 15 times what it is on the back street on which the other building is situated. The land value which is very important was left out of the calculation. I understood that the buildings occupied by the government were actually altered and fitted up by it and all repairs and expenses of every kind are borne by the government; while in the 'Citizen' building or any other building the tenants would get rooms suitable for their purposes complete, and all these expenses would be borne by the landlord.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the minister any of the leases of the Ottawa properties with him?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, but I will undertake to bring them.

Mr. BLAIN. Were the bills for taxes presented in 1906 and 1907 paid without protest or was the matter referred to the Justice Department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The question was carefully considered, but it was not referred to the Justice Department. It seemed to be so eminently just that the taxes should be paid to the city that it was not deemed necessary to refer the question to the Justice Department.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the minister be willing to submit some of these leases to the Justice Department?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no present thought of doing so and I am not impressed with the desirability of doing so.

Mr. BLAIN. Then money is so plentiful that when large bills like this are presented the minister says: Pay them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister did not say that. If he authorized the payment of the bill it was because he thought it so just and fair.

Mr. BLAIN. In a province where the law provides in the absence of a provision in the lease, that the taxes must be paid by the landlord, I think the minister failed in his duty in not submitting the lease to the Justice Department for their consideration. In some of these cases the rents will pay for the buildings in four years. The owners are friends of the government. I shall take an opportunity of moving a resolution in order that we may have a discussion on this matter.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to having it discussed at any time. Are the leases made subsequent to 1906 in Ottawa also required?

Mr. BLAIN. I am not particular.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall be glad to produce them all.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have no objection to letting items go through if they are half right or half decent. We have here an item of $200,000 for rents in Ottawa. I have no hesitation in saying that in paying $42,000 for that building on Slater street, the people of Canada are being publicly robbed of a certain amount of money to put into the pockets of the owners of the property. I would ask to have the item stand until we have the leases and have an opportunity of discussing it. I would not be doing my duty to my constituents or to the country if I let the item go through, feeling in the bottom of my heart that there is public robbery going on. I do not believe the minister conscientiously believes this is a fair or square deal in the interest of the people, and I ask him to let the item stand until we have an opportunity of seeing intelligently what we are voting on.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no objection to having it stand. The hon. member is in error in thinking I am of the opinion that there is something wrong. I made inquiry and my conclusion was that the minister was getting an excellent property at an amount considerably below the ordinary rent in Ottawa, some 30 cents a square foot less than what most landlords get.

Dominion public buildings—salaries of engineers, firemen, caretakers, &c., $208,000.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase there of $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, due to the employment of additional men and to increases in salary.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that item being overspent this year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not very much.

Mr. MARSHALL. How many engineers are employed?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can get that information, but have not it before me now.

Mr. BARR. What is the reason of the increase?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend (Mr. Barr) knows there are a number of new buildings put up every year making more employees necessary. Also there has been a pretty general demand for increases in salary, and where you make even small increases of $50 or $75, they amount to a considerable sum.

Dominion buildings—water, $22,000.

Mr. STANFIELD. I presume that this is water for the boilers?

Mr. PUGSLEY. And for general supply

Mr. STANFIELD. In the item for heating you allow an increase of over one-third. Burning that much more coal, you will need more water, yet there is no increase in this vote.

Mr. J. D. REID.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to get along with this much.

Dominion cattle quarantine stations—renewals, repairs, &c., $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the vote of last year spent?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be spent by the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. HERRON. Is the government still keeping up the quarantine stations on the boundary of Manitoba and Alberta?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot give that information. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) is not here, but perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) will ask that question when some item of the Department of Agriculture is under discussion.

Yukon public buildings — rents, repairs, fuel, light, water services and caretakers' salaries, &c., $80,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. In the Auditor General's Report there are a number of items of charge for the commissioners residence which seem strange. I suppose the commissioner furnishes his own residence?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is furnished by the government.

Mr. J. D. REID. I see there is a charge for a sewing machine. Is that supplied by the government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps that would be for hemming the curtains.

Mr. J. D. REID. Telephone service costs $240.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is where telephones cost money.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is silver tea service—is the government supposed to furnish that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the government furnishes the building; it belongs to the government and is available for the commissioner.

Mr. J. D. REID. Can the minister tell me where, in the Auditor General's Report, I will find the figures showing what the water services under this item cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have them here: Charges for water and ice; government house $500, Post office, $240; court house, $200.

Mr. SPROULE. Do rents not come down in the Yukon? There has been a great decrease in the population in the last five or six years, and one would think that living would be cheaper, yet we appear to pay the same or an increasing amount.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Very little of this is paid for rent—I think the only item is $450. The total expenditure under this item up to November 26 last was $78,065.

Mr. SPROULE. You are going to have an over expenditure there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Last year we had a vote of $85,000, so there will be still about $8,000. We may get through with that.

Mr. BLAIN. The Yukon is a portion of Canada where the revenue and population are decreasing, but the government expenditure there does not seem to decrease. Has the minister thought of applying his rule of economy to that territory?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As long as we keep up the administration of the Yukon these expenditures must be incurred. We cannot avoid such expenditures as those connected with the administration building, the government house and the court house. This includes also the salaries of various officers of the government at several mining recorders' offices. I agree that it is desirable to keep down the expenditures as much as possible in view of the fact that there has been a falling off in population. But I am inclined to think that the falling off is in the floating population, and that there is a permanent population in the Yukon which will continue, and probably increase.

Mr. SPROULE. What is about the permanent population ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand in Dawson city there are 5,000 or 6,000, and in the Yukon altogether about 15,000 people. I understand that a wealthy company have been spending several millions of money in installing an up-to-date hydraulic mining plant, they have built a good many miles of canal system, and are going into mining on an extensive scale. That is in addition to the ordinary placer mining.

Mr. J. D. REID. Before we take up another item, I would ask the minister to instruct his deputy to send us over, or leave with the clerk of public accounts, copies of those leases for that Canadian building. Would he leave them with the clerk of the Public Accounts Committee ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think we can hardly get them copied in time, but I will send a clerk with the originals, and give my hon. friend time to examine them.

Mr. STANFIELD. Would the hon. minister allow me to say a word or two on harbours and rivers in Nova Scotia—as I have to go away ?

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $279,310.

Mr. STANFIELD. Some three years ago an item was put in the estimates for a wharf at Tatamagouche bay. During the by-election of 1907 there were $533 spent on this wharf. Last year another $1,000 was added to the appropriation to continue this wharf. I may say that last summer I got a letter from the engineer of the Public Works Department at Halifax asking me to recommend a foreman to take charge of this expenditure of $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Did the hon. gentleman faint away when he got the request ?

Mr. STANFIELD. I recommended a man whom I thought was an honest man, and after I had sent the letter of recommendation I got a reply stating that I did not have the recommending power, but that belonged to another gentleman. A few days ago I asked some questions in the House with regard to this wharf. I asked for what purpose this money was expended, and received the answer that it was in order that the inhabitants might get on to this island for fishing purposes. I also asked what the depth of water was at high and low tide, and I was informed that at low tide there was no water, and at high tide there was five feet. Now I am glad the minister has left this item out, because it was a waste of money, and there has been a lot of money wasted in Nova Scotia. We want money spent down there on works that are useful rather than merely ornamental. I will send the minister a photograph of this beautiful wharf.

Harbours and rivers, New Brunswick—Beaver Harbour wharf, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This consists of a revote of $5,000 and a new vote of $5,000 for the purpose of proceeding with the construction of a wharf at Beaver harbour in the county of Charlotte. This is a place of a good deal of importance and a wharf is very much needed. Its construction has been pressed for a number of years. It has now been undertaken and is under contract.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the contract price?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $8,808.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this complete it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is expected this will complete it.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the wharf that was partly washed away or was put in the wrong place?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a provincial wharf which was partly washed away.

Mr. SPROULE. How did you spend all the money which was voted last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is all a revote.

Mr. SPROULE. Then you have not spent anything?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet.

Mr. SPROULE. But it was badly needed for several years?

Mr. CROCKET. When was the contract made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The order in council was passed a short time ago and the contract must have been let within a week or ten days.

Mr. CROCKET. Was this one of the wharfs that the minister promised to the electors in the campaign?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a vote passed for this wharf last session. Parliament promised this last session.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any revenue from this wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There will not be until it is built.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister anticipate any revenue from this wharf after it is constructed and, if so, how much per annum?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe that this is a place of a good deal of importance. There are quite large industries there; among others, I think there is a large canning industry and I think that the steamer running between St. John and Charlotte county points call there. What the revenue will be it is quite impossible for me to tell. I am sure that no one will say that the construction of the wharf is not thoroughly justified upon public grounds.

Mr. BLAIN. The minister does expect some revenue?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, when these wharfs are passed over to the Marine and Fisheries Department wharfingers are appointed and wharfage dues are collected.

Buctouche—channel through beach, $2,500.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister explain what this channel is for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for the purpose of improving the harbour at Buctouche. There has been a large deposit of silt blocking the entrance to the harbour and this is to excavate a channel through the bar.

Mr. CROCKET. How much was expended last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $2,873.

Mr. CROCKET. Was that done by day labour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this a dredging work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a work done by an ordinary dredge but excavation work done by the day, using scrapers and shovels.

Mr. DANIEL. This is a channel through which water would pass so as to enable vessels to go in and out?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Why is it not done with an ordinary dredge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because it is work which can be done by scrapers and horses at low tide.

Mr. DANIEL. What is the rise and fall of the tide?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know, but I suppose it will be ten or twelve feet, will it not?

Mr. DANIEL. It would not be more than about six feet, I should think, up there.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to give a depth of three feet at low tide. If there is a tide of six feet it would give a depth of nine feet at high tide.

Mr. SPROULE. If you have a depth of three feet at low tide how can you do it without a dredge?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They can do it with scrapers very well.

Mr. CROCKET. I notice in the Auditor General's Report there is an account of an expenditure of $3,500 for the last fiscal year under the head of 'Buctouche, N.B., Channel Through Beach.' I observe an item of 'legal services, R. A. Irving, Buctouche, $122.10.' Would the minister explain what that was for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to do so; I have not the memorandum here.

Mr. CROCKET. I notice there is a purchase of a site for $500. I would like to know whether this is in connection with the searching of the title. It seems a pretty good bill for a small property like that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will have that looked into.

Mr. CROCKET. I notice also that the barrister's father seems to have done pretty well in connection with this item. J. D. Irving, for the use of an engine for 37½ days receives $8 per day and for the use of a scow for 40½ days receives $2 a day which with other items make $852.11.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I suppose that would be for a digger which would be operated by a steam winch.

Mr. CROCKET. Also I see that this barrister has been supplying stone as well as legal services for which he received $2.25 per cubic yard, amounting to $225. This appears to be a profitable undertaking for the Irvings.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That would depend on whether they were paid more than reasonable prices.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister know that they were reasonable?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I shall presume that they were in the absence of evidence to the contrary.

Campbellton deep-water wharf—extension, repairs, &c., $25,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this expected to complete this wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am unable to say whether this will complete as the chief engineer is unwell to-night and not able to be here.

Mr. DANIEL. We should know how much has been expended and how much it will take to complete.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total expenditure at Campbellton to the 31st of March, was $150,514. The dredging cost $31,597 in addition, or a total of $182,139. The wharf is an extension 300 feet long and 45 feet wide; the dredging was required to give a depth of 25 feet at low water. It is crib work and done by contract.

Cape Bald breakwater, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a new work which is very much needed.

Mr. CROCKET. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is estimated at about $32,000.

Mr. BLAIN. In what county is Cape Bald?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Westmoreland.

Cape Tormentine breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. DANIEL. How much will this work cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The teredo worm causes great damage there and almost immediately after the brakewater was built, a number of years ago, repairs were found necessary from year to year. We are now using creosote timber.

Cummings Cove, Deer island, wharf, $23,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Will this complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. It is new work; it will be done by public tender.

Dover—wharfs on Petitcodiac river, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost of this work will be $5,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the government build wharfs on the Petitcodiac river and pay the total cost of them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Then why is it that on the St. John river the government contributes only half the cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have undertaken the building of a number of additional wharfs on the St. John river solely at the expense of the government. The arrangement referred to by my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) was entered into when the Hon. Mr. Foster was Minister of Finance, and I do not know what reason there was for it.

Mr. CROCKET. It has been carried on for twelve years by your government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, except that we have extended quite largely the work which is done altogether at the expense of this government. In the estimates of this year there is an amount of $20,000, which has never appeared before, for the purpose of building wharfs on the St. John river at the entire cost of the federal government.

Harvey bank—wharf, cribwork, $4,500.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this a new wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes; it is to rebuild the old wharf. This is the total cost.

Heron island—wharf, $3,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this new?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, it is to extend the wharf built by the provincial government.

Mr. CROCKET. What county is it in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Restigouche. The estimated cost is $4,000.

Kouchibougouac harbour improvements, $3,700.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Lameque wharf—improvements, $2,500.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will complete the improvements.

Leonardsville, Deer island — reconstruction of wharf, $14,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to provide for the reconstruction of an extension of a wharf formerly built by the provincial government.

Mr. DANIELS. Will this finish the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Lorneville breakwater—wharf, $29,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will complete the work.

Mill's Point wharf, $3,800.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will complete the payments.

Mr. CROCKET. What will the total be?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,800.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there a contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. The contractor was Mr. Fawcett, who was the lowest tenderer.

Moncton wharf—enlargement, $16,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that the whole cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may take a little more to finish it, but not very much more.

Mr. DANIEL. There was nothing done on that last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There was a commencement made by the contractor, but difficulties have arisen, and we shall have to ask for new tenders under a somewhat changed plan.

Mr. CROCKET. Was the old wharf built by this government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, by the Railway Department. It is a railway wharf.

Mr. DANIEL. When were these tenders called for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Last May or June.

Mr. CROCKET. In this connection I would like to remind the minister of a promise he made to some of the business men of Fredericton in regard to wharf accommodation there. I think that on the eve of the election he sent a telegram to a number of merchants in that city saying that he would do something toward the building of wharfs at Fredericton ; but I see that there is nothing for that purpose in the estimates. I would like to ask the minister why he is not carrying out that promise?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My attention was called to the desirability of assisting the city of Fredericton in giving wharf accommodation, and my hon. friend is quite right that I stated that I would recommend to my colleagues the taking of their request into favourable consideration. There is nothing in the estimates of this year, because that will be an entirely new work, and in accordance with our policy, we have postponed the construction of this wharf at Frederiction, as we have many other public works throughout Canada.

Mr. CROCKET. The minister, having said that he would take it into his favourable consideration, I suppose kept it in his favourable consideration until the 26th of October.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not changed my mind about it.

Mr. CROCKET. My we expect that this promise which the minister gave to the people of Fredericton will be carried out next year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend will look at my promise, and bear in mind what I said with regard to other public works, he will find that in due course my promise will be carried out.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the hon. gentleman in harmony with the government in that policy not to spend anything on new works in the coming year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Of course, every member of the government is in harmony with the government in that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does that comport with the promise he made to the people down there that he would recommend the expenditure to his colleagues?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I never said that it would be done this year.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman left the people with the impression that he was going back to recommend this expenditure to his colleagues; then he comes here and says that his policy is not to do it. He is not in harmony with himself.

Mr. BLAIN. Are we to understand that the hon. gentleman sent a telegram during the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I sent either a telegram or a letter, and, whatever it was, I have no objection to it being produced, and I may say that I have no doubt that it was read at the council meeting in the very terms in which it was sent, without any alteration.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend says it was read at a public meeting during the heat of the election?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know that it was. It was not sent for that purpose. It was sent in response to a request from the mayor of Fredericton. I received a letter from the mayor, and I wrote a letter in reply; I do not think I sent any telegram. My letter stated my views, and those views I am prepared to stand by irrespective of what representative is sent by the county of York to this parliament.

Mr. BLAIN. My hon. friend will bring down the letter or telegram, I suppose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If it is moved for, I will.

Mr. CROCKET. I understood the minister to state in his letter that he would recommend this appropriation to his colleagues. I would like to know if he has done that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon friend will produce the letter he will see what I stated.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. minister said to-night that he had stated that he would recommend this appropriation to his colleagues, and I would like him to say whether he has done that.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I stated that every new work for which tenders had not been called was postponed. That remark applies to a great many public works for which appropriations were made by parliament last session. My hon. friend can surely understand that having postponed these works, I would not think of asking my colleagues this session to provide for works for which parliament had not already made appropriations and in respect of which nothing had been done.

North Head, Grand Manan—breakwater wharf, $7,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to continue that work.

Mr. CROCKET. How much will it cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A lot of the wharf was washed away in the great storm; it is expected to cost $46,000.

Pink Rock, wharf, Shepody bay—extension, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is to complete the extension. A contract will be let.

Pointe du Chêne—repairs to breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these repairs required on account of the teredo?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not to the same extent as at Cape Tormentine, but we are using creosoted timber to avoid the teredo.

Mr. DANIEL. It would seem to be a waste of money to build a wooden breakwater if it is to be destroyed by the teredo.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Cape Tormentine breakwater was built a good many years ago, I think under the previous government, and we have to take it as we find it; it is the same with Point du Chêne.

Mr. DANIEL. Is creosoted timber an entire success in that respect?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Pretty nearly a thorough success.

Quaco harbour—part reconstruction and extension of east pier, $35,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the amount of the contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $32,900. The contractor is Mr. Charleson, of Ottawa. A part of the existing wharf was carried away and that will cost $2,000 to replace.

Richibucto Cape—breakwater wharf, $10,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this new?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Have tenders been called for or a contract let?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not yet. Some work has been done, we procured timber and began the work and have spent about $3,500 by day's labour.

Richibucto wharf, $3,000.

Mr. CROCKET. How much of last year's vote of $9,000 was expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The whole of it will be expended. This is to repair a wharf bought from the municipality and another wharf which we bought.

Mr. CROCKET. How much did you pay the municipality?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We paid $5,000 for one and $1,500 for the other.

Mr. CROCKET. To whom was the $5,000 paid?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think to Mr. Murray.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that the manager of the Kent Northern Railway?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Mr. CROCKET. And the government paid him $5,000 for a site for a wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For the wharf itself; it is an old wharf.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the department have a valuation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, by the resident engineer. His valuation was that the property had cost about $15,000. He said it was cheap at $5,000. He also consulted a prominent firm, Messrs. A. & R. Loggie, who informed him it was fair value.

Mr. CROCKET. How long did Murray hold the title?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not many months.

Mr. CROCKET. From whom did he buy?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From Mr. O'Leary.

Mr. CROCKET. For how much?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,000.

Mr. CROCKET. And the government paid $5,000 to Murray for a property that he bought in order to sell to the government at $1,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know that, the hon. gentleman is putting in something that is not so.

Mr. CROCKET. But the minister knows that Mr. Murray bought the property during that season to sell to the government.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have learned recently that he bought the property.

Mr. CROCKET. And the department paid $5,000 for that wharf just as Mr. Murray had bought it from Mr. O'Leary.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know as to that.

Mr. CROCKET. The department paid $5,000 for it ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, on the representation of the engineer, Mr. Geoffrey Stead. It appears that it is a property of 500 feet frontage and considerable depth. Mr. Stead reported that it would cost $15,000 or $16,000 and was good value for $5,000. He did not report what Mr. Murray had paid for it. The department had no knowledge of what he paid. When it was brought to my notice what he had paid, I wrote to the engineer pretty sharply and ascertained the information on which he had reported as to the value of the property. He reported that the parties had wanted $10,000, which he thought too much, but, on going fully into the matter, he was confident that it was good value for $5,000, and so recommended the purchase.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister know that this very property was offered to the department for $1,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I know to the contrary. I have had a search made and find no record of any such offer.

Mr. CROCKET. To an officer of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not aware as to that. I am aware that Mr. O'Leary made the statement that he had offered it, not to an official of the department who had anything to do with wharf construction, not to the resident engineer, but to another official of the department who did not communicate with the department at Ottawa.

Mr. CROCKET. The gentleman to whom he says he made the offer is still in the employ of the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. But having nothing to do with wharfs.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the minister communicated with this gentleman, Mr. Waterbury ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. Did the minister communicate with Mr. Murray in regard to the matter ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. Are properties of this kind purchased by officers of the department without consultation with the minister ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not customary, certainly.

Mr. CROCKET. Was the minister not consulted in this matter ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The minister was consulted by the officials of his department.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister say he was not consulted by Mr. Murray ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no knowledge of being consulted by Mr. Murray.

Mr. CROCKET. I would like to have the minister's own idea of the price paid for that property—does he think it was excessive ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A few months ago my attention was called to the fact that the property had been purchased from Mr. Murray at a less sum than the government had paid, the sum mentioned being $1,000. I at once wired to my deputy to delay the completion of purchase until I had had an opportunity to make further inquiries. I received a telegram that the purchase had been completed through the Justice Department and the title had passed. I at once wrote to the resident engineer, Mr. Stead, calling his attention to what I had heard, and asking him to give me full particulars of the facts on which he relied in giving an estimate of the value. I also called his attention to the fact that the department had not been informed of the previous transfer and gave him direction that, in the future, I wanted him clearly to understand that whenever a property was purchased the department must be informed of all previous transfers in recent years so that we could form a judgment as to the value, and also any other facts that might assist the department in arriving at a full judgment. The engineer wrote me very fully and very frankly. He said he had heard that, some months before, the property had been purchased at $1,000. He regarded that as an absolutely ridiculous price for the property. He made inquiry and was led to believe that the previous owner had parted with it because he had no use for it, having other property. He also wrote that he had made inquiries of Messrs. A. and R. Loggie, who are among the most reputable business men in the lower provinces, or in all Canada, and they had instructed him that if they owned the property they would not think of parting with it for $5,000. He also reported that he had examined the property and the material in the wharf must have cost at least $15,000.

Mr. CROCKET. It was all sawdust.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He says not. He says there is ballast of stone and gravel and probably a million cubic feet of cribwork, not new, of course, but a million feet must have cost a considerable sum. He said he could not get the property for less than he had, and that, in his opinion, the valuation was not a high valuation, but a low one.

Mr. CROCKET. Had the minister received any representation that this wharf was necessary ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. From whom ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. From different people there.

Mr. CROCKET. Was there any public body in the county which made representations to the department ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot state as to that now. I know that we were urged to get additional wharf accommodation there. It appears that the Kent Northern Railway goes to the water, and there was no public wharf there, and the accommodation was very limited. There is no doubt we have a very valuable property and one that it was necessary we should have. In connection with the railway, it will be a great advantage to Richibucto.

Mr. CROCKET. How much is it intended to spend ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $3,000 at present.

River St. John — including tributaries, $6,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the minister state what he intends to do with this vote ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a vote for blasting rocks, building wing dams and otherwise facilitating navigation of the river. I am inclined to think that we will expend a sum of money this year in improving Grand Falls. There are difficulties in the way of navigation so far as floating lumber is concerned. I think a few thousand dollars could be expended there with great advantage—right at the falls and a little above.

River St. John and tributaries—construction of wharfs in tidal waters, $20,000.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like the minister to state where he is going to build these wharfs.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not state exactly, but we have applications for quite a number of wharfs, both in the counties of Queens and Sunbury, and some in the county of Kings. There is one at Oromocto, another at Scotchtown, and another I think at Burton. There are quite a number which are urgently required in the public interest. I will get a list later if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister stated some time ago that many public works had been proposed but had to be abandoned, but he did not intend to abandon those which came under one of three categories, and one of those categories was cases where tenders had been called for. Now, I wish to remind the minister that tenders were called for no less than nine wharfs in the county of Queens and Sunbury. I have here a clipping from the 'Daily Telegraph' of St. John, dated October 13, 1908, which reads thus:

Nine new wharfs in Queens and Sunbury—On representation of Colonel McLean, Minister of Public Works calls for tenders—List of places where wharfs will be built.

The Department of Public Works, Ottawa, as will be seen by reference to another column, are calling for tenders for nine new wharfs in Queens-Sunbury. These will prove of great benefit to the residents of the localities and have been procured—

They had already been procured.

—through the representations of Colonel H. H. McLean, the Liberal candidate in Queens-Sunbury, to Hon. Mr. Pugsley, Minister of Public Works.

This was dated 13th October, little less than a fortnight before the elections.

The places where the new wharfs will be located are as follows:—

The Range, Parish of Waterborough, Queens county, N.B.

Burton, Parish of Burton, Sunbury county, N.B.

Newcastle, Parish of Canning, Queens county, N.B.

Barker's, Parish of Sheffield, Sunbury county, N.B.

McAllisters, Parish of Chipman, Queens county, N.B.

Young's Cove, Parish of Waterborough, Queens county, N.B.

Ironbound Cove, Parish of Chipman, Queens county, N.B.

Scotchtown, Parish of Canning, Queens county, N.B.

Lower Jemseg, Parish of Cambridge, Queens county, N.B.

Tenders for these wharfs will close on November 12.

As tenders had been called for in respect to all these wharfs, I think they should be included in the estimates of work to be done this year. I have here a copy of the advertisement:

Tenders for wharfs on St. John river and Grand Lake, N.B.

Then it gives the nine places I have just read. That advertisement is signed by 'Nap. Tessier, Secretary.'

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does my hon. friend say that he approves of my going ahead with these wharfs ?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly, I do.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Well, I intend to do so.

Mr. DANIEL. Then why are they not included in the estimates ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have got a vote of $20,000, $5,000 more than last year.

Mr. DANIEL. Will that build nine wharfs?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It should.

Mr. DANIEL. Is my hon. friend the member for Sunbury and Queens (Mr. H. H. McLean) satisfied with that?

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. $20,000 is pretty good.

Mr. DANIEL. I am speaking on behalf of the people of Queens and Sunbury, who, I was afraid, had been deluded by these promises made previous to the election. I call the attention of the minister to the fact that these promises have been made, and naturally the people expect him to carry them out.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. I am delighted that my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) is giving me his assistance in obtaining these necessary public works. I am also highly pleased to hear him state this evening that he thoroughly approves of the policy adopted by the Minister of Public Works in erecting these wharfs, because I understand he joins with me in believing that these wharfs are absolutely necessary for the proper navigation of the River St. John. But I want to remind my hon. friend that he has changed his opinion this session from the opinion he held last session. I want to remind him that when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stated on the floor of this House that it was a vicious principle to erect at the public expense wharfs in rivers or lakes, and that the public money should only be expended on wharfs in harbours or on the sea coast, my hon. friend heard that statement and he did not dispute it.

Mr. DANIEL. I never heard the hon. member for North Toronto make any such statement, either in this House or out of it.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. I have an extract to prove what I say, and if my hon. friend wishes I will give it to him, because I used that extract in speeches in the county of Queens and Sunbury and I used it on nomination day. The statement cannot possibly be denied. As regards the statement made by my hon. friend that he was not present when the hon. member for North Toronto made that statement——

Mr. CROSBY. Mr. Chairman, is this in order? Are we here for the purpose of doing business?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman rises to a point of order I must, of course, ascertain what it is.

Mr. CROSBY. The point of order is that the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens is not discussing the question under consideration. Surely you know that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens is in order and may continue his speech.

Mr. CROSBY. I only want the ruling of the chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CROSBY. I will wait until he gives it so that we will know what he wants.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not comment on the ruling of the Chair. He must withdraw such observations.

Mr. CROSBY. I simply say that if that is your ruling we will know it in future.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. gentleman to go farther than that. If he does not, his remark is not out of order.

Mr. H. H. McLEAN. I was only endeavouring to answer the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Daniel). I am glad to know that he thoroughly approves of the principle laid down by this government and that is that every necessary public work, every necessary wharf in tidal waters and in navigable waters, will be constructed at the expense of the government of Canada. I was also delighted to know that this principle meets with his approval and, of course, meets with the approval of all hon. gentlemen of the opposition. I want also to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that this principle has been opposed in this House by hon. gentlemen on the opposition side. It has been opposed by the hon. member for North Toronto and by other speakers on his side. I also desire to say that we give credit to the Minister of Public Works for inaugurating that principle and carrying it forward.

Mr. DANIEL. I am very pleased to hear the remarks of my hon. friend. Although he was a little inexact in some of his statements I quite exonerate him from any intention of being wilfully inexact. But I would like him and the members of this House to understand that in so far as I am concerned I am entirely in accord with any government that provides proper means for transportation and the carrying on of the business of this country whether it is on the sea coast or on the inland lakes and rivers. I never lifted my voice against the expenditure of money for any such laudable purpose and I do not propose to. I shall not do so for one reason, that, in the city, that I come from, we are looking for some expenditure for purposes connected with the great transportation interests of this country. I would not feel like advocating expenditures for that purpose in my own constituency if I were not willing to advocate them in the constituencies of other hon. gentlemen whether on this side of the House or not. While my hon. friend from Queens and Sunbury would like to have imparted a little irony or sarcasm into his remarks I do not think they apply in any degree whatever to the member for the city of St. John.

Mr. CROCKET. Has the department made an estimate of the cost of these nine wharfs in Queens and Sunbury before calling for tenders.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The department prepared plans and called for tenders which we thought would be the best guide as to what these wharfs should cost, but, when the tenders came in, with respect to several of them, we thought that the price was too high and we also thought that the plans might be simplified so as to reduce the cost very materially. My own view, based on an experience of a good many years in connection with the building of wharfs on the St. John river when I was a member of the provincial government, is that we ought to get suitable wharfs on the St. John river at a cost of from $1,200 to $3,000. We are now having new plans prepared with the view of getting a cheaper wharf, one which will answer all practical purposes just as well and we hope to get the cost of the construction of these wharfs down to from $1,200 to $3,000, according to the length of the wharf, the depth of the water and the difficulty in making the approaches to the wharfs.

Mr. CROCKET. What was the total amount of the tenders that were received?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They ranged between different amounts. Some were as high as $7,000.

Mr. CROCKET. On the plans that had been drawn?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, that had been drawn by the engineers at St. John. We thought the cost was greater than suitable wharfs should cost and we gave directions to reduce and simplify the plans.

Mr. CROCKET. After the elections were over the plans were simplified.

Mr. DANIEL. The minister did not state whether he intended to build these wharfs or not.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is the object of the vote.

Mr. DANIEL. And it is expected to build them?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Is the work to be done on all these wharfs during the present year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to be able to proceed with the work on all of them as soon as we can get the plans and have the tenders called for.

Mr. BLAIN. What county are these in?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Queens-Sunbury and King's.

Mr. BLAIN. How many wharfs are there in the county of Queens-Sunbury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon friend from the county of St. John read the list. We hope to construct all of these.

Mr. BLAIN. That will be nine in one county.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are two counties.

Mr. BLAIN. We are to understand that nine wharfs are to be constructed in one constituency represented by my hon. friend?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is right but the water stretches are very large. They take in St. John river, Grand lake and Washdemoak lake.

Mr. BLAIN. All on the recommendation of my hon. friend?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the request of the hon. gentleman on the urgent request of the people in the various localities.

Mr. BLAIN. Was the Minister of Finance consulted about these large expenditures?

Mr. FIELDING. These nine wharfs seem not to be very extravagant in their cost. I do not think that even the whole amount of the tenders represents a very extravagant expenditure. I think it is within the reasons of economy that have been laid down.

River St. John—wharfs in tide water—contribution to the local government not to exceed one-half the first cost of wharfs built by it, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you buying wharfs from the local government or what?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would like, with the consent of the committee, to strike out the words 'River St. John' because for some reason or other, the contribution to be made to the provincial government is limited to wharfs in the tidal waters of the river St. John. The provincial government have built a wharf upon a tidal river in the northern part of the province and they have urged that we should pay one half the cost of it. I do not see why the rule was limited to the St. John river. It is better for us where we can, to get the provincial government to see its duty to pay one-half the cost rather than that we should pay the whole of it. I move that the words 'River St. John' be struck out. It does not add to the liability but enables us to distribute it to other rivers.

Mr. CROCKET. It just takes that much away from the River St. John?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It may.

Mr. CROCKET. As a representative of one of the St. John river counties I object most strenuously to the proposition of the minister. Last session other representatives of these river counties as well as myself protested that these counties were not treated equitably in regard to the appropriations for wharfs. We pointed out that there were thousands and thousands of dollars spent upon the rivers in the province of Quebec—the Saugenay river was especially instanced—where this government paid the entire costs of the wharfs and that on the important river St. John the government contributed only one-half the cost. The decision of the Minister of Public Works now to interfere with that pittance is an injustice to the people of these counties. I strenuously object to the proposition of the minister which will result in reducing the appropriation for the River St. John. I have pointed out that this government has paid the whole cost of the wharfs on the Petitcodiac river, and it is certainly very strange that after his professions of generosity to-night the minister should now propose to reduce even the beggarly half-cost contributions to the construction of wharfs on the river St. John. If the minister wants to aid the construction of wharfs in other parts of the province then his proper course would be to take an extra appropriation for that purpose and not divert money that has always been applied to the St. John river. It is the duty of the government to pay the whole cost of the wharfs on tidal rivers in the province of New Brunswick as they do in all other provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The striking out of the words 'River St. John' will not in any way affect the money that would go to the St. John river. For the first time in the history of the country we have a vote of $20,000 for wharfs on that river. This is purely a question between my department and the government of the province of New Brunswick, because unless they build the wharfs we cannot contribute half the cost. The provincial government through the Chief Commissioner of Works has requested me to change the wording of this resolution and I would ask the committee to allow me to do so.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Is this in the nature of a subsidy for wharfs already built?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We pay one half the cost of the wharfs which the provincial government has built.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. How is it that when the provincial government of British Columbia applies to this government for a subsidy for works which are usually subsidized by the federal government the answer made to British Columbia is that there is constitutional objection to paying subsidies to any provincial governments; that they can only pay subsidies to private owners, but when we come to the province of New Brunswick (the minister's own province) we find that another yard stick is applied and that there the Federal government can pay subsidies to the provincial government, when there is, it is said, a constitutional obstacle to paying them to the provincial government of British Columbia. That is a matter which ought to be explained.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman has been misinformed. The Dominion government has contributed one-half the cost of works upon the Fraser and Columbia rivers when those works would not ordinarily fall to the federal government, they not being connected with navigation. But by reason of the importance of the work and the extent of the damage that otherwise would be done, this government has on more than one occasion actually contributed one-half of the cost of protection works in the constituency of my hon. friend. I have never heard this government raise the constitutional objection that it could not assist a provincial government with regard to works towards which the federal government might fairly contribute. Some fifteen years ago the Dominion government agreed to contribute one-half the cost of the wharfs on the tidal waters of the St. John river which the government of New Brunswick might build. That practice has been continued all these years and all the New Brunswick government asks now is that, instead of paying this amount to them for wharfs on the St. John river, it may be extended to other tidal rivers.

Mr. CROCKET. If the minister makes the change he proposes, does he not think he ought to increase the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The Minister of Public Works has, as usual, an ingenious answer to the question I put, but his answer does not meet the case at all. In the instances on the Fraser river to which he has referred the Dominion government did very reluctantly and after a great deal of pressure make contributions towards works which we claimed in British Columbia we were not responsible for, but to which, in our devotion to the public interest, we consented to contribute one-half in order to avoid the damage to property that would have been caused by the neglect of the federal government to do their plain duty upon the Fraser river. The federal government resisted the claim we made, and in every instance in which they helped us on the Fraser river they repudiated responsibility and stated they did so as an act of grace and not as a matter of right. Why, no later than to-day, in answer to an application I made to the Department of Public Works for the continuation of certain works which we were able to get this government to undertake on the Fraser river at Langley, the minister sent me a letter over his own signature entirely repudiating any responsibility for the work which his department had undertaken and left in an incomplete state. He stated in his letter to me that this work was a matter of provincial and not Dominion concern. When I said that he had one yard stick for British Columbia and another yard stick for New Brunswick I referred more particularly to the doctrine laid down by this government in connection with the bridge over the Fraser river at New Westminster. The answer to our application for a subsidy was that if we would hand over that bridge to a private corporation to exact toll from the people of the Fraser valley for ever. then this government would give a subsidy amounting perhaps to $300,000 for the bridge, but because it was owned by the province, and we proposed to keep it in the public ownership of the people of the province, this government had not a cent to give us. They told us that there was a constitutional objection to giving any bonus to the province except a bonus authorized by the several Acts of confederation, while now we find them giving a direct subsidy to the province of New Brunswick towards the creation of public works. I am not objecting to that subsidy, but I am objecting to one rule being applied to the provinces of eastern Canada and another rule to our disadvantage being applied to the province of British Columbia.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. In regard to the amendment proposed, I fear it might mean a change in the destination of the vote, and I am not sure of the right of the committee to make a change.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In that case I withdraw the motion.

River St. John—survey between Fredericton and Woodstock, with a view of improving navigation, $5,000.

Mr. CROCKET. There was an appropriation of $5,000 for this last year. Is that all expended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. And this is an additional $5,000 to continue the work or to pay for the work already done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To pay some balance, and to continue the work.

Mr. CROCKET. Can the minister say how much the survey of September and October last cost the country?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The expenditure to November 30, 1908, was $2,976.27. We expect that the further expenditure, I suppose for the payment of the balance, will be $2,023.63. The accounts are not all in yet. That would make a total of $5,000 expended before the close of the fiscal year. The surveys are not entirely completed, and we want to continue the work.

Mr. McALISTER. If not out of order, I would like to call attention to a statement which I understand was made on the hustings during the election campaign in regard to that survey by the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket). He said:

The Grits had had several fake surveys on land up and down the valley of the St. John; but now they were making a fool survey on water.

I would like the hon. member to state what he means by a fake or fool survey.

Mr. CROCKET. If the hon. member for Kings and Albert will consult his friend, the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell), I think he will be able to gratify his curiosity as to what was meant by the references to the 'fake survey of the land' and also to the 'fool survey of the water.' The hon. gentleman no doubt still has a recollection of the survey for the Transcontinental railway which was conducted along the banks of the St. John river during the election campaign of 1904 and of his strong denunciation of the character of that survey at the last Liberal convention at St. John. On that occasion the hon. member for Carleton declared that the survey was no survey at all, that there was not so much as even a profile of it to represent the thousands of dollars which it cost the people of the country. This is what I called and what the people of the St. John valley called 'the fake survey.' The expression seemed to sum up the views of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) in short metre. I hope my hon. friend from Kings-Albert now understands the reference. As to the fool survey of the water that was applied to the survey of the river between Fredericton and Woodstock which was made in a tow-boat during the last campaign under the management of a young man named A. E. Hanson, and which the minister has informed us will require another five thousand dollars in addition to the five thousand dollars which was voted last year to pay the bills.

Mr. McALISTER. I would like to ask the hon. member if it was not at the request of two Conservatives, Shaw and Bull, that this dredging was to be done?

Mr. CROCKET. I am not aware.

Mr. McALISTER . I am informed that the hon. gentleman is aware of that fact.

Mr. CARVELL. As I do not have any public works in my constituency, and do not ask for any, I did not suppose that I would have to take a hand in these debates about public works in New Brunswick. But as the hon. mmber for York (Mr. Crocket) seems to be somewhat excited over this matter of the survey of the River St. John, I would like to point out to him, what I have pointed out within a year in this House, that this survey of the St. John river was done at the request of a public meeting in Woodstock, attended by a number of influential people from his own constituency, including the board of trade from his own city, who came to Woodstock, and joined the board of trade of that town in passing a resolution asking me to use my influence with the government to have this survey made in order to ascertain if it would not be possible to have water communication between Woodstock and Fredericton during a longer period of the year. I brought the matter before the Minister of Public Works and his department, and they went into it; and I think it comes with poor grace from the hon. member for York to refer to this as a fake survey. No man knows better than he does that there never was a more genuine attempt made to secure a public improvement. The hon. gentleman has referred to Mr. Hansen, who was employed in the work. He would not say to Mr. Hansen's face what he has said to-night; and he would not say with regard to another gentlemen—and a good Conservative at that—Mr. Miles, who was employed on that survey, what he has said to-night; and I do not think he would say in his own constituency what he has said to-night.

Mr. CROCKET. It was the hon. member for Kings and Albert who stated that I had said it.

Mr. CARVELL. It is not very often that we bother calling the hon. gentleman down, but there are times when even the patience of a long-suffering man like myself is exhausted. My hon. friend knows the necessity of that work. He knows that if we succeeded in demonstrating to this government that we could extend the water communication down the river St. John three or four months in the year, it would be one of the greatest boons that could be conferred on that part of the province. I happen to know the nature of the report of one of the gentlemen who made this survey, and he is very hopeful that navigation to a depth of eight or nine feet can be obtained by the expenditure of a very small amount of money. I commend the Minister of Public Works for continuing this investigation, and hope he will succeed in demonstrating that by dredging the river we can have at a reasonable cost the navigation we desire. While my hon. friend from York may not wish to see anything done by this government that will gain credit for it in the eyes of the people, I can assure him that if the Liberal representatives from New Brunswick can do anything to benefit the people, we will do it, regardless of whether the hon. member from York likes it or dislikes it.

Mr. CROCKET. I believe that when this vote was proposed last year, the hon. member from Carleton made a statement somewhat similar to the statement he has made to-night in regard to the proposal of this survey being made by the boards of trade of Woodstock and Fredericton. It is quite true that these bodies were very much interested in the improvement of the navigation on the St. John river between Fredericton and Woodstock. I urged that matter several times in the House; but that was the first intimation we had that these boards of trade or any responsible people had asked of this government to make an appropriation of $5,000 or $10,000 to survey the water between Fredericton and Woodstock. I think that the members of the Fredericton Board of Trade will be very much surprised to learn it. There are eight or ten places in the river where dredging is required, and these were just as well known as the post offices along the river. I had correspondence myself with the Public Works Department, which show that they have had for years reports on the matter, sent in by Mr. Shewan, of St. John, a competent authority, these reports gave the department all the inforamtion that could possibly be attained or that was reasonably necessary for the purpose of determining what appropriations would be necessary. I do not withdraw one word of what I said with reference to the perfect foolishness of this vote. It was the subject of laughter during the election campaign wherever referred to by the people living along the river and the people in Fredericton, so much so that the gentleman in charge to whom my hon. friend has made reference, became known to his friends as the hydrographer. The money was expended, and that seems to be the only object to whom my hon. friend has made reference. If we had one or two of the bars and obstacles dredged from the channel between Fredericton and Woodstock, we would have had some benefit from the expenditure, but to pay out such a sum in such a moment, for the purpose of getting information that the department has and has had for years on the file, is certainly the height of folly.

Mr. CARVEL. The hon. gentleman has only to talk about five minutes to show his absolute ignorance of the subject under discussion. When the work started and the engineers got their instructions from the officials in St. John they were directed to do the very thing he has advocated, to take ten or twelve spots along the river and make a report. I recommend a prominent engineer and he spent a week on the work. He then said: I might as well stop the work and save money unless I am allowed to make a thorough survey and give information of some value. He said that if he surveyed the six or seven places pointed out to him they would have no knowledge of the condition of the river between these two points, would not know whether there were three feet or sixteen feet, and at his solicitation I took up the matter with the Minister of Public Works and orders were given to make a thorough survey. It is just as well that my hon. friend and the people should know this. I have seen the plans and profile of the upper 25 or 30 miles of that work and there are three or four dozen places in this 24 miles that required the survey without which the department would have no knowledge on which to come to the conclusion as to the dredging of the river. If my hon. friend would spend as much time trying to find out the facts of each case, as in reading a paper called the 'Gleaner,' published in Fredericton, which throws insulting terms at everybody employed by this government to do anything, he would know more about the subject than he has given evidence of to-night.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Has it ever occurred to my hon. friend to have a branch of the Trent Valley canal built down the St. John river?

St. Andrews wharf, $18,000.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $18,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Was any work done last year?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, the contract is just being let.

St. John harbour—improvements, repairs, renewals, $25,000.

Mr. DANIEL. What does the minister expect to do with that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The ordinary work that goes on, of repairing a breakwater and other work which might not be considered as a part of the national work. There is work at the Partridge Island pier.

Mr. DANIEL. Has this anything to do with the work of the dredge 'Fielding?'

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Seal Cove, Grand Manan island—breakwater pier, $32,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that a new work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Partly. It is to extend the breakwater, part of which was swept away in the great storm.

Shippegan harbour—improvements in Shippegan gully, $3,500.

Mr. CROCKET. There was an expenditure of $5,691 on this account last year. Among the items I see Loggie, W. S., rope, $21.89; spruce, $17; shingles, $13.75; hardware, $75.04, a total of $127.43. Is that the hon. member for Cumberland?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I would suppose that must be some mistake because W. S. Loggie is not carrying on business. There is the W. S. Loggie Co.'y, Limited.

Mr. DANIEL. Is Mr. Loggie a part of it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the company was incorporated twenty years ago.

Whitehead, Grand Manan wharf, $5,400.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think that will complete it.

Mr. CROCKET. Is there a contract or is it day's work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A contract, $4,851.

Welchpool (Campobello island) wharf, $24,000.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. This is another item that looks large to us in British Columbia who get appropriations in such small chunks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My hon. friend speaks of small chunks. Look at the improvements on the Fraser river. The hon gentleman forgets all these. The total probable cost of the wharf is $24,000. This is a very important wharf, as a large business is done at Campobello. The wharf will have a length of 314 feet, measured on the centre line, with a stone approach. It will be built of ordinary cribwork. We called for the tenders and the lowest tender has been accepted. I am satisfied, from the report of the engineer, that the price is fair and reasonable.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this work being built of creosoted timber?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. DANIEL. Why not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Because the teredo worm is not so harmful along the Bay of Fundy coast as in some other places.

Mr. DANIEL. I am confident that the minister is mistaken about that. In Eastport, Maine, the wharfs are very seriously injured by the teredo.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think that such is the case along the Charlotte coast. The hon. gentleman knows that the teredo is not injurious in the St. John harbour.

Mr. DANIEL. The fresh water running into St. John harbour makes it impossible for the teredo worm to live there, as it lives only in salt water. But in the Bay of Fundy, and around Grand Manan, I am confident the teredo is injurious. The minister seemed to think he had made such an improvement over the former government's policy by using creosoted timber, that I thought he would not use anything else in this case.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We are not building with creosoted timber around the Bay of Fundy.

I think my hon. friend is mistaken as to the destructiveness of the teredo worm there.

Mr. DANIEL. The teredo is at Eastport. and if it is there it is in the harbours of Grand Manan.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister overlooked my question. I congratulate the people of Welch Cove on this wharf. But I would like to know, for purposes of comparison, how big a place it is.

Mr. EMMERSON. The absurdity of that question would be apparent even to my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) if he knew where Welch Cove was. This harbour is on an island in the Bay of Fundy, whose only means of communication with the mainland is by vessel. The wharf will be used by many more than merely those at the place where the wharf is built. The wharf is very necessary in the public interest.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I have to thank the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) for the courtesy he has shown in addressing this lecture to me, and for the language with which he opened his polite address. But, while I appreciate his kindness, I would like to renew my question to the minister who has charge of this appropriation. I ask the question because I desire information. I could lecture the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) to more effect, perhaps than he can lecture me. But that is not the purpose of this committee. I am addressing what I believe to be a proper question to the Minister of Public Works, and I think I am entitled to the information, for purposes, as I have said, of comparison.

Mr. PUGSLEY. At Welch Pool Cove, where the wharf is built, there is a population of about 600. Campobello is a very rich island, and one to which many people resort in the summer. There are two large summer hotels. The town has a number of stores, a lobster cannery employing 25 hands, and a boneless herring cannery employing 50 hands. Besides the summer hotels, there are many summer cottages. mainly occupied by people from the cities of the United States. Five steamers call there and a number of sailing vessels make Campobello their headquarters.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. We will resume in supply, the Postmaster General presenting his estimates. If these be finished the Minister of Public Works will resume.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 26, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 79) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

Bill (No. 80) respecting the Kootenay and Arrowhead Railway Company. — Mr. Geo. Taylor.

Bill (No. 81) respecting the Manitoba and North Western Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Cash.

Bill (No. 82) respecting the Monarch Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Beattie.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MUNICIPAL RIGHTS OF MONTREAL AND 'LA PRESSE.'

Mr. L. A. A. RIVET (Hochelaga). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called, I wish to call the attention of the House, and at the same time enter my protest against an editorial published in 'La Presse,' yesterday, February 25, entitled, 'Les Surprises d'un projet de loi,' which states. partly at least, as follows:

The hon. member for St. James, Mtre Honoré Gervais, has rendered a signal service to the city, in drawing the municipal authorities' attention, before it was too late, on the Bill of the 'Canadian, Liverpool and Western Railway Company' now before parliament for sanction.

And further:

'La Presse' has more than once contended that the parliament at Ottawa had no control whatever over the streets of a city, a matter which is altogether under provincial jurisdiction. Montreal has every interest to watch the Bills which are presented either before the provincial legislature, or the federal parliament. Is that done to-day with sufficient diligency?

The city of Montreal could organize, easily and with profit, a vigilance service which is needed to-day. Special agents—most probably these would be lawyers—should reside permanently during sessions either at Ottawa or at Quebec, so that the city could be notified of any measure being presented in which she would have interests of some sort.

But this service should be conducted with the utmost regularity, as a detective agency. We submit the idea to the wisdom of our aldermen; it rests to them now to perfect it and put in operation.

As I have said in the beginning, I think it my duty to protest in my own name and in behalf of my colleagues of the metropolis, who are particularly aimed at in that editorial, against the false and unjust assertions against the hon. members of this House and of the Railway Committee.

In justice to the promoters of the proposed bill, to the members of the Railway Committee, and particularly to those who in that committee are more directly charged which the interests of the city of Montreal, I must protest against the double injustice of this article.

It is not true, as it is asserted, that the interests of Montreal have been at a particular moment in a serious and imminent danger, that if it had not been for the intervention of the hon. member for St. James, these rights and privileges would have been sacrificed. Every member of the Railway Committee knows what are his rights and duties, and I must immediately state that on the very first time that this bill came before the committee, Tuesday last, the promoters were disposed, in compliance with the request of several members, to add to their bill a clause having for object to safeguard the autonomy, not only of the city of Montreal, but of every municipality through which the company intended to construct its lines and distribute electrical energy.

It was thus entirely unnecessary and supremely unjust to say, as some Montreal papers, and especially 'La Presse,' did say, that the rights of the city of Montreal were in danger.

I protest once more in the name of the members of the committee against the false assertions of 'La Presse' and other papers in which appeared sensational articles upon this question. I will add only one word as to that part of the editorial of 'La Presse' where the creation of a vigilance service is suggested. For my part I state here that I am opposed to it. As a representative of the city of Monteral I know well enough my duties and the interests of the city of Montreal to dispense with this sort of guardianship to watch over me.

I believe that the interests of Montreal will be well guarded by the hon. members from that city whenever it will be necessary.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Post Office—Outside service—Salaries and allowance, $2,737,856.25.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). There is an increase in this item of $375.47. I shall be ready to give any details that the committee may desire, but I may explain the increase generally. In the post office inspector's division, there is an increase of $10,342.60, made up of the following:—38 increases of $50 each, $1,900; two increases of $78.25 each, $156.50· one increase of $46; one increase of $40; 11 additional clerkships. These increases are statutory increases.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the minister please state who the new appointees were with their offices and salaries?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the post office inspectors' offices, we have appointed eleven additional clerks. In the Nova Scotia division, Mr. J. H. Kennedy, junior second-class clerk was transferred from the Auditor General's office to the Halifax post office at a salary of $1,000. In the Ottawa division, Mr. L. E. Johnston, appointed fourth-class clerk at $400, transferred to the London, Ontario, division. E. Stevenson and L. Hamilton Strong, appointed fourth-class clerks at $400 a year each. In the Manitoba division. D. I. Bailey appointed fourth-class at $400. In the Calgary division. T. Humphries was transferred from the post office in Toronto at $1,000, and C. E. Duncan was transferred at $700.

Mr. FOSTER. That is, at the same salary as before?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, except that, in the west, we make a special allowance of 15 per cent. We sometimes transfer clerks from the inspectors' offices in the older provinces. because experienced officers are needed for new districts in the west. At present in the west, they have very good staffs. Sometimes, a clerk desires to be transferred from the west to an eastern office, or vice versa. This accounts for these transfers. In the Edmonton division, R. C. Ferguson, senior second-class clerk, transferred from the inside service at $1,100. C. Watson, junior second-class clerk, transferred from Toronto post office at $950. That makes $2,050 for the Edmonton division. In the Vancouver division W. F. Tracey, senior third-class clerk, transferred from junior third-class clerk at $800. A. L. Reid, senior third-class clerk transferred from the railway at $860. a total of $8,010. These represent the salaries of the 11 additional clerks in the inspectors' branches.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the total amount of the salary increases? The minister explained the statutory increases and that is all he has explained so far.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have given the figures for the inspector's office, $10.342. In the railway mail service the figure is $117,553. In the post offices the increase is $247,581.25.

The second part of my hon. friend's question is what proportion of this increase is made applicable to the statutory increases. in the railway mail service the increase of $117,553 is made up as follows:

No. of Increases.	Amount.	Total.
3	$100 00	$ 300 00
23	78 25	1,799 75
1	30 00	30 00
327	50 00	16,350 00
86 additional	.....	43,970 00
12 mail transfer agents	.....	5,624 00
1 additional messenger	.....	469 50
Increase in mileage allowance paid to the railway companies		40,000 00
Increase in provisional allowance		10,000 00
Total increase mail railway service		$117,553 25

Mr. FOSTER. If there are any exceptions to the statutory increases the minister might let us know later.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I know of none. The amount is made up chiefly of statutory increases with the exception of the additional clerkships. I have given my hon. friend particulars of where these additional clerkships have been created. I come now to the additional clerkships. Mr. E. E. J. Evanturel was transferred from the Quebec office to the office of the superintendent of railway mail service in Quebec at $1,200. Mr. H. M. Harris was transferred from the Calgary post office to the office of the superintendent of railway mail service at Calgary at $670. There were nine new appointments at $400 and 75 new appointments at $500 Shall I give the names?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not asking for the names. How are the new appointments divided?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They are divided between Halifax, Montreal, Quebec, Ottawa and Toronto.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister might give the number in each division.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The numbers are as follows:

Railway mail service division—

	No.
Halifax	6
St. John	2
Quebec	5
Montreal	15
Ottawa	9
Toronto	8
London	2
Winnipeg	10
Moosejaw	4
Calgary	9
Vancouver	5

Mr. FOSTER. Are all these railway mail clerks?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the railway mail service, travelling on postal cars.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the necessity for the large increase in number?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The mileage of railways has increased. The moment a railway is built, application is made in the district for the establishment of a railway mail service. We have two systems, there is a baggage car service and a postal car service. If it is a baggage car, we pay the railway company 4 cents a mile; if it is a postal car, we give the company 8 cents a mile.

Mr. FOSTER. What facilities do you get on the baggage car?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A postal car is a post office on wheels, and clerks are stationed in that car to sort and distribute letters, and deliver them at the several stations where the train stops.

Mr. FOSTER. I asked what were the accommodations given you on a baggage car for which you pay 4 cents a mile?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We are supposed to get from the railway companies sufficient accommodation in a special baggage car for our mails, and they are delivered in bags at the stations.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any sorting in the baggage car?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, only accommodation for bags. Sometimes the company does the work itself, and has a side service from the station to the nearest post office where the mails are distributed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister tell us how many post office inspectors there are in the Dominion?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is one at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, London, Winnipeg, North Bay (to be established shortly), Vancouver, Calgary, Moosejaw, Kingston, Saskatoon, Edmonton and Victoria.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister explain what is meant by the inspectors' offices, on page S—2 of the Auditor General's Report, where $119,000 has been expended?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That includes the salaries paid in that branch throughout the country, and the sixteen inspectors cover the whole district. Let not any hon. gentleman be surprised at the increase in the number of employees in that branch, because the country is expanding, and the moment a new railway is built we are bound to extend the system to that railway.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister tell us how many men are employed in looking after the rural mail delivery service, outside and inside?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No new employee has been added to the Post Office Department for that branch. We have selected Mr. Ross, of Toronto, the superintendent of post offices in the Dominion, as the chief organizer of the rural mail system. But we keep the same organization, the same inspector in each district, who will receive petitions, and these are sent to the department at Ottawa. The petitions are sent direct from the people in the country to that inspector, and he will himself advertise, as he does at present, for the opening of new stage routes, and will establish the system himself. We do not need any new employees for the rural mail service So that it will not cost the country one cent more.

Mr. DANIEL. I would ask the Postmaster General what treatment he intends to give to the letter carriers in respect to their salaries. I presume it is the intention of the government to give them some increase, and perhaps the hon. gentleman might indicate to what extent? I know that in some places the letter carriers are very hard worked. I do not know that they get any extra pay for extra work, but I do know that for ten days during the last elections, the letter carriers in the city of St. John were kept at work until 11 and 12 o'clock at night, delivering Liberal literature, party literature. I do not know that it was very successful, because when the people were roused out of bed at that unseemly hour of the night and came downstairs to take in letters, and found only some little brochure relating to the Liberal party, they were not filled with thanksgiving towards the Liberal party. That is by the way. But I would like to hear from the minister how he proposes to deal with the letter carriers in so far as their remuneration is concerned.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards the extra work which may have been added to the letter carriers, either during the election or at any other time, for instance at the time of the centennial at Quebec, or during the exhibitions in Toronto or Ottawa, of course, they are paid extra. But under no circumstances should the letter carriers be employed for doing one party's work exclusively. He has to distribute the literature of both parties, my hon. friend knows.

Mr. DANIEL. I quite understand that.

Mr. BARR. I do know, from what occurred in my own riding, that my opponent had his address sent down to Ottawa and it was franked back.

Mr. LEMIEUX. By whom?

Mr. BARR. The initials J. S. F. are used for the frank. I cannot find these initials in the list but such is the case. I find that in many other ridings there are similar cases. By what authority were these addresses franked? There were 6,800 franked in the county of Dufferin.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am very glad that my hon. friend called my attention to that fact. I am not responsible for the abuse of the franking system in the House of Commons. That is permitted by law and the post offices in the parliament buildings are under control of the Speakers of both Houses. I have nothing to do with this part of the service. Last year some complaints were made as regards the service in this House. I am glad to be relieved of responsibility for that service by the Speakers of both Houses and the committee on internal economy. But, nobody has the right to so misuse his frank as to send for outside parties, literature, letters or parcels. Members, I know, as a rule, confine themselves to their own mail, but my attention has been called this year by one firm in Toronto to the fact that envelopes containing circulars were coming from the House of Commons under the franking privilege. I could not believe my eyes, but I was unable to ascertain whose initials they were. Again, I may tell hon. members who are new in this House that the franking privelige is strictly confined to the members of the House and that it is therefore personal to them only.

Mr. BARR. After ten days have elapsed members of the house have no authority to frank.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. BARR. Surely the Postmaster General does not pretend to divest himself of responsibility and to throw the whole blame on the Speakers of the two Houses? It is a notorious fact that what I have described occurred. In my own riding 6,800 of these addresses were received by the electors. I received one myself. Therefore, I think that the hon. gentleman must hold himself responsible for that state of affairs. This is only one of the many other cases. Yet, no Conservative could avail himself of that privilege. Not only was ordinary literature transmitted, but here was the address of my opponent sent from this House and franked with the initials J. F. S. This is a palpable abuse. It occurred some ten days before the election and three days before the nomination. These addresses were sent around broadcast and not only that but the electors got tons and tons of literature. That is not British fair play. It is the reverse, and the Postmaster General cannot throw the burden upon some one else. He is responsible for it, he is at the head of the department, and if the Speakers of the House have allowed that to take place, I think there should be an investigation. I do not think it is quite fair that literature should be sent in that way from this House when the Conservative candidates had not the same privilege. Here is a concrete case that should receive the attention of the minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It might happen that as last session was well known to be the last session of the parliament a good deal of mail matter might have accumulated.

Mr. J. D. REID. No one knew that but the hon. minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not know; it may not be true.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, but the minister knew that it was the last session.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The post office in the House of Commons is not under my control. It is under the control of the Speaker. I do not appoint a man in the post office. I have no authority over the officials in the House of Commons post office, but I was assuming that if literature was sent to my hon. friend's riding after the session was over it might have accumulated here with other literature. At all events I do not wish to condone the action of the owner of the cabalistic letters J. S. F. The initials 'J.F.S.,' had no success in Dufferin. My hon. friend has been returned and we are all pleased to see him here.

Mr. BARR. If the literature had borne fruit as they expected it would there might have been a different result. But my hon. friend says it might have accumulate. No, the time has passed for that; my opponent was not in the field, he had not issued his address and therefore it would have been utterly impossible for him to have sent it down here in time to have it franked during the session and sent back. I care not who is responsible, whether it is the Speaker or not; he ought to be brought before the bar of this House and we should know whether that state of affairs is going to continue.

Mr. HENDERSON. My experience in the late election was somewhat like that of my hon. friend from Dufferin (Mr. Barr). My opponent used the mails very freely and used the frank of some person whose frank is recognized in the House of Commons post office. The county of Halton was flooded with campaign literature having stamped upon it the 'Compliments of Dr. W. S. Harrison.'

Mr. LEMIEUX. That was your opponent?

Mr. HENDERSON. That was my opponent. These envelopes, as the minister will observe from one I have caused to be laid on his desk, were passed through the House of Commons post office and franked by some one whose initials look like B. F. C. Who is B. F. C.?

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Customs.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, I think it is not the Minister of Customs nor yet is it the Postmaster General, but I believe there is no doubt that it is some one in the service of the government. We know that between sessions no member of parliament has the right to frank literature. The moment the gun fires, or, at any rate within a few days afterwards, the right of every member of the House to use the frank ceases and he is unable again to use his frank until he has been returned and within ten days again of the opening of the next session. I think it very peculiar that a gentleman who had never been in the House of Commons, who had never represented the county, should have a privilege from the government that was denied me. I did not have the privilege of franking letters at that time because this all took place between two sessions of parliament. These envelopes reached my county about ten days before the election and were circulated in very large numbers. The postage would be six cents each on these letters, or $60 a thousand, and there being 5,000 electors in my county the post office revenue has been robbed of at least $300 in that one county. I do not accuse the Postmaster General of having any guilty knowledge of this, nor do I accuse any officer in his department, for I think they are too careful of their duties to do such a thing. But no doubt there is some person in the employ of the government whose frank is recognized by the postmaster in the House of Commons and who either used this frank or permitted it to be used for the benefit of Dr. W. S. Harrison, my opponent. I am not complaining about the character of the literature sent out; it was very tame; it did not amount to much. One portion of it was intended as a tirade of abuse upon the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), but that hon. gentleman is held in so high esteem in Halton that it had no injurious effect on him and it certainly did not hurt me. Some more of that literature had reference to the prosperity of Canada under Liberal rule.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, the people of Halton had been reading the newspapers and they understood more about the prosperity of Canada than they could learn from this literature which was sent out in a fraudulent way a week before the election. Dr. Harrison had a perfect right to circulate campaign literature in the county of Halton, but he had no right to circulate it at the expense of the country, because it was fraudulent, it was robbing the revenue of the country, it was pure graft. As I told the people in Halton, the very fact that a man seeking their support should come before them in such a manner, grafting and dredging the treasury, to endeavour to secure his election; well, is it any wonder that the people would not give their confidence to a man who would be party to such a thing. I most strenuously complain that any officer of the government should be permitted to do such an act. I do not ask that that official be dismissed, for that might be too harsh treatment and perhaps he did it in his zeal for the cause in which he felt a warm interest, but he certainly ought to receive such a strong rebuke as would deter him and others from doing that kind of thing in future. The Postmaster General, if he takes the Civil Service list, will be able to trace out who the guilty party is, and I think it is his duty to do so. I am quite sure there was no authority in law for this.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am glad the minister assents to that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. HENDERSON. I produced these envelopes in the county to show how my opponent was dredging the treasury, and I stated that I would draw the attention of the Postmaster General to it in the House of Commons, so that he might take steps to protect the revenue of the country. In every shop, in every village throughout the country there were a number of these envelopes to be found in the waste paper baskets, showing that the people paid very little attention to the literature. But the point I make is that the revenue was robbed and that some measures ought to be taken to prevent its recurrence in the future.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. I don't want the hon. member for Halton to attribute any blame to the postmaster of the House of Commons.

Mr. HENDERSON. I did not do so.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. If the hon gentleman looks at the envelopes he will find they were mailed at the city post office and not in the House of Commons post office.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there a frank on it?

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. There is a frank on it and the Postmaster General knows who it is. Now, this being mailed from the city post office who else than the minister has the right to frank a letter from that post office? As I understand it, it is only the minister and his secretary who can frank at that post office, and it is the duty of the Postmaster General to go to the city post office and ask why the official there allowed this mail matter to go out without this frank.

Mr. PERLEY. I corroborate what has been said by my hon. friends. The Liberal literature circulated throughout my county was mailed at the city post office and the initials used for the frank were very difficult to decipher. I took one of these envelopes to the city post office and the official there told me he knew the frank and that it was perfectly good, but he did not tell me the name. These envelopes containing Liberal campaign literature were circulated all over my county, and inside was a typewritten slip bearing the legend: 'with the compliments of P. R. McGibbon.' This gentleman never was a member of the House of Commons, but nevertheless he was able to use this frank to send out his literature to appeal to the electors to vote against me.

Mr. BARR. If the Postmaster General will look at the envelope he will find that it was franked with the initials only, and not the full name of the person who franked through the mails. Liberal campaign literature was similarly circulated throughout my county and my opponent, who was a very decent fellow, admitted at the nomination that he was asked from Ottawa to send down anything he wished to have franked through the mails and he regretted very much that he had done so. He said he did not understand the state of affairs or he would not have allowed this mail matter to go through the post office in a surreptitious way. The fact is now clear that these envelopes were not sent through the city post office, and so the Postmaster General himself must assume the responsibility. I do not blame the Postmaster General. I know that he is a man far above doing such a thing, knowing that it is contrary to the law. But it is up to him to investigate this matter and to let us know who is the culprit, and then punish him for what he has done.

Mr. HENDERSON. My attention has been drawn to the fact that I made a mistake in reading the name of the post office on these envelopes. In examining the envelope more closely, I find that the stamp is the Ottawa post office instead of the House of Commons post office; so that the matter would come within the duties of the Postmaster General. I make this correction, because I do not wish to impute anything improper to the postmaster of the House of Commons.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am informed by the deputy that this was sent through the Ottawa post office, and not through the House of Commons post office, and therefore I must say that it was wrong.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What are the initials?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The initials are not very plain.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is one on which the initials are very plain—"R. F. C."

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am informed by the deputy that when there is an accumulation of mail matter at the House of Commons, it is usual, in order to expedite its transmission, to send it direct in bags to the Ottawa post, where it is stamped. My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Geo. Taylor) will remember that during the session of 1904 the corridors of the House were simply jammed with literature which was being sent out by both sides of the House, as we all expected the elections, and it took several weeks after the session to get that literature sent. We had to provide special cars for it, and it is only just to my predecessor, Sir Wm. Mulock, to say that he offered every facility to my hon. friend from Leeds to expedite the sending out of that mail matter.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Tons of it were never delivered.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not think that is the testimony of the hon. member for Leeds. At all events, let me state my own case, and the House can judge from it. Of course, the frank of the Postmaster General is accepted at any post office, wherever he may be. However, during the last campaign I was not in Ottawa, but in Quebec, and I paid the postage at the Quebec post office on each letter and each circular I sent out, and gave instructions to my secretary to see that that was done. Of course, the ministers enjoy the privilege, while in office, of franking their own mail matter.

Mr. BARR. Can they extend the privilege to others?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I must say that they must not, and, speaking for myself, I would not. The franking privilege of members of the House of Commons is in the same position. Members of the House of Commons must not abuse that privilege.

Mr. BARR. I think we ought to have a promise from the minister before we pass this item that he will investigate this matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly. Notwithstanding what the hon. member from Leeds has stated, I certainly could not say what are the initials on this envelope. At all events, these initials at that date, and the stamp of the Ottawa post office on the envelope make the matter look rather suspicious, and I will have it investigated. Certainly, subject to the explanation I have just given I would not approve of it.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What are the initials of the deputy Postmaster General?

Mr. LEMIEUX. "R. M. C."—Robert Miller Coulter. These are not his initials.

Mr. PERLEY. Will the Hon. Postmaster General read the law on the subject?

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Sections 75 and 76 of the Post Office Act are as follows:

75. All letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Governor General, or sent to or by any department of the government, at the seat of government, shall be free of Canadian postage under such regulations as are, from time to time, made in that respect by the Governor in Council.

76. Letters and other mailable matter addressed to or sent by the Speaker or Clerk of the Senate or of the House of Commons at the seat of government shall be free of Canadian postage, and letters and other mailable matter addressed to or by any member of either House at the seat of government, during any session of parliament, or to any of the members at the seat of government as aforesaid, during the ten days next before the meeting of parliament, shall be free of Canadian postage.

Mr. PERLEY. According to that, the minister would have no right to frank anything except matter on the business of the department?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, the official business of the minister.

Mr. PERLEY. Then, I would ask the minister what he would say if a minister of the Crown franked out during election time matter for other people?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would not do it myself.

Mr. PERLEY. What would the minister say and do under these conditions? Because I think I have in my office an envelope that was franked and used for this purpose.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In such a case, I would severely reprimand the minister.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) referred to the fact that in the session of 1904, preceding the election, the whip of the Conservative party franked out a large amount of literature——

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend (Mr. Geo. Taylor) will allow me. I did not wish to find fault with that; he was acting within his right in franking that literature out during session. But I said that the whips of both parties had franked a great deal of literature, and there was a large accumulation of it, as the hon. gentleman remembers, in the corridors of this House. That literature was sent out long after the session was over. What I said was in explanation of this case.

Mr. PERLEY. The minister does not mean to suggest that these envelopes of which we have spoken were franked and mailed in this House during last session?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did not say that.

Mr. PERLEY. But that is the suggestion. The hon. gentleman referred to four years ago This case has nothing to do with four years ago, because these envelopes had in them typewritten slips which were marked as coming with the compliments of candidates of the Liberal party who were not nominated until weeks after the session was over. Why should the Postmaster General refer to the case of four years ago, and try to make the suggestion that possibly these envelopes were posted in this House last session, when he knows that that could not have been the case?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I am glad the Postmaster General has referred to this case of four years ago, and has quoted the law, and stated that I was within my rights in franking out literature during the session. But he will remember the discussion that took place in the press, and he will remember that every Grit paper in the country hounded me as a violator of the Independence of Parliament Act for having franked out this literature.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It did not hurt my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor). He is still here, and as young as ever.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General of that day, knowing that we were sending out literature, refused to have it sent down to the post office. That is why it remained here to block the corridor—it was simply to deprive us of the opportunity to get our literature out. The hon. gentleman said that I remained here after the session until it was gone. Nothing of the kind; I went home as soon as the session was over. The literature was sent down to the post office and was ultimately sent out, but even then, in many of the post offices throughout the country it was not delivered. But the case we are now discussing is a different case entirely. This matter was not mailed during the session under the frank of a member of parliament. As has been pointed out, it was sent out with the compliments of men who were not nominated until long after the House was prorogued, and it was mailed at the city post office and not at this House of Commons. I have no doubt that the work of addressing this literature was done by civil servants and paid out of the public money. The Postmaster General should ascertain who franked this matter and should make them restore to the treasury the money thus unjustly taken. Unless the Postmaster General does this, he will not be discharging his duty faithfully. I am sure he knows whose frank is admitted to the post office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman say what initials were used ?

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General must know whose frank it is. If not, then the postmaster at the city post office will know. The postmaster here can inform the Postmaster General why he accepted that stuff, and sent it out at the country's expense. He certainly would not do that except on an order approved by the Postmaster General or his deputy.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I assure my hon. friend (Mr. Geo. Taylor) that, since I have been Postmaster General, no officer of the department has been authorized to take upon himself to let any political mail matter pass free through the Ottawa post office to please the party. I would not do it myself, and I would not allow my subordinates to do it. I challenge my hon. friend to name one single instance where this has been done by the post office authorities.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Hon. members here to-day have stated that this material has gone through.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I cannot distinguish the initials of the frank, nor can my hon. friend. I have stated that I will investigate this case. But I cannot make out the initials.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Then, better let the item stand until the minister makes the investigation and is ready to report to the committee.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will investigate.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I say that this is the most outrageous case that ever took place in this House since I became a member of it. And yet I have had to take abuse for doing that which the Postmaster General himself admits was within my rights. But I do not mind, for the more abuse I get, the more my majority increases. I think it is the duty of the Postmaster General, in the interests of the country, to ascertain who is at fault in this matter.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will.

Mr. BRADBURY. As our Ontario friends have called attention to this matter, I would like to have the Postmaster General understand that Ontario is no exception. The province from which I come was flooded with this stuff. In my own county, three days before the election, this stuff was delivered in thousands of copies through the post offices. I attribute my success in the county largely to this literature, therefore, I am not going to protest against it. But it is an outrage that a private individual, one not a member of this House, should be allowed to frank material through the mail out of session and within a few days of election. I hope there will be an investigation, and, if it is proven that this was done without authority, that the parties responsible will be punished. I may say that the Conservative organizer in Winnipeg had dozens of these envelopes brought to him.

Mr. FOSTER. Without postage ?

Mr. BRADBURY. Yes, and the initials on the envelopes I make out to be 'B F C.'

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Is the franking of unofficial matter an offence punishable under the Act ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have never made it a penalty. We have always thought that those enjoying the privilege would remain strictly within the privilege. But I am afraid we shall have to take severe measures if these are not forged names. Of course, a forgery comes under the criminal law.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I can tell the minister of a case in which there is no difficulty in recognizing the name used. I have seen literature circulated in my riding, in session and out of session during the past two years, campaign literature of the Liberal party, and bearing the frank just as distinct as the address upon the letter, 'J. B., Sol. Gen.' I am sorry the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) has just left the Chamber. I wished to speak about this matter when he was present. After the session the frank is changed, so that it is evidently not a mere oversight, and the person sending it recognizes that the sessional frank does not carry in the recess. All through the recess the weekly circular letter of the Liberal party goes out in printed envelopes addressed to the Liberal press of this country and bearing the frank 'J. B., Solicitor General.' There is a clearly defined case on which the Postmaster General may work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would not condone any abuse of the franking privilege by even the Solicitor General, but I may frankly say that it happens sometimes that I send to some of my friends speeches delivered by the Minister of Finance or by the Minister of Customs. The Finance Minister may deliver a speech on the financial condition of the country which I judge should be read by some of my electors. and I would not consider it an abuse of privilege to send such a speech under my frank It is my official correspondence with the people in my county.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not discussing that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the Solicitor General sends clippings to twenty-five or thirty papers in British Columbia each week, I would not consider that as an abuse. I do not know if the statement is true, although I do not challenge my hon. friend's assertion. The Solicitor General has entered the Chamber and is now in his seat and he will explain himself. I was Solicitor General myself and inquired if I was on the same footing as the ministers. I do not consider that an abuse. To send out tons of literature might be an abuse but to distribute twenty or sixty circulars to newspapers explaining the policy of the Liberal party does not appear to me an abuse.

Mr. BRADBURY.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It may be because I am only a tyro in parliamentary affairs but I cannot subscribe to the doctrine of the Postmaster General. When this matter came to my attention I regarded it as an aggravated instance of petty graft, about as bad as any graft I had observed. As the Solicitor General is now in his seat, I shall repeat what I said, that during the past two years, in session and out of session, the weekly circular letter of the Liberal party, a letter devoted to the most scurrilous abuse of the Conservative party and its leaders.

Mr. BUREAU. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. That is a matter of opinion, as the hon. gentleman says, and it is my opinion, and I have a right to state my opinion. This letter, devoted to scurrilous abuse of this side, goes out during session and during recess, bearing the frank of 'J. B., Solicitor General.' The letter is in print. It is not got up by the Solicitor General himself, or representing the product of his literary talents, but is a circular prepared outside, and printed outside as far as we can see and must be carried into the department. Every week 200 or 300 of them are sent out, all with that frank, and to my mind, 200 or 300 offences are thus committed each week against the postal laws to save the paltry sum of $3, which would carry these circulars through the mail. The reason this seems an aggravated and a contemptible piece of graft, is that if the post office officials catch a private citizen in the unintentional act of putting a small piece of paper in a newspaper, they hale him before a magistrate and mulct him. Who would direct this prosecution ? Yet we find the Solicitor General, who would prosecute a private citizen, committing 300 offences every week and the Postmaster General saying that because this is party warfare, he sees no offence in it. I do not subscribe to that doctrine and feel that the House will not subscribe to any doctrine so monstrous as that.

Mr. BUREAU. I have no apology to make. I am not surprised at the harangue of my over scrupulous friend from New Westminster. I heard him insinuate the other night that I was in collusion in letting out Bill Miner. I claim that in franking this literature there was no crime and no offence.

Mr. HUGHES. Was it no crime to let out Bill Miner?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know but my friend had something to do with Bill Miner.

Mr. FOSTER. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That expression would not be in order.

Mr. BUREAU. I take it back, I do not want to connect my friend with Bill Miner; I will let him connect others. I did not misuse the post office for any purpose. That literature notwithstanding the judgment of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is sound literature. I have read some of it, and I think it contains sound principles, and if the people of British Columbia had followed it more closely they would be better off to-day than they are.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. I would like to inform the Postmaster General of what took place in the district of Nipissing. Tons of this stuff were sent out franked in that way. The distribution was so general that even the Conservative candidate got a copy.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What frank was it?

Mr. GEO. GORDON. I have not got any with me now, but I can get some. Tons of that stuff was sent there franked, and went through the mails. Now the hon. gentleman from Halton (Mr. Henderson) figured out a little while ago that the loss to the Post Office Department was something over $300 in his constituency alone. Taking the 221 constituencies in the Dominion of Canada, you have a loss of $66,000 in the revenue of the Post Office Department. Now, if a man wipes the mark off a postage stamp and the country only loses 2 cents by it, he very soon finds himself before a police magistrate and receives severe sentence. I think the Postmaster General will not be doing his duty if he does not institute at once a thorough investigation into this whole matter, and see that the law is carried out according to what he read a little while ago. I think this is one of the most scandalous and disgraceful acts that could be perpetrated upon any people; and if he will investigate this outrage he will not only please the people of Canada, but please the majority of the members on his own side.

Mr. TURRIFF. So far as my constituency is concerned, I did not see one piece of literature franked by any Liberal during the whole campaign, or any kind of franked literature. The hon. gentleman says there was a loss of $66,000 throughout the whole Dominion by this means. Well, if you have a loss of $66,000 through the use of franked literature, and still have a surplus of $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 to what an extent must the Conservatives have used the franking privilege in their time when they had a deficit every year of half a million dollars?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I hope the minister will not only investigate this subject himself, but that the Public Accounts Committee will bring before it some of these men and make a thorough investigation. The western part of the province of Ontario was flooded with this literature, practically every riding. I was in a great number of ridings myself, and everywhere I found the ridings flooded with this literature, franked from Ottawa, tons of it. Listening to the statement of the minister with regard to the position that the Post Office Department in the House of Commons was in shortly after the close of the session, I could not help thinking that at least some person in his department was well aware that this literature was being sent out after the 16th of September, because I have a piece of literature in my hand, explaining the wonderful boon of the rural free mail delivery which the minister promised to the people of Canada. This was sent into my riding.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Sent from the Post Office Department? Is it a general pamphlet?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, a general pamphlet under the same stamp as mentioned by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain).

Mr. LEMIEUX. Does the hon. gentleman mean that it was sent from the Post Office Department at Ottawa?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I cannot help thinking that some one in the Post Office Department had something to do with placing in the literature 'Free rural mail delivery of Canada.' giving the explanation of it that the minister did in that wonderful speech of his at Niagara. This may not be an occasion to pursue the matter further, but I sincerely hope that I shall be given an opportunity to explain what I think the position of the minister was in regard to the stand he took on that occasion.

Mr. MADDIN. I have here a postal card which was mailed to the leader of the opposition at Halifax, delivered there through the mails, and I would like to submit it to the Postmaster General. It bears no frank at all, but it bears the Halifax-Campbellton stamp. I gather from that that the postal card was mailed on the train, and that the postal mail clerk was in collusion with the party whose ends were to be served. You will notice that it depicts the right hon. the leader of the government endeavouring to pull the hind leg off a horse, and on the front of it, in red type, it asks the people to support Mr. Reid and the greater Campbellton. This is not a more flagrant boast of a right to hold in contempt the legislation with regard to the Post Office Department than that offered by the Solicitor General. If the Postmaster General properly read the law a few moments ago, sections 75 and 76 of the Post Office Act, then I submit that the Solicitor General was guilty of a breach of that Act. If, in making his admission before this House he had exhibited any extenuating circumstances, or had shown that he repented or was sorry for what he had done, we could have some consideration for him; but he could not in a more flagrant way have exhibited his utter indifference and disregard of one of the most important laws on our statute-books.

Mr. BUREAU. Prosecute him for a breach of the laws.

Mr. MADDIN. I think it is the duty of the Postmaster General to see that all the laws regulating his department are lived up to, especially by officers of the Crown. While on this subject I would draw the attention to the Postmaster General to what occurred on declaration day following the election in the county of Gloucester. A newspaper clipping from the Moncton 'Daily Times,' containing a letter dated the 13th of November, has been placed in my hands by a reliable authority, and I will read an extract from it for the benefit of the Postmaster General:

Election day may be past, but not so far past but what all can recollect it quite clearly and as declaration day came a week after we are able to recall that event clearly also.

One thing which aids us in recalling the latter occasion and which has caused considerable discussion among our townspeople since was the illumination of the public building on Monday evening the 2nd inst.

This building contains the post office and customs office, and on the evening above mentioned every window in these two departments and also in the janitor's apartment was illuminated with lighted candles placed therein.

This piece of work, the like of which probably did not occur in any other public building from Sydney to Vancouver——

Mr. LEMIEUX. Would the hon. gentleman pardon me for interrupting him? I do not wish to unload my sins on any other man's shoulders, but I wish to remind my hon. friend that post offices and customs houses, all public buildings, are under the charge of the Public Works Department and not under mine. Every public building is under the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MADDIN. Then I will not read any further from the letter. The Minister of Public Works may take cognizance of it. I will bring this aspect of the matter up at some other time because I have no desire to embarrass the Postmaster General with matters that do not come within his jurisdiction. But, I would like to emphasize the fact that the reading of the Post Office Act a few minutes ago by the Postmaster General is enough, on the voluntary admission of the Solicitor General, to show that he has violated that Act.

Mr. BUREAU. I want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maddin) to correct that statement. I never admitted that I violated the Act; I said that I had not violated the Act. I do not want it to go upon 'Hansard' that I admitted that I had violated the Act.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. A declaration by an hon. member as to what he said must be accepted.

Mr. MADDIN.

Mr. MADDIN. I have no desire to misquote the hon. gentleman. I will put it this way.

Mr. BUREAU. I want the hon. gentleman to take that back.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Maddin) is stating it within order. I presume that is his intention.

Mr. MADDIN. Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is my intention. I submit that on the admission of facts voluntarily made by the Solicitor General he has been guilty of an infringement of this Act, and that it is the duty of the Postmaster General to institute a prosecution against him.

Mr. BUREAU. I never made that statement. I say I am not guilty of an infringement or of a violation of the Act, that I kept within the Act.

Mr. MADDIN. I said that upon your admission of the facts—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not understand the hon. member for South Cape Breton to be charging that the Solicitor General admitted a breach of the Act. I understand him to be stating that the facts that the Solicitor General mentioned consitute a breach of the Act in his opinion.

Mr. MADDIN. Exactly. That is all I do say and that is all I wish to convey. I submit that upon his admission of facts here this afternoon it becomes the duty of the Postmaster General, who is the special guardian of this piece of legislation, to see that it is lived up to.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As regards that post card, it might happen that when post cards and ordinary envelopes are stamped some may escape the attention of the postmaster. During elections especially, or at any time, when there is a large mailing process going on it may happen that the stamp is forgotten upon one envelope. In the large offices in Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto and Winnipeg, there are machines run by electricity for stamping envelopes and the absence of stamps sometimes escapes the attention of the stamper. In this case I have no hesitation in saying that if the postal card was knowingly mailed without a stamp, not only the sender but the stamper who passed it was guilty of an offence. I do not wish to justify the action of any guilty party but it quite often happens in ordinary business that a man may fail to detect the absence of a stamp on a letter or card. The very fact of sending an unstamped card to the leader of the opposition on a political question shows, it seems to me, that the sender could not have been acting in bad faith, and that it was a mistake. I would not defend a guilty act.

Mr. PERLEY. I am very glad to hear the Postmaster General say that he does not think that a minister of the Crown has a right to frank out, during recess, election literature for the benefit of candidates who are put forward by the Liberal party. I have obtained the envelope that I referred to. It is addressed to Mr. Murdoch McRae, Harrington East, Que. It contains a speech delivered by Mr. E. M. Macdonald, M. P., Pictou, N. S., and inside there is a typewritten slip with the 'compliments of P. R. McGibbon.' It was mailed at the city post office on the 30th September and marked 'free.' I took it to the city post office and asked about the frank which seems to be in blue pencil, and they told me that it was 'S.A.F., M. A.' I am glad to see that the Minister of Agriculture is here, and I believe that it must be his frank. I would like, under these circumstances, to ask the Postmaster General to reprimand the Minister of Agriculture right here now, while we are all present.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the Minister of Agriculture be good enough to say whether it is his frank or not.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot say whether it is, but it is quite possible.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I can only add the evidence afforded by what has taken place in my riding to what has already been said by many hon. members on this side of the House. I do not at all object to a member using his franking privilege himself and perhaps overstepping the mark a little, but I certainly object to any person using the frank which is the special privilege of members of this House and of Cabinet Ministers. I think we have proof that somebody has been using a frank which he has no right to. We must not forget that we on this side of the House represent more than forty-five per cent of the electors of Canada, and I say it is not right for the government, or any one on behalf of the government, to use the special machinery of the government for the purpose of distributing campaign literature to the injury of forty-five per cent of the people. We have a concrete case of somebody having made use of the stamp which is the special privilege of a member of this House, and having passed the matter through the post office. There is no doubt that tons of that literature have been passed through the post office with that frank upon it, and the postmaster should have known that it bore the frank of somebody who was not entitled to use it. I want to ask the Postmaster General what he is going to do with the person who absolutely and without authority uses that stamp for the purpose of transmitting tons of literature through the mails, as has been done during the past year? I have noticed that it is a favourite way for ministers to dispose of a question by saying, 'I will inquire into it,' and then the interest drops, but, assuming that it is proved that this gentleman has used that frank without authority, what is the Postmaster General going to do? Is he simply going to administer a severe reprimand? If that is all he is going to do anybody will be justified in using the frank. If the Post Office Act does not provide some penalty for a man who unjustly uses the franking privilege it is high time that an amendment was brought in to make it a criminal offence for any person to use the franking privilege who has no authority to do so.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I may say at once that the supposed franks which have been exhibited this afternoon reveal a state of things which I will not tolerate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have no hesitation in saying that the envelope just produced by my hon. friend (Mr. Perley) does not bear the initials of the Minister of Agriculture. I know the initials of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. PERLEY. What are they?

Mr. LEMIEUX. 'S. F.'

Mr. ARMSTRONG. He admits it is his frank.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh no, he does not. My hon. friend insinuated a moment ago that the initials B.F.C. were the initials of a member of the government, but that is not clear to my mind. At all events I say that this state of things cannot be tolerated because the Post Office Department must have the respect of all parties in the country, and I intend for the future to see that the spirit and the letter of the law shall be carried out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the past we may have been a little lax in framing regulations, trusting that those who enjoy the franking privilege would use it prudently and not indiscriminately. We will frame such regulations as in the future only purely official business bearing the frank of ministers and members of parliament will go through the mails. I may say that since the beginning of the session I have received complaints from certain firms in reference to the abuse of the franking privilege. I attribute the reason for these complaints to the fact that it was done by new members of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Postmaster General mean to interpret the Act so as to prevent a member of parliament from franking any mailable matter unless it is of a business character?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A member of the House has a right to frank all his business letters —I mean business letters in connection with the public business of the country. But, the other day I received from a firm in Toronto an envelope bearing the frank of one of the new members of this House who sent broadcast through the country circulars inviting the public at large to subscribe to shares in a certain mine in the Gowganda district. That was clearly an abuse of the privilege. The franking privilege is given to enable a member to correspond with his constituents, and with his family, and with the public generally on public affairs, but it is not given to enable a member to send thousands and thousands of circulars inviting persons to take shares in a mine. That is an abuse of the privilege. It seems to me it it is a mere matter of common sense.

Mr. CARVELL. Now that the Postmaster General has so clearly defined his view of the law and the attitude he intends to assume in the future, it seems to me there is one very important omission, because the Postmaster General has not stated the punishment he intends to mete out to the culprit who franks these documents in this way. I would imagine from the evidence given by so many hon. gentlemen opposite that there must have been a large number of these documents sent to different parts of Canada, and some punishment should be dealt out to the culprit. I would suggest to the Postmaster General that if in the first place he can find out who the official is, he should send him to the Bishop of British Columbia and get him to make a confession and I have no doubt the bishop would treat it as an absolute secret, and his name will not become public, and I dare say the bishop would very kindly assure us that there is no politics in it, and possibly His Lordship would be willing to absolve even the Solicitor General.

Mr. SPROULE. With regard to the franking privilege, I quote from the Post Office regulations, page 21, which, referring to the Cabinet Ministers says:

All letters and other mailable matter from the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of an official character.

That is the only right the ministers have to frank, and when the Solicitor General says he had a perfect right to do what he has done, I am not surprised at the interpretation of the law which we sometimes get from the Justice Department of Canada. The Postmaster General says that the private member of parliament has only the right to frank letters on the business of the country, but the regulation does not say that; it says:

Letters and other mailable matter addressed to or by any member of the Senate or of the House of Commons whether on public business or on the personal affairs of such member.

That shows the interpretation of the law is broader in the case of a member of parliament than it is in the case of a minister.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is meant by 'personal affairs.' ?

Mr. SPROULE. I presume it is his own personal business. I do not know anything about the instance the Postmaster General has referred to, but if that member of parliament were engaged in mining it would be his personal business to send out these circulars, and the regulations would appear to justify him in that.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will take my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) as my witness. Taking the regulations which he has just read and assuming that letters written to his family or to his constituents or to the public on public questions constitute his personal business as the word 'personal' is generally understood, now would the hon. gentleman take it upon himself to send broadcast thousands and thousands of circulars under his frank, asking the public to subscribe to shares in a mine? He would not

Mr. SPROULE. I would not.

Mr. LEMIEUX. He would not, and every one knows he would not do it, and in not doing it he would be guided by his own conscience, his own sense of honour, and common sense.

Mr. SPROULE. What I wished to draw attention to was the fact that a private member of parliament has a greater right to the use of the franking privilege during the session than a minister of the Crown, if I correctly interpret the hon. gentleman's own regulations.

Mr. BURRELL. It seems to me that it is time that a protest was put in against the remarks made by my hon. friend from Carleton, New Brunswick (Mr. Carvell). Eighty or ninety of us are new members, and I think it is fair to assume that the majority of us have come here with an earnest desire to do the best we can for this country, very often regardless of political affiliations. I am aware that hon. gentlemen opposite, and those on this side, are working along different lines, and unfortunately on many occasions there is too much party recrimination and bitterness. Now, the present discussion involves a principle, and I want to express my satisfaction with the way in which the Postmaster General has dealt with this question. He has recognized that there is a principle at stake, and has shown a manly and honest desire to rectify the abuse referred to. But when these matters are under discussion, and an hon. member opposite gets up and introduces totally irrelevant matter, for the purpose of flinging a cheap jibe at the opposite party, I think it is time for any member who has a sincere desire for the progress of this country along right lines to enter a protest against the irrelevancy and the levity of his remarks.

Mr. PERLEY. We have gained a great deal when we have got from the minister a promise to try to rectify this evil. This frank is in plain blue pencil, and anybody might have made it, whether he had any authority or not. I was told at the post office that these were the initials of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and I wish to ask that hon. gentleman whether he gave anybody authority to frank literature of this kind with his frank in blue pencil on the envelopes, or whether he knew it was done?

Mr. FISHER. I did not give authority to anybody to frank with a blue pencil in any way or shape, and did not know it was done.

Mr. FOSTER. The question that has been discussed this afternoon is a little more important than probably the Solicitor General, from the way in which he met it, may think it to be. I consider it to be a very important question, because, as my hon. friend from British Columbia has said, there is a principle underlying it, and the Postmaster General has in that respect come face to face with it in a manly way and has acknowledged that there was an evasion of the Act, and has given the assurance to this House that, whether it was done by a colleague or by an outsider, he proposed to take what measures are necessary in order to prevent it occurring again. He went a little further: he proposed to investigate the matter and find out if he could what had been done, and what punishment or remedy could be enforced. If it was done with the authority of the Postmaster General or that of any of the ministers of the Crown, and if it was done with the authority of any of the ministers of the Crown after the session was over, they themselves would be responsible for the pecuniary damage and for any violation of the principle of the Act, if that were proved to have happened. But the fact is, and it is plain enough, that somebody has been robbing the public treasury. That is exactly what it means. If a man had gone into a country post office in the dead of night and abstracted from the till of the postmaster money belonging to the postal revenues, would he be a thief, or would he come before this House and say, I did it, I glory in it, and I am not going to make any apology for it? It is plain what it means; and if $20 or $2,000 has been kept in the pocket of the man who by the law ought to pay it into the Consolidated Fund of Canada for the service Canada did in carrying his mail matter, is it any less robbery of the public treasury? I do not think my hon. friend the Postmaster General will deny that it is exactly the one and the same thing as the other. In the one case your man comes and takes the money out in stealth by night; in the other case he robs the treasury just as effectively, because he either uses a power which he has no right to use or surreptitiously gets his carrying done without paying anything therefor. Now, we have three cases. We have the case of a private post card. No private post card can go through the postal service of this country without a one cent stamp upon it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. This private post card is only one; but as long as there is the one which contravenes the law it is serious. When the hon. Postmaster General comes to investigate it, if he does, he might find out whether it slipped in between two others or not. Somebody must have posted it, and, prima facie, the man who posted it intended to defraud the revenue. No court or judge before whom the matter was tried would say that is probably how it happened. It is not the business of the judge and it is not the business of the Postmaster General, to suggest how it may have slipped in. There is the incriminating charge, and it is his business to suppose that his revenues have been defrauded, and to go as far as he can in tracing the fraud. That post card apparently was not posted at a post office, but was put into a postal car on the railway between St. John or Campbellton and Halifax and sent to a gentleman at that time in the city of Halifax. There is one case; in how many cases was the same thing done? In the other case, what happened? The Solicitor General, if I understood him aright, took the ground that the matter that went out was good.

Will the Postmaster General examine that for a moment? If a man has defrauded the mails by putting a letter inside a news paper and so avoiding letter postage, is it any answer for him, when he is brought to book, to say: 'But there were fine sentiments in that letter? Such an excuse would not be taken. Evidently, then, it is no excuse for the Solicitor General to say that the matter he sent out without paying the country's postage, as I believe he should have paid under the law, was good matter. This is not the kind of excuse that increases very much our respect for the Justice Department of this country. Here is a man to whom we pay some thousands of dollars a year and his travelling expenses; he represents justice in this country; before this House and this country he takes a position which I doubt if any other representative of a justice department has ever taken—that if the stuff is good stuff it is no harm to send it through the mails without paying the proper legal postage. Here is a case in which the frank is plain; the Postmaster General himself cannot cavil on that ground. If there is anything in the law on this subject, it is intended to preclude members of parliament or ministers from franking extraneous matter through the mails when the House is not in session. Extraneous matter, I say. I would not carry the prohibition too far. If a minister during recess wishes to write a letter to the firm of which he was a member, or to pay a bill, I would not object to his franking the letter. That is a point that no one would raise in this House. Every minister does it, I dare say, and no one would cavil at it. But has the minister a right to take my correspondence and save postage for me by franking it through the mails? He has not. Where, then, is the defence of the Solicitor General? What was this matter that was being sent out? Was it anything connected with the business of the Department of Justice? No. Was it anything connected with Mr. Aylesworth's personal business? No. Was it anything connected with Mr. Jacques Bureau's personal business? No. Carry the case a little further. Mr. Aylesworth might have been writing to his constituents asking them to vote for him and to fight against Armstrong or whoever was going to be nominated against him. He might frank that letter; I would not find fault with that. But here is an organization that is conducting political warfare against nearly half the people, and it is so high-toned and so high-minded that it employs its Solicitor General to beat one of the departments that the government is trustee for, the Department of the Post Office, out of the petty postage on its letters. This weekly letter is an engine of the Liberal party; it is a part of its propagandist machinery, and is a matter entirely outside the personal business of Mr. Aylesworth or Mr. Bureau. It is posted every week of the year, in session or out of session, and is franked by the Justice Department. Does any one deny it? The solicitor General says that he has no apology for it. He might just as well frank the merchandise of the C. Ross Company on Sparks street. The great Liberal party ought to be more able than a private company to pay such expenses, and ought to be quite as manly to bear it. Will the Postmaster General inquire what the Liberal committee in the city of Ottawa were doing all last winter and up to the very day of election? If he does he will learn that tons and tons, millions and millions of copies of brochures and pamphlets were sent away from Ottawa under frank and scattered over every constituency in this country. I have here a statement by the secretary of that organization in the city of Ottawa stating exactly what was being sent out—so many copies of this or of that, to go into the several constituencies before election day.

Mr. FOSTER.

Did the Liberal party pay any of that postage after the House was prorogued? That is worth inquiring into. If this postage was not paid a wrong was done, somebody has robbed the treasury, and somebody should be punished for it. But there is worse than this, and I ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) to pay attention. All this would be bad enough, but there is still more in it. Here is a Liberal-Conservative running in the county of Argenteuil. He gets up his own literature and pays for it. While he is a member of parliament he has a right to frank anything he likes into his county by way of propaganda—that is a matter between him and his constituency. But one day after the close of the session he has no such right. A Mr. McGibbon opposes him in his county—whether he was a candidate before the House closed or not I do not know. It would be bad enough for members of parliament or cabinet ministers to frank literature through the mails after session, but it appears that, again and again, those who never were members of parliament, who were not even nominated for parliament until after the House closed, sent their literature under frank, or had it sent in some way first to Ottawa and from Ottawa throughout the constituency. His Majesty's post office paid the bill; the public revenue loses that much. The frank of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) was used to defraud the revenue of a large amount. Here are two things, one of which is unfair and the other absolutely dishonest. It is unfair that the Liberal-Conservative candidate should have to bear his own expense, while the Liberal candidate, by reason of his party being in power, should be able to send his literature without expense, taking the money from the taxes of the Liberal-Conservatives as well as from those of the Liberals of this country. The Minister of Agriculture has not denied that he franked literature after the House was closed; he said it was possible that it might be his frank. I would be loath to believe that any one would have the gall to put the initials 'S.A.F.,M.A.' on envelopes and send them through the post office. I should be inclined to think, under the admission of the Minister of Agriculture, that he himself had so franked this literature, or had authorized it to be done. He will not deny that it may be his own; I cannot deny that it may be a forgery of his name. If Sir Richard Cartwright or Mr. Fielding makes a speech in parliament I have no objection to their sending them out by the thousands under frank. But I do not believe that they have the right to take up the campaign of Mr. McGibbon in his constituency and frank his literature. This matter cannot rest here. If it were treated by every one as it has been by the Postmaster General we could leave it to him, but the Department of Justice has said that what they did was absolutely right and that they had no apology; they flaunted defiance in the face of this House. The matter must be tried out and we must know whether the government is going to put its imprimatur on a doctrine like that. I do not believe the government will. I give them credit for long consciences sometimes, but I do not think they will father that doctrine. I am sorry the Justice Department put itself in a position like that before this House and before the intelligent fourth estate I see before me, especially on this side of Mr. Speaker's chair, and before the country at large.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friends have referred to what appears to be my frank on certain literature that was sent out during the political campaign. I may be wrong in my interpretation of a minister's privilege in franking outside of the session, but I have always supposed that he has the same privilege as members of parliament have during the session of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Right.

Mr. FISHER. Members of parliament during session were able to frank anything whatever it might be which they wished to send out connected with their public position as members of parliament. I believed that as a minister I had a right to frank anything I sent out relating to my public position as a minister. I do not know whether that was my frank or not; I certainly never gave authority to put a pencil frank in that way on any envelope. I do not know what the contents were. I do not think I should send out literature sent to me or my department by any one else under my frank. I think that would be improper, but I have always felt that I had a perfect right to frank during the recess such matters as members have been franking during the session. I have been acting upon that principle. If my interpretation of my privilege has been wrong, I am prepared to bow to the proper and legal interpretation and to forego such privilege in the future. I have acted upon that principle for many years, and I know that my predecessors in this and every other government have done the same thing. I know that members have franked tons of literature in each of the last three sessions. I am willing to stand by what I have done in the past, as I know that I have simply been following the practice of all other ministers.

Mr. M. CLARK (Red Deer). I rise to endorse in a very few words what I consider was a noble appeal to this House, and to the new members on the part of the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell.). I am certain he will get the ear of a large portion of this country when he asks the members of this House to cease from mutual recrimination, and devote themselves to more important work by example and by precept, of raising the public life of the country, and attending to the legislative and administrative business they were sent here to do. I thought when the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) rose to his feet and referred to the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), that the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo had sown his seed upon ground where we might not have expected it to bring forth very good fruit, but where it had brought forth very good fruit, for the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) endorsed, as I understood in his opening words, the proposition laid down by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell). He said quite truly that there is a principle at stake in this thing, and the minister faced the principle nobly, boldly, and honestly, and promised that he would do his best to see that no abuse of this kind occurred. I take it that the response of the minister to the appeal which had been made to the whole House by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) was perfect. But after this commencement what do we find the hon. member for North Toronto doing? I could not describe his speech better than by saying it was the most magnificent example of what had been described by the member for Yale-Cariboo in the term mutual recrimination How much further forward are we going to get by talking of one another as robbers and thieves? If that is not the language of recrimination, I do not know the meaning of the word. He appealed, as I understood him, to the great Liberal government as he described it, to show some high-mindedness. Wherever the Liberal government goes for its lessons in high-mindedness, the last place I should go is to the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. M. CLARK. For the matter of that I do not think that if I did go I should be followed by many of his friends on that side of the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. M. CLARK. I am thoroughly in agreement with the logic of what has fallen from the lips of the Minister of Agriculture. I think the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) was not only wrong in taste in not following the very good advice given him, but that he was hopelessly weak in his logic. If members are to be allowed to break the law during the session, he may rely upon it that ministers will break the law during the recess. The whole weakness in the case of the opposition in this matter is to be found in a remark of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Middlebro).

He said that he would restrict the franking privilege to members, or would even allow them to go a little over the mark. Well, we all go over the mark. Will the hon. member for North Toronto rise and say that he has never franked a letter for some one which, strictly interpreting the law, he had no right to do? I notice that he loes not rise. If I wanted to imitate his picturesque and forcible style of oratory, I should point my finger at him and say that he was a robber and a thief; but I abstain. Now, I would like to give the Postmaster General every encouragement to go along the line he has promised to pursue. After all, I wonder that hon. members on the opposition side of the House do not see that in all these discussions about political purity what they are really doing is aspersing their own country—that is what it amounts to in the end, they are aspersing their own country. They are attacking the morality of the people and of the nation to which we belong, because the practice of this government has just been endorsed by a majority of the people of this country. I do not think that the most pharisaical man opposite would rise in his place and say that all the political morality of Canada is on the opposition side of the House of Commons. I do not believe that even the hon. member for North Toronto would be equal to that bold statement. They are attacking the people of this country, they are attacking the political morality of this country. The way to cure the evil is for ministers to face criticism such as this, boldly and honestly; it is for the House of Commons to respond honestly, as individuals and as a corporate body, to such appeals as the member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) has made to-day. I have responded to these appeals because I have fought two elections in this country; one of them I lost, and one of them I won. So far as I was personally concerned they were pure elections; I was not in a position to buy votes even if I could, and I would not buy them if I was able to do so. Let the electors be good enough not to be bought; let the candidates be good enough not to buy them, and you will soon see an improvement in the political morality of the country. With regard to the logic of this thing. I think my hon. friend is hopelessly wrong. If we are to have improvement in this matter, the franking right must be restricted to the utmost possible extent. You cannot break a law in little pieces. That would be the last word I would like to utter on this occasion.

Mr. PERLEY. I must say I like the way in which the Minister of Agriculture spoke about this matter, and also the Postmaster General ; but I cannot understand how he could interpret the regulations in the way he says he did. Section 114, which refers to this subject, seems to me to be quite plain. Referring to mail that is sent out from Ottawa, it says:

All letters and other mailable matter posted from the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of an official character.

That is all it says. When it refers to mail matter coming into Ottawa it says:

—all correspondence addressed to the ministers in charge of the said departments or to their private secretaries or to the deputy heads or secretaries comes free. But in reference to mail matter going out, the language is distinct, that the frank only covers matter of an official character. Now I cannot see by what stretch of imagination the Minister of Agriculture can claim that this campaign literature sent out all over the country, was a document of an official character. I do not suppose he will suggest that, so I cannot understand by what method of reasoning he reaches his conclusion. As I understand the regulations, during the session of the House we are all supposed to be on an equality. We are two parties in this country. Last session when we were sending out literature, we received every civility and service from the post office authorities here, everything was done to give us fair play, to gentlemen on this side equally with those opposite. Now during the session we are all on an equality, we all have a right to frank literature to our respective counties, or to any other county. But as I read this section 114, the moment a session of parliament is over, ministers of the Crown have no longer this right which belongs to members during the session; they then come back to their official right, which is limited strictly to the official business of this country. Now how can the Minister of Agriculture argue that that right extends to them during the recess ? I submit it would be exceedingly unfair during an election. We are all supposed to be on an equality. Opposition members have to pay postage on their literature during recess, and why should not their opponents pay postage also? I do not know how this was done whether the literature was sent in by the government candidates to Ottawa and franked out from here, or whether the Liberal party had an office here in Ottawa with a staff of clerks engaged in writing those mystic letters on these envelopes. But it was not fair play to the Conservative side. I would like to know how the Minister of Agriculture can imagine that section 114 of this Postal Guide gives him any authority to frank letters during recess to other counties than his own?

Mr. FISHER. I confess I have never carefully read the law. I knew what the practice had been from time immemorial, and I followed it, supposing that my predecessors during their administration had followed the law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The whole subject was discussed at great length in this House about ten years ago, and the distinction which has been pointed out by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) was clearly and forcibly pointed out at that time. During a session a member of parliament, as I recollect the regulation—I have not got it under my hand—is at liberty to send out literature, any documents, whether of a public or private nature, under his frank. I suppose the reason for that is obvious; it would be impossible in the post office to make any distinction between documents of a public character sent out by a member and those of a private character. At all events there is the language of the regulation, and you cannot put any restriction upon it so long as it remains as it is. But when you come to the power of a minister of the Crown outside of a session of parliament, the language is very different; a minister's power to use his frank is restricted, as I have always understood it, to documents of an official character. Therefore, there is no confusion or lack of logic, as has been suggested, in the position taken on this side of the House. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was complying with the law in doing what he has acknowledged that he did on this occasion. The regulation with respect to a member of parliament, is in these words:

Letters and other mailable matter addressed to or by any member of the Senate or of the House of Commons while at Ottawa, during any session of parliament, or to any such member at Ottawa, during the ten days next before the meeting of parliament, may pass free of postage.

Now with regard to ministers of the Crown, the case is entirely different.

All letters and other mailable matter posted from the public departments at Ottawa and franked as being of an official character——

Shall pass through the post office free. Campaign literature can not properly or legally be franked as being of an official character; the Minister of Agriculture will recognize that at once. Thus, there is this very important difference, a difference which ought to be recognized and adhered to by a minister of the Crown so long as the regulations are in the form in which we find them at the present time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have followed very closely this debate and I reiterate the statement that some regulations should be framed so as to draw the line between use and abuse. In this matter, we have trusted to the personal honour and sense of propriety of members of the House. I will not go so far as to say, as did my hon. friend from North Toronto, that, because there was some literature franked during the recent campaign, some of the heads of these departments should be accused of theft and robbery. I say that might have been an abuse, but I would not go so far as to say that it was a crime. At all events, the regulations must be made clearer and I intend to frame them in such a way as will, in the future, not lead to the imputation of motives to either side of this House. Before the end of the sesion I may have occasion to discuss this question again and I hope everybody will find that justice will be done to both parties.

Mr. BUREAU. I do not want the idea to go abroad, as the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has sought to convey it, that I have been engaged in robbing the country ever since I have been Solicitor General. The hon. gentleman has had his innings now and he is always happy to give me a crack when the opportunity offers, and I suppose he now feels satisfied. When he got up he had in his mind one of two things, either that he wanted to heap some abuse upon myself, or else he felt that he was standing by a principle and desired to have an evil corrected. As my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) has said, the hon. gentleman has himself franked a letter for another, but it does not follow that he is a public thief, and ought to be branded as such in the country. If I franked this weekly letter I did not do it to save money. I am not so close or stingy. I did it because it had been done before, as I well knew, because I have in my possession papers and other documents that were franked by ministers of the Crown under the old regime addressed to myself and my father. It may be that under a strict interpretation of the regulations I was wrong, but when I said that I had no apology to make I said so with a full appreciation of my words. I never thought the hon. member for North Toronto was getting so careful of the public treasury and was becoming so close that all of a sudden he would make a crime of it. This is a usage which has prevailed for years which is now stronger, not only than the regulations but than the law itself. It has been done for many years, and if so where are you going to draw the line? I made the statement that I thought I was not violating the law and I repeat that I never thought I was violating the law, because I never thought that for years and years and years such a violation could take place without a remedy being provided. I franked this letter because it was in accordance with the usage, and now my hon. friend wants to convey to the country the idea that I have set up as my justification the claim that it was good matter. I never made any such statement. My hon. friend with all his volubility of language and his wonderful imagination, can take out of my words, maybe misplaced, what I never meant, in order to put an improper interpretation upon them and to impute a wrong purpose. I made this statement because the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) said that this letter was something that was indecent, and should not go through the mails.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I object to be misrepresented by the Solicitor General. I never made any such statement.

Mr. BUREAU. How did you qualify that letter?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman says that he did not make that statement you must not insist.

Mr. BUREAU. It may be that I am mistaken. I do not want to misrepresent the hon. gentleman, but he did qualify it. Have I not the right to ask him how he qualified it?

An hon. MEMBER. Scurrilous.

Mr. BUREAU. Thank you. He called it 'scurrilous' matter; that is no better. I do not want it to be said that I stood here and bragged that I had done it. I said that I had no apology to make for what I have done, and I repeat it. My hon. friend does not expect me to run across the floor, cross my hands, get down on my knees before him and say: Oh thou, the only virtuous man on earth, forgive me! I will not do it. I did only what has been done for years and a thing which would not justify anybody in holding it up to the country as a threat against the welfare of Canada. If we have robbed the country, notwithstanding all our thieveries the Postmaster General is able to come here to-day and make the statement that the Post Office Department, instead of having a deficit, as it had in years past, finishes the year with a surplus, and I will leave it to the people to judge if the exercise of the franking privilege has been the cause of a less efficient service, or of deficits. I do not want to incriminate the hon. member for North Toronto, but I know that he used to carry stamps around with him all the time to post letters to his family when he was a minister of the Crown. I do not want the hon. member for North Toronto to make an unjust attack upon the Minister of Justice, for whom I know he has a special love, because I said that I had no apology to make for what I had done. I speak for myself and myself alone.

Mr. FOSTER. It is a playful habit for some of my good friends on the other side of the House, if they are new members, to immediately lead an attack upon the member for North Toronto. He seems to be a form of ladder on which to climb towards a sudden notoriety if nothing more in the House. I do not know how to explain it. There may be some natural explanation; I am not quite sure. I suppose a fly would rather make its onset on the horns of the ox than be flittering around the dust heap or something of that kind. There may be a principle in human nature that thinks that nobility comes out of that kind of thing. It is also the playful habit of some hon. gentlemen to impute to me what I did not say. The Postmaster General came very close to doing that. I was drawing a lesson, I drew it properly, I drew it in very plain, definite language so that any man could understand what I said, and I declared that there was no shadow of difference between the man who went into a post office at the dead of night and by stealth and secrecy burglarized the post office, and thus robs the treasury, and a man who surreptitiously and wrongfully put mail matter into the service and had it carried at the instance of the country thereby making the country pay the bill; it was robbing the revenues just the same. When you discuss a principle and try to make two things equal, you are not under any conscious knowledge, until you are taken up a moment afterwards, that you called the Solicitor General a thief, that you called the Postmaster General a robber and that you called the Minister of Agriculture a burglar or anything of that kind. Some class of minds may reason that way; I am not responsible for every class of mind that there is in this country, and I suppose I have to be under a disability on that account. Now, my hon. friend grew rather dramatic—it is allowable to him—and he figuratively crossed the House, dropped on his—I am afraid not very hardened—knees, and apostrophized the member for North Toronto as the only virtuous man. That is a lovely little failing the members on the other side of the House have. They think it is a manly way of making a statement which they do not care to make on their own responsibility. My good and recently acquired friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) started out nobly and had he only stopped where he started he would be farther ahead than he was at the end, because he started with the enunciation of the principle that we were not to have recrimination in this House and he did not go far before he wondered whether he would come to the member for North Toronto as an example of high mindedness.

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. For lessons in high mindedness; quote accurately.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, for lessons in high mindedness. Now, what did my hon. friend mean by that? Did he mean to start out on the principle of brotherly amity that was enunciated by my hon. friend from Yale-

Cariboo (Mr. Burrell)? He may have thought he was on that skating rink but it seemed to me he was floundering on ice far away. He went on to make two or three other allusions; what did they mean? Had they anything to do with this argument? Starting from his hypothesis he should not have used them because they introduced the principle of scrap between the parties, and that was a thing his soul abhorred. Now my hon. friend, was I not right in saying that had you stopped where you started your ground would have been more logical than it was at the end?

Mr. MICHAEL CLARK. It would have been better for you.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I suppose that remark is on the principle that the fly that jabs at the bull's horn thinks he is doing a tremendous piece of battle, and if it pleases the fly and does not hurt the bull, I suppose there is no great harm in it; it is just a question for the onlooker and the outsider who is not prejudiced either way to form a judgment upon. Now, the whole thing is simply this: The member for Three Rivers, although he may not realize it—sometimes we think he has not quite realized it—is a little more than simply a member of the House; he is the Solicitor General of Canada. He is a part of the Justice Department of this country, and he can hardly make a statement such as he has made this afternoon and disassociate himself from his department and from his position. We look to the Department of Justice—whether it is the minister or whether it is the Solicitor General, we look to him as an exponent of the law, and I allowed myself in an unguarded moment to make a query as to whether one who seemed to have come so far short of a proper definition of this law would shed lustre and brilliance upon the department to which, for some reason or other unknown to most of us, he has been for some years allied.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADIAN, LIVERPOOL AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 44) to incorporate the Canadian, Liverpool and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

On section 2,

The works of the company are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. BARKER. This raises a question which has been suggested in this House before and which was discussed at some length in the Railway Committee—the propriety of putting such a clause as this into Acts of parliament without reference to the truth of the statement thus made. I raised the question in committee. I do not question, nor has anybody ever questioned, so far as I know, the constitutional power of this House to declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada. Nor does anybody question the fact that, when parliament makes this declaration concerning any given work, then, under the clause of the British North America Act, the work becomes legally one for the general advantage of Canada. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the House at length, but I desire to protest formally and strongly against the idea apparently entertained by members of this House that there is no question to be considered in reference to inserting such a provision in a Bill as to whether the statement thus made is true or false. Some hon. members seem to think that because parliament has the power to declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada, that settles the question, and that if we exercise our powers that makes it all right. What I contend is that the constitution intended and requires that before the House expresses such an opinion by Act of Parliament, it should satisfy itself of the truth of the statement; it should be convinced that the work is really one for the advantage of Canada as a whole. I am convinced, from what passed in the committee the other day, that the question whether this work is or is not one for the general advantage of Canada was not considered. This subject has been before the House again and again, and with all respect to the House, I say that the matter has been dealt with without regard to the truth or falsity of the statement made, that this declaration that a work is for the general advantage of Canada has been put into Acts of Parliament when, in my opinion, it was actually false, and without hon. members considering for one moment whether the statement was true or the very opposite of true. We have spent hours and hours in discussing such questions and without much result. But I do not propose to let a Bill of this kind pass this House without entering my protest against the practise that I have just mentioned. The constitution intended that the provinces should control certain works within their confines, but it gave to this parliament the power and right, when it found a case to warrant it, to declare a work, even though within provincial limits, to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and therefore one to be controlled by this parliament. I protest against such a statement being put into a Bill of this kind without due consideration, and against any hon. member voting in favour of inserting such a statement in a Bill unless he is convinced that the statement is true.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not directly or indirectly interested in this Bill, except as a member of this House and a member of the Railway Committee. Nor do I take exception to the argument of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker); in fact, I quite concur with him on the question of principle. I believe that, unless there is within the scope of the corporation objects that are interprovincial or international in their character, we should not attempt to incorporate such a body or give it any powers. This Bill was very fully considered by the committee. I know nothing with respect to the objects of the company or the gentlemen who seek to be incorporated except what appears in the Bill. In the Bill certain objects are set forth, and it is clear that it is the intention of the incorporators to do a transcontinental and export business, to place themselves in a position to make connection with through railways and steamships and to have steamships of their own. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) need only refer to clause A of section 8. Or, if that does not satisfy him, let him refer to section 13, wherein it is stated that these gentlemen who seek incorporation desire to form a company that can enter into agreement with transcontinental railway companies, the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern of Quebec, showing clearly that the object of this railway is to do an interprovincial, transcontinental and even international traffic. There is also clause A of section 10 which covers the right to engage in a navigation enterprise in connection with their railway, clearly having in view an export business. Now, I quite appreciate this fact —that, unless upon the facts we can declare that the work is for the general advantage of Canada we should not listen to the prayer of the petition. But if they desire to have power to do business that is beyond the limits of one province and so come within the jurisdiction of this parliament, it seems to me that in such a case it is for us to give them their powers, because they cannot get them elsewhere. The moment we are not able to declare that the works of a company are for the general advantage of Canada, we are without jurisdiction and have no power even to enact such legislation; it is ultra vires of this parliament. A provincial legislature could incorporate these gentlemen, but could not grant them the powers asked for under sections 13, 10 and 8 of this Bill.

Mr. BARKER. Is there any doubt that a provincial legislature can authorize its own creation to make any contract with another company that has powers partly from the legislature creating that company?

Mr. EMMERSON. That would have to be ratified by this parliament.

Mr. BARKER. Not at all.

Mr. EMMERSON. However, that is entirely begging the question; they could not get the powers asked in section 13. These jealousies that are stirred up as between the provincial and Dominion government are, I think, not in the best interests of either the province or the Dominion. Wherever a transportation company can come within the scope of the Dominion parliament, I think it is in the interests of transportation in this country that they should come here and that we should incorporate them. It is all important in the interests of transportation that the Railway Commission should have jurisdiction over the companies, certainly over railway companies seeking to make traffic agreements with other railroad corporations in other provinces, so that the railways may be subject to the orders of the commission. In the case of a purely local or provincial corporation the company should not come within the scope of the Dominion Railway Commission. I do not take issue with my hon. friend in his theory. All that he has said is very true, but it is not applicable to the circumstances of this Bill. That is why I supported the Bill in the committee. I would hesitate to support the granting of a Dominion charter to any railway, purely provincial in character. I am just as zealous in that regard as is my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). I speak for myself as one member of the committee, and only for myself.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member (Mr. Emmerson) argues strongly that a provincial railway could not take advantage of the provision of clause 13, could not enter into agreements in regard to the handling of freight, &c. The Ontario and Northern Railway, which is entirely provincial, has entered into agreements with Dominion railways, and no trouble has resulted. This is done with many railways.

Mr. EMMERSON. Would the Railway Commission have power to exercise any jurisdiction over that provincial entity?

Mr. SPROULE. There are two Railway Commissions, the provincial and the Dominion, and the provincial commission has jurisdiction over provincial railways just as the Dominion has over Dominion railways. This company professes to desire to carry on transportation by navigation, but we find it is too frequently the case that companies ask for rights of this kind, or the right to build storehouses or elevators, or to navigate inland waters, which in all probability they will never do, but abandon these rights of their charters and depend on the other features of their charters. We had a Power Bill before the House a few days ago. It originally applied to three rivers, the Rainy river, which was international, the Nipigon which was navigable, and the Pigeon, which was neither navigable nor international. The Pigeon river was dropped from the Bill this year. I believe that the other two streams were taken in in order to get away from the control and jurisdiction of the provinces, on the grounds that one was a navigable river and the other an international stream. When a work is to be declared for the general advantage of Canada the promoter should be made to show that it is in reality for the general advantage. That phase in a Bill should not be a mere allegation without any tangible foundation. This railway is all in the province of Quebec and the Quebec legislature could incorporate the company and give them power to do anything they desire to do. We had a representative of the provincial government come before our committee and protesting in the strongest way that it was an invasion of provincial rights, and would likely lead to trouble if it was continued. Surely we ought to have some respect for representatives of provincial governments when they come before us and tell us that we are invading their rights. We should have the strongest ground for doing so, otherwise we will be doing what the hon. gentleman says we ought to avoid, that is, creating difficulties between the provinces and the federal government. That is what we are doing here, and when we have representatives from the province protesting against it, saying that they have a right to give all the powers requisite to enable this corporation to carry out the purposes of its undertakings within a province, and in face of that are we going to usurp their authority by stating in this parliament that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada, and take it under our own control, and deprive the provinces of the control they are entitled to exercise? I think we should go very slowly on this question. As my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has said this question has been argued over and over again, and we have not been able to make our opinions prevail. The question is becoming more intense every year. The province of Ontario comes down here from time to time; there are several Bills on the paper of a similar character in which that province is interested. Last year they sent down their representatives, and I am told will do the same this year, to remonstrate against the invasion of provincial rights. The province of Quebec is doing its best to avoid the difficulty, the province of Ontario is putting forth all its influence to avoid it, and if, in face of these facts, we do over and over again invade provincial rights, we must in the end provoke a contest that will lead to no good results. I think we would be well advised if we took an early opportunity of ascertaining what the respective rights of the provinces and the Dominion are, so that we may keep within our rights, and not always be infringing upon the rights of the provinces. The more we do so the greater will be the trouble. and the more difficult will be a settlement in the future when this question comes to a climax, as it undoubtedly will some time.

Mr. CARVELL. I agree somewhat with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) when he claims that there should be a principle laid down to guide us in matters of this kind. We have had this question before the Railway Committee many times during the last three or four years, in fact there is hardly a Bill coming before the Railway Committee asking that a work be declared for the general advantage of Canada, on which we have not heard the question of provincial rights discussed. I do not intend to discuss the reasons why I should vote for this Bill, because I am willing to adopt the reasons advanced by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). I think he has stated sufficient reasons to justify us in voting for the Bill. But I want to go further than that. There seems to be a doctrine advanced by many hon. gentlemen, especially those from Ontario, that we have no right to grant legislation or to create an entity if it be wholly within any province of Canada. Now I want to refer the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and also the member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker)—and they are both reasonable men, the hon. member for Hamilton is no doubt a good lawyer—I want them to be fair, and tell this House whether, in their opinion, section 92 of the British North America Act did not contemplate just such legislation as is being proposed in this Bill, if it did not contemplate that this parliament should have the right to create a corporation for the purpose of doing business entirely within the province. Take clause (c) of subsection 10 of section 92, you will find that it especially exempts from the jurisdiction of provincial legislatures such works as, although wholly situated within the province, are, before or after their execution, declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada, or for the advantage of two or more provinces. Therefore the British parliament, when the British North America Act was being put through, specially contemplated that the federal parliament of Canada should have the right to create corporations for the purposes of carrying on works wholly within the province so long as that work was to the general advantage of Canada. But now the question arises on what principle should this parliament proceed in order to decide when any particular proposition is or is not for the general advantage of Canada? It seems to me that is an important thing for this parliament to consider, that is a thing we have been discussing in the Railway Committee ever since I have been a member of parliament and it is being discussed more and more every year. I believe with my hon. friend from East Grey that the time has arrived when a clear definition should be made, not of what are our rights, because we have all the rights possible, but when we should exercise our rights, and when we should refrain from exercising them. I think that is a fair proposition.

Now probably I would go further than the hon. member for Hamilton, I would go so far as to say that a Bill, having for its purpose the incorporation of a railway company to connect with any other railway company operated by steam, should be incorporated by this parliament and not by the provincial legislature. I put forward that proposition for this reason: To my mind the greatest function which the Railway Commission ought to have in Canada is the regulation of rates and the preservation of life and property. Now I make the statement. I know my hon. friend from Hamilton will agree with me, that the Railway Commission has no power to regulate traffic rates over a railway created by a provincial legislature; therefore, in order to give the Railway Commission any control over the rates of a railroad we must have it created by the federal parliament and not by a provincial legislature. My hon. friend can see the difficulty he will be met with the very moment that a railway created by a local legislature attempts to do business with a railway, or make connection with a railway which is of a Dominion character. This petition asks for the right to build a railway from a point on the Transcontinental Railway to other places. It starts from a connection with a Dominion railroad, necessarily, when it is completed, it must come in contact with the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the Canadian Northern of Quebec, and probably with the old Grand Trunk Railway. Now if a man living on the line of this railway wishes to ship goods to any other portion of Canada he has got to get a rate from this road in conjunction with the other roads; or if he wants to bring goods from any portion of Canada into any other portion of Canada, he must get a through rate from the point of shipment to the point of distribution, and that means a rate over the Dominion road as well as over the local road. My hon. friend will agree with me that the Railway Commission has no power to control those rates, if this railroad is incorporated by the province of Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me for asking him a question? Is the hon. gentleman aware of the fact that the Federal Railway Commission has power to control through rates on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that a portion of that railway running through the United States is under the insterstate law? But the Federal Railway Commission all the same takes into account the rates through that portion of the United States, right through to the coast, and makes a through rate all the same.

Mr. CARVELL. Certainly, but that does not affect the proposition I am putting forward. We will suppose that a man wants to ship goods from the city of Montreal to Lake St. John. If he goes by the Canadian Pacific Railway there is no doubt the Railway Commission has a perfect right to say what the Canadian Pacific Railway shall charge from the city of Montreal to the point of intersection with the provincial railroad, but their powers end when they get a provincial charter.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it not a fact that the Railway Commission governs freight rates on the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway? I am a shipper over that road and I know that the schedule is printed and approved for both roads by the Railway Commission.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not know. I am not a shipper, but I will tell my hon. friend and he knows it if he knows anything, that if this Railway Commission does control the rates it is by agreement and not by authority. I dare say there will be agreements, and I dare say many of these local companies are anxious to carry out the wishes of the Railway Commission. The hon. gentleman must know, if he knows anything of what he is talking about——

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Excuse me; the hon. gentleman asks me to state a fact——

Mr. CARVELL. I am not asking the hon. gentleman anything. I repeat that the Railway Commission has no power to control rates over any railway created by the province of Quebec. For these reasons I think this Bill should pass, and I think there should be a declaration by this House as to what character or class of undertaking we should declare to be for the general advantage of Canada. Personally I believe that such legislation should extend to all railways which intersect any other railways operated by steam.

Mr. EMMERSON. Not merely intersect, but make a junction with them.

Mr. CARVELL. Make a junction with or have an interchange of traffic. When we get down to street railway, it is a purely local enterprise. It has no necessity of making freight rates or having an interchange of traffic with other roads. Therefore, I think these street railways should be entirely incorporated by the provinces. But in so far as this road is concerned, and all others of a like nature, I contend that this parliament and this parliament alone ought to govern.

Mr. W. B NANTEL (Terrebonne). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as I am responsible for the bringing up of this question before the railway committee yesterday, I may be allowed to say a word.

Whatever may have been the mode of procedure followed heretofore, and altogether the words 'work for the general advantage of Canada' may have been in most cases inserted in Bills of a similar nature, I do not think that the constitution of our country has been modified in consequence. I, for one, consider that the whole matter turns on the question as to whether we have the right and authority required for inserting that clause in such Bills.

In turn, I may be allowed to read the article of the constitution just quoted by the hon. gentleman for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), though I am bound to give it a different meaning:

Sec. 92, paragraph c., 'Such works as, although wholly situate within the province, are before or after execution declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces.'

It will thus be seen that such works should before or after their execution be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. In a charter like this statements of all kinds may be inserted. For instance, I may request authority to build a railway in the city of Ottawa, with power to extend the line into the United States; but my requesting such authority does not in itself, to my mind, suffice to endow the Dominion parliament with the enabling power required. It frequently occurs that people who ask for charters for such undertakings have no great assurance of being in a position to carry them on very far, and the idea seems to be that the inserting of such a clause will give this parliament jurisdiction. That is not my belief. To my mind, some evidence of one's intents and means is required. Yesterday, before the committee, no attempt was made to show that this undertaking was for the advantage of Canada. That is where such evidence should have been adduced, as it is known that when such a Bill is referred back to the House, such proof is supposed to have been made. Inserting in the Bill this or that statement does not give parliament jurisdiction. In the present instance, no attempt even has been made to show that this undertaking was for the general interest of Canada.

All these clauses inserted in Bills, as for instance those in Section 13, which empower the company to enter into arrangements with the Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway companies, are no evidence at all, and often have for their sole object to enable the promoters to sell out to other companies. These gentlemen might just as well have asked for a grant of all the franchises mentioned in the revised statutes, so as to be in a position to sell them at some time or other. Very often things are managed just in that fashion.

If such a principle were to be accepted, provincial rights would be utterly destroyed, and there would be no sense in a local legislature granting charters, since the Dominion parliament would have control over everything I understand that when a railway has been created under a provincial charter, and it becomes necessary, on account of its extension, to declare it a work 'for the general advantage of Canada,' the Dominion parliament may so declare it; but I maintain that such a step may be taken only after the undertaking has been carried out. On the other hand, if it should be found desirable to make such a declaration before going on with the undertaking, some evidence as to its truth should be required. This is precisely what was omitted before the committee yesterday.

I protest against the habit of inserting into all such Bills a general clause of this character, without any attempt at all at proving that such works are for the 'general advantage of Canada.'

Mr. SEALEY. In this connection, I have as much respect for provincial rights as any man in the House. I believe they should be respected but in the matter of railways I do not think there is room for any two opinions as to whether all railways in Canada having an interchange of commerce and traffic should be under the direction, control and influence of the Dominion Railway Commission. We have, in our neighbours to the south of us a striking illustration that we should not follow. There all the great railways endeavour, if possible, in their connecting links, to get a short road that is operated by a State charter, that is beyond the influence of the Interstate Commerce Law, because on these short branches, they are able to collect extortionate tolls on traffic that passes over them. In fact, the great roads of the United States all have short lines of railway and they invariably, if at all possible, route traffic over these lines, explaining, in many cases where they have parallel or alternative lines, that they have no working arrangement with the lines that they directly control, but that they have working arrangements with the lines which they own and hold by trustees for their own good and welfare. For that reason the Interstate Commerce Commission has no jurisdiction and shippers are charged extortionate rates. Surely, if it is at all possible to prevent it, we should not create a condition of that kind in Canada. As has been said, those railways which are strictly within the province should be chartered by the province and should be under the control of the province. If they limited their business entirely to the province, and did not come in conjunction with the general railways of the country the objection possibly would not be so great, but there is no railway, long or short, that proposes to do a business at all but has to have arrangements for the interchange of traffic with other railways and when they begin to do that, and they cannot exist without doing it, they should certainly come under the direction and control of the Dominion Railway Commission.

The Temiscaming and Northern Ontario railway has been held up as an illustration, but I know from my own experience and from correspondence with officials of that road and of the Grand Trunk Railway that we are unable in many cases to compel them to quote rates because it does not come under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission. It can, as I understand only be compelled to make traffic arrangements with the other railways by the good will of these other railways. I believe that the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario, good and all as it is in this province, ought by some means or other be brought under the Dominion Railway Commission. The province of Ontario has a provincial railway commission and they can control certain matters, but it is seldom that two commissions with different authority will agree, and so the best results cannot be obtained. Freight originating in the western provinces and shipped to the seaboard or on a through rate to the old country would lose not only the advantage of railway competition but of ocean competition as well, because under the arrangement which the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have with the ocean liners, the through rates to the old country are fairly steady and settled. This railway, with perhaps new terminals in Montreal and Quebec that will accommodate tramp steamers and all kinds of carriers which give lower rates for the heavier and coarser traffic, would be in a position to absorb all that difference and notwithstanding that the trunk lines would give as cheap rates from Vancouver and the west through to a junction near Montreal or Quebec, this little junction railway would be outside the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission and in that way they could extort a toll that would leave very little if any advantage for the shipper by reason of this alternate route. There does not seem any sound reason why any strip of railway should be permitted to do interchange of traffic business unless it is brought under the direction of the Dominion Railway Commission. While, in many matters it is perhaps right to stick to the provincial rights idea to the letter it is not a consideration at all, to my way of thinking, in the matter of railways doing a general interchange transportation business.

The hour for private bills expired.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE.—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 23) respecting the Alberta Central Railway Company.—Mr. McIntyre (Strathcona).

Bill (No. 28) respecting the union station and other joint facilities of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the Midland Railway Company of Manitoba at Portage La Prairie.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 38) respecting the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company.—Mr. Dubeau.

Bill (No. 41) respecting the Tilsonburg Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Schell.

SUPPLY

The House resumed in Committee of Supply.

Mr. HENDERSON. I take very strong objection to the position laid down by the Minister of Agriculture as to the right of a minister to frank mail matter outside of what appertains to the business of his own department during the recess of parliament. When I noticed the large circulation through the mails of this campaign literature in my county, I drew the attention of the people to the manner in which the revenue of the country was being defrauded in the interests of the government candidate in that country, and I naturally argued that the man who would do that sort of thing was not the man to send to parliament. I believe that was a fair and proper argument. The Minister of Agriculture has now argued that he considers that a minister has the right during the recess to frank any mail matter that he sees fit, notwithstanding that it may have no reference whatever to the business of his own department. I raise my protest against the statement of the Minister of Agriculture because I feel that if I allowed it to go unchallenged, the argument I made during the campaign would be unfounded. I believe that the Postmaster General is quite in sympathy with my contention, that no minister of the Crown has the right to frank such campaign literature. On examining the frank on this envelope I believe it to be the frank of a minister of the Crown—I will not mention his name—who occupies a seat in another house, and I fear it is but a repetition of what occurred years ago. Again I protest against this unfair and illegal use of the franking privilege by a minister. It would be monstrous if a minister of the Crown could, during the parliamentary interim, frank everything and anything he thought fit, by the ton or the hundred tons, contrary to the regulations, which are explicit and clear that he has the right to frank only matter that has some connection with his department. I have said this in order to justify myself, and not to leave unchallenged the statement that was made this afternoon or to leave my people to suppose that I had raised a point during the election which was not tenable.

Mr. DANIEL. This afternoon I asked the hon. Postmaster General a question in regard to the salaries of letter carriers. I may remind him that his superintendent made certain recommendations to the Civil Service Commission in this matter, and in the Civil Service Act of last session I believe the salaries of the class to which letter carriers belong were placed at from $500, as a minimum, to $800, as a maximum. The recommendations of Mr. Ross, I think, put the salaries on a per diem basis instead of a yearly basis, and included some other recommendations, especially one relating to superannuation. I would like the minister to tell us whether he intends to adopt any of these recommendations of Mr. Ross, and if so, when?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I had not forgotten that question. My hon. friend, and indeed all the other members of the House, are very anxious that something should be done not only for the inside service, but also for the outside service. However, it is not a question of sympathy; it is a question of business. Whatever may be the sympathy of the incumbent of the Post Office Department, he has to submit to the wish of the government as a unit. Being myself a son of a poor civil servant, my sympathies, of course, go towards the outside civil servants. I am not at liberty, however, to place an amount in the estimates to give an increase to the letter carriers and the clerks in the post offices. I am governed by the Post Office Act, which establishes different grades and fixes the salaries of the different classes. Since I have been acting as Postmaster General I have received delegation after delegation, and I can claim a little credit for having myself asked for the appointment of the recent Civil Service Commission. I have read the whole of the report, including the evidence given by each of the very able employees of the department, such as the deputy Postmaster General, the acting Deputy Postmaster General, and the chief superintendent, who are in daily contact with the employees. I have my own views on the subject, and although I cannot take the House into my confidence just now, as to what will be done in the near future, I may say that the acting deputy minister has prepared with myself a report which will be before council very shortly, on this very question of salaries for the outside service in the Post Office Department. All I can say at present is that the matter is engaging the attention of the government.

Mr. LAKE. The minister this afternoon made the statement that the moment a railway was built, advantage was taken of it to carry the mails by the trains. I do not think that has always been the case. I have just had letters from two small towns in my constituency, Odessa and Davin, which are situated on the Brandon and Regina branch of the Canadian Northern Railway, asking that they should have regular mail service carried by the trains. A train is run each way every day, and yet these places are receiving their mails only once a week, by means of the overland stage route. I imagine it likely that these would not be the only places along the line which are in the same position. If the Postmaster General will go into that question, and take advantage of the daily train service to provide a daily mail for the people, it will be very much in the interest of the country.

Mr. LEMIEUX. These two towns are on the main line of the railway, and I see no reason why they should be deprived of the railway mail service. If my hon. friend will make the usual application, the department will certainly look with favour on his request.

Mr. LAKE. I heard that they had already applied to the department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. These things take time. There is a little red tape, but we try to avoid delay as far as possible. I see no reason why they should not have a daily mail.

Mr. A. C. MACDONELL. I regret the conclusion the Postmaster General has come to with respect to the remuneration of the letter carriers, and I feel that he also regrets the stand that he is obliged to take. It seems to me that no work of the post office is more important than that of those who are delivering the mail, either a letter carrier or railway mail clerks. We ought to pay our officials in that capacity remuneration equivalent to that paid those similarly situated in other countries. For instance, in the United States men engaged in this work are very much better paid than in Canada. The work done by these men is onerous; it calls for men of education, strong men both in mind and body. In addition, the railway mail clerks take their lives in their hands when they engage in their work. The letter carriers perform an excellent service and receive small remuneration and enjoy few privileges. I had thought to raise this question when the Civil Service Bill was under consideration, but this seems a favourable opportunity. I would call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the earning power of his department is very large. Take, for instance, Toronto, which yields a large postal revenue, quite the largest of any city in Canada. It does seem to me that the men who perform there the work of letter carriers should receive something more than $1.25 or $1.50 a day. The statute, it is true, limits the minister's powers in this matter. But there is surely a way to amend Acts of this kind, and it is for the government to take the initiative in relieving the hardships of government employees wherever they exist. No one would oppose the appropriation of a reasonable sum to remunerate these men for services performed. I urge upon the minister very full consideration of this matter. The subject is one upon which the public feel deeply. Unfortunately, we see occasionally accounts of men in the post office service who betray their trust. In all such cases there is a public sentiment for the man who is receiving a mere pittance of $1.25 or $1.50 a day and is tempted to pilfer a letter. These men are trustees of money as well as performers of an important public service. I do hope that the minister's statement that this matter is under consideration is something substantial, that he means that the matter is to be dealt with in a way to give satisfaction to the public. After all, it is public service and the public pay for it. The Post Office yields a large revenue, and I do not think it is expected by the public that the Post Office is to be made a taxing department; we are satisfied if a good postal service is given and the department makes both ends meet. The public wants the best service they can get, and they want to pay fairly for efficiency. I am not one of those who believe that it is wise to ring a bell in the public street and call upon those who will undertake to work at low rates to enter the service. The men who do this work should be treated as the rest of the service are treated. They should not be regarded as being in the outside service; they are in the service of the country, in the service of the King, and they should be given a fair day's wage for a fair day's work. The minister will not hear any cavil on this side if he improves the condition of the men of whom I have been speaking, men whom the public believes to be entitled to more than they are receiving.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I desire to say a word especially upon behalf of the railway mail clerks. I agree with what my hon. friend from South Toronto (Mr. A. C. Macdonell) has said, that these men occupy a very hazardous position—I may say the most hazardous position in the public service. If any men in the public service deserve an increase, they are the railway mail clerks. By way of illustration, I may refer to an accident that happened a short time ago in my own constituency. The local train carrying the mail between Pembroke and Ottawa ran into a light locomotive. On that train were two railway mail clerks, and both these men were injured, not to any great extent, I understand, but one of them so seriously that he has been unable to resume work up to the present time. I should be very glad to see an increase given to these officials.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Is there a minimum salary for country postmasters?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, $35.

Mr. MEIGHEN. Are there any cases in which they are paid a merely nominal sum --less than the minimum?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No.

Mr. MEIGHEN. How long has this minimum been in force?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In 1896,—speaking of the new era—the minimum salary of rural postmasters was $10. This applied to postmasters whose offices yielded almost no revenue. In 1897, or 1898, Sir Wm. Mulock increased that minimum to $25, and at the same time he increased the percentage given to the postmasters on postal notes and money orders. This was a good thing for the accounting offices. The small offices that do not sell postal notes or issue money orders are called non-accounting offices. Two years ago, I increased the minimum to $35 a year. I made another scale which I have not under my hand, of percentages for the sale of money orders and postal notes. I also made a larger allowance for rent, fuel, and light. On the whole the increase has been found satisfactory. The scale of increases is fully explained in this circular to postmasters:

Post Office Department, Canada,
Ottawa, September 17, 1907.

Postmasters are informed that the Postmaster General, after careful consideration of representations made by those postmasters whose salaries are based on the revenue of their offices, has decided on the following scale of remuneration.

Salary.

Fifty per cent on the first $1,000 of revenue, 30 per cent on all over $1,000 and up to $10,000, and 20 per cent on all over $10,000 of revenue, the minimum salary to be $35.

Allowance for Night Duty.

An allowance will be paid for night duty when a postmaster is required to be on duty after 9 p.m. or before 7 a.m. The minimum allowance will be $10, and the maximum $100, according to the time employed, and the work done.

Allowance for Forward Duty.

The rate of remuneration will be 12½ per cent on the revenue of the offices for which direct or indirect forward duty is performed.

Allowance for Rent, Light and Fuel.

This allowance is to be increased by 35 per cent. Therefore, if a postmaster is now receiving $100 under this head, he will receive $125 under the new scale.

Compensation for the transaction of Money Order, Savings Bank, and Postal Note Business.

Money Order Business.

Four cents for each money order issued, and one cent for each order paid. Formerly postmasters were paid ¼ per cent on the amount of all orders issued, and ¼ per cent on the amount of foreign orders paid. This scale operated unfairly. For instance, while the work involved in the issue of a $100 order is no greater than in the issue of a $5 order, the commission the postmaster received from the $100 order was 25 cents, whilst for the $5 order only 1¼ cents. The system of paying so much a piece for the issue and payment of order is fairer in that the remuneration follows the work, and the rates above proposed will give the postmasters a somewhat better commission than they receive at present.

Savings Bank Business.

The rate of remuneration will remain as heretofore.

Postal Note Business.

One cent for each note sold.

The general revision of postmasters' salaries and allowances will be made as soon as possible, but as there are over 12,000 offices to be considered, it will take some time to complete the work. The salaries and rent allowances will be revised first, and each postmaster will be duly notified of any increase that he may be entitled to. The revision of allowances for forward and night duty will follow immediately after that of salaries.

All increases, either in salaries or allowances, will take effect from April 1, 1907.

R. M. COULTER,
Deputy Postmaster General.

I have here a scale of rent allowance to take effect from 1st of April, 1907:

Mr. MEIGHEN. I have here a cheque given in payment of the salary of the postmaster at Makaroff in Manitoba. The other information which I have in connection with this case was furnished me by the member for Dauphin, who, unfortunately, is not here to-night. The postmaster there, according to my information and according to a cheque which I have here, receives from the government a very small salary. His duties consist of attending to the arrival of the mail on the train at 11 o'clock at night and 4 in the morning the year round. He also attends to the distribution of the mail. For that he is paid one dollar per annum.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As mail courier probably.

Mr. MEIGHEN. They pay him quarterly in more senses than one, and I have here a cheque of 25 cents in payment of his salary for the quarter ending December, 1905, as postmaster at Makaroff station. He presented this cheque in the usual course, the bank charged him on each cheque 25 cents so the government can figure out what his annual recompense is.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I said a moment ago that the minimum salary paid to postmasters throughout Canada is $35. Sometimes we are asked to establish a temporary post office, perhaps for a club of business men at a summer camp, and to oblige them so that they will not be deprived of their mail, we appoint a postmaster, generally the caretaker, but of course we do not expect to pay him. As to the small payment to mail courriers our policy is to call for tenders and to give the mail contract to the lowest tenderer, but even when the amount is very low, we always find some one ready to offer his services at a lower figure. In the county of Nicolet which I represented for two sessions, there is a place, St. Grégoire, where the service for years between that point and Nicolet, three or five miles, has been carried at 99 cents a year. The reason is that the mail carrier also operates a stage and as the people know he must be at the station at certain times to deliver the mail, he gets practically all the patronage of the whole district, and while he receives only 99 cents as courier, he makes $600 or $700 on account of his privilege of carrying His Majesty's mail. This is a very old cheque, January, 1906.

Mr. SPROULE. Are not your government cheques payable at par at any bank?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Mr. MEIGHEN. The bank returned it to him. I may explain that Makaroff is a purely country post office on the Canadian Northern road. It could not possibly be for the purpose of business men, because there are very few business men there permanently. I am informed there are 23 farmers, at a minimum, using the post office the year round.

Mr. LEMIEUX. According to the last report of the department the revenue of Makaroff, in the county of Marquette, is $98.88, and we pay a salary of $87.83. We pay the postmaster besides $12 a year for office allowances.

Mr. ROCHE. Makaroff is in the local constituency of Dauphin.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Since 1906 many of these little villages on the Canadian Northern have grown into towns or cities.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I would like to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the needs of the people of North Toronto, a large and populous town contiguous to the city, for a letter carrier delivery. Until recently the town of West Toronto, which is now a portion of the city, had a letter carrier delivery, so also had the town of East Toronto. These two towns have now gone into the city, and are the district of the hon. member for North Toronto. The people of North Toronto think now that inasmuch as they are contiguous to the city they ought also to have a letter carrier delivery like West Toronto and East Toronto had before. I wish the minister would look into that and see if he cannot give this large town of 4,000 or 5,000 people a letter carrier delivery.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Do they elect aldermen?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Yes, it has a regular municipal organization, with a mayor and council. While I am on my feet, I would like to direct the attention of the minister to another matter, and that is a postal service for the new mining camp of Gowganda. The most active centre of business in all Canada to-day is in Elk lake and Gowganda. The minister has been good enough to give a service to Elk lake, and also I believe to South Gowganda. But Gowganda proper, which is now being created a town by the legislature of Ontario, has for weeks been trying to get a postal service. The minister says he has taken it up and he is waiting for it to be erected into a town by the legislature of Ontario. But in the meantime it is an immense business centre. There are some days a hundred teams of traffic on the road to Gowganda. There are three banks now, there are hotels and stores being built every day, many capitalists are going up there, a telephone wire is being put in, and the people greatly feel the need of improved postal facilities. It is true it will cost a little more money, perhaps $5 or $10 a day, to establish a first-class courier service from Earlton and Elk lake, but there is so great a business there that it would pay the government to make an extra effort to give them a first-class accommodation. The revenue the customs house is taking in from the consumption of dutiable goods in Gowganda and in that northern country, I fancy, is larger than the revenue derived from cities of 20,000 persons. It is the centre of a great industry, and in view of these facts the government ought to follow the enterprise of those people and give them an excellent postal service. If the minister does that he will gain the approval not only of that portion of Ontario but of the whole country. There are men coming in there now from New York, from Montreal, from Toronto, from the old country, they are driving in there, they are on the trail now, for navigation to open to get in, and there will be a rush there in a short time. That being the case the place is worthy of a good postal service. I understand the minister has delayed action until the Ontario government has established the town site. But there are lots of houses there which would be glad to take care of the post office and give every reasonable accommodation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad my hon. friend has again brought this matter to my attention. As he is aware, we have called for tenders between Earlton and Elk City. Although during the season of bad roads we are paying $25 a day and for the remainder of the year $5 a day to the present service, yet the department has not hesitated for a moment to undertake that expense for the benefit of the people at Gowganda. At another point I have just established a tri-weekly service which is quite sufficient for the present. We are now paying $30 a day for only a few people in that country, but as soon as the tenders are in and the Ontario government have settled where the town site will be, the postal service will be established. But I do not think it would be fair to the Ontario government if we were to locate a post office outside the town site, I think it is only fair that we should wait the action of that government. The Ontario government are doing their utmost to meet our wishes.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I think the town site was defined yesterday in a Bill in the legislature.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. I would like to say a word with reference to a free mail delivery for the town of Owen Sound. I forwarded a communication to the minister, but he has not yet answered it. The town of Owen Sound, as the minister may have noticed, is about to be incorporated into a city. It has a population at present of about 13,000, and it has lately annexed a portion of the adjoining village of Brooke. According to the last report of the Postmaster General, it had a revenue in 1908 of $23,000; and I think I am safe in saying that after the annexation of the town of Brooke it will have a revenue of $25,000 or $26,000. The number of post office orders issued last year was 3,116.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend need not go any further. If they have that population and revenue they are entitled to free mail delivery within the city.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Thank you very much. Will the Postmaster General kindly inform me what steps are necessary to secure free mail delivery?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The city clerk sends officially to the department a statement as to the population of the new city of Owen Sound, because, I understand, you have made additions to the city. Then the city must undertake to number the streets in order to facilitate the delivery of letters. When that is done we send our inspector to organize the delivery, we appoint letter carriers and we give notice to that effect to the citizens.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO. Will the minister kindly send me a communication to that effect?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Very well.

Mr. SMYTH. I understand that the hon. the Postmaster General this afternoon made a statement that some of the members on this side of the House had been abusing the franking privilege by sending prospectuses in connection with some enterprise in Gowganda through the mails. As a member from that northern part of the country and being engaged in the mining industry to a certain extent I felt that perhaps it was a reflection upon myself.

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, it is not the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SMYTH. I think the hon. gentleman surely then should have been as frank in his statement as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were with him, because they named the parties who were doing the franking. I feel that it is a reflection upon myself and I rise to say that I am not guilty of using the franking privilege in that way. But while I am on my feet I might just say that I know whereof I speak, because, within a very few days of becoming a candidate for the House of Commons, I had the honour to be one of your humble servants in being the postmaster at a town in the district of Algoma, and I was astonished at the quantity of matter that was franked through that office, notwithstanding that it is only a small country office, under the frank of several gentlemen on the other side of the House. It was sent all over the constituency and it was nothing more or less than political literature. I think that some portraits of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) were franked through my post office, and one person had the—I might say—gall to want to take one of these portraits of our honoured leader, and have it posted on my store window to show the good qualities of our worthy Prime Minister. Of course, I objected to that, but I just want to say that there was a great deal of franking done through that small office and judging from the amount of matter that went through that office I am sure it must have been sent through some of the larger offices in that district by the ton weight.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I did not have in mind the hon. gentleman this afternoon when I referred to the use which had been made of the franking privilege to spread broadcast circulars concerning Gowganda shares. What I said was that I had received from a firm in Toronto a complaint that a gentleman in the House, a new member probably, was using his frank to send circulars through the country. The firm which complained was in the same business as the member who was using the frank and it was a matter of rivalry between the two firms.

Mr. GEO. GORDON. As I have the honour to represent the constituency in which Gowganda is situated, and since the minister has been good enough to clear the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Smyth) of the charge made this afternoon, I would ask him to say that I am not the person referred to either. I have not abused the franking privileges in any way, nor shall I do so as long as I am a member of this House. I thank the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) for impressing upon the Postmaster General the advisability of giving postal facilities to Gowganda just as quickly as he possibly can. I would have said something before this upon the subject, had I not had the assurance of the Postmaster General that he was doing all he could and that he would have a post-office there within a very few days.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend was not the member mentioned nor intended to be mentioned. Therefore he is not guilty.

Mr. MADDIN. I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. the Postmaster

General the fact that the city of Sydney, in the constituency which I have the honour to represent, has a population, as nearly as it could be enumerated a year ago, by the clergymen of the different denominations, the school teachers in the city, and the assessors under the direction of the city council, of 14,800 plus and that for the last two or three years the question of free mail delivery has been mooted down there. Some three years ago the city numbered the different streets in order to comply with that part of the regulations. I would like to ask the Postmaster General now what further steps are necessary to be taken in order to have the free mail delivery system inaugurated in that city. Whilst I am on my feet there are three other little matters which I desire to mention. I am sorry to be delaying the passing of these estimates, I have no objection to them, I may say, and I feel quite satisfied the Postmaster General is endeavouring to do his very best under the circumstances. I am not criticising the expenditure. There is a new town called Waterford and at this place two coal mines were opened up about 15 months ago. There are residing at that place over 200 families, and as the mine goes deeper and its development and output increase this population will grow. A year from the incoming spring they will have anywhere from 500 to 600 men employed at mines Nos. 12 and 14. For the last eight or nine months mail matter directed to that place has been carried to the employees and people living there in the houses erected by the Coal Co. by merchants who truck their goods from Sydney, and the adjoining towns of Glace Bay and Dominion.

A post office was promised to Waterford and several local people were told they would be appointed postmaster, so that the Postmaster General will have no difficulty in selecting somebody for the position. It is absolutely necessary that a post office should be opened there when we consider that there are over 200 families who are dependent on the present altogether inadequate mail service. Then again, there is a stretch of twelve miles of rich farming country along the Myra river extending from Marion bridge to Salmon river, which is without a post office. There is a post office at Marion bridge and another at Salmon river but in the twelve miles between there is none, and in view of the fact that the Post Office Department had a surplus last year and that the estimates for this year include an increase of $193,000 for the mail service, I press upon the Postmaster General that he should open a new post office within that twelve miles of country. I would also direct the attention of the Postmaster General to another matter. If the hon. minister was present when the resolution of the hon. member for Guysborough was being discussed early in the session, he will remember that I pointed out that it would greatly assist the isolated fishing villages round the coast if they were granted better postal facilities. The constituency I represent has an extensive coast line and so my constituents are greatly interested in this matter. The mail for Bauline is made up at Main-à-Dieu and despatched to Bauline once every week on Friday. Now, the mail for Little Lorraine is also made up at Main-à-Dieu and goes to Little Lorraine three times a week. Little Lorraine and Bauline are equi-distant from Main-à-Dieu where the mail is made up and the mail carrier in going from Main-à-Dieu to Little Lorraine is obliged to pass within a mile or a mile and a half of Bauline, so that the Postmaster General could very easily provide that the people of Bauline should have a mail delivery three times a week. These people are all settled very closely together in a little cove thrust out on the Rocky shores of the Atlantic, and although they are only thirty miles from Sydney, so far as the mail service is concerned they are as far away from that city as if they lived in Vancouver. These are the only matters in connection with the Post Office estimates which I wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General, and I trust he will give them the consideration which I think they deserve. As to free mail delivery in the city of Sydney, the Postmaster General has stated that if there was a population of over 13,000 in a city it was entitled to this privilege.

Mr. LEMIEUX. And a revenue of over $20,000. I am told that the revenue of Sydney is $22,000 so that it comes within the rule.

Mr. MADDIN. Yes. I may take it for granted then that the free mail delivery system will be extended to the town of Sydney.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My answer to the hon. gentleman from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) covers the city of Sydney. If there are over 200 families at Waterford I am surprised they have not already applied for a post office. How far are they from the nearest post office?

Mr. MADDIN. The nearest post office is at Lingan, five miles away. The Postmaster at Lingan has a son who runs a store at Waterford and he goes home nearly every day or his brother comes over to Lingan and the mail is handled by them in that way. I know for a fact that a request for a post office at Waterford was submitted to Mr. Johnston who represented this riding in the last parliament and he gave his personal pledge that a post office would be established. In fact this young man Burke, the son of the postmaster at Lingan who does business at the new town of Waterford was promised the appointment of postmaster and so far as I am personally concerned there would be no objection to his appointment because he is doing his work pretty well now.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will look up the papers in these cases.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. We would like very much to have the post office at New Westminster made a city post office. What are the requirements for a city post office?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are three grades, the ordinary post office, the city staff post office, and finally the city post office. The New Westminster post office has not yet reached the dignity of city staff standing. New Westminster is entitled to free delivery and that will lead to the other grade in a few months probably. The other day we wrote to the New Westminster authorities and within five or six weeks we will probably have a free city delivery, but my hon. friend must not be too ambitious to begin with. We are chary about establishing city post offices because they will come under the Civil Service Act and that will entail quite a large expenditure, so that the revenue from such offices must be correspondingly large. It is only the post offices in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver, London, Hamilton, Quebec, Halifax and such large cities that are city post offices.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I appreciate very much what the Postmaster General is going to do in giving us free city delivery, but I would impress on him that the business of the New Westminster post office is very congested.

Mr. LEMIEUX. What is the revenue?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. $22,000 according to the last report.

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are offices yielding a revenue of $60,000 which have not reached the dignity of city post offices, but that will come in time.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. What we want in New Westminster is that the government shall take the responsibility of administering the office and provide a sufficient staff to do the work. At present the postmaster controls the office and pays his assistants, and he claims that the revenue does not permit him to engage sufficient men to provide the service to which the city is entitled; because, in addition to attending to the city service, the office is the distributing office for the district. The people of New Westminster will be very much disappointed to know that they are only getting half measure from the department, because they supposed that when they got free delivery, they would get what usually goes with it. I may say that New Westminster has been growing very rapidly of late. Within a few years its population has doubled, and the conditions which were all right a few years ago have become almost intolerable, and it will be a source of great embarrassment to the people if the post office does not keep up with the march of progress made by the city.

Mr. BRADBURY. I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that about a month ago I made application for a post office at Hazel Ridge, on the Molson cut-off of the Canadian Pacific Railway, about twenty-five miles east of Winnipeg. There is a station there, so that the expense would be very small. At present people have to travel five miles to get their mail, and sometimes the roads are impassable. I hope the minister will see his way to provide that post office.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the petition has been sent, it is probably now in the hands of the inspector, and I am awaiting his report.

Mr. BRADBURY. I hope the report will be favourable. If not, I hope the minister will see it is made favourable. I have also sent a letter to the minister in regard to the need of improved mail facilities between Selkirk and Winnipeg.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I received the letter this morning, and the hon. member will get the answer to-morrow.

Mr. BRADBURY. The Selkirk people are labouring under great disadvantages at the present time, and I trust that the minister will see his way to giving them the improved facilities they desire.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. I want to say a word in support of the position taken by my hon. friend from New Westminster. I never could understand why a postmaster in a city office and the men employed under him should not be directly employed and paid by the government. In offices where this is not the case, the tendency is to increase the salary of the postmaster and get inefficient labour at small salaries to assist him.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The policy of the department, since a year or fifteen months ago, has been, wherever we are justified by the revenue of the post office, to fix the salary of the postmaster at a point and pay the officers under him.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. Is there a fixed revenue?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We have adopted the $20,000, but if the revenue is close to that figure, we do not exact the pound of flesh. At the same time, we give the city the benefit of free delivery.

Mr. RALPH SMITH. My point is that if you employ a postmaster to supervise an office, with a revenue of $20,000, why do you not do the same for an office with a revenue of $15,000? I think the postmaster should be put on salary, and the employees under him should be paid and supervised by the department in both cases.

Mr. HERRON. Complaints are made that the accommodation for the post office of the town of Pincher Creek, where I live, are very inadequate. It is a little place six feet by ten to accommodate a town of 1,500 people; that is the exact size, because I measured it, and there is only one wicket for all the business of the office. However I have no complaint to make about the way the business is conducted, including money orders and postal notes. I am sure the Postmaster General himself will admit that this is not the kind of mail service that should be given to the people of a town of that size. About a month ago I put in an application for a post office at Spring Ridge, which is in the direction of the Kootenay river. Has the minister arrived at a decision in regard to it? I think generally we should have better mail service in that country than we have. I believe we are entitled to tri-weekly mails where now they are only weekly. There are mail routes there that have been established for ten or twelve years, well settled throughout their whole length and yet with only one mail a week. The people are complaining, more particularly in view of the fact that the Postmaster General is able to report a large surplus. One other point: complaints have been made to the Postmaster General, either through myself or direct, of the condition of the post office at Macleod. I am sure that the Postmaster General will admit that the accommodations there are not sufficient. Macleod is an important centre of commerce. The post office service there is not fit for a place one-fifth the size, and the Postmaster General knows it. There are other complaints that I need not mention here.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As to the Macleod post office, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Herron) has already called my attention to the matter outside this House, and it is now engaging the attention of the department. This is the first time my hon. friend has told me of the unsatisfactory accommodation of the post office at Pincher Creek.

Mr. HERRON. I was not complaining of the postmaster——

Mr. LEMIEUX. I quite understand, it is a question of the accommodation. I take a special note of the hon. gentleman's complaint. I suppose he is simply re-echoing the complaint of the public, and we will notify the postmaster to provide the necessary accommodation. As regards the increase in the mail service from weekly to tri-weekly and daily, I may say that we have been making these increases quite freely for the last few years. In this year's report of the department, the hon. gentleman will see that the number of miles which the mails have been carried by railway, water route and ordinary land route was 1,129,779 miles more than the previous year. Of course, the railway and water routes account for a great deal of this, but still there is a large increase in the land route system also. I do not at all refuse to increase the service when there is the least justification for doing so. I have stated before, when my estimates were before the House, that where there is a population of, say, 25 or 30 people in the Northwest, I never refuse to open a post office. When the distance is not extraordinarily long I usually begin with a tri-weekly service. That is my policy for the west, and when the railways run near by and settlements extend, I increase the mails in many cases for tri-weekly to daily.

Mr. HERRON. I have in mind now a route running south from my town through thickly-settled country for twenty miles or more, a route that has been in existence for ten years or more, and still only one mail a week. That is one case, and I believe you can find dozens of others in my own constituency. I do not know whether these people have been making requests for a better service—they have not been making them through me. But the facts are as I have stated. There are three or four hundred families on a route, and they come twelve miles for their mail to the different post offices along the route. I do not think that is a proper service.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not, either.

Mr. BARNARD. Has the minister any recent communications from the letter carriers of Victoria requesting to be placed on the regular Civil Service staff? I had occasion to discuss that question with them at some length when in Victoria, and it seemed to me the argument they made was a very good one indeed. They claimed that the care they are required to take in connection with the registered mail required just as much education, and just as much attention to duty and just as much responsibility as is required of many of the second and third-class clerks in the regular Civil Service. I would bespeak from the minister favourable consideration of this request, and I would ask him to tell me if he has come to any conclusion on the matter or whether it is still under consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend (Mr. Barnard) was absent from the House a moment ago when that matter was discussed. I explained my position. Briefly, I stated that a report is being prepared by the acting deputy Postmaster General, Mr. Laschinger, which I am submitting to council. In fact, the question is before the government and is engaging the serious attention of my colleagues. More than that I cannot say, except that the letter carriers and the outside service generally know where my sympathies are.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. I would like to ask the Postmaster General with regard to a petition I presented to him about a year ago, asking for a post office at Graham station. So far I have not had any word from the department though I have been led to believe that a report was made.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will take that up to-morrow. I have been away.

Mr. McALISTER. It is rather late now, and I feel ashamed to retard the passage of these estimates. But with regard to franking I wish to say a word. I may inform hon. gentlemen opposite that nothing of that kind was done in Kings and Albert. Our postage cost us between $500 or $600. I wish, however, to call the attention of the Postmaster General and hon. members on both sides of the House to a little matter that may or may not be of importance. We have a large number of postmasters in Kings and Albert, and I am safe in saying that three-quarters of them are Conservatives. That is all right——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McALISTER——so long as they behave themselves. We paid for our postage, and I am sorry to inform the House that in certain localities a considerable quantity of campaign literature was not distributed by the postmasters and never reached its destination. I think the minister in those cases should take some action. I can produce men to whom papers were addressed who never received them, and these postmasters protested because their attention was called to the non-delivery. To hear hon. gentlemen opposite talking to-day one would suppose that everything that went wrong occurred on this side of the House.

Mr. BARR. Hear, hear.

Mr. McALISTER. I do not think that is the case; I think we are fairly equally divided in that respect.

Mr. ROCHE. Has a post office yet been opened in Pope, on the Grand Trunk Pacific? Up to two weeks ago it had not been opened. The minister informed me that he was waiting for the recommendation of a postmaster. Many people there have to go several miles for their mail although there is a tri-weekly train service through the place, all because the defeated candidate who has the patronage has been careless or apathetic in making a recommendation. The people have petitioned for an office, naming a postmaster. This system of appointment should be amended and after a certain length of time, if the person controlling the patronage does not act the department should act on the petition of the people.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will see that the appointment is made as soon as possible. My hon. friend will understand that in matters of this kind we have to act on the recommendation of some one in the constituency, and the candidate is, of course, a respectable man in good standing whose advice is likely to be valuable. I shall have the appointment made as soon as possible.

Mail services, $193,000.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Would the minister explain the system of rural free mail delivery which he has established?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have already explained to the House during the last session the plan I would favour for the Dominion as regards rural mail delivery. I then said that I would not favour the system adopted generally in the United States because it was beyond our means. Without taking too much time to quote the figures of the American postal authorities, I may say there are two systems of delivery in the United States of mail matter addressed to persons residing in rural districts; first the rural free delivery and second the star route system which we have adopted. The former is widely known and need not be described particularly. The latter is incidental to the transportation of the mail over star or stage routes. The contracts for it include an obligation to deliver mail into boxes erected along the lines of such routes. Rural mail delivery as they have it in the United States to-day has been in operation for over 12 years. Starting as an experiment in 1895, on 93 rural routes, the number of routes increased in 1896 to 148, in 1899 to 391, in 1900 to 1,276, and from that on by leaps and bounds until at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1908, there were 39,277 routes in operation. The expenditure—and this is the future which justified the department in adopting the present very conservative system of rural mail delivery— the expenditure for rural mail delivery in the United States, which in 1897 was only $14,840, in 1898 $50,241, in 1899 $150,012, and in 1900 $420,433, had at the close of the fiscal year June 30, 1908, reached the stupendous total of $34,360,463. It is out of the question for Canada, having the same territory with the climate she has—and of course the climate affects the routes—for the small population compared with the population of the United States and with a much smaller postal revenue to adopt the system which cost the United States annually $34,360,463.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister think that the United States pretend to furnish the mails in the sparsely settled districts of that country by the free mail delivery system?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Suppose the United States do not deliver the mail free in the sparsely settled districts, then if it costs so much money in the settled districts, what will it cost in our own districts where we have the same territory to cover? Listen to this:

The average annual salary paid to a rural carrier for the year ending June 30, 1893, was something over $178; for the year 1899, over $383; for the year 1901, over $406: for the year 1903, $532; for the year 1905, $650. In 1907 the rural mail carrier in the United States received an average salary of $711 a year, and for the year 1908, $877.88, and the end is not yet in sight.

Say the postal authorities of the United States. So it is out of the question for us to adopt the system of the United States. It would mean the ruin of the Post Office Department; it would mean wiping out of our total revenue. Now, we have adopted a system which is fairly described in this booklet which I intend to distribute to the members of the House. The Post Office Department has decided to undertake the delivery and collection of mail matter to a number of persons residing in rural districts along and contiguous to the line of travel of our existing stage routes, of one mile and upwards in length, upon receipt of a properly signed petition for such services from the residents of each of the rural districts traversed by such routes. Petition forms will be obtained upon application to the post office inspectors, or to the Post Office Department, mail contract branch, Ottawa. Now, who are the persons entitled to the privilege of a rural box? I cannot give a better definition of the system than by reading what the department is spreading through the country.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister will allow this one item to stand over and pass the other two. I fancy this discussion will take an hour or two, there are several gentlemen who wish to speak on it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would prefer to pass the whole item. Supplementary estimates for this year will be laid on the table shortly, and the whole question can be resumed then. In these estimates which will be laid on the table within five or six days I have a similar item, not so large, under which this same discussion could take place. We need this money in the department. This discussion can take place at any time on the other items; in fact, I will arrange with my hon. friend the whip (Mr. Geo. Taylor) to have the discussion then.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that will be satisfactory.

Miscellaneous, $545,500.

Mr. ARMSTRONG.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) wanted to say something about miscellaneous in the next item.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The very same items will come up in the supplementary estimates, but for lesser amounts, and I will arrange with my hon. friend the whip for a special debate. When these supplementary estimates are before the House all these questions may be brought up then.

Mr. BURRELL. I was going to ask the minister if he could not hold over this item till next week as I have to go away and may possibly be absent for several days.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will not take up the supplementary items until my hon. friend gets back.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. I would suggest that that pamphlet on rural mail delivery be distributed to each member.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Certainly.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, March 1, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CARRYING OFFENSIVE WEAPONS.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS (West Huron). Moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 83) respecting offensive weapons and capital offences. He said: The Bill which I desire to introduce is designed to diminish the criminal offences now unfortunately occurring so frequently in Canada. It is of a preventive nature, not of a penal character. The first five clauses refer to weapons which are commonly carried by criminals. The first is designed for the protection of immigrants arriving in this country. As we are all aware, around the terminals of the railways, and the wharfs where steamships land, are a great many pawn shops and shops of second hand dealers where revolvers are exposed for sale: strings upon strings of same in the windows. Now, immigrants who come from southern Europe and who are accustomed to carry stilettos, knives and other implements with which to avenge their fancied wrongs, when they come to this supposed wild western country and find exposed to their view these murderous weapons, they naturally think they require them for their protection, and purchase them.

Sir, poisons are kept under lock and key and sold only by permit. I seek to provide.

under the first section of this Bill, that revolvers and pistols are to be in the same category, so that the one who sells them must have a permit from a judge or police officer. Under present law, persons are prohibited from carrying revolvers; why, then, should these weapons be exhibited for sale? The last clause of the Bill refers to punishment for capital offences. Under the Canadian law, a person found guilty of a capital offence is sentenced by the judge to be taken from the place from which he came, kept there for a certain time—generally, two or three months—and there hanged by the neck until he is dead. Under section 1064 of the Criminal Code, it is provided that the person condemned to death shall be hanged inside the jail in which he is confined on the day of execution. The clause that I propose in this Bill requires that a prisoner sentenced to death shall be immediately removed to the nearest penitentiary where the last penalty shall be inflicted upon him. In this we shall only be following the present law of the state of New York. Capital offenders being hanged or electrocuted at Sing Sing. And as long ago as 44-5 Victoria—that is, 1881—the British parliament passed a law under which a judge sentencing a person to capital punishment, may, if he sees fit, order his removal to the penitentiary or central prison, and this is generally done. Under our present system, where a crime is committed in a small village or town, the condemned remains for two or three months in the local prison awaiting the execution of the sentence. In the meantime, the whole community is stirred up, all the morbid curiosity and mawkish sentimentality of the people is aroused, and the result is that one murder often leads to two, because crimes are epidemic. I have spoken to a great many people of different classes about this clause, people who were interested in the matter, such as officials of the law, as well as citizens in various walks of life, and I have yet to find a single one—excepting one gentleman, a member of this House to whom I spoke this morning—to disagree with my belief that such a clause as I here proposed should be put upon the statute-book. Another point in favour of this proposed measure is that the prisoner will be saved the refinement of cruelty, for, while he may not hear the nails being driven into his coffin, he does hear them being driven into his scaffold when confined in a common jail and frequently he sees the gallows being erected for his excution.

Mr. SPEAKER. I may remind the hon. member (Mr. Lewis) the practice is merely to explain the provisions of the Bill on first reading, not to debate it.

Mr. LEWIS. I move the first reading of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Hon. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). I desire to ask when we may expect the printed report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the branch lines connecting with the Intercolonial.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The report was ordered printed by motion of this House. I have no more information than my hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) has concerning the printing of it. But I will make inquiries.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). I would again call attention to returns which, I think, ought to be down by this time. There are the returns with reference to the dredging industry and the financial returns. One wants a little time to look these over, and the preparation of them ought not to take long. There is also the return of the armouries to be brought down by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden). It is quite a long time since the motion for this order was passed.

Mr. H. B. AMES (Montreal, St. Antoine). I would like to remind the Minister of Finance that a week ago we asked for certain returns and received a promise that they should be brought down shortly. They are not down yet. It is six weeks since these returns were ordered.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Many returns apparently simple involve the examination of books and papers over an extended period. I have every disposition to bring these returns down as quickly as possible, and have ordered accordingly.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY—FORT WILLIAM JOINT SECTION.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 25) respecting the joint section of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company at Fort William, Ontario—Mr. Turriff.

On section 1.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are two Bills of similar nature and in order to expedite their passage through the committee we appointed a subcommittee who went over them very carefully and made certain amendments which the Railway Committee as a whole approved of, making one change in this section by striking out the reference to every party mentioned except the two making the agreement. The original draft says 'all other parties.' We struck that out and left it binding only on the parties who made the agreement.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN, LIVERPOOL AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 44), to incorporate the Canadian Liverpool and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

On section 1.

Mr. LENNOX. As the Minister of Railways knows this Bill has been the subject of a good deal of contention and I believe it was discussed pretty fully on Friday night. The member for Quebec West (Mr. Price) is absent and the people of the Quebec district are very much interested in this Bill. I have also had a communication from a gentleman representing the Union of Canadian Municipalities, requesting that the Bill be allowed to stand over. It is suggested that if it stands over a discussion now going on will probably lead to an amicable arrangement satisfactory to all parties. I would move that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. GIRARD. I do not see why the suggestion of my hon. friend should be concurred in. I was not here for the discussion on Friday night, but I do not understand that the member for Quebec West (Mr. Price) intends to oppose the Bill, I do not believe he is so strongly opposed to it that he would come before the House and ask to have it stand. There are members present from Quebec who would be able to discuss the Bill and I believe it should pass as it is on the Order Paper.

Mr. LENNOX. There is no great reason why it should not stand. The union of Canadian municipalities is a very strong and important organization, and they have asked to have it to stand. The member for Quebec West (Mr. Price) of course represents an important section on this side of the House, and I submit that no inconvenience will result from allowing it to stand.

Progress reported.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 46) respecting the Crawford Bay and St. Mary's Railway Company, and to change its name to 'The British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba Railway Company.—Mr. W. McIntyre.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 76) to incorporate the Imperial Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. A. Haggart.

QUESTIONS.

MOTOR CARS ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. What has been the total cost of construction of motor cars Nos. 225, 226, 227?

Mr. GRAHAM.

2. What date were these cars put in operation by the Railway Department and on what roads?

3. What is the total revenue to December 31, 1908, also cost of maintenance of said cars to same date?

4. Are these cars running now? If so, where? If they are not what is the reason?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. $55,800.00.

2. One car was placed on the run from St. John to Hampton and return, August 5, 1907, the second car was placed on the run from Halifax to Windsor Junction and return, 9th October, 1907, the third car being used as a spare one while the others were being worked into shape. More or less minor difficulties, incidental to all new enterprises were encountered, but are being gradually remedied. During the year 1908, one car was on the River Ouelle Branch and gave good satisfaction. One was running between Levis and Chaudiere and one between Halifax and Windsor Junction.

3. The revenue has not been worked out, the cost of maintenance for the three cars to date was $4,669.11.

4. One between Halifax and Windsor Junction. Two in the shops for general repairs in order to be ready for next summer's business.

Dr. J. S. RUTHERFORD.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Has Dr. J. S. Rutherford, veterinary director general, tendered his resignation?

2. If so what are the reasons of said resignation?

3. Has said resignation been accepted? If not, what has been done in regard to it?

4. Does Dr. Rutherford fulfil duties beyond those generally attached to his position of veterinary director general?

5. What is his salary as veterinary director general?

6. Does he receive any other emolument?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture):

1, 2 and 3. Dr. Rutherford did some time ago tender his resignation, but has since withdrawn it.

4. Yes. He is Live Stock Commissioner and is also charged with the administration of the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

5 and 6. For all his services he receives a salary of $4,000 a year.

'DEBATES,' COST OF PRINTING.

Mr. G. BOYER asked. (Translation):

What was the cost of printing 'Hansard' for the last session of the preceding parliament, including the composition of the matter on metal, the printing and paper?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State). (Translation.) Daily edition, English version, one hundred and forty-eight copies (148.) Sixteen thousand and thirty five dollars ($16,935.) Stitched, two thousand one hundred and one (2,831) copies, seven volumes (7), fourteen thousand one hundred and forty columns (14,140)—Nineteen thousand, five hundred and ninety dollars and six cents ($19,597.06.)

Total—Thirty six thousand five hundred and thirty two dollars and six cents ($36,532.06). Stitched, French version: Five hundred and seven (507) copies, seven (7) volumes, fourteen thousand five hundred and thirty four (14,534) columns. Twenty six thousand six hundred, ninety three dollars and fourteen cents ($26,693.14).

QUEBEC TERCENTENARY.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What amount of money was subscribed by government and private individuals, respectively, to the tercentenary battlefields celebration of last year, and what amount thereof was spent on the celebration?

2. What amount was spent out of the permanent fund for additions and improvements of the battlefields, and of what did they consist?

3. What amount of the permanent fund is still held by the trustees?

4. Who is the permanent secretary of the commission, what salary has he been paid, and out of what appropriation?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. There are two funds, the Battlefields fund and the Tercentenary fund. The amount subscribed by the governments of the provinces and private individuals to the 31st January towards the Battlefields fund was.. .. ..$450,488 79
And from the sale of materials on the Pierre Cauchon property.. 391 90

$450,880 69

Towards the Tercentenary fund from the Dominion government.. .. ..$300,000 00
Sales of tickets for pageants.... 32,280 88
Refunds, sales of effects, &c.... 3,557 32

$335,838 20
Amount spent on the celebration. 321,168 69

$ 14,669 51

2. To the 31st January last, for printing, telegrams, cables, notaries' services for searching titles, surveying fees, travelling expenses, &c.. .. ..$6,608 03
For purchase of Pierre Cauchon property on Ste. Foye road.. .. 7,846 55

3. $436,426.11.

4. No permanent secretary has been appointed.

DEBATES—STAFF OF TRANSLATION OFFICE OF 'HANSARD.'

Mr. G. BOYER asked. (Translation).

1. Of how many persons is the translation office of 'Hansard,' French version, composed, comprising the translators and all other persons co-operating in this work?

2. What was the total amount of salaries paid to these employees last session?

Hon. C. MURPHY (Secretary of State): 1 and 2. The number of persons employed in the translation office of 'Hansard,' French version, is 12, all of whom are translators or proof-readers. In addition there is a caretaker of the building in which they are employed. These employees are not paid by the session, but by the year. The total sum received by them during the fiscal year 1908-9 was as follows:

Translators and proof-readers....$22,500 00
Caretaker.. .. .. 300 00

Total.. .. ..$23,800 00

In addition to the above there is a sessional messenger of the House of Commons detailed to act as messenger between the French 'Hansard' translation office, the House of Commons and the Printing Bureau.

COLLAPSE OF THE QUEBEC BRIDGE—TRANSLATION OF REPORT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY.

Mr. G. BOYER asked. (Translation).

1. Is the report of the commission of inquiry relating to the Quebec bridge catastrophe, given out to be translated into French? If so, who is charged with this translation, and is he a civil servant already under salary?

2. When was it given out, and how many pages are now translated?

The Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). (Translation.)

1. The report of the commission of inquiry relating to the collapse of the Quebec bridge has been translated into French and the French version is now being distributed. The translation has been done by Mr. Ulric Barthé, of Quebec, who is not in the Civil Service and therefore does not receive a salary from the government.

2. That the report was given out to be translated in November last. The translation is now completed. The minutes of proceedings of the investigation which will be appended to the report of the commission of inquiry have been translated and are now under print.

RICHMOND RIFLE RANGE.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR, asked:

1. Have representations been received by the Militia Department of danger from shooting on the Richmond rifle range, because of insufficiency of protection afforded by the stop butts?

2. If so, will steps be taken before target practice season opens to secure safety?

3. If not, will the department communicate on the subject with the clerk of Richmond municipality and with the officer commanding the 6th Regiment?

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1 and 2. No such representations have been made to headquarters.

3. The District Officer Commanding has been called upon to furnish a report.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—HOURS OF WORK.

Mr. STANFIELD—by Mr. Blain—asked:

1. On what date were the employees of the Intercolonial Railway classed as mechanics, put on 8 hours a day and 8 hours pay?

2. Was this done as a retrenchment in view of a deficit?

3. If so, is the deficiency chargeable to that branch of the service?

4. If not, why was this reduction put upon the employees of that branch of the service?

5. Is it the intention of the government to continue that 8 hours a day, 8 hours pay in that branch of the service for all time to come? If not, for what length of time?

6. How many employees are affected by the reduction from 10 to 8 hours?

7. What is the saving effected monthly by the change?

8. Has there been any curtailment made in the official staff of the road? If not, why not, in view of the deficit?

9. Has the government received any communications from the men affected in respect of the matter?

10. If so, what is the nature of the communication?

11. If any were received, what reply did the government make to the same?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1, January 1, 1909.

2. Largely because of the hours of daylight, and it did effect a saving.

3. A statement concerning the business of the road will be made later.

4. Answered by number 2.

5. Orders were given for full day of 10 hours to be resumed March 1.

6. 1665.

7. $16,700.

8. No.

9. No.

10. Answered by number nine.

11. Answered by number nine.

GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANK.

Mr. S. SHARPE asked:

1. What were the amounts on deposit in the Government Savings Department on October 1, 1889, October 1, 1896, and October 1, 1897 and 1898?

2. How many officials were employed in connection with the management of this fund in the years 1888, 1890, 1898, 1900 and 1908?

3. What was the cost of management of this fund in the years 1888, 1890, 1898, 1900 and 1908?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

If the hon. gentleman will put his question in the form of a motion for a return the information will be furnished as early as possible.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

EXPENSE OF NEGOTIATING GOVERNMENT LOANS.

Mr. S. SHARPE asked:

What expense, including commission and brokerage, were incurred by the government on the various loans negotiated by the government since the year 1896 at a rate of interest in excess of 3 per cent?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). The charges of the financial agents in London on the issue of loans since the year 1896 have been the same as those which were established for some years prior to that time. The charge for the sale of stock and bonds is ⅛th of one per cent.

In case of redemption, no charge therefore is allowed to the bank where it has the issuing of a loan to retire the bonds redeemed, but if no loan is issued by it ⅛th of one per cent is paid to the bank for redemption.

The bank is also paid the necessary out of pocket expenses for stamps, advertising, printing, brokerage, &c. The only new condition in connection with the business is that since 1904, to meet the established practice arising out of the changed conditions in the London money market, it has been deemed expedient to pay commission for underwriting. These commissions to underwriters (including brokerage) vary from one per cent to 1¼ per cent.

CATTLE-GUARDS AT RAILWAY CROSSINGS.

Mr. S. SHARPE asked:

1. What special complaints, if any, have been made to the government in regard to the failure of railway companies to supply suitable cattle-guards, which have been investigated by the government and what defects were discovered?

2. What steps did the government take to compel the railway to comply with the requirements of section 254 of the Railway Act?

3. What remedies, if any, were applied by the company, to remove the cause of the complaints regarding the inefficiency of their cattle-guards?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. There have been from time to time filed with the board individual complaints against railway companies for failure to furnish suitable cattle-guards, and these have been dealt with specifically by the board in every instance. It will, however, take some time to go over the records of the board for the past five years to ascertain what these special complaints were.

2. Whatever complaints have been made to the board, it has taken the matter up with the railway companies, and had suitable guards provided in accordance with the provisions of section 254 of the Railway Act.

3. See answer to number two.

CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES.

MR. JOHN LAMBERT PAYNE.

Mr. McKENZIE asked:

1. Is John Lambert Payne a member of the Civil Service of Canada?

2. If so, is he of the inside or outside service?

3. In which department of the Civil Service is the said John Lambert Payne employed, and at what salary?

4. What are the office hours of the said John Lambert Payne?

5. Is the said John Lambert Payne authorized by the government to engage as public prosecutor against persons at Ottawa alleged to be lending money at unlawful rates of interest?

6. If so appointed, at what salary, for what period and to which department does he report?

7. How much of his time did the said John Lambert Payne devote to said prosecutions since his appointment or since January 1, 1908?

8. Was there any reduction made from the ordinary salary of the said John Lambert Payne for time devoted to said prosecutions? If so, how much?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes.
2. Inside service.
3. Department of Railways and Canals, at $2,800.
4. The same as all members of the Civil Service.
5. No.
6. No.
7. The department is not aware that any of his official time was taken up with the prosecutions referred to.
8. No.

BRITISH COLUMBIA RAILWAY BELT LANDS.

Mr. GOODEVE asked:

1. Are the public lands in the railway belt of British Columbia Dominion lands within the meaning of section 3 of the Dominion Lands Act?

2. If so, why have settlers not received title?

3. If not within the meaning of that Act, why not and under what authority are they administered?

4. Have any homesteaders in that belt received Crown grants from the Dominion? If so, how many, and under what authority?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior.)

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1. Settlers have received title under the regulations prepared by authority of the Governor in Council, and patents have been issued to homesteaders from time to time on proof of the completion of required duties. These regulations are based upon the provisions contained in 'An Act Respecting Certain Public Lands in British Columbia,' being Chap. 59 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906 (formerly Chap. 56 Revised Statutes, 1886.)

3. Clause 4 of the Dominion Lands Act excludes the lands in the Railway Belt of British Columbia from the operation of the Dominion Lands Act. Regulations for the administration of lands in the railway belt in the province of British Columbia are provided by order in council of the 17th of September, 1889, and amending orders.

4. Yes, 1740, under the authority of the regulations for the disposal of Dominion lands within the Railway belt in British Columbia.

SUMMER FISHING—LAC DU BONNET.

Mr. CAMPBELL (by Mr. W. H. Sharpe) asked:

1. Is it the intention of the government to open Lac du Bonnet for summer fishing? If so, on whose recommendation?

2. Is a lease being granted to any person, firm or firms?

3. If so, what are his or their names, and on what terms is the lease being granted?

4. Have tenders for the summer fishing been called for? If not, why have tenders not been called for?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Not as at present advised.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. Answered by No. 1.
4. Answered by No. 1.

CANADIAN IMPORTS.

Mr. SINCLAIR asked:

What percentage of Canadian imports entered Canada during the year 1908 by way of Canadian ports?

Hon. Wm. PATERSON (Minister of Customs.) I presume the question means Canadian seaports. We have arrived at the answer by a process of deduction which is the only way the information can be given.

The total imports of the Dominion for the year ended March 31, 1908, for consumption were $358,428,616.

The goods entered for consumption from the United States amount to $210,652,825.

Leaving imports from countries other than the United States $147,775,791.

Goods from other countries imported through the United States, value $27,431,412.

Balance imported through Canadian seaports, value $120,344,379. Per cent 81½.

SANDY COVE BREAKWATER.

Mr. JAMESON asked:

Adverting to Sandy Cove breakwater, what are the names and addresses of the persons to whom money is yet owing, and what are the respective amounts due to each for labour performed on the work, and for materials used in construction, respectively?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). No money is owing by the government, but the department is informed that the following amounts are owing by the contractors:

MARINE DEPARTMENT—BOOK-KEEPING.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

1. Has Mr. Kenneth Falconer done any work upon or in connection with the books or book-keeping of the Marine and Fisheries Department since the investigation into his accounts in the Public Accounts Committee last session?

2. Has the work undertaken by Mr. Falconer been completed? If not, why not?

3. What is the date of the latest services rendered?

4. What is the total of Mr. Falconer's claim, how much has he been paid, and has he an unsettled claim?

5. What is the expense occasioned by change of methods in the department as the result of Mr. Falconer's work?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. Mr. A. T. Doud, of Kenneth Falconer's firm was employed from the 5th June to the 10th August, 1908, inspecting the work established by the firm in the agencies. Mr. Doud was only paid his travelling expenses.

2. Yes.

3. From the 5th of June to the 10th of August, 1908.

4. $42,223.17. Mr. Falconer has no claim against the department.

5. The establishment of a new system of book-keeping did not necessitate the increase of the staff.

Mr. LENNOX. What I meant by the fifth question was the expense of getting new books and all other such expense, not necessarily the change in the staff.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will get that information.

BANFIELD CREEK LIFEBOAT.

Mr. BARNARD asked:

1. What was the cost of the Banfield Creek lifeboat and when was it purchased?

2. Has the government made any inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the wreck of this lifeboat? If so, what was the result of such inquiries?

3. Upon what duty was the said lifeboat engaged when the wreck occurred?

4. Is it the intention of the government to have said lifeboat repaired? If so, what is the estimated cost of such repairs and when will same be completed?

5. Is the government, pending such repairs, making provision for protection of life from shipwreck in the west coast of Vancouver island? If so, what protection?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. $10.900. Contract made in May, 1907, delivered in November, 1907.

2. Reports were obtained from T. Gillen, coxswain in charge of the station, and from the agent of the department at Victoria. As a result of these reports the coxswain was discharged and the crew paid off.

3. The boat was at anchor in front of the station when the storm arose which destroyed the boat.

4. The matter is engaging the attention of the department.

5. The agent at Victoria has been instructed to place the Clo-oose lifeboat at Banfield and to obtain a proper crew for the boat.

UXBRIDGE POST OFFICE.

Mr. S. SHARPE asked:

When was the site for the Uxbridge post office purchased, what site was selected, at what price, and from whom purchased?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

An order in council was passed on February 8th, 1909, authorizing the purchase from L. H. Hutchinson, for $1,200, of lot 4, block G, corner Brock and Spruce streets.

CARIBOO MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. BURRELL asked:

1. What payments have been made since 1890 in connection with the mail service in Cariboo, and to whom were these payments made?

2. On what date was the last public tender called for in respect to the Cariboo mail service?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

1. Payments made for the Ashcroft station. Clinton and Barkerville mail service. From 1891 to 1897, British Columbia Express Co, $163,165; from 1898 to 1902, Kilgour & Miller, $116,187.45; from 1903 to 31st Dec., 1908, British Columbia Express Co., $158,539.82. Total, $437,892.27.

2. April 2, 1897.

WEEKLY MAIL—NOVA SCOTIA.

Mr. SINCLAIR asked:

What number of post offices in the provinces of Nova Scotia are accommodated with only weekly mails?

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General):

134.

HUMBOLDT ELECTION OFFICIALS

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Have the accounts of the election officials who acted in the general election of the 26th of October last for the electoral district of Humboldt been sent in to the government?

2. If so, have they been paid, and to whom was the money sent? If not, what is the cause of the delay?

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State):

1. These accounts have not been received by the Auditor General.

2. A letter, dated 19th February, from A. K. Thom (presumably the election clerk) addressed to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and which was transferred to the Auditor General on the 27th, states that some enumerators' and deputy returning officers' accounts are included in ballot box forwarded by express to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 19th February, and that other accounts will follow in a few days.

No payment has been made in connection with the expenses for holding the election in Humboldt.

BANK ACT.

Mr. MACDONELL asked:

Is it the intention of the Minister of Finance to introduce this session an amendment to the Bank Act or a revision thereof, containing renewals of the bank charters which expire in 1911, with a view to affording the public an opportunity to consider any proposed amendments which may be thought desirable, between the present session and the next session of parliament?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). No.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE STABLES.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

1. When were the stables at the entrance to the Royal Military College grounds erected and by whom?

2. Were tenders called for, and what was the amount of the original contract?

3. What was the total cost of the stables?

4. What are the dimensions of the building, and how many horses was it designed to accommodate?

5. Has the building been in general use since its completion? If not, why not?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. (a) Date of contract, May 9, 1905.
   (b) H. W. Watts.
2. (a) Yes.
   (b) $6,990.
3. $8,573.69.
4. (a) 96 feet by 38 feet.
   (b) 22 horses.
5. (To be answered by the Department of Militia and Defence).

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence):

1, 2, 3, 4. Appertain to the Department of Public Works.

5. No use has up to the present been made of these stables, because the quarters being erected for the accommodation of the men who will look after the horses are not yet completed.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE COTTAGES.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

1. What is the estimated total cost of the 16 cottages constructed for the accommodation of the civil subordinate staff at Kingston Royal Military College including fittings, furnishings, &c.

2. What portion of the work, in addition to the original contract, has been let by tender, to whom and at what price?

3. Has any of the work been let without tender? If so, what, to whom and the amount in each case?

Hon WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Original estimated cost, $96,000.
2. Alterations to main drain and lowering basement and inside drain, M. Sullivan.....$1,777.00
   Change to pressed brick..... 1,700.00
   Electric wiring and fixtures, Halliday Electric Company.. 3,550.00
   Outside connections, Halliday Electric Company 145.00
   Heating, Mr. Sullivan 2,750.00
3. Hot water boilers purchased from Cluff Bros. for $1,230, regular market price.

COST OF ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE STABLES.

Mr. EDWARDS asked:

1. What are the dimensions of the building at Kingston Royal Military College, referred to in the estimates as barracks accommodation for stables?
2. From whom were tenders received for construction of same, and amount of each?
3. When and to whom was the contract awarded, and what did the contract cover?
4. What is the cost of the building to date and what is the estimated total cost of the building, fittings and furnishings complete and ready for use?
5. Has any of the work been let without tender? If so, what portion, to whom, and to what amount in each case?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. 35 feet by 41 feet; two stories and basement.
2. M. Sullivan, $9,490; W. H. Godwin, Jr., and Enoch Godwin, Jr. $9,890; W. T. Chapman, $10,500.
3. (a) M. Sullivan, on January 15, 1909.
   (b) Excavation, mason work, brickwork, carpenter work, plastering, galvanized iron work, plumbing, painting and glazing.
4. (a) Nothing paid to date.
   (b) $15,000.
5. No.

RIVER DESLISLE FISHWAY.

Mr. BOYER moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports of inspectors and engineers relating to the position of a fishway at the entrance of the river at Deslisle, Soulanges.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister Marine and Fisheries). I have no objection to bring down the correspondence with regard to the construction of the fishway, but as my hon. friend is aware the matter is now before the courts, and it would not be advisable to bring down the reports of the inspectors and engineers.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

MOTIONS AGREED TO WITHOUT DISCUSSION.

For a return showing: 1. At what work the Translation Branch of the House of Commons is employed.

2. The number of permanent translators in this branch.
3. The total amount of salaries paid to these translators.
4. The documents, reports and other matters which have been translated in this branch in the last twelve months, not including the pages already translated in the preceding year and repeated for the purposes of the report, nor the tables already made and translated and repeated for the purpose of completing these reports and documents, which have been most recently translated.
5. The total number of pages translated by the permanent translators.
6. The number of persons, outside of the Translation branch, to whom has been given translation work.
7. How much this outside work has cost, and how many pages have been translated in this way.
8. What Blue-books, if any, and other matters, excepting 'Hansard,' are translated in other departments other than the Translation branch of the House of Commons, and in what departments.—Mr. Boyer.

All prepared correspondence between the government and the government of British Columbia with reference to the reduction of Indian reserves in that province proportionately to the decrease of Indian population as provided for by order in council.—Mr. Barnard.

For a return showing the average number of men employed in every capacity in the working, maintenance and repairs of the Carillon and Grenville canals during each of the following months: July and August, 1906 and 1908, September and October, 1907 and 1908; and the total outlay for wages and salaries, also the total expenditure of every kind in connection with the said canal during each of those months.—Mr. Perley.

For a return showing how many bushels of seed wheat were bought for Saskatchewan and Alberta for the season 1908, who it was bought from, at what price, and what grade it was; if the wheat so bought was cleaned for seed; how the wheat so bought was used; who it was sold to, and at what prices; the total loss in connection with the wheat so bought.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

For a return showing how many bushels of English oats were bought for seed in Saskatchewan and Alberta for the season 1908, and at what prices; the condition the oats were in before and when they were bought; if used for seed or sold; who they were sold to and at what prices; the total loss in connection with the oats bought in England, and any complaints there were about them.—Mr. W. H. Sharpe.

For a copy of all correspondence, documents and papers relating to the construction, or proposed construction, of a line of railway from a point at or near Caledonia to Liverpool, not exceeding 29 miles referred to in the Acts of 1903, chapter 57, section 23d, and all orders in council, reports, contracts, agreements and other papers relating to the same matter.—Mr. R. L. Borden.

For a copy of all correspondence since January 1, 1907, between the government and the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, Quebec and Three Rivers, respecting interest due or overdue on advances made by way of loans to these bodies by the government.—Mr. Ames.

For a return showing the names and addresses of all half-breeds living in the United States who have been allotted scrip since January, 1902, and to whom said scrip was sent or delivered.—Mr. Bradbury.

DISALLOWANCE OF COBALT LAKE ACT.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex) moved:

For a copy of all correspondence, orders in council, papers, and other documents relating to the disallowance, or application therefor, of an Act of the legislature of the province of Ontario, intituled: 'An Act respecting Cobalt lake and Kerr lake,' being chapter 15 of the statutes of 1907.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion is one which I think calls for some remarks in this House, owing to the widespread interest which has been taken in the Act in question—an Act which has been described as one of confiscation of private rights, which has been described by one of the ablest judges in the province of Ontario as a violation of the eighth commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal;' an Act which has been condemned in the most severe terms, not only by party papers, but by independent newspapers and financial papers in this country, and by some of the leading financial papers of the motherland. The Act is one of paramount importance to the parties immediately concerned, the Florence Mining Company, because, if the contention of that company is correct, one of the fundamental bases of constitutional government has been violated. If the position of that company is correct, the Florence Mining Company was entitled to a valuable claim in the township of Coleman, in what is commonly known as the Cobalt district; if their contention is correct they were, by virtue of discovery, by virtue of survey, by virtue of all the formalities required to comply with the general statutes of the province, entitled to the valuable property which shortly afterwards was conveyed by the government of the province of Ontario for a large sum of something over $1,000,000. It may be good policy from a financial standpoint to take away the property of people in order to increase the revenues of the province; it is all very well for most people to look on complacently and see the government confiscate the property of certain individuals in order that they may share in the spoils, but it is not much fun for the people whose property is thus taken away. It is not my intention to go into the merits of the case pro or con. What I say is that this company has been deprived by an Act of the legislature of Ontario, not only of what they say is their property, but of their privilege which any citizen has to go into the courts and establish their right to that property.

Now, what are the facts of the case? Under an Act of the province of Ontario, the General Mines Act, any person who makes a discovery of any property open for exploration, surveys it, marks it out and complies with the conditions prescribed, has a vested right in that property; the statute gives him a right to hold that property, a right to work that property, a right to obtain his title in due course. That is the position which they take. The dispute has been as to whether this property was open for exploration. Undoubtedly up to August, 1905, it was open for exploration. About that there is no dispute. By an order in council passed on August 14, 1905, by the Ontario government, the Cobalt lake and some other properties were withdrawn from exploration; about that I think there is no dispute. Shortly afterwards the whole township of Coleman, in which these properties were situated, was withdrawn from exploration. But an order in council was passed in October, 1905, the effect of which, it is claimed by the Florence Mining Company, to be that the township of Coleman was again open to exploration. That was the state of the case in December, 1905, when Mr. Green took it into his head, with Major Gordon and some other associates, to explore the bed of the Cobalt lake. They went to Haileybury; they went to the recorder's office; they went to the Crown Lands office in Toronto; they say they were furnished with maps; they were furnished with particulars which assured them that this township was open for exploration. They went to a considerable amount of expenditure; they obtained a diamond drill, and on the 7th of March, 1906, after prospecting for some time and after a great deal of expense, they made a valuable discovery as a result of their operations. Accordingly they then became entitled to get a patent, to get a registration of their claim. They went to the proper authorities and made their application, and then they were told that, notwithstanding what had happened, they were not entitled to their claim, that this property was not opened for exploration at that time. They contest that issue. They say it was open for exploration. They say: We went to your department; we got the land from your department; we were going on exploring, and it is not fair now for you to say after all this that it was withdrawn from exploration and that we have no rights in it at all.

Mr. FOSTER. At what date was it they alleged they got that information?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. Along some time in December, 1905, or January, 1906. The order in council was made in the previous October, which, they say, opened it for exploration. The matter went on; they said they would bring suit. First of all, they said, we will establish our claim; we will prove to you that it was open for exploration; the maps that were made showed it was open for exploration. But instead of accepting the issue, instead of giving them a hearing, the result was that by an Act, chapter 12 of the statutes of 1906, assented to on the 14th of May, the order in council was set out, and it provided that:

Notwithstanding that at or before the time of the passing of such order in council, a discovery or discoveries was or were made, or was or were alleged to have been made on such lands or any part or parts thereof, and notwithstanding that some claim or claims to the mining rights, mines or minerals therein or thereon was or were at or before such time pending.

So this statute does not authorize the sale of the property, it simply says that the rights acquired by discovery or otherwise shall be set aside and shall not be rights at all.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. What was the date that the discovery was filed with the department?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. On the 7th of March, 1906; that is when the discovery was made, and registration was applied for immediately afterwards. Notwithstanding that fact, the Florence people pressed their contention and they have pressed it to the present time. The next step, I think, was when action was brought by the Florence Mining Company on the 26th of December, 1906. That action was brought against the Cobalt Mining Company to whom the government had in the meantime sold the property, as I have said, for something over $1,000,000. That action had been commenced about the time the patent was granted. But if that were not enough, surely if they had the right to do that, it was not necessary to follow it up by an Act of the legislature to confirm it. But in the following April another Act was passed, which was assented to on the 20th April, 1907, which confirmed the sale which the government had made, and declared the property to be vested in the purchasers:

As and from the date of the said sales absolutely freed from all claims and demands of every nature whatsoever in respect of or arising from any discovery, location or staking.

Nothing stronger could be stated in an Act of parliament to take away the rights, if they were rights, of those people who had made the discovery, and who claimed they were entitled to this very valuable property. The Florence Mining Company, so strong in their claim of right, exhausted every constitutional means to maintain the right to their property. I understand they applied to the Lieutenant Governor to refuse his assent to the Bill. That attempt not succeeding, they petitioned His Excellency in Council to disallow the Act. In the meantime the case was coming on for trial. Three or four times it came up, and no decision upon the petition for disallowance had been made, the trial was postponed in order to see the result of the petition for disallowance. Finally, I think it was in April 1908, a report was made, and His Excellency decided not to disallow the Act, and that is my excuse for bringing the matter up in this House. If the ground for refusal to disallow had been that His Excellency agreed with the reasons given for passing the Act, then I think that this House ought to censure the government which advised such a course. If, on the other hand, the reason for disallowance was that it was a matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, whether right or wrong, whether confiscation, or robbery, or theft, as has been suggested, then it may be that the Dominion government was right, and that we should not interfere with provincial matters. Certainly we have the power to interfere, certainly I think His Excellency has the prerogative right to disallow, whether it is because an Act is beyond the jurisdiction of the province or whether, in the interest of the whole country and as a matter of political expediency, it ought to be disallowed. I understand that the reason given for not disallowing was that it was a matter within the jurisdiction of the province. The case came on for trial before Mr. Justice Riddell. Notwithstanding the refusal to disallow, the plaintiffs say that the principles of Magna Charta have been violated, we will go to the foot of the Throne and see whether, under the constitution of Canada, any government has a right to take away the property of people without compensation. The case came before Mr. Justice Riddell upon trial. He said that the 8th commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal,' does not apply to the local legislature, that they have a right to steal the property of other people if they wish, there is nothing except what is physically impossible they cannot do, and he said they must seek other remedies in order to get justice on account of the claims which they are making. He said they did not intend to speak on the merits of the case; he said he did not pass on the question whether or not at the time of the discovery the property was open for exploration, or whether, as contended by the government in Toronto, the property had been withdrawn from exploration. But the fact remains that no person disputes that that Act did take away from these petitioners the right they had to go to the courts, the right that any other person would have to vindicate, and press, and prove the right which he claimed to have. The proposition was made, during the controversy, it is alleged, that the matter should be referred to the Court of Appeal, and that the Court of Appeal should decide whether or not the property was open for exploration, the parties to be bound by the decision. That also was refused. I am not questioning the good faith of the Ontario government, though their conduct was such as to cause comment, and here is the fact that they did refuse even such a reasonable offer as this. The Act of 1906 barred the claims of the Florence Mining Company, and the whole three readings of that Bill were put through in one day. I do not know why this was done. I do not say that the provincial authorities were not acting bona fide, but I am sincere in saying that all the conduct of the Florence Mining Company in the matter indicates that they believe that they were given these rights and that this Act of the province of Ontario has, beyond doubt, taken away from them a property worth more than a million dollars without compensation, property to which they are entitled by virtue of the general law of this province. The case has gone to the Court of Appeal, and stands there for judgment, and it will probably go to the foot of the Throne. Whether they will succeed or not, we cannot foretell. But, in view of the strong interest that is being taken in this by financial concerns, let me read a comment upon it from the Toronto 'Financial Post' of January 15, 1909:

The whole matter is the subject of considerable discussion. One writer points out in a very able argument in the current number of the 'Canada Law Journal' that 'the numerous judgments recently given which uphold the doctrine that there is no appeal from the action of a provincial legislature so long as it confines itself to subjects committed to it by the British North America Act have created a widespread feeling of alarm among men concerned with financial affairs. The well-grounded idea that the rights of property are less secure in Canada than in the United States and Great Britain, or as one eminent financier puts it, than even in Mexico, is not calculated to encourage the flow of capital to this country. On the contrary, it puts us at a decided disadvantage as regards every kind of investment and industrial enterprise. The capitalist looking for investment sees that in the United States legislatures are not allowed to make or enforce any law which shall prejudice the privilege or immunities of the citizen of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the protection of the law. Coming to this country, he finds that the courts have concluded, contrary to the plain intention of the framer of our constitution that, in dealing with the rights of property concerning which they have exclusive jurisdiction, our provincial legislators are not bound to regard the provisions of Magna Charta or that still earlier code the Ten Commandments.'

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association have dealt with the matter. The council of that association discussed it, and made the following recommendation:

Pending the appeal to the Privy Council in the above case no action need be taken, but your committee are strongly of the opinion that should the Privy Council uphold the action of the Ontario legislature, prompt measures should be taken to provide a remedy, even though it require an amendment to the British North America Act.

This, so far as I can see, is the general sentiment of the independent press. Although, in one sense, it may be an advantageous thing to take away the property of people to enrich the treasury of the province, still, if that is done to-day in one case it may be done to-morrow in some other case, and the security which has heretofore been enjoyed in respect of property and civil rights will become a thing of the past. Fortunately, these things do not happen very often. But I certainly think this return ought to be made in order that the public records of the House may show that in refusing the petition for disallowance His Excellency in Council did not countenance the character of legislation contained in the Act I have referred to.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). I desire to ask the hon. member (Mr. A. H. Clarke) if this matter has not been dealt with by Mr. Justice Riddell, and, if so, will he not quote Judge Riddell's opinion?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. Probably the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. A. Currie) did not hear me? What Mr. Justice Riddell said was that, so far as the courts are concerned, they had no authority to grant the relief asked for; that it was a matter for the legislature to answer to the people and to the authorities; that, so far as the courts were concerned, the legislature had the right to take away the property of people and violate every principle of honour, and the courts could not interfere. For that reason, I say, some other relief ought to be granted, so that the rights of people may not be taken away from them in so summary a fashion.

Mr. C. A. WILSON (Laval). I am thankful to my hon. friend from Essex for stating the facts of this case in the fair manner he has done. I understand that in March, 1905, one Green discovered, at the bottom of Cobalt lake, a silver mine, that he registered his claim in the recorder's office, and afterwards transferred his interest to a company known as the Florence Mining Company. Then a law was passed confirming the title of another company known as the Cobalt Lake and Kerr Lake Mining Company. Legislation has been passed by the Ontario government confirming the second-named company in their title, notwithstanding the claim or rights of the Florence Mining Company. We are now called upon in this House to express an opinion whether His Excellency the Governor General was right in refusing to disallow or rather in refusing the petition of the petitioners asking for the disallowance of that law. I do not think it is necessary for the moment to enter into the merits of the cause of action accompanied by an injunction of the Florence Mining Company against the Cobalt Lake and Kerr Lake Company. A decision has been passed upon this case by His Lordship Mr. Justice Riddell. Could my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke) give me the date of that decision?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. The decision was given June 15, 1908.

Mr. C. A. WILSON. I read with great interest the judgment of Mr. Justice Riddell and especially the quotation already cited by the hon. member for Essex 'Thou shalt not steal,' and I quite agree with his lordship. I do not think the law passed by the Ontario Legislative Assembly was a right and true one. But this is not the question for the moment. Reviewing the history of confederation, I find that the provinces which entered into the compact of that union, a contract which they signed freely, deprived themselves of the rights which they had enjoyed during the union and before. I understand that the King is the King within the provinces as well as here in Ottawa, that his power is the same, that the King can do no wrong here in this House of Parliament and he can do no wrong when he is advised according to the opinion of his ministers and acts through the ordinary work of either the parliament of the Dominion or the legislative assembly of any one of the provinces. The jurisdiction of the provinces is limited to their territory, and their power of legislation is confined to that territory. If an Act or a Bill has been assented to, has been discussed in the legislative assembly, has been authorized by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of that province, it is a law. If that law is intra vires, it does not come within the scope of this parliament to advise disallowance. If that Act is ultra vires then it is for the courts of this country to decide upon it and to have it so declared. After confederation, I would rather say one year after the confederation had been adopted by the imperial authorities, many cases of disallowance had already been sent up to Ottawa to be commenced or disallowed. The Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald, then Prime Minister of this country, thought it proper, necessary and useful, in order to give the parliament then sitting, coming parliaments and coming generations a true and right interpretation of clauses 56 and 90 of the British North America Act, to lay down a dictum that would be the rule in the future. What was that dictum? What was the rule then laid down? I shall quote from that state paper the very rules that are now dictated to us to follow, so that we may well understand the duties we are called upon to perform in relation to the disallowance of a provincial law.

Cases which the minister may consider

1. As being altogether illegal or unconstitutional.
2. As illegal or unconstitutional in part.
3. In cases of concurrent jurisdiction as clashing with the legislation of the general parliament.
4. As affecting the interest of the Dominion generally.

These are the rules then laid down by Sir John Macdonald, the then Prime Minister, on June 8, 1868. Are we to understand that this Act passed by the parliament of the province of Ontario is totally illegal and unconstitutional? I would respectfully submit that this is not my view of the Act. I understand, and in this I have been convinced by the different precedents that were decided since confederation, and mainly by the precedent of a case coming from the same legislature which had passed an Act to protect the public interest in rivers, streams and creeks, the famous case of McLaren and Caldwell. This case was the subject of an interesting debate in 1882, and I would consider is much in common with the present case, because it related to private rights in a creek on some timber limits, the property of Mr. McLaren at the time. Mr. McLaren had erected certain works in order to hold back the water to float his timber during the spring, summer and autumn freshets. In rear of the timber limits of Mr. McLaren, Mr. Caldwell bought some limits, and when in the spring Mr. Caldwell started to float his logs there was an objection on the part of Mr. McLaren, who contended that he had certain private rights in the dam he had erected across the stream to float his logs.

An action, known as the case of Caldwell vs. McLaren, was taken to define the right of a party to float his timber down to market. The case came up exactly as the present, before Mr. Justice Proudfoot. The judgment then rendered was a judgment ab inconvenienti, to use a legal expression. Mr. Justice Proudfoot rendered judgment in the sense I have just mentioned in order to give an opportunity to the unsuccessful party to have a decision from the court of appeal. After the decision of his lordship was rendered there was a law passed and that law was, as the preamble says, to protect the public interest in rivers, streams, and creeks. This Act came up for the approval or disapproval, as the case might be, of His Excellency the Governor General in Council. The Act was disallowed for the reason that a judgment had been rendered and then this law was enacted ex post facto. The case went to appeal after the decision of Mr. Justice Proudfoot and while the appeal was pending the law was passed by the legislative assembly of Ontario and came up here for approval. The Act, as I have said, was disallowed, and the judgment of the court of appeal rendered. The law was no longer in existence when the judgment of the court of appeal was delivered. This is the dictum of his lordship who pronounced the judgment of the court.

Having reached the conclusion that all streams are by public authority dedicated as highways to at least the extent essential to the defence in this action, I have only further to remark that when the obstruction which stood in the way of the enjoyment of the legal right is removed, when the traveller by land or lumberer seeking to float his lumber down a stream, finds the highway unobstructed, he is at liberty in my judgment, to make use of it without inquiring by whom, or with what motive, the way has been made practicable. He finds the rock on the road allowance blasted, or the chasms that crossed it bridged, and he pursues his journey along the highway thus improved; or he finds that the freshet covers all obstacles with a sufficient depth of water, and he floats his logs down the highway thus made useful. If may be in appearance and perhaps in reality rather hard on the man at whose expense what was a highway only in legal contemplation becomes one fit for profitable use, has to allow others to share in the advantage without contributing to the cost. That is, however, a matter for his own consideration when he makes the improvements.

This question is one of private rights and, according to subsection 13 of section 92 of the British North America Act, the provincial authority is the only authority to deal with these matters. We are not here to sit as a court of appeal but we are here to respect the authority and autonomy of the provincial government. This might be the proper time to ask under what circumstances, when, how, and why His Excellency the Governor General, under the advice of his ministers, may disallow Acts of provincial legislatures. As I remarked at the start, I understand that the local legislatures have the power to pass legislation within the scope of their jurisdiction; that is to exercise powers within the limits prescribed by the British North America Act. If the province undertakes to legislate in such a way as to affect the rights of another province, it would be illegal and unconstitutional, and under such circumstances the Dominion government may intervene and disallow the legislation. Now, take another instance. If a province should undertake to enact legislation which would deprive a company holding a federal charter of the right to exercise its powers and privileges within the different provinces that might be an occasion to intervene. Then, take another case. The legislation of a province might clash with the legislation of another country, with the legislation, for instance, of our neighbours the United States; that might be a case where it would be proper for the federal government to intervene. But it is not the case nor is it any remedy for the harsh and unjustifiable situation in which Mr. Greene and the Florence Mining Company find themselves. But, I respectfully submit that there is one remedy: Let those who have sinned repent in due time. I do not quite agree with my hon. friend from Essex when he states that all legal means have been exhausted. If I were the counsel for the Florence Mining Company I would advise them to go to appeal, because I think the court of appeal might render a decision quite different from the one that was rendered by the judge in the first instance, without commenting in any wise on the judgment of his lordship, Mr. Justice Riddell. As to whether all legal means have been exhausted, or as to whether the time for appeal has expired, I would not like to risk an opinion because I am not familiar with the law of procedure of the province of Ontario. The last resort which has been indicated by my hon. friend from Essex, that is that the case may go as far as the foot of the Throne, may be a very efficient one, but there is a simpler way. The remedy lies with the legislature of the province of Ontario. The parties who have been aggrieved may seek a remedy from the legislature, may ask for redress, and have no doubt if their claim is a just one they will be heard, their representations will be weighed and justice will be done.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (Algoma West). I cannot allow this motion to pass without saying a few words in reply to the very caustic criticisms to which my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) has subjected the measure which the Ontario government saw fit to pass and which has not been disallowed. My hon. friend indulged in invectives with regard to the effect of the measure; he seemed to roll like a sweet morsel round his tongue the idea that there was an interference with private rights, a stealing of some lands, a taking away from somebody that which belonged to that somebody, or, depriving somebody of a right which by law that somebody possessed; a right whether inchoate or vested. I submit in the first instance that in his conception of the position of matters under this Act, my hon. friend (to whose legal ability I would pay the highest tribute) has taken a mistaken view of the whole situation. What was the situation as it presented itself at this time to the Ontario legislature? Why, there is no doubt at all that it was clearly within the jurisdiction of the Ontario legislature to make laws, and within the right of the government to pass orders in council with reference to the mining regulations of the province of Ontario, and particularly to make special regulations with respect to withdrawing territory found upon inquiry to be rich in minerals. Now, the regulations had been made at this time and were in force when the staking took place in Cobalt lake upon which the Florence Mining Company base their claim. But over and beyond that, in order to preserve a portion of the territory to Ontario which was supposed to be more than usually rich in mineral, the Lieutenant Governor in Council saw fit to pass an order in council on the 14th August, 1905, withdrawing from exploration for minerals that portion of the district of Nipissing in which lies the bottom of Cobalt lake. In the preservation of any mineral area in an excited period of prospecting there must be heart burnings and there must be disappointment. The Florence Mining Company, a speculative company having absolutely no vested rights,—my hon. friend to the contrary notwithstanding—went into that field as a speculator, acquired what they believed to be speculative rights from prospectors and built upon these speculative rights, to run up against an order in council duly passed in pursuance of the legislative jurisdiction.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. What about the order in council of the 30th of October which opened up that territory for prospecting?

Mr. BOYCE. Whether it was the order in council of the 30th of October or that of the 14th of August, it made no difference because the Ontario government had the absolute right to close or to open that territory as they saw fit.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. You don't understand me.

Mr. BOYCE. If there was a staking by any one in the meantime, that staking did not take place under any law of the province of Ontario or any regulations made under law dealing with the mining rights of the province. Such staking could not under the law give the right to any one to claim a piece of land as against the government.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. You do not catch my point. I quite agree that by the order in council of August the property might have been withdrawn from exploration. My question was: What do you do with the order in council of October following which opened it, as it is alleged, for exploration. The opinion given by two or three leading lawyers, Mr. Ritchie being one, was that that order of October again opened up the territory for exploration.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend will bear in mind that that order in council did not apply to this territory.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. It applied to Coleman township.

Mr. BOYCE. It did not apply to this territory.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. That is their claim; they say it did.

Mr. BOYCE. I am dealing with facts; I am instructed and I believe I am correct in stating that that order in council of October did not at all touch the area in question, which remained closed.

Mr. CONMEE. Would my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOYCE. Certainly.

Mr. CONMEE. Cobalt lake is within Cobalt township. Suppose it did cover Cobalt lake, what is the hon. gentleman's answer then?

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Conmee) must pardon me if I decline to soar into the heights of hypothesis with him. He is such a visionary gentleman himself with regard to some of his legislation and some of his questions in this House that I do not desire to attempt to cope with him in his flights of imagination. Any gentleman whose imagination can soar so high as to believe that the Nipigon river is an international waterway, far excells me in any flight of imagination I could hope to take. I will not discuss an hypothesis with him, but I shall deal with the argument of my hon. friend from Essex. My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) must know, as a lawyer, that the question with regard to the right of the applicant under the Mines Act of Ontario to obtain a patent has been tested time after time. Even though the applicant proceeds to the fullest extent under the regulations he must come to the point at which he has got to ask the government to give him a patent, and then comes the question as to whether he is entitled to insist upon a title to his patent and whether he has the right to compel the government to give to him of the public domain. My hon. friend must also see that there is always the right in the Crown to withdraw for the public good any part of the public domain. That was what the Ontario government did, and the Act of which he complains was merely a confirmation of the order in council which did withdraw that land and which was not subsequently put back by order in council, as I am instructed, and as I believe to be the fact. The disposition of public lands, as my hon. friend well knows, is a matter of discretion; it is not a matter of absolute law. It cannot be enforced as against the Crown, and therefore the Crown had discretion to withdraw, and it did withdraw this land from sale. I do not know that the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) as to this being such a tremendous outrage on the people of Ontario are very well timed. I do not know that they would appeal very strongly to the right hon. the Prime Minister. I fancy the right hon. gentleman may imagine that some invidious comparisons might be made as between the position taken by the Ontario government in this connection and that taken by this federal government in multitudinous other connections. For instance, here was a case where the Ontario government in the exercise of its right over the public heritage had the temerity and the courage to pass an order in council to preserve for the people of this province an area of land of undoubtedly great value. And for what purpose did the Ontario government do this? Was it to give it away to a few speculators, a few grafters, a few bogus companies of political friends, a few gentlemen closely in connection with the department who knew how to manipulate and to get land, valuable lands, for nothin? Oh, no. The Ontario government held this land in order that the revenues of the province of Ontario might be strengthened and increased by the opening of that land to public competition in the fairest and most honest manner possible so that the full value of that land might be obtained in the open market and placed to the credit of the whole people in the provincial treasury.

Is that stealing? Was it stealing, in the exercise of the right of the Crown, to get $1,080,000 for that which under the old regime the government would have got a few paltry hundreds for? It may be an outrage on the policy followed by this government; it may be a very great shock to the consciences of those hon. gentlemen who were witnesses to the exposure of the timber deals of last session, that the Ontario government was so absolutely wanton as to save for the people of Ontario a million dollars where somebody close to the government might otherwise have received the same land for a few hundreds. Sir, the doctrine which my hon. friend has rolled as such a sweet morsel under his tongue, 'Thou shalt not steal,' is hardly applicable in this connection. The keenest critic of the mining policy of the Ontario government cannot but see that in every step in a difficult position, in dealing with large interests, the Ontario government has endeavoured in every respect to conserve the interests of the people of Ontario, and to preserve for the people, and not for the speculator, the political hanger-on or the grafter, the resources of that province. The mining policy of the government of Ontario has been submitted to the people of Ontario, and the people of Ontario, by a somewhat emphatic, perhaps a somewhat exaggerated, expression of opinion, have approved of that policy. One of the strongest objections raised to a renewal of the confidence of the people of Ontario in the Whitney administration during the last election was this very question in regard to the interference of the government with private rights in Cobalt lake, and the people almost unanimously—there were very few derelicts left from that storm—approved of the government's policy. My hon. friend contends that there should still be some interference from here. Well, the matter has not only been before the people of the province of Ontario, but it has been before an impartial judge, the Minister of Justice, who has examined this legislation, doubtless bestowing upon it that critical examination which his high legal abilities and attainments specially qualify him to give it. I do not suppose for an instant that the hon. Minister of Justice, in that examination, would be prejudiced or biassed one way or the other. I certainly do not think he would be prejudiced or biassed in favour of continuing the legislation if there was a doubt in his mind of its constitutionality. If there had been such a doubt in his mind, I would rather suppose that my hon. friend, from motives of public policy, would under the circumstances lean in the direction of the disallowance of the legislation, from certain comments which have been attributed to him in the public press before the matter came under his consideration. I have only this further to say to my hon. friend, that I think that upon reconsideration he will see that his strictures upon the morality of the measures are quite out of order—that the only motive appearing to underly it was to carry out that wise policy of conserving the resources of the province of Ontario that was introduced shortly after the present Minister of Lands and Mines came into office, and has been since adhered to and carried out to the great enrichment of the province of Ontario. This is a class of cases of which we have had numerous instances. My hon. friend will doubtless remember the case of Dwyer vs. the town of Port Arthur in which some particular legislation was referred to in order to validate a by-law as to which certain proceedings had not been taken. The legislature passed an Act allowing the by-law as if the necessary proceedings had been taken. They were proceedings for the preservation of the rights, not of one individual, but of the public generally. The legislation dispensed with them, litigation arose, and the courts decided in favour of the statute. The Act upon which my hon. friend has bestowed his comments was certainly an Act for the preservation of the rights of the people as against the rights of the speculator. It was an Act passed on the lines of a wise policy; a policy which has been inaugurated by the present Ontario government in the administration of the magnificent mining areas of the province, and I think very little fault is to be found with the legislation, having successfully passed through the examination of the Minister of Justice, and having received the universal approval of the people of Ontario as wise and economical legislation.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on the interesting question brought up by my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. Clarke), the question of disallowance. I take the facts as stated by him. He states that under an Act and regulations of the Ontario Government, a certain party went and prospected on a certain mining property, performing all the conditions of the Act and of the regulations, and made application for the property; that subsequently the Ontario government passed an order in council annulling its former regulation by which the lands were opened for settlement. I am taking the particulars as stated by my hon. friend, for I know nothing about the matter myself. His statement is that the party in question complied with the law, and was therefore entitled to a patent for the mining section. There is no doubt that he was, and that the courts would order a patent to issue to him. There is no doubt that under the British North America Act the jurisdiction over civil rights and property is vested in the provinces.

The province rightly or wrongly — my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) contends that the province was right, and my hon. friend from Essex (Mr. Clarke) says it was wrong—the province, by an order in council withdrew these lands from sale, or virtually annulled, as far as they could, the right these parties had to the property. Now, the question arises whether they had jurisdiction under the section of the British North America Act giving them control of property and civil rights. My hon. friend said he would like to see this question decided by the courts, but I think perhaps they would decide that, where jurisdiction is given to the provinces over property, they only have the right to legislate in regard to the same. My hon. friend thinks that Judge Riddell in his judgment hinted as much. It has not been finally decided by the Privy Council, although in the case of the Temporalities Fund their judgment was strongly in that direction; it went this far, that the corpus, or the power that the British government had to deal with property, was given to the province, and, if they gave it to the provinces, then they have the absolute disposition of the property, they have the right to take it from one individual and give it to another without compensation. That question has not been clearly decided by the Privy Council. I think the question of disallowance, which the hon. gentleman mentions, is an interesting one. Why was this right of disallowance given to the Dominion government? It was absolutely given to us. Our contention long ago was that it was for the purpose of protecting private property as much as anything else. The argument made at the present day is an entirely different one, it is on the lines laid down by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Wilson), that is, that where disputes arise between the provinces which might affect the rights of one or the other in reference to the Dominion, in reference to international questions, in reference even to the raising of taxes which could interfere with the Dominion revenue—in all these, I suppose, the Dominion government has a right to exercise its powers of disallowance. So the question is not whether we are interfering in what a province has absolutely jurisdiction over. But my hon. friend from Essex follows the doctrine which was laid down by his friends long ago. He has no right to complain of this disallowance. I remember in this House hearing the Hon. Edward Blake laying down the doctrine, that if a province had jurisdiction over the subject they had a right to do wrong if they liked, and it was none of our business to interfere. It is then none of the business of the hon. member for Essex to complain if they have done wrong in disallowing this Act.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. I want the papers in order to show on what grounds they put it.

Mr. J. HAGGART. Why has not the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. H. Clarke) the same influence with the government as the hon. member for Laval (Mr. C. A. Wilson), who read the order in council with the reasons——

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. They are not public.

Mr. J. HAGGART. They are public now. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. H. Clarke) has no right to complain. The doctrine which he now opposes was laid down by the Reform party when in opposition—that if a province had jurisdiction over a subject, the Dominion government had no right to interfere. I am not dealing with the merits of the case, whether this disallowance is or is not in the interest of the province. But I may say that, if I had my way, wherever a province interfered with the sacred right of the individual, that individual should have the right to apply to the Dominion government and ask for a disallowance of the law. I held that doctrine in reference to the Streams Bill. I am glad to find that some hon. members on the other side of the House who held contrary views to mine at that time are now disposed to agree with me.

Hon A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). As I do not intend to offer any opposition to the motion of my hon. friend from South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke), I might, I suppose, without impropriety, leave to the coming down of the return asked for the answer to much of what the hon. gentleman has said in regard to the reasons which impelled me to give to His Excellency in Council the advice which I did give in this matter. But the question is of so much general interest, and so directly and intimately affects the principles of the constitution under which we are carrying on the government of this country, that it seems to me I ought to say a few words before this motion is put in regard to the difficulties which arose in the consideration of this matter. In the first place, I wish to add an item to the circumstances as detailed by the hon. member who moves this resolution. There was not only the application for disallowance, to which he has referred, by those who were the assignees and successors in title of the man who said that he had made a discovery of valuable minerals under Cobalt lake in March, 1906, but there was an additional and independent—so far as appeared—application for disallowance made by one Henry Dreany, who asserted that he had recorded a claim in accordance with the requirements of the Ontario statute to a part of the bed of Cobalt lake on the 17th to 18th July, 1905, at a time when there never was any dispute but that this location was open for purposes of prospecting and exploration. He asserted that fact, at all events. His right, whatever it may be, as fixed by the actual step of recording his claim, was one of the rights which, under the legislation which has been referred to, were taken away, and his claim, as well as that of Green, or of the Florence Mining Company, who had bought from Green, were absolutely divested from him and from them and vested in the purchasers from the government, the company now claiming to own the property. So, in considering what advice ought to be given with reference to this legislation, there were the two claims to be taken into account. And I want it to be understood that, in coming to a conclusion as to the advice or recommendation I ought to give in the matter, I did not attempt in any way to pass upon—even in my own mind to pass upon—the justice or stability or validity of the claims in question; that, I think, is something with which no person is concerned except the parties directly interested. A much larger question, it seems to me, arises here. One of these claimants was asserting that he possessed the right and litigating that question in the courts. He or his company have demonstrated already by the expense to which they have gone that they have faith in their claim, that they are, in good faith, asserting that claim, that they are presenting it to the regular, constituted, judicial tribunals of the country for adjudication, and that they are prepared to back it up and establish it if an opportunity is given them to do so. So far as the other claimant is concerned, he has not, that I am aware of, entered upon litigation at all. Perhaps he has thought that it is too big a task for one man to undertake. He would have—as the litigation which is on foot has demonstrated—not only to fight a company, able, at all exents, to pay over $1,000,000 for the property involved, but to fight as well all the strength and all the financial resources of the Ontario government itself. And perhaps it is not to be wondered at that Dreany has not entered upon litigation with such a prospect as that before him, but that he simply asserts that the records show that he had made a discovery, and had recorded himself as entitled to the benefit of it, months before this property was in question at all or any order in council had been passed by the local government seeking to withdraw it from exploration and location. Now, application to disallow a piece of legislation which purported to vest property, to which there were adverse claims, in some other person or some other purchaser presented itself for consideration. And, in what I have to say upon the subject to-day, I want, so far as possible, to discover the point of view which should be taken, I think, by any one occupying the position I have the honour to hold, and the point of view from which these matters may properly be looked at by a citizen and resident or property owner of the province of Ontario. The two are standpoints, which, I feel, necessarily differ very materially, and I want first to speak of this matter entirely from the standpoint of the official of this House, of the member of the government who is called upon to advise as to the course which His Excellency ought to take in a matter of this character. The large question of principle which was presented for consideration was simply whether or not the provincial legislature has the power, without control, to take one man's property and give it to another and to take away from the person injured any right of redress in the courts. It is sufficient to say without passing upon the validity in any way of the claim which was made by the man who says he was wronged, that he had a claim which in good faith he was presenting to the courts, and that the legislation in question, in so many words, took from him the right to litigate and declared in unmistakable language that the courts must award the property in dispute to his antagonist. Now, I think I may safely say—and especially in view of the remarks which have just fallen from my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart)—that if this identical question had arisen before 1896 this legislation would have been disallowed. I think it is simply the misfortune of the applicants for disallowance that this occurrence did not take place before 1896, because, up to that time at any rate, the rule in such matters, so far as I am able to gather that rule from the records of the Department of Justice, and from the public records of this country, had been in accordance with the views which have to-day been enunciated by the hon. member for South Lanark. And I will say at once that I believe that was the intention with which the framers of the British North America Act provided the right of disallowance in the statute. I am old enough to have a memory of the days before confederation, and dissever the point of view which should to remember as current events the views discussed in the newspapers of the time of the purposes and ideas and intentions of those who assembled at Quebec and framed the resolutions and what the earlier ideas of the relative positions of the provincial legislatures and Dominion government were, in the days before 1870. Speaking from that memory, as well as from the reports of the opinions that we have, I express the view here that, beyond doubt, the idea with which the power of disallowance was conferred upon the Dominion government was that it might be exercised upon principles such as have been stated by the hon. member for South Lanark this afternoon. Not only do I say that as a matter which I hold as within my own recollection, but I am fortified in more respects than one by official utterances to the like effect. In 1873, there was in question in the province of Ontario a very famous piece of litigation known as the Goodhue will case, in which the provincial legislature had passed an Act to make a new will for a very wealthy gentleman named Goodhue then not long deceased. On that measure coming under consideration of the Ontario courts, Chief Justice Draper, speaking in 1873, and speaking as a man who was not only at the time a distinguished and experienced judge and Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal for the province, but also in the light and knowledge of an eminent statesman of the parliament of the two Canadas in the days before confederation, used this language:

Such Bills are still subject to the consideration of the Governor General, who, as the representative of the Sovereign, is entrusted with authority, to which a corresponding duty attaches, to disallow any law contrary to reason or to natural justice and equity.

That language is to be found in vol. 19 of Grant's Ontario Chancery Reports, at page 384. And no more distinct judicial utterance describing the purpose of the power of disallowance could well be found. These views then obtained. And, a few years later, in discussing the proposed disallowance of what is known as the Rivers and Streams Bill, passed by the Ontario legislature, Sir John A. Macdonald, in 1881, used this language in recommending disallowance:

I think the power of the local legislatures to take away the rights of one man and vest them in another, as is done by this Act, is exceedingly doubtful; but assuming that such right does in strictness exist, I think it devolves upon this government to see that such power is not exercised in flagrant violation of private rights and natural justice, especially when, as in this case, in addition to interfering with private rights in the way alluded to, the Act overrides a decision of a court of competent jurisdiction by declaring retrospectively that the law always was and is different from that laid down by the court.

But those views, expressed in 1873 and in 1881 were not the views merely of the earlier years of confederation, they were substantially repeated as lately as 1893 by the Hon. J. Aldric Ouimet as acting Minister of Justice. In referring to an Ontario statute then under consideration he used this language:

Assuming the statute to have the effect which the railway company attribute to it, the case would appear to be that of a statute which interferes with vested rights of property and the obligation of contract without providing for compensation and would therefore, in the opinion of the undersigned, furnish sufficient reason for the exercise of the power of disallowance.

So that not only in the earlier years of confederation but as late as 1893, we have the most distinct statement by the minister of that day that if provincial legislation interfered with rights of property without providing compensation that circumstance afforded sufficient reason for the exercise of the power of disallowance. Speaking for myself I say at once that, perhaps from the influence of earlier education or perhaps from the consideration of maturer years, I entertain in all honesty and sincerity the view that it is of vital consequence to the well-being of this Dominion that the rights of the provinces to legislate within the scope of their authority should not be interfered with, and that every provincial legislature, within the limits prescribed for it by the terms of the British North America Act, is and ought to be supreme. I believe that this is a principle of greater importance to the welfare of this Dominion as a whole than even the sacredness of private rights or of property ownership. I am willing to go thus far in the enunciation of the views I am stating to this House, that a provincial legislature, having as is given to it by the terms of the British North America Act, full and absolute control over property and civil rights within the province, might if it saw fit to do so, repeal Magna Charta itself. I know no difference between that most sacred bulwark of liberty and of property to every British subject and any piece of legislation. I take it that no one would dispute the power of a provincial legislature to repeal the Habeas Corpus Act or any other charter of liberty which Englishmen possess; and in precisely the same view I take the ground that rights of property are subject only to the control of provincial legislatures within Canada. Having that view it seemed to me in considering this legislation that I was not, as advising His Excellency in Council called, upon to think at all of the injustice, of the outrageous character it might be of the legislation, but that my one inquiry ought to be whether or not there was anything in the legislation itself which went beyond the power of the provincial legislature to pass a law referring alone to property and civil rights within the province. In that view I had the help of opinions which had been expressed by my immediate predecessors in office, the Hon. David Mills and the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, and I found in instances in which they had been called upon to consider legislation of somewhat similar character, an assertion of the principles to which my mind adhered and therefore, what I considered a safe resting place in precedent, even if I had not been prepared to make, if necessary a precedent for myself and to depart from the course which had been taken repeatedly before 1896. In 1901 the Hon. David Mills, in reporting upon legislation of a somewhat similar character, used this language:

The undersigned conceives that Your Excellency's government is not concerned with the policy of this measure. It is no doubt intra vires of the legislature and if it be unfair or unjust or contrary to the principles which ought to govern in dealing with private rights, the constitutional recourse is to the legislature, and the Acts of the legislature may be ultimately judged by the people. The undersigned does not consider, therefore, that Your Excellency ought to exercise the power of disallowance in such cases.

In the same year, speaking, with reference to legislation of the province of British Columbia which was then under consideration, he said:

The undersigned bases his refusal to recommend disallowance upon the fact that the application proceeds upon grounds affecting the substance of the Act with regard to matters undoubtedly within the legislative authority of the province and not affecting any matter of Dominion policy. It is alleged that the statute affects pending litigation and rights existing under previous legislation and grants from the province. The undersigned considers that such legislation is objectionable in principle and not justified unless in very exceptional circumstances; but Your Excellency's government is not in any wise responsible for the principle of the legislation, and as has been already stated in this report with regard to an Ontario statute, the proper remedy in such cases lies with the legislature or its constitutional judges.

A year later Mr. Fitzpatrick, reporting upon British Columbia legislation, used these words:

It appears that litigation was pending between the government and the petitioners, at the time of the passing of the Act, with regard to the peitioner's liability to pay these royalties; and no doubt a very strong case is made out by the petitioners in support of the view that the legislature should have allowed the existing law to operate and should not have undertaken to legislate so as to diminish or affect existing rights.

The undersigned cannot help expressing his disapprobation of measures of this character, but there is a difficulty about Your Excellency in Council giving relief in such cases without affirming a policy which requires your Excellency's government to put itself to a large extent in the place of the legislature and judge of the propriety of its acts relating to matters committed by the constitution to the exclusive legislative authority of the province.

I share these views. I believed, as I still believe, that this is the true spirit of our constitution. We have advanced since the days of 1867, or even of 1881 or 1893. The doctrine of provincial rights, which has always been, I am glad to think, the peculiar property of the political party of which I am a member, has of late years found strong supporters even in the ranks of our political opponents. We welcome this accession to the principles for which the Reform party in Canada has fought ever since confederation, and, acting on these principles and because I was brought up to believe in them and because I do sincerely and honestly think it is best for this country that each provincial legislature, within the sphere of its authority and jurisdiction, should be supreme and amenable only to its constitutional judges, the electors of its own province, I concurred in the opinions expressed and precedents laid down by my immediate predecessors. I shared their views and I acted upon them in this case. I advised my colleagues and, through them, His Excellency that this power of disallowance which was vested in us was one which, in the interest of the commonwealth, it was better should not be exercised even though the Act which was sought to be disallowed went the length of taking my farm from my possession and handing it over without any compensation to my neighbour, or, it might be, to my political opponent. These are considerations entirely for the provincial legislature. It represents the people of the province; its members are elected by the same electors who send us to this House, and I certainly seek to put every provincial legislature, within the scope of its jurisdiction as laid down in the British North America Act, upon an absolutely level footing with the parliament of Canada itself so far as its legislation is concerned. I know no difference and can see no distinction to be drawn from the true reading of the language used in the British North America Act. Both this parliament and the different provincial legislatures have limits placed by that legislation upon their jurisdiction and legislative powers and it is of equal importance that each should keep and be kept entirely within its own limits. It would not be proper, in declaring some provincial measure to be one which ought to be disallowed, that this parliament or its representatives, this government, or its Minister of Justice, should transgress the limits of the jurisdiction which the British North America Act intended to confer upon them. My view was, and is, that any measure of this sort is one in regard to which the only appeal from the provincial legislature ought to be to the people who elect that legislature, and who, if they please, may dethrone the government of the day and deprive it of power. This was a question, it seemed to me, to have been fought out at the polls. This was not a question which it was right to relegate to the Minister of Justice or the government of the day at Ottawa, and ask that minister or that government to decide and, acting upon that view and no other, I gave the advice which I did in this matter.

Before taking my seat I want to say just one word, and I shall be extremely brief about it, with regard to this legislation looked at from the standpoint of the voter in the province of Ontario. I do not blink in the least degree the importance of the principle involved. I wish to state it in the plainest language at my command. It simply means, in my judgment, speaking as a voter of the province of Ontario, that our present provincial government, that our recent provincial legislature, have arrogated to themselves the right to say to any citizen of the province: You shall not litigate; it makes no difference how just you think your claim, we have the right to decide it and to deny you the open door of the courts; we have the right in this particular instance and we choose to exercise it. Of course, in this matter, the Minister of Justice did not act without sending to the representative of the Crown in Ontario, and, through him, to the provincial government, a copy of the representations which were made in asking the disallowance with the invitation that they should make any observations they might see fit in the way of an answer. When the papers come down the House will be possessed of the observations which the government of Ontario saw fit to make in regard to this legislation. I shall not go into that more than to say that one, at all events, of the principal grounds upon which the propriety of the legislation in question was rested was that it affected the revenues of the province. No doubt it did. There was a million dollars hung up before the eyes of the voters of the province of Ontario, and because the Ontario government had secured from this operation the magnificent sum of $1,000,000 the voters of the province were asked to ratify what they had done and to say that it was a proper and legitimate transaction. I wonder if it occurred to any of my fellow electors that the government of Ontario could at any time make a good many millions of dollars if they pleased for the revenues of the province by confiscating farms enough and by legislating those farms into the possession of anybody willing to pay for them. That exactly was the principle upon which this legislation was defended before the people of the province at the polls. My fellow voters, or a majority of them, seemed to have been content. I only trust that the day will never come when they may see reason to regret from personal experience that they did not condemn at the polls, as it ought to have been condemned, this manifest encroachment upon the rights of property and the right to resort to the courts of the province.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). I just want to say one word in view of the very extraordinary speech of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) in giving his reasons for not disallowing this Bill. I am bound to commiserate the minister upon being in the minority in two particulars. He is not only in the minority as a voter in the province of Ontario, but he is in the minority in his own party with regard to this question of provincial rights. In view of the strong statements he has made as to what caused him to advise the non-disallowance of the Act in question, I take this opportunity to urge upon the Minister of Justice to hold a special caucus of his party so that he may say these things emphatically to his supporters in this House and urge them to once in a while vote for provincial rights in the Railway Committee. The Minister of Justice is, I believe, himself a member of the Railway Committee; his name is called over and over again, and every time it is called there is silence. As these are the doctrines he is so anxious that parliament should carry out, I hope the Minister of Justice will during the session favour us with his attendance in the Railway Committee once in a while, and see that his followers there do not vote against provincial rights every time a railway charter involving provincial rights comes up for consideration.

Mr. GEORGE GORDON (Nipissing). I did not intend to speak on this motion but as a shareholder in the Florence Mining Company I think I ought to say something. I am a new member of this House, but already I have been surprised to find how time is frittered away by hon. gentlemen talking a great deal on things they know nothing about. I venture to say that the member for Essex who brought this question up to-day does not know whether discovery was made of mineral in place by the Florence Mining Company in Cobalt Lake, or by the party who turned it over to them. Does the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. A. H. CLARKE. Do you know?

Mr. GEORGE GORDON. I am pretty sure I do know. I was a shareholder and I am a shareholder in the Florence Mining Company and I want to tell my hon. friend that the courts did perfectly right and treated the Florence Mining Company justly when they threw out their case. I do not believe the Florence Mining Company had a case at all. I do not believe there was a discovery of mineral in place, but I do believe that the Florence Mining Company had nothing upon which to back up their claim. When people who know nothing about a subject interfere, they are pretty certain to get into trouble. I say here to-day that I candidly and honestly believe that the Florence Mining Company never had a discovery of mineral in place, and never were entitled to the rights in that lake. And when the Minister of Justice speaks about the Ontario government as he did this afternoon, I want to tell him, so that he may understand the independence and honesty of the Ontario government, that the four names which were on the petition were the names of four prominent Conservatives. That, I believe, was done to endeavour to influence the Ontario government in some respect, but it resulted in failure. I am sorry to say that my name was put down on that petition and obtained in a manner it should not have been by any person who wanted to do the right thing. I was told that if I subscribed to the Florence Mining Company and put up $100 the same as the others were doing we would stand to make something very big, and that at the most we could only lose $100. I did not know at the time what they were driving at. I gave the money over and pledged my word to go in with these people before I knew what it was all about. I did not know what they were after, but I asumed that the gentleman who offered me such a prospect was doing something that he need not be ashamed of, and so I signed my name. But, afterwards when I found out what it was, and when I read the evidence, I came to the conclusion that they never had a discovery of mineral in place, and that they were not entitled to the property. I believe that the people who are justly entitled to that propery have it today.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I rise for a moment to a question of privilege. I understand that the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has said that he has heard mv name called time and again in the railway committee of which, he said, I am a member, and that I have not been present to assert provincial rights. I beg to inform the hon. gentleman that I am not a member of the railway committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS Hear, hear.

Mr. GORDON.

Mr. LANCASTER. As explanations are in order, I would ask the Minister of Justice to reorganize the management of that committee, and to see that his name is not called by the clerk of the committee every day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). It would have been better if the Minister of Justice after delivering his very able and instructive speech upon this subject, had concluded without attempting to make an absolutely unwarrantable attack upon the Ontario government. This is not the place for that. In the previous portion of his remarks the Minister of Justice stated most distinctly that he was not called upon as Minister of Justice to pronounce either upon the justice or injustice of the legislation which had been passed, and having put himself in that position before this House, and speaking still as Minister of Justice he saw fit to indulge in very strong invective against men who are not here in place to defend themselves. To say the least such language was unwarranted by the occasion. I do not know any of the circumstances of this legislation, or of its allowance, but I am bound to say that any man who considers himself injured by legislation of that kind has always the right to go back to the legislature, make his arguments there, and ask that the injurious enactment be repealed. I had occasion to do that once myself in the legislature of Nova Scotia when certain legislation had been passed affecting rights which were then in litigation. I went to the legislature of Nova Scotia and after a very hard fight I succeeded in obtaining for my clients what I believed in that case to be justice. But I would like to say something more to the Minister of Justice. If the refusal to permit litigation of claims against the government is an outrage, as the Minister of Justice has declared, I would point out to him and to the Prime Minister, that in no less than in 30 or 40 cases arising in connection with the Post Office Department the government of Canada absolutely refused to certain men the right to litigate their claims. And, I would ask the Minister of Justice to begin his invectives against that administration of which he is a member, in view of his declaration this afternoon that a claim against the Crown whether in the right of the province or of the Dominion ought to be put into litigation when once that claim is made. I myself rose in this House not fewer than four or five times and I asked that a fiat should be granted in justice to the men whose contracts had been rescinded by the Postmaster General of the day upon the assumption that he possessed the authority in connection with these contracts, which authority was controverted bv the men with whom these contracts had been made. And, notwithstanding my repeated protests in this House and notwithstanding that over and over again these men not only by petition to the Crown but on the floor of this parliament, have presented these claims, they never were permitted to be put in litigation, and to this day the claimants remain without the privilege of recourse to the courts of the land. It cannot be possible that the Minister of Justice is ignorant of all this. I would suggest to him that at the earliest possible occasion when he meets his colleagues in council he will use on them some of these forcible expressions to which he has this afternoon given voice, and insist, upon peril of his own resignation as a Minister of the Crown, that that right so long denied to these men shall be at once conceded, and these claims referred to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

TELEPHONE RATES IN CANADA.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the experience of the provinces which have taken over the telephone system and the evidence collected by a special committee of this House appointed to inquire into the question of telegrams and telephones more than four years ago, establish the fact that the people of Canada, outside the zone of provincially operated lines, are paying far higher rates for telephone service than they should be called upon to pay.

That i tis the immediate duty of the government to initiate and carry out such measures as will remove long existing abuses in this regard and secure to the people of Canada, other than the people of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba, a rate of service at least as moderate as, having regard to local conditions, prevails in countries where a national telephone service is maintained.

He said: Mr. Speaker: This is a business proposition, and I propose, in my activities in this House, to limit myself as far as possible to business propositions, and to endeavour to bring about, as far as I can, better conditions for the people generally. The question of an amelioration of our condition as regards telephone service is, comparatively speaking, new. It did not occur to our people perhaps as early as it did to the people of the United States, that we were not enjoying as good conditions in this respect as we were entitled to. Even in the United States, down to the year 1894, the Bell Telephone Company had practically a monopoly of the service in that country, and it was only about that time that the people began to awake to the fact that they could do better than to allow this monopoly to continue. It was considerably later than that before it began to dawn upon us that we also were entitled to a better condition of things. Perhaps it was not until about the beginning of this century that we began to realize that we were paying too much, and not getting as good a service as we were entitled to; and from that time onward the feeling has been gradually growing stronger in Canada that we should do something to rid ourselves of the monopoly of the Bell Telephone Co. But, although there was a good leal of agitation on the subject in the House, no definite action was taken until 1904, when Sir Wm. Mulock moved the resolution which resulted in a special committee being appointed to investigate the matter. This government was certainly not more alert than it ought to have been in appointing that committee. Now, I would suppose that that committee was appointed for some business object, and that object, as I understand, was to ascertain whether or not we could put ourselves in a better position; and if the result of that investigation was to show that the conditions were not satisfactory, some action would be taken. From that time down to the present no action has been taken; nothing has been done to relieve the people of Canada from the conditions under which they were suffering. There are many men in this House far more familiar with telephonic conditions than I am, and better able to stir up the government to get a move on in this matter, but in the absence of anybody else taking it up, I took it upon myself at the beginning of this session to place this resolution on the Order Paper with a view of righting the wrongs which the investigation of the committee of 1904 showed to exist in the Dominion of Canada.

Now my resolution aims at two things. My first proposition is that we are paying too much for our telephone service, and I may add that our telephone service is not as complete or as good as it ought to be. My second proposition is that we are entitled to have as cheap a service as those countries where national telephones have been established. The members of this House are very familiar with these propositions. When we talk of nationalizing our railways or any of our public utilities, the answer from the honourable gentlemen opposite is this—and I have heard it from the right honourable the leader of the government down—that we can get a cheaper service and a more efficient service from a company service. Now, we have a company service, and according to the decision of the government we are to continue to have a company service, and that being the case, it is for us to see to it, as far as possible, that a company, being able to give a cheaper service than a government can, shall give us at least as cheap a service as is enjoyed in countries where a government service is given. At the time the investigation took place, the committee took evidence from various important bodies as to what they thought was the best system for Canada. There were two classes of advocates: One was for the ownership by the government of the entire telephonic system in Canada, the other was for the ownership by the government of the trunk lines only, with the branch lines and local services in the hands of companies or other parties. Among those who advocated complete government ownership were the Toronto city council, the Owen Sound board of trade, the county council of Bruce, the city of Nanaimo, the town of Simcoe, the township of Pickering, the town of Port Perry, the Regina board of trade, the Montreal chambers of commerce, the Stratford board of trade, the town of Morris, Man., the municipality of Pipestone, Man., the municipality of Batiscan, Que., the municipality of Matsqui, B.C., the municipality of Jordan, B.C., the municipality of Maple Creek, N.W.T., the municipality of Rama, the county of Essex, the town of Hespeler and the councils of the towns and county, the trades and labour councils and the boards of trade of the county of Waterloo.

Among those who advocated government ownership of long distance lines, were Kelowna in British Columbia; the Ontario Municipal Association; the Union of Canadian Municipalities, which is an important body representing the matured thought of the entire municipal bodies of Canada, which I think is not an unimportant element in the discussion of any public question in Canada. There was the town of Peterborough; the Winnipeg Printers' board of trade; the retail merchants of Ontario, 5,000 strong; the Guelph board of trade; town of Orangeville; town of Neepawa; town of St. Andrew's, New Brunswick; Union Telephone Company, Florenceville, New Brunswick; municipality of Gormley, Ontario, county of Elgin; township of York; town of Weston; Halifax county, Nova Scotia; town of Sarnia. I have said that the government pronouncing judgment in this House and repeating it everywhere, that we can have a better and more efficient service by leaving it in the hands of companies than we can by having it operated under government authority, directly by the action of a minister or indirectly through the action of a commission, it is up to the government, if I may use that expression, to see to it now that we have at least as cheap a service, as efficient a service, as they have in those countries where nationalization has been established. Now, the House will remember that in the course of that investigation we employed an eminent expert, a Mr. Dagger, who was expected to collect material and boil it down, as it were, to crystallize it and to present it to the committee. That being the case, I venture to read a line or two of his report, at page 16 of the evidence of the select committee I have referred to. He says:

On sechule 'F' to this exhibit will be found the long distance fees charged in the principal countries of the world. From it will be seen that the charges in the United States and Canada are the highest of all, being double the British rates and four times as much as the German. There would appear to be no satisfactory reason for this, as it is well known that the cost of the English trunk lines is very much greater than those upon this continent for the following, among other reasons—

1. Much heavier copper wire is used, the main lines weighing 800 pounds to the mile as against about 200 pounds here.
2. Poles have to be imported and creosoted whereas here native cedar is used.
3. Porcelain insulators and iron bolts are used in England, glass insulators and wooden pins here.

I am satisfied that the present rates in Canada could be cut in two and still leave a satisfactory profit on the working.

State ownership is, however, the only way to demonstrate the truth of this assertion.

Now I am not going to argue to-night either for or against state ownership. I take it that the government has pronounced their policy to be a policy of company ownership and government control. But taking it that way, I am here to urge upon the government to act now, and to see to it that we shall have at least as cheap rates as they have in countries where a national system has been established. Now I refer hon. gentlemen, though I will not read it, to a schedule found on page 33, being the schedule 'F' referred to in the evidence I have just read; it gives a comparison of the rates in various countries where national ownership exists. I will not read it, because it is a somewhat complicated table and hard to follow, but I will deal with it in another way, because I propose to use some figures contained in that schedule. Now, I want to give another quotation from this volume, it is the statement of the chairman of the committee, Sir Wm. Mulock, and it establishes so far as his view of the matter is necessary to establish it, that we are not getting in Canada as cheap rates, or anything like as cheap rates, as the countries in which a national system exists.

THE CHAIRMAN, Sir Wm. Mulock. (Referring to exhibit No. 2, schedule 'F') the rates for Canada and the United States are apparently the highest in the world. There is nothing to compare with them.

Mr. MACLEAN. These are the charges for three minute conversations, are they not?

Mr. DAGGER. Yes.

THE CHAIRMAN. Three minutes in the day time and half the rate at night. These are day rates, are they not? A. These are day rates.

THE CHAIRMAN. The rates, according to this schedule, in Canada and the United States are the highest in the world, being 100 per cent higher than in Great Britain, and more than that in comparison with other places, as you will see when you analyse the schedule. But it is sufficient for the people to know that at present we have the pleasure of paying 100 per cent more in Canada and the United States than in any other part of the known world.

Now, Sir, that is the view that the chairman of that committee enunciated, and I am not going to say why it was not carried out. out. We know of the common rumour which may or may not be true, that he parted company with hon. gentlemen opposite because he could not get that desirable policy carried into effect. I am not going to argue whether the nationalization of our telephones would be desirable or not, I am arguing, though, that for four or five years before that investigation took place, and for four years since it took place, it was the duty of the government to do something to relieve the people from paying the very heavy and unfair prices which they were obliged to pay by reason of the monopoly which exists in Canada. Now I wish to refer briefly to a few figures that ought to be interesting to the representatives of the people of Canada. And let me say here that I do not feel, Mr. Speaker, that it is necessary for me to elaborate my argument tonight, for the reason that I have, to a great extent, succeeded already. We passed an Act last year, but nothing was done under that Act, and so I put my notice upon the Order Paper. I have, however, the satisfaction of knowing that since I put my notice upon the Order Paper the government have begun to get busy, and they have taken action on the Act of last year within the last couple of weeks. Not only have they taken action, but having referred the matter to the Railway Board, the board has issued its order for the telephone companies to file their tariff of fees, and so we may expect, I think, some amelioration of the condition under which we have been suffering far too long. But all the same, although part of the benefit has been obtained, yet I feel that it is of importance that the government having requested the Railway Board to act in this matter, should give the Railway Board some indication of their policy as regards the tariff rate that shall obtain. So I have every faith that this resolution will be accepted by the government, and will be the policy adopted by the government upon which the Railway Board is to act in determining the rate that the company shall be allowed to charge the people of Canada.

I wish to give the rate in different countries for a three-minute conversation for sixty miles or over. These figures are taken, to a very considerable extent, from the records of the committee to which I have referred. In other cases they are obtained from an expert whom I have consulted, and I believe they are all absolutely correct according to the records of the various countries referred to:—

Rates—3 minute conversations 60 miles—Comparison by Countries.

Denmark..	9½
Sweden..	8
About one-quarter of our rate.
Finland (80 m.)..	4½
Less than one-eighth of our rate.

Yet, Canada is the home of the telephone, the place where the telephone was invented. If there is anywhere any country in which you would expect an up-to-date telephone system and reasonable rates, it would naturally be in the country of the telephone's origin. Now, I have referred to Australia, and as that country is a country of long distances, like our own, and we might expect telephones to be as expensive there as with us, it may be worth while to give some details. Here are some figures of local and long distance:—

Canada, $3.60.

Canada pays double the British rate, three times Australia, ten times the French rate and nearly fourteen times the rate paid in Sweden.

Some European rates for comparatively short distances are as follows:

Great Britain, Germany and Switzerland, 20 miles for 6 cents.
Norway, 120 miles for 7 cents.
Finland, 20 miles for 2¼ cents, or 40 miles for 2½ cents, or 80 miles for 4½ cents, or 120 miles for 6 cents.

This is sufficient for illustration and sufficient to give a clear and reasonable idea of the conditions existing in other countries.

It is well known that independent telephone lines have been established in the United States and the result has been very beneficial to the people. As I said the monopoly was first invaded in 1894 and I shall read just a line or two from the evidence collected by the committee in reference to one state, Indiana. This evidence is to be found in the proceedings of the committee. The passage is headed—

Mr. LENNOX.

What happens when the people and not a monopoly control the telephone situation.

The passage proceeds:

The independent telephones of Indiana number 166,255.
The annual exchange rentals for these telephones amount to $3,048,885.
The same number of telephones, at the rates charged by the monopoly, before the independent movement began, would cost the people of Indiana annually $7,275,300.

The independent telephones, therefore, save the people of Indiana to-day:

Annually	$4,226,415
Quarterly	1,056,603
Monthly	352,201
Weekly	88,050
Daily	12,578

Besides all this the independent movement has covered the field.

In the reign of monopoly there were only 7,000 telephones in the state of Indiana, or one for every 350 of population, and not one in the house of a farmer.

Now there are 166,255 independent telephones, or one for every 16 of population, and 30,000 of them in the houses of farmers.

The new Long Distance Telephone Company has, upon its own lines, within a radious of 50 miles of Indianapolis, 61,286 subscribers, who use no other than independent telephones.

It will be seen what the people of the United States were losing. The question is how much are we losing, how much are we losing to-day and how much will we be losing as long as we continue to have the state of things the government are permitting to exist. It is not an entirely irrelevant inquiry, how much have the people lost in the four years the government have sat quietly doing nothing since this subcommittee developed the fact that something ought to be done by the government in order to better the condition of the people of Canada in this respect. The result in Indiana is that they now have one telephone for every sixteen of the population. It is hard to ascertain exactly what we have in Canada. I have seen it stated by some persons that we have one telephone for every 65 of the population, but as in Ontario we have only one for every 89 and in Quebec one for every 102 of the population, I am inclined to think we have not so good a showing for all Canada as one for every 65 of the population. What the independent companies are doing in the United States will be found at vol. 2, page 766 and following pages and what they are doing in Canada will be found at page 738 and following pages, but I shall not take time to refer to that to-night.

I wish to refer to just one other matter by way of comparison. At page 20 of vol. 2, will be found evidence showing the difference in charges between the company owned system and the independent telephone companies. The figures for a number of cities in different states of the Union are as follows:—

City.	Bell rates.		Independent.
	Bus.	Res.	Bus.	Res.
Columbus, Ohio..	72	36	40	24
Elizabeth, N.J..	100	54	36	30
Erie, Pa..	60	30	40	28
Grand Rapids, Mich..	36	24	30	18
Indianapolis, Ind..	72	48	40	25
Mobile, Ala..	48	30	30	18
Rochester, N.Y..	60	40	40	30
St. Joseph, Mo..	50	36	40	30
Wilkesbarre, Pa..	72	57	28	24

That is perhaps sufficient for illustration and the question arises, can we lower the rates and can the government by adopting the resolution I have put forward effect that beneficial reform for our people? I submit that we certainly can, for while according to the doctrine of the government a state-owned system cannot be as economically managed as a company-owned system, in all those countries where the telephone is operated by the nation as distinguished from operation by companies, we have the undisputed fact that the rates are enormously below the rates we are paying in Canada. We could state it better by saying that our rates are outrageously above the rates they are paying in other countries where the telephone system has been nationalized. We had a very recent example in the case of Manitoba. I shall not go minutely into the Manitoba figures because that is a matter which is right on the surface.

Every one sees that in his morning paper. I am trying to bring before this House something that is not altogether on the surface, that might have escaped the vigilance of some hon. members. In the case of Manitoba they have a surplus of $380,000 odd for the eleven and a half months in which they have been operating. They have added 1,468 miles to their long distance lines, they have established 2,168 new stations and, by increases in their system, they have added to their expenditure over $80,000. Yet they have, as the result of eleven and a half months' operation, $380,000 surplus.

Mr. BRODER. They have not changed their rates yet.

Mr. LENNOX. Have they changed their rates yet.?

Mr. BRODER. No.

An. Hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. The other night, in the House at Winnipeg, Mr. Rogers made an announcement as to what they would do, what the method of operation in future would be and he announced very considerable reductions, which will be seen in one or two items that I propose to refer to:

	Present rate,	Reduced rate.
Winnipeg.
Joint users, business..	$25 00	$15 00
Single line, residence, unlimited service..	30 00	25 00
Two party line, residence, unlimited service..	24 00	18 00
Joint users, residence..	15 00	5 00
Extension rates in residence, wall or desk..	12 00	6 00
Brandon and Portage la Prairie.
One party, residence, unlimited service..	$25 00	$20 00
Two party, residence, unlimited service..	21 00	15 00
Residence extension sets, desk or wall..	12 00	6 00
Small Towns.
Single line, business, unlimited service..	$24 00	$20 00
Single line, residence, unlimited service..	18 00	15 00
Farmers' Lines.
	$24 00	$20 00
	30 00	25 00

There are other reductions. I have just picked out a few of those that appeared to be very substantial and decided.

Mr. DANIEL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether that surplus in Manitoba is a surplus after paying interest on cost or not?

Mr. LENNOX. I understand it to be a clear surplus.

Mr. DANIEL. After paying interest?

Mr. LENNOX. I have not analysed it sufficiently.

Mr. SPROULE. After paying $61,000 interest on cost.

Mr. LENNOX. What I want to say in reference to Manitoba is this, and it is only because it is a matter that is not in everybody's mind that I refer to it at all. Manitoba has not as yet had a reasonable opportunity of demonstrating what it can do in this line. But we do not need to appeal very much to Manitoba in order to fortify our argument because we have such ample fields to afford us evidence in other countries where this system has been in operation for many years. I merely referred to Manitoba in passing. We have established the fact that they are giving a vastly cheaper service in other countries than in Canada. Now we come to the point of how these other countries are doing it. Are they doing it out of the general funds of the state or out of the earnings of the business? We find that Russia, which has already been referred to and which performs its service at one-third of our rate shows large profits, that Norway which has been furnishing the service at a cheaper rate than Russia had a surplus at the time the evidence was taken by this committee of $137,484, that Germany was shown to have had large profits and we shall refer more in detail to Germany later on; that Bavaria, in 1903 showed a net profit of $355,166; the Transvaal Colony a profit of $114,445; Rotterdam, in 1904, a profit of $26,824.86; Tasmania, $28,026.85; State of Victoria, $34,284.80; Straits Settlements, $4,034.04; Guernsey, $1,338; Portsmouth, $9,603.64; Swansea, $3,615. These figures show that after setting aside a sufficient sum to cover depreciation in plant, to pay incidental expenses and to pay interest upon the investment, a substantial profit has been realized. We have again, as contained in the report of the evidence of the committee, New Zealand showing a surplus of $38,756.46; or 2.69 per cent, on the capital expenditure after paying 5 per cent. interest on debentures; and we have the Secretary of State in Germany, stating in his report shortly before the evidence was taken by the committee that:

Since 1880, 5 per cent has been paid on the capital expenditure for the entire telephone system. (Ottawa evidence.)

Belgium—Profit on whole system, $153,923. The Minister of Railways, Post and Telegraphs, states that the interest paid by the government amounts to 3 per cent on the capital expended; also that the cost of the lines is paid off in 15 years, and the cost of the apparatus in 10 years. (Ottawa evidence.)

Russia—The St. Petersburg-Moscow line, 411 miles in length, which cost $492.40 per mile for two circuits earned a surplus of $36,050 in 1904. The rate for 3 minutes conversation being 77 cents. (Ottawa evidence.)

Great Britain, it was said at the time that the committee sat, was operating at a loss. At the time of the last report available, when the evidence was being taken, the Postmaster General pointed out that it was not fair to count the British system as being operated at a loss because a large portion of the investment had not got into the position of earning money, but in the subsequent report which I have he shows that the condition of things is changed and therefore I may refer to a subsequent year. In 1905-6 the Postmaster General's report shows that the earnings, after the payment of all expenses of operation, were £396,605, and that after setting aside interest and depreciation amounting to $353,492 there was a net surplus of £43,113. If you add to that the fact that at that time they were earning a royalty from their telephone system it shows that for that year they made a net profit out of their telephone system of £386,545. The figures for 1907 show a net surplus in that year, of £19,305 sterling after setting aside the necessary funds for depreciation. For the year ending 31st March, 1909, the report of the Postmaster General has not of course come to hand, but I find in Hazell's Annual that the suggestion of the Postmaster General that things would begin to show a different condition as soon as the capital investment was in a position to earn money, has been verified.

Now, it is a good thing to stop when you are done, but if I were to say all I think I ought to say upon this question I would not have done. However, I think I have said enough to lead me to hope that the government, having taken some action during the present session, will see that active measures are followed up by the Board of Railway Commissioners to ensure that we shall not have to continue to pay such high telephone rates as we have been paying in the past. My resolution is not directed in any way to embarrass the government. It is a friendly resolution; in fact, this session I have in many ways been co-operating with the government.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear.

Mr. LENNOX. I have been trying to go with them hand in hand, as it were, and I hope I shall be able to do them a great deal of good. This measure which I advocate in my resolution is one which affects almost every person in Canada. Take a telephone rate of four cents for fifteen miles in Australia and of 4½ cents in some countries for 120 miles, and you can see that if we can get telephone rates on anything like the reasonable basis in effect in these countries where they have nationalized their system, we will be extending a great boon to the people of our rural districts. It is the rural districts in which I am most concerned. I feel that what is driving the young man away from the farm is that he has not the modern conveniences and advantages which are possessed by his relatives in the cities, and if you want to get the young man back to the land you have to make rural life more comfortable. I hope that when we conserve our water-powers and by their means carry the electric light into every barn and the dwelling of every farm in Canada, and when we bring the telephone and the telegraph at reasonable rates to every farm home, and when our postal facilities give a daily mail service to almost all parts of the country, then will our young men be encouraged to live upon the farm, and then will a great step be taken for the betterment of Canada.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenberg). The closing words of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) remind us that when the millennium comes we will be a happy people living in a happy world. We are told by the hon. gentleman that his resolution is moved in a spirit friendly to the administration, and I will allow that statement of his to pass without comment, further than to say that if it was intended to be friendly its language is certainly deceptive. The first part of the resolution contains the premises upon which the hon. gentleman bases his conclusion, and a portion of it reads:

That in the opinion of this House the experience of the provinces which have taken over the telephone system establish the fact that the people of Canada, outside the zone of provincially operated lines, are paying for higher rates for telephone service than they should be called upon to pay.

The language employed there is certainly not very clear, but I assume the hon. gentleman intended these words to mean, that in the three prairie provinces in which they have assumed the ownership and control of the telephone system, there has followed a reduction in rates, which causes the existing rates to be lower than the rates in other provinces. If there is any efficacy in an argument based on that portion of the resolution, the hon. gentleman must have failed in his proof because the telephone rates in the three prairie provinces are not lower than they are in any of the other provinces of Canada. The resolution was placed upon the Order Paper on January the 21st last, and it is hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to claim that by reason of its publicity at that date he forced the government of Manitoba to make some slight reductions recently. The conclusion of the resolution is based upon another statement of fact, which, as is the case of the former portion of the resolution, is not correct. It says:

"That the evidence collected by a special committee of this House appointed to enquire into the question of telegraphs and telephones more than four years ago, established the fact that the people of Canada, outside the zone of provincially operated lines, are paying far higher rates for telephone service than they should be called upon to pay.'

Now, Mr. Speaker, I assume that when the hon. gentleman undertakes to state that in any one province of Canada we are paying higher telephone rates than we should, he means that the private or company owned and operated telephone lines are earning more than a reasonable profit. I can quite understand that the telephone rates in certain European countries are lower than they are in Canada, but surely the hon. gentleman must see that he has failed to give to the House a scintilla of evidence to show that in any one province of Canada the people are paying a higher telephone rate than they should, although I am not going so far as to say that in some cases, that may not be so. My contention is that by citing the telephone rates prevalent in European countries the hon. gentleman does not prove that the rates in any portion of Canada are higher than they should be.

Mr. hon. friend, in commencing his remarks, referred to certain statements made some years ago by one Mr. Dagger, before a select committee of this House. If I am not wrong, it was upon the statement of Mr. Dagger that the premier of the province of Manitoba promised a reduction in the telephone rates of that province anywhere from 100 to 200 per cent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see how any tolls can be reduced 200 per cent.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That is right—50 per cent. On one occasion the premier of Manitoba made the public declaration that the telephone rates in the province of Manitoba would be materially reduced by reason of representations made to him by the same gentleman, Mr. Dagger. Now, in that portion of Mr. Dagger's evidence to which my hon. friend for South Simcoe has referred, I find this statement:

I am satisfied that the present rates in Canada could be cut in two, and still leave a satisfactory profit on the working.

The man who makes that statement is not one whose judgment respecting telephone rates and telephone operations in this country should be accorded the smallest measure of credit. The experience of every telephone company, the experience of every individual who knows anything about telephone operation in this country, would stamp that statement as being so absolutely absurd as to deprive any opinion offered by Mr. Dagger on this subject of any value whatever. Mr. Dagger, on page 12, makes the following statement respecting the experience of the city of Glasgow in municipal telephone operations:

Before the establishment of the Glasgow municipal exchange the rates were $48.70 in the city, and $97.40 to $121.75 in the suburbs. The telephone area of the municipal system is 143 square miles, and the rate is $25.60.

Now, it is very unfortunate that while Mr. Dagger presented that statement to the committee as evidence of the ability of a municipality to give lower telephone rates than a private corporation could do, very shortly afterwards, the corporation of Glasgow went out of the telephone business. I will give a resume of the experience of the city of Glasgow in the telephone business from a book entitled 'Public Ownership and the Telephone in Great Britain,' by Mr. Meyer, as follows:

The corporation of Glasgow embarks in the telephone business, expecting to install a plant for about $95 per subscriber's line. In May, 1906, its expenditure had been $183 per subscriber's line. The corporation lays its wires under the streets; at the same time denying the National Telephone Company all public way-leaves. It expects to destroy the company's business in Glasgow; but it is beaten 'to stand-still.' In September, 1906, the corporation sold its plant to the post office for $1,525,000 that is, at a net loss of $58,980.

Mr. LENNOX. Why did the Post Office Department buy it?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Because the city of Glasgow could not operate the plant at all, and asked the Post Office Department to take it off their hands; that is the only reason. (Reading):

Shortly afterward the Postmaster General announced that he would have to reconstruct the main exchange, as well as replace every one of the 12,800 subscribers' telephones in use. Those operations probably will cost from $500,000 to $750,000.

That is the case to which Mr. Dagger referred as proof of the wisdom of municipal ownership and operation of telephone lines. The city of Glasgow expected when they went into the business very materially to reduce the rates to subscribers, but after a year or two's experience they found that they could not give the rates promised, or even the rates given by the National Telephone Company, a company which was operating under very serious disadvantages, and they were obliged to sell their plant to the Post Office Department.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Have the rates been increased since they sold to the Post Office Department?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I do not see that that would be important at all. Now, the hon. mover of the resolution has given to the House the rates charged in various European countries. Of course, that is very interesting information, but it is not necessarily conclusive; it does not necessarily substantiate the allegations made in his resolution. In many of the countries to which he has referred, particularly Great Britain, Germany, France, Holland and several others, since the evidence was taken before the select committee of this House there has been a complete change in the telephone rates. At that time there was a flat-rate service in most European countries, but that has since been changed to a measured-rate service, under which the subscriber pays a certain amount for every call, and there are now many restrictions in these countries which did not then exist.

Again, on the opposite page from which my hon. friend quoted the evidence of Mr. Dagger, he might find some remarks respecting the characteristics of the telephone service in many of those countries presented to the committee by the same Mr. Dagger. For instance, in Bavaria he says they have a bad rural intercourse, and the heart of my hon. friend is particularly warm towards people living in the rural districts. In Wurtemburg he says the rural intercourse is very poor. Respecting Great Britain he says the regulations are unfavourable to develop communications with the outside towns. In Holland the rural intercourse is bad; in Belgium the rural intercourse is indifferent; in France we find bad rural intercourse; the same in Spain, the same in Italy, the same in Russia. So that this same Mr. Dagger says that the service in those countries is not adequate.

Now, surely some attention must be paid, and some thought must be given to the adequacy of the telephone service given in these various countries. The people of Canada are willing to pay a certain figure for a good service, I think I may safely say that the people of any country are willing to pay a higher figure for a more efficient service. But I think I may safely say that in no part of Europe can you find a telephone service at all equal to the service in Canada. Surely nobody in Canada would like to see installed in this country a telephone service so inadequate, so useless, I might say so disliked by the people, as is the telephone service in Great Britain. My hon. friend should remember this, that the cost of the installation and maintenance of a telephone service, as well as the maintenance and installation of any public utility, must in some degree determine what shall be the charges made to the public. For instance the weather conditions in France are much more favourable to telephone operation than in Canada and consequently upon that ground, if on no other, could we expect higher rates here. Then the cost of labour in many countries abroad is very much lower than it is in Canada. If my hon. friend will look in volume 2 of the report of the select committee, he will find that the salaries and wages paid to employees by telephone companies in European countries very much less than the wages and salaries paid by telephone companies in this country. Then my hon. friend referred to Australia. It is true that the telephone rates in that country are considerably less than they are in Canada, but they are not given in Canada. There telephone systems are less expensive to maintain, and the cost of operation, including the rate of wages paid, is very much less in that country than in Canada. Now I am referring to this case in a general way, because my hon. friend has drifted off into a line of discussion I did not anticipate; and I trust that some hon. gentlemen who will follow me will go more carefully into that aspect of his remarks, because I am sure they can be more fully answered than I am doing. While the hon. gentleman was speaking I was looking over volume 2 of the select committee report, and in it, I find a report by Mr. John Hesketh, the electrical engineer in the Postmaster General's Department, Queensland, on matters investigated by him during a recent tour in America and Europe. At page 653 I find he makes some observations respecting telephone companies in European countries as well as the United States, which are rather important, and I will ask the House to bear with me while I read a few extracts therefrom. He presents a schedule of rates in this report to his government, and he says:

I beg to ask that the present schedule be read with the greatest caution. The rates themselves in many instances appear most attractive, but they are one side of the picture only.

I may remark here that my hon. friend the mover of the resolution was looking solely on one side of the picture when he dealt with European telephone rates.

As indicating the effect of local conditions, Stockholm may be instanced. Here operators receive 50 kr. a month, or, say, £36 per annum, as compared with £110 in Australia. The tariff being arranged on a measured service basis, the calls per subscriber are reduced, and each operator is enabled to attend to 250 subscribers; two and a half times as many as in Sydney, or over three times as many as in Melbourne.

He then refers to the cost of labour and construction in Australia, and he finds it considerably higher. He then proceeds to make some unfavourable comments on the figures given by the Swiss government respecting the cost of telephone operation there, and he states that these figures are very inadequate and misleading. Now I wish to read that gentleman's statement respecting the charges made by independent telephone companies in the United States. My hon. friend referred to the charges made by independent telephone companies in the United States, and compared them with those made by the Bell Telephone Company, and certainly there was a great difference. I would like to read to my hon. friend what this expert has to say respecting the difference in rates between telephones operated by the Bell Company and independent companies in the United States:

The American independent movement is now suffering from the effects of having fixed the rates too low. In only one independent company was I told that the rates were adequate, and in this instance they were higher than the competing Bell Company. In all the other cases there was a movement in favour of higher rates, as those now in force did not allow the class of service required to be maintained. Even the post office London rates have been fixed by considerations of policy, and not finance.

Now respecting the figures quoted by my hon. friend in connection with the charges made by independent telephone companies in the United States, I want to say first that the character of the service which they give to the public is not as good as that given by the Bell Telephone Company and I wish further to say that the figures which he gave this evening, and which were quoted from the select committee of this House which sat a few years ago, are not the figures in force to-day; and whatever force the argument of my hon. friend might have, if those figures were correct, is now entirely lost. Coming back to the resolution, as I stated in the beginning, my hon. friend in effect asserts that the telephone rates in the prairie provinces are lower than in all the other provinces of Canada, and that they have been lowered by reason of the fact that the governments of those three provinces have become proprietors of the telephones, or most of them, and are to-day in control of them. Now if that is the fact, if that allegation in the resolution is correct, my hon. friend has not endeavoured to sustain it.

Mr. LENNOX. I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that there is no such allegation in the resolution whatever. The fact is that these three provinces are dealing with the matter provincially, and therefore we cannot deal with it. Any person who will read the resolution can see that.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is difficult to understand what the resolution means, and the hon. gentleman cannot find fault with me for so saying. It is difficult to explain it to the House. I do not mean to say that my hon. friend deliberately made this resolution beautifully vague so as to give ample opportunity of dancing all around the green, and drawing any conclusion he cared to. It looks very much like that. My hon. friend says that the experience of the provinces, mainly the prairie provinces, established the fact that the people of Canada are paying too high a rate to-day. Now that may mean something in my hon. friend's mind, but surely no other conclusion can be drawn than that there has been a reduction of rates in these three provinces by reason of the fact that the governments have taken over the telephones in these provinces.

Mr. LENNOX. It does not mean anything of the kind.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It would take my hon. friend too long to make that clear to the House. I am not trying to misconstrue the resolution of my hon. friend, but I do in all sincerity submit that it is not capable of any other construction.

Mr. LENNOX. Does not the hon. gentleman know that these three provinces, because they found the rates were excessive, took over the lines themselves? Is not that the obvious meaning of the resolution?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Then my hon. friend goes on to say that therefore Canada should do something in the same line.

His argument is ineffective, unless he shows that there has been some improvement of conditions in these provinces. Otherwise what is the good of referring to these cases? What is the good of making these allegations? I do not propose to argue against the naturalization of telephones. My judgment is that it would be a very unfortunate thing for Canada to engage in it; I hope that no gentleman on either side of this House would affirm such a policy. The experience of other countries of the world would be against it, but particularly in Canada, I believe would it be an impossible policy. Once in a while, a province does become the proprietor of the telephone system and engages in its operations. I fear, however, that the motive prompting provincial governments to engage in this work is not so much commercial as political. I think that is fairly true of Manitoba. Two or three years ago, the government of Manitoba embarked upon this work. The leaders of the government promised the people reductions in telephone rates. I could read to the House, but it is not necessary to do so, the statements of Mr. Roblin and Mr. Rogers promising tremendous reductions. Perhaps it might not be out of place for me to give the substance of a statement by Mr. Campbell, the Attorney General of the province. Referring to the telephone system in Grand Rapids, Mich., he stated that there the house telephones cost $24 and business telephones $36, against $30 for house and $50 for business in Winnipeg; and he made the specific statement that the cost of a telephone for Winnipeg should not exceed $16, and that for that sum a most satisfactory service could be given. This statement is almost as ridiculous as that made by Mr. Dagger when he said that telephone rates in Canada could be reduced fifty per cent and still leave a handsome profit to the operating company. They had a similar experience in Great Britain. The Duke of Marlborough organized a company called The New Telephone Company. In a series of letters addressed to the London 'Times,' he promised that, if the post office would give his company a license to operate a telephone system, he would give to the five millions of people in the London metropolitan district a metallic circuit service at $50 or $60 a year, very much less than the rates charged by the Post Office, or by the National Telephone Company, the chief telephone company of England. He had an experience of one year and found that he could not give the telephone service at anything like the rate he had led the people to expect. He sold out his plant to the National Telephone Company, and, later, he admitted, in a letter to the 'Times' that in talking about $50 and $60 telephone rates he certainly had 'done a great deal of bleating.' And I think that Messrs. Rogers, Roblin and Campbell, of Manitoba, have 'done a great deal of bleating' in promising the telephone reductions they have promised to the public. The provincial government of Manitoba purchased the Bell Telephone system in that province, promising to the people great reductions and I have no donbt——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) allege that they have not given very substantial reductions? Does he venture to say that the figures I read are not correct?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is true that, in the last few hours, forced to it either by my hon. friend's resolution, or by political expediency, or something else, they have made a reduction. But I intend to argue that there was no justification for that reduction, there were no business reasons for it, and they did not have enough telephone experience to warrant them in making reductions.

Mr. LENNOX. They have a surplus.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I have no hesitation in making the prophecy that not many years will elapse before they will not merely restore the rates the Bell Telephone Company had when they were operating the system, but that in many cases they will increase the rate. The provincial government were not long the proprietors of the system when they increased the rates, the amounts paid for telephones by medical men, veterinary surgeons and nurses were very much increased. The cost of telephone connections to the farmers was also increased, for the government obliged the farmers to furnish the poles to make connections between their residences and the line along the highway, whereas the Bell Telephone Company had always supplied the farmers with poles. They also made a regulation that long distance calls requested for the night but made in the day must be charged for at day rates. And in no instance did they make a reduction of the rates.

Now, my hon. friend said, and has repeated while I have been speaking, besides referring to it modestly in his own address, that Manitoba is now reducing the rates. I have said that there was no business reason for Manitoba making a reduction. Every hon. member will agree with me that if it can be shown that the Manitoba government operated the telephone system without producing a surplus they had no right to make a reduction in the rates. It is of very little use to make a reduction if the people have to pay for it at some other time or in some other way.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman deny that they have a surplus?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. They have a surplus on paper.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman deny that they have a surplus?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I deny that, according to the methods of book-keeping employed by all well managed telephone companies that they have any surplus, and I believe the Manitoba government are fully aware of the fact that they were not justified in making reductions.

Mr. ROCHE. Does the hon. gentleman know that the control of the telephone system is not with the government, but with a commission of former Bell employees?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I am aware that the telephone system is operated by the commission. But I am also aware that, so far as policy is concerned, the commission is under control of the government, and the revenues received by the commission are paid over to the provincial treasury. The rates are certainly controlled by the government, and not by the commission, otherwise we should not find Messrs. Roblin, Rogers and Campbell making such great promises to the public of telephone reduction. The statement issued the other day by the Minister of Telephones and Telegraphs, of the province of Manitoba gave as total receipts from telephones, $722,612, of which——

Mr. SPROULE. That was for eleven and a half months only. Add the other half month.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That is for the year from Jan. 8.

Mr. LENNOX. It is for 11½ months.

Mr. SPROULE. You should add the other $27,000.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The Bell Telephone Company disposed of their telephone system I think on January 8, 1908. The statement given the other day to the provincial parliament at Winnipeg, was up to Dec. 31, 1908.

Mr. LENNOX. It began Jan. 15.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The total receipts as I have already said were $722,612, which included $62,698 of uncollected tolls. However, I make no point of that. This statement includes unearned rentals, but the statement does not give any particulars and it is impossible to tell how much of that total revenue was for unearned rentals and I am sure the mover of the resolution and every hon. gentleman in the House will agree that that statement should not have included for the year 1908, unearned rentals.

Mr. LENNOX. I will send the full account to my hon. friend if he would like it in detail.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I have it, but will my hon. friend tell me if that statement included unearned rentals.

Mr. LENNOX. I will send the statement to my hon. friend and he can examine it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. That takes considerable time and if the hon. gentleman knows, he will answer my question.

Mr. LENNOX. I have not looked at it to-day; I think it does.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I take it for granted my hon. friend does not know because evidently the government of Manitoba do not know or they would make it public, and unless my hon. friend has private advice from them he does not know.

When the Bell Telephone Company sold its assets to the government of Manitoba, they paid to the government $108,000 for unearned rentals. I think it is fair upon this to base some figures as to what the unearned rentals would be on the 31st Dec. last. The telephone system during 1908 increased very largely in Manitoba, in Winnipeg as well as in the rural districts, and if $108,000 was the amount paid by the Bell Telephone Company to the government of Manitoba on Jan. 8, for unearned rentals at that time, surely I may fairly conclude that $120,000 to $125,000 would be the amount of unearned rentals included in the statement issued by the government of Manitoba the other day. Therefore this would leave a total revenue for 1908 of about $600,000. The statement issued the other day by the government of Manitoba also states that the gross expenditures were $530,161. That includes debenture interest upon the bonds given to the Bell Telephone Company in payment of the system they acquired. This would leave a surplus of $70,000 and I am sure no gentleman can successfully contradict my statement that the very best you can make of the year's operation in the province of Manitoba would be a surplus of $70,000 and not a surplus of over $200,000.

I say that the statement does not even disclose a surplus of $70,000, and if the government of Manitoba employed the system of book-keeping that all good telephone companies in the world do and should, they would disclose to the public a deficit. They make very little allowance for depreciation in the telephone plant. This of course varies, different telephone companies employ different methods of calculating depreciation. Some assign values for depreciation of the plant divided up into ten or twelve portions, the wires are given a certain period of life and the poles a certain period; some telephone companies write off ten per cent and some five per cent, but I think that in most cases eight per cent would be considered a very fair amount to write off for depreciation. The government of Manitoba spent $104,000 for maintenance of their telephone system in 1908, and they did not write off anything in addition for depreciation. The question of telephones in Manitoba was inquired into before a special committee of the legislature of that province in 1906. The Hon. Mr. Campbell, attorney general of the province, questioned the general manager of the company with relation to the amount that should be written off for depreciation of the plant as follows:

Q. What would you say of the evidence of Mr. Moulton of the Twin City Company (a previous witness) when he says that 5 per cent is sufficient to write off for depreciation in any one year?—A. From our experience of a year in the business we still think a company is justified in charging at least 10 per cent.

Taking the figures given by Mr. Moulton to that committee, viz., five per cent, the telephone system cost the government of Manitoba say $4,000,000. They paid more for it. Five per cent of that would be $200,000 a year, and surely that is a very low estimate. There is probably no telephone company in the world which provides less than five per cent for depreciation. The Manitoba government provided nothing whatever for depreciation unless it was included in maintenance, and that amounted to $104,000 so that in addition there should have been written off in that statement some ninety odd thousand dollars for depreciation. Figuring maintenance and depreciation at $200,000, you completely wipe out the surplus which the government of Manitoba have presented to the public. Therefore I say to my hon. friend that the Manitoba government did not operate its system at a profit, and I say further that they were not justified in making a reduction in the rates. It was not done for commercial or economic reasons, the motive was purely political exigencies and considerations.

The Bell Telephone Company wrote off for depreciation the following percentages of its revenue:

Year.	Depreciation.
1900..	38 per cent.
1901..	42 "
1902..	36 "
1904..	34 "

Whereas the government of Manitoba simply provides for maintenance. They provide 17 per cent of their revenue for maintenance, figuring nothing for depreciation. I wish to quote the opinion of the Manitoba 'Free Press,' a paper not friendly to the Manitoba government, with regard to this statement. It deals with it in a fair and able way; I think able, because the writer has apparently reasoned out his statement well. I see no objection to it. The figures employed are incontrovertible.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN.

I would like to just read to the House the conclusions contained in this, and I challenge any hon. gentleman opposite to successfully contradict or weaken anything in it. The 'Free Press' says this:

1. That considerably over $100,000 of receipts is improperly charged to 1908 as this amount is in payment for services which the province could not render until the year 1909.

I presume no person could successfully contradict that. I cannot see how any person possibly could.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the hon. gentleman tell the House whether that is an editorial or a statement by some member of the local legislature?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. It is an editorial, but if it is based upon fact, and if the conclusions which this editorial render to the public are true, it does not matter very much who wrote it. I have read one of the conclusions from the editorial and if my hon. friend will point out wherein he thinks it is incorrect I will be very glad to give him my opinion upon it and possibly I may correct some error which may be lurking in his mind.

2. That the outlay upon maintenance is equivalent only to two and a half per cent of the value of the telephone plant, whereas the minimum estimate of depreciation is five per cent.

That is absolutely proven by the statement which is issued by the government.

3. That, whereas the Bell Telephone Company sets aside not less than thirty-four per cent of its ordinary income for maintenance, the province last year set aside only seventeen per cent.

4. That the outlay upon maintenance for telephones in the city of Winnipeg last year was not more than one-half what it was in the year 1904, when the telephones were owned and administered by the Bell Telephone Company.

5. That the surplus, upon the figures as set forth in the statement of the government, is $70,000 and that this amount has only been obtained by expending on maintenance an amount equivalent to only half the minimum estimate for depreciation.

6. That, putting the maintenace at twice the amount given in the figures, that is, at $208,000 in place of $104,000, the Manitoba government telephone system was operated last year at an actual loss of between $30,000 and $40,000.

I say that the last statement, according to the financial statement issued by the Manitoba government is absolutely correct. I challenge any person to controvert that in the slightest degree whatever, and I repeat what I have already said, that the result is not favourable to the administration and that the telephone system in 1908 in Manitoba was operated at a loss. I deny that my hon. friend who moves this resolution can obtain anything from the experience of the province of Manitoba to justify the conclusions which he asks this House to affirm. Then, there is this to be remembered: The government of Manitoba have been in charge of the operation of this system for but one year, and I think it is fair to say that they have not yet had that experience which would warrant them in embarking upon the policy of rate reduction. I submit that the people of Manitoba would have justified the government in abstaining from any reduction of these rates for a further period at least. Again, it should be remembered that Manitoba is a growing province, and that it is a peculiar thing that the telephone business is different from almost all other commercial businesses in that as your volume of business increases your profits do not necessarily grow, and there comes a period in the telephone business when, if you receive a certain number of subscribers, you commence to lose money. In most other businesses the greater the volume the greater the profits. This is rather an important point, and I wish to read what a telephone paper called 'Public Service' says in answer to a question asked upon this point. This question is often asked concerning the telephone business. Take, for instance, the city of Brandon. It is a young and growing town. The average length of wires in that town to-day is half a mile. This town will grow in all directions and what change will this effect? They will have to increase the length of the wire lines per subscriber, and consequently there will be a greater initial cost per station and a larger maintenance cost. In the second place, the increased number of subscribers increases the number of calls at the central office, and this necessarily increases the labour in connection with the central office. Of course, it also means an increase of rates. Now, I wish to read one of a series of answers given to a question by a correspondent of this paper, the question being: Why are telephone rates higher in a large city than in a small city or town? The writer who answers this question says:

As the number of subscribers increases, the number of calls per station increases correspondingly, and, as an operator can only handle a certain number of calls per hour, extra operators are required. This item of expense in a large exchange, as compared to the same item of expense in a small exchange, is very large. By way of illustration, and to account for the increase in the number of calls per station with the increase in the number of stations, it can readily be seen that in an exchange of 1,000 stations a subscriber can only call 999 other subscribers, whereas a subscriber in an exchange of 10,000 subscribers can call 9,999 other subscribers, and being able to do this it is natural to suppose that the calls per station will be materially increased with the addition of other subscribers.

The above reasons are only a few of the many that can be advanced to show the necessity for charging higher rates in a large city than in a small one. It is now a generally well known fact that the telephone business is altogether unlike any other, for where cost is usually decreased the bulk of business increases in any commercial business, the reverse is true in the operation of a telephone plant. As the number of subscribers increases, the cost of installation and operation increases proportionally, which necessarily compels the charging of higher rates from time to time as subscribers are added to the exchange.

The hon. gentleman in his resolution refers also to the other provinces, of Alberta and Saskatchewan. He does not mention them, it is true, but in general terms he refers to them, as I assume they are included in the prairie provinces. My hon. friend attempts to draw some conclusions from the experience of these prairie provinces and, as he asks hon. gentlemen to base a judgment favourable to this resolution upon that experience, I beg to say there is nothing in the experience of the province of Saskatchewan to justify anybody in supporting his resolution because in that province they have had no telephone experience as yet. At the last session of the legislature the government of that province took power to instal and operate trunk lines, to empower municipalities to engage in the telephone business and to aid farmers' lines to the extent of giving them free poles. I therefore say that the hon. gentleman can find nothing in the experience of Saskatchewan to sustain his resolution, and consequently his resolution is, at least to the extent of one-third of it, absolutely vitiated. I might at considerable length give the result of telephone operation in the province of Alberta, but I wish to be brief, and I will simply say that there has been no reduction whatever in rates in that province since it took over the Bell Telephone system. Neither the government nor any member of the government has made any promise to the public that the rates would be reduced, and indeed I may say that the telephone rates in Alberta are higher than they are in the county represented by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the honourable gentleman say that his friends in Alberta and Saskatchewan were wrong in taking over the telephone system?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. If the honourable gentleman wants my own personal opinion, I will answer that I believe it was a bad policy. I say that the telephone rates in all the western provinces are no lower to-day than they are in any town or city in Ontario of corresponding size. There has been no reduction of rates in Alberta, and on the authority of statements made by the Calgary newspapers and the Calgary

Board of Trade, I say that the province of Alberta is not giving to its subscribers as good a service as was given by the Bell Telephone Company. The honourable gentleman says that Canada is suffering from a telephone monopoly and that we are in an inferior position to other countries with respect to the telephone service, but he also tells us that he offers no argument for or against government ownership. As I have pointed out it is not fair to compare telephone rates in this country with the rates prevailing in France or in Italy or in Australia. The question is: Are the private telephone companies in this country giving as good a service as they possibly can, and are they giving that service at as cheap a rate as they can consistent with maintaining their plant efficiently and allowing themselves an adequate return on the capital employed? I do not think that Canada is prepared at this stage to assume the enormous financial burden of taking over the telephone systems. It would be a serious matter also to add to the Civil Service list of the country the employees of the telephone service. Successive postmasters general and chancellors of the exchequor in Great Britain have given as a reason against the taking over of the National Telephone Company that it would be a menace to the country to add its employees to the already over burdened civil list. The experience of the British post office is that they cannot get the same efficiency in the unit in the telephone service as the National Telephone Co. gets from its operators. However, assuming for the sake of argument that there is a grievance against the telephone companies, is there not a better remedy than nationalization of the telephones? After the evidence was taken by a select committee of this House some years ago the government no doubt took this matter into consideration and last year the Railway Act was amended by placing telegraphs and telephones under the control of the Railway Commission. By that Act of last year the Railway Commissioners are given control over the rates of telephone companies within the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada; all telephone tolls are made subject to the approval of the board; tolls may be dealt with in the same manner as standard freight rates; the telephone companies are compelled to file with the board the tariff to be charged from time to time; the railway board can compel the company operating a long distance system to grant connections to any telephone system owned and operated by any company, province or municipality; the board can compel that company under terms to make provision for the use of connections; the board is authorized to apply the provisions of the Railway Act with respect to joint tariffs to the interchange of business between telephone companies, and all working agreements between telephone companies as to interchange of business are to be approved by the board. Now, the question is, does not this legislation put the telephone companies of this country sufficiently under the control of the Board of Railway Commissioners to ensure to the people due and ample protection as to telephone rates? I submit that it does, and I submit that the policy at present contained in our legislation in this regard is the proper policy. The Railway Commissioners have already taken a great deal of evidence concerning telephone rates in this country, and they should be given ample opportunity to study this question, and no doubt in due course they will make such regulations as to rates as will afford ample protection to the public. The Railway Board has, I think, secured a reputation for business which is commendable to itself and is satisfactory to the people of this country generally; and if the telephone companies operating in this country are doing an injustice to their subscribers and to the public generally, as the mover of this resolution suggests, I think we may well hope that ample relief will be accorded by the Railway Commission. I do not wish to delay the House further on this matter; but in closing, I desire, seconded by Mr. Sinclair, to move this amendment:

That all the words after the word 'that' in the first line be struck out and the following substituted: 'This House re-affirm its approval of the legislation recently passed by the Canadian parliament placing telephone companies under public control through the Board of Railway Commissioners, and expresses its opinion, that until such times as the remaining provinces of confederation follow in the footsteps of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba in the acquisition of the business and property of telephone companies within their limits, such government control is ample to protect the interests of the public both as to telephone tolls and service.'

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean), whose splendid ability in placing a case before the House I have often admired, but from the manner in which he floundered around to-night in the attempt to say something to offset the arguments of the hon. member for South Simcoe, (Mr. Lennox) I am sure he will agree with me that the arguments that he has advanced in support of his position are not such as will meet with the general approval of the people of the country. He tells us that the western provinces do not give lower telephone rates than the provinces of the east. The hon. gentleman knows that the statement issued by the Manitoba legislature within the past few days is sufficient to convince any fair minded man that the government of that province have succeeded not only in showing a surplus of $250,000, but in giving to the people of Manitoba a substantial reduction in the annual rate for phones. I desire to congratulate the hon. member for South Simcoe on the able manner in which he has presented his case to the House. We cannot sufficiently appreciate the efforts which that hon. gentleman has put forth to obtain for the users of telephones in the Dominion of Canada a substantial reduction of rates and, judging by remarks of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. A. K. Mclean) I would be inclined to think that the reduction of rates in Manitoba by the legislature was due to the observations of the hon. member for South Simcoe. I want to remind the hon. gentleman that it is the Conservative party in the province of Manitoba that has reduced the rates within the last few days, and I have no doubt that when the good Liberal governments in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan come to investigate their systems and place them on a proper basis, they will, like the province of Manitoba, be able to give the people of those provinces a substantial reduction in rates.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. member for Lunenburg has no faith in them.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That is quite true; he is more conversant with the telephone conditions in the western provinces than the people of those provinces, who are most enthusiastically in favour of establishing provincial telephones, managed and controlled by the provincial authorities, with national trunk lines to connect with the provincial systems. There is no doubt in my mind that the day is not far distant when the trunk lines of this country will be controlled by the Dominion parliament. With regard to the reduction of rates in the province of Manitoba, I may say that the rate to joint users, businesses, in the city of Winnipeg, now $25, are reduced to $15; single lines, residences, unlimited service, now $30, reduced to $25; two party line, residence, unlimited service, now $24, reduced to $18; one party line, residence, and two cents per outcall, $15; joint users, residence, now $15, reduced to $5; extension rates in residence, wall or desk, now $12, reduced to $6. These men have been able to give to the people of Manitoba not only an efficient service, but a substantial reduction in rates. The hon. gentleman said that there was nothing for depreciation of plant, but finally admitted that 2½ per cent was set aside for that purpose.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not admit that at all.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If he did not admit that, will he be kind enough to listen to this statement that comes from the legislature of Manitoba:

The maintenance and efficiency of the plant, equipment, long distance and farmers' rural lines have been kept up during the year by the expenditure of $98,699.99 for material, travelling expenses and labour.

All the telephone companies, municipal systems and others in the province who are doing business independently of the Bell Company, have been accorded connection with the government system, thereby adding to the value of all telephones which now comprise a system of over 20,000 subscribers. The independent companies in the eastern provinces want similar connections with the Bell Company but can't get it.

The hon. gentleman lives in a province inhabited by progressive people, and I am satisfied that many of the independent telephone companies in his province would be glad if the Railway Commission would compel the Bell Telephone Company to connect with the independent lines. I could show him in the western part of Ontario many telephone companies, who have been doing the expensive work of telephone building, and are begging and pleading to-day at the doors of the Railway Commission, to grant them connection with the Bell telephone lines.

Take one instance in my own riding. Only a few days ago it was my privilege to go to some members of the Railway Commission and show them that the Bell Telephone Company, in delivering messages in that district, would go to work and hire a horse and carriage and charge it up to the farmer who had an independent telephone in his house, and he had put his hand in his pocket for $2 to pay a man to deliver the phone message, when that same Bell Telephone Company could have transferred it in a moment to the independent telephone company's line, and it would have been delivered to the farmer. I only hope that the Railway Commission will take into consideration the importance of this question of independent telephone companies throughout our land. They are the men who are building up companies composed of farmers, and who find it impossible to get the Bell Telephone Company to put in their lines at any reasonable figure. I would like to take you into a township I have in mind at the present time. On the one side the Bell Telephone Company is charging the farmers $20 a year and compelling them to subscribe for three years, and to furnish enough subscribers to build a line several times over before they will begin operations; while on the other side of the township is an independent telephone company with some 200 subscribers, and they only charge $6 per annum, and are able to show a splendid surplus at the end of the year. I have in my possession the annual statement of that independent company and it shows that these men, through good business management, had been able to develop a splendid telephone service that covers a great deal of territory and are able to give to the people in those rural districts that service for $6 per annum, and show a surplus at the end of the year.

Now my hon. friend from South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) is simply urging upon the government the necessity of investigating this important question. Four or five years ago we had a great deal of useful information placed before that Telephone Committee, information that has never been given to the public except through the medium of the speeches of my hon, friend for South Simcoe. What we need is a more progressive policy along the line of telephones and telegraphs in this country. From what I was able to gather when I was over in the old land in regard to telephone and telegraph systems, I am satisfied that with proper business management and government control of these public utilities we could make them paying concerns, and at the same time cut the prices in two. The hon. gentleman from Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) gave us the example of the city of Glasgow; he said the city of Glasgow had turned over the independent telephone company to the Post Office Department. But he had to tell us at the same time that the reason they had a deficit was chiefly owing to the fact that they were fighting the National Telephone Company in that great city of Glasgow. No other reason can be brought forward to show that if they had exhibited reasonably fair business abilities, they would have had a surplus at the end of the year.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The city of Glasgow had a tremendous advantage over the National Telephone Company, because the corporation of Glasgow would not allow the National Company to put its wires under ground. They were obliged in many cases to string their wires from housetop to housetop. It was sheer inability on the part of the municipality successfully to operate a telephone company.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At the same time the government turns round and buys it out, and to-day what do we find in regard to the management of telephones in Great Britain? It was my privilege only last year to show to the Prime Minister, answering a statement of his in regard to telephones and telegraphs in Great Britain that I do not think he would attempt to repeat to-night, that instead of the companies not being paying investments there, they are paying investments, and they are giving a most satisfactory service to the people of that country. I agree with my hon. friend from Lunenburg that a few years ago the telephone system of Great Britain was anything but satisfactory, and we would not like to see in the Dominion of Canada the system they had there at that time. But I want to tell my hon. friend that that system has been wonderfully improved, and that to-day it is getting to be almost as perfect a system as you can find anywhere.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I would like to remind my hon. friend of this fact also, that Great Britain is only in the telephone business to preserve her telegraph business. They know they will always lose money by the telephones.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, I shall have to quote the British Postmaster General in 1906-07, and read some words that he used with regard to the telephone business which I think will be sufficient to convince the hon. gentleman of the truth of my statement:

The number of telephones in connection with the post office of the London telephone system increased during the year from 24,000 to 32,000.

Is that not a reasonable and substantial increase? Does that look as if the telephone companies were taking away all the business from the telegraph companies?

The growth of the system is still rapidly proceeding, additional subscribers being connected at an average of about 160 a week. New exchanges at Epsom and Ealing were opened early in the year. . . . It is satisfactory to know that a balance is now shown after paying all working expenses and after providing for interest and for a sinking fund for the repayment of capital. It must, however, be remembered that the revenue in previous years has been insufficient for these purposes, and that a considerable deficiency remains to be met out of the balances in future years.

I merely read these statements to show that in Great Britain they are making wonderful strides, not only in the telegraph but in the telephone as well. The hon. gentleman seems to think that the figures given by my hon. friend from South Simcoe were not of sufficient interest to the people of this Dominion when they were gathered some four years ago, and that since that time conditions have changed to such an extent that a very different state of affairs exists to-day. However, let me give a few quotations. The charge in Canada for a three minutes' conversation over 60 miles is as follows:

	Cents.
Canada	35
Great Britain	18
New Zealand	12½
Norway	9½
Denmark	9½
Switzerland	10
Bavaria	12
Belgium	19½
Russia	26
Australia	24½

Let me remind the hon. gentlemen of this fact, that a great many foreign countries are deeply interested in the telephone system and they are making a success of it. Among these I might mention Great Britain, Denmark, and Belgium. Great Britain operates the trunk lines and some local systems. Denmark operates the long distance lines, Belgium the entire system, Germany the entire system, Austria the entire system, also Bavaria, the State of Victoria, the State of Tasmania, the Commonwealth of Australia. New Zealand owns the long distance system, Cape Colony the long distance system and local exchanges, Norway the greater number of the trunk and lines, Holland the interlocal lines, Switzerland and Russia, nearly all the trunk lines, Glasgow, Brighton, Hull, Portsmouth, Swansea, Sweden, Strait Settlements, and Natal.

Pratically every one of these countries or cities has been able to show a substantial surplus. The Bell Telephone Company, up to the present time, will not heed the cry of the people living in the rural parts of Canada. I hope that the government will decide to follow the resolution presented this evening by the hon. member for South Simcoe and impress upon the commission the necessity of seeing to it that the independent telephone companies are fairly dealt with. But, if the postion taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) is the position of the government, it is evident that the government are not anxious to see the rates reduced in Canada, and that they are not going to put forth any effort to that end. The Bill was passed about a year ago, and until within the last few days the government apparently had not taken any action. I have a copy of the order in council which shows that it was passed only within the last few weeks, empowering the commission to go on and do its work. If the government have neglected this matter for the last ten or eleven months, are we not justified in urging upon them the necessity for dealing with it definitely and emphatically? The questions involved are important, not merely to the cities, towns and villages, but to the people living in the rural districts as well. We in this House, I believe, are not paying sufficient attention to the people living in the rural districts. We have in this chamber 221 members of parliament, only 23 of whom represent purely city constituencies. The constituencies represented by the other 198 members are largely rural. And yet we do not, to my mind, devote sufficient attention to the people of the rural districts. The one fact we cannot afford to forget is that Canada is distinctly an agricultural country, and we cannot make her anything else. We are proud of her fisheries, and I recollect that only a few weeks ago we heard the hon. gentleman (Mr. A. K. Maclean) say that the income from our fisheries amounted to $40,000,000. The leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) made a statement the other day that our income from timber amounted to $52,000,000. Our mines yield us about $80,000,000 or $90,000,000. We are glad to know that the output of our manufactories is several hundreds of millions. But the farming industry last year produced no less than $700.000,000 worth of goods. And when you consider the time and attention given by this House to the development of this great industry, you cannot help but feel that agriculture is not being developed as it ought to be and that we are lagging behind other nations in our progress in this great industry. I say this not with a view to discuss that question in itself, but as giving a reason why more attention should be given to the welfare of our agricultural population. I urge upon the government the necessity of accepting the resolution that has been presented. I feel satisfied that if they will do that they will help to improve the position not only of the people living in cities and towns, but also of the people living in the rural districts.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.). I have listened with great interest to the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox), in fact I always listen to him with much interest, because he prepares his speeches well and is usually fair in his presentation of his facts. I have listened also to the somewhat impassioned appeal of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) on behalf of the farmers. I think many of those on this side, as well as those opposite, can join in that very laudable aim. In so far as these hon. gentlemen are asking the government to take steps to make sure that the people of this country get their telephone services as cheaply as possible, I am heartily in accord with them, as also, I am sure, is every hon. member on this side. I am hardly at one, however, with my hon. friend from South Simcoe in his interpretation of the meaning of the first part of the resolution he has moved. As I understand this resolution, it asks this House to declare that the result of the operation of telephones in those provinces of Canada in which they have been controlled by the government is that the people receive their telephones cheaper than do the people of those provinces in which the telephones are not controlled by the government. If that be the case, I must say that I do not agree with him. I can speak very intelligently so far as one province is concerned, and I think I can speak with some intelligence so far as another province, the province of Manitoba, is concerned. I am not going to follow my hon. friends in their statements concerning telephonic affairs on the continent of Europe.

I have not been there to examine into the subject, and, so far as I know, neither have the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I read the evidence taken before the Telephone Committee with a great deal of interest, and have listened with interest to the quotation of it by these hon. gentlemen. But I would point out that that evidence was given four years ago, and that in the four years that have elapsed there have been a great many changes in the telephone business. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) referred to the fact that Glasgow, one of the cities put forward as a model from a municipal standpoint, has gone out of the telephone business because it could not make the business pay. And I would point out that, notwithstanding that there has been a very serious agitation for better control of telephones all over Canada and the United States in the last four years, in nearly every part of Canada and the United States telephone rates have increased rather than decreased. As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Lunenburg, the more the telephone business increases the greater in proportion will be the increase in the cost. It is different from other public utilities or other businesses. In my own town four years ago we were getting business telephones for $10 and residence telephones for $5, and those long distance telephones at that. Five years ago we were able to talk from Woodstock to St. John, 140 miles, for 25 cents. To-day we pay 55 cents. All over Canada you will find the rates have been increased. In any province of Canada, so far as I know, five years ago the long distance rate was based on a five minute conversation; to-day it is based on a three-minute conversation in every province except Manitoba, where it is two minutes. I point this out only to show that, notwithstanding the agitation that has been carried on in the country, telephone rates have been going up and the municipalities have not been taking control of this public utility or going into the telephone business. The only province in Canada which has gone into the telephone business with anything like thoroughness has been Manitoba.

It is not my purpose to deal with telephone matters in European countries. I need not point out that the conditions in Europe are very different from those in Canada. In the first place we know that wages are much higher here than in continental Europe, that you can operate a telephone system, so far as wages are concerned, in most European countries for fifty per cent of what you have to pay in Canada. I can apply almost the same percentage to Great Britain.

Mr. SPROULE. Would that apply to Australia?

Mr. CARVELL.

Mr. CARVELL. No, I do not think so. I want to be fair and I think that in all the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) to-night the Australian proposition looks to be the cheapest telephone communication we have discussed. But I want also to point out that my hon. friend did not state the capital involved in Australia, whether or not there was a deficit or anything with regard to the maintenance of the telephone system there, for instance the amount set aside for depreciation.

Mr. LENNOX. If I recollect I read out what the service was in Australia.

Mr. CARVELL. Then I did not catch it, but if the hon. gentleman did give that information I stand corrected. My purpose is to discuss this subject from a Canadian standpoint. It is not to my mind a question of what they have done in England, in France, in Bavaria, in Sweden or in Norway. Conditions are different in these countries from what they are here. The important question is what have we done in Canada up to the present and what can we do in the future? I again assure my hon. friends that although I am somewhat interested in the telephone business in one province, I am as anxious as my hon. friends to see the people of Canada get telephone communication at a proper rate. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) spent some time discussing the iniquities of the Bell Telephone Company. I hold no brief for the Bell Telephone Company. I am willing to admit that in many cases all over Canada the Bell Telephone Company have been monopolists and I dare say they have many sins to answer for. I am not trying to excuse or exculpate or even to apologize for them, but I wish to discuss for a few moments the actual conditions of the telephone business as they exist in Canada to-day. It has been said here to-night, and I presume will be again by my hon. friends on the other side of the House, that the experience of the province of Manitoba in the last year has justified the statement made so many times by hon. gentlemen opposite in the last three or four years, that all public utilities should be owned, operated and controlled by governments and municipalities, and not by corporations; or in other words the doctrine of public ownership.

Mr. LENNOX. Oh, no.

Mr. CARVELL. I am glad my hon. friend says 'oh, no,' because the only logical conclusion of the argument we have heard to-night is that the government should take control of these utilities and operate them themselves.

Mr. LENNOX. No one on this side has made any suggestion, and I distinctly said I was not arguing the question of public ownership pro or con. I was saying we should have as cheap a service in Canada as having relation to the conditions existing in other countries where they have a national system would be possible.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman has correctly repeated what he said earlier in the evening, but I again repeat that the logical conclusion of his argument is that we must have public ownership because the only instances he has given where they have cheaper telephones than in Canada are in those countries where government ownership is in existence and telephones are owned and controlled by the government.

In Manitoba the government have been operating their telephone system for a year and as was pointed out by my hon. friend they had a surplus in that year of something like $380,000. I think he was wrong in that, that he was including in it $161,000 which should have been paid for interest.

Mr. LENNOX. I think my hon. friend is right in that statement; I looked it up afterwards.

Mr. CARVELL. So it should be $220,000 or $230,000 instead of $380,000. But I make the statement here to-night, and I propose to prove it, that instead of the Manitoba government showing a surplus of $230,000 in their year's operation they had actually shown a deficit. I know my hon. friends opposite will not say 'hear, hear' to that statement but I shall give a few figures which will prove it. In the first place I am quoting now from a speech made by the Hon. Robert Rogers, in the legislature of Manitoba, on Thursday last, as reported in the 'Winnipeg Telegram,' a paper not unfriendly to the local government of Manitoba or to hon. gentlemen opposite. He stated that the total receipts of the Manitoba telephone system in eleven months and a half were $722,612. It is true he stated that at the same rate they would have received $27,000 for the remainder of the year which would have brought the receipt up to almost $750,000. But while they would be receiving $27,000 in receipts, they would also be expending a large amount in operation and management and therefore for the purpose of my argument I am confining my remarks to the actual receipts and expenditures in eleven months and a half. According to the same statement I find that they expended in operating $186,436; in maintenance $104,478; in general expenses, $35,107; and in miscellaneous, principally insurance, $16,589; or a total of $342,610. If you arrange these figures a little differently I would say that the total cost of management instead of being $186,436 is $238,132 and these are the figures used by Mr. Rogers because these were operating expenses, general expenses and miscellaneous. Therefore we have $238,132. I lay it down as an axiom in the management of telephone companies, and there is no telephone expert in or out of Canada, no man who knows any thing about telephones, who will not state that you should pay as much in every year for maintenance and depreciation as for operation.

The Manitoba government admit they have spent $238,130 for operation. Therefore, if you take the result of the cost of maintenance and add to it another $238,000 you will have about the proper amount which will have been paid out for operation, maintenance and depreciation. I want to go back and take it in another way. If you take the items of expense and add them together you get $342,610 and, taking that from the total receipts, you have the seeming result of $380,000 to the good. But, it is admitted by my hon. friend that out of that you must take at least, $161,000 because that is the interest on the debentures as stated by the Minister of Public Works for the province of Manitoba. Then, you must take out of that sum an amount for unearned rentals. I want to discuss that question of unearned rentals for a moment because I may say that this is one of the most misleading, one of the most unfair, and, if I were speaking in the presence of the man who made the statement, I would almost be justified in saying the most dishonest portion of his statement. But, it might not be fair to so characterize it in the absence of the man who made the statement. When the Manitoba government took over the Bell telephone system a little more than a year ago it was admitted that they should receive $108,000 from the Bell Telephone Company as unearned rentals. There is probably not a gentleman in this chamber to-night but who is the user of a telephone and I do not believe there are very many gentlemen who have not to pay their telephone rental in advance, some three months, some six months and some a year. I am saying what every hon. gentleman knows to be the truth. I know that the custom prevails in Manitoba and I know that at any time the Manitoba government have in their hands not less than $100,000 in money which they have not earned or paid for. I find from an analysis of the statement issued by the Minister of Public Works for the province of Manitoba, about the 22nd or 23rd of February, that last year they received from rentals—and that means what we, as subscribers all over the country will pay for having a telephone in our house—at least $535,465. Now, to be fair you have to take away from that $100,000 or $120,000 in order to ascertain what the actual receipts in rentals for that year would be which would bring down the actual receipts to $415,000 or $420,000. Assuming that you are only paying three months in advance, you have one quarter, or $100,000, of this amount paid in advance every three months. At no time in the year would they have less than $100,000 in their possession, representing rentals that had not been earned. But, if in January, 1908, they had $108,000 in their hands, it is only fair to assume, if they obtained 2,000 additional subscribers, that they should have $120,000 in their hands at the end of the year, and therefore I am going to assume, when they made up this statement and when Mr. Rogers made this statement in the legislature of Manitoba that they had in their possession $120,000 which they had not earned. Any person must admit that that should be deducted from the gross revenue of the province for that year.

Now, that brings us to another question and that is the question of depreciation. I do not have to argue to any hon. gentleman in this house nor to any gentleman in the country, farmer, or merchant, or telephone manager that there will be a depreciation every year in a telephone line. I can tell you what the experience of the New Brunswick Telephone Company has shown that our poles, which are always 25 feet long by 6 inches at the top, have to be renewed every twelve or fifteen years on the average, and that cross arms which cost about forty or forty-five cents each have to be renewed every seven or eight years on the average. That is what is called depreciation. I can point out to you more than that. There is not a telephone company in Canada that has not, in the last twenty-five years, been compelled, practically to discard every switchboard in its service. They have been compelled to discard the Blake transmitter and the short distance transmitter by the thousands and tens of thousands all over Canada. Go to the Bell Telephone Company, the Nova Scotia Telephone Company, the New Brunswick Telephone Company, or any big telephone company in Canada or the United States and they will show you whole warehouses almost filled with discarded telephone instruments. They have been compelled to put in long distance equipment and in less than ten years they will be compelled to discard the present apparatus and put in some other arrangement. These are some of the incidents that go towards depreciation in plant which must be provided for by any well regulated telephone company. There are various items which go to make up the amount that should be set aside to provide for depreciation. The New Brunswick Telephone Company consider that they must set aside eight per cent of the total cost of the investment in order to provide depreciation. Some companies go as high as ten per cent and some companies as low as five per cent, but in no company is it possible to get along with an expenditure of less than five per cent for depreciation—not maintenance. My hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) will pardon me if I tell him that he is a little mixed as to the meaning of these terms. The word 'maintenance' means ordinary little expenses that have to be incurred every day in the week and every month in the year in keeping your line in fairly good working order. It means that if a cross arm breaks you must put it up again, it means that if an insulator breaks, as thousands and thousands do in the year, it must be repaired, it means that if you have a sleetstorm, such as we had a month ago by which tens of thousands of dollars worth of wires and poles are broken down to the ground. they must be repaired. All of these things are incidents in the operation of every telephone company which must be provided for every day and every week and these are the incidents which go to make up the maintenance. When we speak of five per cent for depreciation we do not mean this at all. We refer to a sum of money not less than five per cent on the cost of the investment which is actually necessary to replace a pole that becomes rotten, to replace a cross arm when it becomes rotten, to replace a switchboard when it becomes obsolete, or in other words to keep the whole telephone system in such a condition that it will be a well working concern. If you add to the statement of the Manitoba government the sum of five per cent for depreciation you make an addition there of $165,000. There is no telephone man on earth who will say that you can keep the Manitoba telephone system up to a proper state of repair, system costing $3,300,000, for less than $165,000 per annum and if you add these sums together you have a total of $446,000 and your total balance. after subtracting expenditures from receipts will be only $380,000; or, in other words, if these figures be correct the operation by the Manitoba government of the telephones lines for eleven and a half months. instead of showing a surplus of $232,000, shows a deficit of $55,998.

I am prepared to meet any actuary or any practical telephone man whom the province of Manitoba may appoint and go over these figures with them, and I am satisfied they will not differ with me to the extent of $10,000. I have stated that no telephone company would for a moment hope to get along by expending for maintenance and depreciaion a less amount than for operation, and if you take the operation at $238,000, and the depreciation and maintenance at a like amount, and the unearned rentals at $120,000, and the interest at $161,000 and add these together you have $757,264 as against a total revenue of only 722,612, or a deficit of $34,632. I therefore repeat that instead of having a surplus of $232,000, by any mode of intelligent figuring which they possibly can devise there must be a deficit of anywhere between $25,000 and $50,000 in the operation of the telephones in Manitoba last year. I state here to-night, and I think I can prove it to the satisfaction of the House, that the proposed reduction foreshadowed by the Minister of Public Works in Winnipeg on Thursday night are in reality no reductions at all. The hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) read a statement to the effect that they had reduced the joint user telephone from $25 to $15. But, does the hon. gentleman realize what joint user in telephone means. I doubt if there is a gentleman in this chamber who ever knew of the joint user of a telephone. I do not know of one in my own town; if there are any in New Brunswick they are very few, and I venture to say that there are not one hundred joint users in the whole city of Winnipeg. Joint user of a telephone means that once in a while in a big city you will find, say a collecting lawyer and an insurance agent occupying adjoining rooms as offices and they both pay a certain amount for the telephone they use in common. I doubt if you will find one hundred such in Winnipeg, and yet this is one of the lemons that the Manitoba government throw out to the people and say: look what we are doing for you. And, as the joint user in residences; where will you find two families using the same phone.

Mr. LENNOX. You will find hundreds, perhaps thousands of instances in Toronto where families occupying flats use one telephone and contribute jointly to the rental.

Mr. CARVELL. That would be in an hotel.

Mr. LENNOX. No.

Mr. CARVELL. That would be what we call P.B.X., or private branch exchange.

Mr. LENNOX. We get a telephone in Toronto for $50 and all the people in that house use it.

Mr. CARVELL. Meanwhile the telephone company is getting $5 for the telephone.

Mr. LENNOX. You can tell the company that two families will use the telephone in a private house and instead of charging $30 each they charge $50 and there are hundreds of cases of that kind.

Mr. CARVELL. That is so, but does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the government of Manitoba will allow two families to have a telephone in their house and charge them only $10.

Mr. LENNOX. My opinion is that the government of Manitoba will allow two families the joint use of a telephone in a private residence for $10.

Mr. CARVELL. That is what you mean?

Mr. LENNOX. That is what I understand.

Mr. CARVELL. Then I simply say I don't believe it.

Mr. LENNOX. And the last announcement of the Postmaster General in England provides for the same kind of joint user.

Mr. CARVELL. We are discussing Manitoba, not England, and I do not believe the government of Manitoba will give two families the right to use a telephone for $10, when they will charge one family $24. If my hon. friend can find any comfort in a reduction of that kind he can have it, but there is a great big nigger in the wood pile somewhere in this proposed reduction of the Manitoba telephone rates.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a reduction from $24 to $18.

Mr. CARVELL. I am willing to admit that there is a genuine reduction of from 15 per cent to 25 per cent in the residential telephones according to the statement of Mr. Rogers, but outside this residential reduction and the farmers' lines there is practically no reduction at all. This talk about joint user is only a delusion and a snare because people do not go in for joint user. This two party reduction is another delusion and a snare because business men will not use a two party line. A farmer will use a two party or a four party or an eight party line because he cannot help it, but fancy a banker or a lawyer or a doctor or a professional man of any kind using a telephone with another man on the same line; for a two party line means that one can listen to what the other may be saying. In the city of Winnipeg or in the city of Montreal or in any large city there are no two party lines to any extent. I have asked from my friends here about the conditions in Winnipeg and so far as I can learn there are no two party lines in that city. I may be wrong about that, but that is the informaiton I have obtained.

Mr. ROCHE. What about the reduction of rates in the towns?

Mr. CARVELL. As I understand it the rate is reduced to $39, and I can tell my hon. friend that in the city of St. John and in the city of Halifax we get a single line for $45, and in the city of Ottawa which is probably as important as the city of Winnipeg, you get a business telephone for $45.

Mr. LENNOX. What about the extensions; is there not a reduction there?

Mr. CARVELL. Once in a while you will find a man who has a telephone in his hall or his library and he wants another in his bedroom, and he has an extension set put in and that means another telephone on the same line which will ring at the same time as the main telephone, but the reduction on the extension sets is another delusion and a snare. I do not suppose there are more than two or three gentlemen in this chamber who have in their residences extension sets.

Mr. LENNOX. All the government people have them.

Mr. CARVELL. I do not think so. I know something about the telephone business, and I can say that not one per cent of the telephones in this country are extension sets; so that when the government of Manitoba tells the people that it is reducing the extension rates from $12 to $6 they are merely deluding them. They charge for business telephones $25 and 2 cents per outcall. Let us see what that means. I do not suppose that any man who uses a telephone in his business makes less than five calls a day; that is 10 cents a day or $30 a year. That means $55 a year for his telephone service, whereas he can get the straight telephone for $50 a year. That is what they call a reduction. Then, to carry this thing to the point of absolute nonsense, they say they will give a residence telephone for $15 and 2 cents an outcall. Now, is there any man whose wife would not use the telephone more than three times a day? That is 6 cents a day or at least $21 a year for outcalls and $15 for rental, which brings the residence telephone up to $36 a year, whereas you can get a general residence telephone for $24 a year. And they call that a reduction. Now, we will come to the smaller towns of Brandon and Portage la Prairie, and there the same policy is carried out. They give a two-party line for unlimited business service for $27. They give a one-party line for $17.50 and 2 cents per outcall. For five calls per day this would bring the cost of the telephone up to nearly $50, or nearly twice as much as the regular telephone would cost. The whole thing is simply an attempt to hoodwink the people. Next, we come to the small towns. The rate for single lines, business, unlimited service, is reduced from $24 to $20, and for residence from $18 to $15. But they have never touched the big source of revenue, the big tax on the users of the telephone, amounting to 60 per cent of the total receipts of the telephone companies by way of rental, that is, from the business telephone. In Winnipeg the business telephone was $50 under the Bell Telephone Company; it is $50 to-day under the Manitoba government. In the cities of Brandon and Portage la Prairie the rate for the business telephone has not been reduced one cent. Now, I make the statement that the farmers' lines and residential telephones all put together do not yield more than 40 per cent of the total rental revenue of the province of Manitoba, and I want to show this House what amounts to, figured out from a telephone the whole reduction standpoint. Mr. Rogers states that his total revenue for twelve months has been $750,000. I say that is not true. My hon. friends will admit that you have to take off $120,000 for unearned rental, which brings your revenue down to $630,000. Sixty per cent of this would be for rentals and 40 per cent tolls. The 60 per cent would amount to $378,000. You have again to take 60 per cent of this as representing business 'phones, which will amount to $226,800, leaving $151,200 as the total receipts of the government of Manitoba last year from residence and farmers' telephones, and these I will admit they have reduced about 20 per cent. Twenty per cent of that $151,200 amounts to the magnificent sum of $30,000. I challeng any telephone man to contradict the statement I make, that the total reduction proposed by the Manitoba government through Mr. Rogers last Thursday in the Manitoba legislature will not amount to $30,000 in the next twelve months, and I am prepared to prove that the increases which the Manitoba government have imposed on the users of telephones since they took power amount to more than $30,000. When that government took power the users of telephones for doctors, veterinarians, nurses and people of that class were only paying $40, and they at once put up the rate to $50. When they took power the service for long distance 'phones was for a three-minutes' conversation, and they immediately reduced it to two minutes. I submit to any business man that he cannot carry on any kind of satisfactory conversation over a long distance line in two minutes, and a conservative estimate, based on the experience of telephone companies, is that this amounts to at least 25 per cent of increase in the rate on long distance telephones. Last year the Manitoba government received in tolls for long-distance service $164,000, and if to that you add 25 per cent for this reduction of time, it amounts to $61,000, twice as much as they will save by the cut on farmers' lines and residence rates. And they claim that they have cut the telephone rates in two, for which they are entitled to credit, and hon. gentlemen opposite want other provinces and the Dominion of Canada as a whole to adopt the same policy as the province of Manitoba. Now, I want to give some figures which are rather interesting. You would think to hear hon. gentlemen opposite talking that the Manitoba government were giving telephone services away. I tell you that there is not a province in Canada that is not to-day getting a cheaper telephone service than Manitoba. Let me give you a few figures in proof. In Halifax the rates are, business, $45; residence, $30; in London, Ont., the rates are $45 and $25; in Hamilton, Ont., $45 and $30; in Sydney, Cape Breton, $40 and $30; in St. John, N.B., $40 and $23.50. Our friends in Manitoba would go crazy if they could get telephones as cheaply as we are getting them in New Brunswick where the New Brunswick Telephone Company controls practically all the business of the province. And these are all single, individual lines—no three or four-party lines. Now, let us come to some of the smaller places. But you will please remember that in Winnipeg the rates are $50 and $24.

Mr. ROCHE. What is the population of Winnipeg?

Mr. CARVELL. I suppose around 100,000.

Mr. ROCHE. Add about half more to it.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman may be pardoned, because that is the true western spirit. But we are going to talk facts for a while to-night. Now I want to show what the Manitoba government are charging compared with a village which they won't say is about one half the size of Winnipeg. Let me give first some of the smaller towns of Eastern Canada. Sydney, $34 business and $27 residence; Guelph, $30 business and $25 residence; Moncton, $30 business and $25 residence; Fredericton, $25 business and $25 residence; St. Stephen, $25 business and $25 residence. Now those we may place against towns like Portage la Prairie and Brandon which are not half the size of the towns I have named, in many cases not one third the size. In Brandon, I am told, the rates are $35 and $20 under the new rate. But there is hardly a city in eastern Canada twice the size of Brandon and Portage la Prairie which does not get telephones at the same rate. Take a few more comparisons. In Manitoba, under the new rate, the city of Winnipeg has 7,000 subscribers, and pays $50 for a business phone and $25 for a residence phone. The city of Ottawa with the same number of phones, 7,000, pays $45 and $25, or $5 less than Winnipeg taking the two instruments together. Now coming to Brandon with 700 users, the business phone is $35 and the residence $30. Chatham has 780 users, and the business phone is only $30 and the residence $25, or $5 cheaper than it is in Brandon for the two instruments. Then come down to Portage la Prairie, 500 users, $35 and $20; Brockville, 535 users, $30 and $25, again $5 less than in Manitoba for the two instruments. Take Manitou, 125 istruments, $20 and $15; Arnprior, 160 instruments, $20 and $20; Alexander, Manitoba, 32 instruments, $20 and $15; Colborne, 60 instruments, $20 and $20. And yet, Sir, hon. gentlemen from Manitoba are horrified when I tell them that in New Brunswick, in a dozen towns with 5,000 or 6,000 population, we do not pay as much as they do in Manitoba under the new schedule. Why, we give an unlimited single line service in towns of that size in New Brunswick for $20, and we give them a great number of lines for $18; we give them a residence phone on a single line for $18, and a party line for $15. I want to tell my hon. friends more than that. In the province of New Brunswick we have in those towns nothing but the very best up-to-date telephone. Not only have we a central energy system in all our small towns, that is, the same as they have in Ottawa; but I doubt if they have in Manitoba, in any of these towns, anything like copper metallic circuits. I am told that in most towns of Manitoba they have only iron circuits, in many circuits not even metallic circuits, they are simply grounded systems, and in New Brunswick our telephone rates are at least 20 per cent lower, and in many cases 50 per cent lower, than they are in Manitoba under the new schedule.

Now I want to speak for a few minutes on the question of the long distance telephones. My hon. friends opposite when dilating upon the virtues of the Manitoba government and the virtues of public ownership as exemplified by the operations of the Manitoba government, took good care not to refer to the question of tolls. I am going to refer to that for a few minutes, and I make the statement here that the Manitoba government to-day are charging the same tolls which they charged last year, and which the Bell Telephone Company charged, and they are charging ten per cent to 15 per cent more than they are charging in any other portion of Canada for the same service. Let me give a few instances showing a comparison between Manitoba and New Brunswick—I take New Brunswick because I am best acquainted with that province. I will admit that the service under ten miles is similar in both provinces, 10 cents. When you go above that, beyond 10 miles, there is not a solitary rate in the province of Manitoba but is at least 10 per cent higher than in the province of New Brunswick, or anywhere else in eastern Canada. Now take a few illustrations. In Manitoba, over 10 miles and not exceeding 15 miles, the rate is 15 cents. In New Brunswick I will give a concrete example, namely from St. John to Westfield, a distance of 14 miles, where the rate is only 10 cents. I have here a statement which I will let my hon. friends examine if they care to, showing the rates from the city of St. John to Woodstock and a hundred other points in the province of New Brunswick, and they can figure the distance for themselves. Moreover, the distances in New Brunswick are air lines, and not lines which follow the roads. I do not know whether they figure air lines in Manitoba or not. Now from 20 miles to 35 miles, in Manitoba the rate is 25 cents; while from St. John to Hampton, 22 miles, the rate is 20 cents. From 45 to 55 miles, the rate in Manitoba is 35 cents, while from St. John to Apohaqui 39 miles the rate is 25 cents. From 85 miles to 130 miles, in Manitoba the rate is 50 cents, while from St. John to Moncton 90 miles the rate is 45 cents. From 130 to 160 miles, in Manitoba, 60 cents; from St .John to Woodstock, 140 miles, 55 cents. From 185 to 200 miles, in Manitoba, 80 cents, from St. John to Andover, 190 miles, 70 cents. From 260 miles to 285 miles, in Manitoba the rate is $1.10; while from St. John to Campbellton, 276 miles, it is $1. Those Manitoba rates are all for a 2 minute conversation, ours are for a 3 minute conversation. And yet our friends opposite hold up the results of government ownership in Manitoba as a sample which we should follow in the other provinces of Canada. God forbid that we should ever follow the pace set by the Conservative government in Manitoba in respect to a telephone service.

Mr. BURRELL. What is the rate for a 5 minute conversation on the Dominion government owned system, for about 50 to 100 miles?

Mr. CARVELL. That is a very intelligent question and requires an equally intelligent answer. I may surprise my hon. friend to tell him that the Dominion government does not own a telephone line, that I know anything about .

Mr. BURRELL. I may inform my hon. friend that the Dominion government he supports is operating and owning a telephone system.

Mr. CARVELL. Now that I think of it, there are two, I think, in Canada operated by the government. I am told there is one somewhere on the Pacific coast going toward the Yukon, and another away down the St. Lawrence river, somewhere on the Labrador coast.

Mr. BURRELL. Allow me to correct the hon. gentleman. Allow me to inform him that there is a system owned and operated by the Dominion government extending a good distance down the riding of Yale-Cariboo. And I think that, as they have adopted the principle of government ownership, the House should have some explanation about the operation of that system and its result.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend (Mr. Burrell) will have a chance, so far as I know, to give all the information he wishes to. But, to be fair, I would say that the Dominion government is not in the telephone business to such an extent that we can even discuss it at all. What is the use of men talking nonsense and bringing in little quibbles, when we want to deal with facts? I know the Dominion government are operating a telephone line on the Labrador coast. And I suppose my hon. friend would want me to go into an elaborate discussion in which the operation of that line in Labrador would be compared with the operation of the lines in the great city of Winnipeg.

Mr. BURRELL. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) is using rather strong language——

Mr. CARVELL. If the hon. gentleman wishes to ask me a question, let him ask it.

Mr. BURRELL. I desire to make the statement——

Mr. CARVELL. Never mind your statement. Ask your question.

Mr. BURRELL. Does the hon. gentleman know how far this line runs and how the telephones——

Mr. CARVELL. No, and I don't care. I am talking telephones, not quibbles. There are a number of questions I wish to discuss before I leave this important matter. I stated earlier in my remarks that I would attempt to prove that so far as Manitoba is concerned, they have not shown a surplus but a deficit, and have not reduced the rates; and I am willing to leave it to the judgment of this House whether or not I have substantiated my statement. I think I have substantiated it, and I think my hon. friends opposite will get but cold comfort from the consideration of the report presented by the government of Manitoba after their first year's experience in the operation of the telephone. My hon. friend from South Simcoe referred to the remedy, and stated that, in many instances, independent telephone lines have come in and have been able very materially to reduce rates. I admit that four or five years ago, and even as long as ten years ago, there was a great boom of independent telephone lines all over Canada and the United States. And there is no reason why they should not exist to-day. In my own constituency, we have three independent telephone lines, all doing a splendid business. My hon. friend from Lambton thought it a most remarkable thing that an independent telephone line could exist giving a telephone service at six dollars. In my constituency, hundreds of farmers' telephones cost only seven dollars, eight dollars or nine dollars. But, alongside of these, the New Brunswick Telephone Company are getting fifteen dollars for farmers' lines. If hon. gentlemen will take even a few moments to consider it, they will see that a farmers' line can be run at a very cheap rate. But you have perhaps twenty or even thirty subscribers on a line, and a cheap iron wire at that——

Mr. TALBOT. And fastened to a picket.

Mr. CARVELL. Yes, to anything. But it is an accommodation to the people, and while I have some interest in the New Brunswick Telephone Company, I have encouraged the incorporation of farmers' lines as far as I could. In less than three years, I have had a hand in incorporating two of them. They are a good thing. The farmers are able to have their social gossip. But the man who tries to do business over the line must allow for the fact that every one else knows what he is talking about. And there cannot be a social function any where in the country but every one knows about it. The farmers can get the state of the market, can learn what hogs, potatoes, or oats are worth, the line is a good thing for them. But, when you come to talk about telephone business, the comparison is not at all a fair one. For, in order to have a telephone business, you must have exchanges, you must have long distance connection and every thing else that makes a telephone service. I suppose there is not a switchboard on any farmers' line in Canada that costs $100. But the central switchboard in a town of 4,000 or 5,000 people will cost from $5,000 to $10,000. So, when the hon. gentleman talks about farmers' lines at five dollars or six dollars a year, his discussion is not germane to the subject. There is a big question staring us in the face—are we in Canada paying too much for our telephone service? I must say that the evidence furnished by the government of Manitoba does not prove that the government telephone service is an ideal condition of affairs. How are we to get the rates reduced? My hon. friend from South Simcoe says by independent companies. I say, all honour to the independent companies. I like to see them go ahead and do all they can. But, I must say, the result of the experience of the independent companies has been anything but favourable from a financial standpoint. I have in mind the case of an independent company started in Portland, Maine, six or seven years ago. They put in what is called the automatic system. Under this system, no central is required; by the manipulation of a portion of the instrument you make your own connection and your own call. At first the company gave ridiculously low rates Afterwards they increased their rates to almost what the old line was charging, but, at the end of five years, they went into a receiver's hands and the shareholders lost about half a million dollars. We find another illustration in Red Deer, Alberta. The Bell Company were charging thirty dollars for business telephones and twenty dollars for residence telephones. A gentleman named Morte came along from the United States, and claimed that he could give them telephones at about half of what they were paying. The municipality gave a franchise and made a contract, and the system was installed. The rates charged were so low that the Bell Telephone Company got out and left the place entirely to the municipal system—municipal in effect because it was run under municipal control. They started in to give a service at twenty-five dollars for business telephones and ten dollars for residence. After running for a year or two, they found they could not possibly carry on the business at these figures, and gave notice to the municipality under their contract that they would apply for arbitration to fix the rates. The arbitrators, I should judge, were men who would be competent to deal with the matter. One was Mr. Roland Winters, of Lethbridge, the second Mr. R. S. Kelsch, the well known electrical engineer, of Montreal, and the third William Cousins, the mayor of Medicine Hat. After hearing the evidence and taking every thing into consideration, the arbitrators gave their award, which allowed the company to fix its rates at twenty-three dollars for residence telephones and thirty-five dollars for business telephones —about ten or fifteen per cent more than the Bell Company had been charging before the independent company went there at all. Now, let me give a few figures illustrating what independent companies have done in the United States. I state that not an independent company has been doing a telephone business—I differentiate between a telephone business and a farmers' line—for ten years, or even five years, that has not been compelled to increase its rates :

City.	Original rate.	Present rate.
St. Louis..	$60—$36	$72—$48
Cleveland	48— 36	72— 48
Pittsburgh..	48— 36	72— 58
Toledo..	44— 26	52— 32
La Crosse	30— 18	36— 24
Madison..	24— 18	33— 21
Galesborough	30— 18	36— 24

I have another list of 201 different companies organized in the different states and every one has been compelled to raise the rates in the last five years from twenty-five to sixty per cent. It only illustrates the truth of my statement that they cannot do telephone business for less than it costs—neither can the government of Manitoba. neither can the government of British Columbia and neither can a corporation.

I find I have still a good deal of matter to discuss and as it is getting late I would beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to oppose the adjournment of the debate except on some reasonable terms. We have sat here hour after hour listening to hon. gentlemen opposite speaking well, speaking eloquently I admit, but not speaking to the question we should be discussing, not speaking to the question I brought forward. The government have a duty to perform in this matter, but they have not made any statement as to what course they intend to pursue. The country will expect us to debate this matter and dispose of it in some reasonable way. I ask the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he will say that he will give an opportunity of continuing this debate. In that event I have no objection to its being adjourned; otherwise, I must insist that we should either dispose of it by vote now, or decide upon the question of adjournment as the rules of the House provide.

Righ Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). In the few words just uttered by my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) there are many things to which I could take exception. He said the question has not been debated on this side. In my humble opinion it has been well debated. In so far as the government are concerned, I may say we are disposed to accept the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean). I will not undertake at this period of the session to say whether it will come up again; perhaps it will, perhaps it will not. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) has had at least six or seven different opportunities of bringing up this question before to-day.

House divided on the amendment to the amendment that the debate be now adjourned (Mr. Carvell).

Amendment (Mr. Carvell) agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business may we expect to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We will take the Bills which are on the Order Paper, that is if they are printed, and afterwards we will take Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In their order?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR. What Supply?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Canals.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, March 2, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN, member for the electoral division of Comox-Atlin, introduced by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier (Prime Minister) and Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance).

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Secretary of State) moved that the House go into Committee on Thursday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient that there should be a department of the Civil Service of Canada to be called the Department of External Affairs, over which the Secretary of State of Canada shall preside, and that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be the deputy head of such department, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and such other officers and clerks as may be requisite for the due administration of such department, at such salaries as, under the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, are appropriate to the divisions and subdivisions of the service to which such officers and clerks may be assigned.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Athabaska Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

Bill (No. 85) respecting the British Columbia Southern Railway Company. — Mr. George Taylor.

Bill (No. 86) respecting the Cobalt Range Railway Company.—Mr. Hodgins.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE — THE BUDGET.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) if he can tell us when he expects to bring down the Budget?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) I cannot make an announcement at present, and some days must elapse before I can do so. There are some matters engaging my attention, which, though not more important, are more urgent.

SUPPLY—ESCAPE OF CONVICT BILL MINER.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR (New Westminster). Three weeks ago, I brought to the attention of this House certain matters in connection with the British Columbia penitentiary, matters of especially grave moment because of the fact that they involve an interference with the prerogative of pardon which, under our constitution, is the personal prerogative of His Excellency. I charged on that occasion that there had been serious defects in the connecting links between the penitentiary and the Department of Justice, that material information respecting transactions within the penitentiary had not been communicated to the department by the inspector whose duty it is to visit that institution and make periodical reports to the government. We had the promise on that occasion that the government would institute an investigation into the facts thus brought before the House; but, in connection with this promise, we had the embarrassing fact that the head of the department had volunteered a certificate of character to the person involved in these charges, that is, the inspector whose duty it was to have made reports which I charged —and I think substantiated that charge by evidence produced in this House—had not been made, and by that certificate of character so given the government had placed themselves in the embarrassing position of sharing in whatever condemnation might be subsequently found attached to the conduct of the inspector. The first certificate of character was given by no less a person than the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) when, in the following week, he answered a series of questions placed upon the Order Paper by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). The answers to these questions revealed that whereas there had been paid a series of visits to the convict known as Bill Miner, as to whom this discussion in the House had arisen, and these visits were recorded in the books of the penitentiary, no permission had been given by the department for these visits, and that they were directly contrary to the regulations of the Department of Justice, and therefore should have been reported by the inspector to the Department of Justice on the occasion of his first visit to the institution after they had been recorded in the book. I would like to recall that the facts before the House showed that the inspector visited the institution in July, 1907, that the escape took place in August, 1907; that all these visits were recorded on the books during several months prior to July, 1907, one of them so late as June of that year, and that none of these visits were reported to the Department of Justice here, as shown by the answers made by the Minister of Justice to the member for Portage la Prairie to the effect that the department had no knowledge of the matter and had given no permission for these visits.

It was also stated in this House, in connection with this inquiry, that the reason certain detectives were permitted to visit Miner was that he was supposed to have taken certain bonds, the product of the hold-up near Mission in the year 1906. Now, in the answer made by the Minister of Justice in reply to the inquiry whether the department proposed to follow up that clue and find out whether there had been a recovery of those bonds subsequent to the escape of Miner, I would like to point out that nearly 18 months had elapsed, so that there would have been ample time for these bonds to have reached their destination in Australia, and there would have been ample opportunity to inquire whether the officers had fulfilled their duty, and had pursued this subject by inquiries in Australia, or wherever else it might have been thought proper, to ascertain whether the bonds had been returned there, and so establishing a connection between the departure of Miner and the recovery of these bonds. The answer made by the department was that they had not made any inquiry, neither did they intend to pursue any inquiry in that direction. So much for the departmental side of this matter. But after the ventilation of the subject in this House, the public in British Columbia commenced to take an interest in it. I propose to read an extract from the Vancouver 'Province,' a most influential and independent newspaper published at Vancouver, a paper I may say of the highest respectability and responsibility, and which I am sure would not publish a paragraph of this kind except on the most unquestioned authority. I read from the Vancouver 'Daily Province' of the 12th of February, this statement appearing in black type so as to emphasize it and add to its importance, and to show that it is not a mere casual paragraph brought in by a reporter but has received the attention of responsible persons in the office:

An official who is in a position to speak authoritatively on the subject of Bill Miner's escape from the penitentiary at New Westminster this morning made the following statement for publication:

At the time of the investigation into the escape made by Inspector Dawson I could have told him, had I been called upon to testify, that Bill Miner did not escape from prison by crawling under the fence through the hole through which it was alleged he went. No man ever crawled through that hole for two good reasons. The first was that the hole was not large enough; the second, because the hole was made only for the purpose of covering the letting out of Miner. The story of the loss of fifty thousand dollars worth of bonds or money by the Canadian Pacific Railway or any one else in the robbery, and that it had been cached by Miner, was an invention in the interests of the robber himself. No one ever lost that sum; no bonds were ever stolen. Miner's friends on the outside called on him and conducted fake negotiations for his so-called escape and the securing of the cached money. Certain persons made it possible for Miner to escape, apparently on the understanding that he would divide up on the booty. These facts can easily be proved if the government makes an investigation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a statement involving an arraignment of the Department of Justice, and is of a most serious nature, a statement so serious that I do not remember ever to have seen its parallel in the press of this country or of any other country, without an immediate inquiry being set on foot by the department indicted, in order, either to absolve the persons mentioned from complicity in the escape if they were innocent, or to punish the persons who were guilty of circulating so mischievous a story. I am surprised that nearly three weeks have elapsed since the publication of that indictment of the Department of Justice, without the slightest notice being paid by that department to the arraignment made by this official, who says that he was in a position to tell how this man left the penitentiary if he had been called by the inspector who was sent there and spent four months conducting this inquiry. But he was not called by the inspector, and was not given any opportunity to testify in this connection, and although his statement has been before the public for two weeks or more this House has been allowed to remain in ignorance whether or not the department of Justice have given any attention to this information. But, Mr. Speaker, matters did not rest there. While the Department of Justice were seemingly oblivious to what the public might say about this, seemed to have lost any interest in Bill Miner, and had apparently no concern as to whether he escaped or was handed out, the public in British Columbia were not indifferent. The persons in British Columbia charged with interests much inferior in degree to those with which the department stands concerned, would not rest quiet under the indictment. One of these persons was the Canadian Pacific Railway detective, Bullick, who was mentioned in this House in connection with the transaction, and as to whom we were told by the Solicitor General that he had been permitted to visit the institution because, as that hon. gentleman said, he desired, on behalf of the railway company, who were prompted by the express company, to find out what became of these bonds. We find Bullick submitting to an interview in the 'Daily Province' of February 18, and saying:

I never had an interview with Bill Miner at the penitentiary in New Westminster, but I was present when Jake Terry interviewed the train robber there; I accompanied Terry to the penitentiary to see if he and Miner were acquainted, and though I was present when the two men met I said nothing to Miner beyond correcting a statement he attributed to me in reference to the reported death of his sister. Warden Whyte was present at the time.

I certainly therefore never could have promised Bill Miner a pardon if he would surrender to the Canadian Pacific Railway any bonds which he was credited with having stolen at the Whonnock hold-up. I never made any such promise to Miner or even discussed the subject with him notwithstanding any statement made to that effect by Miner to Instructor McKenzie of the penitentiary, and by him reported at the Dawson investigation into the escape of Miner.

This statement was made to-day by Mr. Robert E. Bullick, inspector of the special service department of the Canadian Pacific Railway in reference to the information given out in parliament yesterday by Hon. A. B. Aylesworth when questioned concerning the unsavoury escape of the train robber and three fellow-prisoners on August 8, 1907.

There never were any bonds stolen in the Whonnock hold-up by Bill Miner or any one else so far as I am aware, continued Mr. Bullick. The story of the theft of bonds was invented by Jake Terry, of Bellingham, a former pal of Miner's in San Quentin penitentiary. Terry spun the bond yarn to Mrs. Wellman, a sister of Miner's, who was living in Bellingham after the Whonnock hold-up, in the hope that he would be able to excite her cupidity and so learn from her the whereabouts of the robber who was then in hiding. Terry thought Mrs. Wellman would have some knowledge of her brother's location. Finally Terry while intoxicated gave the story to the Bellingham press in an attempt to substantiate the accounts he had been giving to Miner's sister. That was the origin of the bond fake.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am reading all this because the story is essential. You will observe there is a direct contradiction here between the statement made by the Solicitor General in this House that the reason this man was allowed to see Miner was that he wished to secure a trace of the bonds alleged to have been stolen, and the statement of the man himself, who comes forward and says that there never were any bonds, that he had no instructions from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was not authorized by the express company to act, and that the whole thing was a fake. But he proceeds now to a subject which does concern us, and as to which we have had no proper answer from the Department of Justice. He says:

The most peculiar circumstance in connection with the escape of Miner has not yet been brought up in parliament, and that is how it happened that when Miner got away his upper lip was adorned with a moustache and his hair was unclipped. Following the alleged escape, days elapsed before it became known that Miner was not close cropped and clean shaven—had the true description of the man been given out he would have been arrested as he was met not far from the mouth of the Fraser river by a policeman who recognized his features but was confounded at seeing such a growth of hair and moustache which he knew could not have been grown during the few days which had at that time elapsed since the escape.

It is suggested that perhaps the federal government hesitates about making any statement in this connection, as it would be merely furnishing evidence of the loose manner in which its penal institutions are managed.

Now completing the story, I find in the New Westminster 'Daily Columbian' which arrived in the mail to-day, a singular statement by Mr. D. D. Bourke, ex-warden of the penitentiary, a statement dealing with the report made to this House by the Minister of Justice and by the Solicitor General. I wish to call attention mainly to the concluding paragraph, but I think it is essential to the record, and lest any person should say that I had not read the full letter, that I should read the whole of it although it is the concluding paragraph to which I wish to direct special attention. The letter proceeds:

The Vancouver 'World,' of the 23rd inst. has an editorial headed 'That Borden Telegram,' in which it states that the conduct of the bold wretch who tampered with the telegram committed a treasonable crime. He misled the state. Equally guilty of treason is the man who misleads the Crown and he who misleads a minister of the Crown misleads the Crown itself.

As my telegrams regarding the escape of Bill Miner have been discussed in the House and as they may be discussed again when the deferred item for British Columbia penitentiary is brought up, I think it advisable that the hon. the minister as well as the public should be correctly informed in this matter before the discussion is resumed.

The minister is reported in 'Hansard' (unrevised) of Feb. 11 as follows:

After referring to my telegram of the 8th Aug. the minister says (page 971):

'But the extent of the message which then came, and which for the first time gave the slightest hint that Miner was one of those that had escaped, was a telegram which Mr. Bourke despatched on the 11th of August. When it reached Ottawa it was not addressed as it ought to have been, and as I understand Mr. Bourke says his original message was addressed, to the inspector, but it was addressed to Mr. Dawson individually. On receipt at Ottawa, instead of being delivered to me, or to Mr. Stewart, or to the department, it was repeated to Mr. Dawson at Kingston.'

Here are the facts as I know them.

On the 8th of Aug. Bill Miner and three other convicts escaped. Immediately I wired the department that four convicts had escaped. Seeing we had not recaptured these men I wired the department again next morning, 9th Aug., and gave the name of escaped convicts and asked permission to offer a reward. A child can understand even an hour's delay in such cases counts in the convict's favour. All day of the 9th I looked anxiously for a reply but none came. Several days having passed and getting no reply from the inspectors I had given up hopes of the department taking any action when I noticed an item in the Vancouver 'Province' of the 15th stating that Chief Chamberlain had received instructions to offer $500 reward for Miner. As this was only an item I looked carefully over the Vancouver papers for a day or two to see if an official notice had been given, but there was none. I then went to Vancouver and asked the chief why he had not offered the reward, officially, as no one would venture his life with Miner on the information in the news item. The chief replied that he had no instructions to do so, and showed me the telegram from Col. Sherwood which simply stated the fact but gave no advice. A day or two later I had a telegram from Col. Sherwood saying Detective McLeod, of Vancouver, would call upon me in regard to the Miner case, and a few hours afterwards he with Chief Chamberlain and C.P.R. detective Bullick called on me. As Mr. McLeod assured me it was all right to allow the chief and Mr. Bullick to hear all I had to tell him, all three were present during the interview. As I am not aware of the reward being officially announced at any time, this interview was the first made here by the department of which I am aware for the recapture of Miner—about a fortnight after Bill Miner escaped.

Here is where it begins to be particularly interesting:

When Mr. Dawson began the inquiry some days afterwards he worked himself up to a passion because of the delay in getting my telegram of the 9th of August asking permission to offer a reward. He said I addressed the telegram to him instead of to 'The Inspectors.' That he was then at Dorchester and that the telegram was forwarded to Dorchester, that he had left Dorchester for Kingston before the telegram arrived there, and after arriving at Kingston he went to the country for some days and when he returned to Kingston and got the telegram several days had elapsed, and that had I addressed it 'The Inspectors,' Inspector Stewart would have got it at once and taken some action on it. I said I addressed it 'The Inspectors.' He then went to his papers and took therefrom a telegram such as I sent but addressed 'G. W. Dawson.' I still insisted that I addressed the telegram 'The Inspectors,' but he pretended not to believe me and charged me with bringing great trouble on the government. That evening I wrote the telegraph operator of this city for a copy of the telegram which he sent me. It was addressed 'The Inspectors.' I handed it to Mr. Dawson. When I was in Ottawa a year later I called at the telegraph office there and asked for a copy but was told at the telegraph office that such papers are always destroyed after being held six months. As my telegram of the 8th was addressed 'The Inspectors' and received all right, and as my telegram of the 9th was addressed all right to 'The Inspectors,' the only conclusion that can be drawn from Mr. Dawson's version is that it fell into some hands at Ottawa who saw, in thus falsifying it, a better chance for Miner to escape and as a consequence for my resignation.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR

It would be interesting to know what action Mr. Dawson took to find out the guilty party. When I handed him the copy received from the operator, Mr. Wilson, and when he saw it was addressed 'The Inspectors' he said: 'What further action are you going to take about it?' I replied that I felt my share was done, as the message left Westminster all right.

It would only cost a trifle for Mr. Dawson to wire to Ottawa for a copy of that telegram, and settle the matter there and then. Indeed had I anticipated so much trouble arising over the matter or had I known Mr. Dawson as well then as I learned to know him during the course of the inquiry, I should have wired for a copy at my own expense.

I fear that unless this telegram transaction is cleared up satisfactorily a crime of greater magnitude than the escape of Bill Miner will stain the reputation of our fair Dominion.

(Sgd.) D. D. BOURKE.

I submit that this statement, added to the facts brought out in our discussion of this matter three weeks ago, shows that there is urgent necessity for some action being promptly taken in reference to it and I think the government will be derelict in its duty if it leaves the inquiry of this matter in the hands of the inspector who was accused by Mr. Bourke in the first statement, which I read in this House and is again accused in the letter which I have just now read. That this government which has been paying so much attention lately to the matter of forged telegrams, which has held itself up to public applause for the horror it has expressed that any one should attempt to tamper with a telegram between its despatch and delivery, should sit silent and allow the charge to be made that a telegram addressed to the Department of Justice was forged, just as much as any other telegram was forged, somewhere between the departure of that telegram from New Westminster and its receipt in Ottawa by the changing of the address of the inspector, who, on his own statement, was a thousand miles away and could not possibly receive it until the lapse of several days and then the object for which the telegram had been sent here was defeated. I submit that this is a most serious matter and one which calls for more urgent attention by this government than has been given to it, as is shown by the fact that three weeks have elapsed since this charge was first made in this House and that the government has sat absolutely silent under it during that period.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice.) Mr. Speaker, there is, in connection with this matter, one feature upon which I think we will all be agreed and that is that it is most unfortunate that a subject of the kind has to be made a matter of trial in the newspapers and that perhaps it is equally a misfortune when one of the newspapers which engages in such a trial happens to be the personal or particular organ of any hon. gentleman in this House.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to correct the hon. Minister of Justice and to say that the newspaper with which I am connected has not engaged in this warfare except to publish a signed statement from a responsible citizen.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think a very good illustration of the misfortune which I have referred to is furnished by this affair and by one, at least, of the incidents in connection with it. When the matter was first discussed, while in committee of supply on the 11th of February last, I gave as full and as frank a statement as I was able to give from memory of all that had occurred in connection with the events of now nearly two years ago. I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) to express himself at that time as pleased with the fullness of the explanation that was given. A few days afterwards, however, a question was put upon the Order Paper designed—to cross examine shall I say—I will prefer to say designed to bring out more fully all possible facts in connection with this particular escape. To that question I gave as full an answer as, I venture to think the circusmtances of the case admit of, on the 17th of February last, and I have but to refer hon. gentlemen who desire any information in connection with this matter to the pages of 'Hansard' at 1228 and 1229 in which they will find as precise and as complete a summary of the official file in this matter as it was possible for me to frame after going over that file myself from beginning to end for the purpose of giving the answer which is there set down. Now, that answer was given on the 17th of February ult.; it was telegraphed to the British Columbia newspapers and among others to which that answer purported to have been telegraphed was the newspaper with which the name of the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is connected.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I will have again to correct——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I will have again to correct the Minister of Justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member rises to a point of order; he has the right to be heard.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have corrected the hon. minister and I notice he did not accept my correction. I understand the reason for that but I do not think the statement should be repeated by the minister even under the disabilities. I would like to say now that this report——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am in order. My point of order is that the minister says that the report was telegraphed to my newspaper. I have to say that that report was not telegraphed to my newspaper. My paper does not take the associated press telegrams and this despatch was copied from the Vancouver 'News-Advertiser,' which does take that service.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is customary to accept an hon. member's statement.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The observation which I made Mr. Speaker, was that this answer given by me in the House, or the substance of this answer, was telegraphed to British Columbia and appeared in various newspapers there, among others in the newspaper with which the name of the hon. gentleman is connected. That statement is literally true and may be verified by any hon. member who cares to take the trouble to examine the files in the library and to refer to the issue of the 'Columbian' of the 18th of February last. Now, I may repeat what I said at the outset that in matters in which an hon. gentleman in this House takes a particular interest it is sometimes a misfortune that that same hon. gentleman should have a newspaper at his disposal. For this reason my answer to the question as to interviews of detectives with Miner, and in particular as to statements with regard to bonds which it was supposed Miner knew the hiding place of, was very distinct and exact in saying that the first the department or any official of the department at Ottawa ever heard of even the existence of such bonds was when, after the escape of Miner and during the investigation of the circumstances of that escape held by Mr. Inspector Dawson, one of the witnesses, namely, Instructor Mackenzie had stated in evidence that Miner told him that a certain man named Bullick had come to the penitentiary to see him (Miner) in regard to the existence of those bonds. That answer having been given to this House on the 17th of February, in the issue of the 'Columbian' on the following day on the front page and under the heading: 'The department was unaware; Aylesworth in Commons gives names of visitors to Bill Miner in captivity; no permission given; no records made of interview with Bullick and Terry; names registered;' there appears the statement that I gave to this House the name of chief constable Macintosh as the man who had given the evidence in question before Mr. Dawson and who had given to the officials of the department the only information on this subject which they had. I had mentioned in my answer in another connection altogether the name of Chief Constable Macintosh, but as to this particular point my answer is distinct and specific in giving the name not of Chief Constable Macintosh at all but of Instructor Mackenzie. Now, in each of the other newspapers in British Columbia the answer is correctly printed—

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I am sorry to have to say that the statement just made by the minister is not correct.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I rise to this point of order: that the hon. minister is imputing dishonourable motives to me—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not noticed that the minister has done so.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In each of the other newspapers of British Columbia the answer is correctly given——

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The telegram in every other newspaper read that the person who gave this evidence was instructor Mackenzie, as I said, but by some misfortune, by some alteration let us suppose in the transmission of the telegram to this particular newspaper office in British Columbia, by some possible forging of the telegram shall I say——

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) rises to a personal explanation he should be heard.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I would like to ask whether it is in order for a minister of the Crown to charge or to insinuate that a member of this House has connived at the forging of the telegram.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is allowed to give a personal explanation.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that the Minister of Justice is entirely wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. The minister says that this telegram originated in the 'Daily Columbian' and as I have already informed the House it originated in the Vancouver 'News-Advertiser' which takes the despatches which the 'Columbian' does not and it was copied from the 'News-Advertiser' by the 'Columbian' word for word.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Of course, I am not able to enter into the secrets of the hon. gentleman's sanctum in British Columbia. I must naturally take things as I find them, and on the front page of this Daily 'Columbian' of New Westminster of February 18, 1909, I see this remarkable evidence of the enterprise of that great organ of public opinion. I see that there is a telegraphic despatch from Ottawa direct to the Daily 'Columbian.'

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I ask for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, whether the Minister of Justice, having been informed that he is wrong, is permitted to continue to insult me as he is doing ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In this paper——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is permitted to make a personal explanation. The minister is now referring to an article in a newspaper, which is quite a different matter.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I find on the face of this newspaper article, Mr. Speaker, no indication that it is copied from any other organ of public opinion, no credit given to the enterprise of the other newspaper, which may have been at the expense of having this message sent across the continent. But a despatch dated Ottawa, February 18, appears in the issue of the 'Columbia' of the same date. It appears as if it were a special despatch sent to that newspaper—not, it is true over any special or private wire, but an ordinary piece of telegraphic news due to the enterprise of that newspaper itself; and but for explanations which I understand have been given to the contrary, I certainly would have supposed, I certainly did suppose when I read that article that it was what it professed to be, and that it was truthfully purporting to give to its readers the understanding that that newspaper had a special correspondent at headquarters in Ottawa to whom it was indebted for this information. Be that as it may, however, that article came to be published in the Daily 'Columbian,' the point is precisely the same. Whether or not there was an error in telegraphing, whether or not there was something taken out of the telegram after it reached the Daily 'Columbian' and something else put in instead, whether or not that message was improved by someone, influenced by motives of misguided political zeal, however it was, this newspaper published the statement that the Minister of Justice was driven to say that Mr. Chief Constable Macintosh was the person who had conveyed that information to the department which the department ought to have known from the beginning. Nor is this all, Mr. Speaker, because side by side with the telegraphic despatch to which I have referred, in the adjoining column and under equally staring headlines, we have the result of another piece of enterprise on the part of this newspaper, in the form of interviews purporting to have been had on the day in question with Chief Constable Macintosh and with Mr. ex-warden Bourke. May you understand exactly, Mr. Speaker, the enterprise of this newspaper and the way in which public opinion is worked up on this great question in British Columbia. There is a telegraphic despatch, which, when it comes to be published in a newspaper, is unaccountably erroneous, and which attributes to Chief Constable Macintosh the giving of information to the department with which Chief Constable Macintosh had never any concern in the world. Immediately thereafter the industrious reporter sets out for Chief Constable Macintosh to interview him, and not unnaturally Chief Constable Macintosh gives the whole story an utter repudiation, saying that he had never testified anything of the kind. Then the newspaper tells you:—That is a sample of the kind of statement you get from your Minister of Justice, and accordingly a half column is built up of rosy phrases in which the Minister of Justice and his department are held up to the scorn of an outraged British Columbia, because statements of this notoriously untrue character are actually made by the Minister of Justice of Canada from his place in the House of Commons. Nor does the enterprise of this newspaper stop at this point. Not only have we the effect of an interview with Mr. Chief Constable Macintosh, but we have also the effect of an interview with Mr. ex-warden Bourke, who, according to the newspaper says: 'now the public of British Columbia can see what reliance can be placed on the information which the Minister of Justice receives from his subordinates in regard to penitentiary matters in British Columbia.' And again the moral is pointed, and again the newspaper drives home to its readers the great truth that the whole management of public affairs under this administration is rotten to the core and ought to be changed; that no dependence whatever can be placed on the officials of the department. This is a sample, this is an illustration; and upon such foundations is built the whole edifice which the hon. gentleman has erected with regard to the escape of this convict Miner. No sooner had this newspaper published statements purporting to have been made by ex-warden Bourke as to what disclosures he could make if he saw fit than a letter was written to him, which appears on the pages of 'Hansard,' in which he was asked to say what statements he could make which he had not made at the time he was sworn to tell the truth and the whole truth in regard to this matter; and promptly there came by way of answer from Mr. Bourke this letter, written in his own hand,

New Westminster, B.C.,
Feb. 6, 1909.

Mr. G. W. Dawson, Esq.,
Inspector, Ottawa.

Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 30th ult., requesting information I may have regarding the escape of Bill Miner, that I have not already disclosed, and in reply I wish to say that, so far as my memory serves me, I gave you at the investigation and in my previous reports all the facts of which I was in possession.

Yours truly,
D. D. BOURKE.

If Mr. Bourke did, as it was his sworn duty to do, give all the information he possessed in regard to this matter, at the time he was sworn to do so, in the fall of 1907, and while the facts were fresh within his recollection, there remains nothing new to be added, and the whole substance of the information he was able to give, or that any other person connected with the penitentiary, inside or outside of it, who testified, was able to give, is contained in the answer to which I have already referred In that answer it was stated, as I said on the 11th of February in the Committee of this House, that through the improper direction of the telegram which Mr. Bourke sent announcing the escape of Miner, there was a delay of at least 24 hours at this end of the line. That telegram, as it was received from the telegraph office at Ottawa, is upon the files of the department. It has not been interfered with in any degree since it left the custody of the company. That telegram is not addressed to the inspectors of penitentiaries, but to Mr. Dawson and to Mr. Dawson accordingly it was delivered. Mr. Dawson was not at the time in Ottawa and as a result of the telegram following him and not getting back to Ottawa till after it had been received by him and transmitted by him to his colleague in the inspectorship, there was that delay which I have mentioned at this end of the line. Now, it is said that Mr. Bourke states to some newspaper or other that when he despatched that telegram it was correctly addressed, that it was addressed by him to the inspectors of penitentiaries and not to Mr. Inspector Dawson by his personal name. I cannot say as to that; Mr. Bourke's statement may be perfectly true, I am not in a position to contradict it, and I do not desire to be understood as casting the slightest doubt upon it. Unfortunately the alteration of telegrams in transmission seems to be too common, especially when British Columbia is concerned; and just as there was this error in the newspaper to which I have already referred, in getting the name of Mackenzie changed to Macintosh by some inadvertence in copying on the part of either the telegraph company or of some newspaper copyist, so there was a difference between the address of Mr. Bourke's telegram in this instance when the copy of it in Ottawa was delivered and the condition in which Mr. Bourke says that message was when he wrote it and delivered it to the telegraph company in British Columbia.

What possible blame can be attached to the officials of the department in that connection I am unable to fathom. I am not seeking to cast any blame in the matter upon Mr. Bourke. I have never made any attack in this matter upon him; on the contrary Mr. Bourke has been, as I think I pointed out previously in this House, dealt with at all events leniently on the part of the Department of Justice and of the government. Notwithstanding all that took place in that summer, Mr. Bourke was allowed to resign and received to the full his superannuation or retiring allowance calculated upon his full actual period of service. I cannot think that he has anything to complain of and hon. gentlemen will bear me out in the memory that when this matter was under discussion three weeks ago Mr. Bourke's own language was quoted that he had no complaint against either the government or the Minister of Justice but that his quarrel was with the penitentiary inspectors. Into that quarrel, if there be a quarrel or if Mr. Bourke fancies he has a quarrel, I have no desire to go, it does not strike me that it is a matter in which the public interest of this country is concerned, and except for the exigencies of newspapr warfare, I am not able to understand any principle upon which this matter is resumed from time to time on the floor of this House. Miner escaped. No person in this country can regret the fact of his escape more than I do. I fancy I regret it more than any other hon. member in this House. What is to be done about it? What can be done? Every exertion that I was able to think of was made at the time to capture the man. Only the other day one of the four men who escaped with him was recaptured and is now in custody. At any moment, any day, Miner may be recaptured. Whether or not he ever will be I no more can tell than the hon. gentleman himself. But this I say and say without fear of successful contradiction that there was no stone left unturned by the inspectors of penitentiaries or by myself, to secure the recapture of that man from the moment we received the first intimation that he had escaped from the penitentiary.

On the former occasion on which this matter was discussed, the hon. gentleman indulged in other things. I do not know if they have been repeated to-day but I wish to say while on my feet one word in regard to at least one of the statements then made for which the hon. gentleman promptly took me to task. I stated when on my feet before, although I was speaking without any previous opportunity to refer to the files, and eighteen months after the event, that that was not the first escape that summer from the penitentiary of British Columbia. The hon. gentleman at once challenged me and no sooner had I taken my seat than he thought to put the Minister of Justice in a hole by referring to the official report which stated there were six escapes during the year from that penitentiary and that the other two were subsequent to those of Miner and his three companions. The explanation was simple. Of course the hon. gentleman was not aware of this and I have no doubt he was speaking in perfect good faith, but we take no account in our annual reports of escapes which have not been successful, of escapes which are followed by recapture before the end of the year when the report comes to be made. There had been escapes previous to this from the British Columbia penitentiary as I stated. I remembered the circumstances perfectly when I was speaking and I remember them still. I can give the hon. gentleman, if he wishes, the name of the convict; I can tell him all the circumstances of the escape and I can tell him that we recaptured that convict within forty-eight hours and therefore he did not appear in the report at all. But the circumstance was there, the fact was that when Bourke reported Miner's escape that was not the first escape that summer, and this second escape as it then was, coming so close upon the heels of the former escape, prepared me to believe just what was officially reported by the inspectors as the result of the investigation, that the discipline in the penitentiary at British Columbia had been too lax. Do not the facts which I laid before the House three weeks ago and which are spread upon 'Hansard' demonstrate that? You have interviews taking place with convicts contrary to the regulations upon the sole responsibility of the warden or of the deputy warden without any reference to the inspectors or to the minister at Ottawa. Simply upon their own 'say so' we have them admitting people to see convicts, interviews taking place and those interviews not entered in the register, never known until in the course of an investigation months afterwards one of the witnesses says in evidence that the escaped convict told him there had been such an interview. These things, it seems to me, show exactly what the report in question stated, namely that, though there had been the most honest and best intentions on the part of the late warden, who is now dead, and on the part of the deputy warden, they had been remiss, they had not lived up to the instructions and directions which had been put before them for their government; they had chosen, of their own will, to take upon themselves the responsibility of committing breaches of these regulations, these breaches had been followed by escapes, and they were accountable and responsible, as it seems to the department, that these escapes should have taken place.

Now, I do not know that there is anything more I have to answer in the statements which have been made by the hon. gentleman on this occasion. I can only repeat to this House that, from first to last of this matter, there is nothing the department had to conceal, nothing in regard to which the department—the Ottawa end of it, as distinguished from its officials in British Columbia—has to apologize for. In regard to these officials, I have to repeat that I think the extent to which they are blamable is that they did not obey the regulations that are put before them, but preferred to exercise what they thought a sound discretion. They took the risk, and after the event has happened, one of them who now survives, seeks to throw the responsibility for the result upon his superior officer, and to show that it was because his methods of administration were not earlier found out that he was allowed to go on in the unfortunate course, which, during that summer at any rate, he was pursuing. I admit, as the hon. gentleman has said, that these interviews, which I stated in my previous answer had taken place, were held without my authority. If I am responsible for the disobedience of instructions on the part of a warden or a deputy warden of a penitentiary, and if I am accountable for their refusal to obey my orders,—which is simply what the circumstances here amount to—then I am in the judgment of this House whether or not I should be condemned. I can do nothing but state the facts; and, in regard to the facts, I have put before this House on the previous occasion in the answer I have referred to, and again in what I have said to-day, the very fullest information which I myself possess.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) began his remarks with a statement which must have been carefully considered, and which was designed—I submit to the judgment of every member of this House—to cast discredit upon the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor). I do not think that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice would have the courage himself to deny this. The purport of that statement was this: That in the British Columbia newspaper, published in the city of New Westminster, the answer given by the Minister of Justice on the 17th of February in this House, had been wrongly set forth, although it had been properly and correctly set forth in every other newspaper in British Columbia. Now, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he adheres to that statement or whether he withdraws it.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My authority for the statement is not a personal examination, but a statement made to me that in every other British Columbia newspaper, the answer had appeared as in 'Hansard.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think it would have been more becoming the position of the Minister of Justice in this House, before he undertook to make a statement of that kind, obviously levelled at my hon. friend from New Westminster for the purpose of discrediting him, to have made a personal examination. I wish to inform the Minister of Justice that the statement he made in this House this afternoon in that respect is absolutely unfounded and unwarranted. I have under my hand the 'Daily News-Advertiser,' from which the paragraph was copied into the columns of the 'British Columbian,' as stated here this afternoon by the hon. member for New Westminster, and it will be seen that the inaccuracy to which attention has been called by the Minister of Justice (in the very fair manner that has characterized his remarks this afternoon) is to be found in the columns of the 'News-Advertiser' exactly as my hon. friend from New Westminster déclared. I will read it in order that there may be no mistake on the subject:

> There was no record of Bullick or Terry's visits in the visitors' book, although there were records of all the others. The department first became aware that the visit of the detectives was to locate or secure information as to certain stolen bonds when, at the investigation conducted by Inspector Dawson, Chief Constable Macintosh said that Miner told him that Bullick said he (Miner) would be pardoned if he surrendered the Australian bonds. Macintosh said he repeated Miner's statement to the warden, who knew about it. Inspector Dawson wrote to Bullick, who replied that the only time he had seen Miner was when he visited the penitentiary in the company of Terry, at which time the warden was present.

This is exactly the same inaccuracy of which the minister complains. I think that it is to be regretted that a gentleman holding the position in this House of the Minister of Justice should have ventured, without more care than the hon. gentleman seems to have taken, to make a statement designed, obviously and plainly designed, for the purpose of casting discredit upon an hon. member of this House. But these eccentricities on the part of the Minister of Justice are not uncommon. We heard him yesterday declaiming—though he said he had no right to declaim—against certain action of the Ontario government——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Very good. I might refer to that by illustration properly within the rules of this House. And I may remark, there is no hon. gentleman who transgresses that rule more frequently than the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself. I may say, in this connection, that it is indeed a matter of surprise to us to find a Minister of Justice holding a portfolio in this government which has refused a fiat to a very large number of men who assert that they have a valid claim against this government in respect of its Post Office Department. It is a surprise to hon. gentlemen in this House who have listened to recent debates in which the Minister of Justice expressed himself very strongly on this point.

But these are all matters by the way: the real point of this case has not been touched by the Minister of Justice, and every hon. member who has listened to him knows that the real point has not been touched by him. The point of the case is this; what explanation has the government, what explanation has the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), what explanation has the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau), for the fact that a convict was permitted to escape in broad daylight from one of the penitentiaries of this country, and up to this time that man has not been recaptured? What is the meaning of these rumours depending on evidence—if the statement of responsible men reported in the newspapers are to be regarded as evidence—that this man, at the time of his escape, had been permitted to have his hair grow to the ordinary length, like any citizen of this country, and his moustache to grow as well, so that he would escape recognition as a convict.

Has my hon. friend the Minister of Justice touched upon that point this afternoon? Every one knows he has almost carefully evaded it. I leave to any hon. gentleman in this House who reads the discussion which took place on the 11th February, who examines the statements made then by the Minister of Justice, and the utterly inconsistent statements as they seem to me, of the Solicitor General, I ask hon. members of this House if they will say that up to the present time any true and reasonable explanation of this matter has been given? What is the meaning of it all? What is the meaning of the extraordinary apologetic attitude assumed in this House by the Minister of Justice towards this man Bourke? Why, he told us on a previous occasion that he had made a demand on this man—he had made a demand, with theatrical gesture and loud voice he said he had made a demand upon him that this information should be forthcoming; and when we came to examine that letter, why, Mr. Speaker, we saw that the Minister of Justice, when he addressed himself to Mr. Bourke, was roaring it as gently as any sucking dove. And this afternoon he has been at great pains indeed to assume a remarkably apologetic attitude towards Bourke. What does it all mean? This man has been charging, by direct implication, if not in express terms, and I am inclined to think in express terms as well, though I have not the context under my hand—this man has been charging conspiracy in connection with the escape of the convict Miner—let that be understood—and he has been charging that officials for whom the Minister of Justice is responsible in this House have connived in that escape. What does the Minister say? He says, will you please give to me, the Minister of Justice, any information that you have on this subject? And he stands here in the House this afternoon and regards the situation as absolutely solved to his satisfaction, because he has received a somewhat curt letter from Bourke informing him that he has no further information than that which has already been given. Why then did Bourke state on previous occasions, over his own signature, that he had such further information? Should 24 hours be lost before a committee of this House was appointed to bring that man Bourke before the committee and take his evidence on oath? Sir, that is not the attitude of the Minister of Justice. The attitude of the Minister of Justice is absolutely a departure from what we would expect of a gentleman whose management of a department in this important respect had been challenged in the public press over and over again. He beseeches the grace of Bourke, because he has made no attack upon Bourke in this House, and he flatters himself that Bourke has made no attack upon him. Bourke has made a direct attack upon the management of an institution for which the Minister of Justice is responsible Further, I say that when the Minister of Justice boasts in this House as to the treatment which he accorded to Bourke after that escape had taken place, in superannuating him exactly as if the discipline in that penitentiary had been all that was required, treating him as if no escape had taken place—I say that when the Minister of Justice boasts of that, he boasts of something of which I think he has absolutely no reason to be proud. It is in my belief the bounden duty of the government to see what that man has to say on that subject under oath. It is true, he has given his evidence already. I have already stated in this House that I would not be inclined to give much credit to the assertions of a man who, having once given evidence on oath, declares afterwards that there are circumstances within his knowledge which would throw new light on this subject. But we cannot afford to have the administration of justice in this country thrown into contempt and disrepute. When we have reflections such as have been made by this man Bourke and by other men in British Columbia, indicating that there was some collusion or conspiracy, it seems to me the bounden duty of the government not to let the matter stand where it is. Instead of attempting to cast discredit upon an hon. member of this House who brings these matters to the attention of the government, I would think that the Minister of Justice should welcome the aid of any member of this House in trying to bring about a better condition of affairs than seems to exist in the administration of the penitentiaries.

Hon. J. BUREAU (Solicitor General). I did not intend to take part in this debate, nor to say anything more after the explanations of the Minister of Justice. But I see there is an inclination on the part of our hon. friends opposite to misinterpret his words, and to endeavour to impute to him motives which he has not. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition greatly surprises me when he says that this debate was brought up wholly for the purpose of drawing from the Department of Justice some explanation of the escape of Bill Miner. He says the Minister of Justice has not answered the questions put by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor), because he has not explained the escape of Bill Miner. Well, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition what more can the Department of Justice do, or what more can the Minister of Justice do, than to hold an investigation, to call the officers who were supposed to know anything of the circumstances of the escape, and examine them under oath, to take their evidence and come to a decision thereupon?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a fair question; will my hon. friend permit me to answer it? Will he tell me, in the first place whether the circumstance with regard to the growth of this man's hair and moustache before his escape, had been investigated, and if it had not been investigated, does he not think in all fairness it should be investigated?

Mr. BUREAU. Well, the leader of the opposition asks me a fair question. As he knows, I am not charged with the administration of the penitentiaries. But I was informed after the debate that took place on the 11th of February that the then warden of the penitentiary, as has been stated by the Minister of Justice, had certain weaknesses in regard to this matter, and I told him I was informed that at the time of the escape, the officers reported that Bill Miner's hair had not grown three-quarters of an inch—if I am not mistaken that is the answer I made.

Mr. CALVERT. What about his moustache?

Mr. BUREAU. About that I have no information. The leader of the opposition has accused the Minister of Justice of casting a slur upon one of the members of the opposition. Now, Mr. Speaker, my attention was called to the articles of the 'Daily Columbian' when the Minister of Justice cited these editorials of the 18th of February. I ask now, is there any man sitting in this House who reads newspapers, or any man outside of this House, when he sees a despatch in a daily paper of the importance of the 'Daily Columbian,' a paper whose importance is enhanced by the fact that a gentleman interested in it sits in this House—is there, I say, any man in this House or out of it who is going to write or telegraph to the editor of that paper, or to the manager, to find out whether a certain despatch is genuine, or whether it was copied from another newspaper. I submit in all fairness to the members of the opposition that when the Minister of Justice saw in that paper a report purporting to have been telegraphed from Ottawa, he was perfectly justifiable in thinking that the report had been telegraphed from Ottawa, had been telegraphed in the regular course of business, as happens in all newspaper offices which wish to keep their readers posted upon the proceedings of this House. This paper says in so many words that Chief Constable Macintosh was the man to whom Miner reported that Detective Bullick had been at him and had offered him his liberty if he would give back the bonds. The report of the minister speaks of the instructor, Mackenzie, not only in one place but in different places. Here it is at page 1228 of 'Hansard':

During the investigation conducted by Inspector Dawson after Miner's escape and on 13th September, 1907, Instructor MacKenzie stated in his evidence that after the interview with Bullick and Terry, Miner had told him that Bullick said Miner would be pardoned if he would surrender to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company certain Australian bonds which the company believed he (Miner) had taken from their express car on the occasion of the robbery at Mission. MacKenzie further deposed that he had reported Miner's statement to the warden, who said he knew about it. No record of the interview of Messrs. Bullick and Terry with Miner is entered in the convicts' visitors book.

I submit that under the circumstances the hon. member for New Westminster should see that his readers are properly, rightly and correctly informed that they should know the truth about this deal. He cannot accuse the Minister of Justice before he writes a word to correct the statement which appeared in the 'Daily Columbian,' because, in justice to the Minister of Justice and to himself, that correction should be made.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. I wrote that word several days ago to Chief Constable Macintosh.

Mr. BUREAU. My hon. friend may have written a letter but the paper does not speak about it. His private correspondence does not affect us very much in this transaction. We are more concerned in what the paper published. The matter was published in the newspaper and the correction ought to be made in the newspaper. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) seems to make it a crime that the Minister of Justice did not immediately send a constable or detective after Mr. Bourke and bring him down here that he might be brought before the bar of the House to answer any questions that any hon. member of the House might see fit to put to him. He makes it a reproach to the Minister of Justice that he wrote to Mr. Bourke: Will you please give me the information? Mr. Speaker, I do not know that a superior, writing or talking to one who has been an officer of his, whether he may be still in the service or out of the service, has to bully him when asking anything of him. The leader of the opposition is not justified in finding fault with the Minister of Justice because he has written a civil letter. He also says that the Minister of Justice ignores the rules of the House that the Minister of Justice is trying to heap abuse on some body, that he his trying to get after the hon. member for New Westminster, that he his trying to get after the government of Ontario, and in the same breath finds fault because the Minister of Justice has written a polite letter and makes it a crime that is a crime.

Mr. HUGHES. As I understand it the Minister of Justice stated, in very loud tones that he had demanded of Mr. Bourke an explanation and when the demand was brought down it was found to be a veritable sucking dove sort of letter.

Mr. BUREAU.

Mr. BUREAU. Of course, it is only natural, I suppose, that my hon. friend the member for Victoria and Haliburton (Mr. Hughes) never demanded what he got. We remember the whole history with regard to that hon. gentleman and we know that he got more than he demanded sometimes. When my hon. friend the Minister of Justice says that he demanded, the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton may endeavour to impart a meaning to his words by adopting the tone to which we have just listened. My hon. friend is a military man, he must be a good sport and if so will he in all fairness tell us what he wants the Minister of Justice to do?

Mr. HUGHES. I want the minister to be honest when he comes to this House and not say that he demanded something when he only asked for it in a very humble tone.

Mr. BUREAU. I challenge my hon. friend to point out any dishonest statement made by the Minister of Justice. Here is a fair question and a fair question requires a fair answer. Show me any statement made by the Minister of Justice that is dishonest.

Mr. SPROULE. I——

Mr. BUREAU. I am asking the hon. member for Victoria and Haliburton. I will keep on my feet if he does not desire to answer my question.

Mr. HUGHES. The statement that I spoke of in this connection is that the Minister of Justice stated that he had demanded of Mr. Bourke when he did not demand of Mr. Bourke, but very tamely and very humbly took his hat in his hand and asked Mr. Bourke to be good enough to give an explanation. Mr. Bourke seems to be master of the situation.

Mr. BUREAU. If that is the only crime committed by the Minister of Justice and the Department of Justice the country can be safely trusted to place a proper value upon the accusations of hon. gentlemen opposite. I see that the warrior spirit has invaded the other side of the House. The other night the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) wanted me to show him my burglars' tools with which I was to burglarize the country post office where the postmaster happened to keep a few cents in a tea cup and he declared that because I franked a few letters that I sent through the mail I was to be condemned. To-day he wants the Minister of Justice to walk up to Mr. Bourke pistols in hand and say 'your money or your life.' If that is the only charge against the Minister of Justice all well and good. The leader of the opposition ought not to be so bitter against the Minister of Justice as he is. I ask now in all fairness what other steps could have been taken to recapture the convict Bill Miner whose escape we all regret? Hon. gentlemen cannot say that we have been derelict in our duty in the Department of Justice. As soon as the news came action was taken to try to find the convict and bring him back. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Taylor) tried to show that there was a mistake in the telegrams. In his speech on the 11th February the Minister of Justice explained, as Mr. Bourke explained himself, in his letter, that the telegram had been sent to Mr. Dawson instead of being sent to 'The Inspectors,' that the telegram had gone to Dorchester, then to Kingston and then back to Ottawa, that Mr. Dawson had got it in Kingston and had sent it back to Mr. Stewart upon its receipt and that immediate action had been taken on the matter.

The leader of the opposition also states that in view of the rumours which are going around, the government ought to take immediate action. I do not think that my hon. friend is serious when he makes that statement. If we were to make an investigation, if we were to appoint a committee of the House upon every rumour that we hear we would be constantly sitting with a special committee investigating and trying matters. As my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) states we might as well have this House sitting as a committee on rumours because they would keep it busy.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know my hon. friend (Mr. Bureau) does not wish to misquote me, but my chief basis for the suggestion that there should be an inquiry was the statement that Mr. Bourke made over and over again in the press.

Mr. BUREAU. How does my hon. friend want us to act after Mr. Bourke has been heard under oath? Subsequently Mr. Bourke made statements in the newspapers. We ask Mr. Bourke to tell the government all he knows about it and he gives this information as it is his bounden duty. Here is a man that had performed his duty as acting warden in the penitentiary, and when we write him he says he has nothing further to disclose than that which he did disclose at the time of the inquiry made by the inspector. I should think that at the time of the escape and at the time of the inquiry made by the inspector the facts were vivid in Mr. Bourke's mind. He knew exactly what they were. He was then at the head of the penitentiary and when he came to give his evidence under oath I am satisfied that, the man being honest, as I believe he is, told the facts and I do not attach as much reliance upon any statement of fact which Mr. Bourke made eighteen months or two years after Bill Miner's escape as the lapse of time, might, under certain conditions, make him forget the facts and cause him to believe that they had another aspect than that which presented itself to his mind at the time of the occurrence. In view of all the circumstances, it is absolutely unfair to charge the department with negligence, or to charge that there was conspiracy between the government or any of the officials of the government in Ottawa, looking to the escape of Bill Miner. There is nothing in Bourke's statement, there is nothing even in the rumours that have been published, there is nothing anywhere to give ground for such an insinuation. The hon. gentleman read from a newspaper the statement that a man high in office knew that Bill Miner did not escape through the hole in the fence as alleged, but that the hole was put there as a blind. Well, if this matter is really brought up in parliament in the public interest why do these people not come forward and state exactly what they know to the Department of Justice?

Mr. HUGHES. Why not bring them forward?

Mr. BUREAU. Why is not the name of this gentleman high in office given?

Mr. HUGHES. The paper will give it if you demand it.

Mr. BUREAU. But the paper publishes a mere rumour.

Mr. HUGHES. The paper is responsible to the Solicitor General and he can bring that paper up if he wants to.

Mr. BUREAU. We cannot bring to account every newspaper that publishes a mere rumour. This newspaper says it is reported that some one high in authority knows a certain thing; it publishes a mere rumour and it takes that rumour as a basis for attacking the government. Now, what can you do in such a case? What means is there to hold a newspaper responsible for such a publication? The department has done everything that it could do in this matter; the Minister of Justice has made a fair and full statement to the House as to all the circumstances, but notwithstanding, every now and then the hon. gentleman from Westminster produces the 'Daily Columbian' to read certain statements and to base on them an attack upon the government. I submit to hon. gentlemen that such a proceeding is not fair play. I submit also that there is no warrant for saying that the Minister of Justice has endeavoured to cast any slur on the member for New Westminster. I submit further, for the consideration of the House, that the action of the 'Daily Columbian' newspaper in this matter, using an incorrect statement about Chief Constable Macintosh and endeavouring by interviews based on that incorrect statement to stir up the feeling of the people of British Columbia, is intended to unwarrantably cast disrespect on the administration of justice and is not such conduct as one would expect from a journal which would be supposed to be devoted to the public interest.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo.) This being a question which has been much agitated in the province of British Columbia, and in view of the sarcastic remarks which have been made by hon. gentlemen on the government benches as to how public business is conducted in British Columbia, I think I should say a few words. I have not the honour or the advantage or the disadvantage whichever it may be of being a lawyer, and not having a trained legal mind, it may be that I am unable to see that it makes any material difference to the question at issue whether in a telegram of 700 words the word the name 'Macintosh' was incorrectly substituted for the name 'Mackenzie.' What has that got to do with the principle at stake? The Solicitor General has not denied the charge made by the leader of the opposition, that the Minister of Justice had attempted to discredit the hon. gentleman from New Westminster because of his connection with the newspaper which gave publicity to this matter. As the leader of the opposition clearly showed this despatch was printed in good faith word for word by the 'Columbian' as it appeared in one of the leading newspapers in Vancouver. In view of that fact, I do not think we have yet had an adequate retraction of the charge made against the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) by the Minister of Justice. Is it any great misfortune that a member of this House should be connected with a newspaper? I do not know what the affiliations of other hon. gentlemen may be but I dare say there are some on the other side of the House who are connected with the press. They are not to be blamed therefor, nor should there be criticism of this sort directed to the hon. gentleman who opened the debate. What point was the Minister of Justice trying to make against my hon. friend (Mr. J. D. Taylor) because he was connected with a newspaper and because he has succeeded in running it after an up-to-date fashion? If we are to believe the Solicitor General it would be the duty of the 'Columbian' to make no reference whatever to the escape of Bill Miner or to the management of the penitentiary What is a newspaper for if it is not to keep the public in touch with what is going on and what more interesting and important piece of news could the 'Columbian' publish than this very peculiar incident in connection with a great public institution situated in the city in which it is printed? The 'Columbian' simply did its duty in putting the public in the possession of the fullest information in regard to this whole affair. and that it did so reflects credit on the management of that newspaper. Now, although we have had explanations over and over again both by the Minister of Justice and by the Solicitor General, there are several matters which have not been cleared up. Inspector Dawson was apparently in New Westminster inspecting the penitentiary in June and July and it has been shown that he knew of five or six visits which had been paid to this convict Miner previous to that date and it is apparent that he did not report them to the department. One would think that this was of sufficient importance to be reported by Mr. Dawson to his superiors. We have also the statement that in this letter of Bourke which has just been published, he says that Mr. Dawson saw an authentic copy of the telegram as it left New Westminster addressed to Inspector Dawson, and that has not been explained by the Solicitor General. Without going into the question in any critical way, I may say that what the people of British Columbia and what the people of Canada want to know is, whether this whole thing is not of sufficient importance to call for a thorough investigation in the interest of the administration of justice in Canada. I believe I am voicing the opinion of a great many members not only on this side of the House but also on the opposite side when I say that in view of the statement made by the Solicitor General in this House some time ago in connection with the bonds which were stolen and in view of the fact that there was no action by the department to see whether the bonds were accounted for in Australia, and when we have in addition the fact that a notorious criminal has escaped without being recaptured, there is sufficient to call for a strict inquiry. The capture of this convict was a credit to the police system of the country and his sentence strengthened the confidence of the public in the administration of justice in Canada, and, now that he has escaped, and in view of the discussions in the press, and in view of the elaborate statements made by the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice in the House, and in view of the unrest in the public mind about the circumstances of the escape of this notorious criminal, is it not time that we should have an impartial inquiry not an inquiry at the hands of Inspector Dawson who is hopelessly mixed up in it, but a thorough inquiry conducted by some impartial tribunal. I believe that the Department of Justice will not justify itself in public opinion and that it will not promote in the eyes of the public the highest respect for the administration of justice unless it causes this whole thing to be probed to the bottom.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (E. Grey). The Solicitor General defied any member on this side of the House to point to any inaccurate statement made by the Minister of Justice. Only a few minutes before, when it was drawn to the attention of the House, the Minister of Justice said distinctly that the mistake which appeared in the 'Columbian' was absent from the reports in all the other papers in British Columbia. That is shown to be inaccurate.

Mr. BUREAU. Was it dishonest?

Mr. SPROULE. It was not founded in fact, and that is sufficient to discredit a great deal of what the Solicitor General says. Then, the Minister of Justice says that when the department first received the report of the escape on the eighth day of the month, the names of the prisoners were not given, and that they got no information as to their names until the 12th; yet Mr. Bourke says he telegraphed the names on the following morning. There is a discrepancy there, and yet neither the Minister of Justice nor the Solicitor General desires to go any further either to verify or to refute that statement. Then, we have the facts of the prisoner's hair and moustache being allowed to grow, so that his identity could be hidden when he got out into the world, and no explanation is given of the reason for that. I thought that either the Minister of Justice or the Solicitor General would have referred to that fact; but both of them, I was going to say purposely, avoided it. The country would like to know what was the cause of it, who was responsible for it, for what purpose it was allowed to be done. It was in violation of the rules of the prison. With all these rumours and more than rumours, and all this circumstantial evidence before the country, the impression is left on the public mind that there was some connivance between the department and this prisoner to account for his escape; and when the Department of Justice refuses to inquire into the matter any further, the country will come to the conclusion that they have something to hide which they are afraid will come to light. The very pleading reference made by the Minister of Justice to Mr. Bourke was in itself very suggestive that he would like to keep the friendship of that gentleman. It was quite in contradistinction to the statement he made before in the House, that he had caused an imperative demand to be made upon Mr. Bourke. There must be something behind all this. If there is, this House would like to know it. The apathy of the government and their opposition to any further inquiry will force on the public mind the impression that there is something behind which they desire to prevent coming to light; otherwise they would take the first opportunity to have the fullest inquiry made before this House and the world in order to refute the many charges which are levelled against the Department of Justice.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP. Mr. Speaker, I think no one can have listened to the debate this afternoon without feeling that the escape of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) was about as easy as that of Bill Miner and apparently a great deal more regretted by the government. We are perhaps liable to lose sight of what is after all the main feature of this interesting and important case. I remember that a few years ago, under somewhat similar circumstances, charges were made against another department of this government. It was at first insinuated and then charged that the Department of Marine was not all that it should be; and I remember with what indignation hon. gentlemen opposite decried any reflection on that department from this side of the House, and how every one of them was prepared to raise his hands to Heaven and swear that a more immaculate department than the Department of Marine and Fisheries had never existed. And yet as time went on investigation was made into that department first in part, by a committee of this House, afterwards by the Civil Service Commission and still further by Mr. Justice Cassels, and it would be cruel to point out all the derelicts that now lie stranded along the course of those investigations. Charges are now made against another department of this government, and an opportunity to investigate them is refused. Every member of the House, on whatever side he may sit, will, I think, feel that it is a pity that, whenever the suspicion is expressed that any department of this government is not properly conducted, the supporters of the government should refuse an investigation into that department. But even when we have had suspicions of other departments, I think everybody, not only in this House, but in the country has had the feeling that there was one department on which we could implicitly rely, and that was the Department of Justice. I ask if any greater misfortune could befall any country than to have the administration of justice befouled; and it is almost as bad to have a suspicion in the minds of any number of people that that department is badly administered. Now, there are certain facts in this case which are beyond all dispute. Nobody disputes the fact that Bill Miner escaped. Nobody disputes the fact that he received remarkable treatment while in the penitentiary. The rules of the penitentiary forbade certain interviews. These were wilfully and deliberately ignored by the officials of the penitentiary, none of whom apparently have been punished for that. Miner was given privileges which were given to no one else, and certain prison disadvantages to which other prisoners were liable did not befall him. When he escaped and the message announcing his escape was sent to Ottawa, although his name was not mentioned, one would have thought it would have been enough to put the department on the qui vive, especially as there had been a number of other escapes during the summer. When the despatch only came on the fourth day after the escape, could any one have believed that so discreet and alert a department as the Department of Justice, would have sat down for four long days without inquiring who the prisoners were or anything about the magnitude of their offence, waiting like Micawber for something to turn up? And when the telegram did come on the evening of the eleventh day. it was, according to the statement of Mr. Bourke, properly addressed to the Inspector; and we have from Mr. Dawson the statement that the telegram was addresed to himself. It is perfectly clear that either Mr. Bourke made a false statement or that Mr. Dawson, or some other official, forged the address, and tried to deceive the public. Somebody is lying. Either Mr. Bourke or Mr. Dawson has wilfully lied and tried to deceive the country. There is another significant fact. The rumour is that Miner was allowed to escape. The story goes that some £50,000 of bonds were stolen and that he was allowed to escape because he was willing to tell where the bonds were—in other words, that he was willing to pay his way out of the penitentiary in that way; and when the question is asked of the government if they have taken steps to inquire what has become of these £50,000 of bonds, the government are compelled months after to say that they have made no attempt whatever to find out what has become of them. In the face of all this accumulated evidence against the Department of Justice, when this afternoon an hon. member from British Columbia, who comes from the very neighbourhood of the penitentiary, rises in his place to call the attention of the representatives of the people to the statements made, which, if true, reflect on the Department of Justice, and, if untrue, should be disproved as soon as possible, we have the melancholy spectacle of the Minister of Justice, the one minister who, above all others, should be absolutely judicial in his utterances in this House and free from partisan bias, when his honour and the honour of his department are at stake, standing up to make a defence which consists entirely of a violent personal attack on the hon. member who raised the question, and even that based on a state of facts unhappily found not to exist. I think I am justified in repeating what I said at the outset, that it seems to me that it would be a sad day for our country if charges of this kind could be made, and the one great department of the government in which we should have confidence, be unwilling to allow a full and complete investigation to ascertain whether or not there is anything in these charges. It is idle to say to any hon. member of this House: make a charge on your responsibility as a member; because of course we cannot know anything of these matters except what we have learned from the statements of hon. gentlemen opposite and the utterances of the press. But, Sir, I think we are justified in saying that we do know that a feeling of suspicion has been aroused. It is impossible to understand why a department which has done absolutely nothing wrong would not welcome the opportunity of brushing aside the imputations cast upon it, instead of acting in such a way that no matter how innocent it may be it of course arouses suspicion and tends to lower the confidence the people of this country rightly have in the administration of justice in Canada.

Mr. G. H. COWAN (Vancouver City). I agree with the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) in regarding the administration of justice as of far greater importance to this country than any partisan advantage to either of the two great parties of Canada, and therefore I can enter into this discussion for a moment, I think, without imputing any sinister or improper motive to the members of the government—just for a moment. As I understand it, since the investigation that took place, very important and material evidence has come to light. It has become known that certain visits were made to Bill Miner in the cell, in violation of the rules of the penitentiary. I understand that that fact was not reported by the person who made the investigation. I understand that that material fact was not reported, that Inspector Dawson did not report to the Minister of Justice or the Department of Justice that he himself had been derelict in his duty and had failed to advise the department that although he knew improper and illegal visits had been made to Miner, he had kept that knowledge locked up in his own breast. I understand further that this same Inspector Dawson, to whom had been deputed the sacred task and duty of preserving intact and pure the administration of justice in this matter, is directly contradicted when he says he received a telegram addressed to him, G. W. Dawson. It is also a new and unreported fact that this Bill Miner was allowed to grow his whiskers and his hair. The Solicitor General says, as if he had made an actual measurement of the man's whiskers, that they were not longer than three-quarters of an inch. I do not think the administration of justice is dependent on whether these whiskers were allowed to grow three-quarters of an inch, an inch or a foot, they were allowed to grow contrary to the penitentiary regulations of Canada. If I understand the Department of Justice aright, that fact was not brought to the attention of the department. In the light of all this new evidence, of all these material facts discovered since the investigation made by the man against whom all circumstantial evidence points as the man who was derelict in his duty, since this investigation was made by the culprit in the case, according to the circumstantial evidence in the case, surely no government in Canada will dare to ignore these important and material facts freshly discovered. Surely no man impressed with the importance of preserving pure and undefiled the administration of justice in Canada will dare to say: We will not accord an investigation. If we are reduced in Canada to the condition that men, fearful of their partisan advantage, fearful of the exposure of their own officers, fearful of I know not what else, refuse to permit an inquiry, then the administration of justice in the United States, at which we have been in the habit of pointing the finger of scorn, is away and above our own, our own which will set free a man convicted of the most serious crime in the calendar, a crime which has no parallel in the criminal annals of this country. I cannot believe that the government of Canada, impressed with the great obligation that is upon them, will dare in the light of these new facts to sit quiescent and refuse an investigation.

Mr. S. HUGHES (Victoria and Haliburton). But for the evident attempt of the Minister of Justice to place the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) in an improper light before the House, I would not have uttered a word to-day. The offence of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is that he has unearthed the very suspicious circumstances connected with the escape of this man, Bill Miner, and forsooth, because the hon. member's paper chanced in copying from another paper to get the name of Macintosh instead of Mackenzie, we have the tirade against our friend which we have just heard. What is the object of all this bluster? Is it to so intimidate our friend from New Westminster that he will sit quietly in his seat like a good little boy the rest of the session and not dare to further seek to expose the gentlemen who have had charge of the management of this institution and of this particular case? The statements made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) were that Bill Miner's moustache was allowed to grow. It transpired that this was the case. Might I ask that the Minister of Justice follow this matter up to see by whose authority the order was given which allowed this poor man, whose eyes were affected to grow his moustache? Is it or is it not true that the electric light in his cell so affected the nerves of the brain of the poor fellow that he could not sleep, and that after inquiry an order was given that Bill Miner's hair should be allowed to grow? We have it on the authority of the Solicitor General that it was at the time of his escape three-quarters of an inch long.

Mr. BUREAU. I said less than that.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it true that the orders of the Justice Department were deliberately violated in allowing this man to go from the inner inclosure into the brick yard where life prisoners are never allowed? Is it true that poor Bill Miner's feet got sore walking around on the hard floor of the inner inclosure, and that by some authority he was allowed into the brickyard where his feet might rest on mother earth and his corns might not cause him sleepless nights? Is it true that all these things followed the sercet interviews of these detectives? Is it or is it not true that immediately after the escape of Bill Miner the deputy warden who was acting as warden because the warden unfortunately was ill, wired the Department of Justice that four prisoners had escaped? Is it true, or is it not true, that the very following morning Bourke again wired the department that four prisoners—naming Miner among them—had escaped, and asking authority to offer a reward for their recapture?—this telegram addressed, not as the Minister of Justice has said, to one of the inspectors by name, but, according to Bourke's solemn statement to the Inspectors. If these facts be true, and if they have been produced subsequent to the inquiry, then if the Minister of Justice is anxious to allay public feeling, and if he dare cross the path of this man Bourke, there is only one way to proceed, and that is to order an investigation. We have all seen in the advertisements the contrasted pictures, 'Before taking' and 'After taking.' We had a picture of the Minister of Justice standing in the House telling us that he had demanded, instantly demanded, of this man Bourke to produce his evidence. We have the other picture now of the minister standing hat in hand and saying: Please, Mr. Bourke, will you give us whatever data you have in connection with this affair that have not been brought out. The case strikes the public as very strange and very suspicious. The public want to know how it happens that Bourke is the master of the situation. Another point on which the Minister of Justice is in error, in addition to those pointed out by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is this: he endeavoured to make a point against my hon.

friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D Taylor) by saying that escapes had occurred that year previous to Bill Miner's. The records do not show it. And the minister explains his mistake by saying that recaptures were not reported. Well, let us see. I have the minister's report before me, and at page 2 I find a statement that, in 1904-1905, there were three escapes and, at the foot is a note stating that one of those who escaped was recaptured. In 1905, two prisoners escaped and it is stated that both were recaptured. The minister talks a little too fast, and not by his own book. A trifling mistake in a name—between Macintosh and McKenzie, both good Scotch names,—was not sufficient to justify the Minister of Justice in reading the Riot Act, as he has done, to the member for New Westminster. If the Minister of Justice considers his own personal and political credit, if he values the administration of justice in this country and has any desire to satisfy an honest public, and if he is not under the thumb of this man Bourke—I say that advisedly, if he is not under the thumb of this man Bourke—then, to my mind, there is only one course open to him, and that is to bring these parties before a committee of this House and have a full and fair inquiry so that these rumours may be set at rest and the truth may be made known.

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). Answering the hon. member from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) seemed to make much of the fact that the escape was investigated by Mr. Dawson the inspector of penitentiaries. At the time Mr. Dawson was appointed to make this investigation, Mr. Bourke was the superintendent of the prison at New Westminster, and it was under Mr. Bourke, as superintendent, that the prisoners had escaped. After the investigation had been made and after—according to the Minister of Justice—Mr. Dawson had reported that there was no blame attached to the superintendent of the prison, we find that the superintendent was superannuated. And the Minister of Justice, referring to this superannuation made very much of the point that, notwithstanding the fact that he had been negligent of his duty and had openly violated the rules of held, Mr. Dawson was Mr. Bourke's superior annuated at the full allowance for his term of service, and the minister seemed to put that forward as a reason why no complaint should be made by the superintendent of the prison. But when the investigation was held Mr. Dawson was Mr. Bourke's superior officer, and he, Mr. Bourke, had reason to believe that if the explanation he gave was satisfactory to Mr. Dawson he would be maintained in his position and it was only after he had been superannuated at lesser salary than he thought he was entitled to that he made the various statements that had been published from time to time. That is most important. The Minister of Justice writes, not demanding anything from Mr. Bourke, but, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has said, in a somewhat pleading strain, asking Mr. Bourke if he had stated all the facts in the investigation prior to his superannuation. And Mr. Bourke, as has been pointed out, rather curtly replies that he had done so. But, in his signed statement in the newspapers of the province, Mr. Bourke has stated that, if asked to do so before an independent commission appointed to investigate this question, he could tell many things that he had not told previously. And the minister makes a complaint in regard to this; he pleads that it is very unfair on the part of a man treated so well by the government to make statements of this kind. But the real question is that raised, by the leader of the opposition: These statements are either true or not true; if true, they call for an investigation, and Mr. Bourke is still a servant of the people in that he is in receipt of pay as a superannuated servant; if not true, he should declare before an independent tribunal that these statements are not correct so that the Department of Justice may be free from suspicion. It has been truly said that the whole government of our country hangs on the purity of our administration of justice. If we fail in that, all our government fails. This is not a small matter, and I am surprised that the head of the Justice Department, should, on a question of this kind, declare that he has given all the information necessary and that he sees no cause for further investigation. I do not intend to go further into this subject, but I think the two points, the real points at issue, are those raised by the leader of the opposition, and that this House should demand a full investigation by an independent authority into the escape of this prisoner.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) is a new member of this House, and perhaps he will not take it amiss from me, who have had more experience than he in parliamentary practice, if I tell him that, in view of the discussion he wished to introduce and the information he wished to elicit, it would have been preferable if he had followed the usual practice when a matter of this kind is to be brought under discussion, and had notified the parties interested of his intention, so that they might have been prepared with the documents to meet any statements that he might make. As I understand, he did not take that precaution, and therefore the discussion cannot be as complete as it would be otherwise. Had we had notice of his intention, we could have had documents at hand to meet the views he presented to the House. I may say that a good deal of matter has been brought into this discussion which seems to me absolutely irrelevant to the question. The question which interests the country—and the only question in which the country is interested—is, whether there has been any connivance on the part of anybody in the escape of Miner. No more dangerous criminal, I think, was ever in the clutches of Canadian justice.

It was a fact for which we took some credit that when one of these American desperadoes came to Canada, thinking to play with impunity in this country the pranks he had been playing on the other side of the line, he was arrested, tried and convicted. It was a shock when we heard, and we heard it with a good deal of shame also, that he had subsequently been allowed to escape from the penitentiary. If the discussion had been confined to these facts I would have more sympathy than I now have with the manner in which it has been brought to the attention of the House. I think a good deal of the matter brought forward has been irrelevant. I agree with the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) that it is not of much importance that, in despatches which are sent to British Columbia newspapers, the name Macintosh had been substituted for the name Mackenzie. That in itself would be of no consequence, but it is of some consequence in this matter. I would say to my hon. friend from New Westminster that since he is the responsible editor of the paper in which the mistake occurred, and if he intended to bring the matter before the House, it would have been perhaps better and more in accordance with the courtesy, with the etiquette and the amenity of public life, if he had taken the opportunity of correcting that mistake. Telegrams, in transmission from the sender to the receiver, may get distorted, we have had evidences of that before; but I think it is due to the person who has been misrepresented that the editor should take the opportunity of correcting the error. In this case my hon. friend did not choose to do so, and so I say the substitution of the name Macintosh was not without some importance in relation to the matter under discussion, because the fact that the name Macintosh was introduced in this telegram gave to the newspaper an opportunity of going to see Mr. Mackenzie and getting from him what I cannot characterize otherwise than a tirade against the Department of Justice. Therefore it would have been better, in the interest of the administration of justice generally, and in the interest of truth, if the error had been corrected there. It was not corrected.

Mr. FOSTER. What was the date?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. 18th of February. My hon. friend, in the course of his observations, tried to cast a slur upon the investigation which took place—at all events I assume that was his intention, from the statement he made later on. He wanted to give the impression, an impression which seems to prevail on the other side of the House, according to the speeches we have heard this afternoon, that the investigation which has taken place had not been as full and as complete as it might have been. He read from a newspaper—I am sorry I could not hear very well what he read, but I understood him to read from an interview in which some one stated that if he had been called upon he would have shown that Bill Miner had not escaped through a wall, and that he would have shown how he had escaped. Now, Sir, I ask my hon. friend, and I ask the House generally, what importance or what reliance can be attached to such a statement as that? Hon. gentlemen have tried to show that the investigation which took place at Dawson into the manner in which Miner had escaped, was not as complete as it might have been, because a certain man had stated that if he had been called upon he could have thrown light upon the manner of the escape. But if I understood my hon. friend aright, the extract which he read did not give the name of that man. Am I right?

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. It said a high official, without naming him.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Well, how are we to know who this high official was? It is contended that there should be a new investigation. On this point I express no opinion, the matter is new to me. But it is not possible to come to a conclusion on a vague statement of that kind. If a newspaper says that somebody is able to give certain information, surely nobody would pretend that such a statement is a sufficient basis for a further inquiry. Now I appeal to hon. members on both sides of this House whether it is advantageous to the administration of justice, advantageous to the administration of any other department of the government, that we should have these slurs cast from one side of the House or the other; I say that at least we should have some responsible name put forward as a basis for any further investigation. If we are shown any reason to suppose that the investigation was not as complete as it possibly could be, that further facts might be discovered to show how this man escaped, then I would be willing to go very far in order to find that out. But it is not possible for any reasonable man to come to any other conclusion than that we have obtained the whole truth in regard to this matter, so far as it can be obtained. I wish we had more information. So far as I can see, the administration of justice in that respect was loose, and the department has, I understand, taken the precaution to put it in better hands. I do not know what mistake has been made, but I am ready to agree with the hon. member for New Westminster that the administration of the penitentiary was not what it should be, it was carried on in a manner that called for correction, and it has since been corrected. But so far as I can see, I put it to the good sense of the House whether any case has been made for another investigation. I think that charges most unfair have been made against the minister himself, who is a painstaking official, and a credit to the administration of justice in Canada, and who could have nothing but a stern desire to meet any deficiency that was found to exist in the administration of the penitentiaries under his charge.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). The Prime Minister has very cooly and dispassionately discussed the question for a brief period, and I suppose that we may with equal coolness and dispassionateness discuss what the Prime Minister has said. He commenced by lecturing a new member. New members do not know the order of the debate as well as older members, and they ought to be excused for not adhering strictly to its forms. So I think the Prime Minister might have excused the member without parading the offence. It is right that when you are going to bring up an important matter, the minister who is in charge of the department affected should be informed of it, with a view of eliciting the utmost information. My hon. friend from New Westminster, a new member, forgot that; but I have known even older members to forget it and to bring up matters without notice. Of course it is not absolutely a rule of the House, it is a courtesy which is generally observed, because it ends by forwarding the purpose had in view. So much with reference to the lecture which was read to the member for New Westminster. Then the Prime Minister deplored irrelevant matter having been introduced into this discussion. It was deplorable, there is no doubt about that. But who is the man that introduced that irrelevant matter? The man who introduced it, and added all the acerbity that has been imported into this debate, sits exactly behind the Prime Minister. Here is my hon. friend from New Westminster, why should he have been reproached by a Minister of Justice with having undue relations with a newspaper, and using it—well, to say the least, somewhat dishonestly. No other inference could be taken from the words of the Minister of Justice. It is certainly no disgrace, it is no dishonour, and I do not think it is any great disadvantage to a man to represent in this House his constituency and at the same time be the editor, or proprietor, or owner of a newspaper. But the gravamen of the charge that was made by the Minister of Justice, made with malice aforethought, was that this hon. gentleman having a newspaper here, indited a telegraphic despatch to that newspaper intended to and which actually did misrepresent the Minister of Justice, and that, on this basis of misrepresentation, the newspaper published interviews and comments which were derogatory to the Minister of Justice and to the management of his department. I ask the Prime Minister if he can get any other meaning from the words that the Minister of Justice used? There is no use in labouring that point. That is actually what the Minister of Justice said, and his statement was as plain as a pikestaff, that this was wrong in that paper whilst in other papers it was correct.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR. In all other newspapers?

Mr. FOSTER. Whether he said all newspapers in the province or not I will not say but he said that in the other newspapers the despatch was correct. When the Minister of Justice, instead of adhering closely and dispassionately to the facts of the case, starts out to try to injure a member who, in the course of his duty, brings up the matter, when he does this on a wrong basis of facts and, when as he afterwards acknowledged, he had not himself taken the precaution to verify these facts, he did something that he was not justified in doing. That is where the trouble arose in this debate. The Minister of Justice is prone to do that sort of thing. Yesterday furnished an example, other days have furnished other examples and it would be well for the department and more in keeping with its traditions if the Minister of Justice would leave a little of his petty partisanship to one side and treat his political opponents with more fairness. It was a shock and a shame, said the Prime Minister, to learn that Bill Miner had escaped as it was with joy and pride that they learned that Canadian officers and Canadian courts had been instrumental in catching such a noted desperado and afterwards, by the machinery of the law, in landing him in prison for life. The position of matters was well defined. The Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister were glad that Bill Miner the desperado, had been landed within the penitentiary at New Westminster. The Minister of Justice knew that Bill Miner, a noted desperado, was in the penitentiary, he knew that the discipline was bad in the penitentiary, he knew that just previously to his receiving certain information one, two, three prisoners had escaped therefrom.

All this he knew when he received, on the 8th day of August, notice that four prisoners had escaped out of the New Westminster penitentiary. The Minister of Justice, with all that pre-added knowledge and consciousness, did not take enough interest in the matter to immediately inquire about the names and the circumstances. Four days elapse and still he had not inquired. What is the mildest name that one could give to inaction of that kind? I think that there was an initial negligence and a lack of that proper promptness which should characterize the department under such circumstances as those. Now, we go a little further. The Prime Minister says that my hon. friend should have corrected his mistake. My hon. friend, the member for New Westminster, was in Ottawa city. The telegram went to the paper in British Columbia. On the 18th it was published in that paper. My hon. friend did not see that paper again until certainly a week and maybe more had passed. He had no data for correcting the mistake at least until the paper came within his hands. I do not know how many days after the 18th it did come. I do not know the date of the publishing of the paper but the probabilities are that he would not see this paper until four, five, six or seven days after his telegram appeared. Then, my hon. friend says that he communicated with the man himself, Mr. Macintosh, and told him that it was a mistake. It might have been quick and prompt if the man and the newspaper had been on the same street. It was absolutely impossible to make it either quick or prompt with half a continent intervening between the two. Now, the Prime Minister says that we have nothing upon which to base a renewed investigation. Why? Is there any good reason why, if there is a scintilla of new evidence, it should not be followed up? Circumstances that have been detailed here to-day in reference to the bonds, the lax discipline, the visits against the various rules of the department, the fact that these visits were known to the inspector of the department, and that they did not come, by way of a report from that inspector to the department, calls for an investigation. This is a fact, if I understand the facts correctly. I will leave myself to be corrected with regard to that but that is the way I understand it. Am I wrong in that?

Mr. BUREAU. I do not know if I understand my hon. friend. Does he mean to say that the inspector was aware of the visits before he held the investigation in New Westminster? The inspector only learned of these things after he had held the investigation, as I am informed.

Mr. FOSTER. That is the only point about which I was uncertain and that is why I made the inquiry. Then, as I understand it, these visits are recorded in the books at the penitentiary.

Mr. BUREAU. Some of them are in the book, as was stated by the minister in his answer which appeared in 'Hansard' on the 17th of February. All those that are entered are mentioned there. I am informed that four are entered and one is not.

Mr. FOSTER. Some of the entries of visits refer to visits to Bill Miner?

Mr. BUREAU. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, as I understand it, the inspector was there and if he inspected anything he would inspect the books. If he had inspected the books he would have found the record of these visits, he would have made some inquiry about them and he would have reported that inquiry back to the department. But, those visits were not reported by the inspector. These then are the facts. The escaped prisoner has not been taken. And now there come up two pieces of evidence. Reference has been made to the name of an official of high authority, who has been quoted by a newspaper as having definite information, which, if he had been aksed for it, would have thrown a very different light upon this question. The man's name is not given, but the paper referred to is the 'Province,' which is, I understand, a responsible and very reputable paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not understand that there is any name given in the newspaper.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that the name is there; I stated that the statement appears in the newspaper and that the newspaper stated that he was a high official. Does not the Prime Minister think that something to go upon especially in a case like this? Is the minister of the department to take no cognizance of that at all by way of a communication with the newspaper publisher asking him for the name of that high official? As it stands it is a blot and an aspersion upon the name of that particular penitentiary. A statement made in a reputable newspaper that a high official is in a position to give further evidence and make further disclosures, is a thing that the Department of Justice should follow up. The Department of Justice says it will not do so because it cannot take cognizance of an anonymous statement, but if the Department of Justice wants to follow it up I have no doubt a method can be found to do so. More than that, Mr. Bourke is your own official; he was there at the time of the escape; it was he and the late departed warden who allowed the rules to be transgressed; he is cognizant of these negotiations if any went on, and his latest statement is that he is able to give information which will put a very different light upon this matter. We are not inclined to make a partisan question of the administration of the Department of Justice or the discipline in one of our great penitentiaries. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) did not start out in that way. He was fallen foul of by the Minister of Justice, who in most excited language and stentorian tones belaboured the member for New Westminster for bringing the matter up at all. It is that which added the spice of bitterness to this debate and but for that there would have been nothing partisan about it. We will forgive the Minister of Justice—it is his failing perhaps more than his fault—but desiring as we do on both sides of the House that the matter should be cleared up, is there not good ground now for further investigation? If the idea goes abroad that prisoners may escape from our penitentiaries that is bad enough; but, if the idea goes abroad that they can escape by connivance that is worse, and if in addition there is a suspicion in the public mind that that connivance was built upon financial or moneyed interest that makes it still worse. It seems to me it is necessary to pursue this investigation in view of the added evidence. Bring Mr. Bourke before a competent examining authority and get from him the new evidence he has or make him show he has not got it. Get, if possible, the high official who is said to have communicated with the 'Province' newspaper and let us, as far as we possibly can, have the matter set at rest. It is of so much importance and means so much for the good name of our administration of justice in Canada that in my opinion it cannot be left where it is.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). The discussion this afternoon must have struck any one who listened to it with any degree of care as one of those peculiar occasions which sometimes, during the last three or four years, have developed in this parliament when gentlemen on the other side have started discussions based upon mere newspaper rumour. I am afraid that the Minister of Justice rather stirred up hon gentlemen on the other side by his references to the unreliability of the telegrams which are published in certain British Columbia newspapers, and hence we have had all kinds of forebodings and all kinds of suggestions about wrong-doing and the necessity for an investigation into this and into that. But let us look at the question calmly. Bill Miner escaped from the British Columbia penitentiary in August, 1907, the man in charge of the penitentiary being the deputy warden, the warden being ill at the time. There is some question as to the non-delivery of a telegram which was addressed to Inspector Dawson at Ottawa, and some hon. gentlemen have endeavoured to cast so much suspicion on Inspector Dawson, that you would think Inspector Dawson was in British Columbia conspiring for the escape of Miner. At all events, owing to a peculiarity about these British Columbia telegrams, there was a non-delivery of the message announcing that Miner had escaped. But as soon as Mr. Dawson did receive the information he proceeded to British Columbia, held an investigation into the facts; an investigation similar in all respects to that which was held by every Minister of Justice when the Conservatives were in power and when they also had escapes from the penitentiaries. I am reminded by the Minister of Justice that under the Penitentiary Act which has been on the statute book for a great number of years, the inspector was the official who alone could conduct an investigation into the matter. That investigation was held, and as a result of it the inspector recommended that the deputy warden who was in charge of the penitentiary at the time should be allowed to retire and that the guard should be retired. The government accepted these recommendations. Now, the hon. gentleman from New Westminster has on two occasions precipitated discussion with regard to this matter without the slightest reason. You would think to have heard these hon. gentlemen opposite this afternoon that some one of them had moved for the papers and had them brought down and that the official record of all the proceedings had been placed upon the table of the House, so that every hon. member, and the country, and the newspapers might at least know what had been done in the matter. But my hon. friend from New Westminster has not done that.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to say that I moved for these papers and the motion was carried about two weeks ago.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Then my hon. friend, in the style of so many other members on that side of the House, proceeded to discuss the subject before the papers were brought down and without knowing the facts. Had he only waited until the official documents in regard to this matter were laid on the table of this House and he in common with every other member of the House had an opportunity to read them, then it would have been possible for us to give the matter the serious and practical consideration that it deserves.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do those papers change the facts as stated by the Minister of Justice?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend was one of the gentlemen who applauded most vociferously when his hon.

friends talked about an investigation. Like him, I have no knowledge of what the papers contain, but I am prepared to wait till they come down before I take the responsibility of saying what should be done. My hon. friend the Solicitor General informs me that there is no record of the motion which my hon. friend from New Westminster states he made. But he can take that matter up at another time.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to order. I have made the statement that a motion of mine was carried in this House, and the hon. gentleman quotes the Solicitor General as flatly contradicting me. My statement is perfectly correct, and the Minister of Justice made an address to this House on the motion.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. For the purpose of my argument it is of no importance whatever whether the hon. gentleman made the motion or not, because if he did, he should have paid some deference to the intelligence of the members of this House and waited till the papers should be brought down before discussing the question, so that every hon. member should know what he was discussing.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Retract.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Allow me to rule on the point of order that has been taken. I do not think it is well taken. There is a difference of opinion as to whether or not a certain motion is on the records of the House. I do not think the personal word of the hon. member for New Westminster was called in question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether he did not understand, as I understood, the Minister of Justice this afternoon to state that every scrap of information upon the files of the department with respect to this matter had been embodied in the answer which he gave on the 17th of February?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I did not so understand the Minister of Justice. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition knows very well that the answer which the Minister of Justice gave could not by any possibility cover in detail the evidence that was given in the investigation or the details of the report made by the inspector who was the official investigator of this matter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I only speak of what he said.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. We are in this position, that the Department of Justice is in possession of papers which can fully and clearly inform this House and the country of every step taken in this matter up to the time when the investigation was completed and the report was made; and we have the hon. member for New Westminster precipitating this discussion prematurely. We have hon. gentlemen stating that whiskers and hair were allowed to grow on the prisoner, and that many other things occurred. All these things were investigated by the inspector. Then we have my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), whose particular function is at all times to make facetious speeches about imaginary refusals to grant investigations, dropping into the old song when there was no refusal, and talking about the honour of the Minister of Justice being in question, when he knew that none of the hon. members of this House who have spoken on this subject have ventured to suggest that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice was in any way connected with or had any previous knowledge of this escape. I submit, under these circumstances, that this whole discussion is premature. If the hon. member for New Westminster has moved for these papers, this House should wait until they are brought down. If hon. gentlemen opposite then think there are reasons why there should be a fuller investigation, and place those reasons before the House in a proper way, I am sure that the Minister of Justice will follow his duty, as he probably more than any other member of the bar in this country knows how to follow it; because no matter what hon. gentlemen opposite may say about the partisanship of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, none of them can question the high position he attained at the bar of this country or the position he has held for many years as the leader of the bar of the whole Dominion of Canada. I repeat that if my hon. friend the Minister of Justice had not said something about British Columbia and the frequent occurrence of mistakes in telegrams, I do not think we would have had this discussion this afternoon. These repeated occurrences of errors in telegrams to and from British Columbia are rather unfortunate. Some of my hon. friends from British Columbia, perhaps my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) might put a motion on the Order Paper asking that this House should direct an investigation into the telegraphic service to and from British Columbia not only in regard to the telegrams which are sent with reference to reports to inspectors of penitentiaries, but also in regard to telegrams which are sent to and from leaders of political parties on the eve of an election with a view to obtaining political support.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADIAN LIVERPOOL AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House went again into committee on Bill (No. 44) to incorporate the Canadian, Liverpool and Western Railway Company.—Mr. Girard.

On section 2.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) I move that section of the Bill be struck out. There is nothing before us which would warrant parliament in inserting it.

It should be entirely left out.

Mr. TURCOTTE (Quebec). (Translation.) I would like to hear on what grounds the hon. gentleman can rest his proposal ?

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) I have given them to the committee the other day.

Mr. TURCOTTE. (Translation). I do not see any harm in going over them again.

Mr. NANTEL. (Translation.) The other day I said in Committee of the Whole, that this committee had no evidence that this was a work for the general advantage of Canada, and that it was not sufficient to make such a statement in order to confer jurisdiction upon this parliament. In fact, we have nothing but the statement embodied in section 2, to the effect, that this work is for the general advantage of Canada, although we have no evidence to warrant it. In my opinion, the promoters of this Bill should have produced sworn declarations stating their purpose and the means at their disposal for the carrying out of this work, but they utterly neglected to do so. Moreover, I contend that even if it is implied by the whole Bill barring this section that the incorporation of this company is really for the general advantage of Canada, such a section would be entirely useless. But, I hold the opinion that we must not add this section, for the mere purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon this House.

Mr. TURCOTTE. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand why this section should be struck out. The mere fact of this Bill being before the House, after having been sent to the Railway Committee, and of its asking that civil and legal rights be conferred upon a railway, is a prima facie evidence that this parliament is entitled to legislate upon this matter. It is incumbent upon those who oppose this section, to show that the whole Bill or some part of it does not come within the province of parliament. However, I believe that it is in the public interest and conducive to the proper management of the affairs of the Dominion that such a clause be inserted in all the bills.

The hon. member for Terrebonne, is apparently of the belief that this is a new clause inserted in charters incorporating companies. On the contrary, it is the usual clause, and whoever is familiar with judicial matters is perfectly aware of it. There is no need for its justification. The British North America Act, distinctly states that whatever is outside the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial legislature, falls within the scope of the powers of the Dominion parliament. It is incumbent on the opponents of this clause to show that the Bill deals with a matter exclusively within the scope of the powers of the legislature. If that is not shown, jurisdiction is implied. It has been stated that no proof had been given, that such an enterprise was for the advantage of Canada as a whole. Such evidence has not been asked for by any one. The law does not require it. The clauses inserted in the Bill are in themselves sufficient evidence that it falls within the scope of the federal authority. Were similar clauses inserted in a Bill submitted to the Quebec legislature, there would be sufficient ground for warranting its cancellation.

Let us take, for instance, clause 13, which reads as follows :

> 13. Subject to the provisions of sections 361, 362 and 363 of The Railway Act, the Company may, for any of the purposes specified in the said section 361, enter into agreements with the Transcontinental Railway Company, The Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, or any of them.

To my mind, that power of entering into agreements with railway companies which are under the control of the Dominion government, implies that of establishing connections between those various railroads and gives parliament jurisdiction.

It is alleged that this company asked authority to build and run a railway wholly within the limits of the province of Quebec. My answer is that it is not solely the territory covered by the railway which should be considered, when the question of jurisdiction is to be decided. It is necessary, besides, that the powers applied for by the company should be such as the legislature has authority to grant. Whenever the powers, rights or privileges dealt with are not exclusively under the control of a legislature, the Bill falls within the scope of federal authority.

There is no need for my quoting any further from the Bill, since all its clauses are known to hon. members, who have made a study of it, as for instance, that relative to navigation and commerce. How could the Quebec legislature be called upon to legislate on such questions ?

After carefully studying this Bill, I am bound to say that it does not concern some vital interests of the province of Quebec only, but that, considering the territory it runs through and the powers which the company requests this parliament to grant, the work may be stated to be for the general advantage of the Dominion. Nor shall I stop at that : I say that this parliament has not only the right, but has for its duty to grant to the company the act of incorporation which they have applied for, and that it is in the interest of Canada that we should not be debarred from passing such legislation.

It would be a very dangerous precedent for us, as representatives of the people of this Dominion to assume an attitude of indifference towards such legislation, to refuse dealing with it and refer it back to the legislature of Quebec, it would amount to stating that all the clauses in this Bill are within the exclusive scope of provincial legislature. The discussion which has been carried on just now, has an interest far exceeding that of the mere incorporation of a railway company. It is a principle which we are about to lay down. I wonder whether our parliament is going cheerfully and deliberately to proclaim its lack of powers, without even having gone into the clauses of the Bill submitted to us, for it is a fact that we have reached the second clause only, out of a total of thirteen. Should some of the following sections deal exclusively with provincial matters, nothing prevents us from cancelling them or inserting a proviso safeguarding the rights of the legislature. In following a different course, we would, to my mind, be evading our duty and aiming a slur, as it were, at this parliament. As I said a moment ago, it would be creating a dangerous precedent, and I hope the House will not take such a responsibility.

Mr. MONK (Jacques-Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if there is any slur aimed at any one, it is to be laid down to those who are anxious to infringe on provincial rights. Were the argument of the hon. member (Mr. Turcotte,) to be accepted, we might at any time, in connection with undertakings entirely under the scope of the provincial legislation, interfere with their business and assume all the rights belonging to them under the constitution.

The hon. member seems to think that our parliament has only to declare an undertaking to be for the general advantage of Canada, to authorize our assuming, on no other grounds but that declaration, control over legislation appertaining to the provinces.

We have had many interpretations of those rather puzzling words inserted in the British North America Act, whereby we are enabled to declare a work to be for the general advantage of Canada. That construtcion of the words has on many occasions enabled us to invade provincial rights. However, I have never heard of any court finding that we were entitled to make such a statement without proof. I was not present at the meetings of the Railway Committee when this Bill was under consideration, but I believe that one of the strongest arguments brought forward against its acceptance was to the effect that no evidence had been adduced to show that such legislation was of interest to Canada as a whole; and it seems to me that the position taken by the member for Terrebonne, in whose opinion proof should be furnished beforehand as to the character of the undertaking, in order to give us jurisdiction, cannot be controverted. The mere reading of the Bill shows that this railway is a purely provincial concern.

I listened carefully to the arguments of the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Turcotte). He has not denied the fact. The whole territory through which this railway is destined to run is situated within the bounds of the province of Quebec. If such be the case, it comes within the definite clause of the constitution which vests the full control of such an undertaking in the provincial legislature. Therefore, I say that before interfering in provincial matters, before infringing on provincial rights, we should have been perfectly well satisfied that such undertaking concerns Canada as a whole.

What evidence has the hon. member brought forward to show that such work is for the general advantage of Canada? He quoted a section of the Bill wherein the company asks for authority to enter into arrangements with companies incorporated by the Dominion parliament, such as the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Canadian Northern, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and other railway companies which are under our control. He has drawn the conclusion that this railway—essentially a provincial concern—must be of interest to Canada as a whole. I do not think such an argument will appeal very strongly to hon. members.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, we have for some years past, dealt too highly with applications of this kind. If, as stated by the hon. member (Mr. Turcotte), that Bill affects some vital interests of the province of Quebec, if that railway is wholly within the bounds of that province, what right have we to legislate and to grant incorporation to such a company? What right have we to extend our jurisdiction over it when there is not a single argument to show that such jurisdiction is ours? Evidence as to that should be supplied in the first place, and I think it would be wise to refer back the Bill to the committee, with a view to obtaining such evidence.

Mr. GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay). (Translation). Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I shall state a few facts for the information of the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who has just contended with great force that the Bill under consideration, if passed, would be an infringement on provincial rights, as it tends to grant to a private company authority to build a railway through a territory situated wholly within one province. While maintaining strongly that contention, he nevertheless acknowledged that in days bygone the Dominion government had, under similar circumstances, created many precedents. In this connection I may be allowed to submit a list of Dominion charters exactly similar to this, numbering forty-two, which have been granted during the last parliament from 1904 to 1908, and consequently with the co-operation and approval of my hon. friend, who was then a member of this House and of the Railway Committee as well. Of these forty-two charters, there is one for an undertaking of an exclusive provincial charter, authorizing the construction of a railway twelve miles in length, from Brandon, Manitoba, to a point on the Grand Trunk Pacific; said charter having been renewed by this House only a few days ago. The motive which actuated parliament in granting this charter, and the only one stated, is that the proposed road will be a connecting link between two roads incorporated under Dominion laws, and that in consequence the Dominion parliament alone is in a position to grant the required authority.

The argument brought forward by the hon. member for Quebec (Mr. Turcotte) to the effect that provincial legislatures have not the power to authorize a private company to enter into agreements, under circumstances such as these, with companies created by Dominion charters, that argument has been unhesitatingly accepted in the past by this parliament, whenever the powers applied for in the present Bill have been sought.

Let us suppose that the Dominion parliament should have in the past, as it is requested to do to-day under similar circumstances, refused to grant such applications, the promoters would have been obliged to apply to the provincial legislatures in order to obtain such charters as these legislatures are in a position to grant, that is to say very incomplete; then, they would have been obliged to come back to this parliament in order to get these charters ratified, extended and completed. All of which would necessitate a heavy expenditure and cause delays which are always injurious to undertakings of such great utility in the public interest. The mode of procedure adopted by the Dominion parliament in the past, and which we are still following is more businesslike, more rational and does not in any way interfere with provincial rights.

My hon. friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Nantel), contended that the good faith of the promoters had not been established before the committee; he went so far as to rebuke them for not having laid before that committee affidavits setting forth the truth of their statements. Let me tell him that before the Railway Committee, complete plans have been filed showing the location of the proposed railway. A long and animated debate ensued, which ended in a vote whereby the committee, by a majority of 30, declared itself favourable to the Bill. Will my hon. friend undertake to say that this majority took that stand without realizing its responsibility, and have erred in their appreciation of the fact. I cannot believe his contention to be such. Considering that the House, as a rule, stands by the conclusions of the various committees, my hon. friend should not attempt to induce it to go back on the decision given by the Railway Committee approving that Bill.

How could a provincial charter grant to the promoters of this Bill the powers which they are seeking?

Mr. MONK. What powers?

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation). Among others the following: To start a line from any point along the Grand Trunk Pacific, incorporated under the Dominion Act; to cross and enter into arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern, the Quebec and Montmorency, all incorporated under the Dominion Act; also to establish lines of steamships between Canadian ports over waters under the control of the Dominion parliament, and foreign ports. All will admit that this is an absolute impossibility. It then becomes necessary to apply to the Dominion parliament. That is, no doubt, the reason why my hon. friend during the last parliament, voted in favour of forty-two charters exactly similar to those I have just mentioned.

Of course, I do not contend that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk), in that speech which he has just made, was trying to satisfy the committee that he had committed the same unfortunate mistake forty-two times in succession, that is, every time he voted in favour of the Bills referred to. I prefer believing that he spoke oblivious of the past; otherwise, I would be forced to admit that forty-two times in succession he erred in a lamentable way. From what I know of my hon. friend I am sure he would be averse to going back on his past career in parliament; I prefer believing that he was joking a moment ago.

The Bill as amended by the Railway Committee and reported to the House, affords ample protection to provincial rights; and there is no justification for the plea made on behalf of these rights. I think it better to close my eyes to what is going on behind the curtains. It has been insinuated that no evidence had been submitted as to the responsibility and good faith on the promoters; my hon. friend from Terrebonne would even have gone so far as to require affidavits establishing those facts. Had my hon. friend been an old parliamentarian, he would not have shown himself so exacting; for he would have known that it is not usual here to compel people to make public their private affairs, either in the shape of inventories or other similar statements. The Railway Committee in this connection has acted in exactly the same way as they had done on previous occasions, that is to say, they have accepted as evidence of the good faith and financial responsibility of the promoters, statements made before them in that respect

I trust, therefore, that all opposition to the Bill on that ground will cease and that my hon. friend will withdraw his motion.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE (North Simcoe). This Bill involves a question of provincial rights and has caused great discussion and loss of time in this House. It appears, as near as I can understand, that a few men can get together, chip in a few dollars, and having raised $300 or $400, they can come here and ask for a Bill giving them greater powers even than the provinces have. This is an omnibus Bill. In the first place, it is a railway charter, and I see no particular reason why, so far as that is concerned, the Bill should not pass. But there is added also a shipping clause, and this is added in order to have some argument to carry through the most dangerous clause in the Bill, namely, the water-power clause, under which the company may develop power and dispose of electrical energy. I think it is time that this House took a stand on this question, and, when gentlemen come here and ask for Bills of this character, we should compel them to separate the various powers asked for and then consider, straight and fair, each one as a separate Bill on its merits. Why is this water-power and electric light and power clause incorporated in a railway charter, seeing that it is recognized that these matters appertain to the province ? The reason, I take it, is that there is no expropriation power for these companies under provincial legislation. They come to this parliament for these expropriation powers, for the purpose of seizing water-powers which are now or will soon be, valuable. This is the most dangerous thing that can be asked. Why ? Because we give them power to invade private rights and even to seize and expropriate provincial properties. If I understand this Bill aright, it empowers these gentlemen to seize every water-power in the province of Quebec from Lake St. John to Montreal. Even though a water-power may be twenty miles away from the track and owned by a private individual, they can take it from the owner by expropriation. Even if the province of Quebec owns a water-power fifty miles away from the railway, there is nothing to prevent the company seizing it and using it for their own purposes. It is not even provided that the railway must be built before these powers of expropriation can be exercised by this company. I had an evidence of the apparent power behind this Bill in the Railway Committee. I realized for the first time what it was to have a lobby there in support of a Bill. I had been told before I came to this House that when a dangerous Bill was to be put through there was a strong lobby, and it was generally composed of members from the province of Quebec. I did not believe it until I saw the lobby behind this Bill with my own eyes. We saw some of these gentlemen from Quebec strenuously forwarding this Bill which takes away the right of their own province, rights which the province, through its representatives before the Railway Committee asked us not to interfere with by passing this Bill. I, as a representative from the province of Ontario, feel keenly on this subject, because the rights of my own province have been violated on a number of occasions by Bills of this kind. It is said that one of the most valuable undeveloped water-powers in Ontario has been expropriated—in fact, it took three or four railway charters from this House to cover all the available powers on a certain river in Ontario—in this way. It is high time when gentlemen ask for such powers as are proposed to be given under this Bill, that they should be called upon to give evidence of good faith. And, further, if representatives of the province of Quebec come here laying violent hands on the rights and property of their own province, they cannot expect the representatives of other provinces to have much sympathy for them when rights of even a more delicate character are in danger. They are establishing a dangerous principle. Every member of this House, no matter on which side he may be, should stand up for the rights of his province and of other provinces in matters of this kind. There is nothing very great at stake in this Bill. The promoters do not tell us: 'We have $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 in the bank ready to go on with this work.' It is purely a speculative paper charter. And when these gentlemen ask us to give them power to expropriate provincial water-powers and properties, they are going beyond the mark. The province of Quebec has no coal; in that respect, it is in the same position as the province of Ontario. In a few years, the wood will be gone. Coal will always be a high-priced article in the province of Quebec. How are you going to turn the wheels of your factories? How are your intelligent hard-working population, the best class of artisans in the world, to get employment in the province of Quebec, if you are going to give away your water-powers and tie them up in monopolies in this fashion ? It is clear that this Bill involves a very dangerous principle and this House should reject it. Not only can they seize water-powers even from the province itself, but they can go into any city and deliver power.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. A. Currie) tell me under what section that power is given?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Under section 10, as I understand it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am not interested in the Bill, but I wish to understand the hon. member (Mr. J. A. Currie).

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. That point came up before the Railway Committee, and the promoters of the Bill said they would accept an amendment. But what was the amendment? It was that they were not to be allowed to deliver power in any municipality without the consent of that municipality. Well and good. But what happens when we come to apply the powers given? They can pass a line through a municipality, and, though that municipality may have a power of its own, or may be taking power from a private corporation, they can compel the municipality or that private corporation to give up that power to them by unjust competition and by lowering the rates. We have an example in the province of Ontario, where the rights of the people in a city have been given away direct by aldermen refusing even to vote according to the will of the people on power questions.

Mr. RIVET. Name it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The city of Hamilton, if you want one; the city of Brantford, if you want another. The people of those cities voted by overwhelming majorities in favour of accepting provinicial power and the aldermen would not carry out the will of the people.

Mr. RIVET. These are Ontario municipalities.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not wish to have Quebec municipalities placed in the same awkward position as some of those in Ontario have been placed in by any action of this parliament. Let the province of Quebec deal with its own questions of water-power and electricity. Let us deal with this as a railway matter and strike out the power clauses. It is bad enough for hon. members to ask us to swallow the pill; why do they call upon us to swallow the box? If the promoter of this Bill will withdraw the power clauses, there will be no difficulty in the adoption of the measure.

Mr. L. A. A. RIVET (Hochelaga). As a member of this House from the province of Quebec, to which my hon. friend (Mr. J. A. Currie) has just referred, in terms which, I hope, he will not dare to repeat in our own province—

Mr. LENNOX. What terms does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rivet) refer to?

Mr. RIVET. I protest most energetically against the language that has been used by the hon. member towards the members from the province of Quebec, who understand their duties as well—I will not say even better—than the hon. gentleman himself does I say, as a member from that province, that I resent the language which has been used to qualify the conduct of Quebec members on the committee. The hon. gentleman says that after coming to this parliament he has had an opportunity of observing that the Quebec members were, to use his own words, purely and simply lobbyists, taking charge of whatever piece of legislation might come before the committee, and doing the work which ought to be performed by the promoters themselves in pushing those Bills through the committee and afterwards through the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say there is not the least foundation, there is not the least excuse, for the language the hon. gentleman has used to-night. Every one of the members of my province resent that language, and feel it their duty, through my humble voice, to make a most energetic and formal protest against it. As members of the Railway Committee, hon. gentlemen coming from the province of Quebec, as well as from the other provinces, understand that there is only one thing to do when a Bill is brought before the Railway Committee, and that is to study the Bill upon its merits, and if they find it based upon a just and sound principle, to support it irrespective of every other consideration. The hon. member has just hinted, in fact he has plainly intimated, that other considerations than those of public interest actuate the members from the province of Quebec in studying any piece of legislation that comes before the Railway Committee and the House. Well, I can only repeat that there is not the least ground for such an accusation as the hon. member has seen fit to make to-night.

Now, coming to the Bill which is before us, I, as a member of the Railway Committee, took some part in the consideration of this legislation when the Bill came before the committee for the first time. I thought that it was one that fell properly within the jurisdiction of this parliament, not only because in clause 2 the works of the company are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, but because many other provisions of the Bill bring it within the jurisdiction of this parliament. Irrespective of any other consideration, looking at the object of the Bill from a public standpoint, I said to myself, as every other member of the committee should say to himself, that it was my duty to support it and to see that it was adopted by the committee and by the House. Now I will not go over the arguments, which have been pretty well set forth by members who have previously spoken. But I can say that I feel at perfect liberty to vote for the Bill for the reasons which have been given by my hon. friend from Quebec, and by my hon. friend from St. Johns. Finally, I desire to say once more that the members of my province resent the imputation made by the hon. member, which was altogether unfounded, and I protest against such language, not only on my own behalf, but on behalf of all the members of the Railway Committee coming from the province of Quebec.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the evidence that the hon. gentleman thinks would warrant us in saying that this is a work for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. RIVET. The 8th clause of the Bill provides for the building of a line which is to be connected with other lines under the jurisdiction of this parliament. Under clause 13 of the Bill, the promoters of the company ask for power to enter into agreements with the Transcontinental Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, or any of them. All these companies have been created by this parliament, and it is obvious that the promoters of this Bill require authority from this parliament to enter into agreements with these other companies, because their line starts from a point on one of them, the Transcontinental Railway. There are other clauses which justify the promoters coming before this parliament for incorporation. It seems to me that the opposition which is offered to the Bill is not inspired by motives of public interest. We know very well what hon. gentlemen think when they talk about provincial autonomy.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln). In reference to what the hon. gentleman says, I am not so touchy about dealing with this subject as he appears to be. I would say that the last statement the hon. gentleman made was entirely unwarranted, when he insinuates that any member of this House is actuated by other than public motives. However, I do not care what he says about it, because it does not make any difference. I would point out that section 8 of the Railway Act is ample security, for all they want to get in a provincial charter. They have in the Railway Act that section which provides that the jurisdiction of the Railway Commissioners shall apply for all necessary purposes, and even to provincial railways which connect with Dominion railways. That is why I asked the hon. gentleman where was the evidence which would warrant us in deciding the question of fact. Now I am not like other gentlemen in the Railway Committee, who assume at once, whenever a charter is asked for in this House, that the work is for the general advantage of Canada. By the way we have been acting for the last few years we have got that principle turned upside down. We keep on deciding without any evidence whatever that the work is for the general advantage of Canada, whereas before we have any constitutional right to incorporate a company, the onus is on the promoters to present us with the evidence. We keep on in the Railway Committee, that is the majority of us, and I do not belong to the majority, deciding without a tittle of evidence that the work is for the general advantage of Canada. No other tribunal would decide any such thing, the onus being upon the applicants to convince us as a parliamentary committee that there is an exceptional reason why a certain matter cannot be dealt with under the clause of the British North America Act which gives the provinces jurisdiction, forgetting, and wilfully forgetting, apparently, that under the British North America Act railways are primarily within the jurisdiction of the provinces.

It is only when we have evidence before us which is substantial, which is convincing, that a provincial charter will not serve the purpose sought for that we have the right to decide that the work should have Dominion incorporation and be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. I did it in the last parliament, and again I am going to enter my protest against this sort of thing. We are shirking our duty; we are undertaking to decide a fact to be in the affirmative without any evidence of it. Hon. gentlemen seem to confuse the questions of power and duty. Over and over again it is said in the Railway Committee, and sometimes in this House, that we have the power, if we declare this work to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, to incorporate a company. Nobody says we have not the power, but the question is: Have we exercised the power properly and judicially in making that declaration, and have we the evidence to wararnt us in deciding that question? In this case there is not a particle of evidence to warrant us in coming to that conclusion and without evidence to show that this is a work that cannot be properly dealt with by the province of Quebec we should not sanction this incorporation. I care not which province may be concerned. I cannot help it if hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec are going to get angry because this happens to come from their province. They must not do that and expect us to sympathize with them. We say the same thing with regard to protecting any other province in the Dominion. We are consistent at all events upon this question. Whether this comes from Quebec or any other province the fact is the same, that if there is no evidence to warrant us in coming to such a conclusion as would justify us with any sort of a judicial mind in deciding that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada I am not prepared to vote for the Bill.

Mr. MONK. There is one thing that I would like to be enlightened upon and that is how the language used this evening by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. Currie) has insulted the members from the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Rivet) takes the position that any one claiming for the province of Quebec the right to control its own railways, the right to legislate where it has exclusive jurisdiction and the right to control its own water-powers is insulting the members from the province of Quebec.

Mr. BUREAU. That is not what the hon. member for Hochelaga says at all.

Mr. MONK. Yes, I do not see that my hon. friend from North Simcoe in taking the position that a member for the province of Quebec——

Mr. RIVET. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. MONK. I have the floor.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RIVET. The hon. gentleman has put words in my mouth that I never uttered.

Mr. MONK. That is what I understood from the hon. gentleman, and that is what most hon. gentlemen on this side of the House understood. Hon. gentlemen, in order to repeat to-morrow in the press, the old story that the members of the opposition in this House from the province of Ontario have declared their enmity to the province of Quebec——

Mr. RIVET. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MONK. It is to protest against that——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. RIVET. I rise to a point of order, and ask permission to correct the statement made by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LENNOX. That is not a point of order.

Mr. MONK. Pardon me.

Mr. RIVET. The hon. gentleman says that I have protested against the language used by the hon. member for North Simcoe because we are opposed to the position which hon. gentlemen opposite have taken. I protested against the language which he used because he charged members from the province of Quebec with being lobbyists.

Mr. MONK. There is no point of order in that, and I did not hear the hon. member for North Simcoe utter any such language as that. Any man who, in this House, wants to safeguard the rights of the province of Quebec in a matter of this kind and to assure to that province the control of its important water-powers, for the reasons indicated by my hon. friend from North Simcoe, is entitled to the credit of the province, and if he displays some heat in advocating these rights he may rest assured that those who realize what the needs of our province are will be thankful for it. I desire to refer for a moment to what was said by the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Girard), who stated that on forty-two different occasions, to his own knowledge, I had been a party to such legislation and approved of it. I was not aware that the hon. gentleman had followed so carefully my delinquencies in this House. Upon that score I have a very tranquil conscience, because, if I sinned forty-two times I sinned in company with my hon. friend. I am free to confess that what has been stated here to-night by one member of this committee, that in the past we have been a great deal too lax in matters of this kind, is well founded. It has been so for a long time and I think it is time to see to it that the rights of the provinces are safeguarded. There is the instance of the railway on the Island of Montreal. Upon what proof was this declared to be a railwav for the general advantage of Canada, confined as it is to the Island of Montreal and therefore falling under the jurisdiction of this parliament? I question very much indeed if it is to the advantage of the city of Montreal or of the province generally. Has there been any proof adduced that this projected company is a company in the general interest of Canada? That is the only clause in the whole charter that gives us any jurisdiction. Is there a member of this committee who will say that if there has been no proof of that, this parliament is not committing a rash act in incorporating this company? What proof, have we, Sir, that in view of the protest which was lodged before the Railway Committee by the province of Quebec, through its authorized attorney, who said that they did not wish to see this legislation passed, this company has not come here because it knew that the parliament at Quebec would not grant the privileges it is claiming for us? We are arrogating a jurisdiction to ourselves, and the point raised by my hon. friend from North Simcoe is a particularly interesting one for us in the province of Quebec. If we assume jurisdiction and give to this company the power which is mentioned in clause 38 of expropriating water-powers for the development of electricity we will place the province of Quebec, which has no coal and which has such a wealth of hydraulic power, in the most unfair position which will give rise to trouble later on. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that we should at least refer it back to the committee in order that ample proof should be secured of the general interest which has been alleged by speakers in favour of this Bill, but of which no proof whatever has been given.

SUPPLY—ESCAPE OF CONVICT BILL MINER.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the House resumed debate on the motion to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. J. W. MADDIN (South Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, before coming to this House as a representative I had a full recognition of the great differences dividing the political parties on matters of policy and such like, but I had to wait until today to find that an important matter such as the escape of a life sentenced desperado like Bill Miner would be a subject upon which the political parties in this country would differ. This matter is of too great significance to be dealt lightly with, and in view of its great importance I submit that the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor) who initiated the debate is not open to the censure visited on him by gentlemen opposite. I find in a recent edition of the Ottawa 'Free Press,' an organ of this government the following:

AN INQUIRY MUST BE HAD.

The conditions at the British Columbia penitentiary, which have been the subject of parliamentary comment within the past month should be investigated either by a committee of the House of Commons or by a judicial commission. That there is something radically wrong in that institution is proven not merely by the rumours and counter-rumours in circulation respecting the escape of Bill Miner and his accomplices, but also by the fact that the past week has seen a repetition of the jail breaking as a result of which two convicts got away, one of whom is still at large. That such a thing could happen after the experience with Miner, and especially after the re-organization of the penitentiary staff, shows that there is still need for more reforms.

Discipline is the first essential in a successful penitentiary, but discipline seems to be a much lacking commodity at New Westminster. The record of the past few years, including the escape of Miner, an insurrection or two among the convicts, several suicides, the practical dismissal of the former deputy warden and his replacement by a hospital steward, as well as the self-confessed trafficking in tobacco and other luxuries between the guards and the convicts—all this certainly justifies a searching investigation. The government has everything to gain and nothing to lose by a full and impartial investigation and we trust that the Minister of Justice will soon see his way to ordering such an investigation.

I deplore, Mr. Speaker, that the conditions which in this country surround a question such as we are discussing, differ so greatly from those which would obtain in Great Britain. In the mother country, if an imputation went abroad that anything was wrong in the administration of justice all political parties would put their heads together and a full and thorough investigation had. And when, in his speech this afternoon the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) expressed surprise that Bill Miner has escaped in August, 1907, and that not until this late date was the matter brought up in the House of Commons, perhaps the explanation of that is that the members of the administration now in power in Canada do not relish full and proper criticism of their departments, and when it is borne in mind that until last October there was a solid phalanx of government supporters from British Columbia it is not surprising that the matter has not been brought to the attention of parliament until the present day. It is certainly not the custom with this government to allow its supporters to bring up for discussion matters which are calculated to embarrass or to annoy them. The Department of Justice is the most important department of government. We can afford mal-administration in other departments; we are less than 7,000,000 of people occupying a country which can bountifully supply a population of one hundred millions; we are rich in natural resources and the appropriation of even hundreds of square miles of coal areas without adequate compensation to the country, and the exploitation of our forest resources by friends of the government, and the uncompensated depletion of our fisheries to supply the markets of the United States' cities are not so grievous after all because we have still enough left and to spare for our own supply. But, when it comes to the Department of Justice, that bulwark which stands between the citizens of Canada and all attacks on their liberties and rights, that department should be as Cæsar's wife above suspicion. It is the duty of the Justice Department to investigate in the fullest manner anything that is calculated to reflect upon its administration, and even though the cloud hanging over it be but the size of a man's hand, it is incumbent on that department to endeavour to dispel it. Whether it be based on idle rumour or whether it be based on common gossip there is no doubt that suspicion has seized hold of the mind of the people with regard to the escape of the convict Bill Miner. The facts are briefly these: In 1906 the Canadian Pacific Railway as common carriers took charge of £50,000 of bonds to convey across this continent. The train was held up at Mission Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway and was looted, and rumour had it that these £50,000 of bonds were stolen. Subsequently another train robbery took place and afterwards Bill Miner and his accomplices were arrested. It was to the credit of the administration of justice in Canada that he was tried, sentenced to a life term and incarcerated in the penitentiary at New Westminster. Now, rumour further says that the detectives of the Canadian Pacific Railway discovered that Bill Miner was the man who appropriated these £50,000 of bonds in 1906, and reasoning as ordinary men would they said: If we can approach this life term convict and get him to surrender these bonds or tell where they are concealed we will have accomplished a meritorious act. And so, one of the Canadian Pacific Railway detectives visited the penitentiary as also did a detective from the United States, and an ex fellon was taken in with Mr. Bullick and Bill Miner was interviewed in the penitentiary. Now, rumour further has it that when the proposition was put to Miner he answered: If I were out of here I could locate the bonds, and so arrangements were quietly made by which he left the penitentiary. It is further said that before his alleged escape his hair and his moustache were allowed to grow, and while the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General have told the House that his hair did not exceed three-quarter inches in length, there appears to be no positive statement from these hon. gentlemen with regard to the moustache. At all events the statement is made that Miner was enabled to step without the penitentiary and to hand over these bonds to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) paid the Minister of Justice a flattering compliment; he spoke in glowing terms of the high position held by that hon. gentleman at the Bar, and I have pleasure in agreeing with everything that has been said as to the legal attainments of the distinguished gentleman who is Minister of Justice. But Sir, the Minister of Justice paid small credit to that intelligence when, after telling us how he investigated the matter, he asked us: What more could I do? I submit that the ordinary business man, with the facts as rumour and gossip have placed them before the country, to take no more reliable source, would have worked on the conclusion back to Bill Miner. He would have found whether or not it was a fact that £50,000 of bonds were transported across this continent, whether these bonds had been stolen in transmission, and whether they had been restored. If these facts had been established, and if the telegram which Mr. Bourke said he sent to Mr. Dawson as inspector was changed, it is to be borne in mind that it came to Ottawa over the wires of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and if it was the object of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to compass the discharge of this man from the penitentiary in consideration of the return to them of the bonds, it would easily be a part of the scheme that any telegram sent to the Department of Justice over their wires would be intercepted.

Some hon. members have found fault with the hon. member who initiated this discussion this afternoon. That hon. member read from the Vancouver 'Province,' a paper which he said was independent and was published by reliable people, an imputation in heavy black type on the editorial page against the Department of Justice. I submit that an act of so grave a character as is involved in this case, which is nothing more or less in substance than an effort to usurp the pardoning power of the Crown, is something to be reprobated by both sides of this House. I regret that it is not viewed in that light by the members of the government, and that the Minister of Justice does not take it upon himself to investigate this matter to the fullest extent. As the party organ in Ottawa says, he has nothing to lose by doing so. If I drew the attention of the Postmaster General to a charge of dishonest conduct amongst the officials of the post office in Ottawa, and I told him that it came from a reliable source which I was not in a position to divulge, and if he took the matter up and discovered that something was wrong, it would be no reproach upon him or his administration. But if he hesitated or refused to investigate the matter, then I would say it was a reproach upon him—that he became a party to it. The Minister of Justice has pointed out that in all cases except those of capital offences, when pardon was sought, it was granted on the advice of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice is a man above reproach, and I would not for one moment connect his name with this so-called conspiracy; but I do wish to point out that unless he takes the matter up and investigates it, there will be a lack of confidence in his department. The hon. minister pointed out that in the Brothier case this pardoning power was exercised by the Governor General on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice. Seemingly this could not be compassed by those who wished to get Bill Miner outside, and the conspiracy which is talked about did not extend to the heads of the department at Ottawa, but was fully worked among the officials of the penitentiary at New Westminster, with the result that Miner was permitted to escape.

Now, the path of duty in this case is quite clear. It becomes the duty of the Minister of Justice, under all the circumstances, to institute proceedings, to find out to what extent there is truth in the statement that those bonds were stolen and that they have been restored, and if it be a fact that those bonds were stolen by Miner and restored by him, I think there is such a case of circumstantial evidence to submit to any jury that they would not be slow in finding that there was a conspiracy between the officials of the penitentiary and the friends of Miner on the outside.

Mr. D. D. McKENZIE (North Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my hon. friend from South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) on the very eloquent manner in which he has presented his views to the House. My hon. friend is not without experience in the courts of this country or without knowledge of what is evidence and what is not evidence. My hon. friend speaks as if there had been no investigation of this matter at all. If the circumstances of the case, as presented from both sides of the House, had been without investigation up to this time, we would all say at once that certainly there should be an investigation. I do not know the terms of the Penitentiary Act in respect to discipline or in respect to investigations into matters of this kind; but it has been stated to-day by gentlemen who know, that that Act provides for an investigation in cases of this kind by the inspector. If that be the case, I take for granted that an investigation of such a character has taken place in this instance; and, if so, it has the same force as an investigation before a judge, because the officer is constituted a judge in such cases by the Act. Therefore it is no light matter to set aside as of no consequence the findings of that official. If my hon. friend would reverse the order of things and would say that gentlemen on the opposition side were content with what had been done by the inspector, and the Minister of Justice were coming here and asking for the consent of this House to a re-opening of the investigation, I can well imagine the storm with which he would be met, particularly by my hon. friend from South Cape Breton, to produce the evidence on which he based his request. Where is the evidence in this case? The opposition in this House is led by a distinguished lawyer, and there are a good many other lawyers in the opposition, and they speak with great flippancy of evidence. Where is the evidence? There are rumours in newspapers; are they evidence? If the hon. gentleman presented himself before any judge of this country to ask for a new trial of a case that had been tried, and the judge asked him, where is your new evidence, and my hon. friend would say, I have not a word of new evidence, but a certain newspaper publishes rumous that a certain official in a certain place said that if he were questioned he would tell something; would any judge or court allow the case to be re-opened? The judge would certainly tell him that he had no grounds on which to base any such application, and it would be summarily refused. That is the position here. An investigation has been held, every man who had anything to do with the penitentiary has been examined and there is not a particle of evidence, as far as appears here—there may be when the papers are brought down—that will connect Bourke or any other official of the penitentiary with aiding and abetting this man in his escape. But so far there is no such evidence, and I think it only fair to conclude that a proper investigation has taken place, and we must conclude that a proper decision has been reached, that nothing wrong has been found against the management of that penitentiary, except what has already been corrected by the suspension or dismissal of the acting warden and by the dismissal of some officials of the penitentiary.

Mr. LANCASTER. What does the hon. member say about the well-established fact that the inspector who made the investigation is himself accused of having allowed surreptitious visits to be made to this man?

Mr. McKENZIE. The superintendent or warden of the penitentiary has been examined on oath and we must assume he was properly examined, that every fact that could be elicited from him and every thing he knew was declared before the officer of the law who heard that evidence. He has been asked since the appearance of this newspaper story whether he had anything further to say. Does it make any difference what style of language was used in asking him if he had anything further to declare to his country in respect to the escape of these men? His reply was read here this afternoon, that he had nothing further to say. My answer to my hon. friend is that when a man declares upon his oath that he has fully and freely disclosed everything he knows about a certain fact, and he is asked afterwards, if there is anything in the rumours abroad that he has anything further to say and in reply to that inquiry he says: No, there is no truth in it, I have told you already on oath all I know of this matter, therefore it is quite unnecessary, in my judgment, to call upon him to give any further evidence——

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Justice in answer to questions stated that surreptitious visits had been made with the consent of this very inspector to Miner before he escaped. Does it not occur to my hon. friend that this was not the right kind of inspector to pass judgment ?

Mr. McKENZIE. I know of no evidence to that effect.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Minister of Justice said that.

Mr. GRAHAM. Did he say that ?

Mr. McKENZIE. I did not understand that there was any alleged conspiracy between the officer who held the inquiry and any person in connection with the investigation. If there is I will ask my hon. friend to produce it or an evidence of it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not produce it in the shape of using the word 'conspiracy.' I pointed out that the Minister of Justice said in answer to questions that a number of visits had been made improperly and that they should only be made with the consent of the inspector.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The Minister of Justice did not make the statement attributed to him, and if the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) will look at 'Hansard,' page 1227, where the whole statement of facts from the Justice Department is contained, he will find a direct denial of that statement.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that to-day's 'Hansard' printed already ? I heard the Minister of Justice say it to-day.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. He did not make the statement to-day either.

Mr. McKENZIE. I have followed the answers of the Minister of Justice with a great deal of care and I am satisfied the position I took here is perfectly clear, that nothing of a wrong character has been brought home to the official who held the investigation. There was nothing that would disqualify him in my judgment or that should disqualify him in the judgment of this House or render him not a proper tribunal to try the charges in connection with that institution. Had there been, I certainly would not place any weight or base any argument on the investigation which he held. But I submit again that this investigation having been held there is nothing here presented that would justify us in asking the case to be reopened and a new trial to be held—and I submit that this investigation is more important than many a new trial would be.

I fully agree with the hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Maddin) that it is a deplorable fact that party strife or squabbles should take place in this House or anywhere over the administration of justice. We are all proud of the administration of justice in Canada, we are proud of the respect which our people have for the law. It is one of our proud boasts, and I am sure no person should attempt to make cheap political capital out of this matter even if a mistake had been made in connection with the administration of justice. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken said that the blame if blame there be does not come within a thousand miles of the Department of Justice or the learned gentleman who is to-day at the head of that department. That is the statement he has made. But supposing there was something wrong, there is not contention that the Department of Justice is in the slightest way implicated. It is said that officials of the penitentiary in British Columbia should not be called upon to do anything towards the capture of this individual. Miner, until they had instructions from Ottawa. I think that is a very unfair assumption to make, and it is dangerous to have a report go abroad from this House, that all we expect officials to do is to sit down and do nothing until directed from Ottawa. I take it that very much the same relationship exists between the Minister of Justice and the officials of the penitentiary as exist between the Attorney General of a province and the jailer or sheriff of a county. What would you think of a jailer or sheriff of any county in Ontario who would sit down and twirl his thumbs if a prisoner escaped from a jail until he heard from the Attorney General of Ontario or got his directions ? We have a right to suppose that every penitentiary is well equipped with officers and that they have men to act in emergencies. Why should there be any necessity for communicating with Ottawa in order to capture this man? There were officers on the spot whose duty it was to take immediate action, and the officials of the penitentiary had at their beck and call all the resources of the government of British Columbia, who are interested equally with the government of Canada in the administration of justice. Therefore there is no point in saying that some time may have elapsed between the sending of the telegram and its receipt here. I submit there is not a particle of evidence upon which to base a further inquiry. We on the government side, as far as I know, have nothing to conceal. If any gentleman has evidence of a reliable and substantial character to lay before the government or the Minister of Justice, let us have it.

And, after that is done, if the Minister of Justice will not act upon it, there is some ground for fault finding. But, until that is done, I submit, an investigation having been held, the department is satisfied, and the House, I think, should be satisfied, too, that everything has been done to ferret out the truth, and this question should not be made a means of gaining party advantage. The hon. member for South Cape Breton

(Mr. Maddin) declared that this should not be made a party question. He is a fairly regular attendant in this House, and knows how the party spirit was imported into the question. He knows that this was made a party question by his friend from New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) when the Solicitor General (Mr. Bureau) was putting his estimates through this House ten or twelve days ago. The hon. member from New Westminster knows that it is not a difficult matter to stir up party feeling in a body such as this House where the party lines are clearly marked. It is said that in the west there is a breezy honesty and sense of fair play. I am glad to know it. But I must say that I have not discovered any extreme measure of it in the hon. gentleman who has been bringing up this question from day to day. It is a well-known principle of British justice that no man may be attacked in our courts without giving him some notice of what is to be charged against him. I can tell my hon. friend from New Westminster that it is not fair to attack a man without giving him intimation so that he may have an opportunity to answer. We are told that the administration of justice outside this House must be extremely pure. I do not know that there is one kind of justice outside this House and another inside this House. I submit that if the reputation of a man is valuable outside this House, it is equally worthy of defence here. I submit also that if a man would be laughed out of court for presenting a case based upon an old newspaper and on a humdrum story and using this means to taking away the reputation of another man, he should be all the more laughed out of this House when he attacks the reputation of a minister of the Crown and a department of government on such evidence. The hon. member for South Cape Breton said that if a matter of this kind arose in England in connection with the Department of Justice, hon. gentlemen on both sides would get together and quietly inquire into the matter. We have strong men on both sides of this House. We have a competent lawyer leading the opposition. and we have a competent Minister of Justice. There should be no difficulty, according to the rule laid down by my hon. friend. for these two gentlemen to get together and quietly discuss this matter and find out if there is anything to investigate. I am sure that if the leader of the opposition would, in this quiet way, convince the Minister of Justice that there was something wrong. there would be no difficulty in getting an inquiry. But I submit, without impugning the motives of any person, that this would not suit the purpose at all. This could not get flaring headlines in the papers of Nova Scotia; we could not have the Jekyll and Hyde act in the newspapers and in this House if this quiet way were adopted. It suits the purpose very much better to carry on the talk that we have heard. We have not been allowed to wait even until the papers come down. If the papers were down and we had the facts before us, possibly it would be found that there was nothing to talk about. The great thing is to make a great hullabaloo about the matter and work up a lot of newspaper notoriety, get the matter before the public regardless of considerations of fairness; and hoping it will have some injurious effect upon the administration of justice and upon this government generally. My hon. friend from South Cape Breton knows very well the trick of the jury lawyer who tells his story to the judge: 'I want to prove so and so; I want to get in such and such evidence.' He knows that the judge will tell him that he cannot get in that evidence, but his object in telling the story is that the jury may hear it, and, no matter whether the judge admits it or not, the story will have more or less effect upon the minds of the men in the jury box. That is the scheme of these gentlemen—to get this story before the public right or wrong,—truth or falsehood does not make so much difference, so long as the story may have some effect on the jury and make a little cheap political capital.

Mr. GLEN CAMPBELL (Dauphin). Unfortunately I am not a lawyer, as are many of the gentlemen who have discussed this question, but, as this is a question relating to the west, I may be forgiven if I say a few words upon it. I shall not take up time in discussing the legal points involved. But, in fairness to the hon. member from New Westminster, I take exception publicly to the usage that the hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Taylor) received at the hands of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth). The Minister of Justice arraigned the hon. member for New Westminster on the strength of some articles that appeared in a paper published in British Columbia. The hon. member for New Westminster rose in his place and corrected the minister, yet the Minister of Justice did not have the justice to acknowledge—'decency' is the word suggested by a friend beside me, did not have the decency to acknowledge—the fact that he had made a mistake. An apology was due from the Minister of Justice to my hon. friend from New Westminster. But the minister did not offer it. I hope the hon. minister will think again, and, later on, will tender to the hon. member for New Westminster the apology he owes him. The right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) took it upon himself also to reprimand the hon. member for New Westminster. It was a reprimand worded as such a reprimand can be worded by only one man in this House—the Prime Minister himself—in the most courteous terms possible. It showed the steel hand in the velvet glove. But even such a reprimand was not due from the First Minister of the great Dominion to a new member of this House. The First Minister accused the hon. member of discourtesy to one of the ministers in not officially notifying him that this discussion would be brought up. He left the impression that a rule of the House had been broken by my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Taylor). I want to tell him and to tell this House through you, that no rule of this House was broken, there is no rule of that kind. If the First Minister wants to shield himself by any supposed rule of that kind, let him amend the rules of the House and provide that when a discussion of this kind comes on notification must be given. There was no notification necessary, because the last few weeks this matter has been a live question in the House. It was brought before the Solicitor General on the 11th of February last, and he showed on that occasion that there was one Bureau at least in the government of Canada where one could apply for information and not get it. Therefore I say the question is not new, it was something that the Department of Justice already had in hand. A motion had been passed by this House at the instance of the hon. member for New Westminster, calling for the papers pertaining to this inquiry to be laid on the table. That motion was passed over two weeks ago, and yet the Solicitor General to-night stated, through the mouth of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) that there was no motion for papers. Why, Sir, he cannot be attending to his business, because it is his duty as Solicitor General to prepare those papers when they are asked for by the House.

I was somewhat surprised to hear the defence which the hon. member for Pictou made of the Minister of Justice. He told this House that the Minister of Justice was the greatest lawyer in Canada, the finest lawyer in Canada. Well, Sir, if beclouding the real facts of the case by a display of verbosity constitutes a great lawyer, then I want to tell the hon. member for Pictou that I absolutely agree with him; but if that is the duty of the greatest and finest lawyer in Canada, I have only to say that thanks be, I am only an old farmer. The hon. member for Pictou found fault with the members on this side of the House discussing this great issue before the papers that were called for had been brought down. I suppose he acts on the old axiom that the exception proves the rule, and therefore he went to work to discuss the question himself. But in his discussion of the question he showed, I think, in the opinion, not only of the members on this side of the House, but in the opinion of the members on the other side, that if any man in the House had no right to get up and discuss this question it was the hon. member for Pictou himself, because he showed absolute ignorance of it. Let me point out to that hon. gentleman that in future when he desires to discuss a question that is brought up in this House, it would be well for him to be in his place looking after the interests of his constituents, instead of running round the country doing all the mischief he can. The very fact that the hon. member for Pictou was called upon to deliver the speech he did to-night shows conclusively that he was called in as a forlorn hope. He has always been called upon as the leader of a forlorn hope, in committees and everywhere else, the last two sessions. I hope this House will take his remarks at their true value, and take that particular matter into its consideration.

I do not intend to speak at length on this question, as it is one relating to a criminal matter that is foreign to me. My only object in rising is to pour oil on the troubled waters. The facts, as I understand them, are these: This man Miner was captured, tried and sentenced to the penitentiary for life, for one of the gravest crimes that had ever been perpetrated in Canada. After being incarcerated for a certain length of time, he escaped. An investigation was held, and as a result of that investigation, one of the minor officials was fired, or perhaps I should say suspended, for since then he has been taken back to work. Another man, as the hon. member for Pictou improperly said, was suspended, or was asked to send in his resignation. I said 'improperly,' and I use the word advisedly. This man was not asked to send in his resignation, he sent it in of his own accord. He asks for superannuation and gets it. Nobody has been punished, among the officials of the penitentiary at New Westminster, for inefficiency and neglect of duty. Nobody in this country, whether Liberal or Conservative, doubts for one moment but that some one was to blame. If any member of this House, in the conduct of his private business, finds an employee to blame, he punishes that individual. It is up to the government, it is up to the Department of Justice, to punish some one in regard to this matter, because the worst criminal that Canada has had in the clutches of the law for the last decade, has escaped, and nobody has been punished. The government supporters are handing out boquets to every official who could be blamed. The man who was in charge, this man Bourke, was allowed to resign and got his full pension; the government did for him all that it could do to any man who had performed his duty with the utmost fidelity.

Now what are we asking on this side of the House, and what every decent man in Canada ought to be asking is: that the truth shall be made known. An investigation was held and held by an official who is the object of a certain degree of public suspicion, who held the investigation himself, who tried his own case and who was practically his own judge and jury. That investigation has resulted in nothing, looking at it from the standpoint of justice. Certain things have come out since. There are rumours possibly but there never was smoke without fire. Certain rumours have come out. There is more perhaps than mere rumour. The deputy warden, who was allowed to retire and who was superannuated as if he were the finest official in the service of the government, has come out in different papers over his own name with a specific statement, amounting almost to a charge, to the effect that if he were brought before an impartial tribunal he would give evidence which has never been adduced and would do something to clear the atmosphere in this regard. It has been proved that the hole in or under the wall, through which this man Miner was supposed to have escaped, would not have accommodated a man of his size, and that it was absolutely impossible for him to have made his escape in that way. It has come out further that this man Miner has been permitted against the law, that is administered by the Minister of Justice, to grow a moustache—somebody said whiskers—and also hair to the length of three-quarters of an inch in a limited time. Three-quarters of an inch is a respectable growth of hair particularly on the top of the head, and I will submit to the judgment of the hon. Solicitor General upon that point.

Mr. BUREAU. What about the Minister of Justice?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would tell my hon. friend that in my youth I was taught to respect gray hairs and even if the gray hairs are not on the top of the head I still have to respect the hon. Minister of Justice, and therefore I shall not refer to them. But those are facts that have been brought out since this so-called investigation was held. On this side of the House we take no exception to what was brought out at that previous investigation, but what we say is that the points that I have brought forward were not disclosed at that investigation and that all western Canada, and British Columbia particularly, believes that there was some collusion or that the intervention of influential corporations or parties, led to the letting out of this man Miner. These points have been brought out, but they were not brought out at the investigation, and we ask the government to give us an investigation, or some kind of independent tribunal, that will go into these matters and see whether or not there is any truth in them. On behalf of the government themselves I appeal to them to adopt this course. I want to tell the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that the suspicion is all over Canada to-day that there is something crooked in this matter, and on behalf of the Canadian people and also on behalf of the great Liberal party, it is up to him to insist on having a free, independent tribunal that will bring Bourke before them and will not only bring Bourke before them but will bring one of these three convicts who escaped along with Miner and who has since been recaptured, as I heard it stated in the House, and who will give evidence to show how he got out and whether there was any collusion. We only ask it in the spirit of fair play. We only ask it to clear and not to damn the fair name of the Minister of Justice. We want the minister to have his name as clean as it ought to be and as I believe it would be did he give us this investigation. I have here, sir, if it will be any benefit to the House, a picture of Bill Miner. I understood the other night that the Solicitor General said that about a month ago they had news of the whereabouts of Bill Miner? Am I right?

Mr. BUREAU. I beg your pardon.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understood the Solicitor General, on the 11th February, sitting on the front benches, to say that he had news of the whereabouts of Bill Miner and expected to get him in a few days. Has he anything further in reference to that to communicate to the House?

Mr. BUREAU. I said I was informed that it was expected that they would capture him.

Mr. CAMPBELL. In closing I just want to make this appeal, and I want to make it to the right hon. First Minister. We are not speaking here to-night, we have not done so to-day or upon any other occasion when the matter came up, for partisan purposes. We are all Canadians, whether we be Liberals or Conservatives. There is a blot of suspicion on the fair name of Canada with reference to the administration of justice. It is a little matter, a matter of very little moment with regard to the question of expense, it would not cost much to appoint a committee, or whatever you like to call it, an independent tribunal, who will investigate, who will bring this man Bourke, who will bring this prisoner who was taken the other day before them, get from them whatever information can be got and clear up this business for ever and a day. It is only justice that we are asking.

Motion agreed to and House went into Committee of Supply.

Trent canal—Construction, $1,000,000.

Mr. WALLACE. As I understand it the appropriation for the work on the Holland river is included in this vote for the Trent canal, although the former work has nothing to do with the Trent canal at all. I do not think those two votes should be put in a lump sum, but at all events we should have some information as to how much it is intended to expend on the Holland river.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). In including these two votes in the one appropriation we are following the precedent of last year. We will spend about $200,000 on the Holland division. I have stated that it would cost $600,000 but I believe that it will cost much more than that before it is completed.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I do not want to delay the passing of the estimates, but this is going to be a contentious matter and as there are several returns on the Order Paper with respect to it which have not yet been disposed of I would ask that this vote be deferred.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think there is any return asked for, but there is a question on the Order Paper with regard to it.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. And it was asked that that question should be put in the form of a return.

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps I can give the information now.

Mr. WALLACE. I have asked for the following information by question number 8 on the Order Paper.

1. How much money was spent on the Newmarket canal on the Holland river, before 31st March, 1908?
2. How much money was spent in April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November and December of 1908?
3. What contracts were let since 31st of March, 1908, and the amount of such contracts?
4. Were tenders asked for?
5. Who are the contractors?

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The Minister had ample time to answer this question before, but he asked for his convenience that it should be put in the form of a motion for a return and now he says he can give the information right away.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did not ask that the question should be put in the form of a return.

Mr. SAM. SHARPE. There is a deeper principle than that involved. Here is an appropriation for $1,000,000 in which two independent and separate works are included. The Holland river is 30 miles away from the Trent canal, and yet we are asked to allow this vote to slide through without obtaining detailed information. We would not be doing our duty to our constituents if we did not learn how much is to be expended on the Holland river and how much on the Trent canal and where the work is to be done. If this vote goes through the Minister can spend the whole one million dollars on the Holland river if he wishes to and not one cent on the Trent canal. It is a reasonable request to ask that this item should stand until we get the information which will enable us to discuss it in an intelligent way.

Mr. FOSTER. While my hon. friends here are directly interested in this matter I have a general interest in it, and early in the session I asked for the complete papers as I wanted if possible to find out whatever in the world set this Holland river work going at first and what were the representations that ever induced a sane department to undertake to build the Newmarket canal. I have not obtained that information, and if the government is going to spend a lot of money on that work we ought to know something about it. The minister will make more progress if he allows this vote to stand till we get full information.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not know whether I can give any information as to the manner in which this work came to be undertaken, but I can at least disclaim any right to the honour that the hon. member for North Ontario sought to do me the other evening when he said it was the custom in that part of the country to couple my name with this work. That was a piece of news to me, as I imagine it was to everybody who heard it. I think it was a compliment. I should be very proud indeed to have my name connected with any public work in the constituency of North York which the people of that constituency took an interest in or that was for the welfare of the community. But I do not want to sail under false colours. I do not claim any credit for this undertaking; I have never done so, either in this House or out of it, for the simple reason that I had nothing whatever to do with it, and have no right to take any credit for it. I entered this house, as hon. gentlemen mostly know, in the fall of 1905. At that time there had been a vote of $100,000 passed by this parliament in the previous session. I have always understood that the way in which that vote came to be passed was that a very numerous and very important delegation of the principal men of the county of North York came to Ottawa during the spring of 1905 and made representations to the government and to the Minister of Railways and Canals, as the result of which it was determined to undertake this work.

I have lying before me a list of names of some of those who came specially from North York at that time for the purpose of urging their views upon the government. In that list are such well known names as those of Mr. T. H. Lennox, M.P.P., the present member for North York in the legislature of Ontario; Mr. F. W. Daville, who has since then been made sheriff of the county of York; Mr. T. H. Brunton, a well known member of the Conservative party, I think at that time and probably still president of the association for the riding; Mr. Archibald McCallum, who was at that time I think reeve of the township of King, who was the gentleman I had the honour of opposing at the by-election in the fall of 1905, a man of the highest standing in the community, and a man whom I need not say I hold personally in the highest esteem and respect; Mr. A. McMurchy, a member of the township council of King and also a leading Conservative of the county; and I might go on to give other names simply to show that there was absolutely nothing political, and not the slighest thought of politics, in the matter. This was literally the body of the county of North York, whatever that might be worth, and it was just as much a Conservative undertaking as it was a Liberal undertaking. Everybody in North York knows that, and I should welcome the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. S. Sharpe) if he would now or at any time pay a visit to the riding of North York, and make any attack upon this undertaking or upon the men who initiated it and believed that it was for the good of Canada. I certainly should not ask for any better assistance towards that waning of political influence which the hon. gentleman attributed to me when he was addressing this committee last week, and which he said was due to the fact that I had originated or advocated this scheme. Let that political influence continue to wane if my hon. friend's efforts to identify me with it has anything to do with accelerating it towards the vanishing point. I can only assure him that the more opposition he will offer to the construction of that canal, in that locality, the more he will feed the popularity of the man who has the honour to represent that constituency at the present time. That of course is but natural. I suppose that whenever any public work is desired in any locality, the men who live there, and who think it will be for the benefit of the business centres of the locality, unitedly and generally, favour it, with regard to political considerations. I think that the hon. member for North Ontario would not object to the construction of the public building in his own home town of Uxbridge, for which there is a vote in the estimates. I think he would be very glad to take it, and I am quite sure that the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) has on more than one occasion in this House urged the building of a branch of this very Newmarket canal up to the village or town of Bradford, a few miles to one side in his constituency. The very deputation which came here originating this scheme and urging it upon the government contained representatives of his constituents—I know nothing of their politics—from the town of Bradford and the township of West Gwillimbury; and because they thought they would be served by the construction of the branch which the hon. member from South Simcoe has advocated in this House, they were in favour of this work and united in urging it on the government of that day. But without any reference to what the origin of this work was, the question before this committee is whether or not public money should be voted towards carrying it on, and I want to address myself very briefly to that question. Some $200,000 or $300,000, I suppose, has already been put into the work. Now, if no more money is to be voted for it, it stands uncompleted and the country loses the money that has been put into it. I fully admit that if the work will be absolutely valueless, if it was abject folly to have undertaken it, the best thing we can do is to abandon it, notwithstanding what has been done by the people who came here clamouring for it, and by the people here who were weak enough to yield to that clamour and to undertake the work for them. It was not this parliament, it was not your humble servant who now addresses you, who had anything to do with it. It was our predecessors, and I am by no means prepared to say that they made any kind of mistake in doing what they did. A good deal of fun has been poked at this enterprise by the newspapers. I have not the slightest objection to that. I have enjoyed as much as anybody a great many cartoons that I have seen about it in which I figure. I do not any the less enjoy a good joke because it is at my expense, and I have no objection to the cartoonists exercising their art with me as a subject if they think it of any consequence to do so. But if it comes to be a serious question in this House, and if hon. gentlemen here seriously present for consideration to the committee the contention that this canal, when it is finished to Newmarket, will not have water wherewith to float any boat or be of any practical service to this country, that is another story altogether; and it is seriously that I want to say a few words with reference to this undertaking, assuming that any one who criticises it or thinks it cannot become a valuable means of transportation to Newmarket and to the adjoining villages, is dealing with the subject in equal seriousness.

This is no question of law, it is not one upon which I am in the least degree competent to form an opinion for myself. If it were a legal question and I had any strong view about the law of the matter I would be prepared to back that view at any rate as far as the Privy Council, before I would come to the conclusion that I had been wrong. It is not that kind of a question. Being a purely engineering problem, I am not competent to deal with it, but I am prepared to place exactly the same confidence in the opinion of a distinguished engineer, that I am egotistical enough, if you like, to say I would place in my own opinion if it were a matter of law. I have known the gentleman who is now the deputy minister and chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals since he and I were boys side by side on the shores of the Bay of Quinté. I have seen him rise higher and higher in his chosen profession until to-day I believe there is no man in the Dominion of Canada who stands higher as an engineer than he; and having in his engineering opinion as absolute confidence as I honestly think he would have in my opinion upon a purely legal question, I am prepared to rest my satisfaction with the proposition to construct this work upon his opinion as a matter of engineering, that there is ample water supply for all the working purposes of that canal when it has been constructed.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When was that opinion given?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Mr. Butler's opinion has been given to me in private conversation on more than one occasion. I have asked him if he had any doubt about it, but he says he has none upon the information he has received of the surveys. I am not competent to go into the figures or test at all the correctness of his view.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. When was that opinion given, and was it put on paper?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. As recently as this afternoon. I asked him this afternoon if there was any question about it in his mind. It was never put on paper to me, he and I are too well acquainted to deal with each other on the footing of a piece of paper. I rest my confidence in the practicability of this work upon the opinion of the gentleman to whom I have referred. If other members of the House have not the same confidence in him, that is a matter in regard to which each must form his own opinion.

Mr. S. SHARPE. Was the opinion of the deputy minister based on personal inspection or on the reports of other engineers?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. My hon. friend will have to obtain that information from the department. I am not able to tell him whether Mr. Butler has made a personal inspection or not. I asked him on the subject as an old friend, and as the man in charge of that department of the public service, and because of these repeated gibes or jokes about the great waterless canal that the country was building. I am of course, discussing it altogether on the supposition that this is not an impracticable work, not a work that will have no water wherewith to float a barge after the canal is completed. If I am wrong in that supposition I quite agree with hon. gentlemen that the work should be stopped. No one will propose seriously to construct a ditch to serve as a canal that will have no water after it is finished. It seems to me we ought seriously to consider whether or not this undertaking, supposing it to be practicable, is for the benefit of the country to the extent of the amount of money that will be put into it. As to that, let me remind hon. gentlemen who represent that part of the country—I think I see pretty nearly all of them opposite me, I think I have the honour to occupy an oasis of fertile territory surrounded by a vast desert of Conservative. shall I say of unfertile country—let me remind these gentlemen who represent that part of Ontario, of the departed glories of Holland Landing and Holland river. Long before I had any acquaintance with that part of Ontario, Holland Landing received its name. How did it get it? How else than that it had its wharf, its landing place, and was the port for Lake Simcoe? In the old days before the advent of railways, barges and scows, I do not know of what draught, but vessels of some kind or other, were continually brought up the Holland river as far as Holland Landing. They used the landing for commercial purposes of transport, and although that village has now the air very much of a deserted village, I admit, it shows, in the buildings which still remain and the works or their remnants along the river, evidence of the prosperity that once visited it when it was literally one of the lake ports of Ontario. If traffic by water was possible, as it undoubtedly was a hundred years ago or fifty years ago, prior to the construction of railways, if it were profitable to navigate the river from Lake Simcoe as far as Holland Landing, why would that navigation not be profitable again if the silt and sand which in course of time has filled up that stream below Holland Landing is removed? The first half of the work which this vote proposes to provide for was the cleaning out of the natural bed, the straightening of it in places and the making of that river once more navigable as far to the south of Lake Simcoe or Cook's bay as Holland Landing. That was the head of navigation naturally and up that far boats could now go if there was a dredging and deepening of the natural stream and all the better if there were a straightening of the river where it was too winding in its course. That is the first branch of the work that was undertaken in section 1, I think, of the Newmarket or Holland River division of this canal. And no one, I say, could successfully contend that there is not ample water for navigation purposes in that part of the stream.

What is the condition above it? Newmarket is the principal town in the constituency, and has a population, I suppose, of 4,000 or 5,000 people. It is some three miles—possibly not more than two and one-half miles by direct route—further up the natural stream than Holland Landing. The stream would not be navigable for any economical purpose any further up than Holland Landing so long as it remains in a state of nature. At Newmarket there is already a dam thrown across the stream, and a pond in consequence created. I do not know how many feet in depth that pond may be, but the dam, I should say, from personal observation, must be twenty-five or thirty feet high. I suppose there is at least that volume of water behind it, covering perhaps some eight or ten acres in the present pond, and this, without any attempt at conservation, storage or utilizing to best advantage the water which by nature will come to that water-course or stream. I am not pretending to argue whether or not it is practicable, I only know that any one who passes up and down along the railway or drives about Newmarket can see these things for himself. And, if engineers, having made their survey, report to us, and if the deputy minister and chief engineer of the department, upon his responsibility as head officer of that department tells us that it is in his judgment a practicable work, I am content, I am prepared to take the responsibility of voting public money for the doing of this work upon his confidence that it is a perfectly practicable scheme. The building of this canal from Holland Landing to Newmarket is, of course, not a dredging operation, it is the ordinary construction of a canal, which will replace the natural stream which now runs from Newmarket to Holland Landing. As to the commercial value of the work when it is completed, I entertain no kind of doubt. Newmarket is to-day as great a business centre as many of the towns along the line of any of our canals, a larger place than many of the towns on the St. Lawrence canals, than many of the towns along the line of the Trent canal, than many of the towns along the line of the Welland canal, a place of at least equal importance, I should say with the county town of Lincoln, with which the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) from that constituency is well acquainted. The Welland canal, of course, a great national undertaking for through traffic between the lakes, is not to be compared to something of local concern such as this either in the expenditure it involves to the country or in its importance to the country once it comes to be constructed. But my contention with regard to this canal is simply this, that just as any other public work into which you might put an equal amount of money is for the benefit of that locality primarily, so this public work, once it is completed, will be very greatly to the benefit of the riding of North York and the adjoining riding of South Simcoe. The Holland river is the boundary between the townships of East Gwillimbury which belongs to North York and West Gwillimbury, which belongs to South Simcoe, and each of these townships and the locality generally will reap the advantage of this canal when it comes to be completed. With regard to the advantage of it to the people there, I venture to say to the hon. gentlemen who are criticising it, hon. gentlemen representing the adjoining constituencies, that there are, in the riding of North York at all events, no two opinions. I have not at any time made the construction of this canal a political question in that constituency. It would be idle for me to attempt to do so because the people there know equally well with myself—in fact, much better than I do—how that work came to be initiated. They have heard and seen in the newspapers periodical attacks upon this work, attacks to which, I have always thought, the city of Toronto contributed, possibly, more than any other portion of the province. Although Newmarket, as compared with the city of Toronto, is a small place, it is not without the usual local jealousy. There is already, and has been for years, an agitation in the north end of the county of York for separation, a desire to set up a separate county for themselves, with Newmarket as the county town. There have been continual attacks, I may say, from the public platform upon this undertaking on the part of members of this House from the city of Toronto. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) it seemed to me, could scarcely make a platform speech without denouncing the horrible outrage of this waste of public money in the Newmarket canal. That is good politics for me in North York, I am willing to admit, but other than in that sense, there are no politics about it. On the public platform, on nomination day, last October, my opponent referred to my course during the last parliament as representing North York and asked what I had done for the constituency. He did not pretend to say: This man has brought us the canal. If he had done so, I suppose, he would have answered his own question. In that connection, upon that occasion, I said from the hustings that, while I had had nothing to do with it, and had never, so far as I was aware, asked for one dollar of expenditure in North York, I thought that those who attacked the expenditure upon this canal could be found, in every instance, among the ranks of our political opponents, and that those who defend it were, perhaps necessarily, upon the side of those who were making the expenditure. But it was only in that sense that the question, so far as I can see, had the least element of political significance in it. I remain entirely of this opinion. That work never was of political significance, it was simply a piece of local work which the people of the locality, without regard to politics, united in wanting, and, so far as I know, unite in wanting still And, exactly as the inhabitants of any other town in the province would like to see public money expended in their midst, so the people of North York would be very much dissatisfied, I am sure, if anything were done to interfere with the completion of this work.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). I think the Hon Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) intended to leave the impression with the newer members of this House that the last parliament had been unanimous in voting a sum of money for this canal. I wish to say that the members on this side, when this was originally introduced, objected just as strongly as they do to-night, and that just as strong exception was taken by the members acquainted with the locality as on the present occasion.

Now we are told that the people from that riding, of both political stripes, came down here and petitioned the government to spend a sum of money on this canal in North York. Now I do not suppose there is any riding in Canada that will raise a strong objection to half a million of money being spent therein, whether it serves a useful purpose or otherwise; the people derive an immediate benefit from the expenditure. Now with regard to the canal itself, I took strong objection to it when the scheme was first proposed. A great deal was said with regard to the water supply. I thought then, and I think now, that it is of very little importance, because the canal will be just as useful dry as it will be wet. There is nothing to sail up or down it, so it is no concern of this parliament whether there is ever a drop of water to supply the canal or not. Now we are told there are institutions in North York that will benefit by this canal. I am somewhat familiar with the situation, and with some of the people there, and I know of no institution that will benefit to any appreciable extent, with the exception of one or two particular pets of this government. I believe there was another enterprise which was carried on a few years ago down on the Holland Flats, catching frogs. But I believe that enterprise has lapsed somewhat of late, and if this canal is constructed it will perhaps revive it. I do not know of any other good purpose that will be served by building the canal. Perhaps down in lower stretches towards Lake Simcoe, it may be partitioned off and the farmers along there may utilize it for raising ducks or geese. Perhaps the upper stretches might be used for sheep pens, or pig pens, where the land is a little dryer. But I do not know of anything else that can be done with it.

Now, Sir, I take exception to the amount of money that is being sunk in an enterprise of this kind. I want to remind the minister, and I want to remind this committee, that it will not be only the original amount of money we put into it that this country will have to furnish, but there will be large sums required annually for the upkeep of this useless enterprise. The gates on the locks will rust on their hinges, and will have to be renewed from time to time. A large number of employees will have to be paid annually. We are loading upon the country, not only the original sum, but an additional large sum yearly to keep up the appearance. In the riding I represent we have a good deal of navigation, and we have vainly appealed for the last two or three years to this government for some works that are badly needed there. Last year a small estimate was put through for a little wharf, I think somewhere about $4,000, but this year that is cut out altogether; on account of hard times the government can't afford to go on with it. I want to say here, realizing what I am saying, that in the town of Gravenhurst, where this little grant was made for a wharf, there will be as much navigation in one year as there will be on this Holland river enterprise for all time to come. Now I want to put this thought particularly before the minister, that if this $200,000 or thereabouts that he proposes to put into that canal next summer, were spread over those northern waters where they need accommodation very badly, and where there is a number of steamers to land, he would be doing a great deal of good to that northern country, opening up and developing it. But down there where there is nothing and never can be anything for a steamboat to do, this money will be wasted. I feel strongly on this matter, and I would ask the minister carefully to consider it. I want to say that when this vote was first introduced it was distinctly destined for this canal, and was not coupled up with any Trent Valley matter whatever. I do not know of any reason why the minister should mix up the Holland River canal with the Trent Valley canal, unless it is to put us in the position that if we object to the one we should have to object to the other. I do not object to going on with the Trent Valley canal. I am not much enamoured with the enterprise, but it has been accepted by both sides of the House and it was commenced a great many years ago when the prospects were more promising than they are to-day. In any event, both sides of the House are committed to the Trent Valley project, and we must carry it through. But we are not committed to this Holland river enterprise, at least on the opposition side of the House. We have objected to it from the first, and I think the minister ought to deal with the two enterprises separately. Now the Minister of Justice thinks there is only one opinion in North York with regard to the enterprise. I heartily concur with him. I have talked with people in North York, and I have yet to find a single individual, man, woman or child, who thinks this enterprise will be of any use in North York outside the temporary expenditure of money in its construction. I think the minister would fail to find a single ratepayer in North York who would say, over his own signature, that this work will be of any benefit to the people after it is built. I will not say any more on the question at present. This matter will come up again, as the minister is going to make an announcement upon it, and I reserve any further remarks until then.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Minister of Justice has not given the history of this transaction exactly as it occurred. He was good enough to introduce my name, and that is one reason why I wish to say a word or two. I happened to be here at the time when this project was first broached in the House. Let me inform the committee that it originated in a meeting at Newmarket, at which Sir Wm. Mulock was present as the representative of that riding, the riding of North York, and that Sir Wm. Mulock was then an active promoter of the scheme. That all originated before the meeting of that deputation to which the hon. gentleman referred to-night. The enterprise, so far as I can ascertain by the records, was virtually originated by Sir Wm. Mulock. Sir Wm. Mulock was the father of the scheme, and made it a stepping stone in the election which was then pending. I made that charge on the 17th of February, and it was not denied. I referred to it as an election scheme. Sir Wm. Mulock had brought forward this scheme of deepening the creek between Newmarket and the Holland river, and expending a large sum of money. I referred to an article which appeared in the 'Witness,' and I said:

Let me read a word or two from the Bradford 'Witness,' which is a paper not altogether published in the interest of my hon. friend, but published in the riding he formerly represented.

The article is dated February 9 and it is headed 'The Trent Valley canal extension':

Our readers will remember that a public meeting was held in Newmarket last September to consider the advisability of steps being taken to deepen the east branch of the Holland river via Holland Landing, Newmarket and Aurora and the west branch to Schomberg, in order to make these waters available for commercial purposes in connection with the Trent Valley canal system which will shortly be continued to Lake Simcoe. Sir Wm. Mulock, the Hon. E. J. Davis, Mayor Kane, of Newmarket——

Another good supporter of my hon. friend. —Mayor Daville, of Aurora, spoke in favour of the scheme——

'Scheme' is the very word.

—and a large committee was appointed to promote this great undertaking.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Was the Postmaster General (Sir Wm. Mulock) present at that meeting?

Mr. LENNOX. He was the chief spokesman in favour of this scheme to promote the general interest and prosperity of Canada through his own riding and through his own supporters. The hon. gentleman (Sir Wm. Mulock) seems to have been the chief person on that occasion, as we would naturally expect him to be.

Since that meeting government engineers have made careful survey of the territory——

Mark you, my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice tells us to-night that this scheme originated in a deputation coming down and waiting upon Sir William Mulock in the city of Ottawa, but I will point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that Sir William Mulock on this occasion, invites me to attend with the deputation.

It would need to be careful if it favours the putting through of this canal.

The Minister of Justice seemed to think that I used to be in favour of this scheme. I thank God I never was.

—and, although no official report has yet been made, it is pretty well understood that the engineers will report favourably upon the matter.

They have their instructions, in other words, I need not take up much time over the intervening part. I appreciate that it might be said that this newspaper item may not be correct. Surely it cannot be that the engineers were actually on the ground surveying it before the deputation came down at all. Let us see as to that. Turning over a few pages I find this:

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman is very funny.

That was referring to Sir William Mulock.

He tries to get away from the point. Does the hon. gentleman deny, as is stated in the paper, that he was present at the meeting and spoke in favour of the scheme? I read it, not only in the paper but I read it in other papers, amongst them the Newmarket 'Era,' I think.

The Newmarket 'Era' was a liberal paper.

While I was travelling on the train I met a gentleman who had just come from the meeting. I know it was discussed broadcast throughout the last general election, and I am calling attention to it here because I think it does not become a cabinet minister, on the eve of an election, to make promises to the electors which may influence their votes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. An abstract declaration of principle may be a very good thing. I attended the meeting in question, I addressed myself to the meeting as other citizens did, and I was saying what I am saying now, that the district would be advantaged by the construction of such a work, but the question of its cost and the question of its feasibility were matters entirely in the future, and the determination of the work must depend upon these considerations. That is my view to-day. I hope the result of the inquiry will show that the work is feasible, and that the prices come within a reasonable figure or as reasonable as will commend itself to support at the hands of this House.

Mr. LENNOX. Is it a fact that engineers or surveyors were put on?

Sir William Mulock does not evidently want to answer that question because he says:

When we come to discuss that question, the way it happened to come up at that time will be made clear.

I assert here and now that the way that the matter happened to come up was that Kane Bros., the most influential men in the riding of Sir William Mulock, wanted it to promote their own industry, and that they were the originators of this scheme. Continuing Sir Wm. Mulock said:

It grew out of the decision of the Railway Commission seriously affecting a great enterprise in our district. The people were seriously intending to move away because of the railway freight rates. The matter came up in that way, and the people of our district were extremely uneasy lest this large enterprise should move away on account of the rates of freight charged by the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the commodities used and exported by that enterprise.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman has not answered me, but probably he will tell me now?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. About the engineers?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. The engineers have been in the field ever since, and I think they are in the field yet.

Mr. LENNOX I do not want to prolong this matter; if the hon. gentleman will tell me now, that is an end of it—what large enterprise was it that was about to leave?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Messrs. Kane & Sons.

Mr. LENNOX. Of Newmarket?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. Of Newmarket.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, the gentleman who is named in this paper as the promoter of this scheme.

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. He is one of the firm.

Mr. LENNOX. By what authority were these engineers sent into the field?

Sir WILLIAM MULOCK. By the authority of the Minister of Railways.

So we have it established as clear as anything can be established that this transaction originated in the way that it is here described. Then we go on and discuss the matter and Sir William Mulock tells me that a deputation is coming down within three or four days from the riding of North York; he understands that some of my own constituents will be here with that deputation and he invites me to attend it. I did go and listen as he had invited me. He said that I would be convinced, but I was not convinced, and I am not convinced yet. I think I will not be convinced as the time goes on because it has demonstrated more and more the utter uselessness and absurdity of the scheme. The Minister of Justice thought it was worth while to refer to the personnel of that deputation. I cannot say that I am surprised at the Minister of Justice. I have been here since 1905 when he came in and I am not a bit surprised that he thought it magnificent argument to put up, that T. Herbert Lennox, representative of the riding, at the request of people who wanted money expended in the riding, came down as one of the deputation. Where have we drifted since then? What was the amount that was said to be the total expenditure for the scheme? I understood from some members of the deputation that it was then said that it would cost $350,000. What is it to cost now? I do not know whether it was for the purpose of influencing votes during the last election, but it was reported during the election that there was going to be $3,500,000 expended upon the work. The Minister of Justice has thought fit to refer to the fact that I have advocated the digging of a trench from the Holland river proper up to the railway station at Bradford. In that he is entirely mistaken. My constituents at Bradford have felt that inasmuch as the government carried away the wharf which they should have built in South Simcoe and put it across on the other side of the river so that they have to cross the river in order to get to the wharf which should serve them on Holland river, they were entitled to have a cutting made up to the railway station and they sent in a petition in regard to the matter. As representative of that riding I had the honour to present that petition, as I shall be happy to accede to any proper request which my constituents make to me. The hon. gentlemen will not find that I have advocated the scheme further than to represent the wishes of my constituents in that regard. But, there is a thousand miles of difference between that scheme of cutting a trench up to the railway station, if it can be done for a moderate expenditure, and this mad-cap scheme of spending one million dollars or two million dollars for a cutting which has already demonstrated itself as an absolutely indefensible scheme. Last summer in going through that county two or three times a week in the dry season—and I want to say that it was a particularly dry season last year and could not be taken as a fair average—but in going through that district last year I never could detect that any water was escaping beyond the pond or dam in the village of Newmarket. In other words, all the water of that stream appeared to be evaporating from the surface of the pond, and scores of people passing up and down noticed the same fact. This is an absolutely indefensible expenditure of public money and notwithstanding the fact that so much money has been squandered already on it I believe it would be wise at this point to stop.

Mr. GRAHAM. The request of my hon. friend to allow the item to stand until the return is brought down is a fair one and I am ready to accept it.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. Will the minister divide the appropriation so that we will know the expenditure on the different parts of the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will tell my hon. friend approximately what will be expended on each.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. It is not what the minister purposes doing but what he will do when he gets the item through that we would like to know.

Mr. GRAHAM. I hope my hon. friend does not mean that insinuation.

Mr. SAMUEL SHARPE. I did not intend to reflect on the minister and I do not want factious opposition to the item, but we surely should have that information.

Mr. GRAHAM. I told my hon. friend the other night how the expenditure was to be divided, but I will make it more explicit when the vote comes up again. I also gave the reasons why the two were considered the one scheme.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. If there are any engineers' reports in connection with this scheme I would ask the minister to bring them down. I would also ask him to bring down any information in possession of the department with regard to the levels, the tonnage which originates in that section, the rainfall of the area drained by this enormous river and so on.

Mr. GRAHAM. I placed that information on the table some time ago.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. We would also like to know the depth of these artesian wells.

Mr. LENNOX. And how much the pump cost.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. It is important to know if any engineer of standing has made a report as to the utility or the feasibility of this canal. We have heard that engineers were going to report but we have never got the concrete fact. If the minister has any written reports he should bring them down.

Mr. GRAHAM. I have them here to-night but we are going on to consider another item.

Mr. HUGHES. Has the minister taken into consideration the question of lighting these waterways. On the Scugog river from Sturgeon Lake to Lindsay there is a great deal of traffic and the river is not always properly lighted. A good part of it could be lighted by electricity but I am informed that possibly it could be lighted more cheaply by acetylene gas.

Mr. GRAHAM. When the work on the canal is completed the question of the proper method of lighting it will have to be considered.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the minister bring down the report of the deputy minister upon which the Minister of Justice this evening justified the proceedings? I would also like to have a difference made between the feasibility of the mechanical construction and the utility of the work, as well as the commercial data upon which the department concluded it was wise to spend this money.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know if we have all that information. I have the report made by Mr. Walsh, a prominent engineer in 1906, and I have a later report by Mr. Grant one of the best men in Canada. I have no written report from my deputy or chief engineer. The statement of the deputy was based on what the engineers have reported to him.

Mr. FOSTER. It would have very great weight with this House if the substance of the information which was communicated to the Minister of Justice were communicated to us who are to criticise and to vote for this expenditure. The Minister of Justice to-night argued on what he said was the information given to him by the engineer whom he lauded so highly, and I am not saying anything against the laudation.

Mr. GRAHAM. The information made to the Minister of Justice was practically the contents of these reports of engineers in whose judgment the chief engineer has confidence.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the Minister of Justice as usual was wrong.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am explaining what occurred. I have both these reports here to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. It was not, then, the report of the deputy minister, but the report of these engineers. The Minister of Justice represented that it was the report of the deputy minister.

Mr. GRAHAM. The deputy minister based what he said on the reports of these two men. The report of Mr. Wash was what this House acted on, I suppose. He endorsed the scheme before Mr. Butler was chief engineer.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. The hon. minister will note the unfairness of the argument of the Minister of Justice, who informed the House that he was willing to stand by the report of one of the ablest engineers in the country, that is, the deputy, Mr. Butler, and that that gentleman had reported to him that everything connected with this canal was satisfactory, virtually leaving the inference that the chief engineer had made the report on his own knowledge after having looked over the work. I think it is up to the Minister of Justice to square himself with the House after trying to shoulder any responsibility for this canal and its non-success on an engineer of such standing as the deputy minister. If I were an engineer, I would not tolerate it for one minute unless I had made the report.

Welland canal—electric lighting and power plant, $8,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. What does it cost to operate this electric plant?

Mr. GRAHAM. This work is not quite completed yet, and it is difficult to tell just what the cost is. All the locks except No. 27 are now operated by electricity.

Mr. J. D. REID. What I want to see is how the cost compares with the cost on the Cornwall canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will try to get that for my hon. friend. I think it is very much less.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this $8,000 finish the work?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

To widen canal near Welland, $40,000.

Mr. FOSTER. What is being done there?

Mr. GRAHAM. The work that was undertaken was quite a large work. It was to enlarge and widen the canal—really to make a basin. There has been expended on it up to date about $47,000. The total estimated cost is $87,000.

Port Colborne improvements, $65,000.

Mr. FOSTER. We would like to have an explanation of where we are going to.

Mr. GRAHAM. This work has been under way since 1900. A number of tenders were received, and the contract was made with Messrs. Hogan & McDonald. We are trying to make a clear navigation of 20 feet depth.

Mr. FOSTER. What have we now at Port Colborne?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have 20 feet of navigation right up to the piers.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the elevator completed?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, and we put 350,000 bushels through it last season as a test, and it worked very satisfactorily.

Mr. LENNOX. During the election?

Mr. GRAHAM. No. We wanted to try it before the season of navigation closed. The vessel was the 'Midland Prince.'

Mr. HUGHES. What is the capacity of the elevator?

Mr. GRAHAM. The storage capacity now is 800,000 bushels. It has foundations for 2,000,000 bushels.

Mr. J. D. REID. The 'Midland Prince' came down two or three weeks before the election. I would like to know why there was not more grain put through that elevator last fall. As I understand, it was built in order that the freight rates from Fort William and Port Arthur to Montreal might be reduced. Do the minister and his department believe that it will be operated from this out, and if so to what extent, and will it result in cheapening freight rates? I opposed the building of the elevator at Port Colborne; I have always believed that the better plan would be to deepen the Welland canal so as to permit vessels to come through to Kingston or Prescott. That would materially cheapen freight rates from Fort William to Montreal. What does the minister expect to happen in the coming year on account of the elevator being ready?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a large order. I do not know just what is going to happen, I hope the elevator will be busy. It has been suggested, and this is perhaps worth considering, that we ought not to be content with waiting to see what it will do but should engage some person on commission or otherwise, to induce shipments via that elevator and see if we cannot have a large volume of grain pass through it this year. The elevator is ready for business and experts say it is one of the best equipped on the continent for its size and capable of doing its work. I have been considering for some time whether it would be better just to say to the public: The elevator is there, go on and use it, or to send some person representing that elevator perhaps to the board of trade at Winnipeg to induce them to ship grain by that route and give it a full test. I would be glad of an expression of opinion on this point.

Mr. HUGHES. Does not the minister think that shippers will soon realize if the elevator is any use ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a difference of opinion on that. Some say the elevator will not be used unless we send some one to induce shippers to send grain through it.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the country be responsible for the contract ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Oh no, if we sent a man west we might give him a certain commission for every bushel of grain he sent that way.

Mr. HUGHES. Why should you rival other routes ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We built the elevator to be of some use and want to impress the public with its usefulness. I think if the public would use it one year they might be convinced of its usefulness. I agree that we could, with a larger Welland canal, rival the transportation system of any country for grain to the sea-board.

Mr. HUGHES. We were told it was something like Castoria, that the children cried for it.

Mr. LALOR. The building of the elevator at Port Colborne seems to me to be a useful piece of work. Large boats that are unable to pass through the canal with a full cargo can unload part of their cargo at Port Colborne and so pass on to Montreal, but it would seem to me that to make the system practicable there should also be an elevator at Port Dalhousie so that the boats could take on their full cargoes there. The opinion in Port Colborne of men who are well qualified to speak is that the elevator is badly located, and that good judgment was not used in its erection. Many items under the Welland canal are very familiar to me, because during the last general election in that county our good friend the member for that county (Mr. German) issued a circular letter to his constituents in which he took credit for all the expenditures included here upon the Welland canal in addition to post offices and armouries in Welland town and Niagara Falls. I notice one item here widening the canal near Welland, $40,000. In the circular letter it was stated that one of the reasons why Mr. German should be returned was that he had succeeded in getting the government to spend $40,000 in widening the canal at this particular point for the use of a steel plant located there. The expenditures may be wise, I am not criticising them, but I think the elevator scheme is a good one if it is properly carried out, although the opinion there is that the elevator is not well located.

Mr. J. D. REID. Although that elevator was built with the expectation that it would really complete the system between Fort William and Montreal, and that vessels would then be able to carry the grain between these two cities at a minimum cost, still I do not believe it would have that effect. I still believe that the whole solution of the question of the transportation of grain between Fort William and Montreal is to deepen the Welland canal. But we have the elevator now at Port Colborne and it will take years to deepen the Welland canal. I think every thing should be done in order that the grain from the Northwest provinces should go through via Montreal, and in addition to that any grain that we can bring from the western states via the St. Lawrence route. If the government collects charges at the elevator of any large amount it will certainly prevent grain going through that elevator and the result will be that the elevator will stand there doing nothing. I would suggest that the elevator be made practically a part of the Welland canal system and that grain should be put through that elevator at cost price. In other words, if a vessel comes there with a cargo of grain the actual cost of unloading the grain and putting it into other vessels for transportation to Montreal is all that should be charged. I could name a number of vessel owners in Canada, one of them the St. Lawrence and Chicago Forwarding Company of Toronto, which has several large vessels carrying between 200,000 and 300,000 bushels. These large vessels can go to Port Colborne and the company have several other vessels which could carry the grain from Port Colborne to Montreal. If they could put it through the Port Colborne elevator at the cost price of elevating and putting it back into their own vessels, I think it would encourage the carriage of grain from Fort William to Montreal. I would suggest that the elevator be made practically a part of the Welland canal system and that you should say to the St. Lawrence and Chicago Forwarding Company, or to the Montreal Transportation Company: If you will bring the vessels to Port Colborne and load into the smaller vessels there for transport to Montreal, we will put the grain through the elevator for just what it costs us to do the work. In this way, you will encourage bringing the grain down the St. Lawrence, instead of allowing it to go by Buffalo. These large vessels have to go to Buffalo, unless they come to Midland and send the grain by rail; if it goes by water it must go by Buffalo. I do not say finally that this would be advisable, but, I believe that it would be a good policy to pursue, to make the proposition to these transportation companies of which I have spoken.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I heartily endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). From my knowledge of this business, I have no hesitation in saying that the minister will not be disappointed so far as the elevator is concerned, for there is sufficient work of this character coming to fill all the available channels. Anybody conversant with the traffic on the great lakes knows that the additional vessel room required every year, even for mooring, for loading and unloading, amounts to virtually three-quarters of a mile. The tonnage is growing at a rate quite unknown to those who are not familiar with this business. When it comes to the last week in the fall, every port on Georgian bay and Lake Huron is congested and vessels have to be moored three and four deep and await unloading. I am heartily in accord with any expenditure that will give to this tonnage, which is growing and bound to grow like a snowball in larger percentage each year, the accommodation that it requires. I would like the minister to give me information, the next time his estimates are before us, as to the policy of the government in expenditure on these harbours and canals. Whether the expenditure is to be confined to the harbours named by the commission appointed some years ago by the government. That commission narrowed down the expenditures at the east end of the great lakes to three harbours—Parry Sound, Midland and Port Colborne. To my mind, these gentlemen, who were not experts on transportation on the great lakes, did a great injustice to other harbours, altogether apart from the fact that if the government built piers and spent all the money they could on all the harbours, they could not keep pace with the growth of that traffic. I think that any one who takes a thoughtful interest in the welfare of the west will say that every one of these expenditures made for the accommodation of this traffic will take care of itself and will yield benefit to the country at large. Consider, for instance, the enormous terminals being built at Fort William. Up to a few years ago, you had only the Canadian Pacific Railway there. Within the last four or five years great terminals have been arranged by the Canadian Northern. In two or three years you will have the terminals of the Grand Trunk Pacific—three transcontinental lines bearing the wheat down to Port Arthur and Fort William. About $5,000,000 has been spent on harbour facilities to put the grain into the vessels. But how are you taking care of the lower end of the spout? That is a matter the government will have to consider. The engineer of the department has given this subject a great deal of thought, and the reports of the department call attention to the question involved. I would urge the minister to consider the advisability of putting in the supplementary estimates items necessary for other points. The estimates this year had been cut down to Parry Sound, Midland and Port Colborne. Parry Sound has virtually ceased, in a sense, to be a great centre for a railway. It is true it has a fine harbour. But the Grand Trunk owns Parry Sound, and it owns Midland also, and I understand that their policy is to send the traffic by way of Midland. Let some of the other places have a chance to develop as terminals as well as these places. The government have done a great deal, but not more than this enormous trade demands. The traffic of the northwest and the United States is tending our way. Our port of Montreal to-day is a greater port for grain shipments than New York. That is something to be proud of. We must make every effort to perfect every link in this chain of communication. Let us deal with things as they exist. Let us not go into airy schemes and theories which may work out eight or ten years from now, through the building of a railway to Hudson bay or something of that kind, but let us take this up as a practical, existing business question and deal with it in that spirit. I had not intended to make these remarks, but I have every sympathy with the minister and the department, and I hope that when we next consider these estimates I shall be given the information which I have asked for.

Mr. J. D. REID. Has the minister ever asked the Dominion Marine Association what they would suggest as to the working of this elevator? It seems to me that if he were to ask them how grain could be brought to this elevator and so to the St. Lawrence route, they would be able to make some suggestions that would be of value.

Mr. GRAHAM. The suggestion of my hon. friend I will take up in a more thorough way, to see what these companies suggest.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is railway connection provided with this elevator at Port Colborne?

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend will look at the next item to be taken up, he will see that I am asking $21,000 to provide connection with the Grand Trunk sidings.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. Is it intended to keep that switch so that any railway may use it? We are building it ourselves, and will let any railroad use it that wants to.

Mr. G. V. WHITE. Has the minister estimated the cost of deepening the Welland canal system, and also of deepening the whole St. Lawrence system?

Mr. GRAHAM. In the next item I am asking for a small amount to go on and complete the surveys commenced last year, so that we could make an estimate of what the new canal will cost.

Surveys, $10,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have been for some little time engaged in surveying the route, an alternative route, and trying to get what the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) asks for, an estimate of what it would cost to deepen the Welland canal or build a new one.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I would ask the minister to consider that in the Welland canal he will have to cut 12 to 14 miles of living rock, and when vou come to consider the great cost of moving that rock, which runs up to about $2.50 per cubic yard at the very least, as compared with moving clay at 8 cents, he should well consider the alternative route, in view of the modern engineering science.

Sault Ste. Marie canal—construction, $50,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The value of the work done there up to November 30 was $166,347. The tender was given to C. S. Boone, of Toronto, the lowest tenderer, for deepening and widening the channel at the upper end. It is under construction now. This is all above the locks.

Mr. BOYCE. How much do you expect it will take to carry it through?

Mr. GRAHAM. The tender is $253,657, probably it will take more money than that.

Mr. BOYCE. What I would like to see done there is a little straightening of the channel between the government dock and the entrance to the canal. I think the minister has that well under consideration.

Mr. GRAHAM. That will have to be done.

Mr. BOYCE. I know he has been giving a great deal of consideration to us up there, which we very much appreciate indeed, and I ask that he will generously continue the good work.

Sault Ste. Marie canal—rebuilding north entrance pier, including dredging, $68,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. That has to be dredged out and rebuilt. We propose to advertise for tenders and let the work to the lowest tenderer. That is the north entrance pier, which is simply rotting away. I was up there on some other business last fall, and I took a look at it. It really has to be done for the safety of navigation. I think we cannot make any mistake in not letting these things go too long where navigation is concerned.

Mr. BOYCE. How much dredging is there to be done?

Mr. GRAHAM. We have not got the detailed estimate in time to give it to the House. I am asking for $68,000 to start the work. We will make a concrete pier, a permanent work.

Quebec canals—remarking boundaries, surveys. &c., to complete, $5,500.

Mr. J. D. REID. Didn't I see something a short time ago in the papers where some deputation from New York wanted to use these canals right through?

Mr. GRAHAM. Really what they wanted was for us to rebuild the Chambly canal up to the Richelieu river, to give them connection between the port of Montreal and the state of New York. But that has not yet been agreed to.

Lachine canal—wall north side of Basin No. 2, $70,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Who has the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM. Quinlan & Robertson. This work can only be carried out in the spring time when the canal is unwatered. The date of the contract is April 20, 1908, and the work is required to be completed next October. There were two tenders, those of Quinlan & Robertson and Mr. Wallberg.

Mr. REID. What happened that Wallberg did not get it?

Mr. GRAHAM. He only gets it when he is the lowest tenderer and this time he was not. The contract price is $114,019, and the total estimated cost is $184,000. This is for a concrete wall on the north side of Basin No. 2.

Beauharnois canal—

Building stone protection for clay dyke..	$ 1,500
Macadamizing road, Hungry bay dyke..	11,000
Extending protection wall at Hungry bay..	15,000

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that the Beauharnois canal was leased to some parties for a water-power and that the government have practically nothing more to do with it.

Mr. GRAHAM. These three votes are practically in connection with the protection of land that would otherwise be drowned. This is a dyke that has been there for years. It is to build a stone protection and to macadamize the road. This work was found to be necessary and last year we had to do some temporary work to keep the land from being flooded by water.

Mr. J. D. REID. Are the government keeping on the lockmen and maintaining the canal?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is leased and we do not pay any of these expenses.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How much do you get out of it?

Mr. GRAHAM, $12,000 a year.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. How much do you get out of the Cataract Power company?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will give the exact figures to-morrow. I do not like to give them from memory.

Mr. REID. I see in the Auditor General's Report at page W—83 a payment of $7,032.31 for staff last year.

Mr. GRAHAM. That was before the lease was executed. We do not pay anything now.

Mr. J. D. REID. Will the minister tell me whether all of the lockmasters have been dismissed?

Mr. GRAHAM. The lessee has taken them all over; we do not pay for them.

Mr. PAPINEAU. Since the canal was leased the lessees are paying all of the men except the overseer. This dyke which is at the head of the Beauharnois canal was built in 1852. After the canal was completed the engineers discovered that they had made a mistake in calculating the level and that instead of getting 9 feet of water they had only five or six feet. They proposed the construction of the dyke between Grand Island and the shore of the St. Lawrence at the entrance to the Beauharnois canal. This is the dyke that the minister is now asking authority to repair in order to keep the water at its proper level.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then this dyke is being built for the benefit of those who have leased the canal?

Mr. PAPINEAU. It was bought in 1852, and it has been repaired ever since to keep the water at the proper level.

Mr. J. D. REID. Exactly, but the canal was leased in the condition it was at that time. The government leased it to a company to be used for water-power only. Now they find that they have only five or six feet of water and they want to have this dyke repaired. They ask you to spend this money in order that you may give them nine or ten feet of water.

Mr. GRAHAM. This has nothing more to do with lessees of the Beauharnois canal than it has to do with Timbuctoo. The same lake supplies our Soulanges canal and we must have the same level of water for it. This matter was threshed out in the House last year. There were a great many petitions received asking that the property of private individuals should be protected. If we do not repair this dyke we may spend twice as much to compensate people for land which may be drowned or flooded.

Mr. GRAHAM.

Mr. LANCASTER. Why do not the lessees do that?

Mr. GRAHAM. This was built fifty years ago.

Mr. LANCASTER. They have leased the property and why should they not keep it in repair? It is they who get the benefit.

Mr. GRAHAM. This dyke was built under a judgment of the court. We examined this question very closely and there is no question about the necessity of the work unless we are prepared to accept the responsibility for drowning out very many acres of land.

Mr. LANCASTER. It is right that some one should repair it, but why should the government lease this property to a lessee and then repair it at its own expense? Why should not the lessee keep it in order?

Mr. GRAHAM. This has nothing to do with the Beauharnois canal lease at all.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. gentleman that sits behind the Minister of Justice said that it was to increase the level.

Mr. PAPINEAU. The hon. gentleman (Mr. J. D. Reid) misunderstood me. This dyke was built when the canal was opened but it was not until they had raised the level of the river that these lands were flooded. The government was sued by the Hon. Edward Ellis and condemned to pay £16,000. They built that dyke to prevent the flooding of the farms in a part of Beauharnois and Huntingdon.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is it part of the Beauharnois canal system?

Mr. PAPINEAU. It begins two miles above the end of the Beauharnois canal.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is outside of the canal system?

Mr. PAPINEAU. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not the way we understood it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Last year you spent $13,019.76 on the Beauharnois canal; was this expenditure prior to the execution of the lease?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then there will be no more repairs?

Mr. GRAHAM. We do not pay any repairs or any staff except the overseers who look after the locks and the repair of the lock.

Mr. J. D. REID. This item will not appear again?

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Some resolutions reported.

QUESTIONS.

PAYMENTS TO INSIDE CIVIL SERVICE, OTTAWA.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What was the total payment in 1896 to the permanent Civil Service employees of the inside service at Ottawa, and of those employees not in the then Inside Civil Service, who were paid out of lump votes and Civil Government Contingencies, respectively, in the branches and departments added to the Inside Civil Service by the Act of 1908, and what is the sum estimated for the similar divisions for the year 1909-10?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We are collecting the information, it is not yet ready. I would ask that the motion stand.

LEVEL CROSSINGS ON GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

1. Referring to press reports accrediting Mr. Hayes of the Grand Trunk Railway as saying that there are 50,000 level crossings on the Grand Trunk Railway system in Canada, and to the return brought down to the House on the 16th instant gave 14,999 as the total number of level crossings in Canada on the 30th June last, (a) are the figures of the return correct, (b) what is the number of level crossings on the Grand Trunk Railway system in Canada, (c) how many of these are said to be protected, (d) in what ways are they protected, and how many of each class?

2. Of how many of these crossings (a) protected, (b) unprotected, have the government or Railway Board plans, drawings or photographs?

3. Of Grand Trunk unprotected crossings, (a) how many according to the company's statements to the board, require protection, (b) how many have the board claimed to require protection or (c) has the question been taken up at all between the board and the company?

4. About what amount is said to be the cost of installing a set or pair of gates at a railway crossing, say in Ontario or Quebec, (a) in a city, town or village, (b) on a country highway or elsewhere, and (c) what is the ordinary average annual cost of up-keep, exclusive of attendance?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. I am not prepared to say how many crossings the Grand Trunk Railway Company have in Canada, but I understood Mr. Hays to make the statement that there are about 3,000. It seems to me that it would be comparatively correct The Board of Railway Commissioners have not the plans of the Grand Trunk Railway system. These plans were filed many years ago, probably with the government, and long before the board was in existence. The only plans that the board has are locations made by railways since 1904. Plans previous to that date are with the Department of Railways and Canals.

2. Submitted herewith is a list of the plans of the larger cities and the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies are supplying the smaller ones at the present time showing what crossings are protected and unprotected in the cities.

3. No statement has been furnished by the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the board as to what crossings they think require protection, and while a large number of orders have been made ordering protection, it does not appear that the question of general protection has ever been taken up by the board with the company.

4. The average cost of installing a gate is about $600. That would be approximately $700 in a city where the street is wider and a tower is used and $500 on a crossing in the country. With a watchman, fuel for his equipment, oil for his lights, shovels, etc., the average up-keep for a gate operated in day time only would be $600 per year. If operated day and night $1,200. This would cover all contingencies for ordinary repairs to the gate.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE—BOOK-KEEPING.

Mr. LENNOX asked:

What is the expense occasioned by change of methods in the Department of Marine and Fisheries as the result of Mr. Falconer's work?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). The initial expense of buying books to instal the Falconer system in the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the various agencies was $2,916. A part of this expense would have had to be incurred for ordinary renewals or for books required by the extension of the agencies. The annual expense since that time has not shown any increase.

IMMIGRANTS COMING INDIRECTLY

Mr. LENNOX asked:

How many immigrants, British subjects, who have come to Canada otherwise than by continuous journey from the country of which they are natives or citizens and upon through tickets purchased in that country, have landed in Canada and settled here since 27th of May, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). 1,556.

GOVERNMENT TELEGRAPH STATION SUPPLIES.

Mr. BURRELL asked:

1. Who are the contractors for the carrying of the supplies of the government telegraph stations, north of Quesnel?
2. What are the terms of such contract, and on what date was it let?
3. Were tenders for this work advertised for in the usual way?
4. Did the contractors purchase from the government a pack train for this work? If so, what was the precise nature of such pack train and equipment, and what was the price paid?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1, 2, 3 and 4. In the course of and up to the time of completion of the construction of the Yukon telegraph the freighting of the material and supplies was effected by means of pack trains employed by the department. After the completion of the line in 1901, however, there was no need for the all-year-round maintenance of the pack train; the only requirement then being the once-a-year distribution of provisions, &c., to the several stations along the line, which distribution, it was thought, might very well be dealt with incidentally by the general freighters. Accordingly, in June, 1902, the department's intention was publicly announced at Hazelton through the agent there, and, of three offers received, the one from Messrs. C. Barrett & Co. (viz.: $75 per head purchase price for the pack animals and a flat rate charge of 17½ cents per pound for deliveries between Quesnel, Hazelton and the Ninth Cabin, the next station south of Echo lake) being the best and considered advantageous, was accepted and a contract entered into, and has since been annually renewed.

At the same time (June, 1902), a contract was entered into with Mr. J. F. Galbreath (the only freighter operating in that district) for the section of 287 miles between Echo lake and Nakina, the prices charged ranging from 3 to 25 cents per pound according to distance. This contract, being considered fair and just by both parties to it, has likewise since been annually renewed.

The distribution of supplies along the line beyond Nakina to Dawson is done by the water and rail facilities at the regular rates of transportation without contract.

ORIENTALS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. RALPH SMITH—by Mr. Gutherie—asked:

1. How many Orientals were there in British Columbia on January 1, 1909?
2. How many of these were Chinese, Hindus and Japanese, respectively?
3. How many Orientals have been naturalized as British subjects up to the above date?
4. How many Orientals came into Canada during the month of January, 1909?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Number estimated, approximately, 38,258.
2. Chinese, 17,297; Hindus, 5,131; Japanese, 15,848.
3. Up to June 30, 1908, 7,442 had been naturalized. No later returns.
4. 55.

WEEKLY CIRCULAR TO LIBERAL PRESS.

Mr. J. D. TAYLOR asked:

1. With the respect to the weekly letter to the Liberal press, declared to have been passed through the mails during the recess of parliament free of postage under the frank of

'J. B., Solicitor General,' during what periods has this circular letter been so franked?

2. Is the letter printed by the order or at the expense of any department of the government, or at the Government Printing Bureau? If so, what department?

3. Is the matter of the letter prepared by the order or at the expense of any department of the government? If so, what department?

4. If not prepared or printed by official authority, by whom are the letters presented to be franked?

5. What has been the average number franked each week, as nearly as can be stated in case no record has been kept?

6. Is the franking privilege of the Department of Justice being applied to any other matter of this nature?

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Solicitor General):

1. From April 28, 1907, to November 27, 1907, and from July 21, 1908, to January 19, 1909.

2. No.

3. No.

4. The mailable matter in question was never presented by anybody to be franked. It was delivered by the printer to Mr. Bureau, and by him distributed upon his own responsibility.

5. On the average from seventy-five to one hundred.

6. No.

3. $5,000,000 for one month; Bank of Montreal, Ottawa, March 2, 1909, 4 per cent.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

As the answer to this question will be voluminous I would ask to have it stand as a notice of motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stands as a notice of motion for a return.

MILITARY BUILDINGS AT KINGSTON.

Mr. EDWARDS moved:

For the production of the original tenders received in response to advertisement calling for tenders for the erection of the building at Kingston, R.M.C., intended for barracks accommodation for stables, and also for a return showing the advertisement and the papers in which inserted.

Mr. EDWARDS also moved:

For the production of the original tenders received in response to advertisement calling for tenders for the erection of the Veterinary Hospital at Kingston, and also for a return showing the advertisement and the papers in which inserted.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). There is no objection to these motions provided they be amended according to the arrangement of last session: That these tenders be simply laid on the table and then returned to the department so that they may not become permanently a part of the records of the House.

Motions amended agreed to.

—Mr. Lennox.

For a return showing the various quantities of work of each description or class actually executed by the several contractors and certified as correct by the engineers and paid for up to 31st December, 1908, upon the several sections of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, where the sections have not been completed the various chief engineers' estimate of the quantities of the various class of work remaining to be executed, together with an estimate of the cost of completing the same, based on the contractors' prices attached to each tender.—Mr. Lennox.

For a return showing, with respect to leases granted since 30th June, 1896, for timber on Dominion lands in British Columbia, the names and addresses of lessees, the date, term and acreage of each lease, and the bonus received for the same.—Mr. Taylor (New Westminster.)

For a return showing, with respect to prosecutions since 1896 for violation of postal law, the nature of each offence alleged, the place of residence of person charged, and the result of each trial and penalty imposed.—Mr. Taylor (New Westminster.)

For a return showing the amount on deposit in the Government Savings Department on October, 1, 1889, October 1, 1896, and October 1, 1897 and 1898; how many officials were employed in connection with the management of this fund in the years 1888, 1890, 1898, 1900 and 1908; the cost of management of this fund in the years 1888, 1890, 1898, 1900 and 1908.—Mr. Sharpe (Ontario.)

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS ASKED FOR EASTERN QUEBEC.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska). (Translation.) Moved:

That in the opinion of this House it would be in the interests of agriculture that new experimental stations should be located at certain places removed from those now in existence, where the conditions of climate and soil are different. That especially an experimental station should be established and put in operation in the eastern part of the province of Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the resoluton I have the honour to submit to the consideration of this House calls for the discussion of a question that is of vital interest to the most numerous and important class of this country.

Agriculture is the main source of wealth of Canada. I need no statistics to establish that Canada is above all an agricultural country and that the farming population exceeds considerably the combined population of those engaged in industrial, commercial and professional pursuits. The annual value of our farm products largely exceeds the collective value of the products of all our other industries.

Things being so, agriculture must take the first place in the minds of the economist and the politician of this country.

The future of Canada rests largely upon the place that we shall occupy as far as agriculture is concerned.

In other countries, the farming industry is far from being inactive. Several countries are actually competing on the markets of the world; they are perfecting their methods; they are developing and enlarging their cultivated areas; they are growing products of a better quality and they are making every effort to remove all competitors.

Canada cannot afford to look passively at that struggle. But if we want to see our country take active part in the struggle, if we want our farmers to compete successfully with those of rival countries, they must be aided in their efforts by all the advantages that are to be derived from scientific knowledge, observation and new methods, without which no real progress can be obtained.

If the majority of our farmers whose daily toils give to the soil its productive value were to be shut out of the achievements of modern science, Canadian agriculture would be doomed.

The population as a whole must be in such a position as to take advantage of scientific discoveries, and to attain that end in a practical way, the special conditions of each section of the country and the distinct fitness of the people inhabiting these sections must be taken into consideration.

By the establishment of experimental stations in different parts of Canada, the federal government has taken a step in the right direction.

These experimental stations are designed to bring under the observation of our farmers the results obtained by the most perfected methods of farming in each region, to show them how the yield in wheat, vegetables, &c., can be increased by a judicious choice of manures, of seed grains, by the use of a new agricultural implement.

When a farmer living in a district where the yield in wheat is scarcely five bushels to the acre, can see a nearby field yielding 15 or 20 bushels to the acre, if he can be convinced that extra charges for seed and manure, in obtaining that result, are considerably less than the value of the increased yield, he cannot but return from his visit to the experimental station with the conviction that it is possible for him to do better than what he has been doing in the past.

It has been said that agriculture is a school for common sense, observation and practical notions. If it is so, no better means can be devised to supplement our agricultural wealth, than to materialize the scientific formulas and give the actual proof of possible achievements by the comparison of two fields, one yielding fifteen bushels of wheat, and the other, in the neighbourhood, yielding one-half or two-thirds more, and that without the aid of any theory.

Every country the world over has realized the vital importance of establishing experimental stations in different parts of the farming districts, and of increasing the number of these stations from year to year.

The United States are unquestionably in the lead. Under the terms of the Act of Congress of the 2nd day of March, 1887, the American government pays annually $15,000 for an experimental farm in each state and territory in the union. Special Acts also provide for the establishment of such farms in Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico.

In 1904, they had in the United States, 60 experimental stations, of which 55 were receiving $15,000 annually from the federal treasury. There are also, in the United States, several branch stations.

The total amount these farms could dispose of in 1904 was $1,508,820.25; of that amount the federal treasury contributed $719,999.67. The balance of $788,820.58 consisted in allocations from the different states, in the sale of farm products, in fees for analysing samples, and in different other sources. In the year 1904, 795 people were employed for the administration of these farms and the carrying on of the experiments.

Besides the scientific reasearches of general interest, or special to the district in which they are carried on, these institutions are specially interested in the distribution of seeds imported from Europe, in the study of diseases in vegetables, of objectionable insects, and of the best means to prevent damages of all kind to plants, &c.

They have also a large number of experimental stations in Germany—80. The allocations to German stations are far behind the allocations received by the American stations; those allocations are drawn from the same sources, the greater part being paid by the national government.

In France there are 71 experimental stations with a budget still less than the one alloted to the German stations.

If the total allocations given to experimental stations in these three countries are divided by the number of stations in each country, we have, in round figures, the following result:

United States	$23,000
Germany	8,000
France	3,000

The same policy prevails in all agricultural countries. Here is a statement that I have compiled concerning several agricultural countries:

Country.	Area Sq. m.	Number of Farms.
Germany	208,830	80
France	203,687	71
Austria-Hungary	261,030	61
United States	2,970,000	60
Sweden	172,876	26
Italy	110,659	22
Belgium	11,373	15
Japan	174,000	15
Norway	124,100	12

The purpose of those stations is the same everywhere:

1. The cultivation of agricultural plants, not only those already grown in the district, but also those that could be grown, having regard to the nature of the soil and the climatic conditions:

2. Experiments to bring into cultivation plants fit for fodder, selected from the local vegetation or imported from countries where climate conditions are smilar;

3. Experiments to test the effect of manures in different soils;

4. Experiments in irrigation of plants;

5. Experiments and investigations in stock raising, in view of obtaining the best results for local agriculture;

6. Geological and biological studies of the region as regard the climate, the soil, &c., in order to fulfil the purpose of the station.

Mr. Speaker, the data I have just quoted shows that a great deal is yet to be done in Canada if we want to be in a position to compete successfully with other countries in the field of agricultural progress.

With a territory of 3,600,000 square miles, yet the number of our experimental stations is limited to seven (7).

The province of Quebec, with a land territory of 341,750 square miles, an area larger than that of Germany, of France and all the other countries I have mentioned, with the exception of the United States, has not one single experimental station for all that territory, notwitstanding that no country has a greater variety of climate and soil.

I am quite ready to admit that our experimental farms are of great service to the country but they are not in sufficient number to effectively represent the varied conditions in all the important parts of Canada.

In his report on Experimental Farms for 1896, Mr. Wm. Saunders, the superintendent, says, page 5:

When in October, 1886, the first step was taken towards the organization of experimental farms in Canada by the appointment of the director, the first undertaken was a careful study of the climatic and other conditions which influence agriculture in different parts of the country; and to find out where the several farms which it was proposed to establish could be placed so as to confer the greatest benefit on the farmers, the intention was that the sites chosen for these institutions should be located as to cover the more important climatic conditions prevailing in this country, and at the same time minister to the needs of the existing agricultural population.

In his report for 1895, Mr. Saunders says, page 6:

As the experimental farms are too few and too widely separated to fully represent all the different climates and other conditions affecting agriculture throughout the Dominion, the endeavour has been made to enlist the cooperation of farmers everywhere in the useful work of testing varieties by distributing among them, for this purpose, samples of such products as have proved most valuable at the experimental farms.

So, the officers of the Department of Agriculture expressly admit that the experimentall farms already established cannot be of great service to the agricultural class in certain distant parts of the country where the climate is quite different.

In a pamphlet published by the Department of Agriculture, in 1905, for the Liege Exhibition, and entitled 'Le Canada, son histoire, ses productions et ses ressources naturelles,' and prepared under the direction of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, I see:

Canada is blessed with a marvellous variety of climate. Its most southern part is as near to the equator as Rome, while its most northern part is quite near the Arctic Circle. Between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts lie about 3,000 miles of land and inland waters. Therefore, it is quite evident that Canada rests under as large a zone of atmospheric conditions as the whole of Europe.

At page 85 of the same pamphlet published under the direction of the hon. minister, we can see the following statement relating to the province of Quebec:

The climate differs considerably between the different parts of the province.

I can ask for no better authority to establish that the Ottawa Experimental Farm. which is supposed to provide to the agricultural needs of the two great provinces, Ontario and Quebec, does not represent the climatic conditions of a large portion of the latter province.

When the Experimental Farm was established in Ottawa for the special advantage of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, four other farms were established in order to promote agricultural interests in the other provinces.

One of them at Nappan, Nova Scotia, near the boundary line between that province and New Brunswick, was intended to minister to the wants of the farming community in the three maritime provinces. Another farm was established at Brandon, Manitoba; a third one at Indian Head, Saskatchewan; and the fourth at Agassiz, in British Columbia.

I may be allowed to point out that the two farms at Brandon and Indian Head are only 182 miles apart by rail, and that the reasons given to justify the establishment of two farms so near to each other were the differences in climate and soil.

On page 10 of his report for the year 1888 Mr. Saunders makes the following statement about these two farms:

Some differences of climate, soil and situation are abundantly sufficient to warrant the establishment of the two farms, and with experimental operations in agriculture, horticulture and forestry carried on at each, a vast amount of useful and practical information will soon be gained which will be of great value to farmers in every part of that country and meet in large measure the varying conditions to which they are individually subjected.

Is it not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the same considerations did not lead to the establishment of an experimental farm in the eastern part of the province of Quebec where the weather conditions are so utterly different from those prevailing in Ottawa, especially if it is considered that the farmers of that district must cover from three hundred to six hundred miles to reach the central farm.

In 1906 two new farms were established by this government—both in the province of Alberta. These two stations are 261 miles apart, following the railway line.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, answering a question which I had put to him, stated on February 10 last that a new farm was being established at Rosthern in the province of Saskatchewan.

Now, I sincerely commend the establishment of these new farms in a district which is progressing rapidly and where new settlers will have to be assisted and instructed so as to make a successful start, but I think it my duty, Mr. Speaker, as the representative of a farming constituency in the district of Quebec to ask of the government our share of the funds set apart for the promotion and expansion of agriculture.

The farmers of the St. Lawrence valley have been the first tillers of the soil in this country; they have had a share in the progress of every other district, and to-day the government should put them in a position to successfully compete with their fellow countrymen in the other provinces.

Mr. Speaker, the climate of this eastern section of our province is utterly different from the cliamte of Ottawa and the western part of Quebec. All you have to do to satisfy yourself about it is to refer to the reports of the different meteorological stations.

The climate of our district is affected by the elevation of the ground, its topographical situation, the vicinity of large areas of water and of forests, the inequality of the soil and the direction of the prevailing winds.

The winter season lasts much longer in the Quebec district than in the other regions; our farms are still covered with snow when the lands in Ontario and in the Montreal district are in full growth.

The summer season is much cooler in our district than it is in Ottawa. Let me inquire about it from the numerous citizens of the capital, who, in June, leave their own town in order to get the benefit of the change of temperature they can enjoy on the banks of the St. Lawrence.

On account of the length of the winter season, the period of vegetation is much shorter than in Ottawa. The following operations must be promptly attended to, and our farmers can devote but very litle time to the improvement of their lands which a century or two of farming has exhausted and whose productivity is probably not what it ought to be.

Another disadvantage arising from the protracted winter season, is the necessity of keeping our stock in the stables during seven months or seven months and a half, and consequently of growing large quantities of fodder.

During the winter of 1907, a number of farmers in the county of Kamouraska, had to undersell many heads of farm cattle, on account of the dearth of fodder which they could not buy at a reasonable price. Fodder plants suitable to our district and hardy, should be selected and put to a trial, and thus invaluable advantages would be gained.

Formerly, the farmers in the rural counties east of the city of Quebec, harvested enough wheat for the local consummation and for the export trade. Lately, one of them told me that a bushel of seed often yielded a crop of twenty-five bushels. At present, the ordinary yield does not exceed between five and eight bushels. Result; our farmers cannot compete with the western farmers and they have in a great measure ceased to grow wheat.

The advising of the farmer in the selection of the most profitable and germinative seeds, the practical teaching of a system of rotation, the suggesting of the means of improving land which has been depleted, such is the purpose to be fulfilled by the establishment of an experimental station in the district of Quebec.

How many farmers in the district of Quebec have thus lost large sums of money because they undertook to grow fruit trees that had been sold to them by American agents, or came from the province of Quebec, the varieties supplied by those agents not being hardy enough to withstand our climate. The fruit trees of northern Europe seem best suited to our local conditions, but practical tests only, such as might be carried on at an experimental farm would have sufficient authority to induce our farmers to devote themselves to this important branch of agricultural pursuits.

Mr. Speaker, the district for which I claim an experimental station contains a large number of farmers and covers a wide area.

Such a station would be greatly beneficial to the following counties: Gaspé, Bonaventure, Rimouski, Témiscouata, Kamouraska, L'Islet, Montmagny, Bellechasse, Lévis, Dorchester, Beauce, Lotbinière, Mégantic, Athabaska, Quebec, Portneuf, Champlain, Montmorency, Charlevoix, Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

According to the census of 1901, the counties I have just mentioned, had a population of 534,366 inhabitants. The area occupied was 6,516,428 acres, and the number of settlers upon farms, 66,785.

At that time, the following statistics were collected in the different provinces:

Provinces.	Settlers upon Farms.	Acres Occupied.	Population.
British Columbia..	6,739	1,497,419	178,657
Manitoba.....	32,495	8,843,347	255,211
New Brunswick....	37,583	4,443,400	331,120
Nova Scotia.....	56,033	5,080,901	459,574
Prince Edward Island.....	14,014	1,194,508	103,259
Ontario.....	224,127	21,349,524	2,182,947
Quebec.....	159,599	14,444,175	1,648,898
N. W. Territories..	23,098	6,569,064	158,940
	544,688	63,422,338

Those statistics show the immense importance of the agricultural lands of the Quebec district so far as area and population are concerned.

The establishment of an experimental station in our district has been asked for for many years past. Recently this question has been often discussed before the public and this important improvement is sought for by the exponents of public opinion.

Last year the board of trade of the city of Quebec unanimously passed a resolution asking the government to render that measure of justice to the farming class. It would be useless to quote that resolution which is no doubt in the hands of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. However, I must say that I do not approve that paragraph of the resolution which states that the proposed experimental station should be established in the vicinity of the city of Quebec.

The sums voted for the establishment and maintenance of experimental stations are purely agricultural appropriations to be expended in the interests of the whole farming community and not for the sake of a particular section of the country.

This question is of such a vital importance that it must not be considered as local and the experimental station of the Quebec district should be established at the most central point where the climate and the soil are fair samples of the conditions generally prevailing in the district.

Mr. Speaker, I leave it to the House to pass judgment upon my resolution. I ask for no favour, but I claim justice for our province and our district. I sincerely hope that this debate will not be merely academic and that we shall soon have the occasion of witnessing its happy results.

Mr. MARTIN BURRELL (Yale-Cariboo). Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have not been able to follow the argument of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me in the French language. I have no doubt that there are very cogent reasons why the system of experimental stations should be extended and if such extension is justified by facts in the province of Quebec, the proposal will have my hearty co-operation and support. It is a matter of congratulation that a resolution of this kind is not controversial. There are some who think that nowadays governments are too paternal, that they interfere too much with the liberties of the subject, and undertake to do things for the subject which he would be better able to do for himself. I think, however, that there are very few people at this time of day who will deny that within the sphere of governmental operations there rightly comes assistance of a scientific character to the great basic industry of agriculture, the immense importance of which to this country need hardly be suggested. One of the greatest problems facing all governments and all people at the present time is the conservation of great natural resources. I think I am not far astray when I add that an equally great problem is the adoption of methods in connection with agriculture that will assist the agriculturist is making more in the way of production out of a given area than he does at the present time; because, after all, the day is not very far distant when, in spite of our immense areas of land in in this country, speaking at all events in a general way, it will be of vital importance to us that we should be able to sustain a much larger population on a given area than we do at the present time. This is a problem which has to be faced by other countries, it is true, of less extent than ours and with older civilization. We have to follow in the footsteps of countries like Belgium and Denmark which, with much smaller areas support much larger populations by the practice of intensive farming, a practice which has been very largely assisted by the governments of those countries. We have had various instances of the effect on the economic problems of the world of either a greater or a lesser production in the work of agriculture. I need only instance how a couple of years ago the great shortage in the grain product of the west practically meant a panic in the financial world of Canada, and we know with what palpitations of heart and what intense anxiety the other great industries which are associated with this country's development awaited the announcement of the condition of the coming crop. I do not think I need say any more in showing how agriculture, of all industries, deserves the most sympathetic consideration of a government, especially on the scientific side, because it is a practical impossibility for the average agriculturist or horticulturist to carry on experiments of a scientific kind. To do so would absorb all his time and energy, and he has not sufficient scientific training. There is great justification, therefore for the government taking proper steps along those lines, in the fact that the scientific results achieved by trained men mean increase not merely a hundred fold but a thousand fold the products of our country. I would point to the great benefits that have been derived from the establishment of agricultural experimental stations in the United States. It is hardly necessary for me to show to those who are at all familiar with the subject that the establishment of the great experimental stations at Cornell and in a great many other parts of the United States, with the assistance of the federal government, have been productive of improved methods in agriculture and horticulture that mean untold millions to the economic advantage of that country. The establishment of experimental farms, either agricultural or horticultural, to my mind lies more within the sphere of federal than provincial jurisdiction. It is true, in some respects the provinces may well take hold of this what one might call educational work. No one will deny, for instance, the admirable character of the work done in this country in the establishment of the farmers' institutes in Ontario and similar institutions in other provinces. We have a great many small experimental stations throughout the province of Ontario. I know something of this matter, having had an intimate connection with one of these stations some years ago. While the province can do something, there are obvious limitations to its operations in some cases. I am glad to pay a tribute to the excellent work carried on by the central experimental station in Ottawa, and to express my belief that that work, in the various departments —agricultural, horticultural, chemical, etc., —is yielding results of inestimable value to the whole country. I want now to speak more particular of a sister industry—that of horticultural or fruit growing. That industry is intimately connected with agriculture; but though carried on upon a smaller scale in Canada, it is in some respects of more importance to the country. In the first place being a more intensive form of agriculture, it will sustain on a given area an immensely larger population than ordinary agriculture. I think I am fairly safe in saying that on ten acres of orchard thoroughly cared for we can have a production as far as freight goes, equal to that produced by the same effort from 100 acres of grain. I may add that it leads to an immensely larger employment of labour. Those of us who have had any experience with horticultural work, know that acre for acre we employ probably five or six times the amount of labour that is required in ordinary agricultural operations. Therefore in the way of building up a largely increased population in this country horticulture deserves the particular regard of the governmental authorities.

Then I might also add that this not only leads to the establishment of a lot of important subsidiary industries, but it also proves, probably, one of the best advertisements to the outside world of the climate and fertility of the soil of Canada that we could possibly have. Let me point out the enormous good that has been done by governmental experimental stations both here and in other countries, and I refer especially now to Canada, in the way of the immense saving effected by the giving out to the country of the proper method of fighting various pests which knock so large a percentage off the products of horticulture and agriculture. Let me give you one instance of the case of a most destructive pest: That is, the codlin moth which attacks the apple. It will be a surprise to some hon. gentlemen who do not know to what extent that one insect will shorten the financial proceeds of one branch of horticultural work. I speak from memory, but I think fairly accurately of what took place in the state of Illinois alone, a large apple growing state, where, upon statistics being collected some years ago, it was found that the ravages of this one insect in the state had lost two million dollars to those engaged in the industry of apple growing. If that is a fair sample of what one insect will do, when we extend the illustration to the various fungus diseases we can at once see that there is an enormous economic loss to this country, affecting not only agriculture and horticulture, but every line of industry in the country, because it is a well known fact that to a greater or less degree they depend upon agriculture and horticulture, and the loss runs up to untold millions. Here again, I think, we have a strong argument for governmental help and assistance. I might refer more particularly to my own province because I know there are hon. gentlemen here who are able to speak with reference to the province of Quebec and to point out its special needs. I wish to direct the attention of the House more particularly to the needs of the particular province from which I come, and to try to present to the government and the minister who represents that particular department the reasons why I think the federal government should take a somewhat larger view of the situation with regard to experimental stations. I am not going to deal with the statistics of Canada at large, although I might point out that horticulture now has arrived at the stage where it may be properly described as a national industry. Although in British Columbia we have not an industry which can bear comparison with that of the older provinces such as Quebec, Ontario and Nova Scotia, we are making rapid progress, a fact which will be appreciated by the House when I state that it was actually within my own lifetime that the first fruit tree was planted on British territory west of the Rocky mountains. Because of the difficult character of the country, due to geographical and other reasons, development and settlement went on slowly, and we have had to solve the great problems of clearing land and overcome other obstacles. This development went on slowly, until in the year 1900 we had an acreage in fruit of 7,000 acres. It was about the year 1900 or 1901 that we began to understand the immense possibilities in commercial horticulture that really lie within the limits of our great province owing to its climate and soil. These possibilities have been grasped by a large number of people and the development has been so marked within the last eight years that we have now over 75,000 acres in orchard. We apprehend that we have about one million acres adaptable for the production of high-class fruit of all kinds in what we call southern British Columbia, and, speaking very broadly, a large portion of this area, certainly several thousand acres, is situated in what we call the semi-arid belt. It includes the districts of the Okanagan valley, the Thompson river, the Kettle river, Nicola valley and other portions of the country where the mighty Fraser river receives the waters of the Thompson at Lytton. At the present time the experimental station which the government has now under its charge in British Columbia and which it established some years ago, is of no practical use for all these great interior plateaus, which are not only being developed quickly, but which will present tremendous value to the country within the next ten years. I am not now discussing the point so much as to whether the government, through its officers, was well advised or ill-advised in picking upon that particular place to establish an experimental station. Of course, we know that the experimental work carried on at this station is good for very many reasons, one being for the testing and propagation of varieties, and another the determining of the proper means of fighting various diseases, in which lines we must admit that the station at Agassiz can do fairly good work. But one of the chief things for which the experimental station should be of value to the great fruit-growing district of British Columbia is not only the determination of the proper way of fighting fungus diseases, but also of attacking the great problem of irrigation. The station at Agassiz is situated in a valley which is very humid in character and which is almost at sea level; so nearly, at all events, that we might call it at sea level. It is in a humid country in which there is an excess of rainfall. and the consequence is that the conditions presented by the work of the experimental station at Agassiz have absolutely no applicability to the problems which will be presented for solution in these hundreds of thousands of acres which are going to constitute the great district for commercial horticulture in British Columbia. For instance, a very large proportion of the acreage under orchard is situated at an altitude from 1,000 to 2,500 feet above sea level. I may say once more that as far as the Agassiz station goes it is of little value to us in the interior country. I do not want to go into too many details, but I would like to give a concrete illustration of how this great industry of horticulture has developed in our province. I will take the case of the Okanagan valley. It was only in the year 1872 that the first fruit trees were planted in the Okanagan valley. These trees were brought in by the Mission fathers, who established a mission on the east side of Okanagan lake and who brought the trees in under incredible hardships over the difficult and dangerous mountain trails from the coast. There are a few of these trees alive at the present time. Nothing was done in a large or commercial way until, by the foresight or enterprise of a former Governor General of this country, Lord Aberdeen, a large tract of land was purchased in the centre of that great Okanagan valley and horticulture was gone into on a somewhat large scale. The efforts of Lord Aberdeen in that direction showed what could be done, but up to the year 1893 or 1894 practically nothing was done in the Okanagan valley, in which today we have 18,000 acres in orchard, nearly 5,000 acres of which are peaches, and the whole of which is practically under the vital necessity of irrigation because of an insufficient rainfall. I would like to give some idea to this House of the value of irrigation in connection with agriculture and horticulture. I do not suppose that many of those who are not connected with this industry realize how intensely important irrigation is to successful horticulture or agriculture.

The science of irrigation is practised in every part of the world, and it has been a feature of agriculture for thousands of years. There are the remains of great irrigation works in Egypt and in parts of Asia which are at least 2,000 or 3,000 years old. At present, the science is carried on to an extent known to few people. For instance, in India millions of acres are under irrigation by means of canals, and other millions of acres by systems of pumping from wells or reservoirs. This means not only tremendously increased production but also an immense saving of life. In Italy, we find that in practically the whole southern part of the country, the work of agriculture is carried on with the assistance of irrigation. In Egypt and China the same thing is true. In the United States there are 4,000,000 acres under irrigation which means that practically all this land has been reclaimed from the desert and is now producing food. Careful computation shows that there is something like 40,000,000 acres in the world under irrigation, which, but for irrigation, would be partially or wholly unproductive.

The point I wish to press upon the Minister of Agriculture is that there is a need which, perhaps, the government, up to the present time, have hardly realized, for an experimental station in what is called the semi-arid belt of British Columbia. Because, it is impossible for us, the individual operators, to gain what the true value of water is, how to use it, how to distribute it and so on. This means that there must be an immense quantity of water now going to waste which, if economically used, would mean the reclamation of many thousands of acres. If we had proper scientific experiments to inform us how much water to use and how to use it, it would mean an immense addition to the quantity of land, now sterile, that could be brought under cultivation. While the governments of the United States and the governments of other countries also have been going into this question in a thorough way to find out what the value of water is in connection with agriculture and horticulture our government has done practically nothing. In regard to the value of water, the customary standard of measurement throughout the world is becoming the cubic foot per second, and what is called the duty of water, is the area over which this quantity can be distributed with the best results. In Alberta, where the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have carried on the largest irrigation works in Canada, if not in America, it has been estimated that, for the culture of wheat and grass, one cubic foot per second is enough for 100 acres. I think they are now fixing that duty at 150 acres. In other parts of the world, the duty of water varies according to conditions. In California, where they have done a great deal of this work, and where the land, without irrigation, is absolutely sterile, being in the arid belt, and where they realize every drop of water, they have extended the duty of water to 250 acres. Taking the average of 100 cases of the whole world, it will be found that one cubic foot of water per second has a duty of 117 acres, exclusive of the culture of rice, where much more water is required.

Mr. BRODER. The quantity of water required will depend upon the evaporation.

Mr. BURRELL. These figures apply mostly to countries in which the evaporation is very rapid. Now, I do not wish to take up the time of the House, but I would like to say that this whole question of the application of water for the reclamation of great tracts of otherwise sterile lands in the arid or semi-arid districts is an immensely difficult question. Our present imperfect methods cause needless waste of water. We are groping in the dark as to what we should do for the development of our resources. Not only that, but a shortage of water in a very dry country means heart-burnings and quarrellings; it means the division of communities into hostile camps; it means the neglect of proper methods to reclaim even some of the areas that might otherwise be reclaimed. I would strongly urge upon the Minister of Agriculture to take into consideration these facts and to realize that in British Columbia we have an industry of great value to the country as a whole and an immense acreage that can be reclaimed and made to afford room for population and greatly increase the wealth of Canada. I trust the minister will see his way, at an early day, to look into this matter, not to put it by year after year, but to take it up in a whole-hearted way and establish an experimental station somewhere in the arid or semi-arid districts of British Columbia, where it can render benefit to the whole province.

Mr. J. E. ARMSTRONG (East Lambton). I appreciate very much the efforts of the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) in bringing this subject before the House at this time. It is a subject of great importance, not only to Quebec but to every province of the Dominion. For years, we have been urging the necessity of establishing experimental stations throughout the Dominion, not merely stations for the development of the grain-growing industry, but in connection with the fruit industry, and I hope the efforts put forth by hon. members from Quebec and others will have definite results with the Minister of Agriculture. For some years past, we have been urging upon the minister the need of establishing an experimental tobacco station in the western district of Ontario. I do not need to remind the Minister of Agriculture of the importance of establishing such a station, of the extent of the industry or of the splendid work that such a station could accomplish. I would urge upon him the necessity of establishing another experimental station in the western peninsula of Ontario. As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, in that peninsula we have a very mild climate, much milder, for instance, than that of Ottawa, at which the Dominion Central Experimental Farm is situated, or even of Guelph where the Ontario Experimental Farm is established. A large portion of that western peninsula is gradually being developed for the growing of different kinds of fruit. I have for some time been urging on the minister the necessity of investigating that western district with reference to this important question, because we cannot expect that the experiments that are carried on here at Ottawa, or at the other experimental farms in Ontario, can accomplish what we would like to see done in that district. The minister has been urged to afford help to establish a farm in the Niagara district. I know he is fully alive to the importance of such a step, and while the Ontario government are making wonderful strides in the establishment of experimental farms, and in giving valuable information to the farmers, yet I cannot help feeling, as the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) has so well said, that it is nothing but right that the federal parliament should take a deeper interest in the establishment of these experimental farms, not only in the province of Quebec, but throughout Canada. I am glad indeed to see that the members from Quebec are taking up this question in earnest. I am satisfied that experimental farms are needed in the west also. Take for instance, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta, no one can estimate the amount of good that could be accomplished by farms of this kind in that western country. I well remember reading two or three years ago, in the report of the Minister of Agriculture, what was said with regard to the extra amount of grain that could be grown on farms if we were only able to add one bushel to the yield of each acre of land sown; it would bring into the pockets of the Canadian farmers over $12,000,000 a year. The advantage therefore of these farms is evident, and I am satisfied that the question having been brought up from year to year, and now that both sides of the House are united upon it, the minister will give it a great deal more attention than he has done in the past.

Mr. E. PAQUETTE (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I beg to express my thankfulness to my friendly neighbour, the member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe). He has ably pointed out the usefulness as well as the need of the establishment of an experimental farm in the eastern part of Quebec. Therefore, I have so much more ready willingness in associating myself to his labours and in seconding his motion.

My friend has gone over all of the agricultural field. Statistics demonstrate that experimental stations have been affording the highest and most valuable services to the farming community in Europe, in the United States and in our own country. All civilized countries put themselves to heavy pecuniary sacrifices towards the erection, improvement and perfection of experimental farms. In our work of nation building, it lies with us to go into all of those expenses which are calculated to be indispensable to insure eminence and prestige for the farming class.

Experimental farms along with our several farming institutes have largely contributed to the progress of agriculture, the very foundation of our national wealth and prosperity. The exports of our farm products amounted to $13,000,000 in 1891. In 1901 they had reached the figure of $24,000,000. The experimental farm is the farmer's true school. It is consequently of high moment to secure and place a good model under his keen observation. For instance, the nursery at Aulnaies village, for many years under the management of Mr. Dupuis, has done a great deal for the advancement of horticulture in the county of L'Islet. We are conscious of the happy influence exercised by the St. Hyacinthe school over the dairy industry. The establishment of an experimental farm in the eastern section of the province would perforce bring about some needful reforms requisite for progressive scientific farming. Our farmers might be shown around it, they could study it, take an interest in the manifold experiments carried on, and they could avail themselves of them. This would mean a standing lecture and wonderfully satisfying results could thus be derived.

Our soil and climate differ from those of the Ottawa district. We want an experimental farm to test the different qualities of the soil. The building of the Grand Trunk Pacific or Transcontinental opens up new sections to both settlement and farming. The analysis of the soil of that country is of the utmost importance. This great work will be apt to be perhaps neglected if we remain too far away from our experimental farms.

This experimental farm might be made an experimental station for agricultural purposes. Our farmers are too far away from the Ottawa farm to derive the full benefit of it. I am aware of the stringency of our finances, but this work is urgently needed by our farmers and we must endeavour to find the money to further the progress of agriculture. The hon. Minister of Agriculture knows the needs of our district. He should be satisfied that the establishment of an experimental station for agricultural purposes in the eastern part of the province of Quebec would serve the interest of a territory the possibilities and the development of which are worthy the attention of this parliament and government. This experimental farm might be made an experimental station for agricultural purposes, might also help the cattle raising industry, and in short, it might further the progress of agriculture.

Mr. O. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I could hardly allow this opportunity to pass without congratulating and at the same time without thanking the hon. member for Kamouraska for the very interesting remarks which he has just made in moving his resolution. And I think I state in this not only the sentiments of the farmers of the great county which I represent, and which is part of the district whose welfare my hon. friend has so much at heart, but also of the farmers of the whole province of Quebec. I will take the same opportunity to thank the Minister of Agriculture who, on all occasion, has shown us so much kindness, to us members of the province of Quebec and to our electors, every time we applied directly to his department or to the experimental farm, he always gave satisfaction to every one who has had to deal with him. I think this is a splendid opportunity to ask him to extend further the field of his operations in so far as practical farming is concerned.

Every one will admit that the farmers in that part of the province, which I belong have made wonderful progress in the last fifteen or twenty years, especially in dairying. But in certain respects, I have to own with regret, we are still deficient. It is true that our farmers have to put up nowadays with the impoverishment of the soil, due mostly to the neglect of our forefathers. The province of Quebec has a magnificent soil under a very favourable climate, but it has lost somewhat of its fertility as far as production is concerned. If there be any thing practical for the whole country, it is surely agriculture. I recognize that the lectures organized by the Minister of Agriculture throughout the country have had very good results, but more so theoretically than practically. It is a recognized fact to-day, not only in the province of Quebec, but, I dare say, in the world at large, that the farmer has a great calling, and that he is the very foundation of the wealth and progress of every country. These lectures have educated him to the importance of his calling, and in this respect the work performed in Ottawa is most satisfactory. But the experiments conducted at the model farm here do not all apply to the province of Quebec owing to the different climatic conditions. Much good will derive from the establishment of an experimental farm in our province, for instance in the way of drainage. Good drainage generally stimulates the natural action of the soil, so that crops may be at least a fortnight earlier than would otherwise be. We are also behind in the selection of seed grain. Our soil does not produce as much as it could. Certain quantities of seed grain are sown but do not bring proportionately as much as in other provinces. An experimental farm in the province of Quebec would result in the practical demonstration of good drainage.

The farmers of the province of Quebec have also to be stirred up to the advantages of improving their stock. Much has been done already, and the government of the province of Quebec has done their share, but in this also we are somewhat deficient. I acknowledge that much improvement has been accomplished in that direction in such counties as Kamouraska, L'Islet, Bellechasse and others. For instance in my own county, where a man had from six to eight cows ten or twelve years ago, he has to-day between thirty and forty. But the breed is lacking. A branch of the Ottawa farm would surely be of immense advantage in this respect in that part of the country. Farmers as a rule love to hear lectures. They cherish what is told them, but there is nothing so useful as things practical, and I believe that the establishment of an experimental farm would alone give the best practical results.

As it is to-day, the government of the province of Quebec spend certain sums of money as encouragement to a number of agricultural schools. I had occasion several years ago to be one of the commissioners appointed to investigate these schools, and out of the four, we condemned two. I hold that to-day the four or five thousand dollars which the government grant to the school at St. Anne de la Pocatière is money absolutely thrown away. If this money was pooled with what amount this government would be willing to give, I think these four or five thousand dollars would bring many times the results which are derived from them to-day. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will accept in a friendly manner the suggestion contained in the resolution, and will give this very important question all the consideration it deserves.

Mr. MAGRATH (Medicine Hat). Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret not to have understood the speeches made by the hon. gentlemen who preceded me upon the important question of agricultural interests. I wish to say a few words in support of this resolution, because I know that a new country cannot be successfully settled without the aid of experimental work. Experimental work has contributed greatly towards the successful settlement of northwestern Canada. The Indian Head farm has been in operation for many years and it has been of great benefit. At one period the territory immediately surrounding Indian Head was not being settled, and I believe that the great change that has taken place in that section of the country is largely due to the experimental work conducted by the Minister of Agriculture. I feel that it is impossible to say too much in support of the work being done by these experimental farms. I am sorry we have not an experimental farm in the northern portion of Quebec, along the line of the National Transcontinental Railway. In a few years our prairie country will be largely settled and we will then have to locate people in the wooded areas. I see no reason why we should not direct attention to the country say 25 or 50 miles north of this city. That work, however, can never be taken up successfully until some experimental work is done further north in that province. I take pleasure in supporting this resolution and I sincerely trust that the government will see its way clear to give the province of Quebec at least one experimental farm and possibly two, because I believe we cannot have too many of them in the various sections of this large county

Mr. A. S. GOODEVE (Kootenay). I am glad to say a few words in support of this resolution. In the Kootenays we have felt greatly the want of an experimental farm. As you are aware, we are situated in the mountains under peculiar conditions, and we are anxious to know the best kinds of fruit to grow and the highest altitude at which fruit can be successfully matured. This question has been taken up by various boards of trade in that district and at a recent meeting of the Associated Boards of Trade, at which thirteen boards were present, a formal resolution was adopted in regard to this very question of having more experimental farms in that western country. I well remember that when cheese and butter factories were first started in Ontario the successful marketing of the product presented great difficulties to the farmers and others interested. The government then came to the rescue, and owing to the work done by the Agricultural Department a large and profitable industry has been built up in the province of Ontario and other portions of Canada. That is one phase of the question that appeals to us as fruit men. We have already learned by experience that almost any kind of fruit will grow in the valleys surrounding the rivers and lakes of British Columbia. We have in my own particular district several large valleys, particularly the Windermere, Pend-Oreille, Kootenay and Arrow Lake valleys. These have been largely advertised, many settlers are coming in, and the land is being taken up for agricultural purposes. Going through that district last fall I found that in many instances a good deal of the smaller fruit had been allowed to go to waste. This was partly due to the fact that some of the varieties cultivated there were not suitable for marketing, they were of too soft a nature. Then too, in many districts where the fruit was perfectly suitable for the market, there was not a sufficient quantity to enable the growers to get rates and accommodation to send it to their markets. I know that experimental farms along the line suggested by previous speakers would be of great advantage to us in that portion of the country. The officials of such farms would be able to tell the ranchers not only the best fruit for the particular altitude in which they were situated but also the best fruit for marketing. As has been said by the hon. member for Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) it was not until Lord Aberdeen, in the Okanagan valley, established apple growing on a large scale that we were able to market successfully. That is one difficulty. A rancher in one valley will grow one kind of apple, cherry, pear, peach or small fruit, and his immediate neighbour will grow another variety coming in a few weeks earlier or a few weeks later, with the result that neither can market his fruit in the best condition or in the quantities necessary to obtain the best prices. In that way there is no doubt that an experimental farm would do a vast amount of good and would hasten the time when the horticulturists of that district will be able to add materially to the wealth of Canada. I heartily support the resolution so far as it applies to the further establishment of experimental farms in the various provinces. No doubt the arguments advanced by the hon. gentlemen from Quebec have been such as would impress the minister and the government, and I think that the arguments we can advance and have advanced in regard to the western provinces will also be of weight. I trust that the Minister of Agriculture will take this question, as he has taken other questions, into his serious consideration, and that he will grant such assistance in this matter as will hasten the time when we will have a large amount of fruit in the various provinces of this Dominion.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland, N.B.). Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was unable to follow the remarks of the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution. I was, however, able to sufficiently follow the remarks of the hon. member for Dorchester to know that he complimented the hon. gentleman from Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) upon the manner in which he presented the resolution. I am very glad that I am able to heartily support the sentiments set out in the resolution. From the remarks made by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, there is no question in the mind of any gentleman present as to the great benefit which has accrued to the agricultural interests of this Dominion from the operation of experimental farms. This idea is set out in the resolution and it is also set forth that if we had more of these farms they would still more benefit the agricultural interests of Canada. The reasons advanced in the resolution for asking for the establishment of a new farm in the eastern portion of Quebec are that the conditions of soil and climate are different from those at the experimental farms now in operation. We can easily realize that this is so. I understand that we have but two experimental farms under the administration of the Dominion in eastern Canada, one in Ontario and one in Nova Scotia. I wish to say on behalf of my own province that there are differences in the seasons, in the soil and in the climate between Nova Scotia and the northern portion of New Brunswick. It seems to me that it would be in the interest of agriculture in the province of New Brunswick that an experimental station should be established in that province, either in the north-east section or the north-west section. I may say for my own county that agricultural interests have advanced very materially during recent years; but in some departments, especially in dairying, we are still very far behind, and if we had an experimental station within reasonable distance, and at a point where the climate and soil are different from what they are at Nappan in Nova Scotia, I am sure it would add materially to the agricultural interests of New Brunswick, in which all of us feel a deep interest.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure indeed in joining my congratulations with those of other hon. gentlemen to the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe), who has introduced this very excellent resolution, a resolution in the sentiment of which I am sure hon. members on both sides of this House will join. What undoubtedly is wanted in the agricultural sections of this country are experimental farms; and the value of these experimental farms is undoubtedly proportionate to the manner in which they are managed. I do not rise for the purpose of indicating generally the localities where one of these farms should be established; but I do rise, as a member coming from that portion of Ontario known as New Ontario, for the purpose of suggesting to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that that portion of Ontario needs a little more of his fostering care than it has received in the past. If the hon. minister would direct his attention to that very rich portion of Ontario, having regard to the maintenance there of one of these experimental farms, I fancy that he would do a great deal of good. Such an institution would be a means of instruction to farmers there who are labouring under rather rigorous climatic conditions and other disadvantages which are not met with in other portions of the province of Ontario. It is just to that class of territory, which is somewhat different in its nature and climatic conditions from the rest of the Dominion of Canada, that the hon. gentleman refers in the first part of this resolution. The northern parts of the province of Ontario are known to be agriculturally rich; but what they are capable of producing under more favourable conditions, which can only be ascertained by scientific investigations and by continued research and experiment, has never yet been demonstrated. I therefore thought this would be a favourable opportunity to suggest to the hon. minister that he should consider that portion of Ontario, with the idea of establishing in the most suitable part of it, the part where it would give the greatest good to the greatest number, an experimental farm, so that the people engaged in agriculture in that country might have the advantage of instruction with regard to what the land is capable of producing, what fruits can be grown there and to what extent, and other questions affecting the agricultural industry. That experimental farms are of the greatest possible utility especially in a new country is too much of a truism to admit of any question, and I think the establishment of one or more in these northern districts would be of the greatest utility. We have a splendid experimental farm in Ottawa, which is of great benefit to the more thickly settled portions of Ontario and Quebec; but the conditions in New Ontario are so different in many respects to what they are here, that the establishment of an experimental farm there would undoubtedly stimulate agriculture and tend to the increased settlement of the country. I earnestly commend this matter to my hon. friend's consideration, and trust that he will give effect to the suggestion I make.

Mr. J. P. TURCOTTE (Quebec). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker. This debate brought by the resolution of the hon. member for Kamouraska, is one of the most interesting that came before the House. Not only is the resolution asking the government to safeguard the interests of the agricultural classes of our country, but it seems to me that it will have the further result of creating provinces, every one of them endeavouring in the future more than ever to take lead in the development and progress of agriculture.

If I am not mistaken, we must to-day be well informed as to what goes on concerning the agricultural questions in the old and new provinces. The art of agriculture is relatively easy in the new provinces ; the land is virgin and consequently more productive ; the farmers settling on these farms bring with them knowledge acquired elsewhere, new ideas, and they work in a manner which is entirely unknown in our old provinces. So that if it is necessary for these new provinces to receive help from the government to be more prosperous, I will say that the old ones need also that help in order to free themselves of the old routine of method which were probably good formerly, because they were answering the needs of those generations, but which are to-day old-fashioned and no longer adapted to our times.

The hon. member for Kamouraska did well to call the attention of this House to this important question, and to beg the government to get more interested in the fate of the agricultural classes in the different parts of the country, and to state precisely, as he did, that it is on the province of Quebec that its care should be spread. Why ? Because this province being the first that has been settled, the agricultural customs which were developed, customs which have created these sound and industrious populations which we all admire, are not, however, in a position to correspond to the needs of our times. They must have a guide to show them the defects of their methods, and what should be done for the general benefit of the province of Quebec and the whole country.

If the government has at heart, as I believe, the agricultural interests and wants to protect them, they will gladly accept the proposition of the hon. member for Kamouraska, whose object is to do away with the routine of which suffered the province of Quebec. The government would accomplish this an intelligent useful and pressing work.

It has been said that the difference of climate and soil in our province asks for different modes of cultivation; this is elementary and it does not require much experience to be proved, but when we pass from theory to practice, it becomes very important to have some men trained by study and experience to guide us, if we want to make good work. This is not the duty of individuals, but of the government. Just as the agricultural classes support in the great electoral contests the program of reform of the government, just the same these classes have a right to look for help when it comes to reforms and progress of which they shall benefit.

Some years ago, Mr. Speaker, a great movement was set on foot to give to the province of Quebec a model experimental farm. My predecessor in this House, Hon. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, was at the head of this movement ; he wanted this farm to be established in the county of Quebec. Whether it pleases or not, my hon. friend from Kamouraska it seems to me that it is the right natural place for a farm of this kind. It was around that the first farms were cultivated at the virgin of the colony. I am not one of those who say that we must put aside all that was done by our ancestors. Experience proves the contrary, and presently we find in the county of Quebec the most beautiful farms of the province, some being valued as much as $75 to $1000 an acre. For instance, I will mention the farm of the Quebec seminary, the farm of Mr. Gustave Langelier at Cap-Rouge, upon which he spent lots of money, principally in the improvement of the cattle. At every exhibition, Mr. Langelier always won first prizes.

I believe that the efforts that have been made to bring the government to establish an experimental farm in the limits of the county of Quebec, must be continued, and as a representative of this country, though not being a farmer myself, I believe that it is my duty to continue the work begun. No doubt the financial question must be considered. I understand that the government which has great work on hand cannot apply considerable money for new undertakings, but it seems to me that it is sufficient to appeal in the name of the class which is most interested, the farmers, to urge upon the government to make new sacrifices. When we see at the head of the Department of Agriculture a man who represents so well the agricultural interests, it is to be hoped that in a near future another experimental farm will be established, and that the government will put it in the county of Quebec.

There is no jealousy in the population. It does not concern who will win the medal. It is not neither a question of party between the two sides of this House ; we all love the farmers, and the government has to look upon the agricultural classes for the progress of the country.

I believe that we all agree upon that, and whatever preferences each of us may have, if the government should establish another experimental farm in the county he chooses, we will all applaud.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). I have listened with a great deal of interest to the debate upon the important question of government experimental stations, and I desire to say only a few words with reference to it. I am at a loss to know how my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture will be able to find locations for all the additional experimental stations which he has been urged to establish.

An hon. MEMBER. What about Dundas?

Mr. BRODER. Dundas is able to take care of itself. I would be in favour of further equipping and developing our existing experimental farms before going too far in establishing additional experimental stations. I believe the experimental farm at Ottawa ought to be one of the best equipped farms in the world, having a staff of the most capable and the most experienced scientific men available. But, there is this difficulty with scientific men. Science is a fine thing but it will not go alone in this world. The scientists should get down to the struggling masses and learn the philosophy of new experience. Every year we take important evidence before the Committee on Agriculture. A year ago we received such evidence, but this evidence is not in the hands of the people yet. I do not say that the minister is to blame for this. It is attributed simply to the system we have had in vogue for years. Evidence which was deemed to be of the greatest importance to the people has not reached them yet. There should be some system adopted by which this evidence may be put in the possession of the people with very little delay. When one takes up evidence that was given over a year ago he says that it is out of date and he will take no interest in it. I do not believe in building experimental stations to fight conditions, but I believe in establishing experimental farms to suggest what is best adapted to each particular locality, following along the lines of least resistance. You do not want to undertake to raise wheat scientifically where wheat is not intended to grow. Follow along the lines of least resistance and give to the country what is best adapted for each particular locality. While some people say that we used to raise good crops when we had none of these farms, that is very true, but the farmer is met by a hundred enemies to his crop to-day when he did not have one fifty years ago. He is met by a hundred difficulties when he did not have one fifty years ago. The farmer has to fight all along the line. He has to fight bugs and he has to fight lice—we might as well talk plainly —which attack his crop. Every day that he gets up something is attacking his crop, his apples, his potatoes, his hay. What the experimental farms want to do is to suggest to the farmer, not to carry him on their back and let him act upon their suggestions. I believe that much could be done to improve conditions, speaking of Ontario alone. I am not referring to Quebec, and I know a great deal about Quebec because I was born and brought up there. I know that in some sections it is a great apple country and, I want to say, that millions of dollars could be added to the value of the apple crop every year if it were properly taken care of. Now the question is whether it would not pay this country to do the experimenting even at considerable expense. I believe that the localities that are suffering because of lack of knowledge in this respect could be easily reached if proper means were adopted to do so. What has been said about British Columbia is of the very greatest importance. I believe that an experimental farm would do a great deal of good in Quebec and the people of Quebec would eagerly use it if it were placed amongst them. They have done a great deal in their province. I was reading, last night, documents issued by the government of Quebec, which indicate a line of work that it would be well for the province of Ontario to copy in many respects. In these documents suggestions were made to the people for beautifying their homes and farms, and prizes were offered for the best kept farms and homes. If the minister will take this matter up and carry out some of the suggestions which have been made this afternoon I am satisfied that his efforts will meet with the hearty appreciation of the people of this country.

Mr. E. B. DEVLIN (Wright). Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few words before this debate ends, in connection with the resolution which is proposed by my hon. friend the member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe). It seems to me that the resolution can be divided into two parts, first:

> That in the opinion of this House it would be in the interests of agriculture that new experimental stations should be located at certain places removed from those now in existence where the conditions of climate and soil are different.

Then, again, referring more especially to the province from which the hon. gentleman comes, he advocates that:

> Especially an experimental station should be established and put in operation in the eastern part of the province of Quebec.

I am not speaking upon this subject as a practical farmer. I have been allied with the farming classes for a great many years and I take a very deep interest in farming, though I cannot say that I ever really worked upon or worked a farm. But I take sufficient interest in the Dominion as a whole to understand the importance in this country of agriculture. I do not think that any sum of money is too great to be expended by this parliament in the interest of the farming community of Canada. I believe sir, that the time is not far distant when Canada will depend almost entirely upon its agricultural resources for the aggrandizement of the country and I believe that due importance should be shown to the farming classes. It is fortunate for this House and for this country that we have at the head of the department a man who is eminently qualified to act as Minister of Agriculture. It is fortunate, I say, that we have watching over the interests of the department which is more particularly concerned with the agricultural classes, a man who takes a deep interest in the farming community, a man who has studied the question in all its aspects and a man who never loses an occasion to show farming communities that he is fully competent to judge their needs and to cope with their difficulties. So far, our government has done a great deal which is of benefit to the agricultural classes. The government has expended large sums of money towards the improving and almost perfecting of the cold storage system. We have in this country elevators which are second to none upon the continent and which are of great benefit to its farmers in enabling them to export their wheat, grain and other products. If I may be permitted to say a word on behalf of the province from which I have the honour to come I would advocate as strongly as I possibly can the earnest consideration of the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Kamouraska. It is true, that we have here, in the city of Ottawa, an experimental farm. It is true that in the distribution of grain throughout Canada and in the education of the agricultural classes the experimental farm is doing a wonderful work. Owing to the enlightened efforts of the Minister of Agriculture the fame of Central Experimental Farm has been spread throughout the world. And while that is true I do think the provinces, more especially those which are far distant from the capital, have a just claim for the establishment of experimental farm stations. I believe myself that a very appropriate place for an experimental station of not too great magnitude would be across the river in the county of Wright, but I shall not enter into the family quarrel which seems to exist between the hon. member for Quebec county (Mr. Turcotte) and the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe). I might perhaps be induced to waive my claim if either of those gentlemen should succeed in obtaining what he so earnestly desires. I do not think we should be selfish in this matter, and so I am free to endorse the suggestion that the farmers living on the St. Lawrence river below Quebec, in Kamouraska and Temiscouata and these other counties, should have the benefit of an agricultural station in their vicinity. The Minister of Agriculture would do well to give this resolution his earnest consideration and I trust that the House will generously vote a sufficient sum for the establishment of at least one experimental farm station in the province of Quebec.

Mr. A. B. McCOIG (West Kent). The section of Canada in which my constituency is situated is not only the most important agricultural district in the province of Ontario, but in the Dominion of Canada, and so it behooves me to say a word for the agriculturists of southwestern Ontario. The farmers of the counties of Kent and Essex have probably more money invested in the agricultural industry than have the farmers of any other section of a like area in Canada. The fruit industry in that district is of increasing magnitude, although I must confess that there has been to some extent neglect in the furnishing of means to the fruit growers for the protection of their fruit trees. We have been unfortunate enough to have had experience of the San José scale pest, and while some assistance has been rendered by the provincial government that assistance has not been adequate. In this connection I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and to the government that they should allow the necessary spraying apparatus for the prevention of the San José scale, and which is largely manufactured in the United States, to come into Canada free of duty. If assistance were given in this direction we would be able to raise a larger fruit crop and to export this fruit in greater quantities than at present to other parts of Canada, where there is a profitable market for it. It is well that the House should remember that in the counties of Kent and Essex we are blessed with a climate and a soil which enable us to produce crops which cannot be produced in other parts of Canada. For example, last year the sugar beet crop of these two counties was over half a million dollars in value, and the corn crop amounted to at least probably three million dollars' worth. I need not tell hon. gentlemen that the culture of tobacco is also an important industry with us. Hon. gentlemen will readily see how advantageous it would be to the farmers of these counties if there were established in the vicinity of Chatham an experimental station which would supply information as to the most approved system of cultivating these valuable crops which are largely peculiar to that district. A short time ago there was a corn convention in the county of Essex and had the Minister of Agriculture been able to be present he would have been justly proud of the samples of corn exhibited there. I do not wish to draw an invidious comparison, but nevertheless I think the newspaper was not far astray, which stated, that the samples of corn exhibited from other parts of Canada were as but nobbins compared with the samples from the counties of Kent and Esssex. Then again, as a corollary of the large production of corn in Kent and Essex, there is a very extensive hog raising industry in these counties, and I am safe in saying that three million dollars would not buy the hog products which have been sold from Kent and Essex. I must compliment the Minister of Agriculture that he has done many good things to encourage the hog industry but something yet remains to be done. The hog trade is not only of importance to the farmers of this district but it is of almost equal interest to the people of the other provinces who to a very large extent buy their dressed hogs from these two counties. I have every confidence in the Minister of Agriculture that he will give us every assistance within his power to enable us to profitably pursue that valuable industry. Then, I endorse all that has been said in favour of a large free circulation of bulletins in the different sections of the country, and I would specially suggest that an effort should be made to distribute these bulletins with particular reference to the kind of crop which is most successfully grown in any given district. These bulletins should be sent not only to the few on the subscription lists of the agricultural colleges but they should be distributed in all the schools of Canada so that the children might learn, and so that they might take home to their parents this information and instruction as to the most modern and best means of pursuing the agricultural industry. I have felt, Mr. Speaker, that when a motion of this kind was submitted to the House, I would not be doing my duty as the representative of the most important agricultural county of Kent were I to refrain from saying a few words upon a question so interesting to my constituents.

Mr. JOHN BARR (Dufferin). Representing, as I do, an agricultural constituency, I desire to express my views on the question now before the House. It is gratifying to know that there are questions upon which we can unite for the common good, divesting our minds of all political feelings. That is as it should be. For, when we come to consider the great subject of agriculture, we cannot but realize that it is to the agriculturists that we must look for building up this country of ours. Though we have only seven millions of people at the present time, we have land to provide farms for a hundred millions. We should dig broad and deep the foundations for this great industry of agriculture. It seems to me that the successive governments of this Dominion have not given to this subject the consideration that it deserves. I say this without referring to one government more than to another. We have never given a fair proportion of our expenditure to the benefit and encouragement of agriculture. When we consider that nine-tenths of the inhabitants of Canada are of the agricultural class, and when we consider how little of our public expenditure goes to the development of agriculture, we cannot feel that we are doing our whole duty. It is true that the government has done much in this line, but there is very much more still to be done. There are only three or four experimental farms in the Dominion. The present resolution is in favour of establishing such farms in the eastern part of the province of Quebec. We have our Central Experimental Farm on the border between Ontario and Quebec, and that farm has done good work, and we are proud of it. But we know that conditions of soil and climate vary greatly in different parts of the Dominion, and, therefore, I contend we should have not merely an experimental farm on the border between Ontario and Quebec, but one in the eastern part of Quebec and one in the western part of Ontario. Instead of spending half a million in this service, we might well spend two or three millions. Agriculture is very different from what it was half a century ago. At that time we had but to tickle the soil and put in the seed and Providence would do the rest. Now, we have all sort of enemies to contend with. It is impossible for any farmer alone to learn how his farm can best be handled under the conditions that obtain to-day. With experimental farms in different parts of the Dominion the best means of meeting the enemies that the farmer has to contend with would be discovered and the farmers could be educated in these methods as they are introduced. There are great new areas of the country being opened up which could be developed more quickly if experimental stations were established to learn how agriculture can best be carried on under the existing conditions. Some years ago we saw exhibited in the provincial legislature of Ontario wheat that was grown on the other side of the height of land, and beautiful wheat it was. It was grown by one of the then members for Ottawa on a large farm he had in that country. Hundreds and thousands of people are going into this new country which is being opened up by the Temiscaming and Northern Ontario and Grand Trunk Pacific Railways. I believe we should have an experimental farm there for the benefit of those who are taking up farming in that country. The results would be beneficial to all Canada, for that country is rich not only in minerals, but, I am quite confident, in agricultural resources also. We should have experimental farms in the several provinces, and should spend large sums for the purpose of educating the farmers. I believe also that we should have agriculture taught in our schools. Our provinces are doing good work, but the Dominion ought to lead, not lag behind, in experimental work for the advancement of agriculture.

Mr. A. H. CLARKE (South Essex). I desire to say a few words on a question which, while not strictly in line with the resolution, is of great interest to the fruit-growers of the district I represent, and, therefore, I ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments. The matter to which I refer has been spoken of by the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. McCoig)—the question of protecting the fruit trees from pests. For, we may have experimental farms and encourage agricultural industry, but it will be in vain unless we protect the product we already have. There is great complaint in my part of the country that sufficient encouragement and assistance is not given by the government to the extermination of the scale and other pests which affect fruit trees. Special complaint is made that paris green and other spraying materials furnished in this country are not effective, and these materials are brought from the United States. The Horticultural Society and the Fruit Growers' Society have passed resolutions asking that the duty be taken off spraying materials in order to encourage the farmers to get rid of the scale and other pests that are doing so much to destroy the orchards of southwestern Ontario. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who has to do with the question of duties, is not in his place, but I hope this matter will be brought to his notice and that something will be done to assist in protecting the fruit trees from these pests.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). This debate has taken a wide range, and I shall ask permission to advert for a moment to some of the side questions that have been brought in. I am glad to hear the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. A. H. Clarke) speak of the necessity of securing the best spraying materials to assist the horticulturists of this country in getting rid of the pests that destroy the profit of their industry. The other day a petition was presented to the government asking that certain spraying materials should be placed upon the free list in order to give to those who have occasion to use them a better article. The allegation was made that a proper spraying material was not produced in Canada. If that is the case it is the duty of the government to place such articles on the free list. That is in accordance with the policy inaugurated in 1878, where an article was not produced in this country it should be given to the people of Canada at the lowest possible price. I have here a circular issued by a company at Niagara who are manufacturers of spraying materials. It states that this article is manufactured by the Niagara Spraying Company, of Middleboro, New York, U.S.A. I understand that the product of this factory is a desirable article, and I draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to it. I am sorry the Minister of Finance is not here, because I think if he were to take note of it he would at once assist by the free admission of that article, for the destruction of the various pests that trouble the horticulturists.

We talk a great deal about benefiting the farmers by experimental farms and thus enabling them to carry on their operations to much greater advantage, and to produce larger crops. The hon. member for East Kent (Mr. McCoig) a few moments ago made a reference to the hog industry of the country and to the large amount of hogs produced in his county. To my mind the very best experiment that the government to-day can adopt with regard to agricultural products is an experiment along the line of securing the greatest market we possibly can for the Canadian people for what they do produce and the better way to do that is to make sure that we prevent the large invasion of American products into this country. This invasion is an injury to our farmers, inasmuch as the American products monopolize a large part of the market which ought to belong to our Canadian people. That is another matter to which I would direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture. I do not think he can better help the hog industry than by doubling the duty and keeping out the American product as far as possible, giving all the market we have to the Canadian people. This might apply to other lines of agricultural products as well. It is useless to expend money to increase our production unless we safeguard our market for the production when it has been made. Along that line I think the government can use their energies and ability with very great advantage to the people of Canada.

Mr. J. A. DUBEAU (Joliette). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of unduly prolonging this debate, but as the representative of a largely agricultural constituency, I consider it my duty to support the motion of the hon. member for Kamouraska.

I will take advantage of the opportunity to remind the House that last year, in the course of a debate on the best means of favouring the development of the Canadian tobacco industry, I requested the hon. the Minister of the Interior to amend the Inland Revenue Act in such a manner as to issue the same license to all Canadian tobacco manufacturers, whether they handle foreign, mixed or purely Canadian leaf, instead of obliging them to take out three different licenses for these different branches of industry.

I also requested that the system of variously coloured stamps which manufacturers were obliged to place upon their goods, according to the origin of the leaf, be done away with. The government granted my request and so amended the Inland Revenue Act as to issue the same license for the manufacture of all tobacco whatever may be their classification, while according to the new departmental regulations, a uniform stamp is now issued to all. For this I tender my thanks to the government. These changes have rendered and continue to render great assistance to the Canadian tobacco industry, which is being very notably developed in the province of Quebec. I believe, however, as I had occasion to remark when the question was debated last year, that we will be obliged to follow the example of other countries, and establish, in the midst of the planters, experimental stations under the charge of experts who are able to guide them in the proper industrial treatment of the leaf, in order to produce an article suitable to the requirements of trade. May I therefore express the hope that the hon. the Minister of Agriculture will be able to place in the estimates a sum of money for the establishment of an experimental station in the district of Joliette. This would enable us to improve our tobacco to such an extent as to make it a staple article of export. Some days ago, a deputation composed of the members of the Tobacco Planters' Association of the district of Joliette, waited upon the government for the purpose of expressing the necessity of the establishment of an experimental tobacco station in that district. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture being at that time absent in Washington, I desire to call his attention to this fact, and I hope that he will give the request of the planters his most favourable consideration.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I must congratulate my hon. friend from Kamouraska, not only on the substance of the resolution he has introduced, but also on the manner in which he supported it. He has shown us that he has thoroughly studied the question, not only in its application to the Quebec district, but also to the whole Dominion. I have great pleasure in accepting the resolution, and hope that it will meet with the unanimous concurrence of the House. The resolution is in line with what was proposed two or three years ago.

Two or three years ago we put into the estimates a sum of money for the purpose of establishing branch stations on the experimental farm system. We have already acquired three such stations since that time, and I have been in negotiation with proprietors in other parts of the country with the object of securing suitable locations for other branch stations. I want to say that the requests which we have received from hon. members here to-day, and requests for such stations in different parts of the country, involve very large expenditures, and show great eagerness for the establishment of these stations. In deciding where we shall first do this work we have kept this principle in view, that the experimental stations should serve the largest number of people in a district which was a fair sample of a large area of country, rather than to establish stations in districts which should serve an area for a small population, or as a model of work of a restricted and peculiar character.

Mr. MONK. Would the minister say where the three stations are now ?

Mr. FISHER. One is in the semi dry district of southern Alberta, one is in the northern part of Alberta, and one in the northern part of Saskatchewan. Since the question has been asked, I will say why it was that these localities were first chosen for this work. In the original establishment of the experimental farm system, there were five farms established. There was the Central Experimental Farm here at Ottawa, which was expected to serve the purpose of Ontario and Quebec, lying as it does on the boundary line between them. One was near the boundary line between the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia and within easy reach of Prince Edward Island, to serve the purposes of the maritime provinces. One was established in the then comparatively new province of Manitoba at Brandon; a fourth was established at Indian Head in the then new territory further west, and a fifth was established in the great province of British Columbia. The idea was that these stations should serve the provinces mentioned. When, however, a few years ago we established two new provinces in the Northwest, we found that the province of Alberta had no farm which seemed to serve the needs of that great agricultural province. The question was how we could meet these needs, and instead of establishing a branch farm at some central point for the whole province, as was done in the earlier scheme of organization, we thought better to establish two smaller stations, one in the south part, which is dryer, and one in the more central part of that great agricultural province, nearer the northern region, where farming must necessarily be of a mixed character, and where conditions are different from those at Lethbridge, where the southern farm was established.

Mr. STAPLES. How many acres were acquired for the experimental farm in the northern part?

Mr. FISHER. I will not go into details of that kind just now.

Mr. MONK. Perhaps the minister will tell us when these new farms were established?

Mr. FISHER. As soon as possible after the establishment of the province of Alberta. I think I acquired the first one about two years ago, and the second one a little over a year ago, immediately after the province of Alberta was established. Now a third farm was established in the northern part of Saskatchewan, very much for the same reason that the two farms were established in Alberta. The farm at Indian Head, in Saskatchewan, is in the southern part of the province on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, where the land is altogether prairie, where the climate is rather dry, and where farming consisted in wheat growing. We wish to establish another farm in the northern part where wood land is mixed with prairie land, and where the syle of agriculture will be necessarily different from that in the southern part. For that purpose we have bought a farm at Rosthern, between Saskatoon and Prince Albert. I have been in negotiation with the provincial governments of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island with a view to their purchasing a farm each, and placing it at our disposal for this work. We have not yet been able to fix upon the exact location, but I believe that before long these governments will be able to place at our disposal for the purpose of carrying on such work as this, one farm in the fruit-growing district of Nova Scotia, and another in the centre of Prince Edward Island. I have had many applications for the enlargement of this system, and I wish to continue in the line that we have begun. I may say that I have already promised that a farm shall be established on the island of Vancouver, in British Columbia. The conditions there are very different, from an agricultural point of view, from the condtions on the mainland, and it seems only fair and right that that great island should have a model station where experiments and illustrations of the best agricultural methods can be carried on. My hon. friend from Kootenay (Mr. Goodeve), and my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell), have spoken of the interior or dry belt of the province of British Columbia. Here let me say to those gentlemen from British Columbia that no district in the Dominion has been given more careful consideration and study than the mainland of the province of British Columbia, both on my own part and on the part of my officials.

Most of us know pretty well the general character of that great province, but probably none of us realize its immense agricultural possibilities. The beauty of its scenery is famed the world over, as are the richness of its mineral resources and its wealth of fisheries, but I venture to say that in the future it will be the agriculture and the fruit growing of British Columbia of which Canada will be most proud, and from which it will reap the greatest advantages. I dare say it is a surprise to many to learn that there are 75,000 acres of orchard land in that province, and while many of the trees are not yet bearing, still so great has been the profit accruing that in recent years there have been thousands of acres of fruit trees planted and the experience already has proven that those who have engaged in the industry have been wise in their generation. There is a difficulty in the way, however. The country is divided by mountain chains and ridges, and the crop which is suitable to one valley may not be suitable to any very wide area. It is therefore impossible to find one central spot in the interior of British Columbia where an experimental farm or illustration station could be established to serve the whole of the interior. Until the time comes when such stations will be numerous, we will have to proceed on the principle of selecting a site which will serve the largest area and the greatest number of agriculturists within reasonable reach of the centre. In most other parts of Canada an illustration or experimental station will serve a very large area and to begin with it is well that we should place them where they will be of benefit to the greatest number of people. I have been guided as much as possible by this consideration in the order in which I have taken up the placing of these experimental stations. I would like to go much further in this direction than I have gone. Let me tell hon. gentlemen who have not been many years in this House a little bit of history. In the year 1899 I came forward with a proposition in regard to illustration stations somewhat smaller than those branch experimental stations, and I desired as time went on and as I was allowed to have money enough to do it, to establish such a station in every county of the Dominion. And after eight years experience of the results of that proposition not having been given effect to, I have no hesitation in saying that the loss has been enormous to the agriculturists of Canada. But, the House of Commons was opposed to my proposition and it had to be withdrawn, and from that day to this I have not undertaken to reintroduce it. I hope, however, that my idea will be amplified as time goes on, until, if not in every county of the Dominion, at all events in every part of the Dominion where an experimental station may serve a large number of agriculturists, we shall have one established. I am glad to hear my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) and other hon. gentlemen approve of the stations already established. I can endorse what my hon. friend from South Alberta (Mr. Magrath) said as to the effects of the experimental farm at Indian Head. The district of Indian Head is probably to-day the most productive of that great wheat growing region, and I only speak what I have heard said by hundreds and hundreds of the best judges in the Northwest when I say that the fact that the Indian Head district is to-day so much in advance of most parts of the Northwest is due to the establishment of the experimental farm station there. I venture to say that everybody who knows the great wheat growing prairie area between the great lakes and the Rocky mountains will endorse my statement that Mr. McKay, the manager of the Indian Head farm, has done more to educate the farmers of the Northwest in the proper methods of wheat growing than any other dozen or perhaps any other hundred men in the Dominion of Canada. His work in that direction has been largely assisted by the fact that at Indian Head he has been able to carry on careful experimentation and observation, the results of which he has for a long term of years placed before the farmers of the Northwest. I believe that the same can be said for the experimental farm at Brandon and other farms throughout the country. My hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder) spoke about the value to the farmers of the evidence taken before the select committee on agriculture and he seemed to complain that this literature was not as freely circulated as it might be. Well, that is for the Committee of Agriculture and the Committee on Printing to deal with, because the taking of that evidence and the distribution of it is entirely under the control of the members of this House, and the Department of Agriculture and the Minister of Agriculture have nothing to do with it. If the evidence is not sent out to the farmers of Canada it is because the members of the House do not take the trouble to send it out.

Mr. BRODER. The difficulty is that such a long time elapses before it is printed.

Mr. FISHER. That defect can be remedied by the Committee on Printing and the Committee on Agriculture. I have no more control over that as Minister of Agriculture than my hon. friend has. I have inveighed against it, and urged the Committee on Agriculture to take steps with regard to it, but effective steps have not yet been taken.

Now, let me say a word with regard to some remarks of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell). He spoke of irrigation and said that nothing had been done by the Department of Agriculture to measure the water that was required for the irrigating of certain lands. Let me say that in the establishment of the experimental station at Lethbridge a little more than two years ago that very work was taken up. Mr. Fairfield, the manager of that station, is an expert in irrigation work, and one of the first things that was laid out for him was that he should establish gates and measures on the irrigation canals of that farm, and watch them and take notes, and find out as quickly as possible the very point my hon. friend asked for. It is true, these gates and measures and sluices have only been built a little less than a year. They were erected as soon as possible after we acquired the farm, and therefore we have no results yet which we can place before the public; but just as soon as it is possible to obtain the results, they will be made available for those who wish to carry on irrigation work. Nobody appreciates more than myself the immense value of irrigation work in semi-arid or dry parts of our country. That has been impressed upon me for years, both in regard to that large area of land in the interior of British Columbia and that large area in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan, which until quite recently was thought to be too dry for agricultural experiments. I am glad to say that discoveries have been made by which to-day it is well known that much of that dry land can be cultivated, under methods which any farmer can carry on, and that excellent crops are assured in those parts of the country without irrigation. Irrigation is a splendid adjunct and help to that kind of dry farming. On the station at Lethbridge just that kind of work is being experimented with, and just as soon as we have any results that are assured, that information will be given to the public. If there is one thing in connection with the experimental farm system of Canada of which I am proud, and of which everybody connected with agriculture in Canada may be proud, it is that Dr. Saunders, who is at the head of that system, is a man of scientific attainments, well trained in scientific agricultural experimental work, a man who hesitates to jump to conclusions, but who, as soon as the conclusions have been scientificially proved, is well able to put them clearly and concisely, so that the ordinary farmer can understand them; and it has been the glory of that system, that what has been concluded as the results of years of experiment, and what has been put before the public, has been universally acknowledged to be correct and well founded. Dr. Saunders and his staff have never yet been obliged to withdraw any point that they have put forward, and have never been found out in hasty or incorrect conclusions. I congratulate Canada, and I congratulate myself as the minister in charge of that particular work, that we have a man of scientific training and attainments on whose word we can thoroughly and absolutely rely as to the results of his experiments.

Let me say, too, in reply to my hon. friend from Dundas (Mr. Broder), that while he is correct in saying that science must be joined with practice, still without science—and science to be of any use must be full and clear—the work of the practical farmer would be much less efficient than it is to-day in Canada. It was only a few weeks ago that in this city of Ottawa, and in these buildings, there was held the annual meeting of the Seed Grain Growers Association, and I regret extremely that more members of the House did not take part in that meeting. Dr. Robertson, the head of the McDonald Agricultural College at St. Anne, delivered an address in which he put before the meeting the fact that if the fields of grain in the province of Quebec generally had produced as much per acre as the fields of grain on the McDonald College farm, they would have produced $100,000,000 worth more than the grain crops of Quebec last year amounted to. That was not the quantity raised on the experimental plots, but was the quantity raised on some two hundred acres of the McDonald College farm. This is a statement of startling importance; and I venture to say, in reply to the hon. member from Dundas, that scientific knowledge is the handmaid of practical agriculture. Without scientific knowledge practical agriculture cannot make those advances in our country and on this continent which its importance justifies. The farmers of Canada today, partly through the experimental farm system, partly through the operations of the other branches of my department, and partly through the work of the different branches of agriculture in the various provinces, have an abundance of knowledge at their disposal which they do not make full use of. If they would make use of one-tenth of it and carry one-hundreth part of it into their everyday operations, the results would amount to tens of millions of dollars more from agricultural produce than there is to-day. It is the farmer's slip-shod methods in this country which is the limit of our agricultural production. We are fortunate in Canada in having established a reputation in the world's market for a fine quality of agricultural product; and today the market of Great Britain and Ireland is reaching out and demanding more of our finished agricultural products than we are sending to it, and the prices we get for these articles which we do send are such as to give the farmers of this country who raise the goods and export them splendid profits and splendid results, and the only pity is that the farmers of Canada are not doubling and quadrupling their exports every year. If they do not do it, it is not for lack of teaching or for lack of knowledge; it is for their lack of interest in their work, their lack of industry, and largely, I believe, for the lack of that labour which is necessary in the carrying on of our farming operations.

Sir, the experimental farm system has, for twenty odd years back, been laying before the farmers knowledge of an inestimable value. Many have taken advantage of it, many have improved their methods as a result of it; enough have done so to be a leaven that is working through the whole system of agriculture in the country. There has been enormous progress, there has been great improvement and the agriculture of Canada to-day is infinitely ahead of what it was twenty years ago when the experimental farm system was first established. This is largely due to the example and model of these farms. It is largely due to the experiments which have been carried on, the principal results of which have been sent broadcast among the people through reports and bulletins, that this progress and improvement are so great. I venture to think that we can safely and wisely multiply the number of illustration stations so that the farmers who do not read and do not quite apprehend all that they do read may be able to go easily to these stations and see what they can do. Then I think they would be more willing to go home and try to follow up what they have seen. I would be glad, if, within seeing reach of every farmer in the Dominion, there was an experimental plot, or rather, I would like to call it an illustration plot, where he could see the best methods in regard to those crops which are best adapted to the region in which he lives, so that the eye, as well as the comprehension in reading, will teach him what to do. It is a big and broad subject and the undertaking is too much to be accomplished in one year or perhaps in ten years, but we ought to work towards that end, and the resolution which my hon. friend from Kamouraska (Mr. Lapointe) has introduced is a confirmation of my own opinion and an encouragement to me to go on and try to carry out as much as possible of the system which I had already inaugurated and which I would like to amplify.

Let me say just one word in regard to a point that I had in mind. Different sections of the country have organized excursions to the experimental farms in other parts of the country as well as to the experimental farm here. A very good thing. We have had some of the most interested and most intelligent bodies of farmers coming from the province of Quebec to the Central Experimental Farm, among them men who have come as far as 400 or 500 miles and spent three or four days on the trip so as to be able to have an opportunity of seeing the work on that farm and of going home with a better understanding of what farming is in a scientific way. I may say that I have had abundant evidence of this fact. I have letters by the score and by the hundreds from these people congratulating the Department of Agriculture on what was being done at the Central Experimental Farm, letters, which have, in consequence of these visits, even anticipated my hon. friend from Kamouraska and other hon. gentlemen who have asked for the establishment of other experimental stations. This is the best evidence of the value of these experimental stations, and I am glad to know that these excursions have taken place in different parts of the country. In Nova Scotia, Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island farmers have organized excursions to Nappan, out in the west, in the province of Manitoba, excursions are held to Brandon; in Saskatchewan and Alberta to Indian Head, and I believe also in British Columbia there are excursions of those interested in the fruit growing industry to Agassiz.

Let me say one word in reply to the remarks of my hon. friend from Yale-Cariboo (Mr. Burrell) in that connection. He spoke of the work there as being no use to the interior dry belt. I agree with him that it is of very little use. It happens that Agassiz is a very wet place and the result is that the work of fruit growing there is of very little value from the experimental point of view to the dry belt of British Columbia. The farm is so situated that it is almost impossible to keep live stock on it successfully and well. The result is that the farm has not been of that advantage to British Columbia which was expected, and which, I think, a farm of that kind ought to be. That is one reason why I immediately decided that I would put a farm on the Island of Vancouver and why I have been groping and trying to find the right place to put an experimental station in the dry belt of the province. An hon. gentleman spoke about protection against insect pests and diseases which attack fruit trees, &c. Our farm system has been working on that ever since its inception. Let me here say that one of the very best officers of the experimental farm system was the late lamented Dr. Fletcher, entymologist and botanist of the experimental farm. His reputation and work extended far beyond the limits of Canada. He inaugurated economic botany and entymology, which is the true application of these two great natural sciences to the practical work of the farm, and his work has told so well that Canada is to-day freer of insect pests than any other country, which produces so much fruit and has so many trees. It is true that in a small portion of Ontario the San José scale is planted and established. That occurred some years ago, but our measures to shut out nursery stock and seedlings coming in from the United States, which is infested with this scale without fumigation, have been so successful that this pest has not been introduced into any part of Canada where it was not then in existence. It is true that it is spreading a little in that portion of Ontario where it has existed for so long. Efforts have been made to control it and reduce its evil effects. The provincial government has been acting in this direction and I believe to-day that while the work has not been altogether successful it is largely due to the efforts of the provincial government that the pest has not spread much more widely and that it has not covered those parts of the province where the fruits which it affects are produced. We must beware of other pests. Just at this present moment Dr. Saunders and his staff are watching and fighting against the introduction into parts of Canada where it is not yet known of an insect which is known as the brown tailed moth, a pest which has attacked the great state of New York and other states on the border and is creating the utmost havoc amongst fruit and other trees. That pest is known slightly in our own maritime provinces. We are taking steps to stimulate its extermination there and we are watching and examining every entry of fruit trees and seedlings coming into Canada from those countries where this pest exists, so as to make sure that the pest will not be introduced into this country. That is but one instance of the work that the farm system is doing to protect this great fruit growing industry.

My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) said a few words a little while ago about spraying materials. I commend his views with regard to the free entry of spraying materials, and I can only congratulate him, myself and the House on the fact that so ardent a protectionist as he is is willing to reduce the duties or remove them from any item. I am glad to hear it and I can assure him that he has my entire sympathy. I have spoken perhaps too long, but I feel very strongly on this subject. I think that I am in a better position than most men to know what has been the advantage of such work as the experimental farm stations and similar stations can do in this country. I have no hesitation at all in saying that what little expenditure Canada has made in this way has been returned, not only to the farmers, but to every man, woman and child within the boundaries of the Dominion, ten and twenty times over in the results which have been achieved; and I am satisfied that any further expenditure, even running into large sums if we are able, with the present declining revenue to spend, the money will be equally well returned to the whole country. Do not imagine for a moment, Mr. Speaker, that this is a question which affects the farmers only. It affects the whole country; it affects the transportation interest, the mercantile interests, the export trade and the import trade. If, in any way, we can accomplish even one-tenth of what Dr. Robertson said could be accomplished in the province of Quebec simply in one part of the work of improving agriculture—the improvement in the seed grain—we shall deserve well of our country, and I am sure that future generations will arise and call us blessed.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, we have just heard a most interesting debate and I am not surprised, I admit, at the promise which has just been made on behalf of the government. I expected a precise statement from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), for although this question may appear a new one in certain respects. in others it is not so. I well remember having referred to it in this House during the last parliament and having laid before the government the same request as that made to-day by the member for Kamouraska, for the establishment in the province of Quebec of a very unpretending experimental farm, not nearly so extensive as the central farm at Ottawa, but sufficient nevertheless to supply our farmers with that information which it is difficult for them to obtain from our central station. I entered into no details as to its situation or extent. I stated before the House that we had spent much for the experimental farms so far established and that in view of the various conditions obtaining throughout our vast territory, this expenditure, great though it had been, was yet inadequate to the wants of the different provinces. I requested the minister to establish in the province of Quebec a model farm which would be within the reach of all the inhabitants of that province, and so conducted that farmers speaking the French language might be enabled to reap every possible benefit therefrom.

It is a great satisfaction to me to find that the minister has considerably altered his views concerning such stations, for when I made that request, urging practically the same arguments and giving the same statistics which have been to-day adduced before the House, I could not secure his approval. I predicted that he would become a convert to public opinion and I now find that he has been reclaimed.

No doubt, I would have desired more explicit explanations on the part of the minister as to the location of the farm to be built in compliance with the wishes of the hon. member for Kamouraska. The question being one of long standing and having been several times submitted to the Minister of Agriculture, who now admits that the step is necessary, we had a right to expect from him something more positive concerning the establishment he intends to create in the eastern portion of Quebec.

After the harmonious debate of this afternoon, I have certainly no intention of striking a discordant note, but I will say that in view of the great development of experimental farms in the Northwest, we are entitled to require a little more than this for the province of Quebec. There are already three experimental farms in that region of comparatively recent development. The minister has to-day declared that he has considered it necessary to establish no less than two new farms in Alberta and one in Saskatchewan. He informs us that another will soon be in operation in British Columbia. Now what arguments are we in a position to bring up in support of the motion now before the House? Have we not the Lake St. John region, containing at least a million acres of farming land upon which hundreds of rich and prosperous parishes might be built up? Have we not also the ancient valley of the St. Lawrence, concerning which our data are very general and vague and which is generally supposed to be so poor that the farmers living there scarcely reap a sufficiency? Nothing could be more removed from the truth, the region being exceedingly rich, but its various climates require to be studied. It is well known that fruit-growing has been undertaken with excellent results to the east of the city of Quebec. Have we not, moreover the valley of the Metapedia, where settlement is well advanced and which would be benefited by an experimental farm in eastern Quebec?

I am gratified to find that opinions which I claim as having been the first to express them here, are to-day unanimously accepted, even by the minister who some years ago had not attained the conviction which he has proclaimed to-day. Shall we have that experimental farm, and when?

There seems to be, I regret to find, some difference of opinion, even among the representatives of the region, as to the proper location of the experimental farm. The member for Quebec claims it for his constituency.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) He is not serious.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) And one of them made statements which are to be regretted when he said that the farmers of his county were wedded to routine. This is often said of our French Canadian farmers and it is untrue. Let our farmers be given the same opportunities of progressing, let means of education be extended to them as generously as they are to others, and I am convinced that that exceedingly intelligent portion of our fellow countrymen will be even more prompt in taking advantage of them than many other portions of the population of Canada. I have acquired this conviction while travelling through the province of Quebec.

I would advise my friends in the Quebec district to elect a few more members to sit on the opposition side of the House. That would perhaps help them in obtaining experimental farms of which the government is so profuse in the west. How can the thing be explained unless by the indifference of the government? My hon. friend may indeed desire to punish those whom he loves and according to the principle of the Good Shepherd, he may be willing to leave the faithful flock, to go off in search of the stray lambs. I cannot tell; but apparently it is to the advantage of certain portions of the country not to pay too humble a court to the powers that be.

Hon. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Postmaster General). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I will add but a few words to the speech of my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture. As to the somewhat acerb remarks of the member for Jacques Cartier, I may pass them over in consideration of the cordial support he has given to the motion submitted by the nember for Kamouraska.

The latter deserves to be congratulated upon the eloquent and instructive speech he has delivered, a speech showing that he has seriously studied the question. My hon. friend's success has been the more remarkable that opinions are generally so sharply divided here. He has rallied every representative in this House from Halifax to Vancouver to the idea that we have so long entertained of establishing an experimental farm in the district of Quebec. Montreal cannot object to such a request which is of more or less local interest. Indeed Montreal is within three hours journey of the excellent experimental farm we have here in Ottawa. Moreover, the whole Montreal region will reap especial benefit from the great agricultural school lately founded in the province of Quebec by that distinguished Scotchman, Sir William McDonald. The Oka school also will be of great use to the district of Montreal. But Quebec is far removed from Ottawa and from those schools. The climate of Quebec, as is well known, differs from that of Montreal. Even within the Quebec district important variations of climate may be observed. Thus, in Gaspé and Bonaventure, the winter is longer than in Quebec, but milder. Summer and autumn lasts three and sometimes four weeks more.

We of Bonaventure and Gaspé have no present intention of claiming an experimental farm. The Quebec district proper should, we think, take precedence; that is one of the clearest results of the motion made this afternoon by my hon. friend from Kamouraska.

The member for Jacques Cartier does not seem convinced of the government's good faith in this matter. He even claims that if the district of Quebec should obtain an experimental farm, it will be due to his own efforts. I know that during the last session certain questions were asked concerning this, but I think I am not mistaken when I say that during the last election the people of the Quebec region themselves delivered to their representatives an imperative mandate to have so important a question definitely settled.

The member for Kamouraska deserves our thanks for having taken this matter in hand, and also our congratulations for having succeeded in carrying conviction to both sides of the House. He has been through out the spokesman of the district of Quebec and has obtained from the Minister of Agriculture the equivalent of an official promise that his views will be promptly carried out.

ADJOURNMENT — BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Bill of the Secretary of State (Mr. Murphy); then the Bill respecting the Civil Service, if it is ready, if not, Supply, Railways and Canals.

House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, March 4, 1909.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 87) To incorporate the Arnprior and Pontiac Railway Company.—Mr. Hodgins.

ASSAULTS AND OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

Mr. E. N. LEWIS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 88) respecting assaults and offences against the person.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, this Bill has reference to crimes that now, unfortunately, are too prevalent throughout the whole of Canada. There is no one within sound of my voice but will admit that there has been a strange laxity in the punishment of offenders against the person while those frequently found pilfering a small sum of money with which to purchase something to eat are punished too severely. The purpose of the Bill is to increase the punishment of tramps or others who commit offences against the person and to take proper care of persons dangerous to be at large. We must recollect that twenty years have elapsed since the Criminal Code was first made law in this country. Times have changed, our circumstances have altered and our population has increased. Throughout this fair Canada of ours crimes against the person of a very objectionable character are rampant. The murderer, the burglar, ravisher, the assaulter, gets off with a small punishment. Unfortunately there is a practice prevailing which is not calculated to mitigate this condition. A tramp who is arrested in a certain county is allowed his liberty by the magistrate on condition that he goes into another county within so many hours.

In the recent Stratford case, where the negro broke into the house and murdered a woman after assaulting her, the negro had been arrested three times within one week before the murder, but had been allowed to go by different magistrates on condition that he removed into another county. The seventh clause of this Bill prohibits a magistrate from allowing a criminal, a vagrant, an idle or a dissolute person to go free on condition that he leaves the county. It also provides that where a vagrant, an idle or a dissolute person has been convicted a second time he shall be sent to a prison or penitentiary provided by the province in which he is charged, there to be detained at hard labour until the inspector certifies that from his course in the penitentiary or from his having learned a trade there, he is, in the opinion of the inspector, able and willing to earn an honest living and not be a menace to his fellows. Where a prisoner, after being liberated, in that way, commits another offence, then in addition to the punishment for that offence, he shall be sentenced to from five to ten years in the penitentiary. Tallack, on the Law of Crime, distinctly lays down that the first act of violence predisposes to a criminal disposition, and that where a person has been convicted three times he should be treated as incorrigible and kept where he will not be a menace to his fellow men. Clause 6 authorizes the police to search tramps, idle and dissolute persons for weapons and prescribe punishments

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT HARBOURS AND PIERS ACT.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 89) to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act.

He said: The object of this Bill is to provide for the leasing of breakwaters, wharfs and piers which are under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, to municipal corporations or railways or shipping companies. The existing law provides that municipal corporations may become the lessees of wharfs. There is no provision as far as shipping companies and railway companies are concerned, and it has been thought advisable that they should have the power to lease wharfs. As a matter of fact such a power exists before the wharfs and piers and transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. There is a provision in the Public Works Act declaring that these wharfs and piers may be leased to shipping and railway companies and to municipal corporations. The present Bill is simply an extension of this power granted under the Public Works Act to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The second clause provides for the commuting of wharfage rates. The collection of the small wharfage fees on some of these minor wharfs becomes a very serious difficulty for the department. We think that if we had the power to commute the fees with the shipping companies it would give us a larger revenue than we now receive.

Motion agreed to, and the Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

OSHAWA HARBOUR, REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. Who is the collector of customs at Oshawa harbour, and what is his salary?
2. What revenue has been collected at the port of Oshawa each year since it was taken over by the government, and from what sources was the revenue derived?
3. In addition to the salary of the collector, what other expenses have been incurred by the government each year in connection therewith since taking over the port?
4. What representations were made to induce the government to invest in the harbour?

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs):

1. George F. Blamey is Collector of Customs at Oshawa. Salary $1,200 a year.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the balance of the question stand?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

KITSILANO INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. COWAN—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Did the hon. the Minister of the Interior on or about the 18th of October, 1908, receive from W. W. B. McInnes a telegram in the words or to the effect of the words following:

'Indian reserve at Kitsilano is within city limits. Have assured electors government would consent to transfer reserve to city for park purposes if other parties consenting. Please wire me if you will consent.'

2. Is so, did the minister reply to the above telegram in the following words:

'Yours of 18th received. Will be glad to arrange as desired regarding Kitsilano reserve provided arrangements can also be made with Indians and provincial government.'

3. If not, what is his reply?

4. Is the government still willing to transfer Kitsilano reserve to the city of Vancouver if arrangements are made with the Indians and the provincial government?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Answered by No. 2.
4. In view of the more recent action of the provincial government in contesting the right of Indians to the land comprised in reserves in that province, it is not considered advisable that any promises should be made at present as to future action by the Dominion government as guardian of the rights of the Indians.

CAPT. D. McPHAIDEN.

Mr. COWAN—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. Has Captain D. McPhaiden, shipping master at the port of Vancouver, resigned or expressed desire to resign?

2. Has the department requested his resignation?

3. Has the department had applications for his position? If so, how many and from whom?

4. Does the hon. minister intend to retire him ?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. No.
2. No.
3. No.
4. The question has not been considered.

MARINE DEPARTMENT PURCHASES.

Mr. COWAN—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. What system has been substituted in the Marine and Fisheries Department for the patronage system?

2. Are tenders always invited? If so, by whom and before whom are these tenders opened?

3. If in any case no tenders are invited, in what cases, and what method is adopted?

4. When tenders are invited, do the notices thereof fix the date of opening?

5. Has the patronage system been discarded in the publication of these notices?

6. If so, what principle governs the choice of newspapers in which to publish?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The system at present in vogue is that adopted by all large industrial concerns, which results in goods being purchased at the lowest possible rates, quantity and quality considered.

2. Yes. By the deputy minister and purchasing and contract agent. When the value of the supplies required exceeds $5,000, tenders are publicly advertised for and are opened in the presence of the minister and deputy mininster. When supplies to the value of less than $5,000 are required tenders are invited by the purchasing and contract agent from the leading wholesale houses and these tenders are opened by him.

3. Tenders are always obtained for construction work and supplies except when the supplies do not exceed the value of $10 to $20.

4. Yes. When publicly advertised for.

5 and 6. Notices calling for tenders are placed in a sufficient number of the leading journals to insure competition.

THE LIGHTHOUSE BOARD.

Mr. COWAN—by Mr. Geo. Taylor—asked:

1. Is it intended that the lighthouse board shall be a permanent institution?

2. If so, has it been reorganized since the report of the Commissioners Fyshe and Bazin?

3. Is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries now a member of it?

4. Who are now the several members of that board?

5. Are any engaged directly or as agents in the shipping or fishing business?

6. To whom are they responsible, to what extent and under what regulations?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. No change is contemplated at present.
2. No.
3. No.
4. Acting deputy minister, G. J. Desbarats, chairman.

Lt.-Col. W. P. Anderson, chief engineer, member.

Commander O. G. V. Spain, wreck commissioner, member.

Acting commissioner of lights, Mr. J. G. Macphail, member.

Hugh A. Allan, Montreal, member, representing shipping interests generally.

Capt. J. W. Troup, Victoria, B.C., member, representing shipping interests on Pacific coast.

Mr. W. H. Noble acts in the absence of the acting commissioner of lights.

Mr. H. H. Fraser, assistant chief engineer, acts in the absence of the chief engineer.

The presidents of the pilotage districts of Montreal and Quebec are ex-officio members of the board when matters affecting their districts are under consideration.

5. Yes. Hugh A. Allan and J. W. Troup are interested in the shipping business.

6. The functions of the lighthouse board are advisory and not administrative. Their recommendations are addressed to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who takes such action upon them as he deems proper.

DEPORTATION OF IMMIGRANTS—EXPENSE.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Does the government keep a special account of the expenses incurred in connection with the deportation of immigrants?

2. What is the amount expended by the government in deporting immigrants for the last four fiscal years, respectively?

3. How many immigrants have been deported since the end of the last fiscal year?

4. What has been the total sum expended by the government in connection with the deportation of immigrants since March 31, 1908?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Yes, since 1st July, 1906.

2. 1904-1905
1905-1906
See answer to No. 1.
1906-1907. $3,086.55.
1907-1908. $12,988.30.

3. 1467. To January 31, 1909.

4. $27,284.36.

THE 'MINTO' AND 'STANLEY.'

Mr. RHODES asked:

1. Were any of the officers and crews of the government steamers 'Minto' and 'Stanley' laid off duty between the 12th and 17th of February, 1909?

2. If so, on what days were they laid off and for how long were they laid off?

3. At whose request were they laid off and for what purpose?

4. Were any substitutes provided for the men laid off?

5. Were the officers and men paid, or will they be paid for the time that they were off duty?

6. If substitutes were provided, are they to be paid by the government?

7. Did the steamers or either of them make a regular trip or trips without the officers and men who were laid off?

8. Could the work of the steamers be carried on properly and safely without the services of the men laid off?

9. Have the men all returned to duty? If so, when?

10. What are the names and positions of the officers and members of the crew laid off?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1. The captains' daily reports show that the 'Stanley' did not make her daily trip on the 12th but remained at Georgetown; and that on the 16th, owing to a blinding northeast snowstorm neither vessel left her dock, the 'Stanley' remaininng at Georgetown and the 'Minto' remaining at Pictou. On the other dates referred to the regular trips were made, excepting the 14th which was Sunday. It may be added in this connection that, following the usual custom and the practice in Great Britain with regard to Royal Navy Government ships, the officers and men of both the 'Stanley' and 'Minto' who were entitled to vote in the election in Pictou county on the 16th had permission to do so.

2. None of the officers or crews were laid off.

3, 4, 5. See No. 2.

6. No necessity for substitutes; none employed.

7. See No. 1 and 2.

8, 9, 10. See No. 2.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, on the 18th of February the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. J. D. Taylor) asked the following questions:

1. Has the government received from the government of British Columbia a resolution adopted by the legislature of that province, praying that application be made to the imperial government for the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the circumstances in connection with Oriental immigration into British Columbia?

2. If so, what was the date of receipt, what acknowledgment was made, and what action has been taken?

3. If no action has been taken, is it the intention of the government to deal with the matter?

These questions were answered in the negative by my hon friend the Secretary of State. My hon. friend was not in the government last year, and he was not aware that a resolution of the kind referred to had been received by the government last year—I think in the month of April—requesting this government to ask the imperial government for such a commission. I have to inform the hon. gentleman now that no action has been taken upon this petition, and that it is not the intention of the government to deal with it. The reasons for this course are: First, because this is a matter with which this parliament has power to deal. Second, because action has already been taken under authority of this parliament which has resulted in effectually controlling immigration from the Orient, as follows: first, immigration from China, by Act of this parliament; second, immigration from Japan, by diplomatic action; third, immigration from India, by representations from this government to the Indian office and Indian authorities.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called, might I ask the Finance Minister when we may expect the revised French treaty to be brought down?

Mr. FIELDING. I could bring down the treaty itself immediately, but as it has been in substance already communicated to the public the treaty itself would add nothing to the store of information, and as there is considerable correspondence connected with it, I thought it would be more convenient to have the correspondence and the treaty brought down together. I will try to have them brought down within a day or two.

LEVEL RAILWAY CROSSINGS.

Mr. LENNOX. Can the Minister of Railways inform the House when we shall probably have legislation introduced dealing with railway crossings. The minister, I presume, is working on it, and it is important that we should have it as soon as possible. I would like also to call the attention of the minister to a minor point. In answering questions yesterday he said:

I am not prepared to say how many crossings the Grand Trunk Railway Company have in Canada.

I would like to call the attention of the minister to the fact that in a return brought down on the 15th or 16th of February last it was stated that the total number of level crossings in Canada was 14,999, and that some 3,000 of these are protected. Mr. Hays is reported to have made the statement, which may have been incorrectly reported in the press, that they have 50,000 crossings on their lines. In one or two papers it is stated that he said 3,000, which is probably in the neighbourhood of the right number. If the minister has the total number of crossings on all the railways in Canada, it seems to me that he could give the information I ask—how many are on the Grand Trunk system and how many of these are protected. I am anxious to have that information for this reason: Mr. Hays estimates the cost of carrying out on the Grand Trunk system the suggestion made in parliament at $50,000,000, which means $16,000 odd for every crossing on their system.

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend will note that I laid on the table a memorandum of the engineer of the Railway Commission, so that when I used the pronoun 'I' it was his 'I' and not mine. I will make inquiry again. As to the introduction of legislation, it is not any easy problem to work out. I expect to introduce something of the kind in a very few days.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. HERRON. On the 1st day of February I obtained an order of the House for information as to how much money the Manitoba 'Free Press' had received from the government in a number of years, and I have heard nothing of it since.

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY. Instructions were given to prepare that information. I will see that it is brought down at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LAKE. I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior if he will kindly expedite a return which was ordered by this House on my motion on the 22nd of February relative to the areas of certain coal and timber lands in the prairie provinces and other information in that respect.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS.

Hon. CHAS. MURPHY (Secretary of State) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient that there should be a department of the civil service of Canada to be called the Department of External Affairs, over which the Secretary of State of Canada shall preside, and that the Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be the deputy head of such department at a salary of $5,000 per annum, and such other officers and clerks as may be requisite for the due administration of such department at such salaries as, under the Civil Service Amendment Act, 1908, are appropriate to the divisions and subdivisions of the service to which such officers and clerks may be assigned.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the Bill to be founded on this resolution does not involve any serious constitutional change. It aims merely at an improvement in the administration of that class of public affairs which relate to matters other than those of purely internal concern. As the House is aware the Government of Canada holds all its official communications extending beyond the bounds of the Dominion, whether with the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the various sister dominions, or with His Majesty's ambassadors to foreign countries, through His Excellency the Governor General; and I might say for the information of the House that it is not proposed to effect any change in this regard by the legislation that is now proposed.

The House is also, I take it, aware, that despatches bearing on all questions of an external character come through His Excellency the Governor General. They are by His Excellency referred to the Privy Council and by the Privy Council they are in turn referred to the particular department which is supposed to be specially concerned with the subject matter of the communication. In due course the minister at the head of that department reports on these despatches to the Governor General in Council and that report, if agreed to by council and approved by His Excellency, is transmitted as the answer of his government. Now, this plan looks simple and in the early days of the Dominion it may have worked satisfactorily. These days however are passed, and with the development of the country and the increase in the number and complexity of its international relations it is felt that the old system is inadequate to meet the existing requirements. Those members of the House who are also members of the Privy Council know that official correspondence does not always lend itself to the simple treatment I have outlined. Sometimes it is difficult to tell at first sight to what department a despatch may relate; sometimes a despatch may relate partly to one department and partly to another or to several departments; and it frequently happens that where despatches of a series are referred to a particular department others of the same series may later on find their way to another department which having no knowledge of the earlier correspondence will be at a loss to decide what shall be done. The government feel that it would be a great advantage if all such communications were sent to a common centre where they could be dealt with according to a uniform system; where there would be a small staff of officials trained in the study of these questions, and where at all times it would be possible to ascertain not only the present position of a question but its history from the very beginning. It is with the object of attaining these results that the present resolution is submitted to the House and that the Bill to be founded upon it later will be introduced.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Secretary of State has not made one thing manifest to my mind, and that is the most important thing of all: Why is it that the Department of the Secretary of State cannot be the common centre to which the hon. gentleman alludes; why cannot that department do all the work that has been outlined in the very brief remarks of the Secretary of State ?

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). The Secretary of State has I think given the reasons why it is deemed advisable at this stage of our national development to have a department of external affairs. All governments have found it necessary to have a department whose only business shall be to deal with relations with foreign countries, and in our judgment Canada has reached a period in her history when we should follow the example of other countries in that respect, as, for example, the Commonwealth of Australia. In the Department of the Interior we have a department which deals with interior affairs and we have also a department which deals with Indian Affairs alone, it having been found long ago that the dealings with our aborigines required the attention of one department. So it is in the Department of Marine and Fisheries where we have practically one department dealing with marine affairs and another dealing with questions appertaining to our fisheries. I suggest to my hon. friend (Mr. R. L. Borden) that we have now reached a standard as a nation which necessitates the establishment of a Department of External Affairs. It is not unnatural that the hon. gentleman should ask, why the machinery of the Department of the Secretary of State is not sufficient for the purpose. We have given this matter a good deal of consideration and the conclusion we have arrived at is that the foreign affairs with which Canada has to deal are becoming of such absorbing moment as to necessitate special machinery. Look at the volume of business of an external character which has been transacted during the past year. We had the French treaty negotiated by us, of course with the concurrence and approval of the imperial authorities; we had another treaty dealing with the long pending question of the interpretation of the treaty of 1818 in relation to our Atlantic fisheries. For the last forty or fifty years this has been a source of contention between the United States and Great Britain although luckily during the last ten or twelve years we have had no serious difficulty with our neighbours in regard to it. However, our fellow subjects in Newfoundland have not been so fortunate and as we know they have had during the last four or five years some very acute differences with the American authorities on the subject of the interpretation of the treaty of 1818.

And, as a consequence, an arbitration has been determined upon to settle the points of difference between Newfoundland and the American authorities. We have been drawn into this contest; we have gone into it, not because we had any controversy of our own, but simply because our fellow-subjects in Newfoundland were in it, and we thought it our duty to give them all the assistance we could in their difficulty. Then, we have had another treaty, also negotiated at Washington, with reference to the fisheries in the inland waters. We have another treaty to mark again the boundaries between Canada and the United States,—not to create any new boundary, but simply to place new land marks to show plainly where the boundary is. Then, we have had another and most important treaty which is now engaging the attention of the American Senate, which, I hope, will come before the Canadian parliament before many days are over, that is, a treaty to settle in a friendly spirit all difficulties which may arise in the boundary waters between Canada and the United States. Then, the House is aware that, from time to time, we have had informal negotiations with Germany in relation to the tariff difficulty we have had with that country. Now this alone will show to the House that Canada has reached a position where foreign relations have assumed a very important character. That is not surprising. We have now a population which cannot be less than six millions and is probably more; we have an annual revenue of $80,000,000 and more; our trade last year grew to the very large figure of $600,000,000. Under such circumstances, I repeat, it is not extraordinary that the volume of foreign affairs has assumed such proportions as to make it indispensable that we should have officers, trained for the purpose, whose business shall be to deal with such questions and such questions alone. Let me call the attention of the House to the character of the communications we received and which are to be classed as belonging to foreign relations. All our communications pass through the colonial office or the ambassador of His Majesty at Washington or elsewhere, and then come to the Governor General. From the Governor General, they are sent to the Privy Council—

Mr. FOSTER. The Secretary of State is it not?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, to the Privy Council. It is not our intention to disturb that. It is better that the representative of the Sovereign should receive all communications relating to foreign affairs, and it is natural that by him they should be sent to the Privy Council. At present, from the Privy Council, they are sent to the department to which they relate.

Mr. FOSTER. How is that distribution made? Through the Secretary of State?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, by the Privy Council itself. All the despatches are sent from the Governor General to the Privy Council; the clerk of the Privy Council places them before the council, and by the council they are assigned to the department to which they relate. But this is done sometimes in a hurry, and therefore it happens that despatches may go to the wrong department. For, my hon. friend will understand, ministers sitting at the council board have not the time to look into these matters themselves, and must depend upon their officers. The intention is that we should have a department which will be a department of Foreign Affairs and will deal with nothing else. All the despatches will be sent by the Privy Council to that department.

Mr. FOSTER. They will come first to the Governor General, then to the Privy Council, then to the department?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, the Department of External Affairs. There they are docketed, they are digested and prepared.

Mr. FOSTER. How prepared?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A memorandum is made—that is how I would work it out.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They would be abstracted—a precis made.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Very good, they would be abstracted, then sent to the proper department for information. The Department of External Affairs would receive this information, digest it and draft an answer to be sent to the minister and by him submitted to the council for its action.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask one question. Will this department take up despatches, let us say, relating to a fisheries question, and prepare an answer to them and submit it to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. Suppose that a despatch relating to some foreign affair comes to the Privy Council—suppose that it relates to this very fisheries question, of which I spoke a moment ago—the Atlantic fisheries. That despatch will go to the Department of External Affairs. I would like to have a history of every question made and kept up from day to day, so that the minister in charge, might, in a moment, understand what the question is and be prepared to advise the Governor General as to the policy that ought to be followed. If it is necessary to get information from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, it will go to that department. The Department of External Affairs will thus get all the technical details upon which to base a conclusion. It will also prepare a memorandum or draft of despatch, or answer, to be laid before council, on which a policy can be adopted. Take, for instance, a question that was familiar to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) when he was in office—the question of the seal fisheries of the Pacific ocean. This is a most complicated question, one which comes to the front from time to time and may come up again. Suppose we receive from the British Ambassador a despatch on this question. This despatch will be referred to the Department of External Affairs. All the information upon the question is collected, so that we can deal intelligently with the proposition which may be made to us. It may be, it will be sent to the Marine and Fisheries Department to get the information needed to deal with it. And when the matter is in proper shape, the Department of External Affairs will prepare a memorandum for the minister.

Mr. FOSTER. Which minister?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Secretary of State, the head of the department. He will bring it before council and by council the matter will be dealt with. This is the only reasonable way in which we can deal with these matters. At present, these questions are carried to different departments, there is no department in which we can collect a history of the several questions, and no officers trained to give us the advice we need in order to deal with these questions. When I was in England some years ago, I took pains to learn how these things were dealt with there. I found that in the Colonial office and in the Foreign office there are officers especially trained to keep up all the information needed to deal with the questions that may arise, keeping up the history of each question from day to day, so that, in a moment, the ministers may know where they are. I may be asked—I take it that such is the effect of the question asked by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden): Why not have this done by the Secretary of State's department? Why have another department? I have simply to answer that, in such experience of the government, as I have had leads me to believe that we have attained such development as a nation that in order to deal with these matters, we must have a department for the purpose. It is not intended it shall be a very numerous department, a very heavy department; I think the officers at present in the service can do the necessary work. But I think it is essential that we should have this department by itself, with nothing else to do but to give their special attention, and all their attention, to these matters alone.

Mr. FOSTER. I have been listening to the Prime Minister for information. What I want to get at, if possible, is the modus operandi which it is proposed to employ, and something of the extent and cost which that modus operandi will involve. From the remarks made by the Secretary of State, who did not go into it very extensively, I could not get into my mind just the method which it was proposed to proceed upon to accomplish the object. The Prime Minister has gone more into detail, and he has opened up what appears to him to be the method which should be pursued. Now, no one is more happy than myself, than the members on this side of the House, in common with every other citizen of Canada, at what may be the indication of Canada's extending business, not only internally, but with foreign countries, with the sister colonies, and with Great Britain. But the Prime Minister must not try to make us believe that there never were any external relations of importance until within these last few years. Canada has seldom been without her outside vexing questions, that have been from time to time of greater or less importance. It is not necessary to mention them, they come to the mind of every person who has had 25 or 30 years experience in public matters in this country. We have such questions now, we always will have them, and it is natural to suppose that they will be more extended in proportion as we grow, and the means of communication with the world becomes more rapid.

Now let us see what my hon. friend proposes, and inquire whether his idea will work out or not. It is not proposed to make any constitutional change; we are thankful for that. The despatch, when it enters Canada, will go to the Governor General as at the present time; the Governor General will then put that despatch into the possession of the Privy Council as quickly as possible, doing that because the head of the Privy Council is the premier of the country, who should first have notice of these despatches. They go to the Privy Council under the present and the past method of action. It has been the duty of the Privy Council to send these particular despatches each to the Minister of the department which was concerned. It is not a difficult matter surely for the ministers around the table in the Privy Council almost immediately to decide as to whether such and such a despatch affects the Department of Marine and Fisheries, or affects the Department of Agriculture or affects any other department. It shows on its face the subject matter, and the moment subject matter is shown, it goes by consequence to the minister in charge of the department in which those matters are carried on. It may take a little time, it may call for a little discernment, but I do not think the difficulties in that respect are at all large. Under the proposed plan, the Prime Minister will be rid of all that difficulty, of having any initial discussion or investigation with regard to despatches that come in, by immediately bundling them off to the Secretary of State. There may be an advantage in that in one way, there may be a disadvantage in another. It is an advantage that every member of the Council should have a constant and current knowledge of whatever is coming in from external sources affecting the business of Canada, that it should enter the Privy Council, and after it has passed through this process of digestion, come again before the Privy Council for ultimate decision. It may be some disadvantage that the matters which will receive the least consideration first will be sent as a matter of course and form to the Secretary of State, and therefore the ministers individually will not become cognizant of them, or have the curent knowledge of which I speak.

Now you get a despatch with reference, we will suppose, to the Pacific fisheries, and you send it off without consideration to the Secretary of State. What has this new department under the Secretary of State to do with it? The minister says it must be docketed, registered, an abstract made of it then it is to be sent—by whom? By the Secretary of State. Where? To the proper department. Is the Secretary of State a better judge of the department to which each despatch should be sent than would be the Prime Minister and the Council hearing the despatch and becoming cognizant of it? There does not seem to be much advantage gained in that respect. But there are despatches coming in which are confidential, which belong primarily to the Prime Minister alone, which sometimes never go beyond the purview of the Prime Minister, or may be one or two of his most responsible colleagues. What is to be done with those despatches? Are they to be bundled off to the Secretary of State, put into the hands of his docketers, and abstracters and registered? Then what becomes of their confidential nature? Does not the Prime Minister see that neither he nor his Council can divest themselves of the necessity of looking at those despatches in the first instance, in order to separate, if nothing else, what are purely confidential and what are partly confidential, from those which are matters of course? But let that pass. Now that the Secretary of State has had them docketed, and bracketed and abstracted, he looks them over and says, I am of opinion that this goes to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or it goes to the Department of Agriculture, or it goes to the Minister of Justice—some matter of international law, or something of that kind; and he takes it upon himself to decide. The mistake, if there be one, is the mistake of one man, the judgment being the judgment of one man; in the other case, the judgment being the judgment of the Council, the mistake would be more rare in the occurrence. Can your Secretary of State be at the office always? What happens? As in every other department, it happens that one or two men in the department are the men who will actually direct affairs, they will be the persons who will do the distribution, and who will consequently send these things on their way, rightly or wrongly.

But having got that far—and I am anxious just to carry it out and see where it ends—having got that far, what does the Secretary of State say? His boss man, with $5,000 a year, tells him: This is to go to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it is a very important matter with reference to the seal fisheries of the Pacific, and it must go to that minister. What does it go to the minister for? Does the Secretary of State say to the minister: Here is a very important despatch about the seal fisheries; I want you to give me all the information of your department with reference to that matter, get your men to work, give me the abstracts, send me the papers, I want them here as quickly as possible, the Governor General is in haste to have an answer. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries does—what? Puts himself into the hands of his officers, sets his clerks to work, gathers together all the information he can, bundles it up, and sends it over to the Secretary of State. But the Secretary of State knows no more about it than the man in the moon, comparatively speaking. He bundles it over to his $5,000 officers and their clerks. They are the men who are to write the despatch, says the Prime Minister. I do not believe they are the men who ought to write the despatch. It strikes me that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who knows the business from the foundation up, historically and otherwise, in whose department are all the facts as well as all the history, is the man who has to determine the policy and is the man who has to lay down the tenor of the despatch and submit it to his colleagues. Now it is proposed that he is not to do it. He is to send over the information and these experts in the Secretary of State's Department are to prepare the despatch in answer to the one that was received and lay it before your Privy Council. That is the programme, as I understand it. If that is the programme what must you have? You must have a replica of every department of the government in the Department of the Secretary of State, men who are as able as the ministers of the departments are, men who are just as well up in their history as the ministers of the departments; consequently you are to have, if you are going to have an effective service, a very costly and numerous service. But even though you have that, a minister says I am the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I have studied my department, I know its history and its circumstances and consequently I would feel as though I were the one who was to go to council with the kind of despatch which should go in answer to the despatch which had come. Now, I am simply to be told to send my material over to this new bureau, and if one of these gentlemen wants to know something that he does not know, tote over there, coach him up and tell him how things are, what rocks he has to avoid, and what clear water he has to take as he sails along in this despatch business. I believe that difficulties and practical difficulties will be encountered in that respect which I doubt if the right hon. gentleman has thoroughly weighed. The objection I have to this system is that it is not effective unless you make a most thorough, expensive and expert system, and have in the department some man who knows as much about every department in the government as does the responsible minister himself in reference to its history and circumstances. The despatch comes back from the Secretary of State but it is not gotten up by the Secretary of State. He comes and goes. He is here to-day and there to-morrow. It is the permanent man who will do it, it will be the bureau man who will do that. When that despatch comes before the Privy Council there sits the minister whose department is concerned. The despatch is read, he has had no guiding hand in it and he may not have been consulted. He may say: I do not think it is a proper reply to be made; I do not think this bureau man has got the spirit of this matter. What is to be done? You cannot pass it against the minister. You will do what you might have done at first much better, it seems to me; that is, you will put it in the minister's hands, then as you will necessarily have to put it in the minister's hands in the last resort and let him take hold of it and give you the idea of the department. No outside bureaucrat can have the atmosphere of the department who has not been brought up to the work and who does not know the history of it. I think that will go without any contradiction at all. It is impossible to live in South Africa and have an appreciation of the air of Alberta or of Saskatchewan. You cannot do it, and no simple clerk, no extra well paid clerk in the bureau can have the atmosphere of the department such as that which clings to it for fifty years and is the product of the experience, history and the knowledge of its men during that time. When I came, a boy almost, into the Department of Marine and Fisheries, I knew nothing of the department more than its name. Upon whom did I depend? At that moment I leaned strictly on one of the most capable deputy ministers we ever had. He had his faults, as every deputy minister has. That was our late lamented friend, Mr. Wm. Smith. He had the whole history of the Department of Marine and Fisheries in his head. There was not a subject you could bring up in regard to which he could not at first give you his version and point to the material relating to it which carried out his version of it. You never can have your expert in this bureau with the head on him, with the atmosphere and with the amount of knowledge that the man brought up in the department for fifteen or thirty, or it may be, forty years has; and so that is why I think that this matter will not come to a good conclusion in the end. Yes, we want system. Everything that refers to the Department of Marine and Fisheries should be registered, docketed, bracketed in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries own department, to be at his right hand when he wants it for any purpose whatever. Everything that you want docketed in reference to this matter can be done by two expert men in the Privy Council, attached to the Prime Minister himself who can keep what is necesary to the Privy Council—a record of all the transactions under that head. That can be done by two or three good business-like, expert men in the office of the Privy Council as well. In this I am not opposing our extension; no one wants to do that. I am not saying that these matters are not multiplying, but if they are multiplying they are multiplying by additions in each department, each taking its quota of added burden, but each department is well able to do this work and the Lord knows every one of them has a pay-roll big enough to do it. So, I repeat what I said at first. It seems that you add but another to the percolating media through whose hands this business would run, through which it would retrace itself until it came out at the same point at which it went in. You have a more simple, economical and thorough manner of dealing with this matter if you attach a little body of expert clerks to the Privy Council, put them under the Prime Minister, where, I think, these things ought to be and let them do all this work of keeping the records so that the Prime Minister and council, when they want to know the history of an affair, shall have the records and the abstracts under their own hand to show them what they need to know instead of having to hunt through the different departments to find this information. I just state these things because I want to see what we are going into before we go into it, and to see whether it will be a change for the better or not.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words upon this question before it goes through.

The record that is to be found in the library of parliament is rather interesting when contrasted with the proposal which is being made to the House to-day. I remember very distinctly that years ago there was, from this side of the House, a strong attack made upon the Conservative government of the day because of the number of the departments we had in the Canadian government. The example of the United States was set before us of a country with something like 65,000,000 or 75,000,000 people running the government with only six departments, or seven at the outside, one of which was supposed to be an artificial department, while they said that in Canada we had to have eleven or twelve. I remember Mr. John Charlton vigorously attacking the government for it, and I remember some hon. gentlemen who are to-day in the House doing the same thing and saying that for the size of the country we were entirely too extravagant, that we were burdened by too much government, that we were not economical, that we were spreading out and that we were making the government very much more expensive.

That debate occurred upon a proposal to establish the two controllerships of customs and inland revenue, which resembled, in one respect, under-secretaries of state in the imperial parliament. The controllerships did not carry the full rights or salaries of ministers of the Crown. It was proposed that the controllers should be paid $4,000 each, but that proposal was denounced as unwarrantable extravagance, the country was told that the government were spending money at a most reckless and unjustifiable rate. The present government, however, had not been long in power before they raised the two controllerships to full-fledged departments with a minister of the Crown at the head of each, and with full departmental staffs, with highly paid officials. Then they established the Department of Trade and Commerce, which they claimed was justified because of the expansion of business in the country. It is now proposed to establish practically another department to be called the Department of the Exterior, to carry on correspondence with foreign countries and perhaps with the mother country relating to business that ought to be carried on through the various existing departments. It is only a year since we were told there was need for some one, who might be regarded as an expert, to look after this foreign correspondence, and Mr. Mackenzie was proposed by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself as a suitable person. Within a year the same right hon. gentleman informs the House that it is desired to create a new department to do that work. What is going to become of Mr. Mackenzie? This is the very work, as I understood, that he was to do. It was necessary to have an expert and he was the man of experience who might be regarded as an expert. Has Mr. Mackenzie not fulfilled the requirements of the situation? All we have heard about him is that he has been fully equal to his task, in every respect. Is the Secretary of State so busy that he cannot attend to this work, that his department is overburdened? I have always understood that it was an ornamental or supernumerary department, not having very much to do. Yet the Secretary of State is to have another staff under him to carry on this work. Before this government came into power they said that the ten or eleven departments then existing were too many, but to-day they have fourteen departments and one or two sub-departments, and they propose to create another, entailing increased expense which cannot be justified. The expense that they denounced a few years ago as entirely unjustifiable is now, they say, absolutely necessary. If it is necessary to have a new department to carry on that correspondence, then the existing departments must be overworked. Are they? The country do not think they are. Some, I think, are overworked, but there are many others that are not, and it is generally understood that the Department of the Secretary of State is not one of those which are overworked.

Another grave objection to this proposal is that the heads of the existing departments will not be in a position to properly answer inquiries by members of this House in reference to their departments, because correspondence which should be conducted by the heads of the various departments will be conducted by the head of this new department. Thus, for instance, if we ask a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he will say: Oh, that information is not in my department, it is in the possession of the Department of the Exterior. The head of the new department will really have the right to lay down the policy of the other departments, to become the diplomat of the government. I understand it will be the duty of the head of the new department to prepare a reply to any communication from abroad and that that reply will be submitted to the Privy Council, without being submitted to the minister of the department concerned.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It goes to the Privy Council.

Mr. SPROULE. And not to the department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Then I cannot understand how any minister of a department can keep in touch with the line of policy in his department, for which he is responsible, if correspondence relating to it is to be answered by some one else on lines suggested by that other person's judgment. I think it will result in confusion and will stultify the ministers in their administration. When a new minister enters a department he sometimes proposes changes in its policy; he may be more enterprising than his predecessor and lay down a distinct line of policy, the result of mature deliberation, as has been done by the Postmaster General in several lines, and by the Minister of Railways. My contention is that he cannot keep in proper touch with his department under the system now proposed and cannot be in a position to properly answer questions relating to his department that may be put to him by members of this House. To summarize, the creation of the new department will give rise to confusion and prevent the existing departments from being as valuable as they are to-day. It will mean a new department, an increase of expense, a new staff of highly paid officials and will involve an acknowledgment that the departments that are to-day charged with the responsibility of that work are not equal to the task imposed upon them. I do not think that is very creditable to the government. It means discrediting the man the government got authority to appoint only a year ago to carry on the foreign correspondence, and keep in touch with it, and be prepared to give any department information as to any business that might come under his notice. Mr. Mackenzie's business is to be done away with and the Privy Council is to be shorn of a good deal of its important work. The clerk of the Privy Council and the assistant clerk were in the past supposed to be valuable men, but they will not be so in the future. Taken all in all, this is another evidence of the extravagance of the present government, of that expansion which a few years ago they declared was entirely unjustifiable. It is an evidence that there is something wanting when the affairs of this government cannot be carried on by fourteen departments and one or two supernumeraries, and they want to appoint another to help them to do it.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, I suppose that on this occasion, in considering the resolution which has been proposed, the principle involved rather than any question of detail is the subject of discussion, though necessarily details must also be taken into account. Of the necessity for some step of this nature I am entirely satisfied. The necessity for it has been impressing itself upon my mind for more than two years past, and I think a consideration of one or two actual incidents of public business will convince any one that some such course must be taken if the business affairs of this country are to be carried on in proper or even in orderly fashion. The relations which subsist between the Department of Justice, or the Minister of Justice of the day, and other departments or other ministers are very similar to those which subsist between an advising counsel or solicitor and his clients. Of necessity the Department of Justice is consulted about many matters of daily routine or of ordinary business in the different departments of the country's service, and on that account, in the disposition which is made of despatches such as has been outlined by the Prime Minister, it is very frequently the case that a despatch relating to some question of a legal character must necessarily go not only to the department which is acquainted with the facts of the matter to be dealt with, but also to the Department of Justice. For that reason it was not long after I had taken charge of the Department of Justice, two years and seven months ago, that different incidents connected with external affairs of Canada came to my knowledge, which impressed me with the feeling that there ought to be and must be some change made in the present manner of conducting business of that character, if our business was to be properly carried on. Let me mention one of the incidents to which I have alluded. Every one knows of the seizure some years ago of a Canadian ship by the government of Uruguay. The 'Agnes Donahue' was seized by that republic upon a charge of poaching within territorial waters, and the men on the vessel were imprisoned for some time. A special messenger, a legal gentleman of the province of Nova Scotia, from which province the ship's owners and the ship's crew in the main came, was sent specially by this government to South America in an effort to arrange the matter and secure some kind of settlement, with the result that the ship's crew were liberated. But the ship's owners have not to this day received any compensation for the seizure of their ship, and there is in consequence a claim for such compensation against the government of that republic being still promoted by the government of Great Britain urged thereto under representations from the government of Canada. Despatches in relation to that matter are continually passing through the British Foreign Office and Colonial Office to Canada. The matter involved is necessarily of legal character. These despatches very frequently, two years and a half ago, were being referred to the Department of Justice simultaneously with a like reference of the same despatches to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The Department of Marine and Fisheries, so to speak, was a client, and the Department of Justice was its legal adviser. When endeavouring to take up the matter and get acquainted with the details, so as to be in a position to advise upon it and deal with it, I found what I might without impropriety call an enormous file of correspondence and documents of one kind and another with reference to it already accumulated in the Department of Justice. After acquainting myself with the circumstances as well as I was able, I was in a position to frame some sort of recommendation or answer to the reference that had come to me from council. When that recommendation was brought up in council and discussed, I found that it did not altogether meet the views of my colleague in charge of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. A consultation took place between us in consequence, a consultation which, if it was necessary, might just as well have been had beforehand, and after we had come to an agreement in the matter, we thought we could unite upon a recommendation as to the course which ought to be taken. In the course of that consultation, I ascertained that there was a file of at least equal size in the Department of Marine and Fisheries on this subject, and some remark led to the discovery that in the Department of the Secretary of State there was a third portentous file, which in the course of the months had grown up about this affair. If these despatches seemed to be merely of a formal character, not calling for determination of any line of policy and not involving any question of doubt they might be referred simply to the State Department, and might be answered from that department as a matter of routine business, without going to any other department at all. The result was that in that matter, which after all was simply a good sized lawsuit, there were no fewer than three files in three departments each of which had to some extent been engaged with it. It struck me that was not business-like and that it ought to be changed. Since then I have been discussing this situation with my colleagues and in that spirit urging that some such steps as now proposed should be taken.

Let me mention just one other occurrence of entirely different character but which illustrates the imperfections of the present system. Emergencies arise; during the absence of the First Minister and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the Colonial Conference in 1907 there arose an occurrence of serious danger, I think I may say, out of the seizure of a ship in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. It was in midsummer; the only ministers here were the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself on the day that necessity for action took place. It was certainly a serious enough situation that faced us. Neither of us knew anything of similar occurrences which had taken place as we afterwards found out and which of course would be well known to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. There was necessity for prompt action; it was a situation involving a very great deal of anxiety at the time. Happily all went well, perhaps more by good fortune than by good management. I am thankful to say the situation never even came to the knowledge of the industrious newspaper reporter, and nobody knew anything about it. Now, if there had been a department of external affairs with a permanent secretary or staff acquainted with all business of a nature such as I have in mind, the difficulty which then was of most serious character would have been to a very large extent obviated. There would have been some one who would have known the current of affairs in connection with matters of that sort and who would have knowledge of precedents which would have been most useful to guide. In this case the only thing to be done was to get all the knowledge possible by personal application to different clerks in different departments and to go, as I did go, from department to department trying to find out things without letting anybody know why I wanted the information. It was a matter that I felt it was of utmost importance should not become public property, and the going from clerk to clerk in different departments to gather piecemeal bits of information without letting it be known what the difficulty was that had sprung up, was I believe not in the interest of the public business of the country. The matter directly involved foreign relations ; it directly involved circumstances which if there had not been friendly relations existing might very well enough have led in our dealings with other countries to an actual rupture of friendliness. Under these circumstances I became strongly impressed with the necessity of some such step as is now proposed. So far as I was able to follow the observations of the hon. member (Mr. Foster) I did not gather that he objects to the proposal in itself, but rather that he thinks the details of the scheme so far as outlined might be improved upon if a small staff of expert assistants were attached to the First Minister himself. I may say at once that so far as I am concerned that step would meet with my entire approval. That is however, the merest question of detail. The one important thing in the scheme now proposed is the permanent head who by this resolution is to be appointed with a salary of $5,000, the same as any other deputy. He will, of course, like any other deputy, be acting under the superintendence of some minister. That minister, whatever department he may have in charge, may be here to-day and gone to-morrow, and that may be so even though he be the First Minister. In that respect it is no difference whether the minister to whose department this deputy of external affairs is attached is the First Minister or any of his colleagues. This work is analogous to work of the Department of State; and in other countries we have such duties discharged by the Secretary of State. It seemed not improper ; it seemed the best course to attach these duties to the Department of the Secretary of State. You will have then a gentleman appointed to be the permanent Under Secretary of State for External Affairs. As time goes on he will become saturated, I hope, with the atmosphere or the spirit of that department which the hon. gentleman so eloquently described. His usefulness will, of course, increase with time, and if we can secure, as I think we may very possibly be able to secure in the original appointee to that position if this measure becomes law, a gentleman of experience, expert, able in the discharge of just such duties, so much the better, because we shall have a good foundation laid whereupon to build. With such a permanent official appointed, he need not in the beginning at any rate be surrounded by an army of clerks. I should hope that two or three, or at most four or five efficient assistants in the way of clerks assigned to work under him, may be entirely sufficient for the carrying on of the business of this department. The additional expense to the country will simply be the $5,000 which the under secretary will receive together with the remuneration to be paid to any new clerks who may be required for the service of this Department of External Affairs.

It is very possible, I think, that, by assigning to these duties of this department some of the present clerks in the State Department, who, perhaps, could be spared, it will be unnecessary to call for the services of even the few additional clerks that I have referred to. But, once you get a department established of this character, you have that one man, the permanent under-secretary to whom I have referred, who is charged with responsibility for these things—he and his Minister the Secretary of State. Take one of the cases I have mentioned by way of illustration: A despatch comes with regard to which either the permanent under-secretary or the temporary minister in charge feels that he cannot make the answer to council without consulting somebody else. If it is a formal matter, if it is a matter he knows all about, and he feels that he does not need to go to any of his colleagues for purposes of consultation, he prepares his answer to council at once and that is an end of that transaction. But if it is a matter of more difficult character, if, for instance, it concerns the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the policy of that department, and also involves some question of international law,—what then should be done? Either that deputy has a personal conference, if he wants it, or communicates by correspondence, with the department interested, or the minister himself sees his colleague on the subject. The most harmonious relations, I am very glad to state, exist between the members of the government, and we can see each other with the utmost freedom, and with the utmost pleasure, at any time and discuss any matter of the country's business. It is not of necessity that there should be even the formality of the writing of letters; the ministers who are interested in the matter can meet, and in half-an-hour, or, perhaps in five minutes, settle upon the line of answer to be sent,—if not upon the wording, at all events upon the substance, of what is to be done with reference to this despatch. Instructions are given to the deputy head, who, probably with his own pen, will frame an answer, he being in a better position, from superior knowledge of the craftsmanship, to frame a despatch than even the minister himself. And, as a result, you get the best way of handling matters which otherwise are more or less complicated and might occasion difficulty and trouble. I do not apprehend, if this resolution is carried and the Bill to be founded upon it is passed, any continuation of the practical difficulties which I have already, myself, experienced on several occasions, and which in my mind have given rise to a feeling that some step of this character is absolutely necessary. There ought to be some one man at least who would have all the strings in his hands, would know what had passed before and would see to it that what was going out from this government was not inconsistent with what had gone before but was in continuation of the general line of policy which, in regard to dealing with any particular matter that may have come up, had already been adopted by the government.

Mr. SPROULE. What do you propose to do now with the officer who was assigned to that duty last year?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. When we get into committee, I will answer that. Motion agreed to and House went into committee.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, I have not to find fault with the discussion that has taken place—far from it; I think it is quite apropos. I am very glad of the observations addressed to the House by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster). I suppose that my hon. friend from North Toronto will not dispute this—that a Department of External Affairs is a necessity of government I suppose that he will not dispute this also —that, some time or other whether now or later, there must be in this government, as in all other governments, a Department of External Affairs. If my hon. friend agrees with this—and I do not think he can dispute it—I think he has answered all the criticisms which he has offered to the House. The only question which might arise, in my opinion, is, whether or not the time has come when such a department is necessary. If you tell me that Canada has not yet reached such a point in its development that necessity arises for this department, that is a question that we can debate. But if you tell me that under no circumstances should such a department be created, I say that that is a proposition which you cannot maintain, and, I am sure, on reflection, will not maintain. I look upon it as a matter of necessity that when a government which has reached the condition that Canada has reached, such a department cannot be dispensed with.

Mr. FOSTER. It means that Canada must carry on some external relations?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It means that Canada has to carry on external relations——

Mr. FOSTER. What has she been doing for the last forty years?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not only for the last eleven years but for the last forty years, and even before confederation,—every government must carry on such relations. But I believe that the time has come when there must be a department to carry on these relations, because the business cannot efficiently be done otherwise. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asks: What about Mr. Mackenzie? Mr. Mackenzie will remain where he was placed last year. He is in the Department of the Privy Council, and his duty is to look after the foreign and imperial correspondence. He will have precisely the same duties to perform as he is performing at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us briefly what Mr. Mackenzie has been doing?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He looks after the imperial and foreign correspondence. When it is brought to him, he has to enter it in a book, docket it and distribute it. That is the duty of Mr. Mackenzie.

Mr. FOSTER. He is attached now to the Privy Council.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He remains attached to the Privy Council. But the department we have now in mind is not only a clerical one, is not only to perform the clerical work which Mr. Mackenzie has to perform. My hon. friend understands very well what will be the duties of this department: There is to be a permanent official the Under Secretary of State for external affairs, whose duty and business would be to keep posted from day to day on the external history of Canada as it progresses. Despatches come relating, let us say, one to the Justice Department, one to the Marine and Fisheries, one to the Post Office, one to the Customs and one to the Interior. They are distributed to these departments, and there they are lost—that is, so far as the other departments are concerned; each minister has the despatch that has been sent to him but that is all. We want a department in which the history of all these despatches will be kept and followed from day to day.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Mackenzie not doing that?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is doing that simply as a clerical department.

Mr. J. A. CURRIE. I wish to say to the Prime Minister that it would help us a great deal in arriving at a decision on this matter if we had statistics of the number of these despatches received daily, or monthly, and the necessity for the department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is a very fair question. I have not the statistics to-day, I will have them at the next stage of this Bill; I shall be happy to bring down, all the statistics the hon. gentleman has mentioned. Now, my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) said a moment ago that when he came to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, being, as he said, a boy, and knowing nothing of the business of the department, he had to rely upon a very able man, Mr. Wm. Smith, and he paid him a very deserved compliment. But I may say to my hon. friend that after the experience which he has acquired in thirty years of public life, and with all the attention he has given to it, were he again to return to-morrow to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, he would still largely have to rely upon his deputy minister. It is not expected of a minister that he should carry in his mind all the details of the office, which have to be gathered by the deputy minister. The time of the minister is too precious, he would not be able to do justice to his department if he were compelled to keep in mind all the details which properly come before the deputy minister. I may say to my hon. friend that he would need such a deputy minister as he had under him before. I may say to him that when I came into office, now twelve years ago, and when despatches began to come in relating to foreign affairs, I had not in the Department of the Privy Council any official who could inform me, or upon whom I could rely; I had to go to another officer, who is fortunately well qualified for that position, I have no hesitation in giving his name, Mr. Pope, the under secretary—and get from him all the information I needed relating to those foreign affairs, before I could come to a decision and advise my colleagues, or His Excellency the Governor General, in relation thereto. It is therefore indispensable, I think, that at this time we should have what every other government has, a department of external affairs, where everything relating to our foreign relations may be found, and that instead of their being scattered as at present in the various departments, they should be concentrated in one department, where we can get them at a moment's notice, a department in charge of a man who is acquainted, not only with that department, but with the affairs of all the departments in so far as they relate to external affairs.

Mr. HAGGART. What are the statutory powers you are going to give to this new department?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They are found in this section:

The Secretary of State as head of the said department shall have the conduct of all official communications between the government of Canada and the government of any other country in connection with the external affairs of Canada, and shall be charged with such other duties as may be from time to time assigned to the said department by order of the Governor in Council in relation to such external affairs, or to the conduct and management of international or intercolonial negotiations, so far as the same may appertain to the government of Canada.

Mr. JOHN HAGGART. These are large powers. Every confidential report will go to that department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It will be in the discretion of the Governor in Council to say whether any confidential report shall go to the department or not; some may go there and others may not. But the hon. gentleman knows very well that there must be some department to which even confidential despatches may be assigned. The one thing I want to impress upon the committee is the necessity for the government of Canada to have now a department in which the information which is now scattered over all the departments, may be concentrated for the advantage of the ministers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The right hon. gentleman spoke of a committee of external affairs as a necessity of government. The history of this country during the past forty-two years will show that his words could not be taken in their literal acceptation. If the right hon. gentleman meant that some official activity, some departmental work in connection with external affairs, is a necessity of this government, then we would all be inclined to agree with him. Now, I do not find any fault with the object which is aimed at by this legislation, I am not disposed to quarrel with that. The right hon. gentleman said that the object of the creation of this new department was three-fold: First, the allotment of despatches; secondly, the creation of a history of each subject to which reference can be made from time to time; and thirdly, the preparation of a draft despatch in reply to any communication from abroad. Those were the three objects, and I regard them as very desirable and necessary objects. But I have yet to see that it is necessary to create a new department for that purpose. Let me point out to the right hon. gentleman what he is doing. In the United States at the present time there are nine departments. One of these is the Department of the Secretary of State, which deals with all foreign relations; and one would think that if the Department of the Secretary of State in the United States can deal with, and tabulate, and prepare the history of these matters connected with the foreign relations of a population of nearly 100,000,000, the Department of the Secretary of State in Canada could do the same thing for our foreign relations, which are very limited indeed as compared with those of the United States. If in the Commonwealth of Australia, where they have only eight departments, and where the Minister of External Affairs is the Prime Minister of the commonwealth, they can get along without a Secretary of State, it does seem to me a piece of unnecessary machinery in this country to have, not only a Department of Secretary of State, but a new Department of External Affairs as well. In other words, to carry on the machinery of government in this respect for the people of Canada, requires not only the machinery which is sufficient for ninety millions of people in the United States, but also the machinery that carries on the same governmental work for the government of Australia. I was much struck with the history of affairs given by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, but I would not be disposed to draw from his remarks exactly the same conclusion which he did, although he did not very much dispute the argument which was put forward by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). The difficulty in the whole matter has been that you have, not too little, but too much machinery. You have three departments getting in each others way, the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the Department of Justice, in the illustration which was given to us by the Minister of Justice. What you want is not more machinery, but better organization. You have any amount of machinery now. My hon.

friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) referred to the fourteen departments of government He was altogether too modest. There are more than fourteen departments. Can the Secretary of State tell me how many departments of government there are now?

Mr. MURPHY. There are fourteen departments of government.

Mr. SPROULE. Seventeen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. For example, there is a Department of the Interior and a Department of Indian Affairs.

Mr. MURPHY. Both under one minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman is speaking of ministers. I was speaking of departments, and my hon. friend from Grey was referring to departments. I say there are a great many more than fourteen departments. After all, the creation of something that you call a Department of External Affairs will amount to nothing. It is the organization which you must create for the purpose of coping with this work that will count in the end. I am absolutely unconvinced by anything in the argument put forward by the Prime Minister and by the Secretary of State that the mere creation of this department is going to advance you one single step. Take, for instance, the illustration put very cogently by the Minister of Justice this afternoon: What should have been done with the case of the 'Agnes Donoghue?' What, in the name of common sense, had the Department of Marine and Fisheries to do with it? Can any human being conceive why the Department of Marine and Fisheries should have interfered with that? Suppose a British subject went to some other country and undertook to enter into a railway enterprise there, suppose that he obtained a charter for a railway and that the government there confiscated his undertaking in a manner unwarranted by international law and complaint was made to this government; would the complaint go to the Department of Railways and Canals for Canada? You might just as seriously send that to the Department of Railways and Canals as to send this particular complaint to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. It should have gone to the Secretary of State and some minister whether before or after the creation of this department, must, in a case of that kind, invoke the aid of the Department of Justice. The creation of this new Department of External Affairs does not advance the work of government in this respect one jot or iota as far as I can understand.

I do not for one moment lift my voice against the expenditure of $5,000, or a larger sum of money, for doing the very necessary work that ought to be done in connection with our administration, as far as foreign affairs are concerned, but I do protest against the unnecessary multiplication of the departments of the government. What will it amount to? You create this department, that department, and the other department, and then you create this branch, that branch, and the other branch, when, as the returns brought down this very session indicate to this House and the country, you do not even go to the trouble to indicate to the clerks of these departments what their duties are. Return after return has been brought down and laid upon the table of this House indicating that nearly every department of this government has, up to the present time, absolutely failed to comply in any sense with the legislation of this parliament passed in July last. The creation of departments amounts to nothing, and the creation of branches of departments amounts to nothing, but the creation of a live system of organization in any department of the government does count for something and that is after all what the Prime Minister himself must desire in this matter.

There is one other circumstance to which I would like to invite attention, and which to me has seemed important in view of what has been suggested to me this afternoon by hon. gentlemen who have been members of an administration, a privilege which, to the present time, it has not been my fortune to enjoy. In the Commonwealth of Australia, situated, in so far as Great Britain is concerned, very much as we are, the Minister of External Affairs is the Prime Minister; so that all the matters of a confidential character alluded to this afternoon, some of which possibly could not be disclosed even to the Cabinet as a whole, shall come to the Prime Minister as Minister of External Affairs, and he shall use his judgment and discretion as to how far they must be kept confidential even as far as members of his cabinet are concerned. If we are to concede what the Prime Minister has argued for—and I am not disposed to concede it because I am not yet convinced—but if one were disposed to concede the argument of the Prime Minister that a new department is necessary for the mere purpose of organization, then I say that that department should be under the control of the Prime Minister and not under the control of the Secretary of State. Mr. Chairman, that is the way the situation strikes me at the present time. Let me just add in conclusion that I do not see that any of the dangers or difficulties which were pointed out by the Minister of Justice this afternoon would be in the least obviated by the creation of this new department. The minister at the head of the Department of External Affairs might be away, the minister in charge of any one of the departments might be away and still an emergency might arise. You may always expect contingencies of any kind in matters of government. The creation of this department will not do away with them. I thoroughly concede, of course, what the Minister of Justice argued, that the creation of a history of each of these subjects touching external affairs under the control of a capable officer would be of infinite importance to the ministers who are here in Ottawa and who have to deal with situations of that kind, but I do not see that it is very much forwarded by the mere creation of this department and by calling it a Department of External Affairs.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think that after all the difference between the two sides of the House on this question is not very great. It seems to be very minute indeed. If I understand the criticisms that have been offered by hon. gentlemen opposite, they have admitted frankly the necessity and advisability of having special officers detailed for the work that we have in mind. They say that it would be sufficient to increase the personnel of the department of the Privy Council over which the Prime Minister presides. The Prime Minister may not necessarily be the President of the Council. Sir Charles Tupper, when he came into office, took the portfolio of Secretary of State. When Sir John Macdonald formed his government in 1878 he took the portfolio of the Interior in addition to his duties of Prime Minister. When the present government was formed in 1896 I came to the conclusion that the Prime Minister should be President of the Council. I am still of that opinion. Very shortly after I took office I discussed this point with Sir Charles Tupper and he thought I should have taken the portfolio of Secretary of State. I differed with him; I thought the Prime Minister should be President of the Council. Whenever there is a change of government my hon. friend on the other side of the House may not become President of the Council but he may become Secretary of State, or take another portfolio. It does not matter under which minister the Department of External Affairs may be placed, it is sufficient that it should be under a responsible minister. The fact that there will be some confidential despatches which the Prime Minister may have to keep to himself does not weigh very much with me; in fact, in the course of my experience during the last twelve years, there never came to me a despatch which I thought I could not take to council. On the contrary, upon every occasion that any matter of this kind occurred, I have always thought it preferable to take the whole cabinet into the confidence of the Prime Minister and of His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. FOSTER. That would be on your judgment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Of course. I do not believe there is anything which should be kept from council, although there might be some things that it would possibly be advisable to keep within the Prime Minister and the Governor General and perhaps one or two of the colleagues of the Prime Minister for the time being. But this matter will not be changed when there is a Department of External Affairs. One thing that I would like to impress upon hon. gentlemen opposite is that the present system cannot continue any longer. It is very true that for the forty years that confederation has lasted we have not had such a department, but forty years ago the foreign relations of the government were not the same as they are to-day. Canada has increased very much during that time, and, in my humble judgment, we have come to the point when we must pay much more attention to these matters than we have in the past. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), who has been in the government, thought it should be sufficient if we were to increase the number of clerks and detail three or four of them to give us the information which we want to have. I do not dispute that this is a method which might perhaps work. It may be that it would be sufficient to detail a staff in the Department of the Privy Council or the Secretary of State and assign to them the work we now have in mind. I do not think there can be any discussion as to the necessity of doing this work. It must be done, and it must be organized promptly. But we have thought after consideration that it was better to give to this branch the dignity and importance of a department by itself, as is done in other countries.

Mr. FOSTER. Dignity is very costly.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No, I do not think my hon. friend can say that with any truth. We will have a deputy head, perhaps two or three officers and no more. When we come to another stage in the discussion of this Bill, we will place before the House exactly the staff they want to have and for which we will ask the sanction of parliament.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister now tell us how many will be required and their salaries?

Mr. MURPHY. It is believed that not more than four will be required in any event and three may be sufficient. It is further believed that gentlemen now in the service may be transferred to this new department at the salaries which they are now receiving.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been looking up the record to see what was said at the time of Mr. Mackenzie's appointment. I find the Prime Minister said that Mr. Mackenzie had been appointed a clerk in the office of the Privy Council and that his duties would be to classify and keep track of the correspondence which was accumulating very fast from the imperial authorities and colonial and foreign governments. He was to collate it and I thought answer it as well, and I think the Prime Minister spoke of Mr. Mackenzie's familiarity with newspaper work and his educational endowments. Is Mr. Mackenzie to be at the head of the new department?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Mr. McKenzie will remain in the office of the Privy Council and this new department will be under the control of the Secretary of State. It is not contemplated that Mr. Mackenzie will be at the head of the new department.

Mr. SPROULE. If Mr. Mackenzie is to remain in the Privy Council and collate this correspondence, what is the necessity of this department ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If the despatches were to be sent directly to the Department of External Affairs, Mr. Mackenzie would perhaps be transferred to that department; but it is thought better that the despatches as they come from the Governor General should be sent to the Privy Council because the ministers then can have a friendly discussion over it. Some of these despatches are not of importance, but others are of great importance and it is thought better that they should come directly to the Privy Council before going to the Exterior Department. Mr. Mackenzie will continue to look after the correspondence as he does to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. If a communication should come from the British Ambassador at Washington it would be received by the Governor General; the Governor General would send it to the Privy Council, the Privy Council would hand it over to Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Mackenzie would send it to the Department of the Exterior and the new department would collate it again, register it and I presume answer it on their own judgment and responsibility, because up to this time the information given us is that the Privy Council would expend no inquiry or intelligence on it, but after the answer would be prepared the Privy Council would decide whether it was an appropriate answer.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend is about right. The communication will go to His Excellency and be referred by him to the Privy Council; the Privy Council will send it to the Department of External Affairs with instructions or without instructions and the Department of External Affairs, when they have passed on it and prepared an answer, will send it back to council to be discussed.

Mr. SPROULE. Council will then discuss it, sign it, and send it back through the same channel, I presume. It will make a much slower mode of carrying on business.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. Referring to the number of departments, we have the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Labour, the Customs Department, and now the Department of the Exterior, the Department of Marine, with the sub-department of Fisheries; the Department of the Interior, the Department of Indian Affairs, the Department of Finance, the Department of Inland Revenue, the Post Office Department, the Department of the Privy Council, the Department of Public Works, the Department of the Secretary of State, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Justice and of the Solicitor General, the Department of Railways and Canals, and the Department of Mines. In all we have twenty-one departments and yet this government condemned their predecessors for having eleven departments. I am told the Printing Bureau is now to be a new department.

As to the working of this new department, supposing a communication comes from the British Ambassador referring to the Fisheries Treaty, would that communication be submitted to the Department of Marine and Fisheries before being dealt with by the Department of the Exterior ? Where will that department get the information required to answer it ? Would it be answered before going to the Department of Marine and Fisheries ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That depends upon the circumstances. If a despatch came from Mr. Bryce to the Governor General on a question of the fisheries, it would be sent to the Privy Council, and the Privy Council would send it to the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. FOSTER. What is Mr. Mackenzie doing in the meantime?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He is an officer of the Privy Council, and looks after the work assigned to him.

Mr. FOSTER. What is that special work?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The important correspondence of the Privy Council. The Department of External Affairs may perhaps be able to give an answer in five minutes, or it may have to get information from the Department of Marine or some other department. But when a question has been the subject of communication from day to day or week to week for some time, the Department of External Affairs would probably be able to answer it on the spot without reference to any other department.

Mr. FOSTER. I have listened most attentively to the Prime Minister's explanation and to the explanation given by the Secretary of State. When the Secretary of State was asked how many departments there were, it was really a study to view his countenance. Of course, he is a young minister. When he has been there for a year, he will probably be able to count the number of departments there are in this government; but it will be a business for him just the same. The Secretary of State was very practical when my hon. friend from East Grey asked about the officials already appointed. He answered that the probability was that there would be transfers of three or four from other departments and that there would be really no more new officers outside of the under secretary. That of course went back directly to Mr. Mackenzie. A year ago Mr. Mackenzie was picked out of the fourth estate and appointed to this office, an office which was specially defined, the need of which was great, and a definition of the duties of that office was made by the Prime Minister. The difficulty was that things were not in order, the despatches were not classified and tabulated, and Mr. Mackenzie was put there to bring order out of disorder. Now, we are going to have the organization put in charge of the Secretary of State, and it seems to me that it was the idea of the Secretary of State that Mr. Mackenzie should go to his department and do his organizing and tabulating in that department. The Prime Minister says no, he is to be kept in the office of the Privy Council, and if his duties there are to be to tabulate and keep a history of the documents, are you going to have two tabulations and two histories? That will not make matters more workable, but will make them more cumbersome; in fact, you will have just one more circumlocution office. I want to tell the Prime Minister, and it may be taken for what it is worth, as a minister who had something to do with such matters, that he will find that it is absolutely impracticable to have great questions, affecting intimately one department or another, adjusted without the active co-operation of the minister of the department. Mere matters of form an ordinary clerk can attend to; but our external affairs are now very important affairs. The Minister of Justice fairly made my hair stand on my head when he was depicting the heart-curdling vision—which he brought to the edge of the platform and then refused to raise the curtain upon— of war, bloody war which was on the very verge. What neighbour was it—Japan, China or the United States. Happily the Minister of Justice was here, and, without a single man of the fourth estate knowing anything about it, he settled the whole difficulty. Does this not show the Prime Minister how important our external affairs are? They are so important that they ought not to be in the hands of a second-rate or third-rate minister. I do not make any invidious distinctions. The young man who comes in as a new minister has yet to learn his business. As a rule the Department of the Secretary of State will go to a young man. He has not the drill, the experience, the wisdom necessary for our external affairs, which are important and are going to be more so, and upon their proper adjudication, with temper, delicacy of touch, wisdom and discernment, will depend whether there will be international disagreements or international peace. The best drill that I ever had since I came into public life was the drill I got in the Department of Marine and Fisheries when the Atlantic and Pacific fisheries questions were up. I would have been very sorry to have been deprived of having had that experience and the breadth and growth that it gave me. I was the right person to have that business in charge, because I was the head of that department. When I went there I relied upon my deputy minister, but I did not rely upon him entirely. I made every part of the department, which was a tremendously extended one, a special study, and within two years I knew the history and operation of every part of the department. Sir John Macdonald said: You are the minister of that department, and it is you who must take this matter in charge. I did so, with the assistance of the Governor General and the Minister of Justice, and it was the best drill I ever had, and was an antidote to the sickening mass of detail and party patronage business which every minister in the course of time gets so heartily sick of. You are going to take that from every department, you are going to have a bureau which will do that business. The Minister of Justice said that the officials would get saturated with the business in time; but you cannot sit in the Secretary of State's Department and know what the Minister of Agriculture or what the Minister of Marine knows about his own department. You will never do in that department what will be satisfactory to a responsible live minister unless he has a hand in the pie, and he has a right to have a hand there. You may bring from that bureau all that your new fledged diplomats may pen on paper but the minister whose department is chiefly affected will say: I do not agree with some parts of it, I will have to think it over; and then your merry-go-round starts again. I lay these difficulties before the Prime Minister and the thinking men of the House, so that they may be considered.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Bill (No. 90) to create a Department of External Affairs.—Hon. Charles Murphy—introduced and read the first time.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. When does the Minister of Agriculture propose to go on with the Civil Service Bill? I do not want to hurry him, but we will be getting into other business now and that Bill should be considered.

Mr. FISHER. The delay has been caused by the necessity of making out the schedules which we agreed to attach to the Bill. All the schedules are ready except those of the Senate and the House of Commons, and I cannot proceed with the Bill until the classification of the Senate and House of Commons employees is prepared. I am pressing it forward with all my power.

IMMIGRATION.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of Interior) moved second reading of Bill (No. 17) respecting immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. This requires some explanation.

Mr. OLIVER. This Bill differs in detail rather than in principle from the law passed some three years ago, and the necessity for the changes in detail arises from the changed conditions of immigration. The law now on the statute-book was the first action by parliament on the policy of selected immigration and since then circumstances have arisen which make it necessary to follow a policy of more and more restriction or more and more careful selection. This brings with it the difficulty of enforcing the law as it is, and we find that the law requires amending in order to make it more satisfactory in enforcement when tested by opposition which brings it under review of the courts. It is with the view of carrying out the principles contained in the existing Act and to make it more effective that this Bill has been framed. There is a provision against what is called assisted immigration. It has never been the policy of the government to assist immigration but there were no definite proceedings taken to actually prevent assisted immigration until an order in council was passed a year ago and that order in council is incorporated in the present Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that under this Bill there shall be no assisted immigration either to steamships or to individual agents?

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill is in accordance with the order in council at present existing, which provides for the exclusion from Canada of immigrants assisted by charitable organizations unless the immigrant has been approved by the authorized agent of the Canadian government before sailing.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that does not do away with the assistance to immigration if I understand it correctly, it relates only to the assistance given by a philanthropic or charitable institution.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. You will not accept the immigrants, notwithstanding the assistance given them, unless they are regarded as suitable when examined. But the question I asked is: Do the government intend by this Bill to stop immigration that is assisted, for instance, by paying commission to those working in the United States to bring immigrants to Canada?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not know that I understand quite what my hon. friend wants to arrive at.

Mr. SPROULE. Take, for instance, the North Atlantic Trading Co., they got a lot of money that was really assistance to immigration, being paid a certain commission. The steamships also are paid a commission and so are agents operating in the United States. That I would call, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, assisted immigration. What I ask is: Do the government intend to stop this assistance or carry it out as heretofore?

Mr. OLIVER. I think the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) is hardly well advised in using the term 'assisted immigration' in referring to the matter mentioned. I should consider this immigration effort and not assistance to immigration. This Bill embodies the principle which is now contained in an order in council and which has always been the policy of this government in regard to immigration that there should be no assistance to immigrants to enable them to immigrate.

Mr. SPROULE. But, if you give them a reduced passage, would not that be assistance?

Mr. OLIVER. The government has not given anybody a passage of any kind at any price.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). This Bill is a very considerable change from the provisions of the law which hitherto have governed our immigration system, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is a step forward upon the lines which have very often been advocated in this House, and more particularly on this side of the House. As I understand the measure, it does not in any way interfere with the system of favouring immigration which has existed hitherto; it does not disturb in any manner our immigration agencies established in the United States, in the British Isles and on the continent. It in no way changes the system of bonusing immigrants which has hitherto existed, and in relation to which we are still governed by the order in council which has considerably enlarged the system, extending it to railway navvies and other classes, which, up to the time of passing that order in council, never had been comprised within the bonus system. What the Bill aims at particularly is to provide for a strict examination of immigrants when they land in Canada. It has been found—there is no doubt whatever about it—that our system of examination was utterly deficient. And the object of this legislation is to provide a system that will assure a more careful examination of incoming immigrants. I say that, so far as that goes, this law is a step forward. But the question which suggests itself, I am sure, to every member of this House who has taken any interest in the question of immigration is this: If this is a good law, if it provides a safeguard against a class of immigrants who are not desirable in this country, why has it not been enacted sooner? While giving credit to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) for this measure, I say it is fit and proper for us to ask why this safeguard was not provided ten or twelve years ago when we began receiving in this country such large quantities of immigration, when from an expenditure of about $100,000 a year or $125,000 a year, which was our limit up to 1896, we went up to an expenditure of $700,000, $800,000, and finally, even more than $1,000,000. As a consequence of a very much more expensive propaganda and the establishment of far more numerous agencies and of a system of bonusing which had never been known before, we have had an immense influx of immigrants. The conditions prescribed by this Bill were known to be necessary at that time. They were urged on this side of the House repeatedly when that wave of immigration began to invade Canada. This measure is taken largely from the American immigration regulations and law. Why did not we adopt it before? That is the serious observation I wish to lay before the minister—let him tell us why we are, so to speak, locking the stable door after the horse is gone? For that is what we are doing. The explanation must certainly be found in the fact that, during a certain number of years which former members of this House will certainly remember, we had given to the tendency of immigration to this country a push forward which was extremely imprudent. Not to go too extensively into affairs of the past, it will be remembered that, through the contract with the North Atlantic Trading Company largely, the country paid out, speaking off-hand, but I think pretty closely to the figures—over $450,000 in bonuses and expenses of advertising. It will hardly be denied that in this we were doing an extremely imprudent thing, for we never were able to find out what became of that money and to whom it was paid. I do not wish to go at too great a length into that phase of the question, and to recall a past which most of those who took an interest in the question at that time, I am sure, have still in mind. This proposed legislation, to my mind, shows the usefulness of the campaign, in this House and outside of this House, which was kept up by the opposition for a long time in order to secure the very provisions that we find in this Bill. And it is extremely regretable, I am sure, not only in the interests of our country, but in the interests of the immigrants of the better class who have come here and succeeded, that these enactments were not put into law before the large influx of immigrants into Canada, amounting, I suppose, in the last ten years, to over 800,000 people, had begun.

Let me say a word with regard to one of the dispositions of the Bill, and which is continued, if I may say so, in the principle of the Bill. The whole Bill proceeds upon what is to my mind a bad principle, and I venture to say that before long we will come to the conclusion in this House and in the country that that principle is not well founded. The whole Bill is founded on the principle of the examination of the immigrant after he lands, or is about to land, in Canada. I think that experience has demonstrated, and statistics will show, that this is a wrong principle. We should make sure that the immigrant is a fit and proper person to come to this country before he leaves the port of embarkation. This is what happens in practice: The immigrant will go to the booking agent, we will say, in the British Isles or on the continent. The agent is anxious in the first place to bring this immigrant within the bonus class, and I submit to my hon. friend the minister that with the wide order in council authorizing the payment of bonuses, it is not a very difficult task for an experienced booking agent to get that immigrant into the class which earns him a bonus. No examination whatever as to the physical condition of the immigrant takes place before landing. There is no inquiry whatever as to his moral qualifications to become a citizen of this Dominion. All that takes place is that the booking agent makes sure that he will earn, through this immigrant, his bonus, and sells him a ticket. Everything induces the agent to direct this immigrant to Canada, if possible, not only because of the bonus he receives, but because of the generous commission he gets from the transportation company.

The immigrant arrives in Quebec, we will say. Now members of this House who have followed the proceedings of the Immigration Committee in the past sessions, know what kind of an examination the immigrant undergoes there. It is exceedingly brief. I think it was Mr. Scott, the superintendent, who told us that the examination is a matter of two or three minutes, or perhaps four minutes. The immigrant passes before a medical examiner at the port of arrival. There are a thousand or two thousand immigrants to be examined, and a train is waiting to carry them on to their destination. He will look at their eyes, at their external appearance, but no proper medical examination takes place. And I ask the House how is it possible in the short space allowed to the examiner, to make sure, even in the most superficial manner, of the qualifications of the immigrant to enter this country. He passes before a second officer and is immediately hastened on board the train, and moves away. Now what happens? He arrives in Montreal or Toronto. The man we will suppose, is undesirable; we will suppose that he is guilty of some offence. He is immediately brought before one of our criminal courts, either for some worse or some petty offence. The magistrate asks him where he comes from, what steamship line brought him across. He is remanded, and through the immigration agent, as I understand, the department of my hon. friend the minister is communicated with. The department sends an officer to make sure of the fact. Deportation in that case is found necessary; the man is at our expense detained in jail, he is afterwards forwarded with a guardian at the expense of the country, as a rule, to the port where he landed, for instance at Quebec. When the steamer is out in the stream ready to go, he is taken on board the vessel and sent home. He arrives in Liverpool. They don't want him there, and will not receive him. He is sent on perhaps to London, and there what is the condition of that man? It may be that he is only in the early stage of criminality, but he is an absolutely lost individual, utterly discouraged, ostracized, and his fate is one, although he may be a criminal, very much to be deplored.

In the case of those who are deported because they are afflicted with disease, which very often happens—we had last year over 800 deported after admission to this country—the case is infinitely more pitiful. The man is returned to the company that has brought him over, and he is sent back. If he is the father of a family who came out here to prospect and found an establishment, he returns to his home in Europe, having expended all the money he had when he came out here to establish a home. He is absolutely discouraged, and becomes a very active agent in doing as much harm as possible to this country, spreading everywhere the idea that this is the very worst country a man could come to. Very often families are separated, and the utmost distress and grief accompany this deportation. Cases have come under my observation where the hardship is very great indeed. I have known of other cases of people deported from Montreal who, after having done a great deal of harm in that city, in a variety of ways which it is not necessary to dilate upon now, have been sent back to their own country. There was a case came under my own personal knowledge of a prostitute who arrived in this country from Europe. There was nothing apparently to prevent her admission to this country. She came to Montreal and established a house there, and after a time was brought before the magistrate, and had to be deported. It is evident that it was impossible at the port of entry to discover the objection that existed in that case, and a great deal of harm resulted. There is no doubt whatever that if inquiries had been made, and if that person had been told on the other side that it was absolutely useless for her to attempt to enter Canada, we would have been spared the expense and the disagreeable consequences which resulted in that case.

I have a few more remarks to make on this subject, but as we have now passed the hour of six o'clock I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the Prime Minister be good enough to tell us what business will be taken up to-morrow?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Supply, commencing with the Department of Railways and Canals.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.
