Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, this is an important question, no doubt, and one to which the government has given some attention. Parliament has not had the opportunity of giving it the same amount of consideration and for my part, as a member of parliament from the maritime provinces, I would feel reluctant to vote for the resolution as it stands were it not for the fact that my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and other members of the government have declared that when this matter comes again before parliament at a subsequent session we will be just as free to consider all the details as we are to-day, that we will be free to amend, accept or reject the whole of it, and details will be the question of the representation of the smaller provinces. The suggestion was made by a member of the government, I think the Minister of Finance, that possibly an equitable arrangement, in so far as the representation of the smaller provinces is concerned, would be that the population of Quebec, for the purposes of representation, would be counted in accordance with the dimensions of the province at the time of confederation. That would be one way of preserving a reasonable representation for the maritime provinces, because there is an apprehension that in consequence of the enlargement of the area of the province of Quebec there is danger that our representation will be materially reduced. A provision of that kind might perhaps save it. I personally think that a provision of that kind would be somewhat complicated, and I would very much prefer that when this matter is under consideration we should take steps to have placed in our constitution a provision somewhat similar to that which is in the constitution of the Australian Commonwealth that there shall be a minimum representation from every province; either that or that a condition should be inserted that the representation from the maritime provinces would not fall below what it was at the time of confederation. I do not think that a provision of that kind in the constitution could possibly do any harm to any province or any individual in any province. I do not think that the larger provinces of the Dominion could object, and it would certainly satisfy the maritime provinces. The representation even under these circumstances would never be unduly large. I am satisfied that confederation would not have been possible if the men who arranged the basis of confederation had ever looked forward to the time when the representation of the smaller provinces would be so reduced that we would practically have no voice in the great council of the nation. But, as the statement has been made by my right hon. friend the leader of the government that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) and seconded by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLean) is at the present stage unnecessary, and that we will be just as free in a subsequent session when this matter comes up for final consideration to consider all the details of the question and particularly the detail of representation as we are to-day, I do not see the necessity of inserting this amendment, and for these reasons I shall vote against it.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word or two if the House will pardon me. Without going into a discussion at great length of the whole argument of the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) I would like to say that I listened to him with a great deal of attention, but I fail to appreciate wherein he has given the House any logical or reasonable argument from a legal or constitutional standpoint that would convince any hon. gentleman that because the boundaries of any particular province may be increased therefore any right of compensation flows to any other members of confederation. It seems to me that the proposition of creating a new province is one which would give just the same rights to the older members of confederation as would an accretion to the boundaries of any of the existing provinces, and no one has ever asserted that in the former case any such right has arisen. I rise not so much for the purpose of discussing that point as to refer to the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield). I desire to say in reference to that point that the hon. member's amendment is entirely outside of any question that is involved in the resolution before the House. It is absolutely nugatory and can have no effect of any kind whatever. No amendment such as that which he proposes to be introduced into this resolution can be held either by the Dominion government or any of the provincial governments to be of any value or to limit their powers or to give to any of the provinces increased rights in regard to the matter of representation. The question of what the representation of the maritime provinces in this parliament shall be, cannot depend on any conference that may take place between the federal government and the provincial governments of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec; it must depend upon legislation that may be subsequently passed by the imperial parliament. If as it is anticipated the result of this resolution will be to increase the area of Manitobe, Ontario and Quebec, then a condition will arise in the smaller provinces which this parliament would be bound to recognize and to ask the imperial parliament in view of the changed conditions to create increased representation for them.

Mr. CROCKET. The hon. gentleman contends that the representation of the provinces would depend altogether upon legislation of the imperial parliament, and that being so how does he justify the statement of the Prime Minister that when this legislation comes before the House it is to be passed upon terms and conditions agreed to by the provinces and by this parliament, and that these terms and conditions will cover representation as well as other matters, and hence there was no need of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Colchester.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I did not understand the Prime Minister to make any statement with regard to that. Of course the result of this conference may produce conditions under which this parliament may be called upon to ask the imperial parliament to deal with the question of representation. But the hon. gentleman knows full well that any conference between these provinces and the Dominion cannot increase or lessen our representation in any degree.

Mr. CROCKET. I agree with the hon. gentleman, but he is in contradiction with the position taken by the Prime Minister who said that when this parliament dealt with the matter it could and would adjust the representation.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I did not so understand the right hon. gentleman and I am quite sure my hon. friend (Mr. Crocket) did not so understand him.

Mr. CROCKET. I certainly did so understand him.

Mr. LENNOX. So did we.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I am sorry my hon. friend takes that view, because I did not understand the right hon. gentlemen to make any such statement. There can be no doubt at all about the constitutional principle that the imperial parliament alone can increase the representation of any province in this Dominion, and no doubt the imperial parliament would act upon the request of the Dominion parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. But that is an entirely different matter from what we are now discussing, and every hon. gentleman must see that the amendment is entirely outside the point.

Mr. LENNOX. Not quite.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. My hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) knows very well that the representation of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island cannot be affected in the slightest degree by anything that the provincial governments of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec may say, and that this parliament alone by address to the imperial parliament subsequently can deal with that question. Now as to the point that the representation of the maritime provinces has been affected prejudically by the increase of the electoral unit of the province of Quebec, I think hon. gentlemen will find that the decreased representation which came to the maritime provinces in 1901 did not come as a result of the increased unit of representation in Quebec, but as a result of the tremendous increase in population of western Canada. As a result of the readjustment which had to be made under section 51, subsection 4, a reduction of the representation of the maritime provinces was brought about chiefly because of the increased population of the west.

Mr. DANIEL. Is it not a fact that the increased unit of representation caused by the increase of population in Quebec was also a large factor in the loss of our representation?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. As a matter of construction of the statute both these conditions must concur before representation can be decreased.

Mr. DANIEL. But you only referred to the increase of population in the west.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I was endeavouring to point out that the suggestion that the increase of the electoral unit in Quebec must necessarily decrease the population of other provinces, is not absolutely correct, because in addition to that you must have an abnormal increase in the population of western Canada so as to bring about a proportionate diminution of the population of the other provinces.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As a matter of fact the increased population of Quebec has taken place within the old boundaries of that province and not within the area of any territory which has been added to Quebec since confederation. My hon. friend from Beauharnois will corroborate that.

Mr. HAGGART. Every one knows that.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. The statement of the Postmaster General is absolutely correct. The population of the province of Quebec has increased and the electoral unit has increased but that is not due to increased territory; it is entirely due to natural causes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. We must approach this question from the standpoint that the diminution of representation which took place in 1901 was not alone due to the increased population in the province of Quebec, but that there must also be considered in it the abnormal increase of the population of the west, which was a very potent factor. Now, if I correctly apprehend the decision given by the courts with reference to the proper interpretation of section 51 of the British North America Act it was, that the population of Canada for the purpose of the computation to be made under section 51 subsection 4 was to be deemed to be made up not merely of the population of the four original provinces, but also of the provinces which now constitute confederation, and in that computation there was not to be considered the population of the territories. The consequence is that by the addition of territory to the provinces of Manitoba and Ontario, in the next computation which takes place in 1911, the population of Canada, for the purposes of this computation, will be increased by the additional number of people who may be within the territory thus added to these provinces.

To that extent the representation of the smaller provinces will ultimately be affected. I think this House will be bound, in all fairness, at that time to take into consideration this question and to ask that the imperial parliament should review the question of representation all over the country. But that is not a question which this conference can deal with. This parliament alone, when the Act founded on the deliberations of this conference is introduced, will have to deal with the question of representation, in the light of the changed conditions that will result from the increase of the territories of these three provinces. It does not appear to me that this amendment is at all appropriate when it asks 'that the extensions of boundaries provided for by this resolution should be accompanied by such conditions as would prevent such extensions prejudicially affecting the representation of any province in parliament.' I do not think that parliament at this time should be asked to come to any such conclusion, because nothing that can be done by that conference will affect the representation directly. It seems to me that all the rights of any province in this regard will be well protected by the resolution which I propose, because it deals with the conditions as they are, and parliament should keep itself in line with constitutional and legal principles. I therefore move in amendment to the amendment:

That under any legislation to be introduced to give effect to the foregoing resolution, nothing shall be done or provided to impair the representation of any province in this House.

I move that resolution because I submit that this House should give notice to the parliament that is afterwards to deal with the result of this conference, where we stand with regard to this question of diminution of representation; and we treat this question as it should be treated by recognizing the right of this parliament alone eventually to deal with this question. It seems to me also that we who come from the smaller provinces of the Dominion can fairly expect that when parliament comes to deal with this question and to legislate definitely and certainly upon it, parliament will recognize the changed condition resulting from the tremendous development of the Northwest, which was never foreseen by the fathers of confederation, and which necessarily affects this whole question of representation, and that the time will have arrived, in 1911, when we may fairly expect a complete review of this whole question of representation, with the result that after the next census justice in this respect will be given to the smaller provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York). Mr. Speaker, as one coming from the province of Ontario, I wish to say that while that province does not get, by the proposition before the House, all the territory which it thinks it ought to get, it will accept that territory and the responsibilities that go with it. The province of Ontario does not believe that we have to-day reached the ultimate bound of civilization towards the north. The province of Ontario has accepted the view that there is a great and rich country to the north, and, while other people are talking about it, the province of Ontario is to-day building a railway to Hudson bay, and we hope to see an Ontario port on Hudson bay. The province of Ontario accepts all these responsibilities, and hopes to build up a great new northern Ontario in the added territory. I would like to see the other provinces take the same view. I believe that the province of Manitoba now receives the advantage of the extension of its boundaries to Hudson bay, and that it will go ahead and develop the country that is occorded to it. As to the question of representation, I was glad to hear the Prime Minister say to-day, what I have long contended for in this House, that while the British North America Act is a solemn document, it is not so sanctified that it cannot be reviewed by this parliament; and if it can be shown that the smaller provinces have not the representation which they think they ought to have, I believe that parliament is big enough, I believe that my own province and all the other provinces are big enough, to revise the constitution of the country and give a fair representation to the smaller provinces. I agree with what has been said here to-day, that it would be proper and fair, and in the line of harmony, to provide that the representation of the maritime provinces in this House should not be less than it was originally at confederation. We are all surely big enough to take that view. As to the amendments before the House, I would like to see the amendment moved by the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stansfield) accepted. It is simply an amplification of the proposal made by the government. If that view of it is taken, we shall have an expression that will represent the opinion of the whole House. The last amendment is on almost the same line; and if you can find a way to have a resolution that would meet all the interests in the House it would go a long way towards the settlement of this question. With regard to that northern country of ours, we do not know what is there; but the province of Ontario, in so far as it will exercise jurisdiction over it, will do whatever it can to develop it. Hudson bay, as has been said, is going to have much to do with the future development of this country. I hope that in a short time we shall have not only a railway from Ontario to Hudson bay, but one from the Northwest, and that the country lying south of Hudson bay will be developed and settled and the possibilities of mining, fishing and other industries in that country will be worked out and that these industries will be proved to be sources of wealth to the whole country. Again I would appeal to the House to see if there is not a way in which the resolution can be made unanimous, and in that way meet the views of all sections of the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the amendment in its present form does not seem to be very relevant, as it is not prefaced by the necessary words to make it an amendment to the original resolution. However, that is a matter for the hon. gentleman who has moved it and His Honour, the Speaker. Might I ask if the government propose to accept the last amendment ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to say, in the first place, that I do not see the difference in meaning between the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Colchester and the one proposed just now. The right hon. leader of the government told us distinctly in the course of his remarks that he could not accept the amendment of the hon. member for Colchester, because the resolution as it stands leaves the terms and conditions for future consideration and that it was not necessary or desirable to confine the terms of that resolution in any way.

Now when a similar resolution of exactly the same purport and meaning—so similar that it will be a question for the speaker whether it can be put as an amendment to the amendment—when the same thing, having exactly the same effect is proposed, my right hon. frind forgets his declaration and is quite ready to accept it. No doubt the only real reason is that the first amendment was moved by my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) and the second has been moved by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald). If there is any other reason I would like to hear what it is. Let us look for a moment at the two amendments. The first is as follows:

That the proposed resolution be amended by adding thereto the following paragraph: Be it further resolved that the extension of the boundaries provided for by this resolution be accompanied by such conditions as will prevent such extension prejudicially affecting the representation of any province in parliament.

That amendment is harmful and cannot be accepted by the government. It confines the terms of the resolution, and the terms of the resolution should be left wide open for the future expression of parliament at any other session. Let us look at the other amendment which is acceptable:

That all the words in the said amendment be struck out and the following substituted: And under any legislation to be introduced to give effect to the foregoing, nothing shall be done or provided to impair the representation of any province in this House.

The difference between those two amendments is exactly the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee. The right hon. gentleman cannot accept tweedledum but he is perfectly willing to accept tweedledee.

As regards the observations of my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) touching the reduction of the representation of the province upon ascertaining the population in each province by a decennial census, it does not seem to me that he expresses the situation with absolute accuracy. What happens is this. In the first place the unit of population is ascertained by dividing the population of the province of Quebec by the number of its representatives, 65. In that way you obtain the unit of population. Then you proceed as follows. You apply that unit of representation to the population of every other province as ascertained by the same census. You may find that the representation of some province will be reduced by the application of the unit of representation. You do something more, not by way of reduction but by way of preventing the reduction of the representation of any such province. You take subsection 4:

On any such readjustment, the number of members for a province shall not be reduced unless the proportion which the number of the population of the province bore to the number of the aggregate population of Canada at the then last preceding readjustment of the number of members for the province is ascertained at the then latest census to be diminished by one-twentieth part or upwards.

So that subsection 4 is not a provision for the reduction of the representation of any province but a saféguard against such reduction. If it were not for that purpose, you would apply simply subsection 1 and there would be no need for subsection 4. But the proviso I have pointed out is a safeguard in certain cases against the reduction which would be brought about by the application of the unit of representation. It is idle to say that the reduction of representation in any province of Canada is brought about in the way that has been suggested. It must be brought about by the application of the unit of representation as ascertained in the province of Quebec; and this subsection 4 does not operate to further reduce but operates in certain cases to prevent any such reduction. That is my appreciation of its meaning and I think it is the correct one.

My right hon. friend the First Minister, in replying to some very brief observation which fell from me this morning, said that to leave unsettled the boundary question between Newfoundland and the province of Quebec or any part of Canada might lead to bad blood. I quite agree that it is proper to have that boundary line ascertained by some tribunal with the approval of both parties. But he seems to think that that affected my suggestion of this morning. It does not affect it in any way. What I suggested was that inasmuch as we hope and believe that Newfoundland will at some future time be brought within the limits of confederation, it might be advisable, both from an administrative point of view and as an inducement to Newfoundland to enter confederation, that we should leave certain portions of that territory to become part of Newfoundland as a province of confederation and to be administered by the province of Newfoundland. My right hon. friend thought that would not be practicable because it might lead to dissatisfaction in Quebec. I do not see why it should. He has already suggested that if this area were habitable, if it were likely to sustain a large population, he would have been prepared to create it into a new province. Well, if the province of Quebec would be willing, as we may presume from his remarks, to have this territory created into a new province, is there any objection to have a portion only of that territory kept as an inducement to Newfoundland to enter confederation. If there be no dissatisfaction in the one case, I do not see why we should assume that there would be in the other. I looked at it merely from the standpoint of convenience and efficient administration and also from the other very desirable standpoint of our bringing Newfoundland some time within the bounds of confederation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to have your decision, Mr. Speaker, as to whether or not there is any material difference between the two amendments—that of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Stanfield) and that of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald)—which makes the last amendment in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The amendment itself, proposed in the first instance, does not seem to stipulate in what manner the preventing of any reduction in the representation of any province, consequent upon the enlargement of the boundaries of any other province, should be arranged for. It is a little indefinite in that respect. Whereas the amendment specifically states that this shall be provided against in the legislation introduced to extend the boundaries. It is a rather fine point but I am not prepared to rule that the amendment to the amendment is out of order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. You will find that the resolution itself calling for an extension of the boundaries is the foundation for legislation, and consequently the amendment of the hon. member for Colchester, which provides that such extension be accompanied by such conditions as would prevent it prejudicially affecting the representation of any province in parliament, is about as definite as anyone could possibly desire.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I desire to suggest a verbal amendment—in the third paragraph of the resolution, to insert the words 'of Manitoba' between 'boundary' and 'as,' making it read 'the eastern boundary to be the present eastern boundary of Manitoba,' and so on.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to.

DOMINION GUARANTEE COMPANY.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE moved:

That that part of rule 102 relative to the posting of private Bills and also rule 88 relative to fees be suspended in connection with Bill (No. 211) to amend the Act of the present session intituled an Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.

He said: This new Bill is, in effect, an amendment of the Bill passed this session, but under the circumstances, it is necessary to follow in the form of having a new Bill.

Motion agreed to.

THE GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Before the government orders are proceeded with, may I ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Pugsley) if we could have printed copies of the Georgian Bay ship canal report. I understand that the report is in manuscript. If it could be printed it would be very useful. I need not tell the hon. minister that not merely members of parliament but many people outside desire to see this report.

Mr. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). As the report contains quite a large number of maps, it is desirable to print these with the report, and it will take from six weeks to two months before these can be completed. I have an additional typewritten copy of the report which I shall be glad to lay on the table so that hon. members desiring to see it may have an opportunity to do so before the House rises.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. But the minister does intend to print the report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. But it will take six weeks to print the maps.

Mr. LANCASTER. Could not the report be sent out first and the maps afterwards?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it would be better to keep them together.

Mr. BERGERON. Will they be sent to members during the recess ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I will give instructions to that effect.

CANADIAN ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 201) to assist in maintaining an independent and efficient service of telegraphic news from Great Britain for publication in the Canadian press. He said : The object of this Bill is to extend for a period of two years the subsidy granted to the Canadian Associated Press. Perhaps that is, technically, not exactly the situation. The subsidy was allowed on a sliding scale for five years, aggregating $60,000, and thus averaging $12,000 a year. The promoters of the enterprise applied for a renewal of the subsidy on the basis of $12,000 a year for five years, an equal sum to that given before, but under a different arrangement. After consideration we thought that all would be done that was necessary for the moment if we assured the promoters of the enterprise of the continuance of the subsidy of $12,000 a year for two years. During that time, it may be that some other arrangement will be made, which, perhaps, will give more general satisfaction. I think that, on the whole, the service rendered has been regarded as satisfactory, though it has not been above criticism. However, after considering it, we have asked parliament to grant this for two years.

Mr. FOSTER. What has been done ?

Mr. FIELDING. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) what has been paid, but that is about all I can tell him. The results of the expenditure are seen in the press day by day.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the minister no report on the subject ?

Mr. FIELDING. I have a communication from the president of the Canadian Associated Press, Mr. J. Ross Robertson, which, if my hon. friend wishes, I will read. When the deputation came to me and asked a renewal of the subsidy, I asked them to put in writing a statement of their views. I received, in response, this letter. It was marked 'Personal,' but I do not think it was intended to be other than a public letter :

Toronto February 18, 1908.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Minister of Finance
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir,—In accordance with your request made at the conclusion of the interview on Friday last with the deputation from the Canadian Associated Press, I beg to transmit to you in writing, the facts and figures then presented. In placing the matter before you I said :—

This deputation as you are aware is here with the object of discussing the future of the Canadian Associated Press and its relation with the government under the agreement entered into five years ago—which agreement expires at the end of next June.

The agreement was in brief that the government pay towards the expenditure of the Canadian Associated Press, for the years 1904-5-6, a sum not exceeding $15,000 a year ; for 1907 a sum not exceeding $10,000 a year and for year ending June, 1908, a sum not exceeding $5,000.

At the outset, I just want to refer for a moment to the past work of the Canadian Associated Press.

The work that the association has done during the four and a half years of its operation, has been most satisfactory to the membership, and I believe, meets with the approval of the government.

When the association was formed, it was settled at its first meeting that its purpose was to handle all Canadian news originating in Great Britain or the continent of Europe—and this class of news only. But, when the London office of the association had been in running operation for some months, on special occasions, other news of interest to Canadians was made part of the service with results that met with not only the entire approval and satisfaction of the members of the association, but elicited from newspapers not in the association, most favourable comment.

Among this class of news referred to, was news from Australia and New Zealand, that affected Canada—especially in matters concerning tariffs, which was particularly of value to Canadian manufacturers.

Then the British parliamentary election results were collected by our agents and cabled to the association. These were the only detailed returns of the elections sent to this continent by cable, for the American associated press only handled results in prominent constituencies, and generally only gave a meagre service.

It will also be remembered that the proceedings of the Colonial Conference in 1907 were very fully reported, for the Canadian Associated Press was favoured with exceptional advantages which enabled it to cover this event better than any other news service that uses the cables.

It is worth noting that the fulness of the British election reports and the Colonial Conference service by the association, was most favourably commented on by some of the leading British newspapers, and by Canadian correspondents of British newspapers resident in Canada.

The way that the Canadian Associated Press covered the British elections was a recognition of the fact that this country has national and imperial news interests that are not served by the American Associated Press.

It is a pleasure to know that members of the government at Ottawa also expressed their satisfaction with the manner in which both of these events were handled by the London office of the association.

It was particularly gratifying to hear citizens of Montreal and Quebec, speak in commendatory terms of the interesting cables concerning the sad death of the late Hon. Raymond Prefontaine in Paris—an event which was followed with a closeness commensurate with its interest to a large section of the Canadian people.

The proceedings of the Alaska Commission were also fully reported by our service. It was a satisfaction to note that our reports on all these three events were wired from Toronto to leading American journals that had not been favoured by the American service, with such full reports. I think that the Alaskan Boundary report showed the enormous national value of having the views of Canada's representatives in London fairly and adequately reported to their constituents at home.

The immense sporting constituency of the Canadian press has also been well served, for every sporting event of importance, including results of every principal race run in Great Britain and of leading athletic sports, especially football games, are cabled as they occur. In fact, every sporting event of moment in Great Britain is promptly covered. Not only were there events in Great Britain covered, but also reports of sporting events in Australia in which Canadians were interested by reason of Canadian competitors taking part.

The satisfactory manner in which the London manager of the Canadian Associated Press handled the mission of the hon. Rodolph Lemieux to Japan deserves special mention. It was thought by some members of the press that this event should have been covered direct from Tokio, but to do so would have involved an expenditure of not less than $2,000. It would have involved the expense of a special agent and cables would have cost at the press rate, forty-seven cents a word—we covered the assignment from London by careful selection and compilation of the ample cable reports of the London daily press, at the cost of Atlantic cabling which did not amount to over three cents a word delivered in Canada to each paper of the association. These reports were very satisfactory.

Then our cattle and market reports are a new and important feature added to our service. We had great difficulty at first in getting satisfactory reports. Our London manager, however, personally interviewed the leading cattle firms in Great Britain and Ireland, with the result that the association receives reports from two of the leading cattle firms free of all cost for the information, and at a cost only of the cabling to Canada.

The cattle dealers of Canada have expressed their great satisfaction with the accurate and ample reports that are so forwarded. These reports also permit the farmers to know exactly where they are at in relation to the old country quotations that are the basis of the export price for cattle.

Our cable service also supplies the cheese quotations which are of vital interest to the Quebec and eastern Ontario cheese producers.

Our service is now confined to twelve papers in Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. Two papers in Winnipeg that were members had to withdraw some months ago owing to increased rates imposed for general news service by the Canadian Pacific Railway. These papers were perfectly satisfied with our service, but the large increase in the price of their general telegraph service compelled them to withdraw. This withdrawal is, I understand, only temporary and in the near future, the service will be renewed under an arrangement that will give all the daily papers west of Winnipeg to the coast the opportunity of receiving through the Western Associated Press the service at a much lower rate than the Canadian Associated Press could forward it direct.

I understand they have now come in.

I desire to also call your special attention to the fact that all the cables received by the Canadian Associated Press after publication in the papers of the association are either wired to daily papers not in the Canadian Associated Press or are sent as plate matter to hundreds of daily and weekly papers published in Canada, so that the Canadian Associated Press reaches all the people of Canada by indirectly serving tens of thousands of readers who do not see copies of the papers that belong to the Canadian Associated Press. This feature has been impressed on me by the reading of our cables in scores of provincial weeklies and in the dailies of the smaller towns that are not of our membership.

Now, Sir, I have tried to cover in summarized form all the points which I think clearly show that the Canadian Associated Press has made good in its efforts to carry out the purpose for which it was organized.

Under the present agreement, the limit of the amount to be paid by the government was $60,000. But the amount earned by the service only involves the sum of about $50,000.

The association suggests that the same amount be granted, but that instead of $15,000 for three years and $10,000 and $5,000 respectively for two years, the limit be $60,000 for five years, payable at the rate of $12,000 a year—or whatever portion of that amount is earned by the association. It is, of course, to be borne in mind that the members of the association have expended an amount equal to that paid by the government.

Permit me to state that the work of the association has been carried on with a close regard to thorough business principles and that our expenditure has been most carefully guarded. We have endeavoured to get the best possible value for the money we expend and we have tried to serve the country in our association so as to give a comprehensive, prompt and efficient service.

You will, as an old newspaper man, recognize the difficulties that have to be faced by any man who undertakes to manage such a service as ours. It is a difficult matter sometimes to please everybody, and it is a pleasure to know that some who were inclined to criticise us in the beginnings of our work have now nothing but good words for the efficient manner in which our news service has been conducted.

It is for the government to decide whether the public end it tried to promote by the original terms of the agreement with the Canadian Associated Press has been served.

If so, the Canadian Associated Press is willing to continue and extend its work somewhat on the lines of the present agreement. If not the Canadian Associated Press will have to continue its work on other lines. I do not doubt that the minister is as familiar with the good points of the Canadian Associated Press service as I am.

We have now come to a point where we must be governed by your decision as to the lines on which we are to work in the future. If you favour the principle of co-operation between the government and the press of the country in the supply of old country news concerning Canada, the association is prepared to do its utmost to extend its membership and if possible add to the service which will make it even more acceptable and useful than it is at the present time to the people of the Dominion.

I think the foregoing covers all the points that I spoke of at the interview.

Yours truly,
J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
President.

This contains as full and comprehensive a statement of the work of the association, and the manner in which it is performed, as we could hope to have. I am aware there has been some criticism. I have been disposed to be lenient in my judgment of the service, because I know from my own experience that it is not always easy for a journalist to get information which seems to some persons to be important. It takes all sorts of people to make up the newspaper world, and many of the items which are cabled by the Associated Press will perhaps be regarded by some as of not great importance, and what one reader would regard as of particular importance is regarded of much less value by another reader. Making allowance for that, I think the service on the whole has been useful, and for the present at all events we are disposed to give them a helping hand to the extent of this appropriation for the two years.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to ask the minister two questions. What newspapers constitute the association? I believe the number is twelve, but which are the newspapers? In the second place, as this has now been going on for five years, has the membership been decreasing or increasing? Another question is, What is meant by the expenditure of dollar for dollar, and what do the government take in as items of dollar for dollar, and how do they get at those items?

Mr. FIELDING. With regard to the first question as to the names of the papers, I think they are chiefly papers of Montreal and Toronto. I find the memorandum furnished me does not give me the names, but probably it is only those papers in large communities which can afford to become partners in the enterprise, and the less important papers have to take the news from them. I think I may say that it is the papers of Montreal and Toronto chiefly, although I believe at one time some other papers were included. As to the other question, it was understood, and we accepted the statements of the president of the association in the matter—I do not think we require anything but their own certificate—that they must satisfy us that the cable service they are receiving costs them twice the amount, that is to say that we divide the dollar equally in helping them to pay the cost of the cable, on the principle of helping the man who helps himself. If they pay a dollar, and they must show us that they have done so, we give them another dollar for their news.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the object of helping the association?

Mr. FIELDING. We will discuss that in committee.

Mr. BERGERON. It is on the principle that I ask the question. I have great respect for Mr. Robertson, who is a very prominent newspaper man. It looks as if we were financially helping a few gentlemen to the detriment of a great many other newspapers. I understand there are some newspapers which do not belong to the association and they are prepared to get their despatches in a different way. We are voting money to the detriment of those gentlemen who do not belong to the association. I have heard a great many criticisms of the reports which have been sent to Canada since we have been paying this money. There are despatches that may interest some people but other things are looked for and a great many people are dissatisfied. I will mention an instance which comes to my mind and which occurred last July. It was about three days before we could procure any news about the Bisley team and the report with regard to the shooting for the Kolapore cup was sent in such a mixed up way that nobody could make anything out of it. It seems to me that the government should have nothing to do with this matter. I do not see why we should pay money out for this purpose. Another consideration is that this system may be unfair to the opposition in the House. These newspapers may be prompted to publish despatches in such a way as to favour the government. I do not understand why a government which is so much opposed to protection should go out of its way to spend money to help gentlemen who can perfectly well take care of themselves. The principle is bad.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. I understand that there are twelve subscribers and that there is only one subscriber west of Ontario—that is in Winnipeg—and none east of Quebec. I think that if this $12,000 is to be paid the government might make some effort to bring other newspapers into this association.

Mr. FIELDING. How?

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. They should devise some scheme. Twelve newspapers receive this bounty of $12,000. Every one of these papers is rich, and I think that the government should see that the eastern and western papers should get some benefit from the voting of this large sum of money.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the minister if he can give the House any information as to how this is operated in London. Have they correspondents all over the world, or all through the empire, and do these correspondents give their news direct or is there one man in London who culls the papers and gives what he thinks is best for Canada? I would like to ask also whether there has been any offer from other agencies, or from any agency, which has correspondents all over the empire looking to the giving of further correspondence, telegraphic and otherwise, from the seat of each event, gathering it, and putting it into the news columns of this association? I have heard some very strong criticisms in reference to this service. The service does not appear to have met with public approval. I do not know what the reason is. Is it that they have one or two persons in London and that we are dependent entirely upon that sort of culling of the general news of the world?

Mr. FIELDING. I do not think that the Canadian Associated Press pretend to keep correspondents all over the world. They have one or two correspondents in London who have, I believe, access to the sources of news there. As to just what those sources are I am not clear; at all events, they are able to send very correctly all the news which they believe it is suitable to send, some of which, I admit, has been the subject of criticism. My hon. friend asks whether any proposition has been made by any other body. I have not had presented to me any proposition in the form of a written document, but I have had communications with representatives of the famous Reuter agency whose service is world-wide, suggesting that perhaps they could give a service which would be as good as or beter than that which is being given. My answer was that that was a matter which the government could not undertake to control and that we did not propose to organize such a service.

Mr. BERGERON. We pay.

Mr. FIELDING. We pay but we do not want to have anything to do with the management of it. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) suggests that the service might probably be too favourable to the government. I have taken the position that the government should have nothing to do with the management of it. When people have written to me complaining of the nature of the telegrams which have been sent and suggesting that the government should do this, that or the other thing, my answer has been that the government did not undertake to dictate to this service. All we do is to help the Canadian press to get this service. We have been given to understand that they desire this service, but if they do not want it we do not desire to dictate to them or to interfere with its management. We do not desire to say what shall be the nature of this service, and least of all would we say how it should deal with any matter affecting the government.

Mr. BERGERON. Last April, when the bond issue of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was being put on the money market, that same association telegraphed over here that the whole issue had been subscribed, when as a matter of fact only eighty per cent had been taken up.

Mr. FIELDING. I presume that my hon. friend must have some reason for making that statement or he would not make it. But we will not assume any responsibility for what may be cabled to Canada. We say to the leading journalists of Canada that we would like to help them to get a better service, and if they will form their own organization, select their correspondents, adopt their own regulations and make their own arrangements, we are content that they should do so, but we do not want to have anything to do with the management. Whether they send news favourable or adverse to the government is a matter entirely for them to say. The gentlemen who are connected with the concern in London are not known to have any undue regard for the government, but I would not suggest that they have in any way acted unfairly. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. A. A. McLean) says that this does not do any good to the papers of the west or the east. We cannot insist on the papers in the west or the east coming into this association. It costs money to come into this association. Newspapers have to pay out their own good money to come in. They have to pay the tolls, and if a paper at Charlottetown, Halifax or St. John is not willing to pay the tolls we cannot say to the members of the association that news must be supplied to these papers for nothing. The few papers which do remain in the association have to assume a very serious financial burden. If there were any discrimination, if there were any wrong done to a paper at Charlottetown, Winnipeg or anywhere else, we would not permit it, but in view of the fact that the service is open to them upon the same terms as to other papers in the Dominion of Canada, I think that is all we can ask. As to the general purpose of the service I am satisfied that it is a good one. Everybody must admit that the news which we got from the mother country and the European news generally, but particularly that which came from Great Britain, and which came to the American Associated Press, was prepared for American readers and was coloured with the bias that too often enters into the minds of American correspondents. When the press of Canada had to rely for their news upon sources of that character, what wonder was it that we occasionally received very curious accounts of what was going on over there with regard to matters with which we ourselves were concerned. There were only two papers in Canada which were in a position to have reports of their own. The Toronto 'Globe' and the Montreal 'Star,' if I remember rightly, were the only two papers which had a regular cable service of their own. I suppose that if they consulted their own individual interests they would have preferred that this arrangement should not have been made, because they were, you might say, in the position of monopolists. They were rich, so to speak, and could afford a service. But, that was not sufficient. We wanted the press generally to have the news of the motherland and we wanted a service which would not be tainted by the anti-British feeling which we found characterizing the news which came to us from time to time by way of the United States. I think that that purpose has to a measurable extent been fairly well accomplished. Under this arrangement we have received, I think, a larger volume of English news of interest to Canada than we have ever received befor. The worst that can be said of the service is that occasionally there is an item which does not seem important enough to cable. I have heard men say: What rubbish that is to pay sixpence a word for, but while it was rubbish to one man there were probably some other man, or more likely some women who were deeply interested in that class of news. I do not think the service is perfect. There is some room for criticism, but I think the gentlemen connected with it have honestly endeavoured to give a fair and impartial service, and I am rather disposed to give them a good word and to hope they will do better in the future if they can.

Mr. W. F. McLEAN (South York). The association is absolutely non-political and non-partisan, and the papers connected with it are of both political parties. They have two men in London who have access to the sources of news, who get early copies of all the London papers and have access to the despatches of some of the news bureaus, so that a good and early service is obtained at a comparatively small cost. The news that has been sent here has been of a Canadian character. It was a matter of regret that previous to the establishment of this association the Canadian papers got most of their news through the American association. That news was often anti-British and anti-Canadian and especially intended for consumption in the American market. An arrangement was made the other day by which a new association in the west becomes connected with this association, and it will get the news. It is true that newspapers who desire to take the news must pay a portion of the cost, but they have to pay for other news, and why not pay for this?

Mr. FOSTER. Do they get a decreased rate?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There has been a rate made so that most of the western papers can come in. It is hoped that arrangements will be made to take eastern papers in if they cannot stand the present tolls.

Mr. BERGERON. What are the tolls?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Ten cents per word for the cables, and each paper must pay a portion of the land tolls on this side. The market reports supplied by this service are of great interest and importance to those interested in different lines of commerce. There have been mistakes in the service, but that same remark would be true of all such services. The service is a good service; it is a Canadian service; it will be improved. The funds are very carefully administered, the collections are made every month and the newspapers pay dollar for dollar with the government. There is no politics in the association. We hope soon to have it on such a basis that it will be able to take care of itself. If we wish to improve our connection with the old country, if we wish to be more in touch with the mother land, nothing can so much conduce to that end as the establishment of cable lines owned by the governments of Great Britain and Canada, and I throw out this as a hint to the government. One of the postal reformers in England stated the other day that he sees a penny-a-word cable service in sight. I trust that may come, but it can only come by co-operation between the governments. The greatest monopoly in the world to-day is the cable monopoly, which has its headquarters in London, and they have been able to maintain exorbitant cable tolls.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Marconi system?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. I had hoped that by this time the Marconi system would have made good, and I believe that some of our news despatches have come by Marconi. It is true that some of the news bureaus in London, which are also great monopolies, have tried to break down the Canadian Press Association by offering to take charge of the collection and distribution of Canadian news. But no matter how well conducted a news bureau in London may be, our contention is that it is better that the Canadian press should make its own selection of the news to be cabled here. I may point out that in connection with the recent elections in England and in connection with the great sporting events we have had a first-class service. The rifle contests at Bisley are also well reported, and if we pay money out of the national treasury to send our volunteers to Bisley we might certainly pay a little to obtain the news of their achievements. The Olympic games are now going on in London and we have made arrangements to get early news of the results. I trust that the cable will be able to announce the success of the Canadian competitors.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the gentlemen who represent the Canadian press in London?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. There are two of them, but their names I do not remember, although I saw them the other day. I believe they are Canadian newspaper men who have gone to England for that purpose.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I agree with the Minister of Finance that it would be impossible for the government to attempt any censorship of the news which is sent by the association to this country. I suppose the only reasonable way to look at it would be to consider what the news was which came to the Canadian press before this service was instituted and what it would be at present without that service. I am not familiar enough with the subject to venture any opinion as to whether the changes in that respect are so marked as to make it worth while for parliament to continue the grant. I have no doubt the government has considered the subject, and if they believe it to be of sufficient importance I would not be disposed to oppose the grant. I agree entirely as to the very great importance of our having news from the motherland of a distinctive character and not coloured with anything that would be more appropriate for another nation than ours. There has been a good deal of complaint of that in the past, and I think it was that very complaint that led the government to propose to parliament a vote for this service in the first instance. Some complaints have been addressed to me with regard to the character of the news very much along the line mentioned by the Minister of Finance. It was urged that the news was sometimes of an exceedingly trivial character and of little interest to the country generally. I do not think the government can deal very well with that except by submitting the whole subject to the consideration of parliament. It would be very desirable if the area over which this news were spread by the press of the country could be broadened; at the present time it seems to be very much restricted. As my hon. friend from South York suggests, if more newspapers could be induced to take the news the average cost to the newspapers of the country would be very much reduced, and the project would commend itself more to parliament than it otherwise can. I realize, of course, that that is not within the control of the government; but the government might at least urge upon the members of the association that steps should be taken in that direction. In fact, if it were necessary to alter the conditions of the grant a little in order to widen the area, I think that would be a wise course.

Mr. LENNOX. I have nothing to say in the way of fault-finding in connection with this matter. It is a little difficult to control the character of the news. It is exceedingly important however, that we should have early advice of certain matters transpiring not only in Great Britain but in other parts of the world—financial, industrial and commercial news. One suggestion I would like to impress upon the minister as to which he can probably do something. He has said that the news sometimes appears to be trivial. It is undoubtedly so at times, and what I think should be impressed on those furnishing the news is this, that Canada can only afford to pay for news that is industrially, commercially or nationally important. For instance, we could not very well justify paying very much money for social news, but we can justify paying money for anything that will advance the interests of the great producing classes in Canada, such as the manufacturers and the agriculturists.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BERGERON. Has my hon. friend ever received any remarks from the French newspapers of Canada in reference to this service? I know that some of the large French newspapers have complained very much about this service because the news all comes in English, even the news from France, and not only have they the trouble of translating it, but the news is so much changed that it is inaccurate. The hon. minister says that since this service was inaugurated we have had no anti-British news. That may be true; I hope it is; but we have a great deal of news, from England, from Rome, and particularly from France, that is anti-Catholic and completely erroneous, as we afterwards learn from the European papers. For these reasons, I think this is a venture that we should not have entered into.

Mr. FIELDING. I have no recollection of having received any protest from the French press on the subject, and certainly I have never received any protest from any source on the ground that the news was offensive to the religion of our Roman Catholic brethern. I once received a personal letter from a gentleman connected with the French press to the effect that such a service was not any good to them ; but for the reason that it was a private letter, I did not feel at liberty to send it to any person in charge of the service. This service is in the hands of the press irrespective of politics, and any criticisms of its character should be communicated to the gentlemen who have charge of it. If it commends itself to the press generally, and I think it does, we are only too happy to subsidise it. But we have nothing to do with the character of the despatches.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not mean to say that there was anything injurious in the news ; but we got news which was not true, and it was only by reading the newspapers that we received eight or ten days afterwards that we found that it was not true. This showed that the service was not properly controlled. How did the newspapers get the news before we subsidised this service ?

Mr. FIELDING. They got it through the American Associated Press. The rich American papers controlled the whole business, appointed the correspondents and fixed the tolls, and our papers were furnished at low rates, with so much of the news as they chose to take. The news was very often coloured with anti-British feeling, to put it mildly. There were only two papers in Canada, the Toronto 'Globe' and the Montreal 'Star, which had their own cable news from England.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I would like to call the attention of my hon. friend to the statement he made a moment ago concerning the character of certain news which is to be found in our French newspapers. Does he say that that news comes from the associated press?

Mr. BERGERON. I have been told so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am sure it does not. It does not come from London at all but comes direct or through the American associated press.

Mr. BERGERON. I was told the contrary, and was told that by these gentlemen that they were not only paying their share for this press service but paying it for news which was contrary to the truth.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. If there is any religious news of interest to the Canadian people, such as news from Rome regarding the appointments of bishops and other ecclesiastical matters of interest, and if any one in Rome will give that news to the Canadian press, our newspapers would be only too glad to disseminate it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. As a reader of the press and as having been a member of the Press Association, I am somewhat interested in newspaper affairs and follow very closely the despatches sent by the correspondent in London, Mr. Robertson, the brother of Mr. John Ross Robertson, of Toronto. From my personal knowledge, I can assure my hon. friend that he never, to my recollection sent anything which could be found objectionable by any race or creed. As regards news which appears sometimes in our press and to which objection may be taken, my attention was called by one of the highest dignitaries of the church in the province of Quebec to some items which appeared in a newspaper with which I am somewhat connected.

Mr. BERGERON. The 'Nationaliste' ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, nor 'L'Action Sociale.' I refer to 'Le Canada' of which I am vice-president. This dignitary pointed out that the item in question had not been taken from the British press nor had it come through any service we have in England, but was taken from newspapers published on the continent, which are opposed to the Catholic church. My hon. friend has never been on the staff of a newspaper or he would know that the scissors play a large part in the editorial room.

Mr. BERGERON. But we do not pay for that news.

Mr. LEMIEUX. But the public do. I am sure my hon. friend has no intention of injuring Mr. Robertson or making any insinuations against him. Mr. Robertson we know to be a fair minded man who would not lower himself by publishing anything disparaging to any religion.

Mr. BERGERON. I did not know who was responsible and I do not know Mr. Robertson, and am not making any charge or implying anything against him. All I say is that a lot of trash is sent across and published in our papers, which our papers would not publish if they had to pay the full rates and were not aided by this government subsidy.

Mr. FOSTER. I am told that the Reuters Press Agency is the most complete in the world, and that they made a proposition to put the whole of their world news at the disposal of the Canadian Press Association and allow that association to select their own editor so as to insure the sending of news that would be of use to Canada. In that way we would get a broader and a better service than we get now. Has the Finance Minister had any such proposition made to him?

Mr. FIELDING. A gentleman connected with the Reuters discussed the subject with me, but I do not think any proposal was ever made in writing. My suggestion was that he should consult the representatives of the press here and see whether they were prepared to make any arrangement with him to replace the present one. I did not feel that I was in a position to make any arrangement with Reuters.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not suggest that, but when the government is paying out $60,000 in five years, is it not interested in finding out whether we could not have an improved service ? The service is not satisfactory at present although it is better than the old United States associated service. But it is not as good as we ought to have now.

Mr. FIELDING. In these things, it seems to me, the interests of the newspapers are much greater than those of the government. Of course, as representing the public, we are interested, to the extent of the subsidy, in having a good service. But the newspapers have even a deeper interest ; and besides they know the best kind of news and they know the best way to get it. If Reuters was the best source of supply, we could trust the newspapers, in their desire to get the best service, to make whatever arrangement might be most advisable. I thought I was doing right in saying to the representative of Reuter's : See these newspaper gentlemen ; we are anxious only to subsidize the best service, and the newspapers are the best judges of what is the best service. That is why it seems to me I was right in referring the matter to them.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

At six oclock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM.

Bill (No. 205) to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of opium for other than medical purposes, read the second time, considered in committee, read the third time and passed.

THE CANADA SHIPPING ACT.

Bill (No. 183) to amend the Canada Shipping Act read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BRODEUR. This section is to take the place of section 4 of the Canadian Shipping Act. By section 4 it was provided that nothing in that section concerning the registration of ships should apply to ships belonging to His Majesty. In 1906 the imperial parliament passed an Act by which ships belonging to His Majesty should be registered. It did not make provision with regard to ships belonging to His Majesty in the colonies, but it reserved that power for the colonies themselves to exercise.

On section 2,

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of this amendment is to prevent the multiplication of the same name for ships. There was no provision in the law to the effect that when a ship was registered the name should be submitted to the department to find out whether it should be used. The result has been that a good many ships are bearing the same name. We find now, especially in sailing vessels, that there are not less than fifteen or twenty ships in one case bearing the same name. The imperial parliament passed a law last year by which the duplication of names should be avoided, by compelling people seeking for registration to send the name of their ship to the government. We are adopting absolutely the same legislation as was adopted by the English parliament.

On section 3,

Mr. BRODEUR. Sections 74 and 75 of the Shipping Act provide that in order to be admitted to examination a man must be a British subject, or domiciled in Canada for three years. It amounts to about the same thing, because when a man has been previously domiciled in Canada it is supposed that he takes out his naturalization papers. But it has been found that no such provision exists in the United States, and they simply confine the application to pass an examination to persons who are American citizens. This Bill is for the purpose of giving to the Governor in Council or to parliament the right to prohibit any citizen of a country which does not give us the same privilege as we are giving to it, the right to refuse such citizen to be admitted to pass the examination. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) wanted to make some remarks on this clause and we might therefore let it stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 4—certified officers.

Mr. DANIEL. What does that mean ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The sections which are mentioned before section 98 have reference to British ships which, not being registered in Canada, were not obliged to take certificated officers when they left our ports. A Bill was introduced by my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) some time ago dealing with the same question. The matter was dealt with by a special committee and as a result of the work of that committee a report has been made at variance with the section which is now proposed. In view of that I do not want to press this section, but I am willing to accept the report of the committee which has given the matter full consideration. We will strike out this section, and propose later on the amendments which have been accepted by the committee.

Section withdrawn.

On section 5—certified officers.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of this section, I think, will commend itself to all the members of this House. It is to provide that gasolene launches and gasolene boats of a small tonnage will not be obliged to take on certificated officers. This is done to meet a situation which exists on the St. Lawrence. It will be well known by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) and also by my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) that American launches are carrying passengers and doing work on the St. Lawrence without being obliged to employ certificated officers, while our laws provide that Canadian launches are obliged to employ certificated officers. It was found that this legislation was affecting our citizens and it was thought advisable to provide that small gasolene launches of less than five tons gross tonnage should not be obliged to employ certificated officers.

Mr. J. D. REID. How does our Canadian law now compare with the American law as far as gasolene launches are concerned? I was around the Thousand Islands a short time ago and I was told our Canadian laws are much stricter than the American laws.

Mr. BRODEUR. Precisely; this clause is proposed to meet the situation which my hon. friend has just mentioned.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to see the same laws in force in both American and Canadian waters. There is so much traffic between the different points on the St. Lawrence that if you have different laws you will have trouble arising all the time. On the other side, as far as lights and signals are concerned, the laws are very good. I do not know what the laws are here, but I believe they should be practically the same on both sides of the river.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is the nature of the proposition.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is all I want.

On section 6—going to sea without certificate.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to correct an error which has occurred in the revised statutes. It is to restore practically what was in existence before the revision of the statutes and which perhaps is the law today, but in order to avoid any misunderstanding we thought it better to have this special clause put in the Act.

On section 7—offences.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to be struck out also, because it deals with the offences which were mentioned in section 4, which section was struck out. When we come to incorporate in the Bill the Bill which has been submitted to this House by the special committee appointed for that purpose this section will be of no use.

Section withdrawn.

On section 8—fees on engagement or discharge of seamen.

Mr. J. D. REID. Do these shipping masters receive a salary from the government?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they are paid by fees. Some years ago there was a great deal of agitation in British Columbia concerning this matter. A law was passed by which it was provided that a shipping master should have the right to make a formal agreement with vessel owners enabling him to charge $10 for the hiring of men. They framed the statute in such a way that when there is no agreement, if a seaman comes and hires himself before the shipping master, the shipping master is not entitled to anything. The law was so framed that the shipping master would be deprived of his fees if there were no formal agreement.

Mr. DANIEL. Are these fees taken out of the wages of the sailors?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; they are paid by the vessel owner.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The fee provided for in British Columbia is a very large one indeed and might be rather a serious thing for the vessel owner. There would be a crew of 25 men on an ordinary tramp steamer and the shipping master would get $250 for an hour's work. I would like an explanation of why you allow $10 in British Columbia and only 50 cents in the other provinces?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some years ago it was found absolutely impossible to find seamen in British Columbia, and with the consent of the vessel owners I believe, it was arranged that a fee might be agreed upon between the owners and the shipping masters. This law does not compel the vessel owner to pay $10; it simply says that he may make an agreement with the shipping master to pay that sum, but if he can get men for 50 cents so much the better for him.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could a man be inspector of hulls and shipping master at the same time?

Mr. BRODEUR. I know of no such case.

Mr. J. D. REID. It would be a very dangerous thing if that were allowed because there are some vessels which if they were better inspected it would be all the better for those who sail on them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There was a good deal of discussion when this amendment in the law which you are now retaining was passed about two years ago. Does the minister knows how it has worked out in practice ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has worked out satisfactorily. We had a complaint about one shipping master which was investigated and held not to be well founded.

Mr. CONMEE. Would the provisions in clause 5 exempt vessels propelled by electricity or gasoline from carrying a certified officer ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. This provision was inserted to meet the representations from the St. Lawrence and the Lake of the Woods districts, that these vessels should not be obliged to carry a certified engineer or master. It is proposed that all vessels less than five tons shall not be obliged to have a certified officer.

Mr. CONMEE. It would seem to me that the language of subsection (c) of section 13 might conflict with section 5 in this respect, but if the minister is satisfied I suppose it will be all right.

On section 9—tonnage duty.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of this provision is to reduce the dues which are levied upon vessels for the Sick Mariners' fund from 2 cents per ton to 1½ cents per ton. It has been found that we have been collecting more than has been expended, and we hope that this reduction will make the receipts and expenditures about equal.

Mr. DANIEL. I am glad that the minister is making that change. At present there is a large surplus in this fund, because the tax is bringing much more than is required for the benefit of sick seamen.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is a surplus, but not a large surplus, and it has been considered advisable not to impose on the vessels a larger tax than is required for the maintenance of the sick seamen. With this reduction there may not be sufficient to cover the expenditure ; but we hope to make it sufficient by a wise administration of the money entrusted to us.

Mr. DANIEL. I may say that the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Prefontaine, expressed himself in this House as being of the opinion that the whole tax ought to be abandoned, and expressed his intention of making that change.

Mr. BRODEUR. We must of course provide for the sick seamen. If the vessel owners were willing to undertake the matter themselves, that would perhaps be sufficient ; but it is feared that in some cases the vessel owners would not look properly after their sick seamen, and therefore it is perhaps better to maintain the situation as it is.

Mr. DANIEL. I quite agree that the government would have to look after the sick seamen, but I thought there might be some other method of doing it.

On section 10—pilotage dues.

Mr. BRODEUR. This section is proposed for the purpose of repealing the legislation passed some years ago providing that vessels plying between the Great Lakes and Montreal and Quebec should not be required to take on any pilots. Some accidents have occurred as a result of this, because I was surprised to hear some time ago, some pilots whom we had dismissed had been taken on by some of these vessel owners. The Shipping Federation is urging strongly this legislation, because, as everybody is aware, the channel between Montreal and Quebec is not a very wide one, and the vessels plying there have to be put into the hands of persons of experience ; but it is feared that they are sometimes put into the hands of persons who are not experienced, and that accidents have occurred in consequence. I may quote the cases of the 'Cassandra,' the 'Turret Bell,' and the 'John Lambert.' When we learned that the vessels were taking on apprentice pilots whom we had dismissed for misconduct, we thought the time had arrived when we should impose this restriction.

Mr. DANIEL. The section referred to in this clause refers to ships that are exempted from compulsory pilotage. I would like to call the minister's attention to the next succeeding section in the Act, namely, section 478, where he will see that the pilotage authorities of certain pilotage districts are, notwithstanding anything contained in this last section, authorized to make regulations as to what ships shall be exempted from compulsory pilotage. The ports mentioned are Halifax, Sydney, Miramichi, and Pictou. I wish to call the ministers attention to the fact that the pilotage authorities in the port of St. John are the pilot commissioners, who have as full control over pilotage matters in that port as any pilot commissioners have in any of the ports of Canada. I inquired at the department to ascertain why it was that the pilotage authorities of the port of St. John were not given the same power and authority as the pilot commissioners in those ports that I have named, and the department was unable to furnish any reason. I do not know whether the minister has since acquired the information, but when I spoke to him he could not give any reason why the pilot commissioners at St. John were not included in section 478.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend drew my attention some time ago privately to this matter and I asked the officers of my department to find out the reason of the omission and they have not been able to do so. I surmise, however, that the reason was perhaps due to the fact that St. John is treated differently from the other harbours. There was special legislation passed in the 80's concerning it.

Mr. DANIEL. That has nothing to do with the pilotage authorities.

Mr. BRODEUR. I know. It was with regard to the administration of the harbour itself, but it is probably due to that fact that St. John has not been treated in the same way as the other ports mentioned in section 478. I intend looking into the matter, and if there be no reason found why St. John should not be on the same footing as the other ports, we shall have to amend the law. I am under the impression, however, but speak subject to correction, that there has been some protest on the part of the Board of Trade on the ground that if St. John were put on the same footing as the other harbours, the result would probably be an increase in the rates for tolls which the vessel owners would have to pay.

Mr. DANIEL. Not necessarily. It all depends upon the action of the pilotage commissioners. I do not know whether they are all appointed by the common council or a portion by the common council and a portion by the government, but the effect of placing the authority in the hands of the pilot commissioners would not necessarily result in any increase of the pilotage dues.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, it might, because the harbour of St. John would then be included in clause 477, under which all vessels plying between Nova Scotia or any part of the Bay of Fundy and St. John would not be obliged to pay any pilotage dues, whereas under section 478 the pilot authorities would have the right to impose such dues. I think that was the objection made by the board of trade.

Mr. DANIEL. This would give the commissioners probably the authority to impose pilotage dues on some vessels that are not now affected, but the point is whether it would not be fair and right to do so under the circumstances.

Mr. BRODEUR. It is considered that St. John is too big a port for that. Mr. Finlayson moved to add the following subsection to section 10:

Subsection 1 of section 477 is amended by adding the following paragraph:

Ships making or entering the harbour for refuge shall not pay pilotage dues.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection to incorporate this amendment which has met the approval of the subcommittee to which the Bill to amend the Canada Shipping Act was referred.

On subsection 11,

11. Paragraphs (i) and (j) of section 565 of the said Act are repealed and the following are substituted therefor:

(i) 'passenger' means any person carried on a steamboat other than the master and crew, the owner, his family and the servants connected with his household, and other than the guests of the owner of any steamboat used exclusively for pleasure, if such guests are carried on such steamboat without remuneration or any object of profit; and

(j) 'passenger steamer' means any steamboat carrying passengers.

Mr. BRODEUR. The object is to make clear what constitutes a passenger. Application was made the department to allow freight vessel owners to bring guests in their boats. It was feared that if such permission were given, it would perhaps cause those freight vessels to have a passenger service and so we thought it advisable to make it very clear that this would not be allowed.

On section 14—to amend section 591.

Mr. BRODEUR. The old section 591 provided simply that the report should be made to the inspector. We want it made very clear that it shall be made to the inspector who issued the certificate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The expression is a little unusual—'shall report such occurrence to the office of the inspector.' Why 'the office'?

Mr. BRODEUR. That is what we proposed. But the Senate thought that, as the inspector might be dead, or might have disappeared or been replaced, it would be better that the report be made to the office. I think this was suggested by the leader of the opposition in the Senate. It was accepted by us, as we wish to have the provision verey definite.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The form of words is unusual. I should have supposed that some such expression as 'to the inspector who issued the certificate or his successor in office' would be better.

Mr. J. D. REID. The inspector is often away from his office. Go to the office of the inspector in Kingston while he is off inspecting, and you will find his office locked up.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is always somebody to attend to this work. It is supposed that they will have somebody to attend to it.

Mr. J. D. REID. They have no clerks.

Mr. BRODEUR. They do some other work generally, and they have somebody to attend to these matters.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have gone many times to the inspector's office in Kingston and found him away on duty and his office closed up.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think that this clause could be improved. What would the leader of the opposition think of using the expression 'make a report of such occurrence to the office of the inspector'?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister's suggestion would still leave the matter open to the objection on the ground I have mentioned. But it may work out; I am not very critical of the language.

Mr. DANIEL. Is the inspector of hulls also the inspector of machinery?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is the inspector of hulls and also the inspector of boilers and machinery. The report is to be made to this inspector who gave the certificate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I might suggest what I think will meet the point, and that is to provide that the report shall be in writing. If the party making the report found the office locked he might fulfil the letter of the law as here proposed by standing there and making the report to the office.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have no objection in accepting the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 15—changes in certificated officers to be reported.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I think subsection 2 of this section is objectionable. It imposes a new duty on the captain and owner of the ship of reporting to the inspector whenever he changes an officer. It is customary for steamboats crossing the Atlantic to change their officers every trip, and it would be a good deal of trouble to the captain to report every change of officers to the inspector, who I suppose, is some officer in Ottawa, who would simply file it away in a pigeon-hole, so that, while a good deal of trouble for the captain, it would be of no advantage to anybody. We now require the custom-house officer to see that the captain and mate have certificates as required under the law. If you choose to impose the same duty upon the customs officer with regard to engineers, I have no objection. I think subsection 2 should be cut out.

Mr. PARDEE. I endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Nova Scotia (Mr. Sinclair). So far as the inland waters are concerned, if this duty is imposed upon masters I feel sure it is a law which will not to be adhered to to any great degree. For on inland waters officers are changed very often in the season. Besides, this seems rather impracticable. I cannot see what is to be safeguarded by having this section passed, as, under the law, these men must have certificates in order to be employed.

Mr. BRODEUR. In the spring, for example, on the inland waters, the inspector is obliged to see that all the requirements of the law has been complied with before he gives his certificate. It was supposed that this legislation would be a very wise move, because it would ensure that those in charge of the vessel are certificated officers. When a change takes place we have nothing before us to show whether this vessel is properly manned afterwards; no report has been made showing whether she has on board an officer possessing a proper certificate. If we find that it is necessary, when a vessel is inspected in the spring, to have the names of the certificated officers on that vessel, and that the certificate shown to the inspector bears those names, I think it is a wise suggestion that when a change takes place it should be at least communicated to the department. Then we will know whether the new appointment on the vessel is a certificated officer or not. We have not in the service a sufficient number of men to inspect every vessel plying on the ocean or inland waters; that is why I think we should require that when a change takes place in the officers of a vessel that change should be communicated to the department.

Mr. DANIEL. If the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) is correct that the vessel cannot clear unless she has the proper certificated officers, what is the necessity for this?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are places where we are not obliged to clear, places in the inland waters.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The inspector has the duty imposed upon him in the spring, or at the time of inspection, to see that the men have a proper certificate. It is the duty of the engineer to hang the certificate up in the cabin, and the engineer is fined $20 if that certificate is not found hanging there. I do not believe, however, that a case has ever occurred where a ship has been sailed in Canadian waters requiring a certificate by an engineer that did not have a certificate. The owner of the vessel is under a heavy penalty if he employs a man without a certificate. Then there is this other safeguard, that he can be called upon at any moment to produce his certificate. I think those provisions are sufficient, and we are imposing another duty upon the ship owner and the shipping master that, to my mind, is altogether unnecessary. If we keep on piling new duties on these people we will drive away ships from our waters altogether. I do not believe there has been a single Act passed in the Canadian parliament during the last ten years that has really had the effect of encouraging the shipping industry of this country. Every one of those Acts imposes some new burden on the man who is endeavouring to prosper in his business. This Act is a sample of a good many others that have been passed. We have to have certificated engineers for every tug boat in Canada that has an engine over a certain size. Tug boats were allowed to run without any certificated officers in Canada and in England, and there are twenty tug boats in British waters for one in Canadian waters, and there are no certificated officers required. But for the purpose of pleasing some labour people somewhere, we are imposing a new duty on the ship owner to employ certificated men on tug boats. I understand there are about 700 of those tug boats in Canadian waters, many of them engaged in hauling logs in the Ottawa river, and isolated places in the northern parts of this province. The tug boat is owned by the engineer; or his son is perhaps the engineer, and the owner is the captain. These men are the only people on the tug boat. Mr. Adams who is in charge of this department, says that he scarcely ever knew of an accident happening through these men being uncertificated. If you read the evidence taken before a commission of this House two years ago, evidence given by the shipping men in Ottawa, you will see that they point out what a serious thing it is for them that they should be compelled to employ certificated men on their tug boats in the upper waters. But that discussion will come on better when this clause now suspended is taken up. I would like hon. members who take an interest in this matter to look into this question before it does come up.

Mr. BRODEUR. This clause will be considered to-morrow.

On section 17—temporary certificates to act as engineer.

Mr. CONMEE. I think the machinery of the old law was preferable. A large number of boats are now being operated on the inland waters that cannot be operated after this law comes into force. I understand that it makes a further restriction. What is the use of talking about a tug boat of only four nominal horse power, of what service is that kind of a boat?

Mr. BRODEUR. The object of this amendment is simply to provide for a situation which occurs in New Brunswick. The old section provided that the minister could issue temporary certificates on a steamboat authorizing the engineer to operate within certain specified limits in the waters of Canada. The result was that in New Brunswick, in the district of Passamoquoddy Bay, temporary certificates were given to persons plying between Grand Manan to the mainland, but if they wanted to go outside to Eastport, those temporary certificates could not be used. The change which is proposed is that the minister may specify the limit within which he shall act.

Mr. DANIEL. It merely cuts out 'within specified limits in the waters of Canada.'

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes and the limit shall be specified as designated in the certificate. This is to give to a person the advantage of acting not only in Canada but also on the other side of the line.

Mr. CONMEE. Unfortunately the minister, or the draughtsman who drew this clause, has in his mind a particular situation in one of the provinces, but the law applies to the whole Dominion of Canada. We have plying on the Lake of the Woods, Wabigoon lake and a dozen other lakes, boats of 30 or 40 horse-power. This Act would cut them out. They are already suffering great hardship. Section 26 of the Act, 45 Victoria, provides that:

> The minister, upon a report of a duly appointed and qualified examiner of masters and mates, may grant a temporary certificate as master to an applicant sufficiently qualified by his knowledge and experience to take charge of a steamboat of not more than ten tons gross tonnage.

A few years ago that tonnage was changed to 20 tons but the number of passengers were not increased. The Act now provides that he may take charge of a boat 20 tons gross tonnage carrying not more than ten passengers and plying within the minor inland waters of Canada.

An hon. MEMBER. That refers to masters and this deals with engineers.

Mr. CONMEE. The same thing applies to engineers. On the minor inland waters the law is not respected and it cannot be. The people have the right to carry on their business, they will carry it on and if the law is not made to suit conditions they will take the risk of violating it. That is what they are doing to-day. Along the line of construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific boats are plying on the inland waters of from 80 to 100 tons and of from 25 to 80 horse-power. This also cuts it out because it is of more than 20 tons gross tonnage. The law states that they must have a certificated officer handling a boat of more than that tonnage unless permitted under the rules of the department, which I understand, they are sometimes in the discretion of the inspector. Yet, the boat upon which that master is placed is confined to ten passengers. That is entirely unreasonable, there is no good purpose served by it and it is only imposing a hardship and impossible conditions upon the owners and those who operate these boats. It may be said that you can get a certificated engineer and captain to run these boats. But, you cannot do it.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why ?

Mr. CONMEE. Take the best certificated officer you have on the Great lakes, put him on the lake of the Woods and he cannot run a boat of 20 tons because there are no charts of that lake. No man can run a boat on one of these small inland lakes except the man who has grown up in the district and knows the local waters.

Mr. J. D. REID. Why does he not get the certificate of a master or engineer ?

Mr. CONMEE. He ought to do it but the law will not give it to him. The way to remedy this is not to impose more onerous conditions but to give the inspector jurisdiction. The inspectors are either competent or they are not competent. Why not allow the inspector to say what boat an officer is capable of sailing ? If a boat is capable of carrying twenty passengers say so ; if it is competent to carry more than 20 passengers why should it not be allowed to do it? If a contractor wants to remove his staff of 50 or 100 men from one point to another is he going to make ten trips with a tug when he might do it all at once ? The boat is perfectly safe and large enough. What purpose is served by imposing such a condition as this ? It must be apparent to the minister that the risk will be taken, that the boat will carry a larger number of passengers and take the chance of the penalties being imposed. I submit that there should be a change, that instead of it being limited to 4 nominal horse-power it should be 30 or 40 horse-power when a law is being made which is going to apply to the whole of Canada. We had my hon. friend from Strathcona (Mr. McIntyre) making the same statement with regard to certain waters in his constituency. He said that no man could sail a vessel on these rivers unless he had knowledge of the river or unless he had been engaged there for a year or so before he became the master of a boat. You can employ no one to run these boats except the men who have had practical local knowledge and experience of the particular water in which the boat is operating. Therefore, these hampering conditions which serve no good purpose and which do not protect the public should be removed from the Act instead of further onerous conditions being imposed.

Mr. BRODEUR. I must take exception to the last remark of my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). We are not increasing the difficulty which he is mentioning; it is quite the reverse. The statute which is now in force provides that a temporary certificate may be issued to engineers of vessels of 4 nominal horse-power of the single cylinder type and 9 horse-power if of the compound type. We are increasing it to 14. Instead of increasing the difficulty which my hon. friend has mentioned we are moving in the direction which he suggests. In regard to the suggestion of my hon. friend that we should leave entirely to the discretion of the inspector the question as to whether certificates should be given or not, I do not quite agree with him. I think that in this case it should not be left entirely in the discretion of the inspector. Of course, if there are special circumstances we do not want to take any action that would prove a hardship to any person, but is it not dangerous that passenger vessels should be operated by persons who are not absolutely qualified? Why should not these men pass their examinations and take certificates? We are willing to grant them certificates in the cases of small vessels. But, to go farther than that, as my hon. friend suggests, and issue temporary certificates to officers of vessels of 40 horse-power is a very serious step and a step in the wrong direction. We must ensure the safety of the people. Passengers are going on these boats and we must see that these boats are in charge of persons who are properly qualified. In exceptional circumstances we issue temporary certificates and if there were cases which would prove a very serious hardship we would consider the circumstances. I remember a case which came to my knowledge a few years ago where, on Lake Temiskaming, the engineer of a boat left and they could not get anybody to take charge of the vessel. Of course, we would not take procedings where it was impossible to get men. To provide that these vessels should be obliged to take officers who pass an examination would be a serious step.

Mr. CONMEE. The argument of the minister is against himself, because if this is an improvement and not a restriction then it shows how bad the former law was. I had the honour of accompanying a deputation, some of whom came 1,000 miles, to see the minister, and it was pointed out to him that if they were obliged to engage certificated officers, these men could only stand round and draw their pay while the local men who had knowledge of the waters operated the vessels. What good purpose can be accomplished by such legislation as this. I would ask him to let clause 17 stand until he considers it further.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will be very glad to consult Mr. Adams who has a great deal of experience in this matter.

Mr. CONMEE. I want to enter my protest here. Is there no regard to be paid to the thousands of people who have their money invested and who do busines with these vesels. I do not think it is a sufficient answer to the representations made to say that some officers of the department will be consulted. I protest against that.

Mr. J. D. REID. I agree with the hon. member (Mr. Conmee). Here is one of the most important Bills of the session submitted to us within two or three days of prorogation, when it should have been introduced long ago and referred to a committee so as to allow the vessel owners and others interested to be heard. There is a good deal in this Bill that should be criticised but we are told that it must slide through now. We have had navigation laws for a great many years and they could easily be allowed to exist for the three or four months intervening between this and next session when a well considered Bill could be introduced and the people interested heard in regard to it. The government will have to take the responsibility of this Bill because the House is not treated fairly by submitting it to us at this late hour of the session.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Bill has been before the House since June 2 and previous to that it was fully discussed in the Senate and the interested parties had the advantage of being heard. I sent it to the Senate in order to give the interested parties an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Were they heard before the Senate ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not know if the Bill was referred to a special committee; I am informed now it was not.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is the very point I raised.

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been before the Senate for three months.

Mr. CONMEE. Who knew anything about that?

Mr. BRODEUR. For several sessions past there have been Bills brought before the House by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Leighton McCarthy) and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. McLean) and they have been discussed in the House and referred to committees. The change proposed in this section is a mere verbal change and it removes some of the disabilities which have been mentioned.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister tells us to-night that he does not know anything about the Bill and that he will have to consult his officer who is not present. The Bill is prepared by his officer who no doubt does his best, and while it may be all right in theory it may be all wrong in practice. I want the very best Bill that can be produced and one which will protect the public while at the same time it will not be a hardship on those interested in the business.

Mr. BRODEUR. Under the present law these temporary certificates are issued only to engineers in charge of 9 horse-power compound engines and now we are extending it to 14 horse-power so that it lessens the restrictions formerly placed on vessel owners.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have been informed that application has been made on behalf of certain ship owners in the maritime provinces to so widen the Act as to enable Canadian vessels up to 500 tons to sail as far as the River La Platte without certified masters and mates. Is that provided for in this Bill?

Mr. BRODEUR. I may say that such a question was brought up in connection with a Bill which has been introduced by my hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. McLean). This Bill was referred to a committee, which heard evidence and unanimously reported in favour of some changes being made in that direction. I think the committee recommended the adoption, not of the River La Platte, but of British Guiana, as the limit. That provision will be incorporated as a section in this Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would oppose the enlargement of the powers in that direction, and I speak on behalf of ship owners as well as of ship masters and mates. I have under my hand a long communication, which I do not propose to inflict on the House at this moment, but I would like to know when that amendment will be under discussion.

Mr. BRODEUR. As soon as we are through with the Bill as it is, I understand that a motion will be made to incorporate in this Bill the provision which has been reported by that committee.

Mr. PERLEY. This section 17 refers to the granting of temporary certificates to engineers on small passenger steamers. I think the minister might increase the horse-power, on which he would grant temporary certificates, to fifteen or twenty horse-power. I want to point out that there is nothing here providing for the granting of temporary certificates to engineers on tug boats. For instance, on the Ottawa river there are a great many tug boats engaged in towing logs, none of which have certificated engineers, although many of the engineers on them are able to take the machinery to pieces and put it together again, and have been at their work for many years. Provision ought to be made for granting temporary certificates to these men.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is nothing in any existing legislation requiring tug boats to have certificated engineers. This Bill will provide that engineers on tug boats of a certain size shall be obliged to have certificates. If the House agrees with that, we shall have to provide for issuing temporary certificates to engineers on tug boats.

Sections 17, 18, 19 and 21 allowed to stand.

On section 22—deck loads.

Mr. BRODEUR. This provision is for the purpose of making the phraseology the same as in the British Bill.

On section 25,

Section 732 of the Canada Shipping Act is amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

'Certificate' includes license and branch license.

Mr. BRODEUR. In our law there are cases in which we issue not only licenses but certificates. This is for the purpose of declaring that certificates include licenses and branch licenses.

On section 28,

The said Act is amended by inserting the following section immediately after section 782:

782a. It shall not be necessary to hold a preliminary investigation before a formal investigation is held.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is to meet some cases, in which the negligence is so apparent that it becomes necessary to hold immediately a formal investigation.

I intend to move the following amendment:

That after paragraph (d) the following be inserted:

Where the minister has reason to believe that a master, mate, pilot or engineer is unfit or unable to discharge the duties.

This is to meet the case of an officer who may be blind or have some defect which renders him absolutely incapable. There is no provision at present to give the minister the right to hold an investigation.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 29,

29. Section 784 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

784. A court holding a formal investigation into a shipping casualty shall hold it with two or more assessors to be selected for that purpose by the minister. Such assessors shall have nautical, engineering, or special skill in the matter to be inquired into, and the court shall be the sole judge as to whether any assessor possesses the requisite skill.

Mr. BRODEUR. Section 784 provides that the assessors must be men having experience in the merchant service. We may not, however, have any such officer at our disposal, but we may have an officer who has a certificate of the Royal Navy, for example, and we therefore think it advisable that we should dispense with the words 'having experience in the merchant service.'

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. minister tell me how often this Canada Shipping Act has been amended since its first enactment?

Mr. BRODEUR. It has been changed very often like all laws that have been long on the statute-book. Generally speaking, the principles we follow in the Canada Shipping Act are those adopted in England. In England they pass laws affecting even Canada in relation to shipping in some cases, and it is found in these cases that it is wise to have similar laws here.

Mr. MONK. Do any of the provisions of this Bill apply to stationary engineers?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. MONK. Because representations have been made to me from Montreal that it is very desirable that legislation on these lines should be passed for stationary engineers.

Mr. BRODEUR. That is a matter for the provinces. Boilers are inspected by the provincial authorities—I know that as far as my own province is concerned that is the case. The Bill does not make provision in relation to any engines and boilers except those on vessels.

Mr. MONK. But this Bill applies not only to the inspection of boilers and engines but also requires the certification of engineers.

Mr. BRODEUR. So far as stationary engineers are concerned, the matter is dealt with by the provincial authorities.

Mr. MONK. It may be so.

Mr. BRODEUR. I move that the following clause be added to the Bill, and I would call the especial attention of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) to this:

1. Paragraph (f) of section 72 of the Canada Shipping Act is repealed and the following paragraph is substituted therefor:—

(f) 'coasting voyage' means between any port or place on the eastern coast of Canada and other port or place on such coast, or in Newfoundland, Labrador or St. Pierre or Miquelon or a port or place on the eastern coast of the United States of America, or Mexico or Central America, or in the West Indies or on the eastern coast of South America, not further south than five degrees north latitude, and also means a voyage between any port or place on such coast or on the western coast of the United States of America, not further south than the harbour of Portland in the state of Oregon, and not further north than Cape Spencer in the territory of Alaska, or any inlet or bay having its entrance on the eastern side of the said cape.

My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) introduced this year a Bill defining the coasting voyage. It was referred to a Select Committee of this House to hear evidence. That committee made a unanimous report. They proposed to define the coasting voyage as meaning a voyage between a place in Canada and a place north of Cape Hatteras. But Cape Hatteras is in North Carolina, and most of the coasting trade of the maritime provinces is not with that section but more especially with the West Indies. It was found advisable, that the limitation of the coasting voyage should be extended to the limits I have mentioned in this section.

Mr. EMMERSON. How far does that take them ?

Mr. BRODEUR. To British Guiana.

Mr. EMMERSON. I would like to bring to the notice of the committee, and particularly of the minister, the contents of a letter I have received from a retired sea captain, a gentleman of large experience who has sailed practically every water in the world. I can best do so by reading extracts from his letter :

I notice that there have been witnesses called from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island who are anxious to allow Canadian vessels as large as 500 tons to start upon voyages as far as the River La Platte without having a mate on board with a certificate of competency.

This agitation no doubt arises with owners of coasting vessels who are anxious to man their ships with cheap men as officers. This, sir, is certainly a retrograde step, and is not in the real interest of the shipping of the country and no doubt has arisen with those owners who insure their vessels with the great insurance companies and carry very little or no insurance themselves.

The writer never knew a ship owner who carried his own risk that did not prefer competent men as masters and mates. I passed my examinations in England before there were any certificates issued in Canada. At that time we were not obliged to have certificates in England, they allowed us to enter and clear our ships if the ship was owned in the provinces, but we could not sail as master or mate in a ship owned in the United Kingdom except we held certificate of servitude, showing we had been master before the year 1851 when they first issued certificates of competency in England. The examinations in Britain are a little more difficult than in Canada, but they have excellent preparatory schools where the candidates attain a prescribed way of doing the work necessary for examination, and it is in my opinion a correct and necessary way and the man who has not sufficient intelligence nor energy to attain it, should not be placed in a position of such responsibility as attaches to the master or mate of a ship with cargo of great value and the lives of many other men depending upon him.

It is just as necessary for a mate to have a certificate of competency as it is for the master, for a master may die or be disabled as well as another, and why should the lives of the ship's company and a valuable ship and cargo be imperilled or placed in jeopardy because the owner of the vessel can save a few dollars a month in a mate's wages ?

I am sorry to trouble you with such a lengthy document as this letter, but I know whereof I write. I know by myself I was a good mate and a good ship master before I held any certificate of competency, but was a better and more competent one thereafter. I could give you many instances of the benefit of these examinations, but do not wish to inflict upon you unnecessary writing. But do not let us go backwards, for surely if it be necessary for those who practise law, medicine, engineering, dentistry or selling drugs, to pass examinations and obtain certificates of competency, it must be necessary for officers of ships to be competent, for a small ship unskillfully handled might easily sink one of the great steamships with a thousand people on board.

I cannot help resisting an argument in favour of retaining the examinations and issuance of certificaes of competency, which is very strongly supported by the fact that the holder of a certificate is to a very marked extent responsible for any dereliction of duty or neglect of duty, that he is held responsible and must be accountable by the Marine Department of the Board of Trade in the United Kingdom, or by the Marine Court of this country, or by a consular court of British subjects in a foreign country, who may upon sufficient evidence either cancel his certificate entirely or suspend it for almost any period, which means degradation and prevents him from attaining such position again in a British ship until the court that degraded him, or a court with equal authority, reinstated him by again granting his certificate. This I assure you, sir, is a strong incentive to more particular attention to his duty, and a constant study of the rules of the road, meaning the rules adopted by every nation that govern the conduct of ships when approaching each other, the avoiding of collisions at sea, as well as the rules specified by the authority under which he holds his certificate.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that, whatever be the merits of that letter, it has no relation whatever to the section now before the committee, but it might have some relation to the next section.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think the letter is germane to this section because there is the same principle. It is a retrograde movement, as I understand it.

Mr. BRODEUR. A proposition has been published to increase the tonnage of vessels. I propose to move two amendments.

Mr. EMMERSON. But they all incorporate the same idea. In the first place, you define what coasting voyage is, but you have extended the mileage so to speak of a coasting voyage.

Mr. BRODEUR. Masters of vessels and engineers will object to that.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The object of this section is to define and fix the limits of the coasting trade on the Atlantic and the Pacific. Up to 1903 the southern limits of the coasting trade extended to Cape Horn, on the western side, and consequently the coasting voyage permitted vessels to sail around the entire coast of both north and South America. Now it is proposed to fix the southern limit at British Guiana. It is not necessary to have a certificated master or mate when engaged in the home trade in Great Britain. It is as difficult to navigate a ship along the Irish, Scottish or English coasts as it would be from the maritime provinces to the British West Indies. There is no restriction whatever there. In the United States the coasting trade law permits American vessels to engage with trade in Cuba and the Philippines, which virtually means there is no restriction whatever. If it is proposed to fix the southern limit of our coasting trade at British Guiana——

Mr. EMMERSON. Until very recently the United States did not have certificates at all.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. We have a great deal of trade with the British West India Islands. A great number of our smaller vessels desire to engage in that trade and there is no objection to it.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that to make it easier ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Well, it does for ships of a certain size. It will remove some restrictions. Shipping men in the maritime provinces say that it is necessary in the interests of our trade, that our shipping is at present hampered by the law as now existing.

Mr. BERGERON. Have you a case in view ?

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I think that what I have said applies to the maritime provinces generally. We had a great deal of evidence taken before the committee. Vessel owners and sailing masters were here and they seemed to be of the opinion that it would be desirable to extend the limits of the coasting trade. There is some objection to increasing the tonnage of vessels which uncertified masters and mates are permitted to navigate.

Mr. BERGERON. I think that these measures are brought down very late in the session. We have no time to go through the old Act and compare it with the amendments.

Mr. BRODEUR. This Bill was introduced in December last and was sent to a committee for the purpose of being examined and of hearing evidence.

Mr. BERGERON. Did this come from the Senate ?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is an amendment which has been brought down from that committee. This was not in the Bill at all. The Bill introduced in the Senate was a government Bill and it has come over to us after having been a couple of months in the Senate.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN.

Mr. BERGERON. What becomes of the other Bill ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The other Bill is on the Order Paper ; that is Bill (No. 12). It was presented at the opening of the session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. According to the ruling of the Speaker earlier in the session this could not be touched at all.

Mr. FINLAYSON. This was reported by the committee over a month ago.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. But, if there is a similar provision on a Bill on the Order Paper, according to a ruling of the Speaker, it cannot be dealt with now.

Mr. BRODEUR. It cannot be passed except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. It was not asked; it should have been done before.

Mr. EMMERSON. A reference to the Act of 1903 will show that the term' coasting law ' was defined there and on the eastern coast of the United States coasting vessels could go as far south as Cape Hatteras in the state of North Carolina. They could go to Newfoundland, Labrador and St. Pierre Miquelon, but they could not go down below Cuba or the Florida coast. Under the amendment that is now proposed a coasting vessel——

Mr. BERGERON. Can go around the world.

Mr. EMMERSON. Can go practically anywhere in South America.

Mr. DANIEL. She cannot cross the equator.

Mr. EMMERSON. It might as well be so.

Mr. DANIEL. No, it might not, because crossing the equator is much more difficult navigation that getting down to the equator or within a few degrees of it. In the evidence that we had before this committee that matter was fully brought out. An effort was made by some members of the committee to extend coasting voyages as far as the River Platte, but in the professional evidence that we had, objection was made to giving a coasting voyage certificate that would allow a coasting voyage to extend beyond the equator on account of the difficult navigation that is encountered in that region. That is really the reason why the coasting voyage was not extended.

Mr. EMMERSON. Of course, my hon. friend (Mr. Daniel) having been a member of that committee, and having heard all that evidence, would be in a much better position than I am to speak of that, but I certainly would submit this fact that there must be much more difficult navigation south of Cape Hatteras than there is north of it.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Why ?

Mr. EMMERSON. One of the most difficult sections of the east coast of the United States is south of Hatteras. Vessels coming from the West Indies or from South America find the very greatest difficulty in approaching Hatteras. I do not, of course, assume to have any technical knowledge, but I have always understood from sea captains that their greatest difficulties in coming from southern ports to Canadian ports, especially in the winter season, were in approaching Hatteras. At any rate the idea involved in this amendment is that you are loosening the ropes as it were and permitting vessels to be in charge of non-certificated officers——

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. They have what are called coastwise certificates but you are permitting them to go on voyages that are practically not coastwise, A coastwise vessel in going from any of the maritime ports in Canada will strike for Cape Cod and then go down. If going to New York it will go through the Sound. If it is going to Philadelphia it will strike out but sometimes even then it will follow down the Sound when going on that voyage. But, it seems to me that we are taking a retrograde step in doing away with the necessity of having certificated officers on these larger voyages. Vessels of a cetrain size are enabled to engage in this coastwise traffic without being manned by certificated officers. You are going to raise that limit and therefore you are lessening or doing away with the restrictions. My hon. friend has stated, very fairly that the owners of vessels have asked for this, that the owners of vessels in Nova Scotia have deemed it to be in their interests that this should be done. Most reforms in the law respecting the safety of ships were carried against the protest of the ship owners.

Mr. J. D. REID. Is the hon. gentleman opposing this Bill ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I am.

Mr. J. D. REID. Then the Bill cannot be considered because it requires the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I am not raising any technical objection. I am opposing it on principle.

Mr. J. D. REID. It does not make any difference whether it is principle or not so long as you are opposing it. I would like the ruling of the chair on that point.

Mr. EMMERSON. That technical objection should be taken before we went into committee.

Mr. BRODEUR. The House has given its unanimous consent to take this clause into consideration, and when the clause is being considered any hon. gentleman can express his views pro or con.

Mr. BERGERON. The point is that we are taking a clause from a certain Bill on the Order Paper introduced by a private member and adding it to this government measure. The private Bill being on the Order Paper this cannot be done without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. The unanimous consent of the House has been given.

Mr. SINCLAIR. This government Bill is before the House and the hon. member for Lunenburg is perfectly in order in moving his amendment.

Mr. LENNOX. The amendment moved is taken from a Bill which is already on the Order Paper, and Mr. Speaker has decided quite recently that that cannot be done except by the unanimous consent of the House. The member for Westmorland does not give his consent and therefore the consideration of this Bill is not in order.

Mr. BERGERON. The other day the hon. member for York (Mr. Maclean) moved to add to a government Bill, a clause taken from a Bill which stood in his name, and Mr. Speaker ruled that he could not do so without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. The unanimous consent of the House was given when I moved to consider this question, and the leader of the opposition mentioned the point but he did not press it.

Mr. LENNOX. A member of this House can take an objection under the rules at any time he sees fit, and when he does so his objection disturbs the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. What is your authority for that ?

Mr. LENNOX. My authority is a well recognized rule of the House which was acted upon quite recently.

Mr. EMMERSON. I have submitted certain objections with respect to this legislation. In 1903 parliament decided that a coasting voyage should not extend south of Cape Hatteras and that it was not in the interest of safe navigation that Canadian vessels sailing from a Canadian port to an American port should be allowed to to go beyond Cape Hatteras unless they were in charge of officers certificated under the laws of Canada. By this amendment we propose to say that it is not necessary to restrict. Are there any reasons why we should not go back to the old law that existed previous to 1903, and indeed, previous to confederation ?

Mr. PICKUP. In 1896, the coasting voyage extended all around the coast of South America. It was in 1903 that the change was made.

Mr. EMMERSON. If in 1896 we felt that the time had not come when we should compel every man who navigated a vessel as far south as Cape Hatteras to have a certificate, the reasoning is so much the stronger.

Mr. PICKUP. You did not insist on their having certificates until 1903. Previous to 1903 certificates which were granted for coasting voyages enabled a master to sail a vessel to South America. It seems unfair to the man who gets a certificate now that he does not have the same privilege as the man who got a certificate previous to 1903.

Mr. EMMERSON. For what reason did we limit it in 1903? I cannot conceive that this parliament would take such a step without some good and sufficient reason. I can only assume that the reason was that it was considered in the public interest that these vessels, when going on voyages south of Cape Hatteras, should be manned by officers who had certificates which were more than coastwise certificates.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I would like to know why my hon. friend wants to stop a coasting vessel at Cape Hatteras when its business is largely south of Cape Hatteras—in the West Indies. Why does he not want the vessel to go to some place where it can get some business, where our vessels have been going for generations? I venture to say that the hon. gentleman cannot find a single accident that has happened from the fact that coasting captains have been allowed to go south of Cape Hatteras. Everybody who has studied the question has felt that a mistake was made in 1903, when the limit was fixed at Cape Hatteras. I could understand a man saying that a vessel should not go around the Horn; but to say that we should stop at Cape Hatteras when a large amount of the business is done south of that point strikes me as absurd.

Mr. EMMERSON. We do not stop the business. We simply require that vessels engaging in that trade shall be manned by officers who have the necessary certificates.

Mr. SINCLAIR. You are defining the limits of a coasting voyage. Even whether a man has his certificate or not, he must stop when he reaches Cape Hatteras.

Mr. EMMERSON. But he can have a certificate otherwise than a coastwise certificate.

Mr. BRODEUR. My hon. friend knows that most of the mariners of the maritime provinces are coast-voyage mariners, and if you force them to take seaboard certificates, you will render matters more difficult for most of them.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would ask the chairman for a ruling on the point I raised.

Mr. PICKUP.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My ruling is that the motion is out of order unless the House unanimously consents to take it up.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Without speaking on the point of order, I would like to see the proposed legislation pass the House in one form or other, either as added sections to the government Bill or as it was introduced. It will take just as much time to get it through later in the week as it will to-night. The minister could put himself in order by changing a single word in the section which he asks to be added to the Bill. So I do not think my hon. friend should press his objection.

Mr. EMMERSON. I wish it to be understood that I do not object to this amendment on the ground that it forms part of another Bill that stands on the Order Paper.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. I would ask my hon. friend to state his objection, so that we may know what it is, and then we can reply to it.

Mr. EMMERSON. I do not object to the consideration of this clause, but I do object to changing the definition of the expression 'coasting trade' so as to allow vessels manned by those having coastwise certificates going beyond the limitations set forth in the Act of 1903.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR. I would propose that section 3A be added to amend section 96 by striking out 100 and substituting 150. The Act provides that a sailing ship registered in Canada of 100 tons register may go to any port in Canada on a coasting voyage. I am now proposing to make the limit 150 tons.

Mr. EMMERSON. I shall oppose this for the reasons set forth in the letter which I read to the House.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BRODEUR moved that section 97 be amended by striking out the words 'two hundred' and substituting 'four hundred.'

Mr. EMMERSON. I object to this increase.

Mr. BRODEUR. This is with regard to the mates.

Mr. EMMERSON. The mate very often has to take the place of the master. Frequently in voyages to the West Indies, the masters are lost at sea or die and the vessels have to be taken charge of by the mates. If there is any reason for requiring a certificated master, you should certainly require a certificated mate.

Mr. BRODEUR. As far as Great Britain is concerned, there is no restriction.

Every vessel engaged in such voyages may be without certificated officers. In the United States the restriction is 700 tons. Before the committee it was established by evidence that it was very difficult to find mates, and in some cases vessels had to be detained a long time because they could not get proper officers. We did not think it advisable to increase the limit to 700, but the committee thought we should increase it to four hundred. With some reluctance, the department agreed to embody this clause in the Bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. KEMP. Before the Bill leaves the committee, I would like to ask the minister a question. With respect to section 477 of the Bill—'compulsory payment of pilotage dues'—there are certain exemptions, as, for instance, certain vessels employed in voyages between ports on the great lakes and ports on the St. Lawrence. Were the representations made by the Dominion Marine Association considered, and what was done about them?

Mr. BRODEUR. Some representations were made by the Marine Association with regard to this. They asked that the Bill should be amended in the opposite direction from that we have taken. But I found on examining the records that it was impossible to comply with their request. I might quote several accidents that were due to the fact that the vessels had not proper pilots. There was one case that occurred this spring. My hon. friend understands the necessity there is of having vessels in charge of the right men on the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, the channel being somewhat narrow. Representations were made to me by the Shipping Federation that, in order to prevent accidents, we should always have pilots on these boats. The Shipping Federation represented to me the case of the 'John Lambert.' The master held a United States certificate and did not understand that the rules for the harbour of Montreal were different from those for the great lakes. The result of the captain not knowing this was a serious accident. Another instance was that of a young man who had been dismissed by the department as apprentice pilot because his habits were not regular, and who was taken to pilot some of these vessels. We have been taking all the precautions possible in order to ensure the safety of navigation of the St. Lawrence, and it would not do to allow a man who had been dismissed from the service because his habits were faulty to be taken on these boats and become the cause of accident.

Mr. KEMP. I do not object to that, nor do I wish to take up time in discussing the general question. I want to know whether these exemptions were done away with? For instance, ships 'employed in trading between any one or more of the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island and any other or others of them.' Are these cancelled?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. KEMP. Why discriminate? Why legislate against the captains and masters of vessels which originate in Lake Superior, Lake Huron, Lake Erie and Lake Ontario?

Mr. BRODEUR. This is a privilege not being taken advantage of by these people to whom it is allowed.

Mr. KEMP. But it is a very serious matter for the captains of vessels on the great lakes who are trying to build up trade between the upper lakes and the lower ports. I will not take up time discussing the matter; I simply enter my protest against it.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Civil government—Department of Agriculture—to pay G. F. O'Halloran, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, a salary of $1,000 per annum as deputy commissioner of patents from April 1, 1908, $1,000.

Mr. J. D. REID. Perhaps the minister will explain why he is only spending $500,000 in the interests of the farmers and nearly six and a half millions on——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TALBOT. This is the last week; it is time to be serious.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the minister please explain this vote?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). A short time ago, when this question was up in connection with the Civil Service Bill, I explained the situation. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) was here then.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask if it is the intention of the government to give what we may call the rank and file of the civil service any additional pay?

Mr. FISHER. There are no special items in the supplementary estimates of a general character for the civil service. I do not know just what the hon. gentleman means by rank and file. But the estimates give, so far as I know, all that the government intend to bring down.

Mr. FOWLER. I mean the first, second and third class clerks. I understand the deputy ministers are to have an increase, and I wanted to know if the others were to have. There was some talk some time ago of a ten per cent advance by way of bonus. I understand the minister to say that the government has abandoned its intention with regard to that, if it ever had one.

Census and statistics—further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. BERGERON. I thought the census was finished.

Mr. FISHER. The census of 1901 was finished long ago, but we have now a permanent census office. Last year we took an agricultural census of Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces.

Fumigation stations—further amount required, $500.

Mr. FISHER. These fumigating stations are a protection against the introduction of the San Jose scale into Canada. The nursery stock that comes in from the United States has to be fumigated.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I have been waiting for an opportunity to comment on the humiliating manner in which the Minister of Agriculture has treated the Agricultural Committee and the members of this House. It is not reasonable to make any prolonged discussion in regard to agricultural matters at this stage of the session. But I want to call the attention of the minister to the way he has treated the Agricultural Committee, and the way in which he has dealt with the resolution that committee passed on the 20th June, 1905. That resolution read as follows :

That this committee realize an injustice is being done to the people of Canada through their British embargo on our cattle being maintained, and believe that it would be in the best interests of the farming industry of the Dominion to have a deputation consisting of the Minister of Agriculture of each province of the Dominion to act in conjunction with the Dominion Minister of Agriculture to wait upon the chairman of the Board of Agriculture of England, giving as much publicity to their proceedings as possible, and laying before the said department the justice of our requests, to have the Act authorising the said embargo repealed.

That resolution went through committee into this House, and the House passed it unanimously. It was the wish of both sides of the House that the minister should conduct that matter in the manner expressed in the resolution. Now he has not raised a finger towards carrying out the wishes of this House. In his reply to this resolution he makes use of the following words :

The Minister of Agriculture has made no effort to bring together such a deputation for the purpose set forth in the above resolution, for the reason that, in view of the repeated representations made by the Canadian government and the persistent refusals of the British government (as shown by the documents attached hereto and those previously brought down) and the persistent action of the British parliament in refusing to amend the existing law so as to admit of the importation of live Canadian cattle into the United Kingdom, such action would, in his opinion, be futile and undignified.

Why does the minister take the position that it would be both futile and undignified to obey a resolution of this House ? He takes the position that the Agricultural Committee and the members of this House did not know what they were doing when they passed that resolution. I could go through the whole of this correspondence relating to the cattle embargo, and show that the minister has not raised a finger towards trying to remove that cattle embargo. I have letters under my hand addressed to Lord Strathcona wherein he states distinctly that so far as this government is concerned they do not want to get mixed up with the cattle embargo in Great Britain. When he received letters from the meat association of Great Britain, and when he knew that an agitation was going on in that country from year to year, and he was urged to give some encouragement to those who were endeavouring to remove the cattle embargo, the minister, instead of giving that encouragement, did the very opposite, and would not give a particle of encouragement to these men. The minister knows that when the vote was taken in the British House of Commons his attention was called to it ; he knows that when representations were made to him from different sections of the country urging him to lend some assistance to the men who were fighting for the removal of the cattle embargo in Great Britain, he refused to raise a finger, he practically told Lord Strathcona that this government did not wish any action to be taken.

Mr. FISHER. I do not wish to continue the controversy. The hon. gentleman says I know all about it. I think I do, and I am quite willing to say now that I have not taken the steps there suggested. My reason for not doing so was that almost immediately after that resolution was passed, the Minister of Agriculture of England declared emphatically and publicly that so long as he continued in office the embargo would not be removed. He was followed by another Minister of Agriculture, who declared the same thing, and he has been followed by a third minister of the oposite political party who has declared exactly the same thing. As this is a matter which has to be dealt with by statute in the British parliament, and as the government has declared over and over against the removal of the embargo by Act of parliament, I think it would be both futile and undignified on the part of Canada to bother any more about it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The minister knows full well, that, while it did not carry, a measure providing for the abolition of the embargo was before the British House of Commons.

Mr. FISHER. With what result?—it was overwhelmingly defeated over and over again.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Yes, but if the minister had been able to show to the British House of Commons that the Ministers of Agriculture of the Dominion and of the various provinces were anxious to have this embargo removed does the minister not believe that would have had a great effect on that body? He knows full well that instead of him taking up the resolution of the committee and dealing with it in the proper method he has failed in his duty in this respect, and we cannot censure him too strongly for the manner in which he has acted.

Mr. FISHER. They have the official despatches from this government making representations and giving reasons why the cattle embargo should be removed, they were before the British government and the British parliament, and members of the British House of Commons, in all these debates, quoted them, but they have had no effect.

Mr. STAPLES. I do not think the Minister of Agriculture is justified in sitting quietly down and making no effort to remove the embargo on our cattle. Surely the minister should make an effort to have the resolution adopted by the Committee on Agriculture and endorsed on the floor of this House forwarded to the British government and to the British parliament. He should make every effort to secure the abrogation of that embargo. It is essential to the best interests of the agriculturists of this country that it should be removed, and under these circumstances is the minister going to sit down quietly and say that they have discussed it on the floor of the imperial parliament and that there is nothing more for him to do but to accept whatever finding they may have arrived at? That is a pretty weak argument, and I believe the farmers will not accept it in the way the minister expects them to.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. And he has instructed Lord Strathcona not do do anything in this matter.

Mr. STAPLES. Has the minister forwarded the resolution of this parliament asking that the embargo should be removed, or has he called the attention of the imperial parliament to the resolution adopted by the Committee on Agriculture and endorsed on the floor of this House? Has the minister even gone that far?

Mr. FIELDING. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Staples) help us by pointing out just what can be done with the British government that has not already been done to get them to remove the embargo? What would my hon. friend do?

Mr. STAPLES. I would not sit down and say there is nothing further to be done. I would make a further effort. That is the time I would get busy.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend would get busy, but my hon. friend has not answered the question. Would he be good enough to tell me what he should do? The British government has announced its policy on the question, it has a large majority and, having announced its policy, what is my hon. friend going to do to change it? Do not tell me that he will get busy. We are all busy.

Mr. STAPLES. If I were the Minister of Agriculture I would certainly consult my colleagues and try and formulate a policy for the removal of the embargo.

Mr. FIELDING. That will not do. What would my hon. friend do to make this wicked British government change its policy?

Mr. STAPLES. I would lay every argument that is possible to lay before them.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has only waked up. That has been done. Tell us something else.

Mr. STAPLES. The Minister of Agriculture said not more than a moment ago that he had not even laid before the imperial authorities the resolution that was passed by this House. Has he done all he might do?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, and more.

Mr. BERGERON. Could not this government withdraw our preference if they will not do that?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we could, but we think it would not be wise to do so.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should the farmers of Canada suffer for the sake of giving England a preference of about 33 per cent?

Mr. FISHER. Would my hon. friend do that?

Mr. BERGERON. Yes, I would. I do not think that the preference is worth anything at all.

Mr. FIELDING. To whom?

Mr. BERGERON. To Canada.

Mr. LENNOX. Are we right in saying that the Minister of Agriculture did not take any action upon the resolution of this House?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. LENNOX. The Minister of Finance asks what we would do. I think the farmers of Canada ought to be represented in this House in a peculiar and especial way. They are the backbone of the institutions of this country, and the Committee on Agriculture ought to be a peculiarly important committee. If there is any committee of this House which is entitled to great respect it is the Committee on Agriculture. I understand that that committee passed a unanimous resolution upon this point. They represented as thoroughly and completely as they can be represented the farmers of Canada. I have great respect for the Minister of Agriculture, but I think he is assuming a great deal when he——

Mr. D. ROSS. I rise to a point of order. Is this discussion pertinent to a vote of $500 for immigration?

Mr. LENNOX. I think the Minister of Agriculture is taking on himself a great deal when he assumes that he can veto——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. LENNOX—a resolution of the Committee on Agriculture and the action of this House. When the Minister of Finance asks what could have been done it is clear that the Minister of Agriculture could have laid those two resolutions before the House of Commons in England.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to say a word in regard to this matter as I was responsible for bringing the matter before the Committee on Agriculture. It is generally known that the farmers are anxious to have the embargo removed. We know the attitude of the British government, and we are very sorry that they have taken that attitude, but I may say that I have found the government always willing to take every step in their power to bring the matter before the British government. I would call the attention of the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong), who is criticising the Minister of Agriculture so severely, to the fact that one of the latest attempts on the part of the government to impress this matter upon the British government was when the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) called the attention of the imperial conference and of the British government especially to the fact that the embargo was maintained as against Canadian cattle, and intimated to the British government that it would be regarded by the people of Canada as a very gracious act on their part if that embargo were removed. Still I hope that the matter will work its own remedy and that we will soon have the British people in greater numbers demanding that the embargo be removed in order that they may get relief from the exorbitant prices that are being demanded for meat in that country at present.

Mr. BARR. It seems to me that the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture who brought that resolution before the House urging that the Minister of Agriculture should take action is very easily pleased. We find the chairman of the committee, after being snubbed by the Minister of Agriculture and after being treated not with the courtesy, that he should be treated with, coming here and defending the minister who has told us that he would not even forward that resolution to England. I submit that if England is going to treat us in the way she has done over this embargo it is time that we should look after our own interests. If we cannot get justice done then we can look after ourselves, and probably we will find that the preferential duty is not to the advantage of Canada. If England is not going to give full consideration to her colonies then the time may come when Canada may have to take action. The least the Minister of Agriculture could have done would have been to forward that resolution to England. We all know the time was when we were told that if there was a reform government in power in England they would have so much consideration for the reform government in Canada that they would remove the embargo. But now that the reformers are in power in England this government is afraid to embarrass them, and so the Minister of Agriculture would not forward the resolution which expressed the wishes of all the farmers of the Dominion of Canada. I am surprised that the chairman of the Agriculture Committee who was so bold when he was in the committee, should be found to-day defending the course of the minister. I can tell him and I can tell the minister that the farmers of this country will not stand being humbugged and treated discourteously.

Mr. CHRISTIE. It would appear to me from the standpoint of the farmer, that the Minister of Agriculture has treated this matter very lightly. There is nothing so detrimental to the interests of the farmers of Ontario, and of the Dominion generally, as this embargo on our cattle in the English market. There is an agitation in Great Britain among the live stock people demanding the removal of that embargo, and I think the Canadian government should extend some assistance to the men in England who are trying to benefit us in this respect. The day is past for growing wheat profitably in Ontario, and so we have to direct our attention to the raising of cattle and sheep. Our cattle are under embargo in England and recently there has been an embargo of 30 days put on Canadian sheep going into the United States. All this simply means that the Canadian farmers cannot any longer profitably raise sheep, with wool at 7 or 8 cents a pound and an embargo of 30 days on these animals entering the United States which was our only market for sheep. Consequently, the Ontario farmers have only the dairy industry left to them. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture what we may expect in the future with reference to those matters I have mentioned ?

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member (Mr. Christie) is not more anxious then I am to have the embargo on Canadian cattle entering the English market removed. There is no excuse whatever for that embargo. I have made the strongest possible representations to the British government, they have several times replied that they cannot entertain the proposal, that they would not entertain the proposal. That reply has not only been given to me as Minister of Agriculture for Canada, but it has been reiterated over and over again to the different bodies in Great Britain who have demanded the repeal of the embargo. I trust the agitation in England will succeed. Nobody would be more glad than I if it did, but I am sorry to say that all the indications are that for a number of years yet it will not succeed. We have placed our arguments forcibly and vigorously and completely before the British government and I do not believe that reiterating and reiterating them will accomplish any good purpose. If hon. gentlemen opposite can tell me anything that will accomplish our object I will be glad to consider it.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. That being the case why did the minister ignore the resolution of the agriculture committee and of the House and refuse to send it to England.

Mr. FISHER. I said I was ready to do anything that I thought would accomplish any good result.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. It does not depend on what you think.

Mr. FISHER. I do not see any use in beating the air with idle threats. I know that the people in England who are agitating there have had great hopes but that time and again these hopes have been dashed to the ground.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. They had no help from Canada.

Mr. FISHER. They had every help from Canada. They have the papers and the documents which have been placed before the British government and these documents have been used in argument by their representatives in parliament. Is it likely that we will accomplish what they, in England, cannot accomplish ? Is there any use for us to beat the air with mere reiteration of the arguments we have advanced time and again. I am quite ready at any time to aid the agitation in England but I think action on our part in the present juncture would be futile. Suppose the English people were to represent to the parliament of Canada that we must do something which we think to be detrimental to Canada but which they would think would be advantageous to England, do you think they would be likely to succeed ? I think it would be looked upon by us as an impertinent interference in matters of domestic concern ; and I do not want to put myself or the Dominion of Canada in a position to be snubbed. We have come pretty near being snubbed in regard to it already. I do not want to get entirely to the point of being snubbed.

Mr. CHRISTIE. The majority of the farmers in the province of Ontario are breeders of live stock, and there is a splendid market in Great Britain for pure bred live stock. Could not the hon. minister make an effort to have our live stock tested and allowed to be sold over there without being killed at the port of entry ?

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend surely knows that the diseases against which the embargo exists are pleuro-pneumonia and foot and mouth disease, and there is no test against these diseases.

Mr. FOWLER. This seems to be an awful indictment against the Minister of Agriculture on the part of a number of distinguished agriculturists such as the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Armstrong) and the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Barr), and an awful confession of impotence on the part of the minister. He says that it is impossible for him to do anything in this matter. I supposed, from the experience we have had of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that nothing was impossible to him. He seems to be unfortunate in his own department ; but when he took charge of the Department of Militia in the absence of the minister of that department, he was able to do wonderful things—he dismissed summarily one of the best officers that ever came to this country from Great Britain. But he does not seem to have influence enough with the British government, though his friends are in power there, to get this little embargo removed. I do not think he does himself justice. When he became Minister of Agriculture, we thought we had at last an ideal minister for that department, a horny handed son of toil who knew what it was to plough and sow and reap, and we thought our agricultural interests would be well attended to ; the only thing he has done to advance agriculture has been to teach the farmers' wives how to fatten chickens and how to kill them. Of course, I admit that the Prime Minister has to some extent tied his hands, because he told the people of England that the trade preference was given to them without any expectation of reward, and therefore it is that the suggestion of the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) can scarcely be acted on by the Minister of Agriculture. I am sorry that the minister is not able to do more for the farming class than he has done; I am sorry that he is only able to get a paltry half million for the farmer, while the Minister of Militia, with the strong influence which he has over this government, is able to get six and a half millions for the soldiers.

Mr. FISHER. I am trying to make up for it by getting more now.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture why he allowed the report of the Committee on Agriculture to be adopted. That committee met and formulated and passed this resolution, which was reported to this House and adopted by this House. The Minister of Agriculture says that the Committee on Agriculture know nothing about it, and that the members of this House who adopted that report know nothing about it. Why did the hon. minister place the committee and this House in that position ? Why did he not rise and say that the report could not be adopted? If the chairman of the committee had the interests of the agriculturists at heart, he would tender his resignation or else call the committee together and pass a vote of censure on the minister for turning down its report.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I want to ask the minister to give us the new regulations in reference to the importation of thoroughbred stock from the United States into Canada.

Mr. FISHER. I cannot give my hon. friend that information off-hand ; but I will get it and send it to him. Regarding the quarantine placed upon Canadian sheep going into the United States we received notice of that two or three weeks ago, and we immediately entered into communication with the department at Washington, the conclusion of which has not yet been reached, so that I cannot give any detailed information with regard to it. I can only say that our understanding is that that quarantine was put on in consequence of some scabby sheep having been found in the United States, which were believed to have been brought in from Canada. We have been investigating the matter to see just what the facts are in regard to it. I have not yet seen a report on that incident; but I hope shortly to be able to ferret out the whole thing and to give the information. We are also in communication with the authorities at Washington to see in what way we can get this quarantine removed.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. After the statement of the minister, I think I should put on 'Hansard' a couple of letters. This letter is from the High Commissioner, dated 11th October, 1905 :

I beg to send you copy of letter dated August 7 (with an enclosure) which I have received from the National Association of Meat Traders on the subject of the Canadian cattle embargo. The general secretary of the federation also came to see me recently on the same subject, when I explained to him the attitude of the Canadian government in relation to the question, as outlined in the correspondence which I have had the pleasure of having with you. I understand also that there will be a general conference of the various interests concerned in the removal of the embargo on November 24 next at the Westminster Palace Hotel, when the question will again be considered, and if you wish me to take any action in regard to it, I shall be much obliged if you will kindly favour me with your views.

Mr. Fisher wrote as follows:

My Dear Lord Strathcona,—Yours of October 11 has just come before me. I have been away for several weeks in the west and only private letters were forwarded to me. I note what you say in regard to the cattle embargo discussion. It seems to me in line with our opinion that we ought not to take any part in this, which has now reached the stage of a political discussion in England. I would not suggest your having anything to do with the conference. Of course, if matters there develop so as to make you decide it worth your while to do anything about it, I shall be quite satisfied to leave that to your judgment.

And so on. I have here a memorial from the National Federation of the Meat Trader's Association which I might read for the benefit of the Canadian people who take an interest in this question, but the time is too limited. I would like however to just call attention of the minister to another letter which he wrote Lord Strathcona on the 10th May, 1905. I shall only read a part of it because it is very lengthy.

I do not know Mr. M. Donald Munro, but it is well understood that the men who handle Canadian fat cattle, shipping them to England are not particular about the embargo being removed. The farmers of this country, however, are, and there is a general feeling in the country on the part of everybody that the embargo is unjust and reflects upon the health of our cattle. . . .

I feel that we Canadians ought not to enter at all into the controversy at present going on in England, and therefore I have made no reference to any of the articles which appeared in the press there or the statements which were made by public men, with the single exception of what appeared to be in the official utterances of the minister.

I might go on reading letter after letter to show that the minister, instead of coming out boldly on the question and taking an active interest in it, instead of putting forth his best efforts to have the cattle embargo removed, was devoting his attention to minor matters. I only wish I had time to go on and show the futile part the minister has taken in this whole matter. If I had the time I could go on and show what little interest he has taken in a subject which is so vital to agricultural interests. Take his whole career during the past eleven years and you will find that instead of his paying attention to the development of that great cattle industry, he has been paying his attention to some of the other departments to the neglect of the greatest industry we have. When we look over the paltry bits of legislation he has brought in for the advantage as he deems it, of our agricultural industry, we cannot but be convinced that the time cannot come too soon when a different government will have control of the country and promote different legislation for the advancement of that great interest.

Mr. OWEN. I would like to ask if the cattle from any other country are allowed to enter England on more favourable terms than the cattle from Canada?

Mr. FISHER. The Canadian cattle have the greatest privileges except the cattle of the United States, which are treated on the same footing.

Exhibitions—further amount required, $175,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Does this include the grant for the Dominion exhibition?

Mr. FISHER. No, that is a special grant of $50,000 each year and that is in the main estimates.

Mr. CROCKET. When may we expect a decision regarding the Dominion exhibition grant for 1909 ?

Mr. FISHER. Soon after the close of the session.

Mr. CROCKET. I trust the minister will bear in mind the claims of Fredericton. The people of Fredericton will be much disappointed if that grant is not given the capital of New Brunswick which is now making preparations for the provincial exhibition of 1909. If the grant be given to any other place, that will kill the provincial exhibition to be held at Fredericton.

Mr. FISHER. There are several applications on which the government will have to decide.

Mr. CROCKET. But there is no doubt that grant goes to New Brunswick.

Mr. FISHER. New Brunswick and Saskatchewan are the only two provinces which have not received the grant. Saskatchewan is asking for it for 1910 and New Brunswick wants it for 1909.

Mr. BERGERON. How much money is expended altogether on exhibitions?

Mr. FISHER. There is an amount of $200,000 in the main estimates and there will be about $375,000 altogether for the two exhibitions this year. This is the first opportunity we have had during many years of exhibiting at the general exhibition at London, and I wish to make a special effort in view of the fact that this is an Anglo-French exhibition. We are very anxious to show what our French Canadians can do under the British flag as compared with the colonies of France under the French flag.

Mr. BERGERON. These exhibitions may be a good thing but there is something lacking somewhere. After the exhibition we had at Milan, there seemed to be no good result. I have seen some business men from Italy who were in Ottawa and they told me that when anybody in Italy wanted to know anything about Canada, they did not know where to apply, as there were no Canadian agencies there. Some company in Italy wanted a lot of railway ties and probably would have bought a very large quantity in Canada if they had known where to apply for them. As I said when this question first came before parliament, if, after each exhibition is over, a Canadian agent should remain with a small exhibit of some of the Canadian staples, it would do more good. We have been perambulating our goods all over the world at exhibitions, but the time has come when agencies should be established. The former government established agencies in Australia, and these have been continued by the present government. This shows that the system is an advantageous one.

Mr. FISHER. There is no doubt that there is great force in the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron). It is true that the impression made by these exhibitions is a strong one, but, naturally, if there is no continuance of work that impression fades. I do not know that I would be justified, in connection with my department, in asking for a vote of money for a continuance of the work. I think that should be in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STAPLES. When will the minister have these regulations printed regarding the importation of thoroughbred stock from the United States? I believe these are the outcome of the Dominion Livestock Convention held last winter, and so there has been time to have these regulations printed and circulated. I know that the minister (Mr. Fisher) is a busy man. He has been for some time attending to the Civil Service Bill ; then he was down in Stanstead trying to convince the people there that there was no bar in the House of Commons. And so on. I think he should come back to his department and try to attend to affairs for the farmers.

Mr. FISHER. I do not seem to have appreciated my own capacity. The hon.

gentleman (Mr. Staples) pays me a compliment, which I accept for what it is worth, and thank him accordingly. He has reproached me unfairly on this matter, because these regulations were passed by the Customs Department three or four weeks ago and were immediately made public.

Further amount required to encourage the production and use of superior seeds of farm crops and for the enforcement of the Seed Control Act, $18,000.

Mr. STAPLES. How is this money to be expended? There is nothing more important in the interests of agriculture than the production and distribution of good seed.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's opinion of the work we are doing. We are increasing considerably the amount of money to the Seed Growers' Association, which is working well in the province of Manitoba, from which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Staples) comes. Last year we got out a book generally known as 'Farm Weeds,' for which there has been a most unprecedented demand all over the country. I am proposing to get out a second edition, for which a considerable part of this vote is to be spent.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you issue them free?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. But I am seriously considering whether a limited number, at any rate, ought not to be sold. We have been trying to get them into the hands of those generally interested and in a position to justify their being given this book.

Mr. HENDERSON. Has the minister any of these books on hand?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will be glad to get one, for I have a requisition for it from a correspondent. May I call upon the minister to-morrow?

Mr. FISHER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this vote cover the amount spent in sending out samples of seed?

Mr. FISHER. No, that is provided for out of the experimental farm vote.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the size of those samples ought to be increased.

Mr. FISHER. They are larger now than they used to be.

Mr. FOWLER. Better make them larger still. The farmers in my district are pleased with these seed samples; there is only one fault that they find with them, and that is that the samples are not large enough. It takes a farmer so long to grow from these small samples a sufficient quantity of seed to use on his farm that the seed becomes run out before he gets enough.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. FISHER. He can do it in two years, if he does it right.

Mr. FOWLER. In oats you ought to have at least a bushel.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not? These lawyers, doctors and others about me here express surprise. But gentlemen who know about farming, as the Minister of Agriculture and I do, know that what I say is sound. There is no better way in which you could spend money than this—it is far better than giving it to the Minister of Militia to buy Ross rifles with. If the Minister of Agriculture does not feel that he can go the whole bushel that I suggest, he should send eight pounds instead of four.

Mr. FISHER. We send ten now.

Mr. FOWLER. Make it twenty.

Mr. STAPLES. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) has brought up this question before now. Every year we on this side have tried to impress the minister with the necessity of increasing the quantity of grain sent as a sample. We carry on farming differently in Manitoba from the way it is carried on in the eastern provinces. When only a small quantity of seed is sent to a farmer it is almost impossible for him to keep it separate.

If a farmer has a bushel, or sufficient to sow an acre, then he is in a position to harvest that and keep it by itself, and when he comes to thresh it, it will not be mixed up with other kinds of grain. It would be better if the minister would send out this seed to fewer persons and send it in larger quantities. A farmer in a particular district would get sufficient to seed an acre or two, and then after a year he is in a position to supply his neighbours with that kind of seed. I am glad to hear that the minister is going to be more liberal in sending out the synopsis that he has published. Some time ago I called his attention to the necessity of placing these books in the hands of the various municipal councils throughout the country. Since then I have had a great many letters from the clerks of municipal councils in the province of Manitoba, and from reeves, asking that this book might be placed in the municipal offices, the same as the minister has been distributing them among the various school districts. I would ask him now if it is his intention to carry out that idea?

Mr. FISHER. We are trying to do that, or something similar, and that is the reason I am asking for this money.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I want to endorse the sentiments of the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Staples). We are spending a good deal of money in sending out small samples, and I venture to say that from ninety per cent of all the small parcels the farmers of this country get no result. I know from personal experience, and the experience of farmers in my district, that the sample is too small, it becomes mixed in with other seed. If you sent out at least half a bushel of seed to fewer individuals, you would get some benefit.

Mr. BARR. This is one of the items that I think is very much too small. We have an item of $18,000 for the production and use of superior seeds, and for the enforcement of the Seeds Control Act. We might cut that item in two, and I would like to know what could be accomplished by $9,000 in encouraging the production and use of superior seeds of farm crops. The government should send out fewer seeds in sufficient quantity to enable the farmers to bring forth good seed. We know that even when good seed is sown on a farm for a number of years it deteriorates. If the government were to spend $100,000 in sending out larger quantities of seed, they would be doing the greatest possible benefit to the farmers. In my experience I have had great trouble in supplying the farmers who wrote to me asking for samples of seed. I received a number of letters asking for this seed, and I got two or three samples and could not get any more. The farmers are the most important class in this country, and this item should not be less than $100,000.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I want to endorse what has been said by the previous speakers. Some of our farmers have put together the four or five pounds each one of them received and got one farmer to sow it, so that they could get some result from it. If you sow only four pounds of seed you lose track of it, and it is of very little use. If it was sent out in larger quantities and to fewer people, it would produce far better results.

Further amount required for the administration and enforcement of the Meat and Canned Foods Act, $20,000.

Mr. MARSHALL. How many inspectors has the minister appointed?

Mr. FISHER. I have not yet appointed any for the canned fruits and vegetables. I expect to appoint two or three more just as soon as the season opens.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I would like to know how many inspectors the minister has under salary in carrying out the Meat Act, also what amount of money it is costing the country, and if that Act is being enforced in every constituency of this Dominion as it is in my own riding.

Mr. FISHER. I could not say the exact number of inspectors. There are somewhere between forty and fifty veterinary inspectors, and a number of them have assistants who are not deputies, who are men chosen as much as possible from the butcher class, to aid them in inspecting the actual slaughter. It is being enforced all over the country.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Would not local veterinarians look after this Act better than some of the inspectors the minister has appointed? We have some very efficient veterinarians in my district.

Mr. FISHER. We laid down the rule last year that men required to pass a special examination, and good veterinarians do not wish to leave their practice. We require a man to go into the work the year round. We give him a salary of $1,200 a year. Most of them are put into the factories and do not travel.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Are the inspectors required to be single men ?

Mr. FISHER. No. We do not like to keep an inspector too long in one factory. He is apt to get slack and become too friendly with the people who own the factory. He must be ready to pick up and go whenever required. The chief veterinary inspector says that when a man is married it is not easy for him to remove at a moment's notice.

Mr. CLEMENTS. There is an efficient veterinary surgeon in my city who would like to have been appointed an inspector but he was practically told there was no use of trying the examination because he was a married man.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. A large canner informed me the other day that he wished to dispose of five cars of waste and chop apples. The bulk of this product goes to Germany where there is 7-10 of a cent surtax. The price he can get on these refuse apples is 1 1-5 cents and if you take 7-10 off 1 1-5 you will see what the surtax is doing for the apple man.

Mr. MARSHALL. Is it the intention of the minister to appoint sufficient inspectors to inspect the canned goods factories this season ?

Mr. FISHER. We did not undertake to inspect the fruit and vegetable factories in the same way we do the meat factories. I do not think we will be able to undertake the inspection of all the factories this year.

Mr. MARSHALL. It would be worth while to do it this season because the pack will soon be half over.

Further amount required for the development of the live stock industry, $20,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I was at the Experimental Farm recently and I want to compliment the department as far as the new building is concerned. But, the swine pens at the Experimental Farm are a disgrace to this country. If the minister would take some of this vote and build a proper piggery out there he would be doing justice to his department and to the country.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I had the pleasure of visiting the farm and I must compliment the minister upon the fact that they had there some litters of pigs that are as fine as any I ever saw. But, I think that the Experimental Farm ought to have an ideal animal of all breeds. I think they should have an ideal pair of horses out there.

Mr. FISHER. There are some pretty good ones.

Mr. CHRISTIE. They should have ideal cows, both short horn and dairy cows. One of the largest farmers in North Ontario, a very prominent Liberal, was here and asked me to take him over to the farm. When I took him there he was very much disappointed with the stock that he saw. He said that he expected to see ideal animals He said: I have better animals in my own stables.

Mr. FISHER. What kind ?

Mr. CHRISTIE. Short horns.

Mr. FISHER. Beef short horns.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Yes. I think that at the Experimental Farm where there is so much money spent there should be ideal animals of all classes so that when farmers went there they could see what they should try to breed up to. I hope the minister will carry out that idea because I am satisfied that it is for that purpose that we keep the farm there. We are not keeping that farm for the purpose of raising common stock that every farmer can raise.

Mr. FISHER. I just take exception to this extent: My hon. friend is quite right in saying that we have no typical or ideal beef short horns there. The short horns we have are dairy short horns and I think my hon. friend will acknowledge that they are very fine specimens of the breed. The other breeds of dairy cows I think are ideal, each one of its kind. I have been about among the dairy herds of Canada and I venture to say there is not in existence such a herd of French Canadian dairy cows as there is at the farm. There is no better herd of Ayrshire and the Guernseys are a very fine lot. The dairy short horns would not come up to my hon. friend's ideal of beef short horns although they are very creditable as dairy animals. As far as horses are concerned I am surprised at my hon. friend's strictures. We have five or six teams of first-class horses, not, show Clydesdales, not the Clydesdales that go into the ring and take prizes, but first class working Clydesdales that will go through a large amount of work in a day. I do not think my hon. friend will find in his own county a barn full of working horses, not show horses, not stallions and mares kept for showing, but a barn full of working horses that will compare with our farm horses. I have been down through his county and I have seen finer show horses but not many teams of finer working horses. I would like to say to my hon. friend from West Kent (Mr. Clements) in regard to the piggeries that I have not been on the farm lately, but when I was there last I saw, without exception, the best lot of litters of young pigs that I ever saw in my life. At one time there were five sows with 72 or 73 pigs and they raised them all. My hon. friend is right in saying that the first part of the piggery that you see as you go in is not an ideal one, but I never saw a better place for wintering sows and keeping them in good order than that shed at the back of the piggery, and if I were going to build a piggery on my own farm I would build just such a place as that. I want to try to put up an inexpensive building there which will be a model for any ordinary farmer to build by. We find that pigs do better in comparatively cool and inexpensive buildings.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I mentioned in the House last year that I purchased some thoroughbreds at the experimental farm and they were a failure from the start to the finish. I would not like any other farmer to be led into the same trap as I was, because I lost one thousand dollars by the transaction if I lost a dollar.

Mr. BERGERON. This is an appropriate time to direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to a matter of considerable importance to breeders of horses in the province of Quebec. There is a provincial association which grants pedigrees for horses and there is also a federal association of the same kind. As the Minister of Agriculture knows the breed of French Canadian horses has pretty well disappeared, and the object of the provincial association is to improve and perpetuate it. A number of the farmers in the province complain that horses which have been granted a pedigree by the provincial association have been refused a pedigree by the Dominion association, and on this account great disappointment has been caused. The people who have made complaints to me were under the impression that some of our English friends wished to discriminate against the French Canadian breed of horses.

Mr. FISHER. I think I can explain the whole thing to my hon. friend. For a number of years in different parts of Canada there were local stud books and herd books kept for registering the pedigree of animals, but this system was found to be detrimental to the breeders of live stock, because a pedigree issued in Quebec would not be recognized in Ontario or the other provinces, and a pedigree issued in Ontario would, in the same way, not be recognized outside of that province. Representatives of the breeders and live stock throughout the Dominion held a convention in Ottawa and they asked the Department of Agriculture to establish national stud books and herd books. After a great deal of discussion and consideration, I agreed to allow the National Live Stock Association to establish records and books at Ottawa, and I gave them office room in the department. It was agreed that the department should affix the Dominion stamp to the certificates they issued declaring that these records were accepted by the Department of Agriculture. At first all the breeders did not fall in with the arrangement, but one after another they have asked to be included in these national records, and among others the French Canadian Horse Breeders' Association. I discussed the matter with the breeders of French Canadian horses and we found that a great many animals had been recorded which were not French Canadian at all, and had no affinity with the French Canadian breed. In the province of Quebec the French Canadian breed of horses used to be well known, but unfortunately it has almost disappeared and there are very few pure bred animals left. In their anxiety to get a pedigree for their horses a number of French Canadian farmers had them registered in the Quebec book. Some of them were no more French Canadian horses than would be an English thoroughbred. Some of them were actually registered in other stud books as being standard bred trotters, some of them even as Clydesdales or English thoroughbreds. When the breeders of French Canadian horses asked to have the seal of the department attached to the pedigrees in this book, of course, we could not do it under these circumstances.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. FISHER. My hon. friend must have a little patience. This is a matter in which the farmers of Quebec are greatly interested, and which is of the utmost importance to them.

Mr. BERGERON. The minister is answering a question which I put to him, and I am anxious to get the information.

Mr. FISHER. I am answering the question in all courtesy, and I hope hon. gentlemen will have patience.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a very important matter.

Mr. FISHER. It is very important to the breeders in the province of Quebec. I met the representatives of the French Canadian Horse Breeders' Association and I told them that if they would appoint two officers of their association I would appoint two officers to represent the department, and these gentlemen would examine the French Canadian registered horses and decide whether the animals were typical of the breed and deserving of being registered.

Mr. BERGERON. What if they did not agree?

Mr. FISHER. Then they had to call in a fifth man who is generally the chief veterinary officer of the department, and who is well up in the work. As a matter of fact there has been no disagreement at all. In every case the representatives of the French Canadian horse breeders have endorsed the decision of the committee. The result is that to-day we are establishing at Ottawa a really representative national record of the French Canadian breed of horses. The animals which are registered in the national herd book will be very much more valuable and creditable to the French Canadian breed of horses than the animals registered in the old way could possibly be. The French Canadian Horse Breeders' Association at their annual meeting asked us to do that, we agreed to do it, they appointed their own representatives, and their representatives are doing the work.

Mr. BERGERON. Then some of these farmers must have been fooled by the provincial association, and have been paying for information which is not correct. There is certainly something wrong about it.

Mr. FISHER. There is nothing wrong, but as a matter of fact they are not keeping up the book at Quebec, and it cannot be accepted as a national book.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I am glad to hear that they are not keeping up the local book in the province of Quebec, because it was against the interest of the breeders. Any horse registered in the national herd book at Ottawa can be shipped to any point in Canada for half fare. That regulation has been obtained by the live-stock people. All these local associations have died out, and I am surprised to hear that an attempt is being made to keep up one in the province of Quebec, because the whole object of the breeders is to raise the standard of all breeds of animals, and that cannot be done unless they are recorded in the national herd book.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. How long does the minister intend to continue this system of registration, because you cannot improve the breed unless you record the ancestor. You will have to draw the line at some point, or a horse will not be regarded as of the French Canadian breed.

Mr. FISHER. We shall have to close the book at some point. That is a matter that will have to be arranged with the breeders. I could not undertake to do it myself.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the same remark apply to the French Canadian cow as to pedigree ?

Mr. FISHER. That breed has been long well established and the herd book is accepted as a national record.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a national herd book ?

Mr. FISHER. Yes. I may say that the expenses in connection with this herd book are increasing all the time. This year I am going to publish the first volume of records of French Canadian cattle that has been published.

Mr. W. JACKSON. There has been some discussion to-night in reference to the embargo. That is a question we cannot settle in the way we would, as we have to deal with a country outside of our own. I am not in favour, and I do not think the average farmer in Canada is in favour, of having our beef manufactured in England. We should finish the beef in Canada, and it seems to me that if we had regulations so that when our finished cattle went to England they could be retained there for a time before being slaughtered, it would be a great advantage; because cattle after crossing the ocean, and perhaps having a bad voyage, are not in fit shape to be slaughtered on arrival. Our live-stock goes to Great Britain under the same regulations as live-stock from the United States. Three or four years ago the British government prohibited cattle from going from a certain part of the United States. It was during the winter, when our cattle were practically barred from going to England, because they were shipped via the short line, which passes through the State of Maine, and we were prohibited from using that road, which practically meant that we had not that outlet for our stock. But bad as this embargo is, the agriculturist of this country must be vigilant to retain the privilege we have in the old country to-day. Our cattle are going through the United States to the British market and American cattle are going through Canada to the British market; and if there is any ground, however frail it may be, for the British agriculturist to say, the cattle from Canada and the United States are diseased, we shall find our cattle placed on the same footing as the Argentine cattle. Therefore we must be watchful of the privilege we have in getting our cattle into Great Britain in the way we do. But there is one thing which we have under our own control, and that is the right and privilege of improving our beef producing cattle. It is a regrettable thing to find in the weekly reports of the British market that our Canadian cattle are quoted at from a half cent to a cent a pound lower than American cattle. The result is that the British agriculturist who desires to seek a home outside of England will conclude that there is something wrong with the agricultural area of Canada, and will prefer to go to the United States; whereas as a matter of fact the conditions in Canada are such that we can produce better beef than they do in the United States. We can go to the United States fat stock shows and take all the first prizes.

The trouble with our cattle is they are not uniform. Our agriculturists look with pride to the stand our cheese has taken in the old country. Is it not in their interest that our cheese should be rated there as high as it is? If that be the case with cheese, it is more so in the case of cattle. It is highly desirable that our cattle should enjoy the same high standard. While our Agricultural Department has not possibly given too much attention to the cheese producing breeds of cattle, they have not given the attention they should have to the beef producers. We are losing millions of dollars every year through not producing higher grades of beef cattle. I have watched some of the experiments on the farm, perhaps more particularly since I have been in this House, and I must say that the last report of that department has been more to my taste and fancy than any of the previous ones. Our farmers are not as well convinced as they should be that they are losing money by feeding second-class grades instead of first-class stock, and I would like to ask the minister what he is doing in his department to improve the beef producing of cattle in Canada.

Mr. FISHER. One of the first things we undertook to do was to work in connection with the administration of the different fairs throughout the country and endeavoured to get a definite line of prizes and a definite and uniform system of judging. For that purpose we have sent out judges—not all of the officers of the department—to different fairs and we pay the travelling expenses of these men. The result has been a great improvement in the quality of judging. We have gone further in making these judges give their reasons verbally in the ring for their decisions so that the competitors will understand why one animal is so much better than another. That has a very good educative effect, and we have been very much gratified to find that an increasing number of exhibitions all over the country are asking for these expert judges. The extent to which they have done that, shows the value of the work. We have also had a system by which we have aided in the sales of thoroughbred bulls. Where the associations undertake to have a sale of thoroughbred bulls, we sometimes send an expert to aid in selecting the bulls and in other cases give small amounts to these associations to assist them in carrying on the sales, by means of which a superior class of male animals has been distributed. Not always the highest class because we cannot as a rule have these sold at auction as the breeders of the choicest animals prefer to sell by private sale; but still we have been able by these means to assist in the introduction of a better breed of animals to be utilized for the improvement of the common cattle and in that way raise the quality of the stock. For instance in this particular neighbourhood of Ottawa, some five or six years ago it was almost impossible for a farm manager to buy fifty or sixty steers in the fall for the purpose of fattening, but to-day he has no difficulty getting them in this neighbourhood, thus showing an improvement in the live stock, and that is true of almost every part of Canada.

Mr. WILLIAM JACKSON. It seems to me that if we would distribute more stock from the farm, that would have a good effect. If you would distribute half a dozen of stock animals of the kind I speak of, our farmers would soon become awake to the fact that it is high time for them to stop breeding from scrub. I am in earnest in this matter. I cannot help but think that our farmers should be roused up in some positive way to appreciate the amount they are losing by not producing better beef. I have no fault to find with the department for what it has done in the promotion of the butter and cheese business, but the very fact that this has been boomed so much has been detrimental to our beef producing herds. I spoke of this matter last year and I know, as a man who has been dabbling in that business all my life, that it is high time we changed our methods. Go to Montreal or Toronto or the old county and you will find some good Canadian bullocks there, but they are not at all uniform. You find just the reverse in the case of American cattle which are exported, and that is the reason why our cattle are not sought after so much as the American.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Does the department propose continuing the present system of testing for tuberculosis? Our cattle intended for export are tested while that test is not necessary in the case of those which remain at home. This interferes considerably with trade, and I do not see why we should insist on our cattle being tested before being sold. I have read the opinion of some officials of the department to the effect that there is no danger in using the milk of a tubercular cow. Why then should we, by applying this test, interfere with our export trade ? I have in mind a case in which the export of Holsteins to South Africa was prevented because we insisted on this test.

Mr. FISHER. We have to test them in order to get them into the other country. That is why they are tested. This whole question of testing for tuberculosis is one of the most complicated I have ever had to deal with, and I must confess I do not think we have any of us yet reached a conclusion with regard to it.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. In this case men who are buying did not wish the test. In South Africa they have more disease in a square mile than we have the country over. The test of the cattle was insisted on here.

Mr. FISHER. I will inquire into that.

Mr. FIELDING. I would call the attention of the committee to the civil government items, beginning on the first page, and I propose to take these up in their order so far as the ministers are present.

Civil government—Privy Council office—to increase the salary of F. K. Bennetts, assistant clerk of the Privy Council, from April 1, 1908, $400.

Mr. FIELDING. I am informed by the Prime Minister that that may be struck out. Arrangements will be made under the law which will meet the case of this gentleman. I move that that be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. WARD. As it is understood that on any of these items any matter could be discussed, I desire to bring up a matter—

Mr. TAYLOR. There is another item of the Justice Department further on, is there not?

Mr. WARD. I do not want delay. I regret very much at this early hour of the morning, and this late stage of the session, that I should feel obliged to discuss any matter of importance, but as the question I wish to discuss relates to the imprisonment of a man who, in the opinion of a great many of his friends, has been unjustly deprived of his liberty, I think it is of sufficient importance to devote a few moments to the consideration of it. Frederick Blunden, who lived in the neighbourhood of Fort Macleod, was tried there on November 22nd, 1904, and convicted of stealing two steers, and has been imprisoned at Macleod and Edmonton for three years and a half. Ever since his incarceration he has been appealing to the Department of Justice for a new trial. He objected to appeal for executive clemency, because he insisted that he was entirely innocent of the charge upon which he was convicted, and it would not answer his ends to be pardoned or allowed out on ticket-of-leave. These appeals have come, as the papers have shown, at intervals ever since his incarceration. The one answer has been sent to him—that nothing could be done. Now, it would be necessary to enter shortly into the evidence given at that trial in order to show why I differ, in some sense, from the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) and his predecessor. I do so with a great deal of diffidence, because, with my limited experience, it hardly becomes me to differ with gentlemen who have had so much experience in these matters. The trial took place before Mr. Justice Harvey at Fort Macleod. The only evidence that was given against Blunden was that of Richard Train, who was caught by the Northwest Mounted Police killing these two cattle. Train's explanation of the matter at the time the mounted police came down upon him was that he had purchased the cattle two months before from a man he did not know. He repeated that on two occasions to the two sergeants of police, and he also said that if he had made a mistake he was quite willing to pay for the steers. Train was put in jail at Fort Macleod and lay there twenty-eight days before he made any charge against Blunden. Then, according to the evidence which is under my hand, he stated that he made this charge to save himself and by the advice of his 'agent'—I suppose he means his solicitor. This evidence of Train was contradicted in one very important particular by one of his own hired men. I might go back for a moment to explain that the story told by Train at the trial was that on Sunday evening, four days before he killed the cattle, Blunden took tea with him in the presence of his two hired men. During the course of the meal Blunden said he had one steer to sell. After eating tea, Train says, they went out together behind the barn, and Blunden pointed out in the bunch of cattle, from 100 to 200—Train said he would not swear there were not 200—these two steers. Train admits that he was not within fifty yards of the cattle, and says that Blunden rode down on his horse and pointed out two cattle in the bunch as cattle which he was willing to sell. Train admitted that it was dusk and almost dark. It seemed absurd to think that a man could distinguish a couple of cattle in a bunch of 200 when he was fifty yards away. The contradictioin to this statement is in the evidence of Lewis Albert Carr. His evidence showed clearly that he was trying to screen Train. His evidence, as given at page 75, showed that he was at Train's on the 11th September, the day this is said to have taken place. Then, at page 76:

Q. After supper what did he (Blunden) do?—A. He got up and went out.

Q. Did you see him after that?—A. I saw him leave the house; then I went out and went into the tent and did not see any more of him.

Q. You mean Blunden went out before you did or after?—A. Before I did.

Cross-examined by Mr. Nolan:

A. He turned his horse in the direction of his own house and I went into the tent and saw no more of him.

Q. As a matter of fact Blunden got on his horse and rode home, come now, tell the truth, didn't he get on his horse and ride home?—A. Yes.

Q. He went away leaving your man Train behind?—A. I do not know what became of him. I do not know what became of him after that.

So, although Train swears that Blunden went down and showed him these cattle, after tea, Train's own man swears that Blunden got on his horse and went directly towards his home. Blunden also swears in his evidence that during tea time he told Train that he had one small steer calf to sell. This same man Carr confirms the statement of Train made at tea. Now, Blunden, in his evidence, absolutely denies that he ever sold a hoof of any kind to this man Train. So he was convicted on the unsupported and really contradicted testimony of this man Train, who, as he states in his evidence, made a charge 28 days after he was in jail in order to save himself. Now, with regard to Train, I have here the proof of his conviction in Scotland of perjury a short time before he came to this country. In order to show the character of the man whose evidence convicted Blunden, I wish to read the charges upon which he was convicted in Scotland:

Richard Train, prisoner in the prison of Greenock, the charges against you are (1) that a petition for sequestration of your estates having been presented on October 26, 1898, you did, at a meeting of your creditors within four months next before such presentation, namely, on October 24, 1898, within the White Hart Hotel, Campbelltown, attempt to account for part of your property being £1,447 of money, by stating falsely that you had lost it between St. Enoch station, Glasgow, on the evening of Otober 12, 1898, and a house in Ayr, which you did not describe more particularly, on the morning of October 13, 1898, in contravention of the Debtors' (Scotland) Act, 1880, section 13b, 2.

This is also a part of the charge;

And a petition for the sequestration of your estates having been presented on October 26, 1898, you did, time and place last above libelled, attempt to account for part of your property, being £1,447 of money, by stating falsely that you had lost it between St. Enoch station, Glasgow, on the evening of October 12, 1898, and a house in Ayr, which you did not describe more particularly.

This is the letter from the sheriff's officer at Campbelltown, addressed to Charles Blunden:

Sheriff Wallace has asked me to reply to your letter of 22nd ultimo, and to send you the inclosed copy of the indictment against this person, who was tried at the Glasgow circuit court of judiciary before Lord Kincairney, in February, 1899, and was sentenced to six months imprisonment. He was found guilty on the first and third charges only.

I read that indictment to show the character of the man upon whose unsupported and contradicted evidence Blunden was convicted. He did not ask for pardon or for clemency of any kind, but simply that he should be allowed a new trial under section 1022 of the Criminal Code. The Minister of Justice objects to that section for the reason, as he has stated to me personally, that that section should not be in the Act. That is not the position the Minister of Justice should take because it is in the Act, and I believe there is full power for the minister to take cognizance of the doubt which must exist in his mind with regard to this case, and to give a new trial to this man. I will read that section in order that the committee may know exactly upon what I base my opinion.

If upon any application for the mercy of the Crown on behalf of any person convicted of an indictable offence, the Minister of Justice entertains a doubt whether such person ought to have been convicted, he may, instead of advising His Majesty to remit or commute the sentence, after such inquiry as he thinks proper, by an order in writing direct a new trial at such time and before such court as he may think proper.

Of course, I submit that there must be a doubt in the mind of the minister, but the correspondence so far shows that he would not admit that there was any doubt, and of course having no doubt, I am inclined to believe he was right in the course he has taken hitherto. But I would ask him to reconsider that matter in the light of this conviction of Train, which I should be glad to send over to him, although he has expressed to me personally that it is not his custom to grant a new trial except in cases of capital punishment. I think there is sufficient doubt in this case to justify the minister in the exercise of the power he has under that section. Now, I submitted the matter to the Deputy Minister of Justice some little time ago, and his reply referred me to section 989 of the Criminal Code, and in connection with that section I desire to make this statement: That at the trial there was not the slightest attempt made to show that the cattle in question, although they bore the mark of George Lane, of Calgary, were stolen. The Deputy Minister of Justice contends that under section 989, where the cattle bearing the brand of another person are found in some other person's possession, the onus of proof rests upon the party having possession of those cattle. This section says:

When a person is charged with theft of cattle, or with an offence under paragraph (a) or paragraph (b) of section 392 respecting cattle, possession by such person or by others in his employ or on his behalf of such cattle bearing such a brand or mark of which the person charged is not the registered owner, shall throw upon the accused the burden of proving that such cattle came lawfully into his possession or into the possession of such others in his employ or on his behalf, unless it appears that such possession by others in his employ or on his behalf was without his knowledge and without his authority, sanction or approval.

Now, that being the statute law it must be construed strictly, and I say there is not a bit of evidence to show that these cattle were ever in the possession of Blunden, or in the possession of any one in his employ or on his behalf. There was no effort made at the trial to show that these cattle were ever in his possession, and it rests upon the bare unsupported and contradicted statement of Train to show that they ever could possibly be in his possession.

Now, in addition to all these points I have raised, I want to draw attention to a largely signed petition which was sent into the Department of Justice a short time after this man was convicted. As this petition sets out a good many facts, and the opinion of the people in that part of the country that something should be done in this matter, I will read portions of it. It was signed by 240 residents about Macleod, and I want to call attention to the fact that the ranchers about Macleod and that portion of the country are the very people whom the judges were endeavouring to protect, no less than thirty ranchers signed this petition asking that this conviction of Blunden should be set aside. The petition is as follows:

The petition of the undersigned settlers and residents of Macleod district humbly showeth:

1. That whereas A. F. Blunden of near the town of Macleod, farmer, was on or about November 23, A.D. 1904, convicted by the Hon. Horace Harvey, a judge of the Supreme Court, of having stolen two certain beef steers branded Y T, the property of George Lane, and was sentenced to a term of ten years with hard labour.

2. And whereas on the evening of September 15, 1904, one R. N. Train was caught in the act of killing the aforesaid two steers and was then and there arrested and held in custody for 28 days before he informed on Blunden for having stolen that said two steers by selling them to him; that at the time of the arrest of the said Train he informed the police that he had bought the said steers a month and a half previous from a man he did not know and that he, Train, had made a mistake and was willing to settle; and when on the preliminary hearing Train repeated that he had made a mistake.

3. That Train was tried for the act of killing the aforesaid steers but was acquitted and was called as a witness against Blunden, which said evidence had been given in his own behalf and was the evidence upon which the said Blunden was convicted.

4. That the said Train was tried again before the Hon. D. L. Scott on February 8, 1905, for stealing two other certain cattle and was convicted of the said crime. That on the said trial Train again accused Blunden of having sold him the said two cattle and at the trial of Blunden it was made sufficiently clear that Train had falsely accused the said Blunden to the court, that the said Train was there convicted.

5. And whereas the said A. F. Blunden is a young man who has always held the respect and confidence of all who knew him, and your petitioners could not believe him guilty until so found on the evidence as given.

6. That your petitioners know the said R. N. Train and believe that he accused the said Blunden in order to save himself, and we are of the opinion that a great wrong and injury is being done to the said Blunden, and furthermore we believe that the said Train was about and in a measure did accuse one James Smith of near the said town of Macleod, farmer, of having sold the said two beef steers, but on account of action being taken by an advocate on behalf of Smith in reference to business relations between Train and Smith, Train withdrew the accusation and laid an information against Blunden which led to his arrest and conviction as aforesaid.

7. It is submitted that Blunden should not have been convicted as Train's evidence was all the proof against Blunden and that Train was no doubt actuated by the motive of self-protection.

Now, therefore, your petitioners humbly pray that the royal mercy be extended to the said A. F. Blunden, and that the sentence upon him be remitted.

I did not mention that Train was convicted before Judge Scott of stealing two other cattle and sentenced to five years imprisonment, whereas Judge Harvey sensentenced this man against whom, as I contend, there was no proof, to double that term. Although I have failed so far with my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to get any reconsideration of the case, I trust that he will be able to take a different view of the matter and to grant the prayer of the petition and of the man who has written to him so often upon this subject.

In regard to the conduct of Blunden in prison, I might mention that the reports of his conduct have been from the first satisfactory and that in the last two reports he is recommended strongly as a proper subject for the consideration of the department. I would ask the minister to consider whether this is not a proper case for intervention. This man, although he has been invited, as the correspondence will show, to apply for executive clemency, states that he wants a new trial in order to establish his innocence and to go out a free man instead of a man with a stigma upon him. Surely it is some evidence of the innocence of this man that he refuses to apply for executive clemency, states that he wants a new trial in order to establish his innocence and to go out a free man instead of a man with a stigma upon him. Surely it is some evidence of the innocence of this man that he refuses to apply for executive clemency. It is some evidence of his innocence that he desires, in view of the new evidence which has come to light, that he shall be given an opportunity of showing that he was not guilty in the first place. In that connection I have an affidavit here from a man named Samuel Nelson, of Granum, dated February 13 last, which states that on or before September 14, he met Richard N, Train, with his boy driving a bunch of cattle between Round lake and Rocky coulée. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Herron) can give you information as to where that is. They were going in the direction of Train's home, Rocky coulee. This was on the day before Train was discovered killing these cattle and the evidence shows clearly, in fact, Train says, that these cattle were driven in by his boy and his girl. It is stated in one of the letters to the minister that this boy and girl of Train's would swear, if they had an opportunity, that these cattle that they drove in were cattle that Blunden never had anything to do with. In the face of all the evidence that has been presented, I would simply ask the minister to reconsider his decision not to grant a new trial and if that cannot be done, why, I suppose the only thing for Blunden to do is to apply for executive clemency. The man, is far gone in consumption and it will be a blot upon the administration of the department if he should die during his term of imprisonment.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to say a word in reference to the matter. As the case has been so fully dealt with by my hon. friend from Durham (Mr. Ward) I shall not at this late hour attempt to cover the ground again. The hon. gentleman has dealt with certain circumstances which led up to the conviction of Blunden so fully that the committee will thoroughly understand the situation. I would like to say a word further in connection with what led up to the severity of the judge in this case. I am not going to complain of the action of the judge in any way. For about ten or twenty years cattle stealing had been going on practically all the time all over the country and it seemed impossible to convict any one of this offence. It assumed such proportions that the whole country was up in arms against it, all the respectable people of that country, the officers of the law and even the judges, but they did not like to undertake to prosecute men on the ordinary evidence as compared with evidence that might be used in similar cases in other parts of the country. For the last ten years this cattle stealing has been going on to such an extent that the judges have almost reversed the transaction and now they are in many cases over severe. They are ready to convict men who have been accused of cattle and horse stealing on very slight evidence, and sometimes for the sake of getting a conviction they will accept evidence that they would not accept under ordinary circumstances. That is what has led up to this. I have no doubt that while judges have leaned towards leniency they have on occasions gone to extremes the other way. There is no fault of course to be found with the judge in this case. I hope the Minister of Justice will give this matter his serious consideration and if he gives this man a new trial he will be acting in accordance with the opinion of 95 per cent of the respectable people in that country. A great many people believe that Blunden is an innocent man. From the evidence it will be seen that it is quite possible that the man Train endeavoured to save himself by giving false evidence against Blunden. I believe Blunden is an innocent man and I hope the minister will give him a new trial and an opportunity to establish his innocence.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. When the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Ward) moved some months ago for the papers in this matter I urged that in the interests of the prisoner himself the motion should not be pressed. I am still very strongly of opinion that cases of prisoners who are universally making application for clemency or reconsideration of their trials should not be made the subject of discussion in parliament. The file in this case consists of some 300 or 400 pages and my hon. friend (Mr. Ward) has examined it and is familiar with it. I have read it some time ago and I am somewhat familiar with the circumstances, but other members of the committee are necessarily not acquainted with the facts. I do not propose to discuss them because they certainly cannot be intelligently discussed within a few minutes. Each of these two men had his trial, before a different judge, and each judge came to a like conclusion with regard to the guilt of each man. Neither was tried with a jury but two different judges upon different occasions and upon facts that to some extent differed, was distinctly of opinion that each man was guilty of the offence charged. My hon. friend has seen the confidential report of the judge before whom Blunden was tried and the judge says that he was convinced the man was guilty upon his own cross-examination. I can only say that after considering and reading the testimony so far from being convinced of the prisoner's innocence I have arrived at an opposite conclusion. Of course it is impossible for one who simply reads the evidence, to come to any conclusion at all as satisfactory upon a pure question of fact as the judge can who sees and hears the witnesses. I can see no reason why the conclusion of an experienced judge upon such a question of fact ought not to be deemed as valuable as the conclusion of a jury, or ought to be interferred with any more lightly. With one breath it is said that this prisoner insists upon his innocence and does not ask clemency while with another it is urged that it is a case in which clemency ought to be exercised. The prisoner himself is not by any means as unbending as my hon. friend from Durham puts it, because he has distinctly asked for clemency.

Mr. WARD. Because he is dying of consumption.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is true he maintains his innocence, but he urges his release upon the ground that he has served a long imprisonment already and ought to be the subject of a pardon or of conditional release upon ticket of leave. That is something in regard to which discretion has to be exercised, and I express no other opinion than to say that in view of the circumstances of the case it has seemed to me up to this time at any rate that it would be premature to interfere, and I have been unable to see my way to recommend it. On the question of a new trial I want to say merely a word. I do not understand the law to be that there is resting upon the Minister of Justice any duty or any right to order a new trial because the man convicted asks for it. I think the statute does not mean anything of the sort. We are here with the British system of administering criminal justice under which we have absolutely no provision whatever for the giving of a new trial by the courts in criminal cases, on a question of fact. If there is a mistake in law it is a different thing; if there is a mistake on the part of the learned judge in laying down the law to the jury or if there is legal miscarriage there is provision for a new trial. Can it be that the same parliament which so deliberately declined to intrust to any court in the country the power to order a new trial in criminal cases on a question of fact, would vest that very power in the uncontrolled discretion of a Minister of Justice.

I think it would be extraordinary if that were the law. Now, if we look at the section in the Criminal Code which is relied on, I think it plainly does not mean anything of the sort. It says: If (not upon the application of the prisoner) but if, upon an application for the clemency of the Crown in favour of some person convicted of a crime the Minister of Justice feels doubt whether this person ought to have been found guilty, he may, instead of recommending His Majesty to pardon or commute the sentence, after such inquiry as he thinks fit, order in writing that a new trial be had, at such time and before such court as he thinks right. It is not upon an application which the prisoner makes as a matter of right or as a matter of indulgence that a new trial may be given to him, but it is upon an application for clemency. It never could have been intended that any man, by the device of asking for clemency, could in an indirect way ask for a new trial. It is something of the minister's own motion which is contemplated by the statute. If the minister, in considering an application for clemency, feels so much doubt about the matter that he does not know what to do, then of his own accord he may take this course as a solution of the difficulty. What would you have if it were otherwise ? This is a provision not limited to capital cases or to important cases of any kind, or to cases involving long imprisonment, but extending to every criminal prosecution, every petty squabble before a magistrate ; and if the Minister of Justice has power to grant a new trial in all criminal cases upon being asked to do so, it means that one man is appointed in Ottawa to sit in review over the hundreds and thousands of criminal cases which are tried every day of the week and in all parts of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I think the simple stating of the thing demonstrates that it never was intended by parliament. No court may do it in any province, but one man is to sit in Ottawa and do that work for the whole Dominion. It is an impossible thing on the face of it, because when you once started doing it, you would have an application after every conviction. But apart from that there is no machinery for it. Suppose the prosecutor refused to attend ; there is no means of bringing him before this august tribunal which is to sit on his cause. And how is the minister to proceed ? No indication is given in the statute. I can only say that having given, not this particular case, but various capital cases, the most anxious consideration, my mind is unalterably convinced that parliament never intended to vest such jurisdiction in the Minister of Justice. In capital cases it has come to be almost universal that the prisoner's counsel applies for a new trial under this section, insisting that there has been something wrong done by the jury, that there was some evidence which was not correct, that there is something new discovered ; and the counsel thinks it is a dreadful thing for the Minister of Justice to tell him, what I am saying to-night, that he does not believe that parliament ever intended to vest any such power in the Minister of Justice. I think it would be disastrous to the administration of criminal justice in this country if it were so. I may say that ever since this section has been on the statute-book, in only one instance has it been acted upon, and that was one in which there was a lamentable miscarriage of justice. How could it be otherwise ? Suppose that a prisoner was convicted and condemned after a long trial by a jury, and then on an application the Minister of Justice sets aside the verdict and orders a new trial. Every juryman at the new trial would know it. There would be the argument almost irresistible that this great potentate had felt that the verdict against the prisoner was so unjust that he would not allow it to stand, and ordered a new trial. It is tantamount to an instruction to the new jury to acquit. In the case mentioned it was so taken ; there was an acquittal in spite of clear evidence. With regard to the case of this prisoner, I can only say that it is plain that although the other man may afterwards have been convicted of a like offence, it does not establish the innocence of the man against whom he testified. On the contrary, as the judge in Train's case pointed out, it might well be on all the testimony that both men were guilty, and indeed that was his opinion. The Minister of Justice must treat these cases when they come before him as applications for clemency, as cases in which the prisoner was properly convicted. He looks about for extenuating circumstances, inquires into all the facts of the case, the man's previous character, and taking into account all these considerations he advises whether or not it is a case in which the sentence, though it is a proper one, can properly be interfered with ; and it is upon that view and upon that only that his recommendations to His Excellency must proceed.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to draw the attention of the minister to one statement he made which I think is not correct, that is with reference to the judge being one of experience or of long standing. The judge was just newly appointed to the bench, and this was one of his first trials. I do not reflect on the judge or on the sentence at all for that reason. I have never heard any complaint against the judge in regard to the way he conducted the court or in regard to the sentence he administered at the time ; but I have heard since allegations of innocence on behalf of the prisoner.

Mr. WARD. I want to refer to one statements made by the Minister of Justice, that is, with reference to Justice Harvey's report. I did not feel at liberty to mention that report at all, because my hon. friend showed it to me in confidence ; but as he has referred to it and has spoken of Justice Harvey having stated that he believed Blunden to be guilty, I desire to say that what Justice Harvey did state in regard to that was that Blunden's attempt to prove an alibi convinced him of his guilt. Now, he made no attempt whatever to prove an alibi at the trial. He did bring three witnesses to the preliminary examination before the magistrate, but not before Justice Harvey at all. It is quite true that he made the attempt there ; but he states in his evidence that he got his brother to write to the clergyman who had performed the christening upon which they based the alibi that he was at home on the day the christening was held. And he got his brother to write to this clergyman to find out if that christening did actually take place on the 4th. When he found from the clergyman's letter that it took place on the 11th, the day he was said to be at Blunden's house, he withdrew the alibi at the trial and there was nothing before the justice at all. How the attempt to prove an alibi, under the circumstances, was evidence of his guilt is beyond me to understand.

Mr. BERGERON. All those names mentioned have increases of salary, and I imagine these are all the increases that the employees at Ottawa will get. Does that mean there are to be no increases for the permanent employees at Ottawa?

Mr. FIELDING. There is no provision for a general increase except under the operation of the Act. Quite a number will get increases though not immediately. The suggestion was first made in the report of the Civil Service Commission, and afterwards in the House, that an increase of 10 per cent would be given, but if we did that for the service at Ottawa and not outside, there would be widespread discontent. It would cost a good deal to do it, and we thought we could not adopt that suggestion at present.

Mr. BERGERON. Then, as a matter of fact, there will be no increase?

Mr. FIELDING. No such general increase.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice there has been a general increase along the line so far as the deputy ministers are concerned, and that certain officials are regarded now as deputy ministers and receive the increase, such as the clerk of the House and the librarians of parliament. With this I have no fault to find, but there is one officer who has not received an increase, and that is the gentleman who occupies the distinguished position of Speaker. He receives the same salary to-day as did the Speaker thirty or forty years ago. Whoever may be the incumbent of that position receives the salary of $4,000 in addition to his sessional indemnity. He not only performs the duties of Speaker, but is supposed to entertain members of parliament and to be in a position to entertain distinguished strangers who visit this Washington of the North, and I think it simply disgraceful that he should not have a considerable addition made to his salary. Take the Clerk of the House, a very interesting gentleman, as we all know, and one whom we are proud to reward by giving him a respectable salary, but the Speaker occupies a more prominent position. He is called on to perform duties in the way of entertaining which are expensive, and there is no special allowance made to him in that connection. I think that his salary should be at least equal to that of a minister of the crown. I would commend these remarks to the careful consideration of the ministry, and hope they will make up their minds to do him justice. The office is the highest in the gift of parliament and one to which consequently should be attached a respectable indemnity, more particularly when we know that the gentlemen who have occupied that position have been, almost without exception, men worthy of it.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to emphasize what the hon. member from Kings (Mr. Fowler) has said. Many years ago when we were discussing the salaries of the officers of the House, somebody held that the Speaker only filled the position some three or four months in the year, and the rest of the time he could devote to his profession or other business. But when we have sessions such as this one, lasting eight months, it is hard to know what he can do outside of parliament, and, as my hon. friend has said, the salary of $4,000 to the occupant of that high position is ridiculous. There are other officials who should not be lost sight of. There was a report made by the Debates Committee presented to this House, but the adoption of which was not moved for reasons the Minister of Finance knows well. These men have worked for the last twenty-five years at the same salary as they are getting to-day. I mentioned the case to the right hon. the First Minister, and he led me to understand something would be done, if not in the way of adopting the report of the Debates Committee, by a report of the Committee on Internal Economy or in some other manner. I see nothing in the estimates for these gentlemen, and I understand there are to be no more. Either the Prime Minister has forgotten or my hon. friend will let us understand how that report can be acted on. We have the best staff of reporters which can be found in the country and perhaps on the continent. They are the least paid of any parliamentary staff of the kind in the world, and I think it would be only an act of justice to them and show a proper regard for the report of the Debates Committee, that that report should be acted upon.

Mr. FIELDING. It is expected before the session closes that some action will be taken with regard to the 'Hansard' staff. More than that I cannot say at present.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board —to pay H. T. Ross, Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance, a salary of $900 per annum as law clerk, from the date at which the Civil Service Act of the present session comes into force, $600.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the explanation of this item?

Mr. FIELDING. In the case of gentlemen belonging to the learned professions, we have considered that we should pay them a somewhat higher salary. We are doing it in one or two instances. This gentleman is acting as assistant deputy at $3,600. If he were not a professional man, we would have to employ a law clerk, and this item is so worded that if at any time the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance should not be a professional man, he will not get the benefit of the increase.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—to provide for the appointment of an assistant deputy minister at a salary of $3,600 per annum.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why do you want an Assistant Deputy of the Marine Department?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are two branches in the department and the work is very extensive. It was increased last year by the addition of some branches which belonged formerly to the Public Works Department, and it is necessary that we should have somebody to replace the deputy minister when he is absent. We have no secretary of the department.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you made the appointment yet?

Mr. BRODEUR. The appointment is practically made, but the order in council has not been passed.

Mr. FOWLER. Who is to be the incumbent?

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say off-hand.

Mr. BERGERON. Mr. Desbarats is acting now?

Mr. BRODEUR. As deputy minister—yes.

Mr. J. D. REID. In what position are the two men who are under suspension? Are they receiving their salaries?

Mr. BRODEUR. No.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see you intend to appoint a purchasing agent. Surely, one man could purchase, not for one department alone, but for the whole government.

Mr. BRODEUR. As our purchases are extensive, it has been considered that, instead of having this work in the hands of agents and others in different parts of the country, it should be concentrated in one hand so that goods may be bought for the whole department at one uniform price and the lowest attainable.

Mr. TAYLOR. One man could purchase for the whole government.

Mr. BRODEUR. It would be a big job.

Mr. J. D. REID. I suppose the purchasing agent will be given the patronage and told to confine himself to that?

Mr. BRODEUR. There are merchants whom we know to be good merchants, furnishing reliable goods at fair prices; and in the case of small purchases, he goes to these and they are bound to furnish the best goods at prices that are fair and reasonable.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should there be a patronage list?

Mr. BRODEUR. In some cases, we cannot ask for public tenders. In all cases where the purchases are over $5,000 we do call for tenders.

Mr. BERGERON. But if the department is to have a purchasing agent, why should not that purchasing agent buy according to his own judgment?

Mr. BRODEUR. Certainly. That is what he is going to do.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you a man in your eye for this position?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Merwin?

Mr. J. D. REID. The purchasing agent should be allowed to purchase wherever he wishes to. But I know what will happen—there will be no difference from the condition of affairs we have known. The minister speaks of calling for tenders for over $5,000, but there are many purchases that aggregate same $5,000 to $40,000, the purchases made in small quantities.

Mr. BRODEUR. From the same person?

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes. The minister shakes his head. He has many times questioned the accuracy of my statements, and yet I think I have established them all. I can take the Auditor General's Report and show where he has purchased for the use of the department $10,000 from one person in the course of a year and has paid retail prices. Now, what the department ought to do is to follow the course taken by the Department of Railways and Canals some years ago. Seeing that the same goods were purchased from time to time, tenders were asked for the supply of these goods for a year, and the different centres of departmental work were supplied as required. But I can foresee what will happen—the minister will give the purchasing agent a list of names of merchants, and the purchasing agent will buy from these at retail prices; he will purchase $5,000 worth at the same rates, that I would purchase $5 worth. The hon. gentleman knows that his deputy minister declared before Judge Cassels that had the purchases been made at wholesale rates, as he had urged should be done, $200,000 would have been saved under the present minister. I have no doubt that in the next three years another $200,000 will be lost.

Department of Public Works—to provide for the increase in salary of the chief clerk appointed to the position of Assistant Deputy Minister of Public Works at $3,600 per annum, from April 1, 1908, $1,650.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the successor to Mr. Gelinas, the late secretary been appointed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No appointment has yet been made.

Mr. BERGERON. Will it be made soon?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, very soon.

Board of Civil Service Examiners—to increase the salary of Dr. Thorburn, chairman of the Board of Civil Service Examiners, $400.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think this amount should be increased. Dr. Thorburn is getting $500 for holding examinations, and that should pay him pretty well.

Mr. FIELDING. He held two examinations at special points in the west during this year.

Mr. FOWLER. There are cases far more deserving of an increase than this.

Mr. J. D. REID. You are increasing the salary of this man from $500 to $900, and yet there are a lot of poor men in the service who expected a little increase this session, and they are not going to get one cent.

Mr. FOWLER. In consequence of an explanation which the Clerk of the House has made to me, I withdraw any objection I had to this item.

Supreme Court of Canada—contingencies—additional amount required, $500.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand that there is a gentleman over in Paris buying books for the Supreme Court. I think he has bought about $35,000 worth of books in Paris. Who ordered those books?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is nobody in Paris, that I am aware of, buying books for us. There was a proposition made last year when a vote of $5,000 was taken, that the money should be handed to a dealer in books living in Montreal, and that he should get all the books he could for that amount. I declined to sanction such an arrangement, and the money was left to be expended under the supervision of the judges, by the registrar of the court. The books wanted were particularly in the line of French civil law, and the work of purchasing them was to be supervised by the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Girouard. But no one has been commissioned to make purchases in the old country, so far as I know.

Mr. BERGERON. The information I had was that orders had been given to buy books in Paris, and that instead of buying them in Paris one gentleman was buying old books around Montreal and having them bound again, and another one was in Paris to do the same work. It looked like a scheme.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I think probably if second-hand books were being purchased and rebound, it would be a proper expenditure. But that is being done as a matter of private enterprise.

Penitentiaries—St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary—to pay Keeper J. P. Forster for services as brickmaking instructor during the season of 1906, $100.

Mr. BERGERON. Why are you singling out Keeper Forster for extra pay?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. He was performing special services altogether outside of his ordinary work as keeper, and in regard to which, as the inspector has reported to me, very much more than that amount was saved to the government.

British Columbia penitentiary—to purchase additional land and buildings, $15,000.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is to purchase a small corner of property which we have coveted for a long time, but we have only now been able to obtain it. It is in the corner of the penitentiary reserve. The reserve is bounded by two streets, Cumberland street and Columbia street, and at the intersection of these two streets was the residence of a judge, and an adjoining lot which approached almost up to the penitentiary wall. It was very desirable that that property should be added to the reserve, and we are now able to secure it.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to have an expression of opinion from the hon. Finance Minister as to the argument that I was putting forward regarding an increase of salary to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. FIELDING. I can only say that the suggestion of my hon. friend is deserving of serious consideration, but I do not feel at liberty to say anything more about it.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-day?

Mr. FIELDING. It is understood that the Election Bill will be taken up for part of the day, and that at an early hour the motion for Supply will be made to enable an hon. gentleman opposite to bring up a matter of which he has given notice.

Mr. BERGERON. At 11 o'clock ?

Mr. FIELDING. At 11 o'clock the Election Bill will be taken up, but if it takes too much time we will adjourn the consideration of it and the House will be moved into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 2.15 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, July 14, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE—AMENDMENT.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 212) to amend the Criminal Code, and to repeal section 415 of the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What is this Bill ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The object of this Bill is to make some clerical amendments in the Criminal Code in a number of instances in which mistakes, either of printing or of manuscript, have been discovered in the revision of the statutes. In addition, there are two new provisions, and the repeal of a section which has become effete. The new provisions will make slight changes in one of the clauses as it now stands relating to the use of trading stamps ; the other is making it an offence to obtain credit by false pretenses or by fraud. There is also a clause, as the title of the Bill indicates, repealing the section of the Railway Act which imposes what has been spoken of as the double liability upon railway men, the liability to prosecution other than under the provisions of the Criminal Code itself.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE PARDONING POWER.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask whether we are to receive the return ordered by the House early in the session with reference to acts of clemency and pardon exercised by the Justice Department or by the Governor General ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will take a note of it.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.—Mr. Aylesworth.

On section 1—voters' lists in unorganized territory, Manitoba polling divisions, &c.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There are three variations which I would like to move in the wording of the clauses as printed. In the first subsection, line 9, I would move to substitute for the words :

During the months of August, September and October,

The following :

Between the first day of August and the fifteenth day of October.

In subsection 9 at line 27, I would move to strike out the words 'of such judges' and substitute the words 'county court judge resident in Winnipeg. I understand there are two county court judges of equal seniority, who were appointed on the same day, and to make it clear I propose this amendment :

At the end of subsection 9, I move to add the following words :

And such distribution shall be completed before the first day of October in each year.

Mr. BRISTOL. I wish to enter my protest against sections 1 to 8 inclusive of the proposed subsection 9a. These sections relate to the establishment under certain circumstances in unorganized territory in the province of Ontario and the province of Ontario alone, of voters' lists framed under the Act of the Dominion parliament. I think that such legislation is unwise, impolitic and unnecessary and is apt to cause friction and bad feeling between the great province of Ontario and the government of the Dominion of Canada. The present Dominion Elections Act, sections 1 to 9, deals with voters' lists for Dominion elections and by it, without any exception, the voters' lists for Dominion elections are framed by the various provinces concerned. But this legislation, so far as these sections are concerned, for the first time takes it out of the hands of the province of Ontario to frame voters' lists for unorganized territory in Ontario and under all circumstances and for all time that power is placed in the hands of the Dominion government.

The reasons advanced for this discrimination against Ontario, this slander on the administration and legislation of that province, are astonishing. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) at great length set out that there had been great irregularities in the making of the last voters' lists which would be effective at the present election and said there had been dissatisfaction, but he failed to bring before the House, and up to the present there has not been brought before the House, one tittle of evidence by any man that he was in any way disfranchised. The Prime Minister was not content to stand on that ground, and I think wisely, for the obvious reason that all the complaints advanced by the Minister of Justice occurred after this legislation had been introduced. What is the obvious inference from that ? Unquestionably every thinking man must feel that there was an intention, long before there were any facts to justify it, to discriminate against Ontario by unfair and unjust legislation in this respect. The Prime Minister has not sought to justify it on that ground but intimates that he wanted to help the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) who had some complaint in reference to the last election ; but if you examine that position you find that what the hon. member for West Algoma complained of was first, partisan enumerators, and, secondly, that only six days were given for appeal and no time for enumeration. Under the present legislation as brought in, there is practically the same power to give just as short a time, or less than was given four years ago, because in both cases the Act reads that the laws of the province are to be followed as far as possible. We heard the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) dilating at great length on the injustice of the Ontario government's present law and he said there should be at least sixty days for appeal. This Act does not provide anything of the kind ; it says the laws of the province are to be followed as far as possible, and so the same position is retained in this Act as existed four years ago. Thus if it was intended to give any fairer treatment to the candidates in these constituencies, the Act as proposed does not carry out that intention.

Let us examine the existing Act for a moment to see the present scheme. Clause 6 provides that the voters' lists generally in the organized territory must be sixty days old. That governs the whole of Canada. Then to govern the case of unorganized territory, wherever it may exist, section 7, which was acted on at the last election, provides :

Where, under the laws of a province, the voters' lists for any provincial electoral district or division or any of them are prepared not at regular intervals, but at such times as are fixed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council or some other provincial or local authority, or only from time to time for the purpose of a general or other election in immediate contemplation, the last preceding voters' lists so prepared shall be used for the purpose of any Dominion election in the territory comprised in such provincial electoral district or division, or the parts thereof for use in which they were prepared, if such lists have been prepared not more than one year before the date of the writ for such Dominion election.

So that up to the present time if the law were unchanged, in every province where there is unorganized territory, where the lists are not prepared at regular intervals, the list remains in force one year, and without this present legislation the lists used at the last provincial election in Ontario as well as in Quebec would be the Dominion voters' lists under this statute. Quebec is permitted to retain those voters' lists, the voters there are not put to the trouble of getting on another voters' list as they are in the unorganized territory in Ontario, which is a discrimination against Ontario. There are to-day new lists in Ontario, only two months old. Every other province, and particularly Quebec, which has had elections, can go on its way rejoicing ; the lists are satisfactory because they are prepared by Liberal governments, but we will not have the same lists in Ontario for no reason that has been disclosed unless it be that they are prepared by a Conservative administration. There is no escape from that position.

Section 8 of the existing Act goes on to say :

In case the lists mentioned in the last preceding section have been prepared for more than one year, new voters' lists shall be prepared, and the Governor in Council may, for the purpose of preparing and giving effect to such new voters' lists, appoint all necessary officers and confer upon them all necessary powers.

2. In the preparation of such lists, the provisions of the laws of the province regulating the preparation and revision and bringing into force of the provincial voters' lists in such cases shall, as far as possible, be observed and followed.

Section 9, which 9a now proposed will follow, reads :

If any voters' lists have been prepared under the section last preceding not more than one year before the date of the writ for election, such lists shall be used, unless there are lists of a later date prepared under the provincial law, and new lists shall not be prepared.

So that under the existing law, unless the lists are more than a year old, they can and must and should be used.

The reasons for such legislation are obvious. How ridiculous it would be, suppose there happens to be a Dominion election this year, that Ontario alone in its unorganized territory, should be put to the expense and the electors in those northern districts be given the trouble of the preparation of another list this year. Unless there is some overpowering necessity, I am unable to see any ground upon which it can be supported. I have read the statement of the Prime Minister that section 9a, in his opinion, repeals section 7. It does as far as Ontario is concerned, in this respect, that it makes it necessary to prepare a list in Ontario where the list is one, two or three months old, but not in Quebec, although the list there is three months old.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Are there any lists pepared in the unorganized districts in Quebec ?

Mr. BRISTOL. There are.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No. There is provision in the municipal code for the preparation of lists in the organized districts, but so far as my information goes there are none for the unorganized territory.

Mr. GAUVREAU. They do not vote at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. They do not vote.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. Those people will be disfranchised.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It has not been worth while having lists prepared. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in his speech on this question——

Mr. BRISTOL. Does not the Grand Trunk Pacific pass through there?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, but it was not intended to bring in the Grand Trunk Pacific vote, that is a very gratuitous insinuation. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier said that although the power exists to have lists prepared by the municipal code, the——

Mr. BOYCE. Is the fact that no lists had been prepared in the unorganized districts of Quebec the reason this government is not interfering?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, I understand there is no list.

Mr. BRISTOL. The hon. gentleman is better informed than I could be as to the conditions in Quebec. We can only take the information that is given in the House, and the Minister of Justice brought into this House a Bill which provided for the making of voters' lists in the unorganized territories of Quebec. Perhaps he is equally ignorant with myself as to that province; but surely some of his colleagues from the province of Quebec could have put him right. We have this fact, that the Minister of Justice brought in a Bill which provided for making lists in the unorganized districts of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, but that, without any excuse, or for some reason best known to himself, he has decided to leave out the province of Quebec but to leave in the province of Ontario, although lists have been prepared in those districts in the province of Ontario within two months, and not one tittle of evidence has been produced before this House that those lists are unfair or unreasonable. Where lists are prepared by any provincial government, whether Liberal or Conservative, and complaints are made to the Minister of Justice that they are unfair, his first duty would be to communicate with the attorney general of that province and put the complaints before him and ask him if there is anything in them. That is the course he would take if he wanted this Dominion to go on without friction. But the ridiculous part of it is that these complaints did not exist at the time the Bill was brought in, which shows the animus of the Minister of Justice and his colleagues in introducing it at all. If we are going to conduct this confederation on harmonious principles, we must not encroach on provincial rights. If I were to read the many speeches the right hon. leader of the government has made in favour of accepting the voters' lists prepared by the various provinces I would keep the House longer than it would care to stay. Everybody is familiar with his utterances in that regard. I am astonished that he has departed from those principles so far as the great province of Ontario is concerned. If there is one man more than another in this country who should have been careful in this matter to have left the province of Ontario alone, in the interest of harmony, it is the right hon. gentleman. The feeling will exist all through that province that there has been unjust discrimination against it, that the right hon. gentleman has not acted with the sunny ways with which he usually conducts the public affairs of this country. This kind of legislation should be enacted only as a last resort, called for only by some imperative necessity. But, in view of the facts, it will be a blot on the statute-book of this country. To say that the government of Ontario will not have fair lists made in the unorganized districts is an insult to that government. There is no public interest to be served by putting through this legislation. Instead of it being styled an Election Act, it should be styled an Act to insure the election of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). I challenge the right hon. gentleman to find the slightest complaint in regard to the fairness of the voters' lists in any of these northern ridings, except that of our loud-speaking friend from Rainy River. Hon. gentlemen may get declarations which they will not show, but that is not the proper way to deal with legislation. There should be proper evidence produced that there is anything unjust or unfair. If there was any real ground of complaint in this matter, it was possible for this government away back in May, or in June, since the election took place, or at any time up to the 1st of July, to represent to the government of Ontario that they wanted new lists made in the Rainy River district or in any other district; because, under the laws of the province of Ontario, up to the 1st of July, and afterwards if it is desired, the province can have new voters' lists prepared in the unorganized districts. If there was the slightest complaint of those lists, why, in the name of common sense, was not the attorney general of the province communicated with, and asked to have enumerators appointed and to have the judicial revision which the law provides for? It was perfectly feasible; but the hon. member for Rainy River and the government did not want that. They seemed to be blind to their own interests in this matter, even if their course should put people by ears and cause ill-feeling throughout the country. Such a state of affairs is a surprise to me, because it is contrary to the whole career and to all the public utterances of the right hon. leader of the government. Without any communication with the government of Ontario, but on ex-parte statements, hon. gentlemen opposite ask this parliament to legislate on this matter, and to treat Ontario differently from any other province. This legislation is unjust and ill-advised and is going to cause ill-feeling and disturb the harmony of confederation.

Mr. WATSON. How will it disturb the harmony of the unorganized districts?

Mr. BRISTOL. I was not dealing with them specially; but if I were a voter in any of those districts, and had an opportunity to get on the voters' list in June, I would object very much, in a part of the country where distances are so great and travelling is so difficult, to have to get on another one in July, August or September. The clauses I was referring to in the Ontario Voters' List Act are sections 57, 58 and 59, which are as follows:

57. The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint enumerators whose duty it shall be, unless such preparation is suspended by proclamation as hereinafter set forth, to prepare annually the voters' lists for those parts of the province without municipal organization.

58. Every enumerator before entering upon his duties shall take the oath of office before a district or county judge, police magistrate or stipendiary magistrate according to form 20 of this Act, which oath the enumerator shall forthwith transmit to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

59. So soon as may be convenient after the first day of June, in each year, but not later than the first day of July, unless the preparation of the lists is suspended by proclamation as hereinafter set out, the enumerator shall cause to be posted in a conspicuous manner throughout those parts of the territory for which he is appointed at every public and separate school-house, and at every statutory polling place, and at every other place which may be directed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, a copy of this part, and one or more printed notices in accordance with form 21, and the enumerator shall attend at the time and place mentioned in the notice.

It goes on to provide for appeals, for at least ten days' notice of the hearing of such appeal, and fifteen days' notice within which to put in the appeals. Now, it is urged as one of the reasons for bringing in this legislation that in one or two of the polling subdivisions in the district of Rainy River the time for appeal had not elapsed before the election took place. Well, I do not know what information the right hon. gentleman has on that point, but I have the information from the Attorney General's Department that not three votes in that district were affected in that way. There was ample time for appealing. The hon. member for Rainy River had the same right to appeal as anybody else, and if he did not take any action it was because he thought he could hold up the right hon. the First Minister to pass this legislation, for he knew that the list then being prepared and subject to appeal to the county judge was the list on which every Dominion candidate would have to go to the polls if the election took place within a year.

Mr. WATSON. How could there be any possible chance for an appeal when the voters' list was dated 5th June, and the elections held on the 8th?

Mr. BRISTOL. What I say is this. So far as a Dominion candidate or a prospective Dominion candidate, who might have an election this year, was concerned—not a provincial candidate—he could have put in appeals undoubtedly. The right to prosecute an appeal was not affected by the fact of an election taking place. The Dominion candidate had a perfect right to have that list revised by the District Judge, and it was his duty to see that it was put into shape because he knew it must be his list unless he got legislation from this parliament changing the law. That law was not introduced by us but by the Liberal party and has been acted on for years. If the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) did not have that list put in shape, it was because he thought he would hold up the First Minister and get a list which would elect him at all costs and under any circumstances.

I fancy there are many others of my colleagues on this side absolutely opposed to this proposed legislation. Therefore I shall not at this stage take time to criticise it as it deserves, but I would say that notwithstanding the howl from the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) and his desire for sixty days appeal, this Bill does not give one day more for appeal than does the Act of 1904. It says that the laws of the province shall be observed, and you have this ludicrous result that while that is admitted, the Dominion government propose to take the administration into their own hands. For these and many other reasons which could be readily given, I am against this legislation as unconstitutional, as opposed to provincial rights, as unjust, unfair and unreasonable, and therefore I submit the clauses I refer to should be struck out

A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) has forestalled me in the protest I intend to make on behalf of northern Ontario with reference to the introduction into any Election

Bill of this Dominion of a clause at once so unnecessary and so mysterious as the one now proposed in substitution for the one, which was even more so than the present amendment. When one comes to consider the reason submitted by the Minister of Justice for this legislation, it strikes one at once how ridiculous and absurd is the position which the hon. minister occupies in the eyes of the country. Just let us see what position he took when introducing this legislation on March 9, 1908. He then said very little about the necessity for these lists in New Ontario and very little indeed with regard to any irregularity. Not one word did he say with regard to the fastening upon northern Ontario of voters' lists to be prepared by this Dominion. It is clear from the complaints which have come and have been referred to since, that there were no irregularities in the preparation of the lists because there were no lists then prepared. There was nothing to complain of except that the appointment of enumerators was in the hands of the Conservative government of Ontario, and that was considered sufficient ground by the Minister of Justice for interfering with the right of that province to administer her own laws and prepare her own voters' lists.

The second reading of this Bill was moved on May 5; and speaking of the irregularities which justified the necessity for portions of clause 1, the minister said at page 8101 of 'Hansard':

I do not know and I do not suppose anybody can know, without the taking of evidence whether or not that state of things does exist.

Contrast that with the very fair statement of this minister on July 2, page 12112 of 'Hansard.' He said:

With regard first to Manitoba, I have not tried to check over those statements, but certainly they were categorically made and were backed up apparently by evidence of a documentary character, but many of them were with equal definiteness denied from the other side of the House, and I have no doubt, as I said when speaking six weeks ago on this very point, that it would take a judicial inquiry to establish in any individual case what the facts and truth may be. Enough at least at all events has appeared to demonstrate that there is great dissatisfaction and that that dissatisfaction extends to the minority of that province, a minority provincial which is represented in this House by a majority of nearly two to one seats.

Then with regard to Ontario, the minister listened with great intentness to what the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) had to say, and I may take this opportunity of declaring that that hon. gentleman is unable to substantiate the many statements he made of irregularities in the election or the preparation of the voters' lists, which affected that election or the regularity or validity of those lists. What did the Minister of Justice say after the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) sat down? What he said will be found on page 12117 of 'Hansard,' speaking of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), he then said:

He pointed out the facts which were not controverted.

—which have never been so far as I am aware contradicted, and which I presume are incontrovertible as establishing the manner in which in his own constituency and under the present Ontario Registration Act these voters' lists were being prepared.

Mark you, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice said that the hon. member had stated facts which had not been controverted which had never, so far as he was aware, been contradicted, and which he presumed were uncontrovertible. And, Sir, he sat there, mute, absolutely senseless to the protest which I made during an hour or an hour and a half in which every point that the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River had made in the shape of complaint or allegation of irregularities was not only contradicted, not only controverted but either completely explained away or absolutely disproven. Sir, there is a Minister of Justice who is a spectacle before this country. It is upon statements and pesumptions such as that that this Minister of Justice seeks to force through, with the concurrence of the Prime Minister a measure which is a direct invasion of the provincial rights of the great province of Ontario, rights which the Prime Minister was so careful, in days gone by, to safeguard and of which he was so loud a champion. Then, at page 12118, speaking of these irregularities complained of by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River, the Minister of Justice said:

And if we find in such an important centre as the chief place of the riding the hon. gentleman represents, lists prepared in that sort of way under the Ontario statute passed only at the recent session of the legislature, and if we find coupled with these various lists so prepared that whether by accident or by design all right of appeal is cut off to those who would wish to appeal, and that these lists stand to-day as lists which have not had in any respect whatever the work of the judge in the way of revising or hearing objections to them, a clearer case it would be difficult to find for legislative interference.

And, Sir, instances which make this a clear case for legislative interference upon which the Minister of Justice depends—whether true or untrue—arose not merely after the Bill had been introduced but after it had received its second reading; and even the facts upon which he relied were denied and controverted upon the floor of this House. Moreover the hon. minister proceeds on hearsay, as you will find at page 12119:

I am told that in one of the ridings the enumerator refused to go to a settlement where there was an overwhelming preponderance of voters of the adverse political party.

The minister stated that he had these facts from letters and declarations in his possession. And yet, when he is asked to lay his evidence upon the table he says that it consists of private correspondence and cannot be produced in the House. I ask the committe again to say whether the Minister of Justice is endeavouring to act even with reasonable fairness towards the House and the country, but more particularly towards the province of Ontario. But the Minister of Justice does not take that position always, as has been said, and said so well, by my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol). Speaking of the position in the province of Quebec, at page 12122, he refers to the complaints which have been made by members from his own side of the House as to the disfranchisement of voters in the province of Quebec both for provincial and federal elections. And this is what he said :

The province of Quebec is possessed, according to hon. gentlemen on this side, of a considerable extent of unorganized territory, in which at present there are no voters' lists——

I commend this to the attention of the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in view of what he has said to-day.

—and the people who live in those districts do not vote either for the provincial legislature or this House. That seems to be an anomalous condition. My hon. friend from Wright county (Mr. Devlin) said something about the number of such persons who were residing within the limits of his constituency. The number was considerable. On attention being called to the fact that, not merely in Wright and Montcalm and the other counties alongside Montcalm, which extend into the northern or unsettled portions of the province, but in the ridings of Gaspé and no doubt of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and other portions of the province, there are possibly many colonists who, under the present system, have no means of getting a franchise—on attention being called to that fact, no doubt the provincial legislature will at once provide a remedy.

What does the right hon. gentleman say this morning ? He says that the remedy is left with the legislature of the province of Quebec, because, forsooth, these are unorganized portions of Quebec in which voters have not voted either in provincial or in Dominion elections. I think I understood him correctly in that. He does not deny it, therefore I assume that it is correct. If that be the case why does the hon. gentleman not apply the same remedy to Ontario ? Why does he propose, by Bill passed in this parliament, to create polls and to make up voters' lists in the unorganized districts of Ontario where there have never been polls before, or a vote cast either in provincial or Dominion elections ? He cannot deny that this is what he provides for by this Bill so far as Ontario is concerned, nor can he deny that, in the case of Quebec, he leaves this remedy in the hands of the legislature of that province. The right hon. Prime Minister says : I will not leave this in the hands of the provincial legislature of Ontario, but I will force it with an iron hand upon that province, not merely as a temporary method of meeting a temporary exigency, but for all time; but so far as a similar condition in Quebec is concerned. I declare, through my Minister of Justice, that the legislature of Quebec shall be free to remedy the difficulty in its own way.

Again I ask the right hon. gentleman, if he applied that condition of things to the province of Quebec in 1904 when he permitted the lists to be made up in nine polls, aggregating 543 names of voters who never voted before in that district, at places where there was no settlement, in many cases no patented land, in other cases not a single dwelling house, and in most of them absolutely no roads—there were 543 names appearing on those voters' lists. The right hon. gentleman made up voters' lists where there were never any voters' lists before, either provincial or Dominion. The right hon. gentleman assumes legislative authority with regard to Ontario which he scorns to establish with regard to Quebec and leaves to the Quebec legislature. Has the right hon. gentleman laid before this House one tittle of evidence to support the statement he has made that there was dissatisfaction about the lists in Northern Ontario ? Not one tittle of evidence. The Minister of Justice is asked for the evidence on oath that he speaks about, for the letters that have been written to him containing these complaints. He won't produce them, but at the same time he says that the evidence is not contradicted. Can one imagine a gentleman occupying the position of Minister of Justice so wanting in the first principles of fairness that he would inflict this measure upon the province of Ontario and at the same time refuse to make public the sworn declarations with regard to irregularities which he says he possesses ? Will the right hon. gentleman subscribe to that sort of justice? Will he say that the Minister of Justice is justified in passing this measure upon evidence which he will not or dare not produce before this House? Would the right hon. gentleman ask this House to accept evidence that a court would not accept under similar circumstances? If I were at the bar of a court and were to tell the judge that I could abundantly prove my case by affidavits, by sworn evidence that I have in my bag, but I won't produce it, it is satisfactory to me, and therefore the court must be satisfied with it also—there you have an illustration of the position of the Minister of Justice and of the Prime Mnister of this country in forcing this legislation upon the province of Ontario. In the province of Quebec the Minister of Justice says that numbers of persons are disfranchised, but although hundreds are disfranchised in the province of Quebec, the Minister of Justice does not think that is a case for interference by this House, and he is content to leave that to the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature of Quebec. But where there is a list not closed, and where only one appeal was put in against that list in the district of Rainy River, the Minister of Justice takes that one case as sufficient to justify him in going on with this legislation. I protest on behalf of the unorganized districts, and on behalf of the province of Ontario, against this iniquitous legislation, and I shall continue to so protest until the right hon. gentleman sees fit to change it.

Then with regard to the irregularities referred to by the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), all I can say is that the irregularities were in no sense sufficient to vitiate the voters' lists that were already made up. I hold in my hand a memorandum of the dates of the courts of appeal from all the voters' lists in that district, made up under the unorganized provisions of the Act of 1893, and I find that although the list for Kaministiquia, which is complained of by the hon. member, and the list for Simpson island and Heron bay in that constituency, were not closed at the time the provincial election was held, yet I find that courts were appointed for every place in the district where these unorganized lists were made up, and that the lists were duly revised and duly closed, and they remain now certified as good lists, the statutory time for which has completely expired, There is no reason why they should not be used for the Dominion elections except the reasons which have been referred to by my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), namely, that the hon. member for Rainy River knows perfectly well that he has absolutely no chance, in view of the result of the provincial elections, of retaining a seat in this House, with a popular majority of between 1,000 and 2,000 against him, unless he is able to make up the lists as they were made up in 1904, to suit the constituency of Port Arthur and Rainy River and to secure the election for himself. There was a protest, I believe, filed with the returning officer by one M. J. Kenny on the 13th day of June. That was a protest against the fact that the voters' lists had not been certified by the judge ten days before the polling day, and, therefore, that the list did not come under the provision of subsection 3 of section 78 of the Ontario Elections Act, and respectfully submitting that in view of these irregularities the returning officer could not make a legal declaration with reference to the election of the member for that riding. And when Mr. Kenny delivered that letter of protest he stated to the returning officer that the objection was taken by Mr. James Conmee, M.P. It is easy for the hon. member for Rainy River to manufacture complaints himself or to get them manufactured over the hand of his solicitor, Mr. M. J. Kenny. It is easy for the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) to keep the sore open; it is easy for him to hug a grievance, and the result of my investigation is that the hon. member for Rainy River would rather have the grievance than, in the public interest, find a remedy. His hope is to be able to make the lists under this Bill according to his own ideas and to go into territory where voters' lists were never before made so that he may accomplish the very thing the Prime Minister has so warmly deprecated. The making up of these lists under this Bill is open to the further grave objection that it affects 11 provincial ridings in Northern Ontario, in all of which there are regularly made up voters' lists only a month or two old and which could be used at the next Dominion election. And, Sir, in only one of these 11 ridings could the member for Rainy River or the Minister of Justice find the shadow of a complaint. Let these gentlemen give any particulars of irregularities, and I have the information here ready to answer them. But the member for Rainy River seems to dominate both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice; he seems to hold them in the hollow of his hands and to 'boss the job,' and so in violation of all the principles of the Liberal party and in violation of all the principles laid down by the Prime Minister himself the lists in these 11 constituencies are to be taken out of the control of the province of Ontario, not only for the next Dominion election, but for all time. Against that insult to my province I protest most strongly.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I still hope that the Prime Minister will see his way to prevent this insult to Ontario and to treat that great province in the same manner as the other provinces of the Dominion are treated by this Bill. A few days ago the right hon. gentleman told us that he made certain concessions in the case of Manitoba and British Columbia so as to meet the views of the opposition, but it occurred to me that in his heart searching the right hon. gentleman found that the public opinion of this Dominion was against that interference by the Dominion parliament with the provincial lists, and so he stayed his hand. If we are going to have all over Canada electoral lists prepared by Dominion authority well and good, but if this parliament declares, as it has declared that the federal lists shall be made by the provincial authorities then let us not discriminate. The Minister of Justice told us that every word of this Bill was written by his own hand and I have wondered where he got his inspiration. Surely it was not from the Prime Minister because the right hon. gentleman could have told him about the position of the Liberal party on the Franchise Act of 1885, a measure, which the Prime Minister told us, had engendered much bitterness. Again, the Prime Minister could have reminded his Minister of Justice of what happened in 1893 when the Liberal party in convention decided to do away with the Dominion Franchise Act and to confide the preparation of the lists to the several provinces. Again, the right hon. gentleman could have pointed his minister to the declaration which he himself made in 1898 when the present franchise Act was brought into force, and when the Prime Minister said (Hansard 1898, page 4015):

But I would not have hesitated to accept the franchise provided by the Conservative legislature in Quebec because though there were many things in that franchise on the whole to which I would have objected, still as it satisfied the province, it would have satisfied me. It is the same way as regards other provinces. It is possible the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party, but still on a question of this kind I am disposed on my part to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative.

I have been endeavouring to discover what motive actuated the Minister of Justice in preparing the original Bill submitted to this House and I can arrive at no other conclusion than that when he found a province in which the legislature was controlled by the Conservative party he aimed to have the lists in that province prepared by federal authority. He started at the Pacific coast and finding the province of British Columbia with a Conservative government he attacked that province, and when the Bill was submitted to the House it was found that nobody of any political party had any serious objection to raise to the lists in British Columbia. In Alberta and Saskatchewan there were Liberal governments; these young provinces are still to some extent under the paternal care of the Dominion government and so they were not interfered with. Then he came to the pioneer province of Manitoba and he laid violent hands on that province and he attempted to destroy every principle laid down by the Liberal party with regard to the franchise. He essayed to wrest from the province of Manitoba the possibility of her having anything to do with the electoral lists in federal elections. Then, he came to the province of Quebec, and it is very difficult to find out just what the conditions are in that province but I presume so far as the unorganized districts are concerned they are much the same as in northern Ontario. The Minister of Justice pretended to interfere with the control of the lists in the unorganized districts of Quebec, but as the Prime Minister announced in this House he communicated with the authorities of that province and he accepted their explanations as satisfactory and would withdraw that portion of the Bill which referred to Quebec. What a contrast between his manner of dealing with the Quebec government and with the Ontario government. In no way whatever has the right hon. gentleman communicated with the attorney general or with the government of Ontario to find out what were the conditions in the northern part of that province with respect to the lists or to ascertain whether if any irregularities existed the provincial government was willing to correct them. Let me tell the right hon. gentleman, in view of the concessions he has made to Manitoba, that the government of the province of Ontario are fully as competent as the government of Manitoba or of Quebec or of any other province of the Dominion to make out a proper electoral list. This is a serious matter. It is nothing short of a slur upon the province of Ontario. Surely we are as highly civilized in the province of Ontario as are the people of any other province, surely we have reached as high a state of development in that province as have the people of any other province, and yet under this Act the Prime Minister casts a slur on the people of Ontario and discriminates against that province in respect to six constituencies. I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that what we call New Ontario is being very rapidly developed by the present government who know every foot of that territory and who so understand its wants that there is no authority in the Dominion so competent to deal with the voters' lists there as is the provincial government. I warn the Prime Minister that the people of Ontario will not forget this insult. We in Ontario point with pride to our sister province of Quebec and surely the Prime Minister must see that this discrimination against Ontario will create a great deal of ill feeling. I would also call attention to the fact that it is only by the weapon of the great majority which the Prime Minister has in this House that he could perpetrate such an outrage. The right hon. gentleman has not a majority in this House from the province of Ontario, but by his majority from the province of Quebec and other provinces of the Dominion he is able to say to the people of Ontario: You are not competent to make fair electoral lists; we will not trust you. The present government of Ontario singularly enjoys the confidence of the people and I believe that this slur will be resented in a way which will surprise the Prime Minister.

Now, as I have said, wherever the Minister of Justice found a Conservative government in power he laid hands on that province. He did not interfere with Nova Scotia, although as was shown by the letters and documents read by the leader of the opposition very grave irregularities exist in the electoral lists of that province. But a Liberal government is in power there and the irregularities are not noticed by the Minister of Justice. Then, New Brunswick had a close call. You will notice that the provincial elections in New Brunswick were held on the 8th of March and this Bill was introduced on the 9th of March, and so you can imagine what would have taken place had the New Brunswick elections been held a month earlier and the Conservatives returned to power. Again, in Prince Edward Island there is a Liberal government and there is no interference with the lists there. Therefore, in looking for the reason which prompted the Minister of Justice in drafting the original Bill I can only come to the conclusion that he sought to present a thoroughly partisan measure and that the discrimination against the Conservative provinces was partisan to the last degree. One word with respect to the hon. member for Rainy River. The fallacy of the arguments which he attempted to present to this House in favour of the Bill was completely exposed when it was shown that the alleged irregularities which he pointed to as a reason for the Bill occurred long after the Bill was introduced. I believe, and I think all reasonable men will believe that the electoral lists for the unorganized portions of Ontario are just as good lists on the average as are to be found in any province of the Dominion. If there be irregularities I do not believe they occurred by intent, and at their very worst they are certainly not greater than those which are shown to exist in Nova Scotia or elsewhere. I trust that even at the last hour the Prime Minister will withdraw this clause of the Bill and refrain from doing this injustice to the province of Ontario.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT (Muskoka). Representing as I do one of the constituencies in northern Ontario which will to some extent be affected by this Bill, I feel I am justified in uttering as strong a protest against it as I am capable of uttering. It has been truly stated in this discussion that we have as correct voters' lists in northern Ontario as we ever had, and as correct lists as are to be found in any part of the Dominion. Then, why should there be interference by this government: why should this government lay violent hands upon that portion of Ontario and say: We cannot trust you; we will take this matter entirely into our own hands and we will put a stigma upon the government of Ontario and upon the people of that portion of the province, because after all these lists have been made up by the people who reside in these unorganized territories. Now, Sir, the strong ground of the objection of the member for Rainy River is that there was not sufficient time under the Ontario statute to properly compile these lists, but let me point out that the time given for the preparation of these lists under the provincial law is just as great as the time provided for in this Bill so that this chief ground of complaint by the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) falls to the ground. But, the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) cares nothing for that so long as he gets the preparation of the lists into the hands of men whom he thinks he can manipulate. I might point out also that under the system of registration if it is at all well done we have better voters' lists than we have under the ordinary system of compiling voters' list in the organized portion of Ontario, and I think the same thing would apply to any portion of Canada.

Owing to the constant movement of population, some system of registration is necessary if we are not going to disfranchise a large number of people. I hold in my hand the voters' list for 1907 as finally completed by the judge, of one of the municipalities in my riding. I hold another as it comes from the hands of the assessor for 1908. That covers a period of between seven and eight months. In that municipality alone I find new voters being qualified to the number of over 100. That municipality is of course somewhat larger than some of the others in the riding, but it represents only about one-ninth of the riding; so that that indicates a change in the voters of that riding of 900 voters in the space of less than eight months. If that proportion is kept up for the whole year, it will mean between 1,300 and 1,400 voters that would be qualified to vote at an election next fall if put on list who will be disfranchised should the election be then brought on. In the unorganized section, in which there are only a few municipalities, the same thing will not apply. In the last election the government took the machinery into their own hands, and in the course of a couple of weeks they had to do what it takes two months to do under the Act, so that the list was necessarily very incomplete. It is almost impossible to make up a proper list in that length of time. But bad as it was, there were more votes polled in the unorganized portion in proportion than in the organized portion of the riding I represent, being 72 per cent in the unorganized portion and ony 65 per cent in the organized portion, on account of the length of time required to make up the voters' lists. So I think it is absolutely necessary, if we do not intend to disfranchise large numbers of people in the organized districts, that we should bring the machinery more up to date than it is at the present time. While it may not pertain particularly to this Bill, I want to emphasize that point. This Bill, as I understand it, is to enable a few people to be put on the voters' list in the district of Rainy River and Thunder Bay. There is no complaint, I understand, in any other part of the unorganized districts.

Mr. CONMEE. I may say to my hon. friend that there are similar complaints from other ridings.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. If there are, they have never been laid before this House. It may suit some hon. gentlemen very well to keep in their pockets the complaints and bring them down at the last moment, when there is no opportunity to defeat them. That may show a high degree of cleverness, but I do not think much of it. Suppose you do put on a dozen or half a dozen voters for the Rainy River and Thunder Bay district, I have no hesitation in saying that in some of these northern ridings there will be at least a thousand people disfranchised. Perhaps there will not be that many in the district which the hon. gentleman represents, but there is a great difference in the number of voters when the election is held at the proper time of the year, say in the month of June, as compared with late in the fall. In the recent election held in the province of Ontario by the Whitney government there were over 50,000 more votes polled than there were in the last Dominion election, which was held late in the fall. In the riding which I represent hundreds of people had gone to the woods at the time of the election, and found it impossible to get back to vote. The right hon. gentleman brought on the election in what is called the deer season. All over this country we have men enduring the burden and heat of the day with the hope that in the beginning of November they will have a couple of weeks of hunting in the northern woods of Ontario. These men come from all parts of the province. If the right hon. gentleman again brings on the election late in the fall, it will have the effect of disfranchising thousands of people in this way. What are the votes of a few people in one riding compared with the disfranchising of thousands of people throughout the province? Under the terms of this Bill the revising of the lists is put at such a date as to make it impossible to avoid that sort of thing, because in spite of anything he can do, it will take from now till the 1st of November to prepare the list. Then hundreds of men go into the lumber woods late in the fall, and these people will be disfranchised as well. With regard to the actual working out of this measure, we shall have this condition of affairs. Under the local Act notices are put up in the month of July in the various ridings throughout that northern country, and the enumerators who will be brought in under this Bill will go to work a few weeks later, so that you will have two sets of officials at work, and the public will be put to the inconvenience and trouble of looking after two sets of courts to see that they are on both lists. That may look very easy to the people assembled in this parliament, but it is far from easy in those scattered settlements of northern Ontario, where the distances are so great and where the conditions are such that sometimes travel is almost impossible. I want to point out another defect in this Bill. I find no provision in it making it necessary to take as a basis the present voters' lists as compiled by the province. Every man in these unorganized districts will have to see personally that he is put on the list. As it is to-day, a man who has been on the list knows that he has the qualification, and the chances are a thousand to one that he will remain on the list unless there is some reason why he should be put off. Under this Bill that cannot be, but every man will have to see for himself that he is put on the list. This is a very distinct hardship to the people, and I appeal to the right hon. gentleman to take the voters' lists as compiled by the province of Ontario as a basis, if he must put the Bill through, so that every man will feel that he is already on the list unless for some reason his name should be removed. That would do away to a large extent with the difficulty of making every man go and see that he is put on the voters' lists of an unorganized portion of the province. As regards the courts necessary to be held, I have made a calculation and find there will be an average of fifty enumerators' courts for each one of the Dominion ridings represented in this House. Only a small portion of the district I represent comes under the scope of this Bill—some eight polling places. In my experience that means an enumerator's court for every polling place, and our plan has been in the past for a judge to have a court of appeal in every place where the enumerator sat. A hundred courts will have to be held by the judges over that northern district in a short space of time and the same number of courts in connection with the provincial lists. The judges will have in addition to their ordinary division courts and quarter sessions and will have to crowd into that two and a half months perhaps 125 courts in some ridings. It would be physically impossible for any judge to hold all these, and I do not know whether you can make a provision for the work to be divided between two or more judges even if they do happen to live in the districts they preside over.

All these things considered carefully should lead the right hon. gentleman to decide to remove clause 1. While that might be found objectionable by two or three of his friends, I believe that in the province and particularly in the unorganized districts, he will make more friends and stand better in the public estimation. There has been no hardship in any quarter of that section of country with regard to the lists compiled by the late government. They are as correct as one can reasonably expect and certainly as correct as they are anywhere in the organized portions of Ontario or the Dominion. Under all the circumstances it would be well for the right hon. gentleman to remove this clause, to take away this stigma from the province of Ontario, especially northern Ontario, and let us make the Bill as perfect as possible. I am not asking too much when I ask the right hon. gentleman to appeal to his Minister of Justice to remove this clause and treat the province of Ontario the same as Quebec or any other province. If the province of Quebec can be trusted to make her own lists, why cannot Ontario? Surely the minister will not say that he cannot allow a Conservative province to control its own voters' lists.

Mr. ALCORN. As a representative from the province of Ontario, I desire to register my personal protest, in the strongest possible terms, against the insult placed by this government on that province. Surely the government are not going to cast this stigma on the province of Ontario of declaring that its provincial government and officials are not to be trusted and that they are incompetent to compile fair and reasonable lists which may be used both in Dominion and provincial elections. I am not aware of any ground for this particular clause in this Bill except that in the opinion of hon. gentlemen opposite, a province, presided over by a Conservative cabinet, cannot be trusted to make up its own voters' lists. The justification for this Bill must be some wrong which requires a remedy. Well, what is the wrong? We have no information on that score. We have had no specific allegations made to the House by the government or any member of it, not even by the Minister of Justice. Then why should Ontario be treated in a different manner from the other provinces? It has been stated in a general way that dissatisfaction exists with regard to the lists in northern Ontario, which were prepared for the purpose of the provincial elections on June 8 last. Well, I suppose that a certain degree of dissatisfaction will always exist against the party which has the making up of the election lists. The Minister of Justice told us that certain information had come to him by letters and other written communications, and that certain irregularities were said to have existed in certain polling divisions in the northern territory. But he gave no detailed information to prove these charges. Speaking on that subject, at page 8101 of 'Hansard,' on May 5 last, he said :

> I do not know and do not suppose any one can know without the taking of evidence whether or not that state of things, as so described, does exist or not.

But no evidence was taken, and the taking of evidence was the very proper means, as pointed out by the minister himself, by which the House might have been informed whether the legislation now proposed is necessary. It has been said that certain appeals were, in some nebulous manner, not particularly described, impeded in respect of the lists made up in northern Ontario last June. That objection however can have no force. If the judges did, in one instance, or possibly two, certify lists as to which appeals had not been heard, that did not impede going on with the appeals in the ordinary and proper way and holding courts of revision and disposing of any appeals that any person chose to make. Whether the list had been placed in use for provincial purposes or not did not prevent the courts of revision from going on and appeals being had in the regular way for the purposes of a Dominion election. Now, as this Bill must be based upon some wrong requiring a remedy, one would have supposed that the remedy applied would be commensurate with the wrong complained of. I have heard no specific complaint other than that the lists in one or two instances were certified by the judge before the time for appeal expired. It seems to me that, if the government, in their unwisdom, conceive it necessary to bring in such a measure as this covering the whole ground of the preparation of lists, their revision and bringing them into force, they entirely overstepped the wrong of which they are complaining. Their proper course would be to take such measures with the Ontario government as would induce that government to right any such wrong as that to which I have alluded; and if that course was not effective, if the Ontario government refused upon proper representation being made, to right the wrong, then a Bill might be brought in covering the irregularities which the government might be able to prove to exist. But it seems to me that the revolutionizing of the whole electoral courts in northern Ontario and imposing upon that portion of the province entirely new lists, with all the attendant labour and expense—and, it seems to me in trying to work out the particulars, hardly workable at all—cannot be justified as commensurate with the wrong of which the government complains.

At one o'clock, committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

On section 1,

Mr. BOYCE. I beg to move that for the reasons stated, subsections 1 to 8 both inclusive of section 1 of this Bill be struck out. In making this motion I desire to point out the difference between this law as it stood prior to the advent of the Whitney government in 1905, and the present law. In the elections of November, 1904, the law stood as it is now, with this amendment, accepting the provincial voters' lists in their entirety, provided they were not more than a year old at the time of the issue of the writ for a general election. So whenever there were provincial lists in the unorganized territories under the old law which were not one year old at the date of the issue of the writ, those lists were used for the Dominion election. Now I fail to see that any argument has been adduced in support of this legislation, any sound reason put forward upon which that basis should be changed, any logical ground for the change of basis and the non-acceptance of the provincial lists for federal elections, any ground upon which to reverse the principles which the Liberal party enunciated in their platform of 1893, and which they emphasized in 1898 when they repealed the Franchise Act and provided for the acceptance of the provincial lists. If this law were to pass, although you approve of the provincial lists and accept them, in almost all cases, if you held an election, although the provincial lists were only three months old and properly prepared, under this amendment you would provide that those provincial lists shall not be used, lists that had been prepared three months, or perhaps only 60 days, before the issue of the writ. But the right hon. gentleman proposes to ask the province of Ontario to put aside those lists for all time, and to accept lists which may be eleven months old, thereby disfranchising all those who became entitled to vote since the last lists were made up. The right hon. gentleman will see what I mean, by referring to subsection 7 :

Where, within one year prior to the date of the writ for an election in any electoral district composed wholly or partly of such territory not municipally organized, voters' lists for any such territory have been prepared under the provisions of this section, such lists shall be used for such election and new lists shall not be prepared therefor.

That emphasizes the right hon. gentleman's intention absolutely to discriminate against lists prepared under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario, although in the case that I have mentioned, nine months more recent, regular provincial lists have been prepared under the laws of the province. My right hon. friend would absolutely discriminate against those, ignore them, cast his professions to the winds, and use lists which were eleven or eleven and a half months old, and thereby disfranchise all those who became entitled to vote in the meantime.

Mr. J. D. REID. Before this Bill is passed I want to enter my protest against the reflection that is being cast upon the province of Ontario. The only reason I can see why Ontario is being treated in this way is that the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has insisted that he be looked after in the next election. I am surprised that the Prime Minister has listened to the hon. member for Rainy River in this matter. Here is an election Bill prepared, and the only province in the Dominion of Canada that is reflected upon, I might say insulted, is the province of Ontario, by these words :

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, voters' lists for the portions of the province of Ontario which consist of territory not municipally organized shall be prepared during the months of August, September and October in each year.

Now I assert as a citizen of Ontario that it is most unfair to our great province that the Prime Minister has seen fit to yield to the solicitations of the member for Rainy River and insert that clause in this Bill. I have not heard one word throughout the whole province of Ontario complaining of any unfair treatment under the last lists. I do not believe there is a man in the province of Ontario who believes that Mr. Whitney, the Prime Minister of Ontario, would allow a single improper act to be committed in the preparation of the voters' lists. Even if there had been a little trouble in a couple of polls in the Rainy River constituency, I think myself that the Prime Minister, being a resident of the province of Quebec, would have been the first man to let the province of Ontario alone. The hon. the Prime Minister has tried to lead the people of the province of Ontario to think that he wants to be fair and just, but in this matter it is the only province at which he is hurling this insult. I think the hon. member for Rainy River has been well treated, he has had public works given him up there, enough to carry his constituency without having to be assisted in this way. So far as I am concerned, I think the Prime Minister should name this the Conmee Bill, because it is simply a Bill passed by this House to elect the hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. BENNETT. A Bill for the relief of the hon. member for Rainy River.

Mr. J. D. REID. Yes. In getting this Bill through the Prime Minister hopes to win four or five more constituencies, in some way. I think the Prime Minister is most unfair towards Ontario. As regards the province of Quebec, he sees that a Liberal government is in power, and the voters' lists will be prepared within the next month or so just as he wishes.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Prime Minister thinks he is safe there, so he is willing to withdraw Quebec, but in Ontario, where lists have been prepared and the Prime Minister cannot say that anything has been wrongly done, he wants to have five or six members elected simply by this Bill. I am surprised that the Minister of Customs, who represents Ontario in the cabinet, and who, I am sure, is proud of his province, has not prevented this slur being cast upon it. The Minister of Railways and Canals and other ministers from Ontario seem to be afraid to protest against it. It may be that there is truth in the story that an effort is being made to get the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce out of the cabinet and that therefore these gentlemen are afraid to stand up for Ontario. The Prime Minister has evidently decided that we will have an election this fall, a year before we should have it, and he hopes by thus taking an unfair advantage through these lists to carry six counties.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Chairman, as seconder of the amendment of the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) I wish to express my disproval of the course pursued by the leader of the House in introducing legislation to deal especially with Ontario in respect to voters' list. In the last session of the legislature, prior to the election just held, not a word of protest or condemnation of the Whitney administration for their preparation of the voters' lists was presented nor has any complaint been heard since the election. I have not heard a valid argument advanced why Ontario should be legislated against in this respect. The right hon. gentleman knows that the people of Ontario are anxious for a fair and honest voters' list. His own party had charge of the preparation of these lists for over thirty-six years, and since this party came into power in 1896 elections have been held on the voters' lists prepared by the legislature of that province.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAIN. The Prime Minister says 'hear, hear.' Why is he not now willing to trust himself and his government to a voters' list prepared by a provincial government in Ontario now? There can be but one reason. I do not wish to single out my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Commee) but my hon. friend has a history in Ontario, he was a prominent follower and supporter of Sir Oliver Mowat in days gone by and continued a support of the Liberal party in the legislature. He has a record that is all his own, peculiarly his own, I do not wish to refer to it, but if the right hon. gentleman had turned a deaf ear to my hon. friend and had asked the honest people of northern Ontario whether they thought federal lists should be prepared for the coming election, I am sure the answer would have been that they were quite satisfied with the lists they had and did not ask the government to go to the expense or to single out that part of Ontario which will soon become an organized district. This course will not bring support to the right hon. gentleman when he appeals for support to the people of that district. I think he could afford to trust the people of Ontario. They applauded him in days gone by, he announced himself prior to 1896 as a champion of provincial rights. That was his great cry in Ontario and other provinces and many people in that province, I think too many, trusted him and voted for him—the right hon. gentleman may smile, he has heard predictions before, but I venture this prediction that when the election comes my right hon. friend will receive from these northern districts a rejoiner such as he never received before, because of this Bill. Neither in the discussions in this House nor in the newspapers of Ontario, even the 'Globe,' have any valid reasons been given why the government should not adhere to the policy of provincial voters' lists for federal elections as they did in 1897. Why do they depart from it? Because a Conservative administration controls affairs in Ontario now; therefore my hon. friend asks for special legislation providing for special lists in northern Ontario in order to give the Liberals a better chance. I am surprised that gentlemen from Ontario on the other side of the House have not protested against this invasion of the rights of that province, they sit quietly and allow this Bill to go through without a protest. The Minister of Customs who is well and favourably known in Ontario, whom the people have honoured, who has called loudly for provincial rights and has told the people of the fairness of the right hon. gentleman and of the government he is supporting, sits quietly by and says: It is all right, we shall have a special voters' list for my own province in the unorganized district. I want to say a word or two to the Minister of Justice. I am sure when at the close of the session the Minister of Justice reflects upon his position he will have cause to regret that he was the father of this Bill which strikes at the province of Ontario. Evidently one reason for the action of the Minister of Justice was that he might save the hon. member for Rainy River, but I venture to think that although that hon. gentleman may put on the voters' lists all the employees of the Grand Trunk Pacific in his constituency, it will not save him at the next election.

Mr. MILLER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) think that the judges to whom this matter will be entrusted would put on the voters' lists employees of the Grand Trunk Pacific who have no right to be there?

Mr. BLAIN. I do not know, and I am not going to speak for the judges. My argument is that the preparation of these voters' lists should be left to the province of Ontario, and the hon. member (Mr. Miller) has supported that principle in the days gone by.

An hon. MEMBER. He will support anything.

Mr. BLAIN. Of course, he will be compelled to support anything that comes from the government.

An hon. MEMBER. He was independent once.

Mr. BLAIN. We have not seen any evidence of that since he came to the House. I tell the First Minister that he is making a serious mistake when he presses through parliament legislation which is an invasion of the rights of the people of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is brought to a vote, I desire to add a word to the protest which has been made by my colleagues from Ontario. It is rather a singular thing that nobody finds a word to say in support of this clause. The Prime Minister has no word in support of it; the Minister of Justice is dumb on the question and he cannot hear anything we say; and the Solicitor General, who ought to be in his place earning his money, is out of the House successively and continuously. I protest, in the first place, against the unfairness of making us discuss a question with a man who cannot hear us and with a sub-officer who ought to take this legislation, being well paid for his job, out of this House and shirking his proper duty. What use is there in addressing an argument to a man who has got to wait until he reads 'Hansard,' and then maybe to-morrow he will vouchsafe an answer. We could avoid that by having the Solicitor General put in charge of this Bill. But the Prime Minister does not give us either a chance to discuss the matter or to put a man before us who can discuss the matter with us. In that he is unfair to this side of the House, which at least does wish to discuss and put its reasons with reference to these various measures before the government and parliament. Of course, it makes no difference to men on the other side of the House. They have no criticism to offer; they are not supposed to offer any; they are not invited to offer any; their's is simply to vote whatever the Prime Minister wants, and it makes no difference to them whether the Minister of Justice can hear their arguments or not, or whether or not there is a Solicitor General in his place who can hear. But with us it is a little different, and I protest against this abuse of his position by the Prime Minister. We must not forget the legislation with which the right hon. gentleman came down to this House, on March 9th, and we must not forget the legislation with which he came down some two months after. And we cannot help expressing the opinion that if he had climbed down just a little bit further it would have been better for his own reputation and better for the public life of Canada. He and his Minister of Justice came down with a proposition to invade their old code rights, the provincial control of franchises, in the case of four provinces, three of which are now administered by their opponents and the other of which is still in their grasp. The Prime Minister, more than any other man, at one period of his career, took this simple and logical position: I prefer to trust the provinces in the matter of these franchises and in the matter of preparing the voters' lists. The right hon. gentleman went further and said: I will trust these provincial governments, even though they are opposed to me, for although in some cases wrongs may be done, yet upon the whole I believe the virtue of the principle will overweigh occasional wrongs, and even with that in view I argue for provincial franchises and provincial control of the lists. But a change came over my right hon. friend's vision, and this legislation was introduced on the 9th of March; introduced in all its boldness—so bold that my right hon. friend was himself a little terrified when he came to look at it. I am charitable enough to think that he did not give that legislation thorough personal revision until it had been discussed many days in this House. If I am wrong in that it makes it no better for my right hon. friend. But the bold proposition he came down with was: To seize the making of the lists in the province of British Columbia, from which no single note of dissatisfaction or protest had ever come to him or to any member of his government. Why did he single out that province? For no other reason than that he did not want to single out the province of Manitoba alone, and so, for the sake of company, he added in British Columbia. And when some few of the members from British Columbia gave a tardy and lukewarm submission to the measure, not one of them made a note of strong complaint, and in fact the consensus of their opinion was that both sides of politics believed there were fair and just voters' lists in British Columbia. But he proposed to take hold of the province of Manitoba. He grasped the province of Manitoba in 1904 through a subclause in the present election law, and by means of a forced revision, a partial revision, a scandalous revision, in which the thin red line outrage was perpetrated to his knowledge and to the knowledge of his colleagues March 9th, 1908, he proposed if possible to get a legal way of doing what he did before in an illegal manner, and so avoid the judgment of the Supreme Court of Manitoba, which pronounced that the thin red line action was illegal. And so he proposed to put his own partisans in charge of British Columbia, in charge of Manitoba; men appointed by himself, started in after the writ had issued to do the whole work of enumeration, of notification, of revision and of notification again, in the short period which elapses between the issuing of the writ and the holding of the election. No amount of argument of the Minister of Justice, specious as it is, that they were allowed to do it either before or after the issue of the writ affects the question at all. You must take the maximum of the power that the government takes in any legislation and criticise it upon that, and the maximum of the power they took was to place their own creatures in charge of this matter after the writs for the election were issued and to do the whole work of notification, and enumeration, and revision, in that short and impossible period of time.

Then, Sir, they took hold of the province of Quebec as to its unorganized districts and of the province of Ontario as to its unorganized districts. That was the intention of the right hon. gentleman and his Minister of Justice; that is what they proposed to push through; that is what their following in the west, outside of the British Columbia province, assisted them in attempting to push through, and for which they fought week after week with the strongest of language and the stoutest of backbones, determined to push it through and to teach the Conservatives what they ought to be taught in the province of Manitoba. Well, Sir, something happened. My right hon. friend, began to sense what he was trying to push through, and the fair-minded men in the country began to say that he had gone further than he should have gone, that he had bitten off more than he could chew without injuring his political digestion; and after a month and a half or two months he came down. He left the province of British Columbia alone; he left the province of Manitoba alone; he deserted the stalwarts of the province of Manitoba who had made their plaints—one, two, three, four, half a dozen of them, set out in long affidavits and in long statements that they read in the House; what was, according to the Minister of Justice, incontrovertible proof of the terrible wrong that was being done to them. He deserted them all, he climbed down, and he is hanging now by the eye-lids to the little unorganized territories of the province of Ontario. Why did he not drop that, and complete his reputation for being honest and fairminded. Having let all the rest go, why does he hang on to this? There is the same obloquy, the same unfairness of spirit, the same lack of argument to back it up that there was in the other case. Why did he desert the stalwarts from Manitoba and cling to the one lone man from Rainy River? How do these gentlemen feel about it? After all their partisan support, after eating the leek and being dragged through the mire at the heels of my right hon. friend's devious policy in the west, to be sacrificed on the altar of seeming fair play, and yet to have this spotless dove from Rainy River made their particular favourite and put up on high. How do they feel about it? My right hon. friend has not only to square his accounts with the 'Free Press' of Winnipeg and with those ardent followers of his from the west, but he has to square the account which yet remains with reference to his treatment of the province of Ontario. They will not discuss it here. His followers from Ontario will not open their mouths here. Let me tell him that this discussion has only begun, and that before this year is over there is not a hamlet or town in the province of Ontario that will not hear of this insult to the government of Ontario, and fully heed it. My right hon. friend snaps his fingers in the face of public opinion. Once when I was talking to him across the floor of the House, when I put his pledges of 1896 before him, and his performance of none of them, the right hon. gentleman pulled himself up and said: 'Well, Sir, what are you going to do about it?—we are here and you are there.' Yes, my right hon. friend is there; he has his majority behind him, but it is a majority which he got in 1904. Another question is, how the country feels in 1908? My right hon. friend is bucking up, without the best backing, against a government which has the very best backing. He, the leader of a moribund and disintegrated government, is bucking up against the Hon. Mr. Whitney and a fresh, vigourous government. He, with a majority in a moribund parliament, elected four years ago, is bucking up against a government in the province of Ontario which has the verdict of the people of a little more than a month ago, and an overwhelming majority in favour of that government—95,000 of a majority in the province of Ontario, formerly his right arm; and is it because that has been lopped off from his support that he visits with this petty revenge, if I may call it such, with his puny punishment, the province which had refused to recognize his lordship and refuses to bow to his sovereignty? Well, if he does, he will only find after the next election record is placed on file, that his majority from the province of Ontario will be still less. There are fairminded people amongst the Grits in the province of Ontario. Mr. Whitney's majority of 1904 and his majority of 1908 show that there are more than Tories in the province of Ontario that will vote against a party which has been false to all its pledges in provincial matters, and much more against a party which has been false to all its pledges in federal matters. My right hon. friend has not given a reason. The Minister of Justice has not given a reason. He visits with that superior smile of his any objection which is taken from this side of the House, and deigns no answer. But my right hon. friend and his Minister of Justice have to get out before the people of this country, before the universal trial judges of this country, and have got to answer there for this legislation against the province of Ontario. I ask my right hon. friend whether this was not his position in 1896; did he not say: We will take the provincial franchise and the provincial arrangement of the list? He did. Did he not say: We hold power in our hands, and if we find that these are violated and gross instances of injustice are shown, we will have a chance to remonstrate with the provincial authorities, and if they do not conform with what we believe to be right, we have then the further right to take the matter into our own hands. That was his position; how has he carried it out? I ask him to say whether or not he has had the courtesy to communicate with the Hon. J. P. Whitney or the attorney general of Ontario, giving them the grounds on which he thinks wrongs have been done in those constituencies, and asking them to examine into them, and if they find that these wrongs have been perpetrated, then to provide the means for redress.

Such I venture to say he has not. I venture to say that neither he nor his Minister of Justice ever had the courtesy to approach the government of Ontario and put the case before it. Why? Because they had no case. When a case is to be put, it must be a reasoned one, based upon substantial evidence. But the Minister of Justice takes this absurd and petty position that because the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) has said something in this House and read something in this House, both of which he may believe to be true, but which have been absolutely and categorically denied by my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce)—and one member's word is just as good as another's in this House—because that hearsay statement has been made, my right hon. friend and his Minister of Justice take it as evidence upon which they can base this extraordinary piece of legislation. Why, the Minister of Justice gave away the position himself. He said he had heard nothing that could be called evidence and that evidence was the only thing that should guide one. I have no evidence, he said, and without evidence we cannot properly ascertain the true facts of the case and the basis of the difficulty. Yet he has not seen fit to take evidence. Neither has the first minister. The government has not proceeded in that way at all; but on a mere expression of dissatisfaction, on the mere assertion of one member met by the equally positive denial of another, just as intelligent and just as well posted, he has brought in this Bill. That is all there is, and yet on that evidence, which in a court of law would not hang a cat, which would not be permitted to have the least weight before any judge, our Minister of Justice—save the mark—in this Dominion parliament has thought fit to interfere with the sacred right of the franchise and attack the honesty and administration and good intentions of a local government. What answer has my hon. friend? There can be none. He has not been courteous nor honest nor fair. What he should have done, when the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) made the statements he did—what he should have done, if he thought there was a possible case, was to collect the data, put the case before the Hon. J. P. Whitney, and then if nothing were done, he would have some reason for grasping power which otherwise he has no business to lay a hand upon, and in laying hands upon which he is going against his own principles and his own record.

Then I asked my right hon. friend a question regarding the unorganized districts in the province of Quebec and what reply did I get? The Minister of Justice replied, and his reply shows the bareness and the baldness of the whole case. He said there were hundreds of people in the unorganized districts in the province of Quebec who could not vote. What does the right hon. gentleman propose to do in their case? Or is he only looking after those whom he expects to vote for the Grit candidate. Is it not as much the business of the Minister of Justice to see that the hundreds of voters in certain unorganized districts in the province of Quebec are given votes as to see that some voters who, it is alleged, have been left off the lists in the unorganized districts of Ontario, should be put in a position to vote. Is my right hon. friend solicitous that these voters in the unorganized districts in the province of Quebec should be in a position to exercise their franchise? If so, there is just as much imperative necessity that they should be looked after and organized and put in a position to exercise their rights as it is that these voters in the unorganized districts of Ontario should enjoy the franchise. But what has been done? My right hon. friend has dropped Quebec but hangs on to Ontario. Why has he dropped Quebec? He gives a very ingenuous reason. He says that the party friends who lead the government in that province may be trusted to make matters right, but in the case of Ontario the hon. Mr. Whitney, just returned by an immense majority, and his government cannot be trusted to do what is right. Why, the right hon. gentleman never asked him, never gave him the opportunity, and up to the 30th of June of this year, Mr. Whitney, both by his declarations and the power he possessed, could have remedied this matter of appeal, if my right hon. friend had deigned to enter into communication with him. Mr. Whitney had the power, the will and the desire, but my right hon. friend seems as anxious to keep a grievance as my hon. friend from Rainy River (Mr. Conmee). Both of them cherish grievances. They can give over the unorganized districts in the province of Quebec to the provincial legislature but they refuse to trust them to the province of Ontario.

The right hon. gentleman has gone too far in this matter, the defect alleged is that there are voters in the unorganized districts of Ontario who have been left off the list. But why were they left off? Because the local elections were held on the 8th of June, and consequently there was not sufficient time to take appeals and have lists revised. But that is a difficulty only for this year, if it be one, and what is the hon. gentleman's proposed legislation? Does it confine itself to remedying that grievance this year? No, but the right hon. gentleman makes that pretense to grasp the unorganized districts, eleven of them, for all time to come. His measure goes immeasurably beyond the grievance and proves that it is not a desire to remove a real grievance which animates the right hon. gentleman but a desire to grasp the voters' lists. Take all your newspaper statements and the statements made in the House, and you have only one or two or three places where any grievance is alleged, but you see that as a pretext to grasp the whole eleven unorganized districts. Why do you do that? Not because you want to remedy a grievance localized in two or three places but because you wish to have the organization of those districts permanently in your hands. That will not appeal to the people of Ontario. It will not appeal to fair minded men throughout this Dominion. And after all, take out your partisans on the one side and the other, and you have the salt of the political earth in the shape of that large number of thinking people, growing every day larger, who hold the balance of power and who exercise an independent spirit of criticism and judgment with reference to both political parties. That you are outraging. The public sentiment in this country will not go with you. It will go against you and you feel it has gone against you when you give the people a chance to speak by their ballots.

I protest as strongly as I can. I make my protest here, throughout Ontario and this Dominion: and if these hon. gentlemen will not give a reason for the belief that is in them, they will be obliged to give it when we meet them at the poll.

Mr. PATERSON. It is well understood that it is highly desirable no lengthy speeches should be made at this stage of the session, and therefore I suppose many members may keep quiet who otherwise would feel it incumbent on them to take part in the debate.

But it seems to me that hon. members opposite want some one from the province of Ontario to speak on this subject. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has gone into one of his paroxysms, one of these streaks that at times take possession of him, and has tried to wax indignant about a thing that, it seems to me, can be treated reasonably. What is this fuss about? What is it that he is going to discuss with the electorate?—and that, I suppose, he will give us the privilege of discussing with him. He tells us that some outrage is being committed, that war is being entered upon against the Whitney government. He says that we will find that we are up against the Whitney government. We are evidently up against some individuals in this House who hope some time to form a government, my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) being one. It is with them we will have to fight; we are not fighting with Mr. Whitney at all. We are seeking to have our own rights in this matter. We are not departing from our principles——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON. I think hon. gentlemen opposite have admitted that we have kept that one plank in our platform.

Mr. BERGERON. You are spoiling it now.

Mr. PATERSON. Then do not hon. gentlemen opposite see how wrong they were for years in stating that we had not kept even this one? If they were wrong then they may be wrong now. We are seeking to have the new lists in places where there are no municipally-prepared lists. We have said in the past, and say now: Adopt the lists which are municipally prepared and upon which the local elections are held. But there are no municipally-prepared lists in the unorganized districts. There was special legislation by the provincial legislature to deal with these unorganized districts and provide for making up the lists. Hon. gentlemen say this Bill is special legislation. We are proposing to do the same thing with reference to Dominion lists. Is there anything wrong in that? The special legislation providing for making the lists for the Ontario House was carried out by partisans. I am not going to say they were unfair men, but they were men of the provincial government's own choosing, men who did not occupy judicial positions. These men prepared the lists, and on those lists the elections were run. If this Bill passes, it will declare the sense of this House that while in the organized counties the lists of the provincial elections should be used, yet in the unorganized districts where there are no municipally-prepared lists this Dominion legislature shall direct how those lists shall be prepared.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) allow a question? Does he propose to move an amendment to apply this to the province of Prince Edward Island?

Mr. PATERSON. I am not proposing any amendments to the Bill. We are discussing this question of Ontario and this alleged outrage of which hon. gentlemen talk.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) probably did not catch the drift of my question. He said the government proposed to take charge of the making of the lists where lists were not municipally prepared. I supposed, of course, he would move to apply it to the province of Prince Edward Island where the lists are not municipally prepared.

Mr. PATERSON. I will do the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) the justice to say that he is not so dense as not to understand what I said. We are discussing Ontario——

Mr. BOYCE. Why not apply the same to Quebec?

Mr. PATERSON. The subject under discussion now is Ontario. According to hon. gentlemen opposite, if we were trying to do this thing in Quebec we would be doing the monstrous thing that they declare we are doing here. Now, whether a monstrous thing or not, we are doing it only in Ontario, and, therefore, the discussion can be confined to Ontario. There was necessarily special legislation by the provincial legislature to provide for the making of these lists for the provincial elections. I maintain the right of this parliament, in perfect consistency with the principles we announced in the past in favour of municipally-prepared lists, to legislate specially for the preparation of lists for the Dominion election. It has been argued by hon. members opposite that this is done for the sake of the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River (Mr. Conmee), that this Bill, if rightly named, would be called : A Bill to elect the present member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River. They say that the hon. member has asserted of his own knowledge that the lists are unfair as they were prepared, at least in some of these districts, for the last election. But they say also that he has given no proof, and therefore that the facts as he presents them should not be accepted. I do not deal with this matter on the basis of the statements of the hon. member (Mr. Conmee). I take the statements and arguments of hon. members opposite on the floor of this House. And I ask these hon. members to judge by inference from those statements whether the lists prepared in the last provincial election were just, honest and complete lists.

Mr. J. D. REID. Of course, they were.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid) says they were. Now, what is proposed under this Bill? Is it proposed that the government shall appoint its own creatures to prepare lists? Nothing of the kind. It is proposed that three judges of the land shall be selected and that they shall select enumerators who shall prepare the lists.

Mr. ALCORN. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. PATERSON. Let me go on——

Mr. ALCORN. I would only say that——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Sit down.

Mr. PATERSON. The enumerators are to prepare the lists, and when they are so prepared they are to be revised by the judges, so that only such names as are proper to be on those lists shall remain on.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. May I ask the hon. member (Mr. Paterson) a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Oh, oh. Sit down.

Mr. PATERSON. My hon. friend from North Toronto alluded to that class of citizens who, as he says, are distinct from political parties and who, he claims, are the remnant that save the country, and declares that the people will condemn this Bill. Will the sane and fair element in the community, the people who view questions fom a non-partisan point of view, say that a measure which provides that the judiciary shall prepared the lists is a partisan outrage? Will these men say that the judges will prepare the lists in such a way as to give the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River a seat that he is not entitled to? I am a layman and I have always had an exalted idea of the judiciary of Canada. It has remained for members of the legal profession—who may aspire to positions on the bench themselves some day—to attempt to change my feeling on this subject. Is this their estimate of the judges of this country? Can they imagine themselves raised to the judicial bench, and willing, in that lofty position, to act as mere creatures of the government to make a list for the election of men to parliament who could not be elected fairly? The statements of these hon. gentlemen make me more suspicious of these existing lists than anything that the hon. member for Thunder Bay and Rainy River has said, for they tell us that on lists prepared by the judiciary, Liberals can be elected, but that Liberals would have no chance of election if the provincial lists were used. There can be no stronger argument. The hon. member may go from one point of Ontario to another—I trust I may be able to follow him or accompany him—and he will put this to the people of Ontario. What is the matter with this? Well, you are seeking an undue advantage. How so ? Because you have appointed the judges of the land, according to these gentlemen, to prepare the lists, and that task being confided to their hands, they are going so to manipulate these lists that the hon. member for Rainy River and others can be elected when the people don't want them. Will he not be in a nice position in making that argument on the platform before the people?

An hon. MEMBER. That is not the point.

Mr. PATERSON. It is the point, and the only point that is going before the people of Ontario, that clear distinct point, and all the worked-up indignation that the hon. gentlemen get off now or will be able to get off in the future, will look very cheap and very silly in the presence of men who will understand that the whole pretended outrage consists in this, that instead of having the lists prepared by partisan officers of the government, they are prepared by the judges of the land.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PATERSON. What is the use of saying no? Your whole argument, everything you have said in reference to this Bill, proceeds on the assumption that the judges who revise the lists will make partisan lists.

Mr. ALCORN. The judges do not make the lists.

Mr. PATERSON. Very well, then, if they do not make the lists the hon. gentleman confesses that the judges are honest men and that they have done honest work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. In this case it is the enumerators.

Mr. PATERSON. No, the enumerators are appointed by the judges, not by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. They do their work under the direction of the judges, their work is to be revised by the judges, the lists therefore are judicially prepared lists as distinct from partisan lists prepared for the local House. I trust that next time the Ontario government revise their lists they will take a leaf out of the book of the Dominion government, and instead of appointing their partisan enumerators, will leave the task in the hands of the judges, as it is proposed to be done in this case. An insult to the Whitney government! How can it be an insult to the Whitney government? Do you mean to tell me that the Whitney government do not believe that the lists prepared by their officers are honest lists? Do you mean to take that ground? Very well then, that being so, we appoint the judges to make those lists, and those lists made by the judges, if they are what you say they are, will corroborate what was done by Mr. Whitney's officers, and bring him glory and renown, and you will be relieved of the trouble. It will only confirm the Whitney government's wisdom, it will only make the Whitney government shine more resplendently bright, that is all it will accomplish. Then I need not carry the argument further. we all grasp it. There is a special preparation. Remember that in the counties you are talking about in the unorganized district. I do not know how many Dominion ridings it will make, perhaps half a dozen; there are eighty ridings in Ontario in which you use the lists prepared by the local government, and in the other six ridings you have a special preparation of the lists. There, instead of having the lists made by partisan officers of the local government, we propose to have the lists made for these constituencies by the judges of the land. That is the proposition that goes before the people, that and nothing more; and instead of being an insult to the Whitney government, their lists being right and proper, when the revision of these lists take place, the judicial revision which every man must admit will be honest and fair, and when that confirms the righteousness of the Whitney lists, why, the Whitney government is exalted and we will be cast down, especially the member for Rainy River who does not believe that this is the case. Now is not that the whole matter, notwithstanding all the indignation that you may attempt to arouse? There is one thing to be regretted, that is, that we find gentlemen of the legal profession in this House committing themselves to this bald statement, that the judges of the land, whose selection is not left to the government, but is determined in the Bill, that these men can so forget their duty, to forget the responsibility that rests upon them, that they will deliberately prepare lists that are false and wrong in order to elect members to this House that could not be elected on proper lists. We will await the result of this revision when it is made, and if it turns out that the lists that have been prepared by the provincial House are just and right, then hon. gentlemen opposite will be able to charge that we have entailed upon the country whatever expense there may be connected with this revision, and that is the only thing they can charge us with. The whole question is simply the small amount of money that it will take to bring about these judicially revised lists in the unorganized districts, that will, or ought to give absolute satisfaction to every man in this country, whether he be Grit or Tory.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Customs has been as amusing as usual. He told us in the commencement of his remarks that he did not desire or expect to be up against the Whitney government. He did not remind us that he had already been up against the Whitney government in the two ridings of Brant, and had come back with a very crestfallen appearance.

Mr. PATERSON. We all meet with such accidents in elections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, and the hon. gentleman has met with a great many. So far as I understand his argument, it is this, when you condense it, that because the lists in the unorganized districts of Ontario are revised by the judges, and are therefore honest and good lists, it is the duty of this parliament to disregard them and to propose this measure. He has declared most emphatically, so far as we could follow him, that the lists prepared by the officers of the Whitney government and revised by the judges of the land, are fair and honest lists. At all events he said no word against them and he argued that because the proposed lists to be prepared under this legislation will be equally fair and honest, therefore this legislation should go on.

Mr. PATERSON. I said more than that.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He said not a word against their accuracy or fairness.

Mr. PATERSON. Yes, I said that the inference and the only inference that could be drawn from the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite was that these lists were unfair.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman seriously ask the House to believe that this legislation is being based upon the statements of hon. gentlemen on this side? The hon. gentleman seems to be very much in error as to what the policy of his government has been in the past. He says it has been their policy to abide altogether by municipal lists and to legislate whenever they were not municipal lists. Does he not know that from 1897 to the present time, in the unorganized districts of Ontario, where the lists are not municipally prepared, the lists have been respected if they are less than a year old? That is the present law by section 7 of the statute.

Mr. PATERSON. I know it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Then he is not abiding by the principles of the past when he proposes this legislation which provides that even where there are provincial lists less than a year old, those provincial lists in those unorganized territories shall be disregarded, although they are made to-day under the sanction and supervision of the judges, and that new lists prepared by this government shall take their places. Thus it may happen that these federal lists will be made in August, September and October of this year and new lists will be prepared under the provincial government next spring; then if a general Dominion election should take place next July or August the lists nearly a year old, prepared by this government, shall be used and not the new lists prepared by the provincial government and approved by the judges. That is the effect of this legislation. The hon. gentleman proposes judicial lists, lists having judicial authority. What has he to say to the action of his friends in Nova Scotia, who, year after year, have denied any appeal to the judges with respect to the electoral lists of the province? The Conservatives of Nova Scotia would be delighted to have a chance to appeal to the judges in respect to the preparation of the lists, more than once have they made that motion in the assembly since 1882, but on every occasion it has been voted down. This Bill cannot be justified under present conditions. The Minister of Justice himself has declared that these matters which have been brought to the attention of the House, asserted on one side, controverted on the other, could not be determined except upon evidence before a committee of the House. No one will gainsay that.

Mr. PATERSON. We had that evidence inferentially to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister differs from his colleague the Minister of Justice, who, in putting forward these stories, on July 2nd, said that he did not put them forward as evidence of any facts, except the one fact that there was dissatisfaction on the part of some hon. gentlemen opposite. We do not know how many people were dissatisfied, it may have been one or half a dozen or fifteen in the northern ridings of Ontario. But there are the words of the Minister of Justice that these matters upon which this Bill rests are matters that cannot be known except by inquiry on evidence and that inquiry has not been made. Further than that, we have the distinct admission of the Minister of Justice that, so far as he and the government and this House are concerned, that evidence is not forthcoming and has not yet been placed before parliament.

Mr. CONMEE. It has been stated that there is a properly prepared list in the unorganized territory and that no evidence was produced in this House to show that that list was defective, unfair, improperly and illegally prepared and stuffed. I made assertions on a former occasion that it was an unfair list, that it was illegally prepared, that it took an unfair advantage of one political party, that it was prepared by political partisans, the enumerators being the nominees of the Conservative candidates in the local elections.

Mr. BOYCE. Would that be the reason for introducing this Bill?

Mr. CONMEE. No, not the whole reason; the hon. member himself gave the reason for its introduction; two years ago he spoke for nearly three hours discussing and showing the imperfections of our present Act in regard to the preparation of lists for Dominion elections. He claimed that gross injustice had been done to him in his riding. He repeated those arguments during the present session, and if a strong case could be made out for a change in the law, he is responsible for making such a case. His whole argument led to that point.

Mr. BOYCE. The very provisions that I complained of are continued in this Act.

Mr. CONMEE. I entirely differ, they are not. The Act he complained of provided that the lists must be prepared after the writs were issued and the accusation was made against this government that it was a partisan list, hasty and therefore an imperfectly prepared list, and there was a good deal of ground for some of those allegations. It was in view of that that the government, as far as I know, undertook this legislation, in order that they might be relieved from allegations of that character, in order that they might have a fair and reasonable list which would be regarded by fair-minded men as just, as between the political parties. Such a list should not be prepared during the heat of a Dominion election, when perhaps men go to greater extremes than they would at other times. These were some of the reasons, if I understood the Prime Minister aright, which justified the introductoin of this legislation. It was timely and much needed legislation, as the present law is defective. The legislation was brought down before the statements were made by me, but the reasons given, I think, are sufficient to show the necessity for it and they are additional evidence that this legislation is absolutely necessary if we are to have a fair list. Does my hon. friend think that the present Dominion law if acted upon in the same manner as in the past would produce a fair list? He is on record as saying it would not.

Mr. BOYCE. What I complained about was the corrupt administration of the law by this government, and my words are on record.

Mr. CONMEE. And what I am complaining about is the corrupt, partisan, and fraudulent administration of the provincial law. Now I call the attention of the leader of the opposition to some remarks he made in this House. He criticised the reasons for this legislation as paltry and in support of his contention he read the following statement which was placed in his hands by the Whitney government:

The enumerators for the making of the voters' lists in territory without municipal organization were appointed by a general order in council dated the 18th day of December, 1907. At this time J. Gartforth was appointed to make the list for the old district of Port Arthur and Rainy River. The work was not commenced at Port Arthur, and it was afterwards found that the name of the enumerator had been received by telegram as J. Gartforth, where it should have been J. Ashforth. On the 6th day of January an order was passed correcting the name and appointing a separate enumerator, Frank Stain, for the Fort Frances district. It was supposed by the department that there was no further difficulty; but in March it was found that Ashforth was apparently incompetent and incapable of doing the work, and on the 25th day of March his appointment was cancelled, and he was instructed by telegraph to hand all papers and money to Mr. Donald Hogarth. On the same date Mr. Donald Hogarth was appointed enumerator for the east part of the riding of Port Arthur, and Thomas Cummings was appointed enumerator for the western portion. Both were instructed to see Mr. Langworthy, the Crown attorney and the clerk of the peace, for advice.

In the first place when I was accusing the enumerators of being partisan and of preparing lists without any notice and stealing a mean advantage over their opponents, the hon. gentleman from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) was quick to jump to his feet and contradict that statement because he said that he knew Mr. Ashforth would not be guilty of such a thing. Well that is correct. In the statement read by the leader of the opposition it is claimed this Mr. Ashforth was incompetent and incapable of doing the work, but I think my hon. friend from Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) will admit that there is no more capable man in the country than Mr. Ashforth. It was not because he was not competent that Mr. Ashforth was dispensed with: it was because he was too high class a man to do the work of the machine. That is why he never got the instructions he should have got from the clerk of the peace.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend has before him a statement that Mr. Ashforth did not get the letter.

Mr. CONMEE. I have no such thing before me; I have Mr. Ashforth's own statement that he did get the appointment.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend has heard it stated several times that the reason Mr. Ashforth did not act was because he did not get the letter, which was incorrectly addressed to him as 'Gashforth.'

Mr. CONMEE. No such statement has been made and no such statement is true if it is made.

Mr. BOYCE. It is on 'Hansard.'

Mr. CONMEE. My. hon. friend is wrong. It is on 'Hansard,' there was a mistake as to the name and that might have misled the gentlemen at Toronto for a short time, but nobody claimed it mislead Mr. Ashforth, so far as I remember, who told me himself he was appointed enumerator.

Mr. BOYCE. When?

Mr. CONMEE. Last February; and the document read by the leader of the opposition is proof that he had no instructions. He was referred to Mr. Langworthy for advice and instructions and he never got them. Why did not he get them? I leave hon. gentlemen to answer that question for themselves. He did not get them because he was not the kind of man they wanted. Let me illustrate that by another instance. We hear a good deal from gentlemen opposite about the virtue and righteousness of the Whitney government and their officials and their administration. I have never attacked that administration and its record and I do not think it is a fair thing to do ; and I am going to make the remarks which I feel called upon to make now because the name of a respected citizen has been attacked in this document read by the leader of the opposition. Mr. Ashforth was a member of their license board and it was proved up to the hilt that two members of the board were bribed and had received money. An investigation was called for and a gentleman came up to hold the investigation and when he got to Port Arthur he found there was something in the rumours, and where do you think he held the investigation? In a back room 7 feet by 6 feet of Mr. Garrick's office. Two or three bold spirits found their way in there and the commissioner was just about to close his books as there was no evidence, when they called on him to subpœna Mr. Downing and Mr. Downing's evidence disclosed that he gave $400 to one member of the board and $200 to another. The man who got the $200 admitted it ; the gentleman who got the $400 did not deny it but he said it was given for another purpose. The commission of that officer was to investigate not that one charge but all the charges in regard to the license administration in that town, and he has never done it. The court was adjourned for ten days and the court never sat again and they have never come back to finish the investigation because there are lots more behind the scenes. I have the report here of the evidence taken and one of the witnesses was asked : Why did'nt you go to Mr. Ashforth, who is another member of the board. His reply was : Why, Mr. Ashforth was regarded as a particularly honest man and there was no use going to see him. That is evidence as to the character of Mr. Ashforth. And if the newspapers are correct, within the last few days they have dismissed that board and they have dismissed Mr. Ashforth along with the two men who had received the money. And why ? Because he was honest ; because the public had respect for him; because even those who were conspiring to bribe the board could not get near him because of the high character of the man. He could not be tampered with. That man is dismissed from office ; and in this House his name is dragged in as that of a man incompetent to prepare the voters' lists.

Mr. BOYCE. Who dragged it in but the hon. member himself?

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. leader of the opposition read the report. I am not responsible for it ; I am repudiating it. I want to go a step further on that point. I have under my hand a quotation from the Conservative newspaper of Port Arthur, the 'Herald,' which verifies the statement I made. The declaration I made was that Mr. Hogarth, who, according to the reports, was the office man and the partner of the candidate, and was appointed enumerator, was acting the part of a partisan by canvassing for Mr. Carrick while in the pay of the people of the province. That was my allegation. I did not make it of my own motion. I read from the newspaper in which that charge was made. As against that charge, the hon. leader of the opposition read a statement showing the date of Mr. Hogarth's appointment and giving the reasons for his appointment. Now, let me give the reasons which the Conservative paper of Port Arthur gave for his appointment. It makes this statement :

> Mr. Carrick's personal agent has not assisted in the compilation of the voters' lists. It is true that Mr. Donald Hogarth was appointed enumerator, but without the knowledge of either himself or Mr. Carrick, on April 21. Immediately after Mr. Carrick's nomination the government was wired by the candidate to this effect: 'Can you cancel Mr. Hogarth's appointment as enumerator?'

According to the document read by the hon. leader of the opposition—and I will show by sworn testimoney in a minute or two that that is corroborated—Mr. Donald Hogarth was appointed enumerator on the 25th day of March, nearly a month before the date that the Conservative paper claims that he was advised by telegraph that he was appointed enumerator. What was he doing in that month? Exactly what he is accused of doing—canvassing and preparing the list for the Conservative candidate. There can be no controverting of these facts.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. The hon. member states that Mr. Hogarth was canvassing for Mr. Carrick during that time. Where is his proof of that?

Mr. CONMEE. I will not give any proof of that. I make the statement. The newspaper here accuses him of it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, I can show it from the Port Arthur 'Chronicle,' which is on file in the library. The Conservative paper denies it.

Mr. BRISTOL. Had the Conservative candidate been nominated at that time?

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, he was nominated previous to this article.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the date of that article?

Mr. CONMEE. The 28th of April.

Mr. BRISTOL. The hon. gentleman said that he was canvassing for Mr. Carrick from the 25th of March.

Mr. CONMEE. I think I understood the hon. member's question quite correctly. The hon. member did not fix the date in March.

Mr. BRISTOL. I thought I did; I endeavoured to do so.

Mr. CONMEE. If that is what the hon. gentleman meant, there was no candidate at the time the enumerator was appointed. I am not talking about when the candidate was nominated; I am talking of the time when the enumerator was appointed, which Mr. Hogarth and the Conservative party and paper denied.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. How could he be canvassing for a candidate when there was no candidate?

Mr. CONMEE. Is my hon. friend so very innocent? When he is a little longer in public life he will get wise on that subject. I do not think I need waste any time in giving an answer to that question. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie has stated that he has not only contradicted but disproved everything I stated, and I suppose he thinks he has. I also made the statement that the enumerator, Cumming, posted his list in Port Arthur for the riding of Fort William, fifty miles away from the polling division to which that list referred—fifty miles in some cases, sixty miles in others, forty miles in others, twenty miles in others.

Mr. W. WRIGHT. Does the hon. member make the statement that it was not posted at the other places as well?

Mr. CONMEE. I did not previously make the statement but I now make that statement. I stated then that I had no knowledge of that, and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie dared me to say that it was not posted there.

Mr. BOYCE. I say it was posted there.

Mr. CONMEE. It was not posted there. There was an investigation as to that matter, and here is a memorandum sent to me by Mr. Dowler, one of the attorneys who appeared in the action. He is a responsible man, and he is quoting the evidence. He mentions some of the cases, and then he says:

Mr. Cummings was called. The following proceedings took place. The enumerator, J. H. Cummings, was sworn, produced telegrams covering his appointment, showing appointment for part of Port Arthur and Rainy River riding west of Port Arthur.

The same evidence that the hon. leader of the opposition brought down, showing that this man was appointed by telegram, dated the 25th of March. The document from Toronto turns out, on sworn testimony, to be correct. The 25th of March is the date that both Cummings and Hogarth were appointed, and both of them concealed that date for nearly a month and went on with the preparation of the list without any notice or any warning to their opponents and behind the backs of their opponents:

And stating that he had a letter affirming it, but had not brought it with him.

I may say that later on this document shows that he did produce the letter.

No further appointment or change in territory had been made, that the two polling subdivisions, of Mattewin and Kashahowie were first visited by him between March 30 and April 18.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the hon. gentleman reading?

Mr. CONMEE. I am reading from the report of the evidence taken in the trial that took place last week.

Mr. BOYCE. Is it the evidence or Mr. Dowler's opinion?

Mr. CONMEE. It is a quotation from the evidence.

Mr. BOYCE. By Mr. Dowler?

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. gentleman wants to cast doubts on a written document sent by a reputable lawyer, he is perpectly welcome. I am reading the statement to the House and not to my hon. friend because he seems to be privileged to deny anything and make any assertion in the most flippant manner.

Mr. BOYCE. I have not done so to the extent my hon. friend has.

Mr. CONMEE. At any rate that is my opinion, and I stand in the judgment of the House as to whether I am warranted in making that statement.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman's statements have been proved not to be worth much on many occasions.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is often a little too bumptious and free with his denials and assertions.

(reading):

Were first visited between March 30 and April 18, and were visited the second time by him, between May 2 and 9. These lists or parts of the Cummings list were posted in his office about May 14. The other polling subdivisions were visited by Cummings on the first occasion between April 18 and 23, and on the second occasion between May 20 and June 3. When he was making the second visit to several of the polling subdivisions on the P. A. D. Dr. Smellie was with him.

Dr. Smellie was the Conservative candidate of the riding of Fort William.

(reading):

The lists prepared by him, or the parts rather, for the different polling subdivisions, were prepared separately, and posted in his office separately, and as each was posted from time to time, copies were delivered by him to the judge, the sheriff and the clerk of the peace, Mr. Langworthy, but no copies were either mailed or delivered by him to anybody else.

That is evidence positive that no copies went to or were posted in these electoral divisions of the riding.
(reading) :

Except he thought he gave a copy to Mr. Mackenzie, of Port Arthur.

Mr. BOYCE. Is that the proclamation or copies of the list ?

Mr. CONMEE. Copies of the lists. He mailed them to the sheriff, the clerk of the peace, Mr. Longworthy, and the judge, but no copies were either mailed or delivered by him to anybody else.

A completed bound list of the different polling subdivisions as prepared by him had been made, and he had copies of the same in his office but had not posted them up, nor delivered them to anybody, neither had he advertised the completed list.

Neither has he to this day signed the declaration the law provides he should for the completion of his list.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Whose affidavit is this ?

Mr. CONMEE. The enumerator Mr. Cummings.

Mr. BOYCE. If the hon. gentleman will not state it. I may say, for the information of the leader of the opposition, that the hon. gentleman is quoting from the report of somebody else as to what that evidence is and not the evidence itself.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend may hold his soul in patience. I am not going to deceive the leader of the opposition or the House.

Mr. BOYCE. You are trying to do it.

Mr. CONMEE. This is a report of the evidence sent me by Mr. Dowler, a reputable lawyer, who acted on the part of those who made the appeal.

Mr. BOYCE. Employed by you.

Mr. CONMEE. By the Liberal party, I suppose.

Mr. BOYCE. By you.

Mr. CONMEE. By me if you like. I should not wonder if I had to help to pay the bill. But that does not make this lawyer a dishonest man. We may possibly find an honest lawyer in this province. I have had considerable trouble to find one on some occasions, and I think I could bring that a little closer home if I wanted. I have no objection—although there are some statements in this not for the public—to hand this to the leader of the opposition if he would like to see it. Here is another little piece of evidence, and I cannot imagine that this gentleman would send me a statement of the evidence which was wrong. I take it for granted that it is right since I am reading it, and if Mr. Dowler is deceiving me or this country, that will not do him any credit as a member of the bar.

Francis Dubois, of Silver Mountain, was sworn and stated that there were fifty-two names on the Silver Mountain list, composed altogether of river drivers who were simply making a drive of logs down the river and were probably not in the riding over a week, and none of whom were there at the time of the election. Though there were ninety-nine names on the list, including these fifty-two, there were only seventeen that voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. They did not have a 'Minnie M' up there.

Mr. CONMEE. Evidently not.
(reading) :

He also stated that there were in the neighbourhood of eighteen to twenty names that should be on, that no voters' list came to the polling subdivision until the morning of the election, when Dr. Smellie's scrutineer brought up some copies, and that no appeal was made.

I do not wish to detain the House by reading these documents. There are other witnesses and they all say the lists were not posted in the riding. Let me say this to the committee. Will it be believed—I am repeating the statement I made previously——

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman has offered to send the document over. Will he kindly do so ?

Mr. CONMEE. No sir, I did not offer to send it to you at all. I offered to hand it to the leader of the opposition if he wished to read it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I should be very glad to have it.

Mr. CONMEE. I am making a statement because I see the hon. gentleman in his seat now and he was not there a moment ago. At that time I pointed out that this particular enumerator was appointed for a ridding to which he did not belong. He was making up the lists in the Fort William riding, and he posted them only in his office in the Port Arthur riding. That is clearly proven by the evidence. But now there appears even a worse case than that. Mr. Cummings was appointed to make up the lists for the west division of the riding of Port Arthur. He did not make up that list at all, but made up the list for the west portion of the riding of Fort William, in which he had no authority. I think that will be seen by the documents to which I refer. The man was appointed and the division of the district took place afterwards, but no change was made. I am told, on what I believe to be reliable authority, that the reviser for a section of the Kenora division was not appointed for that division, but made up lists for a large section for which he had no authority.

Mr. BOYCE. Have you your lawyer's statement for that?

Mr. CONMEE. No, but I have just as good. Now, I state further, and I think I shall be borne out by the facts, that the reason why these appeals were not taken was because the whole thing seemed to be in confusion. Even lawyers could not tell us what steps to take; they did not know where they were at. The law had not been distributed; nobody could get it; nobody knew how to proceed in order to make an appeal. The only purpose in maintaining the appeal that has been made is to expose the conditions under which the lists were prepared. Judging from a letter which I have, I take it that the appeal will go on, but that will depend upon the judge. But I am told by members of the legal profession that, notwithstanding the defects, notwithstanding that the list was prepared by the enumerator for a riding to which he was not appointed, notwithstanding that it was never a posted list, notwithstanding that he has never made the affidavit that the law requires before the judge can give his certificate, yet the election was held. We cannot have a proper revision because the law deprives us of the opportunity. Here is a section of the Ontario Act of 1908:

The non-performance by the enumerator of any of the duties under this Act within the time appointed shall not affect the validity of the list nor shall such list be void for any irregularity if there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the Act.

I am told that because of that section we are actually shut out from anything further than merely an exposé of the manner in which the list was prepared.

Mr. LANCASTER. That would be because there was substantial compliance.

Mr. CONMEE. If the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) will pay attention he will see that there are two sections in that sentence:

The non-performance by the enumerator of any of the duties under this Act within the time appointed shall not affect the validity of this list——

There is a stop there.

—nor shall such list be void for any irregularity——

That is another point.

—if there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of the Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. In every case if there has been substantial compliance.

Mr. CONMEE. In the first you are positively shut out. At least that is the interpretation given to me. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) shakes his head. He is a lawyer and I do not pretend to argue the point with him; I leave him to his fellow lawyers. I have here a number of newspaper reports, but I shall not take up the time of the House by reading them. It is claimed that at Ignace the enumerator posted up his notice that he would be there on a certain day. He did not come until three days after the date fixed, and when he did come he took a leaf out of the Roblin enumerator's book, he secretated himself in the office of some political friend and made up his list there, and the Liberals did not know anything about it—did not even know that he was in town. Now, with regard to Mr. Eoll's list I have a fair knowledge of the facts because I took a great deal of pains to find out whether I was warranted in the statement that I made in this House on a former occasion. Mr. Eoll was appointed in December, but did not start to prepare his list until some time later. He went his first round and had begun on his second round and completely closed a number of polling subdivisions before any of the Liberals knew that he had been appointed enumerator or that any notices had been posted up. It may be asked: How could that happen? It certainly did happen, whether hon. members are satisfied with my explanation of how it could have happened or not. Mr. Eoll is not a very well-known man—I have nothing to say against him, I am not using his name for that purpose, but I never knew there was such a man until I heard that he was enumerator after this had occurred. It is claimed that he posted up on his own door the announcement that he had posted up the voters' lists at certain places at certain times. These places are isolated, some of them are twenty or thirty miles from a railway—mining camps, lumber camps or settlements. Take, for instance, the township of Marks, which is a long way from any of the towns or cities. The enumerator goes up there. There may be no schoolhouse on which to post the notice. He posts it, perhaps, on the door of some citizen—perhaps some good Conservative, though I do not make that statement, but the fact is that nobody saw that notice and no news came to the Liberals of Port Arthur or Fort William that that notice was up. That has been done over and over again, purposely, enumerators concealing their appointment and carrying on their work in such a way that the public knew nothing of it. The document which the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) read, showed that Mr. Hogarth was appointed a month before he began his duties, and the Conservative newspapers were denying it all the time. The enumerator would start out like a thief in the night to prepare his list unknown to the opponents of the ruling party and would make an unfair list. Hon. gentlemen opposite say to us: You ought to be content to accept these lists. I say: No, they are not fair or just lists. Surely it is within the power of this parliament to remedy an evil of that kind. No hon. member on the other side has contended that the present law relating to Dominion lists is a proper law or one that works fairly. Its operation in the past has proven it very defective indeed. I want to point out that the Ontario law is no better. What did the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Wright) do today? What has the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) done every time he has got on his feet? Both these gentlemen have argued that there was not enough time given to prepare the Dominion lists. The hon. member for Muskoka tried to persuade the Prime Minister that under this Bill he would only have about two months and a half to prepare his lists, and that it was much too short a time.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Did I not refer to the Bill as introduced, providing for making those lists after the writs were issued, and it was in that connection I stated that there was not sufficient time.

Mr. CONMEE. I understood his argument to be that if elections come on this fall, this Bill will only give you two months and a half to prepare the lists.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. When the hon. gentleman spoke some time ago his principal grievance was that there was not sufficient time under the Ontario Act, and now he is willing to adopt the same time.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. The Ontario Bill provides that there shall be only fifteen days from the time the enumerator posts up his ists for the people to appeal to him when he holds his court the second time, to have their names put on the list, or others struck off which ought not to be there. Then there may be an appeal to the county judges if any one believes he has not received fair-play at the hands of the enumerators, or the district judge can fix ten days. I say that is not sufficient time. Whether my hon. friend takes his position on the Dominion Act, it is defective; if he chooses to take the Ontario Act, it is still more defective, you cannot have a proper list under it, there is not time enough.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Then the hon. gentleman does not endorse this language of the Bill in subsection 5:

In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the law of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in like cases shall as far as possible, be observed and followed.

Mr. BOYCE. It provides that the Ontario law shall be followed as far as possible.

Mr. CONMEE. It is not the case now. This law will govern. Hon. gentlemen say: You are doing an injustice to the province of Ontario. How? The hon. member for North Toronto and others charge this government with treating the province of Ontario with indifference, that we are casting a slur upon Ontario and upon her government. I would like to know how. Why should Ontario feel wounded if this House chooses to take charge of its own electoral lists? What business is it of Ontario's, if the provincial government is not in politics to interfere with Dominion elections? The Ontario government do not want to dictate to this House as to how the lists shall be prepared on which members are elected to this House. Hon. gentlemen opposite ask: Where are your principles of provincial rights? I would like to know where provincial rights are involved. Wherein are the principles of the Reform party involved in this Bill? The Reform party was never committed to anything beyond municipal provincial lists. Where does the provincial rights question come in? The hon. member for North Toronto grew eloquent on that question, and directed toward me some remarks that I don't think he should have used. I want to say to him that I do not think his reputation is improved. I do not think he is any more spotless than a good many other members of this House. I doubt very much if there are not more dark spots on his hide than there are on some other members. He grew eloquent about the way Manitoba was going to be treated. The hon. gentleman has forgotten not so long ago when he was willing to take Manitoba by the throat and force her by coercion. The hon. gentleman made a reference to me which I feel disposed to resent. I do not usually sling out uncomplimentary remarks to members of this House. I do not think it is altogether becoming to the hon. member for North Toronto, because if there is one member of this House who lives in a glass house, it is that hon. gentleman. He has not shown that spotless character that he talks about, in the positions of trust which he has occupied, in politics or otherwise. When he was Finance Minister of this Dominion was just the time when the McGreevys and others were getting in their best work. His record is not very good, either.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the matter with it?

Mr. CONMEE. There is this matter with it, that he was supposed to be the guardian of the people's funds, and those funds were pilfered from his treasury by political friends, and either the hon. gentleman did not have ability enough to detect it, or he did not have the will, whichever position he chooses to take. The facts are there. No one has accused me of being a traitor to my leader or to any one with whom I was associated. So I think so far as that kind of thing is concerned my hon. friend would be just as well off if he left out some of those sharp sayings. I want to say to him and to hon. gentlemen opposite that I have been in public life for a considerable time, and I defy any man, I do not care on which side of the House he sits, to bring against me anything that I am ashamed of. I do not say I am perfect, I make no claims. But some of the remarks directed against me to-day are ungentlemanly, are uncalled for, but I do not intend to refer to them any further at this moment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have verified by documents and by the various Acts my contention in regard to these lists. If the statement the leader of the opposition read in this House is true, and I think it is, as to the dates these enumerators were appointed, then it is time that they were directed to go to the Crown Attorney for instructions. The Crown Attorney is a Conservative. I do not say that he is a bad man at all, but he is a strong Conservative. It appears that that was either deliberately or stupidly done, because the instructions were not given. The fact that these gentlemen were appointed enumerators, and that they were dealing with the rights and liberties of the electors of that district, was concealed from the opposite political party for more than a month. I want to ask hon. members if that was a fair thing. If the documents which have been brought down here have any foundation at all then these lists are the very worst kind of lists that could be prepared. They are partisan lists. In a division where there are only 99 names more than half of them were there wrongfully. In the Rainy River district I am told there was an appeal against one of the two polling divisions in which there were 180 names struck off. These are the only two polls in the whole four ridings of Thunder Bay and Rainy River. in which appeals could be taken. Under these circumstances, if hon. gentlemen can have the face to say that they should force their opponents to an election on lists of that character, then they are not the fair men I have given them the credit of being.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I wish to enter my earnest protest against this piece of legislation. It is most unfair, unreasonable and uncalled for. After listening to the arguments of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and others who have spoken on the government side, I am forced to the conclusion that the Prime Minister must share that view, and feel that these clauses should not be passed and that we should vote for the amendment. The Minister of Customs in the old days went about the country telling what great things the Liberal party would do when in power, on behalf of the provinces; they came into power and have gone back on every promise except this one. To-day the minister attempts to defend the action of the government, saying they are standing by provincial rights, but surely his conscience must tickle a little. This appears to be only opening the door in northern Ontario to such men as the O'Gormans, the Pritchards, the Prestons, the Jacksons, the Conmees, and all the rest to go into that country, to take advantage of the electors, and when I see the Prime Minister attempt——

Mr. CONMEE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member has used my name in connection with corrupting the electorate. I want that statement withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not hear the hon. gentleman suggest corruption.

Mr. CONMEE. He mentioned my name as going into that country and corrupting.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The hon. gentleman is a little sensitive, because there are other people of the same name.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member used my name and I want it withdrawn. I think I am within my rights.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. But if I did not use it in connection with the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee)—there are other Conmees.

Mr. CONMEE. You mentioned it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think a statement of that kind about a member of the House is out of order, a statement charging the member with going into the constituency and there corrupting.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I did not charge him.

Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. member say he did not mean the member for Rainy River ?

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I was going to say——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. To be in order the member should withdraw the expression.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If he wishes me to withdraw a statement I did not make in regard to the hon. member, I am willing to withdraw it.

Mr. TALBOT. Don't be half a man, be a whole man.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That language is altogether unbecoming and must be withdrawn.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sorry to have used that expression if it is out of order, but I cannot help feeling——

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman has not withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understood the hon. member to withdraw.

Mr. CONMEE. He said he would but he has not done it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. member knows the rules.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I withdrew any application to the member for Rainy River some time ago, how many times does he want it? The singling out of Ontario in this legislation is unfair and uncalled for and I cannot help protesting against it. The hon. member for Rainy River talks about the machine being used by the Conservative government in Ontario. Let him go back to the days of the Ross government and remember how elections were carried on under the instructions of that machine working under the men then in office. I appeal again to the Prime Minister to leave Ontario alone, to take the position that was taken many years ago. 'Hands off Manitoba,' was the cry then and on that cry we were able on this side to obtain justice for Manitoba within the last few weeks. The Prime Minister on investigation will be convinced that practically only one man behind him is attempting to defend this measure, and he cannot come to any other conclusion than that this legislation would be an injustice to the province of Ontario and that these clauses should be struck out.

Mr. McCOOL. I am surprised to hear hon. gentlemen opposite speak of a slur being cast upon the government of Ontario by asking the passage of this Act. It cannot be claimed that the reference of the list to a board of judges is casting a slur upon the provincial government. I have been amused to hear speakers opposite repeating that only the member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) was being ill treated in reference to the preparation of the lists. The enumerators appointed for the district of Nipissing did not wear wings any more than those in the Rainy River district. I have hundreds of letters here but shall read only a few, including an affidavit illustrating the evils that have existed there. I shall first call attention to the most northerly district. I have here the oath taken by the enumerator for that district, Mr. Williams Hugh, who swore,

I, Williams Hugh, make oath and say:

1. That I have set down in the voters' list for the townships of Pense, Ingram, Dack, Robillard, Marter, Chamberlain, Truax, and all territory north to proposed junction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific, according to the best of my information and judgment, the name of every person entitled to be entered thereon.

2. That I have not entered upon the said list the name of any person which I have reason to believe ought not to be entered thereon.

3. That I have not intentionally omitted from the said list the name of any person which I had any reason to believe ought to be entered thereon.

4. That I have to the best of my knowledge and belief discharged the duties required of me by the Ontario Voters' List Act.

WILLIAMS HUGH.

Sworn before me at North Bay in the district of Nipissing, this 13th day of April, 1908,

J. A. VALIN,
District judge, district of Nipissing.

The instructions received from the department in Toronto were that he should do what has been incorporated in this affidavit. Here is a copy of the affidavit sent to Judge Valin after the list was made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is there any objection to the oath or to the instructions; what is the point?

Mr. McCOOL. I will leave the hon. gentleman to judge of that when he hears the affidavit.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am speaking of the form of oath and form of instructions.

Mr. McCOOL. The affidavit I have read declared this man carried out his instructions and had proceeded to the junction of the Transcontinental and Northern Ontario Railway with the Grand Trunk Pacific. This affidavit shows whether he did or not:

Original sent to Judge Valin, North Bay.

In the matter of the Ontario Voters' List Act.

I, George Shortt, of the township of Marter, in the district of Nipissing, make oath and say:

1. That I am entitled to be a voter.

2. That Williams Hugh, an enumerator for preparing voters' lists for the unorganized portion of the district of Nipissing, north of Englehart, has as I am informed and verily believe, included in his list a number of voters residing in the organized town of Englehart and the organized township of Evanturel. In the voters' lists of said organized municipalities the names of said persons should be included.

3. That as I am informed and verily believe the said Williams Hugh has never posted up a list made by him for said unorganized territory but has kept same locked up in his safe and it has been impossible to inspect the said list.

4. That as I am informed and verily believe that the most northerly point which the said Williams Hugh visited was Driftwood City on the construction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway.

This is 30 or 40 miles from the point he states in his affidavit he visited. All the people in that section were disfranchised.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCool) asking us to take the oath of a man who speaks from information and belief as against the oath of a man who positively swears he did something ?

Mr. McCOOL. Evidence can be brought that this man never visited that section.

Mr. LANCASTER. Well bring it and do not ask us to believe such an affidavit as that against positive evidence.

Mr. McCOOL. But he does not say in his affidavit positively that he did visit this place.

Mr. BOYCE. Is not that the statutory form of affidavit ?

Mr. McCOOL. I have no time to be bothered answering your questions.

Mr. BOYCE. Because you do not want to know the truth.

Mr. McCOOL (reading) :

5. That the said Williams Hugh never visited any point on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway where there are a large number of voters and the said persons were never aware of the said list being prepared, and unless the said Williams Hugh goes further north, at least to the junction of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway with the proposed line of the Transcontinental Railway a large number of persons will be disfranchised.

6. That mining operations are being carried on on Lake Abitibi, and a large number of persons are employed in the vicinity thereof transporting freight.

7. That the said Williams Hugh never visited the vicinity of Lake Abitibi, and unless he does so and prepares lists, there are a large number of persons will be disfranchised.

(Sgd.) GEORGE SHORTT.

The line of the Transcontinental passes north of Lake Abitibi and this affidavit states positively that the man never went to that section of the country at all.

Mr. LANCASTER. How does he know what the other man did.

Mr. McCOOL. What does the hon. gentleman know about it anyway ? This affidavit says positively he never visited that section.

Mr. LANCASTER. And the man who went there swears he did.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCool) give us the date of that affidavit ?

Mr. McCOOL. The original of this affidavit was filed with Judge Valin at North Bay and the date is omitted from this copy. I think we could get the original if necessary.

Mr. BOYCE. The original of that affidavit has been before Judge Valin, the district judge ?

Mr. McCOOL. Yes.

Mr. BOYCE. Then Judge Valin has seen the original and has passed upon it ?

Mr. McCOOL. I do not know whether he passed on it or not. The enumerator never went up into that district to make lists.

Mr. BOYCE. It is like the affidavit read by the member for Winnipeg.

Mr. McCOOL. When the friends of the Liberal party appealed to Mr. Hugh to have the names of men who were well known to be qualified placed on the list he said he would receive no names in that way, although they were supported by affidavits, and that these men would have to appear before the judge. That would mean a loss of four days and there are not many voters who would lose that time to go before a judge in support of an appeal. That kind of thing was done throughout the whole district. In another case a notice was posted on a school house that the enumerator would be there at a certain hour on a certain date, but it did not say what territory would be embraced, and a number of voters appeared for miles round and they were told by the school teacher that nothing was known about the enumerator except what was posted on the door. After waiting for two or three hours they went home, but the enumerator came later on and made up a numerous list supplied by one or two of his friends who happened to be there.

Mr. BOYCE. What place was that ?

Mr. McCOOL. North of New Liskeard, in Nipissing.

Mr. BOYCE. That does not give us much information.

Mr. McCOOL. Here is a letter I received from a very prominent citizen of Nipissing and this is what he says with regard to the lists :

The lists in this riding are a disgrace. In some cases the lists have been changed after the enumerators court was held. In McPherson and Kirkpatrick the names put on at the enumerator's court were afterwards left off the list, thereby disfranchising a large number of Liberal voters. About forty were left off in McPherson and Kirkpatrick, and thirty in Hugel, and the same thing occurred all through the unorganized townships. I am getting a large number of charges prepared and will be able to prove scores of cases of corrupt practices.

These names were not placed on the list and the enumerators kept them off. The enumerator was E. A. Wright who holds a dozen positions under the present government, and I think he is under suspension at present for some wrong-doing in connection with the license board, he being chairman of the license board of the district of Sturgeon Falls.

Mr. LANCASTER. That shows the Whitney government punishes wrong-doing.

Mr. BOYCE. What is the name of the writer of that letter ?

Mr. McCOOL. The name of the writer of the letter is Mr. H. E. McKee of Sturgeon Falls, barrister.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. McCOOL. Yes, and he is as reputable a man as there is in this House or out of it, that is who he is.

Mr. BOYCE. We saw him down here the other day.

Mr. McCOOL. I can give you another and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Boyce) will probably find some fault with this man because nothing is right in the eyes of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) unless it emenates from one of his own peculiar friends. This letter says :

In New Ontario the Liberal candidates can attribute their defeat to two things, viz.:

1. Voters' lists prepared by enumerators who did not display even the slightest degree of fairness. Liberal voters in large numbers were left off lists, while many Conservatives were placed on lists although there was not any qualification possessed to entitle their names being added to lists. Foreigners in large numbers were placed on lists and they voted for Shillington, the Conservative candidate. Here in the town of New Liskeard, Wing Deer (a Chinaman) who is not a naturalized subject voted for the Conservative candidate. Let me say just how these names were collected. The police magistrate, the road inspector, the homestead inspector, the Crown lands agents, division court clerk, division court bailiff, license inspector and in fact every government official collected the names of Conservative voters for enumerators.

Lists were carelessly made up. In one poll here there was a case of one elector voting twice. The Christian names of two electors were E. and E. R. and the same individual voted at two different times in the same poll. Instead of posting lists as required by Act, some enumerators kept them locked up in safe so our men could not have access to them.

To accept such lists for Dominion election purposes would be utter nonsense. Why it would mean defeat before the campaign started.

Hon. gentlemen opposite boast of the majority of the Whitney government. I can tell them that if it were not for stuffed lists in Temiscamingue, Nipissing, Sturgeon Falls and Sudbury, Mr. Whitney would have four supporters less than he has today.

Mr. LANCASTER. Is that an affidavit which the hon. gentleman has just read?

Mr. McCOOL. No, it is not necessarily an affidavit. Hon. gentlemen opposite are as hard to please as the enumerators in that district. They want an affidavit to place any Liberal voter on the list, but any old name handed in by a Tory heeler goes on the list at once. That accounts for the fact that the lists in the district of Nipissing to-day are stuffed to the number of over 1,000. Here is another piece of rascality :

I wish to call your attention to the state in which our voters' lists are in this district. As it is likely that there will be a Dominion election in the near future it is important that new lists be made. In this small town of ours where the lists were to be made up independent of politics, we find about 25 Liberal voters' names left off, out of a total of about 125 voters. Here is the list of names omitted:

Robert Jamieson, livery owner; Henry Yarkie, livery owner; Thos. Inglis, livery owner; Thos. Barret, butcher; W. Whelan, teamster; P. Savard, boarding house; Geo. Vaillancourt, boarding house; Joe Milway, restaurant; J. Milkie, pool room; W. Searson, baggage man; Fred. Deacon, clerk ; S. Fielding, carpenter ; Joe Beaudry, labourer ; D. Roulleau, restaurant; R. Robertson, labourer; W. Kintrea, clerk; W. Lett, clerk; Thos. Code, clerk; Arthur Deschaut, labourer; R. Bruyere, labourer.

I can't just remember all of the names, but there are several more, and that is only in the little town here. All through the country it is the same way.

H. O'GRADY.

Here is something from another portion of the district :

Warren, Ontario, June 15, 1908.

Mr. C. A. McCool, M.P.

Seeing the approach of the federal election, I will take the liberty to notify you about the voters' lists which has been used for the provincial election in this district of Sturgeon Falls. It has been so tampered with that quite a few names have been taken out of it. People who have been voting for some forty years (Liberals) are missing. I consider it to be my duty to post you and the other members on these facts. Hoping to be of service,

I remain truly yours,

MEDERIC TREMBLAY.

Here is another case from the Temagami district :

In Temagami and vicinity about 100 Indians voted. They were all sworn, but took the oaths in Harley township. The poll was not opened until a quarter to ten o'clock, and some of our good friends left and came to town thinking it was not going to be opened. We have cases in which men had their fare paid and in which men voted under other men's names. When you consider that the government officials in this district, including the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway employees, amount to about 600, and the way the province went in general, what can you expect?

With regard to the Indian vote, I may say that these Indians are wards of the government who receive their annual treaty money. At the last election I venture to say that the same trick was played at Temagami that was played at Haileybury in 1896. The Indians were on the list by virtue of the revising barrister, and three men did duty for forty voters in the town of Haileybury. I venture to say that the same thing happened at Temagami, because you could not otherwise get the Indian vote at that time of the year. I venture to say that not more than half a dozen were present. A particular friend of the party opposite has since boasted to me how he did the trick; he took the Indians each time and redressed them and got them to go and vote. The men who do such things are rewarded by the local government. I have here the 'Haileyburian,' which ought to be sufficiently Conservative to carry weight even with the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, and in it there is a letter from Williams Hugh to his friend Mr. Farr, which reads as follows:

Englehart, Ontario, July 6, 1908.

Dear Mr. Farr,—The Hon. Frank has, through the department, directed me to open a land office at McDougall chute—now Matheson.

This is a news item, you will of course put this in your own peculiar way. I regard Mr. Cochrane's action in transferring me as approving my efforts in the settlement of this district, which you have done so much to bring to the notice of the landless.

Yours truly,
WILLIAMS HUGH.

Mr. Cochrane approved of Mr. Hugh's election work.

Mr. BENNETT. When your reputation is as good as Mr. Cochrane's, it will be a good deal better than it is now.

Mr. McCOOL. I do not have to go to the hon. member for East Simcoe to get a reputation in this House or out of it. While Mr. Cochrane is an old friend of mine, he is no angel with wings any more than is the hon. member for East Simcoe. The hon. member for North Toronto repeated what he said were the words of the premier, that occasional injustice with regard to the lists by zealous friends might be overlooked. I say the same thing. But the matter is different when it affects a whole district from one end to the other. The district of Nipissing is not all unorganized. I think only about one-third, or 7,000 or 8,000 voters are in the unorganized section. There might be an occasional slip on the part of the enumerator, an occasional leaving off of names, but when the thing is done from one end of the district to the other, it is high time the government should step in and do something to protect the lists. I am not surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite wanting to hold on to these lists, for they know just as well as I do what was done in the last election.

Mr. BOYCE. What was done?

Mr. McCOOL. I will tell you what was done in one case to my own knowledge, in the hon. gentleman's district. We have a number of men working up there in our lumber camps at Searchmount. Out of 150 men, only one man was singled out to be put on the list, and that was because the bush rangers informed the enumerator that he could be counted on to vote Tory. Just one man out of 150. It is all very well to say that these lists can be appealed, but unless the voters really entitled to vote are placed on the list in the first place. it is almost impossible to get them on later because, in the majority of cases, they have to go ten, twenty or forty miles to be registered. How many voters can afford to lose two or three days' time in order to go and register? Is it expected that the candidate will bear that expense? Why, it would cost thousands of dollars. All we ask is a fair list, a list prepared, as this Bill calls for, by enumerators appointed by a bench of three judges. We make no complaint whatever about the municipal lists, but on the other lists it is not possible for us to have a fair election. I therefore trust that the amendment will carry.

Mr. BOYCE. If there is any man who has a little to complain of in connection with the lists, it is the hon. member for Nipissing, and right well does he know it. There is not a list made up in that district as he well knows, which was not criticised in the making and which was not the subject of appeal, or in respect of which there was not an opportunity for appeal. The hon. gentleman has placed himself in a very invidious position—in exactly the same position as the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole) did with regard to the Manitoba lists. Did he use that declaration where it would do any good? Yes, he took it to the district judge. He or his minions took some evidence before the district judge on an appeal from the very same list, and having heard that he had some declarations, I made inquiries from reputable counsel, who was present at that court, and that gentleman said that these affidavits were laid before the court and the judge did not believe one word of them.

Mr. McCOOL. Where did the hon. gentleman get that information?

Mr. BOYCE. Yet the hon. gentleman has no hesitation in coming to this parliament and reading copies of declarations which were repudiated by the court of record on which he tried to foist it.

Mr. McCOOL. Will the hon. gentleman

Mr. BOYCE. I will not be interrupted. My hon. friend would not answer me a question with regard to the authorship of his document and I refuse to allow him to interrupt. Forsooth there is the evidence upon which this great high and mighty Minister of Justice based his Bill. Here is the declaration and the evidence, which I presume he could not use because it was labelled with the cloak of privacy. There stands this great Minister of Justice who said that this Bill was rendered necessary by reason of certain information—some of it in letters and some of it on oath—referring to the district of Nipissing. But when asked to produce that evidence, he was ashamed to do so. But he can get it through another avenue and that is the avenue of the hon. member for Nipissing, who has no shame or scruples in endeavouring to lead the House to believe affidavits which the judge repudiated. When the hon. member for Nipissing tried to make the House believe that the enumerator had refused to go to portions of the district where there was a population and where it was his duty to go, he merely repeated what his master, the Minister of Justice, said. The Minister of Justice said that the enumerator in Nipissing did refuse to go to a district where he should have gone and where there was a large number of Liberal voters. Has there been a word to substantiate that? The enumerator is bound by the Act, and the hon. member for Nipissing knew well that neither the enumerators in the district of Nipissing or in any other district declined to go to every place where they were required by law to go. That the enumerator in Nipissing did go to every place and district set down correctly all entitled to be on the list and wilfully omitted none is absolutely proved by the affidavit of the enumerator himself. Surely that should avail against a declaration repudiated and rejected by the district judge. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that there is not one place in that district he was required to visit to which he did not go.

Mr. McCOOL. That is not true.

Mr. BOYCE. Then the converse must be the case, and my hon. friend must assert that, of his own knowledge, there were places where it was the enumerator's duty to go and where he refrained from going. Will he state what places they were?

Mr. McCOOL. Yes, at the junction of the Temiskamingue and Northern Ontario Railway with the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. BOYCE. Will my hon. friend tell me whether that was a polling place? I am asking for information. The hon. gentleman has made some serious charges. He said that, according to his own knowledge, this enumerator had refused to go, or had refrained from going, to a place to make an enumeration where, by law, it was his duty to go. Is that correct?

Mr. McCOOL. I do not know that I catch what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) is saying.

Mr. BOYCE. I am talking at the top of my voice.

Mr. McCOOL. I understood him to ask if there was a polling place at the junction of the Temiscamingue and Northern Ontario Railway and the Transcontinental. How could there be when there was no list?

Mr. BOYCE. Then my hon. friend (Mr. McCool) is lamentably displaying his absolute ignorance of the law when he states that, to his own knowledge, an enumerator refused to go to a place where, by law, he was required to go. The hon. gentleman made that statement, and he displays his ignorance of the Act in making the charges in this wild and reckless manner. Section 60 of the Act says:

> The enumerator shall visit every part of the territory where by the statute or by proclamation of the Lieutenant Governor in Council there is required to be a polling place.

What was that enumerator to do? The Ontario government had not appointed a polling place, and he would have been derelict in his duty had he gone where there was no polling place. Let the hon. gentleman place the responsibility where it should be placed; let him go to the Ontario government and ask why a polling place was not established there, and he will get his answer from the very gentleman whose name he has reviled, Hon. Frank Cochrane, than whom there is no more honest or more capable administrator in the government of the province of Ontario. And I say it ill-becomes my hon. friend from Nipissing to revile the name of the Hon. Mr. Cochrane or to cast a slur upon him in this House. He dare not do it in the presence of or in the hearing of Mr. Cochrane. But I, for one, will take good care that the hon. gentleman's words and mine are conveyed to that hon. gentleman.

Mr. McCOOL. I rise to a question of privilege. The hon. member (Mr. Boyce) is putting words in my mouth that I never uttered. I never said a word against Mr. Cochrane.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McCOOL. I did not say a word about him at all until his name was interjected here by the hon. member for Simcoe, except to read a letter in a newspaper.

Mr. BOYCE. I am putting my construction, for which I am responsible, on what the hon. gentleman said concerning Hon. Frank Cochrane. Was there a protest entered against the election in Nipissing? The time for it has gone by. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCool) going to be like the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Bole)? These

hon. gentlemen make charges of Chinamen voting, aliens voting, and all voting Conservative. How he knows which way their votes are cast I do not know, for there are no numbers on the ballots now, thanks to the Whitney government. The hon. gentleman makes these complaints here, but where these claims would be pertinent and proper, in the courts in Nipissing or Thunder Bay and Rainy River, they are not heard of. My hon. friend from Nipissing cannot point to a protest in a court of law to show that the election was attacked there.

Mr. McCOOL. It is not too late yet.

Mr. BOYCE. Then I put it to the hon. gentleman: If he has the public interest at heart, and if anybody besides himself is enough interested in these grave offences to come forward and present the protest, let him go on and claim justice. But for nearly two hours hon. gentlemen on that side of the House have detained this committee and kept back the progress of this Bill by retailing statements on hearsay about matters concerning which they have little or no personal knowledge. The hon. member for Nipissing did pledge his personal knowledge to one statement, but it now turns out absolutely without a shadow of justification; and the hon. gentleman stands in the invidious position of not only taking up the time of this House, but of stating facts which he knew had been repudiated where they were pertinent, trying to drag them in here after they were repudiated where the facts are best known.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall section 1 be adopted?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is understood that we were to go into Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. The leader of the opposition is right in that respect, but I thought it would be approved by the House if we yielded the committee for the purpose of this Bill. My hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) was accorded the floor for a short time, and I thought that that would be a compensation for the change made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Compensation for the time being, but we might go on with the matter after eight o'clock.

Mr. FIELDING. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) would prefer going on with the Bill, but admits that the arrangement was made, and, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) presses it, we will agree.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not make very much difference when it is done. We can go on either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. We could arrange to call it up to-morrow, the first order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for West Algoma has been disappointed two or three times. Once he was told that there was a cabinet meeting and that the minister concerned could not be here, but it turned out that he was here. Yesterday we understood that the Opium Bill was going on, but another Bill was brought on and——

Mr. LEMIEUX. The Opium Bill was passed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Yes, but another Bill was taken up instead of going into Supply.

Mr. FIELDING. We will be ready to proceed either at eight o'clock or, if the hon. gentleman wishes, the first order to-morrow.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. To-morrow.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—PRIVATE BILLS.

Bill (No. 196) for the relief of Arthur James Townsend—.Mr. Copp.

Bill (No. 198) respecting a certain patent of William B. Smith.—Mr. Galliher.

Bill (No. 207) respecting certain patents of the Metal Shingle and Siding Company, Limited.—Mr. Galliher.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.—Mr. Aylesworth.

On section 1,

Mr. ALCORN. The expression used by the right hon. leader of the government in the earliest stage of this Bill with reference to the character of the lists which are to be produced under this Bill, namely, that they were to be made entirely on judicial authority, is altogether incorrect. One would hardly believe that the government would be disposed to descend to the practice of the deceit involved in that expression. To the extent that appeals are made from the lists as prepared by enumerators under this Bill, the lists will be prepared under judicial authority. The judges will hear and dispose of such appeals as are made, but only in case either party sees fit to appeal. Apart from that, the only connection which any judge will have with any list produced under this Bill, will be that he will appoint the enumerators. Except for that relation with these lists, the judges will never see any of them, and have no connection with them whatever. That expression has been used, apparently and necessarily, with the intent of producing in the minds of those to whom the expression is addressed, the belief that the other lists, that is, the lists produced under the provincial Act, are not the work of the judges, and that the judges have no part, lot or interest in the preparation of those later lists. The right hon. gentleman himself in using that expression, was doubtless well aware of these facts. The Minister of Customs this afternoon, who dwelt at great length on the same subject, and played upon the same string, is perfectly aware, and the press supporting the government throughout the country who have rung the changes upon that expression ever since the Bill was introduced, are perfectly well aware that the self same judges who, if there are appeals, will deal with appeals under this Bill, and with the lists produced under this Bill. These self same judges are the judges who in the past, have produced, and in future will continue to produce the lists under the provincial Act. The self same judges sitting in the same building will perform the same functions with regard to the lists which are made under this Act as they have always performed, and now perform, with regard to the provincial lists produced under Mr. Whitney's legislation, in fact, under the legislation which obtained in that regard before Mr. Whitney's government came into power. It is to be hoped therefore that no one will be deceived by being told that the lists under this Act differ in any respects as regards their judicial origin, or any part the judges may have in their preparation, from the lists which are at present produced by the same process under the provincial Act.

Now, with regard to this section 1, I wish to make a few observations, and I invite the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the points which I propose to raise. In paragraph 9 of section 1 power is taken to judge of the time of the year when this revision shall be made, and new lists made under this Act. The time of the year when these lists are made should be the same in every year, that is, in every year when the power of suspension is not exercised. The provincial Act does not contain such a clause as this, allowing the government to order lists to be made any time and every time they see fit, they are made at a particular time of the year, the enumerators are to begin their work not later than July and thereafter the procedure goes on as provided under the Act. In subclause 1 of 9a the government have taken power to make theses lists at any time, not limiting themselves to the months of July, August or September mentioned in the former part of of the subsection.

With regard to subsection 2, the committee will observe that we are to have for the production of these lists in the unorganized territory a board of registration composed of the various district court judges. It has not been explained why such an innovation is necessary, why there should be a Board of Registration in unorganized Ontario while the County Court judge, each in his own county, in all other parts of that province, performs the entire function of revising the lists in organized Ontario. I submit there is no necessity for forming this Board of Registration, but that each district judge in his own county is quite as competent as the county judge in his county throughout the rest of the province to do the necessary work under this Bill if it becomes law. It has been suggested and probably with a great deal of force. as this Act has been styled an Act for the relief of the hon. member for Thunder Bay, that this innovation is introduced for his benefit; because he is not satisfied to have the district judge in his own district act in reference to the list in that district, but desires that some person else should be called in to assist. Under section 57 of the Ontario Voters' List Act the judge does the work, and I see no necessity for the formation of a board of registration. The more reasonable course and the course consistent with uniformity would have been to have adopted the provisions of the provincial law with regard to the making of these lists and that the work of the enumerators in making their enumeration should have been conformable to the provincial law, not that these enumerators should go on and do their work of enumeration subject to the supervision and according to the directions of the Board of Registration. Surely it is preferable that the work of enumeration should be laid down in the statute and not be left to the dictum of a board of registration or of a judge. The enumeration is much more likely to be made in a uniform and proper manner, the same in each district, if it is done under a statute than if it is done under the direction and supervision, as laid down in subsection 4, of a board of registration or of a judge.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. In what respect does the hon. gentleman refer to this ?

Mr. ALCORN. Subsection 4 says :

4. Such board of registration shall appoint for its electoral district as many enumerators as are necessary, and it shall be the duty of such enumerators, under the supervision and in accordance with the directions of such board of registration, to prepare the voters' lists for those parts of the province without municipal organization in such electoral district.

The Ontario Voters' List Act lays down a procedure for the enumerators to follow. They are, within a certain time, to issue notices that they will be at certain places at certain future times and will there make up the enumeration and place upon the list those entitled to go on. I think it would have been better to have followed that procedure in this statute rather than place the enumerators under the supervision of a Board of Registration. The effect of allowing this to be done, according to subsection 4, will be to produce a result which will not be uniform in the various districts.

With regard to subsection 5, it is provided that the provincial law is to be observed as far as possible.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Will not that govern as to procedure?

Mr. ALCORN. It will probably govern just as far as the judges and enumerators see fit to observe it, but if any difficulty arises the likelihood is that it will not be observed. The statements of the hon. member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) with regard to the lists made up in his electoral district in 1904 show the manner in which the same provision, which was in the law under which that list was made, was laid aside.

Mr. CONMEE. There was no variation from the provincial law in my riding in 1904.

Mr. ALCORN. If the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) is prepared to make that statement after listening to the facts given in minute details by the member for West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) I am satisfied that he should take that position.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member gave details of the preparation of the lists in his own riding, but you referred to my riding and there it was not the case.

Mr. BOYCE. The same order in council regulated the procedure in all unorganized districts.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not care when the order in council was issued, the procedure in the district of Thunder Bay and Rainy River was right, under the provincial Act. That can be verified and there was no fault in the Rainy River district.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to call attention to paragraph 5 of 9a which provides that:

5. In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the law of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in the like cases shall, as far as possible, be observed and followed, but the revision of the said lists shall be had before the board of registration, who shall hear all appeals from the said enumerators, and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.

It appears to me that provision will be in direct conflict with section 13 of this Bill. Section 13 provides for the case of voters' lists in overlapping polling divisions and that any person whose name is on the general list, but by mistake has been dropped from the separate list, may, on taking a certain oath, vote. The provision here is that no person 'whose name is not included on the voters' list so prepared and revised' shall be entitled to vote. Further than that, section 11 of the Dominion Elections Act deals with the several classes of persons who are entitled to vote in Dominion elections although their names are not upon the provincial list. There is nothing to ensure that the persons named in section 11 will be upon the Dominion list to be produced under this Bill. The section of the Provincial Act enumerates the persons who shall not vote, giving a long list, including provincial officials.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Does the hon. gentleman contend that section 11 of the Dominion Elections Act is affected by this legislation?

Mr. ALCORN. It may be.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Do you really think it is?

Mr. ALCORN. Yes.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Where and how?

Mr. ALCORN. I am proceeding to show. Section 12 of the Provincial Elections Act contains a list of persons who shall not vote, for example; Judges, customs officers, clerks of the peace, county crown attorneys, certain postmasters, certain stipendiary magistrates and certain inland revenue officers. It is quite within the range of probability that some if not all of these may be omitted from the lists prepared under this Bill. Although they are not on the provincial lists yet they are good voters by virtue of section 11 of the Dominion Act, and section 150 of the same Act which provides that although they are not on the list yet by taking a certain oath they may be allowed to vote. It may very well happen that some or all of the persons disqualified by the provincial Act will not be on the list prepared under this Bill. The latter part of subclause 5 provides: That no person who is not on the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote. There should be a provision introduced into this clause to the effect that it shall except those provided for under section 13 of this Bill, and also under sections 11 and 150 of the Dominion Elections Act. Otherwise the general effect will be that there will be two entirely inconsistent clauses in the same Act, one making a person a good voter and another declaring he had no vote. It would also have saved a great deal of work and expense if the Minister of Justice had adhered to his original proposal to make the provincial lists the basis of the new lists to be prepared under this Bill. Under the clause he originally proposed the enumerators would have taken the provincial lists in force and have added the necessary names, and the judge would have stricken out such names as should not be on the list.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY. Is not that the practical result anyway when you have these provincial lists before you ?

Mr. ALCORN. The judge does not make the list and it would be quite within the power of the enumerator to discard the provincial lists entirely under this clause as now drafted. Then, under subsection 6 of the Bill it is provided that when the judge has completed the list the enumerator has to transmit a certified copy to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and to him alone, whereas under the provincial Act certified copies of the list are to be deposited in the office of the clerk of the peace, of the stipendiary magistrate, of the sheriff, and of the police magistrate. Under this Bill copies of the lists are deposited only at Ottawa and not in the electoral district affected. I think copies should be deposited in the same offices as are provided for under the provincial Act. Clause 1 provides that the judges have power to divide the whole province of Manitoba and the unorganized districts of New Ontario into new polling divisions ; and that they may also make distinct and new polling divisions every time they make a Dominion list. I believe there is no necessity for the judges either in Manitoba or New Ontario altering the polling divisions in any respect except where overlapping takes place, and I think that was the agreement arrived at.

Mr. BOYCE. It seems to me that the amendment of the Minister of Justice providing a definite period for the preparation of the lists, obviates the necessity for the last words in section 1 which read : Or be had during other months of any year. The Ontario Act provides a definite period in the year during which these lists are to be made, namely, that the enumerator shall start to prepare the lists on or after the first day of June and not later than the first day of July, and the very essence of the Bill is to provide that the time should be made as definite as possible for the making up of these voters' lists. If we have a definite period for the preparation of these lists, as suggested by the Minister of Justice, between the 1st of August and the 15th of October, why enlarge that or run the risk of enlarging it, and make it absolutely indefinite by adding the words, 'or be had during other months of any year.' If the lists could not be made up betweeen those dates, they might be made up in the depth of winter. I therefore move that the section be amended by striking out these words.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Those words were not inserted without purpose. It might be impracticable to conduct the preparation of the lists during the specified months. No one can tell what might happen. There might be an unexpected by-election taking place in the month of June or in any other month of the year in any riding in respect of which it might be important that the lists should be modern, or should not be of an age they would otherwise have if we were compelled always to rely on the last lists prepared. In these circumstances that is a latitude which can do no possible harm. There would be no object, unless there were a necessity, of having a revision of the lists oftener than once in the year, and there is power in the Governor in Council by proclamation to dispense altogether with the preparation of the lists in any year when such a preparation seems to be entirely unnecessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There does not seem to be any provision for the publication of the proclamation. I would move that the words, 'to be published forthwith in the Canada Gazette,' be inserted after the word 'proclamation' in the tenth line.

Amendment agreed to, and subsection 1 as amended agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It has been already suggested by my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) that this work of preparation, revision, and so forth, should be confided to each judge for his own district ; otherwise in so enormous a territory there will be a great deal of confusion. I do not know whether the government have taken that into consideration, but it seems to me that there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has urged.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is a practical difficulty about the working out of any such suggestion as the hon. gentleman has made, and it was only after considering the difficulties that it seemed to me it was much better that there should be a board consisting of more than one judge, as the Bill proposes. There are six constituencies in question. I think there is not one of them in which there is not a greater number of voters voting upon ordinary municipally-prepared or ordinary manhood suffrage lists than will be voting under the provisions of this statute. Perhaps I am wrong in thinking that in every constituency it will be less than one-half of the whole number of voters to whom this statute will be applied. But there is none of the six constituencies with regard to which this Bill will have universal application ; and I think that in the greater number of those six constituencies, there is more than one district judge having jurisdiction. You do not want to single out in an Act of parliament an individual judge by name; you do not want to say either the junior or the senior; you cannot do better than, adopting the language I have selected, make the senior judge, who has jurisdiction in any part of the territory, ex officio chairman, so to speak, or one at all events of the board, and let him select his colleagues from his neighbours. The only possible objection is, that it will be slightly more expensive, but that as an objection is offset by the manifold advantages. I am not sure of the exact number but I think there are, counting the two new district courts in these six constituencies, eleven district judges. Then there are to be six boards of three formed out of those eleven judges. Surely in that way, seeing that some of those judges will be on more than one board, it will be better to have a board of some sort, acting by its full body or its majority, than that each judge should be responsible for the work in his own district. These are very large districts, there would be in many cases a tremendous extent of territory which it would be necessary for a judge to cover, but this would be the best practical way of working it out.

Mr. BOYCE. I do not know whether the minister has considered the position in which these judges will find themselves at this period of the year. Take the electoral district of Thunder Bay and Rainy River, there will be three judges in that district having territorial jurisdiction, none of whom will go outside the district of Thunder Bay and Rainy River.

Mr. CONMEE. There are not three judges at present.

Mr. BOYCE. There will be.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, in all probability.

Mr. BOYCE. The senior judge will be Judge Chappel of Rainy River. Suppose he chose for his board Judge Johnston of the Soo and Judge O'Leary of Port Arthur. It will be seen that, both for the purpose of appointing enumerators and the consideration of appeals, Judge Johnston would be taken away from the Soo and Judge O'Leary or Judge Chappel taken away from either Port Arthur or Kenora for a considerable time. That is not all. During that period another judge will be taken away from Manitoulin for instance. A judge might be taken from Sudbury into the eastern part of the district. Great confusion would result, and just at the time when judges are required for the revision of the organized municipal lists. From the 1st of August to the 15th of October is the period during which the municipal lists in the organized portions of the district are being revised. Why create all this confusion when, at this time and in conjunction with his own duties, the district judge, revising the lists in his territory, could himself revise the lists in the ordinary way without calling in two judges away from the performance of their judicial duties. I really suggest that the assigning to the judge in each district the appointment of an enumerator in the territory within his jurisdiction and giving him, under this Act for the purposes of revision, the same power as under the Ontario Act, would save expense and a great deal of inconvenience and confusion.

Mr. CONMEE. The idea of a board of judges is not mine, but I can see many advantages in it. We are trying to get a fair list. It is generally admitted that a board of three judges is more likely to be fair. Does my hon. friend think that Judge Chappel does not know the whole of the districts of Thunder Bay and Rainy River?

Mr. BOYCE. Each judge would exercise jurisdiction where he does know everybody, and the gentlemen he would call to his assistance would be strangers who in reality could only render him formal assistance.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not understand it that way. This is different from revising the lists. These judges now conduct the preparation of the lists, they allot the polling places, appoint enumerators, issue instructions to the enumerators regarding their conduct and the preparation of the lists by them. That is far different from revising the list after it is prepared. They will do that also.

Mr. BOYCE. Who will be best fitted to judge the enumerators—the judge of the district or two outside judges?

Mr. CONMEE. The Bill gives the judge the selection from the judges nearest to him.

Mr. BOYCE. He must take strange judges.

Mr. CONMEE. He must in the case of my riding. Judge Johnston is far more familiar with Thunder Bay district than Judge Chappel. There are many other reasons why a board of judges would be much preferable. We are very proud of our judiciary and I think we have the best system of any country; but judges are human after all, and the principle acted on by this and previous governments is that it is better, when appointing a judge, to take a lawyer away from the district where he practises. It is better that the judge should be away from those who were his clients when he was practising at the bar, and there are social and family considerations and others which make it more reasonable perhaps to have a board of judges than a single judge.

Mr. LANCASTER. But the cases are not parallel. It has been suggested by my hon. friend from West Algoma that the judge should know personally the enumerators he appoints. That is a very different question from deciding cases. Of course, he is called upon to decide questions between strangers; but, in appointing men to positions of trust, he should appoint those whom he knows.

Mr. CONMEE. It is not merely the appointment of the enumerators, but the general procedure in the preparation of the lists. The provincial law governs that to a great extent. This board of judges must give instructions and these instructions should come from a disinterested body. The complaint against the present provincial lists is that they have been prepared by partisans, that the instructions were given purposely to take advantage of the opposite political party. I did not suggest the idea, but I can see a good deal of fairness in it.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. member's local knowledge is much better than my own. In the district of Thunder Bay and Rainy River where there are three judicial districts, would it not be better to have three judges meet and formulate their scheme for enumerators and have the same system for each judicial district? The only possible argument against it would be, not one of fairness, but of the little initial expense. It seems to me that the scheme formulated would give uniformity in the constituency. First get the judges together, and you will have uniformity of instructions to the enumerators, and, as the result of that, you will have uniformity of decisions afterwards on points raised before the board.

Mr. LANCASTER. What about the selection of enumerators?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. They are suggested by the three judges.

Mr. LANCASTER. Would not one who knows them make a better selection than three, two of whom do not know them?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. But the board as a whole would yield, no doubt, to the suggestions of each member concerning his own district. And, by having the three judges you would have fairness and uniformity of decision.

Mr. BOYCE. There are two reasons against it. The hon. gentleman will see that the time allowed for making up the lists is, comparatively speaking, short. The hon. member for Thunder Bay complained of this. You have now from August 15 to October 15. What are you going to do when you are cornering up all the judges?

Mr. CONMEE. They appoint the enumerators.

Mr. BOYCE. Yes, but instead of having three judges working in one district, he could have the three working in their several districts, and each carrying on this work in connection with his regular district duties. Again, would it be better to allow the judge to attend to his judicial duties and the work assigned him in the place where he exercises jurisdiction, or would it be better to take him away from his district at a time when, it may be, his district court sessions are being held or he is revising municipal lists, and give him work elsewhere, clogging the judicial machinery, not only by taking the judge away from his own work but by making slower the work that is assigned to him? Would it not be better, instead of having three judges, to have each judge work in his own territory where he has knowledge of the conditions and of the people?

Mr. CONMEE. I do not agree with the hon. member (Mr. Boyce). I think this will expedite matters. The three judges meet only for the purpose of selecting the enumerators, formulating the rules and fixing the polling places.

Mr. BOYCE. What about appeals?

Mr. CONMEE. They come before the judges in the ordinary way.

Mr. BOYCE. They come before the board of judges.

Mr. CONMEE. Not necessarily.

Mr. BOYCE. That is what the Act says.

Mr. CONMEE. Yes, the hon. gentleman is right. I had not quite realized that point. But I am glad of it. This is tantamount to an election trial. Formerly the provincial law provided that an election trial might be held before one judge. That seemed unfair and now the law provides for two judges. The board of three judges will deal with these matters better.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the government are disposed to insist upon a board of registration which will probably be unworkable, they will have to take the responsibility of it. Having made our protest and shown that this Bill will be, in our opinion, unworkable, I do not know that we can do any more. That it will be unworkable must be plain to hon. gentlemen who heard the discussion this afternoon. The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. McCool) declared that the process of appeal could not be carried out effectively because, he said the population is too scattered and the judges too far away. If with one judge sitting, it is impossible to give an effective judicial revision you can imagine what the result will be when you require the attendance of three judges to hear every appeal. The case need only be stated to see the consequences. However, we have made our protest. I believe the provision will be unworkable. But the government insist upon it, so let it pass in that form.

Mr. BENNETT. The government should remember that Judge McCurry is an elderly gentleman and it is not reasonable to expect him to go out of his own district. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth) must know that.

On subsection 4,

4. Such board of registration shall appoint for its electoral district as many enumerators as are necessary, and it shall be the duty of such enumerators, under the supervision and in accordance with the directions of such board of registration, to prepare the voters' lists for those parts of the province without municipal organization in such electoral district, and the Governor in Council may confer upon each enumerator so appointed any powers necessary for the discharge of his duties.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This will be subject to the same objection as has been pointed out by other hon. gentlemen with respect to subsection 3. Apparently, it is designed to make this procedure as cumbrous and unworkable as possible. I do not know whether there is any ulterior motive behind it. Some of my hon. friends think it is designed for the purpose of postponing these elections on the ground that the lists cannot be prepared in time.

Mr. BOYCE. That is it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am not suggesting that as my own idea, but I know that some hon. members on this side are impressed with it. There is not the slightest doubt that if the present provincial system is liable to delay, and is found to be practicably unworkable as has been alleged this afternoon, the system now proposed of three judges will be much more unworkable. I do not know that we can say anything about it. if the government insists upon absurdities of this kind, it is only necessary to remind my hon. friends on this side of the House that they could not possibly listen to any greater absurdities than those which were alleged this afternoon as a basis for proceeding with the Bill at all. Therefore, inasmuch as the Bill is founded on the most grotesque absurdity that could be imagined, it seems eminently proper that every provision should be of an equal absurdity.

Mr. ALCORN. Not the least absurdity of the procedure will be the very simple question as to the right of a man to the franchise, a question which will come up over and over again in the courts, will have to be decided upon by three judges, as if it were not possible for any person of ordinary intelligence, having an ordinary acquaintance with the right of franchise, to decide such questions for himself.

Mr. BOYCE. I want to say this to the right hon. gentleman and to the Minister of Justice, that having lived in that country for twenty-four years, and having in view the provisions of subsection 1 of this Bill, and knowing the conditions which exist in that country, I can only say to him that it will be absolutely impossible to get those lists made up within the time the Minister of Justice has fixed therefor, and to have anything like a reasonable time for the preparation or revision of those lists. The thing is physically and absolutely impossible.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not in a position to judge of my hon. friend's statements. He gives me one version, and my hon. friend behind me gives me another version. Which one shall I accept ? The matter has been carefully looked into, and I am advised that the Bill can be worked.

Mr. BENNETT. Take the case of the district of Muskoka. In that large riding there are only three or four townships that are unorganized, and what will be the result if the lists are not completed ? You disfranchise a splendid riding for the sake of two or three townships where there is only a handful of votes. You say under the Act that you may go outside the district for judges. Every person in that country knows that Judge McCarry, of Parry Sound, is a very old gentleman, and I do not believe that he would leave his home in Parry Sound and go down a number of miles to the district of Muskoka to take a hand in these three or four scattered polls. Where are you going to get another judge ? The next nearest judge will be at Kenora, or else Sault Ste. Marie. But the senior judge of Sault Ste. Marie will be at Thunder Bay.

An hon. MEMBER. North Bay will be closer than that.

Mr. BENNETT. The judge at North Bay will be occupied in the Nipissing district. If the lists are not completed in Parry Sound, you are disfranchising a splendid, well settled riding, all because perhaps thirty or forty voters who reside in the organized districts have not been placed in the lists in their polling divisions.

Mr. BOYCE. I suppose there will be not less than thirty polling subdivisions where the lists are prepared in the district of Rainy River. I think there might be as many as that. Then there are thirty polling subdivisions in which the board of judges has to sit for revision.

Mr. CONMEE. They do not have to sit at every polling subdivision.

Mr. BOYCE. They have got to sit somewhere in that riding, they have got to appoint days for hearing appeals in these thirty subdivisions. The probabilities are that there will be appeals in each, we must contemplate appeals in each one of the thirty subdivisions. Then, under this law, the senior judge at Port Arthur chooses the senior judge in my district, Judge Johnston and off he goes to Port Arthur on a revising trip. If he takes two appeal courts a day, it would take him fifteen days to complete the tour ; if he takes one a day, he is away thirty days. Now that is only one instance. But that is done with regard to six ridings, and there is where the confusion is involved, and there is where the Act is unworkable. In the first place, you have not only got to contemplate one set of three judges and the inconvenience that will exist in their territory by their absence, but you have to contemplate more than that. Take this territory between Thunder Bay and Algoma. You have to contemplate that Judge Johnston may be designated by the judge of Port Arthur, and that Judge Johnston later on may be chosen by Judge McCallum, or by Judge Valin in Nipissing. Supposing that Nipissing has thirty to fifty polls, and you only have sixty days for the notice, for the appointment of enumerators, for the enumeration, for the notice of appeal, for the appeal itself, for commencing the lists, sixty days, covering a territory twice as large as the settled portion of the province of Ontario.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I think the hon. gentleman's fears are unfounded. I am acquainted with the district of Nipissing as well as the hon. gentleman. He supposes that there are thirty polling subdivisions, but it is not for a moment to be supposed that the board is going to sit in every polling subdivision. They will divide the territory into districts. In my own riding, a township with twelve subdivisions, the judge only sits at one place in the whole township. Take the whole county of Simcoe. Last year the voters' lists in that whole county were revised by one judge, although the county has a population of 70,000 or 80,000. So I do not think the fears of the hon. gentleman are well founded.

Mr. BOYCE. What are the distances there ?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The distances are not as great as yours, I admit. But the mode of travel is very rapid. The hon. gentleman suggests fifteen or thirty sittings in one district, or one constituency. I do not think that would be necessary at all.

Mr. BOYCE. Does my hon. friend know the country? Take the polls along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific and you get there in a day.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman makes a false assumption that the judges will sit in every polling division. They will form districts and sit at central points. The difficulties are not as formidable as he presumes, but I suppose they will be greater than in the more densely settled portions. It will not take three judges any longer to get to these various places than it will one.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. The Act provides that they shall follow the procedure under the Ontario Act, and that has been that the judge sits for appeal in every place where the enumerator sits.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend is perhaps borrowing a little trouble. He asked if the judges would not have to hold their courts along the line of the National Transcontinental Railway. It does not follow that there are any courts along the National Transcontinental Railway. He is assuming that there will be an appeal in every place where the enumerator sat.

Mr. BOYCE. It is a fair assumption.

Mr. CONMEE. It is not. There will not be appeals in half the places. Court may be held in two or three places in Thunder Bay, three or four places in Rainy River and the same number in Nipissing. Outside of these districts the difficulties will be very small. About two and a half months are allowed for the preparation of the lists.

Mr. BOYCE. I have not heard the hon. member state his objections to having the judges exercise jurisdiction in the territory over which they preside.

Mr. CONMEE. I do not want a judge hearing an election trial.

Mr. BOYCE. Now we are getting at it. The hon. member says that the judge who revises the lists in the cities and towns in his riding well and satisfactorily would not be a satisfactory officer to revise the lists in the unorganized territory.

Mr. CONMEE. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. BOYCE. That is the hon. gentleman's position. The principle is that this should be consonant with the Ontario Voters' Lists Act, and to introduce any other procedure is to render it complicated, unworkable and highly expensive. What are the judges to do with their courts while they are doing this work?

Mr. CONMEE. There are junior judges.

Mr. BOYCE. There are none in your district.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The judges have to make the voters' lists anyway.

On subsection 5,

In the preparation of such lists the provisions of the law of the province regulating the preparation and manner of revising and bringing into force the provincial voters' lists in the like cases shall, as far as possible, be observed and followed, but the revision of the said lists shall be had before the board of registration, who shall hear all appeals from the said enumerators, and no person whose name is not included in the voters' lists so prepared and revised shall be entitled to vote.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to refer to subsection 5 by way of comparison with subsection 3 of the Bill as originally introduced. This subsection is practically the same as subsection 2 of the original Bill. Subsection 2 was followed, and it seems to me this should be followed by a provision of this character—I am quoting now from subsection 3 of the original Bill:

3. In the preparation of such lists the voters' lists which were prepared for the several polling divisions situate wholly or in part within the electoral district or wholly or in part within such unorganized territory as such polling divisions were established at the last preceding provincial election, and which under the laws of the province, are then or were last in force for the purposes of provincial elections, shall be taken . . . and the names of all persons who are not qualified to vote in the said electoral district shall be struck off the said lists, and the names of all persons qualified to vote in the said electoral district and not already on the said lists shall be added to the said lists.

Why is that omitted? It seems to be a proper provision, having regard to the scheme of the Bill in the first instance. Even in the Dominion Franchise Act, as the hon. gentleman will remember, the basis was to be the municipal lists, and the hon. gentleman thought it was strange they were not strictly adhered to. But then, although they were not adhered to, they were taken as a basis; we took such provincial lists as were available and adopted them as a basis.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The clause which we have in the Bill as reprinted is drawn upon a different footing altogether from the clause in the Bill which was originally introduced. As I explained when I moved the second reading of this Bill, to my mind the clause I originally framed was a perfectly fair clause. Taking the Ontario Voters' Lists Act as an example, if the Ontario Voters' Lists Act is a fair measure, providing, as it does, for the preparation of the lists in the unorganized territory by men appointed as enumerators and selected for the work by the Ontario government, I am absolutely unable to understand why that same measure ceases to be a fair measure and becomes an utterly partisan, nefarious, iniquitous, monstrous and wicked scheme, when the very same thing is done by the Ottawa government instead of being done by the Toronto government. Either both of these methods of preparing the lists are entirely partisan or unfair, or each of them is an equally fair way of preparing lists for the purposes of an election. Adopting the principle that whatever the government in power in any province or any parliament did was fair, I prepared the original clause upon the footing that the enumerators should be appointed in accordance with the provisions of whatever the provincial law was, and starting with these provincial lists as a basis, that they should prepare the lists upon which the Dominion elections should be carried out. That was objected to very vehemently, and it was said on the other side of the House and accepted upon this, that to be absolutely fair we should depart altogether from the system of government enumeration or of government appointment of enumerators and have judicially appointed enumerators and so have lists that were perfectly impartial and perfectly pure. Upon that footing I prepared this clause and I ignored altogether the partial—and impure if you like—lists prepared by partisan enumerators and started the judicial enumerators upon their work of preparing their lists from the ground up. I think that is a consistent position, and I have drawn this clause in order that these enumerators acting under judicial direction, upon judicial appointment, with judicial supervision from first to last, and subject to judicial control, shall prepare lists which shall be fair to each party and with regard to which no one will have ground for any complaint.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the Minister of Justice would give us a little less rhetoric and a little more information he would do something to facilitate the progress of the Bill. I pointed out that even in the Dominion Franchise Act which these gentlemen opposite railed against, you always took the provincial municipal lists as a basis and that was the provision in this Bill when first introduced. The Minister of Justice seems to have no idea about this matter except the idea of party or partisanship. I was not discussing it from the standpoint of partisanship; I was discussing it from the standpoint of the rights of the people whose names are on the provincial lists to have their names remain there unless some good reason is shown for taking them off. That seems to be an intelligible principle, but apparently it does not penetrate the mind of the Minister of Justice. There is no possible reason for departing from the original scheme of the Bill in that respect. However, I have placed my views before the House and if the government without any reason whatever see fit to insist that the voters in these northern ridings whose names are on the provincial lists without any question or complaint, shall be put to the inconvenience and trouble of seeing that their names are put on these new lists, the government will have to take the responsibility of imposing that burden upon them.

Mr. ALCORN. If the government do not see fit to adopt the provincial lists as the basis for the first list, surely there can be no objection to taking the first Dominion list as the basis for all subsequent lists.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The Minister of Justice who has given a good deal of attention to this, has come to the conclusion that he wants to have the lists prepared by the judges from the bottom up, and I do not know that there is much objection to that. Of course any man appointed by the judge will want all the information he can possibly have before him in preparing the lists.

Mr. ALCORN. The lists are prepared by the enumerators and not by the judges.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is all the difference in the world between the enumerators being appointed by political machinery or by judicial machinery.

On section 6,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have heard many absurd reasons given on the other side of the House for this legislation, but I have heard no reason whatever given for departing from the provincial polling divisions.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I suppose the judges will accept the local polling divisions which are generally known to the people unless there is good reason to alter them. However, in new districts they may have to be changed from time to time as settlement and population increases, and they certainly should have power to change the polling divisions under such circumstances.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Section 24 of the Dominion Elections Act provides that the polling divisions shall be those provided under the laws of the province for the purpose of a provincial election, the only exception being where the polling divisions are intersected by the boundary between two electoral districts.

Mr. ALCORN. Under this Bill new polling divisions may be constituted for each successive Dominion election. I do not see why judges should be empowered to change them except where there is overlapping.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In the unorganized territory the lists are prepared by a system of registration and the Ontario statute provides that the name of each voter is to be entered in that part of the voters' lists the polling place for which is most convenient for him. Is it to be the enumerator or the judge who shall decide that? I should think that the better authority would be the judge.

Mr. ALCORN. The question is not about the allotment of voters in particular polls, but about the changing of polling divisions by the judges where there is no overlapping. Why should the judges interfere with provincial polling divisions except where there is overlapping?

Mr. CONMEE. That difficulty has been met in the past in the province by the Lieutenant Governor in Council fixing the polling places. There never was an election in which new polling places had not to be provided. Under the Dominion law the Governor in Council would do the same. If we are taking the matter out of politics, would it not be better to take that out of politics also?

Mr. BOYCE. That is not the point. The boundaries of the polling subdivisions are under the Dominion Act to be those provided by the provinces; but under this Act they may, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) says, be sub-divided differently for each election, so that it will be a case of confusion worse confounded at each election, respecting the place where a man will vote. With regard to section 7, why not use the provincial lists if they are more recent?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Section 7 has been considered and passed.

Mr. BOYCE. The hon. gentleman, who is speaking for the Minister of Justice, says section 7 is passed. We are in this position, that we have a deaf Minister of Justice, who listens to his own side of the House, and turns a deaf ear towards this side. When there is any objection raised on this side of the House, the hon. gentleman takes advantage of his infirmity and will not listen. I do not think there is anything worse for any country to suffer from than a deaf Minister of Justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should withdraw the expression 'taking advantage of his infirmity.'

Mr. BOYCE. If that be out of order, I will certainly withdraw it; but I say that this House has suffered from it, especially during this debate, and the country has suffered, and the country will resent it, and will lay it to the charge of the right hon. gentleman who persists in retaining that minister.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think I will accept that responsibility without any hesitation whatever.

Mr. BOYCE. I was proceeding, when I was interrupted by the hon. gentleman who is assuming the functions of Minister of Justice, to ask why this government sees fit, where there is a provincial list prepared regularly and not more than three months old, and where there is a Dominion list eleven months old, to declare that you shall have the Dominion list, and that the people cannot vote upon the provincial list, which is more recent. It seems to be a proposition that would shock the common sense of most people, especially in view of the pronouncement of the right hon. gentleman that these provincial lists must be accepted as the lists upon which the Dominion elections shall take place. One of the excuses of the Minister of Justice for this legislation is that he wants fresh lists ; and in the case I have mentioned you are going to prefer a stale list and are going thereby to disfranchise all the voters who come into a constituency in the meantime. They cannot get on the list and the right hon. gentleman proposes to leave them disfranchised.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Surely the hon. gentleman who has been prattling this whole afternoon has got this into his head at last. Not content with continually prattling——

Mr. BOYCE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The word 'prattling' is not in order.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I withdraw the word 'prattling.' The hon. gentleman who has been continually and volubly speechifying on this Bill all this afternoon, and not content with this continuance of his volubility, which but for your ruling I would continue to call prattling, does not understand the first principle of the Bill ; he now tries to insult the ministers of the Crown. The hon. gentleman has followed the example of the hon. member for North Toronto, who made similar insinuations this afternoon, but no attention was paid to them. Such insinuations are not worthy of this House ; they are certainly beneath the dignity of members of the House of Commons. Surely if a man be ill and while ill is prepared to sit in this House and do his duty to the country, it ill becomes these hon. gentlemen to allude to the fact as they have done to-day. The man who seeks to make such arguments is beneath the dignity of manhood, in my judgment.

Mr. BOYCE. I must again rise to order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the expression 'beneath the dignity of manhood' should be withdrawn.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I will withdraw the expression, and if there were another word that I could substitute for it, within the parliamentary rule, I would adopt it.

Mr. BOYCE. I protest again, and I will continue to protest as often as the hon. gentleman makes these remarks.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I have withdrawn the expression. As to section 7 of this Bill, the hon. gentleman asks again, why not use the provincial lists ? This whole Bill is based on the assumption that we will not accept the provincial lists, for reasons given in this House this afternoon ; and when we have passed the clauses providing for the necessary machinery, why reiterate what has already been said ? That is why I ventured to make the remark that we had passed section 7.

Mr. BOYCE. Now that this wise Solon has spoken, this independent gentleman who came before this country professing to be absolutely independent of either party, this gentleman who entered this House professing no allegiance to the Liberal party, but who has so absolutely surrendered to the exigencies of the party in power, I will proceed. This gentleman, who has taken advantage of his position to cast insults across the floor of this House against me when I am endeavouring to discuss the clauses of this Bill, might well take a lesson himself. There are transactions with which he has been connected and which have been referred to in this House, which might possibly stand a great deal more criticism than any of my actions.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman had better come back to the question.

Mr. BOYCE. I can only say that I very much regret I am prevented from referring to some instances in the political career of my hon. friend. With reference to this particular section I may say that it is the evidence of a desire to discriminate against the province of Ontario as much as possible.

On subsection 8, section 1,

8. It shall be the duty of the board of registration forthwith after the completion of the revision of the said lists to transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, by registered mail, a statement and description showing the limits of the polling divisions so defined and established, together with a copy of the voters' lists so finally revised certified under the hands of the members of the said board, and the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Dominion Elections Act shall apply to such certified copy.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. There ought to be greater publicity. The list, as completed ought to be sent to the candidates or to somebody in their behalf.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The ordinary provision of the Election Act will apply, under which, as soon as the new lists are sent to the King's Printer and are printed, copies are sent by him to the candidates.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. It has not been the custom in the past to have those lists, which are made up in the unorganized districts, sent down here to be printed. It will be impossible to do that under this Bill because there will not be sufficient time.

Mr. BENNETT. I would move that these words be added to the subsection after the words 'Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the sheriff of the district, the member elect and the defeated candidate.'

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not know that there is any objection to what is proposed except the inconvenience and delay. These lists, as they leave the board of registration, will consist in the greater part of printed names, but no one can tell how many names will be added. There may be hundreds. The idea is that as soon as the board completes its revision, it shall transmit a certified copy of the list with the changes and additions to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Then the general Act applies. Section 15 of that Act provides that it shall be the duty of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, immediately on receipt by him of any certified copy of a list of voters, to have it printed by the King's Printer. Then, immediately after it is printed, the King's Printer shall send by registered mail, twenty copies to each candidate. But to have the printed list with all the changes and additions made by the board of registration copied over again before it is sent to the King's Printer, and these copies sent to the candidates, would cause not only considerable expense but consideable delay.

Amendment rejected.

On subsection 9 :

9. In the province of Manitoba the several judges of the county courts shall constitute a board, of which a majority shall be a quorum, which board shall during the month of July in each year meet in the city of Winnipeg on a day to be named by the senior of such judges and appoint for each Dominion electoral district in the said province a committee of one or of three of such judges, and such committee shall thereupon proceed to define and establish the polling divisions into which, for the purposes of the next following Dominion election, the electoral district for which it is appointed shall be divided, and shall distribute among such different polling divisions the names of the voters entitled to vote in such electoral district as such names appear on the last revised lists of electors for the several provincial electoral districts in the said province, so that each voter shall be assigned to his proper poll as established for the purposes of such Dominion election.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved that the subsection be amended by striking out in the twenty-seventh line the words 'on a day to be named by the senior of such judges' and inserting instead the words 'such distribution shall be completed before the first of October each year.'

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I desire to offer the same objection regarding this section as that offered by my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, in connection with a similar section referring to the unorganized districts of Ontario. I do so with all the greater confidence that it will appeal to the reasonableness of the First Minister by reason of his statement that in a newly organized territory, where the conditions are changing, it would be necessary for the judges to depart very largely from the existing conditions and make alterations from time to time which in an old district are not necessary. In Manitoba the provincial subdivisions should be adhered to except where it is necessary for the judges to make a departure in the cases of intersections of polling subdivisions by reason of their overlapping each other. In such cases it would be necessary to have new polling subdivisions and those should be made by the judge. This is a suggestion I made some time ago and which the First Minister said he was willing to accept. But he is now going further. This section allows the judges to disturb the boundaries of the polling subdivisions, as arranged for provincial purposes, throughout Manitoba and in every election. I do not think that that is a wise power to confer on them. My right hon. friend may say that they will not make any departure except where it is necessary. But as the judges differ in their interpretations of any Act, I think the Prime Minister ought to consent to inserting something which would point out definitely and distinctly that the judges are only to prepare new polling subdivisions where there are overlappings and not disturb the existing polling subdivision. He will readily see that if the polling subdivisions for Dominion purposes should be made different from those for provincial purposes, the electors will scarcely know where to poll their votes. I appeal to the Prime Minister if this is not a reasonable suggestion. I would remind him also that the present provincial polling subdivisions have been created by the judges—not by the Lieutenant Governor in Council nor by the returning officers, but by the judges. There can be no party advantage in arranging polling subdivisions ; my objection is based upon the confusion likely to arise in having different polling subdivisions for the Dominion from those established for the province.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Is it the hon. gentleman's contention that in a polling subdivision in which there is overlapping—which means, I suppose, that it must be divided between two constituencies—you would leave only that portion of the polling subdivision in a constituency as a polling subdivision, or attach it to some other ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I would leave it to the judges, where there is overlapping, either to make it into a separate polling subdivision or attach it to an adjoining one.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Would not the judges do what was required in that way ?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman is taking too much for granted. In the enactment of a law you should be specific. As I have said, there can be no advantage in arranging polling subdivisions, though there may be an advantage in fixing the polling places ; but so far as that is concerned, I would not object to giving the judges power to establish the polling places. But I do object to having confusion created in the minds of the electors by having different polling subdivisions for the Dominion and for the province.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. I may state, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) is not aware of it, that at present the judges do not arrange the polling subdivisions, but the government arrange the registration districts and the polling divisions. The reason why we had it subdivided in my district was that they were partisan divisions. Take the township in which I have lived for twenty-five or thirty-five years: We have had two polls in that local division for seventeen years, but as soon as the Roblin government came into power, they removed one and put all the voters in that township in Stonewall poll and made some of the electors go a distance of twelve miles to vote. In the last Dominion election, we put a polling place in the middle of the division as before. We want the judges to lay out these polls for the convenience of and the defence of the people.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). As usual the hon. gentleman (Mr. S. J. Jackson) is speaking without full knowledge when he says that the judges do not fix the polling subdivisions, except in districts where there has been a redistribution and where the returning officer has done it. But the original polling subdivisions through Manitoba have been defined by the judges.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). If I am mistaken, then the prime minister of the province of Manitoba is mistaken——

Mr. CRAWFORD. He often is.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette)—and so are the judges. Are the judges mistaken too? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Crawford) will find that he is wrong in this as he was in a matter previously discussed between us. I stated that the judges fixed the time and place of the courts of revision. The hon. member denied it. But I have in my possession original letters from the judges saying that they named the date and fixed the place for the court of revision. And the Prime Minister, I think, has seen those letters. I handed them to the leader of the opposition to show——

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. That is the courts of revision. But the judges do not lay out the polling divisions.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman is coming around. He has admitted that——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I take exception to the hon. gentleman's statement that the judges fix the courts of revision. They do not; these are fixed by order in council.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Then, I will show the hon. gentleman the judge's letter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is all subject to the approval of the executive council.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). And the executive council have not in any instance departed from the recommendation of the judges. They have embodied those recommendations in orders in council, but the object is to give the information to the electorate. This is necessary——

Mr. CRAWFORD. Why did the attorney general disfranchise electors by tearing off part of the voters' lists which the judges had authorized?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). That is a mere figment of the hon. gentleman's imagination. He is merely reiterating these worn-out statements that have been met and shown to be without foundation. I do not want to enter into an argument upon a question that has already been threshed out. I simply desire to say, and I can show the papers to the Prime Minister to prove, that the judges have established the present polling subdivisions, except where it was necessary to make an alteration and the returning officer was authorized to do that. And, as the polling subdivisions were originally established by the judges, I do not see that it would be right to give them the power to rearrange them for Dominion purposes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to make a correction of the statement of the hon. member (Mr. W. J. Roche). The judges in 1903 made certain registration divisions and afterwards the Manitoba government adopted these and made them into polling subdivisions.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman is getting there. I will soon convince him. I would ask him: Has he any objection to the present polling subdivision in the main? If not, what is the use——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have objections to a number of them.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In my humble judgment, the point is not worth raising The general power is given to the judge to fix the polling divisions. It is necessary that the judge should have that power. The hon. member knows as well as I do that the judges will not interfere with the polling divisions unless there is some good reason for so doing. The reason the general power is given and especially in a province like Manitoba where the population is so rapidly increasing, you may have a polling division which is sufficient to-day but to-morrow it will be found not sufficient. If you give the general power to the judges they will not abuse it, and I think it will work out satisfactorily.

On subsection 10,

10. It shall be the duty of each such committee, forthwith after the completion of such distribution, to transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, by registered mail a statement and description showing the limits of the polling divisions so defined and established, together with a copy of the lists of electors as so distributed among the said polling divisions certified under the hands of the members of the said committee, and the provisions of sections 13 and 14 of the Dominion Elections Act shall apply to such certified copy.

Mr. LANCASTER. I should think the same amendment might be made to this as was proposed by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) in regard to section 8, to provide that the elected member, the defeated candidate and the sheriff should have lists sent to them. We amended section 8 which relates to Ontario on the motion of the hon. member for East Simcoe and this section which relates to Manitoba can be amended in the same way.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. These are the provincial lists which are being dealt with, copies of which will be forwarded by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery under the general law. Each of the candidates in the previous election will have twenty copies. To make the amendment proposed, it seems to me, would be to put work upon the judges without any good reason.

On section 13—person on general list, but omitted from separate list.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. Some amendments were suggested to various sections which I undertook to have prepared when the Bill was resumed. One of them would have a proper place as the next following section of this Bill. A discussion took place at a previous sitting with regard to what is now section 13. That provides for the case of a man whose name had been dropped from the list in transcribing, and it was suggested that there ought to be some provision by which the general list of voters applicable to that poll should be in the hands of the deputy who was conducting the election at that poll. I pointed out at the time that this section 13 of the present Bill was a corollary to section 25 of the statute, and I propose to amend section 25 of the original Act by adding the following words:

And shall deliver to the deputy returning officer for such polling division a true copy, certified by the returning officer, of the lists of voters for the provincial polling subdivision as received by him from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that an answer to the question put the other day by the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) to cover the case where an elector votes in a municipality, half of which is in one county and half in another county?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The amendment, which was moved by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Clarke), is incorporated in this Bill, and seems to have been adopted.

On section 3—nomination paper to state address of candidate for service.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This section was left open to decide what penalty there ought to be on a candidate who does not comply with it, or who may give a fictitious address. A suggestion was made by the leader of the opposition, with which I agreed, that he might be made to forfeit his deposit. I prepared an amendment carrying out that suggestion, but on thinking about it, it seems to me a pretty severe penalty—$200 is a substantial fine. This idea occurred to me as an alternative, that the election petition or other paper, which would be served by leaving it at his address, if it were a real one, might be left for the candidate with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If that suggestion meets with the approval of the committee, I have prepared an amendment on those lines. The idea of publishing it in the 'Canada Gazette' was also suggested, but that perhaps is an unnecessary expenditure. My proposition would be to add this as a subsection:

If the nomination paper of any candidate gives a fictitious address, or does not state any address as required by the preceding subsection, leaving a copy of such process, notice or other document with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for such candidate, shall be deemed equivalent for all purposes to personal service upon him of such process, notice or other document.

The candidate could then go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and get the document.

Mr. LANCASTER. I draw attention to the language of the Act in the section which is being amended:

And leaving a copy of such process, notice or document at such address.

I would suggest that the following words be inserted in the 17th line: 'a grown person.' It would be unfair to leave the copy of such a document at a house where there was no one residing to receive it, or to throw it upon the verandah or into the back yard.

Mr. ALCORN. I would suggest to the minister that after the word 'Chancery,' in his amendment, he should add the words 'at his office in the city of Ottawa.'

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that a candidate in the Yukon, for instance, would be obliged to accept service in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery at Ottawa? Would a bailiff, for instance, have to come all the way down to Ottawa? Why should it not be done by registered letter instead of forcing a man to come down here?

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. It is only in the event of the candidate giving a fictitious name. If he does that he is liable to punishment.

Mr. BERGERON. He would not be the loser, the man who gives the fictitious address is the man elected. Does the man who is contesting an election have to come down to Ottawa? It seems to me that service might be made by registered letter.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. What is implied in the term 'address'? In small villages, for instance, there is no street number. Suppose a farmer is a candidate, and must he give the number of his lot? In villages or towns the address would mean only a post office address.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I expressed the opinion when the Bill was in committee before that if a man lived at a country four-corners where there was only one building and that a post office, if he gave the name of that post office it would be an address and the paper might be left at that post office; but I should think that every candidate would take care in giving an address, to give some specific address, such as his place of business, or, if he preferred, his residence, defining where it was; it would be his interest to do so.

Mr. LANCASTER. What about my amendment requiring it to be left with a grown person?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This was all discussed at the previous sitting of the committee. The whole idea of this clause which was framed on the suggestion of the Elections Committee of two years ago was to make it easier to serve the candidate who was elected, and with that object this provision is inserted. If you are going to whittle it away by throwing conditions in the way of service you may as well not have it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose the committee want somebody served.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The idea was that service might be made by mail and when discussing this two weeks ago that is what hon. gentlemen were contending for.

Mr. LANCASTER. We are not talking of sending by registered mail; the minister is treating this with a flippancy not becoming the Minister of Justice——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. ALCORN.

Mr. LANCASTER——when he says one is trying to whittle away the section, whereas I am trying to do my duty.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman misunderstood if he thought the Minister of Justice was flippant. I would ask the leader of the opposition if he concurs in what the member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is saying, because the Minister of Justice says this section is drawn to meet what the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) thought was a proper provision when sitting on the Elections Committee of two years ago.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The leader of the opposition of course was not a member of the Committee on Elections to which I referred. The view of that committee, as expressed here a few weeks ago, I think by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was that a man should be made to give an address and if when the process server came to serve him the place was locked, that might be a plot by the candidate to defeat service and the proposition was that he should leave it in the letter box or somewhere about the premises. If the committee want to force personal service we can at once strike out the clause.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I do not wish to be understood as assenting to the proposition that any man who has gone through the difficulty and trouble of an election should be liable to having his seat contested or to have a cross petition filed against him by a document being alleged by some process server to have been thrown in his door, of which he never heard. This would not throw out the personal service, it is only a supplementary service and I think this law should provide that where an address is given by a candidate it should be left at that address with some adult person. Any other proposition is unfair.

Mr. BRISTOL. We could easily put the alternative to be left with some grown person or if there is no one in to be nailed up at the address. That is a common way of serving.

Mr. ALCORN. If personal service cannot be effected and we are going to quarrel about the particular method of service, we had better strike the amendment out altogether and let the law stay as it was.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. I move that the clause be amended by providing in terms that service can be effected by leaving the paper at the residence named by the candidate with some adult person, or in the event of no adult person being there posting it to the door.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member (Mr. Alcorn) that the amended section should be withdawn.

Mr. LANCASTER. My objection applies whether the amendment of the Minister of Justice goes in or not, because he is only providing for service on the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I suggest that the amendment be accepted to the main clause, and that the amendment of the Minister of Justice be withdrawn. That will satisfy every one.

Mr. BRISTOL. To close the matter I move that after the words 'at such address,' you insert the following:

With some adult person at such address, or in case there be no adult person there, then by posting same up at such address.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. It seems to me that if you are going to have all this complication you had better leave the law as it is.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that the proposal of the Minister of Justice in the first instance was a good one because the difficulty of effecting service in election petitions has become a scandal throughout the country. We cannot spend too much time over it and unless we can settle on something very soon we had better leave it as it is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Dropped.

On section 8a,

Mr. AYLESWORTH. When the Bill was before the committee previously the leader of the opposition called my attention to section 6 and section 8 asking me to make sure that there was no conflict as to the times for taking these various steps in the Yukon. I have made myself satisfied in that regard and I think there is no room for difficulty. But in the course of that examination I observed that sections 49, 50 and 51 in the original Act as they now stand apply to the Yukon as well as to Saskatchewan and Alberta. They ought to be all three limited to Saskatchewan and Alberta, because we are now making provision in this Bill by sections 6 and 8 for these steps in the Yukon. I have prepared an amendment which strikes out the Yukon from these three sections, because by this Bill we are otherwise providing for the correction of the lists in the Yukon.

On section 17—rejection of ballots.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. When the Bill was in committee before I stated that I would prepare an amendment which would make it an offence on the part of any deputy returning officer to attempt to mark a ballot so as to identify a voter. I propose to accomplish that purpose by inserting a provision in section 20 which amends section 255 of the principal Act, to make the deputy returning officer punishable, without the alternative of a fine, by an imprisonment of not less than one year and not more than five years, who places on any ballot paper except as authorized by this Act any writing, number or mark with the intent that the voter to whom such ballot paper is to be or has been given may be identified thereby. That will cover the case of marking the ballot paper either before it is handed to the voter or after the voter has voted and returned the ballot paper to the deputy for deposit in the box.

Mr. LANCASTER. When this matter was up before the hon. leader of the opposition suggested that the onus should be on the deputy returning officer who had the custody of the paper to show that he was guiltless. That is not usual, but in a case of this kind I think it is right. The deputy returning officer has the custody of these ballot papers and it ought not to be possible, if he has ordinary intelligence and is an honest man, that this thing could happen.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. It is possible unfortunately.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, because he knows that he has no right to put a mark on the ballot paper for the purpose of identifying it. You could not make the penalty too heavy. We say he should be guilty of a serious criminal offence if he puts on a ballot paper any mark by which he can identify any voter. He is the custodian of the ballot papers, and at the end of the poll he it is who decides whether the ballot shall be counted or not. He is the sole judge until you get a recount. When that ballot is laid on the table, that deputy returning officer knows whether he put a mark on it or not. If he did, he will not say so, because he would thereby make himself liable to prosecution for this criminal offence. Suppose there should be a mark on John Smith's ballot and John Smith says he did not put it on, it is not unfair to put on that deputy returning officer the onus of proving that he did not interfere with the ballot.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. There is this difficulty. John Smith might have some vindictive feeling against the returning officer and might put a mark on the ballot himself in order that the deputy might be convicted of a criminal offence. The deputy cannot know that John Smith put a mark on the paper because he cannot unfold it, and it would be very unfair to put the onus of proof on him that he did not put the mark on the ballot, when he is the only one who could have marked it, if John Smith's denial be accepted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I suggested has not very much to do with what has been just discussed. The discussion has related to the question of determining whether or not the deputy returning officer put the mark on the ballot. But that is entirely a question of evidence, and I do not propose to interfere with that in any way. In the absence of proof to the contrary, it should be presumed that the mark was put on the ballot for the purpose of identification by the deputy returning officer, and the amendment I suggest relates solely to the intent and not to the proof that the deputy actually made the mark. I propose that the amendment of the Minister of Justice should be altered so that if the deputy returning officer should place on the ballot paper, except as authorized by this Act, any writing, number or mark, the intent that the voter may be identified thereby, shall be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary. This leaves it open to the deputy returning officer to prove that he had no such intent, but such intent would be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary. The deputy returning officer should have sufficient intelligence to know that if he puts any mark on the ballot, the ballot may be identified thereby, but he would be given the opportunity to prove that he had no such intent in doing what he did.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My hon. friend from Lincoln said a moment ago that any honest man with common intelligence could not make such a mistake as to put a mark on the ballot unless with the intention of finding out for whom the voter cast it. Our experience is to the contrary. Take the cases of St. Hyacinthe and Wentworth. In the latter the returning officer was a political friend of the Liberal candidate. At his particular poll he put his initials on every ballot, and at that poll there was a majority in favour of his political friend. He was an honest man, as far as I know, and an intelligent man also, but evidently had not given the close attention he should to his duties, and he has been lamenting ever since what he did.

Mr. LANCASTER. What he claimed was that he thought it was the right thing to do because it had been done under the provincial Act.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. He had probably been accustomed to act as deputy returning officer in the local elections in which the ballots were numbered, and he did the very same thing in the Dominion election. But take the case of St. Hyacinthe. Our Quebec law is the same as the Dominion, yet the returning officer put his initials and numbers on all the ballots in his particular poll. He is an honest and an intelligent man, yet he made that mistake.

Mr. LANCASTER. What reason did he give ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know that he gave any but he did it without malice. The only objection I have is that to make a man liable to prosecution for having committed such an error, is a very serious punishment. Not only that but you put on him also the onus of proving his own innocence. I thought at one time that we might impose a slight penalty on the deputy returning officer in the case of every ballot he thus marked so as to punish him for his negligence, if not for his malice, but on the whole I do not think we can do much better than accept the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BERGERON. The great difficulty is the little care taken in the appointment of deputy returning officers. They are generally strong party men and very much occupied with the election. The night before polling, they are generally up late, and, instead of studying the law and preparing to do their duty, they are canvassing all day for the candidates of their choice. They go into the poll without knowing the law. And, in the St. Hyacinthe case, the man did not know what he was doing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Possibly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If ignorance of the law were proved there could be no fraudulent or criminal intent. Therefore, all those returning officers to whom the hon. gentleman has alluded would be discharged by any judge before whom they were brought. Of course, this does not add anything to the risk of prosecution ; they would be subject to the risk of prosecution in any case under this section. The section merely provides that the man shall be presumed to know the consequences of his own act. We should have returning officers who will be sufficiently diligent to make themselves acquainted with the law. I admit that the penalty is severe, but I think we might try this for a year and see how it works.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Would the hon. gentleman suggest that the man should be held guilty before he is proven guilty ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. No. But if he puts a mark on a ballot by which a voter can be identified, it will be presumed, in the absence of some reasonable excuse——

Mr. MACPHERSON. That he is guilty ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Putting on the mark constitutes the offence.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. He is not held to be guilty, because it remains to be determined whether he can discharge himself of the burden the statute puts upon him. That is not an unreasonable burden. He is acting for the people of the whole polling division or the whole riding. If he violates the law which has been placed in his hand for his information, by putting a mark which would lead to the identification of a voter, the duty is put upon him of giving a reason why he marked that ballot. That is the whole effect of my amendment.

Mr. BRISTOL. Section 17 provides for the amendment of section 173 of the Act, which provides :

In counting the votes, the deputy returning officer shall reject all ballot papers——

(a) which have not been supplied by him; or

(b) by which votes have been given for more candidates than are to be elected; or

(c) upon which there is any writing or mark by which the voter could be identified other than the numbering by the deputy returning officer in the cases hereinbefore provided for.

To this section this amendment is proposed in the Bill :

Provided, however, that no ballot paper shall be rejected on account of any writing, number or mark placed thereon by any deputy returning officer.

I would suggest that there should be added to that—so that the deputy returning officer's notice will be called to it—— —but any deputy returning officer placing any writing, number or mark thereon shall be subject to the provisions of section 255.

This would put the enactment right in the place where the deputy gets information as to how he is to count the ballots. His attention will be called to the provision of this penalty.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. That is a good suggestion.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Show it to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth).

Mr. AYLESWORTH. With regard to the question whether the intent to do wrong ought or ought not to be presumed in the absence of proof to the contrary, it would strike me as a pretty serious proposition. We are dealing with not less than ten thousand deputy returning officers all over the country. They are men presumably wishing to do their duty ; but they are confronted, when they take charge of their work on election day, with a statute containing some hundreds of clauses which they are supposed to familiarize themselves with and by which they are instructed in a very great number of sections as to exactly what they must do under different circumstances. It would be a marvellous thing if they did not occasionally make mistakes. I suppose that we all agree that where it is an innocent and honest mistake of which we have seen repeated instances in recent times, the man ought not to be punished by the infliction of such a serious penalty as this we have provided. But there might be circumstances under which it might be very difficult for him to prove his innocence. I instanced, the other day when this clause was under discussion, the case of a possible discussion at a poll with regard to some particular voter—such things, in practice, frequently occur. A man comes in whose right to vote is questioned, and some wiseacre suggests that the man's ballot ought to be endorsed with a memorandum so that if it turns out that he had no right to vote his ballot can be found and rejected. Now, if, pursuant to that arrangement made by consent of all parties at the poll the deputy returning officer were to write upon the ballot, if you like, 'This is John Smith's ballot,' that would manifestly be a writing upon the ballot for the purpose of identifying John Smith. But I would think that the deputy returning officer ought not to be punished if he did that honestly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Hear, hear.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It may be said that he could readily prove his innocence. I do not know that he could do it so readily. If indicted for this offence, he could go into the witness box and assert his honesty, but whether his assertion will be believed or disbelieved is another story. What you are proposing to do by this amendment is to put the burden of proving himself innocent upon the man who is accused of this particular offence. That is a very serious departure from the ordinary principles of the law. This clause is framed to make it an offence for the deputy returning officer to put upon any ballot paper a mark calculated to identify the voter with intent that the voter shall thereby be identified. The intent is the gist of the whole offence. If the intent is absent the charge falls to the ground. If it is a mark put on inadvertently, of course nobody is to be prosecuted. If it is not done with intent to identify the voter, there ought to be no prosecution. If it is done with intent to identify the voter, that intent may be honest, although in most cases I think it would be dishonest. But to prove dishonest intent, to prove intent to commit the offence struck at by the statute, it seems to me is a thing which ought to be upon the prosecution. Ordinarily it may be the surrounding circumstances will suffice to satisfy the jury of wrongful intent. But if they do not, if the surrounding circumstances as disclosed in the evidence leave the jury in doubt, ought we then to say that a man should be presumed guilty unless he is able to satisfy the jury or the judge that he was acting honestly ? I think not. I think we are going the full length when we penalize the man who does this with wrongful intent, and leave that intent to be established by the prosecution, just as it is established in other criminal cases.

Mr. LANCASTER. Take the case of one man shooting another. If he points a revolver at him and pulls the trigger, he is presumed to have intended to shoot the other man. The deputy returning officer ought to be in the same position. He actually commits an overt act, he puts a mark upon the ballot which he ought not to put there. Is it not fair to assume that he did it with that intent? Why should not the onus of proving that he had not that intent be upon him? When the deputy returning officer places his mark he actually commits an act which he cannot commit legally, and it ought to be assumed that he would know that it would have the result of identifying that ballot.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Whatever the presumption of the law is, it would still be the same under the amendment of the Minister of Justice. The leader of the opposition proposes to make that presumption go one step further than the law does. The man who places a mark on the ballot is presumed to have done it with intent, just as the man who presents a gun. I would suggest that if you prove that the man did mark this ballot you have nearly proven your case, and the intent will be presumed. But the onus of proof will be shifted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I am not mistaken, both the Customs Act and the Inland Revenue Act furnish many cases where the burden is put upon the defendant of proving that he had no intention of defrauding the revenue laws. That is done in the public interest. It is necesary that the public revenue should be protected. The facts are peculiarly within the knowledge of the man who is accused. This is a case in which we have something quite as important as the protection to the revenue, that is, the protection of the secrecy of the ballot. The deputy returning officer has the law placed in his hands weeks before hand, and if he sees fit to put a mark of identification upon the ballot, it is not imposing a serious burden upon him to ask that he shall show some good reason to the court why he contravened the law in that way, and in the absence of some good reason, it should be held that he put it there for the purpose of identification.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. It is a question whether the court would not infer, by reason of the fact that the returning officer had placed a mark upon the ballot paper, that he had done so wrongfully, because he did it in contravention of the statute. I think the amendment of the leader of the opposition is a matter of surplusage. Any judge would think that a man who commits an act in infraction of a statute did it with wrongful intent. It might appear in the course of the prosecution that the intent would be rebutted by the circumstances, that is, any possible inference that might be drawn by reason of the fact that the mark was on the ballot would be rebutted. But I want to point out to the leader of the opposition that an infraction of the revenue laws is not quite similar to an infraction of the election law. This election law deals with an act which can only be committed once in every four years, whereas violations of the revenue laws may take place every day.

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is the difference?

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Ninety-nine out a hundred deputy returning officers are perfectly honest, and if one is guilty by inadvertence he ought not to be put into the position of disproving his guilt.

Mr. LANCASTER. We want to stop these marks from being put on by deputy returning officers.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. With intent.

Mr. LANCASTER. We want to stop them being put on if they have the effect of identifying the voters. If a returning officer does put such a mark on a ballot, we do him the justice of saying that he must do it with wicked intent. But what we are at is not the intent of the man so much as to prevent the voter from being identified, by making it a criminal offence. Of course, it is only fair that it should only be made a criminal offence when the man does it with a wicked intent.

Mr. LENNOX. The amendment proposed by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) simply means that in the absence of a satisfactory explanation by the deputy returning officer he shall be presumed to have intended the consequences of his act. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. E. M. Macdonald) said that it would be unfair that the judge should be allowed to draw an inference of innocence from the circumstances surrounding the act.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Not that, but that he should be prevented from drawing an inference from the facts and circumstances appearing.

Mr. LENNOX. If the facts and circumstances appearing show or tend to show that the man did not do it with wrong intent, he would be free and the judge would be bound to tell the jury that these circumstances appeared; but if it is clear that he did mark the ballot and that thereby he did identify the voter and marked it with that intention, then he must stand the consequences.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. If a deputy is charged with having marked the ballot, then at the preliminary examination the magistrate would have no discretion but would have to send the man for trial, because if the amendment of the leader of the opposition carries, the magistrate would have to assume intent to commit a wrong and not having the right to sift the evidence would be bound to send him up, whereas if it is left open and the magistrate is allowed to judge, the whole thing could be cleared up.

Mr. LENNOX. If the magistrate had power to try the case he would have the same power to deal with any case as an ordinary trial judge. To say that if a deputy returning officer places on any ballot paper, except as authorized by the Act, any writing, number or mark with intent to identify the voter, it shall render him liable to a penalty, is absolutely idle if you do not follow it with the provision that it shall be presumed he did it with that intent until the contrary appears.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I know of no reason why witnesses should not be called in the first instance before the magistrate.

Mr. CARVELL. The hon. gentleman must know that if a question of fact is raised before the magistrate and there is any evidence on which to justify the conclusion of guilt, the magistrate has no jurisdiction only to send the man for trial.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Criminal Code says he must hear witnesses.

Mr. CARVELL. It has been held he must send him up for trial.

Mr. LANCASTER. Held by whom ?

Mr. CARVELL. By Judge Gregory of Nova Scotia.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no reason why witnesses should not be called so far as I am aware. The observations of the hon. member for Carleton, New Brunswick seem to be very much beside the mark. We have many similar provisions in the Customs and Inland Revenue Acts. Take this section of the Customs Act :

Any person, who, without lawful excuse, proof of which shall be on the person accused, sends or brings into Canada or has in his possession, any bill-head or other paper purporting to be a bill-head or blank capable of being used as an invoice——

——shall be subject to a very severe penalty. There you put the burden of proof on a man in respect of a very ordinary transaction. It is not prohibited by law to have a bill-head in your possession but if he has it brought in from abroad the burden of proof is on him to show that it is not in his possession for a fraudulent purpose. Then section 264, a most comprehensive section, imposes the burden of proof under every possible condition and in every possible variety of suit or proceeding upon the man who may be accused of smuggling or of some infraction of the Customs Act. It seems to me we would be going no further here but would be acting along the same line of policy in the public interest. The rights of the person charged in every such case are sufficiently protected by the right given to him to bring forward every circumstance to show there was no criminal intent in his mind when he committed the particular act complained of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not argue that there is not a good deal to be said in favour of the view advocated by the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden). I have given a good deal of thought myself to this subject, and I thought at the time some punishment should be inflicted on the returning officer who puts any mark upon a ballot quite innocently, without malice, simply as a punishment for his negligence. I call my hon. friend's attention to the Bill as drafted. First of all the offence is created which is quite proper. But look at the penalty, it is not a fine but it is penitentiary, one of the highest penalties the law can inflict. When the offence is of such a nature and of such consequence it seems to me that, as he has to stand his trial, if he is innocent he is already punished sufficiently for his negligence, and I do not think under such circumstances you should put upon him the further burden of proving his own innocence.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have listened to many finely drawn arguments as to what the judges and the juries of the country think of any infraction of clause 17, and I have come to the conclusion that there is only one remedy to apply in disposing of this clause. The right hon. gentleman says there were about 10,000 officers in an election carrying out the law, comparatively few of these men are lawyers, and it would not be surprising if here and there mistakes should be made. Some thirty years ago I was acting for the registrar who was returning officer, and I went through the county appointing deputy returning officers and I made it a point to instruct every deputy carefully as to his duty. In the recent provincial election in Halton I advised the returning officer to take that course and I believe that in every instance he spent an hour with each deputy returning officer carefully instructing him in his duties. The work was well performed and nothing occurred that in any way tended to void the election. I think we might include in this law a clause making it incumbent on every returning officer to instruct his deputies carefully, more particularly with regard to the more technical particulars, and if such were done we would not have a repetition of what occurred in the county of Wentworth, or many years ago in the county of Hastings where in one case at least the election had to be set aside.

For many years in Ontario we had been cursed with the marked ballot. Working men were coerced by their employers to vote as the employers wanted. I have myself seen a voters' list that was marked from the ballots that were returned to the city of Toronto. Every man's name was marked exactly as he voted, and in a bye-election during the same year on the same list, that list was used in the village where I lived and the electors were coerced by means of it. We had a marked ballot for thirty years in Ontario, a ballot worse than open voting. We cannot tolerate for a moment any such thing being introduced into the Dominion election law; we protest strongly against anything that will tend to make the vote of any elector known to his fellows. There is no question in my mind but that by means of this clause 17 the vote of the elector can be known. Suppose it is not made known that would not be the worst feature of it. The bad feature of this clause is, that the employer can go to his workmen and say: This is not a secret ballot, and we will know how you vote and every man can be coerced. The only means of giving us a fair and square election law is to expunge that clause from the Bill and without taking up any more time I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Blain: That section 17 be stricken out.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has misconceived the meaning of section 17. It is in no sense intended to create what was called in Ontario the numbered ballot and which did exist previous to the advent of the present administration.

Mr. CROCKET. It validates any ballots that may be numbered by the returning officer.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. In that sense it does not. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) tell me if he is content with the Ontario Election Act as it at present exists?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am only satisfied with the secret ballot.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. Have you not contended that the present election law of Ontario gives an absolutely secret ballot?

Mr. HENDERSON. I say that what I want is a secret ballot. If this clause is in the Ontario election law I want it struck out there too.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. That statement may be useful hereafter, but if the hon. gentleman reflects for a minute I believe he will come to the conclusion that this is a fair law. Does he realize what power the present law places in a deputy returning officer, who wants to do something that is not proper? Does he not know that it absolutely places in those who have control of the machinery unlimited power to void ballots. In the county of Wentworth in the last Dominion election because the deputy returning officer put a number on the ballots the local judge threw out one poll and changed the whole result of the election. I am glad to say the judge in the county of Simcoe did not follow that ruling, but held that if these numbers were put there with fraudulent intent it would come up properly on a protest; that he could not take cognizance of it and would count the ballots. In the Ontario Election Act the verbiage of the clause relating to this matter is practically the same in effect as paragraph 17 of this Bill. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) reflects what teriffic power he would place in the hands of the deputy returning officer who wanted to act improperly, without this saving clause in the Bill, I believe he will come to the conclusion that the provision is a wise one. It is to the advantage of the party in power that that should be so if they want to do anything dishonest; but it is not fair, and the law should make fairness its aim; and if you place such a provision in the Election Act as exists in both the Ontario Act and this Act, you will do what is fair and right and prevent the deputy returning officer defeating the intention of an elector.

Mr. HENDERSON. Ever since confederation we have got along pretty well with the ballot which we have at the present time, and I think we can leave that as it is without opening the door in the way proposed by section 17.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. I do not think the question has been raised more than three times since confederation; but this section is inserted in the Act for the purpose of preventing it being raised.

Amendment of Mr. Henderson negatived: Yeas, 22; nays, 57

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol), who has been obliged to leave the chamber, has asked me to impress upon the House what he suggested in regard to assisting the deputy returning officer not to make the mistake of marking the ballot; and I would urge on the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice what seems to me to be the wisdom of adopting the suggestion, by adding to the section these words: 'but any deputy returning officer placing any mark thereon shall be subject to the provisions of section 255.' The only thing that can be said against that is that it is a repetition; but the virtue of it is that by section 255 we are providing that that shall be a criminal offence, and the result of making this addition, although it is not absolutely necessary to carry out the law, will be to reduce to a minimum the probability of a deputy returning officer doing what we want to prevent him doing. His attention will be drawn to the matter, because he will read it in connection with his duties at the close of the poll.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The hon. member for Centre Toronto saw me with reference to this suggestion, but I pointed out that this section 173, which section 17 is amending, is a directory section, directing what should be done after the closing of the poll in counting the ballot papers, and it does not seem to me that there would be any propriety in tacking on to such a section a statement that a deputy returning officer would be subject to a penalty provided in another section of the Act. We have provided for the penalties in one clause and for the directions in another clause in another part of the Act.

Mr. LANCASTER. He is sure to see section 173 in order to learn what his duties are, while he is unlikely to see section 155 if he is an honest man not expecting to be penalized.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is not at all likely that a deputy returning officer will turn up section 173 the first thing in the morning, as he has no occasion to use it until the polls are closed in the evening, when it is too late to warn him. It would be much more to the purpose to attach this rider to one of the earlier sections. But he will read the whole statute and try to understand it. I do not think this is necessary in any way. We do not spread all over the statute-book finger posts at every section pointing to this, that or the other penalty. The penalties are there, and he must read and inform himself in that regard.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There may be some force in what the minister observes, though I would have preferred to have the whole penalties at the end of section 173. At least my hon. friend should undertake in his instructions, to draw the particular attention of the returning officers to the penalties and that would perhaps answer the purpose.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I will undertake to draw the special attention of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to them, but I do not want to undertake a responsibility I may not be able to discharge.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I move the following amendment:—

Forms O and P in schedule 1 of the said Act are each amended by striking out of form O the sixth paragraph thereof and out of form P the last paragraph thereof and substituting for the said paragraph in each form the following:

If a voter fraudulently takes a ballot paper out of the polling station or fraudulently delivers to the deputy returning officer to be put into the ballot box any other paper than the ballot paper given him by the deputy returning officer, he will be disqualified from voting at any election for eight years thereafter and be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years and not less than one year, with or without hard labour.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There are some errors in the French version which it is necessary to correct. Section 112 of the statute provides for a stamp which is sent to each returning officer, and the provision is that this stamp is to be specially made for each election and sent the returning officer by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery so that it may reach him on or about the day of nomination. In the French version it is translated 'on that day' and I move that it be amended by inserting the words 'le ou vers.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. In the French version section 197 has been rather freely translated. In the English it is continuous and in the French it is separated into two sections. I propose to make it continuous by striking out the figure 2 and substituting therefor the word 'et.'

Then section 254 in the French version is an exceedingly free translation. The English clause and the French clause no doubt mean the same thing but do not follow each other in phraseology. A new translation has been prepared making the French version literally correspond with the English.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I move in amendment:—

That the said Bill be amended by adding thereto the following sections: Sections 75 and 76 of the said Act are repealed and the following sections are substituted therefor.

This amendment will be found on page 1238 of the Votes and Proceedings. It is to provide that in the first place the writ for an election shall be dated and be returnable on such day as the Governor General determines, or the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery may determine in cases where such clerk has authority to so determine, pursuant to the Act respecting the House of Commons. That would be required to be followed by an amendment I have already presented, providing that after certain delay, in case there should be a vacancy in the representation, the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall have authority to issue the writ himself so that no constituency shall remain unrepresented for a longer period than three months. The next section 76 provides that the returning officer shall be one of a certain class. In Ontario the sheriff or registrar of deeds, in the province of Quebec the registrar or sheriff or prothonotary, in the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, the sheriff, in Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Yukon Territory, the sheriff or registrar or deputy registrar or the superintendent of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. There are further supplementary provisions for any case in which a sufficient number of officers cannot be found or in case of their disqualification, or disability or refusal to act. The object of the section is, in fact, that persons of a particular class and qualification shall be selected, and in that way, it is believed, some of the unfortunate occurrences which occasionally have taken place in this country will be prevented in the future, because this will assure the country that men of responsible position are selected for this important post.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. So far as I am able to observe from a brief examination of the amendment, the principal difference between our present law and the amendment seems to be as to the persons to whom the writ of election shall be directed. Our present law provides that the writ shall be directed to the person appointed by the Governor in Council as the returning officer. The proposition in the amendment is that certain named officials shall be appointed returning officers. I am not, at the moment, able to say how long our statute has been in its present condition, but it is certainly many years—I should say at least twenty-five or thirty years—and, during that time, the writs have been addressed at each election to such returning officer as was selected for the purpose by the Governor in Council. In Ontario, with which province I am more familiar than with any other, the opposite rule prevailed, and, for a great many years—probably for quite as long a time—the writs were required to be addressed to officials just as is proposed in this amendment. That system seems not to have been satisfactory; two years ago the legislature of Ontario, under the leadership of the present government, changed it and adopted our system. In these circumstances, the experience of the past and the trend of legislation would seem to be in favour of continuing the system which we have maintained so long in Dominion elections, and I would submit that no good reason for the change appears.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move the following amendment :

Section 77 of the said Act is amended by adding the following paragraph:
(i) persons who are aliens.

Section 77 provides that none of the following persons shall be appointed as returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk :

(a) Members of the King's Privy Council for Canada or of the executive council of any province of Canada ;
(b) Members of the Senate or of the legislative council of any province of Canada ;
(c) Members of the House of Commons, or of the legislative assembly of any province of Canada, or of the Yukon Territorial Council;
(d) Ministers, priests or ecclesiastics of any religious faith or worship ;
(e) Judges of the courts of superior, civil or criminal jurisdiction, judges of any county or district court, or insolvent court, and any local judge of the Exchequer Court on its admiralty side, and in the Yukon territory, police magistrates .
(f) Persons who have served in the parliament of Canada in the session immediately preceding the election or in the session in progress at the time of the election ;
(g) Persons who have been found guilty by the House of Commons, or by any court for the trial of controverted elections, or other competent tribunal, of any offence or dereliction of duty in violation of this Act or any provincial Act relating to elections, or under the Disfranchising Act ;
(h) Persons convicted of any indictable offence.

I desire to add to this list 'persons who are aliens. I think it only reasonable that persons appointed to these offices should be British subjects.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the reason for this amendment ?

Mr. HENDERSON. We consider it a good, loyal thing to do.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think so too. But is there any occasion for moving the amendment ?

Mr. HENDERSON. We are apprehensive that there may be occasion.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CROCKET. I move that the Bill be amended by adding thereto the following section :

Section 77 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:
2. Every person who, at a time when by this or any other Act he is disqualified from acting as returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk, nevertheless so acts, is, disqualified from voting at any Dominion election during the period of seven years from the date of his first official act as such returning officer, deputy returning officer, election clerk or poll clerk, and he is also guilty of an indictable offence, and shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year nor less than six months, with or without hard labour.

By reference to the notice of motion at page 1239 of the Votes and Proceedings, it will be seen that I am changing the motion as there given by striking out the words 'without prosecution for or conviction of any offence.' It seems to me that this is a proposition which ought to commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. ALCORN. I move the folowing amendment :

Section 114 of said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

Section 114 of the Act, I may say, reads as follows :

The returning officer shall, at least two days before the day fixed for polling, furnish to each candidate or his agent a list of all deputy returning officers appointed to act in such election with the name or number of the polling station at which each of them is to act.

This must be done two days before the polling, and all he has to furnish is the names. Unless he gives the residence and occupation, the name is of little use. I propose that the following be substituted :

114. The returning officer shall, at least three clear days, next before the date fixed for polling, deliver to the official agent of each candidate, a list of all the deputy returning officers and poll clerks who will act in such election, stating the post office address and occupation or addition of each such officer, and the name or number of the polling station at which each of them is to act.

Then I propose to repeal section 116 of the said Act and substitute the following therefor :

116. Each deputy returning officer shall furnish to the returning officer, not later than nine o'clock in the morning of the fifth day prior to the day fixed for polling, the name, post office address and occupation, or addition of such poll clerk ; and the returning officer shall, not later than twelve o'clock noon of the day on which he receives such particulars, post up in his office a list of the deputy returning officers and poll clerks, with the post office address and occupation or addition of each, showing the polling station where each is to act, and shall permit free access to and afford full opportunity for inspection of such list by any candidate, agent or elector at all reasonable times, until the polls are closed. No person shall be appointed a deputy returning officer or poll clerk who is not a resident of and a voter in the municipality, parish, or other local territorial division wherein the polling subdivision in which he is to act is situate, or, in the case of unorganized territory, who is not a resident of, and a voter in the electoral district.

This latter provision as to residence is taken from the Ontario statutes and is certainly a very necessary one. Cases have arisen, and the Minister of Justice is well aware of them, where the absence of such a provision has worked great hardship and allowed frauds to be practised.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have not been able to follow fully the alterations that my hon. friend is proposing, but so far as I can understand them, the change is with regard to what the returning officer is to do in the way of delivering to the agents a list of the deputies from two days to three days before the election. Now, is it worth amending a statute for the sake of changing two days to three days, and about a matter of this character? I think any one who has had any experience with elections knows that it is frequently difficult enough for a returning officer to get the whole list of his deputies complete even two days before voting day. I have known many an instance in which the day before voting day it was uncertain who was going to act as deputy at a particular poll. It is not always possible to make your arrangements perfect two days before the election, and where the returning officer has 40 or 50 polls to look after, and some perhaps more than that, many miles away from where he lives, you are putting a needless burden upon him to say that he must do these things three days before election day. Then section 116 of the Act as it stands is the one which provides what the returning officer must do as to the poll clerks. The deputies, under the Act as it now stands, are to furnish to the returning officer not later than 9 o'clock in the morning of the day before voting, the name and occupation of each poll clerk, but that is not applicable to the provinces of Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Yukon. But my hon. friend is proposing to make that applicable to the whole Dominion, to strike out the words 'if practicable' and make it imperative upon these officials to do what, in all human probability, is going to be impossible over half the constituencies in the country.

Mr. BERGERON. Something might be done if my hon. friend does not wish to accept the amendment altogether. I do not think that in the whole Act there is one clause which is so much transgressed as this one. It is difficult to get the names of the deputy returning officers even one day before the election, and in some cases there is deliberate neglect. There might be added a penalty for a returning officer not doing it according to the old law, say three days or two days, but impose a penalty. I can give an example in the election in St. James, Montreal, where, to my knowledge, ten or fifteen deputies were changed during the night preceding the votation. I happened to be a candidate there and I asked the returning officer for the names of the deputies. They were changed three or four times, and the last time about 8 o'clock at night previous to the day of election. When I got the names the last time I said to the returning officer : Now, surely these are the men who are going to act to-morrow ? He promised they would, and still some of them were changed again on the morning of the day of votation. This, as I say, was done for a purpose, because it was shown afterwards that the election was stolen, and it was due in great part to the deputy returning officers. There should be a penalty attached to that clause by which a returning officer, if he does not give the names of his deputies two days or three days before the polling, should be punished. It seems to me that we are all interested in securing that the elections should be carried on as honestly as possible, and the best way to secure that end is to see that at least the officials appointed by the government shall do their duty. Now, evidently parliament is convinced that something of that sort should be done, because we have a law saying so. But if the government does not want to go as far as the amendment of my hon. friend, at least they ought to add a penalty for neglect of duty by the returning officer. I would suggest that the returning officer, within two days preceding polling, should give the names of all his deputies, and if he changes any one of them after having given the names to the candidates, he shall be condemned to pay a penalty.

Mr. CONMEE. I submit that no good purpose can be served by that amendment; in fact, what object is there in having the names of the deputy returning officers? Why should any one want them?

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend is convinced that the law as it exists to-day is useless?

Mr. CONMEE. I would rather see the provision taken away than enlarged. I want to tell my hon. friend that he cannot carry that law out in the riding I represent, nor even in any riding in New Ontario, because of the great distance.

Mr. BOYCE. It is carried out in provincial elections.

Mr. CONMEE. It is not carried out in provincial elections. I have known returning officers to be sent away three or four days before the day of polling and not be able to reach the polling place. The electors gathered there had to elect their own returning officer to conduct the polls. That has occurred frequently, and the law provides for it.

Mr. BERGERON. The returning officer has eight days in which to choose his deputies. Why should he not choose them before? In a county where it is known there is to be an election the returning officer should be prepared the day after nomination to give the names of his deputies to the two candidates.

Mr. CONMEE. In a district like mine there might be great difficulties, a man might agree to act as deputy and then be prevented by absence or illness. Then the object of knowing the deputy might be a bad object.

Mr. BERGERON. The object would be to see that he is an honest man.

Mr. LANCASTER. Many of the worst evils in the Ontario elections were due to the employment of outsiders to do work which no man in the constituency was base enough to do.

Mr. ALCORN. The minister did not refer to the last five lines of this amendment.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the requirement that no one shall be appointed deputy or poll clerk unless he is a resident of and voter in the municipality, in the polling division. That would be very objectionable. Many of our best poll clerks and deputies are young law students, not 21 years of age, who are sent from county towns into the country and conduct their polls perhaps more satisfactorily than any one else.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BOYCE. I beg to move the amendment No. 17 on page 1239 which provides:

Section 36 is amended by striking out all the words down to, and including the word 'and' in the fifth line, and by striking out the words 'its reception in the other electoral districts of Canada' in the seventh and eighth lines, and by inserting in lieu of such last mentioned words, the words 'the reception of the writ.'

(2) Section 89 of the said Act is amended by striking out all the words in subsection 1, from and inclusive of the word 'except' in the fifth line thereof.

(3) Section 90 of the said Act is repealed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What does the Prime Minister say about the necessity of postponing these elections?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am told there are some provinces where it would be absolutely impracticable to hold them all on the same day. The member for Yale-Cariboo said it would be impossible in his own riding.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have information of an absolutely different character with regard to every riding in British Columbia. I made careful inquiries there last autumn and I find that all the provincial elections are held on the same day without difficulty. Mr. Smith-Curtis, a Liberal candidate, is thus reported:

Mr. Smith-Curtis particularly emphasized his desire for a clean campaign and emphatically declared that he did not favour a deferred election in the Kootenay Riding, believing it to be in the true interests of every elector that the voting in Kootenay should take place on the day of the general elections throughout Canada.

That is strong testimony from a Liberal candidate in one of the postponed ridings and I have not heard anything in this House or elsewhere to induce me to believe that the Kootenay is in a different position from the other deferred ridings in British Columbia.

Mr. MACPHERSON. My hon. friend's information was certainly very bad. In my first election in Burrard, the returning officer was not able even in a by-election to get the ballot boxes into the northern part of the riding, which is now Comox-Atlin until four days after the date set for holding the elections. How could the ballot boxes leave say Nanaimo and get into Telegraph Creek and Atlin, which is 14 days in the winter, and at the same time get into the Squamish Valley? It is a physical impossibility to have the Comox-Atlin election at the same time as the others and the same thing applies to Yale-Cariboo.

Mr. FOWLER. The local elections are held on the same day and why could it not be done in federal elections ?

Mr. MACPHERSON. The local constituencies are smaller. If a polling booth is not represented you may upset the election.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not understand when the provincial elections can all be held on the one day why the Dominion can not.

Mr. MACPHERSON. It is impossible to reach the remote parts of that constituency in a week with the ballot boxes. I assure the leader of the opposition, who wants to be fair, that the information is not correct that you could reach any point in Comox-Atlin and get your ballots printed and distributed within the time stated.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no doubt of the sincerity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) but I am a little inclined to discount statements of that kind because I was assured two years ago of the absolute impossibility of bringing about the election in Kootenay on the same day as the others, and now I find the Liberal candidate in Kootenay saying there is no difficulty whatever. In every local constituency in British Columbia the election takes place on the the same day, and it is a perfectly simple thing for the sheriff by employing a sufficient force of men to send the ballot boxes throughout the three or four local constituencies comprised in one Dominion riding.

Mr. MACPHERSON. That is different.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is not the slightest difficulty about doing the same thing in a Dominion election provided you employ enough men to do it. I have a telegram from the premier of British Columbia stating that not the slightest difficulty was experienced in the last provincial election. If the returning officer employs four men to do the work which four returning officers did in the four provincial constituencies, it follows logically that what was done in the provincial elections can be done in the Dominion elections. I would say to the Prime Minister that I have a telegram dated the 4th of this month from the Prime Minister of British Columbia in which after referring to a report in the local press of a statement in this House that the elections in Yale-Cariboo could not be held simultaneously with those in the rest of the province he says :

I desire to give the strongest denial to this. Provincial elections held simultaneously gave every satisfaction and proved there is no difficulty in carrying this out.

He goes on to say that there is no reason whatever why the election in Yale-Cariboo should be held at a later date than the elections in the rest of the province.

Mr. MACPHERSON. You have got to have your ballots printed at a given point and the ballots have to be sent to a different polling subdivision. There are 1,500 miles between the southern and northern districts of Comox-Atlin and if the ballots are printed in Nanaimo how can you get into Surprise lake without a flying machine in the time allowed. The best possible time that can be made to Surprise lake is 11 days, and if there is ice upon the river as there was during my own election when the man who carried the ballot boxes was obliged to break the trail for 80 miles with dogs, how can you overcome a difficulty like that. When the Prime Minister of British Columbia states it is possible to do that, he states what any man who knows the country knows to be incorrect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose he knows it is correct because it has been done and done in the winter during the last provincial elections. Let me point out that the difficulty is not with regard to the ballots but in posting the proclamations announcing the elections. You have seven days additional to distribute the ballots. I repeat that by employing four men to do the work which the four returning officers would do in the provincial elections you can undoubtedly accomplish in a Dominion election what was accomplished in the dead of winter during the last provincial election.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman who represents the district (Mr. Duncan Ross) has stated that he saw no personal advantage in having the election held after the other elections because as he said the organization has all gone to pieces the moment the result of the general election is known. We have the testimony of Mr. McBride on the one side and the testimony of the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) on the other, and I think we might as well let it go as proposed.

Mr. BERGERON. Let me point out that in the county of Gaspé we formerly had the nomination a fortnight before the election.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Once.

Mr. BERGERON. Yet it worked well. The nomination was held a fortnight before the election and the election was held on the same day as the other elections thus carrying out the principle which the Prime Minister has so often advocated, that all elections should be held on the same day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This exception applies to only 5 constituencies out of 221.

Mr. BERGERON. And the less we have of these exceptions the better.

Mr. FOWLER. The argument which my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) has used with regard to Comox-Atlin does not apply to Yale-Cariboo because no such difficulties exist in that constituency.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the Prime Minister press this provision with reference to the election in Kootenay, notwithstanding the declaration of his own candidate that there is no necessity for it ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not know the particulars about it.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LENNOX. I propose to move an amendment which has to some extent the same object as the one that has just been discussed. It is an alternative amendment numbered 17 in the Votes and Proceedings, and is found on pages 1239, 1240 and 1241. The object of this amendment is to secure the holding of all the elections in Canada on the same day except in the Yukon Territory. It will apply to the five or six electoral districts in which the elections are now usually postponed. The object is accomplished by advancing the preliminary stages of the election, the proceedings as to those which require a greater amount of time for preparation being taken at an earlier stage. For instance, writs of election shall be despatched to the returning officers in the case of those electoral districts in time to allow the lapse of twenty-one clear days between the day of their receipt by the returning officer and the day fixed for the nomination of the candidates. The nomination day will be fourteen days instead of seven days before the election. The general provision found on page 1240 as subsection 2 is that in the case or cases of any electoral district or districts in which the Governor in Council may, after due inquiry conclude that the proclamation aforesaid cannot otherwise be posted up so as to allow the required time between such posting up and the nomination day, the Governor in Council shall fix the day of nomination in the way that I have referred to ; so that it is left to the Governor in Council to determine in any special case whether these special provisions shall apply, and in such cases he shall have them to apply in such a way that we shall secure all the elections in Canada on the same day.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely the Prime Minister will accept this amendment. Has he lost confidence in the schemes that have been concocted, that he requires the elections in those districts to be held after the general election ? Is it because he knows that if the elections were held in those districts on the day of the general election, each of them would return an opponent of the government ? I think we are voting some $238,000,000, excluding the lead bounties ; and surely with that amount of money the government party ought to have confidence that they can win the country, particularly in these hard times, when they have lost the old cry of 'Luck and Laurier,' and ought to be willing to have all the elections held on the same day.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am satisfied, I am sure, but there are some doubting Thomases in this House. I heard this afternoon that some hon. gentlemen were only waiting for the elections to put us out. Therefore they will have all the advantages.

Mr. FOWLER. Many other people must share the feelings of these doubting Thomases.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LANCASTER. I propose :

(18) That the said Bill be amended by adding thereto the following section :—

Section 129 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :—

"129. The printer, and in case of an incorporated company, one of the executive officers of the said company, shall, upon delivery of the ballot papers to the returning officer, file in his hands an affidavit of such printer or executive officer, sworn before such returning officer, setting forth the description of the ballot papers so printed, the number of ballot papers supplied to such returning officer, and stating the facts that no other ballot paper or ballot papers was or were printed or have been supplied to any one else or remain in his possession or under his control."

The object of the amendment is manifest with the reading of it, and I will not trouble the House with any enlargement.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I am not able to see what improvement there is in the amendment as compared with the existing law. In the present law the printer is required to make the affidavit. The proposition is that the printer, or, if it is an incorporated company, one of the executive officers of the company, shall make the affidavit. I think it would be much better that the printer should make the affidavit than some officer of a company who probably knows nothing about it, except what the printer tells him. Under the present law the printer who makes the affidavit is certainly some man who might be prosecuted for perjury. If the printing is done in the printing office of an incorporated company, the present law would require somebody who answered the description of the printer of these ballot papers to make the affidavit accounting for them. The other provision of this amendment is to require the affidavit to be made before the returning officer. I do not know why one officer should be preferred to another for swearing the affidavit before. I do not know the purpose of the amendment unless it is simply for the purpose of making amendments.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Justice must know that many of these ballot papers are very badly printed, and in some cases there are not enough ballots. They are printed, I understand, in various offices, the paper is sometimes poor, and sometimes the ballots are spoiled before they are used. Surely we cannot take too many precautions to see that we have proper ballot papers.

Mr. BENNETT. In accordance with the amendment of the hon. member for West Hastings I propose clause No. 19. As the motion of the hon. member was accepted, this follows as a consequence.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I do not suppose any one can have any objection except that it is difficult to understand how this is necessary. Under the present law the deputy returning officer is required, in the presence of the candidates, their agents, and such electors as are present to open the ballot box and ascertain that there are no ballot papers or other papers therein. It is not made any stronger by requiring him to see that the ballot box is absolutely empty. Piling up adjectives and adverbs does not make the thing stronger.

Mr. BENNETT. There may be in the ballot box, as there were in the ballot boxes at Addington, secret compartments or mechanism by which the ballot papers may be secretly stored in the box.

Mr. FOWLER. This will call the attention of the deputy returning officer to the fact that such appliances might be there. He may never have heard of such cases having arisen, and it may be well to call his attention to the fact that appliances of that sort have been devised by scoundrels to defeat the will of the people.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. ALCORN. I beg to move amendment No. 21 which will be found on page 1241 of the Votes and Proceedings. It requires the printer's affidavit to form part of the return made by the deputy returning officer to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. DANIEL. I move the following amendment to be found on page 1241 of the Votes and Poceedings:

(22) That the said Bill be amended by adding thereto the following section :—

Section 226 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :—

"226. No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding questioning the election or return, or before any parliamentary committee or any commission, be required to state for whom he voted, but he may so state, and if he do so, his statement shall be received in evidence."

The present law states that no one who has voted at an election shall be required to say for whom he voted, and I understand that even in cases where the voter was willing to make such a statement, it has been held by the court that counsel had not the right to put the question to him.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This would certainly destroy the secrecy of the ballot because if you have a poll of say 100 votes and there have been 48 ballots cast one way and 52 the other, and you allow each one of the 52 men to state for whom he has voted, that would disclose at once how the other 48 voted; and while the 52 men may be quite willing to make the declaration the other 48 may not, and they may be just those around whom the law throws the protection of secrecy. Would it be advisable to change that? The present law extends to no collateral proceeding. It does not extend to any prosecution for a criminal offence where it may be important to determine how the ballot was marked but only to a proceeding to unseat the successful candidate. In any proceeding questioning the election the voter is protected by its being illegal to ask him in court how he voted. I think it would be a very serious step to change that and make that inroad upon the feature of this Ballot Act, to which every one, apparently, attaches the utmost importance, unless you are prepared to do away with the element of secrecy altogether and say that the voter, if he pleases to do so, may mark his ballot openly on the table before everybody or identify himself by some writing on the paper.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as secrecy is concerned, if it is once conceded that you can obtain the information in some collateral proceeding you leave the door as open as in the case proposed. It makes no difference whether the information is acquired in a proceeding questioning the election and return or in some collateral proceeding, the secrecy of the ballot in the case mentioned by the minister will be departed from to that extent. The question came before the committee that investigated or tried to investigate—or some members of which tried to investigate—the West Huron and Brockville election frauds, and, after a great deal of discussion, it was decided that the witnesses might be asked for whom they voted. The object of this amendment is to make it clear that the witness cannot be compelled to state for whom he voted, but may do so if he is willing. It seems to me that this is better than the law at present.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. ALCORN. I move that the Bill be amended by adding a section immediately after section 258. This section, No. 258, is the section dealing with secrecy of the poll and containing provisions as to cases which are declared to be illegal in that connection. The effect of this amendment is to increase the penalty upon the election officer who is guilty of any infraction of the provisions of this section.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. What is the present penalty?

Mr. ALCORN. A fine not exceeding $200 and imprisonment for not more than six months. This provides for a fine of not less than $100 or more than $200, imprisonment for not less than six months and not more than twelve and disfranchisement.

Mr. LALOR. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the way the secrecy of the ballot poll is sometimes carried out in the county I represent—and I do not think the penalty can be too severe on the election officers in the poll for failure to carry out the secrecy of the polling booth in their charge. In the county of Haldimand—and I do not say that the Liberal party is altogether responsible for this state of things, for I fear the practice might have been tried to some extent before the Liberal party got possession of the polling booths—a system of telegraphing is carried out, and has been for years, by which a sign is thrown from the deputy returning officer to the constable and from him to somebody else, and in that way it is known how the elector votes; and, if there is any money going, he is paid. I hope the government will make the penalty for violating the secrecy of the polls as great as it ought to be, for we want secrecy.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. This practice that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lalor) speaks of is an illegal practice. Have there been any prosecutions for the violation of the Act?

Mr. LALOR. I do not think so. But, notwithstanding, I state the facts on my responsibility.

Mr. BERGERON. Is there any description anywhere in the law of what should be the divisions of the polling booths?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Oh, yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Then it is not carried out. Generally a polling booth is one room. A curtain is hung in one corner. Of course, if anybody wants to go behind the curtain and make his cross his ballot is secret, because those in the booth cannot see through the curtain, nor can they see over it, for it is generally six feet or more high. But if the voter must have his cross made by the deputy returning officer and goes behind the curtain accompanied by the deputy and the two agents, when he states for whom he wishes to vote everybody in the booth can hear him, so that there is clearly no secrecy about such a ballot. I understand the law to mean that there shall be an entirely different room, so that when it is necessary to ask a voter for whom he votes his answer may be heard by the deputy returning officer, but not by others in the polling booth.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The only objection I can suggest to this amendment is that it is making anomalies and discrepancies in the different penalties even greater than they are. It is in the direction of greater severity, and I am content.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire now to move an amendment to which I will ask the particular attention of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I propose to insert the following as section 278a:

278a. Every person who, directly or indirectly, by himself or by any person on his behalf before or during an election, in order to induce, or in such manner as might induce any voter or class of voters in a particular electoral district to vote for or against any candidate, or to refrain from voting by public speaking, by any writing, by any printed publication, or otherwise, offers or promises, or offers or promises to procure or endeavour to procure, or suggests the probability of the expenditure of the public moneys of Canada, within the electoral district or districts, if and in case only such voter or voters procure or assist to procure the return of a particular candidate or of a candidate of a particular political party, or who, with the intent or in manner aforesaid, threatens or promises to impede, delay, hinder, prevent or diminish such expenditure, is guilty of the indictable offence of bribery, and liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year and not less than six months, and shall forfeit the sum of one thousand dollars to any person who sues therefor, with costs.

This is a new provision not found in the present law. I am not wedded to the exact phraseology, and if the government approve the principle and desire to make any modifications I am willing. But the principle is one that no government can afford to ignore.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I must confess that my hon. friend, in advocating this amendment, is rising to a height that I am entirely unable to reach. I cannot look upon what he depicts in this amendment as in the nature of a corrupt practice. To my mind it is not more than any public man with propriety may do in discussing a matter of public interest in the electoral district in which he may happen to be addressing the electors. Every candidate in offering himself for the suffrages of any locality or district, is identifying himself with that locality, is undertaking either tacitly or expressly, that he will exert himself to the utmost in the interest of the electors of the locality which sends him to parliament. If he, as a member of parliament, by advocating the expenditure of public money upon some public work in that locality, is able to benefit his constituency, I am unable to see any impropriety in his doing so, in parliament or anywhere else. He is not doing that for the benefit of one political party more than another, he is advocating the cause of the electors generally of the constituency that sends him to parliament and it seems to me he is doing a legitimate thing. I regard that as a public question upon which any one who offers himself as a candidate for a public position is expected to have views, and ought to express those views with freedom and with candour. I wish to say and I wish to say it without any intention of giving offence, that I can see no difference in principle between advocating a public building, a public wharf, or any other public work in a constituency, and advocating the giving of better terms in any manner you please to any province of the Dominion, either in giving to a province an increased subsidy, or in giving to a province better terms as to control over its public lands or any other public property. If the one is a corrupt practice, it seems to me the other is. But I think that neither of them is corrupt, and that such candidate is simply advocating in a proper manner that which he believes is in the public interest, either of a whole province, or of a smaller section, or community, township, or any other local subdivision.

Mr. ALCORN. The Minister of Justice entirely loses sight of the purview of the amendment. The question is not whether a public man has a right to advocate the erection of a public building, or the expenditure of public money in a particular locality, but the question is whether he has the right to do so with the view of influencing votes in that electoral district. If it is represented that this work will be erected if a certain man is returned, and that it will not be erected if he is not returned, that is what the section is aimed at.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The section is not designed to touch discussion in parliament at all, it is not designed to prevent a candidate from declaring a particular policy in regard to any subject such as the Minister of Justice has suggested, but it is designed to prevent wholesale bribery of a community by saying that if this particular candidate is elected then a certain expenditure will be made and if this particular candidate is not elected that particular expenditure will not be made. It seems to me there is no difference between inducements of that kind held out to a whole class or an entire community, and the individual corruption of bribery of electors one by one.

Mr. FOWLER. I think my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) must be very sanguine if after looking over the list of supplementary estimates and the long list, the treble column list, of subsidies to railways and things of that sort he expects the Prime Minister to accept this amendment. If he remembers some of the promises that were held out by a certain candidate in the election of 1904, he must have a good deal of faith if he thinks the Minister of Justice would be inclined to accept that, or if he remembers the time the citizens of a certain section were to get the present of a magnificent clock if they voted for a certain candidate, and when it was held out to them that if a certain candidate were elected a canal would run in a certain direction, whereas if he were not elected, the canal would not run in that direction. All these promises have been held out by candidates upon the government side, and my hon. friend must have been very hopeful to expect that the Prime Minister and his colleagues would accept the amendment.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. There is something in that. Demands for public works of every description are growing upon the government. I have had so many demands from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House during the present session that it has been a great sorrow to us not to have been able to gratify them all. I think the hon. gentlemen from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) himself was pressing upon us a demand for certain works and it was quite proper.

Mr. FOWLER. More than that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is enough then.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely the Prime Minister must admit that a member of parliament may interest himself in getting certain public works for his constituency. Why, even the Minister of Public Works reproached me on altogether false premises for not having asked for what I had repeatedly asked. The Minister of Public Works was not in the House at the time, he was devoting himself to another sphere of politics where he was very active. However, a member of parliament certainly has a right to ask for these things for his constituency, he has a right to try and influence the government to put public works of a necessary character in his constituency. But surely the Prime Minister sees a difference between that and a candidate going into a constituency and saying, if you elect me the canal shall come out at Port Hope, and if you do not elect me, it is going to come out at Trenton. Would the Prime Minister say that was a proper thing? Is not that holding out a bribe to the constituency to vote in a certain way? And where do you distinguish between that and the offer to a poor voter of a $5 bill? The only difference is that you are doing it by wholesale in the one case, and you are doing it by retail in the other, and that is precisely what the amendment of my hon. friend from Prince Edward desires to prevent.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. BERGERON. I would have been glad to see in the law a provision preventing a candidate from presenting himself in more than one county. But I understand that cannot be done, especially since a man may be put into nomination without his consent. I have an amendment in the Votes and Proceedings to the effect that when a man has been elected in one or more counties he should be compelled to send in his resignation of the county or counties for which he does not elect to sit within thirty days after he has been so elected, that resignation to be sent to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, as there would be no Speaker at the time. In case he does not do this within thirty days, the seat can be declared vacant, but the fact of electing to choose one county will not prevent the member from having that election tested before the courts. If one election is contested no writ will be issued until the petition is disposed of.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I am not aware that there have been very many abuses of this kind. I remember Sir John Macdonald was elected in 1882 for Carleton and another constituency, but I think a couple of years elapsed before he was elected, because one of the elections was controverted.

Mr. FOWLER. The Postmaster General did the same thing.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Suppose his election is controverted, would you force him to elect while the petition was before the courts?

Mr. BERGERON. There are the cases of Sir John Macdonald and Mr. Prefontaine who sat a couple of sessions before electing for which county he would sit. The object of this is to prevent a county from being unrepresented in this House for two sessions.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Suppose a member is disqualified on a petition from one county, what would my hon. friend do ?

Mr. BERGERON. If my hon. friend was elected for Gaspé and Nicolet and according to this amendment would have sent in his letters to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, saying he has made choice of the county of Gaspé, it would not prevent any one protesting his election in Nicolet. If he was disqualified for any act done in Nicolet, he would be deprived of two seats, because no man who is disqualified can sit in parliament.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is arguing against an old maxim in England that a man can stand for one, two, three or four counties.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not prevent that.

Mr. FOWLER. It does not prevent him standing, it only prevents him sitting.

Amendment, Mr. Bergeron, negatived.

Mr. FOWLER. I beg to move amendment No. 26 at page 1243 of the Votes and Proceedings. That amendment reads:

Subsection one of section 269 of the said Act is amended by striking out all the words from and including the word 'shall' in the 15th line, and by adding the following words in lieu thereof : ' is guilty of a corrupt practice, and liable to a penalty of $200 to any person who sues thereof with costs, and shall also upon conviction be imprisoned for one year.

This is an amendment to the intimidation section and it makes intimidation a corrupt practice. The law provides for the forfeiture of $200 and there is added to this that he shall also be imprisoned for one year.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I cannot see the reason for this amendment. It provides that undue influence shall be a corrupt practice, but that is expressly made so now by section 278 and is frequently a corrupt practice which avoids an election. The amendment reduces the present penalty, as it is now an indictable offence which makes the offender liable to five years' imprisonment besides the penalty of $200.

Amendment negatived.

Bill reported.

USE OF TOBACCO BY YOUNG PERSONS.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 173) to restrain the use of tobacco by young persons.—Mr. Aylesworth.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). The most important amendment made by the Senate is the reduction of the age from 18 to 16 years. The Bill as introduced in this House fixed the age at 16 but by amendment in committee it was made 18 years. The Senate has also amended the provision of the Act with regard to the confiscation of tobacco which may be in possession of a young person of 16 years so as to include the chewing as well as the smoking of tobacco and to authorize the constable to confiscate any tobacco which he finds in possession of a young person under 16, either smoking, chewing, or about to smoke or chew. There is an addition of a subsection to the third section which imposes a penalty on juveniles smoking in any street or public place. To that is added :

It shall be the duty of the justice to examine upon oath or affirmation all persons brought before him who are found guilty of a violation of this section, as to where or from whom such persons purchased or obtained the cigarettes or cigarette paper or tobacco found in the possession of any such person, and the refusal to give such information to the satisfaction of the justice shall be deemed a contempt of the court.

I think this latter provision does not add anything to the general law. If any person under oath is asked such a question he would have no privilege to refuse to answer and he would be guilty of contempt of court if he did not answer. I beg to move the adoption of the amendments.

Mr. MILLER. I move:

That the amendments of the Senate be not received and that the Bill be referred back to the committee of the House for further consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. This amendment of the Senate refers to juveniles smoking or chewing or 'about to smoke or chew tobacco.' How is it possible to say whether any one is 'about to smoke or chew tobacco.' I do not think absurdity could possibly go further than our friends of the Senate have gone.

Mr. MILLER. I particularly object to the Senate amendment by which the age limit is changed from 18 years to 16. Hon. Senator Power introduced that amendment and his strongest argument was based on the statement that 16 years was the limit in the provinces. I beg to point out that 18 years is the age limit in Ontario and New Brunswick. The Hon. Senator referred to the use of tobacco as being a minor offence. I do not think it is the desire of this House to punish youths for smoking tobacco because it is a moral wrong, but rather because the use of tobacco by persons of that age produces ill effects physically. Senator David in support of the 16 year age limit stated that boys of 16 years are very often earning their own living——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The position of the matter is that this House has passed a Bill and sent it to the Senate and the Senate has amended it in certain respects. That being so this House must either concur in or reject those amendments. The House cannot go into a discussion of the proposed amendment with a view of referring the Bill back to committee. It is a question of concurrence or non-concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. Then I beg to move that the amendments made by the Senate be not concurred in.

Mr. FOWLER. That kills the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion of the Minister of Justice is that the amendments be concurred in. If that motion is negatived it would have the same result as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Miller) seeks to attain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Motion (Mr. Aylesworth) concurred in; amendments read a second time and agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 204) to amend chapter 38 of the statutes of 1907 in amendment of the Railway Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read a second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. An Act of last session, chapter 38, provided for the deposit with the Secretary of State of mortgages on railway property to secure debentures. The statute provides the effect of such deposit to be in substance the same as the effect of filing a chattel mortgage in the office of some official of the county in which the property is situated. It makes it valid as against the claims of subsequent creditors, mortgages or purchasers. The next clause in like manner provided that a mortgage on rolling stock given by the railway company and filed with the Secretary of State should be a valid security against the claims of subsequent creditors. Then comes the provision which it is desired to repeal. That is a provision that in the case of any company possessing rolling stock and mortgaging it for the purpose of securing such debentures, the like deposit shall have the same effect as in the case of a railway company. That provision seems to me to be of very questionable validity. It is doubtful, at all events, whether this parliament has any jurisdiction under the British North America Act to pass any such provision relating not to the undertaking or property of a railway company, but simply to property within the province. The other clauses of the Act are in connection with legislation upon a subject which is within our jurisdiction, that of railway law generally, and are certainly valid with reference to Dominion railway companies. This clause is, however, of at least questionable character, and as soon as it was observed, attention was called to it by the Deputy Minister of Justice writing a letter within a day or two after prorogation to the legal gentleman at whose instance these clauses were inserted in the Bill. They were inserted in the Senate, and the retention of this particular clause was through some misunderstanding between that legal gentleman and the deputy minister, who was conferred with on the subject before the amendment was introduced. It would possibly be a snare to companies possessed of rolling stock, who might rely on this provision if it remained on the statute-book, and it was thought that it should at the earliest opportunity be repealed. This Bill was prepared to be introduced earlier in the session, but was delayed because it was thought that it might have place in some general Bill to amend the Railway Act, but in the absence of any such general Bill, it was thought advisable to introduce it in this shape.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY TO SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS.

House in committee on Bill (No. 109) to authorize a bounty to volunteers who served the Crown in South Africa.—Mr. Oliver.

On section 2,

Mr. OLIVER. This section stood for revision, with a view to including in the benefits of the section not only the volunteers who had enlisted in the Canadian corps for service in South Africa, but also Canadians or persons resident in Canada who have served in South Africa in any British corps, and also for the purpose of including nurses who were attached to military forces. The amendment as drafted to cover these points reads as follows :

This Act shall apply to all volunteers then domiciled in Canada who served with the British forces in South Africa during the years 1899 to 1902, or who, being so domiciled, enlisted with or were appointed to Canadian corps that arrived in South Africa for the purpose of so serving, but owing to the close of the war were not on active service.

2. Volunteers shall be deemed to include nursing sisters.

Mr. FOWLER. Were there not some teachers who went out there during the war and taught the Boers in concentration camps ?

Mr. OLIVER. There were teachers ; but it is not my intention to include any but those who are mentioned in this section.

Mr. LEFURGEY. As I had the honour of first bringing to the attention of the House the suggestion that all volunteers who went to South Africa, whether coming from the prairie provinces or other parts of Canada, should be entitled to this grant, I am pleased to know that the government has at last decided to give effect to this policy by introducing the present motion.

Mr. BERGERON. I approve of this very much, and I am only sorry that my hon. friend has not found himself in a position, with all the lands we have in the Northwest, to offer something to the men who fought on the frontier in 1866 and 1870. There have been many demands made on parliament since that time, and these men were promised consideration which has never been given them. Canada can afford to reward those who have taken up arms in her defence and certainly ought to do so ; and by so doing we would be furnishing an incentive to the patriotism of our youth by giving them some assurance that their services to their country, in times of stress, would not be overlooked or forgotten.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Would it not be better to add the words 'both inclusive' after 1902. It says during the years 1899 to 1902, and I presume both these words are included.

Mr. HERRON. In the event of a volunteer selling to a substitute will the volunteer have to appear at the land office to locate the land as in the case of the half-breeds?

Mr. OLIVER. No, that is the difference between the two. In the case of the half-breed scrip it was specially provided that the scrip was not assignable, whereas in this case it is expressly provided that it is assignable.

Section agreed to as amended.

Bill reported.

GRAIN INSPECTION AND SALE ACT.

Bill (No. 203) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act with regard to grain—Mr. Oliver—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. STAPLES. I protest against our going on with this Bill at this late hour of the night. It is one that particularly affects the prairie provinces and one of the most important measures that have come before this House. There are very few members here, and to rush through this Bill now is not treating our agriculturists in the manner they are entitled to. I am as anxious to get away as any one, but I purpose staying here to guard the interests of the farmers to the best of my ability.

Mr. BERGERON. There are many members from the west who wish to discuss this Bill and I do not think we ought to proceed with it to-night.

Progress reported.

JUDICIARY OF MANITOBA AND ONTARIO.

Bill (No. 206) to amend the Judges' Act—Mr. Aylesworth— read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This proposes to strike out the words 'sixty-seven' in the Act and substitute 'sixty-nine' in order to provide for the additional district judges.

Mr. BERGERON. The other day I asked the right hon. the First Minister if he intended acting upon the recommendation of the Quebec local legislature, which declared that two more judges were needed in the district of Montreal and one in the district of Quebec. He replied that the government had decided to confer with the different provinces before granting their demands. He thought there were sufficient judges in Quebec and the other provinces if the systems in these provinces were changed. I find it strange now that he should call on us to appoint judges in the other provinces and not in the province of Quebec.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I read in the 'Hansard' the other day the answer made by the leader of the House to the hon. gentleman's question. I have really nothing to add to what the First Minister then said. I am aware that the Quebec legislature has passed the necessary legislation providing for additional judges and that these additonal appointments have been the subject of correspondence between the Department of Justice and the Department of the Attorney General of Quebec. The matter is one of considerable importance and practical difficulty. Under the British North America Act we have no voice in the passing of legislation which calls for additional judges in any province.

On the other hand, responsibility is upon the Dominion for the payment of judges and the providing of pensions. In these circumstances, while it may be that under the letter of the constitution, it was not contemplated that the province should in any way consult the Dominion on the subject before passing its legislation calling for additional judges, it certainly would seem something that would conduce to harmony in the administration of the respective functions of the different governments if there could be an understanding beforehand, and if there could be some general arrangement by which it could be understood in practice that, before legislation of the sort I have described were passed, there would be at least a discussion of the necessity for it with the Dominion authorities. And I may say that steps in that direction have been taken, and an effort will be made to devise some means whereby there will be no danger of either the local legislatures taking action which might not afterwards be carried into effect as promptly as the local legislatures think it should be, or of taking action to provide for the appointment of additional judges where the necessity for them is not very apparent. Now, in the case of the province of Quebec, upon all the information I have been able to obtain, there seems no actual lack, numerically speaking, at any rate, of judicial strength. The number of judges of the superior court already appointed throughout the province is considered to be ample to discharge the judicial work of the courts of the province if these were distributed in some different way. Business, as it stands, is congested in the cities of Quebec and Montreal, while in the rural districts there are, I am given to understand, more than one instance of judges who would be the better perhaps with a little more to do; and, at all events, where there is not such an amount of work that the judges as they are to-day are not able readily to overtake it and still have time on their hands. In these circumstances, if it were possible to work out some scheme by which there could be a somewhat more even distribution of the work by which the judges from the rural districts might be assigned a share in the heavier work of the cities, there would not seem to be the necessity for adding so considerably to the expense of our present judicial system as would be the case if a number of additional judges were appointed. The same condition of things exists in the province of Alberta, where the staff of judges was provided only a year ago; the provincial authorities are asking for additional judicial help in the superior court. This is a continually recurring difficulty, and, in view of the situation I have attempted to outline, it was thought that, for the present year at all events, we could not properly propose to the House to provide for additional judges where there were existing courts and a certain number of judges in those courts to do the work. As a result, this measure is restricted to providing salaries for two judges for the new courts which have recently been established in New, or Northern Ontario, where settlers have gone in a long distance from any other court, and where an absolutely new court has in the case of two districts been estabilshed ready to go to work on sending a judge for that purpose. In the same way, the new court in the northern part of the province of Manitoba, where an increase of settlement has caused an increase of judicial work, is called for by the legislature, and we have proposed, under this Bill, to provide a salary for that county court judge. But where there are existing courts and a certain number of existing judges, we have thought that the province ought to get along for another year at all events by making some change or otherwise, without asking the expense to be put upon the Dominion, which providing for additional judges would involve.

On section 2—Manitoba—judges of county courts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. This section simply increases the county court judges in Manitoba by two, I understand?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. By one. There was an increase of one last year, making the number seven; it is now made eight.

Mr. STAPLES. When will the additional judge be appointed?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I can only say that as soon as the Act is passed providing the salary the matter will be taken into consideration. It has not yet been considered.

Mr. STAPLES. Then the hon. minister cannot tell us who the proposed judge is?

On section 3—pension or chief or assistant chief of Board of Railway Commissioners if previously a judge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand that this amendment is to include the assistant chief commissioner,—though perhaps that has been enacted already—and to reduce the period by which the pension shall be earned from fifteen years to twelve years? What is the reason for that?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. When the office of chief commissioner became vacant by the death of Mr. Killam, and it was a question of finding a successor, the position was offered to the present incumbent, Mr. Mabee. He at once pointed out that he would, by assuming the office, forfeit any right that was accruing to him to the enjoyment of a judicial pension. The Railway Act provides no pension. And that was a consideration which weighed very much in his mind. The statute provides for fifteen years' service as railway commissioner or five years of service as a judge and ten years' service as railway commissioner. This would not cover the case of Mr. Mabee, as he had not been five years upon the bench. But he thought that some provision ought to be made in order that he would not, if he accepted the new work, forfeit the right which was accruing to him. It was thought that that was a reasonable request upon his part, and this change is made entirely in that view. Mr. Mabee had been something over two years upon the bench, and would be covered by this provision if the amendment is made.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not see anything in section 21 about a period of five years.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The change is made substituting 12 for 15, or 2 for 5. The enactment was made in the first place on the occasion of Mr. Justice Killam leaving the Supreme Court and taking this position. In his case it made no difference, as he had seen service on the bench for more than five years. I do not know why a period of 15 years or 5 years service on the bench was fixed.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 210) to amend the Northwest Territories Act—Mr. Aylesworth—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

On section 5,

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the Bill merely extends the jurisdiction of the courts of these three provinces to the territories northward, subject to the provision that leave of the court must be obtained for the purpose of issuing processes.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. That is the effect, that it gives every plaintiff an option as to the province he will select. No matter where in the Territories the cause of action might arise, the plaintiff might apply to the courts in Ontario, subject to the power of the court to refuse to entertain his cause of action, and to send him to some more convenient province.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPPING ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 183) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Brodeur.

Mr. J. D. REID. Could not the minister let this Bill stand over until next session? I do not see any need for it now. The marine interests of the country are not suffering by letting this Bill stand for a few months.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are some very important amendments.

Mr. J. D. REID. There is a law now that will do until parliament meets again. The Bill has been prepared by one of his officers and while in theory it may be all right, in practice I do not think it is, and I think, in the interest of the marine, it would be well to let the Bill stand.

Mr. BRODEUR. There are some amendments which are absolutely necessary to be passed, for example the provisions regarding gasolene launches. It is of the utmost importance that this provision should pass this year or our vessels will be discriminated against as compared with American vessels.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not agree.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. The member for Leeds (Mr Taylor) the other day urged the passage of this Bill and complained of delay. Another important feature is that the imperial government has passed two clauses amending the Merchant Shipping Act which it is necessary for us to get in our legislation in order to have the two conform. For instance we have the deck load and the registration of ships.

Mr. J. D. REID. I protest against going on at this hour of the night with a Bill of this importance.

Mr. LEFURGEY. The introduction of this Bill is ill-timed. Neither the minister nor his department has information sufficient to pass good legislation upon the subject and the marine interests are not fully seized of the provisions of the Bill, so as to be able to assist in securing the proper legislation.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Bill has been before the Senate for four months.

Mr. LEFURGEY. But the people and the shipping interests have not become seized of it. It is an imposition to bring it down at this stage of the session.

Mr. CONMEE. The law as it stands without this Bill is defective. I am not in love with the Bill but it is better than nothing. In my part of the country great hardship will be worked if it is not adopted. The marine board adopted a regulation some years ago limiting the style and size of gasolene, steam or electric launch that may be built. This regulation was not enforced until last year when they tied up a large number of these boats. Under the present amendment that class of vessel would be relieved.

Mr. J. D. REID. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) opposed this Bill the other evening but supports it to-night. What has influenced him ? I move the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. CONMEE. Even if it is a little defective, after two or three months we can amend it.

Mr. J. D. REID. No, I want it made right. The hon. member (Mr. Conmee) is willing to put anything through, right or wrong.

Mr. L. G. McCARTHY. How idle it is to say this Bill should not pass. Two of its proposals have been before the House for five or six years, the section relating to masters and mates and to marine engineers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suggest you should take something easier. What about the Canada Shipping Act ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is impossible to postpone this Bill until next session because there are some of its provisions which are absolutely needed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We only ask postponement until to-morrow.

Progress reported.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 209) to amend the Canada Shipping Act—Mr. Fielding—read the second time and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. FIELDING. The section of the revised statutes which it is proposed to repeal provides that the Governor in Council may deal with the ships of any foreign country which gives us reciprocal coasting trade, but it does not apparently give us any power to discriminate either as to the different waters of Canada or as to the sizes of the vessels. The history of this measure is that some months ago we passed an order in council designed to repeal other orders which granted the privilege of our coasting trade to certain foreign countries. The United States do not give us reciprocal privileges and it does not apply to them. There are a number of foreign countries which grant us the privilege but it is practically of no value to us because we do not use their coasting trade. An order in council was passed declaring that after the 1st of January next these privileges granted by orders in council should be withdrawn. The order applies largely to Norwegian vessels, although its terms are broader than that. It has been represented to us that the Norwegians have adapted themselves particularly to the coal trade of the St. Lawrence, that many of the vessels in that trade are under the Norwegian flag, that some although built in the United Kingdom sail under the Norwegian flag, and of course, are only entitled to such privileges as Norwegian vessels may have. Many of the ships in the coal trade have been built specially for that trade and it has been represented that before the time fixed in the order in council the coal companies would be unable to obtain British ships of a proper class in sufficient numbers to handle the trade, and that if we adhere rigorously to the order in council we will practically prevent the coal companies getting tonnage to carry their coal. Of course nobody wants to do that. We have thought therefore that it is a case in which there should be some elasticity. We do not desire to extend the privileges of the coasting trade to these vessels without any limit, but it has been suggested that it might be expedient that the government should allow them to have the coasting trade for a limited time, and perhaps with regard to a limited class of tonnage, for instance, the smaller class of vessels would come into competition with our Canadian vessels while the larger vessels would not. It has been suggested that we might allow these larger Norwegian vessels to continue in the coasting trade for a limited period, and what that period should be is a fair matter for consideration. What we propose in this amendment is that instead of the existing clause in the revised statutes we should introduce a substitute clause which would give the government the power of discrimination. For example we might give the privilege to a Norwegian vessel in Atlantic waters and refuse her the privilege in the lake trade, or we might give her the privilege in the lake trade and refuse it on the Pacific coast or, we might agree that Norwegian vessels up to say 1,000 or 2,000 tons should be excluded, but that vessels above that tonnage might be permitted temporarily to engage in the coal trade for a sufficient time to permit the coal companies to secure either Canadian or British bottoms. In other words the purpose of this amendment is to allow elasticity in the law, whereby the government might adapt themselves to the special conditions which might be brought before them. But while we desire that, we wish to say it is not the intention of the government to recede from the general principle which has been laid down that these coasting privileges shall only be continued for a special purpose and for a limited time and under such circumstances as I have briefly mentioned to the House.

Mr. LEFURGEY. This is a very important measure which deeply concerns the shipping interests of the maritime provinces. We have continual protests from Canadian shipping interests against the encroachment of foreigners and the minister knows that this has been a great detriment to the shipping interests of the maritime provinces. The action taken by the order in council prohibiting Norwegians from coming into our territory was possibly a temporary step in the right direction, but it did not get down to the root of the evil. What Canada wants is some national idea to encourage the building of ships in the Dominion. Years ago when we had wooden ships built in the maritime provinces, we were one of the first maritime nations in the world and we had sufficient vessels to carry on our coasting trade. But now the Norwegians have come in, our shipping has become decadent and we are in this deplorable condition that the coal interests which this Bill is designed largely to benefit must have foreign tonnage.

The only way we can deal legitimately and nationally with that is to encourage shipbuilding in this country, and that is a question the government should take up instead of dilly dallying with measures of this kind. This question goes further. We have some remnants of the coasting trade left around the coasts of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; and under the system in vogue for a number of years past that coasting trade has been so oppressed by these large corporate interests, who have paid no attention to the local needs of the people, that it is not able to subsist, and will go out of business unless this government remedies the evils that assail it. These large foreign vessels come over under the coasting privilege, and as the minister has told us, there is no relative value between the privileges we give to them and those accorded to us in the countries from which they come. Under the large incorporate interests which employ them, they shut out altogether the possibility of the small coasting tonnage of the maritime provinces getting its legitimate trade. Take the coal trade of Sydney, Inverness and Pictou. The hon. minister is surely aware of the disadvantages that smaller craft are suffering on account of the privileges given foreign tonnage and the abuse of those privileges, the large corporate companies supplying the coal of the maritime provinces to this foreign tonnage and to the prejudice of both the smaller coasting vessels and the people that they accommodate. Those evils are going on to-day just the same as last year and the year before.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Would the hon. gentleman permit me to say that two weeks ago, while at home, I made inquiries into that subject, so far as Pictou was concerned and I learned that every schooner that came there from Prince Edward Island or anywhere else had been loaded without the slightest delay, and the only trouble with our coal miners is that the schooners do not come as often as they like. The same thing is true of Cape Breton.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Pictou has not been the aggressor in this respect so much as Sydney and Inverness.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that so anxious is the Dominion Coal Company at Sydney to obtain this schooner trade that it has standing advertisements in the newspapers calling on schooners to go to Glace Bay, where they have made special arrangements for loading them. They are anxious for this trade, and it is not fair on the part of my hon. friend to say that they are not. The only discrimination of a serious character that has occurred in this connection happened at Inverness last fall, and that is not likely to arise again.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I am not prepared to take the assurances of the hon. member for Pictou nor of the hon. member for Cape Breton; but I am glad to hear these hon. gentlemen say that some redress has been given to the grievances under which the coasting trade has suffered in the past. However, there is no guarantee that they will be free from such abuses in the future.

Mr. JOHNSTON. What guarantee can you give them?

Mr. LEFURGEY. You can give them the guarantee that the foreign coasting trade is not to come in to fill their places. The schooners have to lie at Sydney or Inverness for six or eight weeks, waiting for their load, while the steamers load up and carry their cargo up the St. Lawrence and come back and load up again.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Would you shut up the coal mine?

Mr. LEFURGEY. There must be some way out. I believe the State of Massachusetts had a law some years ago compelling the vessels to load in rotation, the only exception being that of a steamer which come in for bunker coal. I cannot pick up a paper from the maritime provinces without seeing that the agitation of this question is going on from day to day. Some stringent regulation should be put upon the management of the coal shipping piers, and one of the best ways of rehabilitating our shipping interest is to have a bonus on ship-building so that we may rebuild our shipping and maintain our ships as we did some twenty or twenty-five years ago.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend has discussed two questions which are important, but which have no relation to the Bill. The first is with regard to a shipping bounty, a very important question, but it is not involved in this measure at all. If we give a bounty of $50 a ton, we could not get vessels built fast enough to meet the requirements of the coal companies. The second is the difficulty between sailing vessels and steamers at the piers. I believe that difficulty occurred only at one pier at Cape Breton, and I am assured that a remedy has been supplied. But even if there were no remedy, that does not touch the object of this Bill at all. Then my hon. friend says if we only stop these Norwegian steamers, we will have the business for our own vessels. That was his argument.

Mr. LEFURGEY. No, it was not.

Mr. FIELDING. He wants to shut out these Norwegian steamers altogether. We want to shut them out in a general way, but the coal companies say that if we do not give them reasonable time, they will have no vessels to carry their trade. I represent a constituency which has a good deal of shipping, but if we only carried our coal in the wooden vesesls which we build there, the coal companies could not do a profitable business at all. If they could not use large steamers in carrying their coal, we could not have any coal trade up the St. Lawrence. It is only by building special steamers adapted to the trade, that we can make anything out of it.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Let us build Messageries maritimes.

Mr. FIELDING. And in the meantime shut up the collieries.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You have not begun any.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, we have launched this day in the town of New Glasgow, a magnificent steel ship and without giving any bonus. It was built by enterprising people and I wish them every success.

Mr. LEFURGEY. But you have not aided them in any way.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not going to discuss that question. It may or may not be good policy to aid ship-building. There are certain privileges which have been granted for many years, and whatever advantages there may be in these will go to the splendid steel ship launched by the firm of Carmichael & Co.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Only one steel ship.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, there has to be a beginning to everything.

Mr. BLAIN. Since the Minister of Finance is going into a discussion entirely away from the Bill, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. FIELDING. I think my hon. friend is right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Might I inquire what is the tonnage of this vessel ?

Mr. FIELDING. She is quite a good sized vessel.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not know that this Bill is much less controversial than the other one we have considered. The subject is a very important one ; but coming back to the immediate purpose of the Bill, perhaps it might be said that its advantages will depend all together on the way it is worked out by orders in council.

Mr. FIELDING. That is true.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Finance has announced, but only in a very general way, what the policy of the government is likely to be. I would suggest that the Bill might be reported and stand for third reading, on the understanding that if any hon. gentleman who is not present desires further discussion, we can refer it back to the committee.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Might I point out a fact which would perhaps avoid any discussion on the third reading, and that is that in the original Shipping Act passed in 1870 the power to alter, amend and repeal any order in council that might be passed under the terms of this section were contained in the original Shipping Act. But when they came to revise the statutes in 2 Edward VII., the words giving to the Governor in Council the power to alter, amend and repeal were struck out. The proposition now is only to revive the powers which had previously existed.

Progress reported.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to again bring to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the return I mentioned yesterday.

Mr. BRODEUR. I found out that it had been handed to me some time ago and has been mislaid. I have given instructions to have it recopied and will lay it on the table to-morrow or the day after. It consists only of a few letters.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What business to-morrow ?

Mr. FIELDING. Supply will be moved in the morning.

Motion agreed to and House adjourned at 2.55 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, July 15, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

DAM AT GRANDES PILES, QUEBEC.

Mr. ROBITAILLE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. What amount was voted last year for the foundations of the dam on the St. Maurice at Grandes Piles?
2. What amount was voted and expended during the past eight years ?
3. For what were such amounts expended ?
4. How much did that portion of wharf built at Grandes Piles cost?
5. How much did that portion of wharf built at La Tuque cost ?
6. What salary during the past four years was paid to Mr. Eucharistc Crête, of St. Jean des Piles, and what for ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. $40,000.

Mr. BRODEUR.

DREDGING AT DORVAL.

Mr. BOYER asked :

How much material has been taken out by dredging at St. Lawrence yacht club, at Dorval, since 1867?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works). 59,180 cubic yards.

GRAZING LEASE OF H. RIVIERE.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON asked:

1. What is the exact location and area of the grazing lease held by Mr. H. Rivière in township 4, range 1, west of the 5th meridian ?
2. Did H. Rivière apply for any other lands in township 4, range 1, west of the 5th meridian ? If so, why were these other lands not granted ?
3. Has any other person any interest in this lease ?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. Section 25, the northeast quarter of section 26 and section 27, comprising an area of 1,440 acres.
2. (a) Yes.

(b) The other lands applied for were not granted Mr. Rivière on account of a conflicting application, and a protest having been received from some ranchers living in the vicinity.

3. I do not know.

WHARF AT MILFORD HAVEN, N.S.

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. When was the wharf at Milford Haven, or the Intervale, Guysborough county, constructed ?
2. What has been the total expenditure on this wharf ?
3. How many vessels have been moored at the wharf since its construction ?
4. Who is the wharfinger or caretaker, and what has he been paid each year since its construction for services ?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. In the years 1904-5 and 1905-6.
2. $2,049.94.

3 and 4. Department has no information as to number of vessels moored at the wharf since its construction; no wharfinger has been appointed.

IMPORTATIONS OF FARM AND GARDEN PRODUCE AT SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. BOYCE asked :

1. What quantities of farm and garden produce were entered for consumption at the port of Sault Ste. Marie during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1908?
2. Of what classes were such importations, respectively?
3. What duties were paid upon the same, respectively?

NEW APPOINTMENTS IN DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. ROBITAILLE—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Since Hon. Wm. Pugsley has held the position of Minister of Public Works, how many new appointments to office have been made in his department?
2. What are the names and salaries of the said appointees?
3. How many French-Canadians are in the above list, and at what salaries?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works):

1. Sixteen.
2 and 3.

Names.	Salary.
Arthur Winslow	$ 800 per annum
R. A. Sauriol	800 "
J. H. Parent	1,500 "
K. Brown	500 "

I have no official information as to which of the above are French-Canadians. My information, however, is that they are all Canadians.

MARINE STORES ON SUSSEX STREET, OTTAWA.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Taylor—asked:

1. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries a warehouse for the storage of marine stores on Sussex street? If so, how many employees are engaged in said store, and what are their names and salaries?
2. Who is the janitor of the building, and what is his rate of pay?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries):

1 and 2. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has a warehouse on the first floor of a building on Sussex street. The warehouse is under the control of the inspector of lighthouses above Montreal and the materials stored are in connection with this service. The only employee at this store is the janitor and storekeeper, Albert Corbeil, who is paid at the rate of $50 a month. This building is also used as offices for certain branches of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

LEASE OF BROWN, BEDINGFIELD & COMPANY.

Mr. CRAWFORD asked:

1. How many acres of grazing land is held under lease by Brown, Bedingfield & Company? If so, how long does the lease run?
2. What is the name and address of each member of the above firm?
3. Is this a close lease?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior):

1. (a) 55,427 acres. (b) 31st March, 1926.
2. John Garrett Cory, Gilbert Plains, Manitoba; Joseph Harrison Brown, Pekisko, Alberta; Frank Bedingfield, Pekisko, Alberta; Glen Campbell, Gilbert Plains, Manitoba.

3. Yes.

IMPORTS FOR HOME CONSUMPTION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What are, respectively, the values of and duties on imports into Canada for home consumption for the months of January, February, March, April, May and June, for the years 1907 and 1908?

2. What are the value of exports of the produce of Canada from Canada for the same periods?

DREDGE 'KING EDWARD.'

Mr. BLAIN asked :

1. Has the dredge 'King Edward' been employed in dredging the harbour of Lunenburg?

2. Is the government aware that dredging operations in that harbour have obstructed access to and from private docks by the throwing up of mud?

3. Is the government aware that this has prevailed to such an extent that in some cases vessels have been unable to get in and out of private docks for a certain period?

4. Is this dredge or any dredge now employed in Lunenburg harbour?

5. In what portions of the harbour have dredging operations been carried on, and to what extent and at what cost since January 1, 1907?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) :

1. Yes.

2 and 3. No.

Mr. OLIVER.

4. Yes, the 'King Edward.'

5. (a) Entrance to harbour and around the wharfs. (b) 254,617 cubic yards were removed. (c) contract, $101,846.80; inspection &c., $1,045.53 ; total, $102,892.33.

DUTY ON TOBACCO.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of duty collected on tobacco for the year ending March 31, 1908, by the Department of Inland Revenue?

2. How much of this was due to the additional duty imposed by the legislation of 1897?

Hon. WM. TEMPLEMAN (Minister of Inland Revenue) :

1. $6,841,060.19.

2. $2,143,190.60.

AMERICAN QUARANTINE ON SHEEP.

Mr. ELSON asked :

1. Does the United States place Canadian sheep under quarantine when going into their country? If so, for what length of time?

2. Would it be sufficient to dip Canadian sheep once or twice during the season to remove the cause of quarantine, and allow Canadian sheep to enter the United States without quarantine restriction?

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). The United States authorities have recently imposed a quarantine of thirty days on sheep entering the United States for breeding purposes. In regard to the second question there is no alternative to the quarantine in the United States regulations and we have not yet succeeded in inducing them to make any change.

WHARFAGE DUES AT BRONTE.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the amount of wharfage dues collected at Bronte harbour during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908?

2. What was the amount of rental collected at Bronte harbour during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908, for ground on which fish houses have been built?

3. How much of such collections has the wharfinger retained for his services, or how much has such official been paid for such services during said fiscal year?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. $90.40.

2. $50.

3. $22.60.

IMPORTS OF SUGAR, 1908.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. What was the total amount of sugar, raw and refined, respectively, imported into Canada during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908?

2. What was the amount of duty paid on raw sugar and refined sugar during the same year, respectively?

CORRECTION OF ANSWER TO QUESTION—PURCHASE OF STEEL RAILS.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). I rise to what might be called a question of privilege, to make two corrections, in answer to the questions asked by Mr. Boyce on June 18:

1. From what manufacturers has the National Transcontinental Railway Commission purchased steel rails for use in the construction of the railway?
2. What were the prices per ton, respectively, paid under such contracts?

The price of steel rails purchased from the Algoma Steel Company 32,000 gross tons should read $34 per ton, and not $54 per ton, as it appears in 'Hansard.'

In answering a question by Mr. Boyce on the same subject more information was given than was asked for and the result may be confusing. The question was:

1. From what manufacturers has the National Transcontinental Railway Commission purchased steel rails for use in the construction of the railway?
2. What were the prices per ton, respectively, paid under such contracts?
3. What contracts for rails are still incompleted?

The correct answer is:

1. 65,371·2 gross tons.
2. Dominion Iron & Steel Company—

PURCHASE OF SEED OATS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Some days ago a question was asked by Mr. Fowler in reference to the purchase of seed grain in Prince Edward Island, but only the first two parts were answered. The balance of the question reads:

3. How much money was paid the Prince Edward Island Railway Company and winter steamers for freight on said oats?
4. When were the oats inspected, by whom, and what was the cost of inspection?
5. What was the price charged to the farmers of the West for these oats?
6. What commissions, if any, were paid, and to whom paid?

The answers to the other parts are:

3. The freight charges on the Prince Edward Island Railway and winter steamers on said oats were paid by Jos. Read and Company. The amount is not known to the department.
4. Between February 25 and March 16, 1908—S. J. Moore, seed inspector for the maritime provinces—No additional cost for inspection.
5. Eighty-five cents per bushel.
6. No commissions paid.

CORRECTION IN VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. BERGERON. I find in the Votes and Proceedings an error which might be serious. In the report of the money voted day before yesterday I find the name of Jules Chaconguay as junior second-class clerk at $800 per annum. The name in the estimates was Evanturel. The circumstances stated and the amount are the same, but the name is different, whether intentionally or not I do not know.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is an error.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, that the government of Canada may aid and assist the construction of a line of railway of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' from a point on the company's line of railway, or on the line of railway of the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company, at or near Edmonton or Strathcona, in the province of Alberta, thence, in a generally western direction, to the coal areas, situated at or near the Brazeau river and the headwaters of the McLeod river, for a distance not exceeding one hundred and fifty miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called 'securities,' secured as hereinafter mentioned, of the said company, or of its successors by amalgamation as hereinafter provided, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile for the first fifty miles of the line so aided, and, for the remainder of the said line, to the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, not exceeding in all one hundred and fifty miles, the interest upon the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half-yearly, the principal to be payable in fifty years.

2. Resolved, that the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by a deed or deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge, to a trustee or trustees, approved of by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the said line of railway so aided, and the right of way, station grounds, or other real estate and interest therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials, and other personal properties, present and future, acquired for the purposes of the said line so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining it, and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to arise from the said line, and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said line and the operation maintenance and repair thereof.

3. Resolved, that the deed or deeds of trust shall also create a mortgage, or charge, upon all other lines of railway and properties of the company, and upon all the property and franchises, tools, incomes and revenues connected therewith, to rank thereon next after the bonds, debentures, debenture stocks or other securities theretofore issued by the company, and next after any existing deed or deeds of trust by way of mortgage or charge securing them : provided always that, with respect to lines of railway or parts thereof now constructed and in operation, for the mileage of which no bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities have yet been issued, the company may issue first mortgage securities at a rate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars per mile, and may secure them by deed or deeds of trust by way of first mortgage or charge, having priority over the mortgage or charge created by the deed or deeds of trust hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. GRAHAM.

4. Resolved that the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge, or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purpose of the line of railway so aided, and the forms and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of, and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

5. Resolved, that the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it ; and upon being so signed the government shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payments shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, that the rates and tolls charged by the company upon any of its lines shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the company.

7. Resolved, that any moneys paid by the government of Canada under any guarantee herein provided for, shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities so guaranteed, or under any deed of trust securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust, and the government shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall, with respect to all moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of security holders with respect to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

8. Resolved, that the guarantee of securities, as herein provided, for the said line of railway shall not be given until the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company have amalgamated into one company under the name of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, nor until the amalgamated company, as successors by such amalgamation, has become, as maker of the securities, liable for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so to be guaranteed with respect to such line of railway.

9. Resolved, that the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of the said line of railway so to be aided, shall, for the purpose hereof, be final.

10. Resolved, that the books of the company shall at all times be open for inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General having been apprised of the subject matter of this resolution commends it to the favourable consideration of this House.

Mr. FOSTER. Will there be any memorandum for distribution to the members giving particulars of these various cases or are we to proceed to-morrow with no information except the meagre information that can possibly be given by the minister?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have a memorandum prepared; I have a map with all the lines in both resolutions and forms of application and particulars. I shall have this information laid on the table this afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the government of Canada may aid and assist the construction of the lines of railway, set out below, of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called 'securities,' of the said company, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile of the said lines of railway so aided, respectively, interest on the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half-yearly, and the principal to be payable in fifty years.

2. Resolved, That the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by one or more deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge, to a trustee or trustees, approved of by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the line or lines of railway included therein, and the rights of way, station grounds and other real estate and interests therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials and other personal properties, present and future, acquired for the purposes of the said lines so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining them, and the tolls, incomes, and revenues of the company arising and to rise from the said lines and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said lines, and the operation, maintenance and repair thereof.

3. Resolved, That the said deed or deeds of trust shall also create a mortgage or charge, next after the charges existing thereon, upon all the lines and branch lines of railway of the company now in operation and upon all the property and franchises connected therewith, and upon all the tolls, incomes and revenues derived therefrom by the company, and also next after any bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities heretofore issued or hereafter to be issued by the company to raise the moneys required from time to time to meet the expenditures heretofore made or hereafter to be made for and in connection with the company's yard and freight terminals in Winnipeg, and the expenditures under the agreement respecting Winnipeg terminals, set out in chapter 52 of the Statutes of Canada of 1907, made between the company, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and His Majesty the King, and after the deeds of trust, mortgages, pledges and charges heretofore given or hereafter to be given to secure them: provided always that, with respect to lines or parts thereof now constructed and in operation, for the mileage of which no bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities have yet been issued, the company may issue first mortgage securities at a rate not exceeding fifteen thousand dollars per mile, and may secure them by deed or deeds of trust by way of first mortgage or charge, having priority over the mortgage or charge to be created by the deed or deeds of trust hereinbefore mentioned.

4. Resolved, That the kind of securities to be guaranteed as herein provided and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds of trust securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purposes of the lines of railway respectively so aided, and the forms and manner of guarantee shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of, and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

5. Resolved, That the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it, and upon being so signed the government shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payment shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, That the rates and tolls charged by the company upon any of its lines shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the company.

7. Resolved, That any money paid by the government of Canada, under any guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities guaranteed or under any deed of trust securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust and the government shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall with respect to all moneys so paid be in all respects in the position of security holders with respect to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

8. Resolved, That the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of any of the said lines of railway shall, for the purposes thereof be final.

9. Resolved, That the books of the company shall at all times be open to inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.

10. Resolved, That the lines of railway above referred to are the following:—

1. A line of railway from or from near Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan, to the westerly boundary of Manitoba, there connecting with the company's line to Brandon, not exceeding one hundred and fifty-two miles.

2. A line of railway from or from near Saskatoon, in the province of Saskatchewan, thence running in a southerly and western direction towards Calgary, not exceeding one hundred and seventy-five miles.

3. A line of railway from or from near Prince Albert, in the province of Saskatchewan, by way of North Battleford and Battleford Junction, to or near to Battleford, excluding, however, the mileage between North Battleford and Battleford Junction, the distance, exclusive of the last-mentioned mileage not exceeding one hundred and thirty-two miles.

4. A line of railway from the Thunder Hill line to the company's railway at or near the westerly boundary of the province of Manitoba, running in a generally western direction towards Rosthern, a distance not exceeding one hundred miles.

5. An extension of the Rossburn line from the western boundary of the province of Manitoba, in a northwesterly direction, a distance not exceeding fifty miles.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been apprised of the subject matter of this resolution commends it to the favourable consideration of this House.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to provide as follows:

1. The Governor in Council may grant a subsidy of $3,200 per mile towards the construction of each of the undermentioned lines of railway (not exceeding in any case the number of miles hereinafter respectively stated) which shall not cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, and towards the construction of each of the said lines of railway, not exceeding the mileage hereinafter stated, which shall cost more on the average than $15,000 per mile for the mileage subsidized, a further subsidy beyond the sum of $3,200 per mile of fifty per cent on so much of the average cost of the mileage subsidized as is in excess of $15,000 per mile such subsidy not exceeding in the whole the sum of $6,400 per mile:

72. To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for a line of railway from Chicoutimi south or southeast; not exceeding 5 miles.

2. The Governor in Council may grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned towards the construction and completion of the bridges also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

1. Towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge and approaches over the Nicolet river at Nicolet, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 40 of 1907, section 2, $15,000.

2. To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company (lessees of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company), towards the construction and completion of a bridge over the Saskatchewan river connecting Strathcona and Edmonton, 15 per cent upon the amount expended thereon; not exceeding $100,000.

3. To the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of the following railway bridges:

(a) bridge across the Gentilly river, $15,000.

(b) bridge across the Becancour river, $30,000.

(c) bridge across the Richelieu river, $30,000.

4. To the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of the 26 railway bridges on its line of railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé, payable upon the completion of the said line of railway between the said points, $250,000.

5. To the Interprovincial Railway Bridge Company of New Brunswick, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge over the Restigouche river from Campbellton to Mission Point, $160,000.

6. To the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge across Burrard Inlet, $200,000.

3. Unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'cost' means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge, up to and not exceeding $25,000, forming part of the line of railway subsidized not otherwise receiving any bonus, but shall not include the cost of equipping the railway nor the cost of terminals nor the cost of right of way of the railway in any city or incorporated town; and such actual, necessary and reasonable cost shall be determined by the Governor in Council, upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, certifying that he has made or caused to be made an inspection of the line of railway for which payment of subsidy is asked, and careful inquiry into the cost thereof, and that in his opinion the amount upon which the subsidy is claimed is reasonable, and does not exceed the true, actual and proper cost of the construction of such railway.

4. The subsidies hereby authorized towards the construction of any railway or bridge shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and may, unless otherwise expressly provided herein, at the option of the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, be paid as follows:

(a) Upon the completion of the work subsidized; or

(b) By instalments, on the completion of each ten-mile section of the railway, in the proportion which the cost of such completed section bears to that of the whole work undertaken; or

(c) Upon the progress estimates on the certificate of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals that in his opinion, having regard to the whole work undertaken and the aid granted, the progress made justifies the payment of a sum not less than thirty thousand dollars; or

(d) With respect to (b) and (c), part one way, part the other.

5. The subsidies hereinbefore authorized to be granted to companies named shall, if granted by the Governor in Council, be granted to such companies respectively; the other subsidies may be granted to such companies as established to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council their ability to construct and complete the said railways and bridges respectively; all the lines and the bridge for the construction of which subsidies are granted, unless they are already commenced, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August, 1908, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from the said first day of August, to be fixed by the Governor in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions, conditions and specifications approved by the Governor in Council on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in each case in a contract between the company and the said minister, which contract the minister, with the approval of the Governor in Council, is hereby empowered to make. The location also of such subsidized lines and bridges shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

6. The granting of such subsidies and the receipt thereof by the respective companies shall be subject to the condition that the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada may at all times provide and secure to other companies such running powers, traffic arrangements and other rights as will afford to all railways connecting with the railways and bridges so subsidized reasonable and proper facilities in exercising such running power, fair and reasonable traffic arrangements with connecting companies, and equal mileage rates between all such connecting railways; and the said board shall have absolute control, at all times, over the rates and tolls to be levied and taken by any of the companies, or upon any of the railways and bridges hereby subsidized; Provided always that any decision of the said board made under this section may be at any time varied, changed or rescinded by the Governor in Council, as he deems just and proper.

7. Every company receiving a subsidy under this Act, its successors and assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized hereinunder, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the lines in respect of which it has received such subsidy and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service; and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed and the company performing it, and, in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada; and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy received by the company hereunder.

8. As respects all railways and bridges for which subsidies are hereby granted, the company at any time owning or operating any of the railways or bridges shall when required, produce and exhibit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or any person appointed by him, all books, accounts and vouchers showing the cost of constructing the railway or bridge, the cost of operating it, and the earnings thereof.

9. The Governor in Council may make it a condition of the grant of the subsidies herein provided that the company shall lay the railway with new steel rails and fastenings made in Canada and shall purchase all materials and supplies required for the construction of the railway and bridges and the rolling stock for the first equipment of the railway, from Canadian producers, if such rails, fastenings, materials, supplies and equipment are procurable in Canada of suitable quality and upon terms as favourable as elsewhere, of which the Minister of Railways and Canals shall be the judge.

10. Whenever a contract has been duly entered into with a company for the construction of any line of railway hereby subsidized, the Minister of Railways and Canals, at the request of the company, and upon the report of the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, and his certificate that he has made careful examination of the surveys, plans and profile of the whole line so contracted for, and has duly considered the physical characteristics of the country to be traversed and the means of transport available for construction, naming the reasonable and probable cost of such construction, may, with the authorization of the Governor in Council, enter into a supplementary agreement, fixing definitely the maximum amount of the subsidy to be paid, based upon the said certificate of the chief engineer and providing that the company shall be entitled to be paid as the minimum, the ordinary subsidy of $3,200 per mile, together with sixty per cent of the difference between the amount so fixed and the said $3,200 per mile, if any; and the balance, forty per cent, shall be paid only on completion of the whole work subsidized, and in so far as the actual cost, as finally determined by the Governor in Council upon the recommendation of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and upon the report and certificate of the said chief engineer entitles the company thereto: Provided always—

(a) that the cost, as certified, is not less on the average than $18,000 per mile for the whole mileage subsidized;

(b) that no payment shall be made except upon a certificate of the chief engineer that the work done is up to the standard specified in the company's contract;

(c) that in no case shall the subsidy exceed the sum of $6,400 per mile.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been apprised of the subject matter of this resolution commends it to the favourable consideration of this House.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Hon. G. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to authorize the government of Canada, pursuant to the agreement between it and the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, dated the 19th day of October, 1903, and set out in the schedule to chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903, to exercise the right to take over the whole of the undertaking, assets, property, and franchises of the Quebec Railway and Bridge Company, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said agreement and the said Act, and that the moneys required to pay therefor be appropriated for that purpose out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General having been apprised of the subject matter of this resolution commends it to the favourable consideration of this House.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

On the orders of the day being called:

Mr. BERGERON. When may we expect the French version of the Civil Service Report which has been at the Printing Bureau I think for a month now? I would be glad to have it before the close of the session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall have to inquire in what position it is and will tell my hon. friend to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I would again call the attention of the Prime Minister to a question I put yesterday with reference to a return from the Justice Department.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I shall again call it to the attention of the minister.

THE BRITISH CATTLE EMBARGO.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he has noticed an article in the Montreal 'Gazette' referring to a large mass meeting held in London at which a strong resolution was passed urging His Majesty's government to remove the cattle embargo, and whether he intends to take any action in the matter.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I have not noticed the article referred to, though I have noticed some reference in the public press to such a meeting.

THE PARDONING POWER.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). I would like to answer a question asked yesterday by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) in regard to a return in reference to the exercise of the pardoning power. I explained when the matter was last mentioned in the House that the preparation of that return necessarily involved months of time. I may say that a man has been specially engaged for the work, which is of such a character that it is not everybody who can do it, and he has been working at it continuously now for some months, and expects to be finished in the course of the next two or three months.

CANADA-GERMANY TRADE RELATIONS.

Mr. LALOR. I have received a letter from Germany stating that there is a rumour there that Canada and Germany are about to enter on closer trade relations. I would like to ask about that.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Occasionally conversations on so important a question naturally take place, but no official action has been taken, and I think I can say to my hon. friend that there is nothing contemplated at this moment which would justify that statement.

THE WOOLLEN INDUSTRY.

Mr. LALOR. In view of the fact that a number of deputations have lately waited on the government to urge increased duties for the woollen and knitted goods industries, I would like to ask if the government contemplate makng any change in the tariff in that direction.

Mr. FIELDING. The Prime Minister answered that question two days ago.

SUPPLY: INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish again to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a return of whch I have already spoken twice. Last evening the hon. gentleman told me that the return had been prepared and had been lost. I am informed by the hon. member for Queens, P.E.I., who asked me to bring the matter to the attenon of the minister, that he received exactly the same reply several days ago. The extraordinary delay and the replies of that kind repeated at such long intervals, lead us to believe that we are being humbugged in this matter.

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries). It will be brought down today.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I trust that the hon. gentleman will see that it is, because if it is not brought down to-day the date of prorogation will be very seriously interfered with.

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no need of the hon. gentleman taking that stand, because there has been no intention on my part to be discourteous towards him—quite the reverse. The return was sent to me some time ago and was lost, but it will be brought down to-day.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not think I should be troubled with the necessity of bringing matters of this kind to the attenon of the minister. I only brought this to his attention because members on this side of the House have come to me over and over again and said that they could get no satisfaction in regard to this return, and I was obliged to take the matter up myself. I should not be required to do that. Attention should have been given to it in the first instance. It has been pending for more than six months.

THE FRENCH TREATY.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like to have a definite answer from the government in regard to the French treaty—whether the Senate of France has accepted it, and, if not, where we stand in regard to the treaty between France and Canada which existed before this one was negotiated. If this treaty is not ratified by France, shall we have no treaty or the one we had before?

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman is perhaps aware from the public press that the treaty, though approved by the French Chamber of Deputies, has not been approved by the Senate. I am advised that the French Senate has adjourned and will not meet again for some weeks. We still anticipate that the treaty will be ratified, though we are not in a position to make any statement in regard to that. We are aware that the French government are making every effort to secure the French Senate's approval of the treaty, and we hope that in the end that approval will be given. In the meantime the old treaty remains in force. Until the formal approval of the new treaty by the French Chambers and the parliament of Canada takes place the matter stands precisely as before—as if nothing had been done.

Mr. FOSTER. I would understand, then, that no steps will be taken looking towards the establishment of the commercial steam line between France and Canada until this matter has been finally settled.

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not think any contract has been made yet.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister knows that no contract has been made yet. That was not what I suggested. What I suggested was that until it is seen whether or not the French Chambers will ratify the treaty, I suppose that no steps will be taken to establish that line. It was understood that that was to be consequent on the treaty.

Mr. BRODEUR. Of course, we shall have the service as it has been in previous years.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not asking the minister either in reference to the line as it has been. I am asking with reference to the vote which puts into the power of the government a certain amount of money for a service contingent on the new treaty going into effect, and what I asked the minister was if he proposed to put that into operation whether the new treaty is confirmed or not.

Mr. BRODEUR. There was a service established in previous years, as my hon. friend knows, between France and Canada. That was to expire in the month of May last; but this year the same service is supplied as in previous years under the vote taken some time ago. But for that there would have been no service. I will bring before the Minister of Trade and Commerce the question of my hon. friend. I have never discussed the question very fully with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I do not think it is his intention to make a contract for a certain number of years if the treaty is not ratified.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the arrangement with the old company been renewed?

Mr. BRODEUR. For this year, at the same rate, $5,500 per trip.

ACCIDENT TO THE CORNWALL CANAL.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Stormont). I would like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if any arrangement has been made by which the large manufacturing establishments at Cornwall will get a greater amount of water for power than they are now getting. I understand that since the unfortunate break in the canal they have been cut down to a very small amount, which puts them at a great disadvantage. I recognize that the navigation is the first point to be considered, but I understand that without any great additional expense the channel could be widened in such a way that the cotton mills and the other mills could have a larger amount of water than they are now getting. I may say that the loss of power means to one industry alone an additional expenditure of some $15,000 a month. I saw that a deputation waited on the Minister of Railways and Canals the day before yesterday in reference to this matter, and I want to know if any arrangement has been made by which the mills can get more water.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). As my hon. friend says, the restoration of navigation is the supreme object. That is being done as quickly as possible. We cannot allow anything to be done that is at all liable to place us at the risk of another accident of that kind. There is a large dam of a horseshoe shape. One of the difficulties found is if the current is allowed to be made fairly swift steamers coming down are liable to strike that dam, and it might be carried away and we would be in trouble again.

Mr. PRINGLE. The currents will go away from the dam towards the mill.

Mr. GRAHAM. Coming from the west is the difficulty. I discussed with the engineer last night the whole situation. He informed me that the curve in the canal was too sharp. I went over a rough sketch, and we decided it would be wise in the interests of navigation, apart from any consideration of the mills altogether, to widen out in one or two places so as to make the turn for vessels a little easier and ensure the safety of the cribwork as well as improving navigation. He has also put in a crib west of the dam, so that vessels will strike the crib first and avoid the dam. It would be in the interests of navigation to widen out the channel in one or two spots, and that would also give the mills more water.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the hon. gentleman inquired into the accuracy of the statement made that about a year ago the department was notified of the liability of a break at this point in the Cornwall canal? It is understood that Captain Donnelly had made that statement.

Mr. GRAHAM. The department are not able to find any such communication. The bank all along certain parts of the canal is a difficult bank to protect, and certain opinions have been expressed verbally, but I never heard any suggestion that there was danger of a break at this particular point.

THANKSGIVING DAY.

Mr. KEMP. A large number of our citizens think it desirable to have Thanksgiving Day on Monday instead of Thursday. Many people would like to visit their friends or relatives at a distance, and on that account would prefer Monday to Thursday. I have in mind particularly the commercial travellers. They are much in favour of the change, because that will enable them to pass the holiday with their families.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. We have received representations on this subject from several organizations, especially the commercial travellers. They have been informed officially that this year Thanksgiving Day will be on Monday instead of Thursday.

SLAUGHTER OF HOGS.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to a matter in connection with his department. During the St. Louis exhibition, held in 1904, two gentlemen from Western Ontario, in connection with their own private business, exhibited hogs at that exhibition. On their return to Canada these hogs were placed in quarantine at Point Edward. While there they were slaughtered under instructions of the department. In the Auditor General's Report of 1906 I find, at page D—10, that Mr. J. E. Brethour, Burford, Ont. received compensation for his eighteen hogs, amounting to $1,533, and that Messrs. Douglas & Sons, Mitchell, Ont. were paid $932 for twelve hogs slaughtered on account of disease. I have before me, in the return brought down, the prices paid. On November 4, 1904, they were slaughtered, and the compensation allowed Mr. Brethour was as follows:

1 boar two years old..	$180
1 boar yearling..	160
1 boar yearling..	80
1 boar under one year..	65
1 boar under one year..	80
1 boar under seven months..	35
1 brood sow..	80
4 yearly sows..	400
3 sows, eight months..	255
2 hogs, eight months..	32
1 hog, eight months (died)..	16
1 sow (died)..	150
	$1,533

This amount was paid to Mr. Brethour by the department on the 5th of April 1905. The department ordered a veterinary surgeon to go to Point Edward and examine the hogs when in quarantine. In a letter to Dr. Rutherford, Director Veterinary General, Ottawa, addressed to him by Mr. Perdue, I find the following:

Chatham, November 24, 1904.

It is a question hard to decide whether the hogs contracted the disease while at St. Louis or at Point Edward. Dr. Brown is of the opinion that these hogs became infected while at St. Louis, as one was coughing when it arrived at Point Edward, and was the first to succumb to the disease. The second hog that died I examined and found one of his lungs almost entirely hepatized.

Mr. Brethour applied for compensation and on December 24, 1904, the Minister of Agriculture wrote him as follows:

Dear Mr. Brethour,—I have yours of December 24 with reference to the hogs slaughtered at the Prince Edward quarantine. I note what you say with regard to the exposure of your hogs and will carefully consider the whole matter with Dr. Rutherford. On the first blush, however, I cannot see any possibility of paying compensation.

Yours very truly,
SYDNEY FISHER.

Although I have the correspondence before me, I shall refrain from putting on 'Hansard' any further extracts from it, as our time is very limited. I now find a list of the hogs owned by Messrs. Douglas & Son. These were the prices paid by the minister for compensation to this firm:

Lady Amherst..	$175
Letty..	125
Blain's last..	160
Maplehurst Queen..	125
Full sister to above..	125
Maplecliff Pointer..	15
Maplehearst Leader..	90
Thoroughbred boar..	45
Thoroughbred boar under 6 months.	30
Thoroughbred boar under 6 months.	30
Store hog..	6
	$932

These gentlemen made application to the department for compensation. I have read a letter written by the minister that on examination of the matter, 'at first blush' he could not find that any compensation was due or could be paid by the department to Mr. Brethour. But in the correspondence I notice a letter from the hon. gentleman who represents South Perth (Mr. G. H. McIntyre) in which one of these gentlemen live. It is as follows:

St. Marys, Ont., December 13, 1904.

Hon. Sydny Fisher,
Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Mr. Dunbar has asked me to forward you the inclosed letter from him in reference to a very unfortunate loss of valuable stock that has come to the Messrs. Douglas, who were Canadian exhibitors at the St. Louis fair.

I am not aware of your departmental regulations in regard to the destruction of such diseased animals, and in regard to recouping owners for loss.

The public value of the enterprise the owners had been engaged in, and the special features in connection with the contracting of the disease, would seem to call for the most favourable consideration of the case that you can fairly give.

Yours sincerely,
GILBERT H. McINTYRE.

Messrs. Douglas & Son had their case in the hands of a lawyer, Mr. Dunbar, of Mitchell. He gets in touch with the sitting member of the county who thus writes to the minister on behalf of these gentlemen. And, after some little correspondence—and an alteration in the Act, I may say—compensation at these enormous prices is paid by the minister. I have statements before me from other veterinaries who examined these hogs, and in view of these it seems surprising that compensation should be awarded. On November 3, 1904, a letter was written to Mr. M. B. Perdue, V.S., by Dr. Rutherford in the course of which he says, 'It is very important that the diagnosis should be placed beyond question as the animals are valuable and under the regulations it will be impossible to pay compensation. The director general telegraphed to Arthur Brown, V.S., Sarnia, as follows:

Ottawa, November 3, 1904.

Arthur Brown, V.S.

Keep Douglas hogs strictly isolated. Will send consulting veterinary before ordering slaughter as compensation impossible.

J. G. RUTHERFORD.

I shall not go at length into this case, but I would like to point out what the regulations say as to payment of compensation:

4. Hogs affected with hog cholera or swine plague, or which have been in contact with or close proximity to hogs affected with either of the said diseases should on an order signed by a duly appointed inspector of the Department of Agriculture be forthwith slaughtered and the carcasses disposed of as in such order prescribed.

5. The Minister of Agriculture is hereby authorized to order compensation to be paid to the owners of such hogs at the rate set forth in subsection 2 of section 12 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1903, as amended by chapter 6 of the Statutes of 1904.

The amended statute provides as follows:

4. In all cases, the value of the animal should be determined by the minister or by some person appointed by him, but should not exceed, in the case of grade animals, one hundred and fifty dollars for each horse, sixty dollars for each head of cattle, and fifteen dollars for each pig or sheep; and in the case of pure-bred animals, three hundred dollars for each horse, one hundred and fifty dollars for each head of cattle, and fifty dollars for each pig or sheep.

So you will see that if compensation was allowed at all under the Act, $50 is the highest price that could be paid by the minister for any hog. In this case the hon. gentleman has paid Messrs Douglas & Son $175 and Mr. Brethour as high as $180.

At this stage of the session, time is so precious that I will not dwell upon the case. I have mentioned the fact to show how some of the money is going. In view of such payments the people will not be surprised that the public expenditure is increasing every year. The Minister of Agriculture is something of a czar in his department; whatever he says must go; if he says the price to be paid is $180 it is paid, even though the regulations and the law say that $50 is the highest price that may be paid. I suppose the minister will answer that these gentlemen were contributing to the public good and adding to the reputation of Canada in respect of swine breeding. Well, these gentlemen are private dealers in western Ontario. The department did not ask them to exhibit their hogs at the St. Louis exhibition as a government exhibit; they sent them of their own free will. The correspondence here points out that hog cholera was to be found at the St. Louis exhibition and one of these lots of hogs was close to swine affected with that disease. Judging from the correspondence I am led to believe that the hogs contracted the disease not at Point Edward in quarantine, but in the St. Louis exhibition. The minister, when the matter was first brought to his attention, said that 'at first blush' compensation could not be given. I do not know how many blushes it took before he felt free to pay these enormous prices. Then, if these gentlemen had a right to compensation, they did not require a lawyer to present their case to the department, nor did they have to ask the influence of the gentleman who represents the county. Why should that hon. gentleman be requested to interfere? Taking it altogether, it seems to me there was party politics in this matter and pay, because of this these gentlemen must be paid their price. I do not know what their politics are—nor do I care; that is not the question before us. But I think the farmers of this country will think that such prices as $175 are to be regarded as pretty excessive to be paid by the government for compensation for hogs that were sent for exhibition as a private business enterprise. I await an explanation from the Minister of Agriculture of the excessive prices that he has ordered to be paid these gentlemen contrary to his own Act.

Hon. SYDNEY FISHER (Minister of Agriculture). I regret that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) did not give me a little earlier notice of his intention to bring this subject forward. I merely got a slip of paper a few minutes ago that he was going to deal with the subject

Mr. BLAIN. I rather apologize for the short notice.

Mr. FISHER. The consequence is that I cannot answer the details of the case. I regret that, because I am sure there is a sufficient explanation to be given in regard to it. I have some memory of the case, but, not having had the opportunity to refresh my memory by reference to the files of the department, I cannot be sure of the details. The case was a very peculiar one, and that is why, when I first looked into it, I did not know whether there was any possibility of compensation or not. As a matter of fact, Mr. Brethour and Douglas & Sons are well known hog breeders in the western part of Ontario. They were urged, not only by my department, but by the Department of Agriculture of the province of Ontario, to exhibit at the St. Louis exhibition. Efforts were made to get the stock breeders of Canada to do so, and assistance was given to them in taking their stock to St. Louis for the purpose of making a creditable showing of this country in the competition of live stock there. The result was that Canada did make a very creditable showing. My hon. friend said it was a matter of private business. I take exception to that. I think these men were public spirited citizens, and they were urged to take their stock to St. Louis.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the department solicit these gentlemen to exhibit their hogs at St. Louis as a public enterprise ?

Mr. FISHER. Speaking from memory, I have no doubt that they did, though there may be nothing in the correspondence to that effect. At the same time, it is a well known fact that the Live Stock Commissioner of my department at that time went amongst the breeders of Canada and urged their taking part in the St. Louis exhibition, and the department went so far as to offer to pay extra prizes so as to encourage them to do so, and in order to get a creditable exhibit of Canadian live stock at that great exhibition.

Mr. BLAIN. The department did not pay the expenses of taking these hogs to the St. Louis exhibition. Does he say they did ?

Mr. FISHER. I am under the impression that we paid the expenses besides.

Mr. BLAIN. There is not a word about it in the correspondence.

Mr. FISHER. Well, I am speaking from memory. If my hon. friend had given me an opportunity of looking into the matter I would have been better supplied with the facts than I am now. But I do say emphatically that the department did make arrangements by which we added the live stock breeders of Canada in sending their stock to St. Louis ; just to what extent and in what manner I would have to refer to the files of the department to say. My hon. friend is looking up the files, there may be nothing about it there.

Mr. BLAIN. There is a letter addressed to the minister by Mr. Dunbar, the lawyer having charge of this case, who says :

> Had the exhibit been strictly a government exhibit, so that the government would have had charge of the transportation of the animals, I have no doubt that Messrs. Douglas & Sons would be compensated in full.

Mr. FISHER. That is true. But it was not a government exhibit, the government had not charge of the animals ; at the same time the government did assist pecuniarily these gentlemen to send their stock to St. Louis. What my hon. friend says does not in any way militate against my statement. The fact that it does not appear in that file is easily explained. The matter of sending stock to St. Louis was managed by a special officer attached to the St. Louis exhibition staff, and had no concern whatever with the veterinary branch of my department who had to deal with the question of paying compensation for this stock. I fancy that anything concerning that would not appear on those files. I am speaking from memory, but at the same time I am pretty sure that I am correct. However, the hon. gentleman says that these gentlemen were engaged in a private enterprise. They were to the extent that it was their stock they were handling, but I state again that they sent it to St. Louis on the request of the Department of Agriculture of the Dominion, and also the Department of Agriculture of the province of Ontario, who were desirous of seeing Canada well represented at the St. Louis exhibition. Now, so far as concerns the compensation paid, I have not the details, I have not the figures here. I take the figures my hon. friend gave, but I cannot discuss them because I have not got them before me. I can well believe that if more was paid than would have been paid under the ordinary operation of the Contagious Diseases of Animals Act, it was because of the exceptional circumstances and the exceptional character of the stock. This stock for which compensation was paid was the stock that practically swept the boards at St. Louis and took the prizes at that great international exhibition.

Mr. BLAIN. Who received the prize money?

Mr. FISHER. The men who owned the stock got the prize money, of course, who else would get it? They sent their stock there, and did a credit to Canada which was of incalculable advantage to the whole stock industry of this country. I do not dispute the figures the hon. gentleman gave me, he need not hold them up, I daresay they are exact. All I say is that I have not been able to verify them. However I accept his statement that those figures are correct, and that the money was paid. But it must have been paid in consequence of the exceptional circumstances and the exceptional character of the stock.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understood the hon. minister to say that the Ontario government paid part of the compensation to these gentlemen who took the hogs over to St. Louis.

Mr. FISHER. I said nothing of the kind. I said that the Ontario government encouraged these men to send their stock to St. Louis for the purpose of making a creditable representation of Ontario stock, but I did not say that the Ontario government paid any compensation. I do not know whether they did or not, but I do not believe they did, because full compensation appears to have been paid by my department, and I know Mr. Brethour and Douglas & Son well enough to know that they would not ask any other government for compensation after getting it from this government. They are not that kind of men. My hon. friend has spoken about political influence. I believe that the hon. member for the riding of Perth wrote me a letter simply drawing attention to the fact that one of his constituents, or some people whom he knew, had suffered in this way. But there was nothing improper in that letter, nothing of a political nature. It was the kind of a letter that any member of this House ought to write in the interest of his constituents, and if he had not done so at the request of his constituents, he would have been wanting in his duty to the people whom he represents in this House. But so far as politics are concerned, I do not know the politics of Douglas & Sons. I do happen to know the politics of Mr. Brethour, a gentleman of whom I have the highest opinion as a man and as a breeder of hogs, and he is a well known Conservative. He has been asked to be the Conservative candidate in his constituency, in a certain election some years ago. Mr. Brethour was the one who took up this correspondence and dealt with it before Mr. Douglas ever came near us. It was Mr. Brethour who made the first request to the department, it was Mr. Brethour who made the representations to me. It is true that Dougal & Sons were with him, it is true they suffered with him and they got compensation with him. It was Mr. Brethour who came to see me about the matter before the hon. member for Perth ever made any representations to me at all.

Mr. BLAIN. Why was it necessary to place the case in the hands of a lawyer to get compensation if it was so freely given by my hon. friend's department?

Mr. FISHER. I do not know why it was necessary. It was not necessary to put the case in the hands of a lawyer. It would have been considered in exactly the same way if no lawyer had interfered with it. I do not know why Douglas & Sons put it into the hands of a lawyer, and I do not care. Mr. Brethour did not put it into the hands of a lawyer, but came personally to see me about the matter. At my first interview with Mr. Brethour I said: This is an unusual thing, and I will have to look into it carefully to see the exact circumstances of the case before I can pay you any compensation at all. I did look into the circumstances of the case, but as I said, I am speaking from memory and cannot give all the details. Finally it was decided, that, as these gentlemen had suffered a very large pecuniary loss due to the death of their animals by hog cholera, they should be allowed compensation, that compensation was based on the report of one of our own veterinaries and I authorized and agreed to the payment. As for politics entering into it there was nothing of the kind as far as Mr. Brethour is concerned. I do not know anything about the politics of Douglas & Sons as I do not know them personally. I do not know that I had anything to do with them personally, but as Mr. Brethour is a gentleman whom I know as being one of the leading producers of high class hogs, if not the leading producer, and whom I had met over and over again at exhibitions and at live stock conventions, naturally he came personally to me to discuss this heavy loss of his and to ask for compensation. Compensation was ordered to be paid in the ordinary way of business and to suggest that there were any politics in the matter is absolutely out of the question.

Mr. H. S. CLEMENTS (West Kent). I have had the return in my possession for some time, I have gone through it thoroughly and I have drawn my own conclusions from it. The minister is usually of a very kindly disposition and I want to give him credit for that. But, he seems to have got very wrathy over this return, and it is for that reason that I want to say a word or two. He cannot justify the payment of this compensation in that way. I would be very glad to invite the minister to visit my own district where we have many breeders of high class animals, who have as good a reputation as Mr. Brethour and these other gentlemen spoken of, and yet I can show by this return that these breeders were allowed $6 and $7 each for their high class hogs when they were ordered to be killed by Mr. Perdu. It is simply outrageous that the compensation allowed in this case should have been paid because any gentleman who knows anything about farming never heard of a hog being worth $233.

Mr. McCOLL. Does the hon. gentleman know the price that Mr. Platt of Hamilton gets at public auction for his high class cattle ?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not know anything about Mr. Platt of Hamilton.

Mr. McCOLL. These are high class hogs.

Mr. CLEMENTS. You cannot see a solitary thing in any of the correspondence relative to taking these animals to St. Louis.

Mr. FISHER. If my hon. friend is fair he will acknowledge that the correspondence with regard to taking these animals over to St. Louis would not appear in this return because it is in another branch of my department. The statement he is making is a direct insinuation that what I state is not correct.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the hon. gentleman lay that corresepondence on the table of the House ?

Mr. FISHER. I can if the hon. gentleman will give me time.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Mr. Brown, your own veterinary surgeon and inspector at Point Edward, as shown by this return, distinctly states that these gentlemen are not entitled to compensation. That seems to me to be the most direct evidence that this compensation should not have been paid. As far as Mr. Brethour is concerned the taking of these hogs over to St. Louis was a personal matter with himself. He was a breeder seeking a larger market for his stock and I give him credit for having the personal enterprise to go to the St. Louis exhibition. From the evidence of Mr. Brown there is no question that the disease was contracted at St. Louis. It is because of the irregularities of this government that so much loss has been caused to the farmers of western Ontario and so much compensation has been asked for as these irregularities have permitted a large quantity of American pork to come into this country. I censure in the strongest terms possible the action of the Department of Agriculture in authorizing any such payments as these to these gentleman, and I invite the Minister of Agriculture to come to my district at any time and discuss this question.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). What authority had the minister to order the payment as compensation of such a large amount ? We had a case similar to this before the House last session, and in that case the minister refused to order compensation either large or small. The minister is controlled by statutory law the same as any one else. He may think that he is not but he is. The law says that where compensation is given the value of the animal shall be determined but that the conmpensation shall not exceed, in the case of grade animals, a certain amount and, in the case of pure bred animals, $50 for each pig. It would be interesting to know what justification the minister has for the open violation of the law by which he must be controlled the same as any one else in making the compensation larger than the statute provides. Last year I drew to his attention a case in which an animal had been slaughtered because of tuberculosis and in that case there was an absolute refusal to give any compensation though the party could not afford to bear the loss. The animal had been killed in the interest of the health of the community. If these gentlemen were induced to take their hogs to St. Louis for the purpose of representing the country I would naturally expect that they would be dealt with liberally as the circumstances would justify and the provision of the law permit. I would like to hear the minister's reason.

Mr. PATERSON. He has already spoken.

Mr. FOSTER. He has exhausted his reason.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE (South Perth). I was not in the House at the time that my hon. friend from Peel introduced this matter but I heard a reference to a letter that I had written to the department. I am not aware that the hon. member for Peel has criticised that letter in its form or spirit and I can see no good reason why it should be criticised because it appears to me to be a perfectly natural letter for a member of parliament to write to a minister on an appeal from any one in his riding. It is three and a half years since I wrote it, but, as I recollect it, it conveys exactly what it was intended to convey. I do not think it was intended to convey any political meaning or bias. I know of no political reason why I should aid the Messrs. Douglas whom I did not know at all and about whom at this stage I knew nothing. In this I simply did as every member of this House would do, and all I can say to the hon. member for Peel is that whenever his hogs may be sick or die and I can do him any good I will only be too glad to do so.

Mr. BLAIN. I will send for you because you can be more influential than I could be.

Mr. G. H. McINTYRE. I have never endeavoured to antagonize the minister. I will extend the same offer to the hon. member for Kent; I will be glad to aid him in the same way.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister ought to give some reply.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member (Mr. Sproule) is perhaps not aware that I have spoken already, that the Speaker is in the chair and that I am not authorized to speak again any more than any other hon. gentleman is.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the House will grant you that grace.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I propose to refer briefly to the sale of a large block of land in the townships of Fisher, Haviland and Tilley, in the district of Algoma, by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, on or about April 24, 1900. Presumably this sale was made under the Indian land regulations. The regulation under which it is stated the sale was made reads as follows:

Section 6. The above regulations as to occupation and improvement shall not apply to any lands in respect of which the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, has received a report, sworn to by a competent, reliable and disinterested person appointed by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to examine such lands that the same are in whole or for the most part unfit for cultivation. In the case of such lands the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs may dispose of the same or of the timber or other valuables thereon or therein to the best possible advantage in the interest of the Indians without reference to occupation or improvement.

Under that section and by agreement entered into between the Superintendent Genral of Indian Affairs and the purchasers on or about April 24, 1900, but not carried out by grant of the Crown until September, 1906, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs sold to three gentlemen who certainly were not unfriendly to the government and particularly to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs at that time, the present member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton), 29,301 acres of lands in those townships at the very moderate price of $9,017.50. The names of the purchasers are: W. F. Wilson, sometime of Berlin, sometime of Brandon, Manitoba; A. E. Philp, solicitor and barrister of Brandon, and D. Anson Ressor of Brandon, Manitoba. I wish to point out the conditions in regard to valuation. A valuator is to be appointed to report upon lands which are to be sold in this way and that valuator is to have the qualifications named in section 6, namely, he is to be competent, reliable and above all disinterested, and upon the report of such a man the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs may, in his discretion, sell the lands.

The first episode in this extraordinary transaction is a letter from A. H. Gale who hails from and describes himself as of Oxford, England. That letter reads:

Toronto, July 25, 1899.

Wm. Van Abbott, Esq.,
Agent Indian Affairs, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Sir,—I desire to purchase under section 6 of the land regulations the following Indian lands:

All sections in the townships of Ley, Haviland, Tilley, Fisher, Herrick and Palmer; also sections in Batchawana island. Also all sections in the west half of the townships of Tupper and Archibald, and all of the unoccupied lands in the townships of Kars, Fenwick, Pennefather and Dennis, and the west half of the township of Vankoughnet, all of the said lands being Indian lands and in the province of Ontario, at a price to be fixed by valuation of government valuator and upon such terms and regulations as your government may provide for the sale of the same.

I have the honour to be,
Your obedient servant,
A. H. GALE,
Oxford, England.

Please send reply, if any, to Brandon, Manitoba, care of W. F. Wilson.

It is to be noticed that this gentleman comes from Oxford, England, writes from Toronto and gives his address as Brandon in care of W. F. Wilson. That letter is received by the Indian agent and forwarded to the Department of the Interior where it is filed. Nothing more takes place until March 19, 1900, under which date this letter appears:

Brandon, March 19, 1900.

James A. Smart, Esq.,
Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Smart,—I inclose application to purchase certain hardwood timber lands in the Batchawana bay district, Lake Superior, under section 6 of the regulations, and as myself and associates are very anxious——

Mark the words:

—are very anxious to establish a sawmill in that district, I would be very much obliged if you would take hold of the matter and put it through at your earliest possible convenience. I have been over the ground, and find there will be no difficulty in establishing, by the report and affidavits of men in the Goulais bay district, who are the nearest to this district, and who know the ground, that the lands we are after are unfit for settlement and that it would be most expedient as a matter of public policy to allow of our application being granted.

There is a family, called McCaulay, settled in the Goulais bay district who are the nearest settlers to the land wanted and who are wood rangers, and have acted in different capacities for the government, who are in a position to give an accurate report and valuation of the lands. The elder McCaulay acted for the government as foreman or inspector, during the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie canal, and one of the sons is an expert wood ranger, and has been employed as wood ranger and timber inspector both by the government and by private lumber companies, and the report of either of these men would we believe be reliable.

I further think that we could have a petition signed by every settler in the Goulais bay district asking that the government grant our request, and should you think it advisable will proceed to obtain it at once.

Kindly let us hear from you in this matter at your earliest convenience and oblige.

Yours truly,
W. F. WILSON.

That accompanies the application. I would emphasize these features in the transaction, first that this gentleman wants to purchase hardwood timber, that he is anxious, nay he is very anxious to establish a saw-mill in the district at the very earliest possible moment, that he has been over the ground and that it would be expedient, as a matter of public policy, to grant the application as soon as possible and that the settlers in the district are favourable to it and would petition for it if a petition was asked for.

I further refer to the extraordinary feature of that letter accompanying the application, namely, that the purchaser, the applicant for the land, nominates or suggests to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs the person who is to value the land under section 6. The application is as follows :

Jas. A. Smart, Esq.,
Superintendent General of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,—Myself and associates are anxious to establish a mill for the sawing and manufacturing of hardwood in the Batchawana bay district, Lake Superior, and from a personal examination of the district we find:

1. That there are absoluetly no settlers in the district and no lands have been taken up for settlement, or sold.

2. That the lands in the said district for the most part are unfit for settlement.

3. And that such lands as might upon examination prove fit for settlement are inaccessible for present markets.

4. That there is no pulpwood of any value on the lands proposed to be selected.

5. That the lands proposed to be purchased are now covered by timber license in the name of the St. Maurice Lumber Company expiring on April 30 next.

6. That the St. Maurice Lumber Company has been merged in the business of the International Paper Company of New York.

7. That neither the International Paper Company or the St. Maurice Lumber Company have ever built or operated a saw-mill upon the said limit and have no saw-mill in Canada manufacturing or for the purpose of manufacturing the timber upon the said lands.

8. That we find that the International Paper Company cut a quantity of birch logs on the island in Batchawana bay and had them towed to a mill in the United States, there to be converted into lumber.

9. That if myself and associates are granted the privilege of purchasing the lands or portions thereof hereinafter mentioned under section 6 of the regulations for the disposal of Indian lands we will establish a saw-mill at a point on Batchawana bay with a capacity of from three to five million feet per annum, and will further place a number of settlers upon such lands in the said district as shall be found fit upon examination for settlement under section 9 of said regulation (order in council) June 7, 1888.

10. That the establishment of a saw-mill and plant on Batchawana bay would prove a great boon to the settlers of Goulais bay and to those whom we might place on the lands in the said district and the carrying trade of the upper lakes.

11. That no hardwood timber has ever been cut on the said district.

12. That the majority of the said hardwood consists of maple and birch and the large part of the timber trees are very old and many have already commenced to decay and unless the same are cut within the next few years much merchantable timber will be lost.

13. That we would ask you to appoint a person to report upon the said lands hereinafter mentioned, in accordance with the provisions of section 6 with a view to our purchasing the same.

The following are the lands proposed to be purchased in whole or in part, in quantities, in accordance with section 1 of the regulations, or settlers placed thereon where the lands are suitable for settlement. The townships of Haviland and Fisher, and the most western sections of the township of Tilley.

W. F. WILSON.

There are some extraordinary features about that application. It is an application formal in its nature, of which the letter which I have read is not intended to form a part, and sets out the conditions on which the superintendent general is invited to sell these lands, the main features of which are the development of the district and the improvement of the conditions of the settlers in the neighbourhood. He sets out that the lumber companies that have been operating there have not been establishing any saw-mills, but that on the contrary they have had the logs towed to a mill in the United States, to be there converted into lumber, inferentially commenting very severely on that method, and suggesting that if he and his associates are granted these lands, they will adhere to the manufacturing conditions, establish a mill, and place a large number of settlers on the land. Then the application asks the government formally to appoint a valuator, and in the letter which accompanies that application the prospective purchaser asks that McAuley, either father or son, be appointed the independent valuator under the regulations. That application goes into the department on the 19th of March; it is acknowledged on the 27th of March; and while it is under consideration there is evidently communication between the applicant, the prospective purchaser, and this disinterested valuator who is to be appointed by the government. I refer to the following letter:

Goulais Bay, April 3, 1900.

W. F. Wilson,
Brandon, Manitoba.

Dear Sir,—I received your letter and in reply would say, the parties who hold the timber license have taken the present winter all the pulpwood off that portion of land that you were looking after around Batchawana bay.

In regard to the petition it seems to me unnecessary as it is outside of the settlement. However, if the petition is needed I am at your service.

Hoping you will succeed in the undertaking.

I remain yours truly,
A. McAULEY.

The application was under consideration by the superintendent general of Indian Affairs, and here is the purchaser in correspondence with the valuator to be appointed by the government, employing that valuator in conjunction with the obtaining of a petition, the valuator offering to get the petition to accompany and support the application of the purchaser, and expressing the hope that the purchaser will succeed in the undertaking. That letter by some means or other is in the possession of the Department of Indian Affairs. A report is made upon the matter on the 29th of March, 1900, signed by W. A. Orr. I will not weary the House by reciting the whole of that report, but I will extract portions of it:

Section 6 of the land regulations makes provision for having land reported unfit for settlement examined and authorizes the superintendent general to dispose of such land with the timber thereon to the best possible advantage in the interest of the Indians without reference to occupation and improvements.

He thinks Mr. Wilson's application is worthy of very favourable consideration, and he recommends that the lands be offered to Mr. Wilson and his associates on the following conditions:

1. The lands and timber thereon to be explored and valuated by a competent valuator under oath and payment therefor, other than pine and spruce, to be made in cash at the time of sale at the value placed thereon.

2. Sections and broken sections reported for the whole or most part fit for settlement to be subject to the following settlement duties—One settler to be placed upon each section or broken section, a house at least 18 x 24 feet to be erected thereon and occupied for three years, and five acres in every hundred, or in that proportion, to be cleared and cultivated.

3. Sections or broken sections reported unfit for or for the most part unfit for settlement, not to be subject to settlement duties.

4. The sale to be made subject to the existing timber license covering the lands as regards pine and spruce which timber may be cut and removed by licensees within three years from date of sale provided the license is yearly renewed.

5. Pine and spruce not removed by licensees within three years, to be paid for by purchaser of land at value placed thereon by valuator.

6. The purchasers to establish a saw-mill at a point on Batachawana bay with a capacity of from three to five million feet per annum, and to give Indians the preference in employment of labour, when found suitable for the work to be performed.

7. All minerals, precious and base, to be reserved from sale, as well as the right to work mines and remove the mineral.

8. Letters patent to be issued after the expiration of three years from date of sale, upon proof being furnished of the due fulfilment of all conditions.

I commend that last clause to the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior. This report closes with the recommendation that Mr. McAuley might, as suggested by Mr. Wilson, the purchaser, be instructed to make the valuation. The superintendent general of Indian Affairs thought that he was fulfilling his obligation and the requirements of his solemn trust under section 6 of the regulations, by appointing, as a competent and reliable and above all disinterested person to report on those lands, the man who it was shown was in correspondence with the purchaser, and appointing him while he was employed by the purchaser and doing his work in conjunction with this very application, and who was recommended by the purchaser. Mr. McAuley's letter was before the department at that time, filed there before any offer was made by the department to Mr. Wilson to sell these lands. The land was offered to Mr. Wilson in the following letter:

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, April 18, 1900.

Sir,—In further reference to your letter of the 19th ultimo, inclosing an application to purchase certain lands in the Batchawana district, I am directed to inform you that the department is prepared to sell you the undisposed of lands in the townships of Haviland (except part on Batchewaugn Island), Fisher and the nine westerly sections of Tilley, on the following conditions:—

1. The lands and timber thereon to be explored and valued by a competent valuator under oath, and payment therefor other than pine and spruce, to be made in cash at the time of sale at the value placed thereon.

2. Sections and broken sections reported for the whole or most part fit for settlement to be subject to the following settlement duties: One settler to be placed on each section or broken section, a house at least 18 x 24 feet, to be erected thereon and occupied for three years, and five acres in every hundred, or in that proportion to be cleared and cultivated.

3. Sections or broken sections reported unfit or for the most part unfit for settlement not to be subject to settlement duties.

4. The sale to be made subject to the existing timber license covering the lands as regards pine and spruce, which timber may be cut and removed by licensees within three years from date of sale, provided the license is yearly renewed.

5. Pine and spruce not removed by licensees within three years to be paid for by the purchaser of land at value placed thereon by valuator.

6. The purchaser to establish a saw-mill at a point on Batchewana bay with a capacity of from three to five million feet per annum, and to give Indians a preference in the employment of labour when found suitable for the work to be performed.

7. All minerals, precious and base, to be reserved from sale as well as the right to work mines and remove the mineral.

8. Letters patent to be issued after the expiration of three years from date of sale, upon proof being furnished of the fulfilment of all conditions.

9. The purchaser to pay proportionate amount of cost of valuation for the land found to be unfit for settlement.

Will you be good enough to advise the department whether or not you and your associates are willing to purchase under the conditions above named.

I may say as regards condition nine, that the practice of the department has been to require a deposit to cover the cost of valuation of land under section 6 of the regulations.

Your obedient servant,
J. D. McLEAN,
Secretary.

Here is the answer:

Brandon, Manitoba, April 24, 1900.

J. D. McLean, Esq.,
Secretary Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have your communication of 18th instant and would say that myself and associates are prepared to complete on the terms outlined therein.

We take it, however, that the valuator appointed will have as his basis of valuation the present price of Dominion and Ontario government of like kind in the same district.

Would like to have valuator make his examination at an early date. Would like to be advised about that date as we would like to have a man go over the land with him.

I am your obedient servant,
W. F. WILSON.

Just as if the purchaser had not got sufficient of his own way when he secured the appointment of a man interested in seeing that he succeeded in his application, he must also have knowledge of the time when the valuator would go over these lands in order that he might have another of his friends to accompany the valuator and keep the latter within the line of instructions given by the purchaser.

The next in order is the question of valuation. It is important to see what this valuation consisted of. Well, the result of the valuation was this:

	Acres.
Township of—
Haviland..	10,701	$3,681 70
Fisher..	13,358	4,397 05
Tilley..	5,242	1,909 00
Total..	29,301	$9,987 75

Let me refer to the report upon this valuation by Mr. Orr of the department, dated 17th November, 1900. The terms of the sale were completed by the acceptance of the 24th April, 1900. The pretended valuation went on, and there is a memo. given by Mr. W. A. Orr to the department under date the 17th November upon the whole matter, from which I extract the following:

Mr. Agent Van Abbott, in his letter of the 31st ultimo, reports that he had a conversation with Mr. Thomas Bishop, foreman in the International Lumber Company, the timber licensees, regarding the quantities of timber on the land in question, and the estimate given by Mr. Bishop is very largely in excess of that reported by Mr. McAuley, as shown by statement attached hereto, but as Mr. Bishop's estimate is not under oath I do not think it should be taken as against Mr. McAuley's sworn statement.

He asks that Mr. Wilson be now advised that the department will sell the land on these terms. Here is a man, Mr. Thomas Bishop, foreman of the International Lumber Company, a man of great experience, a man who has worked on these very limits for several years—and the department was told, before that report, by a letter from the Indian agent, dated 31st October, 1900, in which he says that Mr. Bishop has worked on these limits for several years. Bishop's estimate of the value of the timber was far in excess of this so-called disinterested valuation. The department made the sale to Wilson for the lower amount, upon the paltry, flimsy pretext that because Mr. Bishop's statement was not on oath and Mr. McAulay's was, they would prefer Mr. McAulay's valuation. It never seemed to occur to these officials of the Indian Department that in order to make this purchaser pay a fair value they might have sent out, at a little expense, and got an affidavit from Mr. Bishop. That never occurred to the department, or if it did occur they paid no heed. They did not want to get any affidavit, because they wanted to favour the purchasers who were trying to get the land at the most nominal value and then get rid of all the conditions on which they had agreed to purchase it.

Another strange feature about the valuation is that unfortunately all Mr. McAulay's books and notes in connection with this marvellous valuation suddenly became lost. That is reported to the department by the Indian agent on the 27th October, 1905. All the notes and memo. upon which this interested valuator, nominated by the purchaser, made this wonderful valuation, were lost, destroyed by fire or in some other way unexplained, whether from accident or motive of expediency, the House can best judge.

The department had the lowest possible valuation placed upon that land. There is no man of any experience in that country that I have seen who has not said that it is a shame and a disgrace for the government that that land was sold, even under those conditions with regard to the development of the neighbouring country, conditions by which the farmers and the settlers would get an advantage in the opening of that country. Even under those conditions, I have heard it said by many competent to give an opinion that it was a shame and disgrace that so little was got for that splendid acreage. In the township of Tilley——

Mr. JOHNSTON. Louder.

Mr. BOYCE. Considering the source from which the interruption comes I will not regard it. I will say that I am trying to be as brief as possible and if the hon. member will not interrupt me except when it is really desirable, I will be obliged to him. In the township of Tilley, section 7, containing 646 acres, was estimated by the valuator at $425, with all the timber on it. The department sold it at $388. Section 8, containing 637 acres, was valued at $267; the department sold it at $262.50. Section 9 was valued at $247.50 and was sold by the department at $209.50. Section 18, containing 317 acres was valued at $111 and sold at $91. Section 4, containing 647 acres, was valued at $285 and sold at $190. Section 5, containing 644 acres, valued at $212.50 was sold at $175. Section 6, stated by the valuator to contain 565 acres, was valued at $206, but the department sold that section containing 644 acres at $169; so that upon that section there were 79 more acres and yet it was sold at $37 less than the value put upon it by the valuators. The same thing runs through a good many of the lands which I have cursorily touched upon. Let me call the attention of the minister to one particularly significant circumstance. In the same township the s.w.¼ of the n.w.½ of section 17 and the w½ of the s.w.¼ of section 17, containing 40 acres, realized about $4 an acre to this department. But when the valuator for the purchases by Mr. Wilson and his very acceptable associates valued a portion of the same section, all he could see of the value was 34 cents an acre. A great deal of time elapsed in correspondence with the department. Mr. Wilson was not as brisk as he might have been at the first in completing the purchase at the valuation, and we find that the department had to ask several times for him to exercise some haste in closing up the matter. It will be noted that on the 20th of April, 1900, Mr. Wilson writes to the department and asks to hasten the application as he desires to attend to the erection of the mill. This is before the application is accepted. A part of the amount, the sum of $500 on account of purchase is paid on the 5th of May, 1900. After the valuation is made, Mr. Wilson seems to be thinking the matter over very seriously and the department is reminding him about it. On the 24th of June, 1901, Mr. Orr, of the department, reported that the land had been sold to Mr. Wilson and had been withdrawn from sale with a view to allowing Mr. Wilson to bring the whole question of his application before the minister, and it was understood from him when he was in Ottawa in the preceding February that the purchaser proposed bringing it to the attention of the minister. On the 25th of June, 1901, the department wrote to Mr. Wilson that unless action was taken to comply with the terms of sale the department would have to take into consideration the placing of the lands again in the hands of local agents. On the 29th of June, 1901, Mr. Wilson writes to the department that he is advising with his associates and will write later. On the 19th of August, 1901, a memo. is made by Mr. Orr in regard to an application from Mr. Wilson to be relieved of a portion of these lands, reported to be unfit for settlement. This is accepted, the memo of 19th August reading in this way:

> Approved on the grounds that the land is fit for settlement and adjoining settled portions of the township. It is understood that this matter will be disposed of in the course of a couple of months.

Taking into consideration that the transaction was not closed until some time in the year 1906, five years afterwards, this memo seems extraordinary.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BOYCE. When you left the chair at one o'clock, I was proceeding to show that after the valuation had been made, the department was urging the purchasers to complete the sale in terms of the application by payment of the purchase money immediately after valuation. In a number of letters which I will not read at length, the purchasers were urged by the department to close. On December 6, 1901, a memorandum was sent to the department by Mr. Orr saying the matter had stood for a considerable time, and should be closed at an early date. On December 7, 1901, the department wrote to Mr. Wilson, the purchaser, that it would hold the application in abeyance two months. That is from December 7, 1901, to February 7, 1902. Immediately after that, an application was made for the same land, or a portion of the same land, by another purchaser who proposed to establish a hardwood industry in that district, but he was told the land was not open for sale. Then the same delay goes on down to February 13, 1902, when the department again urged the purchaser to close the transaction; again on June 20, 1902, when the department urged that the transaction be closed. On June 24, 1902, the purchaser wrote that he was ill, but he would be able shortly to lay the matter before his associates at Brandon and have it closed. On January 12, 1903, the department again wrote to Wilson urging that the sale be closed up, and received the reply that he had been again away from home for a couple of weeks, and that when he returned he would take the matter up with his Brandon associates and have it closed at the earliest possible moment. I mention these dates for a reason. Something was going on during the time that the purchaser appeared to be doing nothing, and while the department was urging him to close by fulfilling the conditions. Now we come down to January, 1903. Up to that time the purchaser had been paying money in instalments on account of the land, and on May 29, 1903, he had so far completed this purchase that he only owed the department, exclusive of interest, about $500. On May 29, 1903, there comes a letter from Mr. Wilson, the purchaser, to the department which explains what has been going on in the meantime, and his reluctance to close.

Berlin, Ontario, May 29, 1903.

J. D. McLean,
Secretary Indian Affairs.

Dear Sir,—In reference to your letter to me of April 18, 1900——

That is the original offer of sale.

—would beg to submit that owing to the said lands in Haviland, Fisher and Tilley townships being very lightly timbered and the lands so rough and mountainous, it is practically impossible to get enough timber within reasonable hauling distance at any point on the said lands to warrant the erection of a permanent saw-mill, and would respectfully submit that clause 6 with reference to the erection of a saw-mill capable of cutting three to five million feet of timber per year, be withdrawn. The labour in lumbering, especially in a rough country like that, and in hardwood which cannot be floated down the streams, consists chiefly in getting out logs to the shore. A very safe proportion of the outlay would be 75 to 90 per cent for cutting and hauling the logs to the shore, and the balance for labour in the saw-mill cutting them into lumber. The only way I see it possible to take out timber without loss is either to put in a small portable mill that can be moved from place to place on the shore, or make the logs into rafts and tow them to a place like the Soo to be sawn into lumber.

Trusting that you will see your way clear to abrogate clause 6 so I will be able to work the land without loss.

Yours truly,
W. F. WILSON.

Now, Sir, what a farce is that letter. Note the first part of it, 'owing to the lands being lightly timbered and so rough and mountainous.' Refer back to his original proposition to the department to purchase those lands where he says that he has been over the lands and examined them, and he is very anxious indeed to establish a mill for the cutting of hardwood. It is his own proposition to establish a saw-mill on those lands capable of cutting 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 feet of lumber a year. Then it will be observed that he still suggests that he desires to work those lands, but that he desires to work them without loss. The correspondence shows that at the time he wrote this letter he had absolutely no idea whatever of working the lands, and in my judgment, from a careful perusal of the correspondence, I do not believe he ever had any idea of working those lands or of complying with the conditions imposed by the department; and I believe from the same examination that the department, that the officers of the department, that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs at that time, now the hon. member for Brandon, knew that the purchaser had no intention whatever of complying with these conditions, and that he only made them in order to give face to his application. That was dealt with by the department in this way. On June 20, 1903, Mr. Orr again made a memorandum to the department upon the letter just read, in which he suggests that if the permanent saw-mill clause is to be abrogated, that the suggestion of the purchaser be accepted, and that the following clause be added:

The purchaser to place and operate a portable saw-mill of large size on the lands purchased and to give Indians a preference in the employment of labour, when found suitable for the work to be performed.

Paring down the most important condition on which the land was sold. The condition suggested by the purchaser himself was communicated to him by Mr. Frank Pedley on the 22nd day of June, 1903, and in the same letter he is asked to pay the balance of the purchase money. I propose that we shall look behind the scenes and see what this purchaser did. He was under an obligation to plant an industry on this land which would be good for the district, good for the workman and good for the farmer, and I propose to show how anxious he was later on to remove these conditions and get the land freed from them. He says in his application that there was an American firm in there, that they were exporting logs and he asserted that if he and his associates had the property they would establish a sawmill and comply with the manufacturing conditions, so that the settlers as well as the Indians would have the benefit of a hardwood manufacturing industry on this land. What was he doing in the meantime? I refer to a letter, dated September 17, 1903, which reads as follows:

Chicago, September 17, 1903.

To the hon.
Minister of Crown Lands,
Toronto, Canada.

Dear Sir,—A gentleman by the name of Wilson living in Berlin, Ontario, wishes to sell us 26,000 acres of timber lands as per the inclosed map, lands being shown inside the red lines. The owner represents that the logs from this timber can be exported into the United States without export duties or timber dues of any kind from the Canadian government. I desire confirmation of that statement from your department and will be very much obliged if you will inclose same and forward to me by return mail in inclosed envelope and at the same time inclose the blue print which I hand you herewith. I desire your answer at the earliest moment possible and would be pleased with your prompt attention.

Yours very truly,
W. S. JOHNSON.

During the time that this purchaser was trying to get the mill clause abrogated it is shown by this letter that he was offering to sell the land to American firms and representing to them that the logs could be exported from Canada to the United States free of duty to the Canadian government, representing that he could avoid all manufacturing conditions and that he could avoid the very conditions upon which alone he could hope to get a patent of this land. That shows that the purchaser knew what the department was doing before the department had made any ruling whatever about this mill. Before he had accepted or rejected the alternative proposition of the department as to the erection of a portable mill in lieu of a permanent mill this gentleman knew what he could do with the department, he knew that he held some one in the department, perhaps at the top of the department, by the nose and he had confidence enough to go upon the American market and offer this tract of 20,000 acres free from all conditions, undertaking to say that there would be no export duty on logs to the Canadian government. That letter was written to the Minister of Crown Lands, Toronto, and forwarded to the Department of the Interior and, by the Department of the Interior, to the Indian Lands Department. It will be noted that the letter is dated on the 17th September. On the 19th September, just two days after the date of that letter, the purchaser replies to the letter to which I have referred, the letter of June 22, which is as follows :

Berlin, Ontario, September 19, 1903.

J. D. McLean, Esq.,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Sir,—Referring to letter of June 22, signed by the deputy superintendent general of Indian Affairs offering a substitution for clause 6 of the original agreement of sale for lands in Haviland, Fisher and Tilley, would say I am very much disappointed in the terms of the same. I have delayed commenting on it till I could see Mr. A. E. Philp, of Brandon, who tells me you assured him that by proper representation of the case you would abrogate clause 6. If he has misunderstood you and it is impossible to do away with clause 6 it simply means that we have thrown away our money. I inclose two letters that speak for themselves. Cedar is the timber of most value at the present time and what we based our hopes on mostly. Kindly advise me if there is not some way of abrogating clause 6 so as to give us a chance to work the lands in such a way as not to make a loss.

Yours truly,
W. F. WILSON.

On the same day a letter was written by the purchaser to the department in which he asks just exactly what the Chicago man to whom the land had been offered asks. He asks if the department would kindly inform him if there is any export duty on logs, timber or tan bark, or any other regulation prohibiting the export of timber from Indian lands to the United States. A reply to Mr. Johnson's letter is sent by Mr. Pedley :

Ottawa, September 22, 1903.

Dear Sir,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 17th instant, which was transmitted to this department by the assistant commissioner of Crown lands, relative to certain lots in the townships of Fisher, Haviland and Tilley which, you state, Mr. Wilson, of Berlin, Ontario, is desirous of selling to you and requesting information as to whether the timber can be exported to the United States free of duty.

In reply I have to state that Mr. Wilson has not completed the sale made to him, and, therefore, the patent for these lands has not been issued.

I inclose for your information a copy of the order in council of April 19, 1901, imposing 'the manufacturing conditions,' which will show the kinds of timber subject to the condition that it shall be manufactured in Canada, also the blue print which you asked to have returned.

Your obedient servant,
FRANK PEDLEY,
Deputy Superintendent General Indian Affairs.

W. S. Johnson, Esq.,
138 Washington street,
Chicago, Illinois, U.S.A.

Let us see for a moment what that means. What is there included in these words, the 'kinds of timber subject to the conditions'? Here is the Department of Indian Affairs with its superintendent general, its deputy superintendent general, and all the officers of the department presumably watching the interests and carrying out the duties of their respective positions ; they have a contract entered into which requires the manufacture of this timber into lumber in Canada, that the purchaser shall establish a mill for that purpose of a certain capacity, that he shall employ the Indians where possible and that he shall plant settlers on the land. Notice is given to the department that the purchaser is not complying with these conditions, that he is trying to abrogate them and that while the abrogation of the clause is under consideration by the department you have the department notified that this man is offering for sale in the United States the very same land free from all conditions which would prevent the export of logs to the United States. Would you say, Mr. Speaker, that that was a provident transaction entered into by a watchful, vigilant and honest Superintendent General of Indian Affairs? I think not. I think if the Minister of Interior of that time who occupied the position of Superintendent General of Indian Affairs had been honestly desirous of properly performing the duties of his department, if he had been desirous of maintaining the position of this government as trustee of the Indians, if he had been desirous of carefully guarding the interests of the district in which these lands were located, of the settlers and of those who were to get the benefits from the fulfilment of these conditions, from the establishment of that mill, he, when he got that letter, first, asking for the abrogation of the mill clause, and, secondly, followed by the letter from the Chicago man when the land was offered to him free from any conditions, would have said: Mr. Purchaser, you cannot have this land except upon the conditions stated in the application.

Would he not, had he desired honestly to adhere to the contract, itself, have notified the Chicago man at the same time that he told him the purchaser had not received his patent, that the patent could only issue and that the agreement was on condition that the mill should be erected and the logs cut into lumber in Canada and that the conditions of the agreement on which alone the land could be patented were such as to prohibit the export of timber from those limits in the log? But what of the regulations themselves? Here is an order in council dated April 9, 1901—a very significant date in connection with this transaction. The transaction was entered into in the latter part of 1900, and all this time the purchasers were being pressed to pay their money, the valuation had been made and the department was anxious to have it completed. It is shown by later correspondence that the land was offered for sale to American firms, that it was being held purely for speculative purposes, and we find on April 19, 1901, His Excellency in Council assenting to an order fixing manufacturing conditions on timber cut on Indian reserves and Indian lands in Ontario. These regulations are signed by His High Mightiness, Clifford Sifton, Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. I shall not read the conditions. They refer first to pine and second to spruce or other soft wood trees or timber. Whenever other wood than pine is mentioned, the regulations are careful to mention soft wood trees or timber not being pine. The regulations are careful not to mention but to except anything in the nature of hard wood, and hard wood is the very timber which was on this land and an industry for the manufacture of which it was a condition precedent to this application these purchasers should establish upon this land. The deputy was notified by Mr. Wilson that he would consent to nothing, that he would consent only to the employment of Indians at the current rate of wages if it was found they were suitable. The result of it was that the clause containing the manufacturing conditions and provision for the establishment of a mill was abrogated and struck out of the contract.

On November 5, 1903, Wilson says:

> I presume now that the saw-mill clause is arranged that there will be no objection to issuing the patent for the lands.

In the same letter he says:

> The matter of issuing patent for the lands was discussed between Mr. McLean and Mr. Philip some time since and Mr. McLean was favourable to it.

He gets a reply from McLean, who evidently is desirous of fulfilling his duty as acting deputy Superintendent of Indian Affairs. The letter is dated November 27, 1903:

> Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th instant, regarding the issue of patent for lands applied for you in the Batchawana bay district and in reply would call your attention to the last paragraph of letter addressed to you on the 2nd instant, from which you will see that there is still a balance of purchase money due and unpaid of $415.80. Upon payment of the above sum a sale will be duly made in accordance with the conditions specified in letter addressed to you on the 18th April, 1900, varied only as regards clause 6 and under which arrangement letters patent can only issue after expiration of three years from date of sale, upon due fulfilment of all conditions.
> (Sgd.) J. D. McLEAN.

Section 6 of the regulations having been abrogated, the next step is to pare down the conditions with regard to existing timber licenses. The purchaser then sets himself assiduously to work to get rid of the conditions and finally succeeds in getting rid of the conditions which make his purchase subject to any timber license.

Then the purchaser and his friends seem to have become anxious, as on March 11, 1905, A. E. Philp, one of the associates of the purchaser and one of the guarantees of this land by patent from the Crown, was in Ottawa. Here is a letter from him:

> Brandon, Manitoba, March 11, 1905.
> Frank Pedley, Esq.,
> Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.
> Dear Sir,—With further regard to our conversation regarding this matter would point out that I was correct in stating that the clause relating to a saw-mill had been entirely eliminated. I wrote Mr. Wilson regarding this and he had forwarded a copy of your letter to him of 6th November, 1903, which I inclose and which you will see disposes of that question.

Now regarding the lessees, I trust you will be able to advise me that the solicitor general holds that your notice to quit was sufficient and that patent will issue.

The purchaser has been anxious up to this time that the patent should be delayed, but now Wilson is very hostile over the delay in closing.

He insists that when he paid, he paid his money to the department some three years or more ago, he paid it in full of the amount due on Haviland township, and that the patent in any event should issue for that portion.

Yours truly,

A. E. PHILP.

What that gentleman wants now is a patent from the Crown, if it is for only a portion of this land, anything for a patent. The political situation at this time seems to be significant. I find that on March 1, 1905, the Hon. Clifford Sifton, then occupying the position of Minister of the Interior, and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, found it necessary to resign from that high office in emphasizing those high and lofty principles of public morality and public rectitude which it is said have always dominated his career. He resigned his portfolio and at once these purchasers became frenzied with anxiety to get their patents and to get the lands at once out of the hands of the Crown. So soon as this mighty king who had dominated the Department of the Interior during the preceding years was about to abdicate his throne, these gentlemen were evidently afraid that there might rise up in the department another king 'which knew not Joseph.' Well, Sir, they did not get their patent just then, and they were somewhat disappointed at not getting it. There was some little question as to the delay which was occasioned by the purchaser whittling away at these conditions. However, the matter was referred to the Department of Justice, not upon the question of interest, but upon the question of the timber limit. On the 14th of April, 1905, Mr. Philp was again in Ottawa, and it is a far cry from Brandon to Ottawa. In March and April he was down twice to get the patent for these lands and to hurry it up, and on the 14th of April the department writes to the Deputy Minister of Justice stating:

Mr. Philp, of Brandon, called at the department to-day and was very anxious to have an early reply as to the decision of the Department of Justice in that matter.

Well, the Department of Justice gave a decision with regard to the timber limit, and at the same time drew the attention of the Indian Department to the fact that this sale had been made on the 24th of April, 1900, and that interest must be paid on the purchase money. The result of that was that Mr. Orr makes another memorandum on the 28th of April, in which he says:

The other conditions of sale having been complied with——

Although they had not been complied with at the time.

—the purchasers would appear entitled to receive letters patent for the land, reserving minerals, upon payment or remission of above interest and of the value of pine and spruce.

And a memorandum is sent to the purchaser saying that he owed to the department $1,167.32, balance of interest on purchase money—that during the time he was delaying he should pay interest on his purchase money. It appeared to be a considerable delay that the department was subjected to; but Wilson, at the same time, objects, and the result is that my hon. friend, the present Minister of the Interior, possibly with not a very careful examination of the file, possibly upon some one else's recommendation, possibly upon the statement of some one else whose word he was obliged to rely upon, as he had so recently come into the department, advises that this interest be remitted altogether. On the 12th of February, 1906, there is a recommendation by the Hon. Frank Oliver, as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, which is very interesting in view of the facts. I do not associate the name of the hon. gentleman in any invidious manner with this recommendation, because I feel that he was trusting to the representations of those who had been administering the department before him, and this was one of those numerous legacies which were left to him to carry out. This recommendation is as follows:

Department of Indian Affairs,
Ottawa, February 12, 1906.

His Excellency the Governor General in Council.

The undersigned begs to report, in connection with a sale of the land on the Batchawana Indian reserve to Mr. W. F. Wilson and associates, of Berlin, Ontario——

He has made a mistake—it should be Brandon, Manitoba.

—which was carried out on November 21, 1900, that, although the land was purchased by Mr. Wilson and his associates for the purpose of securing the timber thereon, no timber has been removed by them owing to a misunderstanding as regards their rights to operate; and consequently the purchasers have not had the possession nor use of their property.

The final instalment of purchase price was paid on April 12, 1904, and, in view of the circumstances above mentioned, and of the fact that the purchasers paid a fair price for the land, it is considered that the charging of interest on the unpaid principal to the above date would be excessive.

The undersigned would therefore recommend that, under the provisions of section 141 of the Indian Act, as added thereto by section 8 of chapter 35, Victoria 58-59, authority be given for the remission of interest in connection with the sale referred to.

FRANK OLIVER,
Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

And accordingly the interest was remitted. Mr. Philp writes on the 24th of August from Brandon to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs informing him that 'Mr. Wilson has sold the property, and has asked me to instruct you to issue the patent direct to him.' He wants the patent issued to William F. Wilson, of Berlin, manufacturer; D. Anson Reesor, of Brandon, merchant; and Albert E. Philp, of the same place, barrister-at-law. That, after some delay, is carried out, and the patent of these lands is issued to these three gentlemen.

Now, I want for a moment to set before the House a statement of exactly how the matter worked out, so far as the purchase money is concerned, having regard to the changes which were made from time to time by the purchaser with the very easily obtained consent of the department. The valuation reported to the department by this highly disinterested valuator, nominated by the purchaser and appointed by the department, was $9,987.75; the interest, which was worked out by the Department of Justice as owing by the purchaser, amounted to $1,167.32; the valuation of the pine and spruce not removed by the licensee, and payable by the purchaser under section 5 of the agreement, amounted to $704, making the amount payable under the agreement $11,859.07; whereas the department only received from the purchaser $9,017.50, so that the department lost $2,841.57, six years' delay, and an abrogation of every one of the conditions upon which the purchase was entered into; a patent was issued clear and free to the purchasers without asking proof of any one single condition. I lay it to the charge of the hon. Minister of the Interior who sits in this House to-day that he permitted that patent to issue during the period of his administration of office, whether upon some one's recommendation or not, without seeing to it that the conditions had been performed, and that the letter of the contract upon which the patent should issue had been performed. The matter did excite some little comment and criticism. It excited criticism from a member of this House sitting behind the Minister of the Interior, and a gentleman who has done, or been interested in, lumbering in Algoma. I find this letter on file:

House of Commons,
Ottawa, May 30, 1905.

Frank Pedley, Esq.,
Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I have your favour of the 19th together with the full information asked for, and which I assure you is sufficient in every way. I have also been informed that a large tract of Indian land was recently sold for the sum of thirty cents per acre. Is it possible that such a transaction was put through? If so, would you mind giving the names of the purchasers and the quantity of land purchased? No further particulars will be required.

Thanking you for the same, I am,

Yours sincerely,
D. A. GORDON.

What answer did Mr. Gordon get to that?

Department of Indian Affairs,
June 2, 1905.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your communication of the 30th ultimo, I beg to say that in 1900 a tract of land in the townships of Fisher, Haviland and Tilley, containing about 29,300 acres, was sold to W. F. Wilson and his associates at a price based on a sworn examination and valuation of each section, which price averaged about thirty-four cents per acre, the sale being made on specified conditions, pine, spruce and all minerals being reserved from the sale.

Yours very truly,
FRANK PEDLEY,
Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

The minister must know that the deputy superintendent mis-stated the facts in this letter, because the essential condition of that sale having been abrogated, the deputy superintendent general concealed that from a member of this House who desired the information. He informed this member that the sale was made on specified conditions when he knew that these conditions were entirely abrogated.

I have shown conclusively by the correspondence that three years before the patent is issued, these men were trying to get rid of the conditions and sell the same land in the United States free of conditions. The department was aware of that and assisted them in getting rid of the conditions and the spirit and letter of its own order in council of April, 1901, knowing that their removal would result in a sale being made. Before the patent is used a sale had been made. Let me give the figures to show the profits realized by these purchasers from the Crown on the sale they made to these Americans.

Township of Fisher—
Purchase price to the department	$ 3,681 70
Price of re-sale by the purchasers to the American firm before the patent was issued	37,346 06
Net profit to purchasers	$ 33,664 30

Township of Haviland—
Purchase price to department. ..	$ 4,397 05
Purchase price paid by Americans to the purchasers from the Crown, before the patent was issued or concurrently therewith.	49,000 00
Net profit to purchasers..	$ 44,602 95
Township of Tilley—
Purchase price to department. ..	$ 1,909 00
Paid by Americans on the re-sale before the patent issued or contemporaneously therewith.. ..	15,481 00
Net profit..	$ 13,572 00
Total purchase price..	$ 9,017 50
Total re-sale price..	101,830 00
Net profit..	$ 91,812 50

And not a stick removed or a tree cut—not a dollar spent on those limits; not one condition upon which that contract was entered into performed by these gentlemen.

Referring again to section 6 of the regulations, my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior will see that I am right when I say that section 6 contemplates the sale being made with the concurrence of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, absolutely in his discretion, upon such terms and conditions as he may see fit to impose. But the sale can only be made on the report of a reliable and disinterested person, and then it must be disposed of with the timber and other advantages to the best possible advantage of the Indians. If that land was worth $101,830, to be paid in hard cash by the Americans after examination, report and valuation, it was certainly worth that amount when valued by the disinterested gentleman appointed at the instance of these purchasers in 1899-1900. That money was stolen from the Indians. It belongs to the Indian Trust Fund. The purchasers have no right to it and it ought to be restored. There ought to be restitution of that amount or some restitution, having regard to the value of this territory which was alienated in this extraordinary manner.

I was proceeding to show to the Minister of the Interior what the section contemplated as to application—this whole transaction by the Indian regulations, was to be separated entirely from sale of land by a local agent. A local agent, of course, would have no jurisdiction whatever over a transaction of this kind, it had to be made by the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs who had to proceed in the manner specified by the regulations. Then, we see the application put in the name of A. H. Gale, who hailed from Oxford, England, and wrote from Toronto and gave his address as Brandon, Manitoba. We see that letter tucked away in the local Indian agency in Sault Ste. Marie. Why was it put in in this clandestine, peculiar and sinister manner? Gale knew the law, for, in his letter, he mentions the section of the regulations under which the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and he alone, could deal with this transaction. Was there any motive in it? Was it done at any one's suggestion or request? Was it done at Mr. Wilson's request or at that of any one higher in authority or closer to the department than Mr. Wilson? If it was, then surely the members of this House, the members of the government and the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) himself cannot afford to neglect it. If this sale originated in fraud and if this fraud was allowed by the officers of the department, resulting in the net profit to these parties of $90,000, surely that is a circumstance that no hon. member of this House, mindful of his oath of office and realizing his representative responsibilities, can afford to disregard. Let us see if there be any explanation of why this application was put in in this peculiar manner, tucked away in this local agent's office and not brought to the attention of the superintendent general direct and filed in his department. The application of Mr. Gale was not proceeded with. You will see from the correspondence I have placed on record that the application was made by Mr. Gale and he gives his address 'care W. F. Wilson.' The patent and the subsequent correspondence and all the negotiations were with W. F. Wilson, A. E. Philp and D. Anson Reesor, of Brandon. And the patent issued without regard to Gale so far as one can judge from the correspondence, and without regard to his application which lay in the office of the agent in Sault Ste. Marie. And W. F. Wilson, A. E. Philp and D. Anson Reesor profited to the amount of $90,000 by the re-sale. What is the association between Mr. Gale and these lucky purchasers? I will now put in the link. Here is a letter that I have extracted from the files, and hon. members can conclude for themselves as to whether this may be the link or not:

Brandon, Manitoba, April 20, 1900.

J. A. Smart, Esq.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Re my application for timber land in Batchawana bay.

In my previous letter inclosing a letter from Mr. McAuley, I mentioned that the petition referred to in McAuley's letter meant a statement that the lands referred to were in most part unfit for settlement.

I find, however, by looking over my correspondence that he refers to a petition which he can get signed by all the settlers in the district asking the government that we be allowed to purchase the land. We can also furnish a statement sworn to by all the settlers in the district that the land in most part is unfit for settlement.

I wish you would give this matter your earnest attention as no time is to be lost in preparing for the season's operation as I will necessarily lose considerable time preparing to get away from my business here to attend to the erection of a sawmill, &c.

You will notice an application was put in by A. H. Gale dated July 25, 1899, covering all the lands in the district. This, however, will not interfere with my application as Mr. Gale is with me in the matter and we can work under either application. Mr. Sifton wished the application put in Mr. Gale's name at the time.

Please bear in mind that the license of the St. Maurice Lumber Company expires on the 30th of this month and will doubtless be called on to consider a renewal of same even though all pulpwood has been removed, and I trust you will consider its bearing on my application before doing so.

Yours truly,

W. F. WILSON.

'Mr. Sifton wished the application put in in Mr. Gale's name at the time.' Mr. Sifton—the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, the high trustee for the Indians, who, under section 6, had great discretion as to whether he would sell or not sell Indian lands, and who alone had the judging of applications of that character and the imposition of terms and conditions which would obtain the best possible advantage in the interests of the Indians—he, it appears, is a party to the sinister, clandestine application, not sent to himself, not presented to his department, but filed away in the local office in Sault Ste. Marie. For what purpose this was done goodness only knows, except this, that the application of Gale covered all the unsold Indian lands in that part of the district and the subsequent application of Wilson—who, by his own statement, had gone over the land and examined it—and who had the opportunity for nine months to select and narrow down his application to what he wanted. Where is the significance? Leave that letter as it is, carrying with it what information it does; admit for the moment that W. F. Wilson was not justified in saying that the hon. Superintendent General of Indian Affairs had directed that application and had wished it to be in the name of a man who had nothing whatever to do with the transaction—admit all this, and what do we find? Did the department recognize it? The statement went to the Deputy Minister of the Interior, Mr. J. A. Smart, who was very close to the then Minister of the Interior, Hon. Mr. Sifton, if one can judge from evidence that has been adduced before commissions of this parliament. That letter went to him. Did he show it to Mr. Sifton? Was it acted upon? Yes, it was acted upon in the Department of the Interior, it was forwarded to the Indian Department and whatever rights Gale had in that application were, upon the statement contained in that letter, by the wish of this high monarch, Hon. Clifford Sifton, transferred to, vested in and patented to Messrs. Wilson, Philp and Reesor to reap the profits. Is that significant enough for my hon. friend? If not, let me place some more significant facts before him. Who is Mr. A. E. Philp? He is a barrister-at-law, of Brandon, Manitoba. I need not tell this House what association he had with the then Minister of the Interior and Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. He was his partner, his law partner, connected with him in business transactions, very loyal to him, a hard worker in his election, a close political friend and a close adherent to the right hon. gentlemen, and a man who was down here just at the time when Mr. Sifton was resigning his office, clamouring to get a patent, frenziedly anxious that the will of the people should be carried out with regard to the domain of the Indians, and that the conditions of the sale should be performed. There, Mr. Speaker, is the transaction in a nutshell. Let us see how it is worked out in a summary:

1. A blanket application (Gale's), while preliminary selection made by purchaser: and valuator chosen by him and arranged with.

2. A restricted area applied for by Wilson after inspection, and a valuator nominated by applicant and appointed by the minister.

3. The department's proposition to sell subject to manufacturing and other conditions is made to and accepted by the applicant.

4. The purchaser's nominee is appointed by the government to value the land, and his valuation is sent to the department.

5. Indian agent concurrently informs the department that this is a low valuation, and that the valuation of an experienced lumberman in the district, who has had intimate knowledge of these lands, is far in excess of the valuation received.

6. Department rejects high valuation and accepts the lower one, and then reduces even the lower valuation.

7. After lapse of three years all manufacturing conditions of sale are removed so as to permit of the timber being exported to United States in the log.

8. Before abrogating these conditions department is made aware that the lands are being offered to purchasers in the United States.

9. Order in council of 1901 is passed, in which export of hardwood in the log is not prohibited or restricted.

10. Purchase is allowed to drift along from 1900 to 1906, during which time all conditions of sale disappear, and the land is being offered in United States markets.

11. Minister of Justice rules that interest amounting to $1,167.32 should be paid on the purchase money owing to delay in closing deal on recommendation of Minister of the Interior. This is remitted by order in council.

12. Before patent issues to purchasers they have arranged and completed a sale to United States firms of all the lands at a net profit to them of $91,813.50.

13. Patent issues to purchasers without any conditions.

14. Applicants and purchasers are (a) all political friends of Mr. Sifton, Minister of the Interior, who sold the land ; (b) one of them (A. E. Philp) his former law partner ; (c) and the others, D. A. Reesor and W. F. Wilson, active political workers and friends.

15. Mr. Sifton, then Minister of the Interior, directs or wishes original application for the lands to be put in Mr. Gale's name at the office at Sault Ste. Marie at the time.

16. By this transaction—

(a) The Indians are robbed of the true value of the land, the accrued interest thereon, and of the benefit of the manufacturing conditions, which would have provided them with labour.

(b) The settlers in adjoining lots lose value of improvement, roads and settlement, as well as the sawmill and work in the same.

(c) The district of Algoma loses an industry to which it was entitled, and its labouring men lose the work and its merchants the sale of material which would have resulted from its maintenance.

(d) The close political friends of the minister gain $91,813.50 without cutting a tree or doing any work of improvement or development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I notified the Minister of the Interior that I should speak about this matter, and I also drew it to the personal attention of the ex-Minister of the Interior, the man whose name I have mentioned, and who is irresistibly connected with this correspondence. He knew this matter was coming up, but he has not seen fit to houour the House with his presence. Why does he not think it of sufficient importance that he should be here to listen to a transaction of this nature? Perhaps this is a transaction beneath the dignity of so important a gentleman, perhaps that, on the occasions when he does visit this House, matters of more paramount importance attract him. It is only on such occasions that this gentleman, who came into this House like the rest of us, not endowed with too much of this world's goods, but now a very rich man, deigns to visit us ; it is only on very rare occasions that an equipage that almost puts into the shade the carriage of His Excellency the Governor General, rolls up to the door of this House and that hon. gentleman condescends to honour us with his presence. It is of that gentleman that I desire to say a few words, and in his absence I will say them to the right hon. gentleman instead. I have drawn to the attention of the right hon. gentleman the quotation—it is on 'Hansard'—which I will read again to refresh his memory. I quote from the London 'Economist' of the 9th of November last, in which these words are used :

> The worst his opponents can allege is that he has been remiss in not ordering an inquiry into the Interior Department and not dismissing those about him who make a vulgar display of riches acquired no one knows how, unless by official malversation on a grand scale.

I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman, after perusing these indisputable facts, after looking at the sinister way in which the then Minister of the Interior, whom he placed so high on the pedestal, and held up before this country as the Napoleon of the West, this minister who steps down from the office of Minister of the Interior in order to emphasize a great principle ; this minister who, if rumour speaks true, is shortly to be taken again to the political bosom of my right hon. friend—I wonder if the right hon. gentleman can read this evidence of record in the department and then say that there should be no inquiry into the transactions of the Department of the Interior, that nobody has been robbed, that no sinister dealing has taken place in that transaction whereby the public interests have suffered, and that officials high up in the department, even the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs himself, has profited, or his close personal friends have profited through his help, or through the originating mind of the hon. gentleman himself in initiating this great transaction, out of which so much money was made at the expense of the public domain?

Well, Sir, the right hon. gentleman made some professions as far back as 1893, and those professions were backed up by a gentleman, then a very modest young man, who came from the province of Manitoba and who addressed the Liberal convention, saying he was pleased to be there as representative of the youngest province of the Dominion, a young man himself in official life, as he stated. This hon. gentleman, at that great Liberal convention of 1893, was the seconder of this motion.

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

The hon. gentleman said on that occasion :

> Now, Mr. Chairman, I am called upon to second a resolution affirming again the Liberal principle of economy. I do not propose to lecture men who are my seniors in wisdom, as well as in years, upon the necessity of economy in connection with the administration of public affairs, but I wish to call attention to this fact, that, as Liberals, we have the right to say that we are the exponents of economy. Our opponents do not even pretend to be economical. Their principle is to get all the money they can from the people and distribute it amongst their friends.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that, comparing this extract from that speech of the hon. gentleman with the facts as they appear from the records in this matter, it is very clear that he has somewhat changed the principle which he there enunciated. He stated that it was the principle of his opponents to get all the money they could from the people and distribute it amongst their friends. The hon. gentleman has shown that he has followed that principle by getting all the money he could from the people and distributing it amongst his friends, if not himself. These were the principles which were affirmed by the right hon. gentleman. Time after time grave matters of mal-administration in the Department of Indian Affairs have been brought to the attention of the right hon. gentleman. In each case he has defended, or excused, or, if he has not defended or excused, and if he has been silent, he has been the first to rise in his place to vote down investigation, or the punishment of the offenders or that an inquiry should be held into the transaction referred to. Wherever there was a case of corruption the right hon. gentleman has defended or excused it. Where the public has been robbed he has voted down resolutions condemning the robbery. Where the public service was degraded he has denied an investigation and if public servants have been shown to have stolen from the people he has voted down inquiry, investigation, punishment or condemnation. The right hon. gentleman has lent his moral support to transactions as scandalous as this. He has upheld Siftonian deals, he has voted for them, he has approved them and if he does that and if he affirms before this House and the country that he does so approve of them, that he will not lend a hand to punish the offenders or even to inquire whether the accusations and information be correct, than I say that he is standing before this country at this hour, when he is about to ask for the re-endorsation of the people, as one who has not elevated public morality, as one who has not done that which he professed and promised to do, which he vowed that he would do and which he pledged himself to do in his great platform and in his great speech of 1903, which induced the people of Canada to entrust to him the reins of power. The right hon. gentleman is very fond sometimes in this House of making quotations from the sayings and speeches of the Hon. Geo. Brown. He will perhaps remember this quotation from that statesman's speech which is pertinent to the position in which he finds himself to-day:

If, sir, a public man avows certain principles, agitates those principles and seeks to overthrow a government to establish those principles, and when he attains power, laughs at his professions and casts his principles to the winds, he is aiming a blow at public morality.

I ask the right hon. gentleman to take those words to heart in conjunction with the very serious matter which I now commend to his attention and leave with him. There is not a fact that I have stated but which is referred to in the documents in his department. I am not responsible for any of them. Every one of these facts is set forth in the documents extracted from the Department of the Interior. How many more there may be that we have not seen I do not know, but I do know that there has been knitted together a case which the right hon. leader of the government cannot excuse and cannot justify. One by one these facts have been knitted together and they disclose a transaction which is absolutely indefensible. I have embodied in the resolution which I now propose to offer to the House these facts as they appear and which I will commend to the right hon. leader of the House. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move:

That all the words of the said motion after the word 'that' be struck out, and the following substituted in lieu thereof:

The government as trustees for the Indians is bound to sell Indian lands or timber, or other valuables thereon, for the best price obtainable, and to the best possible advantage of the Indians.

That the sale by the government of lands in the townships of Haviland, Tilley and Fisher, in the district of Algoma, with the timber thereon, containing 29,301 acres for $9,017.50 without competition to political friends who were thus enabled to reap profits amounting to $91,813.50,on re-sale of the said lands and timber made by them, before patent issued was not a sale for the best price obtainable, nor to the best possible interest of the Indians, but constituted a grave breach of trust by the government and deserves the condemnation of this House.

I have only to say in conclusion that we have recently had a most emphatic illustration of the wantonness of this sale in which there was no competition and no public advertisement. We had a sale by public auction on the 24th June of Indian timber limits which produced the magnificent sum of $871,000 which went into the Indian funds where it ought to belong in exchange for the timber. In this case, by private sale, $91,000 went into the pockets of the friends and an erstwhile partner among them of the former Superintendent General of Indian Affairs who made the sale.

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior). Mr. Speaker, I think it is proper, in discussing the question now before the House, to call attention to what must be very prominent in the minds of all hon. members. We have before us on the Order

Paper at the end of an eight months' session——

Mr. TAYLOR. For which the government are responsible.

Mr. OLIVER. Ten Bills of serious importance for the consideration of the House. We have Supplementary Estimates on the table for consideration amounting to something like $10,000,000, railway subsidies of possibly $10,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER—and we have also a proposition to guarantee certain aid to railways to the amount of something like $10,000,000. There is sufficient important business to claim the best attention of the House for the remaining period of the session, whatever it may be. To occupy the time of this deliberative body for two hours and a half in shrieking into 'Hansard' the elements of a future campaign address is neither more nor less than an outrage upon parliamentary propriety and the patience of the House. The hon. member knows that in making such a statement at such a time he must have peculiar freedom because no person could take the time or the trouble nor would the House submit to the time or trouble necessary to contradict or disprove the absurdities he has placed before us. My hon. friend, however, has shown himself wiser than the gentleman whose parable he has taken up, whose mantle he seems to think has fallen on his shoulders, the hon. member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames), the slander-monger in chief of our hon. friends opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that expression should be withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER. I withdraw it, I was so convinced of the truth of it——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman knows that it must be unreservedly withdrawn.

Mr. OLIVER. I have withdrawn it unreservedly.

Mr. FOSTER. There is too much of the woolly west in that.

Mr. OLIVER. The member for St. Antoine Division (Mr. Ames), if I am not allowed to use the word slander in connection with statements he made before the House, was unwise, he was not satisfied with making them here when there was not a fair opportunity of disproving them. He was so successful in his efforts on the floor of the House that he undertook to carry them further where they could be investigated with an opportunity of determining their truth or falsity, with the result that he has retreated from the House to make his peregrinations in the remote parts of Canada with his limelight, his camera, and his microscope. His usefulness in the House appears to have departed—and he has departed with it. The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce) is wiser in his generation, he is careful to delay his slander——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has heard a moment ago that that statement should not be used.

Mr. OLIVER. I withdraw the term, I shall use the expression 'unfounded and untruthful allegations.' He has chosen a time when the condition of business for the session does not admit under any circumstances dealing with this question either on the floor of the House or in the committee where it should be dealt with. If the one hundredth part of the noise that my hon. friend has made to-day were warranted by the facts and if he did desire to arrive at a knowledge of the facts, he has had eight months of this session, he has had from day to day the sittings of the Public Accounts Committee before which he could have brought his charges, to have proved, if possible, everything he has alleged here. I submit with due deference that allegation is not evidence, particularly at a time when such statements—and they would be grave statements if they came from a grave source—can not be dealt with as their gravity entitles them to be dealt with. My hon. friend must take it as he gives it. Having chosen to put forward these statements at a time when they cannot be proved or disproved he must accept the opinion that they are of but little weight and could not have been proved if he had brought them forward at a time when investigation would be possible.

Mr. FOSTER. He dare not investigate them.

Mr. OLIVER. My hon. friend is perfectly safe, there is no danger of investigation between now and the close of the session. My hon. friend has been here nearly eight months, he has been an active and energetic member of the House. The alleged facts he has placed before us are within a stone's throw of where he has lived for ten or fifteen years, but he chooses an opportunity, three days before the end of the session, to bring forward the statement he has made, and which I shall not call slanderous again.

I am somewhat at a loss to know just what my hon. friend's charge is. The allegation would seem to be that certain gentlemen lived in a place called Brandon. If that is a crime, then these certain men, Messrs. Wilson, Philp and Reesor, are residents of Brandon and must be condemned. Is it a crime that this land was sold? The land is of no use to the Indians unless it is sold, it is the price that the Indians want and not the land.

Mr. FOSTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. And so the land has to be sold somehow, somewhere,to some one, at some time. Thus, if I understand the matter correctly, it has been the practice of the department for twenty or thirty years, during part of which time my hon. friend was a member of the government, to make sales of Indian lands under certain circumstances. According to that practice a certain sale was made. Is that a crime? Is that the offence charged against the Superintendent of Indian Affairs of that day or whoever was responsible? If that is the crime, then we must admit they are guilty. Is it a crime that the land was sold at 30 cents an acre? The timber of value, that is, the pine timber upon it, had already been removed under a license which had covered this same area.

Mr. BOYCE. My hon. friend will pardon me. The land was sold subject to the provisions of a timber lease then in existence, and that was subsequently cancelled, so that the purchasers got the benefit of the cancellation.

Mr. OLIVER. I repeat that the land was sold subject to the timber license, and the licensees had exhausted their rights, and their rights were cancelled because they had no more rights to exercise, and the purchasers of the land paid extra for the balance of the pine timber that remained upon the tract, and the valuation of the timber was $66. So that the timber of value, the pine timber, had been cleared off before the sale was made. The minerals in the land were also reserved. So that what the purchasers got was the hardwood growing upon the land and the surface rights, for which they paid 30 cents an acre some eight years ago. Now, I am credibly informed that in all this vast area of New Ontario any person may at the present time go anywhere and buy any piece of land for 50 cents an acre, including the mineral rights and the timber rights except the pine timber, and that after performing certain limited settlement duties, and after a period of three years, he gets a patent for the land, including the pine timber. If it is a question of price, it seems to me that the Indians got a better price for their land that was sold eight years ago than the government of the province of Ontario is getting for the land that it is selling to-day. Under these circumstances the charge that there was something wrong in the sale at that price does not seem to be substantiated.

I am unable to follow all the charges which my hon. friend made. There was a charge that a man lived in Brandon; there was a charge that the land was sold; there was a charge that it was sold at a low price; there was a charge that it was afterwards sold at a higher price. It had been sold at a higher price, and it had been sold before the patent from the Crown had been issued. What is the charge in that statement of fact? When a sale is made, if the purchaser fulfils the conditions, the conveyance has to be given, although the property may increase in value. Now, my hon. friend is of the legal profession, and I do not think he will suggest that the Indian Department, having sold lands at a certain price, and the price having been paid, the department had any right to refuse the conveyance of these lands, no matter whether the right to them had changed hands or not. If he holds that view, it is a decidedly new doctrine to me, and in administering the Indian lands and the Dominion lands, I shall have to take new advice in order to be able to conform to the rule my hon. friend has laid down.

But a charge is that the land was sold at a higher price than it was purchased for. Now, I do not suppose that anybody buys anything as a commercial transaction without expecting to sell it at a higher price. That is what he buys it for; and does my hon. friend suggest that a sale having been made, if the value of the property increases, the sale must be cancelled? My hon. friend is not surely so absurd as to hold such an argument when it is stated in plain words. And yet, if there is anything in his charge, that is the position which he insists that the Department of Indian Affairs shall take. Well, let us try this question out by a parallel case. There is a member of this House who sits on the opposite side, a man of high repute, personal and financial, a man whose personal honour or whose business honour I think nobody in the House will question; I speak of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). This hon. gentleman was a member of a company which had the ownership of certain lands which had been granted to the Regina, Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway Company. So far as the matter has come to my knowledge, this hon. gentleman was the chief agent of his associates both in acquiring these lands and in disposing of them. At a certain time, I think in the year 1902, this company—I believe, acting through the agency of the same hon. gentleman—disposed of a quarter of a million of acres of the lands at I think $1.63 an acre. To-day that land is worth $5 or $10 or $15 or possibly some of it $20 an acre. Does my hon. friend suggest that the sale that was made in good faith at the highest going price and through the agency of the hon. member for West Toronto at that time, was a dishonest sale and should be cancelled because that land is worth more to-day than it was then? He would not suggest such a thing; he would say that anybody who would suggest it was not speaking with due responsibility.

And yet he stands up here and for two hours and a half he has shrieked into 'Hansard' denunciations of a certain transaction because the value of the land went up and was sold at a higher figure in a subsequent year. I submit that the position he takes is an absurd one. To say that because property has been sold at a certain figure at a certain time and afterwards sold at a much higher figure, the transaction is not honest, is to draw a conclusion utterly unwarranted. The hon. gentleman drew a comparison between the sale of land in these townships at Batchawana Bay and the sale which recently took place of the timber in the Dokis reserve. He pointed out that, in the first instance, the minister sold the land at thirty cents, and that, in the second instance, a comparatively small area of Indian lands was sold at $871,000. Sir, the comparison is far worse than that. In the case of the $871,000 sale, there was not a foot of land transferred at all. All that was sold was the right to cut the timber for ten years. It is quite possible that the tract to which the hon. gentleman alludes in the first place might have carried timber, but that timber had been cleared away, and to make a comparison between bare land, or more probably rock, and the timber on the Dokis reserve shows the absurdity of my hon. friend's argument from the beginning to the end, and it bears out the view that he would never have made the statement he did, had there been an opportunity to investigate the matter to a conclusion. I do not know that any more need be said. The transaction was in the ordinary line of business. It was just the same as those which had taken place in the department during the past twenty or twenty-five years. It differed from them in no particular except in this that some of these people lived at Brandon and that some of them wrote letters and some of them did not. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) has followed the example set him by the hon. member for St. Antoine division (Mr. Ames) and has imported into his statement of the case insinuations and suggestions entirely unworthy of being put before a deliberative body. The Indian lands are unquestionably a sacred trust. It is the duty of the government to administer them with the view of obtaining for the Indians their utmost value. These lands are looked upon by the public as a sacred trust, and the hon. gentleman is seeking to take advantage of that sentiment in making this most unfair attack especially at this period of the session. If he could prove that there was anything wrong done, he would have made a point, but he was careful to bring his accusation at a time when there could not be produced any proof.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Can the minister give any good reason why the land was not put up at public auction ?

Mr. OLIVER. This land was offered for sale in accordance with the practice of the department which had prevailed for twenty-five or thirty years or more. What was good enough in preceding years was still considered good enough when this sale was made. And because in the process of time conditions change and it becomes necessary to adopt new methods, that is no proof that the former administration was improper or dishonest. But my hon. friend jumped to the conclusion that because there has been a change of administration due to the changed conditions, there must have been something wrong with the previous administration. Nothing could be more unfair.

Mr. HAGGART. A few words in reply to the extraordinary defence of the Minister of the Interior. What is the charge ? The charge made by my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Boyce) is that the Department of the Interior, against the advice of the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, sold property belonging to the Indians, held by us in trust, for a sum altogether inadequate to its value. The hon. gentleman has tried to defend this by citing the policy of the government in the past. Well, if there is one sacred trust which the people of this country should fulfil to the utmost letter, it is that of the Indians. If there is one thing this or any government should be most careful to see to, it is that our wards, the Indians, should receive the highest value for the small moiety of property left to them in this country. There can be no doubt as to the accuracy of the statement made by my hon. friend from Algoma. There can be no doubt that certain parties, clearly connected with the ex-Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) got possession of these lands, belonging to the Indians, for a ridiculously low price, and the minister tries to justify this by saying that his predecessor, the ex-minister, (Mr. Sifton) only followed the precedent set him by previous administrations.

The justification pleaded by the minister is that he was following the usual course in the disposition of these Indian lands. I deny that. I give a most distinct and emphatic denial to the statement that it was the policy of the last government to dispose of these lands contrary to the very advice of the deputy superintendent general of Indian Affairs—who, in this case, it appears, declared in his report that the price for these lands was totally inadequate but was overridden by the Minister of the Interior of that day. And in this way these lands were disposed of, these lands which were held as a sacred trust by the government. I say it is a disgrace to the officers of the government and to the Minister of the Interior that such a thing should happen. Where is the authority for the Minister of the Interior to say that this was the mode by which these lands were disposed of in the past ? The policy of the late government was to ask for tenders for these lands. Nothing was more sacred in the eyes of that government than the trust they exercised in these Indian lands, and they did all in their power to see to it that the Indians got the very last farthing for all the lands that were disposed of. And not only were they careful to act according to the opinion of the chief officers administering the department, but they insisted that the Indians themselves should be a party to the surrender. I do not see anything of that kind here; certainly it was not stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce) nor was it shown by any of the documents he read that the consent of the Indians had been obtained for the sale of this property. But the bald fact stands out that parties closely connected with the Minister of the Interior of that day got control of these Indian lands, and, even before they had got the conveyance of them, they had turned them over at a profit of $90,000. And this government is trustee for these poor creatures who are not able to look after themselves, who at one time owned all the land of this country of which now but a pittance remains to them. And this is the way the Minister of the Interior of this government exercised the sacred trust reposed in him —defrauding these poor people of whom we are the trustees of the sum of $90,000. I say it is simply a disgrace to the management of the department that anything of the kind should occur. I say that my hon. friend from West Algoma (Mr. Boyce) did right to draw the attention of the House to the vulgar ostentation of wealth of these parties from one end of the country to the other, wealth obtained by means such as this. The people of Canada will soon have an opportunity to express their opinion of such transactions, and I hope and believe that the standard of morals among our people is such that the electors will punish such crimes as these, committed by those who have thus unworthily exercised the power of government.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I desire to say just a few words in response to the peculiar observations of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver). That hon. gentleman saw fit to apply some strong language to my hon. friend from St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Ames). There was good reason for his doing so. For if the minister has had certain workings of his department, which he would have preferred to conceal, exposed before this House and this country—

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if my hon. friend is in order in saying that I desired to conceal the workings of my department?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that that language is not in order.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to say distinctly that I do not wish to conceal any part of the working of my department that is rightly the property of the public.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as you find my remark to be out of order, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it. But I desire to say that it is this same hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) who stood up in his place here and declared that he would not bring down certain original documents which in the end he was forced to bring down. He stood in his place here and read a memorandum from his deputy, reading it as his own, which stated that these original documents should not be placed before parliament. Relying on a majority at his back in this House—

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman's statement as to that memorandum, I did not read it as my own statement, but as the advice received from my deputy. And, if I remember well, it did not say that these documents would not be brought down—very far from it.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) declared that they should not be brought down until a special vote had been passed for that purpose in this House; he declared that he proposed to abide by that memorandum and by the advice so received. But the hon. gentleman did not abide by that advice, because, in the end, the original documents were produced and laid on the table of this House without any special vote of the House being demanded.

Mr. OLIVER. I desire to correct the hon. gentleman——

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I want to be correct.

Mr. OLIVER. I am sure of it. I objected, and stated to the House my objection, to bringing down private documents to this House, which documents, on motions calling for them being carried, and on the documents being brought down in response to those motions, became part of the records of the House and were removed from being part of the records of the department. And I instanced the case of what had occurred during the session before, when, in response to a motion by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), certain original documents had been brought down which became part of the records of the House and ceased to be part of the records of the department though they were needed in carrying on the business of the department. And the motions of hon. gentlemen opposite requiring the production of original documents were amended so that these documents did not become part of the records of the House but were laid upon the table for inspection and returned to the department.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) laid great stress upon the circumstance that certain documents had not been returned. But he knew, and every one knew, that all he had to do was to stand on his feet for thirty seconds and move for an order to return these documents to the department,——

Mr. OLIVER. Precisely.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—but the hon. gentleman did not think it worth while to do so.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not think it my duty. The House had seen fit to make these documents part of its records. The House controls its own actions; and, if it saw fit to do this, certainly it was not for me to take control when control had been taken from me by the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I suppose the hon. gentleman is not so absolutely ignorant of the rules of this House as not to know that documents can be brought down only on motion by a member of the House. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver), as custodian of these papers, requires them back, it is his duty to move to that effect.

But this is only an incident. I was referring to the fact that the hon. gentleman had good reason, even in the absence of the hon. member for St. Antoine, to use strong expressions with regard to the course which that hon. gentleman has taken in this House. And the hon. minister (Mr. Oliver) has not heard the last of it. For, if I am not mistaken, he will hear something from that hon. gentleman in the west; and if he desires to meet my hon. friend from St. Antoine on any platform in the west, a proper amount of time will be given him to make his explanation of the administration of his department. The hon. minister referred to the postponement of this motion, but he did not see fit to say that it had been postponed at his own instance. On at least three different occasions to my knowledge, the matter has been postponed either by the action of the government, or at its request. His allusion to the circumstance that this matter has not been brought up——

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware—

Mr. R. L. BORDEN—was unworthy of the hon. gentleman and one in which, it seems to me, he ought not to have indulged.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not aware of having been the cause of the postponement of this motion, and I would like to know when the motion was first proposed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The day before yesterday there was an arrangement made for it, that was departed from, and another arrangement was made yesterday and that was again, at the suggestion of the government, altered and a previous arrangement to that, when it was said the hon. gentleman could not be present on account of a cabinet meeting, was the third to which I have reference. I do not know how many others there were. Under the circumstances, it did not seem to be a happy taunt from the hon. gentleman to speak of postponements. Why should it be postponed? There is no reason for it. My hon. friend, at the earliest opportunity, was ready to bring it on as soon as he had prepared the case and was able to speak upon it; and when he was ready to bring it on, there were the delays to which I have alluded. The minister refers to the lack of evidence. The evidence relied on by my hon. friend from Algoma is to be found in the records of the hon. gentleman's own department, brought down and laid upon the table of the House. What better evidence does he want than that?

Mr. OLIVER. Such part of the record as my hon. friend chooses to pick out and present.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Does the hon. gentleman say that there is any other portion of the record which qualifies that which has been alluded to by my hon. friend from Algoma?

Mr. OLIVER. The best way to answer that is to bring it before a committee of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. We do not usually bring these records before a committee of the House unless there is some fact to be investigated, and inasmuch as the facts were plain and open upon this record, and inasmuch as that portion of the record mentioned by my hon. friend from Algoma is not qualified, so far as I understand, by any other portion of the record, the observation of the Minister of Interior is absolutely beside the mark, and shows his utter incapacity to make any defence whatever to the statements of my hon. friend.

The minister says the statements are grave. He is right, and there has been no answer, except the complaint of lack of time. The minister has had notice of this motion four or five days.

Mr. OLIVER. I never had any notice of this particular motion. I had notice that my hon. friend proposed to bring up a motion in regard to Indian lands, but I had no notice that they were the Indian lands he has alluded to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I accept any correction of that kind.

Mr. OLIVER. That is not what I was objecting to at all. I objected to his bringing this question forward at a time when the press of the business of the session is such that it cannot be attended to fully, either on the floor of the House or in a committee of the House.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. There is no necessity for any committee of the House, there is a necessity for investigating the records of the department which have been laid upon the table. If he has any complaint that all the facts have not been brought out, I will undertake to stay here an additional day, and to give him all the time from the present until next Monday, or next Tuesday, or next Wednesday, to go thoroughly through these records and show whether any of the facts stated by my hon. friend from Algoma can be controverted by the records, or in any other way, by the Minister of the Interior.

What is the gravamen of the charge of my hon. friend from Algoma? I accept the comparison of the Minister of the Interior to the case of a private trustee. What would be thought of a private trustee, and where would he find himself, if, taking the trust property, he sold it upon the statement of a valuator selected by the purchasers, sold it under certain conditions, every one of which was afterwards abrogated, and finally handed it over for a sum of $9,000, although, before the deed was given by the trustee, the purchasers sold it to another person for $101,000? Where would any private trustee find himself under these conditions? In the first place, at the very earliest opportunity, any court of the land would hold this action up to the severest condemnation and would order immediate restitution, with interest. That would be the first proceeding. The next proceeding probably would be, if certain circumstances might fairly be taken into account, that such a trustee would probably be called upon to answer in the criminal courts upon a charge of malfeasance in his office of trustee. Why, the circumstances are almost unbelievable. If any hon. gentleman in this House had arisen and made the statement, without being able to base it upon the records of the Department of the Interior that this particular series of transactions had taken place in that department one would have said that the man was drawing upon his imagination. And yet every line and every word he mentioned can be substantiated, and has been substantiated by my hon. friend from Algoma, by a direct reference to the records of the Department of the Interior. There is small wonder that the Minister of the Interior takes up his half hour in making complaints as to the period at which this matter was brought to the attention of the House, and endeavouring to cast slurs and aspersions upon an hon. member who is not here to defend himself, and who needs no defence against any attacks that can be made upon him by the Minister of the Interior.

The Hon. gentleman had the temerity to refer to private transactions, and amongst others, to the transactions of my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) in connection with the sale of certain lands which were afterwards acquired by the gentleman who had formed themselves into that wonderful corporation known as the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. If I am not mistaken, when those lands were sold—I have for this the word of the member for West Toronto, as well as the records of the department itself—when these lands were sold it was not known that the area within which they might be selected had been enormously increased by an order in council of this government, and that added very materially to the value of these lands. I do not doubt if the member from West Toronto had known at the time, as he has assured me he did not know, that that area had been so extended, the price he would have asked for those lands would have been very much greater. Further than that, what is the idea of the hon. gentleman in comparing a sale of agricultural lands in the west of Canada to the sale of these lands? He knows that the value of those lands, sold, as he says, by a company in which my hon. friend from West Toronto is interested, has been since increased by settlement, and the development of that country by the influx of settlers. No such conditions prevailed in the district we are now discussing, so far as I am aware, at all events, they did not prevail up to the time of the resale by the purchasers. Will the Minister of the Interior tell me this? What was it that increased the value of those lands from $9,000, the price received by these fortunate grantees from certain gentlemen from the United States, what was it that occurred to increase the value? Can any one doubt that if these lands had been put up at public auction, and if these gentlemen had had an opportunity to bid for them, the results would have been very different?

Another instance that is most startling in connection with the matter, is this: There was more than one report made to the government as to the value of these lands. There was a report made by Mr. McAuley, the gentleman nominated by the very men who were purchasing from the government. That is said to have been a sworn valuation. There was another report brought to the attention of the head of the department by a man who had means of knowledge as to the value of the property. We do not know what that man's estimate was; it does not appear as far as I am aware, but it does appear in the records of the department and by the report of the deputy head of the department that the report of that independent man placed the value of this land very much above the amount stated in the report of the valuator selected by the purchaser. Imagine a private trustee acting with respect to a property which was not his own, acting under a trust, having before him two reports, one a report made by persons to whom the land was to be sold and the other the report of an independent person,imagine him having it brought definitely and distinctly to his attention that the report of the independent person was very much larger in its estimate of the value than the report of the man who had been selected by the purchaser, imagine that trustee, in face of these circumstances, putting aside all further inquiry or investigation into the value of this land, disregarding the report of the independent valuator and taking the $9,000 report of the man who had been selected by the purchaser—imagine that in the case of a private trustee and come to a conclusion, if you please, as to what would be the result of an investigation by the courts into the conduct of any trustee such as that which has been described. The circumstances in the case being as they are I am bound to say that in my estimation, after listening with the utmost possible attention to the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, I have heard not a single word uttered by him in defence or justification of the case which has been made out so clearly.

Mr. J. G. TURRIFF (East Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to say anything on this subject had it not been for some outside remarks that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) has brought in and to which I wish to refer for a moment. The leader of the opposition has said that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) made the statement that he was not aware, that, when the company of which he was the principal member sold some railway lands to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company, this government, by order in council, largely increased the area of the lands and therefore made them more valuable.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not say that it was when the sale was made, but I said that when the hon. member for West Toronto negotiated that sale, as the Minister of the Interior has told us, he was absolutely in ignorance of the fact that the area had been extended.

Mr. TURRIFF. That statement of the hon. member for West Toronto is an absolutely false statement in every shape, form and manner.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Shame; order.

Mr. TURRIFF. I have made the same statement in the House before and the statement I make is absolutely true.

Mr. BENNETT. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot very well rule on that point. A statement is made by one hon. member as to what another hon. gentleman has said and the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) states, apparently from personal knowledge, that the statement is untrue or false. I cannot very well rule that that is out of order.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will say it is absolutely untrue if that will suit hon. gentlemen any better. I will say further that before the hon. member for West Toronto made the sale to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company the Minister of the Interior of that day, on two different occasions a year apart wrote to the solicitor of the hon. member for West Toronto, the man who was handling the case that they had against the government, asking the government to give them cash in lieu of land, sending him a map and stating that there had been set apart 10,000,000 acres of land in addition to what they already had had set apart in 1887.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. May I ask the hon. gentleman who the solicitor is to whom he refers?

Mr. TURRIFF. I refer to Mr. Creelman who is at the present time the solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who, at that time, was solicitor for Osler, Hammond and Nanton, and who had brought action against the government to force the government to pay them cash in lieu of land on the ground that the land was absolutely unfit for settlement. In order to give them a better opportunity of locating their land, the government in 1900 and 1901, set apart four different blocks in addition to what had already been set apart, out of which they might select the 800,000 acres which were coming to them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Who had brought action?

Mr. TURRIFF. The Regina, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railway Company.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have not the records before me, but I have investigated the question very carefully. I have looked over every scrap of paper I could find in two very large returns. I looked up the case after it had been stated in the House that notice had been given, and I can find no such notice had been given, and I can find no notice given to any solicitor which would give the information which the hon. gentleman has stated. I examined the returns with great care because that statement had been made and I could find no notice such as the hon. gentleman has spoken of.

Mr. TURRIFF. If the hon. gentleman will get a copy of the bill of rights that was presented by Osler, Hammond and Nanton on behalf of the railway he will find copies of these letters of the Minister of the Interior to their own solicitor and copies of their letters from their own solicitor back to the Minister of the Interior giving the reasons why they would not take the land in these four new blocks, and saying that they had sent their inspectors over that land. Not only did the hon. member for West Toronto know that the land had been set apart, but they sent their inspectors over the land, their inspectors examined most of this new area of 10,000,000 acres and they reported back to the government that in the additional area they were not able to find enough land which would come up to the requirements of their contract, that is to say, which was fairly fit for settlement. The Minister of the Interior notified them that if they could not find enough land within these four blocks and within the original blocks set apart by order in council they could then go outside of these blocks into any land which had not been selected by other railway companies and take what they could get.

Mr. TAYLOR. What has this to do with robbing the Indians?

Mr. TURRIFF. It was the hon. leader of the opposition who brought this matter up. I am only replying to a statement made by your hon. leader to show that he has been misled by the hon. member for West Toronto and I am just putting the facts of the case before the House. It has nothing to do with the Indians, it has nothing to do with the matter that is under discussion, but it was not I who brought it up; it was the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend does not desire to mislead the House, I am sure.

Mr. TURRIFF. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I did not introduce it; the Minister of the Interior introduced it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be wise not to pursue this subject any further but to confine the discussion to the subject before the chair.

Mr. TURRIFF. I will close in one minute. I want to say in conclusion that the statement that has been made in this House before and which the hon. leader of the opposition has made now, on the authority of the hon. member for West Toronto, is absolutely without foundation, that there is not a word of truth in it, that when Osler, Hammond and Nanton sold the land to the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company there was an increase in the area and that if the hon. leader of the opposition wishes to go into the matter further all he needs to do is to get the bill of rights presented by Osler, Hammond and Nanton or send over to the Department of the Interior and get copies of the correspondence with respect to the matter.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume that as this matter of the sale of land by the trustees of the Regina, Long Lake & Saskatchewan Railway Company has been brought under review you will, Mr. Speaker, make no objection to hearing the statement which I propose to offer with reference to it?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is not relevant to the matter under discussion. It was brought in by way of illustration, as I understand, in the first place, by the Minister of the Interior and was used in the same way by the hon. leader of the opposition. I think the discussion of it is not relevant.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the statement was made by the Minister of the Interior in reference to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler), which I regard as a very unfair statement, I thought that I, would be entitled to a small modicum of the time for the purpose of placing the matter in its true light before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. On a question of privilege that might be done, but it would seem as if it would lead to a great deal of trouble and confusion if it were done on a specific motion in amendment such as this. I think the preferable course would be for the hon. member to take the matter up on some future occasion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I shall take another opportunity then of placing the matter in its true light.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Boyce).

Amendment negatived.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. S. J, JACKSON (Selkirk). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, I wish to rise to a question of veracity between the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. W. J. Roche) and myself which arose yesterday. That hon. gentleman made the statement that the polling subdivisions in Manitoba were made by the judges, and I denied the statement. The hon. gentleman was appealing to the Prime Minister and he said :

I would remind him also that the present provincial polling subdivisions have been created by the judges—not by the Lieutenant Governor in Council nor by the returning officers, but by the judges. There can be no party advantage in arranging polling subdivisions; my objection is based upon the confusion likely to arise in having different polling subdivisions for the Dominion from those established for the province.

Mr. HENDERSON.

In answer to that I said :

I may state, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. W. J. Roche) is not aware of it, that at present the judges do not arrange the polling subdivisions, but the government arrange the registration districts and the polling divisions.

The hon. member for Marquette said in reply :

As usual, the hon. gentleman is speaking without full knowledge when he says that the judges do not fix the polling subdivisions.

I would just like to point out to the hon. gentleman that in the Manitoba 'Gazette' of April 28, 1906, there is a proclamation issued by the Lieutenant Governor, which reads as follows :

Whereas, pursuant to the provisions of the Manitoba Election Act, it is necessary to add to and revise the lists of electors in and for the several electoral divisions of the province of Manitoba, and it is necessary for the said purpose to issue a proclamation containing the information hereinafter set forth.

Now, therefore, we have thought fit and do hereby, pursuant to the powers and authority contained in the Manitoba Election Act, proclaim the following:

1. That it has been determined to add to and revise the lists of electors for the several electoral divisions of the province, except those of Brandon City, Winnipeg Centre, Winnipeg North and Winnipeg South.

2. That the names and post office addresses of the persons appointed to act as registration clerks in the respective polling divisions of the several electoral divisions are as follows:

It goes on and gives the polling subdivisions for every electoral district in the province of Manitoba. Then it winds up by saying :

In testimony whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent and the great seal of our said province of Manitoba to be hereunto affixed.

On the following page of the 'Gazette' you will find another proclamation :

Whereas it has been determined to add to and revise the list of electors in and for the several electoral divisions in the province of Manitoba, pursuant to the provisions of the Manitoba Election Act, and it is necessary for the said purpose to constitute the several judges of the county courts in the said province a board of registration;

Now, therefore, we have thought fit and do hereby, pursuant to the powers and authority contained in the Manitoba Election Act, consitute the several judges of the county courts holding office in the province of Manitoba a board of registration for all and singular the premises.

I think it is not necessary for me to say anything further on this matter, except to ask the hon. member for Marquette how the judges can obtain such knowledge of the various electoral districts as to enable them to lay out the polling subdivisions. As a practical politician, he knows that the members always lay out the polling subdivisions. The judges would have to travel through every electoral district to get the necessary local knowledge to do the work. That is the political end of the business, and it is done by order of Lieutenant Governor in Council on the advice of the local member or the man who has been the candidate in the preceding election.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Nothing that the hon. gentleman has said has disproved in the slightest degree the statement I made. He asks what local knowledge the judges of the province of Manitoba have that they can lay out the polling subdivisions; and yet we approved yesterday of a section of an Act conferring that power on the judges.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. They will have to come to me for advice in regard to my district.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). This is the reason the hon. gentleman has been bringing his influence to bear on the Prime Minister, in order that the judges might go to the member for Selkirk and get advice. Now the cat is out of the bag. This is the influence behind the Throne. So that after all the judges are not going to lay out the polling subdivisions.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. We will have to give them advice. You will have to give them advice too.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). No, my advice will not be asked for. The hon. gentleman has read from the Manitoba 'Gazette' a proclamation defining the polling subdivisions, and he states that orders in council are issued fixing the dates and places for the holding of the courts of revision. As a matter of fact the judges name the dates and places for the courts of revision and define the polling subdivisions. I have original letters from every judge of Manitoba showing that they fix the dates and places for the holding of courts of revision, as I stated yesterday. There is the order in council approving of every one of these recommendations and that was given out to the public by means of a proclamation, so that the judges in practice appoint the places and the very same practice and procedure is adopted in connection with the polling subdivision. The judges name the polling subdivisions and the Lieutenant Governor in council issues a proclamation making them known to the public.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Where did that emanate from?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). If the hon. gentleman wants to read the information, I have it right in my possession now.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. What is the use of looking to a judge against the statute?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I did not wish to place on 'Hansard' those letters at this late stage, but, as the hon. gentleman seems in doubt, I shall do so. Here is a letter from Mr. Justice Myers:

Winnipeg, April 7, 1908.

James Hooper, Esq.,

Deputy Provincial Secretary, Winnipeg.

Dear Sir,—Replying to your letter of the 4th instant, I beg to say that the following times and places will suit me for holding the court of revision on the list of electors, namely:—

Lakeside at Macdonald, on Monday, June 8, from 11 o'clock, a.m., to 4 o'clock, p.m.; Gladstone at Gladstone, on Tuesday, June 9, from 1 o'clock, to 6 o'clock, p.m.; Beautiful Plains at Neepawa, on Wednesday, June 10, from 10 o'clock to 6 o'clock, p.m.

And so on, with each place in the riding. And these places named by Judge Myers were in every instance adopted and a proclamation issued to the public.

Mr. S. J. JACKSON. Those are the courts of revision.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. This letter is signed 'Yours sincerely, R. H. Myers,' who used to be the leader of the Liberals in the local legislature before he was made a judge. I have got letters from the other judges in other ridings naming the times and places for the holding of the courts.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. Does the hon. gentleman argue that because the judges have named the places for registration they have also named the polling subdivisions?

Mr. W. J. ROCHE. I can give the very same evidence with regard to the polling subdivisions. They named the polling subdivisions as well. I also wish to inform the hon. gentleman that I have it on the authority of the King's Printer of Manitoba that the judges were not only asked to name the different places for the holding of courts of revision, but to delimit the boundaries of the polling subdivisions, and they did so, and that was approved by order in council and issued to the public in the form of a proclamation.

DEEP WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. ANDREW BRODER (Dundas). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring up for a few moments the matter of the damming of the St. Lawrence down at the Long Sault. I have in my hand a petition to the International Waterways Commission from parties representing the St. Lawrence Power Company, and it has reference to matters that ought to be brought before this House and country. The American company, called the Long Sault Development Company, and the St. Lawrence Company are identical in their interests. The one gets its powers from the Canadian and the other from the American authorities, but there can be no doubt that they have a community of interests. The American Power House and Lock Company, known as the Long Sault Development Company, propose to construct a power house and lock between the foot of the Long Sault island and the main shore, as shown on plan No. 1. Permission has already been granted them by the New York State legislature, authorizing this construction so far as it lies in American territory. What particularly affects the Dominion of Canada is that they propose to dam the St. Lawrence main channel, as well as the south channel, so that virtually the whole river will be dammed at that point. In looking up the correspondence, I find that if they are allowed to do what they want, all the risk will be run by the Canadians and none at all by the Americans.

I wish to refer to another matter which ought to be brought to the attention of the House, and that is that the Waterways Commission, in their recommendations, seem to take a line which would permit or justify the Chicago canal. We know that is going to affect Lake Erie, because they are proposing, as a remedy for the damage that that work is likely to do to the navigation of Lake Erie, to dam the lake near the Niagara river. The several reports and data furnished by the commission point to the conclusion that for sanitary purposes the Chicago canal will necessarily be allowed. The Chicago people have put up the argument that it is altogether for drainage and sanitary purposes for the city of Chicago, but none the less it will affect navigation. If any of the reports can be relied on, it will lower the water, and I want to draw the attention of the government to this. In every instance in which this matter has been referred to any expert authority under the control of the government, the opinion is given that they have not sufficient data on which to base a judgment. Take all the reports and correspondence, and you will find that no one ventures to express an opinion as to what effect this will have on the navigation of the St. Lawrence. That is sufficient reason for our government to say at once that no such thing will be allowed.

Referring again to the proposed damming of the St. Lawrence, when you look up the record you will see that this question was dealt with away back in 1842 by the Ashburton treaty. The seventh clause of that treaty distinctly states:

> It is further agreed that the channel, in the river St. Lawrence on both sides of the Long Sault islands and of Barnhart island——

It refers to other rivers which I do not need to specify here.

> —should be equally free and open to the ships, vessels and boats of both parties.

Mr. BRODER.

Now, away back as far as 1842—I suppose in part, for the reason that this place is very near the point where the river ceases to be the dividing line between the two countries—this matter was particularly referred to. We should stand on the principle of that treaty, we should maintain the spirit of that treaty, and keep both these channels open to both countries for all time. In the treaty of 1871, while not the same language is used, virtually the same conclusion is reached. And, while I am dealing with the matter, I think it well to state very clearly that the people along the river are very much concerned as to what may be done by the government. We have the assurance, given, I think, last February, by the right hon. Prime Minister that nothing would be done by the government without all parties affected by such operations being consulted or notified. That is not the exact language, but that is the spirit of the promise given. This is a matter affecting the navigation of one of our greatest rivers, and it ought not to be dealt with in any serious way without the people's representatives in parliament being apprised of the conclusion that is come to. We know that if the people once get the privilege of damming that river, laying out millions of money as they propose to do according to their own statement, navigation will be but a secondary consideration with those who hold these great interests. I do not think the government should allow local commercial considerations to affect the navigation of a great river which has been made by solemn treaty, common to the two countries.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BRODER. When the House rose at six o'clock I was arguing that local commercial interests should not interfere with the navigation of a river that was of general importance. Now in order to give the House some idea as to what the St. Lawrence Power Company, in connection with the Long Sault Development Company, are asking the government of this country to do, I wish to read the request that they make upon our government:

> (a) To construct a solid masonry dam from a point near the Canadian main shore, about opposite lock 20, extending to the international boundary line, there to join a dam to be constructed in connection with the works above described in American territory.
> (b) To construct a power house between the northeasterly end of this dam and the Canadian shore, together with a new lock about 2,600 feet west of present lock 20, and an earthen dike, having a top width of about 100 feet, between this power house and lock, also a similar earthen dike extending from this lock northwesterly and parallel to the present canal, and connecting with the main shore at Milles Roches.

(c) To enlarge the present channel of Little river as above set forth, to a minimum width of about 800 feet, and to raise the level of the pond above the dams to an elevation five feet higher than the present level of the Cornwall canal above lock 20.

(d) After the stability of all of the above described works has been satisfactorily proved, to remove the two earthen dams at the easterly and westerly ends of Sheik Island and to enlarge the present channel on the north side of Sheik Island.

And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

Now that is the proposition. That means to dam the St. Lawrence river at that point from the main shore over to meet similar works on the American side. I want to say this, that you cannot tell, in a work of that kind, what eventuality might arise. Something might occur that might change the whole aspect of that river so far as navigation is concerned, and if anything should occur to transfer the control of the navigation of that river now in our hands, to American control, in which the citizens of the United States were interested, then Canadian interests might suffer very materially. Now it may be quite a surprise to many in this country to learn that the people of Canada have not had the use of the New York state canals for thirty-seven years; for thirty-seven years Canadian marine interests and Canadian vessels have not been allowed to use the New York State canals. Now what does that mean in case anything should be done to transfer the control of the navigation of the St. Lawrence at that point from the Canadian government to the American government? As I say, you cannot tell what might happen. It is a peculiar circumstance, that while in the treaty of 1871 the United States government stipulated and agreed to urge upon the state of New York the wisdom of giving Canada the use of her canals, whether they carried out that obligation or not, the state of New York has not allowed Canadians to use their canals for the last thirty-seven years. If you go down into the Richelieu river you find that our pulp wood, our lumber and coal go down that river to Lake Champlain in American bottoms. These are things that ought to be considered, and I would like to consider them more at length if time allowed. I certainly think that this is a question deserving of careful consideration by the Canadian government; it is a question that should not be left to one or two men, but should be considered from the national standpoint of keeping that river for the use of Canadian navigation interests. That river is the channel through which imports from Europe are carried into the interior of this country, and it is the great navigable outlet to the sea in the summer time from the interior portion of Canada. It seems to me the government cannot be too careful in dealing with those interests, because no engineer seems to be able to say what effect the damming of the river at that point, as proposed by these companies, might have on the navigation of the river. We know that the slowing of the current by ice jams some miles below Morrisburg has raised the river ten or twelve feet at Morrisburg. When the ice jams occur some eight miles below, the ice gradually fills in until you can drive across it at Morrisburg. This is the first time that it has been known to have reached as far up as Morrisburg. But it has occurred several times some miles below Morrisburg, and raised the water in the river several feet. If the proposed dams were built, the slowing of the current might bring on this ice jam and cause very serious injury to the people along the shores of the St. Lawrence on either side. There is this point to consider, that if you leave the river in its natural condition, any damage that may occur from ice jams, or from any natural cause, the government of this country could not be held responsible. But if we allow dams to be built across that river then this government would be responsible for damages that might result. I have felt it my duty, as voicing the feelings of my constituents along the river in that section of the country, to draw the attention of the House and the government to this important matter, and I regret that the time at our disposition will not allow me to pursue the subject further.

Mr. R. A. PRINGLE (Stormont). I did not think that this matter would come up for discussion at the present time. I may say that I have long taken a very keen interest in the development of power on the St. Lawrence river at or near the town of Cornwall. The hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) has expressed my sentiments when he says that the question of navigation is one of paramount importance, and if I considered for a moment that the accomplishment of this scheme would in any way injuriously affect the navigation of the St. Lawrence river, I would oppose it strenuously. But, Mr. Speaker, the matter is in that stage that I do not think this House is in a position intelligently to discuss it. The Canadian sections of the Deep Waterways Commission have given this matter a great deal of consideration, and in their report they express themselves as not yet having come to a conclusion, and they desire to get the very best expert engineering evidence before they finally report on the matter. I may say that the constituency which I have the honour to represent is vitally interested in this question.

We have had meetings of our town council and our board of trade and delegations have been sent to appear before the Deep Waterways Commission to urge upon them that they give to this matter their most serious consideration. The Deep Waterways Commission have not acted hastily in this matter. They have held meetings at different times. They held a meeting in the city of Toronto and after they had had some representations against the scheme they, for the convenience of the people who might urge opposition to this scheme, adjourned their meeting to Montreal so as to give every one interested an opportunity of being heard. Not one engineer in this or any other country has put himself on record as saying that this scheme will injuriously affect navigation. On the other hand we have the reports of the most eminent American, Canadian and English engineers to the effect that this scheme would not only not injure navigation on the St. Lawrence, but would be of incalculable assistance to it. We saw what occurred here a few days ago. We have a canal, over 9 miles in length, some 6 or 7 miles of that canal are separated from the river by an earth embankment and a greater strain is being put upon the banks of this canal year by year by the increased size of the vessels. They are not increased in length because the locks will permit of a vessel of only a certain length passing through, but they have been increased in width and in carrying capacity. To-day we have vessels going through that canal carrying 80,000 and 90,000 bushels of grain and with the increased displacement of water there is greater pressure put upon these banks. In 1903 I put myself on record in this House in favour of a lock at the foot of Sheik's Island dam, into the St. Lawrence river. If that lock had been built, and engineers of that day said it was quite feasible, we would have had no delay to vessels passing through the Cornwall canal. There would have been no request for a vote of $150,000 to repair break as it is very probable there would have been no break as vessels could have come down Sheik's Island dam, passed through that lock into the St. Lawrence and gone on their way saving the time that it now takes to pass through five locks which is considerable, and saving danger to banks of canal from large vessels passing through canal. My remarks at that time are to be found in 'Hansard' of 1903, page 14137. I said :

I understand from those who are engaged in navigation that a saving of an hour or two could be made by having a lock immediately east of the Sheik's island dam, which would let vessels into the St. Lawrence river without going down through three locks to the eastern end of the canal; and it would also permit all vessels to come up and enter the canal just at the foot of the dam and go through the Cornwall canal in a very short space of time. Vessel owners have told me that it would be an immense saving if that lock were put in, not only a saving of expense, but a great saving of time in passing through the canal.

Mr. PRINGLE

It would not have been a very expensive lock. It would have paid for itself between 1904 and the present time. That is practically the scheme now. The scheme to-day is to have a lock, or two locks, where this dam will be built so that vessels coming through Sheik's Island dam may pass on into the St. Lawrence, saving time and expense. This is a matter of the utmost importance to the whole surrounding country but it should not in any way influence myself or any man in this House in favour of this scheme if it is not practicable and if it is likely in any way to interfere with navigation. What are the objections we find ? My hon. friend has said that no engineer has been able to say what effect it would have on navigation. I ask my hon. friend to read the reports of the engineers who have investigated this matter most thoroughly and who say that the scheme would not be objectionable from the point of view of navigation but that on the other hand it would assist navigation.

There are one or two objections made with regard to this scheme. One is that it will prevent certain tourist steamers passing through the Long Sault rapids. I say at once that it will. For four months there are certain tourist steamers which pass down the Long Sault rapids. They say it will destroy the scenic effect. What does one eminent engineer say in regard to that ? He says : 'Take the great dam on the Nile—I think it is called the Assouan dam ; that dam is bringing yearly increasing numbers of visitors to see its beauties. It is possibly the largest dam in the world.' When this dam is constructed on the St. Lawrence it will be the largest dam in the world and the beauty of the dam will be just as great as the beauty of the Long Sault rapids. But this is not the only rapid we have. There is a chain of rapids all down the St. Lawrence and many boats pass down through them to the city of Montreal. Now, it is said that it will back up the water on the property west of the Cornwall canal. What do the engineers say ? The engineers say that it will back up the water as far as Farran's Point canal and they say that in so far as Morrisburg is concerned the effect will be practically nothing, that it will be nil.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How many miles will that be ?

Mr. PRINGLE. It will be 15 or 16 miles. There is a drop in the river from Morrisburg to where this dam would be erected of between 13 and 16 feet. We have between Morrisburg and the Long Sault a small rapid opposite Farran's Point and engineers say that it would practically do away with this rapid. It is a great inconvenience now to navigation and why ? Because steamers going west have to take to the Farran's Point canal instead of keeping to the river as they could not possibly take their heavy loads up that raipd current. This would do away with that inconvenience. The moment they came within the influence of this dam they would have practically smooth water until they got to Morrisburg where they would take to the Morrisburg canal. I ask the House to pardon me ; I know we are pressed very much for time, but this is a matter that could not be discussed intelligently in fifteen or twenty minutes. I have not taken up the time of this House for some time and it is a very important matter. For myself I do not see the necessity of it being brought up at the present time because I am quite satisfied that the government would not consider entering into any arrangement for the construction of this dam until such time as they not only had a report from the Canadian section of the Waterways Commission, but until such time as they had brought the matter before this House where it could be very thoroughly discussed. My hon. friend has spoken of the channels. To-day all south of Barnhardt's island is the American channel which is practically the only navigable channel; 95 per cent of the water flows through that channel and only 5 per cent through what is an international channel, being the channel between Barnhardt's island and the Canadian shore. The effect of the construction of this dam will be to send 50 per cent of the water to the Canadian side and 50 per cent to the American side. It is well to talk of the beauties of the St. Lawrence : no one appreciates more than I do the grandeur of the Long Sault rapids, but I believe there will still be great beauty there after the construction of the dam and we will have hundreds of thousands of horse-power to be used by our people in manufacturing on the Canadian side. There will no doubt be a large development of power on the American side; they have it to-day. The Long Sault Power Company have their power at Messina. What has been the result ? The construction of one of the greatest works in the United States. The Pittsburg Reduction Company have put up an enormous establishment there. They came to us ; I went with them personally as I was anxious to see the work located on our side. They went over the St. Lawrence Power Company's scheme but found there was no possible way of getting more power than there is at the present without an enormous expense and they turned it down. They established their Canadian institution at Shawinigan Falls and built one of their American institutions right across from us. We wanted that industry and would have had it if we had the powers which we will have under this project. A great deal has been said by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid) against the St. Lawrence Power Company. It has been one of the best developments in eastern Ontario.

Mr. J. D. REID. It has the largest rake-off of any company in Canada.

Mr. PRINGLE. I do not know aything about the rake-offs, and I am not discussing the contract that has been threshed out before. It has been an enormous benefit. Only a few years ago one of our woollen mills closed down and had to go out of business. We were able to have it reopened because of the electrical power and to-day it is employing three or four hundred men in a different class of industry and owing to the power we have had other factories located there.

We suffer in Cornwall from floods in winter, caused by the frazil that comes down, forms in the rapids and passes under the ice which has become solid, causing a shove. The result has been that portions of the town have been flooded, and mills have been closed for weeks. One of the largest of the cotton mills was flooded. These people are naturally interested in seeing this scheme go through, so long as it does not impair in any way the navigation of the St. Lawrence. They know from the engineers' reports that the result will be no floods in the winter. This water will be hemmed back, it will form almost level to the dam, will freeze solid there and there will be just a natural flow over the dam with no possibility of the injurious floods we have had in years past. On one occasion the government had to come to the rescue of people who had suffered from one of those heavy floods. It has been said that the American section of the International Waterways Commission have reported favourably on this. If they have it has been after giving the matter the greatest possible consideration. When the Canadian section of the International Waterways Commission said to Mr. Calvin, to the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company and others who were opposing this scheme : Nominate an engineer and we will appoint him and get him to look into the matter and see what his report will be, they did not take the responsibility of nominating an engineer because no engineer would stand for the statements made by some of those people that the erection of this dam would decrease the flow of water east of Cornwall. Some went so far as to say it would affect the flow of water at Montreal, but that statement was so ridiculous that they could not get any engineer to endorse it. The effect of this scheme would be that instead of only 5 per cent of the waters of the St. Lawrence going down on the Canadian side we would have 50 per cent. The effect would be to give us all the power that could be developed, practically unlimited power, whereas we are now absolutely limited. It is no wonder that some of the power companies are instrumental in putting up opposition to this scheme. This development would be one of tremendous advantage to the whole eastern portion of Ontario and I am satisfied it would be of great advantage to the county of Dundas, which my hon. friend (Mr. Broder) represents. While the Minister of Railways has been expressing his opinion against this scheme it would be a tremendous advantage to his own constituency for this power would be taken to Brockville where it is needed, more than in any other town in Ontario. I have refrained from speaking on this before because I felt that we had not all the information before the House required for a full and intelligent discussion of the question, but when the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Broder) opposes it in the dying days of the session, I feel that in the interests of the eastern portions of Ontario, especially in the interest of the county of Stormont, if this scheme does not injuriously affect navigation, but on the contrary, aids and assists it, the government should give it careful consideration and should procure all possible information on the subject before any agreement is entered into or any permission given for the erection of this dam. Of course I foresee that the permission would have to be a joint permission of the United States and Canada, but nothing I think should be done until the whole matter comes before parliament.

Mr. J. D. REID (Grenville). I protest absolutely against the dam being built. It certainly would be unfair to have it built and destroy the navigation on the St. Lawrence. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) complains that I have been finding fault with the St. Lawrence Power Company. I have not been finding fault with them as a corporation, I have been criticising the agreement made by this government with the St. Lawrence Power Company for eighty-nine years, which I think is outrageous, while the price the government are paying this company is simply absurd. A scheme of this kind is such a great scheme, affecting the whole marine interests in this country, that I think no action should be taken by the government in regard to it until the whole matter is submitted to parliament. I only rose to ask if the Prime Minister can see his way to give us a promise that no action will be taken in the direction of granting a charter or the right to dam the River St. Lawrence until the matter is submitted to parliament and thoroughly discussed here. The right hon. gentleman did state a few months ago that nothing would be done until every one had an opportunity of being heard; but I think we should have that opportunity in parliament, and if the Prime Minister would give us that promise, I do not think there will be any reason for detaining the House any longer at this time, as the matter could come up next session.

Mr. GRAHAM. Being conversant with the territory covered by this discussion, there is a great temptation for me almost to attempt to make a speech; but I will resist the temptation. This is a matter that was brought before the department some months ago, and it was placed before members of the government—the premier, I think the Minister of Public Works, and myself. It is a matter of such great importance that it could not be dealt with quickly or without the gravest consideration. The government feeling that it affected particularly three departments—the Marine Department, the Public Works Department and the Railways and Canals Department—appointed a chief engineer of each of those departments, and these three form a committee, as it were, to look into the matter from the departmental standpoint. They have not yet submitted to their respective departments the result of their investigation; they have not yet had time to do so. But, to be very brief, the matter is of such great importance—and there are two sides to it—that before anything could be done it would require the best consideration of the best talent that could be brought to bear upon it. The government has no idea of taking any steps to commit the country to anything in connection with this scheme until parliament has a full opportunity to discuss it and approve or disapprove of it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Steam service between Canada and Australia, $180,509.

Mr. FIELDING. This is not a new service, but it was not included in the main estimates owing to negotiations which were taking place in connection with the contract.

Mr. BERGERON. Does my hon. friend know the company that is doing the service?

Mr. FIELDING. It is the same company as before. I think it is called the Union Steamship Company. Sir James Mills is the manager of it.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it an English company?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes, with headquarters in London.

Additional amount required for the Canada, Japan and China service, $48,666.66.

Mr. FIELDING. This arises from a readjustment of the service with the imperial government under which we are obliged to pay somewhat more than we formerly did.

To provide for the appointment of a post office inspector, an assistant inspector and three clerks at North Bay, Ontario, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Will there be an office there for the staff?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is to occupy the position of additional post office inspector for New Brunswick?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is a matter of promotion, and we have not yet decided, but will in a few days.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the hon. gentleman filled the place of the late Mr. Ryan?

Mr. LEMIEUX. We shall in a few days. Mr. Gross, the senior officer, and an old and faithful employee, will be given the appointment.

Mr. J. D. REID. I thought I saw that Mr. Hawken is going to be superannuated.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes; he was appointed before confederation, and has on many occasions applied for superannuation. He has done very faithful service, but of late the office has been rather in want of a younger man.

Mr. FOWLER. I have a letter from a constituent of mine who is a mail carrier and has not received justice at the hands of the department. I refer to Mr. Gibbons, who has a claim some three years old. He had a mail contract and he went to Clifton, some ten or fourteen miles further than his contract called for. He sent in a claim for something over $100 and the department offered him $28, which he indignantly refused.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I urged his claim on my hon. colleague's predecessor very strongly some time ago.

Mr. FOWLER. This matter has been before the department some time. I am afraid the Minister of Public Works could not have urged it with his usual vigour, or it would have been paid long ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I pleaded very strongly.

Mr. FOWLER. I am satisfied that if the facts were put before the Postmaster General he would recognize the justice of the claim. A department with a constantly increasing surplus does not want to get services for nothing.

Mr. LEMIEUX. If my hon. friend will send in this claim I shall give it every consideration.

Mr. STAPLES. What progress is the hon. minister making towards the establishment of a post office at St. Charles? The people are extremely anxious to have one, and write me frequently about it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Some weeks ago I established a post office at the request of the people of the locality, selecting what I thought the best site, near the church. But I have received a complaint from some petitioners who say that this is not the proper site. There is a difference of opinion among the people on this point. I have written to the inspector, Mr. McLeod, at Winnipeg, asking him to make a choice of a site.

Mr. STAPLES. It will depend on the inspector?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes, he will make the selection.

Mr. FOWLER. I have found the letter of which I was speaking. The writer says:

> They made me carry the daily for a month from Clifton, also the Long's cove bag for a time. And about three years ago the inspector had a bill made for me of $111.43.

The inspector is Mr. Colter, of St. John.

> I was not quite satisfied and wanted $124, and sent this bill to the Deputy Postmaster General, but have heard nothing of it since.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Perhaps this was sent at a time when the Deputy Postmaster General was away. He was absent on leave for four months. I will see that the papers are brought before me and that justice is done.

Mr. FOWLER. Does that mean that you will send the cheque in the morning?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Practically so, if the claim is a valid one.

Mr. WHITE. Has the department come to a decision respecting the establishment of a post office at Graham Station?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have asked the inspector to give me a fresh report, as there are conflicting statements with regard to that post office. I am sure that the distance justifies placing a post office at that point, but I will act on the report of the inspector.

Mr. CROCKET. Does not the department issue a monthly circular showing the new post offices established during the month and the changes made in existing offices?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Why is it not sent to members of this House? I am sure it is information that would be of use to them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I will see that that is done.

Mr. LENNOX. At Barrie, there are two post offices, one in the old part of the town and one at Allandale, known as Allandale post office. I understand that letters transmitted from one post office to the other must bear a two-cent stamp. I called the Postmaster General's attention to this some time ago and, as I recollect it, he said the matter would be adjusted when the Bill went though. I have a letter which I have forwarded to the Postmaster General from a constituent of mine, not a political supporter I am sorry to say, who asked me to inquire into the matter. He says that the postmaster at Barrie informs him that he has no instructions on the subject, and the two-cent rate is still charged.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The one-cent drop letter rate will come into effect as soon as the Bill is sanctioned.

Miscellaneous—amount required to pay losses sustained by Chinese residents of Vancouver in connection with the riots of Vancouver in September, 1907, and the legal expenses arising out of the inquiry into the same, $26,990.

Mr. BERGERON. Are we to expose ourselves to such damages every time there is a row between whites and the Chinese in Vancouver ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. It has been a good lesson, and I hope it will be the last.

Mr. DANIEL. How much are the legal expenses ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. About $1,000.

Mr. KEMP. Is not this a municipal matter ? If there were a riot in Ottawa or Montreal, would not the municipality have to pay the damage ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There is a difference in this case. I do not wish to excuse the acts perpetrated in September last, but my hon. friend will understand that this is quite different from a riot taking place, say, in Ottawa, where there is only one nationality —that is, we are all Canadians. But this riot in Vancouver was engineered, I am sorry to say, not by our own people, but by foreigners——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Galvanized Yankees.

Mr. LEMIEUX ——and directed against other foreigners. They have appealed to their respective governments for redress and payment of the losses that have been suffered. We thought, under the circumstances, the government should see that this amount was paid, I hope we shall not hear any more of such riots.

Mr. BERGERON. Are we paying for houses wrecked, glass broken and that kind of thing ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) will refer to the report I laid on the table some time ago, first as to the Chinese claims, then as to the Japanese claims, he will see that the whole matter was sifted to the bottom. Mr. King went to Vancouver and took evidence. He had an attorney there to represent the government, and there were legal representatives of the Chinese and Japanese governments. No fancy damages are to be paid or were paid.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt about that; but if these people enjoy this sport and go in for another row, will the government of Canada have to pay for the pots cassés ?

Mr. LENNOX.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think we must regard this case as exceptional.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the head tax paid by the Chinese go to the Receiver General ?

Mr. FIELDING. Only half of it; the other half goes to the provincial government.

Mr. FOWLER. I was going to say that if the government receives the head tax it is only reasonable they should pay the damages.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. If this government is taxing Chinese who come in $500 a head, will he undertake to tax these galvanized Yankees, these anarchists who come in, $500 a head ?

Expenses of Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the losses and damages sustained by the Chinese population of the city of Vancouver on the occasion of riots during September, 1907 (payments on account of services rendered may be made to any member of the Civil Service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $1,165.

Mr. DANIEL. Was that for salaries ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. To pay the expenses of the inquiry—shorthand writers, typewriters, and so on.

Expenses of Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the method by which oriental labourers have been induced to come to Canada (payments on account of services rendered may be made to any member of the civil service notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $3,311.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has this commission succeeded in connecting Mr. W. T. R. Preston with the inducing of these oriental immigrants to come to Canada ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I am glad to be in a position to assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sam. Hughes) that Mr. Preston has nothing to do with the influx of orientals into Canada. Quite the contrary. I met Mr. Preston when in Japan, and I am in a position to say he is rendering very valuable service to this country on this question as well as in relation to commerce. He is a good and very efficient officer of the government.

To provide for expenses of Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the industrial disputes in connection with the cotton industry in the province of Quebec, $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What has the commission to do? Would my hon. friend tell us how it is going to work?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The commission has begun its sittings in Montreal to-day, as I see by the Montreal 'Star,' and several witneses have been summoned, and Mr. King is hearing evidence. My hon. friend will remember under what circumstances this commission was appointed. During the month of May, a strike occurred at several points in the province of Quebec, at Montmorency, at Valleyfield in the county represented by my hon. friend, at Magog and in Montreal. I was asked as Minister of Labour to intervene between the mill owners and their operatives. All I did was to promise the men that if they would return to work and accept the sataus quo I would appoint a commission. They said: We do not know what to do. One month we are told that our salaries are cut down by 10 per cent, and we do not know whether the financial position of the cotton industry is such as to justify a reduction in our salaries, therefore we ask the government to appoint a commission to investigate the circumstances. I did not make any promise, but I returned to Ottawa and submitted the case to the cabinet, and it was decided to appoint Mr. Mackenzie King, who has had large experience in these matters, to hold an investigation. He will confine his activities to the province of Quebec, and will ascertain whether it is true that the salaries have been necessarily reduced on account of over production, as it is claimed.

Mr. BERGERON. Several delegates from the cotton workers met the hon. gentleman in Montreal, I believe. What did they say to him, and what answer did he give them?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I do not exactly remember the answer I gave. But they represented to me that they had suffered two reductions in wages within the last five or six months, ten per cent one time, and ten per cent at another time, and they gave me the facts and figures. They showed that the average wages paid to men in Montreal was $10 or $11 per week, including men, women and children. I thought that was not a very high wage in these prosperous times. They said that there were some people working in those factories, even some mechanics, who were only receiving $5 a week. The delegates represented about 5,000 working people, and they said they would accept the conditions offered by the mills and return to work provided the government would appoint a commission to investigate the situation, and see whether it was true that the cotton market was glutted with goods, and that the owners were justified in reducing their wages in consequence.

Mr. BERGERON. What kind of an investigation is Mr. King holding? Some time ago I remember my hon. friend saying that Mr. King, or some other commissioner, would ask the company to show their books and to reveal the stocks they had on hand, and generally the financial condition of the company, and whether they were in a position to pay higher wages to their operatives. I told my hon. friend that I did not think the commissioner could force the company to show their books, and I am under the same impression still. I would ask my hon. friend to say how Mr. King can force any one of those companies to bring forward their books and show whether, from the condition of their business, they are able to pay the higher wages that they have so far refused to pay.

Mr. LEMIEUX. They will not be bound to pay higher wages, even if it is proven by their books that they have the means to do so, but the investigation will allow the public to judge who is right and who is wrong. The hon. gentleman questions Mr. King's power to examine the books. I think he is mistaken, because Mr. King is appointed under the Great Seal, he has a royal commission, and it gives him power to investigate the books of the company.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does Mr. King's commission empower him to inquire into the relationship existing between the cotton industry here in Canada and that industry in other countries, and to consider whether the Canadian tariff is high enough to protect these industries? Perhaps the Minister of Finance could answer that question. Has Mr. King power to investigate the effect of the tariff upon Canadian industries?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I should say not.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. That is the whole question.

Mr. FIELDING. That is a matter of opinion, some people think it is not.

Mr. BERGERON. I believe that there is something wrong in the present condition of the cotton industry. I am better acquainted with that than with the woollen industry, although I know that in my county the woollen industry is closing down this week, and will not resume unless there is a change in the tariff. But the cotton industry has been a subject for politicians to make capital out of. A man by the name of Paquette is playing a great game in Montreal to help the Liberal party. He has become one of the leaders of the workingmen, and has got them to believe that he is a very powerful man. But he made a mistake the last time because he thought the elections would take place in the fall. He was foiled in his attempt at that time; though he succeeded once before, when I was the victim. The workingmen were deceived, I was defeated and another man gained the seat. Now this is what I wish to bring to the attention of the House. On the last occasion only a few men went on strike, the mule spinners I believe they are called, who furnish work to the great body of the other workers in the mills, and when the mill spinners strike there is nothing for the other operatives to do. But the other operatives were not quite ready to follow their example, they became frightened. The manager of the mills had told them in a very candid manner that he could not pay them the wages which they had been receiving. I may say that a year ago this man Paquette brought on a strike just at the time that the mills were in need of their men, they had orders from the west to fill, and they were caught by the throat, and had to give a 20 per cent increase of salary. But a change took place, orders were cancelled all over Canada, and then the manufacturers told their men in a very honest way that they could not continue paying the same salaries and keep their mills running, that they could only keep their mills running on condition of a reduction of 10 per cent in wages. Well, the men did not believe that, the agitators told them that it was not true. So when the mule spinners did go on strike, about one hundred of them, the mills were closed down, and the men were thrown out of work. There was an over production of goods, the stores were filled with merchandise, orders were cancelled, and the strike could not have occurred at a more convenient time for the employers. This took place during the last local elections. Now what I complain of is that Liberal politicians are responsible for this trouble, and the Minister of Labour is responsible.

The Minister of Labour gave these men to understand that they would appoint a royal commission, that that commission would settle matters, that it would go to the factory and find out, by looking at their books, if the company were in a position to pay the workingmen what they were asking or not. That was very unfortunate. My hon. friend knows that the Investigation Act passed last year gives him authority to compel public utilities to disclose their affairs, but that he has no right to go to a private concern and ask them to open their books to him. These men relied upon the statement of my hon. friend that he would do something for their relief, and they did not go back to work for nearly three weeks, involving a loss of about $150,000 in wages and otherwise. When I saw the appointment of the royal commission published in the papers, it struck me that it would be of no use. Mr. King, whether he is appointed under the Great Seal, or twenty Great Seals, could not, under the law, force any company to show their books if they refused to do so. We should be honest about this. What the cotton and woollen industries are complaining of is the tariff. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) knows very well that there are gentlemen sitting behind him who have been for the last ten days worrying him to do something with respect to the tariff. About $14,000,000 worth of cottons and about $10,000,000 worth of woollens come in to compete with the workingmen of Canada. You may appoint all the commissioners you like, you may drag the Great Seal from one end of Canada to the other, but until you give protection to these industries they cannot compete with the product of foreign workmen. You cannot pay a man $2 a day to make cotton and expect him to compete with a man in England who will work for 60 cents a day. Moreover, we give a preference to induce manufacturers in Great Britain to send cotton into this market. These factories in Canada to-day are working just on tolerance. At any moment they may close their doors, because they are not making any money. We cannot expect people to put their money into industries only to lose it. It is a matter of tariff and nothing else, and the appointment of this royal commission is only throwing dust in the eyes of these workingmen. It would have been better if the minister had gone to them and said: We cannot do anything for you; you will have to go to your employers and leave it to them; if they are in a position to pay you more wages they will, and if they are not we cannot help it.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Of course, I am not going to discuss the question of protection. It is late in the session to take up tariff matters. If, as the hon. gentleman says, this commission has been a sham to throw dust in the eyes of the public, I could have appointed it during the local campaign in May. But I did not do so. It is my duty as Minister of Labour to adjust any differences that may exist between capital and labour, and powers are conferred for that purpose upon the Minister of Labour by the Act. Yes, it is my duty to see that differences are adjusted between capital and labour. Here, in the case, were 6,000 men parading the streets of Montreal, Valleyfield, Magog and near the city of Quebec, and they were complaining bitterly that they could not stand the reduction which was imposed, that the reduction was too severe. I say 'imposed'; I do not know if circumstances imposed that reduction upon them or not.

Mr. BERGERON. If the manufacturers cannot pay them any more, what are you going to do about it?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I heard their side of the story. I heard from Mr. Gordon, of Montreal, and I saw Mr. Simpson in Valleyfield.

Mr. KEMP. Tell us what they said?

Mr. LEMIEUX. They said it was a question of tariff. But still the operatives retorted: They cut down our wages and they continue paying the same dividends, and in some cases pay increased dividends. I am not saying that statement is true. I have not ascertained for myself, except in a general way. But, Sir, as Minister of Labour was it not my duty to say to these 6,000 men parading the streets: Return to your work; you have not the means to remain on strike. I advised them, in a fatherly way, to return to work so as to help their families. They promised me that they would return to work provided an independent commission was appointed to investigate the differences between themselves and their employers. The commission has been appointed. No man is better equipped to conduct such an investigation than the Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. King. He is now proceeding with the work, and we will see what his report is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend says that he met these men, and that he told them in a fatherly way to return to work and he would see that a royal commission was appointed.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. The royal commission was not appointed, and as a consequence of that they did not go back.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The commission was appointed.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at that time.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. King was away.

Mr. BERGERON. But I understand that my hon. friend says that he could have appointed somebody else.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And nobody else was appointed at the time; the consequence was that these men remained out of the mills when they would have gone back to work. They waited until they were starving, and they do not believe any more in the promises of the hon. gentleman, or in what is told them by agitators who, if they went to Valleyfield, would be thrown into the water. They have gone back to work: they could not get anything to eat in the butchers' or grocers' shops, but they went back to the mills and begged to be given work. They are out of the union to-day, and I pity the man who goes there to advise them to go into a union after this. They said: We want to work; we do not want to starve. The manager said: I will give you work at the rate of pay that I can afford to give you. My hon. friend says that these cotton companies are continuing to pay dividends. These men cannot put their money into these industries as a matter of public charity. They go into them with the idea of making money, and it is a good thing that they should make money. When they erect buildings like those which they have erected in Valleyfield, at a cost of $3,000,000, they do not do it for public charity, nor for their health but to make money, and if they do not make money they cannot employ 3,000 or 4,000 men. Mr. Simpson, of the Valleyfield mills, said to them: 'I will pay you as much as I can afford to; later on, if I can afford to do so, I will increase your wages.' We know that to-day, under this government, it costs the workingman 50 or 60 per cent more to live. The workingman who got $1.50 a day before this government came into power could live better than he can to-day at $2 a day. The crux of the whole situation is the tariff, and it would be a great deal better to say so instead of pursuing the course which the hon. minister has in appointing this royal commission. The Minister of Finance knows that there are lots of men in this House sitting behind him who are asking him to-day to do something with the tariff with regard to cotton and woollen goods, and, if that is so, there is no use trying to deceive us. These industries, cotton and woollen, cannot continue in a prosperous condition in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. It may be well for my hon. friend to include in his statement to his friends in Valleyfield, that just across the border in the United States, where they have the blessing, if it be a blessing, of a much higher tariff than we have, the paralysis of the cotton industry was worse than in Canada.

Mr. BERGERON. I will not deny that but the circumstances are entirely different and my hon. friend knows, or if not he should know, that if we had not imported $14,000,000 worth of cottons and if they had been made in this country these working men would be continuing to work at the rates of two years ago.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite debatable but it is too late to debate it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does Mr. Mackenzie King receive a special salary in addition to his regular salary?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Oh no, just his regular salary.

Mr. KEMP. What instructions has Mr. King as to the basis upon which he should go in forming his judgment? Has he been instructed to consider the tariff and dividends?

Mr. LEMIEUX. As will be seen from the papers he has summoned not only the employees but the employers. Several leaders in the cotton industry appeared in the court to-day in Montreal and offered their evidence. They offered to show their books to let Mr. King see what shall be seen. Mr. King of course will exercise his judgment. He is called on not to form a judgment but to report on what he will learn through the investigation.

To meet the cost of boring for oil, coal, gas, etc., $35,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Would the minister give some explanation of the boring for oil?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We have given some assistance towards boring for gas near Calgary and for coal in the province of Nova Scotia by private companies. After a company had sunk a hole 1,000 feet we gave in one instance $3 a foot for every foot below the 1,000 feet. We have $35,000 in the supplementary estimates and from this we purpose giving some assistance towards carrying on boring operations in Prince Edward Island. Representations have been made to us by the provincial government and others that the Geological Survey has carried on little work there since confederation. No coal has been discovered in Prince Edward Island although our geologists say there is a reasonable prospect of finding coal there and we purpose spending $20,000 or $25,000 in sinking three or four holes in different parts of the island in the hope of discovering coal.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. How many wells does the minister intend to bore with the $35,000 ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We anticipate from inquiries we have made that a hole can be sunk 2,500 feet for between $5,000 and $8,000 but much depends on conditions and circumstances, the geological formation, transportation, &c.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. At what points in the island will the holes be bored ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. One near Summerside, one near Gallus Point and at two other points to be located by the Geological Survey.

Mr. BERGERON. I hope this boring will not interfere with the tunnel.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If the minister is going to spend $8,000 or $9,000 to drill a hole 2,500 feet deep it is an absurd rate. In our town we sank a well more than 4,000 feet at a less cost.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. My hon. friend may have accurate knowledge of what it costs to bore a hole but I have seen correspondence with well known contractors, some of them from western Ontario, and I am inclined to think he is very far astray. If we can get a hole properly piped at this price we would have nothing to complain of. I do not know whether this includes transportation of plant which is a considerable item. When it is landed from the steamboat, it has to be moved from one point to another on the island, which will cost considerable money. I should imagine that the diameter of the large pipe is 8 or 10 inches. We do not know whether the oil-bearing formation will be found on the island or not; but experts in well boring, better experts than my hon. friend, have given us estimates of the probable cost of this work. We have made no contract, but I firmly believe that if we bore a well 2,500 feet deep in Prince Edward Island and pipe it, for anything like $5,000 or $8,000—I am only speaking approximately—we will do very well.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not want to take up time in disputing anything the hon. gentleman has said, although I have been twenty years in the business and know something about it. Is Mr. Low still Director of the Geological Survey ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister expect to continue him at full salary ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Mr. A. P. Low, who was appointed Director and Deputy Minister of the Geological Survey two or three years ago, took sick about one year ago, and unfortunately he is still a very sick man. He is off on leave of absence, with pay. He is not entitled to superannuation, I am very sorry to say. I do not know how long his illness will continue, and I am therefore not in a position to say whether he will continue permanently in the service or not. Unquestionably if Mr. Low should recover sufficiently to return to work, he will be continued on full pay.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has Mr. Dowling returned to the Geological Survey ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes, and he is in the west now on one of his expeditions.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I want to protest in the strongest language against the minister allowing the men of that department to go out and work for private companies, as he has done in the past. Mr. Dowling spent five years in gathering information in regard to the coal lands of the Northwest, and last summer a German development company engaged him for two months and he went out and located all the best coal lands in the western country for that company, and in the fall returned to the Geological Survey. Last spring he stepped out again, and, as the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) said a few weeks ago, was employed by another company at the rate of $5,000 per annum, and after being away for a few weeks, returned to the Geological Survey again, and he is now in the west gathering information which he can practically sell to private companies. If this is the manner in which the Geological Survey is going to be conducted, it is not in the best interests of the people at large. I only wish I had time to go into this matter more fully, and to show the minister that the work of that department needs his close attention.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not suppose there is any use in occupying the time of the House in repeating this old story. My hon. friend made all these statements a few weeks ago, and they were fully explained then. Therefore I do not see any use in repeating the explanation.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Does the minister intend to continue to allow these men to go out for private companies and come back to the survey when they cannot get work elsewhere ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The minister is quite ready to give the services of any expert of the Geological Survey, I will not say to assist private companies, but to assist in the development of the great mineral resources of this country. That is all we did. Mr. Dowling is an expert on coal, one of the best men in the Geological Survey ; he has been some twenty years or more in the department. He is getting a small salary, less than $2,000 a year. He came to us and told us that he was going to leave the service unless we paid him more money. He wanted $2,500 or $3,000. He had an offer from a company of $5,000 per annum for a period of years. He was not anxious to leave the service. It seems that our geological friends think more of the opportunities they have for scientific work in connection with the survey than they do of work for a private company at a higher salary. Mr. Dowling had almost committed himself to resigning from the service and going to a private company. We desired that he should not leave the survey, though we were not able to increase his salary to the amount he wanted. Then he asked if he could get off for some months last year to go with the company. After considering the matter fully, we agreed to give him leave of absence without pay. I do not know what salary he received from the company, but probably at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to send an officer to the old country to study the coal shales ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Some months ago instructions were given to Dr. Ells to go to Glasgow to be present at the investigation of shales that were being shipped over there, with the view of acquiring all the knowledge he could on the subject. This is another illustration of assisting private enterprise to some extent, although it will be seen at once how much benefit it is to the country.

Mr. FOWLER. What company is it—from New Brunswick?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. The New Brunswick Petroleum Company, of which the late Minister of Railways is the president?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I do not know. All I know about the company is that a gentleman named Mr. Lodge interviewed me in regard to it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Lodge, of fragrant memory?

Mr. TEMPLETON. I do not know him. He said his company was on the point of shipping fifty tons of shale to Glasgow to have the oil extracted ; and all we are doing is sending Dr. Ells over, paying his salary while he is absent, and probably his expenses. It will not cost $1,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Has the government been appropriating money before for boring purposes ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. This is not new. The government about twelve years ago spent considerable money in boring for petroleum in the vicinity of Edmonton.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is there anything being done on the Athabasca or on the Saskatchewan at Edmonton?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Not by the department. Private enterprise has stepped in, and I know that in southern Alberta several companies are boring for petroleum.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The department sent a man a few years ago to plug a gas hole in Athabaska country. the same as they did the waterhole in the Yukon. Did they succeed in plugging it ? Quite a large expedition went down to plug up this gas hole away down the Athabaska.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We did not send a man up to plug a gas hole. An inspection was made of a gas well.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why, I saw the gentleman in Manitoba on the way down there. He was sent by the Dominion government.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. We sent a man to inspect the wells.

Mr. BLAIN. It is not so long as ten years ago when public money was appropriated for the discovery of oil wells in the Northwest. What is the policy of the government in respect of this matter ? There have been large amounts expended in Ontario during the past year for the discovery of coal oil. If application is made to the department, will the department furnish assistance to parties boring for coal oil ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I am bound to say that I do not think such an application would be favourably entertained. Some ten or twelve years ago efforts were made to find petroleum in Alberta. At that time no private companies were boring for oil, and the government gave its assistance in that direction. Since then, however, private enterprise has been expending large amounts in the endeavour to find petroleum in Alberta, and we are not spending any money in that direction any more than we would in western Ontario where petroleum is known to exist in very large quantities. We are justified in making an expenditure for the purpose of boring for coal in Prince Edward Island inasmuch as the island has no known coal deposits, although our geologists express the opinion that coal may possibly be found at a considerable depth and possibly oil and gas. It would be very important if we could ascertain the fact that coal exists there.

Contributions towards the expenses of sending Canadian representatives to the Olympic games in London, $15,000.

Mr. DANIEL. How many have been sent to the Olympic games ?

Mr. FIELDING. Canada is sending eighty-four representatives, including sixteen men for lacrosse.

Mr. DANIEL. This is for competitors alone ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes. This matter is the hands of a committee of prominent citizens, including Colonel Hanbury Williams, Mr. P. D. Ross, Rev. D. B. Macdonald, with Mr. Pereira as secretary.

Mr. SPROULE. I regard such a vote as the height of absurdity. I think our country is running too far in the line of games and sports and too little in the direction of useful labour, and to sanction all this by a vote in the federal parliament seems to me to be going too far.

Mr. BERGERON. Do the other governments do this ?

Mr. FIELDING. The provincial governments are giving some assistance.

Mr. FOWLER. What provinces contribute ?

Mr. FIELDING. Ontario gives $2,000 and British Columbia $1,000. The contributions of the governments are supplemented by receipts in connection with the preliminary trials and, no doubt, by private subscription.

Grant to National Gymnastic Society to assist in sending representatives to games et Rome, $3,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this?

Mr. FIELDING. The National Gymnastic has its headquarters in Montreal, and is composed, I understand, chiefly of our French Canadian friends. This is to assist in sending competitors to games on the line of the Olympic games to be held at Rome.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not think parliament has heard about this National Gymnastic Society or knows what it is for.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Everybody has heard of the Montreal Amateur Athletic Association. But, though I am an old sport myself, I have never heard of this society.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this for games at Rome, in Italy, or in Rome, N.Y. ?

Mr. FIELDING. There is only one Rome and all roads lead to it.

To compensate the Canadian Bank of Commerce for services in the Yukon from April 1, 1907, to April 1, 1908, $4,800.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN.

Mr. FIELDING. The Bank of Commerce have acted as the government's agent in the Yukon, we allowing them a small commission. At first it was something like 2 per cent, but it has been whittled down until it is about one-quarter of one per cent.

Mr. FOWLER. Better cut it out altogether.

Mr. FIELDING. No, with the present condition of business in the Yukon, if that were not allowed, it is a question whether the bank would agree to do the business for us.

Further amount to provide for payment of the Civil Service Commissioners appointed May 8, 1907, including $600 to T. S. Howe, $12 to M. M. Hutchison and $70.75 to T. L. Mainguy, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act, $15,000.

Mr. FIELDING. This is to pay the further expenses of the three Civil Service Commissioners whose report is before the House. They have not sent an account, and we are estimating the amount that is likely to be necessary.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was money well spent.

Mr. FIELDING. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman approve, so I suppose the vote will be carried.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I do not see their names here.

Mr. FIELDING. It is well known that the commission is composed of Messrs. Courtney, Fysche and Bazin. This is to pay for their services, and also for the secretary, stenographers and others who assisted in the work of the investigation.

Mr. DANIEL. What do you allow the commissioners per day ?

Mr. FIELDING. We assume that we shall be called upon to pay them $30 a day each.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention to form a commission to look into some of the other departments which this commission had not time to investigate ? The Public Accounts Committee has been doing what it could, thwarted though it has been by the efforts of those who are known as the 'Obstruction brigade.' Is it the intention to appoint a commission to investigate, for instance, the Railway Department and take up these land deals such as those with Mr. Lodge in Moncton and Pearson in Halifax. Will the allowance of 25 per cent commission to the St. John 'Sun' on printing done in that city be looked into ? Is it the intention to look into the Merwin case, or to investigate Mr. Wallberg and the $100,000 that he is to receive for the building of a sewer for the new shops at Moncton—no tenders called for, using his men there as he likes, keeping no time book, with no supervision or inspection provided—is it the intention to investigate these things? I would suggest that considering the success we have had in finding out things with regard to the Marine Department, we should apply the same machinery to the other departments.

Amount required to pay expenses of the investigation into the Department of Marine and Fisheries, $15,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that the Cassels investigation ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. It is expected that this amount will be sufficient to pay all expenses. My hon. friend will remember that Judge Cassels is not charging anything for his services, but there will be fees of the lawyers and expenses of witnesses.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it understood that the lawyers are to get $100 a day ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Mr. Watson is to get $100 a day, but the amount is undetermined what will be paid Mr. Perron, so I am informed by the Minister of Justice.

Additional amount required for general immigration expenses, $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the minister tell us something about the regulations that have been put into force to prevent labouring men from passing into Canada from the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. This vote is chiefly for that purpose. Since the change of labour conditions last fall, there has been a tendency for workingmen to come over to Canada from the United States, and we have found it necessary to take some means of putting into force the same exclusion against those people that the United States authorities have for a number of years past enforced against our people going into that country. This action is not taken to restrict ordinary immigration. These are exclusion officers, not properly immigration officers. At the minor points along the line this duty is entrusted to customs house officers, who watch the trains. But at larger points where travel is heavy, we appoint special agents.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister tell us what is the sum total that we have voted this year for immigration purposes?

Mr. OLIVER. The total for this year, including the vote we are asking for now, is $1,010,000.

Department of Marine and Fisheries Towards providing for purchase or construction of a steamer for hydrographic survey of Gulf and River St. Lawrence to replace 'La Canadienne,' $50,000.

Mr. BERGERON. What are you going to do with 'La Canadienne ?'

Mr. BRODEUR. 'La Canadienne' is a boat of uncertain age and requires to be replaced. In cases where old boats are of no more use we sell them by auction ?

Mr. BERGERON. Where is the new boat to be built ?

Mr. BRODEUR. In Canada.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the name of the flagship of the Canadian navy ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The 'Canada.'

Indians—New Brunswick—To provide a further amount for salaries, $400.

Mr. CROCKET. Is this to increase the salaries of the agents ?

Mr. OLIVER. No, this is to appoint an inspector and superintendent of schools.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that a new office ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. That is a perfectly absurd thing. There are only six schools in New Brunswick and there are only a little over 100 pupils in these schools. If you want to do anything along that line increase the salaries of the agents and put the additional work on them. The agents are capable of examining the schools.

Mr. CROCKET. Do not the agents inspect the schools now ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, there are two agents and the agents do the inspecting of the schools, but the agents have been appointed not with a view to their suitability to act as inspectors and it is thought desirable that there should be an inspection by some one who is fitted for that work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Why not increase the teachers' salary by distributing this money amongst them ?

Mr. OLIVER. That is worthy of consideration, but it is generally considered that there should be a uniform standard and general supervision of education.

Mr. CROCKET. As far as the Fredericton agent is concerned, Mr. Farrell is a most excellent official, I doubt if you can get any better results from the Indian schools of Mr. Farrell's district by placing a superintendent of schools over him. I cannot see any necessity for such an appointment as this. If the Department of the Interior want to spend $400, let them increase the salaries of the Indian agents. Mr. Farrell has a salary, I think, of only $500 ; why not increase his salary rather than appoint an unnecessary superintendent over him?

Mr. OLIVER. $600 is Mr. Farrell's salary.

Mr. FOWLER. Whom have you picked out for this job ? Some one has been picked out for it.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman whom I intended to appoint as inspector is the Rev. Father Ryan of St. Mary's.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOWLER. I knew you would have some one picked out for it. The fact that it is Rev. Father anybody does not affect my mind.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You wanted to know who it was.

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly. I knew that there was a man picked out for it. That is your way of doing business—first pick out your man and then create the office for him. This $400 should be divided among the various agents in New Brunswick, men who, as far as I know have done their duty and are good men. Let them inspect the schools.

Mr. CROCKET. Is Father Ryan to be appointed for the whole province ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How many schools are there in the province ?

Mr. OLIVER. There are six Indian schools. They are all Roman Catholic Mission schools. There are three in one district and three in the other.

Mr. FOWLER. They are not separate schools ; they are schools under the school board.

Mr. OLIVER. They are Mission schools.

Mr. FOWLER. I know, but they are schools under the school board.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, but still they are conducted under the auspices of the Roman Catholic church.

Mr. FOWLER. Why do you call them Catholic schools?

Mr. OLIVER. They are Catholic schools.

Mr. FOWLER. This is the province of New Brunswick you are talking about, there we have non-sectarian schools.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Are these not Indian schools ?

Mr. FOWLER. These are Indian schools but they are under the control of the board of education. They are non-sectarian.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Does the New Brunswick government pay anything towards these schools ?

Mr. FOWLER. They pay the teachers.

Mr. OLIVER. The Indian Department pay the teachers.

Mr. FOWLER. If these schools are under the board of education the teachers receive a provincial allowance.

Mr. OLIVER. My information is that these schools have no connection with the provincial school system. They are Indian Department schools but they are conducted by teachers connected with the Roman Catholic church.

Mr. DANIEL. How are they supported ?

Mr. OLIVER. The teachers are paid salaries by the Indian Department. All the New Brunswick Indians are Roman Catholics, and the teachers are of that faith; therefore we speak of them as Roman Catholic schools.

Mr. DANIEL. The province is not taxed in any way ?

Mr. OLIVER. The provincial government has no connection with the schools.

Mr. FOWLER. What did the minister mean by saying that they are under the board of education of the province ?

Mr. OLIVER. If I said that I did not intend to.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. $10 a school is the ordinary fee in Ontario for inspection and the same rate here would be ample. This inspection is done by a clergyman who probably receives his salary from other sources and it strikes me that $400 to inspect the schools is a waste of money. I beg to move that the item be stricken out of the estimates.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you pay to these teachers ?

Mr. OLIVER. On the average about $300 apiece.

Mr. CROCKET. Upon whose recommendation was this new office created? Did the agents recommend it ?

Mr. BARR. Or did the Indians ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say, who recommended it; I am responsible for presenting the item to the House upon the recommendation of the officers of the department. I am informed it is not on the recommendation of the agents but on the judgment of the deputy as to the requirements of the work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How long has this system been going on ?

Mr. OLIVER. There has not been such an inspection, we are proposing it now.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister's answer is a strange answer. He says it is the deputy. Does the minister think that we can believe the deputy, on his own initiative, without a recommendation from any one, has made this radical change in New Brunswick? I fancy that the same person who recommended Father Ryan for the position, recommended the position too. Could that possibly be the Minister of Public Works ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no hesitation in saying that this is an office in which the incumbent, if he is a man who is enthusiastic for the welfare of the Indians, will be able to do great public service. The Minister of the Interior has mentioned Father Ryan as the gentleman whom he has in mind for this position. I know Father Ryan and I am sure that his work——

Mr. CROCKET. An excellent man.

Mr. PUGSLEY. He is a man devoted to his work, he has taken great interest in the Indians in the parish in which he lives, he has erected a church there at large expense and has set aside a portion of it especially for the Indians. He is doing a very great work among them and if the Minister of the Interior appoints him, as he says, as inspector of schools, I am sure the appointment will be a good one. I am told that they have a similar position in British Columbia, and I am sure a man of education and an enthusiastic desire to advance the interest of the Indians will do useful work.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Where are these situated ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Some up the St. John river, one near Father Ryan's church, two in York county and some on the northern shore.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Will there be travelling expenses for this inspector ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will be very small, the salary is small and I am sure the Indians will appreciate it and be benefited very greatly by his services.

Mr. FOWLER. I am satisfied now that it was the Minister of Public Works who proposed this arrangement and not the deputy, as the minister would have us believe.

Mr. CROCKET. Have the agents of the department been consulted in reference to the creation of this office by the minister ?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not answer that question, but I am under the impression they were. The department did not consult the agents on the subject but they approved of the proposition.

Mr. CROCKET. How does the minister know the agents approve of the proposition if they were not consulted ? I do not wish to be understood as saying a word derogatory to Father Ryan. I esteem him as a most excellent citizen. So far as his qualifications to perform such a duty are concerned, there can be no question. My objection is that there is no necessity for this office at all. Mr. Farrell, who has acted as Indian agent in the northeastern district of New Brunswick, is esteemed as one of the best officers in New Brunswick, and I do not think any man could perform the service better than he has done. He has had the complete superintendence of the Indians of the northeastern district. I have yet to learn of one single complaint having been made with reference to the manner in which he performs his duty. He has looked after these schools, and I do not think there is any need at all for placing a school superintendent over him. That is my objection. The government should have given Mr. Farrell and increase rather than create an unnecessary and useless office.

Mr. DANIEL. I asked about the number of the school children among the Indians.

Mr. OLIVER. About 135 enrolled, and probably about twenty-five per cent more than that would cover the total number. With regard to what my hon. friend from York (Mr. Crocket) has said, I am informed that Mr. Farrell has asked to be relieved of a part of his duties owing to his increasing age.

Mr. CROCKET. Has he asked to be relieved of the duty of superintending the schools ?

Mr. OLIVER. Not the duty of superintending the schools, but part of the duty of his agency on account of his advancing years. At the same time, I want to echo everything that the hon. gentleman has said as to the satisfaction given by Mr. Farrell in the performance of his duties as superintendent.

Mr. FOWLER. I think that this office is entirely unnecessary, and that this vote is an absolute waste of public money. I think the service could easily be performed in the future as it has been in the past. For that reason I will support the amendment.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I may say that I have the best of reasons for knowing that Mr. Farrell entirely approves of this proposition. I can say that with positive authority.

Amendment negatived.

Additional to persons employed permanently in the public service, and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for and in connection with passing vessels through the canals of the government of Canada, from midnight on Saturday to midnight Sunday, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $6,500.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that the canals are open on Sunday now on account of the break in the Cornwall canal? I think they were open last Sunday.

Mr. GRAHAM. I gave instructions to open the canal last Sunday and next Sunday, until the pressure is relieved.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Did you get the Rev. Mr. Shearer's permission ?

Lachine canal—to pay Joseph Richard for loss of horse, $225.

Mr. FOWLER. What about the horse ?

Mr. STANFIELD. I think the minister might put an item in the estimates for the two horses that were killed at Truro a short time ago.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. With regard to this horse item, it is very questionable to my mind whether we are liable; I thought it well to put the item in the estimates. The horse was driven on the swing bridge, fell into the water and was drowned.

Mr. FOWLER. Who valued the horse?

Mr. GRAHAM. We had an investigation made by our own official.

Mr. DANIEL. Did nothing but the horse go through? What became of the harness and the rig?

Mr. GRAHAM. The harness would not get drowned. It went into the canal and no doubt they fished it out.

Mr. MONK. It was through a mistake of one of the employees on the bridge. There was a division of opinion as to whether the government was responsible or not. The horse was killed and the harness and rig injured. The man lost $400 and the government agreed to give him $225.

Mr. LOGGIE. About three years ago on the floor of parliament I asked the then Minister of Railways to put a sum in the estimates to pay some very pressing claims for cattle killed on the Canada Eastern Railway. I explained that claims of the same character had been up to that time paid by the proprietors of the railway, the Gibson Company, but when the government took the railway over they came under a different law. I impressed upon the minister the importance of treating the farmers living along the government railway as favourably as were those living along a corporation railway. The minister said he would consider the claim but there the matter ended. This would be an opportune time to put such an amount in the estimates, because the House has passed a law this year which brings matters of this kind under the same law as that which governs private railways.

Mr. FOWLER. For the comfort of my hon. friend from Northumberland, I may say that just before the election comes on, the government will pay all those old claims if he can prove that by getting them paid he will have a chance of being elected.

Mr. LAKE. Does the minister remember that I asked him for a report about the Canadian Northern Railway between its present line and Le Pas?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am sorry that I have not got it here, but I shall let my hon. friend have it.

Mr. BERGERON. Before you leave railways and canals, I would like to ask where the contract between the government and the McIntyre and Robert Syndicate stands. If I understand the lease, these gentlemen were to pay a certain amount at a certain time. Have they paid anything? I am referring to the lease of the Beauharnois canal.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will bring my hon. friend the information.

Mr. J. D. REID. Several parties are inquiring about that and would like to know if any rental has been paid and whether this company pays the employees on the canal in accordance with their agreement.

Mr. BERGERON. I would like also to know if there are any water-powers granted to any company or whether any company has asked for water-power there.

Mr. TAYLOR. Better let this item stand as the ex-Minister of Railways is not present and may have some questions to ask.

Item allowed to stand.

Annual drill—Further amount required including Quebec review, $200,000.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). This is necessary to carry out the review at Quebec. We found that it was costing more than we expected.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let that one stand and we will pass the other, reserving the usual privilege of discussing any of the others on this item.

Mr. J. D. REID. I would like to ask the minister if he has seen a letter published in one of the Halifax papers from the firm of Davis and Fraser regarding the matter we were discussing the other evening of the supplies furnished the troops. As I understand it this firm supplies the man who is now furnishing the bacon to the troops in Halifax. A contract was given for breakfast bacon.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The letter does not say so.

Mr. J. D. REID. The man who is furnishing the supplies purchases rolled bacon and supplies that to the militia except a little breakfast bacon to the officers. Seeing that this letter is published under the signature of Davis and Fraser, it does seem to me that the statement I made the other evening is correct, and that an inferior bacon is being supplied than what the government tendered for.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I read the letter pretty carefully. It does not say that the contractor is buying his bacon from them. It does say that the troops have not been supplied with breakfast bacon, but it offers no proof of this, and, in the end, admits that the troops are now receiving breakfast bacon but says that for a time they did not. But daily inspection was made by two or three officers, and no complaint has been made to me or the department, either at Halifax or here. The letter is the letter of a disappointed contractor, and I take no stock in it.

Mr. J. D. REID. I feel confident that I saw in the papers in this case that these people were supplying the contractor.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not think they are friendly enough for that.

Mr. J. D. REID. If the contractor was doing what is alleged, it was certainly unfair.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I called the attention of the director of contracts in my department to 'Hansard' containing the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. J. D. Reid).

Royal Military College—additional amount required $1,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is that for?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To increase the pay of the professor of English and the professor of French, who have been receiving much smaller salaries than their brother professors.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you increasing the salary of the commandant?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Monuments to Battlefields—amount required towards the erection of a monument to commemorate the battle of Stoney Creek, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is that?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. This is near Hamilton, one of the most important battlefields of the war of 1812. The people in the neighbourhood have raised considerable money and have purchased the property there, and I thought it was the right thing to encourage them by giving them this amount. They are to raise an equal sum.

Mr. FOWLER. Very proper.

Gratuity to the widow of the late Surgeon Captain C. D. Murray, P.A.M.C., $1,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is this the usual practice in such cases?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think it is. This officer did not come under the pension law, and he contracted his illness by performing his duty as a surgeon.

Mr. FOWLER. He was a permanent officer?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Gratuity for caretaker J. Donovan, Montreal, retired, $555.10.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister will remember Captain Mackenzie, who distinguished himself in the Indian Mutiny, and who was for thirty or forty years connected with the militia of Canada, particularly in New Brunswick. He has been a very useful man in connection with militia matters in that province. Is it the intention of the government to do anything for him?

Mr. EMMERSON. Is that the man who wrote a book?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; a very good book.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I agree with what the hon. member has said concerning Captain Mackenzie. He has done good service to the country and to the empire. But he is a pensioner of the British army in receipt of a very fair pension, and he is also the holder of an absolute sinecure in connection with the drill hall at Fredericton. I think he is doing very well.

Mr. CROCKET. I thought he had been removed from his position in connection with the Fredericton drill hall.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would not be absolutely certain, but I think we give him pay.

Mr. FOWLER. If he has been removed the minister will give him a gratuity, I suppose?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In that case, I think he might receive one.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are two items of public works left, and when these have passed that will finish the latter part of the supplementaries.

Public Works—Chargeable to collection of revenue—operating and maintenance expenses—telegraph lines—$55,600.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a matter I wanted to discuss in connection with the telegraph lines, but I suppose I shall be allowed to speak on any item?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Any item: no objection.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the government erecting towers here and there throughout the country in connection with the Marconi telegraph system?

Mr. BRODEUR. No; we have been erecting some in British Columbia——

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I mean in Ontario.

Mr. OLIVER. The towers referred to are probably those of the geodetic survey, the object of which is to establish fixed points throughout the country from which to true up, so to speak, the existing surveys.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Who is in charge?

Mr. OLIVER. Dr. King, of the astronomical surveys branch of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BERGERON. Part of this vote is for the Yukon telegraph system. Is that the system we built some years ago?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this for repairs?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For renewals and repairs. I regret to say it is a very expensive system to keep up. The hon. gentleman can understand that, as it is far from civilization and passes over vast wastes of mountains.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the total amount voted for this service in the main estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The Yukon system, $22,600. The operating expenses of the Yukon system, $180,000, were provided for in the main estimates.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any reduction in the rates recently ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, after consideration I gave directions to make quite a large reduction on the western telegraph line from 50 cents to 35 cents, and in many cases to 25 cents.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has there been much interruption to telegraph communication in the Yukon ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are interruptions from time to time. Within a day or two my attention has been called to interruptions to the line which have been caused by the contractors cutting the right of way for the Grand Trunk Pacific. Trees have fallen down from the mountain side and interfered with the wires. I have given instructions that every reasonable care shall be taken to prevent that occurring. We shall insist upon the contractors repairing the line.

Mr. FOWLER. You have a telegraph lnie, I understand, in the counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Down the northern side of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the purpose of that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The telegraph line was extended down the St. Lawrence for the purpose of primarily assisting shipping, that is, to communicate more quickly with vessels in distress. That was the primary object of the extension of the system. But my hon. friend can see that from time to time demands would spring up to have connection made with business centres along the route. From year to year there has been an extension of the system, and now it serves a commercial purpose. That is the case both in the east and in the west. The telegraph system is being extended in various sections where it was not supposed that the lines would be commercially profitable, and therefore where companies would not undertake to establish a service.

Mr. BERGERON.

Mr. FOWLER. My information with regard to this matter is, that the department has been in the habit of building bridges and roads, and performing work that should be done by the municipal authorities, or at most by the local government, and that this work has been done by the department for the Dominion. I will read what my instructions are with regard to this matter.

There is a county road between Chicoutimi and St. Alphonse on Ha Ha bay, about midway. There is a swamp some three miles long, which should be under the care of local authorities. But the people desiring to rid themselves of this burden made application to the federal member for the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, to get this road cut across the swamp. Being a somewhat ingenious personage, he thought it would be a good plan to tack this on to the telegraph line. He did so. and was able to prevail upon the department to accede to his wishes, and they have been building a mile each year. The work is now about completed. In the Auditor General's Report of 1905-6, D—306, will be found certain items. The whole line is 12 miles long. I am told the amount spent on it is out of proportion. For the two years the total amount spent is about $1,300, for the 12 miles. There are charges for sand that was to be put in the holes for the telegraph posts, and this sand, I understand, has not been piled up around the posts, but a wide ditch has been dug, the poles are outside the ditch, and the sand is spread on the road. They have also been building bridges. I find that they have built a bridge at Anse St. Jean.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the cost of the bridge.

Mr. FOWLER. I will come to that later. I am speaking on the question of principle, about the Dominion government building works that should be built by the local authorities.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It might be that the men repairing or constructing the telegraph line have erected a bridge for their purposes.

Mr. FOWLER. They did not do anything of the kind. There is a population living on both sides of the river. Formerly there was one school on the north side and two on the south side.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. Is the hon. gentleman reflecting the information gathered by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames).

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) is capable of taking care of himself.

Mr. CARVELL. In the Public Accounts Committee the engineer gave all the evidence on this question, and there is no necessity for the hon. gentleman replying to it.

Mr. FOWLER. There was no evidence given with regard to this particular bridge, or any other matter that I am bringing up now.

Mr. CARVELL. So much the more reason why you should not bring it up. The hon. member for St. Antoine spent two days examining witnesses over this question in the Public Accounts Committee, and my hon. friend cannot make this committee believe that there was anything down there that the hon. member for St. Antoine did not find. If you will read the evidence that is given I will not have any fault to find.

Mr. FOWLER. I can quite understand that if my hon. friend from St. Antoine did bring a matter up in connection with bridges how great a difficulty he would find to get in any evidence with regard to it when the obstruction brigade, of which the hon. gentleman was one of the chief movers, was there in full force. But the obstruction brigade cannot get their work in now and I propose to put it on 'Hansard.' I want my hon. friend to understand that it takes a great deal heavier force than he is to prevent me doing anything that I desire to do here.

Mr. CARVELL. That is not sworn to.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is my hon. friend now giving some facts from his own knowledge or from any testimony given before the committee ?

Mr. FOWLER. I am giving the facts as they are stated to me. Appoint a commission and we will bring evidence to prove them up to the hilt.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By whom are they stated ?

Mr. FOWLER. They are stated by me.

Mr. PUGSLEY. By whom ?

Mr. FOWLER. I am not required to state by whom and I do not propose to do it. When I make a statement here I say what my authority is. I say that I am presenting this statement according to my instructions.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I want to know if it is from your own knowledge ?

Mr. FOWLER. No. I was telling the committee about the reason that was given for the building of this bridge across the river. There were two schools on the south side of the river and one on the north side. It was found necessary in the interest of the school district to consolidate these three schools and there was no bridge. So, at the suggestion of the local member the party came to the rescue again. The result is that a bridge was built.

Mr. CARVELL. And the engineer swore in his evidence before the committee that this bridge was built not for the accommodation of these schools but for the purpose of the telegraph line. The hon. gentleman will find that in the evidence.

Mr. FOWLER. There are twelve miles of telegraph line and they bring this officer up and compel him to swear that the bridge is necessary for the telegraph line.

Mr. CARVELL. Your own evidence is not sworn to as I have stated.

Mr. FOWLER. If it were possible to state anything wrongly my hon. friend would state it wrongly.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend takes good pains not to state it at all.

Mr. FOWLER. The highway ran along the south shore of the river one hundred feet from the bridge so that the telegraph does not touch the bridge at all.

Mr. CARVELL. That is not evidence.

Mr. FOWLER. I am giving the evidence as I have it here.

Mr. CARVELL. My hon. friend cannot show any sworn evidence that has been given before the Public Accounts Committee. I was there and I know what the evidence was.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have not said anything about what was stated before the Public Accounts Committee. I am giving a statement of what the facts are as I am instructed.

There has been $200 expended on this bridge. It has nothing whatever to do with the telegraph service.

Saguenay river repairing bridge, west side; $200 has been spent on this work. This is a municipal bridge and ought not to be kept in order by government money.

Ferland via Grand bay. Expense, $201.75. A small stream, the Bras Hamel, flows into the Ha Ha river. Up this stream there are three or four farmers out in the woods west of the Ha Ha river, the main line of telegraph between Ha Ha bay and Baie St. Paul is east of the Ha Ha river. This branch line three miles long was built for no other purbridge and repairing the road. No messages ever come down this line except for hunters pose than to give an excuse for building a in the cariboo season in the fall. Expenditure wholly useless.

Rivière aux Cedres. Expense, $187.63. This money spent in entirely remaking a bridge which is on the provincial road from Chicoutimi to Baie St. Paul. The road is a provincial government road and the provincial government spend money every year in keeping it in repair. The Dominion government also do the same.

St. Felix d'Otis. Expenditure, $199.96. There is a lake known as Otis lake in the township of Otis. A small stream flows northwest from this, empties into the Saguenay river. Where the provincial road crosses this river a bridge has been built. It should not have been built with Dominion government money. It is a municipal bridge like the others.

Last summer the bridge was built on the Balin river. This will appear in the next Auditor General's Report. Several hundred dollars was spent last summer under the same circumstances. This bridge is between St. Anne and St. Fulgence, both thickly populated and well to do municipalities on the highways.

There are five or six houses at a place called Lac Clair in the township of Falardeau. It is a place where sportsmen go to fish. A line has been built from St. Anne de Chicoutimi in Canton Tremblay to Lac Clair, 22 miles distant. There are perhaps 20 families along the line and three stations. The first station, No. 1, in range 6, at a very small saw-mill, Canton Tremblay; station No. 2 at the end of Lake Charles where there are about three or four settlers, and station No. 3 at Lac Clair, where there are three or four settlers. The line is used by sportsmen but never by the settlers except in emergency where doctors or priests are required. A very rough road leads in to Lac Clair, passing for about three miles through a limestone belt. The government spend each year about $100 in work upon the road at this point in Canton Tremblay. It is probably covered by the item; Canton Tremblay, right of way, roadway and property in municipality, $300.

It is a general rule that much of the money voted for the telegraphs is spent in rebuilding or repairing bridges, in repairing roads and doing other work which is entirely outside the function of the Dominion government.

I have also some information in connection with some of these wharfs and to show that what I stated to the minister was a fact——

Mr. CARVELL. This is the hon. member for St. Antoine again.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it ? Well this is the member for Kings and Albert who is discussing it now. There are two counties—Laval and Terrebonne.

Mr. CARVELL. It is a pity you have not some moving pictures to illustrate them.

Mr. FOWLER. You would make a nice moving picture to keep crows out of a harvest field. There is a river separating these two counties, and a scheme was gotten up to build a wharf at a place called St. François des Sales.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What is the name of the river ?

Mr. FOWLER. I will have to look. The minister laughs. It is very funny that I should not know the name of a river in Quebec ! I think that my knowledge of geography will compare with that of the Minister of Public Works or of the burdocks who laugh when he gets off his funny speech. A wharf was built at Terrebonne and a wharf was built in the county of Laval at St. François des Sales. There was no necessity for a wharf at that place. There was no business to be done at it.

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. PUGSLEY. How does the hon. gentleman know that ?

Mr. FOWLER. Because these are the facts. Does he say there is any business done at either of these wharfs ? My hon. friend is silent upon that point.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is making a certain statement and he is making a charge that certain wharfs were built where there was no business. My hon. friend will see that it is due to himself that he should give the committee the source of his information so that one may ascertain whether the statements of the hon. gentleman are to be relied upon.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister built those wharfs and he should be able to say whether there is any business at all ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I presume they were built before I became minister.

Mr. TAYLOR. You are responsible if your department did it.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister does not seem to know anything about his department and whether these wharfs are built on navigable water or not. I have here a statement with reference to this :

It appears that during 1904-5 and 1905-6 there was expended about $30,000 in construction of two 'wharfs' on opposite sides of the river between Terrebonne and Ile Jesus. After the 'wharfs' had been constructed the town council of Terrebonne built a bridge and connected them costing $28,000. This Terrebonne bridge connects Ile Jesus with the mainland to the north crossing the River de Prairie. It is some considerable distance above the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, which is not a draw bridge and effectually blocks the river except for small boats. There is no navigation on this river above Lachenais four miles below the bridge, yet the government has expended within recent years $56,600 for dredging between Charlemagne and Terrebonne. This dredging has no other purpose than to give countenance to the expenditure at Terrebonne and St. François des Sales No boats have been up the river as far as Terrebonne since 20 years and then only at high spring tide. The result of the dredging is merely a ditch of about 20 feet wide with earth thrown up on both sides which washes back in again.

Then we have the River du Moulin in the Lake St. John district. This comes under the head of protection work. As to this I have this statement :

Rivière du Moulin—Protection work.

In the Auditor General's Report for 1905-6, page V-229 appears the item $4,090.73; again in Auditor General's Report for 1906-7 page V-165, under Lake St. John wharfs appears $676.22 and again at V-176 an item $1,469.39 altogether a total of $6.236 spent within two years. The River du Moulin is a fair sized stream entering the Saguenay from the south, quarter of a mile east of the town of Chicoutimi. The regular public highroad between Chicoutimi and Bagotville crosses the stream by a bridge about 200 feet from its mouth. There was formerly a wooden bridge across the stream built by the municipal authorities. They desired to have this replaced by an iron bridge and decided to do so. The township of Chicoutimi paid a contractor to make a stone abutment on the east side and persuaded the resident engineer to recommend to the government the erection of a concrete pier of similiar size on the west side and an iron bridge built by the municipal authorities connecting the two piers. The bridge and the stone pier by contract cost about $8,000; the concrete pier alone on the west built by the government cost $6,236. The municipality did not want to spend $8,000 or $10,000 for the bridge which could not be built for less than $15,000 including abutments. They applied to the provincial government and got a few hundred dollars from that source, than they undertook to interest the local federal member, Mr. Girard, and he advised them to draw a petition which they did stating that the river was filling up the Saguenay and increasing the dredging and Mr. Girard stated that on these representations he would endeavour to get money from the government and the engineer although knowing the facts made a report along these lines. The river is a rocky river, the bed covered with boulders and little sand ever comes down. More than that the Saguenay river is very deep from the entrance of the River du Moulin down for some distance and the dredging operations are upon bars four miles down stream. Consequently the excuses given for these improvements were absolutely fictitious. This is called a protection work but as a matter of fact there are wooden wharfs on both sides of the pier which amply protect the bank at that point and part of these banks is rocky.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If there was no navigation there what do they want wharfs for ?

Mr. FOWLER. You can call them piers, wharfs, piles or what you like.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Who had built the wharfs before ?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not know, that has absolutely nothing to do with the question.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Is that one of the wharfs you have a photograph of ?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, I shall send it to the minister ; I have even the plans. Now, I am going to give my hon. friend some further information :

At Clark city on the west side of the Bay of Seven islands several years ago the North Shore Power, Railway and Navigation Company commenced building a large pulpwood plant. This company was first formed by people of Toronto. Later many Americans became interested. The first year of their operations at the above-mentioned place they began building a wharf. Later they persuaded the federal government to undertake this work for the benefit of the general public of Canada, which was done. The department which has this class of work in hand sent down their own engineer with the county engineer in charge, and the work was started on account of the government, which when about half completed and had already cost over $75,000, owing to wrong construction toppled over partly into the sea.

You would not need any better evidence that this was a government work undertaken by this government, after the experience we have had. The Laurier tower fell in a heap; the Laurier bridge is lying to-day at the bottom of the St. Lawrence river; the Laurier dredge sank to the bottom, and we know what is going to happen to the Laurier government when the next election comes.

The most expensive wood used for this purpose had been imported from the southern states, pitch pine, which originally cost on the spot 12 cents per foot of 12 inches square. The wood and cribwork was about the best I had ever seen, certainly better than any work to be seen about the Montreal harbour when of wood construction; but unfortunately, owing to want of experience of this famous engineer in charge, less than one-half the necessary amount of iron was used in construction, considering the strain the work was expected to stand. However, this was not the cause of the collapse. The bottom on which fourteen feet of this heavy cribwork was supposed to rest (the wharf was about 1,400 feet long by 50 feet wide) was on top composed of four to six feet of soft oozing mud in which it was possible to shove down a pole six feet. Under this for over twenty feet the soil or bottom consisted of sand and gravel mixed. After putting the cribwork in place, with sufficient rock ballast to keep it down, this bright engineer decided to get a dredge and deepen the water on each side of the cribwork to thirty feet. This was undertaken and partly completed when suddenly over 600 feet of the wharf turned half over, part on one side and part on the other. In fact, this part had a full half twist and resembled a corkscrew. It had cost the government somewhere about $75,000 to complete this work. I have been informed the original vote was $90,000. Last year the work of reconstruction was again handed back to the above company who first started it wholly for their own individual interests, no other parties doing business ever going there unless they have business with the company.

At Seven Islands there is another wharf to be built. The small village there has lately been incorporated, and the member for the county of Saguenay decided two years ago that it would be advisable in the interest of retaining their votes in his favour to get the government to build a wharf for them. He was down there last summer, and at a meeting the wharf was discussed. He mentioned in the course of his speech that owing to the government having voted money for a wharf at Seven islands—referring to the one under construction at Clark City—they would have to apply for one for County Arneaud. No person being familiar with the vicinity, it would not be known that the request to the government really meant two wharfs for Seven islands. It is situated on the east side of Seven Islands bay. This wharf will be of no practical utility, the water being very shoal for a long distance off the shore, and no steamer could approach it were it built for a reasonable sum of money, considering the heavy cost and the small service which will be rendered to about twenty fishing boats which frequent the place and fish only a part of each summer, and not half of these boats will make use of the wharf, as the settlement is directly along the beach, only one range of buildings consisting of about eighty families, many of the men having long ago given up fishing to work at the various lumber establishments in the vicinity.

Something like that elevator-shaped building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does the hon. gentleman say that another wharf is under construction at Seven Islands ?

Mr. FOWLER. No, one proposed. I am warning the minister against this demand for a wharf, not at Seven Islands but in the adjoining county. There is a telegraph line at Esquimaux point owned by the government. Several years ago since 1896, the parties there decided that a new bridge over a creek that runs through the parish would be advisable, but how to get the government to put up the money for it was the problem. The member soon solved it. He proposed that it should be represented as a necessity in connection with the government telegraph line. He apparently represented the matter thus in Ottawa, and the following summer a bridge was built over the creek, which at times has about four inches of water over it, at an expense of $400 and charged against the department telegraph lines. The cost of the work was reasonable, but there was no necessity for it.

The latest plan to get money, and one to which the memebr for Saguenay appears to be agreeable, is for building roads. Funds for this purpose are voted from time to time, and of course spent, but one fails to perceive any improvements in the roads. Gangs of men are sent out under a local foreman, but they generally go along the telegraph line which has been cleared years ago, cutting the second growth of short spruce or fir. I would go more into details of these matters only for the fact that it is now nearly twelve o'clock. Here is another expenditure to which I shall briefly refer.

A bridge is to be built over the Chaudière river connecting the counties of Beauce and Compton in the town of Lake Megantic. This is not in the county of Chicoutimi but evidently the representative of Beauce and Compton took a leaf out of the book of the hon. member for Chicoutimi. No doubt the hon. gentleman's supporters will point to him as a wonderful man in getting lots of money from the government to be spent in his constituency, but there will be other constituencies where perhaps this thing will not appeal to the people in the same way. But apart from that. I take it that the public money which belongs to the federal government should be spent for federal and not for provincial and municipal purposes and that all parts of Canada should be treated alike. I have pointed out before to the minister and earnestly besought him to do justice to his own province, and I am showing him here the great favouritism enjoyed by certain sections, such as the county of Chicoutimi, and contrasting that with the injustice done the province of New Brunswick.

This Lake Megantic bridge is to be built over the Chaudière river, connecting the counties of Beauce and Compton in the town of Lake Megantic. This river being non-navigable, the Dominion government is to build one half from the Beauce side calling it a wharf, giving the town of Megantic permission to build a wharf from the Compton side to connect. The provincial government in some manner will grant the town of Megantic $2,000 to help to defray their portion of the cost. And I think we voted in 1905-6, $5,000, in 1906-7, $5,000, and a revote now of $5,000. There has been expended so far about $12,000 in connection with this work. So that not only in Chicoutimi but in other districts throughout the country we find the same thing carried on and the federal money devoted to works that should be done by the provincial and municipal authorities.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I think I should give a few explanations as regards the manner in which the public funds have been expended in the constituency which I represent here. I regret I am not in a position to present these with as much ease in English as in French, and for the sake of clearness and brevity, I shall take advantage of the right I enjoy of expressing in my native tongue.

My hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) has assumed the task of arraigning the government in consequence of certain works which have been carried out, with the consent of the minister, such as bridges, repairs to telegraph lines, the latter having been built through my district in the public interest, and not at all for local purposes.

I have the honour to represent here a constituency of exceptional importance and extent. The greater part of the north shore of the St. Lawrence lies within my county. For the purpose of assisting navigation, the government built a telegraph line along that coast. That line is entirely for the benefit of the country as a whole, and not for that of the residents in my constituency. It so happens that along that telegraph line there are small groups of population, small villages, at certain places, inhabited by fishermen, or by both fishermen and farmers; but in the majority of cases there are no municipalities in existence. In other parts, in order to enable people to vote, municipalities have been organized, the valuation of which is very small. That telegraph line was built without foresight or care; it was practically forced on the people against their will. The posts were set in spite of provincial and federal legislations, and each post which was put inside of the road ditch was an impediment to travel. That work was done at the time the friends of the hon. member for Kings and Albert were in power. I mean the work which was carried on between 1880 and 1896, previous to my occupying a seat in this House; and to-day, the government and your humble servant are called upon in honour and conscience to mend past errors, inasmuch as the law and common sense will allow. And now, my hon. friend, not knowing who are the people moving him in the matter, comes out with this unfair criticism and compels the people concerned to put matters in their true light, through my voice, and to place the responsibility where it belongs.

I regret that my hon. friend does not understand what I am saying, but having the right to speak in French, I want to prove to the government and to the Minister of Public Works, that this whole investigation that has been going on in the Public Accounts Committee, through the efforts of my hon. friend from St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), has no real foundation, but rests merely on the machinations of a group of local politicians, so-called Liberals or Tories, who really belong to neither party. A small ring of speculators in my county have supplied the hon. member for St. Antoine with the information on which he has based his charges, being unaware that such information has no foundation in fact, is untrue and unfair, and the member for St. Antoine, in turn, has passed on this information to the member for Kings and Albert, who has very cleverly brought it once more before the House. However, he did not really know what he was talking about, being content with to repeat here strings of stories of which he would never have spoken, had he taken the pains of verifying the statements; for then he would have known that he had no interest in repeating stories like these, which finally fall back on his friends.

About forty years ago, the Canadian government thought fit, and rightly so, to build a telegraph line from Bay St. Paul, in the county of Charlevoix, to the city of Chicoutimi, in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, with a view to providing the people of that district, which was then very much out of the way, the benefit of an up-to-date means of communication. For that purpose, advantage was taken of the road which the local government had opened through the Laurentian hills, between St. Urbain and St. Alexis. That road, as soon as the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway had reached Chicoutimi, was given up by the local government, and since then, the Dominion government, in order to protect their rights as to the telegraph line just referred to, was, and is still, obliged to repair that road for purposes of maintenance.

Eighteen miles from the parish of St. Alexis is the township of Ferland, where a small group of settlers have located under favourable conditions. On account of the remoteness of their location, they have, through me, applied to the Minister of Public Works requesting him to be so kind as to allow them to connect, on the main line running from Bay St. Paul to Chicoutimi, what I might call a side line, about two miles long, which would enable them to communicate more easily with the rest of the world. That application was immediately granted with pleasure, the expenditure called for being very small and the service thus rendered to settlers in my district being of great value to them. Now, having found this out,—although I see here nothing that should not be highly commended, my hon. friend from St. Antoine, the other day, before the Public Accounts Committee, flushed with virtuous indignation and gave an exhibition of himself which hon. members then present will long remember. The settlers concerned, to whose knowledge will be brought the facts which I am stating to-night, would gladly listen to my hon. friend's argument, if he were so kind as to come and point out to them wherein there is a scandal or a waste of money in connection with work.

The bridge on the Cedar river referred to by the hon. member is situated in that part of the road I have just spoken about, and, consequently, forms part of the maintenance of the telegraph line. Further west, is the swamp to which the hon. member for Kings and Albert has referred, on the road between St. Alphonse and Chicoutimi, and where he has also discovered some sort of scandal. Let me tell him that if, while building that line, his friends, instead of putting the telegraph posts inside the road ditch, had put them, as the law required, in the proper spot, outside the ditch, there would have been no necessity for his informers to maliciously use him as an instrument for misleading public opinion and unfairly criticising the government. After all, that is only a mere business proposition which was carefully considered by the officers of the department and the council of St. Alphonse, the latter, in consequence of the trouble and damages inflicted by the improper building of the line, claiming from the government the compensation to which they were entitled, or else the removal of the line. All parties concerned have accepted as equitable the settlement now proposed, which is one of the most practical and acceptable which the government could make under the circumstances.

Reference has been made by my hon. friend to a bridge at l'Anse St. Jean, which he managed to mix up with a school-house matter, and stated, in support of his contention, that the bridge had no connection whatever with the telegraph line. I am willing to pay the expenses of my hon. friend if he will visit the spot, so that he may be in a position to judge of the fairness of his informers; and he will find out that the bridge referred to is right in front of the telegraph office of the parish, and facing the house of the man employed to repair the line between l'Anse à Cheval and St. Alexis. He will also find out that with a paltry $200, the amount voted for that purpose, it would have been impossible, in the ordinary course, to build a bridge 200 feet long, suitable for general traffic. Then, if he inquires, he will learn that the people there, hearing that the department needed such a bridge, as a facility in the work of repairing the line, joined hands with the department and built a bridge costing $700 or $800; and I do not think there is anything to find fault with in this connection.

Now, let us proceed to St. Félix d'Otis; it is a building put up in the woods; there is no municipal organization there; only a group of settlers along the mail road from St. Alexis to l'Anse St. Jean. The government had to build a shelter there for the protection of the postman in stormy weather. A bridge was crumbling to pieces; the same reasons which justified the Dominion government in building a shelter for the postman, and paying $40 a year to the keeper, for the safety of travellers, justified them in repairing the bridge referred to without laying itself open to a charge of graft or embezzlement.

My hon. friend has spoken of the telegraph line to Lake Clair, north of the Saguenay river. Here again we have a building similar to that in Ferland township to which reference has been made a moment ago, put up for the benefit of isolated settlers, cut off from the rest of the world, but who nevertheless are contributors to the public chest, just as my hon. friend who is complaining, and who have the same right as he has to obtain from the Dominion government, when common sense warrants it, the permanent works they are entitled to. My hon. friend has spoken of subscriptions in connection with the roads in the parish of Ste. Anne. If his informers who have loaded him up, had been willing to tell him the truth, he would have learned that in order to secure a short cut through the parish, it was arranged with the council that the telegraph lines would be allowed to pass over private property, in consideration of the sum of $300 which was paid to them, an entirely clear and fair bargain to the advantage of the department.

Suddenly my hon. friend jumps from Ste. Anne to Esquimaux Point, a distance of about 600 miles, where he discovers another telegraph bridge. If he had looked over the map before delivering himself up as a tool to his informers, who have so utterly deceived him, before the House, he would have found that between Ste. Anne and Esquimaux Point there are 25 or 30 streams, over which, with a view to the maintenance of the telegraph lines, bridges have been built by the department; and that built at Esquimaux Point is only one among many others. Now, at the place I have just mentioned there is a village inhabited by poor fishermen of the north shore, who will be much pleased, no doubt, to learn through the newspapers that the Conservative party has taken upon itself, on the floor of the House to cast aspersions on the government, unabashed for all that, because there are houses in their village, to build a bridge in it, just as they would do if it were in the bush.

My hon. friend will realize that under the circumstances, he has been humbugged by an organization of people who are certainly not his well-wishers, and still less the well-wishers of his party; and I trust that in future, before lending himself to such trickery, he will take the means of ascertaining the real worth of the people claiming his services as a critic here.

I am not quite through dealing with the insinuations made in connection with repairs to telegraph lines carried on in my constituency. Once more, I think it my duty to state that the county of Saguenay, which is comprised within the limits of my electoral district, occupies a peculiar geographical situation, and comprises a widely scattered population, settled here and there, according to the natural advantages offered by the various localities. And that population has been utterly neglected and practically forgotten by the Quebec government for all time, and by the Dominion government until the last seven or eight years. However those people, who number some nine or ten thousand souls, have contributed to the Dominion chest a large amount of revenue since confederation; and I am sorry, indeed, to find that one of my good friends in this House thinks that this government is not doing right in looking after the welfare of these people, in endeavouring to improve their conditions, and granting them a modicum of the improvements which they have a right to claim. However, I do not wish to condemn too severely the hon. member, being satisfied that he acted in good faith, and never perceived that, in making these charges which he has just made, he was merely being used as a tool in the hands of people down there who are greatly amused at the trick they succeeded in working on him.

But before proceeding further, I think it is my duty to state to the House that these criticisms are not endorsed by public opinion in our county and that all this is merely the result of a plot on the part of a few schemers who, unwilling to assume the responsibility for their deeds, have not had the courage to allow the use of their names to the hon. members for St. Antoine and Kings and Albert. On the contrary, they have sought to cast on the Conservative party of my district all responsibility for their action, by voicing their grievances through two members of the opposition in this House. But I am happy to state that I am in a position to defeat the effort which is being made to mix up certain people in this business. A few days ago, I received a letter from one of the leaders of the Conservative party in the county of Chicoutimi, stating that the Conservative party in the district denied all connection with the plot which was going on, apparently under its name, and rejoiced at finding that no French Canadian member of the opposition had been willing to undertake what he frankly called the dirty business which others have been made to do. He requests me to assure the government that the Conservative party as a whole, with the exception of a few of its members whom it disowns, is generous enough and self-respecting enough not to wage war on the government, be it Liberal or Conservative, on the ground of favours which it has itself applied for on several occasions. I trust the government will realize the importance of such a statement.

My hon. friend spoke of a bridge pier on the River du Moulin ; he showed a photograph which he afterwards handed to the minister and read a series of written statements which were, of course, supplied to him by the ring of which I have just spoken ; statements which are false throughout. Let me state to my hon. friend that the pier referred to was built by the engineers of the Department of Public Works as a protection pier, because the wooden sheathing which he mentioned was beginning to give way, that wherever this happens, the bank is eaten up as a result of frosts, and that, one of these days, this wooden sheathing will have to be replaced by masonry extending from the said pier. Otherwise, the dredging of the Saguenay river, which has been started and is practically going on, would be of no avail, the channel being filled up by the material kept back heretofore by the woodwork referred to. My hon. friend claimed that, in the vicinity of that pier, the bottom of the River du Moulin is rock. That is true as regards the east side ; but, when building that pier, it was necessary to put in piles 30 feet in length ; it will thus be seen that the rock bottom, if such exists, is very deep, and that his facts are far from being correct. That is the exact truth as regards the department. When that pier was built, the parish of Chicoutimi forwarded a petition to me signed by all the inhabitants, endorsed by the council, requesting that the government allow them to place thereon the western end of a bridge which they were building. The minister sent no reply, and the council took upon themselves to use the pier as they intended. But even admitting that the object in view was really the building of a pier for the bridge, I do not think I would have reason, or the government have reason, to be ashamed of it. And here are my reasons for saying so: in 1903 I had the honour to represent the county of Lake St. John in the Quebec legislature. Colonization in that district was then almost at a standstill ; it was necessary to undertake large works in order to restore confidence. Two bridges valued at $50,000 were to be built without delay. The local government resolved to undergo that expenditure, but sought the co-operation of the Dominion government for that object I was sent to Ottawa as a delegate to discuss the matter with the Hon. Mr. Ouimet, Minister of Public Works. I submitted the plan to him; he called in his deputy minister, Mr. Gobeil, and his chief engineer, Mr. Coste, to whom he submitted the queston. After considering the matter, the minister decided with pleasure to pay $2,000 for the construction, as wharfs, of two piers on each side of the Grande Décharge of Lake St. John. The Quebec department of colonization was advised of that decision. The bridge was built and in September, 1894, the Auditor General allowed the payment of these $2,000, mention of which is made in the Public Accounts, and in the following letter :

Quebec, March 18, 1908.

Joseph Girard, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Sir,—In answer to your letter of the 15th instant, to the Hon. Mr. Devlin, I beg to inform you that the bridge at the Grande Décharge was built during the years 1893 and 1894.

We received as a contribution from the Dominion government the sum of $2,000.

Yours truly,
F. DUFAUX,
Deputy Minister.

The Hon. Mr. Ouimet, in giving these instructions, stated he was happy that the Dominion law and especially the Hon. Mr. Foster, then the faithful guardian of the treasury had given him a free hand in the matter, towards promoting the settlement of the Lake St. John country, the advantages of which were known to him, and wherein settlers were seeking to build homes for themselves under such favourable circumstances. If in 1904 the then Minister of Public Works and the then Minister of Finance, with the assent of the Auditor General, approved of the idea of contributing to the building of bridges in my constituency, with a view of promoting colonization, I cannot preceive why, in 1908, the friends of the hon. gentleman should take exception to the same policy when carried out by a Liberal government. There should not be two weights and two measures, and and what was perfectly right in 1894 cannot be all wrong in 1908. I have followed in the footsteps of these hon. gentlemen in my efforts to accomplish some good; I am not sorry for it, but they should not blame me to-day for carrying out their teachings.

A moment ago my hon. friend handed over to the Minister of Public Works, with a sarcastic smile, a photograph of the bridge which he finds fault with. I may be permitted in answer to show a photograph of part of the bridge of which I have just spoken, wherein will be seen the piers towards the building of which the Hon. Mr. Ouimet was so happy to contribute $2,000. If my hon. friend had known the history of the case he would have avoided dealing with the matter; for in 1894, at the time of the interview above stated, the Hon. Mr. Ouimet was very glad to give instructions to his engineer, Mr. Blais, to build, as approaches to a wharf to be built later on, three miles of road right through the woods, towards promoting the settlement of Talon township, in the Lake St. John district. These instructions were put down in black and white, and are on record in the department. Now, Mr. Speaker, is there much more harm in the present government building approaches to a wharf with a view to facilitating trade impeded by obstacles in the shape of bad roads, than in the government which was in power in 1894 ordering the building of a colonization road three miles in length as an approach to a wharf which was not yet in existence?

I regret that I should thus be obliged, in order to answer my hon. friend's charges, to recall the political history of the last few years; but it is impossible for me to do otherwise. The Hon. Mr. Foster, speaking in this House on the 12th of March last, stated that the Dominion legislation did not exactly define the exact limit between local works and Dominion works, and that, in consequence, abuses arose from time to time; that it was necessary that such a state of things should be put an end to, and the limit exactly defined. He seemed to blame this government for not doing so. I have no objection to this government taking such action, should they think fit to do so; but I wonder why this government should be under greater obligation than the old government to modify legislation enacted with sound sense by the fathers of confederation; and I cannot admit that the hon. gentleman has the right to blame the present government for doing what he himself was only too glad to do when he had the keys of the chest, and he was called upon to promote the development of some outlying part of the country, even though it be Chicoutimi and Saguenay.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend realizes that those who requested him to make those charges before the House are not his best friends. I believe he himself has not seen them and that he is purely and simply entrusted with the task of carrying on the work started by the member for St. Antoine. Possibly he thought he was dealing with friends, though he did not know their names. I may be allowed to tell him who are the people working this scheme: Mr. Allain, Mr. Savard, Mr. Dubuc, Mr. Joseph Guay, of Chicoutimi, allies of Mr. Ben. Scott, of Roberval, who have as their agent Mr. Simon Lapointe, the latter having come to Ottawa to load up hon. members of the opposition. Mr. Savard and Mr. Allain claim to be Liberals, but in their committee they receive with pleasure those of whom I have just spoken, and who call themselves Conservatives. Together have they prepared the plot; together have they delegated Mr. Lapointe to Ottawa; but on the very day that Mr. Lapointe left Chicoutimi, Mr. Allain and Mr. Savard wrote to a prominent man in Ottawa a letter which I have seen, advising him that Mr. Lapointe was proceeding to Ottawa to supply the hon. members on the other side with ammunition against the government, but that it was in spite of them. So, I am in a position to-day to state to the hon. gentleman that, instead of helping the cause of his Conservative friends in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, he is merely working for the benefit of certain people who claim to be Liberals, but who employ Mr. Lapointe, a so-called Conservative, to make war on the government, without the latter finding them out. Such are the lofty feelings of these hypocrites which I desire to make known to the House and to submit to the appreciation of the ministers who hear me. At the bottom of all this, there is jealousy, there is a desire to promote private ends, which the public as a whole does not suspect, but which people at home keenly appreciate.

My hon. friend has spoken of the wharf at Clark City in the bay of Sept-Iles and has described in a more or less gruesome light. I may say that this wharf has been built by the government with a view to securing control over the landing at that point, instead of leaving it in the hands of private concerns which might have taken advantage of it, to the detriment of others. The company which is doing business at Clark City has spent heretofore about $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 of entirely American capital, which has been applied in developing one of the finest industries in the country, and the products of which will, within a few weeks, be put on the market. This company has contributed towards the building of the said wharf an amount as large, if not larger, than that contributed by the country itself; but they have agreed to let the government have full control of the wharf, and business men consider such a departure to be in the public interest. Presently at Clark City there will be a large town, towards the building up of which the Dominion will have contributed a relatively small amount; and I understand that it has been customary all over the country that the government should co-operate in the building up of industries so beneficial to the public weal.

On the 12th of March last, my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) launched out in great style against the government at the instigation of those same people I have just named, because the government had built on the River Saguenay and close to Chicoutimi booms similar to those in the St. Maurice. He complained at the same time that the pulp company had not paid any dues and refused to pay them, under pretense that these booms were so badly constructed that the pulp company, after applying for them, refused to take advantage of them. That question has come before the Public Accounts Committee. An investigation was held. It was shown and proven by all the officers of the department who have to do with the question, from the chief engineer down, that these booms have been well and properly constructed, according to the ordinary plans in use by the department; but that the Pulp Company of Chicoutimi who had been insisting on the government putting in these booms, had on the day following that on which the government decided to do so, insisted that the government should buy their own booms, consisting in a chain and a single log of small diameter, old and poorly put in, for the price of $30,000. Experts were sent to establish the real value of these fixtures, and it was estimated at $5,000, or $6,000 at most; and the whole endeavour of the company since has been to run down the government booms, unheedful of the reputation of the officials who had to do with this work, in the hope that the government would be constrained to buy up their old plant at $30,000. I shall now read a letter which throws some light on the subject:

Chicoutimi, February 9, 1906.

Joseph Girard, Esq., M.P.,
St. Gédéon.

My dear Girard,—I have been requested by the board of directors of the Chicoutimi Pulp Company to come to some understanding with you regarding certain matters which have already been discussed pretty often, though without much success, owing to circumstances known to us. I am authorized to state to you that my fellow directors, at this meeting, which was held during the absence of Mr. Dubuc in Europe, acknowledge that you are not in any way to blame in this connection.

Our company is just now under stringent circumstances, and that should not surprise you, being aware that we have always been in need of capital, and that our establishment has cost nearly $2,000,000. The directors of the company have shown public spirit in establishing this company in Chicoutimi, and have invested in it their whole capital, their whole credit, all their belonging, and even more.

After subscribing $600,000, wholly paid-up, issuing $400,000 worth of debentures, disposing of $400,000 of preferential stock, we have still to tackle a floating debt of more than $200,000, which will have to be paid up without fault and without delay; and it is in order to request you to assist us as best you can that I have been asked to write to you, and to meet you if you so desire.

You are a man of resources, you have shown it on many occasions; you are aware of the importance of our undertaking, you know what its downfall would mean for Chicoutimi. You know that should we go under, our plant would fall into the hands of Americans, who have their eye on it, and you are patriotic enough to be willing to do what is in your power to prevent that, hon. sir.

If you wish me to meet you, we can discuss what means are at your disposal towards assisting us, and you may count on the gratitude of the directors of the company. I stated openly in public not very long ago, what are my feelings toward you. You may rest assured that these sentiments are wholly shared in by my fellow directors who have requested me to meet you.

Believe me, etc.,
J. D. GUAY,
Vice-president of the Pulp Co.

The pulp company of Chicoutimi being in very bad straits, having failed to secure from the city of Chicoutimi a subscription of $75,000, was striving to restore matters somewhat by extorting from the Dominion an amount of $25,000, which probably would have been very welcome. I deemed it my duty to submit that request of the company to the officials and to the ministers. After realizing that the proposal which was being made could not be considered in a fair light, I let the department deal with the matter as they thought advisable, and I am not sorry for doing so. However, the result has been this plot before the House and before the Public Accounts Committee against the government and against myself, owing to the fact that none of us were willing to endorse such gross boodling as had been proposed. Had I been willing to be the tool of these gentlemen, and stooped to that dirty business, you may be sure that neither the government, myself, nor the House, would have ever heard of those strictures concerning a few hundred dollars spent in the public interest and for the interest of poor people who are worthy of the government's consideration, and particularly because they are honest and loyal.

With the co-operation of these same gentlemen, and their full approval, the government decided to complete the dredging of the Saguenay begun by the Hon. Mr. Ouimet in 1894, and interrupted later. Matters were going on peacefully, the work had been started and was proceeding in good order, when on a sudden Lord Strathcona, Canadian High Commissioner in London, as may be ascertained by a return to an order of the House, wrote to the Minister of Marine here, on behalf of a certain Mr. Becker, whom nobody knows, that the dredging of the Saguenay was an act of madness, that the undertaking should be given up at once, and that the seaport for the district of Chicoutimi should be located at a spot along the River Saguenay which is called 'Les Batures.' I was consulted in this connection. Knowing what was the consensus of opinion in my district, I opposed this demand, although not knowing whence it came, and the government proceeded with the work. Since I have had constantly to battle against a certain party, whom I always found in the way without perceiving what was the reason of it all. But I have here a letter which will make known to you the promoter of this abusrd project, and which shows why the gentleman named is endeavouring to satisfy his hatred and a desire for vengeance against me. I shall now read two letters which will explan my meaning:

Quebec, April 3, 1908.

Joseph Girard, Esq., M.P.
Ottawa.

My dear Girard,—I understand that an application has been made by Mr. J. A. Dubuc, for the construction of a wharf at the Battures and for the extension of the railway up to deep water at that place. That application will be made on behalf of the new harbour company.

Heretofore the Chicoutimi Pulp Company has requested the dredging of the shoals (battures) as far up as Chicoutimi. You and the government have acceded to that request; large amounts have been spent, and there is no reason of recent occurrence why that undertaking should not be proceeded with. I have discussed the situation with Mr. G. S. Scott, Mr. Lemoine and others, and their views coincide with mine, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Dubuc claims that the dredging is almost at a standstill. I know, for my part, that the work is well under way, and that even greater progress would have been made if you had been given a free hand last summer. Half of the dredging is being carried on to a depth of 18 feet. I know that if the work is proceeded with this year and next, the dredging at the government wharf will reach a depth of 18 feet. That is a matter of great importance for Chicoutimi, for us and the pulp company.

Mr. Dubuc is indignant against Chicoutimi; he has a grudge against the city council and so states to all comers. My views differ from his in this respect.

I shall to-morrow return to Chicoutimi; I shall endeavour to cross Dubuc's plans, call a meeting of the city council and of the citizens, and we shall send a delegation to explain matters to the government as soon as you so desire.

If the building of the railway is to be proceeded with, a proposition to which I do not object, it should have its terminus at St. Alphonse, instead of the Battures, but we would like the dredging to go on just the same.

You can rely on me, on my paper, on my friends, on the whole population, I think, for support in this connection.

Do not give up, this is a critical hour, and we need your help.

Yours truly,
J. D. GUAY,
Vice-president of the Pulp Co.

April 10, 1906.

My Dear Girard,—I received your letter on Sunday, just as I was leaving for Quebec, and I met Taché yesterday morning here at the Frontenac. He has given me good news.

Your stand will have the general approval of the people at Chicoutimi, barring the Dubuc faction, which is not very numerous, as you know.

You shall have our petitions by Easter.

Taché tells me that we may rely on the dredging being done. I was informed here yesterday that the people in Quebec are expecting to have the dredge 'l'Internationale' for the Louise basin here, as soon as navigation opens. Have your eye on these people; nobody can tell when they will be through.

Our farmers will be glad to learn that you have obtained $4,000 for them. You are already aware, no doubt, that we have voted the by-law unanimously, thanks to your telegram, which I have explained as best I could.

Yours truly,
J. D. GUAY,
Vice-president of the Pulp Co.

I am glad to be in a position to lay these letters before the House, in order to enable the government and my fellow members to judge of the plots against which I have to contend just now, and of the esteem in which your humble servant was held by the vice-president of the Chicoutimi pulp company. I have not done anything wrong since, neither have any of my friends, notwithstanding which we are no longer held in the same estimation. There is no longer any hope of obtaining the $30,000.

A word of explanation concerning this whole matter. The county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, for its development, is dependent on various industries. Some are in the hands of millionaires; others in those of would-be millionaires. Those of the first class, such as that located at Jonquière, grow and prosper for the benefit of the people as a whole, and of the shareholders, without noise or trouble. Peace prevails in the neighbourhood, and it is a Protestant, Wm. Price, who is the foremost director of the undertaking, in the midst of an entirely Catholic and French Canadian population; and the same thing may be said of other industries in the county of Saguenay.

At Chicoutimi, the only industry in existence is in the hands of French Canadians, in the midst of a French Canadian population; and there is in that locality any amount of quarrelling, litigation, disputes, plots, etc., and even a ring whose influence is felt right here, consisting of people who, though poor, are intent on getting rich quick and have made up their minds to crush any who refuse to follow their dictates. It matters not what is the status or the influence of the person whom they resolved to undo. As an instance, take the case of Judge Gagné, appointed for the district, an absolutely honest and honourable man, whom the Chicoutimi organizer, Mr. Dubuc, has denounced in the papers, and in a circular letter addressed to the members of this House, shamelessly and unscrupulously. Now here is the manner in which the hon. Judge Langelier has lately characterized such conduct :

> Lastly, a Mr. Dubuc has published a letter in which he threatened in plain terms Judge Gagné with impeachment, should he decide adversely to his contention in a pending lawsuit. Whoever ventured to make such a threat to a judge in England would probably have been sent to jail for a term of six months.

In this connection, I wish to enter my emphatic protest against the malicious and slanderous attacks which the ring branded by me are unceasingly directing against the said judge, who has attained to his high position owing to his honesty and on that account cannot be made a tool of.

The clergy of Chicoutimi have not been spared. The newspapers of the province of Quebec, unfortunately, have been imprudent enough to spread abroad reports incorrect for the greater part as to the troubles experienced by the bishop, who perceiving that his good faith was being taken advantage of, hastened to grant to the person whom the ring was anxious to ruin in his esteem a certificate of good citizenship and Christian conduct. Two weeks later, one of the ring stated in a well-known office in the city of Quebec, that the bishop of Chicoutimi must have lost his head to act in such a way, and that he was bound to go. But His Grace knows that he still enjoys the full confidence and respect of the whole Catholic population.

Before the Public Accounts Committee, the inquiry was directed mainly against the engineers of the Department of Public Works, whom the ring had failed to bend to their own objects. The investigation clearly showed that the officials, chief engineers, resident engineers and other employees assigned to the district, are absolutely honest and above reproach and entirely beyond any slanders which the ring might be capable of devising, in spite of their cleverness, for their great talent consists in resorting to calumny unceasingly. There were left only the government and your humble servant who had not been the objects of attacks on the part of that gang of bold speculators. Now it is our turn; word has been given and we must suffer; and so it is that in every station of life we find victims of that gang; the clergy, the judicature, public officials, the government and your humble servant. However, none of us are dead as yet; we all have in hand an antidote in sufficient quantity against the poison distilled by the gang; we have honesty; we are impervious to their venom. In the minds of these organizers, this whole business may be considered as a personal attack on my honesty and that of my friends. Cowardice has prevented them from making their charges openly; but the whole trend of that affair was an insinuation to that effect. The investigation before the Public Accounts Committee has clearly shown the correctness of all accounts. However, since it has been deemed advisable to entrust Mr. Lapointe with the task of investigating our honesty, I shall supply him for the next six months with the following information to be laid before the public: How can Dr. Savard, who was paymaster at Chicoutimi between 1886 and 1900, explain the various payments made to a certain Archibald McLean, an invalid, for square timber sold to the government during the years 1898, 1899 and 1900 for the wharf at St. Alphonse, to the amount of several hundred dollars? How is it that J. Tremblay, in 1900, an unknown, has sold wood to the amount of $690 for the wharf at St. Alexis? How is it that a man by the name of P. A. Potvin, in 1899, sold wood to the amount of $232.75 for the Pipe wharf? Who is L. P. Bilodeau, who managed to sell to the government ordinary board nails for $5 to $9 a keg, and machine oil at $1 a gallon, when everywhere else throughout the country nails were selling at $3 to $3.50, and oil at 30 cents? My hearers know what that means. Then, how is it that in 1899, B. A. Scott received from the government $1,000 for a buoy service on Lake St. John, which at present costs only $300? How comes it that the same B. A. Scott was obliged to return a cheque to the amount of $202 for square timber which he had not sold? I call upon the informer of my hon. friends from St. Antoine and from King's and Albert to look up the public accounts from 1896 to 1900 with especial care, and to report at the next session. That would be of great interest.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) In what year did these facts occur?

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) Between 1896 and 1900.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) So it occurred under this government?

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) Yes; but they are the same people to whom I have referred, and who in an indirect way have brought about my election in 1900, the electors having returned me by way of protests against these abuses. I am happy to state, and I wish it to be clearly understood, that the leader of this government having been advised of these facts previous to the elections, allowed me to be returned practically without any opposition, his intention being to have it understood that his good faith had been imposed upon by people who were utterly unworthy of his confidence.

This being understood, I wish to emphasize once more what I said a moment ago, viz., that this whole plot before the Public Accounts Committee and in this House is far from being advantageous, from a political point of view, to the party who is waging war on the government, the latter having taken advantage of all honest means which the law put at its disposal to promote the interests of all parts of the constituency which I represent, and particularly those of the poorer localities. The government has acted in good faith and with the greatest honesty possible. Your humble servant, supported in the various parishes by the most prominent citizens friendly to the government, considered himself in honour and conscience bound to repay under the form of loyalty and respect the confidence and generosity which the Prime Minister reposed in the district and in its representative. Those hypocrites who expected they might remain hidden while the opposition would be waging war on the government on their account, because the said government practically had been working in the interests of the county, will find it difficult, in spite of their expertness, to satisfy the people that the government have done too much on their behalf. Accordingly, I can assure the House that the government candidate at the next election, in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, will have no difficulty in securing his election, the people knowing what they owe to the present Prime Minister; and I may assure the opposition that, as a sequel to the war which they have been waging against the interests of the county, it will be well for them not to put a candidate in the field, unless they are willing to forego his deposit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the item under discussion.

Mr. GIRARD.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the point of order, because the hon. member for King's and Albert (Mr. Fowler) went out of his way to make an attack on the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) in regard to the expenditure of public money in his county. I think the hon. member for Chicoutimi should have an opportunity to reply.

Mr. FOWLER. I did not go out of my way to make an attack on anybody. I merely read statements and gave facts.

Mr. PUGSLEY. You must take the responsibility of your statements.

Mr. TAYLOR. An arrangement has been made between the two sides of the House to bring this session to a close on Saturday. If my hon. friend does not want to carry out that arrangement, this side is willing to stay here until next week or next month.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Will the hon. gentleman say that after the member for Kings and Albert, at this late stage of the session and the night, made the attack he did with regard to expenditures in Chicoutimi, the hon. member for that county should not be allowed to reply?

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly, let him reply as long as he likes.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman from that county has already occupied more time in the reply than my hon. friend from Kings and Albert did in his statement. I was a party to the arrangement made last night, that in the time allotted to this subject we were to have practically the whole time. That arrangement is now broken.

Mr. GIRARD. I did not like to break any arrangement that has been made, but the hon. member for Kings and Albert has been dealing with so many things in my own riding that I think I should be allowed to answer him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. GIRARD. I regret Mr. Speaker, I have spoken at such length. My hon. friend from Kings and Albert has compelled me to do so. I thought I had the right to answer every one of his charges. I wish to repeat what I said a moment ago, that the Conservative party of the district have not approached the opposition in the person of Simon Lapointe, who came to Ottawa to meet I know not whom. He may represent and belong to a certain class of Conservative parasites who associate with a small number of Liberal people of the same kind, whose existence in the county, unfortunately, we cannot avoid admitting. But I repeat it, the Conservative party in the county has not used this gentleman as its spokesman; and the government may rest assured of one thing, which I am anxious to impress on the mind of my hearers, and it is this: In my district we are new, we are poor, we are needy, but the majority of us are not looking for honours, because we have been brought up in an environment where honour is not a matter of jest; and no one would dare in our midst to try and knife whomever had extended a helping hand to him, whomever had been of service to him, be it the government or be it an individual, should he be a Liberal or should he be a Conservative. We are proud of our education, we glory in it; it may not give as brilliant results, but it is nobler, grander, better.

In our midst there is no Chateau-Saguenay paid ten cents on the dollar, nor people paying their debts with worthless cheques; we make it a point to brand the few amongst us who act otherwise.

I am not ashamed of what I have done for my county. I glory at the thought, and my mind is quite made up to persevere. Always and everywhere have I acted toward the government and my constituents loyally and honorably. The government have not to regret what they have done. Far from it, the people concerned will seize the first opportunity of showing their gratitude. In the future the government should do as in the past, and those who are trying to hurt the government in these parts of the country where those questions are not well understood, will not get much benefit from it, if they only have courage enough to say publicly what was said by the honorable member for Grenville (Mr. J. D. Reid). He said before the Committee of Public Accounts, after becoming acquainted with the charges made: 'That is too small for me.' Such is the verdict of an impartial member of this House, who had followed the trial, and it absolutely exonerates the government, its officers and myself, and we have reason to be proud of such a verdict.

Mr. CARVEL. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, I propose to place on 'Hansard' the facts of the case. For many years the federal government have been constructing federal lines of telegraph in the eastern portion of the province of Quebec known as the Chicoutimi district. Some weeks ago the papers regarding payments in the Auditor General's Report were ordered by the Public Accounts Committee, and Mr. Tache, the chief engineer of the Public Works Department, was brought here and was examined by the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames) for nearly two hours, and by other members. He was examined about every item in the Auditor General's Report regarding the payments of money over these telegraph lines, he was examined about roads and bridges, and he stated emphatically that not one dollar of that money had been spent for any other purpose except purposes in connection with the telegraph lines. He said that in certain places they had built a bridge which was used by children going from one portion of the village to another, but he said that by building that bridge they saved four or five miles in going around to repair the telegraph lines, and that it was absolutely necessary. He stated that in one or two places there were long distances without a single settler, and that they had to repair these roads in order to get along so as to repair the telegraph lines. And some person, I presume the hon. member for St. Antoine (Mr. Ames), has prepared a statement absolutely at variance with the facts as given before the Public Accounts Committee. There is not one word of truth in that statement. That is a pretty strong statement for me to make, but I make it deliberately. And the hon. member for Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler) is the honourable medium by which that dishonest statement is placed on the records of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. That calls forth applause from hon. members opposite—not because they understand what they are applauding but simply because it is a sweeping statement made by one on their own side. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Carvell) is a lawyer, and he ought to know that he is not warranted in making the statement that there is not one word of truth in the statements that I have read——

Mr. CARVELL. Not a word is true according to the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOWLER. So far as personal knowledge is concerned the hon. member (Mr. Carvell) has absolutely no acquaintance with the facts; he has never been in the place, never saw one of these bridges or the telegraph lines. He is taking his story from what some one else has said, whether on oath or not is another matter. He says that in all I have said there is not a word of truth. The evidence of which the hon. gentleman speaks related to the telegraph line and the bridges built supposedly in connection with it. But I took up other matters. And yet the hon. gentleman, without knowledge, without having heard any sworn testimony with regard to these matters, makes the sweeping statement that the whole thing is untrue. That of course, is to be expected from the hon. gentleman—and he is the honourable medium by which that honourable statement is made to this honourable House, to use his own phrase.

Mr. FIELDING. To carry out the arrangement, we shall have to take some Bills. We might rise now for that purpose, and we may go into Supply again.

Some resolutions reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

On the order :

Third reading of Bill (No. 109) to authorize a bounty to volunteers who served the Crown in South Africa.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before we take this up, do I understand that after the Bills the hon. minister (Mr. Fielding) proposes that we shall go again into Supply?

Mr. FIELDING. I take it that hon. members on both sides would prefer to do so. We can do it only by general consent. If there is any objection, it will not be done ; the hour is late.

Mr. FOWLER. No more Public Works estimates at any rate.

Mr. CARVELL. We can stay here a month, if necessary. I do not like this——

Mr. FIELDING. There is nothing to be gained by saying what shall or shall not be done. I am not anxious to remain here unduly.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister told me we were to adjourn early.

Mr. FIELDING. We will not have trouble about that. We are merely carrying out the arrangement to take up Bills and dispose of them. Let us do that, and, if there is any objection to further sitting, I am prepared to meet the wishes of the House.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 109) to authorize a bounty to Volunteers who served the Crown in South Africa.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill (No. 209) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Fielding.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT—INSPECTION AND SALE OF GRAIN.

House in committee on Bill (No. 188) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are two Bills here that run somewhat concurrently, this one and Bill (No. 203) to amend the inspection and sale Act as regards grain. Would it not be well to have both discussed while we are in committee ?

Mr. FIELDING. If it is agreeable to hon. members generally. It will be understood, then, that we can discuss both at the same time, and when the motion for the reading of the second Bill is made there will be no discussion. I have no objection to that.

Mr. OLIVER. The Bill to amend the Manitoba Grain Act has already been in committee and its provisions have been agreed to in committee. I asked the House to leave the Bill in committee so that, if amendments were made to the Inspection and Sale Act that were found to clash in any way with the Grain Act, the Grain Act could be amended without serious delay. If possible, I would like to have the Inspection and Sale Act considered with that view.

Mr. STAPLES. That is, we will take up both together.

Mr. FIELDING. Treat the two Bills as one subject.

On section 2,

Mr. STAPLES. I understood that we were taking up the Inspection and Sale Act as well as the Manitoba Grain Act.

Mr. FIELDING. We could substitute the Inspection and Sale Act amendment for the other.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We can do so by agreement, but the Bill to amend the Inspection and Sale Bill has not been referred to the committee.

Mr. FIELDING. It will simplify it if we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again on this Manitoba Grain Act, and take up the other.

Progress reported.

House in committee on Bill (No. 203) to amend the Inspection and Sale Act as regards grain.

On section 3—definition.

Mr. LAKE. I would like to know the reasons for inserting this clause. The grain dealers of the Northwest, at a meeting, asked that the hardness and soundness of wheat should be the test rather than the colour. This appears to disregard their wishes entirely because it makes it absolutely certain that colour is to be the main consideration.

Mr. OLIVER. I am not able to answer that definitely. This is the Bill as it comes from the Senate and the Senate in its wisdom has seen fit to make a provision such as is here. It is clearly the intention to specify as thoroughly as possible that the wheat must be hard, of red colour and of the Red Fife variety. There is evidently no intention to relax any of the provisions with regard to the quality of the wheat.

Mr. LAKE. I do not agree with the view of the Senate with regard to this matter. I think it would be very much better that we should leave it as it was before in which case there was a certain amount of discretion given to the chief inspector. I would move that clause 3 be eliminated.

Amendment (Mr. Lake) negatived.

On section 5—amended tariff of fees.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the section be stricken out.

Motion agreed to.

On section 6—cost of appeal.

Mr. OLIVER moved:

That section 6 be stricken out and that the following be substituted therefor:
Subsection 4 of section 81 is amended by striking out 'inspecting officer' in the first line and substituting 'department' therefor.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 8—commercial grades.

Mr. OLIVER moved that section 8 be struck out.

Mr. STAPLES. Is there any substitution?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, there is a substitution later on, but the effect is that under the Act as it stands to-day there is no provision for the grain standard board to vary the grades of oats. The proposal of the Bill CCC is that the grain standard board shall have the right to vary the standards of oats under certain circumstances. This is objected to and in place of the right to vary the standards it is proposed to add 'No. 1 and 2 black and mixed oats' so as to provide for all reasonable contingencies and to leave the standard as now made without any question of variation.

Motion agreed to.

On section 9—grain to be inspected in Winnipeg district.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the following be inserted as subsection 2 and 3 of section 123.

2. Grain which is shipped from points west of Winnipeg to Winnipeg for orders, as provided in section 99c of the Manitoba Grain Act, and which goes forward without delivery in Winnipeg, shall be inspected at Winnipeg and the certificate of inspection shall be issued at the end of the period of detention: provided, however, that on the written order of the agent of the shipper a car of grain held at Winnipeg shall be inspected on its arrival and the certificate of inspection issued.
3. In the case of grain which is being shipped east from elevators in Winnipeg or St. Boniface, the sample for inspection shall not be drawn from any car until the car has been billed for shipment by the railway company.

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister explain that?

Mr. OLIVER. The first of the two subsections provides that grain which is being held at Winnipeg for orders shall be inspected at the end of the period of detention. If the car has been held the inspection shall be made when it is going out and not immediately after it has come in except that the shipper may order it inspected after it comes in. If he does not so order it is inspected as it goes out.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Why on going out?

Mr. OLIVER. It is necessary to inspect it at some time and if it is to be sold on sample it is not desirable to inspect it before the sale is made; but if it is not sold in Winnipeg it is necessary that the inspection shall be made before it goes east from Winnipeg in order that no grain may go east from Winnipeg except under inspection.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Would it interfere with the sample market to have the inspection before the grain goes on the sample board?

Mr. OLIVER. It was thought that if it had been already inspected and the certificate issued the grain would be ticketed as of a certain grade, the buyer would buy on that grade and much of the advantage of the sample market would be lost.

Mr. STAPLES. Is this the only clause in the Bill providing for a sample market?

Mr. OLIVER. The only provision.

Mr. STAPLES. How does this compare with the sample market, say in Minneapolis?

Mr. OLIVER. The cases are not parallel. Winnipeg is on the direct route to the head of the lake.

Mr. STAPLES. The owner of a mixing elevator in Winnipeg can buy grain, mix it as he sees fit, put it on track, call for inspection and forward the grain on that inspection.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. STAPLES. Does he not think that is throwing the door open towards the mixing of grain and losing the identity of our wheat in its shipment to the foreign market. I do not think this meets the wishes of the Grain Growers' Associations.

Mr. OLIVER. There is undoubtedly every objection to the mixing of grain once it has been graded, but there can be no objection to mixing before the grain is assembled at the point of inspection. If we can guarantee that from the point of assemblage and inspection forward there shall be no mixing we will have achieved the purpose in the mind of every western man interested in this trade. There must be some point at which the grain trade changes from sample to grade and it is generally conceded that the point should be Winnipeg.

Mr. STAPLES. For grain that does not pass through Winnipeg but goes, for instance, through Emerson there can be no advantage from the sample market.

Mr. OLIVER. No, that grain is sampled for inspection at Emerson.

Mr. STAPLES. I suppose a mixing elevator could be established at Emerson, and that eventually a sample market could be established there the same as in Winnipeg.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course the sample market is of no value unless there is a large number of samples and a large number of buyers. One of the difficulties about the sample market at Winnipeg is that there may not be enough sample buyers to make the proposition successful.

Mr. STAPLES. Suppose that somebody thinks that it is to his material advantage to erect an elevator and go into the mixing business and establish a sample market, does this Act restrict any such operation?

Mr. OLIVER. No; there is nothing against it.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). Does the minister think that the sample market will be of any advantage to the farmers, restricted, as it is, to the period after the middle of December? I understand that they cannot use it prior to that date.

Mr. OLIVER. I doubt if there are enough buyers at Winnipeg to make the sample market a success, even if it were carried on all the year round. It is only an experiment, and my hon. friend is aware that there are great objections urged against the experiment by the railway companies on the ground that it is liable to tie up traffic. My view is that it is not advisable, in urging any changes, or what we think are improvements in connection with the grain trade, to create a position that might be blamed upon this advanced legislation, as we call it. We think it is better to go cautiously in this experiment, and not risk what the railway companies, who are good authorities on the subject, contend would be a serious disturbance of trade conditions, until we see how the matter is likely to work out. Therefore, it is provided that the provision as to an order point shall only prevail from the middle of December to the first of September. I move to insert the following as clause 7a of the Bill:

7a. The following section is inserted immediately after section 108:

108a. Every elevator operator who allows the grain in a car which has been ordered east of Winnipeg or St. Boniface, from which he has signed a bill of lading and from which a sample of grain has been drawn for inspection as provided in subsection 3 of section 123 of this Act, to be returned, without the permission of the grain inspector, to the elevator from which it was loaded shall, for each offence be liable to a penalty not exceeding $50.

Mr. STAPLES. That is a pretty small penalty. If the dealer wants to manipulate the grain in this manner, to put it back and touch it up a little provided it has failed to reach the standard he was anticipating, he can do so with the permission of the inspector. Does the minister think that it is in the interest of the grain producers of the west to allow that?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, we do not anticipate that the inspector will give such permission, unless there should be some physical reason why the car should be unloaded. The understanding is that he shall not do so except for some physical reason which has nothing whatever to do with the grain trade.

Mr. STAPLES. Should not the wording of the clause be made a little more explicit?

Mr. OLIVER. In any matter that is at the absolute discretion of the inspector, the intent of the law is sufficient for an honest inspector; and, of course, we do not want a dishonest one.

Mr. LAKE. I would suggest that we substitute the chief grain inspector for the inspector.

Mr. OLIVER. I am quite willing to do that.

On section 10,

Mr. STAPLES. Will the minister explain to what extent special binning is going to be permitted, because I understand that it is very apt to create great congestion in the forwarding of our grain?

Mr. OLIVER. The provisions as framed in the amendment to the Manitoba Grain Act seem to me to guard effectually against any possibility of a congestion of the trade. In the first place, the conditions are not operative through the rush season; and, in the second place, the privileges cannot be availed of except with the permission of the warehouse commissioner, and he would not give permission for special binning under circumstances that would be likely to cause congestion. This provision is looked upon rather as an experiment. We have carefully guarded, we believe, against any ill effects, and the provision will give a fair opportunity to work it out and see what value there is in it.

Mr. LAKE. Will the inspector be able to inspect and control special bins which are given in any but the elevators operated by railway companies? If the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators, which are the only elevators there now, have to give the whole of the special bins, that may cause some congestion.

Mr. OLIVER. Every elevator at Fort William and Port Arthur will be subject to the same restrictions with regard to special bins or anything else. The section we agreed to in the amendment to the Manitoba Grain Act declares that at any point declared to be a terminal point all elevators are to be public elevators.

Mr. LAKE. Then the inspector will have full discretion to divide the special bins among the various elevators.

Mr. OLIVER. He does not divide the bins but will give permission to the person who applies, if he thinks the interest of the trade will not suffer, and that person makes his own arrangements.

On section 7—In the month of August stock shall be taken of the quantity of each grade of grain in the terminal elevators.

Mr. LAKE. There is just one question. You will have a very large number of different grades of oats provided for now and all mixing of grain in bins apparently is prohibited. Has the minister taken that into consideration so as to determine whether there will be sufficient bins to accommodate all the different grades we are getting. We are providing a large number and also for special binning. This has been taken into consideration, I presume, in the discussion the minister has had with his responsible officers.

Mr. OLIVER. There will not be any larger number of grades necessary under this Bill than without it. There are a larger number of grades established by statute, but during the past season, under the peculiar conditions that prevailed, the grain standards' board had authority to establish commercial grades so that there was last season a considerably larger number of grades than is provided for under this Bill.

Mr. LAKE. How many grades of oats were there last year?

Mr. OLIVER. I could not say how many actual grades there were, but my hon. friend knows that in wheat at any rate the number of grades was very large. There were five statutory grades of oats last year.

On section 17—grades of spring wheat.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. Are these satisfactory to the grain growers?

Mr. OLIVER. This is in place of the proposal which caused so much discussion in the Senate. The difference between the proposal discussed in the Senate and this is that the proposal in the Senate undertook to permit scoured or dried grain to go into the regular grades on the judgment of the inspector. This provision makes a separate place for scoured and dried grain of No. 1 and No. 2 quality, but as to No. 3, it is to go into the regular grades or not at the discretion of the inspector.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). At both points—Winnipeg and Port Arthur?

Mr. OLIVER. Winnipeg is where the inspection is made.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I know that this matter was discussed at some length in the Senate; I shall not take up time in discussing it here. But when we have a sample market, and when it has been proven that this wheat, after it is sent to the hospital and doctored, is of the same value for milling purposes as other wheat, it does seem but fair that the farmer should have the benefit of the grade. I followed, as well as I could, the discussion in the Senate. As well as I can gather, the objection to the proposition is that it somewhat lowers the type or grade of wheat in the British market. But, if the wheat is of equal milling value, it seems to me the farmers should get the benefit. I believe the grain dealers have made a great deal of money on this wheat. We have been so unfortunate in my district as to have some smutty wheat—not very much of it, but by the processes they use they are able to turn it into good wheat.

Mr. LAKE. This covers three different varieties of No. 1—No. 1 hard, No. 1 spring and No. 1 northern.

Mr. OLIVER. That is why the word 'No. 1' is not repeated where the expression is used 'to the grade to which it belongs.'—No. 1 hard, No. 1 spring, or whatever it may be.

Mr. LAKE. There is only one No. 2 grade, but the same wording is used. Could it lead to any confusion? It is pretty clear to my mind, but I make the suggestion.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it is all right. Whatever grade the grain may be, if it is scoured, it shall be given that grade, but the word 'scoured' shall be attached to it, if it is No. 1 or No. 2. But, if it is No. 3, the word 'scoured' shall be attached, or may not be attached, at the discretion of the inspector. I think the provision is very carefully drawn and is all right.

Mr. HERRON. This Bill provides for a grade of 'Alberta red.' Has any representation been made regarding the weight in these classes No. 1 and No. 2 Alberta red? I have heard complaints of many farmers within the last two years. It is said that these grades were two pounds too high, which was a great disadvantage to the growers.

Mr. OLIVER. I have not heard any objections to this. Of course, my hon. friend will see there has been a regrading—Alberta red, Alberta white and Alberta mixed. So, the condition is considerably changed from what it was last year.

On section 18—grades of wheat.

Mr. HERRON. No. 1 Alberta red is to be 62 pounds to the bushel. It has been contended that this is two pounds to the bushel higher than it should be. But, as I have had no request to have this reduced, I let it go.

On section 19—grades of oats.

Mr. LAKE. Is the minister really satisfied that there is need for the large number of different grades here as well as power in the standard board to create more?

Mr. OLIVER. After I explained the proposition to place in the hands of the standard board the right to fix grades for oats, it was objected to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 188) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. STAPLES. I was in hopes up to the present moment that there would be inserted in this Bill that very particular request of the Grain Growers' Association of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. It appears that what they have long been earnestly seeking for has been entirely overlooked. I am not in a position to know what took place at the various conferences that have been held, and up to the present time that matter has not been discussed to any extent on the floor of the House. I refer to government operation of terminal elevators.

If there is anything that the Grain Growers' Association have endeavoured to get it is that. I regret very much that the government had not given that point more consideration and had not incorporated in this Bill a provision to take over the control of the terminal and transfer elevators. What have the Grain Growers' Association got out of this for all the trouble they have gone to? They have had conventions in Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and they have passed resolutions and these meetings have cost no small amount of money. They have also sent delegates down here. They sent them down to the first conference that was held with the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). Then, in order that they might be able to secure the passage of this legislation, they sent their representatives down again, they are here at the present time and I regret very much that the government have not undertaken the operation of the terminal and transfer elevators. The government have gone pretty nearly the whole distance in so far as cost is concerned. This legislation will require the appointment of a sufficient number of officers, in my opinion, to operate the terminal and transfer elevators; so that the government might very easily have gone to the extent that the delegates of the Grain Growers' Association have been asking them to go. I think it is very important that I should call the attention of the committee to some of the resolutions that were passed at the conference of the Grain Growers' Association. I hold in my hand:

Extracts from minutes of meetings of conference of representatives from the Grain Growers' Associations of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and the Farmers' Association of Alberta, held in Saskatoon, February 15 and 17, 1908.

Whereas the Royal Grain Commission, in a report to the Hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, dated February 1, 1907, report that the tendency at Fort William and Port Arthur is for elevators to go under control of private companies, that the operating of terminal elevators by private companies under present regulations would be detrimental to the trade, and destroy public confidence in the result obtained therefrom;

Whereas the commission in their report laid on the table of the House of Commons, state that the private corporations operating terminals at Fort William are composed largely of the shareholders, officers and directors of grain firms and country line elevators in Winnipeg, and as such have a direct financial interest in much of the grain passing through Fort William;

Whereas the commission in their report recommended as a remedy the weighing, cleaning and binning grain in all terminal elevators under the supervision of officers appointed by the Dominion government; and

Whereas we are of the opinion that the remedy suggested by the commission is inadequate to meet the requirements of a terminal system of elevators and maintain the public confidence in the result obtained at such terminals; and

Whereas the Farmers' association of Alberta and the Grain Growers' Associations of Saskatchewan and Manitoba at their annual conventions each passed a resolution urging the Dominion government to acquire, own and operate the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur;

Be it resolved that we endorse the findings of the S.G.G.A. and the M.G.G.A. and the A. F.A., as expressed in their respective annual conventions re urging the Dominion government to acquire, own and operate a complete system of storage terminal elevators, and further that each of the executives of the above associations appoint two delegates to form a joint delegation to wait on the Dominion government to present the views of the grain growers of the three prairie provinces.

Whereas there is danger that in the transfer of grain on the various routes from the lake terminals to the sea-board, that much of the advantage obtained by the government ownership and operation at the lakes will be lost unless the transfer elevators are also owned and operated by the Dominion government;

Be it resolved that the delegates to Ottawa be instructed to urge that these transfer elevators should also be owned and operated by the Dominion government.

What they desire the government to do is set out clearly there. The delegates that came down here, after listening to the evidence that was adduced by railway corporations, bankers, &c., sat down and made a digest of the discussion that took place at that conference. They have sent to me, and, I presume, to all the members of the House, quite a lengthy synopsis of what they desire to have crystalized into legislation. Here is one of the principal recommendations they make:

The most important resolutions and the ones which induced the conference to the length of asking the several associations, to send delegates to Ottawa, were (1) the one urging the Dominion government to acquire (which may be by construction, purchase or lease without interfering with the essential future) and operate the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur, (2) the resolution growing out of this asking that the Dominion government acquire and operate the transfer elevators and (3) another providing for the special binning of grain at the terminals in order that a satisfactory sample market might be developed in Winnipeg to the mutual benefit of the producer and miller.

The government undertakes to classify western wheat into grades according to certain specifications. The safeguarding of the producer of that grain as well as the millers of Ontario and Britain requires that the government surround that grain in transit with such protection as will insure its delivery at points of destination as inspected by the chief inspector.

There is a growing and well grounded conviction among growers of grain in the west that existing conditions at the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur and the transfer elevators between these terminals and the Atlantic sea-board, afford opportunities for manipulation detrimental to the best interests of the country. This conviction is borne out by the report of the Royal Grain Association. On page 18 of the report the following statement appears; say there is a possibility of the elevator operators mixing grain contrary to the Grain Inspection Act—in some cases samples were produced to us that would lead us to believe that there had been either manipulation or serious mistakes made somewhere.

This shows that the existing conditions not only afford an opportunity for mixing grain contrary to this Act, but that mixing and adulteration actually does take place. Again on the same page we read: There is a very general complaint throughout Ontario that they do not get the regular grades of Manitoba grain of wheat especially in as clean a condition as is called for by the Inspection Act. We also found from examination of arrivals in Great Britain, that the grain as received there contains too great a percentage of foreign matter.

I think I have read sufficient to show the House that what the Grain Growers' Association really want is government operation. I shall not argue at present whether it is preferable to obtain that by construction or purchase but I do urge upon the government the necessity of getting the control and operation of those elevators by lease. They have gone to the distance of appointing officers to check the grain through the elevator system, and the government should have gone one step further and obtained control of the elevators and operated them. That was suggested on this side years ago and had the proposition of the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden) received the attention it should we would by this time have worked out the system which the grain growers want. To show that members on this side in the last parliament called the attention of the government to the necessity of government ownership and operation of terminals, I shall read an extract from a speech made by the leader of the opposition. It will be found in the 'Hansard' of 1903, at page 12626. Mr. Borden at that time fully realized that in order to protect the identity of our wheat it would be necessary for the government to undertake a system of terminal and transfer elevators, not only for Fort William but clean through to the sea-board. Mr. Borden said, replying to the Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux):

My hon. friend the Postmaster General grew merry over my proposal to equip the Georgian bay, the St. Lawrence, and maritime ports. At page 9777 of 'Hansard' he actually derides this proposal, and in effect declares—and I think the attention of the country should be called to it—that it is no part of the policy of the government of this country to spend one single dollar upon the Georgian bay ports, or upon the St. Lawrence, or Atlantic ports. I say that after having examined the language of the Postmaster General, and I will show to the House and to the country how I gather that distinct enunciation of policy from the language of the hon. gentleman. The hon. Postmaster General is making a fair comparison—he has stated that over and over again—between my proposal and the proposal of the government. He calls attention, at page 9778 of 'Hansard' to the fact that the debt of the harbour of the city of Quebec amounts to $5,803,538, and he calls attention to the fact that the debt of the harbour of the city of Montreal amounts to $8,054,156. He does not go into the cost of the equipment of other ports, he does not give the figures in regard to them, because he has not the figures before him, but he takes the figures which he has, and he deliberately adds them to the cost of my proposal, and adds not one single dollar to the cost of the government proposal. He is either making an unfair comparison, and I cannot charge him with that, or else it is not the policy of the government to spend one dollar on the equipment and development of the Georgian bay ports, the St. Lawrence or the Atlantic ports. If there is any answer to that, I would like to know what it is. We have a member of the government, put up by the government to criticise the financial part of my proposal, deliberately adding $5,803,538, the debt of the harbour of the city of Quebec, and $8,054,156, the debt of the harbour of the city of Montreal, to the cost of my proposal, and not one dollar for any of these works does he add to the proposal of the government. Is it not an accurate and necessary deduction from that to say that not one dollar does the government propose to expend on the development of the Georgian bay ports, the St. Lawrence or the Atlantic ports? Either that is the policy of the government or else the hon. Postmaster General has made a deliberately unfair comparison. I leave the hon. gentleman and the right hon. leader of the House to say which of these alternatives he desires to accept.

After some cross-firing between himself and the then member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) the leader of the opposition said :

My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has perhaps misunderstood me a little. I do not think my information went so far as to say that there are state-owned elevators, but my understanding is the state takes such control over them that the certificates issued for grain deposited in these elevators bear upon them the stamp of the state, that farmers receiving these certificates can look to the whole credit of the state to see that they are paid and that, in fact, they are practically regarded as negotiable instruments by the farmers of the west. I would defer to the superior knowledge of my hon. friend from Selkirk in regard to that, but I am informed by people who profess to be conversant with the facts that such a condition exists in some of the western states.

If we had had such legislation as the leader of the opposition then proposed it would have been most beneficial in the west last fall. It will be remembered that last fall we had difficulty in financing on our wheat. When the wheat was loaded on cars we could not get the banks to advance money on it, but if we had the government of the country behind us, there would be no difficulty in financing on a bill of lading. Mr. Borden continued :

I would not suppose that it was a very radical thing after all to suggest that the government should consider the economic saving in providing elevators or warehouses at a minimum cost, instead of having farmers themselves provide them at a minimum cost. I think perhaps my hon. friend from Selkirk will agree with me in that view although he may have some modifications to suggest. For example, if it should cost a cent a bushel to warehouse grain for a certain period of time, and if by such assistance as the government could give to the farmers of the west that grain could be stored for a quarter of a cent a bushel during the same period of time, surely a suggestion of that kind is not so utterly absurd that the government should not take it into consideration. That was all I asked. I did not put this forward as a proposal. I put it forward as something which I thought the government should consider. I adhere absolutely to that opinion, notwithstanding the sneer of the hon. Postmaster General, and I think it is a suggestion which the government will have to take into consideration in the not very distant future.

I was very much pleased indeed in looking up information on this important question of government operation of terminal elevators to discover that the leader of the opposition five years ago had this in mind and was anxious that the government should have worked out the legislation which the grain growers of Saskatchewan and Alberta are asking now. He even went further than that and incorporated that proposal in a resolution which was voted down by the government supporters. It was incorporated in a resolution of some length. I will not read the whole resolution, but only the portion that refers to this particular matter :

Perfecting a system of elevator warehouses, and creating free terminal facilities, and securing absolute and thorough control of rates in consideration for assistance thus given.

I am very sorry that when this question has been discussed in a great many conferences in the room of the Minister of the Interior we on this side of the House had not an opportunity to go there and try to induce the government to take over and operate the terminal elevators at Fort William, as well as the transfer elevators farther east. To my mind, the best way to do it would be to lease them as an experiment for ten years. I understand that the constitutional rule prevents us on this side of the House from moving an amendment or I certainly would even now move an amendment and divide the House upon it. But that is a privilege that we on this side of the House do not possess.

Mr. SCHAFFNER. I am very much in sympathy with what has been said by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Staples). Anyone who has resided in the west during the last twenty years can come to no other conclusion than that a very grave suspicion has arisen between the producer and the grain dealer. I am not going to say that there have not been good reasons for this suspicion, but it certainly does exist. There is a feeling that the producer is not getting his fair share of the profit, that too much of it goes to the dealer. To my mind, that arises very largely from the grading of wheat, and it is a feeling that is not peculiar to Canada alone. The same condition of affairs exists very largely in the western states. I find that some bankers in the western states took this matter up in connection with the terminal elevators at Duluth, and I think it is only reasonable to believe that a very similar condition exists at Port Arthur and Fort William. One of the great difficulties there is that most of the elevators are owned or controlled by private dealers. The same dealers who control these elevators also own or control what we call the line elevators. That gives them a great advantage in connection with the transfer of wheat. This question of line elevators has to be met sooner or later, and the resolution which the hon. member for Macdonald has read shows that the grain growers of the west have but one opinion on the matter. They want the miller in the east or the British market to get the wheat, and the same grade of wheat, that the farmer gets his pay for. I have here a statement signed by five of the leading bankers of Minnesota and Dakota, and if I spent two hours in talking I could not say more clearly what I believe than it is expressed in this statement. My opinion is that that condition of affairs has existed in Port Arthur and Fort William for many years, and the producers of wheat have been great losers in consequence. These bankers report the quantities of the different grades of wheat that were shipped into the elevators at Duluth and the quantities shipped out. Of No. 1 Northern 99,000 bushels were received, while 196,000 bushels were shipped out; of No. 2 Northern 141,000 bushels were received, while 464,000 bushels were shipped out; of No. 3, 272,000 bushels were received and 213,000 were shipped out. There were also received of No. 4 201,000 bushels, of no grade 116,000 bushels and of rejected 59,000 bushels. I have stated all the grades that were shipped out. Of No. 4, no grade and rejected, none were shipped out at all. This shows the very thing that our farmers in the west are suspicious of—that their wheat goes into the elevator at a certain grade and comes out at a different grade. Until the government, who represent the farmers, get control of these terminal elevators, the farmer will never be able to get his share of the profit of producing wheat. That report of the bankers of Minnesota and Dakota should have great influence with this government in inducing them to control in some way these terminal elevators.

Mr. LAKE. It is now more than a quarter past two in the morning, and I can only express regret that this most important measure to the Northwest has been delayed to the very last days of the session and to such a late hour of the night; but I do wish to add a word or two to what has been said by my colleagues on this side of the House in favour of the proposal of the grain growers that the government should operate the terminal and transfer elevators. The grain growers who had this proposition very much at heart sent down here a delegation to discuss the question. Certain evidence was given during the discussion which took place in the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and certain points came out there which it is important to call attention to. The proposal is of course that, as the government undertakes to classify and grade this wheat and give it a certificate, it should see that the grain is kept in its purity from the point of production until it reaches its ultimate market. The government proposes to have a very large staff of inspectors to take care of this grain and have absolute control over it from the time it goes into the elevators until it reaches the market. That will mean practically doubling the number of persons at work in those elevators. There will have to be as many inspectors as operators, and the expense on the grain will be practically doubled. I doubt very much whether the control will be effective. And I doubt very much whether it will be workable to have two sets of men with joint control. That will be sure to result in friction. All this extra cost must be borne by the producer. It would be very much better to have the one set of officials operate under the government itself in the capacity of government employees. In that case you could do with many less officials. Government operation need not be costly. Evidence was given before a committee of this House a couple of years ago to show that the western inspection department was more than self-supporting already. The prices which the producer now has to pay for the operation of the elevators, as well as for an efficient inspection, would much more than meet all the expenses of government operation.

As regards the private elevators, a gentleman representing the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and who in that capacity also represented the owners of the privately-owned terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur gave evidence at the conference which was held before the Minister of Trade and Commerce. His evidence was to the effect that he believed there would be no objection on the part of the owners to the government taking over the elevators and operating them. The Canadian Northern Railway has already sold out their terminal elevators and the Canadian Pacific Railway would no doubt also be willing enough to do so. There is no reason why they should object to government operation, provided that operation was as efficient as their own, and I have no doubt it would be. We ought also to have the transfer elevators under government operation in this country. This evening we provided for wages of officials to operate the government elevators at Port Colborne. There are also government elevators at Montreal, Halifax and St. John. The proposal to have elevators operated by the government is not a new one, as my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Staples) has pointed out. If, as he suggested, it would be in order for a private member to move a resolution involving the expenditure of public money, a resolution would be moved from this side to the effect that the government should take over the operation of our terminal and transfer elevators. Such a resolution would be ruled out, and therefore we have to content ourselves with stating our views and regretting that the government has not seen fit to meet the wishes of the grain growers.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE (Marquette). I simply desire to add my voice to that of my hon. colleague in expressing my regret that the very reasonable request of the grain growers of the west has not been complied with, as regards the government operation of terminal elevators. I have had numerous opportunities of meeting deputations of grain growers associations in my constituency, and I do not think there is anything in connection with the carrying, inspection and handling of grain that they urged with greater force than this question of the government operation of terminal elevators, and that of car distribution, and I am glad the distribution is not going to be unfair but must express my regret that the government have not acceded to the desire of the grain growers by taking, as an experiment, a lease of the present elevators and operating them as a government enterprise. This would establish the confidence of our farmers in the system of inspecting and the handling of grain, which they have not today. Whether warranted or not, there is a deep rooted conviction that there is mixing going on and grading to their disadvantage in the private elevators. To restore the confidence of the farmers is to have the handling of their grain under a system of government operation.

Mr. HERRON. I want to say that I acquiesce in the statement made by the hon. members from the western provinces, and had there been an opportunity to vote from the opposition side of this House, I would certainly cast my vote in favour of government ownership and operation of the terminal elevators. Where I live the people have been looking forward to having that put in this Bill, and they will be disappointed to find it is not there.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 183) to amend the Canada Shipping Act.—Mr. Brodeur.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. FIELDING. Railway subsidies and resolutions concerning the guarantee in aid of railways.

Mr. TAYLOR. What about the Election Act?

Mr. FIELDING. I presume it will come up later, if the railway subsidies are disposed of early.

Motion agreed to, House adjourned at 2.30 a.m., Thursday.

Mr. W. J. ROCHE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, July 16, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. HONORE GERVAIS (St. James, Montreal). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Taylor :

That the second report of the Select Standing Committee on the Debates of the House be amended by striking out the words 'the first of April, 1906' and substituting therefor the words '28th November, 1907'; and that the said report as amended be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

THE RESTAURANT.

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works) moved :

That a committee of this House consisting of the Speaker, the Deputy Speaker and Mr. Barker be appointed to confer with a committee from the Senate on the question of a joint restaurant for the two Houses.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad my hon. friend has made this motion because this question has been talked off for a number of years and nothing has ever been done, notwithstanding that the administration of the restaurant has always been very defective. When Mr. Hyman was Minister of Public Works he spoke of using part of the new wing as a restaurant and I should like to know if that is the intention.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The plans for the new wing have no doubt been prepared with the idea that the large room in the upper portion of the building should be utilized for the restaurant and with the convenience of the elevator which is to be installed it would be admirably adapted for that purpose. Those of us who have been giving attention to the matter thought it would be very desirable if the Senate would concur with the House of Commons in arranging for a joint restaurant. This committee will confer with a committee of the Senate with a view of endeavouring to come to an understanding which would be mutually agreeable.

Motion agreed to.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 211) to amend an Act of the present session intituled 'An Act respecting the Dominion Guarantee Company, Limited.'—Mr. Pringle.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—GROSS EARNINGS.

Mr. FOWLER asked:

1. What is the amount of the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for June, 1908, and for the three months, April to June, inclusive.
2. What are the working expenses for the two months of April and May, 1908, respectively?
3. What were the earnings and working expenses, respectively, for April, May and June, 1907?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). Stand.

Mr. FOWLER. You will answer it before the House closes?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

H. A. QUILTY.

Mr. FOWLER asked:

1. Has H. A. Quilty passed the examination for train despatcher on the Intercolonial Railway? If so, how many times has he passed such examination?
2. In promotion in the service, has the said Quilty been passed over? If so, for what reason?
3. What position does Mr. Quilty now occupy in the service, and when was he appointed to his present position?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Yes, Mr. Quilty was up for examination for train despatcher, in January, 1902; but he did not pass. He passed an examination successfully on April 7, 1907.
2. No.
3. Despatchers' operator and relieving despatcher at Newcastle appointed April 7, 1907.

INTERCOLONIAL CONFERENCE AT LONDON.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. What was the amount of money voted by parliament to defray the expenses of Canadian ministers attending the intercolonial conference at London in 1907?
2. How many ministers from Canada attended that conference officially?
3. Was the whole amount so voted expended, and how much did each minister receive?
4. Was any other official mission accomplished? If so, who was the minister, and how much did he or they each receive for such services?

Mr. FIELDING. Stand.

Mr. BERGERON. How long will it have to stand; the time is getting short?

Mr. FIELDING. I think the question has already been answered and is on 'Hansard.'

Mr. BERGERON. I have not been able to find it.

Mr. FIELDING. I will undertake to see that my hon. friend gets it before the session closes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Dropped.

TRANSCONTINENTAL COMMISSION—SALARIES, &c.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

1. What have been the totals for each year of the expenses of the Transcontinental Commission for salaries, rents, travel, and contingencies, including everything not going into construction?
2. Are these expenses charged up to construction account against the Grand Trunk Pacific eastern division?

Mr. GRAHAM. Stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I am very anxious to get this information.

Mr. FIELDING. I think this is the first time it has been on the Order Paper.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, but the first time comes very near being the last time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will see about it to-day; this is the first time I have heard it.

BOUNTIES PAID BY GOVERNMENT.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN asked:

1. What is the estimated amount of bounty payable by the government for the year ending March 31, 1909, on the following products or articles: (a) petroleum, (b) iron, (c) steel, (d) lead, (e) binder twine, (f) other articles upon which bounty is paid?
2. What is the actual amount paid on each of the above items for the year ending March 31, 1908?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) The Minister of Trade and Commerce has given me the following answer:

1.	(a) Petroleum	$ 400,000
	(b) Iron	825,000
	(c) Steel	1,000,000
	(d) Lead	250,000
	(e) Manilla fibre, used in the manufacture of binder twine and cordage	50,000
	(f) Wire rods	350,000
2.	(a) Petroleum	$ 391,217 09
	(b) Iron	863,816 75
	(c) Steel	1,092,200 71
	(d) Lead	51,001 00
	(e) Manilla fibre	41,983 77
	(f) Wire rods	347,134 89

SALE OF ORDNANCE PROPERTY.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House do to-morrow go into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolutions:

1. Resolved, that it is expedient to confirm the following orders in council that is to say:

(a) An order in council, dated the sixteenth day of May, 1904, authorizing the sale to the corporation of the city of Toronto of certain ordnance property in that city, consisting of the whole of the military property lying between and including the old fort and the exhibition;

(b) An order in council, dated the sixth day of December, 1905, authorizing the sale to the city of Montreal of the ordnance property in the St. Lawrence river, opposite to the said city, known as St. Helen's island; and

(c) An order in council, dated the twenty-seventh day of July, 1907, authorizing the conveyance to the city of Montreal of a portion of the ordnance property in that city known as Lafontaine park, and to authorize the sale and disposal of the said ordnance property in the manner and subject to the conditions by the said orders in council, respectively, provided and subject to such further and other conditions as may be imposed by His Majesty and accepted by the corporation of the city of Toronto and by the city of Montreal, as the case may be.

2. Resolved, that the purchase moneys received from the corporations of the city of Toronto and the city of Montreal for the said ordnance properties may be used and applied, and are hereby appropriated to and for the purposes, of the purchase of sites and construction of buildings thereon for military schools of instruction in connection with the permanent force in those cities, respectively —Sir Frederick Borden.

He said: I may say that His Excellency the Governor General has been made acquainted with the subject matter of these resolutions and recommends them to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC AND THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called I would ask the Minister of Railways or the Minister of Finance for information as to whether there is any agreement by which the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is to take over the Quebec bridge at a rental, or on payment of interest on cost, or anything of that kind?

Mr. FIELDING. No. There is no such agreement concerning the Quebec bridge. It comes up incidentally, to what extent may be debatable, under the general contract.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Railways if he has made any progress in finding out how much the Transcontinental Commission know and are willing to give us of what has transpired from March 31, 1907, to March 31, 1908, as the report of the commission does not come down beyond 1907?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have given to the House at different times in answer to questions and during the debate the other day, all the information I have received from the commission covering what took place up to March 31, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to give notice to my hon. friend that when we meet again, if these commissioners do not bring up their information to a later date, we will have to move to strike out their salaries.

Mr. GRAHAM. Their report is up to the end of the fiscal year the same as any other report.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and that is sixteen months ago.

EMBARGO ON CATTLE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called I would like to ask the government whether their attention has been directed to a cable despatch setting forth a very important statement by the Prime Minister of Great Britain. It appears that in answer to a deputation which waited upon members of the British government to advocate the removal of the cattle embargo, the Prime Minister expressed himself in a very sympathetic way and stated that if he were convinced that live cattle could be admitted safely he would be in favour of abolishing the embargo. He also stated that if after consulting his colleagues he found any good purpose could be served by holding the inquiry requested he would grant it. Having regard to this very important statement respecting a matter that has often engaged the attention of the House and of the government I would like to know whether it is the intention to open up communications with the British government for the purpose of demonstrating—as I believe we can demonstrate—the absolute safety of the admission into Great Britain of live cattle from Canada. Is it the intention of the administration to open communications with the British government for the purpose of undertaking to demonstrate, as I believe they can, the absolute safety of admission into Great Britain of live cattle from Canada?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I do not believe that anything could be done which has not been done long ago. When Sir Charles Tupper was High Commissioner for Canada, we demonstrated that there was absolutely no danger in admitting Canadian cattle and that our Canadian cattle were absolutely free from infectious disease. We do not admit that there is anything of that character existing in Canadian cattle and simply stand on the ground we have always maintained. So far as I know the difficulty does not lie in that direction; but if the Prime Minister of England expressed himself in that way, we shall take note of what he said and if anything can be done, it will be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the report in the 'Free Press' is accurate, his statement seems to point to a new condition and call for further action.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT—AMENDMENT.

Mr. AYLESWORTH moved the third reading of Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Before the third reading I wish to make a few remarks to remove the impression that seems to have gained currency in connection with the making of the new lists in the province of Ontario. We are told over and over again that these are to be judicial lists, made by judges. To my mind that is absolutely absurd. The judges are not going to make the lists in New Ontario any more than they make them in the older parts of the province. The judges are the final court of appeal and that is practically all that they will be in New Ontario with the exception of the fact that the enumerators, who are to form the lists in the first instance, are to be named by the judges. Beyond the fact that the enumerators are appointed by the judges instead of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the judges themselves have nothing whatever to do with the making up of the lists. I was very much surprised to find the right hon. the First Minister take exception to the making up of these lists by enumerators appointed by the Lieutenant Governor and yet be willing that they should be made by enumerators appointed by judges. Both the Lieutenant Governor and the judges are the appointees of this government. Wherein then lies the difference which makes the one preferable to the other? Should we not have just as much confidence in the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, the chief magistrate of that province, the highest official in it? Are you going to say that we have no confidence in that gentleman but we have confidence in the judges? To my mind the judges occupy a secondary position compared with that of the Lieutenant Governor. My desire is to dissipate the idea that these are to be judicial lists. That is entirely erroneous. The judges practically will have no more to do with the making of the lists than I will, until the lists go to a court of appeal, and possibly only in a few districts will there be an appeal. So that all that the judges will have to do as regards the making of the lists in the new districts of Ontario will be comparatively trifling, and I do not want the idea to go abroad that these lists will be purely and simply judicial lists made by the judiciary. Of course we are told that the judges are all angels without politics. If they are, I have not discovered any. I generally find that the judges have politics in Ontario as well as other people. I do not say that they exhibit any political feeling offensively, but no man can get rid of the idea that he was once a Liberal or a Tory, and there can be no doubt that in appointing these enumerators the judges will have to appoint Grits or Tories. Whom they will appoint I do not know. Where they will get their recommendation I can conceive. I do not suppose that the judges know who are the best men to appoint as enumerators, and they must get their information from some source. What that source will be, I can only surmise. No doubt there will be plenty willing to offer advice, perhaps unsolicited, and the judges will no doubt be aided materially. I do not say that they will be improperly influenced, but the enumerators must be Grits or Tories. They certainly will not be judges who will make up the lists in the first instance. All the judges will have to do will be to decide whether a man should be stricken off the list or added when there is an appeal. Let us get rid of the idea that these will be Heaven-born lists made by angels in the shape of judges and that nothing can be wrong about them. If that be the character of the lists, they will be extraordinary lists—a little more so than those in the older Ontario. I can see nothing in this Bill which will give the people greater confidence than they have in the Ontario law under which the Lieutenant Governor appoints the enumerator.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I do not think any good purpose can be served in my doing more than reiterate my protest against section 1 of this Bill. The attitude of the government is wholly inconsistent with its professions and absolutely irreconcilable with the circumstances in that northern country. I move in amendment:

That this Bill be not now read the third time but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of amending the said Bill, especially section 1 thereof, so as to provide that the provincial voters' lists in the province of Ontario, whether in organized or unorganized districts, shall be regarded as of equal force and validity for the purpose of the federal election as those of other provinces, and so as to avoid any discrimination against the province of Ontario in that regard.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). My only object in rising is to place on record what the position of the present administration was in 1898 and show clearly where this government stood on the question now before the House and as embodied in the amendment. I desire to read two short extracts from the speech of the Prime Minister in 1898. The first is from 'Hansard,' page 4015:

But I would not have hesitated to accept the franchise provided by a Conservative legislature in Quebec, because, though there were many things in that franchise, on the whole, to which I would have objected, still as it satisfied the province it would have satisfied me. It is in the same way as regards other provinces. It is possible that the control of the several provinces may pass into the hands of the Conservative party; still on a question of this kind I am quite disposed, for my part, to accept the franchise prepared by the legislature, whether Liberal or Conservative.

Then, the right hon. gentleman went a little further than that. Some hon. member, speaking on this question a few days ago—I am not sure that it was not the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson)—said that the position of his party at that time was based upon the fact that the lists were to be municipal lists. But here is what the Prime Minister said in 1898 as reported at page 4312 of 'Hansard':

We do not submit such a proposition; we do not want the lists prepared by our appointees. We are satisfied to have them prepared by either the provincial or the municipal authorities.

Of course, it is in order for the present administration to be inconsistent—they can be inconsistent if they desire. I am not now referring to what took place before the Liberal party came into power, but what took place in 1898 when they decided to accept the provincial lists as the basis of the franchise; and in this second quotation which I have given, it is clear that the intention was to accept the lists of the provinces whether municipal lists or otherwise. I have risen only to make these quotations and to protest once more against the action of the government in discriminating against the province of Ontario. I repeat what I said: I believe that the province of Ontario is as competent to make voters' lists as any other province in the Dominion. If we are to accept provincial lists for Dominion elections, let us not discriminate against Ontario; if this government, or any other government, wishes to make Dominion lists let it apply the same rule to all the provinces of the Dominion.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). It would be sufficient to observe to my hon. friend that in this legislation there is not intended to be, nor is there, any discrimination against the province of Ontario. The amendment put is rather insidious. Let it be remembered that the Bill refers only to the unorganized portion of the province of Ontario. I have stated before that there is good and valid reason why this was done. There is no proposal whatever in the Bill which is now before us for its third reading to attempt anything with regard to the Ontario lists prepared for the organized portions of the provinces. But the provisions of the Act now in force in Ontario for the revision of the lists in the unorganized districts lays this parliament altogether at the mercy of the provincial authorities. It is provided, under the law passed in 1907 and now in force, that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may pass orders whenever it suits their purpose to prevent registration taking place in the unorganized portions of the province. They can prevent the revision of the lists this year, or next year, or the following years. In fact, at the present time, there is a proclamation by the provincial government to prevent the revision of the lists in the unorganized portions of the province. Then, what will take place? That will take place which has taken place in the past—that is, there will be no revision of the lists for two or three years. In the province of Ontario, in 1904, no provincial lists were provided except those of four years before. We had to make our own lists, and we had to do it in a hurry, giving no satisfaction to the people at large, as has been shown by the facts brought out in the debate on this Bill. Therefore, it is far preferable that we should have power to make our own lists as the Bill provides. And this is represented as an attempt against the province of Ontario. I was more than surprised when I heard my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bristol) telling me here across the floor that I should be the last man to invade the privileges and rights of Ontario. I cannot see why I should be selected in this way or what was the insinuation or innuendo of the hon. gentleman in making such a charge against me. There is no such intention. The attempt is made here to create the impression that we are invading the rights of the province of Ontario. My hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) went so far as to say that the changes would be rung on this theme in every town, in every village, in every township in Ontario. I know the province of Ontario, I think, as well as if I had been born in that province. In this matter I know I can rely on the good sense of the province of Ontario against this cry. The people of that province know that when their rights are invaded they can defend those rights; they are not to be gulled in this way when there is no attempt against them.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I think the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will find that the people of Ontario are not to be 'gulled,' to use his own words, by any such statement as that which he has made. It is idle for the Prime Minister to say that there is no discrimination against Ontario, because this Bill which it is proposed to put on the statute-book shows precisely the reverse. On what is this discrimination against the province of Ontario based? Is it based upon the idle statements, unsupported by any evidence, recently made in this House and relating to only two of the six ridings of northern Ontario? Is it based on that, or is it based on something else? These hon. gentlemen do not seem to know. I now put the question squarely to them across the floor, and not one of them knows how to answer. And no wonder, for, as a matter of fact, this legislation is being placed upon the statute-book, upon the demand, the imperative demand, of two of their partisans in this House, and for no other reason. The Prime Minister declares there is no discrimination! Are there not lists made in other provinces in Canada by enumerators and revised by judges? And are not these left as good and valid lists for federal purposes without any interference by this parliament? On what ground is this legislation affecting the unorganized districts of Ontario based? Is it based upon the fact that the lists in those portions of Ontario are not municipal lists? There are lists that are not municipal in British Columbia, in Manitoba, in some parts of Quebec, if I am not mistaken, and in Prince Edward Island. None of these are interfered with. But in the unorganized parts of northern Ontario, where lists of precisely the same character are made up and revised by judges, these are selected by the government for the purpose of special treatment and discrimination. There is no doubt about it. The pages of the statute-book, when this Act goes into effect, will demonstrate what I say.

The Prime Minister resorted to another argument which is quite as fallacious as the one to which I have just alluded. He says that the Ontario government can prevent the lists from being made up, and therefore it is necessary for this parliament to interfere by legislation. He is apparently, when he makes that argument, either ignorant or forgetful of the provision of his own statute, because section 7 of the Dominion Elections Act as it at present exists, makes provision for that very contingency. It is not necessary to read it again, it has been read over and over again. I challenge contradiction by the Prime Minister, or any other gentleman on that side of the House. Section 7 of the Dominion Elections Act makes provision already for that very contingency which the Prime Minister puts forward as the reason for this enactment. Hon. gentlemen opposite will not challenge that assertion because they cannot. Any challenge of that kind would be followed by the reading of the section which makes that special provision. Therefore, so far as that argument is concerned, it falls to the ground.

There is therefore no other alternative for the people of this country to accept than the one which is set forth in this resolution, namely, that by the legislation now before parliament, and which this government by its majority intends to drive through, special discriminatory provision is made in respect of six northern ridings, and that is done without a shadow of pretense or excuse except the hearsay statement put forward in this House by two hon. gentlemen sitting on the government side. It is not necessary to repeat this, it has been made abundantly plain to the people of this country. I venture to think that if no better excuse for that can be put forward than that which has been urged by the Prime Minister, the people of Ontario will not be likely to regard this provision in that kindly light which has been predicted by my right hon. friend.

Mr. E. BRISTOL (Centre Toronto). The right hon. gentleman says that there is no discrimination in this legislation against the province of Ontario. I venture to think that not only is there discrimination against the province of Ontario in this legislation, because legislation already exists which provides for making the lists by the federal government if the lists are more than a year old in Ontario and throughout Canada, but discrimination is obvious from the fact that all these alleged reasons which are advanced by every one else than the Prime Minister, came into existence after this legislation had been planned and brought down to the House. That seems to be overlooked by the Prime Minister. In that legislation at first, Ontario and Quebec were coupled so far as the unorganized districts were concerned. But now Quebec is left out and Ontario is left in. I want to say to the Prime Minister that he has discriminated against the province of Ontario in another way, a way which is contrary to the courtesy which he has always shown to gentlemen on either side of politics, or anywhere else, and that is in the fact that he was not above communicating with the premier of Manitoba and the Manitoba government in reference to the lists of Manitoba, when a strong protest was put up in this House. But did he communicate with the premier of Ontario, or the Attorney General of Ontario in reference to this legislation or these complaints? Not a solitary communication of any kind. I have been informed by the Department of the Attorney General of Ontario that there were not three persons affected by all these alleged complaints that have been made in this House. So I wish to reiterate that I think it would have been in accord with decency and harmony if the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice, instead of allowing his supporters on almost the last day of parliament to make these unsupported statements before this House, had courteously communicated this complaint to the Attorney General of Ontario and asked to have new lists framed, as there is power to frame them, if there was anything in these complaints, on or before the 1st of July. But no complaints have been made to the Attorney General of Ontario and the usual proclamation has been issued stating that it is unnecessary to go to the expense of having another revision two months later in these northern districts, and now special legislation against the province of Ontario is being enacted. It would have been a simple matter to place these alleged facts before the Department of Justice of that province and have an investigation, and if there was found to be anything wrong, I am satisfied that there is not a man in this country who does not believe that the Ontario government would have done justice to the hon. member for Rainy River or any other member.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. In addition to that, the Prime Minister of Ontario and the Attorney General of Ontario offered to have new lists made up under the provincial laws in any ridings where any serious irregularities were shown. They were prepared to do that, and that was well known.

Mr. BRISTOL. So, Sir, I think the animus of the right hon. gentleman and his government is shown by one passage in his speech where he said that he did not propose to leave this House to the mercy of the provincial government of Ontario. I was astonished that he should use language of that character in reference to a matter of this kind, if he was desirous of showing that he was not discriminating against Ontario. I leave it to this House and to the people to say whether the right hon. gentleman is not discriminating against Ontario, both as regards this legislation, and as regards the ordinary business treatment and courtesy that one government should show to another.

Mr. JAMES CONMEE (Rainy River). I have stated on a former occasion, and I repeat it now, that there is no attack whatever upon the government or the province of Ontario with reference to provincial lists. I cannot for the life of me find by what process of reasoning hon. gentlemen opposite can persuade themselves that there is anything in this Bill that reflects upon the province or the government of Ontario. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Bristol) stated further that the reason that the proclamation was issued, if I understood him correctly, cutting out the preparation of the new lists, was because no complaint was made against the lists. The hon. gentleman is aware that during the recent provincial election the Liberal press in the ridings were full of complaints, and these complaints led to official proceedings. I read to the House a few days ago the evidence given at a trial that took place in the district of Thunder Bay, and I sent that report to the leader of the opposition. I was surprised to hear that hon. gentleman say to-day that no evidence had been given to this House, nothing but mere assertion, but no positive evidence of a sufficient character that there was anything wrong with the lists.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN The statement which the hon. member submitted to me was merely a report from his own solicitor.

Mr. CONMEE. That is correct. My honoured friend believes a lot of things on testimony. I suppose he believes that there is such a place as the city of Jerusalem. But did he ever see it? What evidence has he that there is such a city? He believes it on testimony. I submit there is ample testimony as to the wrong preparation of these lists, showing that they were of a partisan character. That fraud was committed upon the opposite political party is amply established by testimony. We have not had a committee. We have not had men here to examine them. If my hon. friend wishes to take advantage of a legal technicality of that kind, well that is a lawyer's privilege. It is only a quibble though. The fact that there has been testimony cannot be denied, my hon. friend can treat it in any way he pleases, but I make the statement knowing that it is correct that the result of this investigation is that Mr. Cummings' lists have got to go through the procedure that the law requires. Under the ruling made by the judge, before whom the case was heard, Mr. Cummings has been informed that he must post up his entire list, not subdivisions of it, that he must give notice in the public press as the statute provides, that the fifteen days must now run and that he must make the affidavit that he has done this before the judge can give a certificate.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If it is the case that the matter is being dealt with by the judge under the provincial laws, and if the laws are thus being remedied, why should this parliament interfere?

Mr. CONMEE. I am very glad that my hon. friend asked me that question, because that is the serious part of the whole situation. I made a statement with regard to Mr. Cummings' list. I am told that the same condition exists with regard to Mr. Hogarth's list. Mr. Hogarth never published any notice, never posted up a completed list, never gave the people notice that it was posted up and never made the affidavit that the law requires him to make in order to obtain the certificate that the statute calls for. My hon. friend says that this shows that you have a legal procedure by which he can deal with these lists. That is only so as to two divisions. What about the twenty or thirty other divisions in which legal proceedings have not been taken in time to bring out these facts? The door is closed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why the same proceedings were not taken to invoke the powers of the judge under the law, and if it is to be expected that this parliament will interfere whenever people do not see fit to avail themselves of the remedies which are at their disposal?

Mr. CONMEE. Why should it be necessary? Why should the voter be put to the expense of forcing law suits, and expensive litigation, against the province to get his rights? That would be a sufficient answer, but the answer has already been given. The law was changed, the people did not understand the amendment by which the time was cut down to fifteen days. This amendment was passed at the last moment, in the closing hours of the legislature; it was not an amendment to the Voters' List Act or to the Election Act, but it was an amendment to the Statutory Land Amendment Act. I couud not get it. I could not find a lawyer in Port Arthur or Fort William who had it, who knew anything about it, or who could give me any advice with regard to it. Under these circumstances, I am surprised indeed that the hon. leader of the opposition or hon. gentlemen opposite do not consider that such legislation as that now before the House is necessary. Is it that they desire to obtain a partisan advantage? What are the conditions which call for this legislation? As to the reason for the legislation, my hon. friend said that the Dominion statute provides machinery for preparing lists even if the province of Ontario did not prepare lists. That is not an answer to the argument that this legislation is necessary, because it is admitted that the machinery has proved defective. Hon. gentlemen opposite complain against it. The hon. gentleman behind him (Mr. Boyce), on several occasions, has declaimed loudly against it. I would like to know now if my hon. friend is prepared to say that he will be satisfied with the existing law.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is perfectly obvious that the proper thing to do in that case is not to make a discrimination against the province of Ontario, but to amend section 7 in the way my hon. friend suggests.

Mr. CONMEE. My hon. friend will see that the province of Ontario is the only province in which the lists were ever prepared under the Dominion law, and under those circumstances where is there a discrimination against Ontario? When the lists were prepared in 1894 nobody ever thought of such actions being a discrimination against Ontario because they were prepared there and nowhere else. The reason is that the conditions existing in Ontario do not exist elsewhere. In the province of Quebec it is not the legislature that prepares the lists, but the counties. In Prince Edward Island, I am told, they have no lists at all, that a man simply gets a ballot and votes. In the Northwest there are different conditions. Ontario presents the only conditions with which we are compelled to deal, and now that we are dealing with them I cannot see that there is any justification for the assertion that we are discriminating against or offending Ontario. Why should the Ontario government be offended?

Mr. LANCASTER. Because you introduced the Bill before these reasons existed.

Mr. CONMEE. Not at all. That is only in the mind of the hon. gentleman. It has been introduced upon sound principles. But hon. gentlemen say that the Ontario government will be offended. I would like to know upon what ground? Has the Ontario government gone into politics to assist gentlemen opposite by preparing stuffed, fraudulent or illegal lists for the purpose of dictating to this House who its members shall be? I do not believe it. I do not think that the Ontario government would hold for a moment that it is their business to interfere with the rights of this parliament. Provincial rights exist, but the question of provincial rights in this House only arises where the undoubted privileges and rights of the legislature are invaded. I would like to know how it is invaded by this Bill. It is within the competency of this parliament to pass this Bill, and there is no question of provincial rights involved in it.

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice). Mr. Speaker, this matter has been so largely discussed on the motion for the second reading and in committee that I have very little to say, but I wish to make a few remarks by way of answer to some of the objections that have been urged to this proposed change in the law. I think that an important consideration is to remember what the existing law is, to compare the proposed change with the existing law and to judge by that comparison whether or not there is an improvement in what is now proposed, and whether or not, therefore, what is now proposed ought to be accepted. Under the existing law the lists for the unorganized portion of the province of Ontario will be prepared anew in accordance with the provisions of the existing statute if a Dominion election at any time fail to be held at a period of more than twelve months after the preparation, in this portion of Ontario, of the provincial lists. That law as applied to this unorganized portion of Ontario has been subjected, in this House, in the e course of the present debate and previously, to very severe criticism as being a provision of the statute which, if not altogether unworkable, it is at all events, impossible to work out satisfactorily. Of necessity, that provision of the law must be worked out after the writ for any Dominion election issues, because, up to the very date of the issue of the writ, no man can tell whether or not there will be a provincial list not too old to be used at that election.

If the provincial list at the date of the issue of the writ is less than 12 months old, it is to be adopted under our present statute and it is only when such provincial list is more than 12 months old, at the date of the issue of the writ that a new list is to be prepared for that portion of the province under the provisions of the Dominion law. Accordingly it is only after the issue of the writ that those steps can be taken under the present provision of the law. That time, it is said, will not be adequate and in any event the men by whom that new list is to be prepared will necessarily be selected by the Dominion government. Those objections have been urged more than once to the present law as applicable to the new or unorganized portions of Ontario, if there should be a necessity for relying upon that law.

In the condition of things which we have to-day as to the unorganized portion of Ontario, it is at least of equal probability that in case the present Bill is not passed the provisions of the existing Dominion law would have to be invoked to obtain a voters' list at the next Dominion elections. The provisions of the present provincial law as to the unorganized territory require the work of the enumerator to be done during June, he has to begin on or after the first day of June in each year unless his work is dispensed with, and he has to conclude on or before the 30th day of June. During June in the present year that work was not done; it had been done before June or may have been in course of completion during the first week of June just passed. On the 30th of June a proclamation was issued dispensing with the preparation of any lists for the unorganized territory during 1908, no such preparation can now take place under the provisions of the Ontario statute, so that if a Dominion election comes to be held at any time during the present year or at any time in the year 1909 before or during the month of June it would be impossible to have any list for that Dominion election unless you took the list prepared under the existing provincial law to which such serious objection has been raised. If the Dominion elections are held before June next it would be possible of course to adopt. if any one were so minded, the lists which have been prepared during the spring months of the present year by the provincial authorities and which have been discussed here. I do not intend to go into any discussion of these lists beyond pointing out that when objection was made to their character the answer that came was simply ridicule of the statements of members on this side of the House as to the character of those lists and the manner in which they were prepared. The statement was made by the hon. member who has just spoken that these lists have been prepared and published in sections, the enumerators certifying them in parts or in sections, from time to time as new sections or parts were prepared. The statute plainly contemplated only one list, only one certificate when it was completed, and one period of 15 days after the whole list was completed within which appeals from that whole list might be taken. It was said when objections were made that they were entirely without foundation, they were absurd, and this list was a right good list. The hon. member who was making these statements has now demonstrated at the end of judicial proceedings that this list is utterly incorrect, utterly illegal and stands exactly as it left the enumerator, not having been subjected to any judicial revision whatever, and being but an improper, incomplete and entirely imperfect list upon which to run an election. The moment that is demonstrated as the result of a judicial inquiry the whole ground is shifted and you hear the cry: Why do you not go on with your appeals? In the meantime an election has been carried on on a list of that character, and if the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) had not gone to the expense of a judicial inquiry by which he has established their utter illegality and impropriety these very lists, in the absence of legislation now in question before this House, would have been forced upon him or any other Dominion candidate for that constituency. That is the kind of inspired, heaven-born list which hon. gentlemen opposite say is immensely superior to a judicially prepared list, for the preparation of which all necessary time will be given and all proper means and facilities afforded for correcting it before the judges of the country.

The issue here is simply whether the existing law is to continue or whether this measure is to be substituted for it. A great deal has been said about an insult to Ontario by the proposition made here. I reply that I have exactly as good a right as any other member in this House to speak for the province of Ontario. I do not recognize any better right on the part of any hon. gentleman opposite, no matter who he is, to speak for Ontario than I claim for myself. I think further that I am speaking here not merely for myself but for at least 38 other members of this House from Ontario who are here supporting this measure, and if we are insulting anybody it certainly is not the province, or the whole province of Ontario by any means. We constitute more than 45 per cent of the representation of the province of Ontario in this House and speaking for more than 45 per cent of the electors of Ontario I resent the arrogance of hon. gentlemen opposite who talk about an insult to Ontario.

It is said that we ought to have communicated with the provincial government of Ontario before we introduced this Bill. I would like to know what more the provincial government or legislature of Ontario has to do with the means by which we shall regulate the preparation of voters' lists for elections to this House than we in this House have to do with the means whereby the provincial government or legislature of Ontario shall regulate its own franchise. We have just as much right in this House to control our own franchise and our electoral lists as the legislature of Ontario has to control its lists and its franchise, and there was no more reason why we as members of this House should consult the legislature of Ontario before proposing any legislation we saw fit with regard to the preparation of our lists than there was why the government of Ontario should have consulted us before passing their Voters' Lists Act last session. There was no more want of courtesy in the one case than in the other; the one legislature is as independent as the other in the preparation of its lists or in regulating the means whereby the franchise will be determined for elections to its own house. Hon. gentlemen have attempted to work up great indignation and to represent this as a matter in which some insult has been offered to Ontario or some discrimination made against it. If hon. gentlemen opposite think they will receive any benefit at the polls from this stage performance they are perfectly welcome to it. It is a measure which I should be happy to discuss before any assembly of electors, and I am perfectly willing to meet any hon. gentleman on the subject at any time or place and discuss it before any audience in Ontario.

When this measure was first introduced we heard a great deal from hon. gentlemen opposite about its operation as applied to the little province of Manitoba and the plea was made: You are afraid to take somebody of your own size. We do not hear that now, there is no whine or cry of imposing on the little province of Ontario but the ground is shifted and now it is said: Here is some intolerable insult that is being flung into the fact of a majestic, a mighty and a great portion of this Dominion. It seems to me the two lines of argument are hardly consistent, and when added to all that the effort is made to show that by reason of some sinister influence within the cabinet or out of it, there has been some effort to discriminate against Ontario in favour of some other portion of the Dominion, surely the ridiculous has come to its fitting conclusion.

Why in Quebec there are no lists whatever in respect to the unorganized territory. Indeed, according to the argument of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) there is no such thing as unorganized territory within the province. At all events no lists have been prepared within that territory and to-day if there are residents there entitled to vote they are not upon any list. It is not then a matter of choosing between provincial lists and Dominion lists so far as that province is concerned, it is a matter simply of considering whether or not this parliament should step in and as to that part of the province of Quebec do what its own local legislature has, up to this time, not seen any necessity for doing. If there is any call or necessity for the preparation of lists in that portion of Quebec which is known as unorganized, and if the provincial legislature applies to that portion of the province a method of preparing the lists different from that which obtains in the remainder of the province, as unworkable or as unlikely to work satisfactorily, as unlikely to produce a fair and impartial list as experience has demonstrated the provisions of the similar law with regard to the province of Ontario are, then it will be time for this House to consider whether or not the lists so prepared for the unorganized portion of Quebec are lists which this House ought to accept as determining its franchise for the purposes of elections to this House. But that time has not yet come and until there are lists prepared in some shape or other and until it is a question whether or not those lists so prepared shall be accepted for that portion of the province of Quebec, there was no occasion for this provision so far as that province was concerned.

When this Bill was originally introduced, it applied to all portions of this Dominion, not already provided for, in regard to which the lists were not prepared in accordance with the system pointed out in our existing election law. That was objected to, the measure was, so far as Manitoba was concerned, modified, as gentlemen know and I need not go over those circumstances again. That modification taking place, the complaint now is that we have retained not the original measure but a measure modified as proposed by the leader of the government six weeks ago, referring this question to judicial determination, and because we have retained that so far as Ontario is concerned, this prolonged objection to the present proposed provision is now made.

The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) this morning says that this is no real judicial preparation of the voters' lists. I can only refer him to the language of the Bill which, if passed, it will fall to those judges themselves to interpret, and which is certainly worded as plainly as any words I am able to find could make it. This Bill provides that the board of registration shall appoint as many enumerators as are necessary and that the duty of those enumerators shall be to do their work how? Under the supervision and in accordance with the directions of such board of registration. I do not think those words are by any means meaningless. They were inserted for a purpose and I believe that before any body of judicial interpreters they will have full effect. I do not mean to say that the judges themselves or any of them will go from house to house like census enumerators looking personally for the voters or registering them, but I do say that having appointed some men as their substitutes, or delegates, as their appointees to do that work, the preparation of the lists will be done by those men under the actual supervision of and in accordance with the actual directions which may be given from day to day or for that matter from hour to hour, if that is necessary, by the judges themselves. And these judges are therefore under this statute as literally to prepare these lists by themselves as is the man who builds a house literally doing that building if he stands there day by day and sees the workmen laying the bricks, building the stairways and putting on the roof. It is true they do not do the work with their own hands, but it is being done under their immediate direction and supervision by men appointed by themselves and under their entire control. I maintain that it is in every respect a judicially prepared list as effectively as though the actual work of enumeration was done by a judge's own hand.

The hon. member for Halton has gently, but still unmistakably, conveyed to the House and to all who may read his remarks the impression that although a judge has accepted and is in discharge of his high judicial duties, he cannot, he does not, forget the political alliances which may have existed in his case before his appointment to the bench. So be it. If my hon. friend in seriousness means it, if he thinks it, so be it. We have in this territory of New Ontario six constituencies and nine district judges. Three of their number were appointed before the present government came into power. I say nothing more than that with regard to political affiliations, but I do remind my hon. friend from Halton that if out of nine judges in Ontario there are three appointed under such circumstances as I have pointed out, there is, proportionately at least, exactly the same representation that hon. gentlemen have to-day in the political complexion of this House. I say then that we are here talking of this work of the judges of the land as we find them. I know that no more impartial tribunal could possibly be selected for the work that is in hand, and it reduces itself simply to this point, that the objections which have been taken to this proposition in committee and here to-day mean that hon. gentlemen opposite believe all voters' lists perfect so long as they are prepared by political partisans selected by hon. gentlemen themselves or their political associates while if such lists are prepared by political partisans selected from this side of the House, then such lists are utterly objectionable. But even if such lists are prepared by impartial judicial authorities, they are equally to be condemned because nothing will satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite unless they can prepare with their own hands the election lists upon which we appeal to the electorate.

Mr. AYLESWORTH.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I wish to say a few words in reply to the observations of the Minister of Justice. The hon. gentleman claims that he has as good a right to speak for Ontario as any member in this House. Well, in this connection, I do not think he has as good a right to speak for the province of Ontario as the men who were here years ago when the Liberal party put itself on record, time and time again, by declaring that the provincial lists, and no other, were the proper lists to be used. That was the stand taken by the present First Minister, by his colleagues who were then in the House, including the late Hon. David Mills and the Hon. Edward Blake. Men of the greatest prominence and importance in the Liberal party of that day declared over and over again that the provincial lists, and no other, were the lists to be used in the Dominion as well as the provincial election. That was one of the planks of their platform on which they went to the country. But in this Election Bill, the government are deliberately setting aside that principle as regards the province of Ontario. They deliberately refuse its application to the unorganized districts of that province. That would not be so bad if the province of Ontario was the only one which had unorganized districts. But other provinces also have them. The same condition exists in other provinces in that respect as exists in Ontario to-day, yet there is no application of this Bill to them. Is it not an insult to Ontario that she should be thus discriminated against? I say it is a deliberate insult to the province of Ontario that this Dominion government refuses to trust to the honesty and integrity of the Ontario officials or the Ontario administration. In the face of this measure, the Minister of Justice cannot claim to speak for the province of Ontario. What is the reason for this? The right hon. the First Minister says the object is to give a man in the unorganized territory a vote by providing for the making up of a list in that territory where now there is none. But if that be the case in the unorganized districts of Ontario, it is equally the case in the unorganized districts of the province of Quebec. Yet he has made no such provision for that province. There he is willing to leave the matter in the hands of the local government, but Ontario, for which province he claims to speak, he treats differently.

Mr. TALBOT. Are you the protector of these men in the province of Quebec?

Mr. SPROULE. I am not, but the present government has declared that this measure was necessary to protect the rights of the voters in the unorganized districts of Ontario. Why do they not protect the rights of these electors in the province of Quebec as well? The object of the Bill, they say, is to give the voter the right to vote where there are no municipal lists. But there are no municipal lists in these unorganized districts in the province of Quebec any more than there are in the province of Ontario. Why then this discrimination? I could well understand the government taking these lists out of the control of the province if they took the ground that this parliament ought to enact its own franchise law entirely. But they do not take that ground, and when this particular clause is made to apply to Ontario alone, when that spirit of partiality is accentuated by the remarks of the Minister of Justice, we have the right to complain. I heard a remark made by a supporter of the government after the provincial elections in Ontario, to this effect: Wait until our government at Ottawa puts through a franchise law and gives us the making of the lists, and we will show you where we stand. I could mention the names of men who spoke to me in this way. A man named Marcil, very closely related to a member of this House, and another, a very prominent henchman of his, were very active partisans during the late election, one of them at one time acting as the deputy returning officer and the other, I believe, the poll clerk. They are both officials on the Transcontinental working for the Liberal party. Neither in the federal area nor in the local has the Liberal party ever depended on an honest election in this district. Need I point to D. A. Macdonald who issued dodgers in the district of Algoma announcing that the election was to be held on a certain day after the day fixed for the election so as to keep the people from going to the polls to vote? Two days before the date fixed in his notice the election was held, and about 125 voters were deprived of their franchise by the wilful deception practiced by one of the officials of the Mowat government. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) knows very well how D. A. Macdonald corralled the Indians in an election out there, took them, in a mass to the poll, and made them poll their votes in favour of the Reform candidate, and then after those Indians had voted, he compelled them to change clothes with their squaws, who were corralled in a building, and the squaws, dressed in male attire, went and polled their votes.

Mr. CONMEE. Where does the hon. gentleman say that occurred?

Mr. SPROULE. In the Algoma district I heard the boast made by D. A. Macdonald himself.

Mr. CONMEE. Under what government?

Mr. SPROULE. The Mowat government. I am speaking of what is a matter of historical fact to-day. I heard the man who did that boast of it on the Pacific boat coming down the lake in 1892. That was one of these devices on which the hon. member for Rainy River has always depended for election. In fact the Bill now before the House ought to be called the 'Conmee Bill,' because its main object is to secure the election of that hon. gentleman. It is because of the knowledge of these things that we are to-day resenting the insult offered to the province of Ontario. We all remember the tricks that were resorted to by that hon. gentleman in the past and I am sure his right hand has not since lost its cunning. At one time it was the 'Minnie M,' at another D. A. Macdonald, and at another something equally disreputable.

To-day these hon. gentlemen opposite desire to be in a position to do what their friends boasted they would along the line of the Transcontinental. The minister, however, has yielded to the strong arguments against the Bill, but nevertheless now, at the tail end of the discussion, he talks very violently against those who compelled him to amend it. Why did not he address these arguments and reproaches to the House weeks ago? He dare not, because he knew they would be answered. But to-day, because he knows that time will not permit an answer, he becomes very valient and very important. But the people of Ontario will remember, when the day of retribution comes, and, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Aylesworth), the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and their friends will be punished by the electorate, when that electorate has an opportunity to pronounce its verdict upon this Bill which is being forced upon the House.

Mr. CONMEE. I would like to ask the hon. member a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CONMEE. The election the hon. member speaks of never took place.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has a right to ask a question.

Mr. CONMEE. I state that the election——

Some hon. MEMEBRS. Oh, oh. Ask your question.

Mr. CONMEE. I ask the hon. member where he has any proof that such an election ever took place, when a man named Macdonald ever ran in Algoma?

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say Macdonald ever ran. I said that Macdonald was the agent of the Reform party. I heard him boast of having taken the Indians in to vote, then causing them to exchange dress with the squaws and taking the squaws down and voting them.

Mr. CONMEE. When was that election?

Mr. SPROULE. And I heard him telling that he had himself posted up a notice at a certain mill, where there were a large number of Conservative voters, that the election was to be held two days after the date really fixed by the proclamation, thus keeping these men at home on election day, with the result that the election was carried against them. It is by such devices as these that the hon. member for Rainy River has so long managed to be a member of some legislature in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) goes beyond what is proper in suggesting that an hon. member has managed to be elected by devices of the sort he indicated. I think that should be withdrawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. SPROULE. I have only this to say, that I have it from the mouth of the man who did it——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The point is that the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) has suggested that another hon. member has always relied upon certain improper devices for election. That is an improper suggestion to make.

An hon. MEMBER. Did the squaws vote?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order. Withdraw.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that statement should be withdrawn.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

An hon. MEMBER. Withdraw the squaws.

Mr. SPEAKER. Some hon. members appear to treat this as a matter for levity. It it not a matter for levity, but a question of order and decorum in debate in this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. They don't know any better——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. members must preserve order and treat the rules of debate with decency and decorum. The statement that an hon. member has relied upon improper means for election is not a proper statement to go on record in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought I was within the rules, Mr. Speaker, in saying what I did; but, in obedience to your ruling, I withdraw the statement.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). I think that for the Act about to be passed —because I assume that it is to be passed by a majority in this House—only one man is responsible, and that man is the Prime Minister and leader of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The province of Ontario, when it comes to fix the responsibility, will hold the Prime Minister responsible for this action. Sir, the Prime Minister has had twelve years of power in this Dominion. He has taken many grave political chances in his time. He is making a political gamble on this legislation—nothing else. He should ask himself if the elections—which I hope and trust will come on this fall—are likely to show that this Bill is worth what it will cost him. This Bill is intended to affect only six ridings at the very outset. It cannot possibly affect the riding of Muskoka. In the last local election the Liberal party had not a candidate there. The result there will not depend upon any list that can be made, even if any person wished to make unfair lists, the unorganized vote there being so small. Practically the same would apply to West Algoma and East Algoma. So it comes down to two ridings—Nipissing and Rainy River. Now, is it worth the Prime Minister's while to take the risks involved in this Bill for such possible results? Even these two ridings are affected greatly by local lcircumstances, as they were in the last campaign. The hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Conmee) fought with the determination, vim and go with which he fights every election. Every means was resorted to to win. There were thrown into the riding of Rainy River the men who have been disgraced in the courts of Ontario for improper and illegal election proceedings. Cap. Sullivan was in the riding, and the hon. member for Rainy River and he were together——

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is making a statement which has no foundation in fact. I never saw Cap. Sullivan in that riding, either in the last election or any other election.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. member this question?——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. member (Mr. Conmee) has denied the statement, and the statement should be withdrawn.

Mr. BENNETT. I accept the hon. member's statement. Now, I would ask him: Prior to the last local elections, early in the month of May, was he with Cap. Sullivan on the line of the Transcontinental Railway, between Selkirk junction and Port Arthur?

Mr. CONMEE. Which election does the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) refer to?

Mr. BENNETT. The election of June last.

Mr. CONMEE. I never discussed that election with Cap. Sullivan at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the hon. member, is the statement correct, as made by him, that he never saw Cap. Sullivan within a month before the date of polling on the Transcontinental line between Selkirk and Port Arthur ?

Mr. CONMEE. No, I never did.

Mr. BENNETT. Then I make this statement on the authority of Dr. Gunn, who lives at Kenora, that he saw the hon. gentleman and Cap. Sullivan there together.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is merely reiterating in effect the statement that has been directed to be withdrawn.

Mr. CONMEE. Is that the Dr. Gunn who is a physician on the Transcontinental Railway?

Mr. BENNETT. The same gentleman.

Mr. CONMEE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has been misinformed, for I was not west of Port Arthur during the whole period of that election, and never saw Sullivan anywhere in the province about the time of the election.

Mr. BENNETT. Then the statement of Dr. Gunn is untrue. I say that all means were resorted to in that riding in the local election, and it resulted in the election of the Conservative candidate. Now, the Prime Minister is placing legislation on the statute-book that will not enure to his political benefit. I say this, and I am confident that my statement will be proven true, when—I hope within the next few months—the people of the ridings affected have an opportunity to express their opinion.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Boyce.

Amendment negatived.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three oclock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not intend to delay the House for more than a moment, I wish to call attention in the first place to a paragraph which I find in the editorial column of the Toronto 'Globe' of Saturday, July 4, to which my attention has been directed only recently. The paragraph to which I allude is this :

There need not much be said regarding the Dominion Elections Bill, which has at last reached the committee stage in parliament. But, in the interests of truth, it should be put on record that the concessions which the opposition now declare to be satisfactory were offered early in May last. The time since wasted might far better have been devoted to serious public business.

I am inclined to agree with the principle enunciated in the last sentence of this extract, but in so far as the statement of alleged fact in the second sentence is concerned, namely, that the concessions alluded to were offered to the opposition early in May, I desire to say in all sincerity, that the statement has no foundation in fact whatever and that it is absolutely devoid of truth. I do not say this by way of imputing any desire of misleading to this journal but simply to place the matter on its proper basis as far as the facts are concerned.

I have already, in Committee of the Whole House, moved a resolution for the amendment of the Bill now under discussion by way of providing that the poll in a general election in Canada shall be held in every constituency on the same day except in so far as the Yukon Territory is concerned. By section 90 of the Dominion Elections Act five electoral districts are excluded from the general rule. As to certain of these there may be some question, but as to others I think there is no question. The Kootenay division of British Columbia, at least, according to the statement of Mr. Smith Curtis, the Liberal candidate for the riding should not be included in this list. As far as other British Columbia ridings are concerned, I have the same information. My information with regard to them has been controverted by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. As far as the Kootenay riding is concerned, I am supported not only by the provincial government of British Columbia, not only by the circumstance that the provincial elections are all held on the same day in that province but also by the statement of Mr. Smith Curtis, to whom I have referred. I will not take up further time in discussing the subject, but I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Bristol :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to Committee of the Whole House with instructions to amend the same by making provision that at every general election in Canada the day for holding the polls shall be the same day throughout Canada except in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. BENNETT.

It may properly be inquired, why, having regard to what I have said just now with respect to the difference of opinion between the two sides of the House, I make the motion in this way. My answer is that my hon. friend from Prince Edward county (Mr. Alcorn), in the amendments which he introduced into this House in this Bill and which were proposed as amendments to the Bill now before the House, pointed out a simple and easy way by which these five constituencies could be brought within the general rule. The difficulty arises, I understand, in all cases with respect to the posting of the proclamation and by adopting the means pointed out by my hon. friend for Prince Edward there should not be the slightest difficulty whatever in fixing one day for the whole of Canada.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. I agree with the hon. member from Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) that his estimate that the proclamatiou should be twenty-three days in the hands of the returning officer before nomination day is a reasonable one. If he gets it twenty-three days before nomination day there will be sufficient time except in Comox-Atlin if the returning officer happens to live in Atlin. But, does not my hon. friend see that if it requires twenty-three days before the nomination it must necessarily require twenty-three days after the nomination so as to distribute the ballot boxes and swear in the returning officers? That would make forty-six days from the time that the returning officer receives the proclamation until the poll can be held.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am obliged to confess, and I trust my hon. friend (Mr. D. Ross) will not blame me for doing so, that I do not see anything of the kind. As a matter of practice in every constituency it is known and will be known perfectly well that the election will not be by acclamatiou and that a poll will be demanded. It will neither be necessary nor desirable for the returning officer to sit down and wait for nomination day for he knows perfectly well that two candidates will be nominated and he can make arrangements accordingly As a matter of fact in my own province of Nova Scotia, long before nomination day the returning officer makes his arrangements with his deputies. In the county of Halifax, which is 140 miles long and where men have to come a distance of 120 miles in some cases, this is always done and it can be done in these ridings in British Columbia just as well. I do not think there would be the slightest difficulty in adopting the proposal of my hon. friend from Prince Edward.

Mr. D. ROSS. The hon. gentleman must see that in a district such as Yale-Cariboo the ballots must be printed at some central point after the nominations are held, and his suggestion that the returning officer might anticipate what was going to happen on nomination day does not apply to British Columbia. We do not know until nomination day whether a socialist candidate will be nominated. They might make up their mind the day before nomination to place a candidate in the field. Then, the ballots must be printed at, say, Kamloops, the ballot boxes must be distributed from that central point and consequently the work cannot be done in a shorter time than the proclamation can be posted from any settled point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. As far as that is concerned my hon. friend from Prince Edward was not fixing twenty-three as the minimum time, but he was fixing a period of twenty-three days as a time which would be absolutely ample in all constituencies.

Mr. D. ROSS. No, I do not think so.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Well, it is not worth while to bandy contradictions across the floor of the House. I have said all that I have to say on that point. I think there is some difficulty to be encountered, but in so far as the Kootenay district of British Columbia is concerned, there is absolutely no difficulty at all if we are entitled to rely upon the statement of Mr. Smith Curtis who says that there is not only no necessity, but that he does not desire any postponement in that riding.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. We have been accused of doing this to get a political advantage, but so far as I am personally concerned I do not think there is much dishonour in getting beaten in an honourable way, and I would much rather have the election on the general election day and take chances. I believe if the election is held on the same day as the other elections you will have your organization better in hand. But, the district of Yale-Cariboo is 700 miles in length from the United States boundary to the Alaskan boundary and it contains 175,000 square miles, while the district of Kootenay contains about 29,000 square miles. So far as Kootenay is concerned, if Mr. Curtis Smith wants his election on the same day, I think it can be arranged, but in Yale-Cariboo and Comox-Atlin—I know the districts well—it is a different matter. It is absolutely impossible to hold the election in Yale-Cariboo on the same day unless the proclamations are issued at least 60 days before the day of polling. If His Excellency can dissolve the House and wait 60 days for an election then I am perfectly satisfied. Notwithstanding the telegram read by the leader of the opposition from Premier McBride, the fact is that the provincial government found it absolutely necessary to pass an order in council deferring the election in the provincial district of Skeena for two weeks after the general election because it was impossible to get the ballot boxes into that district. I know the leader of the opposition wants to be fair and I tell him it is absolutely impossible to hold an election in Yale-Cariboo unless 60 days elapse between the issue of the proclamation and the polling. There are nine provincial electoral districts in Yale-Cariboo and the provincial elections are arranged from nine different centres, while in the Dominion election they must be arranged from one centre for that large area. Under the provincial election law the deputy returning officer makes a declaration before any two voters who happen to be there, whereas under the Dominion election law the deputy returning officer must be sworn in before a justice of the peace and in many instances there is not a justice of the peace within 100 miles of where the poll is held. It is more difficult now than in 1904 to arrange for an election in that constituency because people have gone into Stewart lake and Chapel valley along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific in northern British Columbia where there are no transportation facilities. It will therefore take you a much longer time than in 1904 to provide that the settlers in that remote area shall have their votes recorded.

Mr. ALCORN. I assume that the hon. member (Mr. Duncan Ross) knows of the amendment placed upon the Votes and Proceedings of the 29th of June containing the scheme set forth in Bill (No. 80) with regard to this subject. He is perhaps aware that part of that scheme is that in these five at present excepted constituencies the nomination day is advanced one week, and that therefore 14 days will elapse between the nomination and the polling.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. That is not enough.

Mr. ALCORN. If it were true, which I believe, it is not, that the ballot boxes must necessarily be distributed from one common centre for the whole electoral district, there are 14 days in which to perform that service and surely that would be sufficient. But, I believe that nowhere in the Dominion are there Dominion ballot boxes specially provided. The practice is to use the ballot boxes used in the provincial and municipal elections and therefore there is no distribution to be made except within a very restricted area. The only thing the returning officer would have to do would be to distribute his ballots, and I believe 14 days would be sufficient for that, even in as large a constituency as my hon. friend has.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. But, under the Act, the ballot box which is received by the returning officer must be sealed, must contain a copy of the election law, must contain sufficient ballots for the polling subdivision, and must be opened by the deputy returning officer in the presence of two electors. If that be so the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Alcorn) falls to the ground.

Mr. ALCORN. My hon. friend is entirely mistaken. The ballot box is only sealed by the deputy when he returns it to the returning officer.

Mr. TALBOT. The Magdalen islands are attached for federal purposes to the county of Gaspé and at certain seasons of the year it is next to impossible to communicate with them. The electoral district of Chicoutimi extends to the Labrador coast and in certain seasons of the year the obstacles to communication in that district are almost insurmountable. I call the attention of the leader of the opposition to the fact that it is certainly impossible to have the elections in these two districts held at the same time as in the other constituencies.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When special conditions arise at certain seasons of the year the elections can be held at a later date under section 91 of the Dominion Elections Act.

Amendment (Mr. R. L. Borden) negatived on the same division as last recorded.

Mr. SPROULE. In our judgment there are very serious objections to section 17 of this Bill. However, as there is a desire to hurry the proceedings I shall not refer to the matter further than to move, seconded by Mr. Bergeron:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House with instructions to strike out section 17 thereof.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. I have discussed this matter as fully as I wished on the second reading of the Bill but I might point out that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) seems not to have his own political party behind him in the position which he now takes. I suppose no more pronounced exponent of Conservative political views in this country can readily be found than the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen,' and I read from the Ottawa 'Morning Citizen' of the 27th of June last the following brief editorial:

In some of the recounts of the votes passed at the recent provincial election, ballots have been thrown out because of mistakes on the part of returning officers. In other cases officials who should have been better instructed have jeopardized votes by irregular markings of the voting papers. That is, to say the least, unfair. The ballot represents the will of the people and that will should rule. No mistake of an intermediary should thwart the expression of the peoples' opinion. The sins of the returning officers or those responsible should not be visited upon the voters.

I concur in every word of those sentiments and it was in that view that I framed the amendment which is in question.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice has set us an edifying example by reading newspaper articles when we are endeavouring to hurry through the business of the session. I do not know how much progress we shall make if other ministers follow that example. He appears to be of the opinion that in voting for this amendment we desire to vote against any fair proposal to ensure that no man's franchise shall be taken away. We do not propose anything of the kind, but we do think that section 17 as it stands, for reasons which have been abundantly pointed out in this House is likely to lead and I have no doubt will lead to results which are not desirable. I do not minimize the difficulties which have been brought to the attention of the country in the Wentworth and three or four other cases but when you can point to only five cases since 1867, a period of forty-one years, surely the grievance is not so great as to justify a remedy to which some exception at least can be taken. However, the matter has been threshed out to a wearisome extent in the House.

Mr. FISHER. I do not know where the leader of the opposition gets the idea that there have been only five cases of the kind since confederation. I know of three cases in my own county and in the last provincial election in Quebec there were over five cases, most of them proved in court.

Mr. BENNETT. Your deputy returning officers must be very stupid.

Mr. FISHER. In two of the cases they were Tories, I think in all three.

Mr. HENDERSON. I still think that this clause should be struck out of the Bill. It may be that errors will occur and that deputy returning officers may make mistakes, and in that way some candidate may be deprived of a seat to which he is properly entitled, but I consider that a very small matter indeed compared with the hundreds of thousands of electors throughout the country who are forced by means of a clause like this into voting against their consciences and therefore I cheerfully support the amendment and hope the House will throw out the clause.

Mr. GALLIHER. Under the present law cannot the same thing occur as will occur under this? Cannot the deputy returning officer make marks? Then how many instances have been brought to light in which the manner of voting has been discovered by such a mark.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know of my own knowledge that where the law permitted the manner in which a voter voted to be known as has been the case in Ontario for the last thirty years, voters' lists were taken to Toronto, were marked from the original ballots and were used again in a subsequent election which occurred in the same year and that marked list was used for the purpose of coercing votes. I know as a matter of fact that voters were coerced. One man applied to me on election day and asked if I believed they could discover how he voted. I was obliged to tell him they could, that the law permitted it and I had no doubt in the world they did know how he voted in the previous election and would in that election. He said this was unfair, as it would compel him to vote as he did not want to. That was no doubt done repeatedly throughout Ontario with working men. I will not support any law that would take away the independence of the electorate and lead to the coercion of voters.

Mr. GALLIHER. This same question has been taken up in the United States and it has been held there in reported cases that a state law which would render a vote invalid by reason of any mark or error of a deputy returning officer would be unconstitutional.

Amendment negatived on the same division last accorded.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of amending the said Bill so as to provide punishment by fine or imprisonment for any minister of the Crown or other person who as an inducement to any voters or class of voters in any electoral district to vote for any candidate promises to procure or threatens to withhold the expenditure of any public moneys of Canada or the undertaking of any public works within such electoral district.

He said: This motion explains itself and the reading of it is a sufficient argument for its adoption.

Amendment negatived on the same division last recorded.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). I was not in the House when clause 22 was debated, or I would have had the benefit of the opinion of the legal gentlemen in the House on it. I would direct attention to line 15 of section 22. From my standpoint this clause adds to all the iniquities of the old one by making out a candidate to be a criminal merely because some agent of his, without his knowledge or concurrence, did something which the candidate would have prevented him from doing had he any knowledge of it. Everybody will concede that the Act, as it is, was sufficiently stringent, and that it contained a number of severe restraints and grievous punishments which perhaps were out of all proportion to the wrong done. I notice that line fifteen provides that the actual personal expense of any candidate, his expenses for actual professional services performed, shall be held to be expenses lawfully incurred. Is there any limitation in the amendment to the Bills which can be rendered by professional gentlemen for services in an election ? Is there any limitation to these services they can perform ? Perhaps the legal gentlemen handled this question very gingerly. It seems to me that this is handing over the whole representation in the House to the legal fraternity. No layman would pretend to run an election when he can be made liable to imprisonment and fine because of the actions of an individual of which he has no cognizance. This is intended to put the whole control of the electorate in the hands of solicitors. A solicitor, who acts as agent for a candidate, can do all the things we are trying to prevent by this Bill. These angels who, we are told, are held in chains under darkness, awaiting the great day of judgment, must, I think, be given an intermission in their pains to laugh over this Bill. We are enabling a candidate to get around the penal provisions of this Act by allowing his solicitor to do everything forbidden in it. In England a candidate does not pretentd to do any of these things. His agents do certain things but his solicitor does the rest and presents a Bill for so much for his work. In England the bill is rendered by the solicitor for professional services. The price is ten pounds for every voter who votes and five pounds for every one who refrains. The angels in the bottomless pit must laugh to find us making Acts, creating offences and at the same time asserting provisions which enable them to be avoided—setting up pains and penalties for certain acts and then devising machinery by which the whole measure can be nullified.

Mr. CONMEE. I propose to say a few words——

An hon. MEMBER. The hon. gentleman has spoken already.

Mr. SPEAKER. Did the hon. gentleman speak on the amendment or on the third reading ?

Mr. CONMEE. I spoke on the third reading, but not on the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Then you cannot speak now.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

EDMONTON, YUKON AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions :

1. Resolved, That the government of Canada may aid and assist the construction of a line of railway of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company, hereinafter called the company,' from a point on the company's line of railway, or on the line of railway of the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company, at or near Edmonton or Strathcona, in the province of Alberta, thence in a generally western direction, to the coal areas, situated at or near the Brazeau river and the headwaters of the McLeod river, for a distance not exceeding one hundred and fifty miles, by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called 'securities,' secured as hereinafter mentioned, of the said company, or of its successors by amalgamation as hereinafter provided, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile for the first fifty miles of the line so aided, and for the remainder of the said line, to the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars per mile, not exceeding in all one hundred and fifty miles, the interest upon the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half yearly, the principal to be payable in fifty years.

2. Resolved, That the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by a deed or deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge, to a trustee or trustees, approved or by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the said line of railway so aided, and the right of way, station grounds, or other real estate and interest therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials and other personal properties, present and future, acquired for the purposes of the said line so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining it, and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to arise from the said line, and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said line and the operation, maintenance and repair thereof.

3. Resolved, That the deed or deeds of trust shall create a mortgage, or charge, upon all other lines of railway and properties of the company, and upon all the property and franchises, tolls, incomes and revenues connected therewith, to rank thereon next after the bonds, debentures, debenture stocks or other securities theretofore issued by the company, and next after any existing deed or deeds of trust by way of mortgage or charge securing them ; Provided always that with respect to lines of railway or parts thereof now constructed and in operation, for the mileage of which no bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities have yet been issued, the company may issue first mortgage securities at a rate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars per mile, and may secure them by deed or deeds of trust by way of first mortgage or charge, having priority over the mortgage or charge created by the deed or deeds of trust hereinbefore mentioned.

4. Resolved, That the kind of securities to be guaranteed as aforesaid and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds of trust securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purposes of the line of railway so aided, and the forms and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of, and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

5. Resolved, That the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it; and upon being so signed the government shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payments shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, That the rates and tolls charged by the company upon any of its lines shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the company.

7. Resolved, That any moneys paid by the government of Canada under any guarantee herein provided for, shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities so guaranteed, or under any deed of trust securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust, and the government shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall, with respect to all moneys so paid, be in all respects in the position of security holders with respect to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

8. Resolved, That the guarantee of securities as herein provided, for the said line of railway shall not be given until the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company and the Canadian Northern Railway Company have amalgamated into one company under the name of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, nor until the amalgamated company, as successors by such amalgamation, has become, as maker of the securities, liable for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so to be guaranteed with respect to such line of railway.

9. Resolved, That the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of the said line of railway so to be aided, shall, for the purposes hereof, be final.

10. Resolved, That the books of the company shall at all times be open for inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.—Mr. Graham.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I think the minister should outline the policy on which he grants these bonuses. He should explain why he grants bonuses to some railways and none to others, why he chooses to guarantee the bonds of certain railways instead of giving bonuses. Personally I am opposed, and have been for years, to these bonuses. It is too late in the session to discuss the matter at any length, but I would point out that when hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition they found great fault, and justly so, with this way of proceeding. These bonuses resolutions should be brought down at such a period that we could have an opportunity to fairly investigate them and make our arguments for and against them as the case may be. I wish to put on record my protest against this way of doing business and against all bonuses to railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. These resolutions do not refer to bonuses. I am not referring at all to what has been the policy of the government, but this position I do take. In a new country like Canada, development depends largely on transportation and transportation depends largely on railway construction. In order to develop a new country and enable those who come to it, as well as those who reside in it, to get the best return for their labours, railway facilities are necessary. We have not arrived at the point when we can have all the facilities we desire without government aid. When discussing any railway project, we have to decide whether it is better to give it so much per mile or guarantee its bonds. In the case of a company with considerable resources, my own opinion, especially in the case of trunk lines, is that it is better for the country to guarantee the bonds, because then we are not taking any risks. But in the case of the smaller lines perhaps the better way is to give them some cash aid, and they only get that after the line is constructed, on the report of the engineer. So that, if we get no railway, we pay no money. The only matter to be discussed, to my mind, in connection with this would be whether Canada has arrived at the point when we can do away with aid to railways. My own opinion is that Canada has not arrived at that point. I have endeavoured to deal with every application on the merit of that application, so far as I could get the information necessary.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I desire to say one or two words on this subject, and, perhaps, for the sake of the economizing time, I may make a few observations also with regard to the resolutions which follow. These resolutions were presented to the House seven months and seventeen days after this session was opened. The House now, within forty-eight hours of prorogation so far as we are able to learn, is invited to consider these resolutions and pass them. There has been a great deal of complaint, especially from the Liberal press of the country, and some from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, as to the length of this session, and we have been told that the work in which we have been engaged should not have occupied a longer time than five months. Either this government has been holding back for more than two months and a half resolutions which it deemed perfectly proper, or else it is bringing down now certain resolutions which it does not really believe to be in the public interest. There is the alternative. Do hon. gentlemen opposite seriously contend, in the face of this proposal, brought down more than seven months and a half after the opening of the session, and only after repeated requests by the opposition for their early presentation, that they have to blame hon. gentlemen on this side for the delay; or are they not forced to admit that the delay during this session has been due to the inability of the government to deal with public business in a businesslike way and to bring their measures before the House in proper time? What is the answer? Were these subsidies decided upon three or four months ago? Was the government ready then to bring down these subsidies so that we might complete our work within five months after the session had begun? That is the question they will have to answer for themselves and as to which, I venture to think, they will not be able to answer satisfactorily.

What are the proposals that the government brings down? The first is a proposal to undertake bond obligations to the amount of $11,067,000. The government brings that proposal down to the House on the afternoon of Thursday, and it intends that this House shall be prorogued on Saturday afternoon or evening. That is, forty-eight hours before the time fixed for the conclusion of this session, the government bring down a proposal that the country should incur bond obligations to the extent of eleven millions and upwards. But that is not all. They bring down railway subsidies embracing revotes of subsidies for nearly 1,700 miles of road and new subsidies for nearly 2,300 miles of road—subsidies for a total of nearly 4,000 miles of railways. The combined length of all the lines of railway proposed to be subsidized under these resolutions would extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific across Canada. Therefore, this is a proposal to subsidize railways equal to a transcontinental railway. And the government asks parliament to take up that subject seriously after seven months and a half of the session has passed, and within forty-eight hours of prorogation. It is perfectly obvious that the government are not disposed to have serious discussion or consideration of this proposal—they know it is impossible. If their proposal was ready at the time when this session, according to their own views, should have come to an end, then for what reason is it that they did not present these measures to the House months ago? Look at the amount of aid involved; 3,935 miles of railway at $3,200 a mile amounts to about $13,000,000, which it is proposed to take from the public treasury and use in subsidizing various lines of railway throughout the country. But the proposal is not limited to $3,200 per mile. For if any of these railways is built at the cost exceeding $15,000 a mile, a greater subsidy is given. Looking over the aid granted to railways throughout the country during the last three years under resolutions similar to these, I find that the average amount of aid is over $5,000 a mile. If you take $20,000 a mile as the average cost of these roads—I do not think that would be an unfair or exaggerated assumption—you will find that instead of $12,592,- 000, the public treasury is pledged by these resolutions to no less than $22,566,300. This with the amount of bond obligations proposed by the resolutions now under discussion make a total of $33,500,000 and upwards, which parliament is invited to seriously consider within forty-eight hours of prorogation. And this we are invited to do without any correspondence having been brought down, without any documents being laid on the table which are of much value. It is true, the Minister of Railways has laid upon the table, or rather, has furnished to myself, and, I believe, to some other members, a memo. with regard to the bond guarantee which we are now invited to vote. But still I venture to say the House is absolutely without any information whatever which would enable it to fairly consider and determine whether these individual subsidies ought to be voted or not. I rise for the purpose of making an earnest protest. I do not think that the action of the government in leaving the introduction of these resolutions to the last moment is fair to parliament or to the country. Furthermore, I would say it is not fair even to themselves. Surely conditions are not such that these subsidies, or at least ninety-nine hundredths of them, were not resolved upon two or three months ago. If so many of them were resolved upon at that time, why were they not brought down in time for reasonable discussion? But the government have left all of these resolutions to be brought down at this time. And I protest that it is absolutely impossible for parliament, at this stage of the session, to give to these proposals the consideration which in all justice to the country and in view of the magnitude of the proposals, should be bestowed upon every one of them.

Mr. LENNOX. When I saw these resolutions on the Order Paper, although I knew we had very little time before us, I determined that I would not let them pass without criticism. I want particularly to speak in reference to the new subsidies. The other portion of the resolutions is objectionable, but not so objectionable as the new subsidies. In reference to guarantees, I can understand that there may be conditions under which it would be right to guarantee certain sums for railway enterprises. But there is no time now to consider whether such a course is or is not correct in reference to a particular matter. The amount we have already guaranteed for railways is very large. The amount we are now asked to guarantee for these railways, as has been said, is some $11,000,000. By these resolutions we are also taking over the Quebec bridge, the loss in connection with the Quebec bridge and undertaking to provide the money required for the building of a new one. We are by this resolution also revoting a large amount upon enterprises to which we were committed before. At a moderate estimate, these revotes will amount to about $10,000,000. The history of railway building in Canada I do not think justifies us in assuming that any of these railways to which we are committing ourselves will cost less than $20,000 a mile on the average. There is no justification in subsidizing a railway unless it is one of peculiar difficulty in regard to construction, and I think we can assume from the fact that the Transcontinental Railway costs us more than $60,000 a mile that these railways we are now subsidizing will cost on the average at least to the limit of our liability or $21,400 a mile. On that basis, the revotes will amount to more than $10,880,000. But I wish particularly to speak of the new subsidies. According to my calculation the lines total 2,267 miles, according to another calculation they amount to 2,235 miles.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I think I did state 2,235 miles. But the Minister of Finance told me that about 35 additional miles were to be included, and my estimate was made up on the first basis and without taking into consideration the 32 miles which have since been added.

Mr. LENNOX. That would make my calculation correct. In paying $3,200 per mile up to $15,000, it amounts to $7,254,400. I assume that it will cost probably double that amount, it may cost $45,000. We pay $3,200 per mile on an expenditure of $15,000 per mile, and on any expenditure over $15,000 we pay half the cost, not exceeding in all $6,400 per mile.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. How does the hon. gentleman make up those figures, when the maximum amount is $6,400 per mile? It does not matter what it costs afterwards.

Mr. LENNOX. For a cost of $15,000 per mile we pay $3,200, above $15,000 we pay one half of what it costs, not exceeding $6,400 per mile. Now, if we pay $4,800 per mile we shall pay on these new subsidies $10,881,600, or if the limit is reached, nearly $15,000.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I do not understand the hon. gentleman's method of computing those figures. The subsidies are paid upon the cost of the railway up to $21,400 per mile. If a railway costs $60,000, or $70,000, or $80,000, it makes no difference to the country.

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. gentleman does not understand my figures I understand them, and I think the country will understand them. Up to $15,000 we will pay $3,200; above that we will pay half the construction until the cost reaches $6,400. I am assuming, from the history of railway construction in this country, that it will cost at least $18,200 per mile, and if it does we will pay $4,800 per mile, and the total cost will be $10,881,600. I say that the conduct of the government cannot be justified in bringing down at this stage of the session a proposition committing the country to such an enormous expenditure. Aside from the subsidies we are revoting, we have about 2,270 miles of railway in regard to which we are committing ourselves to a probable expenditure of $6,400 per mile. I submit that it is absolutely unjustifiable. I submit that the time has now come when we should not be paying subsidies for the construction of railways. Having regard to what Canada has already done in railway construction, I say we are not justified in paying one dollar of subsidy to any railway. The proper position for the government to take is this, that the circumstances of this country are such as to lead to the unaided construction of railways wherever they are a national or a commercial necessity. Many years ago in the United States they adopted that principle, and I have no doubt that the good sense of the people of Canada will say that the time is entirely passed when we should be subsidizing railways.

Mr. LALOR. As a representative of a rural constituency, I desire to enter my protest against the huge amount now being voted for railway subsidies. I believe that the constituency I represent is opposed to these subsidies; and personally I am opposed to them. I believe the time has long gone by when we should advance such enormous sums to subsidize railway companies. If we compute the sums of money that have been granted, both by this parliament and by the legislatures of the various provinces, by way of bonuses and subsidies to railways, they will amount to enough to build those roads almost entirely, and the result is that, although the people of the country have paid for the roads, the railway companies own them. I am opposed to these bonuses. I think it was not wise on the part of the government to bring down an important question like this within forty-eight hours of prorogation, when there is no opportunity to discuss it clearly and intelligently. We are reaching a point in our expenditure when we should call a halt, and when we consider that we are to-day asked to vote about $30,000,000, I think it is more than the people of this country expect us, as their representatives, to support. I wish to express myself as strongly as I possibly can in opposition to these subsidies. I think it is an imposition upon the people, and they will not show themselves to be in favour of it when they are asked to record their votes in the coming election. There must be some reason why this huge sum is asked. It is very apparent why we are asked to vote this money. I think we all know that there is an election coming on, and that that accounts for this large amount of money that is being voted. As the representative of a rural constituency, I wish to oppose this expenditure. When we consider that we are voting, in general estimates, bounties to lead, railway subsidies and other grants, no less a sum than $227,000,000, hon. gentlemen will agree with me that it was time to stop and consider the situation. We are running expenditure mad; it is time to call a halt, and I want to express my opinion in opposition to this extravagant and unwise expenditure for railway bonuses. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that in a new country like this it is necessary to grant railway subsidies, but why is it necessary in the old sections of the country, especially in Ontario, which are well served with railways, to continue granting subsidies? If the railway companies feel like building roads in competition with lines already built, they should pay for these roads themselves and not ask the government of Canada to subsidize them.

Mr. TALBOT. I would like to ask the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) to be good enough to tell us how many lines of railway he has in his county?

Mr. LALOR. I think we have the Grand Trunk and Michigan Central.

Mr. TALBOT. You are doing well.

Mr. LALOR. Certainly, we are doing well.

Mr. TALBOT. In some counties we have none at all and we would like to have some.

Mr. LALOR. Is that any reason why we should grant subsidies where there is plenty of competition?

Mr. TALBOT. Will my hon. friend tell me if the railways in his county have been subsidized?

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. Before these resolutions are disposed of, I wish to put myself on record as being unalterably opposed to them. As far as I can judge the sentiment of the people of Canada to-day they are opposed to subsidizing railways. Expressions of opinion have been given by various bodies from time to time in the last few years and especially by the agricultural class indicating that they are opposed to subsidizing railways. It cannot be other than well known to the government that this is the feeling of the farmers to-day. They believe, as I believe, that we have reached a time in the history of the country when, if more railways are needed, we should depend on private enterprise to supply the capital to build these railways and leave those who invest their money in them to depend on the earnings for their returns. We have ample evidence that the railways will be built whether we subsidize them or not, because, in several instances, we have refused to allow capitalists to come in and build roads in Canada and supply the necessary capital themselves. In view of that fact and in view of what I believe the sentiment of the people of Canada to be I am opposed to these resolutions. I am opposed to them as well because of the stage of the session at which they are brought down are submitted to this House. If there is any merit in one or more of them the date is too late and the data which should be available for our purpose is not available to enable us to analyse these propositions and to determine which are meritorious and which are not. They should be weeded out and analysed, but it is entirely too late to do this. It is committing the country to enormous undertakings without a proper analysis or the proper information that we should have before we give our assent to these resolutions. I am opposed to them as well because I fear that they are proposed to-day for one purpose more than any other and that is for the purpose of using them as bribing agencies in view of the approaching elections, enabling hon. gentlemen opposite to dangle them before the people of the country in various districts and to say: You should return the government to power again because of the assistance which they are giving to a railway through your county. Even in gratitude you ought to support the government, but if you do not support the government you are not likely to get as much assistance in the matter of construction of railways as you will if you do support the government candidate. Having regard to our knowledge of how elections have been run in the past by the present government we are justified in coming to the conclusion that these resolutions will be used to their utmost to assist the government in carrying very many constituencies. I think the government has another object in view as well. This means has been adopted by the government at the present time for the purpose of raising a large campaign fund from these subsidized corporations to enable them to run their elections. Some may not take that seriously and some may, but I say that we have had in the history of Canada cogent examples that justify us in reaching that conclusion today. We believe that we are on the eve of an election, that the government are preparing to bring on the election in the very near future, and the history of the past affords us ample justification for reaching the conclusion that this is one of the means whereby governments raise large sums of money to corrupt the electors and carry their candidates to power when the election comes on. Therefore, I say that, if for no other reason, it is not an opportune time to allow these resolutions to pass. I think the country's attention should be drawn to these facts. Why are the government guaranteeing the Canadian Northern Railway as they are doing to-day? Is there any justification for it? Have we any evidence that the people are in favour of their doing it? We have lately passed through a provincial election and the condemnation which was, over and over again, heaped upon the Whitney government by friends of the federal government in opposition to the means adopted for assisting the Canadian Northern Railway, and the fact that on platform after platform they denounced it in the strongest language, this proves one of two things—either that the Reform party were absolute hypocrites when they said that they did not believe it was justifiable to assist the Canadian Northern or they are hypocrites to-day, because they will go before the people of Canada and justify it to a larger extent than was proposed then. They will do to-day what they condemned a few weeks ago. Will they support it to-day? Of course they will, and they will go out and support it in the country notwithstanding the fact that many of them went on the platform and condemned it with regard to the assistance that was proposed to be given to the Canadian Northern Railway by the Whitney government. They are adopting the same means to-day, but they are adopting it to ten times greater extent than was proposed then. It was wrong then it cannot be right to-day. Hon. gentlemen who condemned it then cannot consistently support it now. I am opposed to it and I believe the people are opposed to it. They have put themselves on record time and time again that they are opposed to the further subsidizing of railways. There may be some justification for continuing grants that may have been given to enterprises that are now under way. But that is no justification for providing large subsidies for a number of new enterprises as set forth in these resolutions. I desire to put myself on record in opposition to this, believing, as I do, that the people of Canada are opposed to further subsidizing railways at the present time.

Mr. HENDERSON. The criticism which I shall now offer will apply to the resolutions generally, as I do not propose speaking at any other stage. The Minister of Railways has told us that the time for aiding railway enterprises has not yet passed, and, that is one of the most justifiable things the hon. gentleman has said in this House. But I disagree with him entirely as to the manner of aiding railway enterprises. It has been the practice in by-gone years for a few men to organize a railway company and then appeal to the federal government, to the local governments, and to the municipalities for aid so as to secure money enough to construct the road. As a general thing those engaged in railway promotion never expect to invest a dollar of their own money. I believe the time is past for municipal bonuses and I also believe the time has passed for federal and provincial bonuses. We want railways in Canada, and if we are going to get them they must be aided, but that aid should be given in the form of a government guarantee. I approve of that principle, and I do not see why the government should not apply it to all these different railroads as well as to the Canadian Northern. In the recent Ontario elections the Whitney government was criticised for guaranteeing the Canadian Northern bonds. I justified that guarantee and I am prepared to justify it to-day, because I believe that the true principle of aiding railway enterprise is for the government to guarantee the bonds. Why should the people of to-day put their hands in their pockets to build a railway that is going to serve the people of fifty years hence ? I think we should leave some responsibility for those who come after us. If we guarantee the bonds and the bonds are unfortunately not redeemed by the company, then our descendants who benefit by these railways will contribute towards the expenditure, and the whole burden will not be thrown upon the shoulders of the already over-burdened people of to-day. We were told by the Liberals when in opposition that the people of Canada were being bled white at a time when the annual expenditure of the country was only $40,000,000, but what are the people of Canada going to say to these enormous expenditures being heaped one on another at a time when our annual outlay is $150,000,000. I protest against these bonuses ; I do not intend to support any of them. I think it is time the government should call a halt.

Mr. BARR. I feel it my duty, notwithstanding the desire to get through the business of the House, to enter my solemn protest against this bonusing of railways which is condemned by the farmers throughout the length and breadth of Canada. One of the strongest planks in the Liberal platform of former days was that railway bonuses should cease, but the Liberals in power have forgotten that. The 'Farmers Sun,' the most able organ of the farmers of this Dominion, has condemned railway bonusing in the strongest possible manner, and in that opinion of the 'Farmer's Sun' I cordially concur. And not only that, but it is worse still that in the dying hours of the session with prorogation in sight the government should bring down this enormous expenditure. If the government had submitted their measures months ago instead of waiting until a short time before prorogation the business of the House could have been disposed of long ago. The Ross government for years pursued a policy of delay in a similar way, but the Conservative opposition forced them to bring down their measures in proper time to allow of proper consideration. Here we are rushing millions and millions of the people's money through without due consideration. I believe, Sir, that the people of Canada will at the first opportunity retire from power the government which imposes such enormous burdens upon the people and which shows such procrastination in submitting measures to parliament.

Mr. J. D. REID. The Minister of Railways has been most unfair to this parliament in delaying until the last moment the submission of these resolutions. It is now impossible to ascertain the facts and consider the proposals, as they should be considered. It appears to be the policy of the government to grant bonuses to and to guarantee the bonds of railway companies, and that being their policy the Minister of Railways should have pressed for a grant of aid to the Ottawa and Brockville Railway which is a most important and necessary line. The capital of this Dominion has practically no direct railway communication except that which is afforded by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I believe it would be a great help to the people of the district through which this railway runs as well as to the city of Ottawa if the Grand Trunk Railway Company had direct communication with the capital. The Minister of Railways has neglected the Brockville and Ottawa line, and as to that I would not complain at all were it not that he has subsidized railways in other parts of the province of Ontario which are not so much in need of railway facilities. With that feeling and knowing that it would be of such assistance to the country and to Ottawa as the capital, I think the Minister has not been fair to us in this district in not seeing that aid was given to the railway proposed by this company. If that had been done I am satisfied they would have proceeded with the building of the road at once.

Mr. PRINGLE. We have recently come through a provincial campaign in Ontario. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) spoke on the platform with the leader of the opposition in the legislature, Mr. A. G. McKay, and the whole complaint was that last awful week in Toronto. What was that last awful week ? The Hon. J. P. Whitney enunciated in his platform of 1904 the principle that not one dollar of bonus should be given to any railway in the province of Ontario. He adhered to that policy rigidly ; the only complaint was that he undertook to guarantee certain bonds of the James Bay Railway to the extent of some $2,000,000. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) now asks this House not in the last week of the session, but in the last 48 hours to pass bonuses for millions of dollars and a guarantee of bonds for millions more. Personally I am not opposed to the guarantee of bonds under proper conditions and proper circumstances. I believe it is the best way of assisting railways in opening and developing new territories and that history will show this country will not be called upon to pay one dollar of principal or of interest where the bonds are for a reasonable amount, and precaution is taken to see that the railway is built through a country that will likely be a good producing country. What I do complain of is the absolute hypocrisy of the party which went through Ontario condemning the Conservative party because the Conservative party guaranteed bonds to a small amount, and then asks us to-day, with 48 hours ahead of us, to grant bonuses to an extent of about $20,000,000. I have not had time nor has any hon. member to thoroughly investigate the bonuses to the different railways but I have run through some of them. In Ontario the Ross administration in its dying days granted a subsidy of $2,000 a mile to one railway which is now getting a subsidy of $6,200 a mile. The Ross government granted a land subsidy of millions of acres to another railway which is now getting a subsidy from these hon. gentlemen of $6,400 a mile. Under certain conditions it might be reasonable to grant certain bonuses. The province of Ontario in the past has done it, the Ross government left for the Conservative government a debt of five or six millions incurred in subsidies to railways. But since the advent of the Hon. J. P. Whitney to power in 1905 not one dollar has been granted in subsidies to any railway and yet the Liberals in Ontario raised the cry of that last awful week, simply because there was a guarantee of bonds which I believe was justified. I do not think it is possible for us in 48 hours to thoroughly consider these resolutions. We know we have to prorogue on Saturday and I with others feel that these resolutions should have been brought down weeks ago instead of being left to the last days of the session.

Mr. NORTHRUP. When, only a little over a month ago, hon. gentlemen opposite and their political friends throughout Ontario were making the welkin ring with their denunciations of that last awful week, to a certain extent I agreed with them. On the public platform in Ontario I said that while personally I agreed with the settlement of the mining suit and the guarantee of bonds under the circumstances and conditions under which the Whitney government had guaranteed them, I joined with hon. gentlemen of the opposite shade of politics in denouncing the Whitney government for passing such legislation in the dying days of the session. I feel that I am consistent to-day in protesting not merely as a Canadian ratepayer but as a member of this House, against the studied insult that is paid to members of this House by bringing down such important legislation in the dying days of the session. Not only is it impossible for us to give the proper consideration to these matters, but a blow is struck at the dignity of parliament itself. I venture to say there is not an hon. gentleman opposite any more than on this side who does not know that in the eyes of the great public of Canada the dignity of parliament is lowered and our influence is decreased by the fact that fourteen or fifteen hon. gentlemen who happen to occupy seats on the treasury benches can bring down such an immense grant at a time when it is impossible for private members to vote intelligently, knowing that there is a sufficient number in the House who will be ready to vote blindly for whatever they may bring down. I appeal to supporters of the government to consider their own dignity, the respect we owe to ourselves as well as to our constituents and to protest against such enormous grants being brought down when the country knows we cannot understand what we are voting for. If they protest the Prime Minister must heed them.

Mr. R. N. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I wish to place myself on record as opposed to this resolution and I believe that in doing so I am voicing the strong feeling of the constituency which I represent.

Mr. BLAIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with other members in condemnation of the government for their extravagance in voting such amounts of money for aid to railways in Canada. I notice the resolutions cover some ten pages of the Votes and Proceedings of to-day and if we do not protest against the action of the government we will have some member of it, possibly the Minister of Customs, in a few days saying that the opposition members allowed millions to pass without protest. That is the kind of government we have to deal with so it is necessary, even if we take a little time, to enter our protest against these extraordinary expenditures. In my own county, during the last year and a half, we have had an example of a large railway corporation constructing an important railway without the aid of a dollar from the public treasury, Dominion or local; that is the new Canadian Pacific Railway branch from Toronto to Sudbury, which is looked upon as one of the best roads in Ontario. The roadbed is perfect and it is a credit to the company. If the Canadian Pacific Railway are able to construct a line from Toronto to Sudbury without public aid, surely the other railways of Canada can construct some of these branches without money from the public treasury. Therefore without having had an opportunity to look into these resolutions and refresh my mind as to the geography in order to ascertain where the lines are to be constructed, and not knowing the local considerations, I wish in a word or two to express my disapproval of the large vote the government is asking this afternoon.

Mr. ALEXANDER MARTIN (Queens, P.E.I.) I raise my voice, Mr. Speaker, against these railway resolutions, especially against the bonuses. Considering the heavy obligations to which the right hon. the First Minister has committed this country—the Transcontinental which is to cost between $200,000,000 and $250,000,000; the Georgian Bay canal, $100,000,000; the Hudson Bay Railway, $30,000,000 to $50,000,000; the Welland canal, something like $30,000,000—considering all these I think it is high time he should cry halt. The late Sir John Macdonald gave this country the Canadian Pacific Railway, and his memory is green and will remain green in the minds of the people for what he has done. What he did then was very costly, but the Canadian Pacific Railway has come to be one of the greatest and most successful undertakings that Canada ever ventured into. But the First Minister is coming now to the last straw which is going to break the camel's back. With the credit of this country in the markets of the old world diminished, he goes on favouring certain parts of Canada for political purposes. It is all very well to say we are building up a great country, but are we not travelling too fast? Here are estimates amounting to something like $180,000,000, yet ten years ago, when our estimates only amounted to $42,000,000, the right hon. gentleman considered them entirely too much. In 1896 he condemned railway subsidies in toto. The time had come, he said, when they should cease. Is he going to do for Canada what the late Mr. Mercier did for Quebec? I am afraid he is. When we consider the niggardliness with which he treats some provinces—my own for instance—and the lavish expenditure he proposes to make in others, I am at a loss to understand how the hon. gentleman expects this country to bear the burden. He is incurring expenditures which are staggering the country, which he cannot justify, and now he comes down at this hour of the session and asks us to swallow a host of railway subsidies without giving them at all any consideration.

Mr. EMMERSON. Could I be permitted to add a word to the testimony of hon. gentlemen opposite, though not in the same direction? I do not think that to-day in Canada the people as a rule are playing the part of Rip Van Winkle. They have had their eyes open for some time, and they realize that the conditions to-day are vastly different from what they were some years ago. There is one thing of which they are certain, and that is that the status of Canada at present is far better than it ever was during any previous year in our history. There have been two or three objections raised to these resolutions. The main one is with respect to the lateness of their introduction. Well, I have to commend the government for what it is doing. In this the government are in harmony with the ideas of the people. They are in harmony with the popular sentiment when they realize existing conditions and our future possibility. They have at last, in the interval between all these cries of scandal and motions and resolutions, which we have had from week to week, designed some say for the purpose of obstructing the business of parliament, been able to bring down, in the form of a resolution, certain propositions, which, to my mind, crystallize the best hopes and aspirations of our people. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) took one other exception, and it was that this was only one other means of bribing the people of Canada——

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. But he said the right hon. leader of this House would realize that the people of Canada were opposed to anything of the kind. Sir, if that be true, how is it possible that these railway resolutions can be offered as acts of bribery? I think that my right hon. friend is too astute a statesman to propose to the people something which will not be acceptable to them. Reading these resolutions in detail, I find that the views of the west are being recognized, I realize that the views and hopes and aims of the people of central Canada are being realized. I further realize that those propositions, whether they relate to the east or the west or the centre, are acceptable to the people of Canada. Why? Because Canadian citizenship to-day realizes that we are on the threshold of great possibilities.

They realize that responsibilities rest upon them, and they want a government in power that can understand the conditions and provide for them. I have been for many years allied with the Liberal party. I was an opponent of the party of the hon. gentleman opposite when it was led by that great statesman, Sir John A. Macdonald. I want to say this in tribute to his memory—though he needs no such tribute—that he grasped the situation and provided for its possibilities and requirements. And I congratulate the right hon. leader of this government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) that now, when conditions are changed, when we have made rapid strides, when we have attained a higher plane and enjoy a wider view of the possibilities of our country, he makes provision for these great interests. For that, I believe he will receive, as he merits, the approval of the citizenship of Canada. I do not wish to join hon. gentlemen opposite in holding a post mortem on the past.

But I would call the attention of the leader of the government to the fact that in the past we have aided railways, particularly in the eastern section of Canada and have spent large sums on the government system of railways. My hon. friend from Queens, P.E.I., (Mr. A. Martin), a few moments ago, condemned the incurring of liabilities in the settlement of the transportation problem. And yet, in the next breath, he complained of the disregard of the requirements of his own province in the same direction. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, realizes that Prince Edward Island has received attention, and so have the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec in connection with the government system of railways. As subsidiary to the government system, this parliament has, from time to time, given aid toward the construction of railways which should be branches and feeders of that government system, and these contributions toward railway construction have benefited materially the government system. These expenditures in aid of branches of the government system were made for the purpose not only of increasing the traffic of the Intercolonial but of aiding the communities which these branch railways serve. Now, Sir, the government, having met the requirements of central Canada, as it is doing by these resolutions, should turn its eye to the conditions prevailing in eastern Canada. I shall not repeat the arguments I addressed to the House on a recent occasion, but I ask consideration of this: Is it not in the interests of the Intercolonial from a business standpoint, that the government should acquire the lines connecting with the government system, to make those lines do more perfectly their work as feeders and so increase and extend the traffic of the government system and to benefit further the communities served by these branches? Now that we have under consideration these propositions in the interests of the transportation problem of Canada, I would ask if the government has considered the desirability of acquiring these lines as feeders, thereby perfecting the government system and fulfilling the hopes of the communities served by these branch lines? I do not wish the government to confine itself to one province, but to consider every province. In Nova Scotia, there are branch lines which are recognized as peculiarly coal branches that it would be desirable that the government should acquire, as their usefulness as feeders of the government system justifies that acquirement. And, while this policy would measurably solve the transportation problems of the east, it would enable the people of the west to secure the full benefit and advantage of a government system of railways. For it is not only to the east but to the west as well that the Intercolonial is doing good——

Mr. EMMERSON.

Mr. LEFURGEY. What are you going to do with Prince Edward Island?

Mr. EMMERSON. The government is dealing generously with Prince Edward Island. Only the other night we approved a resolution authorizing the governmnet to construct a branch line there. I am sure that my hon. friend (Mr. Lefurgey) approves of that; and, if it is good policy for Prince Edward Island, it is good policy for the mainland as well.

Mr. LEFURGEY. But what about your connecting link? How are you going to make these Prince Edward Island roads feeders of the Intercolonial?

Mr. EMMERSON. One thing at a time. If the hon. member will have a little patience he will find a tunnel built and a railway running under the straits. He wants everything in a moment. But he waited for generations—at least his political party did—without taking any step in that direction. The present administration are taking steps in that direction. And they are enlarging the railway system of Canada in every way. I invite the attention of the right hon. the First Minister to the subject I have mentioned, and would respectfully ask him, on behalf of the people of the east particularly, whether the government have taken into consideration the acquirement of the branch lines connecting with the Intercolonial as feeders of the government railway system?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If there be those in this House who honestly believe that the time has come when public assistance to railway construction can be done away with, I do not share that opinion. On the contrary, our experience proves that the time, I am afraid, is very far distant in the future when we can in this country do as the United States has done, dispense with assisting by money grants the extension of our railway system to all parts of the country in which settlement has already gone. I have heard to-day voices from the province of Ontario and voices from the province of Quebec, protesting against any new subsidies towards railway construction. I venture to say that if these voices had come from those parts of Canada in the condition they were forty years ago, they would have been the first to ask for railway subsidies. But I can conceive that some people in the province of Ontario and some portions of Quebec, where you have the country gridironed with railways, may think there is no necessity for a further advance in that direction. I would like hon. gentlemen who represent those parts of Canada to remember that in the new provinces, in some parts of Ontario, in some parts of Quebec, and some other parts of the country, the conditions to-day are just as they were forty years ago in Ontario, and if it were left to private enterprise to provide those sections with the blessings of railway transportation, it is probable that they would have to suffer a deprivation for many years to come. This policy was inaugurated many years ago, and so far as I can judge, and I think it is admitted by everybody, it has been a wise policy. It has done wonders for the country, and if the country is to-day as prosperous as it undoubtedly is, the fact is due to two causes, increased transportation and added immigration. As long therefore as immigration continues to flow in at the rate it is doing now, as long as the country settles up as rapidly as it is now being settled, I am afraid that no encouragement can be given to those who think that we can dispense with public assistance to railway transportation. We have done a good deal for the west, we are doing a good deal for the west in these resolutions. I confess that the west has been usually well taken care of. My hon. friend for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) asks if we are not going to do anything for the east. He has told us, not only this session but in preceding sessions, that the east is not as well provided for as it should be ; that at the present time there is an anomalous condition of things prevailing, that is to say, that in all parts of the country where there are feeders to trunk lines these feeders are generally taken care of and put under the management of the trunk lines ; whereas in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the feeders are not connected with the trunk lines. I believe that in this matter, and I think every body will agree with me, if the Intercolonial were under private management, all these feeders which are now merely branch lines would have been acquired by the company and would be part of the system at this moment. But we must recognize that government management of a railway has not the elasticity which would as readily suggest of the adoption of such a policy. As long as there lacks such a union between the trunk lines and the feeders there must be an unsatisfactory condition of things to the people of the maritime provinces. On the other hand, we must recognize the fact that while the idea is a good one, it involves very serious complications and requires serious consideration. I may say to my hon. friend, since he has put the question directly to me, that we have given very serious consideration to the condition of things which he has laid before us. While this condition of things is not a novel one, and we have given to it a good deal of consideration, we have not yet been able to make up our minds that it is a policy which we should adopt. Whilst we are not prepared to say to my hon. friend that we shall adopt this policy, we realize that it is one which requires consideration, and makes it incumbent upon the government to make the fullest inquiry in order that we may be in a position to discuss the matter adequately at another session.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the resolutions.

Mr. BERGERON. Before this was drafted was there any arrangement made with these companies mentioned in this section?

Mr. GRAHAM. Just two companies to be known as the Canadian Northern. When they amalgamate, this guarantee of the bonds of this company takes effect, but we get a second mortgage on the entire system of the Canadian Northern Railway, including this part, which is to be part of the Canadian Northern Railway, and upon which we have a first mortgage. It is so worded as to guard that point by providing that the guarantee only becomes effective when this company and the Canadian Northern Railway are amalgamated into one new company, to be known as the Canadian Northern, each company carrying its own bonding powers into the new company.

Mr. BERGERON. If that new company is called the Canadian Northern, will there be any danger of mistakes being made?

Mr. GRAHAM. No, it will be the Canadian Northern Company.

Mr. BERGERON. But it will not be the Canadian Northern Company that exists to-day?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Canadian Northern that exists to-day will be merged into this.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the Minister of Railways and Canals to say that on the new part to be constructed you take a first mortgage, and that on the part of the railway already constructed the Canadian Northern have the right of issuing securities to the amount of $20,000 a mile, which will be prior to the claim of the government, and that the government, for the sum of money which it advances on these new lines to be constructed, not only takes a first mortgage on the part to be constructed, but a second mortgage on the part constructed, and also gets the undertaking of the company for the repayment of the money?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, they become the makers of the securities of the Canadian Northern Company.

Mr. SPROULE. In regard to the company that it is proposed to guarantee, all the obligations resting against them now will remain the same as heretofore, and the government's mortgage will be a second mortgage?

Mr. GRAHAM. The government will have a first mortgage on all the lines not now constructed, but it will have a second mortgage over the entire Canadian Northern system on the lines already constructed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is not the Canadian Northern system subject to a second mortgage already?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think not.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know from my hon. friend what security we are going to get from the Canadian Northern, and what the pending liabilities are on this road on which we are taking a second mortgage.

Mr. GRAHAM. If there be a second mortgage on the Canadian Northern, I must say it must be on a very small portion of it. My understanding of it was that our mortgage was over the entire system. I will get all the particulars when we rise at six. The main point is that this becomes part of the Canadian Northern system and carries with it all its properties and bonding privileges. The bonding privileges of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company were changed not long ago. On the Mountain portion of the road, by the recent Act, they have bonding power to the extent of $35,000 a mile and on the other portions of the road to the extent of $25,000 a mile.

Mr. BERGERON. Is this Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company already chartered?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the gentlemen composing the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is really the same interest as the Canadian Northern. That is why we are providing that the company must become the Canadian Northern.

Mr. BERGERON. Who are the gentlemen forming the company?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Mackenzie & Mann.

Mr. BARR. Have they the charter in their own name?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. I happen to know that, as a positive fact, the shareholders and directors are Mackenzie & Mann and the gentlemen connected with them in the Canadian Northern system. They have built some fifty miles from Edmonton westward already.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the minister puts forward what he calls a second mortgage as the ground upon which the government have entered into this guarantee, it would seem only right that he should give us some information as to what that security will be. My recollection is that in the province of Manitoba and, I think, extending as far east as Port Arthur, the Manitoba government guaranteed the bonds of that road, and they took as security a second mortgage upon all the system between those points that I have mentioned. So far as that is concerned, it is obvious that he cannot have a second mortgage. All I desire to know is what the particulars are.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will get that information after six o'clock.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. We should know what we are getting in the way of security. Second or third mortgages are not considered very safe, and the minister ought to be able to tell us what claims against the road are privileged before ours?

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this the road of which the Hon. William Pugsley was the promoter when the original charter was obtained?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have never heard that before.

Mr. GALLIHER. The original promoters of this road were all Edmonton men except one man in Toronto.

Mr. M. S. McCARTHY. Is this the line that goes from Strathcona to Edmonton?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes. This company was incorporated originally at the instance of the city of Edmonton and had power to build in the district surrounding Edmonton, extending from Strathcona across to Edmonton and thence westerly 50 miles or more. It was first called the Edmonton District Railway, but subsequently parliament gave power to change the name to the Edmonton Yukon and Pacific Railway and enabled it to build through to the Pacific ocean by the Yellow Head pass, or the Pine River pass, or the Peace River pass. Some years ago the charter was acquired by Mackenzie and Mann and last session it was renewed and the bonding powers increased. Under that charter they have built a bridge across the Saskatchewan river at Edmonton and they have also graded, if not completely constructed some 50 miles. The Railway Act provides that with the approval of the Governor in Council one or more railways may become amalgamated, and if they do the new company takes over all the property of the united companies and becomes liable for all their obligations, and by clause 8 of this resolution it is provided that these bonds are not to be guaranteed until that amalgamation takes place so that the Canadian Northern will become invested with all the property and become subject to all the liabilities of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway.

Mr. BERGERON. Is the hon. gentleman speaking of the bridge already constructed over the Saskatchewan?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Has this railway received any bonuses in any shape from the government ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Thirty-eight miles has been subsidized by the government but that 38 miles is not included in this guarantee.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no provision of that kind in your resolution.

Mr. GRAHAM. That will be carefully guarded.

Mr. BERGERON. The English version of the resolution says that the guarantee is $25,000 per mile for 100 miles, and the French version says that the guarantee is not to exceed in all $150,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. The French version is incorrect.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If the resolution passes its present form I do not see how the Minister of Railways can avoid guaranteeng of the 38 miles. The hon. member for Lanark points out that 38 miles of this railroad has already been subsidized, and the Minister of Railways admits that, and not one of the descriptions in paragraph 1 of the resolution includes the 38 miles. Do I understand that to be correct ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That point has been considered. There are three routes by which the railway may be constructed and it is more than probable it will not take the route starting at the end of the 38 miles. The solicitor informs me that when we say : From a point at or near Edmonton or Strathcona it covers it amply ; making it clear that they can start at the end of the 38 mile section or at the end of another railway 21 miles north from Strathcona on the other side of the river.

Mr. HAGGART. The minister gives his assurance that the railway company will receive no endorsation of bonds for that part of it which has already been subsidized, either the bridge or the line of road.

Mr. GRAHAM. Absolutely. We have no idea of including a foot of the thirty-eight miles built. Section 9 of the Bill says :

The decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of the said railway shall, for the purpose of this Act, be final.

It gives us absolute power to control the mileage.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Is the minister certain that the thirty-eight miles constructed west of Edmonton was constructed under this charter ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the minister state definitely what amount will be spent by this resolution ? It does not state any specified amount, can he say it will not be more than so much ?

Mr. GRAHAM. We guarantee bonds at a certain rate, $13,000 per mile for fifty miles and $25,000 per mile for 100 miles. No money is to be expended but the government guarantees bonds at a certain rate for a certain mileage.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the obligation ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The obligation is to guarantee 50 miles at $13,000 per mile, and 100 miles at $25,000 per mile. I do not think we will ever be called upon to pay a cent.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Were bonds of the railway west of Edmonton guaranteed by the government ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it had a subsidy of $3,200 a mile.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. The minister is certain it was built under this charter ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was built under the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific charter.

Resolution reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 213) respecting aid for the extension of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

AID TO CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

House in committee to consider the following proposed resolution :

1. Resolved, That the government of Canada may aid and assist the construction of the lines of railway, set out below, of the Canadian Northern Railway Company, hereinafter called 'the company,' by guaranteeing the principal and interest of the bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities, hereinafter called 'securities,' of the said company, to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile of the said lines of railway so aided, respectively, interest on the said securities to be at the rate of three and one-half per cent per annum, payable half-yearly, and the principal to be payable in fifty years.

2. Resolved, That the said securities so guaranteed shall be secured by one or more deeds of trust, by way of mortgage or charge, to a trustee or trustees, approved of by the Governor in Council, and such deed or deeds of trust shall respectively grant a first mortgage or charge upon the line or lines of railway included therein, and the rights of way, station grounds and other real estate and interests therein, buildings and other structures and improvements, rolling stock and equipment, plant, machinery, tools, supplies, materials and other personal properties present and future, acquired for the purpose of the said lines so aided, and in connection with operating, repairing and maintaining them, and the tolls, incomes and revenues of the company arising and to rise from the said lines and the rights, privileges, franchises and powers of the company now or hereafter held with respect to and in connection with the said lines, and the operation, maintenance and repair thereof.

3. Resolved, That the said deed or deeds of trust shall also create a mortgage or charge, next after the charges existing thereon, upon all the lines and branch lines of railway of the company now in operation and upon all the property and franchises connected therewith, and upon all the tolls, incomes and revenues derived therefrom by the company, and also next after any bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities heretofore issued or hereafter to be issued by the company to raise the moneys required from time to time to meet the expenditures heretofore made or hereafter to be made for and in connection with the company's yard and freight terminals in Winnipeg, and the expenditures under the agreement respecting Winnipeg terminals, set out in chapter 52 of the statutes of Canada of 1907, made between the company, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, and His Majesty the King, and after the deeds of trust, mortgages, pledges and charges heretofore given or hereafter to be given to secure them: provided always that, with respect to lines or parts thereof now constructed and in operation, for the mileage of which no bonds, debentures, debenture stock or other securities have yet been issued, the company may issue first mortgage securities at a rate not exceeding fifteen thousand dollars per mile, and may secure them by deed or deeds of trust by way of first mortgage or charge, having priority over the mortgage or charge to be created by the deed or deeds of trust hereinbefore mentioned.

4. Resolved, That the kind of securities to be guaranteed as herein provided and the forms thereof, and the form and terms of the deed or deeds of trust securing them, and the times and manner of the issue of securities and the disposition of the moneys to be raised thereon, by sale, pledge or otherwise, pending the expenditure of such moneys for the purposes of the lines of railway respectively so aided, and the forms and manner of guarantee, shall be such as the Governor in Council approves of, and such terms, provisions and conditions may be included in such deed or deeds of trust as the Governor in Council deems expedient or necessary.

5. Resolved, That the said guarantee shall be signed by the Minister of Finance or such officer as is designated by the Governor in Council to sign it, and upon being so signed the government shall become liable as guarantor for the payment of the principal and interest of the securities so guaranteed according to the tenor thereof, and the said payment shall form a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

6. Resolved, That the rates and tolls charged by the company upon any of its lines shall not in any case be higher than the rates or tolls fixed in the contract to be made between the government of Canada and the company.

7. Resolved, That any money paid by the government of Canada, under any guarantee herein provided for shall be held to be paid in discharge of the liability of the government and not in discharge of the liability of the company under the securities guaranteed or under any deed of trust securing them, and the moneys so paid shall be held to be still secured by the said securities and deed of trust and the government shall be subrogated in and to all the rights of the holders of such securities, the interest upon or the principal of which has been paid by the government, and the government shall with respect to all moneys so paid be in all respects in the position of security holders with respect to whose securities default has been made in payment to the extent of the moneys paid by the government.

8. Resolved, That the decision of the Governor in Council as to the length of the mileage of any of the said lines of railway shall, for the purposes hereof, be final.

9. Resolved, that the books of the company shall at all times be open to inspection for and on behalf of the government by any person named in that behalf by the Governor in Council or the Minister of Finance.

10. Resolved, that the lines of railway above referred to are the following :

1. A line of railway from or from near Regina, in the province of Saskatchewan, to the westerly boundary of Manitoba, there connecting with the company's line to Brandon, not exceeding one hundred and fifty-two miles.

2. A line of railway from or from near Saskatoon, in the province of Saskatchewan, thence running in a southerly and western direction towards Calgary, not exceeding one hundred and seventy-five miles.

3. A line of railway from or from near Prince Albert, in the province of Saskatchewan, by way of North Battleford and Battleford junction, to or near to Battleford, excluding, however, the mileage between North Battleford and Battleford junction, the distance, exclusive of the last-mentioned mileage not exceeding one hundred and thirty-two miles.

4. A line of railway from the Thunder Hill line of the company's railway at or near the westery boundary of the province of Manitoba, running in a generally western direction towards Rosthern, a distance not exceeding one hundred miles.

5. An extension of the Rosthern line from the western boundary of the province of Manitoba, in a northwesterly direction, a distance not exceeding fifty miles.—Mr. Graham.

Mr. GRAHAM. Hon. gentlemen will see that I have laid on their desks certain information concerning the various lines to be guaranteed. I think something like 509 miles at $13,000 per mile. The various portions of the line which are part of the Canadian Northern system are outlined in the resolution. In general terms aid to these railways has been urged very strongly in all these sections ; in some places by the municipalities, in others by prominent citizens and in others by deputations. The question of whether the railway shall be built or not, is a very live question. We who have many great railway facilities of course do not appreciate the position in which men are placed who are many miles from a railway. Believing this to be a proper course to pursue we selected those most strongly urged and most important and these are the results.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister know on how many miles of this road bonds and debentures or securities have been issued and to what extent on any portion of the road?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have a statement of that after dinner.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you any prepared agreement or any form of agreement in which you intend to enter with the company with reference to passenger tolls and freight rates? You make provision for special rates.

Mr. GRAHAM. We put that in because we wanted to be sure. Under the general Act the tolls will come under the Railway Commission. As a layman I did not see the necessity of putting it in the Act as we do not intend to make special rates. It was put in by the solicitor.

Resolutions read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 214) respecting certain aid for the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House went into committee to consider certain resolutions respecting the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railways therein mentioned.

Mr. GRAHAM. The first twenty-six of these resolutions are simply revotes. I have laid on the table a map on which is marked every line guaranteed and every line intended to be subsidized, both revotes and others. I have also laid on the table copies of the applications. These charters are all alive.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister satisfied himself that all these undertakings are feasible? The situation may have materially changed in the case of some of these roads since the original subsidies were voted. There may be many companies that are not going on with their lines.

Mr. GRAHAM. Unless a company makes a new application every year it is not considered. It has to give certain reasons for its application. It is possible that there are a large number not applying, but these will not be considered at all although the revotes are there; they all have to make new applications. On looking them over I think there is reason in every case why we should revote the subsidy, particularly as recently the time has not been very good for financing any railway or any other scheme.

Mr. BERGERON. How long ago were these voted? Some of them seem pretty old.

Mr. GRAHAM. I can turn up any case my hon. friend mentions and give the date when the application was made and the subsidy was granted.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the hon. minister any reason to believe that they will build within the time of this renewed subsidy?

Mr. GRAHAM. I can only give the information that was obtained in the application of each company. It is something in their favour that these subsidies were granted them before.

Mr. SPROULE. In many cases, these subsidies were asked for by companies that intended to build lines that would compete with existing lines. But, in the meantime, the charters may have been acquired by the very roads with which it was intended to compete. Can we be sure that we are not granting a renewal subsidy that will defeat the very object for which the subsidy was granted in the first place?

Mr. GRAHAM. My hon. friend's question is very pertinent. It is not easy to learn all these details in the information we receive. We have a regular form for them to fill up, and, as for the rest, we can only use our best judgment. The point is one which would come up rather on the granting of a charter, though, of course, the charter might be granted to one person and afterwards acquired by another. So far as possible, we guarded the point the hon. gentleman has referred to, but, in some cases, it will happen in spite of any information that we have.

Mr. DUNCAN ROSS. On one point, I do not find anything in these resolutions, but to be certain, I would like to ask if, in the Bill covering these resolutions, it is intended to repeal any of the subsidies not mentioned here as revotes. Some subsidies were revoted last year and do not expire for another year. They are not revoted by these resolutions, but I take it that they are not repealed?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is not the intention to repeal any that now exist. You might allow a subsidy to lapse, but you could not very well repeal it, because it might have been financed in good faith.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. Will the minister tell us, as we come to each case, when the charter was granted, and what reason he has for renewing the subsidy?

Mr. GRAHAM. That would take all night. If the hon. gentleman will tell me what information he wants I will gladly give it.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The hon. minister must have some ground for revoting the subsidy, and that he ought to state to the committee. The reason against this course is that it will take all night. This is another condemnation of the government for bringing these resolutions before the House at this late date. These resolutions should have been before the House three or four weeks ago at least, and then we could have read up the information and been ready to discuss the matter intelligently. Gentlemen about me here suggest that they should have been down months ago. Certainly, we cannot intelligently discuss them within the time allowed us.

Mr. GRAHAM. Some of these charters have been granted by the provincial legislatures and it is difficult to get all the information.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I do not see that that makes any difference. No matter who gave the charter, the minister ought to be able to tell us why he is renewing the subsidy.

To the Kettle River Valley Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point at or near Grand Forks to a point fifty miles up the North Fork, and East or West Fork, of the North Fork Kettle river, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 39; not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This road was discussed a great deal in the House several years ago.

Mr. BERGERON. Has the road been commenced?

Mr. GRAHAM. I understand that a portion twenty miles long is under construction. My British Columbia friends inform me that this road will be a great advantage to the province.

Mr. BERGERON. How is it that they never asked for their subsidy?

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a revote. They could start the work, but you must revote the subsidy to keep it in force.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How long is the road ?

Mr. GRAHAM. In all, possibly two hundred miles.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. And chartered in 1901, and only twenty miles commenced.

Mr. GRAHAM. They are asking a subsidy for only fifty miles.

Mr. CROCKET. Does this carry the double subsidy?

Mr. GRAHAM. It will undoubtedly earn the double subsidy.

For a line of railway from Owen Sound in the province of Ontario to Meaford, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 18; not exceeding 30 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. Any person who has been in that part of the country understands the necessity of having better communication with Owen Sound. This line was chartered in 1904.

Mr. BERGERON. It says 'for a line of railway.' What company?

Mr. GRAHAM. The Owen Sound and Meaford.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much has been built?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not know.

For a line of railway from Sharbot lake or Bathurst Station, in the province of Ontario, or between these points, via Lanark village, to Carleton Place, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 7; not exceeding 41 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This charter was given to the Kingston and Pembroke, which now is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was chartered many years ago and the subsidy was renewed in 1906.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Mr. HARTY. They have a controlling interest.

To the Nipigon Railway Company, for the following lines of railway:—

(a) from a point at or near Nipigon Station on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Nipigon lake; not exceeding 30 miles.

(b) from a point on Nipigon bay of Lake Superior to a point on the west of Lake Helen on the line of the Nipigon Railway; not exceeding 3½ miles.

(c) from a point on the line of the Nipigon Railway at or near the crossing of the Fraser river to a point on Lake Jesse, by way of Cameron's Falls; not exceeding 1½ miles;

(d) from a point on the north shore of Lake Nipigon northerly; not exceeding 45 miles; the said subsidies to the said lines being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 10; not exceeding in all 80 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a line chartered I think, by the provincial government some years ago.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How long is it ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Eighty miles.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much of it is built?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think none of it is built.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. When was the charter granted?

Mr. GRAHAM. It was a provincial charter, and I have not a memorandum of the date. It was some years ago.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The minister might give the reason why it is not built.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a very desirable road. I have always thought so. I discussed this charter in the provincial arena.

It will open up a good portion of the province, and we should not cut off the subsidy but renew it, to see if we can get some one to undertake a railway to open up that country.

Mr. HAGGART. The main object of the charter was to facilitate the building of the Transcontinental and to aid in getting supplies into that portion of the country.

Mr. BERGERON. When we subsidize provincial railways do they become federal railways or do they remain provincial railways ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have fairly strong views in reference to provincial charters. I am inclined to think, like the ex-leader of the Conservative party, that any steam road of any dimensions ought to come under Dominion jurisdiction. But it does not come under our jurisdiction because we give it aid.

Mr. BERGERON. If we grant it subsidies we should have something to say in its control.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a Dominion charter for this road as well as a provincial. This is not owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the object of building a railway back up there ? Years ago it was for the object of taking in supplies to build the Transcontinental, and was supposed to be useful in developing some mines and fishing. But I see that some members of the government control the fishing leases in Nipigon lake.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is one of the arguments. In fact, every road that has been chartered running north and south for a good many years, is said to be chartered to help the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. It runs through a pretty good piece of agricultural and timbered area, and I hope my hon. friend will not insist on cutting that out.

Mr. SPROULE. Who owns these charters now ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I am told the Canadian Northern have control of it now.

To the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company (or to the Canada Central Railway Company with the consent of the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company, and subject to the approval of the Governor in Council), for the following lines of railway :

(a) from a point on the said line of railway, between Little Current and Sudbury, westerly towards the Algoma Central and Hudson Bay Railway; not exceeding 100 miles;

(b) from Little Current thence crossing the Canadian Pacific Railway, at or near Stanley, and thence to Sudbury; not exceeding 64 miles;

(c) from a point at or near Sudbury, northerly; not exceeding 30 miles;

the said subsidies being granted in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 1; not exceeding in all 194 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This runs through the districts of Manitoulin, Algoma and Nipissing, in the counties of Grey and Bruce. What we call the Soo interests own this. It runs through a part of Ontario where a road is needed, and where everything ought to be done to get it constructed.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. How much of it is built ?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are 16½ miles built and in operation between Sudbury and Little Current. It has a Dominion charter. The Ontario charter has lapsed, and a new charter was given by the Dominion in 1900.

Mr. SPROULE. This subsidy covers the distance from Manitoulin island towards Sudbury. The people in that country were anxious to get some assistance to build a railway down the island. Is any provision made whereby any portion of this subsidy will go for that purpose ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The charter covers Manitoulin island. There were some deputations down here concerning that, I do not know what arrangement was come to. Originally the idea was to give railway facilities on the island as well as northward. This is a revote of what the company had before. They have not done much construction.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

For a line of railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway at or near Dartmouth, in the county of Halifax, to a point at or near Deans Settlement, in the county of Halifax, in lieu in part of the subsidy granted by chapter 43 of 1906, section 1, item 5; not exceeding 80 miles.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. I thought the Minister of Railways and Canals was going to give some information as to the liabilities against these railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. The liabilities I was trying to get was not against these railways, but against the Canadian Northern.

Mr. URIAH WILSON. The two roads.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will be able to give it when we come to the Bill.

To the Quebec and New Brunswick Railway Company, for a line of railway from Chaudière junction to a point at or near the international boundary, in lieu of the subsidies granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 25, for 18 miles; not exceeding 80 miles.

Mr. MORIN. I know the country through which this road is to go, and I am not able to understand what this vote means. This road starts from the Chaudière junction, or Chaudière curve, and will the minister say where it is going? It says 'to a point at or near the international boundary.'

Mr. GRAHAM. The point is not designated in the application. The route had to be changed. As a matter of fact, the Grand Trunk Pacific took a part of this company's line. The mileage is reduced by some 18 miles as compared with the old grant. This is a revote, and it was put in simply to a point on the international boundary. They do not seem to have given me the point. In discussing that with them they said that they wanted to go in as direct a line as they could, but they did not want to be tied up to a particular point. That is the explanation.

Mr. MORIN. Well, it is a pretty poor explanation. They can strike the boundary line at Lake Pohenegamook or they can strike it westward about 200 miles. To what place do they intend to go? The minister does not know the country as well as I do. West of Lake Pohenegamook the whole country is wooded. There is no town, village or settlement. Why should they run the road to the boundary line?

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. The idea is to make as direct a line as possible to St. John to get to an ocean port.

Mr. MORIN. That is a reply but not an answer. Mr. Costigan who got this charter knows all about the direction of the road and he wants this road to connect with a road at Connors. That road comes up the St. John river, then up the St. Francis river, then to Lake Pohenegamook and thence westward. The government has a road at Lake Pohenegamook in the Transcontinental, and what is the use of building another road from the lake to Quebec? The Quebec Central is building a road there also.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is not a new vote; the only difference is that we are reducing the mileage.

Mr. J. D. REID. When was this subsidy granted ?

Mr. GRAHAM. In 1901 I think.

Mr. J. D. REID. The charter has been hanging round for seven years with a subsidy and yet nothing has been done, while in the meantime the Transcontinental and the Quebec Central are going through the city. If the minister would change this subsidy and give it to the line between Brockville and Ottawa he would be acting more in the interests of the country.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This compaany was promoted by the Hon. Mr. Costigan and the charter was from Quebec down into the St. John valley, New Brunswick. The road was subsidized by the province of Quebec and also by the province of New Brunswick and through the efforts of Mr. Costigan a company spent a considerable sum of money grading the road in the province of New Brunswick from Connors up to the Quebec boundary. The route authorized in the charter was taken up by the Transcontinental and Mr. Costigan while he felt aggrieved did not make any kick about it. During the present session the charter has been changed so as to allow this road to take a more southerly route and get away from the Transcontinental. This is a revote of the subsidy for the line in the province of Quebec, leaving the subsidy in New Brunswick as it was voted last session.

Mr. HAGGART. It was originally intended that the road promoted by Mr. Costigan should be built up by the little St. Francis river, but the Transcontinental adopted that route and this vote is for the purpose of subsidizing a new road towards the state of Maine. What my hon. friend (Mr. Morin) objects to is that you make the objective point at the Chaudière Junction and that there are 200 miles along the boundary of the State of Maine that they can make the objective point at the other end of the line. He wants to know definitely what point the line will go to in the state of Maine and why it is to go there.

Mr. J. D. REID. This is simply a charter to be hawked around with the idea of making money for Mr. Costigan. He had a subsidy grant some years ago when he was not able to do anything about it. Mr. Costigan has no intention of building the road at all but simply to see if he can make money out of it by selling the charter. I do not object if it is for the purpose of opening up new territory where the people must have railway communication, but to charter this railway to run to any point they wish in the state of Maine is just simply to give them a chance to speculate. The Minister of Railways is not doing the country any service by granting such a subsidy as this.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Those who know the Hon. Mr. Costigan will not say that he is a man who gets railway charters for the purpose of speculating in them. Mr. Costigan has devoted a great deal of time and energy to the development of the northern part of New Brunswick and for a number of years he worked unselfishly in connection with this road. He succeeded in getting people to commence the construction of it and they have spent a good deal of money. If Mr. Costigan did not succeed in having matters go through as he had reason to believe they would, he would be in this position—so he tells me and I have no doubt at all it is true—that this company would lose a good many thousand dollars which they have put into the construction of the road. All Mr. Costigan wants, so he informs me, and all he would get would be to have the men who have done the work honestly in the building of the road so far as it has been constructed, paid for the work they have done.

Mr. J. D. REID. The minister states there is nothing done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. In New Brunswick they have built some of it. It is all one undertaking, the part in New Brunswick and the part in Quebec. Construction work has been commenced on the New Brunswick portion. For that the subsidy was renewed at the last session. The subsidy for the remainder has lapsed, and Mr. Costigan is seeking to have it renewed for the part that is in Quebec.

Mr. J. D. REID. I understand that the line as laid by the company has been taken by the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That has diverted it a little to the south.

Mr. J. D. REID. This gives another line.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is quite a long distance away.

Mr. J. D. REID. How much is built and in operation in New Brunswick ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is not in operation. Mr. Costigan informed me that several miles have been graded, a good many thousand dollars spent on it ; work has been done by a firm of contractors in Montreal.

Mr. J. D. REID. I have seen cases where they simply do two or three miles of grading and that holds the subsidy.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is several miles.

Mr. J. D. REID. It is a queer method to bring in a subsidy for a line which they cannot locate within 200 miles. It is absurd and ridiculous to ask for a subsidy with such an explanation as the minister has given and I am sure the people of this country do not wish to have money spent in this way.

Mr. BARKER. Is the proposition to grant a subsidy for about 80 miles easterly from Chaudière to Kamouraska ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It has been reduced to 62 miles.

Mr. BARKER. Is the line shown on the map the 62 or the 80 miles ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That map was possibly arranged with the 80 miles. I cannot say positively.

Mr. BARKER. It was stated that 45 miles had already been granted, as I understand the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin) the line does not appear to run anywhere near Lac Pohenegamook. Is it intended to stop 60 miles from that point, and how far is the red line on the map north or south of the Transcontinental Railway ?

Mr. MORIN. The location of this road is clearly wrong. It would be quite right to build a road from Lac Pohenegamook down to Connor's but there is no sense in building a road from Chaudière where you have the Grand Trunk Pacific, the Intercolonial and the Quebec Central. It is proposed to run from Chaudière to the state of Maine but no point is mentioned. I do not wish to object to the road being built in the least but some explanation should be given.

Mr. J. D. REID. I do not think it right to give a subsidy for a line 200 miles along the frontier. Let them have their line surveyed and then ask for this.

Mr. GRAHAM. That argument would have been all right in the committee where this was all threshed out. It was explained that the road when it got to the International boundary intended to make a connection if possible with some other road, but they did not want to name absolutely the point because they could not say where the American road would meet them.

Mr. J. D. REID. That argument was absurd. When we give a charter in the Railway Committee it does not mean that we are granting a subsidy.

Mr. GRAHAM. No.

Mr. J. D. REID. That is your argument. If the minister had told us he was granting a subsidy we would have taken care to know where the line was to run. It will be only three or four months until the next session and when they have located their line they might come to us.

Mr. BARKER. Looking at the map produced, it would appear that the Transcontinental cannot be more than a mile from this road, and it is an absurdity after building the Transcontinental to subsidize a private road from Chaudière to Kamouraska, almost alongside of it.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It seems to me that those of us who are more especially interested in the development that will be brought about by this road if it is built, may be supposed to know what the result of the construction of the road will be. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) knows that for very many years, in fact ever since railway construction began in Canada, the people along the valley of the St. John have been pleading for the construction of a line of railway through that valley. We have extending along the St. John river from away up above Grand Falls right down to the city of St. John, one of the most fertile and best sections of country to be found in the Dominion. Years ago, when the Intercolonial Railway was projected, many thought that that line would follow the valley of the St. John ; but for reasons I need not go into, the line was carried along the north shore of New Brunswick and the people of the St. John valley were left without a railway. Later on came up the question of the Transcontinental, and the people again had their hopes aroused. They thought that road might be built along their fertile valley, but after the surveys were made the road was located back from the river, so that after you leave Grand Falls it does not touch the St. John at any point but goes through the centre of the province. So eager are the people of the valley for the construction of this line that during the last session of the provincial legislature, the members upon both sides united in supporting the government proposal to guarantee the bonds of any railway company, which might become a part of a trunk line system, to the extent of $15,000 per mile. That idea was supported by all the members of the legislature on both sides and received general support among the people. As I understand the proposition of the gentlemen who, with Mr. Costigan, are promoting this charter and asking for this subsidy. is that they will carry their line from the Chaudière Junction near Quebec, cross the international boundary and go through the state of Maine at its northern part, where it is comparatively narrow, instead of going up around the angle of the St. Francis river in the province of New Brunswick. It will cross the northern part of the state of Maine and connect there with a road down the St. John valley and make this road a part of the St. John valley system. I do not know whether that can be carried out ; but I would say that if the line, as these gentlemen are proposing to have it constructed, is constructed to a point on the St. John in the vicinity of Grand Falls, it will give a great impetus to the construction of a line down the St. John valley. If it does not form part of such a through scheme, it will never be built because capitalists will not put their money into a local line. If built as a through scheme, it will be of enormous advantage to a country 290 miles in extent and one of the most fertile portions of Canada and which is to-day without the railway facilities enjoyed by most of the older sections of the Dominion.

Mr. BARKER. I have listened patiently to the hon. minister. He has not said one word relating to the subsidy. He has given us a description of the country down about St. John at the other end of this line, but he might as well have told us how you would run the Transcontinental through British Columbia by describing a section of it in New Brunswick. This 62 miles is to run not from St. John to this point, but from the Chaudière at Quebec easterly.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Towards the St. John river.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BARKER. But only as far as Kamouraska. We are speaking only of 62 miles and not of all the way to St. John river. Your line may be an admirable way to reach the St. John valley, but there is no necessity for the Dominion bonusing 62 miles of road from the Chaudière to the international boundary. Any gentleman who looks at the map will see that this line must run within two or three miles at the most from the Transcontinental, and it is not absurd to say that after building the Transcontinental, which could join with the line down to the St. John that my hon. friend speaks of, we should subsidize another line from the Chaudière running alongside the Transcontinental for 62 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. The difficulty could be got over in this way. Suppose you give a subsidy to a line from the Chaudière Junction to the state of Maine to connect with a road which connects with the St. Francis road running to Grand Falls down the St. Francis river, and then we will know the direction of this road. Instead of going around on the line of the Transcontinental, the parties evidently want to go to the state of Maine and make a short cut over to the line which they are at present constructing on the River St. Francis towards the Dominion.

For a line of railway from Tusket Wedge to a point on the Halifax Southwestern Railway at or near Riverdale station; not exceeding 8 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is a branch of the main line to Sussex village owned by the Halifax and Southwestern Railway Company.

To the Halifax and Southwestern Railway Company, for a line of railway from Lunenburg to Bridgewater, via Upper Lahave; not exceeding 12 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. This is to connect Lunenburg with Bridgewater.

To the Erie, London and Tilsonburg Railway Company, for a line of railway from Port Burwell to London, not exceeding 35 miles.

Mr. BEATTIE. Knowing that district as well as I do, I would like to give the minister a little information. There is a railway already built from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg. Is it proposed to extend this into London ? Do they propose a new line from Port Burwell to London ? Port Burwell is sixteen miles from Port Stanley and there is a road from Port Stanley to London. Should there be a line between Port Burwell and London, these two lines will not be more than eight miles apart. That district is well supplied already with railway facilities by the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canada Southern and the Wabash line. The city of London and the county of Middlesex built a railway at their own expense many years ago, and I think it is hardly fair to grant a bonus to a line which will be an opposition line to the London and Port Stanley Railway. If a company want to build a line to parallel that, they should be compelled to do it at their own expense. It is hardly fair to the city of London and the county of Middlesex, to have that line paralleled by another line bonused by this country. I hope the minister will look into the matter. The line from Port Burwell already built has been running for years into Ingersoll. The company were not able to run it, their cars were a disgrace, and they had to turn it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway to run it for them. To make an extension from Tilsonburg into London will simply parallel the London and Port Stanley Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. What distance from Tilsonburg to London ?

Mr. BEATTIE. Some twenty-five miles. They are not going to build a line from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg when they have one built and one which they could not maintain and had to turn over to the Canadian Pacific Railway who are now running it. I do not want to move, but I call the attention of the minister and would like him to look into this matter before granting a bonus.

Mr. GRAHAM. In raising the objection that this will give competition, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Beattie) does not agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who said that the main object of giving a subsidy was to bring competition.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister is misrepresenting me. I said that the reason assigned in many instances for these subsidies was that they would be the means of building railways that would give competition, but sometimes these subsidized roads transferred their interests, perhaps to the very same railways with which they were supposed to be competitors.

Mr. BEATTIE. If there was any necessity for this road I would not say a word. Competition is well enough, but I do not see why the Dominion should help them to build another railway to compete with one built by the people of the locality with their own money.

Mr. J. D. REID. On what ground is this subsidy granted?

Mr. GRAHAM. The representations were as follows : The charter is from Port Burwell to London, with a branch to Tilsonburg.

Mr. BEATTIE. The line is already built from Port Burwell to Tilsonburg.

Mr. GRAHAM. From Port Burwell to London, and London to Tilsonburg. But the proposed subsidy is from Port Burwell to London.

Mr. BEATTIE. Tilsonburg comes in between.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is not on the line.

Mr. BEATTIE. Then you are going to run three lines eight miles apart.

Mr. GRAHAM. The representation made to me by prominent men not connected with the road at all were that at present facilities are not afforded them to get in their coal supply which comes across the lake at that point. It is represented strongly, and the figures show, that if there was another road from Port Burwell to London with facilities for bringing coal across the lake that part of Western Ontario would save a large amount on the price of coal that must now come around by the bridge.

Mr. BEATTIE. I am sorry that these prominent gentlemen have been deceiving the minister so badly. At Port Stanley we have had a car ferry that brings coal from Conneaut, and it has been running for years, long before they thought of having a car ferry at Port Burwell. The Grand Trunk, the Père Marquette and other railways get their coal supplies in that way. The coal supply for London and district does not come by the bridge. As to building a branch railway from Port Burwell to London, the thing is a farce. Perhaps they might run a branch from Tilsonburg to London, but they are not going to build a railway to Port Burwell, a place with 25 inhabitants and no trade.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. I am surprised to hear the manner in which the hon. member for London (Mr. Beattie) speaks of running a railway from Port Burwell to London by way of Tilsonburg. This railroad is intended to run from Port Burwell through the township of Malahide, through the town of Aylmer and Belmont into London. The charter was held for an electric railroad by a party living in Aylmer. Some years ago he asked for tenders for the construction of the road. I have been over the route. The holder of the charter was not able to finance the scheme. Since I became a member of the House another corporation have come to the House and got a charter for this road and propose to build the railway. Instead of being in opposition to the Port Stanley road, it will bring more trade into London. Port Stanley and Port Burwell are eighteen miles apart on the lake shore. From London to Port Stanley is twenty miles, from Port Stanley to Port Burwell eighteen miles and—

Mr. BEATTIE. Sixteen miles, if you please.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. And completing the triangle from Port Burwell to Aylmer is thirteen miles and from Aylmer to London through Belmont would make up the distance, 35 miles. It cannot be a competing road with the other, but would make a lot of traffic tributary to London, besides giving the people of Port Burwell another outlet. If people wish to put money into a thing of this kind, if they come from the United States or England and put their money in and develop business, surely we should not object to that. It is enterprise such as this that has built London and all the other towns of this country.

Mr. BEATTIE. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but I wish to say that the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. J. T. Schell) does not know what he is talking about. Aylmer is twelve miles from St. Thomas. The existing road, with which this one, I contend, would compete, was built with the money of the city of London and Middlesex county, and the debt is about $2,000,000. These people propose to build a railway in opposition to that, when the road they have built to Tilsonburg could not be run—it was a disgrace to the country, running with a baggage car and an engine. It was handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway who took it in order to get in their coal that way. But coal in cars has been brought across Lake Erie from Conneaut to Port Stanley long before a car ferry at Port Burwell was thought of. If the minister will look into the matter I shall be satisfied. I have no objection to the road being built, but I do not think the Dominion should give it a bonus.

For a line of railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Plaster rock to Riley brook; not exceeding 28 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Does this line to Plaster Rock run cars?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. Once a week, I suppose?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Daily. The Canadian Pacific Railway are operating it and doing it very successfully.

Mr. EMMERSON. Making money.

To the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company, for a line of railway from a point near French creek to the village of Sandwich, not exceeding 41 miles; and for a line of railway from the village of Sandwich to Campbell river, not exceeding 38 miles; not exceeding in all 79 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway ask for this?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, they are giving a subsidy.

For a line of railway from a point at or near Cowley, in Alberta, to a point on Highwood river; not exceeding 50 miles.

Mr. GRAHAM. I move to insert at the beginning of the item: 'To the Southern Central Pacific Railway.'

Mr. D. T. SCHELL.

Mr. HERRON. I wish to say to the minister that I believe there are two charters over the same ground. The charter which is in existence is almost ready to expire, it has been in existence for a number of years, and there has been no work done. Another company has made application, but it has received no charter. It is ready to begin operations just as soon as they can get assistance; perhaps they will without assistance. I think it is fair to say that if the new company is willing to build that road, it should get the same assistance, provided the old company is not going on.

Mr. GRAHAM. This being the company that had the original charter, and the other company not having a charter, we thought the proper thing to do was to give the subsidy to the company having the old charter. If they do not make progress, we will be in a position to do something when it comes up again.

Mr. HERRON. I believe the charter is just about expiring; provided it is, I hope the minister will give full consideration to this new company, because a road is very badly needed in that particular part of the country.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for the following lines of railway:

(a) from Valcartier station to St. Catherine; not exceeding 3·8 miles;

(b) from Valcartier station towards Gosford; not exceeding 5½ miles.

(c) from the end of the 35th mile of the branch to LaTuque, on the River St. Maurice, to LaTuque falls; not exceeding 5 miles;

(d) from LaTuque falls to the mouth of the River Croche; not exceeding 5 miles;

(e) from point on LaTuque branch to the steamboat landing near LaTuque; not exceeding 1·6 miles; not exceeding in all 20·9 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. Is any portion of this road already built?

Mr. GRAHAM. These are all small branches. I am told none of them are built.

Mr. J. T. SCHELL. None of these are built, but the main branch from Lake St. John road to La Tuque is built, some 25 miles, finished this spring. The main line is building these short branches. From the terminus of that line down to La Tuque none of them are built.

For a line of railway from Montreal to a point on the National Transcontinental Railway; not exceeding 200 miles.

Mr. HAGGART. How is it that you give a subsidy for the purpose of connecting the National Transcontinental Railway with the Northern Railway at Montreal when there is no subsidy to the Ontario people, who are building their own road? Why are they not as much entitled to it as the Quebec people?

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a subsidy given to a company road to be built from Port Arthur and Fort William to Sault Ste. Marie, about the same distance as this, and this is given to a company in Montreal. It has been the policy of the government not to give aid to the Ontario government railway.

Mr. KEMP. That is what my hon. friend from Lanark refers to. He refers to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, the Ontario government road running north to North Bay. Is there anything in the subsidies for that road ? I understand that the Ontario government applied for a subsidy for that road.

Mr. GRAHAM. I said it was not the policy of the Dominion government to aid the line of the Ontario government.

Mr. KEMP. Why not?

Mr. GRAHAM. That will open up a large question of policy.

Mr. HAGGART. The Quebec government may do this. This is for a line of railway, not to any particular company. They may make arrangements with the Quebec government to build it. You give it to the Quebec government, and you refuse the application of the Ontario government.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Ontario government have not made any application.

Mr. HAGGART. You cannot give it to the Quebec government under this vote.

Mr. FIELDING. This application was made some years ago by the late Quebec government, and it was not thought to be a wise policy at that time to assist local governments, if they wanted to build railroads, to come to the federal government for subsidies. The conclusion was reached several years ago when the application was made by the former government of Ontario.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I might call my hon. friend's attention to section 5 by which he will see that this subsidy must be given to a company.

Mr. SPROULE. The government are prepared to give substantial subsidies to connect cities in Quebec with the Transcontinental Railway, but when we reach Ontario they are not prepared to give a dollar.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Port Arthur is in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not a city. The city of Toronto should be connected with the Transcontinental Railway in the same way as Montreal and Quebec are to be. Here is a subsidy given to one province for two hundred miles of railway to connect a great city with the Transcontinental Railway, but when you come into the province of Ontario it can get no subsidy. There is a discrimination in favour of one province as against the other.

Mr. MACPHERSON. Look at section 62.

Mr. SPROULE. I am dealing with 49. It is enough at one time. That is the situation and that is something that will appeal to the people of Ontario as being unfair, because an application was made for a subsidy to assist in connecting the southern portion of Ontario and the city of Toronto with the Transcontinental Railway, and as far as we know, it was refused. At any rate, there was no assistance given, but in this case we give assistance towards the construction of two hundred miles of railway in the province of Quebec.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Public Works drew my attention to clause 5. Does that provide that you cannot give a subsidy to a government?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It must be to a company or companies. The Governor in Council could not give a subsidy under this Act to any other than a company.

Mr. GERVAIS. I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) the name of the company that is to get this subsidy for building two hundred miles of railway between Montreal and the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. GRAHAM. The name is not given here. As in a great many votes, the company is not named. My hon. friend will remember that a very large deputation from Montreal, perhaps as large a deputation, with the exception of that on the Georgian Bay canal, as any of those which have waited upon us this year, waited on the government some few weeks ago urging what, to my mind, was a very reasonable request, that there should be some provision made for connecting Montreal with the main line of the Transcontinental Railway. It was taken into consideration. Unless it be the Grand Trunk Pacific branch lines company I do not know what company would undertake this work. We do not name the company, but we will give the bonus to the company that will build this two hundred miles.

Mr. GERVAIS. No individual without the authorization of the central legislative power can build a railway in this country under the present state of legislation. The company must be organized with power given to it by this parliament or a provincial legislature to build a railway and I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to grant that subsidy to the first company which is ready to build the branch line from Montreal to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Montreal has been waiting for four years for the building of such a railroad, that is already too much. In Montreal, we have been prevented from having anything to do with the building of the Transcontinental Railway though Montreal will pay more that any other city for such construction. I am quite ready to support this vote for the building of a branch line between Montreal and the Transcontinental Railway, but I would like to know if this subsidy is to be paid to any individual who is ready to organize a company to build the branch line or if it is to be paid to a company already organized. I would like to know if the Canada Central Railway Company or some other company I heard something about is to get this subsidy. Is it the policy of the government to pay over the subsidy to any individual or company who will first undertake and operate the construction of this branch line?

Mr. GRAHAM. The policy of the government is to give the bonus to the first company that will show us that it is ready and able to build a line connecting Montreal with the Transcontinental Railway.

Mr. GERVAIS. Have conditions been laid down under which the subsidy can be earned?

Mr. GRAHAM. There are the usual conditions. They have to make a contract with the Department of Railways and Canals which is approved by order in council. They will have to show their willingness, and, in our best judgment, their ability and we will make a contract with them to give them the subsidy for the building of that line.

Mr. GERVAIS. Then the government is not already obliged to pay the subsidy except to a company which is ready to build and operate this railway according to law?

Mr. GRAHAM. We are not committed to any person.

Mr. HAGGART. If I remember rightly the Ontario government are building their line of railway under the name of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, not company; they are building it under the commissioners.

Mr. BRISTOL. No, it is a company.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not a company; it is a government owned road.

To the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, for branch lines of railway from the line of the National Transcontinental Railway to Port Arthur and Fort William; not exceeding 220 miles.

Mr. MACPHERSON. This is the province of Ontario.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you an agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to build this without any subsidy?

For a line of railway from Papineauville on the Canadian Pacific Railway towards Nomingue; not exceeding 30 miles.

Mr. MAJOR. This subsidy should read: To the Little Nation River Railway Company.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Major) points out that there is a company organized but that the minister did not get the application when the subsidy was decided on.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has it a charter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it a Dominion or provincial charter?

Mr. LEMIEUX. A provincial charter.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was not the policy of the government to subsidize provincial railways.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That's a new idea.

Mr. EMMERSON. That has been done for the last twenty years.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Of the lines subsidized from No. 27 to No. 72 both included, how many have already been constructed or partially constructed?

Mr. GRAHAM. I cannot tell without going through all these papers again.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. On the second reading of the Bill and before committee, I will expect the hon. gentleman to give definite information on that point. I would like him to lay on the table also the applications from those several railway companies or corporations for the assistance now given.

Mr. GRAHAM. I laid those on the table this morning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. They should be on the table for at least a week or ten days so that they may be examined by any one who desires. To put them on the table half an hour before the subsidies are taken up is not sufficient.

Mr. GRAHAM. The mileage in operation and the mileage under construction will be found on the application forms.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like it stated on the second reading because it is a matter the minister should furnish to the committee without a suggestion by any member.

Mr. GRAHAM. I did suggest it, in every application.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the use of talking of an application which was placed on the table of the House only to-day when every one was busy with the work of the House, what is the use of speaking of that as information?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will look through the applications and secure the information.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is not the proposed line from Quebec to Ottawa, that is the portion from Hawkesbury to Ottawa, almost constructed?

Mr. GRAHAM. A portion of that line is graded, there are no rails on it, no part of it is completed.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Was it commenced under any engagement from the government that it would be subsidized ?

Mr. GRAHAM. None whatever, so far as I know.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to the power of the government to give a subsidy to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission, let me quote from the Act constituting that body. It says :

The said board of commissioners shall be a body corporate under the name of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Commission—

They have all the powers of a railway company, to work the road and everything else. It is provided here that the Governor in Council 'may grant subsidies to such companies as establish to the satisfaction of the Governor General.' This is a body corporate and would come under this definition.

Mr. EMMERSON. Is it not the property of the Crown ?

Mr. HAGGART. It is a body corporate and it does not matter to whom it belongs. You could change the wording to 'body corporate' if you chose.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister might give us at a convenient time a statement showing how much of these subsidies and which of them will go to each of the three large railways in Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM. I shall try to do that. It is not sometimes easy as they are sometimes for a large company although under another name.

To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company (lessees of the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company), towards the construction and completion of a bridge over the Saskatchewan river connecting Strathcona and Edmonton, 15 per cent upon the amount expended thereon; not exceeding $100,000.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Has the minister taken any steps to make this a combination wagon and railway bridge which it readily conceded to be advisable to do with such bridges ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The government has not taken any steps in that direction, but I understand some arrangement has been made between the provincial authorities and the company to provide for traffic on this bridge.

Mr. SPROULE. I see there is provision for that in one of the Quebec bridges and it would seem to be equally good policy in Alberta.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Of course in the Northwest this government has charge of the land and the provinces have not land to sell as in the east to raise money to build bridges. At Fort Saskatchewan the government required the Canadian Northern Northern Railway to have a traffic bridge and it is a perfect boon to the place.

To the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of the following railway bridges:

(a) bridge across the Gentilly river, $15,000.

(b) bridge across the Becancourt river, $30,000.

(c) bridge across the Richelieu river, $30,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What are these bridges supposed to cost ? We are giving lump sums for small bridges and it seems doubtful policy.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The bridges are in the county of Nicolet which I represented at the beginning of this parliament. These are large rivers and this represents about 15 per cent of the cost of the bridges. The railway is the Quebec, Montreal and Southern, but although it is operated under that name I think the company has transferred its interest to the Delaware and Hudson which will run now from the boundary line to Quebec on the south shore, the railway nearest to the St. Lawrence. It has practically built from Montreal to Ste Philomène in the county of Lotbiniere and is going on with the construction from Ste. Philomène to Lévis It is a first-class road doing its work extremely well, and as I said this represents about 15 per cent of the cost.

Mr. HAGGART. That bridge across the Richelieu is an old friend of ours.

Mr. LEMIEUX. My hon. friend is referring to the Yamaska river. This bridge is on the Richelieu.

To the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of the twenty-six railway bridges on its line of railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé, payable upon the completion of the said line of railway between the said points, $250,000.

Mr. LEMIEUX. This is in my constituency. It is a very exceptional case. For many years past the peninsula of Gaspé has been clamouring for the construction of a railway to Gaspé from New Carlisle, the terminus of the Atlantic and Lake Superior. One hundred miles is built between Metapedia and New Carlisle. In 1903 I secured a charter for this railway from New Carlisle to Gaspé Basin, about 102 miles. The new company has built 20 miles which are in operation and 20 miles further will be in operation the 1st November next. It is a very rugged section of country. They were obliged to follow the shore and cross twenty-five rivers from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin. They obtained the ordinary subsidy, but with these twenty-six bridges they were entitled to a special subsidy. This will insure the construction of the line in about twelve months from now. There is a tunnel also of 230 feet which they have to build.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a strange way of subsidizing bridges. We take a whole line of railway, we do not know what the bridges are going to cost, some of them may not be very costly, they may be only small bridges crossing small streams, there may be others larger, but we count up all the bridges on a line of railway 200 miles long and we give the company $250,000. We subsidize in one breath twenty-six bridges without knowing whether they are expensive or inexpensive to build. In other cases when applications are made for subsidies to build bridges, each bridge is considered on its individual merits but not so in this matter. How do we know how many of these bridges come within the principle we have laid down which justifies our subsidizing bridges at all?

Mr. LEMIEUX. There are twenty-six bridges. One was built since the line was started.

Mr. SPROULE. Was that subsidized ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. Not specially, only the ordinary subsidy. If we followed the ordinary principle of allowing 15 per cent on the cost of construction, four bridges alone would take the amount mentioned in the resolution, $250,000—the bridges across the St. John river, the Grand river, the Pabos and Little river. If you take the cost of construction of those four bridges alone, the 15 per cent on that would amount to the $250,000 now granted.

On those four large bridges the Quebec government also promised a subsidy, provided they would be made suitable for vehicles to cross. That condition is attached by the Quebec government to the special subsidy they are giving. This is a section of country where railway construction is badly needed and where the company have shown good reason why the government should help them, because with the ordinary subsidy they have gone to work and built an excellent line some twenty miles long and twenty more will be built by the 1st November next, and by the 1st November the year following the whole line will be in operation.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this line of railway is subsidized.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The ordinary subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. We are establishing a dangerous precedent. Every one of these railway companies will consider itself warranted in coming back to the government and saying: Treat us as you have done the Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway Company. You have subsidized our railway line first, and now you should subsidize our bridges. Give us proportionately the same assistance for the erection of these bridges that you gave the other railway company. The government are establishing a bad precedent which will give trouble in the future.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Let me show my hon. friend what the company is accomplishing which entitles it to a special subsidy. This company was subsidized to build a railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé basin and thence a railway through the interior, from Gaspé basin to Causapscal in the county of Bonaventure. In order to obtain this special subsidy for bridges, it has abandoned the subsidies allowed for that line from Gaspé basin to Causapscal because the government could not grant a subsidy on that interior line plus the $250,000 for bridges. As the settled parts of the country have to be served before the wilderness, the company have abandoned the construction of the line through the interior for the time being, although their charter still holds good.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not touch the point I raised. You first subsidize the railway and then you take all the bridges in a group and subsidize them to the tune of a quarter of a million dollars. This will establish a very bad precedent. Other railway companies with equal propriety, can come and ask that the same thing be done for them.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) that in the whole list of railways that are subsidized especially for bridges, there is no case identical with this. There are twenty-six bridges of which at least four are very large bridges and going to cost more than a million on a line of about a hundred miles. There is not a similar case in the whole railway construction of Canada.

Mr. BARKER. When we grant a round sum per mile for a railway, does not that include the bridges ? If you pay $15,000 a mile, that is for the whole railway, bridges and everything else.

To the Interprovincial Railway Bridge Company of New Brunswick, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge over the Restigouche river from Campbellton to Mission point, $160,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What is that bridge to cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between $650,000 and $750,000. The Deputy Minister of Railways reports something over $650,000.

To the Vancouver, Westminster and Yukon Railway Company, towards the construction and completion of a railway bridge across Burrard inlet, $200,000.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be the cost of this bridge ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the estimate is about a million and a quarter.

On section 3—definition of the expression 'cost.'

Mr. SPROULE. This partially answers the question asked of the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Barker)—if you subsidize the railway does not that include the bridges ? This says :

Unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'cost' means the actual, necessary and reasonable cost, and shall include the amount expended upon any bridge up to and not exceeding $25,000.

So, you first subsidize the railway at $3,200 a mile, or more if the expense of construction calls for it, this subsidy including the bridges, and then you subsidize the bridges again.

Mr. GRAHAM. No doubt, special cases are made by the government to meet special conditions. Some years ago the policy seems to have been adopted of paying 15 per cent on a bridge, and that seems to be about the usual percentage paid on these large bridges. But special cases are made out year after year.

Mr. HAGGART. These other sections are without change ?

Mr. GRAHAM. They are taken word for word from the existing statute.

Mr. LAKE. What is meant by the completion of a subsidized railway ? Does it mean that the railway is absolutely completed and ready for the running of trains ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I believe that sometimes subsidies are given on 10-mile sections. The road must be completed up to a certain standard and examined by the engineer of the department. He gives his certificate that the road is so constructed and we pay on that.

Mr. LAKE. I have been asking with regard to a portion of the Canadian Northern between Erwood and the Pas Mission on which a subsidy of land is given. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) promised to give me the report of the engineer who visited the line. He gave me one this morning, but it is not the one I referred to. This was made in February when the railway was under a foot of snow. I would ask the minister if he cannot bring down the report of the engineer sent to inspect the line last fall.

Mr. GRAHAM. The report I gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lake) is the only one I know of.

Mr. LAKE. Another inspection was made. The engineer told me he had been over the line and gave me a graphic description of it. I think that was in October. No doubt he made a report, and that is what I wanted.

Mr. GRAHAM. I will look into it and see if there is another report. When I came across this one I thought it was the one the hon. gentleman wished to see.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I propose :

That paragraph 4 be amended by adding after subsection (d) the following additional subsection as subsection (e):

Henceforth, no such subsidy shall be paid for any railway to any railway company, unless such company or companies provide for a proper and gratuitous roadway for vehicles as well as for foot-passengers on those bridges, the plans and specifications for such construction to be submitted to the Governor in Council, for approbation.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak at any length. I think the time has come when the government should inaugurate a new railway policy. This evening, we have voted over five hundred thousand dollars in aid to the construction of railway bridges. Why not provide that railway companies shall build those bridges in such a way as to afford a roadway for foot passengers and for vehicles? Have not those companies received large enough subsidies from the public exchequer, and consequently are we not entitled to stipulate in return those advantages in favour of the public? I do not wish to add anything further on the question, but it seems to me that it is sufficient to call the attention of the government to the matter to induce them to make the change asked for. I have no doubt that my proposal will meet with a favourable reception at the hands of the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. There are two difficulties. First, my hon. friend moves an amendment that no subsidy shall be paid for these railway bridges unless they place a gratuitous passage way for vehicles as well as foot passengers. Does not my hon. friend see that four out of five of these bridges will be where there are no roads, and possibly no foot passengers ? You would not want a roadway for vehicles where there is no roadway.

Mr. LEONARD. As soon as the bridge is built the road would be constructed to the bridge. If the company are obliged to build a passage way for vehicles, they can build it cheaper when they are building the bridge in the first place, than if they add the passage way afterwards. It will cost them twice as much to add the passageway as it would to build it with the bridge in the beginning.

Mr. GRAHAM. I am not forgetting that engineering point. What my hon. friend says about cheapness will not always work out. I had the engineers on that problem the other day, and I found that a bridge could be built with a roadway much cheaper than a roadway could be added to a railway bridge. But that difficulty does exist in some places. No doubt a roadway over a bridge would be very convenient and altogether desirable. But I make the statement again, that in at least seventy-five per cent of the railway bridges of Canada, there would be no need for a roadway for foot passengers, because the bridges are away from a road altogether. Then there is the other objection. It is a fair and reasonable objection that the Dominion government cannot well undertake to start in providing roadways. That is purely a municipal or a provincial affair. While I would be delighted to see them on every bridge, still it is a matter with which the province alone ought to deal with the corporation.

Mr. MONK. I think my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard) has made a most important suggestion, and I had hoped that the government would adopt it. We are paying—I am speaking now principally for the province of Quebec—large subsidies for bridges for companies which, in the majority of cases, are well able to build those bridges themselves without any government assistance at all. Speaking specially of grants in the province of Quebec, I doubt very much if the percentage exists mentioned by the Postmaster General. I think the amount we are granting to villages, particularly on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, is a much larger percentage of the cost of these bridges. There is here an opportunity for the government to render a great service to people along the line of these railways. What are the objections? They are futile. The Minister of Railways says there are no roads where most of these bridges are built. The answer of my hon. friend from Laval is that as soon as that condition is performed there will be no road to these bridges. Just as soon as roadways were built on the Victoria bridge in Montreal, when that bridge was changed, a magnificent roadway was built up to it. The other objection of the minister is that we have no jurisdiction over roads in municipalities and over bridges in the provinces. That seems to me to be an objection equally futile, because whether we have jurisdiction or not, we are not assuming to exercise jurisdiction. We are imposing a condition on a grant of money, and we can impose any condition we like. There is no question of jurisdiction. A case has been pointed out to me by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) of a subsidy granted for a bridge over the river Jacques Cartier in the province of Quebec, conditional on the company constructing a bridge for vehicular traffic. In most cases the municipalities are not in a position to build suitable bridges, in most cases the provinces are not in a position financially to come to the assistance of the municipality. These subsidies are extremely generous, and I think the government ought to accept this condition. There is another point. This afternoon, in the space of four hours, we have been granting nearly $20,000,000 of money without giving those grants the consideration they require. It seems to me to be most absurd, to pass these grants with the little consideration we are giving them, it is perfectly ridiculous. I think the time has arrived when we should adopt for our own preservation some rule by which resolutions of this kind must be brought before the House at least one month before prorogation.

Mr. FIELDING. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is important and in a sense it would be valuable, but much more valuable if it were addressed to provincial and municipal authority. It is simply a proposal to unload on the Dominion treasury the obligations of the provincial government and the municipal authorities. There may be exceptional instances in which while constructing a bridge, we might be able at the same time to construct a highway. But if we are to lay down a principle that this government must provide highway bridges of that kind, I certainly think my hon. friend is mistaken in putting such a project before the House. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) says that the municipalities are not usually able. Well, I question whether he is justified in making that statement, I think most municipalities are able. He says that the provincial governments are not able to do this. I must dissent entirely. Our provincial governments are not so poor that they are not able to provide highways for the people of their respective provinces. They have certainly received large additions to their subsidies, and I think they are well able to perform the duties which under the circumstances, are assigned to them.

Mr. MONK. We are not in Quebec.

Mr. FIELDING. Well, while I would not undertake to make any analysis of the financial affairs of the province of Quebec, I understand that they are regarded as being in a satisfactory condition. But I am dealing now with the principle. In the case of a municipal or a provincial work it is proposed to say that this work shall be constructed at the expense of the Dominion government.

Mr. MONK. Why was that condition imposed when a subsidy was given to the Victoria bridge?

Mr. FIELDING. I cannot recall the circumstances. There may be exceptional circumstances in all these matters. But the effect of the motion of my hon. friend is to unload upon the Dominion treasury obligations which really belong to the municipal and provincial authorities. We may have done it in some cases, and it may be open to objection, but that is no justification for laying down the principle that we are going to do it all the time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It does not seem to me that this is unloading anything on the Dominion treasury. It is unloading something upon these companies. It may be, as the Minister of Railways has said, that it would not be practicable in all cases. Certainly it is practicable in a great many other cases, as it has been carried out in the case of the Interprovincial bridge at Ottawa, Victoria bridge at Montreal and many others.

Mr. FIELDING. I think the province contributed, but I am not sure.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It may be so. I am not aware that the province contributed to the cost of the Victoria bridge at Montreal, but I think my hon. friend is quite right in saying that either one or both of the provinces contributed to the cost of the Interprovincial bridge at Ottawa. The Dominion government gave a subsidy to this bridge, but the provincial government gave a subsidy also, and a footway may have been a condition of the subsidy of one or either of the provincial governments. That is not true of the Victoria bridge, and I think it is not true in some other cases. The proposition of my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard) does not in the slightest degree impose any further demand on the Dominion treasury.

Mr. GRAHAM. Does not my hon. friend see that if you make it a provision that they must have a roadway on all these bridges the applicants will ask for more subsidy? If the Dominion gives a subsidy without making any provision for a roadway, and then imposes that condition, the company receiving the subsidy will ask for more. If you give $25,000, and afterwards put in a condition that will make the work cost $10,000 more, they will need $35,000 to enable them to construct the bridge. You will have municipal councils coming here whenever they want a bridge to be built, and you will have provincial governments also asking aid towards the construction of bridges. My hon. friend points out conditions that may arise, but there is nothing to prevent us from aiding the construction of a bridge, but to say that the Dominion government must provide a roadway on every bridge that is constructed is to suggest something that any railway man who is building bridges will tell you is not practicable.

Mr. MONK. These bridges that are going to be built in Quebec—I suppose the conditions are the same everywhere—were intended to be built whether there was a subsidy or not. My hon. friend the Postmaster General knows perfectly well that this railway, which goes from St. Lambert to Lévis, is being built by a well known American company, it is partly built now, it is under process of construction, one of the finest roads on the continent, and they intended building those bridges anyway without any doubt. They are able to do it. We come to their assistance and give them quite considerable subsidies in aid of the bridges over the rivers which the line crosses between St. Lambert and Lévis. It is a perfectly suitable condition to impose that the bridges should be built according to certain plans and to say that they must have our approval. Impose this additional condition while the bridge is being built. It scarcely adds to the cost of the bridge, and will be an immense boon to the whole population. I hope the government will see fit to adopt the amendment of my hon. friend from Laval.

Mr. FIELDING. May I illustrate what I think is the correct principle by a reference to what was done in the case of an important bridge in Prince Edward Island? The government built a bridge in Prince Edward Island as a portion of the Prince Edward Island Railway, known as the Hillsborough bridge. In that case the provincial government wanted a highway, but this government obliged the provincial authorities to pay their fair share towards that highway, and we deduct every year from the subsidy to Prince Edward Island a certain sum of money; I think it is $12,000.

Mr. MONK. How much did it cost?

Mr. FIELDING. A large sum of money.

Mr. MONK. A very large sum of money?

Mr. FIELDING. A very large sum of money. We said to the provincial government: We will build a bridge for railway purposes, because that is the proper function of the Dominion government, but we will not build a bridge for highway purposes. That is your proper function. Prince Edward Island is not as rich as Ontario or Quebec. Prince Edward Island is not too flourishing, but so fair and reasonable was that proposal that the Prince Edward Island government accepted the responsibility, and every year there is a sum deducted from their subsidy to pay the provincial obligation for providing a provincial highway. This proposal is that while we do that with Prince Edward Island we are going to oblige the Dominion government, out of its treasury, to provide highways in some other provinces.

Mr. MONK. The case of the Hillsborough bridge was quite exceptional. It was a matter of negotiation for a long time between the provincial and Dominion governments. It is questionable whether we should have gone into that expense, but, at any rate, the circumstances are altogether exceptional.

Mr. FIELDING. I will venture to say that if we should adopt my hon. friend's principle you would have the Prince Edward Island government here speedily asking for a refund of the money.

Amendment (Mr. Léonard) negatived.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. GRAHAM moved that the resolutions be read a second time and agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before that motion is put, I would like the Minister of Railways and Canals to be prepared to furnish information when we are in Committee of the Whole on the Bill as to how many of these roads would be constructed in any case if these subsidies were not allowed by parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is perfectly obvious that as far as some of them are concerned this condition holds good, because they are now under construction and they have been initiated by companies which are perfectly well able to take care of them. There are others that are being constructed by railway companies, the chief officers of which have announced over and over again that the day for railway subsidies in Canada has passed, and that no further railway subsidies ought to be granted; and, in other cases, they are being carried out as part of a project, such as the Transcontinental Railway, of which they are an absolutely necessary part, and, therefore, they would and must be built without any subsidy from the government. I want my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals to be prepared to state, on the occasion to which I have referred, how many of these railway undertakings are within the category to which I have allued.

Mr. GRAHAM. I must say frankly to my hon. friend that he is asking me a question that no human being could answer. I could not now and never could answer the question how many of these roads would be built anyway, with or without the subsidy. I do not know how many of them will be built with the subsidy. Nobody knows how many will be built without the subsidy. I want to give all the information I can, but this is asking more than any person has any knowledge of.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. All I have to say in reply to my hon. friend is that if no human being can give that information, no human being ought to propose these subsidies.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No 215) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times.

OLD AGE PENSIONS.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 120) to authorize the issue of government annuities for old age.

Mr. FIELDING. The first amendment provides that nothing in the Act shall be construed as preventing corporations or employers of labour from entering into an arrangement for procuring annuities to be paid to members or persons employed by them. That seems to follow the amendment introduced in this House by the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Ralph Smith) which provided that fraternal organizations may enter contracts for providing annuities for their members. I think there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. Would that interfere with the Foresters ?

Mr. FIELDING. It speaks of corporations or employers of labour.

Mr. THOMAS CHISHOLM. They are employers of labour.

Mr. FIELDING. They are fraternal organizations and would be able to enter into such contracts under other provisions of the Bill. There is a clause in the Bill as it left the House which provides that in the event of an annuity being procured under conditions which defrauded a creditor the creditor might take proceedings to cancel the annuity. The Senate have added : 'Provided always that no action shall be brought for the cancellation of an annuity granted under this Act after the lapse of two years from the time at which the payment complained of has been made.' That seems to be a reasonable clause. These are the more important amendments made by the Senate.

Amendments read the second time and concurred in.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 212) to amend the Criminal Code and to repeal section 415 of the Railway Act —Mr. Aylesworth—read a second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

2. The French version of section 10 is amended by substituting 'dix-septième' for 'septième' in the second line, and by substituting 'sept' for 'huit' in the same line.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The criminal law of England as it stood on the 17th of September, 1792, is applicable in Ontario. By some mishap the date appears in the French version as the 7th of September, 1892, and this clause is to correct the mistake.

On section 3,

3. The French version of paragraph (c) of section 259 is amended by inserting after 'haut' in the third line the words 'il a l'intention de porter à une personne des coups ou blessures qu'il sait être de nature à causer la mort,' and by substituting 'erreur' for 'maladresse' in the same line.

This section of the Criminal Code is a very important one, and the French version has omitted the words referred to in the amendment which appear in the English version. The word 'mistake' in the English version has been translated 'maladresse' and I am told the word 'erreur' would better signify the meaning of the English word.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a rather strange anomaly to see us amending the French version because of defective translation or proof reading ?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. It is very important. The French version is absolutely as much law as the English, and if a man is being tried for his life in the province of Quebec it might depend upon the exact meaning of the word which is used in the French version so that if a wrong word is used it might have serious consequences.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The Minister of Justice misapprehends the remark of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule). For the very reason that it is important he pointed out that such mistakes as these in the French version should not occur. It is undoubtedly of the highest importance that the French version should be correct, and for that reason my hon. friend pointed out that greater care should be taken.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would agree with the leader of the opposition if we were discussing the translation of a literary work, but the whole inspiration of our Criminal Code comes from the English law and when you come to translate the English law into French you meet with serious difficulties. I studied the criminal law at Laval under Mr. Justice Delorimier and in many instances he had to use the English text to give the exact meaning of the law. It is a most difficult thing and it is not surprising that here and there in the Criminal Code we should meet some expressions which do not convey the exact meaning of the original English text. We come immediately after this clause upon the word 'robbery' in English. You have the word 'robbery' and the word 'theft.' In French we have only the word 'vol.' There is in each of these English words a nuance, as we say in French, which is very difficult to express; we have to use several words to express the English meaning. It is very difficult to translate the English criminal law into French exactly.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Which makes it all the more apparent that we should have had the French version prepared and passed through parliament at the same time as the English, instead of leaving it to be prepared months afterwards against the remonstrance of gentlemen on both sides of the House. The present difficulty seems to arise largely from the course which was then adopted. Hon. gentlemen protested that the two versions should be concurrent, that they are of equal validity throughout the country and therefore that we should not have one presented and the other handed in at a later stage. However, there is no doubt about the importance of the amendment.

On section 3,

3. The French version of paragraph (c) of section 259 is amended by inserting after 'haut' in the third line the words 'il a l'intention de porter à une personne des coups ou blessures qu'il sait être de nature à causer la mort,' and by substituting 'erreur' for 'maladresse' in the same line.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The word 'vol' in this instance does not convey the meaning of 'robbery' in the English text and I would therefore move that it should read 'vol à main armée.'

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is remarkable that we should have the amendment of the section presented in an entirely defective form according to the view of the Postmaster General, after it has been prepared by the Justice Department.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have discussed it with the Minister of Justice.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It seems strange that not only the original statute but the amendment should be wrong. Are we quite sure we have it now?

Mr. LEMIEUX. 'Vol à main armée,' yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I hope so.

Mr. LENNOX. It strikes me it is all done very carelessly. Already there has been an enormous number of amendments to the revised statutes. These amendments should not have been required and this is but another illustration of the exceedingly careless way in which this work was performed.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. There is nothing extraordinary about what has taken place, if hon. gentlemen will reflect what the circumstances are. We are putting into the French language English terms of art with reference to the criminal law. There are fine shades of meaning in the words which are used in describing offences in the English law. The word in question is 'robbery.' Every lawyer who practises the English law understands the difference between robbery and theft or stealing or simple larceny. That is not so easy a difference to define in the French language. The omission of these words has been by some accident and was called to my attention by Mr. Justice Cross who noticed in trying a case that in this very important section these four words had somehow been omitted. I do not know whose fault it was, it might have occurred through a printer's error or in the preparation of the manuscript, but it being necessary to supply the words which have been dropped the question arises what word are you to use as the French equivalent for robbery. The natural word is the word used, 'vol,' but that means theft, larceny, a trifling stealing. A man may be guilty of murder constructively, so to speak, by killing another while engaged in burglary or robbery, although he did not intend to kill. But if a man is engaged in some little theft, stealing a chicken, for instance, it would not involve such serious consequences. For that reason after discussing the matter with the Postmaster General, I suggested that an amendment should be made.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister says there is nothing extraordinary about this and there is not, having regard to our experience. We have already had numerous amendments to these revised statutes, which must be cut and hacked and slashed now to an extraordinary extent. Putting through the English version without the French is probably one of the causes for this difficulty.

On section 5,

5. Subsection 2 of section 335 is repealed, and the following is substituted therefor:

2. An offer, printed or marked by the manufacturer upon any wrapper, box or receptacle, in which goods are sold, of a premium or reward for the return of such wrapper, box or receptacle, or a recognizable part thereof, to the manufacturer, is not a trading stamp within the meaning of this part.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This clause I think was harmless, but an amendment has been asked by some retail merchants. Under the section which prohibits the use of trading stamps there is a subsection 2 in the existing law, providing that an offer by a manufacturer is not to be a trading stamp if it is simply an offer, printed or marked on the receptacle of the goods, of a premium or reward for the return of such receptacle. The change proposed by this amendment is to introduce the words 'or a recognizable part thereof.' There was no reason why a manufacturer should not offer a reward or premium to any one who would send back a recognizable part of an empty box without having to return the whole box, which might be rather inconvenient on account of its bulk. I have been spoken to, however, by some hon. gentlemen in the House and by representatives of the Retail Merchants' Association who think it would be better not to interfere with the existing law. I do not wish to introduce anything controversial and move that the words 'or recognizable part thereof' be struck out.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 15,

Section 415 of the Railway Act is repealed.

Mr. AYLESWORTH. This is a section which imposes what is called double liability upon workmen employed on a railway in respect of disobedience to the rules of the company. It has been a good deal discussed incidentally at different times during the session, and it seems to be the general feeling that there is no reason for imposing that additional liability on workingmen employed by the railway companies.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE CANADIAN PATRIOTIC FUNDS ASSOCIATION.

Bill (No. 216) respecting the Canadian Patriotic Funds Association read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The Bill is simply for the purpose of enabling the members of a patriotic company living at a distance to vote by letter. The immediate object is to vote a certain sum of money out of the funds to assist Trooper Mulloy to complete his education in Oxford. Trooper Mulloy, as every one knows, lost his sight through a bullet wound received during the war in South Agrica. He returned home and partially completed his education by taking a degree at one of our universities. He wished to continue his education in order to enable him to practice a profession, and wished to go to Oxford. He was offered assistance from private sources which he refused to accept, believing that this patriotic fund might more properly be devoted to the purpose. In order to get a vote from all the members of the association who find it impossible to come to Ottawa, this Bill is being passed. It was introduced in the Senate, was passed and is now before this House.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. I desire to point out in extension of the principle of the patriotic fund that the soldier from Canada who first won the Victoria Cross in South Africa, Private Richardson, who greatly distinguished himself in the war, has been ill for a long time, is unable to support his family as he would wish to do, and is in distress. I would take this opportunity of impressing upon the trustee of this patriotic fund the necessity of looking into the case of Richardson to see if something cannot be done for him. His present address is North Battleford.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. If this Bill becomes law, it will be open to the members of this fund to consider every case on its merits.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Public Works, chargeable to capital—Marine Department—to provide for a gratuity to the mother of the late Jos. Carbonneau, in his lifetime second mate on board the Canadian goverment steamer 'Lady Grey,' who was killed while on duty, $500.

Mr. BENNETT. Is any compensation to be allowed the relatives of Captain Arthur Clark, who was killed by the explosion of a gas buoy at Parry Sound ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I do not remember with certainty, but I think that Captain Clark's heirs have made application for a petition of right. We maintain that the accident was due entirely to the negligence of Captain Clark and that, under the circumstances, we would not be liable.

Mr. BENNETT. He left a widowed mother who had been dependent upon him for support. I understand there is a claim before the department, and I had hoped that the minister would have done something for her.

Mr. BRODEUR. If I remember the circumstances, the accident was due to his own negligence. He left the buoys in the ice instead of putting them in a dry place, and when he went there in the spring to lay them up the accident occurred.

Mr. BENNETT. Still, he was in the employ of the government, and I see that other allowances are made—for instance, there is a compassionate allowance to the heirs of a man who was killed.

Mr. BRODEUR. He was not in the employ of the government but was under contract.

Mr. BENNETT. But the buoys were supplied by the department, and if there was anything defective in them, allowance should be made. Allowance was made for the explosion at Kingston, I believe.

Mr. BRODEUR. The explosion at Parry Sound was not due to a defect in the buoy. Captain Clark left it in the water, and it was as a result of that that the explosion occurred.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister grant a petition of right ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Oh, yes. I will not offer any objection so long as the Minister of Justice is agreeable.

Mr. KEMP. I think with my hon. friend from Simcoe that most accidents occur through the negligence of the men themselves, still I do not think that ought to be set up as a reason why the government should not consider a claim. I am speaking in a general way. I do not think that because an accident happens to a man while he is in the employ of the government or any one else, and it happens in consequence of his own carelessness, that that should be a reason altogether why his family should be deprived of a gratuity.

Mr. BRODEUR. There may be some difference due to the fact that he was not in the employ of the government, but he was performing a contract with the government in placing these buoys. In the fall of the year he went up there to collect these buoys, and instead of putting them in a dry place left them in the water. When he went up there to float them the accident occurred.

Mr. BENNETT. I hope the minister will reconsider the case and do something in the matter.

Mr. SPROULE. It was stated by the hon. gentleman's predecessor that there was something to be known which would account for these explosions, which they did not know. But several of them have occurred within a few years, and no reasonable explanation was given the House why they happened. I take it that this is on a par with the others.

Mr. TAYLOR. These young men may not have known that the buoys were dangerous if left out in a damp place, and that may not have been explained to them. If that was the case here, I think the government should reconsider.

Mr. BRODEUR. I did not like to take the responsibility of paying the money. The claim was a very large one, and I thought it would be better to refer the matter to the courts.

Mr. BENNETT. Make them an offer of some kind and see if they will accept it.

Mr. KEMP. Is it in the courts now ?

Mr. BRODEUR. They were told that we would grant a petition of right, and my impression is that they have made application for a petition of right. If they have, it has been granted.

Mr. KEMP. Perhaps they cannot afford to pay the costs.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not think that sufficient precaution was taken to inform these men, who are not accustomed to these buoys, that they were dangerous to handle. A serious accident nearly happened with a gas buoy in my district and it was only by a miracle that two or three were not killed. A man who is a thoroughly competent engineer nearly lost his arm and his eyesight. I think the minister ought to see that men who handle these gas buoys are cautioned as to their danger.

Mr. BRODEUR. The new gas buoys that we are adopting do not offer any danger at all. In the accident that happened at Kingston, and that which happened to Captain Clark, the buoys were high pressure gas buoys. The gas was made on shore and transferred by a tender to the gas buoys, which were charged with it. It was a dangerous thing. These gas buoys had a pressure of, I think, in some cases, 150 atmospheres. But with the new system of gas buoys, what we call the Willson gas buoys, there is very little danger, because they are worked under an automatic system, that is to say, we simply take the carbide and put it in the buoy and gas is produced automatically. They have only a pressure of five atmospheres. So there is much less danger.

Lighthouse and coast service—further amount required for salaries of light-keepers, $30,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I have not granted any increase of salaries to lightkeepers for a couple of years, and I thought that this amount should be voted.

Further amount required to pay for the charter of steamers keeping the channel clear at Lime Kiln crossing, Detroit river, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Whose vessels are being employed, how many are employed, how much are they paid per day, and how long will they be employed ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I could not say offhand whose vessels are employed. I think one is Captain Hackett's. I do not know how much he is paid. This whole sum will be expended during the coming season.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I think Captain Hackett has not been employed within the last year, his contract was cancelled, and some other gentleman has the contract. I remember asking a question about it in the House.

Mr. BRODEUR. I may be mistaken.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to direct the minister's attention to a complaint that I have received from the town of Southampton in respect to the life saving station. My correspondent complains that the boat used in the life saving service there is in the hands of a sea captain who is away from Southampton nearly all the time. I would like the minister to investigate this matter, and see whether my information is correct.

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. DANIEL. I call the attention of the minister to the fact that in the harbour of St. John the city pays for the life boat there. I think that is the only place in the whole Dominion where the life boat business is not paid for by the Department of Marine and I think that the department ought to take over the boat and pay for the up-keep of it.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think we have a station at St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. Not in St. John that I know of. I know that the city pays for the lifeboat.

Mr. BRODEUR. I will look into the matter.

Amount required to pay pensions of $300 to each of the following parties: Louis Edmond Morin, Laurent Godbout, Jean Baptiste Tremblay, Hubert Raymond, Charles Brown, Pierre Gobeil, Edmond Larochelle, Adelme Pouliot, Elzéar Desrosiers, Napoléon Rioux, L. O. B. Gautron dit Larochelle and Charles Hermie Bernier, $3,600.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister kindly explain this?

Mr. BRODEUR. This item is for the purpose of paying pensions to pilots below Quebec who are retired. Many years ago they got a charter from this parliament granting them certain rights.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this to be made an annual payment?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. $300 for the rest of their lives?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes, but they retire at sixty-five.

Mr. BENNETT. And each one of these men is to get $300 as long as he lives?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Are they in the service yet?

Mr. BRODEUR. No, they have been retired.

Mr. FOWLER. On account of old age?

Mr. BRODEUR. On account of old age or defective eyesight.

Mr. LENNOX. Is there a statute providing for this?

Mr. BRODEUR. There is no statute providing for this. When the pilots below Quebec, who, as I have just explained, had very extensive rights from this parliament were taken over by the department one of the conditions they put in was that they should be paid a pension when they were retired. There was a great deal of complaint on the part of the shipping federation that very old pilots were still being employed and it was against the interests of shipping that these men should be kept on. So, in order to redeem the privileges they had under this old statute we had to make this arrangement with them.

Mr. BRODER. Can you give any idea of the income they had from their service as pilots ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose it would be from $700 to $1,000 a year.

For the purpose of establishing and maintaining a lightship at Point Pelee, Lake Erie, $30,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there a light ship now?

Mr.BRODEUR. The American government are maintaining a lightship at that point now and we think it is advisable that this light should be maintained by the Canadian government.

Mr. DANIEL. Who is going to provide the lightship ?

Mr. BRODEUR. We are going to provide it.

Mr. DANIEL. Will this amount do that?

Mr. BRODEUR. We expect so.

Mr. KEMP. Will the government withdraw their lightship ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes. This matter has been the subject of negotiation with the United States government for a number of years and we have decided to maintain the lightship there.

Amount required for the completion of Clark's harbour, dog fish reduction works (revote) $10,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Has the minister taken into consideration the necessity for establishing a dog fish reduction works on the Bay of Fundy? I do not know that we have had any debate on the dogfish question this year but we had last year and I brought to the attention of the House some facts showing that it is necessary to deal with this matter on the Bay of Fundy as well as at other places where reduction works exist. It is too late to go into the matter now but it is just as important on the Bay of Fundy as it is on any other part of the coast. The numbers of dogfish there are tremendous. Last year I spoke of a man having his trawls out and obtaining a catch of 1,700 dogfish. The remainder of his catch was all eaten with the exception of the heads.

Mr. BRODEUR. What we have done so far has been mostly of an experimental character. We have been making some experiments on the north shore of New Brunswick and on the western coast of Nova Scotia. This one is to be carried on at Cape Sable, not very far from the Bay of Fundy. This matter has already been brought to the attention of the government and if it becomes necessary to establish a reduction works on the Bay of Fundy I would be very glad to consider it favourably.

Fisheries protection service—further amount required for repairs to the cruiser 'Princess,' $20,000.

Mr. DANIEL. How much have these repairs cost altogether ? The 'Princess' is not a large vessel.

Mr. BRODEUR. The amount is required for placing new boilers on board the 'Princess.'

Mr. DANIEL. How much was expended on the 'Princess' before this ?

Mr. BRODEUR. The drafting of this item is not absolutely correct. It should have been 'Dominion steamers ; further amount required.' The amount which is going to be spent on the 'Princess' will be $20,000 for boilers.

Mr. CLEMENTS. When may we expect the final report of the Fishery Commission?

Mr. BRODEUR. It should be down now, because it was sent to the printer some time ago.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the Georgian Bay Fishery Commission at work ?

Mr. BRODEUR. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. When will it finish ?

Mr. BRODEUR. It is making some investigations now on Lake Erie.

Harbours and rivers—transportation facilities—Georgian bay to Montreal—survey for waterway via French and Ottawa rivers, including payments authorized notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, additional amount, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost of this survey ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am inclined to think that this will about cover it.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the vicinity of $600,000.

Lunenburg public building—improvements, $4,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What will be the total cost of the concrete sidewalk and was it let by contract or done by day labour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost will be $1,262.50. The price was $2.50 per square yard.

Mr. BLAIN. I have information that that work was not properly done.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have had no complaints about it.

Mr. BLAIN. Does the minister know that when there is a rainstorm the cellar fills up with water?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no information about that.

Mr. BLAIN. I want the minister to inquire about that and ascertain if my information is correct. Who was the inspector of the cement sidewalk which cost so much money?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I cannot answer tonight.

Parrsborough public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the cost of this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably about $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Does that include the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. As this is the first vote for this building, if the Minister of Public Works is here next session I do not want him to hold that we are bound by this vote as having authorized the government to erect this structure. We have no information and no particulars about it and cannot get them. What I say as to this building applies to all votes of a like character in these estimates for new buildings. Wherever there is a new vote I want it to be distinctly understood that parliament is not bound for the completion or erection of the structure simply because we have allowed the initial vote to pass through in a hurried moment at the last hour of the session.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I will not hold my hon. friend responsible for the amount of the expenditure, but under the authority of parliament I shall feel it my duty to proceed as rapidly as possible with the construction of the building.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will not let the vote through on that understanding.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Parrsborough is a growing town with a population of 3,000 and I intend to secure a suitable building for post office, savings bank, and customs house for about $30,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know nothing about this building but I wish my remarks to apply generally. I do not believe parliament would have approved of any of these votes in the past if it knew that by voting a small sum we were supposed to assent to the work being carried through at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. This building may not be started before parliament meets again, and I do not want the minister to say to parliament that because of these preliminary votes we have authorized him to spend ten or twenty times the amount of the vote. For my part I will not be held responsible.

Wolfville public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,000 or $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BENNETT. Exclusive of site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should think $25,000 would include the site.

Fairville public building, $5,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Would the minister give some information about this vote?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As my hon. friend knows Fairville is a very important and thriving town where there are mills which employ about 2,000 working people.

Mr. DANIEL. I know all that. What will be the cost of the building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably it would run to $15,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Will it be brick or stone?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have no plan made yet.

Mr. FOWLER. I may say for the information of the committee that Fairville is where the Minister of Public Works made that famous speech which he neglected to repeat in the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY. What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. FOWLER. Read it in 'Hansard' tomorrow.

Fredericton military buildings—new cook house and men's dining room in connection with barracks, $4,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Will that amount complete?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so.

Grand Falls public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably $15,000 or $20,000.

Hillsborough public building, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you intend to spend here?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $15,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What about the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The site is to be given free by the Albert Manufacturing Company.

Moncton armoury, $7,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that it ought not to exceed $15,000 or $20,000. If it is used for a drill hall it will cost considerably more, but if it is simply an armoury I should think $20,000 would be sufficient.

Mr. CROCKET. Have the plans been prepared?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No. It may go considerably more than that.

St. John drill hall, $50,000.

Mr. DANIEL. Where is this drill hall to be built and what will it cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is intended to erect a drill hall which will be suitable for a city of the importance of St. John.

Mr. DANIEL. Can you not give us some idea of the size?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am not prepared as yet because the site has not been selected and the description of building would depend to some extent on the site chosen. There are three sites which I have in mind, one is the Shamrock ground in the north end of the city, another is a well situated lot opposite the custom house and the third is the utilization of the barracks square, now owned by the Dominion government. I am not saying anything in favour of either location. Some of those closely connected with the militia have a preference for one site and some for another.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Militia or Public Works Department secure the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Public Works.

Public works—income—Quebec. Arthabaskaville—public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $20,000 or $25,000.

Grand Mere public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably about $25,000.

Joliette armoury, $6,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $15,000.

Knowlton public building, $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $26,000.

Lachute public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $27,500.

Mr. BLAIN. In what county is Knowlton ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In Brome.

Lévis drill hall, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the total cost of this be ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is a very large and important military centre; it will probably run to $75,000.

Magog public building, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $34,630.

Megantic public building, $7,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost of Megantic ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably $20,000.

Montreal, Point St. Charles—new postal station, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not prepared plans but it will run to $75,000, I think.

Plessisville public building, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $36,000, I think ; it is in Megantic.

Roberval public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is supposed about $25,000.

Shawenegan public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $20,000.

Sherbrooke public building—improvements, &c., $1,800.

Mr. BLAIN. I suppose we are to understand from the minister that all these buildings are constructed after public tender ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Are outside architects to be employed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Our policy is to have as much of this done by our own staff as possible, but in order to get as many necessary works as possible started and to have some progress made by the winter we may have to employ some outside help.

Mr. BLAIN. Will practical men be employed as inspectors ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

St. Therése public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will be a modest building costing not more than $15,000.

Three Rivers—new public building to replace buildings destroyed by fire, $50,000.

Mr. BLAIN. How does the hon. gentleman propose to get all the money to pay for these public buildings? I notice the revenue is falling off at the rate of $1,000,000 a month.

Mr. PUGSLEY. My information is that we need not have any fear on that score. But if by any accident the money is not available the work will not go on.

Mr. LENNOX. What is the total for Three Rivers ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $75,000 or $100,000.

Westmount public buildings, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. We propose to spend there $60,000 to $75,000.

Glencoe public building—additional amount, $12,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will cost from $25,000 to $28,000.

Guelph armoury—additional amount, $64,000.

Mr. LENNOX. How much is this going to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is under contract. The cost is increased by providing for a drill hall over the gun shed. I cannot give the figures just now.

Harriston public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will cost about $20,000.

Leamington public building — additional amount, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The total cost will be $25,000.

Listowel public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will probably cost $25,000.

Mount Forest public building, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This will cost about the same as the Harriston building.

Markham public building — additional amount, $8,000.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the total cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $16,000.

Mr. BLAIN. Who prepared the plans?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The department.

Mr. BLAIN. This was a factor in the recent Centre York election. I want to draw attention to the fact that the plans of the building were one of the exhibits in the election. One of the senators from that section took the plans around and showed them to the electors in Markham village as an evidence of what the government was doing for the electors of Centre York. Does the minister propose to have a Liberal supply of plans of all these buildings so that candidates will have an opportunity of pointing out to the electors what is being done?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) would like to see the plans, I will have copies of the blue prints sent to him.

Mr. BLAIN. I think it was a blue print that was used in the Centre York election. I hope the minister will be careful not to allow Senators to have plans to use with the electors.

Mr. LENNOX. Will this $8,000 finish the Markham public building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No; we expect it will cost $16,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. LENNOX. This is an 'additional amount.' How much was voted before?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the main estimates, $4,000.

Mitchell public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope not more than $25,000.

Niagara Falls armoury, $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much for that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably $35,000.

North Bay public buildings—to complete, $2,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will that cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave that in detail on the main estimates. The hon. gentleman will find it in 'Hansard.'

Peterborough armoury—additional amount, $75,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost of the Peterborough armoury?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is $162,136.

Port Arthur armoury, $10,000

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will depend a good deal on the plans we decide upon. The military men of both cities, Port Arthur and Fort William, are joining together to have the armoury in a place that will suit the people of both cities. I do not know exactly what it will cost, but we must give them a handsome building.

Mr. FOWLER. Are you going to put the building on the flat between the two cities?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In the part of Port Arthur nearest to Fort William.

Park Hill public building — additional amount, $7,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $15,000 or $20,000. We are getting the site free from the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BERGERON. What is there for this in the main estimates?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Four thousand dollars.

Seaforth public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will run about $20,000 or $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that in all these estimates of cost the hon. minister does not include fittings and heating?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not as a rule. I like to leave myself a little margin.

Sarnia armoury, $6,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between $30,000 and $50,000.

Sudbury public building, $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $25,000 or $30,000. Sudbury is a very important place.

Simcoe public building—additional amount, $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost for Simcoe?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $40,000.

Tilsonburg public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably not more than $25,000. It is a nice town and requires a nice building.

Uxbridge public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is that to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It ought not to cost over $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What kind of a town is that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. A nice town.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister will not think so after the election.

Waterloo public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the cost of that?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Waterloo is an important town. The cost of the building will probably run about $30,000.

Walkerville public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the cost of that building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Walkerville is an important town. It will be about $25,000 or $30,000. There is a large revenue both from Waterloo and from Walkerville.

Mr. LENNOX. I may be wrong, but it seems to me that the minister's estimate in the majority of these cases is a mere guess, that he has not proceeded in a businesslike way to ascertain the cost before he puts the amount in the estimates. That is the impression his answers give me—'It is a a nice town, the building will cost so and so.' 'It is an important town,' and so on. Are these mere guesses, or have estimates been made?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Does not the hon. member see that the expense one would be justified in going to depends a good deal upon the size of the town, the business, the accommodation required. For instance, Walkerville; much depends upon whether we combine the inland revenue, the customhouse and post office in one building. With respect to all these items, I have gone over them carefully, but I cannot state within $500 or $1,000 what they are going to cost. The plans have not been prepared, and I have not asked for tenders.

Mr. LENNOX. We do not wish to confine him within $500, but we do think that before we are asked to vote money the minister should have considered the question with his officials, and be able to say about how much money he is going to spend. If he says $25,000, and he wants us to understand that he means it as an estimate of $25,000, not as a mere haphazard guess, that is all right.

Mr. BLAIN. This closes the items for the province of Ontario with respect to public buildings. I want to renew my request that, when the minister advertises for tenders he will not confine the advertisements to newspapers supporting his own party. Are we to understand that when he advertises in newspapers asking for tenders, he will confine the advertisements to newspapers supporting his own party?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I can say this to my hon. friend, that when I come to consider the question I will give his suggestion all the weight which is due to a gentleman who manifests a disposition so non-partisan as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAIN. I am delighted with the promise. But when he comes to a town where the newspaper is Conservative, having treble the circulation of the Reform newspaper, will he be so partisan as to put the advertisement in the Reform newspaper alone?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should not be surprised.

Mr. BLAIN. I should not be surprised either. There is a small post office at St. Mary's to which I referred the other night, costing $30,000, and the minister spent $600 advertising in thirty-three newspapers in that section, calling for tenders, and I think that no one dollar was given to a Conservative newspaper, although the leading newspapers in that section were Conservative.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I regret that the minister has passed over the town of Tilbury, where I requested a public building for a post office and custom house combined. I certainly understood him to say that he would do something for Tilbury, but I regret to find that he has not put a vote in the estimates for that building.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The hon. gentleman is mistaken if he understood that I promised that a public building for Tilbury would be covered in the estimates this year. What I said was that I was impressed with his request. We have a pretty large amount for Ontario, $776,300. I had to leave out a number of public buildings, very much to my regret.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Some time ago I drew the minister's attention to the necessity of public buildings for some important towns in my riding, and the minister promised to take them into serious consideration and give fair-play in the matter. I find in the supplementaries that he has made large grants for public buildings in little towns one-half or one-quarter the size of the towns in my riding that are without public buildings. He does not seem to have any system in the allotment of grants for public works, but is merely guided by partisanship. I enter my protest against this method of doing public business.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was with a good deal of regret that I had to leave out some of the towns in the hon. gentleman's constituency. But he will see that I am giving a good deal for harbour and river improvements in that constituency, for instance, the dock at Gravenhurst.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. Does he think that he is going to put up a wharf in the town of Gravenhurst with a grant of $4,000 ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That will make a good start.

Mr. WM. WRIGHT. How much do you intend to spend there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. All that is necessary, perhaps $8,000 or $10,000.

Public Works—Manitoba Elmwood public building, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the population?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About 15,000.

Mr. A. A. McLEAN. According to my information the minister is not correct. A few minutes ago when the population of Westmount was in question, he stated that it was between 50,000 and 75,000. I know Westmount as well as I know Ottawa, and I know that the minister has misrepresented the population. According to the census of 1901 it had a population of 8,856, and to-day it is not more than 12,000.

Mr. BRODEUR. I think if there is any place that is deserving of public buildings it is Westmount. Westmount is one of the best administered cities in Canada, and the population is increasing rapidly.

Mr. FOWLER. How much ?

Mr. BRODEUR. I suppose about 20,000.

Emerson public building—additional amount, $10,000.

An hon. MEMBER. How much will this building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $30,000 or $40,000.

Neepawa public building—additional revote, $1,500, $10,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. BENNETT. What will that building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is under contract. The site cost $3,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What should the building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $28,000.

Portage la Prairie public building, $8,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably about $40,000.

Mr. FOWLER. From whom did you get the land ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not secured the land yet.

Souris public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I should think not more than $20,000.

Winnipeg military buildings—quarters for married non-commissioned officers and men, guard room, &c., Fort Osborne barracks—additional amount, $33,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What will these quarters cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think the probable cost will be $88,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How many will the building accommodate ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I gave that in the main estimates. I have not the memo. here to-night.

Saskatchewan and Alberta—Edmonton public building—additional amount to complete, $78,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the public building under construction.

Mr. BERGERON. How much will it cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $285,795.67.

Estevan public building—additional amount, $11,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably about $20,000.

Lethbridge armoury, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the armoury cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not think we will have to expend more than $25,000 there.

Moose Jaw public building—enlargement of, $25,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to purchase land and it will leave a small amount to begin the building.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is an addition to the public building there and will cost $20,000 or $25,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that the architect's estimate or the minister's guess ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is about the kind of building I intend to have erected.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the site cost at Moose Jaw ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Between $20,000 and $25,000.

Mr. BENNETT. And the building $28,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is an addition to the building ; I do not know exactly what it will cost.

Mr. FOWLER. How large is this site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not a statement as to that.

Mr. BERGERON. Has it been bought ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have an option upon it.

Moose Jaw armoury, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will it cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $25.000.

Maple Creek public building—additional amount, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is under contract and will cost about $32,000.

Prince Albert public building—vault, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What will be the total cost of that vault ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $5,000.

Prince Albert—Saskatchewan penitentiary—additional land, inclusive of buildings, $40,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The penitentiary has not been erected yet. We are buying the property.

Mr. FOWLER. Who are you buying land from ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Quite a number of different people. When we had the main estimates up I gave a statement as to the land and everybody said that we were getting the land very cheaply.

Saskatoon public building—additional (revoe, $5,000) $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $90,000.

Mr. BERGERON. How much did the site cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $9,000.

Strathcona drill hall and armoury, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We hope to get it built for about $25,000.

Strathcona public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will the public building cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $20 000.

Strathcona immigration building—improvements, $2,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should you have an immigration building there and one in Edmonton too ? You can go across the river in five minutes.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, they are about five miles apart the way the road goes.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not know why there should be one in Strathcona and one in Edmonton.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is the desire of the Department of the Interior.

Wetaskiwin public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cast ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Wetaskiwin is a growing town—about $25,000.

British Columbia—Cranbrook public building—additional amount, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have no memo. as to that.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you bought the site yet ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What did you pay for it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $9,000.

Chilliwack public building, $5,000.
Duncan public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will these cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. They will not exceed $20,000.

Grand Forks public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $25,000.

Greenwood public building, $5,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About the same.

Ladysmith public building — additional amount, $20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much will this cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,552.

Mr. FOWLER. What did you pay for the site ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $1,500.

Revelstoke public building, $10,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What is this to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I am afraid it will run up to about $40,000.

Vancouver examining warehouse, $80,000.

Mr. BERGERON. Is that a new building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for a new examining warehouse.

Mr. BERGERON. Is it to be in the new post office building or is it a separate building?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to be a separate building. This vote is to buy a site which will cost about $75,000. It is a splendid site, well adapted to the purpose.

Mr. LENNOX. How much is the building to cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be an expensive building. Vancouver is a rapidly growing city.

Mr. LENNOX. I am not complaining about the amount; I only want to know what it is?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not prepared the plans. I should suppose an examining warehouse suitable for Vancouver, of brick and stone, and fireproof, would cost from $300,000 to $400,000.

Vernon public building, $12,500.

Mr. BENNETT. What will this cost?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Total probable cost $37,500.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister considered the advisability of putting over each one of these buildings a stone inscribed: 'Pugsley's Princely Present'?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have not thought of that yet.

Dawson post office building—vault, Dominion lands registry, $2,500.

Mr. BERGERON. I understand the population of Dawson is decreasing.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I believe it is going to be a permanent settlement.

Experimental farms, $15,000.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). Will an experimental farm be established in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. PUGSLEY. That matter rests with the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. A. MARTIN. For two or three sessions there has been dangled before the people of Prince Edward Island in the estimates a vote for an experimental station. What progress has been made?

Mr. FOWLER.

Mr. FISHER. Good farming land is so expensive in Prince Edward Island that we have not yet been able to obtain a satisfactory site.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). Is land more expensive in Prince Edward Island than in Moncton?

Mr. FISHER. Yes, a great deal more.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). It speaks well for my province that land is so expensive there that the government cannot establish an experimental station. Every acre of land in my province is valuable. However that is a poor excuse and I would like to know what investigation has been made and what effort has been made to acquire a site? They have experimental stations in almost every province except Prince Edward Island and I want to know why one is not established in Prince Edward Island. It is a good advertisement for my province to say that land is very valuable there and I would like to have that advertised all over Canada. But if the minister tries he can get good land at a reasonable price.

Mr. FISHER. Dr. Saunders has made two visits to the island and examined a number of farms which seemed to be suitable, but the prices were so high that I could not see my way to buy them.

Ottawa public buildings, heating, &c., $8,000.

Mr. BERGERON. The ventilation of this building is very bad. I understand that a large amount, about $100,000 has been spent on an improved system of ventilation by which the air is brought from above, but as the windows are opened the two currents of air meet and the fresh air does not reach us on the floor of the House. Surely something should be done to improve the ventilation. There are two hundred men in this chamber, probably the best in Canada, their health is very precious, and the ventilation is intolerable. I understand that a Quebec inventor offered to provide good ventilation for a certain amount and if it was not satisfactory to restore the building to its original condition, but that as he would not disclose his method his offer was not accepted.

Mr. PUGSLEY. The matter is very important. When it was brought up before I directed the chief architect to look into it carefully and I have now asked the deputy minister to make a note of it. Of course my hon. friend will understand that it would not do for me to go to a large expense unless the chief architect recommends it would improve matters.

Mr. BERGERON. We have spent about $100,000 and it is no better than it was twenty years ago.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think it is very good, take to-night, it is very good.

Mr. BERGERON. You could wear an overcoat to-night.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $448,610.

Mr. BENNETT. Will most of these small works be by day labour ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Where the amount is over $5,000 it will be by contract and sometimes where it is less than that amount. I cannot give the particulars in some cases as I could not proceed with the works until votes were obtained.

Mr. BLAIN. Is there any dredge at Lunenburg?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, the 'King Edward' is working there.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any complaint of the dredge interfering with private property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any complaint that in dredging out the harbour, the clay, stone and sand were thrown on private property?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I have heard of no complaint.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister inquire into this?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy tells me there was some complaint from a firm of the name of Smith.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. There is no reason for any complaint by W. C. Smith & Company. The dredge had made a cut past one of their wharfs and naturally some earth was thrown in towards the wharf but that can be removed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This dredging will be for the benefit of the wharf. They should be content to wait for the second cut when the clay will be taken away.

Mr. BLAIN. If the earth is thrown on private property, the minister promises it will be removed.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This work is done by contract and the engineer will allow nothing to be done to injure private property.

Prince Edward Island—Souris, Knight's point—strengthening breakwater, &c., additional amount, $5,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is for improving the breakwater—rip-rapping work.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister know anything about an application for water rights in the Souris harbour?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not. It would be made to the Marine Department and might come to my department later. My deputy tells me there has been an application.

Mr. FOWLER. On behalf of the hon. member for that county (Mr. Hughes)?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On behalf of the company, of which I understand he is a member.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the result of that application?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is in the Marine Department for consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. Who has the final say ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. In this case the Marine Department.

Mr. FOWLER. What decision did the minister himself come to? Did he recommend it?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My deputy says it was reported favourably by the resident engineer, but it has not yet come before me for actual consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand an application was made by the firm, of which the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Hughes) is a member, for water rights. That application was favourably recommended by the resident engineer. It came then before the Department of Public Works, and that department favourably recommended it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, when the engineer of my department reports favourably upon it, it goes to the Marine Department. If it is recommended by the Marine Department, it comes back to me for my signature. All my department has to do is to look into the matter from the standpoint of navigation.

Mr. FOWLER. Your department, I suppose, did look into this thing from the standpoint of navigation. What was the report?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It was favourable.

Mr. FOWLER. Now it is before the Department of Marine and Fisheries for final adjudication.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the minister know what became of the application ? Has it been considered or not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the minister aware that in this harbour of Souris there has been built by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. J. J. Hughes) what is called a 'block' a sort of wharf which he had connected with the railway government and on which he has erected a warehouse ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. FOWLER. And that might or might not be an obstruction to navigation?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is no wharf there to impede navigation.

Mr. FOWLER. This wharf being built just where these gentlemen applied for the water rights, it is just possible that it might be an obstruction to navigation. Was not authority asked from the Department of Public Works by the member for the erection of a wharf ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. My chief engineer says an application was made.

Mr. FOWLER. What became of it—was it favourably recommended?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Favourably recommended.

Mr. FOWLER. And the result was that the member was allowed to erect his wharf and build his warehouse and attach it to the government wharf.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I understand it could not interfere with navigation.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, of course. The department is doing some dredging there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have been.

Mr. FOWLER. Up towards the wharf of the member? The dredge is working there now, is it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. At Souris 'The Montague.'

Mr. FOWLER. Has it reached the wharf of the member?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The railway wharf.

Mr. FOWLER. To which this other is attached.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I understand that it is inshore.

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, but will the minister say that the dredge is not working towards the shore ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. Will he say that it is not working towards the member's wharf?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I could not say.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a boat house there, is there not?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I do not know.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it built on the property of the member ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Not knowing whether there is a boathouse there or not, I could not say.

Mr. FOWLER. Very well.

Summerside harbour breakwater—additional revote, $19,000, $25,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much are you going to spend there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $133,000, that is the contract.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

New Brunswick—Beaver harbour wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. This is new?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it under contract?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be. Plans are not prepared.

Campbellton deep water wharf—extension repairs, &c., additional amount, $10,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Will that complete the work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think so. It is under contract.

Dorchester wharf—addition to, additional amount, $7,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Building an addition to the wharf, making it suitable for large steamers. Quite a large lumber business is done there.

Harvey bank wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is to be built there?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are two sites offered, one where the wharf will cost $12,000 and one where it can be built for $6,600. I think the one at $6,600 will be sufficient.

Mr. FOWLER. You have not yet purchased the site?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Lorneville breakwater wharf, $8,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that under contract ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It will be.

Leonardsville, Deer island—reconstruction and extension of wharf, $4,500.

Mr. FOWLER. What is to be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $4,500.

Madawaska river—extension of dyke on east side of river at Edmundston and repairs to a portion of dyke damaged by fire in September, 1907—additional amount, $3,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Will this complete the work ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. What will be the total ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. About $13,000.

Miscou—extension of wharf, $4,000.

Mr. FOWLER. That is in Gloucester too?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Will this $4,000 cover the cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The chief engineer thinks so.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the need of that extension ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. To get a greater depth of water to accommodate larger vessels. The tendency is for larger vessels to use this wharf.

Mr. TURGEON. Large steamers come to this point from Halifax, and this is to enable them to reach the wharf.

New Mills wharf, $5,000.

Mr. CROCKET. Is that quite new ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. CROCKET. Will this be the total cost ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No.

Mr. CROCKET. What is the estimate?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Probably $15,000. The contract is not let yet.

St. John river and tributaries—construction of wharfs in tidal waters, $15,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I propose out of this to commence the construction of several wharfs which are urgently required. Among others, one at Oromocto, a high water wharf, costing about $6,000 ; one at Burton, estimated at $3,000 ; one at Sheffield, estimated at $1,500 ; one at Maugerville. One is required at Barker's, one at Scotch Town, one at Newcastle, one at Lower Gage Town, one or two on the Kennebecasis, including Rothesay. Then there are one or two urgently required in the parish of Westfield. My idea was that by the time the engineer gets the plans and specifications ready and tenders are called for, probably the amount I am asking for will enable me to begin the construction of these various wharfs the present year.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to put in a word for a high water wharf at Brown's Flats, which is very much required.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is under consideration. In addition to the $15,000, I have an amount in the main estimates to pay one-half the cost of construction of certain other works, with the idea that the provincial government will pay one-half.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice that the minister has put in a great deal of this money for works in the upper part of the St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There are a good many wharfs already built in the lower part. They are kept in pretty good repair by the provincial government.

Mr. FOWLER. That high water wharf at Brown's Flats is more urgently required than any you have mentioned.

St. John river—to make survey between Fredericton and Woodstock with a view of improving navigation, $5,000.

Mr. CROCKET. What does the minister propose to do with reference to this survey?

Mr. PUGSLEY. When the estimate is passed I shall ask the chief engineer to organize an engineering party to engage at once in the work of making a survey.

Mr. CROCKET. Is it proposed to spend $5,000 for the purpose of surveying the river channel between Fredericton and Woodstock in order to ascertain where dredging is required?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is proposed to expend that if it is necessary.

Mr. CROCKET. I want to say that I regard this appropriation as a most ridiculous one. It is absolutely unnecessary for the purpose. There are six or seven places on the St. John river between Fredericton and Woodstock where dredging is necessary. These points are just as well known to men who are familiar with the river as the villages and post offices along the river. What the people of Fredericton and York county who are interested in navigation want is not $5,000 frittered away in an unnecessary and useless survey of this kind, but they want the channel cleared and dredged. They want some work done this season. If the minister, instead of asking for $5,000, had asked for double that amount and sent a dredge up to do the work, he would have acted more in accordance with the requirements of the situation. This matter had been standing for two or three years, neglected by this government, so that the result was that the people of the St. John valley have now lost the only means of communication they had between Woodstock and Fredericton. To propose now a survey of the river between these points and organize a surveying party for the purpose is the height of absurdity. Last year I called the attention of the acting Minister of Public Works to this matter. I had ascertained myself, from well known river men, at what points dredging was necessary, and I sent a memorandum to the Department of Public Works. If the minister will write to the resident engineer of St. John, I will venture to say that he will find out by means of a letter or two just where dredging is necessary, and if he had the interests of the people of the River St. John at heart he would consider it his duty to start that work without delay instead of wasting money in such a survey as he proposes. I will give the minister a pointer, that if he wants to get any votes at all for his candidate along the St. John river in the coming election, he had better not start any more surveys in that district. The people of the St. John river have had enough of election surveys. They had a survey prior to the last election which cost thousands and thousands of dollars, which was absolutely a fake survey conducted for no other purpose than deceiving the people on the eve of the election. I could quote the words of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), that this was a survey which could not be depended upon. He denounced it in the Liberal convention in St. John as a survey which was no survey at all, of which there was not even profiles. If the minister wishes his friend Mr. Whitehead to get any votes at all along the St. John river, he had better not try the survey business on the people there again.

Mr. PUGSLEY. If I thought I knew as much about this matter as the hon. gentleman thinks he knows, but about which he does not know anything perhaps, I would be prepared to express my opinion on the question of engineering as to what is necessary to improve navigation on the St. John river. The problem is not such an easy one as the hon. gentleman seems to think. It is a problem which requires considerable engineering skill and I would not have thought that I would have been justified in asking for an appropriation from this parliament to engage upon the work of improving the navigation of the River St. John between Fredericton and Woodstock before first having had a proper survey made to determine the cost of the work and to find out what the result would be. The hon. gentleman says you have just to go and do some dredging. There is an engineer's report in my department which says that there is one place alone at Bear island where it will be necessary to construct a wing dam which will probably cost from $20,000 to $25,000 and there are probably other places along the St. John river where the same thing would be necessary.

Mr. CROCKET. How long has that report been on file in the department in regard to Bear island ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. For some little time; I do not know how long it has been there. It is a report which has been made by a competent engineer.

Mr. CROCKET. By Mr. Shewen ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I think by Mr. Shewen, who is a very competent engineer indeed.

Mr. CROCKET. And you want a survey to verify the report ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I want a survey of the whole river between Fredericton and Woodstock for the purpose of ascertaining what the work is going to cost and whether, when the work has been done it will result in the improvement of the navigation of the river. I am not going to be rushed into an expenditure even in my own province until I am satisfied by the opinion of engineers that the expenditure will be profitable and will result in the improvement of navigation.

Mr. CROCKET. How long does the minister expect this survey to continue ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. As long as is necessary.

Mr. CROCKET. Will it be completed during the present season of navigation ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Just as quickly as is reasonably possible.

Mr. CROCKET. Does the minister expect it will be completed during the present season ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. I hope it will.

Mr. CARVELL. It is a great satisfaction to know as much as the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) does but, unfortunately, there are a few people in Canada who are not in that happy condition. This survey is the result of a joint meeting of a number of people in his own constituency, in Carleton and the board of trade of Woodstock, who are interested in the question of having steamer navigation on the River St. John. The meeting was held in Woodstock in May. I received a resolution passed at that meeting and I presume my hon. friend did the same.

Mr. CROCKET. I brought this matter up two years ago. I pointed out to the hon. member for Carleton himself that Woodstock was as much interested in this as the people of York, and asked him to support me in my demand, and not till then was the hon. gentleman heard from in the matter.

Mr. CARVELL. I admit that. I am only pointing out to my hon. friend who makes so light of the fact of a survey being undertaken why I am asking for it and I admit that I have asked the minister to make this survey. It is because a number of people interested in it passed a resolution at a formal meeting attended by a hundred people in Woodstock asking that this survey be made. These gentlemen intend to put money into a steamer if something is done to make the project feasible, they do not know all about it and they have asked for this survey. I transmitted this memorial to the Minister of Public Works and I asked that he put an amount in the supplementary estimates in order that this survey might be made. This survey will be made. I am not perhaps as optimistic as to the results of dredging this river as the hon. member for York is, but I hope that they will be such as will justify the expenditure of some money and that the work will result in the improvement of navigation.

Mr. CROCKET. With regard to what my hon. friend from Carleton has said, the answer, I think, will be found in a speech which he made in this House the other night in which he said that there were six or seven points between Fredericton and Woodstock where dredging was required. That is the same statement that was forwarded to the department by myself last year. He said that with the exception of these points the channel would be clear and that dredging would be required only at these places. He asked that the dredging be done this season, and suggested that if that could not be done a survey might be made. That did not look as if at that time he felt very strongly that any survey was necessary.

Tracadie—works for protection of channel and lighthouse, $2,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that not in Gloucester county ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. What do you want done there ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is for the protection of the channel and lighthouse.

Mr. TURGEON. At Tracadie there is an exportation of lumber to the amount of from 16,000,000 to 18,000,000 feet every year. The Snowball Company themselves cut about 8,000,000 feet.

Mr. FOWLER. This is for the Snowballs?

Mr. TURGEON. The Tracadie Lumber Company do a large business and the Arsenaults and Fergusons ship from there and many others also.

Mr. FOWLER. What will be the cost and what will be the result of this work?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The cost is estimated at $2,500.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was part owner in a shooting lodge near the lighthouse and I know the locality very well. The lighthouse has been changed three times in that locality by the effect of storms. The waters of the straits of Northumberland reach the Tracadie Lagoon by means of a gully and every northeast storm changes the channel and washes away the beach between the lagoon and the straits so that they have to put up protection works.

Three Rivers—deep water coal wharf, $20,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The harbour commissioners have urged us to build a wharf for the increasing business. I hesitated somewhat about it though I was impressed with the necessity for it and when the fire occurred I thought it would be better to build it this year.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it for a private coal dealer?

Mr. PUGSLEY. No, public business.

Goderich harbour — breakwater—additional amount, $228,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What did that breakwater cost altogether?

Mr. PUGSLEY. $94,000.

Goderich harbour—to pay claims of Smeeth & McGillicuddy in connection with construction of wharf, $4,205.93.

Mr. FOWLER. Was that settled by arbitration?

Mr. PUGSLEY. The work was done under the direction of Mr. Gray who is now deceased. Mr. Gray's assistant while recognizing that the work was done in the public interest did not feel he could certify because there was no wrtten order. From the notes of the late Mr. Gray it appears that the work was done in the public interest and while there was no written order it ought to be paid to the contractors. It is on his recommendation as appearing in his notes that this amount is asked for.

Juniper island wharf, $1,500.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this for?

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is a very great deal of traffic upon these waters and Juniper island is a distributing point. A deputation waited on me urging this work and I am informed there is a very large commercial business done there.

Mr. FOWLER. You have as much right to put a wharf there as you have to put a wharf on any little island in a small lake.

Lakefield—reconstruction of wharf, &c., $4,050.

Mr. BENNETT. Was that a government wharf before ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Little Current—improvement of northern channel in Georgian bay, $50,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is under contract, it is improving the channel.

Magnetawan river—improvement of navigation above Kearny, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. There is quite a considerable stretch of navigation here.

Michipicoten, Lake Superior—wharf on Michipicoten river, $3,000.

Mr. BENNETT. On whose property will this be erected ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On government property, we have not acquired the site yet.

Montreal river—wharf on Lake Temiskaming, $3,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is to pay land damages from floods which will be caused by the construction of a dam at Latchford to improve navigation.

Tiffin harbour—improvements, $50,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How much will be spent altogether at Tiffin ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We think $50,000 will be all we can do this year.

Mr. BENNETT. There is $75,000 in the main estimates, so there will be $125,000.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, this year.

Tobermory harbour—glance booms, $3,600.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This a harbour of refuge, and this is to prevent the boats running on the rocks as they come in.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the work at Matchadash to be done out of the general vote of $300,000 for dredging in Ontario and Quebec ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the minister propose to dredge also in the Coldwater river ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAIN. Has there been any investigation of the Port Credit harbour in the last few weeks.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes, I gave instructions to have an investigation made.

Mr. BLAIN. I want to impress the necessity of having dredging done there this summer if possible.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had that in mind about the dredging. The great trouble is that the government of Ontario 50 years ago created a company as was apparently the practice at that time and gave over the foreshore, the harbour and everything. The company owning the wharf has allowed it to fall into decay.

Lesser Slave river—to complete urgent provisional improvements, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What are you doing here ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Improving the navigation ; there is a steamer running and a considerable amount of traffic.

Spillumcheen river—repairs to bank protection works at Enderby, $2,500.

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is the ordinary bank protection work, protecting the river channel.

Dredging—Quebec and Ontario, $300,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How will this be divided as between Quebec and Ontario ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. On the close of the session I intend to take the matter up with the chief engineer and the deputy, apportioning it to the different works according to our best judgment.

Thompson river improvements, $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. What is that ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. This is on the North Thompson river.

Mr. FOWLER. There are no boats there except a small boat that may go up two or three times a year with supplies for the lumber company. This is simply for the benefit of an American lumber company having a mill at Kamloops.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to improve navigation.

Mr. FOWLER. It is to help them in driving logs. It is nothing but a private enterprise and has nothing to do with the public at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is difficult in a new country always to draw the line.

Mr. FOWLER. I know all about the North Thompson river, and I know that the $10,000 is simply for the benefit of that private enterprise.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the minister getting new dredge plants?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not matured our plans yet. We are thinking that instead of buying one or more dredges, we may build two or three. We are taking the vote with the view of getting dredging plant either the one way or the other. We want additional dredges in the lower provinces and in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT. Will tenders be called for the construction?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a shipbuilding plant at Collingwood. They should be given a chance to build the dredges.

Mr. FOWLER. What is this item of $3,000 for clearing waterway of obstructions of Upper Lilloet river?

Mr. PUGSLEY. It is to be applied in removing from the river at its outlet the remains of an old dam, one or two piers, gravel and some boulders, with the view of facilitating the discharge from the lake, so as to mitigate the overflow of the adjoining lands and improve navigation.

Mr. BERGERON. Does the government intend erecting the monuments to the memory of the late D'Arcy McGee and George Brown?

Mr. PUGSLEY. Nothing has been done yet, but we propose to place this work under the charge of the advisory art council who have to do with the erection of a monument in memory of Lafontaine and Baldwin.

Mr. BLAIN. Have the changes been made in the item in which my hon. friend from Brantford was interested?

Mr. FIELDING. It is noted for amendment on concurrence. The memorandum is in the hands of the clerk of the House, and our attention will be called to it when the item is reached.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I see an item of $4,000 additional for steam communication between Prince Edward Island, Cape Breton and Newfoundland. What ports will these boats touch ?

Mr. FIELDING. The wording of the item would admit the service being made to any port in Prince Edward Island. I am not aware of any special arrangements.

Mr. A. MARTIN (Queens). I would like to know whether New London and Rustico are included in this service. I wish to impress on the minister the fact that both those sections, being on the north side and without railway communication, are the most neglected parts of Prince Edward Island as regards communication.

Some resolutions reported.

Mr. FIELDING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will the Minister of Finance tell us if there are to be any further supplementary estimates?

Mr. FIELDING. To the best of my knowledge and belief, no.

Mr. HENDERSON. Not this session?

Mr. FIELDING. No.

Mr. HENDERSON. What business will be taken up in the morning?

Mr. FIELDING. After routine business a motion will be made for Supply. I understand that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) wishes to draw attention to a matter.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 1.47 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, July 17, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

THE QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg) presented the report of the Select Committee appointed for the purpose of investigating the conditions and guarantee under which the government of Canada paid moneys to the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

Mr. WILLIAM CHISHOLM (Antigonish) moved that the report be concurred in. He said: As we are within a few hours of prorogaton, it would not be fair to the House for me to make any very extended remarks on this question. However, at the risk of wearying the House, I propose to make a few observations regarding it. The question of the construction of a bridge across the River St. Lawrence is an old question—one that has agitated the people of the province of Quebec, the city of Quebec particularly, for very many years. Indeed, about the time of confederation a report was made by an eminent engineer on the feasibility of a bridge at or near Quebec. Several times afterwards the question of bridging the St. Lawrence came up, and reports were made upon it, the tenor of which was that the project was a perfectly feasible one. In 1887 the Quebec Bridge Company was incorporated, and, as is usual in such cases, its charter was renewed from time to time. The company approached the then government of Canada and also the provincial and municipal authorities with a view to obtaining aid for the construction of such bridge, and assurances were given from time to time that upon its being shown that the scheme was a feasible and proper one, the necessary assistance would be rendered. Again and again Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John A. Macdonald promised assistance if the company would show that it was really in earnest. First when the bridge company was incorporated the capital stock was $1,000,000. It is alleged that this capital stock was very small for such a large enterprise. It is true the enterprise was a large one, the construction of the greatest bridge ever undertaken, but I should have thought that the time to discuss the question of the sufficiency of the capital stock was at the time of the incorporation of the Quebec Bridge Company. I do not think, however, this is a matter with which we need to concern ourselves at present. The bridge company was incorporated in 1887 and there was subsequent legislation revising and amending the terms of the company's charter. In 1889, a subsidy of $1,000,000 was voted by the parliament of Canada, as set out in this report, for the Quebec Bridge Company. Of this $1,000,000, $374,353 was eventually disbursed to the company. The assistance given by the Quebec government was $250,000 and the city of Quebec gave a subvention of $300,000 so that really this company started out, although its paid up capital was somewhat small for such a large enterprise with assets to the extent of $1,550,000 in addition to its capital stock of $1,000,000 of subvention from the Dominion government, $300,000 from the city of Quebec and $250,000 from the province of Quebec as subventions, indicate that the scheme must then have been recognized as a wise, prudent and patriotic one, and the company capable of carrying out the scheme. The fact that the city of Quebec and the province of Quebec contributed as liberally as they did goes to show what faith they had in this enterprise. When the Quebec Bridge Company had approached the late government the answer in every case was: Show your good faith, show your sincerity in this scheme, by contributing yourselves. Therefore that company was incorporated and the citizens of Quebec, irrespective of politics, actuated mainly by patriotic views and by the desire to have this route across the St. Lawrence which would be not only of national importance but of great local importance contributed towards the scheme. It is true they contributed in small sums in many cases but this goes to show that this was not one of the wild-cat schemes we too frequently see, but was a genuine scheme. The list of shareholders contains the names of some of the very best men of the province and city of Quebec—merchants, bank presidents, vice-presidents and directors, presidents and vice-presidents of railways, Conservatives and Liberals alike.

In 1900, the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company entered into a contract with M. P. Davis for the construction of a substructure and in 1903 entered into a contract with the Phœnix Bridge Company of Phœnixville, Pa., for the construction of the superstructure. Before the company entered into the contract for the superstructure, tenders were asked from various bridge companies in America. Tenders were called for by public advertisement throughout Canada and the United States. Quite a number of plans and offers were submitted by different companies. The determination of which was the best plan to adopt was a matter of vital importance. Inquiries were made as to the most competent engineers on the continent and the directorate of the Quebec Bridge Company after most careful consideration of the information obtained became convinced that Mr. Theodore Cooper was the most eminent and competent engineer in America. The plans were submitted to him, he examined them all and ultimately arrived at the conclusion that the best plan to adopt was that submitted by the Phœnix Bridge Company, and he so advised the directorate of the Quebec Bridge Company. It is not alleged and cannot be alleged that the Quebec Bridge Company did not take all necessary precautions to ascertain the best plan and scheme for the construction of the proposed bridge, and to have it constructed on the best terms possible. In fact it is quite sufficient to say that such men as the directors of the Quebec Bridge Company, business men of experience as they are, would of course take all precautions. There is abundant evidence that they proceeded with the greatest care with respect to the selection of a plan and getting a company to build this work, as indeed they did proceed, in all the different matters with which they had to do.

As to Mr. Cooper, the report of the Royal Commission which investigated the causes of the collapse of the bridge speaks of him in the most complimentary words. It is admitted on all sides that he is and was regarded at that time as the best authority who could be secured. The plans submitted by the Phœnix Bridge Company were prepared by Mr. Szlapka, the designing engineer for the Phœnix Bridge Company. After the plans had been prepared they were submitted to Mr. Cooper who carefully examined them. They were also submitted to a government engineer, Mr. Schreiber. It will be observed that the greatest care and caution were exercisd by the government to see that the plans were properly drawn; they were not satisfied with the opinion of their own engineer but called in a more expert and eminent scientific authority in whom they might have the fullest confidence. They therefore selected Mr. Theodore Cooper. On October 19, 1903, an agreement was entered into between the government of Canada, and the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company which provided, among other things, that the company should release any claim it had to any unpaid balance of the subsidy of $1,000,000 voted in 1899. The government of Canada agreed to guarantee the bonds of the company, not to exceed in amount $6,678,200, which amount was considered necessary to meet the liabilities of the company as at that date, and to complete the construction of the bridge.

It is alleged that at that time the government should have taken over the assets of the bridge company. In what better position would the government have been in if they had done so? The Quebec Bridge Company, it must be admitted on all sides, had constructed the work up to that date as economically and carefully as possible. It was their interest to do so. The evidence, I am sure, shows that they exercised the greatest care and had carried on the construction in the most businesslike way. Could the government have done better? I submit, it could not. I submit that for every dollar expended there was a dollar of work there. In fact, I go further and say that, according to the testimony of Mr. Parent, the bridge company had got for about one and one quarter million dollars substructure and approaches for which the government would have paid at least two million dollars. One can readily understand how that could be; the work would be conducted more economically by a company than by the government. I do not mean to say that government works are constructed extravagantly or that in all cases it is inadvisable to have work done by the government: but we must admit that often, and particularly in the case of these very large works, a company can build more economically than the government can.

Now, it is alleged that when the government undertook to guarantee the bonds of the Quebec Bridge Company, they did not take sufficient precautions in the way of providing a competent engineer to look after their interests in the work. What happened? Immediately after the government became responsible under this agreement of 1903, it provided for the appointment of an engineer to look after the government's interests. The minority report states that an order in council was passed that such an engineer should be appointed. I believe that is true. It was not true, however, that it was on the suggestion of the Quebec Bridge Company's consulting engineer or of the bridge company, this course was not pursued, that is, that the employment of an expert bridge engineer who was to act independently on behalf of the governemnt was dispensed with. Now, that is not correct. The evidence is entirely the other way I would refer to the evidence of Mr. Parent at page 181:

Q. When the difficulty arose about the employment of an expert, by Mr. Schreiber, why did not the bridge company insist that such expert be appointed and act so that the company might benefit by the advice of that expert, without having to pay the cost of an investigation?

A. The bridge company never objected to that; on the contrary, it was favourable to the government's suggestion. I met Mr. Cooper myself in regard to that matter, in New York; Mr. Cooper objected entirely to Mr. Nichol being associated with him in the construction of the bridge.

Mr. Nichol was the engineer suggested to the government by Mr. Schreiber. So far as the bridge company was concerned they interposed not the slightest objection to the employment by the government of Mr. Nichol or any other man. But Mr. Cooper did object to any other engineer being associated with him. Mr. Parent went to New York to see Mr. Cooper and tried to persuade him that it was proper the government should have an engineer. But he objected to any one——

—he even went so far as to say hat if we insisted he would resign his position. He even came to Canada to meet Mr. Schreiber and discuss the question; the government had to choose between the resignation of Mr. Cooper and the appointment of Mr. Nichol.

You will observe therefore, that the statement of the minority report, that the bridge company's consulting engineer objected to or prevented the selection of an independent engineer is at variance with the facts. And further on:

Q. Why could Mr. Cooper object to the government employing the person it desired to employ in order to assure itself of the efficacy of the plans?—A. The reasons given by Mr. Cooper were these: If the government appoints an expert or a bridge engineer, that man might probably take upon himself to do certain things or to give instructions during the building that might clash with that which I might myself do; and as the affair is a large one I do not wish that any one but myself should interfere in the control of the entire construction. His fear was that such a man might give instructions contrary to his own. Mr. Cooper considered at the time that Mr. Hoare was all he needed and that the latter would not take upon himself to do anything without consulting him.

Now, what could the government do under these circumstances? If it persisted in taking Mr. Nichol, who, it is admitted, was not as competent, by any manner of means, who had not so high a reputation as an engineer as Mr. Cooper, they would have lost the services of the latter. Then, if the bridge had gone down as it very likely would have the government would have been accused of negligence; it would have been said that they failed to avail themsedves of the service of the most competent man and had taken a second rate man. This is clearly set forth in the evidence of Mr. Parent, who said:

Q. If the expert the government had decided to employ had found out the defects in the plans that have caused the disaster, would it not have been a good thing?—A. Here is what might have happened: Mr. Cooper pretended that there was no man who could go over his work and I think that was pretty much the opinion of eminent engineers at that time; and on the other hand, if the government had appointed Mr. Nichol, if Mr. Cooper had resigned and that the accident of the 29th August had taken place all the same, the government would have been blamed far more for having set Mr. Cooper aside, he who was considered the best of authorities—to take Mr. Nichol, who was not such; the situation would then have been worse.

Therefore, the action of the government in continuing Mr. Cooper and not selecting Mr. Nichol is quite justified by the facts. And why should not Mr. Cooper have been continued? It is true, he was the consulting engineer of the Quebec bridge company. But it is observed that the Quebec Bridge Company's interest and the government's interests were identical. If Mr. Cooper had been the Phœnix Company's engineer, it would have been a different case, for their interest and that of the government might have not always been the same. The Quebec Bridge Company's interest and the government's interest coincided, and the engineer employed was the most eminent engineer to be found in America. And this man's services were continued.

Now, I come to another point. In the agreement in the Act of 1903, it is provided that before the government guarantees the bonds of the company, the company was to procure subscriptions to $200,000 additional stock. I may say that the company had delivered bonds to the extent of $472,000 to M. P. Davis for amount due on the substructure. These bonds were sold at 60 cents to Mr. Davis himself, who was the only person then to accept them.

The discount of forty per cent, that is to say the difference between par and the price at which the bonds were sold to Mr. Davis, the contractor for the substructure, had, according to the terms of the agreement referred to between the government and the company to be paid up by the stockholders before the government guaranteed the bonds. What happened with regard to that? It is alleged that the whole amount of $200,000 of stock was not actually paid up before the bonds were guaranteed. The way that happens is set out in the majority report, clause 7:

It was urged before the committee that contrary to the provisions of the agreement ratified by chapter 54 of the Acts 1903, the issue of the said bonds preceded the payment of the $200,000 of additional stock by reason of the fact that a cheque of M. P. Davis given in payment of subscription stock, in the sum of $94,900 was not immediately converted into cash and that there was therefore, in this respect, not a compliance by the company with section 4 of the agreement of October 19, 1903.

The company regarded this cheque as cash and so certified to the government and thereupon the government became guarantor of the bonds. The directors did not deem it advisable that the contractor should be too large a holder of this stock.

It was agreed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company that it would take up a certain amount, and it was expected that the Quebec Central Railway Company would also have taken a certain amount of this stock, and in that way the amount of stock in Mr. Davis' hands would be lessened. It was a wise precaution for the directors to endeavour to prevent the contractor having the control of the stock to be issued and paid up. When they got his cheque for $112,000 they regarded it as cash, although they did not cash it and deposit the proceeds. They expected, as I have said, the Grand Trunk Railway to take a portion and the Quebec Central another portion of these 112,000 shares. The Grand Trunk did come later on and take a portion of this stock, paid for the same and a new cheque was given by Mr. Davis for $94,900, the original cheque having been returned to him. That is to say, Mr. Davis first paid up $112,000 for the new stock by giving his cheque therefor, but the Grand Trunk took the difference later on, and Mr. Davis' stock came down to $94,900. The Quebec Central, it was expected, would take over a certain other portion of this 94,900 shares, but it happened that the Quebec Central was not in a position to do so owing to the fact that its charter did not permit it at that time to purchase stock. Later on this company did actually buy stock from the Hon. John Sharples. As soon as it became apparent that nobody else would take any portion of the 94,900 shares, the bridge company cashed the cheque of M. P. Davis. The question arises as to whether that cheque should be regarded as cash. The Quebec Bridge Company did regard it as cash. The evidence of Mr. Price and Mr. Lemoine, who are gentlemen of the highest financial standing justifies one in holding that the cheque meant cash. At any rate the company did regard it as such. It was cashed and was placed to the credit of the company. The time when it was cashed is not material. I mention these facts to show why the cheque was held so long. The stock was issued to Mr. Davis just as soon as he gave his cheque. It was merely a matter of delay in going to the bank and getting the cheque cashed.

Now objection is made that the Quebec Bridge Company disposed of their bonds at 60 cents on the dollar. Regarding that it must appear to any person that these bonds must be disposed of at the highest price they would bring on the market. Now what is the evidence regarding the wisdom of selling these bonds at 60 cents on the dollar? Take the evidence of Mr. Price. Mr. Price was a director of the old company, is a large lumber merchant and is associated in many commercial undertakings. He is also a leading Conservative in the city of Quebec and a man of high standing in that city. On page 94 he says this regarding the sale of bonds:

Q. Do you consider that a good bargain, or otherwise, made by the company from a purely business standpoint?—A. Well, when you can only get one man to buy something that nobody else will buy you are generally satisfied with your bargain.

Q. Of course you have got to take the circumstances into consideration. Taking the circumstances that existed into consideration, do you consider that the company showed good business judgment in making this deal with Mr. Davis?—A. Absolutely so, because if the substructure had been completed and the superstructure had never been completed, the bonds would be absolutely valueless.

Here is the opinion of Mr. Price, who says it was absolutely a good bargain. Then Mr. Gaspard Lemoine, who is also one of the leading men in the city of Quebec, who was formerly president and vice-president of the Lake St. John Railway and now a director of the Quebec bank, says that was a good bargain, that in his opinion the Quebec company acted wisely in disposing of the bonds at 60 cents. In fact he says they could not get that much anywhere else. To the same effect is the testimony of Mr. Thomas McDougall, who was the banker with whom the bonds were deposited by Mr. Davis for advances. He says on page 126 of the evidence:

Q. Will you as a bank manager probably dealing in these matters, tell us what you think about it?—A. Of course when we took this bond from Mr. Davis we took it as collateral security for his account which was a running account with us for the construction of the bridge. We did not go minutely into the exact value of it, Mr. Davis handed it to us and told us he had a good contract and we knew that he knew his business well.

Q. Give us your opinion as a banker, for Mr. Davis ?—A. As a banker I think he took very considerable chances on these bonds.

Q. As a banker you think he took very considerable chances in taking those bonds on his contract ?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that price could have been obtained in the bond market for them ?—A. Never.

To the same effect is the testimony of Mr. Scott and Mr. Dumoulin. Now as to the conduct of the affairs of the bridge company the evidence of the solicitor went to show that it was conducted on thorough business lines. The testimony to which I refer was the testimony of men whose judgment and integrity cannot be questioned and whose standing every man admits. They say that under the management of Mr. Parent the affairs of the Quebec Bridge Company were conducted in a thoroughly businesslike manner and it must be very gratifying to Mr. Parent to receive the testimony of such gentlemen as those who appeared before the committee. The opinion they gave of his management was indeed very flattering and does high credit to the integrity and ability of the president of the Quebec Bridge Company, the present chairman of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. As far as the management is concerned, I think, it must be admitted on all sides that everything was done thoroughly and well.

Now, I come to the falling of the bridge. It is true that the bridge fell but whose fault is it? It is not alleged that it was the fault of any party in so far as the actual work itself is concerned. The report of the Royal Commission is to the effect that it was due to a mistake on the part of Mr. Cooper, the consulting engineer. It is all very well to be wise after the fact but could anybody forsee that such a calamity would happen. If the government had undertaken to build that bridge would it not have proceeded in the same way? It appears now that the proper course would have been to have selected three competent engineers to direct and control the undertaking. That suggestion has been made in the report. But, if these three competent engineers are selected, have you any assurance that another accident may not occur ? Experience will be of great assistance in guiding these engineers but we have no assurance that the employment of even three of the most competent engineers, whoever they may be, will prevent an accident occurring. If the government had taken over the assets of the Quebec Bridge Company in 1903 it is reasonable to suppose that they would have done the very same thing in the matter of continuing the work that the Quebec Bridge Company did. These men who were at the head of the Quebec Bridge Company were men of eminent business ability and capacity. The accident is due to no fault of the Quebec Bridge Company. They exercised the greatest caution possible. It is alleged that Mr. Hoare did not possess the scientific skill that was necessary. Who could tell anything about Mr. Hoare's scientific skill or whether he was defective in that regard at that time? You have to take Mr. Hoare as you find him. The Quebec Bridge Company knew that he was a man of extensive experience, that he was a man recognized as possessing great professional skill. He had been for thirty years engaged in general railway and bridge work. He had been with the company since its inception and he was familiar with the development of this work. He supervised the building of the substructure. He did one of the finest pieces of work in the world. It is admitted that the substructure is one of the best pieces of work of that kind to be found anywhere in the world and the best evidence of that is found in the fact that it stood the very severe strain which was put upon it by the falling of the bridge. Mr. Hoare was recognized on all sides as a man having the necessary professional skill and as being eminently qualified for this position. But, with the caution which characterized the Quebec Bridge Company, they went farther and retained the services of Mr. Cooper, a recognized authority. Referring to Mr. Hoare, I will read from page 103 what Mr. Price says :

Q. Did you know, or do you know, that Mr. Hoare was ever connected with any great bridge construction work, apart from the ordinary bridge on the railway?—A. I do not know exactly what work he has done; I know he has had a varied experience.

Q. In the way you have spoken of?—A. Generally on bridge work, on railways and on general engineering work?

Q. But are you able to say that you do know he was connected with any large, very large, bridge construction in metal?—A. I believe he built the largest bridge for the Lake St. John, or the Great Northern at Hawkesbury, I believe a cantilever bridge.

Q. He built an iron or steel bridge I presume?—A. Yes.

Q. For the Lake St. John Railway?—A. Or the Great Northern.

The testimony of the directors is to the effect that they were perfectly satisfied that Mr. Hoare was the right man for the place —otherwise they would not have engaged him at all—and they had every reason to believe that he was fitted to assume the responsibilty because of the wide experience he had had. It is true that it is stated in the report of the Royal Commission that Mr. Hoare did not have the high technical skill which a man in that position should possess. It is very easy to say that now, but would these gentlemen have made that report previous to the collapse of the bridge at which time he was regarded as a man of excellent practical ability? Previous to the fall of the bridge nobody thought there was anything wrong, nobody thought that the bridge was not in charge of the best engineers that it was possible to secure and nobody intimated that the business of the company was not conducted in a proper way. Now that the bridge has fallen people naturally try to find excuses and to throw the blame on somebody and in this case it is thrown on the Quebec Bridge Company with the view, perhaps, of making a little political capital against the government. But, if you look at it fairly and squarely, I submit there is nothing in the evidence or the circumstances which would justify the charge that there was any carelessness or negligence whatever on the part of the government or of the Quebec Bridge Company. I submit that under these circumstances there is nothing that the House can do except concur in the majority report. The majority report does not pass judgment on the cause of the fall of the bridge which is a matter that scientific men alone can pass upon. On this point it refers to the evidence taken before the Royal Commission where experts dealt with the question. But the minority report undertakes to throw the blame on Mr. Hoare. If there is blame to be thrown on anybody it must be thrown on Mr. Cooper, but I do not think that anybody will say that Mr. Cooper was not recognized as an authority. It is true that his judgment failed in this case, but the greatest scientists in the world make mistakes and their judgment is apt at times to be at fault. I move therefore that the majority report be concurred in.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh):

That the said report be not adopted, but that this House adopt in lieu thereof the draft report suggested by the minority of said special committee as the same appears in the minutes of said committee.

It is a very ungrateful task to have to address the House on a matter of such great importance as this is within a few hours of prorogation. Nevertheless, I think it my duty to give some details to the House with regard to the conclusions which the minority have arrived at with respect to these matters. It seems a fatal matter. When we voted $1,000,000 in support of this enterprise it was, if I remember rightly, at the close of the session, when we entered into the unfortunate arrangement of 1903 which was the cause of this great disaster and has brought us to this impasse it was within forty-eight hours of the closing of the session and here we are, within a few hours of the closing of this session, obliged to consider this matter in all its aspects and necessarily obliged to be extremely brief in any observations which we have to make. I feel it my duty to say that the proceedings of the committee were of a most agreeable character, the minority have no complaint to make on that score.

Mr. W. CHISHOLM.

The chairman was fair throughout and so agreeable were our relations that on the last evening, at our meeting to consider the report, although we were in a majority, we considered my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) as present by a fiction of the imagination, we assumed that his view would be contrary to our own, and although in reality we were in a majority, our report was considered rejected and it comes in as a minority report.

I cannot help thinking that this matter is a lesson to us. We ought, I think, to adopt some rule under which matters of this importance could not come before the consideration of the House at such a late hour of the session. I think that would be a protection for the government which would prevent our proceedings from being, as to my mind they are in this instance, a contempt of the rights of the people. My hon. friends on the committee, although our relations were agreeable throughout, when it came to a consideration of the conclusions of the committee, seemed to have looked upon the matter as one of scarcely any importance. Look at their report; it is a relation of facts about which there is no controversy whatever. The origin of this company, its subsidies, the agreement of 1903, are all set forth, but when you come to that dreadful accident which has cost the country 100 lives and has involved us in a loss which, in my opinion, will amount to over $7,000,000, they do not seem to think it is of more importance than would be the breaking of a window sash in the construction of a building.

Mr. TALBOT. What did the hon. member expect the majority of the committee to say about the accident?

Mr. MONK. I thought that in spite of any political tendencies they would view this matter as a great national question, a grave national disaster, something serious about which it is of no use trying to shield people who are at fault. It is better to lay the blame where it should rest and attempt to arrive at the conclusions which impose themselves. The conclusions to which the minority arrive are the conclusions to which the royal commission arrived almost in terms. Does the government find fault with the conclusions of the commission which they named to look into this matter? There is nothing in the report of the minority that you will not find in the very able, the very exhaustive report to which the government seem to have adhered and at which arrived the royal commissioners named to investigate the causes of this disaster. The commission were not charged, as we were, with this particular feature of the matter, but their commission was of so large a scope that they entered into it and arrived at precisely the same conclusion as we have arrived at as regards the financial aspect of the question and the control of the plans of the bridge—or rather the want of control, for which the Minister of Finance is absolutely responsible, and in regard to which I shall be very glad to hear what explanations he has to give to the House. I do not mean that the Finance Minister did not make a struggle in this case, as he did in all matters relating to the Quebec bridge, but he succumbed at the last, and he is responsible for the fix in which we find ourselves at the present.

Let me refer briefly to the objects of the investigation, because I think it necessary to point that out. We were charged with the task of investigating the conditions and guarantees under which this government paid moneys to the Quebec Bridge Company, endorsed and guaranteed the bonds of that company and what was our recourse at the present moment, and we were charged also with the examination of what precautions the government took in regard to suitable and proper plans for that great structure.

One word in regard to the financial situation. My hon. friend who has opened the discussion on this question has spoken of the men who were in this company. I know most of them; they are certainly good men. I have known Mr. Sharples for a long time, and I have nothing but good to say of him. Mr. Laliberté I have known for a long time; he is a very estimable citizen; in fact, most of them are good men. They seem, in this instance, to have lent their names to an enterprise which, from its inception, viewed from a financial standpoint only, was absolutely ridiculous, perfectly absurd. Here is a company that had for its object the construction of a bridge which could not cost less than $6,000,000; that was a low estimate. What did they put into the enterprise? At most, at the time the scheme was entered into, $65,000. That was the paid-up capital of this ridiculous company, and then $20,000 of this at the very least, as mentioned in our own report, was given to the directors of the company not in accordance with the Act of incorporation of the company. Section 8 of the Act of 1887 incorporating the company defines under what circumstances stock can be given in payment, and it would not be under that section given to the directors for labours. To mention labours seems absurd; they performed no labours. In violation of that clause, out of the $65,000, we find in our report that they got $20,000, reducing the capital stock of the company, organized for an enterprise that could not cost less than $6,000,000, to the sum of $45,000. I say that they got more than $20,000. At page 27 of the printed record you will find $5,200 additional. There was some doubt about that, in regard to which my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) and my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Walsh) did not seem to be convinced. We have reported, in regard to which there is no doubt whatever, that they got $20,000 out of the $65,000. I say that it is in evidence before the committee that they got $25,200 in stock out of the $65,000. But why harp about that? In the Senate not long ago an answer was given by the Secretary of State to an inquiry made by Hon. Senator Landry, and what is the effect of that answer? It may be found under the caption of 'Payment to the Quebec Bridge Directors.' The information is authentic; there is no doubt about it; the directors of this company, these great men who are so patriotic, who have done so much for this enterprise and for their country in such a disinterested manner, have received, according to the answer given by the Hon. Mr. Scott, which answer was furnished by the Bridge Company, $49,601.01 out of a total paid-up capital stock of $65,000.

Mr. TALBOT. Will my hon. friend allow one slight correction? I know he wants to be fair; but when he states that there was only $65,000 paid up, surely he knows better than that.

Mr. MONK. I am speaking of the company at its inception. I will refer in a moment to what happened in 1903; and what happened in 1903 was a deception and a snare, just like what happened before. I say that at the period of which I am now speaking the directors, out of a capital stock of $65,000, received for themselves $49,601.01—the secretary, $16,890, and Mr. Hoare, the architect or engineer of the bridge, $45,150. The personnel of this company had $111,641.01 on a paid-up capital stock of $65,000. The financial situation resolves itself into this, that this company owes the government at the present moment $6,000,000. There is no error in that. I did not hear my hon. friend (Mr. Wm. Chisholm) in his long comments on this question, point out any error in our calculations. It is over $6,000,000 They owe the government $100,000 and more of duties. What else they owe at or around Quebec I do not know. What are their assets? Nothing. There are piers there. There are some constructions and some materials. What is the value of them? Nothing. Possibly the piers may be some use if the new board finds that they can be utilized. But I asked Mr. Holgate the question: 'What can those piers be useful for?' He said: 'I do not know; it is very doubtful if they can be of any use, because any new plan must be absolutely different from the other; but they may be of use.' I do not deny it. It is possible that they may have to be demolished. The materials can be of very little use. I say that these assets are valueless. This is an absolutely insolvent concern, and the government have recognized it to-day. But they did not recognize it in 1903, when that company came here, having no assets whatever and a floating debt of over three-quarters of a million. That, I say, is the financial aspect. Our hon. friends in their report, have endeavoured to show that there was something of value. There is really nothing. My hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) suggests that the new board may change the location of the bridge. It is very probable that they will. From what evidence I heard, it seems to me improbable that they will decide upon the present site. We shall see when the board has reported. The government have done to-day, after all this loss has been incurred, after a hundred lives have been sacrificed, what they should have done at the very beginning; they have begun to consider plans: they never have done so before to-day. I assert that the government have never looked into the plans of this bridge company. Here we are, face to face with the construction of the greatest bridge in the world, the like of which has never been seen. We were involved to the extent that we financed the whole business, and the government—the Minister of Finance, pushed, I suppose, influenced by many forces—never saw fit to control the plans, to see what all this was going to be. That is a very strong assertion; I will endeavour to prove it. It was what the Royal Commission found. They gently hint. They do not use strong terms. I believe the time has come to speak the truth. But they say: 'The misfortune is that these plans were never studied by the government.' What happened, Mr. Speaker? You will scarcely believe the story, but it is borne out by the work of the Royal Commission and by the evidence before our own committee. We had it in the findings and the evidence of the Royal Commission, even if we had heard no witnesses at all. But we heard some, and we three have arrived at the same conclusion as the Royal Commission; we have that satisfaction at any rate. Let us speak of the plans. Would you believe it, Mr. Speaker, that in regard to this bridge, the greatest bridge in the world, Mr. Hoare, a very nice fellow, I have no doubt, but about as competent as a bridge engineer as I am, sent in to the government the specifications, which were in printed form, handed by the government to bridge constructors when we give subsidies for bridges, as we gave a great many last night. He took those specifications for the Quebec bridge, and sent them in to the government as the specifications for the Quebec bridge, with a span of 800 feet. Is that credible? Yet it is the fact. What happened? Mr. Douglas, our engineer for bridge purposes, found fault with them. He ventured to report to the government that the unit stress were too great, by which, as far as I understand the language of these gentlemen, is meant the weight was too great for these specifications. It was a note of warning; but the government took no notice of it whatever. Here was a construction, the plans of which had been devised by the construction company itself, the Phœnix Bridge Company, the government took no notice whatever of this note of warning sounded by Mr. Douglas. The bridge company has taken as its consulting engineer Mr. Cooper. Mr. Cooper is an eminent engineer. He is a man of seventy, and never but once, so far as I know, went near the construction; and the man who in reality is responsible for the preparation of these plans is Mr. Szlapka, with Mr. Deans. Who is Mr. Deans? The chief engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company, and any man who goes on the street will know that Mr. Deans is a very rash engineer. He is a man of ability, who aims at heap construction, and his aims have been attended by sinister misfortunes in the United States.

The government could have found that out easy enough; they did not trouble to inquire. But the critical moment came; the moment when the Minister of Finance enters on the scene—I believe I know too much of the Minister of Finance to think that were he not led in the matter he would not have done as he did—the critical moment was when the plans came up for approval by the government. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, when we gave the subsidy we stipulated we should have control of the plans and should approve them; we always make such a stipulation. But further, in 1903 when we entered into this disastrous agreement we had stipulated specially in the Act passed at the end of the session, that we would have control of the plans and would supervise them. I may say to the House now that after the passage of that Act the government gave itself no heed whatever of these plans and never bothered about them at all. Parliament—as we say properly in our report—had imposed in that Act the duty upon the government of supervising the plans of this vast and unprecedented structure. But after the passage of the Act the government paid no attention to the matter. In July, 1903, when the whole of this scheme was concocted which we heard of only at the end of October, 1903, when parliament was about to prorogue, this matter came up before the government and what happened? I say it is incredible to believe the tale which is unfolded unless you read the proof of it in the evidence. Mr. Schreiber is a very good engineer—there are a great many good engineers, but when you come to look into the plans of a bridge alongside of which the Forth bridge is a small affair, you require special skill and special caution in your experts. What did Mr. Schreiber do? In July he asked the government, and he gave reasons for his request, to employ a specialist in bridge engineering to oversee these plans, and Mr. Speaker, had that been done I have no hesitation in saying—in fact I asked the question of Mr. Holgate and he gave a reply which he carefully read leads to the same conclusion—had that been done the fatal defect in this bridge would have been detected. It was pointed out by Holgate and his associates that after this disaster the government asked a special bridge engineer in the United States to look into the matter and he pointed out the defect. Mr. Douglas, our own engineer, had hinted at it. I believe that Mr. Cooper, being one man with one head had overlooked the matter; it escaped him. No one man alone can carry out an enterprise of that kind; it is impossible. And, Sir, had that been done and had Mr. Schreiber's request been complied with we would not have had to lament and deplore this immense loss of life and money. But what happened? The tale continues to be extraordinary, it reads like a romance. I should have said that when Mr. Schreiber's request came before the government, the government of course granted it and an order in council of the 26th of July authorized Mr. Schreiber to employ a specialist. But this was objected to by parties interested. Mr. Cooper would not hear of it for he looked upon it as an insult. Here was the government of Canada financing this bridge and charged with the duty of overseeing these plans, and what insult could there be to Mr. Cooper. The correspondence is there, but I will not refer to it for I feel I am taking up to much time.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. MONK. It is such an important matter that I must refer to it with some emphasis. Mr. Cooper would not hear of another engineer being called in and he wrote to Mr. Hoare of the bridge company and he pointed out to the government that this was altogether extraordinary. Extraordinary? How? The people of Canada were furnishing the money to finance the whole enterprise; the government of Canada were charged with the supervision of the plans and they were asked to have an independent examination of these plans. What was extraordinary about that? What happened? Why, the government gave up completely and had no examination made whatever, and the plans lay there in the Department of Railways in a huge trunk, all of them approved under the circumstances I have narrated and without a special bridge engineer being called in to give his opinion on them. Well, Sir, I think that with regard to the plans the minority of the committee are right in asserting—as did the Royal Commission and as any man who reads the evidence must assert——that there was no examination of the plans of this vast structure by the authority that should have examined them. The fact remains that we financed the enterprise without controlling the plans although the government was specially charged to control them; and here again was exhibited that same lackadaisical spirit that has characterized the government all through in connection with this vast work. And the member for Antigonish (Mr. Chisholm) has conceded the point when he said: The government considered Mr. Cooper was a competent man and provided the strength of the original specifications was maintained everything was satisfactory. These are the conclusions to which we of the minority have arrived. First, as regards the finances it is a total loss; second, as regards the plans there has been no control, no effective and suitable control of these plans. The plans were approved as a formality and nothing more, and when you come to consider the vastness of this undertaking and the dangers that surrounded the building of a bridge of that size for which there is no parallel in the world, it seems to me that we are right in saying that the government did not use proper precautions in regard to the plans of the structure.

But I must hasten on to what I consider the vital matter. The past is past and there is no use shedding tears, although it is necessary to point out where the responsibility is and where the defect was. But, to-day there is a proposition which the government brings to our consideration a few hours before prorogation. Mind you, this accident happened on the 29th of August, 1907. Lest there should be any misunderstanding, I think I am faithfully speaking the opinion of both my colleagues of the minority of the committee when I say that we believe that this is not only a great national undertaking but that this is a bridge that must be built, and built at once. I do not wish to be represented in my own province as being opposed to this great undertaking. I think the bridge should be built at once. In my opinion when they named the board of very able men who constituted this Royal Commission the government should also have named at that time a board of engineers to prepare plans. We should have had those plans before parliament in January last, possibly with the contract. We should have been in a position months ago to close this matter up and to decide as to the completion of this great work. Instead of that, we are here to-day, with what, Mr. Speaker? With a proposal to indemnify the shareholders. That is what the proposal of the government amounts to. Let me define my position in that respect. Have we authority at the present moment to construct this bridge? I take the statute relating to the National Transcontinental Railway as passed in 1903, and I find in that statute that the government has not only authority but is bound by agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to build another railway from Winnipeg to Moncton. I say there is authority in that statute to build not only the railway but the bridges connected with the railway. There is authority in that statute to bridge every river and every stream along the route of the railway, and consequently we have authority to bridge the St. Lawrence.

There is no doubt about that. It would take too much time to quote the law, but there is no doubt about it. Any Minister of Justice who looks at that statute of 1903 will find not only that the government has authority to raise the necessary money, but it is authorized and indeed it is bound under the agreement which is a schedule to the Act to build that railway and to build that bridge.

Therefore, I say that the moment this accident happened—for now I confine my remarks to the events since this dreadful occasion—the government could have named the commission for which it has asked a vote of $25,000 in the estimates recently passed by this House. It had authority to name a board of engineers to go to work at once. No legislation was necessary. We have the law to go on and finish the bridge, just as we have the law to finish the railway. Fault is found with the calculations of the leader of the opposition as to the cost of this railway. I find fault with them too ; I say that they are too low, the railroad will cost more than the hon. member has estimated. But we are in for it, and we must—and, of course, we will—carry out the work whatever happens. I say that the government has all the necessary authority to go on and finish the work. And what does the Minister of Railways want to do now? He wants this House to authorize the government to take up the agreement of 19th October, 1903, and pay money right and left. We are to begin by paying $265,000, the amount of the capital stock. Let me digress for a moment. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) said that I was mistaken as to the amount of this capital stock. We had imposed upon this company in 1903 the necessity of raising $200,000 additional stock. We would not give the guarantee otherwise. That money was to be employed in paying the discount on the bonds. But they never paid it. They sent a certificate to the Minister of Finance that the condition had been complied with. It had not been complied with ; they were $94,000 short, the amount subscribed by the contractor of the bridge who had paid in the bonds of the old company with the discount, and who paid up when the bonds were paid. out of the guaranteed amount. This was paid, I believe, in 1907. This is the story of the $200,000 additional stock. What we are asked to do now is to pay out money. The bridge lies there under the water, holding in its cruel clutches the bodies of many of those who lost their lives on that terrible day. What we are asked to do is to pay $265,000 to the shareholders. Are we obliged to pay it? There is no obligation whatever. We had reserved the right under our agreement to expropriate the enterprise when finished and a going concern. Well, it is not quite a going concern now. Not only are we to pay back the money of the shareholders, but we are to pay 5 per cent interest from the time they got their certificate of stock. For instance, the one who subscribed $94,000 got his certificate immediately—he paid up three years after. We are to pay 5 per cent from the time when the certificates were given. And 10 per cent premium besides. And what else? Who knows what are the liabilities of this company I asked the question repeatedly of witnesses who appeared before the committee : Have you any statement of the affairs of the company? There was no statement. Who knows what debts we are assuming in taking over the debts of the company—for there is a stipulation in the agreement that we must pay all the debts of the company contracted 'with the assent and approval of the government.' These are very vague words. Why, as soon as this resolution is put in operation the claims will appear as thick as the leaves in Vallambrosa. What ground is there for it? None whatever. I still have confidence, great confidence in my right hon. friend Sir Wilfrid Laurier that he will drop that resolution, for if passed it will have the effect of plunging us into a sea of liabilities of which we know nothing. But, in the first place, if that resolution passes it is admitted that we must pay nearly $400,000 to the stockholders.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN. No, $265,000.

Mr. MONK. And 5 per cent for five years and 10 per cent premium—it is easily figured out. But this is a sum that we can calculate and know ; other claims will arise the amount of which nobody can know.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the city of Quebec and their bonus?

Mr. MONK. These shareholders were heroic men, but they took care to protect themselves in every way. Hon. members will find, on reading the agreement, that there was a provision for the payment of subsidies by the Quebec city and Quebec province after everybody has been paid. There is nothing in the position of these shareholders which obliges us to make such a sacrifice as is proposed. People suffer every day. When I arose in this House years ago to ask the gentlemen to give assistance to the depositors of the Ville Marie Bank under circumstances which I thought justified the giving of that assistance, my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) told me that the government was not an eleemosynary institution, that there were sufferers in business and sufferers in banks. As a result of this, the labours of this board, in which I have confidence—for I hope the company will appoint none but able men—if they find that these piers can be utilized, or some valid ground for dealing with the company in such a manner that those who have cash in the enterprise—those who have put cash in the enterprise and those only—I shall be the last man to object. But to start at this point, without any necessity for it, upon this vast additional expenditure, I say is altogether unjustifiable. The government can go to work and build this bridge without any legislation whatever—there is no doubt about that. But, in any case, why take the action here proposed? I was speaking the other day with a very eminent engineer, one whom I would like to see employed on this work, if that could be possible, and I mentioned that it would take at least three months to prepare the plans. He scoffed at the idea and assured me that it would take a much longer time than that. In three months another session will be near at hand. Then there are tenders to be called for and contracts to be made. Why should we then pass a resolution which will involve us more and more in this disastrous and unbusiness-like way of carrying out a great national work.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenburg). At this stage of the session, when prorogation is at hand, I do not desire to occupy the the time of the House for more than a few moments. There is nothing very difficult or complicated about all the matters relating to the Quebec bridge. I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk), who has just taken his seat, that the collapse of the bridge was a national disaster. But I think it should be treated as a national disaster by hon. members in discussing the subject instead of, apparently, gloating over the country's misfortune. The hon. member (Mr. Monk) finds fault with the report of the majority in not reaching conclusions similar to the findings of the Royal Commission. I submit that the position taken by the majority of the committee was the correct one. Immediately after the collapse of the bridge in August last year, the government, very properly, appointed a Royal Commission to inquire into the disaster and all questions relating thereto. That necessarily was a technical question and could only be dealt with by men who have professional knowledge. The report of the commission was, later, placed before parliament. The majority of the committee, feeling that this was a technical question, did not think it advisable to make any finding on that subject.

Now, my hon. friend boasts that the report of the minority in this respect concurs with the report of the royal commission. Well, if that is a comforting thought to my hon. friends, they are at liberty to entertain it. But I submit that the minority of the committee appointed to investigate and look into the matter of the Quebec bridge construction, and later, of its collapse, have no more idea of the causes of the collapse than have the mummies in the tombs of the Pharaohs. I have great respect for the attainments and judgment of the hon. gentlemen who compose the minority of that committee, but I submit they have no evidence before them, and they were not competent to form any conclusion of any value when they made the report which they have made, and which is called the minority report, and upon which report the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat compliments himself and his confreres because it was similar to that of the royal commission.

Now, just a few words as to the history of this project. This project had its genesis in the city and province of Quebec. The idea of the construction of this bridge developed in the province of Quebec, and naturally and properly there were many reasons why the people of that city and province desired the construction of such a bridge. It was not then a political question, everybody, irrespective of politics, around the city of Quebec were willing to invest a few dollars in the project. When the Conservative party were in power they time and again promised assistance. At one time Mr. T. Chase Casgrain, then Attorney General of the province of Quebec, publicly stated that if the government of Sir John A. Macdonald did not implement their promises and give a subsidy to this bridge his Quebec colleagues should resign their seats. It was not until the present government came into power, however, that the enterprise received any aid. The company was organized first in 1887. The hon. gentleman complains about the amount of their capital. It was small, it is true, only $65,000 of paid-up capital, but the subscribed capital was over $200,000, and the unpaid portion of the subscribed capital was certainly an asset of the company. But, in addition to that, the province of Quebec had voted a subsidy of $250,000 and the city of Quebec a subsidy of $300,000. So at that stage, at least, the company had assets to the extent of over half a million dollars. In the year 1900 the bridge company had made such progress that they entered into a contract with Mr. M. P. Davis for the construction of the substructure. The contract involved an amount of over $1,000,000. The plans were approved of by the government, and the substructure, under that contract, was eventually completed. The affairs of the Quebec Bridge Company were then in charge of Mr. Hoare. I wish to submit to this House that the building of the substructure was probably as important and as difficult an undertaking as the construction of the superstructure. Mr. Schreiber, in his report to the government, stated that in his judgment Mr. Hoare was quite competent to be in charge of the construction of the substructure. The fact that the substructure withstood the collapse of the bridge last year was a tribute to the efficiency and competency of the work of the contractor and the oversight of Mr.

Hoare, who was then in charge of the project on behalf of the bridge company. Later, the question of the construction of the superstructure had to be dealt with by the Quebec Bridge Company, and the procedure they adopted was this: A general plan of the bridge was prepared under the supervision of Mr. Hoare. They then invited tenders from the most eminent bridge builders in America, and with the tenders they invited plans and specifications to be prepared by those tendering. The successful tenderers were the Phœnix Bridge Company, the best known and probably the most reputable bridge constructing firm in America, and their plans and specifications were accepted. At this time the Quebec Bridge Company secured the services of Mr. Cooper, of New York, as their consulting engineer. Mr. Cooper, let me say, was, in the judgment of the profession, regarded as the most eminent bridge designer and builder in America, and perhaps had no superior in the world. I just wish to dwell for a moment on this point, because it is important, because it afterwards transpired that the government, that the Quebec Bridge Company, that everybody interested relied very much on the judgment of Mr. Cooper; and having, as they believed, in their employ one of the most competent men available in the world, it was only natural that they should rely to a great extent on his judgment. I wish at this point to read what the Royal Commission say regarding Mr. Cooper:

Mr. Theodore Cooper, of New York, was the consulting engineer. In the extent of his experience and in reputation for integrity, professional judgment and acumen, Mr. Cooper had few equals on this continent, and his appointment would have been generally approved. Mr. Cooper's strict duties were to examine, correct and approve plans prepared by the contractors, and to give the engineering advice to Mr. Hoare when requested. Mr. Cooper and his chief assistant, Mr. Berret Berger, carried on a most thorough and painstaking examination of the plans. Mr. Cooper appointed both shop and erection inspectors for reasons explained in his evidence, and had these inspectors report fully and regularly to him. Mr. Cooper states that he greatly desired to build this bridge as his final work, and he gave it careful attention. His professional standing was so high that his appointment left no further anxiety about the outcome in the minds of almost everybody concerned.

That is the finding of the commission respecting Mr. Cooper's capabilities as an engineer. They summarize their finding in the beginning of their report, and they say this:

The professional record of Mr. Cooper was such that his selection for the authoritative position that he occupied was warranted, and the complete confidence that was placed in his judgment by the officials of the Dominion government, and of the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company and of the Phœnix Bridge Company was deserved.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask in all fairness, what more could be expected of the government in the circumstances? They believed that the Quebec Bridge Company had as its consulting engineer the most eminent man available in America, a man of well known professional standing, and a man of very great experience. It is true, as was stated by my hon. friend who proceeded me, that Mr. Schreiber recommended the appointment of a consulting engineer who would act on behalf of the government as well. It is true that Mr. Schreiber's suggestion received confirmation by order in council. Later it was found that Mr. Cooper objected to the appointment of an engineer to act on behalf of the government and, Mr. Schreiber, owing to the opposition of Mr. Cooper to the appointment of such an engineer, reported to the government that he had such confidence in the ability and integrity of Mr. Cooper, the interests of the government and of the Quebec Bridge Company being in common, that he felt that they might rely upon Mr. Cooper solely. Accordingly the government abandoned the idea of appointing an inspector. It is very easy to be wise after the event. Had this bridge not fallen, Mr. Cooper's reputation would have been enhanced, had the bridge not fallen, Mr. Hoare might have been known to the engineering profession in Canada as a great bridge builder, but, unfortunately, a fundamental mistake was made in the design of the bridge. I submit in all fairness, that, the design of the bridge having been supervised and approved of by Mr. Cooper and been approved of by Mr. Schreiber on behalf of the government of Canada, it is hardly fair criticism to say that the government were careless and that they did not take sufficient precautionary measures with reference to inspection.

In 1903, as I have already stated, the bridge company had completed the substructure, and the question of the commencement of the construction of the superstructure was before them. They were not in good financial circumstances and late in October of that year they addressed a communication to the Department of Railways and Canals, or probably to the government, explaining their situation and asking for financial assistance in the way of a guarantee of bonds. This request was granted upon certain conditions. An agreement was entered into and that agreement was ratified by parliament in October, 1903. That agreement contained several features, one of which was that the company were to pay up $200,000 of additional capital. The hon. gentleman who preceded me stated that a portion of that agreement was not complied with. Well, if it was not complied with at the moment at which the bonds were issued it certainly was subsequently. To say the worst of it there may have been a postponement of the fulfilment of that condition, but it was eventually complied with. I am doubtful if it is even open to the interpretation placed upon it by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier. One hundred and nineteen thousand dollars of that subscription was made by Mr. M. P. Davis, a gentleman of well known financial standing. That would have given him a control in the company. The company desired that the railways entering at Quebec should be interested in this project and that they should become shareholders. The delivery to Mr. Davis of his $119,000 of stock was postponed in order to obtain a subscription of stock from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Later the Grand Trunk Railway Company did subscribe for $25,000 of stock, they paid the amount and when they did pay it Mr. Davis substituted a cheque for $94,600 in place of his $119,000 cheque and subscription. When this was done the cheque was cashed. The company say that they always regarded that cheque as the equivalent of cash, and I have no doubt they were justified in so doing. Thereupon the company certified to the government that $200,000 had been subscribed and paid. I do not know that it is very important whether the company were justified in treating that cheque for $94,600 as cash or not. It eventually went into the undertaking; at least it is so reported by Mr. Bell, an auditor of the Department of Railways and Canals. Neither the interests of the government nor of the Quebec bridge, nor any other interest suffered by the postponement of the conversion of this cheque into cash. They certified to the government that the full amount was subscribed and paid and upon this certificate the government guaranteed the $6,000,000 issue of bonds. It is said that the government were not justified in doing so prior to the subscription and payment of this $200,000 of stock. In addition to that I have this to say that I am very doubtful if it were possible for the agreement to have been worked out in any other fashion than that in which it was. The Bank of Montreal later advanced moneys upon these bonds and accepted the certificate of the company. They must have had legal advice to the effect that the portion of the agreement requiring the payment of $200,000 had been fully complied with; otherwise the issue of bonds might not have been legal and there was an issue, as I say, of $6,000,000,

At one o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Lunenberg). Mr. Speaker, just before one o'clock I had reached that stage in the history of the Quebec Bridge Company when they found the substructure of the bridge built, and when they found themselves considerably in debt and in need of financial assistance to proceed with the erection of the superstructure. In October, 1903, they made application to the government for financial assistance of some character or another. Up to that time they had expended $914,862 upon the bridge; they were indebted to the extent of $779,550 and they calculated that it would take $6,866,882 to liquidate their indebtedness and place them in possession of the funds necessary to complete the undertaking. An agreement was entered into and the main features of that agreement are: In the first place the company released the government from its obligation to pay the subsidy of one million dollars, a portion only of which (about $375,000) they had received and expended. The company also on its part undertook to receive from the shareholders of that company as of that date the stock issued and to substitute therefor a stock issue equal in amount to the sum actually paid upon the stock. The company also agreed to procure $200,000 of new stock. That $200,000 of stock was subscribed and was eventually paid. Whether it was technically subscribed or paid prior to the guarantee of the bonds by the government is after all not of very great importance because the $200,000 was eventually paid; it went into the treasury of the company and became a part of the common fund of the proceeds arising from the issue of the bonds which were guaranteed by the government. In consideration of these agreements on the part of the company the government agreed to guarantee the bonds of the company to the extent necessary to liquidate their indebtedness and to provide them with that amount of money which they believed would be sufficient to complete the bridge. That agreement was ratified by an Act of parliament and under that agreement the government subsequently guaranteed the bonds and the company were placed in a position to liquidate their indebtedness and to be in possession of funds, and they proceeded with the construction of the bridge. That is practically the history of the bridge until it fell in August, 1907.

To epitomize the story of the bridge in a few words and in chronological order let me say. First, the scheme received its inspiration in the city and in the province of Quebec. The city of Quebec, its citizens, and the province of Quebec were primarily interested in the construction of the bridge. In 1887, a company was organized to commence the undertaking, and I submit that was the proper way to commence the construction of such a work. Neither the provincial nor federal governments would at that time undertake it, and it was only natural that a company composed of the citizens of Quebec should be organized for the purpose. There were three parties interested: first, the province of Quebec; secondly, the city of Quebec; and thirdly, the shareholders of the company. The city of Quebec voted by way of subsidy $300,000; the province of Quebec voted $250,000 and the company subscribed $200,000, so that the undertaking was launched with a capital either promised or subscribed of $750,000. Later, the Dominion government became interested and voted a subsidy of $1,000,000 so that the company at this stage with all the parties interested, had a fair and reasonable amount of capital at their back. Objection was made by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that certain stock was issued to directors on account of services rendered on behalf of the company. This is a matter I need not detain the House about because after all it is not important. The stock of the company had no value at that date; the directors rendered very valuable services, the business of the company occupied a great deal of their time and in many other ways they devoted themselves to the project. Then, we have the company undertaking the project with a capital at their disposal of about $1,600,000. In 1900, they gave a contract for the substructure to Mr. M. P. Davis, the anticipated cost of which was to be over one million dollars. The substructure was successfully built; it stood the test of the collapse of the bridge and I think no adverse comment can be made upon that portion of the enterprise. In addition to the substructure a contract for the terminals on each side of the river approaching the bridge was given also to Mr. M. P. Davis, and that contract was completed at a cost in excess of $1,000,000. Then the company invited tenders and the submission of plans for the superstructure, and the plan of the Phœnix Bridge Company appearing to be the best—was accepted. It was submitted later on to the consulting engineer of the company, Mr. Cooper, of New York, who was a bridge engineer of considerable eminence and one of the best known bridge builders in America. Mr. Cooper approved of that plan subject to some modifications. It was also approved of by the government engineer, and in 1903, a contract was actually entered into with the Phœnix Bridge Company to complete the work. It was suggested by the hon. member (Mr. Monk) that because at one stage in the history of the Quebec bridge, Mr. Schreiber, the government engineer, had recommended the appointment of an inspecting engineer and because this inspecting engineer was not appointed that therefore the government acted without consulting Mr. Schreiber. I wish to correct that statement in case there may be some misapprehension on the part of hon. gentlemen about it. It is true that Mr. Schreiber recommended the appointment of an engineer and such recommendation was confirmed by order in council. Later, on the recommendation of Mr. Schreiber himself, it was agreed that inasmuch as the interests of the government and of the Quebec Bridge Company were in common, and inasmuch as Mr. Cooper was regarded by the profession generally as the most capable man whose services they could secure, it would be sufficient if the construction of the bridge were left to the sole supervision of Mr. Cooper. The construction of the superstructure was proceeded with and everything was going well until in August, 1907, the bridge fell and instantly the critics developed over night. The critics say that there was not a sufficient system of inspection. Now Mr. Speaker, I submit that when the government of the day had secured the services of the most eminent bridge builder in America, and when as the Royal Commission have found—and they have emphatically found upon this point—the government and the Quebec Bridge Company were justified in assuming that everything as regards inspection and construction was in good hands when in the hands of Mr. Cooper, and that the complete confidence placed in Mr. Cooper by the government and by the bridge company was deserving, I say in view of all that, the criticism is most unfair.

I submit further that if that bridge were being built by a private individual, and he had the endorsement of the plans by a man so eminent and so highly regarded by his profession as Mr. Cooper, he would have done just what the Quebec Bridge Company did and what the government did. It is all very well to suggest now that there should have been a commission of engineers in charge of the construction of the bridge. Human aftersight is better than human foresight. So long as there is that limitation of the human judgment, it is only fair to say that accidents of this character are liable to happen and have happened in the past, notwithstanding every precaution that may be taken. The question to-day is, what is to be done to insure the completion of the bridge? The resolution which has been placed on the Order Paper by the Minister of Railways is to the effect that the government are to take over the stock of the company and pay the shareholders. I submit that there is nothing unreasonable about that; it is the only fair and businesslike thing to do. Immediately after the collapse of the Quebec bridge, it appeared to be the opinion of the public generally that the government should take hold of this enterprise. I think it is only fair that under the terms of the agreement of 1903 they should possess themselves of the stock of the company and proceed with the completion of the bridge. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier suggested that we were taking over liabilities, the amount of which was unknown to us. I submit that there are no liabilities which we are assuming that we do not know of. In the first place, we shall have to pay the sum of $260,000 to acquire the stock of the company plus ten per cent premium. That is definite and well-known. In the next place, we know what our loss is in the guaranteeing of the company's bonds; and I suppose it is only fair for me to state that that will in all probability be a total loss to the government of this country.

There is no possible liability, so far as I can see, in connection with the loss of life. I understand that the Phœnix Bridge Company carried with some insurance company a policy which will liquidate any loss which they may be obliged to pay by reason of the loss of life, and I understand that the Phœnix Bridge Company have up to the present time liquidated all claims for damages in that regard. Therefore the only thing left for the government to do is to acquire control of the company and to proceed with the completion of the bridge. It is a national undertaking, and nobody else can assume that responsibility. It is unfortunate that the collapse of the bridge occurred. The government took all reasonable precautions to prevent any such thing happening. I have no hesitation in expressing the opinion that it is unfortunate in a sense that the government are obliged to step in and take control of the bridge. It is an undertaking that I think could be better handled and controlled by a terminal company ; and it might be worth the consideration of the government, after they have obtained control of the company, whether they should not invite all the railway companies of Canada who have an entrance into the city of Quebec to become part owners in the bridge. In so far as the minority report so-called makes findings of fact, I make no protest against it ; any statements in it regarding the history of the enterprise appear to be properly set forth. But in so far as that report charges the government or the Department of Railways and Canals with want of care or with gross negligence,. I do not concur in—I do not desire to occupy further the time of the House upon this matter at this late hour, as I know that there is considerable business yet to do.

Mr. R. N. WALSH (Huntingdon). Mr. Speaker, I desire to detain the House for a short time in making some remarks on the minority report of the committee. The hon. member who has preceded me (Mr. A. K. Maclean) stated that the members who have presented the minority report did not apparently treat this as a national disaster, but rather as a means of making political capital against the government. With that I take direct issue. I do not think that any members of the House appreciate more fully than do the members who have presented the minority report the greatness of the disaster, not only from a monetary standpoint, but in the loss of life which was occasioned; and in view of the fact that the report of the Royal Commission which was appointed by this government stated that had there been efficient supervision this loss of life could have been prevented, I say that it is more than a national disaster, it is a national disgrace. The government of this country practically controlled the construction of that bridge, which was not only a national undertaking, but the largest undertaking of its kind in the world, and they handed it over to a company of which not a single man knew anything of bridge building. There was not a single bridge expert connected with the company, and they had a very limited capital. What is the history of that company ? It was organized in 1887, and if you will read the minutes of the company, you will find that at their meetings at that time their principal business was the appointing of committees to interview one government or another with the view of getting subsidies. Previous to this the Quebec government had contributed money for the preliminary surveys, but up to 1897 very little had been done. At that time Mr. Parent was asked to join the company, as it was thought that his influence would have some effect in procuring assistance for the bridge. In that I think they were not disappointed, and I wonder if the reason that the government are continuing the project is not on account of their promises of support made long ago. I find in the minutes of the Bridge Company that at a meeting held in September, 1897, Mr. Parent stated that he had seen Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who stated that the subsidy could not be voted at the next session owing to very grave reasons, which were privately explained ; but Sir Wilfrid wanted the company to proceed, and they would be sure to get the necessary security to finish the bridge if it is not voted next session; Sir Wilfrid would send a letter guaranteeing the subsidy for the following session. So as early as 1897 we have the government practically pledged to furnish sufficient security to carry out the work. However, in 1903 the government secured the bonds of the company. In the meantime interim bonds had been issued to Mr. Davis upon which there was a discount of some $188,000. In this agreement it was provided that there should be new stock furnished to cover that issue. Evidently the Finance Minister considered that this had been very injudicious financing, and that what had been lost in that way should be made up. Had that been done simply I could have understood it, but when this new stock of $200,000 was practically added to the capital, the government undertaking to take the bridge over and to pay 5 per cent and a premium of 10 per cent, I do not think they in any way helped the matter. It has been said that the sale of the bonds at a discount of 40 per cent was justified in a way, because Mr. Davis would not draw any interest until the substructure was completed. However, he was paid some time within two years, and I notice he drew some $29,000 in interest, which I think was a pretty fair return for the money. It has also been said that the reason the bonds were sold in that way was because there might be a loss on them.

At any rate, the government accepts the statement made that this bridge will be a paying concern. Mr. Parent had made a statement which the government evidently accepted, that, taking out operating expenses in the first and second year, they could still pay 3 per cent and leave a balance of some $56,000, so evidently Mr. Davis was not likely to lose anything. Further, in securing these interim bonds, he practically got a mortgage on the bridge after the reconstruction of the company, which gave him a first lien and practically put him in a better position. As to his cheque being held, the statement is made that this practically carried out the legislation. I wish to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the Finance Minister, in giving his evidence, said that he would not consider that was carrying out the statute. When first it was brought to his notice he wrote to the Bridge Company drawing their attention to the fact that the statute had not been lived up to. It has been said that there was no harm in that, that Mr. Davis' cheque was taken and could have been cashed at any time. It seems peculiar to me that Mr. Davis should be so complaisant, that if he had nearly $100,000 in that he should pay his money and not secure his stock and have nothing to say. I think the history of this transaction, if completely followed out, would be very interesting.

In regard to the plans, the evidence of Mr. Douglas is that the plans on which this bridge was built were the ordinary bridge specifications of 1896, that even in the department after that these specifications had been amended, but that the original plans of 1896 were used as a specification for this bridge, and that it was considered that they were entirely inadequate and that new plans should have been made. When they were submitted to Mr. Douglas he found fault with them and criticised the unit stresses. After that Mr. Douglas had nothing more to say evidently in regard to the plans. Mr. Schreiber, who was a very busy man I understand, evidently considered that he had not the time to properly look after this work, and suggested to the government that they should appoint a bridge expert, which I think was a pretty good idea. It has been stated that the Bridge Company did not object to the appointment of Mr. Nichols. I find, however, in the report of the Royal Commission, a reference to this order in council. The commissioners state :

The policy of Mr. Schreiber was not in accordance with the wishes of the Quebec Bridge Company and its association—see letters, Hoare to Cooper, July 1, 1903 (exhibit 70 I); Parent to Fitzpatrick, June 29, 1903 (exhibit 70 T); Fitzpatrick to Parent, July 118, 1903 (exhibit 73 C)—and as soon as Mr. Cooper fully understood the deputy minister's plans he protested vigorously.

From that it is quite evident that the Quebec Bridge Company were not in accord with the appointing of an expert, and some of the correspondence in regard to that is interesting. Mr. Cooper objected, it is true, to the appointment of a bridge expert, and in a letter to Mr. Cooper from Mr. Deans, the chief engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company, there is a paragraph which I think is significant. It says :

The order in council was taken solely to save time and to have your approval of our details final and binding on the government—it simply being necessary to have Mr. Schreiber's signature as a matter of form.

That was the understanding of the chief engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company. In a further letter of August 1, 1903, he says :

I talked with Mr. Hoare over the 'phone yesterday (the service was not very satisfactory), and also wired him two long messages, and have received his reply, stating that 'he will take up the question with parties at Ottawa, and that we should go ahead, and if anything turns up to cause trouble tell Cooper to let me know at once.' I have written him again, and urged him to stop entirely this proposed plan, and explaining that the sole purpose of the order in council was to give you the final authority to settle all details, the government approval being a mere formality.

It is evident that the construction and carrying out of the plans were all in the hands of the bridge company, the government exercising no supervision. It is true that Mr. Cooper was considered an expert authority, and the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. A. K. Maclean) read the finding of the commission, in which they speak of his ability. But he did not read the whole passage. It continues :

In considering Mr. Cooper's part in this undertaking, it should be remembered that he was an elderly man, rapidly approaching seventy, and of such infirm health that he was only rarely permitted to leave New York. Mr. Cooper assumed a position of great responsibility, and agreed to accept an inadequate salary for his services. No provision was made by the Quebec Bridge Company for a staff to assist him, nor is there any evidence to show that he asked for the appointment of such a staff.

From the evidence of Mr. Holgate, it is apparent that while Mr. Cooper was considered to be simply the consulting engineer, he was compelled to act as engineer in chief, and there was no engineer in chief on the works. The commission find directly against that system, and say distinctly that while it would not have been possible, probably, not to prevent the fall of the bridge, it would have been quite possible had there been a man in charge who had authority to stop the work there to prevent the loss of life which occurred. The report goes on to say that the staff in charge of the bridge as a whole was inefficient and not well organized. This, I think, shows there was practically no superintendence for the government, little interest was taken in the matter, it being left wholly in the hands of the Bridge Company, and, as the report says, everything was taken, as far as the government was concerned, as merely a matter of form.

The resolution which is before the House in regard to taking over this bridge is evidently supplementing the promises made to these gentlemen who took up the stock. In regard to this $200,000 of stock, it is also interesting to note that of the directors of the Bridge Company, with the exception of Mr. Parent, there was not a man who took over $400 of stock. It is also very interesting to note that the voting of this money for their services and divided up, simply comes to a sum which supplements their subscription to make up this extra amount of $200,000. The greater part of this is made up by the railways and Mr. Davis. When Mr. Sharples was giving his evidence I asked him if he had subscribed to the undertaking previous to the government guaranteeing the bonds, and he said: No, he was not foolish enough for that. So this stock was perfectly good to these gentlemen. They were sure of 5 per cent. I believe assurances must have been given them to that effect, and that this action of the government is simply in pursuance of that promise. I believe that this matter should be left in abeyance until the government has a report from a board of engineers who will say whether this work is of any use at all or not and whether the bridge shall be built there, and make sure of all the conditions which will make the superstructure practicable, without paying money where there is no need to pay. I protest against it. If the government intend to build the bridge, they have all the necessary authority in the charter of the Transcontinental Railway. They do not need to go to the Bridge Company and beg for money which was put up to replace bad financing on the part of the company.

So far as the construction of bridges is concerned, New York maintains a board of three or four, every one of them an expert bridge builder. All construction of bridges is placed in the hands of this board. The details are all carefully gone into and everything provided for. But the government of Canada undertook the largest engineering feat in bridge building in the world simply relying on the efforts of a bridge company with little or no capital, allowed that company to select all the engineers, and even interfered with the action of their own officer when that officer sought to have greater precautions taken. Mr. Douglas was evidently too critical in his supervision of affairs, and so he had nothing further to do with them. That the company had their way in this, and that Mr. Hoare was aware of it, is shown by the letter of 27 May, 1907, which Mr. Hoare writes to Mr. Deans, the chief engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company, in which he draws attention to the fact that the regulation of the government in regard to the plans had not been followed out. He said:

> The signature of the government engineer does not comply with the government regulations. The order in council passed some years ago only authorized certain modifications in the specifications and details from time to time if found necessary.

And he closes his letter:

> We are under very close investigation now.

Showing that there had been little or no superintendence of the work done.

I agree heartily with the minority report. I think it is in accordance with the facts. And I hope the government will not put through the resolution this year with regard to taking over this work. Before sitting down I desire to put on record in 'Hansard' the report of the minority:

1.—Financial responsibility of the Quebec Bridge Company.

The Quebec Bridge Company was incorporated in 1887, and, having regard to its undertaking to construct a bridge across the St. Lawrence at or near the city of Quebec, the cost of which would be at least $6,000,000, the company was from its inception deplorably weak financially.

2. Of its modest nominal stock capital of $1,000,000, never, until the arrangements of 1903 to be presently referred to, did the money paid in by its shareholders exceed $65,000, and even of that amount, so petty for such a vast undertaking, some $20,000 consisted not of cash found by the promoters but of the proceeds of fees voted by them to the directors and paid by the country itself for their services in that capacity.

In 1890, the province of Quebec voted to the enterprise a subsidy or aid of $250,000, and further aid of $300,000 was granted in the following year by the city of Quebec.

The parliament of Canada also voted $1,000,000 in aid of the undertaking payable as construction progressed.

The site being chosen, the substructure of the bridge progressed; but in 1903, the company had more than exhausted all its resources, its subsidies as well as its small paid up stock capital were expended, and it had a floating debt of $779,550. It was then without money or means to further prosecute its enterprise.

At this time, the Dominion had undertaken the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway whereof the Quebec bridge was recognized as an essential and most important portion. The early completion of the bridge was not only of national concern as a matter of trade and commerce, but any delay or misadventure would be fraught with most serious responsibility to the lessees of the eastern section of the great railway of which that bridge must necessarily be a part.

In the condition of the bridge company, it was not possible to prosecute its undertaking without the aid of the Dominion, and refusal of such aid would have ensured a forfeiture and abandonment of the venture. The obvious duty of the government, therefore, was to refuse aid, to deal liberally with the promoters, and to take over the property and hold the bridge as a public work.

The president and directors of the bridge company, hopeless though their case appeared to be, succeeded in inducing the government to agree to guarantee the company's bonds up to $6,688,200, the amount required to meet its liabilities and finish the bridge.

An order in council was thereupon passed on the advice of ministers setting forth the terms and conditions of the proposed guarantee and an Act of parliament was passed to confirm the same. The Act referred to (3 Edward VII., chapter 54) was passed in the last hours of a long session, and in the course of a few days was rushed through the Senate and House of Commons with undue haste and without opportunity for deliberation and proper consideration.

10. One of the conditions enacted was that before the guarantee should be given, the company would procure the subscription and full payment in cash of $200,000 of additional stock, and apply the said money to a specific object, the restoration of $188,000 discount which had previously been allowed on an issue of the company's bonds.

11. That condition was only in part fulfilled, though the government, having accepted the written certificate of the company's officers that it had been fully carried out, guaranteed the new issue of bonds. Attention is called to the admission of the Hon. the Finance Minister in his evidence, that had this deception been known to him, he would not have authorized the execution of the guarantee.

12. The government's present liability or outlay on bonds, subsidy and special guarantee to the Bank of Montreal is $6,322,008.13 represented as follows:

Subsidy.. .. .. .

your committee had not that experience and professional skill absolutely essential to the safety and success of so vast and so exceptional an undertaking. That engineer was obliged to rely upon the advice and assistance of a consulting engineer, who, though of high reputation, is advanced in years, and had to be consulted in New York, where he lives. When the catastrophe was imminent, one of the staff was obliged to visit New York to obtain the consulting engineer's advice as to what action should be taken.

21. The government, wholly unrepresented upon the work, left the public interests absolutely in the hands of the Quebec Bridge Company, which company, in the opinion of your committee, was incompetent, and, having regard to the relations between it and the government, utterly unfitted for that position.

22. Your committee are of opinion that the government stand without much, if any, useful recourse against the Quebec Bridge Company for the sums disbursed or for which the government has rendered itself liable.

Subsidy..	$ 374,353 00
Liability on bonds with interest to April 30, 1908..	5,773,223 77
Extra amount claimed by Bank of Montreal..	174,431 13
	$6,322,008 13

23. It does not appear that proper, or any, inquiry was at any time made on behalf of the government with regard to the ability of the Phœnix Bridge Company to perform its contract, or to make good any failure or default therein, nor as to its ability to make compensation where such may be due.

24. The evidence before your committee establishes that in any future construction of this magnitude it will be advisable that plans and specifications be passed upon by a board of at least three competent engineers.

25. Your committee desire to express their opinion that the submission to parliament in the last few hours of a session of matters of such moment and complexity as were involved in the said Act of 1903 is fraught with danger to public interest, and, in their opinion, the instance herein alluded to was, under the circumstances, inexcusable.

Mr. LORENZO ROBITAILLE (Quebec County). I did not rise immediately after the last speaker, because I thought that some hon. member would maintain the government side of this question. I observe with interest the resolution of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham). It provides for the taking over of the property, assets and franchises of the Quebec Railway and Bridge Company. Speaking in this House on April 28 last, I said :

I desire to enter my protest against the adoption of this proposed loan and ask the government to take over the works and complete them.

I am pleased to see that after the lapse of a year the government is ready now to work in the line of the suggestion I made in that speech. I criticised the lack of sufficient government control on the works and also in the finances of the company. Speaking first as to the works themselves, if we study the real cause of the action we shall find that in the commissioners' report, page 9, it is stated :

(a) The collapse of the Quebec bridge resulted from the failure of the lower chords in the anchor arm near the main pier. The failure of these chords was due to their defective design.

Now, were the plans upon which these competing companies were trying to get the contract made by the government engineer? They were not. If you read the report of the commissioners, again at page 9, you will find that they say :

The design of the chords that failed was made by Mr. P. L. Szlapka, the designing engineer of the Phœnix Bridge Company.

This design was made in 1897 and accepted in 1900. At page 14 of this report we find it stated that the Quebec Bridge Company, in 1898, applied to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for approval of the plans and proposed site of the bridge. This application was dated January 8, 1898, and signed by Mr. Parent, and the superstructure is identical with the plan of the Phœnix Bridge Company, dated December 7, 1897. These same plans were reported on by Mr. Cooper on June 23, and at page 15 of the commissioners' report we find what Mr. Cooper says :

From the facts and considerations as stated above, I find the cantilever superstructure plan of the Phœnix Bridge Company an exceedingly creditable plan from the point of view of the general proportions, outlines and its constructve features.

I also find that it is designed in accordance with your specifications.

No wonder it was the Phœnix Bridge Company themselves who prepared the plans upon which Mr. Hoare made the specifications in asking for tenders for construction. It is not surprising then to find that the Phœnix Bridge Company were so much in accord with the specifications.

Mr. Cooper adds in his report that it is the best and cheapest plan and proposals submitted to me for examination and report.

Here I invite every hon. member to read between the lines and he will see that the tenders were never accepted formally. If you look at page 16 of the report of the Royal Commission you will find this :

No positive action was taken as to the tenders, and no one of those was formally accepted then or at a later date.

What was the result ? The result was that seeing that no other plans were submitted save that of the Phœnix Bridge Company, I mean responsible plans—because the other plans and estimates were not bona fide in their method of tendering.

If you look on page 35 of the commissioner's report you will find the same thing :

In September 1898 the bridge contracting firms were asked to submit tenders upon their own designs, to be drawn in accordance with certain specifications.

The specifications, as I said before, given by Mr. Hoare were taken from the design drafted by the Phœnix Bridge Company themselves.

Practically this meant that each bridge company was asked to spend several thousand dollars on the preparation of plans, and that in return it was given an opportunity to bid for a contract to be let by a company of weak financial standing. The result was that although the magnitude of the work placed it outside the limits of established practice, most of the tenders submitted were made from immature studies based upon insufficient data.

Supporting what I said, that on account of the Phœnix Bridge Company having the advantage in filing the plans from which Mr. Hoare took his specifications, no other responsible company would dare to put up some serious plan because it would have involved an expense of a few thousand dollars. There was only one company that had a chance to get its tender accepted.

The evidence shows that the Phœnix Bridge Company gave more time and attention to the competition than any other tenderer, but the error afterwards made by it in assuming the weight of the structure for final designs shows how faulty the estimate accompanying its original tender was. We consider that the procedure adopted in calling for tenders was not satisfactory in view of the magnitude of the work, and was not calculated to produce the most efficient results.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have proved by the commissioner's report that there was a lack of bona fides in the method of tendering. Now what was the first hitch after that ? This company spent a few dollars for the preparation of plans which were taken from the suggestion of the Phœnix Bridge Company, and finding that they had not sufficient money, came to the government and made a request for a million dollars subsidy. This is what the report says :

But when, for the purpose of a guarantee of $6,178,200, the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, found himself called upon to examine for approval, the plans and specifications of the bridge, he formally applied for authority to employ a specially qualified bridge engineer. Such authority was granted by order in council of January 21, 1903.

Now why was Mr. Schreiber's request made to the government ? A few years previously when a million dollars guarantee was demanded from this government, Mr. Douglas, the railway engineer of this government, was asked to submit a report upon the plans given to him by the Bridge Company. I must say in passing that it is the rule of this government never to grant a subsidy for a bridge until their engineer has previously examined the proposition. Mr. Douglas, however, not having the weight of authority that Mr. Cooper has, condemned the plan. Later on he condemned the same plans when they came back in 1903. Mr. Speaker, who is the chief engineer, found himself placed between Mr. Cooper's high reputation and his more humble assistant Mr. Douglas, because these two gentlemen did not look at the matter from the same engineering standpoint—Mr. Schreiber finding himself in this dilemna, and not knowing what responsibility he was assuming, came to a logical conclusion and said to the Governor in Council, I want an assistant to help me sift out the difficulty and see what responsibility I have taken. The Governor in Council thought that the idea was a good one, and an order in council was granted on the 21st of July. What happened then ? If you look through the evidence given at this inquiry you will find that the pivotal point on which revolved the relations between the government and the Bridge Company, has been, not the contractors of the company, but Mr. Parent the president. Mr. Parent communicated with Mr. Cooper and said to him, how is it that a man of your standing should be subordinate to a humble engineer who has no standing ? It seems but right that if we keep you as consulting engineer, we should not be embarrassed by correspondence with regard to the acceptance of certificates or approval of plans. The first tiding we knew, Mr. Cooper came up to Ottawa and said he would not play second fiddle in this matter—that is at least the information that is given us, and immediately the government found that Mr. Cooper's views were all right. Now let us see what Mr. Schreiber says in making his demand :

I would suggest that the department be authorized to employ a competent engineer to examine from time to time the detailed drawings of each part of the bridge as prepared, and to approve of or correct them as to him may seem necessary, submitting them for final acceptance to the chief engineeer of railways and canals.

Mr. Cooper strongly objected, saying, this puts me in the position of a subordinate which I cannot accept. Mr. Cooper at the same time wrote to Mr. Schreiber :

I do not see how such engineer could facilitate the progress of the work, or allow me to take any responsibile steps independently of his consent.

Exactly what I said. He found it would jeopardize his authority and naturally delay the work. Consequently he was given a free hand. Further on the Governor in Council recalled this permission of 1903, and in August, 1905, they said this :

Provided the efficiency of the structure be fully maintained to that defined in the orginal specifications attached to the company's contract.

I must say that that condition of the order in council was not fulfilled, because there was no engineer competent to say who was to determine the efficiency of the structure, and to see that it was maintained to the standard the Governor in Council stipulated.

The Governor in Council intimated that Mr. Cooper must have some one else with him acting on behalf of the government to check over his work. The order of the Governor in Council was not heeded and Mr. Cooper was the only man who was responsible for the approval of the plans and for checking the work for the government and for the bridge company. Probably it might interest our good friends on the other side to state how Mr. Cooper was engaged. He was not hired in the ordinary manner. The first thing he states before the commission in New York is that about February 25, he received a communication from the Quebec Bridge Company asking if he would be prepared to make an examination of these plans and he consented. There was no suggestion that he should become the consulting engineer for the greatest bridge in the world ; simply that he should give the company expert advice upon the plans which would be submitted.

Some months later——

He states :

—Messrs. Parent, Hoare and Barthe came to New York to see him. He stated to them what his fee would be for inspecting and passing on the plans.

They asked him then if he would act as consulting engineer, not resident engineer, but to stay in New York and advise them from time to time when they wanted his services.

Mr. A. MARTIN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that Mr. Cooper at least once if not twice asked to be relieved of his duties as superintending engineer ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I will come to that later. I have here Mr. Cooper's deposition, but probably the House does not desire me to answer the hon. gentleman's question at the present moment as I will come to it in the course of my speech. He said that Mr. Parent left him with the impression that the plans would be sent to him, but no definite step was taken at that time regarding his appointment as consulting engineer. Later on Mr. Cooper asked if he was limited to a certain specification because he found that the financial status of the company was not altogether satisfactory.

Mr. Cooper's opinion seemed to be that the amount of funds available was to a certain extent limited, for when asked if, at the present date, and with the advantages of several years' additional experience, he would still confirm his additional recommendation both as to the type of the structure and the merit of the design, he said: 'Yes, if under the same limitations that existed at that time as to the amount of funds apparently estimated for its construction.' That is an important point, because the structure was apparently limited to the amount of funds they had in sight as far as it was impressed on me.

I could go farther on this point but it is useless to weary the House. We are all aware of the fact that Mr. Cooper was not given the opportunity he should have had to control plans because he had to keep them within a certain limit of cost as he said before. There was no definite figure stipulated, but he knew that the financial condition of the company was weak. The company commenced the construction of a bridge that will cost about $8,000,000 with financial resources amounting to about $1,000,000.

Mr. TALBOT. Is the hon. gentleman now stating that Mr. Cooper made the plans of the bridge ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I do not state that Mr. Cooper made the plans but he approved and corrected them, he was responsible for them which is just the same as if he had done it himself because it was up to him to see that they were all right. I think I have proven that the whole responsibility in connection with the bridge rested on the shoulders of Mr. Cooper, that there was no supervision on the part of the government although an order in council has stipulated that there should be supervision in order to ensure efficiency in the construction of the work. The commissioners report at page 33 :

The connection of the government with the enterprise provided the means for building the bridge, and the final approval of plans rested with it, but in no way did the government exercise any check on the work itself, or any authority over the contractors. The administration of the contract and the disposition of the funds supplied by the government were left entirely in the control of the Quebec Bridge Company, subject to the approval of the estimates by the government inspector, and except that the quantities of material were checked at Phœnixville by a clerk appointed by the Department of Railways and Canals, and an officer of that department visited the bridge in connection with the checking of estimates, there was no supervision on the part of the government.

We find that the commissioners admit that Mr. Cooper was under a severe handicap. They say this :

In considering Mr. Cooper's part in this undertaking, it should be remembered that he was an elderly man, rapidly approaching seventy, and of such infirm health that he was only rarely permitted to leave New York. Mr. Cooper assumed a position of great responsibility, and agreed to accept an inadequate salary for his services.

For the reason, as it was stated to him, that he would be engaged in a consultative capacity rather than to oversee the work.

No provision was made by the Quebec Bridge Company for a staff to assist him, nor is there any evidence to show that he asked for the appointment of such a staff. He endeavoured to maintain the necessary assistants out of his own salary, which was itself too small for his personal services, and he did a great deal of detail work which could have been satisfactorily done by a junior. The result of this was that he had no time to investigate the soundness of the data and theories which were being used in the designing, and consequently allowed fundamental errors to pass by him unchallenged.

If there had been a joint engineer to control the work with Mr. Cooper in accordance with Mr. Schreiber's wishes the errors which were proven to exist by the evidence would have been detected and in all probability remedied, and if they had been remedied the bridge certainly would not have gone down. Mr. Douglas of the Department of Railways and Canals appeared before the committee and in a few minutes I will read an extract from his statement. Mr Douglas reported when the plans and specifications were submitted to him that he did not approve of the unit stresses which had been adopted, which were acted on and which were still embodied in the plan when the bridge fell. If that matter had been looked carefully into when it was pointed out I am sure that the bridge would not be down to-day. At all events the criticism of the Royal Commission on this point is clear enough. Now, in answer to my hon. friend from Queens, P.E.I., (Mr. Martin) let me point out that Mr. Cooper, because of the limited financial resources of the company, the disadvantages under which he laboured, his age, his want of facilities to look properly after this work, wrote to Mr. Parent three years before the construction of the bridge was commenced, as stated by Mr. Cooper himself before the commission in New York that he would not be able to continue the work and asked to be relieved.

ASKED TO BE RELIEVED.

Nearly three years ago, before construction work at Quebec was commenced, Mr. Cooper informed Mr. Parent that he would never be able to go to Quebec again, and asked to be relieved from his responsibilities, as he felt impossible to give the work the attention that he should, as he was under the ban of his physician.

Mr. Parent responded that they never intended to let him go until the bridge was finished, as they had confidence in him and wanted his services continued. He told Mr. Deans the same, but neither would hear of it at all as they did not know of another one who could be mutually agreed upon.

There was no government control, no joint engineer, Mr. Cooper was supposed to have the full responsibility and Mr. Cooper had said that his old age and his feeble health, caused his doctors to order that he should not leave New York. All these considerations were put aside. It may be inferred from the action of the directors that they were better pleased that Mr. Cooper should remain in New York than be on the bridge where he could check things and prove that the work was not done in a business like way. Then, the responsible head of the whole organization in Quebec was Mr. Hoare. Mr. Cooper in his disposition says:

All important changes were referred to Mr. Hoare and I suppose through him to the department.

But the department was not in a position to ascertain the correctness of these plans from an engineering point of view and so Mr. Hoare was the only one to look after them. Mr. Hoare's responsibility is recognized by the commission who in their report (page 49) says:

The company's directors did not seem to have realized the importance of the duties pertaining to Mr. Hoare's position and whilst believing that he was not competent to control the work they still gave him all the powers and emoluments of the chief engineer.

There was a letter written by Mr. Parent to Holgate when it was admitted in 1898 that Mr. Hoare had not the ability to undertake the responsibility of chief engineer but still Mr. Parent said: Never mind, we know you are not capable but you shall be chief engineer. Why was Mr. Hoare accepted under such circumstances? It seems to me that a grave responsibility rests on whoever was the main instigator of the retention of Mr. Hoare and Mr. Cooper who admitted their inability to cope with the magnitude of the work. The report goes further:

Mr. Hoare personally considered that he was in general control of the construction, and that everything was under his jurisdiction except the approval of plans; the evidence shows that he gave much personal time to the oversight of the fabrication of the material, to inspection of the erection and the preparation of the estimates; it also shows that he lacked a comprehensive grasp of the work that was being done by the inspectors, and that although his subordinates entertained the highest personal regard for him they did not look to him for advice when technical difficulties arose.

Was Mr. Parent really the man who was running the Quebec Bridge Company. Probably some hon. gentlemen may challenge that statement but if so I refer them to page 29 of the evidence given before the committee when Mr. Barthe, the secretary of the company, was examined, and Mr. Barthe knows all about the Quebec Bridge Company if any man knows. Mr. Barthe was examined by Mr. Chisholm:

Q. You are aware that the chairman had a good deal of travelling and a good deal of work to do other than what the other directors did ?—A. Certainly. He was the soul of the whole thing and he practically did all the work.

I go further and I say, that Mr. Parent was responsible for the bad as well as for the good in the management of the Quebec Bridge Company. Mr. Parent ignored Mr. Douglas's report which was subsequently proven to be correct. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Maclean) admitted that the unit stresses were the fundamental mistake in the design. If we admit the truth of the maxim, that to err is human, is it not strange that an undertaking of that magnitude should be left in the hands of one single man ? Mr. Douglas condemned the unit stresses, and I quote from his evidence :

Q. Are you in a position to state that this accident could have been avoided by the adoption of the unit stresses you recommended ?—A. To answer that question is a very large statement but I think—

Q. But speaking generally it would ?—A. Yes, I may say that the experiments that have been made at Phœnixville as a result of the collapse of this bridge corroborate my recommendation.

Mr. Holgate stated about the same thing but still Mr. Parent ignored Mr. Douglas's report against the first plans and he ignored the logical recommendation of a joint engineer to supervise the technical accuracy of the plans. Mr. Parent also ignored Mr. Schreiber's admission that he was not in a position to be able to take the responsibility for the approval of these plans and he ignored also the Eiffel committee's report. I may say in passing that the greatest committee of engineers in the world is what is known as the Eiffel Committee in Paris. Eiffel was a great engineer who promulgated certain theories as to stresses and the flexibility of steel and on account of his great scientific attainments the French government permitted him to exemplify his theory by erecting the Eiffel tower for a period of five years. The French government has been so impressed by the successful carrying into practice of the theories of Eiffel that they have allowed the Eiffel tower to stand. There is therefore a committee of engineers in Paris which studies every important work in the engineering world. The Eiffel committee reported that they did not see their way clear to accept the present cantilever scheme unless there was a double resting point provided, and that otherwise the bridge would be exposed to great inconveniences. Time has proven that these defects in the bridge existed and the bridge has fallen. In the presence of all these facts I say that there rests on the president of the bridge company the responsibility of wilful neglect which may probably be extended to criminal negligence ; because a man who undertook such an important position should have known his own responsibility, and if he did not he was not fit for the job.

I say that a man guilty of such carelessness or want of business ability or the ordinary precautions which anybody should take in the ordinary walks of life must in the eyes of God and man be held entirely responsible for the neglect of a duty which was entirely under his control. What was the verdict of the coroners jury at the inquest in Quebec, which was held to ascertain the cause of the death of those poor three score men who went down with the bridge ? These people were in a hurry to pack that jury with shareholders of the company, who rendered a verdict in consideration of their own interests, and went further than a coroner's jury is expected to go, in stating that all of the necessary precautions were taken by the Bridge Company to prevent the collapse. An ordinary motorman who runs down a vehicle or a human being in the streets, is immediately brought before the courts and tried for manslaughter ; but when these high and influential men cause an accident which destroys the lives of three score men, nobody even considers who is responsible. I think it is the duty of this parliament or of the courts of this country to sift this matter to the bottom and see who is responsible. This government does not know what kind of a white elephant it is getting when it agrees to take over the property of this Bridge Company under the broad wording of this resolution. The probability is that this parliament will have to pay out of the public treasury for the errors of incompetent and irresponsible people.

Another point which I wish to impress on the House is that the government had not sufficient control over the finances of the company. The want of such control resulted in loose business methods being resorted to by the company, amounting almost to misrepresentation. I read in the report :

One of the conditions engaged was that before the guarantee should be given the company would secure the subscription and full payment in cash of $200,000 of additional stock. That condition was only in part fulfilled, through the government, having accepted the written certificate of the company's officer that it had been fully carried out, guaranteed a new issue of bonds.

I must say that when the attention of the Finance Minister was called to this, he admitted in his evidence that had this deception been known to him, he would not have authorized the execution of the guarantee. The Finance Minister is a high official upon whose statement relative to finances we can rely, and he considers that the terms of the statute were not fulfilled. How was it ? We find that $2,500 of stock was acquired by Mr. Parent which was paid for not in money, but in services rendered ; $2,500 was taken by a few of the directors in sums varying from $400 to $100; and the balance of the stock, amounting to $119,900 was taken by Mr. Davis. He signed no subscription list. If you look at the evidence on page 59 of the report, you will find that Mr. Bell, the auditor of the Department of Railways, said that he did not think that the subscription list was signed at that time. Mr. Davis gives his cheque, and it lies in the till from January 27, 1904, to February 21, 1907, a cheque that is worthless. It may be said that Mr. Davis had good financial backing ; but I would like to pay my debts in that way, by giving cheques to people who would not present them at the bank. Later we find that Mr. Hays took $25,000 worth of stock, which reduced Davis's to $94,900. The argument was used that it was desirable that Mr. Davis should control stock because he was a contractor ; and it was anticipated that the Grand Trunk and other railways would take some ; but up to the present time no responsible railways have greatly interested themselves in the bridge project, on account of the terminal arrangements that were attempted to be forced upon them. When they saw that, they simply withdrew, and never showed any enthusiasm for the project.

Mr. TALBOT. With the permission of my hon. friend, who I think wishes to be fair, I would ask : does he persist in saying that no railway corporation in Canada took any stock in that company or any interest in the construction of the bridge ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I did not say what the hon. gentleman states. I said that no responsible railways showed any enthusiasm for the project. Furthermore, why have the railway companies never put up a public kick against the terminal arrangements ? As I have already told the Prime Minister, it is because the president of the Bridge Campany is a Transcontinental Railway Commissioner, who has a good pull with the Railway Department and has much to do with the railway legislation of this country ; and as the railway companies have to come here from time to time for legislation, they do not want to incur the displeasure of Mr. Parent, and they thought that instead of opposing the project, it was better for them to show their disapproval by not showing any enthusiasm for it. If I were allowed to give publicly the information which I have received privately from some of the highest officials of railway companies in this Dominion, I would say more ; but I will not, because it might harm them and would not help my case. That cheque of Mr. Davis was uncertified, and was never presented at the bank for three years, but last year, when the Bill for transferring the bonds of the company to the government was before the House, I made a speech which according to the judgment of some men on the ministerial benches was somewhat erratic ; but the Finance Minister, as a practical man, took a hint from it, and thought it advisable to see if there was any foundation for some of the statements made. Mr. Bell went to Quebec in August, and he found that that cheque was there. Mr. Bell said : 'I cannot enter that in my report ; it has either to be paid or the shares will have to be given back.' What happened ? The financial stringency was in full swing, and I know the result, because I saw Mr. Davis in the Bank of Montreal, and he had a very long face, and it was only on the 2nd of February that he was in a position to say to the bridge directors : 'You can pass my cheque now ; I have funds in the bank to meet it.' They put the cheque of $94,900 in the bank, and issued a certificate of stock ; but there was no interest charged to Mr. Davis for these three years. If you look up Mr. Davis' statements, however, you will find that he charges interest for every day that the government does not pay his bills after they are handed in. Why should he be so eager to collect from the government this small amount of interest as compared with the three years' interest on $94,900. In the face of that the Finance Minister admitted himself they do not live up to the statute. Mr. Parent writes to the Finance Minister :

I hereby certify that additional stock to the extent of $200,000, has been duly subscribed to the capital stock of the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, and paid up in full.

A cheque, until it has passed through a bank, is not considered worth more than the paper it is written on. The presumption might be that the cheque is worth something, but in fact the cheque itself is of no value ; still the bridge directors accepted it. I shall read part of a letter which I wrote to the Prime Minister last summer advising him of certain facts, and I shall allow the country to judge whether or not my statements have been justified by events. I wrote :

To the item of the Quebec bridge I especially draw your attention. As you are aware I have had occasion to communicate with you upon this important subject and as I then told you it was my intention to study the question and treat it according to its merits. During your last trip, when parliament was considering the Bill authorizing the government to lend the Quebec Bridge Company $7,000,000, I expressed my views upon the subject. Those views are known to the majority of the electors not only of my riding but also of Quebec city, who are about to awaken from their lethargy judging by the agitation made in Quebec in reference to the demand for 50 feet of land for the Ross Rifle Company under the impression that they were combating a suggestion of Mr. Parent. They are to-day aware of the enormous speculation proposed all along the cove and it would be advisable for you to well study the question, as your government in the future may be seriously embarrassed by it, and I would be sorry to see a scandal, just when we are on the eve of a general election, which will be keenly contested. Such a scandal would mar your reputation as an honest politician and a great Canadin, a reputation that is recognized by both parties, and political history wlll be forced to attribute to you, as to the great Mercier, certain unconscious weaknesses in favour of your friends. I hope that nothing will occur that will cast upon your government discredit before the whole country.

That was on July 29, 1907, and on August 29 the bridge fell.

Mr. D. ROSS. Carried.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I hear the representative of the Great Northern speaking.

Mr. D. ROSS. I do not think the hon. gentleman should be permitted to say such things in such a cowardly way, expecting that people will not be able to hear them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the word cowardly is improper.

Mr. D. ROSS. I think it is myself, but I think the circumstances justify it. However, I will withdraw the word. The hon. gentleman made his statement in such a way that he did not expect me to hear it: I hear the representative of the Great Northern. I do not think the hon. gentleman should have made a statement of that kind, and I want him to explain now why he did make it.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Since the hon. member is so generous as to withdraw the word 'cowardly,' and in order not to disturb his quietude, I will say he is not the representative of the Great Northern; is that sufficient? The Prime Minister said:

I do not understand what you are saying, but if you have any accusations to make, make them specific.

I then sent him a short affidavit, which reads, in part (translation):

In March, 1904 or 1905, an amount of more than $800,000 was paid by the Ottawa government to Mr. M. P. Davis, contractor for work done at the Quebec bridge. In August of the same year the said account, certified by the engineer in chief, E. A. Hoare,——

There we see the utility of Mr. Hoare for the Quebec Bridge Company.

—and another who is said to be an employee of his and paid as above was presented to the accountant of the Bridge Company, the deponent, in order to place his books in conformity with the said account being instructed by the secretary that it was the desire of the directors that his books should accord with this account.

A direct intimation of the wish of the company to have the books made to suit the account if there was a greater payment than his books showed the company owed to Mr. Davis.

In checking the account the accountant found an error of $165,000 overpaid to Mr. M. P. Davis, although it was certified, as follows:

1. An amount of $130,000, balance of the provincial subsidy in favour of the bridge company and transferred to the said Davis in part payment of work done upon which amount he had already cashed $30,000 paid in the beginning of June of the same year. This amount of $130,000 was not credited in the account filed by Davis to the company.

2. An amount of $35,000 which represented a draft which the bridge company had made on the said Davis to finance this draft on, being accepted, was entered to the debit account of the bridge company in Mr. Davis' books. This draft on maturity was paid by the Bridge Company and in the said account is charged to the debit of the bridge company.

In looking over Davis' accounts filed here in Ottawa we find that $35,000 is entered as paid in cash to the bridge company. When you accept a draft or give a note, it is bills payable, it is not cash. It may have been a clerical error; but whatever it was, it was sufficient to induce the Finance Minister to pay on it and not discuss the item.

This is not the only loose thing in connection with the Bridge Company. I mentioned a few moments ago that when they organized the company $50,000 was actually paid in cash, $15,000 of paid-up stock was given for services, $200,000 was supposed to be subscribed by statute, making $265,000; but still the government was content to make that company responsible for $8,000,000 and more. Now, I have some information which I give under reserve, but I think it will be interesting to this House as showing the excellent existing relations between Mr. Parent and Mr. Davis. I have been informed that on different occasions Mr. Davis, knowing how Mr. Parent likes little attentions, has bought certain jewellery for Mr. Parent's family. Furthermore, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, the late Minister of Justice, when he went on his summer vacation at Rivière du Loup one summer, enjoyed greatly the nice team of driving horses and equipages which belong to Mr. Davis. The whole thing works in the same——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I direct your attention to the statement against Chief Justice Sir Charles Fitzpatrick which has just been made. Surely such statements are not allowed in this House against a gentleman occupying such a position in this country.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the statement is hardly a proper statement to make.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. My Georgian friend (Mr. Talbot) likes to hear his own voice now and again. Furthermore, I have information to the effect that in Quebec city, in a certain year, Mr. Parent obtained from this government a supply of manure from the quarantine station in Lévis, and that he used Mr. Davis's scows to transport it to his farm at St. Augustin. It is current rumour in the city of Ottawa that the house he occupies to-day is the gratuitous gift of Mr. Davis——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. What is the point of order ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Robitaille) has no right to make insinuations of that kind against any man unless he is prepared to back up his statements with evidence. He has a right to make charges but not to make insinuations.

Mr. SPEAKER. The rule applies to certain named persons.

Mr. LENNOX. This gentleman does not come within the class of persons referred to in the rule.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I will accept the ruling of the chair——

Mr. FOSTER. I do not understand that the ruling of the chair is that any except certain privileged persons shall not be mentioned in this House. It is a mere matter of the convenience or necessity, or taste of the member who makes use of the name ; but there is no point of order involved. No member of this House must go away with the idea that Mr. Speaker can arbitrarily rule a man down.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. My contention is, subject to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, that no member of this House has the right to make insinuations against any man. If he has charges to make, let him make them. But to make insinuations of that kind with 'It is rumoured,' 'I am informed,' 'I have heard,' is absolutely out of order.

Mr. SPROULE. That is very strange doctrine to preach in this House. Any member of this House is himself the judge of the propriety of the way in which he shall speak of any person to whom the rules do not apply. He is within his privileges, and there is no rule that I know of under which he can be called to order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The only rule applicable to such a question is Rule No. 19, which says :

No member shall speak disrespectfully of His Majesty, nor of any of the Royal Family; nor of the Governor or person administering the government of Canada; nor use offensive words against either House——

And so on. As this rule does not apply there is nothing in the rules or practice providing that what the hon. gentleman is saying is out of order.

Mr. GALLIHER. Is there not a rule under which there must be some relevancy in discussion ? Are not members required to discuss the subject before the chair ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is quite another point. If that rule be invoked, I believe the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Robitaille) is not relevant.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. To satisfy the scruples of hon. members, I will not go further on that line. I will give positive facts. Probably it would interest the members of this House to consider for a moment : Who is this Mr. Parent ? He was a very poor man in Quebec not many years ago ; to-day he has a three thousand-dollar piano, and his house is fitted accordingly. He became mayor of the city of Quebec at a time when the finances of the city were in good shape. To-day, Quebec is one of the most heavily taxed cities in the Dominion. He became Minister of Crown Lands of the province of Quebec, and in ten years sold a larger area of public lands than had been sold in the province of Ontario in thirty years.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, the hon. member (Mr. Robitaille) will observe that the point of order was taken of relevancy. The hon. member's present observations are hardly relevant.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. Then, let us consider this point : What is the effect of Mr. Parent's friendship with Mr. Davis ? A part of it can be summarized in this form :

Discount on bonds, $188,721.

Unpaid shares (unaccepted cheque), $119,-900.

Excess on bill as established by affidavit, $165,000.

Certifying of Davis' bills by engineer incompetent and uncontrolled.

Obtaining the contract for 150 miles of construction on the Transcontinental, Quebec to New Brunswick.

It is useless to say that every one knows how estimates are made. No one can make an estimate exact to the dollar. I have done some contracting work myself, and I have seen cases where the estimate has been made at $7,500 for a certain piece of railway work, two-thirds of a mile, when we did it for $3,000 odd. We know that contractors work at less than cost and yet, somehow, they make piles of money.

It is useless to say what effect all this has upon Parent's standing in the district of Quebec, this acceptance of little favours which can be used for electoral purposes. If I were good friends with Mr. Davis I would go round with my bag. But I understand the other man would have it. Well, we shall have a chance to meet him.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the bridge is down. Some tell us that we should not cry over spilt milk. What is to be done for the future? If the government desires to stand in a logical and honest position before this country, its duty is to appoint a committee of independent engineers to study the most advisable site for the future bridge. In this resolution there ought to be a sum of $25,000 or $30,000 appropriated to defray the expenses. This committee of experts should make comparative estimates between the present bridge site and railway terminals in the city of Quebec and the site and terminals if the bridge is built by the island of Orleans.

I may say that several prominent engineers who have no political influence admit that the latter plan is the most practicable for the development, not only of Quebec city, but also of that portion of Montmorency county which is known as the Island of Orleans. If the government is going to pursue the present plans for terminal facilities they will have to do it on ground artificially made. When these estimates have been made up, let them be reported to parliament with the plans suggested, not leaving every tenderer to make his own plans. Further, I would suggest that there should be a committee to superintend and control the work during the whole period of construction. When plans are finally adopted, call for tenders. I claim that the latter suggestion should receive some attention from the government; as to the rest, they can do as they see fit.

Mr. W. A. GALLIHER (Kootenay). I shall take up little time in discussing this matter. I shall not follow the wanderings of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Robitaille), nor do more than refer to the questionable taste he has exhibited in reading private correspondence and in attacking the private character of individuals. If he is satisfied that is his mission in parliament and his duty to his constituents, then I am not going to question it. He certainly has not confined himself to matters within the purview of the resolution under which this report was brought down and is now before the House. He has gone beyond it to the extent of discussing matters entirely irrelevant and extraneous to it. Furthermore, he has made statements that are not at all facts, but have no other source than his imagination. The hon. gentleman made a speech in this House some time ago, and I had the pleasure of examining him in this committee on that subject, and as a sample of the weight that may be attached to many of his statements I will read one of his answers to my question. In his speech he stated that by reason of certain affiliations and associations of some of the officers of the Quebec Bridge Company, we might expect all sorts of calamities to occur. He hedged on that when it was brought to him directly, and said that he did not say that as a matter of fact. Then I asked him:

Then your speech has really no relation whatever except in the sense that such and such things might happen?—A. Yes.

Q. Now to your knowledge, or so far as you know, they never did occur?—A. Yes, that is why I was asking the government to take the thing under its control, because I was foreshadowing the result.

The hon. gentleman's speeches in this House on that occasion and on this occasion are largely imaginings. Now he tries to convey to this House the idea that one of the reasons why this bridge collapsed was because of the weak financial standing of the company, in other words, they were not strong enough to put such a project through as was necessary for the purpose. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that such is not the case. The Royal Commission, when they went into that matter, found that the financial status of the company had nothing whatever to do with the accident to the bridge. On that point I will read their finding from paragraph (e):

The failure cannot be attributed directly to any cause other than errors in judgment on the part of these two engineers.

(f) These errors of judgment cannot be attributed either to lack of common professional knowledge, to neglect of duty, or to a desire to economize.

If you refer to the appendix to the report of the Royal Commission where they deal with the financial situation, you will find that the conclusion they arrived at was that in no respect whatever had the financial condition of the company anything to do with the lamentable accident that occurred. My hon. friend from Quebec county has also made this an occasion to vent his spleen upon the Hon. Mr. Parent. Now, whatever information may have been furnished to the hon. gentleman for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), and whatever the object of that information may have been upon which he felt bound, rightly so I admit, to move in this House for an order of reference that these matters be inquired into, whatever be the object of that information, and whether it was furnished by the hon. member who has just taken his seat or some outside party, I do not know. Evidently, if it was furnished by the hon. member who has just taken his seat, one of his objects at all events was if possible to procure evidence that would discredit in some way the Hon. Mr. Parent. Now, I am not here as sponsor for Mr. Parent or any other man. But having had this matter under consideration, being one of the commissioners who sat on this inquiry, when I hear these statements made regarding that hon. gentleman as chairman of the Quebec Bridge Company, I would refer hon. members to the evidence of the co-directors of Mr. Parent on that company, Mr. Price, Mr. Sharples and Mr. Dumoulin, and others who were examined before us, and they will see what confidence is reposed in Mr. Parent by his associates. These are the only two points in the hon. gentleman's remarks that I propose to deal with. I am sure that when he reads his remarks and the insinuations and imaginings that he has caused to be spread on 'Hansard,' he will find a great difficulty in understanding really what he has been talking about for the past hour.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) in speaking upon this report, seemed to think that the report of the committee as presented was not full enough, and had not dealt with the matter with sufficient completeness. There were, under the order of reference, three matters which the committee were asked to take into consideration. The first matter was to investigate 'the conditions and guarantees under which this government paid moneys to the Quebec Bridge Company, and indorsed or guaranteed the bonds of the said company.' That, we have set out in the report brought down to-day by the committee. We have not gone into detail or made comments upon it but we have taken the essential parts of the evidence that has been produced in connection with it so that they may be read to the House and the country. In that respect I think we have complied fully with the first branch of this inquiry. The third branch of the inquiry is in regard to, 'what security the government at present possess for the sums already received by and guarantees given to the company.'

As to that my hon. friends who have joined in the minority report differ from those of my colleagues who have joined with the chairman in the report of the committee. There may be an honest difference of opinion as to what the value of these securities is. We, in our judgment, have set out what in our opinion the security is that is held by the government for the money they have expended, so that it becomes a matter of opinion as to what the actual value of this security is. We know what the cost of the substructure, the terminals, the connections with these terminals and the roadbed that has been built was and we know that all these are in existence to-day. We know that there is a quantity of structural material delivered on the ground. All these things are assets that are available and will be available to the government in taking this work over. With regard to the second portion of the inquiry as to what measures were adopted by the government to ensure the preparation of suitable plans of construction and the proper execution of the same,' very little, if any evidence, was adduced before the committee that was not adduced before the Royal Commission. A considerable part of the inquiry in that particular necessarily had reference to matters of a technical nature which no member of the committee is really able to cope with in an intelligent manner, or with sufficient intelligence to enable him to speak authoritatively on the subject. The Royal Commission made their findings upon that point and we refer to them in the report that we present to the House. We say that inasmuch as a portion of the inquiry was of a technical nature and has been dealt with by men competent to deal with it we deem it inadvisable to express any opinion upon that point. So that I think we cannot be charged by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) with not having brought down a full report within the purview of the resolution under which we were acting. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier also mentioned the fact that we had made no reference whatever in this report to the deplorable loss of life. I do not know exactly what reason my friend had for making that remark but I am sure that he will not accuse any other hon. gentleman on that committee with feeling any less keenly the regret which every one must have felt at the deplorable loss of life that took place in that accident. We all deplore the fact. But, I do not think it will do any good now to refer to it. I do not think that was within the purview of the committee. We might, of course, have mentioned it, but I cannot see what would have been accomplished by our having done so. My hon. friend rather plumed himself on the fact that he and his colleagues had come to the same conclusions as had the members of the Royal Commission. I have no objection to my hon friend's statement in that connection, but I would point out that if they came to the same conclusions and justify their conclusions by saying that they agreed with those of the Royal Commission some of the conclusions which were embodied in the report of the Royal Commission that my hon. friend refers to might very well in fairness have been placed in the minority report. My hon. friend sought to convey the impression that the Phœnix Bridge Company were trying to build this bridge as lightly and as cheaply as possible; in other words, that they were skimping their work. That is what I would infer from the expressions made use of by the hon. gentleman. I would refer the hon. gentleman and the House to paragraph L of the report of the Royal Commission which says:

> The work done by the Phœnix Bridge Company in making the detail drawings and in planning and carrying out the erection, and by the Phœnix Iron Company in fabricating the material was good, and the steel used was of good quality. The serious defects were fundamental errors in design.

If my hon. friend agrees with the findings of the Royal Commissioners does not this statement convey to his mind, as it conveys to my mind, the impression that in so far as the material furnished by the Phœnix Bridge Company, the construction under the direction of the Phœnix Bridge Company and the materials manufactured by the Phœnix Iron Company were concerned, they were good. The statement or inference of the hon. gentleman that the work was being skimped, that it was not being done as thoroughly as it ought to have been, or that the material supplied was lighter than it should have been, in the face of this paragraph from the report of the Royal Commission, falls to the ground.

Mr. BARKER. Do they not say the design of the bridge was bad, and was it not the design the government were to approve of?

Mr. GALLIHER. They said the error was in the design, but I was pointing out that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier conveyed the impression that the Phœnix Bridge Company were not supplying proper material and were trying to work upon a cheap scale, and I was proving to him by the report of the Royal Commission, with which he says he agrees, that such is not the case. There is a section of this report of the Royal Commission which has reference to Mr. Cooper himself and which I fail to find included in the minority report. The report of the Royal Commission says:

The professional record of Mr. Cooper was such that his selection for the authoritative position that he occupied was warranted and the complete confidence that was placed in his judgment by the officials of the Dominion government the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company and the Phœnix Bridge Company was deserved.

There is a high tribute to Mr. Cooper, and if as my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) says the minority report contains practically all the findings in the report of the commission, in all fairness that should have been included. The evidence deduced before this committee shows that the directors of the Quebec Bridge Company were capable business men; men of varied experience in business life. It appears also that the affairs of the company were conducted honestly and economically and that the sole aim in view of the company was the building of one of the greatest bridges in the world. The evidence, and the finding of the Royal Commission go to show that it was the desire of the Phœnix Bridge Company and the desire of the iron works to supply the best material, and further, that it was the desire of Mr. Cooper to make the Quebec bridge the crowning work of his life as an engineer. The desire of all parties concerned was centred in bringing to a successful conclusion the completion of this great bridge over the St. Lawrence river at Quebec. As to the manner in which the bridge company conducted its business I would refer to the report of Mr. Bell, who was sent from the Railway Department to audit the accounts. He says:

After careful examination of every voucher since the 19th October, 1903, I find nothing which had not been properly authorized and which might not be considered as legitimate expenditure of a joint stock company.

That report of the auditor puts it beyond all question that the affairs of the Quebec Bridge Company—whatever their financial standing may have been—were managed economically and in the best interests of the company and of the country. As to the certificate that was given to the government I shall not refer to it further than to quote some evidence that was taken before the commission. At page 71 of the report Mr. Bell says:

Q. Do I understand you to say that the proceeds of the $200,000 of the new stock was used for the purposes of the company? Is that what you say?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But they were not used for the purposes of fulfilling the agreement which required that the money should be used to pay off the discount on the interim bonds?—A. The Act, as I stated in my report, was not strictly complied with in that respect.

Q. You stated that in your report?—A. I stated that in my report; the Act was not strictly complied with.

Q. It was not complied with at all?—A. In that respect it was not complied with at all.

Q. There is no limit. You say 'strictly complied with'?—A. I mean speaking of the whole Act. It is admitted that particular part was not complied with, but the $200,000 was subsequently used and paid out, and if that had not been there the $200,000 would have been taken out of bond account for the same purpose; so that one replaced the other. The net result in the end is the same. That is, if the Act had been strictly complied with the company would have been in exactly the same position to-day.

Q. The company used the $6,800,000 guaranteed bonds to raise money for their purposes. If they had got the cash from Mr. Davis and applied it there would have been so much less necessary from the bonds at the moment?—A. At the moment, but they would have had later to take from bond account a similar amount to meet the accounts which were paid by the money secured from the stock.

Therefore, although it is true that the Act was not strictly complied with in that respect yet the result in the end was the same. The reasons have been already given and commented on as to why this cheque was not immediately cashed, but as Mr. Bell deposes the net result in the end was the same as if it had been cashed in the first instance. One other point I wish to draw attention to, and that is with reference to the appointment of a commission of engineers. When Mr. Holgate was giving evidence before our committee, Mr. Monk questioned him as to his views on how a structure of this kind should be initiated, and he gave it as his view that there should be a commission of engineers who would go into all the details of design and of drawing plans. The questions and the answers being general in their nature I wanted to know if he was speaking with reference to what he would have done in the first instance before it was known an accident would occur, and Mr. Holgate frankly acknowledged that he was speaking simply in the light of facts and information he had acquired during the investigation. Therefore, on the principle that hind sight is better than foresight, Mr. Holgate would not go so far as to say that if in the first instance he had been undertaking this work he would have done what, in the light of the knowledge he afterwards obtained, he would consider necessary. He gave it to be understood that if he were undertaking this work in the first instance he would not say that a commission of engineers should have been appointed. I do not desire to detain the House at any greater length.

Mr. GEORGE PARENT (Montmorency). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any length on this matter, on account of the lateness of the hour; but I wish to make a few remarks in answer to the hon. member for Quebec county (Mr. Robitaille). I notice that when that hon. member speaks under oath he speaks very differently from what he does when he speaks in the House of Commons. That hon. member a few days ago was called before the committee appointed to investigate this Quebec bridge matter and was asked by the hon. member for Kootenay (Mr. Galliher) certain questions in regard to a speech which he made in this House last session. I wish to read this evidence in order that the House and the country may know that when the hon. member for Quebec county speaks under oath he speaks in a different way altogether from what he does in the House of Commons. I remember well the words that the hon. member uttered last session, when he made statements that at the time we were not in a position to answer; and that is the reason why we thought it proper to bring him before the committee in order that he might have the opportunity of repeating those statements under oath. I will not read the whole of his evidence but simply the more striking portions of it. One statement made by the hon. member for Quebec county in his speech in the House last session was that the premier of the province of Quebec, at the time the subsidies were granted for the Quebec bridge, happened to be the president of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. The hon. member is supposed to have certain instruction if not education; but he did not know that the president of the bridge company was not at the time the subsidies were granted the actual president of the Transcontinental Railway Commission. The following is his evidence before the committee in regard to another statement:

Q. Do you know when that subsidy was obtained?—A. No.

Q. Now, a little further on in the same speech you stated (reads): 'In 1901, after having secured this subsidy, a company was formed called the Quebec Terminal and Railway Company. Associated with Mr. Parent were Hon. John Sharples, E. Taschereau and Gaspard Lemoine.' Do you know as a matter of fact that Mr. Parent was ever a member of that terminal company?—A. I must say, in passing, that there are a few statements in that speech that were not correctly taken by the stenographers. In reading it up this summer I found, for example, that certain figures do not corroborate certain statements. I corrected some of these with the original that I had when I gave them out, and I think personally that Hon. Mr. Parent's name was not mentioned in the House by me at the time. I read from the statute-book the names of the parties who had registered themselves when they asked for letters patent. Mr. Parent's was not, if I remember right, but there was Mr. Edmond Taschereau, who is a notary in Mr. Parent's office.

Anybody who has the slightest knowledge of legal matters in the province of Quebec knows that a notary is altogether different from a lawyer; but when the hon. member for Quebec county speaks of Mr. Edmond Taschereau as if he were a lawyer, he shows how much he knows about matters of that kind. As to the personal attacks made upon persons who are dear to me, I will not refer to them; the hon. member's condemnation will come later. He has given us only an exhibition of the last kick of a dying ass.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. PARENT. I withdraw the expression, Mr. Speaker. I intended to say a few words on this subject, but as it has been so fully discussed, I do not think it is necessary for me to go further into the affairs of the bridge company. I wish to refer to one statement in the minority report to the effect that the Quebec Bridge Company was not in a proper financial condition, that it had too small a capital, to undertake such a work. If there is anybody who ought to know something about that, it is the people of the city of Quebec themselves; and both sides of politics in that city took one view of the question, and everybody there is perfectly satisfied with what has been done by the company and the government. On this point, instead of attempting to make any argument myself, I will read an appreciation contained in the only Tory English paper that we have in the city of Quebec. This is taken from the Quebec 'Chronicle' of December 14, 1907:

The company was taunted with the smallness of its capital in comparison with the magnitude of the work to be achieved, and was represented as a gang of exploiters, whose only object was to make a good thing out of the government. Now in order to properly value the justice of these accusations it will be well to recall the circumstances previous to and at the time of the company's organization. The want of a bridge over the St. Lawrence had long been felt, and, as the years progressed, became stronger and stronger. There was a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Montreal, it is true, but that bridge was, and still is, the means of conveying Canadian produce to American seaports to the manifest detriment of our own ports and shipping. When the Conservatives held power, Sir Charles Tupper came down to Quebec and promised the government's support towards the construction of a bridge, but he made it a condition that the Quebecers should show the genuineness of the interest they professed to feel by initiating the enterprise, and investing capital in it. Either there was a misunderstanding about this condition, or the Quebec men of means in those days were unwilling to comply with it and the project dropped. As time went on the need for the bridge became more apparent; the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company were opening out a new and immensely fertile region in the Hinterland of the province; the wheat fields of the Northwest had grown to such an extent that the government of the day considered it necessary to provide another outlet for their products, in such a manner as to find a vent for them in Canadian, and not American seaports. Then the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier did practically what that of Sir Charles Tupper had done. It promised effectual co-operation in the building of the bridge, but it was still co-operation only. Then, mindful of what had happened in the past, Quebec gentlemen formed the present bridge company, lest the opportunity should again be lost. It is probable that they were inspired by motives of self interest as well as of patriotism, but they can scarcely be blamed for that, had they not acted as they did, the bridge would not have been commenced.

As for the smallness of the capital invested, it must be remembered in the first place that there are no multi-millionaires here, and in the second place that the company was required as the necessary impetus to set the work going, and not to carry it on to its completion. Nobody expected that a company could be formed in Quebec that would build the bridge out of its own resources, and scanty subsidies from the Dominion, provincial and municipal governments. This was well understood from the outset, and it was well understood also that the work being one of national importance the government would sooner or later intervene, and practically, if not actually provide for its completion itself. What was required was an initiative taken by Quebecers, and that was afforded by the company that is now blamed for doing so, and reproached for the small amount invested. But, if it had not come forward, what then?

I quote this to show the sentiment prevailing in Quebec. In conclusion I would say that the people of Quebec feel, and I as a member from the district of Quebec feel that we should be thankful to the government, thankful to the ministers who have helped towards building this bridge which will result in making Quebec a great city and in giving to the harbour of Quebec the place it should have under the sun of our Dominion.

House divided on amendment Mr. Monk.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) if he intends to answer certain questions I put upon the Order Paper with regard to the Intercolonial Railway ? I refer to questions 1 and 2. I desire to ask the same question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Brodeur) with regard to question 8.

Mr. GRAHAM. I understand that questions will be called to-night or to-morrow. I have the answers to question No. 1 here, but I am not quite sure about the other.

Mr. FOWLER. Could you give the answers now ?

Mr. GRAHAM. It would not be in order to give it now. Questions will be called before prorogation.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Have the orders of the day been called ? If not, on the calling of the orders of the day, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether it is the intention of the government to facilitate the passage of the Senate Bill relating to the water carriage of goods. This is on the Order Paper under 'Public Bills and Orders'. There is a strong demand in favour of the measure—almost unanimous support I believe. I would like to know the intention of the government.

Mr. FIELDING. There is that Bill and also another Bill from the Senate, the two being in the same position. In answers to the hon. member's suggestion, I may say that, some time to-morrow, or to-night if time will allow, we shall be glad to have them called up.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS—TELEGRAM FROM MR. SIFTON.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have received from Mr. Sifton the following telegram:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, July 16, 1908.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
Ottawa.

Please read following to House: Mr. Boyce's statement that improprieties exist in sale Indian lands unfounded, statement that application put in under name different from real applicant at my suggestion or request or with my knowledge absolutely untrue. I do not know that Mr. Philp has or ever had any interest, did not know Messrs. Wilson and Reesor had acquired these lands until a year after sale took place, sale made by officials in ordinary way and under ordinary rules given so far as I know, no privilege whatever to purchasers except what were open to any applicant, I unqualifiedly deny the existence of any improprieties or irregularity whatever.

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

QUEBEC BRIDGE AND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolutions :

Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the government of Canada pursuant to the agreement between it and the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company, dated the 19th day of October, 1903, and set out in the schedule to chapter 54 of the statutes of 1903, to exercise the right to take over the whole of the undertaking, assets, property, and franchises of the Quebec Railway and Bridge Company, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the said agreement and the said Act, and that the moneys required to pay therefor be appropriated for that purpose out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee on the resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the estimated amount of the expenditure ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I thought that, as it is so near six o'clock, the hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) would prefer to have the resolution reported and the discussion of these points take place on the Bill. The estimate for the construction of the bridge, of course cannot be given, until we have the report of the board of engineers.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection to reserving the discussion until the committee stage of the Bill.

Resolution reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. GRAHAM moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 217) respecting the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SALE OF ORDNANCE LANDS.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following resolutions :

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to confirm the following orders in council, that is to say:

(a) An order in council dated the sixteenth day of May, 1904, authorizing the sale to the corporation of the city of Toronto of certain ordnance property in that city, consisting of the whole of the military property lying between and including the old fort and the exhibition;

(b) An order in council, dated the sixth day of December, 1905, authorizing the sale to the city of Montreal of the ordnance property in the St. Lawrence river, opposite the said city, known as St. Helen's Island: and

(c) An order in council, dated the twenty-seventh day of July, 1907, authorizing the conveyance to the city of Montreal of a portion of the ordnance property in that city known as Lafontaine park, and to authorize the sale and disposal of the said ordnance property in the manner and subject to the conditions by the said orders in council, respectively, provided and subject to such further and other conditions as may be imposed by His Majesty and accepted by the corporation of the city of Toronto and by the city of Montreal, as the case may be.

2. Resolved, That the purchase moneys received from the corporations of the city of Toronto and the city of Montreal for the said ordnance properties may be used and applied and are hereby appropriated to and for the purposes, of the purchase of sites and construction of building thereon for military schools of instruction in connection with the permanent force in those cities, respectively.

On section 2,

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN. Is it the intention to make any stipulation for the maintenance of the old fort in Toronto when it comes into possession of the city?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. Do I understand that the government sells to the city of Montreal, St. Helen's Island for so much?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. BERGERON. And the city of Montreal, as compensation, deeds to the government part of Lafontaine park?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not exactly. In the Bill which I shall introduce, the orders in council referred to in this resolution are printed in full. But in the order in council relating to the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers, the two matters are kept separate. The fact is that St. Helen's Island was under lease to the city for certain purposes. The city wished to acquire it, and the government agreed to sell it for a certain sum of money after it had been appraised. The city had been occupying the whole of Lafontaine Park for many years, and having improved half of it, the city wished to acquire Lafontaine Park and the department agreed that the half which the city had improved should be deeded to the city, and that the city should give up any claim it had on the other half so that the department might have the use of the other half for the purposes of drill. At the same time, it is understood that when it is not occupied by the department for parades the city shall have the use of the other half.

Mr. BERGERON. I suppose that this will be left a great deal to the discretion of the hon. gentleman and the city of Montreal when the time comes. He knows that there were objections on the part of many citizens to giving up any part of Lafontaine Park.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There is no intention to construct military buildings on that half of the park, but merely to use it for the purposes of military parades.

Mr. HAGGART. What do you do with the proceeds of the sales?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is provided for in the Bill. The money is to be expended in the purchase of sites in Toronto and Montreal.

Mr. KEMP. What is the purchase price of the site in each city?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $200,000 in each case.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and agreed to.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 218) to authorize the sale or other disposal of certain ordnance lands in the cities of Toronto and Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I wish to say to the committee that in introducing my resolution I omitted to state that His Excellency had been apprised of the subject matter of the resolution, and recommended it for consideration.

On section 2,

Mr. KEMP. I would like to inquire from the minister if he has received any representations from any one in Toronto in respect to the street car service running through these grounds?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. When the arrangement was made with the city of Toronto, the papers in connection with them were laid on the table two or three years ago, it was stipulated on the part of the government that the old fort and the old burying ground should be preserved by the city, that is the condition on which the property is handed over to the city. It is to be used for park purposes exclusively.

Mr. HAGGART. Why do you not reserve a part for the purpose of the public buildings that you intend to put up in Toronto?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The city of Toronto was anxious to have this land. They have had seventy-five acres of it for many years, and they had a lease before that, and had practically become the users; so they thought it desirable that they should become the owners. We have got a fairly good price for it and we have purchased, or the city has purchased for us, a farm at the very low rate of $20,000 and that farm is to be transferred to the government as soon as this legislation goes through, and the balance of the money will be used for the purpose of constructing buildings for the military school at Toronto.

Mr. KEMP. I asked the minister if he had received representations with reference to the street cars going through it?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have stipulated with the city that the fort should be maintained and restored, and of course if the street cars were to go through it or injure it in any way that would not be an observance of the conditions. I think there was a further order in council with reference to this very matter which said that nothing of the kind, no railway of any kind could be carried through the Fort without the consent of the people of Toronto; it must first be permitted by by-law of the city.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EDMONTON, YUKON AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 213) respecting aid for the extension of the Edmonton, Yukon and Pacific Railway—Mr. Graham—read a second time, and House went into committee thereon.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the Bill exactly in the same terms as the resolution?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN.

Mr. GRAHAM. Exactly.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Bill (No. 214) respecting certain aid for the extension of the Canadian Northern Railway.—Mr. Graham—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is this in the same form as the resolution?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, exactly.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—SEED GRAIN.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) promised to lay detailed information on the table of the House in reference to the buying and distribution of seed grain in the west. I have not noticed that it had been brought down.

WOOLLEN INDUSTRY AND THE TARIFF.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a notice in the papers of a petition forwarded to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association setting forth, in a memorandum, the state of the woollen industry in Canada and it was stated that the Prime Minister had made a reply. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he would think it well to lay on the table to-morrow the petition so that it may be within the information of the House.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I will do so to-morrow.

MR. CONGDON'S ACCOUNTS.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) received any information from the Yukon as to the question he asked by telegram in reference to Mr. Congdon's accounts as administrator and whether any audit had been made by the Yukon Council?

Mr. OLIVER. I got a reply. I will try and bring it in the morning as I do not have it with me now.

FINANCIAL REVIEW.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I want to make a few remarks with reference to the financial condition, as it appears, and the outlook on the basis of that condition. It has been usual of late years for the opposition to make a summing up of the matter, presenting the figures and, to a certain extent, embodying their own position with regard to it which custom will not be departed from on the present occasion. It seems to me that it is particularly timely at this period to review some of the more recent events and transactions in relation to Canadian finances and to present in concise form the condition of things as it appears at the present time. The government have been in power now for about twelve years. It is an old story to make mention of the principles they professed and the policies they propounded before they came into power. That has been gone over in successive years until I think there remains not very much more necessity for mentioning it in a review of this kind.

The three principal points in connection with the finances of Canada are: the taxation collected from the country, the expenditures which are made, and the increase or otherwise of the public debt resulting therefrom. The House knows that the Liberal party before 1896 professed to be in favour of low taxation, declared that the taxation at that time imposed was excessive, and promised that when they got into power it would be their privilege and duty to reduce it. To-day the matter stands something like this; that the per capita taxation of 1896, $5.46 per head, was in 1908 raised to $11.70 per head. The total taxation of 1896, amounting to $27,700,000 was raised in the last year to $73,000,000, an increase of $45,200,000, or 163 per cent increase in volume of taxation. The student of the history of taxation would find that $252,000,000 in taxes has been paid during the administration of these gentlemen more than if the level of the taxation exacted in 1896 had been maintained, and that in the eleven years and three quarters of the administration under review $544,000,000 have been taken from the people in taxation, an average of about $48,000,000 yearly, and that each day there is collected in Canada a little over $200,000 as against a daily collection of $76,000 in 1896. There are not many more than six millions of tax payers in 1908 as compared with about five millions in 1896; so that the increase in rate, in volume and in yearly amount of taxation has been increased far away and above the increase of population.

Coming next to expenditures, we find that the party which when in opposition were opposed to the expenditure of that time as being alarmingly excessive, have raised the per capita expenditure of the country from $8.14 in 1896 to $18 in 1908, and the amount of the expenditure from $41,700,000 in 1896 to $112,000,000 in 1908, an increase of 70½ millions in that period, being an increase of 165 per cent. It is interesting to know that in that period of eleven years and three quarters $833,000,000 have been expended by this government of economy, which amounts to $71,000,000 yearly, and that the average daily expenditures of the country are $303,571 as against $114,000 in 1896. Although this has been the history of the expenditure of the country during that period, when we approach the year 1908-1909 we find that the expenditure authorized and contemplated is far and away the greatest of any year in the history of Canada. The following table shows the estimates of 1907-1908 and the estimates of 1908-1909 in parallel columns:

	1907-8.		1908-9.
Supplementary	$ 2,105,105		$ 5,329,633
Main	103,689,519		119,237,091
Main supplementary	11,018,605		10,665,657
Other items	100,000		2,850,000
Bounties (estimated)	2,500,000		2,875,000
		$ 121,413,229		$ 140,957,381
Excess, 1908-9		$19,544,152
Subsidies—
Bridges	15,000		800,000
Railways	5,000,000		22,566,300
		5,015,000		23,566,300
Loans—
Quebec Bridge		6,678,200
Montreal Harbour		3,000,000
C.N. Ry. guaranteed bonds				11,067,000
Total		$ 136,106,429		$ 174,586,681
Excess, 1908-9 over 1907-8		$38,480,252

This is extremely illustrative when we take into account the condition of financial affairs in Canada and throughout the world at the present time as compared with the expenditures for 1907-1908. Where you would naturally look for prudence and economy and if anything a curtailment of expenditures, you find a very large and significant increase. There is no indication in this of any appreciation by either the Finance Minister or the government of the condition of the country or the financial conditions prevailing in the world. If they have any appreciation of those conditions they have not met them as most prudent men in business, banking, commercial or other positions always are ready and think it prudent to do. But the expenditure as outlined for the present year has a feature in it which is somewhat different from the feature of last year as I find by looking over the items of estimates, particularly of the supplementaries. These are what you might call pregnant estimates. A very large portion of them are for the beginnings of works which in the very hurried and altogether inadequate examination that could be given as the estimates were passing the House, promised to run into very large figures before the works for which these are the initiative votes shall have been carried to completion.

There is also this year the item of railway subsidies amounting to some twenty-three to twenty-five millions of dollars which of course extends over a period of years and calls for large sums if we take it for granted that these are bona fide enterprises and will be carried out. Looking over these proposed expenditures and indeed over the expenditures of this government for the last five or six years, there seems to be no species of expenditure which is barred from public help; to expend seems to be the great object of each department and there seems to be no discriminating sense as to what are proper objects for the expenditure of Dominion moneys and what should be avoided. The limited examination which was made in the Marine and Fisheries Department, and which I believe if made in almost any other department of the government would be equally indicative of the general tenor of the expenditures, has shown I think to the satisfaction of everybody who has read that report and the evidence, that there was, according to the commissioners, an utter lack of care and prudence and business foresight, and in fact of directive power and of conscience in the expenditures which were made. During the second commission we have had the fact brought out that over $200,000 were actually thrown away within the last two or three years in the Marine and Fisheries Department alone on account of the patronage list purchases within the knowledge of the deputy and the officers which were larger than they should have been had the patronage list not ruled and had business foresight and discrimination been exercised. Instances were brought of articles which cost to manufacture $400 or $500 being sold to the government for between $4,000 and $5,000 on the excuse that a patent was concerned, but the validity of that excuse fell when the commissioner, Judge Cassels, pointed out that no government was justified in paying more than a reasonable profit and that they had the legal remedy in their own hands with reference to patents which were granted by the Dominion. What one noticed in these expenditures is the utter lack of plan, of uniform development of the different resources and capabilities of the country and the extremely experimental and haphazard way in which expenditures are gone about. When one comes to look into it, the key to the situation is found in this that in not one case out of ten is the expenditure begun because of and consequent upon an examination as to whether the public interest requires the expenditure. The expenditure is begun because of party and political pressure, and the desire on the one hand to get money to expend within the member's locality and on the other hand to help the supporting member by that species of patronage. I am convinced that every year millions of dollars would be saved to this country if expenditures were made upon the basis which I first mentioned rather than upon the second which is the basis generally acted upon. But one of the most reprehensible troubles that we find in the passing of votes and initiating expenditures and undertaking works in this country is what I hope I am not too strongly naming as the absolutely false presentation of the expenditure made, either through carelessness or worse, by the department or the minister in charge of the measure. It is getting to be almost the invariable rule that you cannot place any reasonable reliance upon the estimate which a minister will give you with reference to the completion of a work undertaken by a vote of parliament and the granting of money for the initial proceeding. I shall mention only two instances of this, one on a small scale and the other upon a very large scale. First we have the Royal Mint. It was at first opposed by the Minister of Finance and argued out of the House. It was then made an election cry in British Columbia and 'Maxwell and the Mint' was pasted up through the constituency because of Mr. Maxwell's receiving an assurance from the Prime Minister, after the Minister of Finance had decided it was not necessary to build a mint, that a mint would be built in Vancouver or Victoria, I forget which, Committed in that way the Finance Minister had to eat the leek and bring down the proposition. The statement made at that time was that the mint would cost us an outside figure of $350,000.

And, although there was some opposition, the House concluded that if a mint could be had for that amount it would pass the vote; and it did pass it on these statements. The mint, when it is finished, will have cost very close to $650,000, which is $300,000, or nearly that, above the estimate. That is an example which might be multiplied hundreds and hundreds of times, showing under-estimates of the same extent, or at least a great extent in what may be called the smaller transactions. But what I wish to take up now is the large transaction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. That was a very large undertaking for the people of this country, an important undertaking. And in presenting the scheme the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were on their honour and under the responsibilty of their high offices which have the power of authoritative recommendation and explanation of the measures which are brought before the House. The Prime Minister studied the question, gathered his information and placed a statement of the financial cost to the country, as well as other statements, before the House. And on that statement of the Prime Minister of Canada, the House voted, and the country voted afterwards to sustain what the ministry and the House had done. The Finance Minister is the exponent, naturally, of the financial side of every proposition. And, with his experience, with all the expert aid he had at his side and of which he says he availed himself, he made his statement of what the money cost to this country would be. I propose to-night to examine briefly these statements and to contrast them with what we find the conditions to be in 1908 when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is fairly starting out on the course of construction. Now, I do not wish to misinterpret any one, so I am going to carefully quote from 'Hansard' of 1903, where the speech of the Prime Minister is reported, the statements he then made. At page 7690, he said:

Now, it will be asked: What is to be the liability of the government, what are they to contribute to the building of this railway, for they must contribute something? What they contribute is simply this—the payment of the interest for a certain number of years. It is provided that the bonds shall run for fifty years. During the first seven years, the company are not to be called upon to meet the interest, which is at three per cent; that interest will be met by the government. After seven years the company shall pay the interest if the proceeds of the road are sufficient to earn three per cent. But, if the proceeds are not sufficient to earn three per cent, the payment shall be made by the government.

At another place, on page 7690 he said:

Now, Sir, what is the liability incurred by the government for the construction of this road from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean? Assuming that the road across the mountain is 600 miles long, the cost of construction will be $18,000,000 and the total interest for three years will be $3,780,000 This is the whole of the liability which is incurred by the government for the construction of the railway from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean.

This deals with the western section. He takes up the eastern section also. Then he goes on to explain the whole contract and says:

The total sum of the money to be paid by the government for the construction of that line of railway from Moncton to the Pacific ocean will be in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000 or $13,000,000, and not a cent more.

Having just before that explained that, just as we paid the interest on a certain amount for the Mountain section, we have to pay the interest for seven years on the cost of construction of the eastern section, he made the summation I have just read. There is nothing in the whole of the right hon. gentleman's speech in any way to qualify that plain and definite statement.

Well, Sir, the Finance Minister takes up the matter later. I shall quote from him a little more at length. He first takes up the line from Moncton to Quebec. He says that the distance is 386 miles, but, in order to be certain he estimates it at 400 miles, and then, as reported at page 8584 of 'Hansard' of 1903, he says:

I am advised by competent authorities that, from the general knowledge possessed of that country, that road can be built at a very moderate cost. From Quebec or Lévis to near the point where the railway will leave the province of Quebec it can be built at a comparatively low cost. There is some expensive work in passing from the province of Quebec into the province of New Brunswick, and as you get into the province of New Brunswick, there are some portions which are moderately expensive. But I am informed that you can build a line through that country with maximum grades no less favourable than those on the Intercolonial Railway—though that is not as good a road as my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) wants—for $25,000 per mile. On 400 miles that would be $10,000,000.

From Quebec to Winnipeg I estimate the distance to be 1,475 miles. That is a larger mileage than some of my hon. friends have given. I am not trying in these cases to make the mileage small. I am advised by an engineer who has measured the distance that in putting it at 1,475 miles, I am making a liberal allowance. I put that down at $28,000 per mile, which I am advised is a fair estimate. Remember that in both cases we are speaking of the road only, without equipment. That would make the cost of that section $41,300,000. Taking these two together, we have the estimated cost of the eastern division at $51,300,000.

Being questioned as to whether that included interest during construction, he said that it did not, and continued:

The difficulty there, as my hon. friend will see, is that you can hardly tell what amount will be expended in each year. I have had a rough estimate of that made, and it can only be a rough estimate.

In the first year we would spend only a very small sum. After that, the expense would increase very rapidly. We would spend $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 a year. Distributing the amounts over the period of construction in that way, I estimate that at the end of the period, instead of the capital of the road standing at $51,300,000, it would stand at $54,609,676.

That is, the interest during the construction period is the difference between $51,300,-

000 and $54,609,676, or a little more than $3,300,000. Then he goes on to say:

The annual interest on that sum would be $1,638,290. We would be out of pocket that interest for seven years.

By 'that sum' he means the $54,609,676 on which interest at 3 per cent is to be paid and which is $1,638,290 per year.

So that if you multiply $1,638,290 by seven you will get the minister's calculation of the amount of interest we would pay without recourse during the seven years, and it would amount to a little over $11,000,000. With reference to the Mountain section, the minister then makes his calculation:

We only guarantee our three-fourths, which may be less than $30,000 per mile; but if it costs more the company must pay the difference. We do not guarantee at the outside more than $30,000 a mile, and estimating the length at 480 miles, our guarantee cannot exceed $14,400,000. On that sum the interest during seven years is to be paid by the government, and during another period of three years it is dealt with in the way I have already described. All we are under obligation to pay is seven years of that interest. At the expiration of the seven years, the company will pay its own interest, so that we will be out of pocket seven years' interest in the Mountain section, or interest on a total of $14,400,000, being 480 miles at $30,000 per mile.

The interest on that amounts to $432,000 per year, which multipled by seven, makes the amount that the Finance Minister calculated as what we would pay under the conditions of the contract on the Mountain section $3,024,000. The Minister of Finance then takes up the statement of the Prime Minister which had been criticised, and he confirms that statement.

My hon. friend the Prime Minister, in the course of his speech, said that we could meet the responsibilities of this contract by setting aside the present year's surplus, whch is roundly stated at $13,000,000. Hon. gentlemen opposite have thought that was a rash statement. I am convinced that the figures I shall be able to give to the House will show that my hon. friend's statement is substantially correct.

He then goes on to show it:

In the case of this sum of $54,600,676, which will represent the capital account of the eastern division at the time of its completion, the annual interest is $1,638,290, and we will be out of pocket that interest for seven years. Now if you apply to any actuary of repute in the Dominion and ask him what sum of money it will be necessary to provide to-day to meet the seven years' interest as it shall accrue, he will tell you that for the sum of $8,853,502 you can provide for those seven years of interest. That is to say, that if, instead of managing our money ourselves, we turned it over to an insurance company or a trust company, or any other company which deals in annuities, and it invested the money on the basis of three per cent interest half-yearly, it would provide for that seven years' interest if we would give them now the sum of $8,853,504.

He then goes on shortly afterwards to demonstrate what amount of money should be put in the same way to cover the interest that we would have to pay for seven years on that Mountain section:

I find by actuarial calculation, obtained from an actuary, that the present value of that is $2,334,575. That is to say, if we take $2,334,575 and lay it aside now out of our surplus, under the same process as I explained before, that will provide for the payment of seven years' interest on the Mountain section, as that interest shall accrue from year to year.

Then he goes on to take up the Quebec bridge. He estimates the cost of the Quebec bridge at $4,500,000, and he says that the Grand Trunk Pacific may well be charged $2,000,000 of that amount, and that for seven years on the same principle, we would be out of pocket the interest of that $2,000,000.

Applying the same principle of actuarial calculation, we could provide seven years' interest on that bridge by the sum of $324,246. We have not exhausted our surplus yet. We have only provided some $8,000,000 for one portion and $2,000,000 for another, and there is plenty still left. If we provide further out of our surplus the sum of $324,246, we can make provision for the payment of interest on that $2,000,000 for seven years. I add these items together. The present value, by actuarial calculation, of the cost of the seven years' interest on the eastern division, is $8,853,502. Seven years' interest on the Quebec bridge represented by the present value, $324,246. Seven years' interest guaranteed bonds, Mountain section, represented by $2,334,575. These sums make a total of $11,512,325. Why, we have some millions of a surplus left yet.

Then, in order to be absolutely certain, he says that although he believes that he has made a proper calculation as to the cost of the road, he adds 25 per cent to the cost, making the $25,000 eastern section cost $31,250 per mile, and the $28,000 for the other, to cost $35,000 per mile. Then he carries out the same acturial calculation, and says that to provide for that advance, if ever that advance is required, the actuarial sum required would be raised to $13,725,706. And if that were placed at 3 per cent interest compounded half yearly in 1903, it would meet every cent of the obligation the government would be under, on the increased estimate of cost that he gave in order to save himself.

Now, Sir, I do not think there is any misrepresentation in that statement of the position taken by my hon. friend. And how does it pan out? I have placed here in parallel columns, which I have given to the 'Hansard,' Mr. Fielding's estimate of 1903, and the facts as established in 1908, and they make very interesting reading.

Cost of Grand Trunk Pacific to government.

	As declared by Mr. Fielding 1903.	As demonstrated by facts 1908.
Quebec to Moncton.. ..	$10,000,000
Winnipeg to Quebec..	41,300,000

Interest during construction..	3,309,676	10,009,454
Total when constructed	54,609,676	$124,403,219
Interest for seven years thereafter..	11,468,030	26,124,676
Cost of terminals eastern division..	nil	4,591,250
Total cost 7 years after construction..	$66,077,706	$155,119,145
Interest for seven years Mountain section.. ..	3,024,000	11,304,300
Total cost to government of Grand Trunk Pacific..	$69,101,706	$166,423,445
Quebec bridge..	4,500,000	14,422,238
Total cash cost Grand Trunk Pacific and bridge..	$73,691,706	$180,845,683

The Finance Minister's statement was over $107,000,000 too little.

Now, it is fair to add the 25 per cent which, to make himself sure, as an afterthought he added to his estimate. That will give you the sum of $12,825,000 to be added to the original estimate of cost. But, giving the advantage of that $12,825,000 and the added interest upon it, Mr. Fielding's estimate at this higher value is a little more than $89,000,000 under the facts as established in the year 1908. Now, Sir, I think this is a pretty instructive example of what I have characterized as false representations under which great public works are launched upon this House and fastened upon this country. It is perfectly fair, if it is to cost a larger sum and is a necessity, that the country shall undertake it and pay it, but it is absolutely fair, and nothing else is fair, that the government which launches and fathers the scheme shall be true in the estimate that it makes. Never can you be within an absolute dollar of what it will cost. But these gentlemen in 1903 were cocksure. On this side of the House we pleaded for more information, a little further examination, more expert reports, some idea as to what the character of the country would be and, therefore, the cost of building. But the right hon. Prime Minister and the Finance Minister said that there was no need of it. This side of the House was laughed at when it made that request. They had mountains of information, and they read these mountains of information and placed them upon 'Hansard.' They knew all that it was necessary to know, and, as time would not wait and others could not wait, this matter was rushed through, and here is the instructive result. Are we, with the estimate which I have just read to the House of $180,845,683, yet up to the actual cost of the work? No, Sir. This is only again an estimate based partly on actual contracts and partly on more gathered information, but yet an estimate, and I do not doubt at all but that the estimate will be very materially exceeded. The government themselves to-day have no idea of the difficulty of building that road between Quebec and Winnipeg, when you take into account the character of the country and the difficulty of access to it. Everything that goes in has to go in either from Quebec or from Winnipeg, or, in a little while maybe, by way of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario line, which is being built up to tap the road, and maybe by another road tapping it from Port Arthur or Fort William. But when you take the character of the country and make even these avenues of access to it, and remember that hundreds of miles of that country bear no timber for the first construction, but that everything has to be taken in over these circuitous and immensely costly means of access, you get some faint idea of what the difficulties of the building of that road are. Along a large proportion of that road there is no stone to be found and cement will have to be used, and it will have to be taken in at great cost and over roads which are of difficult access. In the summer season service roading there is very difficult. In the winter season it is quite practicable, but railway men tell me that even in the winter season you cannot do much in taking in lumber and supplies many miles away from where the contractors are working, and that you have to keep very close to where the contractors are using the supplies.

It is now interesting to find out where this amount of $13,725,706, put at interest in 1903 at 3 per cent compounded half yearly, would be in this year 1908. It would be added to by $2,300,000, and at this date you would have in the hands of your insurance man or trust company about $16,000,000 in order to pay $26,124,676 interest on the eastern section and $11,304,300 on the mountain section, or a total of $39,400,000 in round numbers. If you add to that $14,422,238 for the Quebec bridge cost, you will have a total of $51,851,214, and you will have, to meet that, the vaunted $13,725,706, which, with its accumulations of interest, makes now $16,000,000.

I think, a more silly as well as a more unfounded estimate was never presented to any parliament by a man having the responsibilities of the head of the Exchequer of a nation. Those two examples I have given as showing the evils that result from false representation and misleading presentations of great questions as they come before the House. A qualification has in fairness to be made in reference to the Quebec bridge. Since the hon. gentleman made that calculation the bridge has fallen down and of course the Minister of Finance cannot be held responsible for the amount of loss thus involved. To that extent my statement must in fairness be somewhat modified.

What are the cash obligations which today are straight in front of the Minister of Finance and this country. They are these :

Cash obligations incurred.

For Grand Trunk Pacific—
Construction, Winnipeg to Moncton..	$114,393,765
Interest on cost of same whilst building..	10,009,454
Seven years' interest on total cost to be paid by government without recourse..	26,124,676
Cost of terminals, government's share..	4,591,250
Interest to be paid by government without recourse on mountain section..	11,304,300
	$166,423,445
For Quebec bridge—
Total amount required..	$ 14,422,238
Total cash obligations..	$180,845,683

Bond obligations.

Canadian Northern Railway bonds guaranteed in 1903..	$ 9,385,639
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds guaranteed in 1903..	58,048,000
Total obligations..	$ 67,433,639

Contingent cash liability.

Grand Trunk Pacific—
For three years' additional interest on cost of construction, eastern division..	11,196,290
Grand total of cash and bond obligation..	$259,475,612

About all but one of these figures there is not a shadow of disagreement between either side of the House. For the Quebec bridge the total amount required will be $14,222,238, including the loss incurred by its collapse. The Minister of Railways took no exception to that statement ; he simply said that it did not belong to the Grand Trunk Pacific but he allowed the estimate to stand, and I believe that is not an over estimate. That makes up total cash obligations to the sum of $180,845,683.

There is another reckoning which I call the contingent cash obligation. That is that after we have paid the interest for seven years if the Grand Trunk Pacific shall not then out of its earnings be able to operate its road, make its betterments, and take care of itself and pay the interest on that immense sum coming up to pretty close on two hundred million dollars, then this government shall be called upon to pay three years additional interest which would amount to $11,196,290. That may be debatable but my own opinion is that it is a pretty dead certainty that we will have to advance that money during those three years, and if we do our total cash obligations will come up to $192,000,000 and over. But that is not all. The Grand Trunk Pacific has its bonds guaranteed, principal and interest, by this government to the amount of $58,-048,000, so that you must add that and then you get a total of cash obligations and of bond obligations amounting to $250,000,000 in round figures. And in addition to that there is also a bond obligation which in 1903 was entered into by this government with the Canadian Northern Railway Company to the amount of $9,385,639, making a total cash and bond obligation, which at this date and before another estimate is voted in this House, faces the government, amounting to $259,475,612. An hon. gentleman may say the bonds do not amount to anything. Is that true ? Never in the case of a man, or in the case of a nation, or in the case of a business corporation is that true ? Whenever a nation wants financial aid it must submit to the scrutiny of all its obligations and the effect is felt upon the money markets of the world, when that nation has recourse, as it must often have, to these money markets.

Now Sir, with all that bond and cash indebtedness facing this government what else is there ? With the present scale of expenditure and the multiplicity of objects which are continually claiming expenditure and which the government is meeting, and the falling of receipts which are marked both in customs and in the railways of the country ; we must not buoy ourselves up for a moment with the hope that those cash obligations can be met in any other way than by borrowing upon the money markets; London in particular. So that if you take these undoubted cash obligations—leaving out the contingent obligation of $180,845,683, which is now lessened by $26,000,000 paid on that account up to March 31, 1908—and meet them by loans, what happens? It happens that your net public debt which in 1896 was $258,500,000 and on March 31, 1908 was $278,000,000 has to be increased to the alarming total of $432,845,683. And if that contingent liability of $11,196,290 comes to us and we have to provide the money from borrowings the total debt will amount to $444,041,973 when all of these liabilities in cash shall have been covered. The most of that must be covered before the end of 1911 and all of it within a few years thereafter, so that new loans on this account will be necessary to the amount of $166,041,973.

But that is not all of it. There are now current temporary loans running at rates from 3¼ to 4½ per cent amounting to $17,-800,000 in different banks here and there wherever accommodation can be got. They cannot always run; no country can allow that. They must be taken up. Then again if you go to the Public Accounts you will find that before 1910 ends, $57,000,000 of public debt not provided for by sinking funds will fall due and these two items together will render necessary additional new loans amounting to $74,800,000 or a total of $240,841,973, of which $192,216,797, must be raised within three years.

Now, it seems to me that that gives any sensible man room for thought, and necessitates great anxiety and the most serious consideration. And yet, notwithstanding all these facts which I have recited, this appalling load of cash and other obligations that are to be met as much as the fates are to be met in their decrees or natural laws in their working out, no amount of 'Oh, we don't care' will get rid of them; no waving of the hand puts them out from fronting you; no optimism based upon insufficient grounds of consideration or knowledge of facts will ever remove them from your path. They are there, and there to be met, and this country must meet them. And yet, Sir, in the face of these appalling facts, this government starts out in the year 1908 on an expenditure and an increase of obligations unprecedented in the former history of this country, involving in estimates alone $138,078,381, and in bounties, which the Finance Minister himself has estimated for me and which are to be paid, $2,875,000; being a total of $140,953,381. These are the expenditures authorized. But beyond that you have bridge subsidies and railway subsidies amounting to $23,566,300; you have guaranteed loans to the Canadian Northern Railway in the shape of 3½ per cent bonds, and so have added to your financial burdens $11,067,000. Thus you have in this present authorization a total of obligations and expenditures of $175,386,681. I have read to you the obligations which before were staring this country in the face, amounting to $259,000,000 and more. Add that to the $175,000,000, and you have a total of $434,000,000 of cash and bond obligations, most of them cash, which are today staring this country in the face and to be undertaken as soon as this Supply Bill shall have been passed. You may deduct $26,000,000 of that as having been already paid out upon the obligations upon the Transcontinental Railway up to March 31, 1908, which leaves you a total of over $408,000,000. And yet, Sir, I fail to see in any member of the government any move of the government, any utterance of the government, the least appreciation of the condition of things which is set forth in that presentation of what I believe to be the bare and naked facts.

Now, Sir, let me very briefly answer a question or two with reference to this. What is the accompaniment of this condition of things? Are the revenues buoyant? Is trade prosperous? I know that some one with less than knowledge than I think he ought to employ will be quick to declare that now I am going to depreciate the country. Very well; let such a one say what he likes—the truth moderately but firmly stated is the only absolute healing salve; and the man who tries to discourage the use of that is no friend to himself or to his country. Of Canada as a whole, her resources, her capabilities, her future, under anything like fair play, there is no man more optimistic than myself in the whole domain. But I do think that prudence is required, and that we ought to be careful and ought not to abuse even the sturdy power of a young country like ours. What, then, is the condition of the revenue to-day? The revenue is decreasing. What is the condition in the United States, in Great Britain, in every country in the world? There is a hold-up to business; there is a paralysis more or less thoroughly defined; there is the period which inevitably follows a debauch, when headaches come and stomachs are foul, and the man wishes he had not done what he did the night before. This is the certain accompaniment of a period of over-booming or of overgreat business progress and development, such as the world has seen in the last six or seven years. Every country in the world feels it; every other country than ours is providing for it by strengthening its financial position and by proper acts of economy. From Japan to Germany and from the United States to Great Britain that is the absolute rule. The opposite is what is being done in Canada. What do you find with reference to the revenue? In January there was a falling off from January of last year of a fifth of a million—not much, but yet a warning; in February there was a falling off of a third of a million not much, but a little more, in March, there was a falling off of $1,000,000, in April a falling off of $1,000,000, in May, of $1,700,000, in June, of $1,500,000, in the first fifteen days of July, of $1,000,000, which if kept up will make a falling off of $2,000,000 for the month of July; and to my mind the man who declares that things will immediately get better has not correctly sized up the trade or the financial condition in this country or in the other countries of the world. Your Intercolonial Railway, the figures about which I was not able to get to-day, though they were asked for by my hon. friend from Kings and Albert, show, I am certain, what the other railways of the world show, namely, a falling off. There is not a railway in the United States that does not show a large falling off in revenue. Our own will show the same, and although this year this country is I believe to be favoured, if Providence continues to smile for a little while longer, with a bumper crop, still the railways, though they will be immensely aided, will show no increase over last year. More naturally I think, they will show a very considerable decrease, and they are preparing for it and have prepared for it. Every railway in Canada has set itself to strengthening itself by shearing off every unnecessary expense and by putting itself in a position to do the best it can in the period of depression. I notice also that in the money markets of the world the outlook is not so favourable as we would like it to be; and Canada has had her warning with reference to that very thing over and over again.

Grand Trunk Pacific bonds were put upon the British market under what representation? Under the representation of the Minister of Finance which I have read to you to-night and Grand Trunk Pacific bonds placed on the market under this most favourable representation are held yet by the men who underwrote them—and very largely held by those men. The Finance Minister himself has paid from 3½ per cent to 7 per cent for temporary loans, and when he went on the market for $5,000,000 a few days ago only 44 per cent was subscribed by the general public, and the rest is held probably still almost entirely by the underwriters. These are not the best preparatives for future loans, and if that be true the Minister of Finance, who has to go to those markets within the next year and the succeeding year and the year after, for amounts up to $120,000,000 or $150,000,000 might well ask himself whether he is doing the best thing possible to strengthen Canada's credit in those markets by pursuing the wild and reckless course of extravagance he has brought before this parliament and this country in this year of grace 1908. To my mind no more foolhardy and unwise thing could have been done than for the Minister of Finance to flaunt into the face of present creditors and future lenders of money an example of the most inflated estimates and the largest obligations that in any one year have ever been undertaken by the Dominion of Canada. Can you make better representations under present conditions than you would have made when those other loans were being made. The Grand Trunk Pacific must go on the market with more bonds, but will they be taken readily? The Minister of Finance must have more money. Will he get it on more favourable conditions under the course that he is pursuing? Men in London are thinking men, men who lend money in London are thinking men and they will turn the Minister of Finance inside out when he goes to ask for more loans and will want to know exactly all the conditions in this country and who is responsible therefor. Money-lenders are not as a rule sympathetic friends; they are the discerning surgeon and physician, they diagnose and cut to the very bone in order to find out the truth. But the Minister of Finance in reply to my hon. friend the other night, waved it all away with a simple passing of the hand, wrote it all off the book and brought it down to a mere nothing. Why, he says, suppose we had $58,000,000 of guaranteed bonds in our name for the road, what matter is that? Little likelihood that we shall ever be called upon to pay. Suppose there is three years of interest after the seven years we will never be called upon to pay; suppose there is $180,000,000 spent, we own the road. May I put two questions to the Minister of Finance? When every dollar of that money is raised, who raised it? The Minister of Finance of Canada. When it is all raised whose debt is it? The debt of Canada. When the interest is to be paid, who pays it? The people of Canada. This very costly piece of road from Winnipeg to Moncton, when finished including the interest in the Mountain section will have cost from $200,000,000 to $230,000,000, it passes for 1,400 or 1,500 miles through no man's land at the present time, although we hope it will turn out much better than it now looks. I have been curiously waiting for the First Minister and the Minister of Finance to bring to us the reports of engineers and others who have now travelled nearly every mile in that country and have had their rods and their lines upon it. How have they reported on that country? If they had reported the country as being good and had come back bearing grapes of Escol upon their shoulders, do you think these gentlemen would not have displayed the fruit? They have been as mum as oysters, which convinces me that the travellers through that country have not brought a very optimistic report as to its capabilities for furnishing local traffic. So that after all the money is borrowed and the debt incurred and the interest paid by the Dominion of Canada we may or may not get a return of 3 per cent, but if we do it will to that extent add to the revenues of the country some fifteen years from now, but not a single cent up to that period.

A word with reference to general matters. Whilst this government is adept in finding methods of expending money and lying awake nights to find extraordinary channels in which to set it running, they are not so diligent in reference to other matters. They appointed a civil service commission. That commission was not to go into the principles of the civil service because the government were careful to state that those principles were just and right. They appointed this commisison upon the reports of the civil service of this country that their expenditures had increased beyond all bounds, over and above their remuneration and that the matter ought to be looked into, and if their cause was just that the disparity ought to be adjusted. Months and months were spent with that commission, the salaries of the commissioners were paid, their report was given and sustained the contention of the civil service absolutely, going towards readjustment. What have the government done? They have made an excuse of the enactment of that Civil Service Bill to raise unnecessarily the salaries of many men who are getting quite enough at the present time, men with high salaries and not over-onerous duties. They have increased those favourites of theirs, those men who might well have dragged along for a little bit on a salary of $3,500 or $4,000 or $5,000 and have made both ends meet, might have got porridge for breakfast and some light refreshment for tea besides keeping up the general apppearance of a household. They have rushed to an unnecessary rescue of that class of officer but they have left the under official whose salary is not, on their own confession, equal to the requirements made upon him, out in the cold. In their Bill they have taken care that the high-class man shall have his $100 a year of increase, but the civil servant in the lower classes only gets a paltry $50, though the men with the small salary and the young and growing family is the man who needs the great increase rather than the other. They have taken means in that Bill to single out their own favourites, and have advanced, and are now advancing, the salaries of those favourites by leaps and bounds. But the great mass of the service has not had a single grievance sympathetically dealt with, and the whole outside service has simply been put off with promises which, as promises sound well to the ear but which, when they are remembered only as broken promises add a weariness to the heart and add a bitterness to the daily life-struggle of these men in all parts of the Dominion.

This government got in a hurry over the insurance question, named its insurance commissioners, and has paid them up to date some $85,000, one favourite receiving $25,000 and another $14,000, and others in proportion. Those commissioners have looked into all, and in some cases more than all in the opinion of some people at least—they ought to look into. They have made their report. They had their experts, who put a Bill—the Bill—before the government. The government took the Bill and turned it upside down, making a Bill of their own. And, as usual, with Bills made by men who have no expert knowledge of that with which they are dealing, the moment the practical man got before them with that Bill in the Committee on Banking and Commerce, the principal sections were riddled from end to end. Where is that Bill to-day? Two years have passed, the government's favourities have got their big fees, the government have had their investigation—and the greatest use made of it up to the present time has been to follow certain members of parliament with emanations from that commission in the vain endeavour to annihilate those men who are opponents of this government. That may have been what the government wanted, but it is not what the country expected.

The government had a commission appointed for the civil service. Unexpectedly, that commission was bold enough to lift off the lid from one half of one department and expose the brew to the admiring gaze of the public of Canada. Immediately, the commission stopped. It was not asked to continue the same good work in other departments. But enough had been done to make it necessary that some semblance of an investigation should go on. And a semblance of an investigation was instituted. A man who had more work to do than he could do and who told the Prime Minister so—and who told him at the same time that unless he, the Prime Minister, took care of his work he would not undertake the investigation at all—was, in spite of all, appointed. Months have passed and that investigation has not had six consecutive days under the new commission, and months will pass before that investigation can be again proceeded with. And there is your department, without a proper organization, without directive power and without conscience—half its men under suspicion. And yet this parliament is asked to put millions of money into an organization of that kind to be spent behind the back of parliament. And that commission—not because Judge Cassels wishes to do it, but because the government wish it—that commission is doing just the thing that the government had done before, jollying things along to prevent any examination until the elections are over.

This government has been kind to the wrong doer and eminently kind to the middleman. When has the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) ever stood between the treasury of this country and the man who wanted to loot it? Will any one out of his own experience tell of one single case in which it has been done? But when Merwin looted the treasury, when Lodge looted the treasury, when Pierson, Dodge and hundreds of others have looted the treasury, though the Prime Minister knew it, though it was proven and put up to him, not once has the Prime Minister risen and by even a word condemned such proceedings. And to-day the middleman and the patronage list flourish in all their glory. Yesterday as a finale of the land transactions for the present session was displayed before this House one of the most malodorous deals that have ever been exposed here to our humiliation—a trust for the Indians sacrificed by the men who held that trust; Indian property sold for $9,000, and turned over almost before the bill was paid for $100,000. And yesterday the Minister of the Interior slept during nearly the whole of the presentation of that subject. And when he got up, the first thing he did was to call the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyce) a scandal monger. And the next thing was to give his plea. And his plea was: The land belonged to the Indians; Indians cannot eat land; you have to sell it and get money or they cannot get the good of it; we sold it—and that is the whole story.

Franchises are given everywhere. I brought one case to the attention of the House not long ago. Here were four members of parliament in good standng—Duncan Fraser, of Guysborough, Mr. McIsaac, of Antigonish, Mr. Maxwell of a British Columbia constituency and Mr. McInnes, also of British Columbia. And these four members of parliament were standing up like little men fighting for every proposal that the government tried to put through this House. And they got the townsite of Whitehorse divided amongst themselves at $10 an acres, a townsite in which lots—and an acre makes several lots—I have been informed sell at from $500 to $1,500 per lot. That is a part of the system of doping. The Prime Minister dopes the country in several ways. For instance, he gives a contract of printing to Mr. Pierson, who owns the St. John 'Sun,' who has no job office. And Mr. Pierson receives the contract and thanks the Prime Minister. Then he turns it over to a gentleman by the name of Armstrong, telling him: You do this printing and I will keep 25 per cent and you can have the other 75 per cent. That is done, and the Prime Minister knows it. Why should not the country have that 25 per cent and Mr. Armstrong do the printing and get just as much for it as he gets now? And the same thing is done in Halifax, and for the benefit of the same gentleman. The right hon. gentleman himself carries on the doping process. How? By writing out a promise of a judgeship or a governorship and giving it to a man who supports him as a member of this House.

The Prime Minister knows he did it, knows the letter was read, knows that the gentleman had it in his trousers pocket, and voted for him. Since they have come into power in 1896 they have appointed seventy-five members of parliament to positions of emolument, involving an annual salary of $350,000; and these men, until they got the office, would of course have supported the government; and they would be heathens if, after they got the office, they did not say a good word for the government. And so it goes on, and to-morrow we will be asked to swallow another measure, the infamous Quebec bridge matter, which we will have something to say about then. I believe that the proposition which is put before the House in that respect will not stand fair investigation. It was a political thing; the gentleman who has been the soul of it for these years back, is the close political friend of the Prime Minister; and had it not been for that political influence I do not believe the Finance Minister would have done what he did with reference to these bonds. Now, after it has gone to pieces through lack of government supervision, we are to shoulder the whole loss, then we are to rebuild the whole bridge, and then do what we can, little or more, to get any revenue from it afterwards. These and many other methods of the transaction of public business, alongside with what is to my mind, the utterly reckless extravagance of the government, are making themselves felt in this country, are making themselves felt outside this country, are affecting us here and affecting our credit abroad, and I think it is high time that a halt was called. I therefore move the following resolution:

That this House notes with grave concern the continuous and alarming increase in the yearly expenditures and capital obligations of the country under the present administration, as shown by the following:

(a) Comparative expenditures, 1896 and 1908.

	1895.	1907-8.
On current account. ..	$ 36,949,142	$ 76,652,401
On capital and special account..	4,753,241	35,253,979
Total..	41,702,383	111,906,380
Expenditure per head	$8.14	$18
Increase in 1908 over 1896....	$ 70,203,997
Increase per cent..	165 p.c.

(b) Cash Obligations Incurred.

For Grand Trunk Pacific—
Construction, Winnipeg to Moncton..	$114,393,765
Interest on cost of same whilst building.. ...	10,009,454
Seven years interest on total cost to be paid by government without recourses..	26,124,676
Cost of terminals, governments share.... ..	4,591,250
Interest to be paid by government without recourse on Mountain section....	11,304,300
	$166,423,445
For Quebec Bridge— Total amount required.	14,422,238
Total cash obligations		$180,845,683

(c) Bond Obligations.

Canadian Northern Railway, 3½ bonds guaranteed in 1903..	$ 9,385,639
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds guaranteed in 1903..	58,048,000
Total bond obligations..		67,433,639

(d) Contingent Cash Liability, Grand Trunk Pacific.

For three years additional interest on cost of construction, Eastern Division.... 11,196,290

Grand total of cash and bond obligations.. .. ..$259,475,612

That as the scale of expenditures established by the present government and the ever-increasing multiplicity of objects to which public moneys are applied, together with the marked falling off in customs and railway receipts and the unsettled trade and financial conditions throughout the world, preclude the hope that the above certain cash obligations amounting to $180,845,683, less $26,000,000 paid up to March 31, 1908, can be met otherwise than by loans, the public net debt which,

In 1896, was.. .. ..$258,500,000
And on March 31, 1908, was.. .. 278,000,000
Will be thereby increased to the alarming total of.. 432,845,683
And if the contingent liability (d) accrues, will become.. .. 444,041,973
Thus rendering necessary new loans to the amount of.. .. 166,041,973

That on June 30, current temporary loans at rates varying from 3¼ to 4½ per cent amounted to $17,800,000, and from the present time to the end of 1910, $57,000,000 of funded debt not provided for by sinking funds will fall due, rendering necessary additional new loans amounting to $74,800,000, or a total of $240,841,973 of which $192,216,797 must be raised within three years.

That notwithstanding the significant facts above recited, the government, instead of retrenching, have at the present session authorized the following expenditures and incurred the following additional obligations to an extent unpredecented in the history of Canada:

Supplementary estimates, 1907-8.$ 5,329,633
Supplementary estimates, 1907-8 seed grain.. 2,850,000
Main estimates, 1908-9.. 119,237,091
Supplementary estimates, 1908-9. 10,665,657

Total.. .. ..$138,078,381
Bounties, 1908-9 (estimated).. 2,875,000

Total amount voted $140,953,381

Subsidies.

For eight bridges.. .. ..$ 800,000

	Miles.
Railways, revotes..	1,681½
Railways, new..	2,277½
	3,959
Which at cost of $20,000 per mile involves a subsidy of.. ..		22,566,300

Loans guaranteed.

3½ per cent on bonds Canadian Northern Railway, $13,000 per mile for 659 miles..	$8,567,000
$25,000 per mile for 100 miles.	2,500,000
		11,067,000

Grand total.. .. ..$175,386,681

That these huge expenditures have in numberless instances been characterized by utter lack of discrimination, absence of proper inquiry and investigation, disregard of public as compared with private interests, want of common business prudence in oversight, costly pandering to partisan interests, lack of conscience in purchases from the patronage list, and the aggrandizement of the middleman, through all of which millons have been annually wasted.

That in the opinion of this House the mad and reckless financial course of the government is seriously affecting the public credit, unduly burdening the resources of the country, and if longer persisted in, will end in public disaster.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Mr. Speaker, the resolution which the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has placed in your hands may here and there have a touch of new colour, but, subject to that modification, I have to describe it as a very old and very familiar friend. Once upon a time there lived a foolish shepherd boy who fell into the very bad habit of amusing himself by trying to alarm his neighbours by crying 'wolf, wolf.' For a little while his neighbours were aroused by it, and they came out to see what the trouble was, and to render help to the lad if help should be needed. But every time they came out they found that the alarm was a false one, that the wolf did not come. It is no wonder that after a time they became rather tired and paid no attention to the cry of the foolish lad. But the little story has rather a sad ending. At last one day the wolf did come, they paid no attention to the cry of the boy, and the wolf fell upon the innocent lambs and destroyed them. It is not likely that the wolf will come, financially speaking, to this country, and nothing will occur which will really alarm the financial world in regard to the affairs of Canada so long as my hon. friend stays where he is and we, on this side, stay where we are. But if perchance the wolf in that way should ever come, and if my hon. friend should raise the cry, no attention would be paid to him, because all concerned would remember that for twelve long weary years he had cried out 'wolf, wolf' when there was no wolf. For twelve years my hon. friend has been the prophet of gloom, for twelve years he has been painting these dreadful pictures of what must happen to this fated country if my right hon. friend the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and his colleagues should remain in power. From the beginning of the career of this government the hon. gentleman adopted the wolf policy. This government came into power in the summer of 1896, and there was a summer session a few weeks later. There was no time to prepare a policy. All that the government did was to take up the estimates prepared by their predecessors, with some slight modifications amounting to very little, place these estimates before the House and ask the House to approve of them, reserving until the coming session, to be held a few months afterwards, the declaration of the policy which the new government should desire to announce. One would think that, under conditions of that character, there would have been very little cause for alarm. The policy of hon. gentlemen opposite remained in force, the estimates which were brought down to the House were substantially their estimates, and one would have thought that they would have allowed them to pass with little or no comment. But no; the wolf policy was adopted from the beginning, and before this government had been more than a few weeks in power the hon. gentleman raised the very same cry of 'wolf, wolf,' which he has been repeating every year for the last twelve years. Let me show my hon. friend the evidence of that. If time permitted to make quotations to show that that was the policy of hon. gentlemen every session, it would not be without interest, but I do not want to do that. During the very first session, before this government had had time to proclaim or arrange any policy, when we were just simply taking the estimates as my hon. friend had left them, I find that even at that time the hon. gentleman pictured to us a gloomy outlook:

> The Finance Minister looks out upon a future in as normal condition as it well can be, and he deliberately asks this House, with a revenue of less than $37,000,000, to sanction an expenditure of $44,600,000, with supplementary estimates to come down. . . . $44,600,000 will be nearly $8,000,000 more than the total revenue that can be expected during the present year.

The leader of the opposition of that day, the veteran Sir Charles Tupper, was more alarming yet. He was a bigger wolf than my hon. friend. He said on that occasion that our statement of the position:

> Involved the expenditure of millions of money more than he (the Finance Minister) can show any expectation of obtaining.

He said further that the Minister of Finance:

> Was about to expend something like $10,000,000 more than he has any reason to expect to receive.

My hon. friend from North Toronto was a little more moderate. He said $8,000,000, but the leader of the opposition of that day was a larger wolf, and he said that this government was preparing for a deficit in that year of $10,000,000. Then the veteran Sir Charles said at the same time that we were preparing to destroy the credit of the country, which had been so well established under the administration of himself and his friends. What was the result? In due time the supplementaries which Sir Charles referred to came down, the accounts were closed, and we had the result before us. What was it? Did we have the $8,000,000 of a deficit which my hon. friend said was staring us in the face? Did we have the $10,000,000 deficit that the veteran Sir Charles Tupper saw facing us? Just as loudly as my hon. friend declares it now, that hon. gentleman said that we were going to have a shortage of $8,000,000, and just as loudly Sir Charles Tupper declared that there would be a shortage of $10,000,000. If there had been a shortage of $10,000,000 at that time it would not have been anything that we had need to be ashamed of. It was not our year; there was not time to mature a policy; we simply took the estimates of our predecessors, with some slight changes, and carried them through the House. If we had had a large deficit that year, it would have been something for which our predecessors were as much responsible as we were. But what happened? Was there a deficit of $8,000,000? Was there a deficit of $10,000,000? Did the wolf come? No, it did not come to the extent of $8,000,000, or $10,000,000, or $1,000,000, but there was a deficit of only $519,000. These hon. gentlemen cried 'wolf, wolf,' but the wolf did not come.

Their prophecies as to the public credit were put to the test. The hon. gentleman to-night discussed the public credit, and I may take occasion to allude to that further on, but on the occasion to which I have referred, in that first year the veteran leader of the opposition, Sir Charles Tupper, declared that we were entering upon a condition which would destroy public credit. A few months later I had the honour to go to England to float a loan, and that loan was admittedly the best loan that had ever been obtained in the history of Canada. We were able at that time to put on the market, for the first time in colonial history, a loan bearing the low rate of 2½ per cent interest, and which sold at a price to make it unquestionably the best loan in the history of Canada. So that no wolf came to the credit of Canada on that occasion. Then we come to the session of 1897, and again we find my hon. friend indulging in his prophecies of gloom:

> They are going on the straight road towards piling up millions of debt each year.

It would have been a dreadful thing if we had done that. Well, we would just have been following my hon. friend's example, for that is exactly what he did on a very large scale. However, I do not want to discuss that at this moment. I may refer to it in a few moments. We did not have the presence of my hon. friend in the House during the years from 1900 to 1905, but his mantle as a prophet of evil fell upon others, and hardly a session passed that we did not have a melancholy resolution like the one you now hold in your hand, Mr. Speaker, and a glommy speech like that with which my hon. friend has favoured us to-night. Then we came to the year 1904, when we were approaching the elections, just as my hon. friend thinks we are to-night, and possibly he is right. I find that at that time the gentleman on whom his mantle descended spoke as follows. The hon. gentleman referred to is not in the House just now:

Now, I believe this country is going to get relief . . . but the people will secure relief as soon as they are given opportunity.

How much that sounds like my hon. friend to-night!

For here is a record that cannot be presented to a population . . . without making certain the condemnation of those who have made the record.

It was another cry of 'wolf, wolf.' The election came on soon after that, all the melancholy resolutions of my hon. friend's friends were discussed throughout the country from ocean to ocean, and the result was that the record which he said was so sure to be condemned was approved by the intelligent electors of this country. Then in the next session we had the honour to have with us again my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) and again he entered upon this business of predicting gloom. In 1905 my hon. friend felt it his duty then as now to issue some solemn warnings. The revenue of that year was $71,186,072 and he warned us that in his opinion the revenue had reached probably its highest point. To use his words: 'The buoyant point of our revenue had about reached its maximum.' But it was $71,000,000 then and it continued to rise until it rose above $96,000,000. There was another cry of 'wolf, wolf,' but the wolf did not come. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) has proceeded on the same lines to-night; he has gathered up the estimates, and appropriations in every shape and form: he takes the main estimates and the supplementary estimates, and the consolidated fund, and the capital, and the railway subsidies, and the guarantees, and everything in the world that he can possibly put in to swell what he calls: This appaling presentation of the facts. Well, some of these are proper subjects to be included in our budget expenditure, but the hon. gentleman rolls all things up as he did in former years so as to convey the impression to the people of Canada that there is some dreadful disaster coming upon them, and he must not be surprised, if judging by the past, the people of Canada refuse to take him seriously.

I observe that my hon. friend and those associated with him are quite ready to denounce expenditures generally, but there are moments when they take saner views. It is easy enough to be general in these denunciations, but the best and fairest way is to approach this question from the point of view of the particular locality with which we are best acquainted. It is easy to declare that you ought to be economical in one province if you want somewhat extravagant expenditures in your own. It is easy to find fault with expenditures at a distance, but when one goes to the locality with which he is best acquainted he is obliged to take saner views. And so while hon. gentlemen opposite can see no reason for this large expenditure generally, the moment they come to think of their own counties they are able to declare that these expenditures are highly necessary. Take for example the expenditure in the Militia Department, and during this session repeated allusions have been made to the rather liberal expenditure, as it is said, we are making in that department. Is it not curious that the very moment these gentlemen opposite are denouncing the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Militia for the expenditure in their departments in connection with the militia of Canada, we find my respected friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson)—who is slumbering so peacefully just now——

Mr. HENDERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. FIELDING. What is to be thought of my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson), who, while he is going to vote for this resolution against expenditures generally, thinks the Minister of Public Works should build an armoury at Oakville in his own county. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Roche)—whom I do not see in his place—joins in this general condemnation of expenditure, and particularly on the militia, but he wants us to build him an armoury at Minnedosa. The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) would like to have an armoury at Valleyfield. The chief whip of the opposition (Mr. Taylor) no doubt will vote for this amendment; he is against expenditure, but he quietly whispers in the ear of the Minister of Public Works: Send us along an appropriation for an armoury at Gananoque. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Marshall) is going to vote for this amendment, but he would like a drill hall at Aylmer west. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) wants an armoury at Orillia, and the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Alcorn) thinks we should have an armoury at Picton, while the gallant colonel from Victoria Halliburton (Mr. Sam. Hughes) insists that there should be an armoury in the county he represents. And so we find that hon. gentlemen opposite are against expenditures, but when it comes down to expenditure in their own constituencies they are just as anxious for it as anybody else.

We are putting a good deal of money into improvement of harbours and rivers, and perhaps there is no class of expenditure which hon. gentlemen opposite so generally condemn. But, when they come to consider the matter from the home point of view they see it in quite a different light. My hon. friend from West Hastings (Mr. Porter) is very anxious for improvements at Belleville harbour; the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Clements) wants improvements on the Thames river; the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Herron) wants a breakwater in Macleod; the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) also wants harbour improvements; the hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Owen) wants a wharf and a shed beside in his constituency. Then the hon. members from New Brunswick, (Mr. Crocket and Mr. Fowler) while they are prepared to condemn expenditures generally, they particularly serve notice on the Minister of Public Works that they want more money for wharfs on the St. John river and the inland waters of their province. The hon. members from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Martin, Mr. McLean and Mr. Lefurgey), are champions of economy when you are speaking generally, but all the same they serve notice upon us that they want harbour improvements, and breakwaters, and piers and wharfs, and in addition to that they venture to say they would like to have a tunnel. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Daniel) has spoken with gratification of the amount of money we are spending in improving the harbour of that important port, and he informs the Minister of Public Works that he had better go on with his expenditure because St. John needs more. My hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk)—if he were here to-night I suppose he would vote for this amendment—he does not want us to spend money on wharfs and so forth in Nova Scotia, but he thinks it highly important that a wharf should be built at Lachine in his own constituency. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) is very anxious for economy generally, but at the same time he serves notice upon the Department of Marine and Fisheries that no effort must be spared to deepen the channel of the St. Lawrence so that there will be 30 feet clear navigation from Montreal to the ocean, and more than that, he has again and again condemned this government because we have not made a rush order of the report of the Transportation Commission which calls for expenditures running up to possibly $100,000,000. And so I might follow through the long list.

An hon. MEMBER. Go on.

Mr. FIELDING. The list is too long and the time too brief—Oh, yes, I had nearly forgotten that in the midst of professions of economy the other evening, most of the western members sitting on your left Mr. Speaker, wanted this government to buy up all elevators in the Northwest Territories. And the hon. gentleman from North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has given evidence of his idea of economy to-night, when, in the midst of this thundering against the expenditures, we find him advocating that we should spend probably two millions more by adding to the salaries of the civil servants.

My hon. friend who usually sits near the hon. member for North Toronto is not there to-night—I refer to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart)—but as a rule he is unceasing in his demand that we shall at the earliest possible moment enter upon the construction of the Georgian bay canal which will cost $100,000,000. I mention these things because I think they prove that the denunciations which hon. gentlemen opposite hurl in their speeches, and in their resolutions such as the one we have before us to-night, are not to be taken very seriously. As I have said, it is easy to denounce expenditures generally; but when hon. gentlemen come to look at home and see the needs of their own communities, and the demands made on this government from all parts of the country, they have to realize, as we have to realize in this growing time, that there are needs which the government have to meet and which the government will meet in the right spirit. Some of the demands to which I have referred are perhaps not unreasonable; some of them certainly will bear postponement to a later day; but many of the things asked for in this way are fair and reasonable, and it will be the duty of the government from year to year to endeavour to meet every demand of this character. I say, therefore, that when our hon. friends indulge in this general denunciation of the extravagance of the government, the people will bear in mind that while that is the course these hon. gentlemen pursue when dealing with the matter generally, when they come to deal with it from the point of view of their own needs or the needs of their constituents, they realize as well as we do the need of these increasing expenditures.

Now, one trick in which my hon. friend from North Toronto indulges frequently—and he is doing it to-night—is to roll up in his budget the votes for railway subsidies, in addition to the ordinary appropriations, and he appears to think that by putting these big figures before the country he can create alarm. Now, let us look for a moment at the history of a railway subsidy; how does it generally come about? There is a section of the country where there is either no railway at all or inadequate railway facilities, and the people make up their mind that they would like to have a railway. They have not any very clear idea of how it can be brought about, and so they come and ask the government to help them. The government, finding that there is a field for a railway in that part of the country, agree to give a subsidy for it if the people can find a company to do the work; and then the subsidy, perhaps a million dollars, is put into the votes, and the hon. gentleman adds it to the bill which he puts before the House at the close of the session. Perhaps two or three years pass and nothing is done. The people are discouraged, and they send a deputation down here to say that they had hoped that somebody was going to build the road, but they have been disappointed, and they hope that the government will renew the subsidy for another term. Again the subsidy appears in the estimates, and again my hon. friend puts it in his bill, though it has not cost the government a penny. At the end of the second term, perhaps a company comes along and says, we think there is a chance of doing business, and if you will renew the subsidy, we will build the road. So the subsidy is brought down again, and my hon. friend for the third time puts it into his bill of expenditures. By and by the company undertakes the work and makes some progress; but it probably finds that it cannot finish it within the specified time. It comes and says to the government, give us this subsidy for a further term and we will complete the road; and the Minister of Railways puts it among the railway subsidies for the fourth time, and for the fourth time the hon. gentleman has a chance of adding it in his bill. Not one dollar of the subsidy has been paid out of the public treasury, but my hon. friend has had plenty of fun in adding a million dollars to his budget every year. I have taken a list of the railway subsidies voted from 1899 down to 1906, and I find that during that time they amounted to $39,131,159. Now, according to the annual bill which my hon. friend presents, we must have spent that amount; but the actual fact is that the expenditure on railway subdies during that whole period was just $18,319,000, or much less than one-half of the amount of the subsidies voted. So that when my hon. friend is adding these sums to his bill of expenditures every year, he is creating needless alarm; it is another cry of wolf, wolf, where there is no wolf.

Then my hon. friend gets very much disturbed about the condition of the public debt of Canada, constantly conveying the impression that there has been some alarming addition to it. Now, there is no foundation for any statement of the kind; on the contrary, the debt statement which this government is able to present is of the most gratifying character. The increase of the net debt from 1878 to 1898, a period of 18 years during which our Conservative friends were in power, was $118,135,000; that is, an average of a little more than six and a half millions per annum. The increase of the net debt from 1897 down to the close of the last fiscal year under this government, a period of eleven and three-fourth years, including a considerable sum for the Transcontinental Railway is $19,474,376. The average increase per year under the Conservative government was $6,563,000; the average increase per year under this government was $1,657,393. That is the best possible answer to the inference my hon. friend seeks to draw, that we have added largely to the public debt. But there is another way of viewing the public debt. The public debt is only a burden in proportion to the number of people who have to bear it. If Canada should have a population of twenty millions instead of what she has to-day, her public debt would be almost insignificant. The true test of the public debt is not merely the amount of it; it is the proportion in which it has increased as compared with its increase in the previous history of the country, and the proportion which it bears to the population of the country. I have made up a statement of the net debt per head, beginning with the year 1891, and coming down to the close of the last fiscal year, and it is as follows:

Year.	Net debt per head.
1891	49.09
1892	49.15
1893	48.96
1894	49.40
1895	50.57
1896	50.82

This was the point at which the debt per head stood when this government came into power. Now we come to the later years:

Year.	Net debt per head.
1897	$ 50.87
1898	50.77
1899	50.62
1900	49.88
1901	49.84
1902	49.59
1903	46.84
1904	45.74
1905	45.63
1906	44.63
1907 (to March 31)	42.84
1908	40.50

The census authority of Canada, whose figures I have quoted, has made his estimate of the poulation of Canada as it stood on the 31st of March last past being the end of the fiscal year; he has applied his usual method of computation, allowing for the natural increase of population and taking into account the immigration, of which we have carefully compiled records, and the statement made by the statistician is that on March 31 the population of Canada was 6,863,500. If that statement be correct, and it is given by the statistician as being prepared in the usual way, the net debt per head of Canada on March 31 last was $40.50 per head against $50.82 on the day when my right hon. friend assumed office. Sometimes it is said: 'Oh, well, but this government have had good luck, and have not spent much money outside of the ordinary routine; they have been able to show a surplus in that way.' I have had an examination made of the expenditures outside of what we call consolidated fund, that is what is called the capital and special expenditure—all those things that are not charged to ordinary consolidated fund. I find that in the eighteen years, from 1878 to 1896, this special expenditure, capital and other expenditure, apart from the consolidated fund, amounted to $167,-166,252. In eleven and three-quarter years, from 1897 to March 31, 1908, the expenditure on this account has been $162,542,277. It will be seen that we expended during our eleven and three-quarter years on that class of expenditure pretty nearly as much as our predecessors did in their eighteen years. In that respect we stand about even. If you put it on the average, we have spent much more than they did on these expenditures outside of consolidated fund. But observe that at the same time there is a marked difference in the two periods as respects the public debt. The Liberals provided more generously for the public service, as I have shown, but to a large extent they paid their way. Our Conservative friends spent large sums in expenditures of the character I spoke of, but they added them largely to the public debt. Although there was $167,000,000 of capital and special expenditure during the eighteen years of our Conservative friends, they paid but a small part from the revenue and added $118,000,-000 to the public debt. Of the $162,000,000 which we have spent on this capital and special expenditure we added to the public debt only $19,000,000 and we paid out of our ordinary revenue $143,000,000, adding, as I said, only $19,000,000 to the public debt, while they in their period added $118,-000,000 to the public debt.

The hon. member for North Toronto has made a reference to the rates of interest we have been paying and to the obligations we are likely to have to assume. His remarks, to some extent, were a repetition of a statement he made outside of this House at an early period of this session. I took note of it at the time, but there did not seem to be a favourable opportunity to call his attention to it. In a speech at Hamilton, shortly after the opening of the session, I find him reported as follows in the 'Mail':

> They (the government) have marched up to a point where a debt of $100,000,000 must be paid in two years and Mr. Fielding has made no provision to meet it.

My first point in reply is that my hon. friend magnified in an enormous degree the debt which is maturing. He does not seem to think it necessary to speak on these grave matters with that sense of responsibility which should attach to him as a former Minister of Finance. A very much less sum will have to be met within the time named. He proceeds:

Mr. FIELDING.

Instead he (Mr. Fielding) was paying as high as seven per cent to the bank of England for the use of money. The highest that he (Mr. Foster) ever paid was two and seven-eights per cent.

That was an extraordinary statement for my hon. friend to make, if he did make it. We have not paid 7 per cent for any money. He should be aware of that from information given in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, I do not think I ever said that the highest I paid was 2⅞ per cent, because I know exactly what I did pay. It is reported in the newspaper, and the newspaper does its office as best it can, but sometimes it will not get it right. The information I had was that you were paying the Bank of England rate, and the Bank of England rate at the time I spoke was 7 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING. That might justify my hon. friend at that time, but not to-night. The information has since been given to the House that we did not pay seven per cent. If it has escaped my hon. friend's notice it is a pity, because I thought he was present, and the point was important. As I have said, he might have been justified in his statement then, but he would have been fairer if he had said that if we were paying 7 per cent we paid it under an agreement which he himself made. The agreement of my hon. friend is a fair agreement; I am not assailing him for it. The agreement was that on overdrafts which we might have from the bank of our financial agents in England we should pay the current Bank of England rate. It is a fair and reasonable arrangement. But at that particular time there was a panic condition in the country. My hon. friend should have stated in fairness that the rate was entirely exceptional, and should have stated the nature of the arrangement under which it was made, but he did not. Had the bank insisted upon the letter of the arrangement as it had existed for some years they could have demanded 7 per cent, but I was able by negotiations with the bank to secure a reduction of that even at that panic period to 6 per cent, and so stated in the House, and if that escaped his notice I can understand his repeating the statement to-night. However that may be, we did not pay 7 per cent, although if we had done so it would have been under an old arrangement, which, as a rule, is fair and reasonable. My hon. friend is quoted as saying he never paid more than 2⅞ per cent. It must be evident that my hon. friend must have made some such statement, and that to the great disadvantage of his successor.

I do not feel very much concerned about the matter from a personal point of view, and I do not suppose my hon. friend does—neither of us is anxious to blow his own horn. But, when the effect of his criticism would be to bring discredit upon the finances of Canada, I think I have a right to complain. And I think he did not put that matter as fairly as he should have done. If he thinks it important that any comparisons be made in that respect, I can only say that I think this government has no reason to be afraid of those comparisons. The hon. gentleman had many transactions —properly and necessarily—in the way of temporary loans. There are records of fifty four transactions in the way of temporary loans, some for moderate sums and some for sums running up to $3,000,000 and $4,000,000. In not one of these transactions did he obtain the rate of interest mentioned in the Hamilton speech according to the 'Mail and Empire.' In several of them, the rate was 4½ per cent; in fifty-two out of fifty-four the rate was 4 per cent or upwards. In only two out of that long list of transactions was the rate below 4 per cent. One was made at 3¼ per cent and one at 3 per cent. Now, the lowest rate of interest ever obtained on a temporary loan by the Dominion treasury was not obtained by my hon. friend as his remarks would imply. If there is any credit—I do not attach the utmost importance to it, but I have a right to reply to the hon. member's criticism—let it be stated that this lowest rate of interest was not obtained either by the hon. gentleman himself or by any of his predecessors, but by the present administration, for we have borrowed money as low as a fraction above 2 per cent for a time. But I should not confine myself to the hon. gentleman's temporary loans. He says the 'Mail and Empire' did not report him correctly; but, he evidently made comparisons between the success of his own loans and the lack of success of his successor's loans—if he did not mean that, I do not see the purpose he had in view. I have made an examination of the public loans made in the time of my hon. friend. In no case either for a temporary or for a permanent loan did he ever obtain the rate of interest stated in the speech at Hamilton, as reported. I have the record before me, and I find that the lowest rate of interest ever obtained by him—and it was a fair rate, and I am not complaining of it—was in 1894, when he issued a loan of £2,250,000 at 3 per cent and running for forty-three and three-quarter years, for which he obtained £97, 9s. 2d. for every £100 of stock. The net rate of interest was 3.16 per cent—over 3⅛. Now, my hon. friend insists on making comparisons, so let me call attention to a loan issued by the present government in 1897 for £2,000,000 at the extraordinary low rate of 2½ per cent sold at a discount, of course, but at a price, which made the net interest 2.86 per cent, a little less than 2⅞. So, he will see that, in his management of the finances, he never obtained loans on as favourable terms as he says he did, and the present Finance Minister never paid the rate of interest which was charged by my hon. friend.

Now, on the question of taxation, the hon. gentleman has revamped the old story of the amount of taxes the people pay. It is a curious fact that there are times when the more taxes the people pay the better off they are. That may seem an extraordinary statement, but it is an absolute fact in the sense in which I give it; it is a fact when the people pay an increased tax, not by virtue of increase of tariff but by virtue of their own increased ability to buy, due to the greater prosperity of the country. I have been called upon to discuss that before with my hon. friend. Let us bring it down to the individual. Here, for instance, is a labouring man: in 1896, he only paid a tax of $5, but in 1906 or 1907, he pays a tax of $8 or $9. Why did he pay only $5 in 1896? Because the times were hard and wages were low and his purchasing power was not great. He could only afford to wear one suit of clothes, and so he paid only a small tax. But in 1906, times were good, wages were high, and employment was steady; the man was earning more money and he could afford to buy two suits of clothes that year. The increased taxation that he paid is evidence that the man was better off. Which of these two years would be the better one to that man? Would he prefer to go back to 1896 when he could only afford to buy one suit of clothes and pay but a small tax? Or would he prefer the better days of 1906, when, through the better times, regular employment and higher wages he was able to afford two suits and was well able and willing to pay the tax?

My hon. friend entered into a discussion of Grand Trunk Pacific affairs. I shall not follow him in that; I gave my views on that to the House the other day, and covered most of the points which the hon. gentleman has referred to to-night. If I can see any special purpose in his address, some special point that can be stated as the summing up of it, I think it is this: that we should not have commenced the Transcontinental at the time we did. I take issue with my hon. friend, and I believe the country is with me and against him. I believe that in view of the tremendous development in the west which is now in progress, the results of which we are seeing year after year, we did not begin the Grand Trunk Pacific one year too soon. I believe there is not a man who voted for the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme in 1904 who would not as freely have voted for it if he had thought that the cost was going to be more than was then supposed. The hon. gentleman is virtuously indignant about the cost of the road. What could any public man do in such a matter but go to some experienced engineer and take his advice? That is what we did. The estimates we presented were the estimates of the eminent engineer, Mr. Schreiber, the long experienced and well-trusted chief engineer of railways and canals. And when my hon. friend speaks of it as a 'silly' thing to present these estimates to the House, I humbly submit that the opinion of Collingwood Schreiber on a matter of that character is almost as good as that of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). The road is costing more, to some extent, as the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) showed, because, though we were looking for a good road, the commissioners had given us even a better road than we were aiming to get. The road is well built. And it is well known that economy is not always gained by cheapness of construction. It pays to build a road well. There are great railways built and running to-day which realize that mistakes were made in former years when the roads were too lightly built, with curves and grades that were not what they should have been. And untold millions are being spent all over this continent of America to overcome difficulties of that character. By making a good road, by bringing your grades down to the finest point, by giving us such a road as we are getting in the National Transcontinental, we are doing the best thing to cheapen the transportation of the country. And if the people of Canada have put into that road one dollar more than they thought they would need to do in 1903, they realize that they will get the benefit of that dollar in the cheaper transportation which will come to them as long as grass shall grow and water run.

My hon. friend has much to say, and is very much alarmed about the credit of Canada. He thinks some dreadful things are going to happen. I again remind my hon. friend that there is not a sentiment in his speech to-night that is not to be found in the speeches of Sir Charles Tupper and himself in the year 1896, and in their speeches of the years following. It is an old, old story of the dreadful things that are going to happen, but which never do happen. My hon. friend talks of the credit of Canada to-day as suffering. But away back in 1896 the illustrious leader of the Conservative party said just the same thing. Now there are some foolish ideas about the credit of Canada. One respected member of this House who had not given the matter much consideration, though he is usually well informed, solemnly advanced the argument one day in the course of discussion, that because we borrowed money some years ago for 3 per cent or less, and have since paid as high as 4 per cent and sometimes higher, therefore the credit of the country was going to the dogs. Well, that is a foolish argument. Money is a commodity which, like other commodities, rises and falls in value; whenever you find an abundance of money, money is cheap, and when you find money scarce, then money is dear. Now if we want to make comparisons of the credit of Canada there is abundant material to enable us to do so. The true way to test the credit of Canada is not to ask how much we paid years ago and how much we pay now, but how much did we pay years ago in comparison with some standard security, and how much do we pay now in comparison with the same standard security. Now the highest standard security is the British consols, of which I may say something later. Let me make a comparison now with that very high class security known in financial worlds as India government stocks as quoted in London. In 1896 India 3 per cent stock at its highest quotation was 115, and the Canada 3 per cent stock at its highest quotation was 107. There was a difference against Canada of 8 points. Turn to the situation now. In recent quotations the highest for India 3 per cent stock was 93, while the highest for Canadian 3 per cent stock is 97. So we have this position, that in 1896 Canada was 8 points worse than India; in this present year Canada is 4 points better than India government stock. Now if we make a similar comparison with the great corporation stocks of London which are, very high class, it will be found, if you make the same comparison, that Canada has come closer to them, and is often on even terms, but certainly very much closer to them then in 1896, and that is a true comparison.

Why, Sir, so strong has been the credit of Canada in that respect that we have been able to secure from the British government, under this Liberal administration, a great financial concession which my hon. friend laboured in vain to secure in his day. I do not say that he is to blame because he did not secure it; he and his colleagues made the best effort they could. Again and again they pointed out that the Canadian stocks were not admitted to the trustee list, that is to say, that people who hold trust money in England were not allowed by the laws of England to buy Canadian stocks, and that diminished our field of buyers. Again and again the late government, and especially Sir Charles Tupper, laboured to secure admission of our stocks to the trustee list, but he laboured in vain. But after this government came into power—whatever other cause there may be, and I am not here to blow the trumpet of this government, but merely to defend them and put their case fairly—turn to the record and you will find to-day that after the administration of a few years of Liberal government, and consequent on the great progress that was coming to Canada, with the finest development, with the higher position Canada was taking in the eyes of the world, this Liberal government was able to secure for Canada that great boon that the Conservative government tried in vain to obtain.

Not very long ago, and this has a very important bearing on the credit of Canada, a member of the British parliament put on the Order Paper a question to Mr. Asquith, who had not then left the position of Chancellor of the Exchequer. This member of parliament called the attention of Mr. Asquith to the fact that Canadian three per cents stood at a higher price than some of the securities guaranteed by the imperial government, and he wished Mr. Asquith to explain how it was. Mr. Asquith was not willing to admit that, on a close calculation, there was that discrimination against guaranteed securities of the imperial authorities. But at all events, we had this fact, that the two securities were so close together that there was a dispute between the financial men in the British parliament as to whether the guaranteed securities of Great Britain or the securities of Canada occupied the highest place.

Now with regard to this question of increase generally, I must say that my hon. friend is really not wise when he imagines that the people of Canada are going to be deceived by his comparisons between what happens now and what happened in 1896 with regard to the expenditures of public money. The conditions certainly have changed. There was an old Canada in 1896; a new Canada has grown up since then. I think it was Sir William Van Horne, who has a habit of saying quaint things, who said that Canada had been living on a back street for a long time. Canada no longer lives on a back street. Canada has moved up on to the main street, and has her sign out, and the public know to-day that Canada is one of the rising nations, that Canada is becoming rapidly one of the great countries of the world. This has not been accomplished without some expenditure. Does any man imagine that the country is going to stand still ? If my hon. friend wants to talk of increased expenditures, let me call attention to the following comparative statement for the year's 1896 and 1906 :

Service.	Expenditure.			Revenue.
	1896.	1906.	Increase.	1896.	1906.	Increase.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
Post Office.....	3,665,011 30	4,921,577 22	1,256,565 92	2,964,014 23	5,933,342 53	2,969,328 30
Railways & Canals, Collection of Revenue	3,826,225 51	8,779,677 46	4,953,451 95	3,480,217 19	8,058,620 73	4,578,403 54
Excise.....	470,869 86	555,923 25	85,053 39	7,926,005 94	14,010,220 30	6,084,214 36
Customs.....	896,332 50	1,548,384 08	652,051 58	19,766,741 48	46,064,597 89	26,297,856 41
Totals.....	8,858,439 17	15,805,562 01	6,947,122 84	34,136,978 84	74,066,781 45	39,929,802 61

In regard to the Post Office, note the magnificent revenue of a little under $6,000,000 as compared with the revenue in 1896 of $3,600,000. I have taken a ten year period. The figures of later dates are somewhat larger. Then in regard to Railways and Canals. In the year 1896, we only received a revenue of $3,480,000, but in 1906 we received $8,058,000. While these figures show a deficit on the road, and while they show a large increase of expenditure the account is balanced by a large increase of revenue. Take the Excise Department. In 1896, we admit that there was only spent by our predecessors $470,869 and that the expenditure increased in 1906 to $555,923, but, in 1896, they collected under $8,000,000 and in 1906 this government collected over $14,000,000 of revenue. Though there was an increase in expense to the country there was an enormous increase of revenue. Take the Department of Customs. In 1896, the then Minister of Customs expended $896,000 and we have to admit that ten years later the expenditure was $1,548,000. But the revenue which was collected by the Department of Customs in 1896 was $19,000,000 while the revenue which my hon. friend the present Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) collected in 1906, was $46,000,000, so, my hon. friend ought in all fairness when he tells the people about this enormous increase in expenditure, to also tell them that in many of the departments these expenditures are met by corresponding increases in revenue. In regard to increases of expenditure generally, nobody expects that the Dominion of Canada is going to stand still. The increase in expenditures has had something to do—it has had much to do—with the increased development that has come upon this Dominion. If we had not built railways in various parts of the country could there have been that development? Could the Crow's Nest country have been developed if we had not put money into that railway by large and liberal subsidies? Could the western prairies have been filled up as they have been with immigrants from other lands if we had not spent money on immigration and the building up of our railways? Surely it must be evident that when we are spending these sums of money we are contributing to the development of the country. The needs of the country are large and varied. The west needs railways to open up the country, the lake and St. Lawrence districts need river and harbour improvements, and the maritime provinces require breakwaters and wharfs to facilitate trade and to protect the lives and property of the mariners and fishermen. At one point a public building is required to give reasonable accommodation to the public business; at another point an armoury is required in response to the military enthusiasm of the people. Those who wish to be sectional will see only their own need and not be willing to see the need of others. It will not do to make comparisons in that way. The duty of the government is to see the needs of the whole country. My hon. friend from North Toronto on one occasion made reference to our spending moneys at the little places in Canada. Sir, the mass of the people of Canada live in the little places. The needs of the cities are great and we are not unmindful of their interests, but whence come their progress and prosperity if not from the hamlets and villages scattered throughout the country and which originate the trade which passes through the great cities? The needs of the country are great and we are not forgetful of the great works or the little ones either. We are building the Transcontinental Railway and we are going to push on to completion this work which interests the whole country from ocean to ocean. We are going to build the Hudson Bay Railway and thus realize the expectations of the people of the west. We are providing for the various needs of the country according to their respective requirements. It is the duty of a government, Sir, not to be sectional, not to think of this particular place or that, but to take a broad look throughout the whole country and adapt its policy to its needs. That is the policy which this government has followed. We look back to-night with pride and pleasure upon the twelve years of Liberal administration, upon the results of this policy we have adopted, and in the face of the splendid record, which any Liberal candidate can present to an audience in any part of Canada, I do not hesitate to say, Sir, that that policy will continue to command the support of an intelligent and patriotic people.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton, Ont.) My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has made us a stump speech and he has opened it up by telling us a little story about the wolf at the door. Well, I may say to my hon. friend that I do not think he can be called a watch dog as far as the public treasury is concerned nor can he be compared with the man who once guarded the public treasury, Alexander Mackenzie, and whose record and experience in days gone by have been made public in this country by a letter which was published shortly after 1875. My hon. friend refers to historic incidents and fables. I would think he might have referred to the days of old when a king and his courtiers banqueted and feasted while the enemy was at the gate and the handwriting was on the wall. The Minister of Finance pumped up his courage to-night, because, notwithstanding all his boasting, notwithstanding all the vain glorious promises as to what his government will accomplish in the future, and all the vain glorious references to what he has accomplished in the past, he knows that the trend of public opinion in Canada to-day is against him. He has referred to the financial situation of the country. He failed to tell us however, how he expects to meet the $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 of obligations which must be met by this country within the next two or three years. Before I sit down I will read to him some words from the London 'Economist' which go as far in their condemnation of the record of this government as any words uttered by my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Foster). He boasts of his loans. He is proud, Mr. Speaker, that a loan of this Dominion of Canada placed on the London market was taken up only to the extent of forty-four per cent. He actually boasts here to-night of the fact that within the past year the government has been paying six per cent at the Bank of England and apparently he does not understand how much that reflects on his lack of foresight in not preparing for the financial stringency which was foreseen by every important business interest in the country, but was not foreseen by the Minister of Finance for Canada. He boasts of the fact that he placed a loan on the London market that he had to go to financial underwriters in London and that only forty-four per cent of it was taken up.

He boasts of the position of Canadian securities to-day under his management, but let us look at another comparison. A Canadian loan, backed by all the enormous resources of this country but handicapped with the evil financial record of this government, was subscribed for to the extent of only 44 per cent or less than one-half. At about the same time the Irish land loan was placed on the London market by the British government and it was subscribed for between seventy and eighty times over. My authority is the London 'Morning Post,' of July 8, 1908. Is the Minister of Finance proud of that? What has he to say with regard to it? Nothing. What has he to say with respect to the conditions when the new loans fall due within the next few years? The Minister of Finance says nothing, but the London 'Economist' has something to say and I shall quote from that journal a few words which may serve to tone down the enthusiasm of gentlemen opposite, and which may also serve to enlighten the people of this country as to the opinion which will be held by the great financiers of London of the future financial standing of Canada should the present rate of expenditure be maintained. After referring to the great progress Canada has made in recent years; after referring incidentally to the fact that the public debt of Canada is now four times greater per head than that of the United States, the article continues:

The country in short has been making rapid progress and is well able to carry its burdens provided there is no monstrous addition in the immediate future.

The article goes on to enumerate the great public works and undertakings which this government proposes, and it continues:

Here—deducting what has already been spent by the government on account of its section of the Grand Trunk Pacific—is a total of not far from two hundred million dollars to be raised in London before long, to say nothing of the considerable aggregate of Dominion debts falling due, or of the possible necessity for borrowing for other services now that the era of buoyant revenues is over.

I invite the special attention of the Minister of Finance, and the special attention of the Prime Minister, and above all the special attention of the members of this parliament and the people of the country to the words which follow:

This, it must be allowed, is a staggering outlook. Instead of economizing the government has gone on increasing debt and expenditure as a means of mitigating depression; always a risky policy.

And in the face of that opinion from an impartial and well informed source—because the London 'Economist' is recognized as one of the greatest financial authorities in the world—the Minister of Finance entertains this House with a stump speech, and he gives not one word of information as to how these enormous obligations will be discharged. I was amazed that a gentleman occupying his position should not in the course of an hours' speech give one word of information to the people of Canada as to how these enormous burdens are to be met in the future. Not a word of comment on them, not a word of explanation, not a word as to provision for the future, but many words in idle taunts against some half dozen members on this side of the House who had asked for legitimate expenditure of public moneys in their constituencies. Sir, we on this side of the House have not objected and do not object to proper and legitimate expenditures, but we do object to the expenditures of this government in countless instances for the past ten or twelve years for purposes which are not in the public interest and which the Minister of Finance knew were not in the public interest when he sanctioned and authorized them. I was told of one instance, out of hundreds in his own constituency, where an opponent of the Minister of Finance at an election in his county went to a certain voter and inquired as to how he intended to vote and this gentleman who had previously supported the Minister of Finance was not well satisfied. Why, he said, Mr. Fielding means well; he has built this breakwater as a means of giving more employment but he knew and we all knew that it was of no possible use, and why did not Mr. Fielding take that money and divide it amongst us. I say we do not object to legitimate expenditure but we do object to middlemen's profits. The Minister of Finance has declared that there is a new Canada to-day, a new Canada which was not born until after 1896. Well, Mr. Speaker, there is a new Canada and there is a new sign at the door of almost every department in the public service, and it is a sign to the middleman: Apply here. That invitation to the middleman has not been neglected by that very numerous class, and they have been well rewarded.

The hon. gentleman referred to a great many subjects in the course of his speech, but he omitted to refer to a great many more. To a certain extent he dealt with one or two important subjects, but he dealt with them in a small way. He spoke of the enormous expenditure by the government of Canada in recent years, but he did not mention the fact that the government has taken out of the pockets of the people during the past twelve years $252,000,000 more than the taxation would have amounted to upon the basis that existed in 1896. And where has this money gone? Look around this country and point me to any great enterprise that has been completed and paid for. I admit that something has been done by the government in improving the canals, in continuation of a policy initiated by their Conservative predecessors. I admit that the Intercolonial has been extended to Montreal, that some public buildings have been erected through the country, and that something has been done for the St. Lawrence route. I do not desire to minimize in the least anything the government has done in the way of legitimate expenditure for public works, but look at the great public works that are now proposed by the government and which have not been paid for, or paid for in only small part. Look at the Transcontinental Railway: it will cost nearly $200,000,000 of which we have paid up to the present time only $26,000,000. Look at the Georgian bay canal, which these hon. gentlemen flaunt before the country whenever they think it expedient to do so; look at the Welland canal which they are proposing to build, in their speeches out of parliament if not in parliament; look at the necessary but unaccomplished development of our ports; look at the proposal for building the Hudson Bay Railway; look at dozens of other great and important and necessary public works in this country, the expenditures on which the country will have to face during the next few years, and ask yourselves whether or not, having regard to the enormous increase of taxation within the past twelve years, the country has received any fair and adequate return for that money which has come out of the pockets of its taxpayers.

My hon. friend dealt among other things with the Transcontinental Railway. He did not dwell upon it to any very great extent; but I desire to say one or two words with regard to it, for the purpose of placing before the people of this country the ideas of the Finance Minister and the principles upon which the government propose to deal with capital expenditure. In a recent debate in this House my hon. friend was good enough to refer to some statements made by me as the cost of that road as 'monstrous representations' or some similar phrase, and I think it is well to look a little at the cost of that road and at the views of the Minister of Finance with regard to it. What is the position which we take with regard to the cost of that road? We point out in the first place that whereas the Minister of Finance estimated the cost of the road from Winnipeg to Moncton at $51,300,000, it is now admitted by the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Finance that without taking into consideration interest, or terminals, or anything execept the bare cost of the road it will amount to $114,500,000. I take that as the cost of the road to the country, because some one must pay for that road, and there is no one to pay for it, so far as I am aware, except the people of this country. The Minister of Finance says that that is a complete mistake and a monstrous statement to place before the people of this country. In order not to do him injustice, I will use his own words:

> Let me say at once that it is a monstrous statement to say that that represents the cost of that road to Canada.

And he concludes his sentence by saying:

> Therefore you must strike it out entirely.

Let us look at that for a moment. In considering the cost of the Transcontinental Railway you must strike out that item entirely; what follows? This follows: That it makes not the slightest difference to this country whether that road costs $51,300,000 as the Minister of Finance estimated, or $114,500,000, as the reality proves. Further than that, if you are to strike out that item entirely, as the Minister of Finance argues, then it would not make the slightest difference to the people of this country whether the road cost $250,000,000, and therefore all inquiry into Major Hodgins' charges or into the Grand Trunk Pacific complaints is utterly idle. Would any one imagine that these were sober words proceeding from the mouth of the Minister of Finance of Canada. One would imagine that language of that kind could only come from some person who was entirely reckless or regardless of his words and absolutely void of any responsibility for the effect they produce. But my hon. friend went further. He said that interest on construction should be struck out for the same reason. Therefore it necessarily follows that it makes not the slightest difference to the people of this country whether they pay 10 per cent or 3 per cent on the cost of construction. Does the Minister of Finance or any one else imagine that the people of this country can be deceived by an argument of that kind? I concur in the view that has been taken by many gentlemen on this side of the House that in placing the cost of the National Transcontinental Railway at about $192,000,000, I have placed it very much below the mark; that when the people of this country come to foot the bill, it will be found that the amount which I named, and which as the hon. member for North Toronto truly says is only an estimate, will be found very much below the mark.

Mr. Speaker, it is rather a grave situation that confronts the people of Canada to-day. My hon. friend boasts of his revenues. Let me read one or two further paragraphs from the article in the London 'Economist' to which I alluded a moment ago. After dealing with the attempts which have been made to settle the great northern portions of this country the article uses this language:

> The tendency is to push railways further and further north into the solitudes lying above the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific in Ontario, Quebec and British Columbia, where development even under the most favourable circumstances, is bound to be slow; and schemes are actually on foot for invading Labrador and Ungava. The higher price we have to pay for money in England may deter the federal and provincial governments from voting cash subsidies to such projects, but some of them are certain to obtain guarantees, which may easily prove embarrassing.

My hon. friend the Minister of Finance puts to one side with a wave of his hand the liabilities which this country has assumed and which it is proposing to assume in respect to these guarantees of great undertakings. That is not the view that is taken by the article I have quoted from this great financial journal, which declares that these guarantees may well prove embarrassing. The Minister of Finance has a different outlook and a different view entirely to that entertained with regard to these conditions by this great financial journal. Further on in the same article it says :

Hereafter we are likely to get into trouble over the government end of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Many in parliament are of opinion that the company, which has agreed to pay an annual rental equal to 3 per cent on cost for this portion, will be obliged to back out of its bargain. It does not begin paying rent till some time after the completion of the road, but recent explorations have not revealed any great timber or mineral wealth along the route between Winnipeg and Quebec, whilst the division from Quebec to Moncton can hardly be remunerative in view of the competition of the Intercolonial, a government line barely meeting operating expenses. On all sides it is felt that the government should have been content with the company's original design, to begin at North Bay and go on to the Pacific, North Bay being a terminal of the Grand Trunk proper. Unfortunately, the government yielded to party and sectional pressure.

And this is comment from a great financial journal upon the action of that gentleman who to-night boasted that this government was never under any conditions subject to sectional prejudices. The article continues as follows :

The company intended, of course, to live honourably up to its covenant, but circumstances may force it sooner or later to ask to be relieved of the stretch of 1,000 miles from Moncton to North Bay—such, at least, is the growing impression, in which event Canada will be saddled with another white elephant. This, however, is a matter for the future. I mention it merely to strengthen the argument that we had better go slow, and let the remote north remain unopened till we have fulfilled the obligatons, direct or incidental, undertaken in behalf of other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. FIELDING. Would my hon. friend mind sending the paper to me ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Certainly. I think that article was written by a gentleman who has been in remarkably close touch in the last ten years——

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. gentleman has stated this is the comment of a great financial journal, he has given the impression that it was a statement by the editor. I have not opened the paper yet but I do not believe the article was by the editor at all.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It was from the Ottawa correspondent of that journal.

Mr. FIELDING. I took down the words, the hon. member spoke of the comment of a great English journal and he has presented to this House an article by a correspondent and represented it to be the comment of the London 'Economist.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is comment found in the columns of that great financial journal and it is the comment of their Ottawa correspondent who has been in exceedingly close touch with this government and who announces in that very article that the government is going to undertake the construction of the Hudson Bay railroad and who wrote the article at a time when the government intended to undertake the building of that road and to embark on it this session.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member did not say it was a correspondent, he said it was the comment of this great London financial journal and it was not until I asked him to send the paper to me that he made any allusion to the correspondent.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The article was at the hon. gentleman's disposal at any time during my speech and I say it is the comment of the journal to which I allude, found in its columns.

Mr. FIELDING. The hon. member knows that is not fair, there is all the difference in the world between the comment of a journal and the comment of a correspondent. I offer no opinion as to whether the correspondent is wise or not, the editorial of a great paper is one thing, the opinion of a correspondent is another.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. My hon. friend seems to be very familiar with this correspondent. I do not know whether it was any one in close touch with the hon. member who wrote it.

Mr. FIELDING. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I understand the gentleman has been in close touch with the government in the last ten years. It is perfectly obvious he was in close enough touch to know the intention of this government to build the Hudson Bay Railway immediately, although that intention seems to have been modified to a considerable extent in the last three or four weeks.

Mr. CONMEE. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the article ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What part of it ?

Mr. CONMEE. The whole of it. For instance does he agree that the road should have been built to North Bay and no further ?

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I shall read some portions with which I do agree.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Farrer salaried by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was under the impression that Mr. Farrer was a good deal closer to the government than to the Canadian Pacific Railway but my hon. friend with his superior information will no doubt correct me in regard to that.

Here, deducting what has already been spent by the government on account of its section of the Grand Trunk Pacific, is a total of not far from $200,000,000 to be raised in London before long, to say nothing of the considerable aggregate of Dominion debts falling due, or of the possible necessity for borrowing for other services now that the era of buoyant revenue is over.

I agree with that. What does the hon. member for Rainy River say, does he agree with it ?

Mr. CONMEE. No.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. From what part does he dissent.

Mr. CONMEE. I disagree with the whole article.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If $200,000,000 are not to be raised in London or elsewhere how much is to be raised in London or elsewhere ? My hon. friend does not reply ; he does not seem to be able to explain with what portions of that he does not agree.

Mr. CONMEE. I am waiting for my hon. friend's answer.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If my hon. friend will examine the 'Hansard' of 1903 and 1904 he will find exactly what I thought then and what I think now on that point. What I stated then I am now prepared to stand by. Here is another part of the article which is headed :

From our Ottawa correspondent.

Whose identity is announced by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot).

This, it must be allowed, is a staggering outlook. Instead of economizing the government is bent on increasing debt and expenditure as a means of mitigating depression—always a risky policy.

Does the hon. member (Mr. Conmee) not think that a risky policy? So on, all through the article. I have already placed those portions of it on 'Hansard' and I say it is a most striking comment on the course that this government has pursued in its financial policy in the last ten or twelve years, and it comes, if my hon. friend from Bellechasse is to be believed, from a gentleman who has never been regarded as unfriendly to the party in power.

Mr. TALBOT. I think the balloon is pricked and burst.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) has placed an exhaustive statement of the position before the House. So far as the important and significant portions of that statement are concerned, the Finance Minister, has made no attempt to meet them. They relate in the first place to the rapidly increasing expenditures of this country; in the second place to the tendency of this administration to increase that expenditure still further in the face of falling revenues ; and in the third place to the necessity of meeting loans in the London market of between two and three hundred millions during the next three or four or five years. These all-important points have not been grappled with by the Finance Minister who has uttered no word with regard to them, yet in the significant and pregnant words of the article I read here to-night it is these matters which are engaging the attention of financiers in the great money markets of the world although they are not engaging the attention of the government of this country. These are considerations which it was proper to place before the House at the close of the session and when we come to realize what the proposed expenditures of the government amount to I say that no hon. gentleman who reads the resolution and takes to heart the enormous figures of expenditure and the necessary increase of the public debt in the resolution, can find it consistent with his duty to vote against the resolution proposed.

Mr. TAYLOR. One word in reply to a statement made by the Minister of Finance referring to myself. I am satisfied that the minister would not willingly misrepresent me and must have made his statement from hearsay, relying on the report of some person who was present in the House when the discussion took place. Had he taken the trouble to read 'Hansard' he would not have made the statement that he did and I presume when he made that statement reflecting on myself the same application might be made to the hon. gentlemen on this side to whom he referred. I shall read for his information what took place. We were discussing the militia estimates. And I made this statement :

Mr. TAYLOR. It is fair to assume that these armouries will cost about $10,000 apiece and this vote of $50,000 will therefore erect five armouries.

The Minister of Militia had a vote in the estimates of $50,000 for armouries. I made this reference to it :

I would like to know where the minister is going to place these. I want to remind him that they ought to put Gananoque in as good a position as the government found it in when they came into power. We have at Gananoque a battery and a company of rifles. When this government came into power we had a first-class drill shed and armoury, but the government saw fit to tear it down and to purchase another site.

And they promised to build another armoury in its place. That was eleven years ago, and they have done nothing. I asked that $10,000 of this $50,000 that was being devoted to the construction of armouries might be used to carry out the promise of the government to replace the armoury in Gananoque which they had torn down. But the promise they made, like every other promise which they have made, has been left unfulfilled. They took the whole $50,000 for buildings in constituencies of their supporters and neglected the pledge that they had made to Gananoque. The hon. minister says that I made application for an expenditure of public money. All I asked was they should keep the promise they made. In the course of the debate there was the following:

Mr. TAYLOR. What about carrying out your arrangement at Gananoque?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will put that on the list when I return to my office in the morning.

Mr. TAYLOR. Gananoque should be the first on the list because we had a drill shed and armoury there and the minister tore it down. He bought a site but he has not given the boys an armoury since.

The minister says that this is an application for public expenditure. I asked this government to carry out the promise and replace the armoury that they had torn down, and the minister acknowledged the corn.

Mr. C. L. OWEN (East Northumberland). I wish to put on record my disapproval of what I am bound to call the unwarranted and extraordinary expenditure of public money by the government now in power. My name has been mentioned here to-night as asking for a wharf at Brighton village. I am justified in asking for it. I did not ask for a wharf where there is no water. I did not ask for a wharf in an inland lake. I did not ask for a wharf which would turn into a bridge in the course of construction. I did not ask for a wharf to cost $13,000 at a little village on Lake Huron where the postal revenue is $16.14 per annum. I asked for a wharf where it is really needed in the interest of the public, and I say it is a shame and a disgrace to the government in power that they have not built a wharf at Brighton. It is a village of 1,800 inhabitants, with a large trade. I pointed out the need publicly in this House. I did not wait on the minister privately, but I went with a deputation who laid the matter before him. And he gave the deputation to understand that something would be done. I fully expected that there would be an item in the supplementary estimates for a wharf at Brighton village. I am surprised that it was not brought down, because the Minister of Public Works stated in the House that his policy was to spend money where it is needed. I cannot believe that that is his policy, because he has not carried that out in the case of Brighton village.

One can hardly realize that the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) were at that great Reform convention held here in Ottawa in 1893. They were greatly alarmed at that time at what they called the large expenditure—which happened to be about $42,000,000. And, if I remember rightly the speeches of the Prime Minister in the campaign of 1896 in the province of Ontario, he told the people he was greatly alarmed at the annual expenditure and promised that if his party were given the reins of power, he would reduce the annual expenditure $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. I believe the people are surprised at what the right hon. Prime Minister is doing. If he was alarmed in 1896, they are alarmed now. I am safe in saying that no parliamentarian, however long he may have sat in this House, has ever seen that wilfully wasteful expenditure of public money as we have witnessed this session. I am not one of those who do not believe in the development of the country. I believe in spending money for the development, but I do not believe in wasteful expenditure. It has been proven in this House time and again that money has been expended, not in the best interests of the people of this country, but mostly in the interest of the middlemen. As stated by an hon. member this evening, we have middlemen rapping at the door of every department, and every one of them has had his wishes gratified. That is not expending money in the public interest; and I protest against such wasteful and extravagant expenditure.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) speaking with regard to the correspondent of the 'Economist,' led the House to believe that there is a great difference between the casual correspondent and the editor of a responsible journal. But this was not written by a casual correspondent. I have it before me and it is headed 'From our Correspondent.' It is not signed but is adopted by the paper as expressing the views of the paper. It carries with it all the weight of an editorial in that journal.

Amendment (Mr. Foster) lost on the last division recorded.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE. Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to a matter of great interest to my constituency of West Algoma, of which I gave notice a week ago, but which has not been brought earlier to his attention owing to a misunderstanding with regard to the matter. Speak of it to-night because of a despatch from Sault Ste. Marie in the Toronto paper, which arrived to-night, to the effect that 'the rail mill of the Lake Superior Corporation closed down this afternoon for an indefinite period.' An unofficial statement was made that the reason is lack of orders and scarcity of ore to run the blast furnaces. In that connection I would draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the state of things at those works. A little while ago the works at Sault Ste. Marie were obliged to close down from lack of orders. Since then the work has been resumed, but again, unfortunately, the orders not being of sufficient importance to justify the continuance of the work, the mills have closed down again. Now, following that cessation of work at Sault Ste. Marie, come some very disquieting rumours with regard to the importations of steel rails from the United States for some of our leading railways. In this connection let me draw the attention of the minister to section 37 of the Act respecting the National Transcontinental Railway, which requires that company to purchase all material and supplies for the construction of the western division and the equipment of the railway from Canadian purchasers when the same are produced in Canada and when such supplies can be purchased of the desired quantity, of equal quality, and on terms equally advantageous. Section 42 of the same Act states that this agreement is made for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade. Now, we learn that substantial orders of rails for the construction of the western division of the Grand Trunk Pacific, namely, that portion which is being constructed by the company itself, has been given to United States makers, to that extent depriving Canadian producers of the trade they should receive, and to that extent, apparently, in violation of the specific agreement I have just referred to. I now quote from the 'Railway Engineering Review,' of Chicago.

A summary of rail requirements of the Grand Trunk Pacific in the construction of the five sections of the new Canadian Transcontinental road now under way has been given by the minister of the Interior. The total amounts to 267,840 tons of steel rails. Of this total 230,371 have been purchased from the Dominion Iron and Steel Company, Sydney, N.S.; the Algoma Iron and Steel Company, Sault Ste. Marie; and the United States Steel Corporation.

It has also been brought to my attention that large imports of steel rails for the construction of the western division have been made from American firms in addition to this. The Pittsburg and Detroit papers report that large orders have been placed by the Grand Trunk Pacific with Pittsburg firms for use in the construction in the western division, and that, with the exception of a few orders given to the Dominion Steel Company and the Algoma Steel Company, all the rails to be laid on that section of the road would be of American make. Now, I am not giving that as my own statement; I am simply saying that this is what the Pittsburg papers say in regard to the importation of these rails. The Detroit 'Free Press' likewise made a similar statement. Assuming that there is truth, in the statements of the 'Engineering Review' and in that of the Pittsburg and Detroit papers, what they say appears to be verified by men engaged in the steel business in Canada. Then we have to contemplate the conditions of the contract in section 37 as to the class of material, and I commend to the perusal of the Minister of Railways, with regard to the quality of the United States steel rails, an article which appears in the 'Canadian Journal of Commerce' of June 12. This merely contains a quotation from the 'Standard of Empire':

The 'Standard of Empire,' which aims at being the organ of Greater Britain, has the following strong statement regarding United States rails. It will be noticed, by the way that the Imperialistic journal makes no endeavour to discriminate between the United States and America, though it must be aware of the fact that a good sized slice of Greater Britain is also on the American continent, as well as a few other countries:

The serious slump in American rail exports to many of the countries where hitherto they have found a ready market, has brought consternation and despair to American steel firms. In Europe the American rail has been wiped out. To be exact, during more than half of last year the value of American rails imported into all the countries of Europe was less than one per cent of the amount imported during the corresponding period of the previous year. During the same time the imports of American rails into Canada dropped from £268,885 to £56,580. This loss of eighty per cent is even more significant when we bear in mind that owing to the proximity of the Dominion to the United States, the American firms have an immense advantage over everybody else. In other British possessions and foreign countries, the Americans have suffered more or less severely. Thus, a long and appalling list of accidents has at last brought home to the world the fact that the basic steel, dumped so profusely in so many different countries, is worthless for railway purposes. It is no unusual thing for American rails to break in half in the mere process of unloading, and over and over again they have been crushed out of all shape after a few weeks service on lines where the traffic is far from heavy. It is now recognized that the defects are not only due to the inherent unsuitability of the basic process and the careless methods of American manufacture, but also to the fact that the makers fail to discard the faulty metal in their ingots. As a consequence, a revulsion of feeling has set in in favour of the open-hearth steel.

Now, whatever merit there may be in that article, I am not going to do more than draw the attention of the minister to that portion which deals with the suitability of the United States steel rails. Now, there is at Sault Ste. Marie an industry which is capable of turning out steel rails of excellent durability and workmanship. I suppose that most of the railways in Canada have used them. The contract price, as the minister has shown in an answer to a question in the House, is on a par with that of other rail manufacturers, and there is no reason why there should be any preference shown to American firms over Canadian firms in the importation of steel rails for this great railway, provided the conditions remain, under that clause of the contract, the same as they are in the United States in regard to price, workmanship and suitability. Now, I desire to draw the attention of the minister to a statement recently brought down by the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), showng the importation into Canada of iron and steel in the rail and other forms during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1908. Amongst the items mentioned in the statement you will find these :

Iron and steel railway bars or rails..	$ 1,278,084
Pig iron..	3,388,665
With other steel products..	5,417,860
Total..	$10,084,609

Possibly the minister is familiar with the firms who are importing, but there is no getting away from the fact that there are and have been a lot of very heavy importations of steel rails from the United States, some of which at least have been specially imported for use upon the western division of the Grand Trunk Pacific. In contrast with that let me remind the minister of a statement made by Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in the famous speech that he made in Toronto not long ago at the celebration of the opening of the Toronto Sudbury line in which he said that every rail, spike, bridge, tie, car and locomotive was of Canadian production and that despatch and quality of the Canadian product were equal to the very best. I know that I need not emphasize to the minister and to the House the condition of things which exists at Sault Ste. Marie, in Nova Scotia, and at Port Arthur and in connection with many other steel and iron industries, in which a large amount of Canadian, British and American capital is invested. I would ask him to give these matters his very serious consideration and do what he can now, to show the Canadian spirit which should and perhaps will influence him in the matter, to see that the terms of the agreement between this company and the government are strictly adhered to in spirit as well as in letter, that our Canadian industries get the full benefit of the work of the construction of that great road and that all materials and supplies which are the product of Canadian industries are used in the construction of the road, provided the conditions upon which they are obtainable fall within the basis laid down by section 37 of the agreement to which I have referred the minister. It is not an unfair thing to ask. It is creating a feeling of great unrest and serious alarm among the Canadian steel and iron workers to read these reports from time to time. It must create a feeling of unrest and alarm and when, on top of that, you have the Algoma Steel Company at the Soo closing down twice in two months for lack of orders and the manufacturers of pig iron at Port Arthur being obliged to close down, while at the same time we are face to face with these heavy importations from the United States, it is a matter which requires grave consideration which I earnestly hope it will receive from the minister. I trust that he will feel that I bring this matter to his attention and to the attention of the House in a spirit of fairness and from a desire to see that full justice is done to Canadians and Canadian industries and to see that Canada gets, in the development of her trade, the full benefit of the agreement governing the construction of the Transcontinental Railway.

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals). The question which my hon. friend has alluded to is one which is of very great importance to Canada and he will agree with me when I tell him that I have always taken a deep interest in the Soo industry. Before I came to this House and while acting in another sphere I went to a considerable length in doing what I could to see that that important industry was retained and maintained for the people of Canada. Although at the present moment the conditions are not just what I would like I still have faith in the Soo industry and we want to provide the largest possible share of orders for its product. We have two of these industries in Canada, one at Sydney and the other at the Soo. I am sure if my hon. friend will consult those interested in the Soo industry they will tell him that this government has shown its friendship to their industry in a very practical way. On two occasions at least since I have had charge of the Railway Department we have endeavoured to make it smoother for the Soo industry than it might have been if we had not made that endeavour. I believe with him that the steel rails made at Sydney and at Sault Ste. Marie are equal to any made on the continent. I am perfectly in sympathy with that view. I do not agree with the article read by my hon. friend which says that steel rails made in the United States are inferior because they make some magnificent rails there. I will communicate with the president or general manager of the Grand Trunk Pacific to see if there is any truth in the report that orders for rails have been given to the United States makers. I am anxious to do what I can to see that the rails to be used on Canada's great Transcontinental Railway shall be produced in the Dominion of Canada.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

Mr. R. S. LAKE (Qu'Appelle). This is the last opportunity I shall have to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals a question that I asked once or twice before as to whether he has been able to find the report of the engineer who was sent out last fall to inspect the Canadian Northern Railway between Irwood and the Pas Mission ?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yesterday I placed on the desk of my hon. friend the report of our engineer dated February last and that is the only report we have in the department.

Mr. LAKE. Last autumn I met a gentleman on the Canadian Northern and he told me he had been commissioned by the government to go over that road, and he gave a very graphic description of his trip.

Mr. GRAHAM. Perhaps it refers to the same report ; was it Mr. McArthur ?

Mr. LAKE. No, it was Mr. Paradis. He gave me a graphic description of his trip as he would to an old friend, for I have known him for many years and he told me the land was swamp, and that nothing could be hauled over the line in the summer season until the whole country was drained. He told me a hand-car was the heaviest thing they could run over a considerable part of the line and that they had laid the rails so that when the frost came they could take a train of materials out. The report which the minister refers to was made by a gentleman who was sent out there after the freeze up and when there was a foot of snow on the ground. I should like to know if it is possible that a subsidy of 12,800 acres per mile, and which the Minister of the Interior says has been selected in western Saskatchewan, could have been given to such a railroad as that.

BEAUHARNOIS CANAL—ROBERT SYNDICATE.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). As this is the last occasion we will have to question the government, I would like the Minister of Railways to give me the information he promised with regard to the present condition of the Robert syndicate lease.

Mr. GRAHAM. I had a copy of the lease in the House last night.

Mr. BERGERON. The lease has been in my possession since it was signed, but I want to know what has been done under it. Has the Robert syndicate made its payment to the government, and are they carrying out the conditions of the lease. A company called the Canadian Light and Power Company is applying to the city council of Montreal to light the city, and that company is supposed to be the Robert syndicate under another name. As I understand it the Robert syndicate cannot under the terms of the lease amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company according to clause 16 of the lease. Their lease is very stringent on that point, and I would like to know if the Minister of Railways has been notified of any change ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will have to ask information from my hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) what does the lease say about that ?

Mr. BERGERON. In order to protect the people of Montreal against monopoly the clause 16 of the lease says : The Robert syndicate shall not amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, and it is commonly supposed in Montreal that the Canadian Light and Power Company which is negotiating with the city council is in reality the Robert syndicate. I do not believe they could do that without the authorization of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. GRAHAM. I imagine not. If the lease says they shall not amalgamate with a certain company that would seem to imply that they could with some other company, but anyway I think it would not be done without notifying the department and I have had no such information.

Mr. BERGERON. The Robert syndicate cannot amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Company, but the Canadian Light and Power Company might. A subterfuge of that kind would be tantamount to bad faith on the part of the syndicate and I should think the Minister of Railways would know something about it.

Mr. GRAHAM. We have no information in the department with regard to that but I shall make inquries. They have paid $6,000 and another $6,000 is due on the 1st of July and I presume will be paid in due course.

CANAL AT BRADFORD, SOUTH SIMCOE.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). The Minister of Railways said some days ago that he would tell me before the close of the session what he would do in reference to building a short stretch of canal near the village of Bradford in south Simcoe. I would be glad if I could tell the people interested that the Minister of Railways had decided to construct that small piece of work.

Mr. GRAHAM. I do not think I promised my hon. friend that I would tell him what

I would do; but I did look into the matter and I find that the report shows the mileage to be greater than my hon. friend had supposed.

Mr. LENNOX. Three-quarters of a mile?

Mr. GRAHAM. It is about three times that. I had an approximate estimate made but it is not one on which we can rely. We will have to consider the matter as we proceed with the work of the canal.

Mr. LENNOX. After the close of the session the minister will have very little to do, and if I write to him would he answer me and let me know what he intends? When we spoke of it some days ago the chief engineer was ill and the minister could not give any information about the matter.

Mr. GRAHAM. I know my hon. friend (Mr. Lennox) will write me a very courteous letter and if he does I will give him all the information I possibly can in reply. I would not like to commit myself to anything because I really do not know what I am in a position to say.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT —FRENCH VERSION.

Mr. BERGERON. I wish to remind the hon. leader of the House that we have not yet had the report of the Royal Commission on the Civil Service in French, although to my knowledge it has been in the Printing Bureau for several months.

Mr. FIELDING. I have been informed by the Secretary of State that the delay is not in the Printing Bureau, but with the translators. I agree with my hon. friend that it should by this time be in the hands of those who want it in French.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Ottawa Victoria Memorial Museum—additional amount, $200,000.

Mr. FOWLER. At what time in the century is it expected that the museum will be finished?

Hon. WM. PUGSLEY (Minister of Public Works. I may say to my hon. friend that the museum is being constructed very rapidly indeed. The contractor is Mr. Goodwin, who, although his contract price is some $300,000 lower than the estimate of the chief architect, and some $200,000 or $300,000 lower than the next lower tender, has been carrying on the work with very great rapidity and with very great satisfaction to the department. I think he will have the building completed next year. If it were necessary, and I think perhaps it may be considered necessary, to have many of the geological specimens stored at as early a date as possible to preserve them from fire, some provision to that end may be made even before the coming winter.

Mr. BERGERON. Are all the lands and buildings bought for the new departmental buildings on Sussex street?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have agreed for the purchase of the larger number of lots but in respect to some we were not able to agree, and we are taking proceedings by expropriation.

Mr. BERGERON. What about the Lindsay block?

Mr. PUGSLEY. We have not decided to purchase the Lindsay block. I made some inquiries of a tentative nature with regard to the price, which I found was pretty heavy.

Mr. SAM. HUGRES. You will come to it after a bit.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Perhaps so in the somewhat remote future. The Lindsay block, however is not necessary to the departmental buildings which we are now planning.

Resolution reported.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Bill (No. 215) to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of lines of railway therein mentioned—Mr. Graham—read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the Bill in the same form as the resolutions?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I asked if any of the roads proposed to be subsidized are now actually under construction.

Mr. GRAHAM. I endeavoured to get all the information I could along that line. I find the following are partly constructed or under construction, Nos. 32, 40, 43 (three miles), 45, (a portion constructed, balance under construction), 55 (two miles under construction), 60 (a portion under construction), 61, (a portion under construction), 62, 65 (four miles), 66 and 68 (under construction). An hon. gentleman asked the mileage of each of the great railways under this. I cannot guarantee the accuracy of these figures as the subsidies are sometimes voted under names of other companies, but my clerk figures it in this way:

	Miles.
Grand Trunk Pacific..	330·9
Canadian Northern Railway..	202·9
Canadian Pacific Railway..	270·15

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I could not get access to these applications this morning and consequently cannot say much as to their contents. Taking a view of the items which I have had some opportunity of examining I observe that No. 39 provides for a subsidy to the Canadian Pacific Railway in respect of 34½ miles. Section 40 provides for a subsidy for the Canadian Pacific Railway for 123 miles. So far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned. I have never known it to have difficulty in carrying out its undertakings in respect to the building of branch lines. It is a very wealthy and prosperous company. Its stock is considerably above par, standing at 150 or 160; it pays 7 per cent and so far as my memory goes its officers have publicly announced that in the larger portions of Canada to-day railway building should be carried on without assistance from the government. I observe further in respect of 123 miles to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the information contained in the documents on the table is very meagre. It states that the road is already under construction; if that is so I would be of opinion that that railway is quite able to carry the construction of that road to a conclusion. I do not observe from the documents before the House that there is any application by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It does not purport to be signed by any person. No. 68 relates to sixty miles of the Canadian Northern from Hawkesbury to Ottawa which, I understand, is partially completed. The same thing is true of items 49 and 62 which are to aid branch lines of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Item 62, is for a branch line from Port Arthur to the main line of the Transcontinental Railway. That is distinctly a part of the enterprise of the Grand Trunk Pacific, as will appear by reference to the statute under which the Grand Trunk Pacific was incorporated, section 12 of chapter 122 of the Acts of 1903. I refer to section 12 of that Act, which I would read if it were not that I desire to economze the time of the House. The same observation will apply to No. 49 which is distinctly a part of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I have not been able to look at the application with regard to that particular item. But an hon. member who looked into it informed me that there is no application excepting a very informal one purporting to be made by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not vouch for that of my own information, for I could not find the document.

Mr. GRAHAM. That is all the information it gives.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Here, for instance, is the way the application reads in part:

Name of railway. A railway.
Province. The province of Quebec.
What subsidy applied for? 200 miles.
8. From Montreal to a point on the Transcontinental.
9. Applicant. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. GRAHAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. R. L. Borden) will remember that I explained that it was put in this way only to show that there was an application.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN.

This subsidy was granted in response to one of the largest deputations that have visited us this session, and who urged it very strongly. That is the reason it was informal—it was put that way merely to keep the record.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I am only dealing with the information that has been laid on the table.

Mr. GRAHAM. I explained that fully last night.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I was not aware of it. It must have been at the time when I was absent from the chamber. The points I take with regard to these five items—which are the only ones I have had an opportunity to look into—is that they must necessarily be built by the railway companies to whom subsidies are proposed to be paid. So far as that point is concerned. I might be permitted to allude to some observations made in this House by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). I quote from 'Hansard' of 1906, page 5965:

I recognize that the Grand Trunk Pacific came in 1903 or 1904 and asked authority from this parliament to build certain branch lines as well as to have the lease from the government of Canada. They asked authority from the government of Canada, when it should have constructed a trunk line from Winnipeg to Moncton, to lease and operate that trunk line. A part of the scheme and arrangement and agreement on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific was that they should build certain branch lines; and they are held to that agreement.

And further on:

The Grand Trunk Pacific Company are bound to build it; they are under obligation.

This is with reference to a line to the city of St. John. He deals with that exactly as with the other line. He is referring to the two branch lines to which I have alluded, and an additional one to the city of St. John. And he says that the Grand Trunk Pacific are 'under obligation.' The report proceeds:

Mr. DANIEL. Under what charter?
Mr. EMMERSON. Under every discussion that was held in this House in 1903 and 1904. They are under a moral obligation, more than that they are under a pledge, by reason of the project in its entirety. They asked for authority to build certain branch lines.
Mr. CARVELL. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to tell me where we shall find the statute that contains that?
Mr. EMMERSON. I am not putting that claim forward. It was not within the statute, but it was within the agreement, and a well understood agreement, and they are bound to do it.

That was the view of the government, as expressed by the then Minister of Railways, as regards the two lines, for both are included, I take it. I am not taking the point that railway subsidies should not be granted where absolutely necessary for the purpose of proper and legitimate railway development in this country. But I do take the point that where wealthy railway corporations need branch lines which would be carried to completion without a subsidy from the government, or where the company is under the business necessity of building these lines as part of its system, or under some arrangement or agreement with the government, it seems to me that we are going rather far in subsidizing such lines and making a heavy drain upon the revenues of the country. Looking at the five items I have mentioned, two are subsidies for the Canadian Pacific Railway, one for the Canadian Northern Railway and two others for the Grand Trunk Pacific. I find that the total amount of these subsidies authorized by the resolution and Bill is a little over $4,000,000, which is a pretty large sum and a pretty serious obligation. It might turn out, of course, that the roads will cost less than $22,000 a mile, in which case the amount of subsidy would be less, but the total subsidy authorized is no less than $4,079,000. I do not know how many more instances of this kind would develop if one had a proper opportunity to investigate every one of these applications. I deeply regret that, within the time allowed, it is impossible to make such an investigation, and that the information brought down is of so scanty and unsatisfactory a character. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals may be able to give some information with respect of the five lines of which I speak. In the absence of information it does not seem to me that the government has any justification for proposing to subsidize lines which, so far as the facts before the House indicate, would be built in any case without aid from the government.

Mr. GRAHAM. With reference to the two Canadian Pacific Railway lines, one has slipped my memory at the moment, and the one is of 123 miles in length and will not run over $3,200 a mile, as it is in prairie country north of Moosejaw. But, as the committee will remember, earlier in the session, a very strong plea was made to the Railway Department to urge the Canadian Pacific Railway to build a line 123 miles of north of Moosejaw. The reason was that the company had gone so far as to let the contract a year or two ago and people had rushed in there in great numbers. But for some reason it was cancelled. Apparently the road was not going to be built. I took up the question with the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities, and they announced that they would proceed with the building of the road. That was accompanied by a request that if the government were giving subsidies to that kind of a road, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be treated as other roads were treated. I thought so myself, and I put it in the list. The other one was applied for by the Canadian Pacific Railway themselves directly. I made what inquiry I could, and I was assured that it was a road that would serve the people and ought to be aided. Now there is this question as to granting subsidies to a road partly constructed, or that would be. Looking at it from one point of view, my hon. friend would be right, but that has not been the view held by the various governments. I find case after case where subsidies have been given to roads already constructed and in operation. If a country needs opening up by a railway, and a railway company is ready to go on with that, knowing that the policy of the government of Canada has been so far to aid railways, and if they proceeded on that assumption, I am inclined to think that it would not be a wise policy to say that because they went on with the work we should not aid it, if it is doing similar work to other roads that are aided. The road from Montreal is not a Grand Trunk Pacific road, it is not so in stated terms. I suppose their charter giving them the right to build brach lines would possibly be the only one at the present time. But in answer to a deputation, all that we said was that we would consider the advisability of aiding a line connecting the Transcontinental with Montreal. I was careful to put it in that way. It is necessary, both for the city of Montreal and for that portion of Canada, as well as for the success of the road, that the connection should be made. Of the Canadian Northern between Montreal and Hawkesbury and Hawkesbury and Ottawa, quite a portion is graded, and the remarks I made a moment ago would apply to that. Work on that road ceased some little time ago. However, I feel this way, possibly I may be wrong, but believing that we must before many years, notwithstanding all that has been said, have another line across the continent on Canadian territory, this being a portion of it, as it will be when it is linked up, and having aided the other two lines, I think it is only fair that we should aid this one. A part of the grading has been done. Taking, however, the view I expressed a few moments ago, that even if some work has been done on a road, it should not be a bar to getting assistance, if doing the same work. I was in favour of granting a subsidy to that line.

Mr. EMMERSON. When there was under consideration the other evening a proposition to build a branch line on Prince

Edward Island connecting with the main Prince Edward Island Railway, I submitted as a proposition for the consideration of the government that they should first determine with respect to branch lines already constructed and connected with their government system. The Minister of Railways and Canals on that occasion said he had very strong personal views with respect to branch lines. I need not quote what he stated, but it will be within the memory of hon. gentlemen that he personally spoke favourably with respect to them, and he said that another announcement would be made in connection with that subject. Yesterday I had occasion to make some remarks when the resolutions upon which this Bill is founded were under consideration. I then asked the government as to their ideas with respect to the branch lines themselves, because while I take no objection to the policy of aiding railways so far as this country can do so, and while I am in favour of that policy, yet it seems to me there should be certain limitations. Furthermore, I think that in determining as to the advanced ground that should be taken by this parliament in relation to aiding additional lines, there should first be considered the position and the condition of the branch lines already constructed, and which have been aided financially by this government. Now the Minister of Railways has stated that he is favourable to aiding the construction of the line of railway between Montreal and the city of Ottawa. His reasons therefor were that this portion between Montreal and Ottawa would undoubtedly be a part of a third transcontinental line of railway. He is aware that there are to-day already running between this city and Montreal three lines of railway, two of them it is true owned by one company and the other owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, formerly known as the Canada Atlantic Railway. Now it would seem to me that it is a matter of very serious consideration whether the government, in taking this forward movement, should not first deal with the branch lines, and with its own railway system. The Minister of Railways is disposed to aid a trunk line, the Canadian Northern, and very properly. I take no exception to that. But it seems to me that the government for whom he speaks should take into consideration the Intercolonial, and the relationship which exists between that railway and the lines now connected with it. Now, my hon. friend the Minister of Railways promised a later declaration with respect to the matter, and we had from the right hon. gentleman leading the House, yesterday, in answer to a question put by me, a statement as to the course that the government would take in the matter. The government accepted the principle as one that would be in the interests of the country and as one that would be adopted. The proposition would be adopted if the Intercolonial Railway were owned by a private corporation and that is a business proposition which must be acceptable to the country and in the interests of the country. He stated that

The matter has been given a good deal of consideration, but we have not yet been able to make up our minds that it is a policy we should adopt. Whilst we are not prepared to say to my hon. friend——

That is referring to myself—

—that we shall adopt this policy, we realize that it is one which requires consideration and makes it incumbent upon the government to make the fullest inquiry in order that we may be in a position to discuss the matter adequately at another session.

That declaration may mean a good deal. There is a statement that an inquiry will be had, and I think it is due to this committee, as it is due to the country, that the nature of that inquiry should be disclosed. The government apparently have given the matter a good deal of consideration and they realize that it is a policy that requires consideration and places upon the government the responsibility of making the fullest inquiry in order that the matter may be considered at the next session or at another session. We are asked to deal with these propositions. There are railways that may be aided. Certainly we are incurring obligations with respect to certain proposed railways. We should not lose sight of the railways which we have already constructed, the railways in the eastern section of Canada and the railways that were constructed as feeders of the Intercolonial Railway and which were very largely constructed because of the fact that they would be feeders. I had occasion at the last session of this parliament to invite the attention of the House to the statements made by Sir Charles Tupper when he was asking assistance for the construction of certain of these lines and he justified that aid and assistance, properly so, by the fact that these lines would be feeders. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee by going fully into the question, but I think it might fairly be accepted on all sides that the Intercolonial Railway has not been rounded out and will never be rounded out until it has control of its sphere of influence, until it has the control and management of the lines which may serve and which do measurably serve as feeders. In the interest of that section of the country these lines should be operated by the Intercolonial Railway. Now, I would like to ask the minister if he can acquaint this committee with the character of the investigation which is to be made. I quite appreciate the fact that no government should acquire any railways as feeders, that no government should acquire any of these branch lines without first getting the fullest possible information, without first knowing what they were doing and then that they could only acquire them as a business proposition. I simply put that question to the minister, and I trust that he will take us and the country into his confidence with respect to the proposed inquiry. I ask if the government intend to have that inquiry and if they intend to have it at once ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The question of branch railways, I have discovered, during the short time that I have been in this department, is one that is very vital particularly along the line of the Intercolonial Railway. If the Intercolonial Railway were run by a company there are branch lines now that would be a part of that system. The government railway is under somewhat different conditions possibly, but if the Intercolonial Railway is to retain its position it is worth while to very seriously consider if it ought not to go that far in carrying out business principles in order to see that it gets the traffic that rightly belongs to it. If, in the maritime provinces, keen competition should arise with the Intercolonial Railway we might wake up some morning possibly and find that another line had the branch lines and consequently the business that they now give to the Intercolonial Railway in a minor way. This is a large question. It affects Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Quebec. In all there are in the railways that would be called branches about 1,200 miles. There has been a report upon the branch lines of New Brunswick made at the request of the government of New Brunswick. That report I have. In short this is what I propose to do : In order to get the information that would be a basis to work on, it will be necessary to ascertain the length of each line, the amount of its traffic, its revenue, expenditure, rolling stock, the condition of the road and the probability of the development of business along the line.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. What option there is on the line.

Mr. GRAHAM. The option possibly.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. And who holds the option ?

Mr. GRAHAM. These things would have to be investigated thoroughly, and I assume that the investigation would be along the line of getting this information so that we would be in a position to discuss in a business way the question as to whether we should take over these branch lines. During the recess I propose to have such an investigation made.

Mr. FOWLER. The Minister of Railways and Canals has proved himself a most excellent jollier. The minister says that he has already in his hands a report from the commission appointed by the late government in the province of New Brunswick in regard to branch lines. I have no doubt that report was a very full and exhaustive one because the gentleman who acted on that commission received a very handsome honorarium and I know he is a man of ability and I believe he made a thorough examination.

Mr. EMMERSON. There were two of them.

Mr. FOWLER. There were two of them. It seems strange that the Minister of Railways found it necessary to make another examination.

Mr. GRAHAM. If my hon. friend had the responsibility he would not accept the report of any other officials except those immediately responsible to him no matter how eminent they might be. Before I would take any step towards serious consideration I would want a report of a man responsible to me as I am responsible to this House.

Mr. FOWLER. Surely the minister would have sufficient confidence in the men who ran the government of New Brunswick before March the 3rd to believe they would only appoint men who were competent, straightforward, honest and trustworthy ? When the minster says he is going to make a further examination he is simply jollying the hon. member for Westmoreland.

Mr. GRAHAM. There is a province of Quebec and a province of Nova Scotia as well as a province of New Brunswick.

Mr. FOWLER. Then let us know what the policy is in regard to the branch lines in New Brunswick ? The majority of this House have been cheerfully voting large sums of money for railways in all parts of the country, and it seems to me it would be far more important to take over the tributary lines of the government railways. We have granted a large subsidy for a line to Hudson bay although we know nothing of the territory through which it shall pass, and we have conflicting testimony as to the practicability of the water route when the railway is built. The minister can quite understand that one management instead of several ; that the utilization on the branch lines of the lighter rails taken from the main line, instead of selling them to favoured friends as old junk, with tremendous profit to the men who buy and great loss to the railway which sells ; the minister knows that this would tend to great economy in the management.

Mr. EMMERSON. The old rails on the Intercolonial have not been sold as old junk to friends of the government. They have always been put up to tender and the highest bidder got them.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps a better price may have been obtained than the hon. gentleman would get for the broken pots and pans in his own house, but all the same these rails were sold as junk to be broken up. Mr. Mathew Lodge made extensive purchases of these rails and I understood he was quite a friend of the government because the government was quite a friend to him.

Mr. EMMERSON. I dont think Mr. Lodge ever bought any rails.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps not when my hon. friend was minister, but it was commonly reported that he did.

Mr. EMMERSON. I think not, but what is the point if he bought them by tender?

Mr. FOWLER. I said that these rails were sold to Mr. Lodge whom I took to be a friend of the government.

Mr. EMMERSON. Sold by tender.

Mr. FOWLER. So were the timber limits and the coal lands sold by tender, but we know what happened. In certain districts in New Brunswick very great sacrifices have been made by the people to get these lines of railway. In one of the counties I have the honour to represent a heavy and a grievous tax was placed on the people for the purpose of getting these branch lines built. New Brunswick, compared with some other provinces, is poor in resources, but here in the great provinces of Ontario and Quebec, between Ottawa and Montreal, where there are at present three lines of railway, a fourth is being built, and it is being largely subsidized by this government; subsidized to an extent that would go a long way towards purchasing these branch lines in New Brunswick and making them part of the Intercolonial. The principle of acquiring these branch lines was adopted three or four years ago, when the government purchased the Canada Eastern. Why did they do that?

An hon. MEMBER. Because it was connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway, another great trunk line.

Mr. FOWLER. But the Canadian Pacific already had a connection with the Intercolonial at St. John. The reason why they acquired the Canada Eastern was because of the political exigency that existed at the time, and because it was necessary to carry out a pledge whereby they had been enabled to elect a supporter in the county of York, N.B. That is the reason why; and at the very time that scheme went through I brought up the question of the acquisition by the government of the rest of the branch lines in the province of New Brunswick. I asked if that policy was to be adopted, and I got a very unsatisfactory reply from the then Minister of Railways. But it seems to me that if we have all the money required for these various railway schemes—although the Finance Minister may have some difficulty when he comes to borrow—and if we have cheerfully voted for the building of canals in these upper provinces, which yield no revenue whatever to this Dominion, we ought to have some consideration for the maritime provinces in this regard. Take the scheme of the Georgian bay canal, which will cost, at the lowest estimate, about a hundred millions or, if we may judge from our experience with the Grand Trunk Pacific, will cost more than double that estimate, which would be $200,000,000, a very small portion of this would enable us to purchase all these branch lines in the province of New Brunswick. For these reasons, I do think that the government should announce its policy now in favour of the acquisition of all the branch lines which are feeders to the Intercolonial Railway. It should not be a question whether or not these branch lines are particularly profitable, but only whether the price at which they can be obtained is a fair price or not.

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend, in referring to purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway by the government, knows that he was not accurate in his statement of the object. The object of securing that line was to protect the Intercolonal in its sphere of influence, and to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway acquiring the line and invading the territory controlled by the Intercolonial. The purchase was made at less than $6,000 per mile. It was the cheapest railway that was ever purchased in Canada; but it was for that particular purpose and for no other that the railway was acquired, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. FOWLER. I find no fault with the price paid for the Canada Eastern Railway: but I do say that the purchase was not for the reason stated by the hon. member for Westmoreland, but that there was an understanding between a certain gentleman who was very prominent at that time and very influential in the county of York whereby the government party were enabled in the election of 1900 to carry the county of York for the government. The government did not carry out the terms, and session after session passed by until the election of 1904 came on, when the government found it necessary to carry out the terms, otherwise there would have been trouble. Any gentleman who was a member of this House at that time, and was acquainted with the then member for York, would know that he was calculating on this arrangement, and that he could be heard in these corridors declaiming against the government for their failure to carry it out. It was common knowledge that in the last session he was kicking all the time because that arrangement was not carried out, and finally it was carried out. But gratitude is a lively sense of favours yet to come, and as the railway had been bought, the people returned to their previous allegiance, and elected my hon. friend who now represents the county of York, and who will be elected again to represent it at the next election.

Mr. PUGSLEY. I had a great deal to do in the provincial legislature with urging from time to time the adoption of resolutions in favour of the acquisition of these branch roads. The hon. gentleman truly says that the government of which I was a member appointed a commission for the purpose of making an inquiry into all the branches in the province which were feeders of the Intercolonial Railway, with a view of furnishing the Minister of Railways with such information as would be of value in order to enable him to determine whether or not it would be desirable to take over these roads. My hon. friend has given us a bit of ancient history. What is more important to us to-day, in regard to the Canada Eastern Railway, is to know whether the acquisition of that railway was in the public interest. I say unhesitatingly that it was. The Canada Eastern has proved to be a valuable feeder of the Intercolonial, and I personally have felt, and I have not changed my view in that respect, that it would be in the interest of the public and to the advantage of the Intercolonial Railway to have it considered by an expert whether all the branches in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec would be likely to prove valuable feeders to the Intercolonial if taken over. I think my hon. friend is unfair to the Minister of Railways in suggesting that he is trying to jolly my hon. friend who represents the county of Westmoreland, who has taken a warm and earnest interest in this question. I think the Minister of Railways is pursuing a prudent course, which will commend itself to the best judgment of the people of the country when he proposes. through the officials of his department, to conduct a minute inquiry into all these branch lines in the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec. I feel sure that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways is thoroughly sincere in this. I feel that he desires to obtain the fullest possible information, and I can say for one that I am satisfied that the information which he will obtain will convince him that it will be not only in the interest of the maritime provinces, in the interest of the province of Quebec and in the interest of the whole country, but also in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway itself, that he should adopt the policy which has been adopted universally by all the great trunk lines in the country, that is, to acquire all these branches, or such of them as can be acquired on reasonable terms, which will prove valuable feeders to the Intercolonial Railway and increase its traffic and its earning power.

Mr. FOWLER. It must be grateful to the Minister of Railways to get a certificate of sincerity from so sincere a person as the Minister of Public Works. The minister tells us that as a member of the local government of New Brunswick he appointed a commission to inquire and obtain for the Minister of Railways so much valuable information. It is unfortunate that he did not discuss the matter with the Minister of Railways.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That does not happen to be what I said.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not remember the exact words, but that is practically what he said. It is unfortunate that he did not discuss the matter with the Minister of Railways so as to learn from him whether he would consider as valuable the information which that commission was supposed to obtain. Now, the hon. Minister of Public Works is in a position, as a member of the government, to make his influence felt in regard to this matter of branch lines; and when all these subsidies were being considered by the government, why did he not put in a word for the branch lines in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Quebec?

Mr. PUGSLEY. How do you know that I did not?

Mr. FOWLER. I am sure that he did not, because knowing the great influence which the hon. gentleman would have on his colleagues, knowing the great assistance he has been to the government and the tremendous strength he has brought to it, which the First Minister must realize, his influence would be so great that he would be able to impose his views upon his colleagues and if he had advocated with his heart and soul and strength the construction of these branch lines they would have adopted that policy.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I think it strange when we hear so much from ministers and members on the other side about the acquisition of feeders for the Intercolonial Railway that they have said nothing about the Prince Edward Island Railway, which would be the most valuable feeder they could have for the Intercolonial Railway if a connecting link between the Intercolonial Railway and it were constructed. It seems there is either a concerted plan on the part of the government to overlook Prince Edward Island or else there is some ulterior motive in relation to the buying of these branch lines. We have had many promises of investigation and report. It seems strange that they should overlook the most profitable feeder the Intercolonial Railway could have.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC BRIDGE.

Bill (No. 217) respecting the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company—Mr. Graham—read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has the government come to a conclusion as to whether the present site and the works there will be utilized or will some other site be chosen? Have any inquiries been made on the subject ?

Mr. GRAHAM. The position of the government is this. Leaving aside everything that has happened, this fact stares us in the face, the Quebec bridge is down and the Quebec bridge has to go up. It is the duty of the government to see that the plan is carried out as parliament has directed. This Bill provides for taking over the enterprise in accordance with the agreement. Different opinions are expressed as to using the present site. Some members say that the present material will do. I am not offering any opinion, but I say the first duty of the government is to select a board of engineers composed of two or three of the most prominent engineers in the world. To them will be entrusted the duty of seeing if any or all of the piers, if any or all of the material or design, is adequate for the construction of the bridge. To them will be entrusted the task of selecting a design for the construction of the Quebec bridge. My idea is to submit to them the question of site as well, and to take their advice largely as to the best place to build the bridge and the design to be followed. For, whatever has happened, it must be obvious to every person that no mistakes ought to be made in the future, but that the structure to be erected there should be a lasting one and a credit to Canada, because it will be the greatest of its kind in the world.

Mr. ROBITAILLE. I hope that estimates will be made not only for the present site but also for construction by way of the Island of Orleans. It may be remembered that the objection to the Island of Orleans scheme was that it might cost $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 more. But the cost of railway terminals is also to be considered. Estimates should be made so as to show the cost of both bridge and terminals by either route. It may be that the bridge by the Island of Orleans scheme will cost more, this will be more than made up in the saving on the terminals.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the government to pay the bridge company anything for compensation ?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is provided for in the agreement—the par value of the stock with 5 per cent simple interest and the bonus of 10 per cent.

Mr. LEFURGEY.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the amount of the stock ?

Mr. ROBITAILLE. It will be $400,000.

Mr. GRAHAM. Hon. gentlemen are inclined to guess at that. I have here the figures given me by the accountant :

Par value of the capital stock (round figures, $263,000) to which is to be added a bonus of 10 per cent and 5 per cent simple interest from the date the stock was paid up (approximately) $353,000.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The statute provides that the government may take over the work on paying the amount of the stock with simple interest at 5 per cent per annum, the interest to be reduced by any amounts paid as dividend, and also a bonus of 10 per cent. But there is something more important, and it is this : the government, taking over the stock and the whole enterprise, must assume all the obligations of the company entered upon with the consent of the government and also the bonded indebtedness. What is the amount covered by this last obligation so far as the minister is aware ?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have a statement here showing the liabilities up to July 1 :

Statement as to July 1, 1908, showing the liabilities for which the government will be responsible in connection with the taking over of the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company; also a statement of the assets of the said company.

Liabilities.

Total amount claimed by the Bank of Montreal as due by the bridge company, being the balance of principal advances on bond account together with interest on the same; also the amounts of temporary loans and interest on the same from the date the last advance was made on bond account..	$3,976,796 23
Total indebtedness of the company to the federal government, being the amount advanced under authority of chapter 35 of the Acts of 1907..	2,000,000 00
Interest on above, from February 9 to June 30 (approximately).. ..	23,334 00
Customs duties due to the federal government..	133,027 00
Land expropriated from the Quebec Improvement Company, some 32 acres, for which the company would accept in final settlement.	14,000 00
Total for which the government will be liable..	$6,500,157 23

Roughly speaking, this is about the amount of the bonds I think. The Phœnix Bridge Company make a claim for material delivered, but of course that is not allowed. I need not discuss it.

Mr. FOWLER. How much is it?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think it is $215,000 for material delivered which does not belong to us. These following amounts are given me as assets if the bridge is to be constructed in the same place :

Assets.

Piers which the company claims may be utilized in reconstructing the bridge on new plans, and which cost about $1,125,000, but which the company claims could not be built to-day for less than $2,000,000.. ..	$2,000,000
Approaches, including Chaudière bridge, which the company claim are worth..	1,000,000
Large quantities of manufactured steel, delivered at the time of the accident, or stored up in the company's yards since then, and part of which the company claim could be utilized in construction..	1,000,000
Total assets..	$4,000,000

Mr. FOWLER. It is a pity you had not built more piers; as the profit on them would have met all the loss on the bridge.

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes, if we could have sold them, but unfortunately the market is confined to only those piers needed for the bridge. Those that are there could not be built for less than $2,000,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose the material spoken of there is under water.

Mr. GRAHAM. No ; a great deal of it is stored. Some of the engineers claim that a great deal of it could be used. I suppose much would depend on the design of the bridge. I do not care to express an opinion. but it seems to me that the present site and piers will do. If the site is retained. the piers ought to be usable.

Mr. FOWLER. It strikes me that this is a pretty fair bargain for the company, but a pretty bad one for the country.

Mr. GRAHAM. We are not making a bargain but carrying out the statute.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—PUBLIC BILLS AND ORDERS.

Mr. FIELDING. There is a Bill on Public Bills and Orders which I would ask leave to call. I quite realize that a Bill of this character can only go through at this stage by general consent, and I think probably the character of this Bill may get such consent. I beg leave to move that item 66 on Public Bills and Orders, being Bill (No. 187) to amend the Canadian Temperance Act, be now called.

Mr. LANCASTER. Before that motion is put, while I do not object to the subject matter of the Bill, I desire to protest against this Bill taking precedence of my Bill on a very much more important subject. This House unanimously passed my Bill to amend the Railway Act early in the session, and sent it to the Senate before Christmas. It was a Bill to protect the lives of every man, woman and child from the fatal accidents that are taking place every day at railway crossings. The Senate amended that Bill three or four months afterwards, and sent it back to this House. A week or ten days ago I asked the House to consider this Bill, and was told by the Minister of Railways that it was too late in the session, and that they could not take up any Public Bills and Orders. I think if any Bill is to be taken up, it should be that one.

Mr. FIELDING. I would not care to offer any opinion on that point to-night. I realize now that this Bill to amend the Canada Temperance Act can not go through, unless it meets with general approval. I judge from what my hon. friend says that this Bill may be a matter of debate, I offer no opinion concerning it. But if there is no objection to this Bill, we can deal with it.

Mr. LANCASTER. Two wrongs do not make one right. I was pointing out that a much more important Bill did not get any such treatment, and I do not think it is right.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to look at the Bill. Let it stand till to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING. Then we will let it stand till to-morrow, if my hon. friend prefers. There is another Bill, item 65, a Bill from the Senate relating to the water carriage of goods. If there be no objection, I would like to take that up.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What is the nature of it?

Mr. FIELDING. It relates to an important subject.

Mr. LEFURGEY. There is a good deal of objection to that ; it is an obnoxious Bill.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. If I had any idea that these two Bills were coming up I would have looked at them, but I have not been able to do so. Otherwise, I would be happy to go on with them to-night.

Mr. FIELDING. The attention of the House was called to it by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean), and I intimated to him the other day that the Bill would not be called. However, I will not press it now.

On motion of Mr. Fielding, House adjourned at 1.50 a.m., Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, July 18, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS COMMISSION—PURCHASE OF LANDS AT QUEBEC.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 219) respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec. He said: This Bill is introduced in consequence of the resolution adopted by the National Battlefields Commission which has been communicated to me as follows:

At a meeting of the National Battlefields Commission, held on the 16th instant, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, whereas the great work entailed in the tercentenary celebration of the founding of Quebec has absorbed all the time of the National Battlefields Commission; whereas it is most expedient that the commission should be empowered to secure without undue delay certain properties belonging to private parties and which will be required for the Battlefield park; whereas section 10 of the Act constituting the commission requires the authority of parliament before any land or immovable property is purchased or acquired by the commission; whereas delay means the enhancing in value of many of the said properties which might at present be obtained at a much lower figure than would be likely later; the National Battlefields Commission urgently recommends that the Act respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec be amended so as to empower the commission, subject to the previous authority of the Governor in Council, to acquire if necessary, any or all of the properties specified in a memorandum sent to the Governor General in Council on the fifteenth day of July instant such properties as are not mentioned in the said memorandum to remain subject to clause 10 of the said Act.

J. GEO. GARNEAU,
Chairman, National Battlefields Commission.

Section 10, which is here referred to, reads as follows:

No land or immovable property shall be purchased or acquired by the commission except with the previous authority of parliament.

This law relates not merely to the money voted by parliament but to all other moneys which come into the hands of the commission; none of these moneys may be used for the purchase of lands except with the previous authority of parliament. As the public knows, large sums have been subscribed to the Battlefields Commission, and it is expeceted that the Prince of Wales will hand over the money to the commission with some statement made to him of the property which it is intended immediately to acquire for the purpose of creating a Battlefields park. I have a plan, here which I will place in the hands of hon. gentlemen on the other side, showing the property which it is intended to acquire. This property is described in the following statement prepared by Mr. E. G. Meredith, notary public.

1. A tract of land on the north side of the Ste. Foye road, belonging to the Heirs Tourangeau and others. (Site of the battle of Ste. Foye,—a part of which surrounds the lot of land upon which is erected a monument to the memory of General Lévis and General Murray—'Monument des braves') and which is bounded as follows, viz.:

In front to the south by the Ste. Foye road, in rear to the north, by the brow of the hill (Cime du Cap)—on one side towards the east by lot number twenty-five,—belonging to I. A. Fortin, and on the other side towards the west by lot number twenty-eight, belonging to the representatives of the late J. W. Dunscomb.

Which said tract of land was formerly known and distinguished as lot number twenty-six (26) upon the official cadastral plan for the Banlieue, parish of Notre Dame de Quebec, but which lot has since been subdivided—and the said tract of land is now known and distinguished by different numbers, all of which are subdivisions of the said original lot number twenty-six—together with and including all or any part of the said original lot—number twenty-six, as the same is now laid out and shown on the plan of the subdivision of the said lot number twenty-six as streets or avenues, and including all or any dwelling houses or other buildings of any kind erected on the said tract of land.

2. A strip of land on the south side of the said Ste. Foye road, to be taken off the front or northerly end of lots numbers sixty-eight (68), seventy-five (75) and seventy-six (76), and seventy-nine (79) on the cadastral plan for the said Banlieue, parish of Notre Dame de Quebec, the said strip of land to be of such a depth as, when the same is added to the present width of the said Ste. Foye road, will make the said road seventy-five feet wide in that locality.

3. A strip of land on the east side of the Belvedere road, to be taken off the west side of the said lot number sixty-eight (68) above mentioned, and off the front or west end of lots numbers sixty-nine (69), seventy (70), seventy-one (71), seventy-two (72) and seventy-three (73) on the cadastral plan for the said Banlieue, parish of Notre Dame de Quebec, the said strip of land to be of such a depth as, when the same is added to the present width of the said Belvedère road, will make the said road seventy-five feet wide from one end of the same to the other.

4. A strip of land on the north side of the St. Louis road (starting from the junction of the said Belvedère road and the said the St. Louis road and running in a westerly direction) to be taken off the south side of lot number two hundred and twenty six (226)—the front or south end of lot number two hundred and twenty (220)—and about one third of the whole frontage or south end of lot number two hundred and eighteen (218) upon the cadastral plan for the parish of St. Colomba de Sillery. The said strip of land to be of such a depth as, when the same is added to the present width of the said St. Louis road, will make the said road seventy-five feet wide in that locality,—with any houses or buildings to be found on the said strip of land.

5. A strip of land on the west side of 'Gilmour's Hill' (which leads from the St. Louis road to 'Wolfe's Cove') starting from the junction of said 'Gilmour's Hill' with the said St. Louis road and running in a southerly and southeasterly direction as far as the brow of the hill (Cime du Cap)—the said strip of land to be taken off the easterly side of lots numbers two hundred and fourteen (214)—two hundred and seventeen (217) and two hundred and twenty-eight (228) upon the cadastral plan for the said parish of St. Colomba de Sillery. The said strip of land to be of such a depth as, when the same is added to the present width of 'Gilmour's Hill,' will make the said hill seventy-five feet wide in that locality, together with any houses or other buildings erected on the said strip of land.

6. A strip of land seventy-five feet in width by the whole length of the 'Marchmont property' now the 'Merici Convent,' on the west side of the Plains of Abraham,—which was formerly distinguished as lot number two hundred and twenty-seven (227) upon the cadastral plan for the said parish of St. Colomba de Sillery but which is now subdivided into numerous lots,—the said strip of land to be taken as close as may be found to be practicable to the brow of the cliff (Cime du Cap)—and also the whole of the irregular tract of land which will lie between the said strip of land when laid out and the said brow of the hill or Cime du Cap.

7. A tract of land comprising several lots of land with houses and other buildings erected thereon in the neighbourhood of 'Wolfe's Monument,' to the east of the Plains of Abraham, which is bounded as follows:—In front towards the north by St. Louis street or Grande Allee, in rear towards the south by Monument street (on which street Wolfe's monument is erected), on one side towards the east by lot number one hundred and fifty-three and on the other side towards the west by the Plains of Abraham with the streets intersecting or adjoining same namely:—Wolfe street and Monument street, the said tract of land comprising the lots numbers one hundred and fifty-two, one hundred and fifty-four, one hundred and fifty-five, one hundred and fifty-six, one hundred and sixty-one, one hundred and sixty-one A, one hundred and sixty-one B, one hundred and sixty-two, one hundred and sixty-three, one hundred and sixty-three A, one hundred and sixty-three B, and one hundred and sixty-four, (152, 154, 155, 156, 161, 161A, 161B, 162, 163, 163A, 163B and 164) on the cadastral plan for the Banlieue parish of Notre Dame de Quebec.

8. A piece of land forming the southerly part of lot number four thousand and forty-one (4441) on the cadastral plan for Montcalm ward of the city of Quebec, containing from five thousand to eight thousand feet in superficies, and a piece of land forming the southerly and southwesterly part of lot number four thousand four hundred and forty-two (4442) on the said cadastral plan containing from twelve thousand to fifteen thousand feet in superficies, (said properties belonging to the Ladies Protestant Home of Quebec and the heirs Lampson respectively).

9. The lot of land originally bearing the number four thousand four hundred and forty (4440) on the cadastral plan for Montcalm ward of the city of Quebec, which is now subdivided into numerous lots belonging to the Seminary of Quebec and commonly called 'the Seminary farm,' with the house and other buildings thereon erected.

10. A small piece of land forming the south east corner of the property of the church of England Female Orphan Asylum (which adjoins the said seminary farm.

The only objection which I can see to this Bill at the present time is that no maximum purchase price is fixed. I pointed that out in Quebec, and I asked if it were not possible to fix a maximum price, and I received this telegram from His Excellency:

Description of property battlefields mailed yesterday, terms of sales not yet arranged as owners of scheduled property advancing price daily. Think commission should be empowered to use moneys already subscribed for purchase.

The Bill, therefore, which I introduced is as follows:

An Act Respecting the National Battlefields at Quebec.

Whereas the National Battlefields Commission has requested that it be empowered to purchase, acquire and hold the lands or immovable property hereinafter referred to, and it is expedient to comply with such request: therefore His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The National Battlefields Commission may subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, purchase, acquire and hold the lands and immovable property set forth and described in the schedule to this Act.

Then follows the schedule which I have read.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. When the Act now proposed to be amended came before parliament this session, objection was taken by several hon. gentlemen to the provisions of section 5 which read:

The commission may purchase, acquire and hold the lands or immovable property in the city of Quebec, or in the vicinity thereof, where the great battles were fought, or which were occupied by the various commands of the respective armies upon the battlefields.

The section is very indefinite as to the extent of lands proposed to be purchased, and it seems to confer upon the commission a very wide power which might commit the people of this country to an enormous expenditure, the extent of which cannot be foretold. There was very little information before the House at the time and by reason of the paucity of information clause 10 to which the Prime Minister has just called attention was inserted, and it reads:

No lands or immovable property shall be purchased or acquired by the commission except with the previous authority of parliament, and no expenditure shall be made by the commission until it has been approved by parliament.

It is beyond question that the measure as introduced would have involved a very protracted debate and would have encountered very strong opposition if it had not been for the insertion of a provision of that kind. I think it was I who suggested that provision, but I did not suggest it exactly in that form. The amendment which the Prime Minister inserted in the Bill in accordance with my suggestion went beyond the scope of what I proposed. What I recollect to have proposed on that occasion was that no moneys voted by this parliament should be expended for any such purpose unless with the previous approval of parliament. This parliament voted the sum of $300,000 by section 8 of the Act to be paid over to the commission, and by section 16 it was provided that the whole or a portion of that amount might be devoted to the purposes of the celebration which is to take place during the coming week. But apart from the moneys which were to be derived by the commission from the parliament of Canada there were other moneys, the anticipated origin of which is set forth in section 7. The commission was authorized to receive moneys contributed not only by this parliament but by the different legislatures of the provinces, or by any municipal or other body, or by any private individual for the purposes of the Act. So far as the money voted by this parliament is concerned it might be and no doubt was a very proper thing to insert the provision which is embodied in section 10, but in as much as a very large amount of the moneys now available to the commission have been derived, not from the vote of this parliament but from other sources, I am inclined to think parliament might intrust to the Governor in Council the supervision of the expenditure of these moneys for the purposes mentioned in the Act, now proposed by the Prime Minister. Possibly a word or two in amendment of the Act, as just now introduced, might be inserted. So far as I am personally concerned I would not insist very much on that. It may be said of course that information should be given to parliament with regard to the price proposed to be paid, and I would think that the commission would do well not to be in too great haste if such haste should involve the payment of any exorbitant sum for any portion of this land. It will be remembered by hon. gentlemen that section 6 of the statute confers upon the commission all the powers of expropriation with which any railway company is invested under the Railway Act for the purposes of its undertaking. In that provision the commission has a very effective safeguard against the payment of any exorbitant price, and bearing that in mind and also that the proposed purchase is to be subject to the approval and supervision of the Governor in Council, for my part I do not see any objection to the legislation which the Prime Minister proposes.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that under the legislation which was passed with regard to these national battlefields, the commission entered upon a campaign of money collection, and that there was an agreement or contract entered into between the subscribers to that fund and the commission or this parliament, that the conditions under which the commission was appointed and the duties prescribed for them and the power given them, were to be maintained. It was under these conditions the subscriptions were made. Now these conditions are proposed to be removed, and proposed to be removed at this, the last day of the session when there is no time to consider these matters. But there is a plea of urgency. Urgency is a plea that has been made to do service on many occasions. Where can possibly be the urgency? The people who own these lands on the Plains of Abraham have known for many months that there was a proposition to acquire them for a national park, and why has it become so suddenly urgent that these lands should be acquired by the commission? What has caused the price to go up so rapidly just at this juncture? I cannot see anything in that plea at all. I do not see any sufficient reason put forward why the tacit contract or agreement between this parliament and the gentlemen and legislatures who have subscribed to this fund, should be violated. Let this national commission take options upon this property. Parliament will meet soon again, a new parliament, it is true, but parliament will meet in the course of a very few months before the new year. Let the commission take four or five months option upon this property, and then parliament will be in a position to deal with it. I do not see any necessity for this Bill, and I must protest against it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it correct to say that the grant that has been made by parliament of $300,000 is none of it available for the purchase of this land? Has all that land been taken by the commission?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The greater part of the land has already been appropriated by the commission, and I am told the whole of it will be subscribed.

Mr. FOSTER. Not for the purchase of land?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Not for the purchase of land. If my hon. friend will refer to the discussion which took place in this House at the time of the second reading of the Bill he will see that there was a vigorous insistence that all moneys, both moneys voted by parliament and moneys coming from other sources, should be subject to the control of parliament. This was particularly in view of the possible purchase of the Ross rifle factory. The Ross rifle factory is not included in the present grant of land.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood the Prime Minister to say that none of the Ross rifle property is included.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is correct.

Mr. THOS. CHISHOLM. Without attempting to debate this question, I merely wish to enter my protest against the passage of this Bill at this late hour of the session.

Mr. BARR. As one that voted against this enormous grant, I must enter my protest against this proposition in the last hours of the session. I think we might well afford to wait until parliament meets again.

Mr. LENNOX. As I understand the matter, when we did put this saving clause in the last Act, section 10, I think, people would understand that before we disposed of the money we would thoroughly investigate the circumstances. I think that duty is cast upon us, and I regret that at this time of the session the right hon. gentleman has brought this matter up. I do not blame the administration for not having brought it up sooner, because I presume they could not bring it up until about this time. In the meantime, I think we are not right in disposing of this money that the people have contributed, without knowing more of the circumstances than we do. The Prime Minister says that we are not by this attempting to purchase the Ross rifle property. That is true, but we are committing ourselves to a scheme which will involve in the end the purchase of that factory. Whilst I realize that we have no time to discuss the matter now, if I had control of the situation I would not sanction the proposal of this money at the present time. So far as I am concerned, I throw upon the government the entire onus of seeing that what is right is done in this matter.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the Prime Minister should explain where the urgency for this Bill exists. It may be necessary to do it at some time, but I do not see any present necessity. Why won't it do just as well four or five months from now ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have stated that the only authority we have is a resolution of the Battlefields Commission, which pleads urgency for this measure.

Mr. LANCASTER. The right hon. gentleman did not give any reasons, even today, to show necessity. Why cannot a better bargain be made in the fall of the year or next spring when parliament will be in session? Generally speaking, in a hasty bargain the country gets the worst of it and the other fellow gets the best of it. Although I understand the commission as saying that it is necessary, I take that to mean that it is going to be in the near future. But surely it is not absolutely vital that it shall be done next week? The land is not going to run away, the affairs of the country will still be going on and I do not see any reason for doing it now without the information which we ought to have. It is a matter which might be thoroughly investigated, and unless there is some great urgency I am bound to say that I must protest against the Bill passing.

Mr. BARR. There does not seem to be any reason why we should accept the ipse dixit of the commission or that this parliament cannot perform its duties without a direction from the commission. We must hold ourselves responsible for the way the money is used, for the trust which is given to us by those who subscribed this money.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand it, this Act is absolutely independent of and makes no change in the National Battlefields Act as we passed it?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. With this exception only nothing is changed.

Mr. FOSTER. It makes no change in any other particular ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an Act which stands entirely by itself for this one purpose and no other?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. That is right.

Mr. FOSTER. The Governor in Council is authorized to approve of the purchase and holding of this land and no other?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. No other.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the Bill remains to apply to all other purchases that are made and none of these purchases can be consummated without coming to parliament and asking the assent of parliament thereto? What is the extent of the land that is being purchased ? There are rings and edges around the other part of the land. I could not tell from that plan which the right hon. gentleman has shown us what already belongs to the government. I take it as a matter of fact that the waste land of the government will become part of the National Battlefields. I cannot tell anything from that plan as to whether, when this purchase is made to go with what the government owns and which is not occupied by the rifle factory, we will have any more than eight or ten lumps of land scattered here and there, or whether it is to help to fill out or complete a portion of land which lies altogether and becomes a connected part. If we are just to have patches of land here and there throughout the city and call that a park it does not amount to much.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. If I had the plan I could show my hon. friend what we propose to purchase.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to say that there is a feeling abroad that there will be a great deal of extravagance in connection with this undertaking. Now, when the government is proposing to make changes, giving wider and greater power to the commission it is important that the government should point out that this is likely to run into an enormous expenditure. For myself I think it would be better if the government would halt a little until parliament sees how these men will expend the money and the amount of caution they will exercise in the expenditure of it before they are given wider powers. I do not wish to enter any very strong protest, but I do say that it is unfortunate that the government, at this very late hour, should introduce this legislation, and I hope the government will direct the attention of these gentlemen to the fact that they have great powers and that they must exercise great caution or they may call upon parliament to appropriate a larger amount than the people are willing to pay.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think it will be doing my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) no injustice to say I do not believe he has any undue confidence in this government; I cannot understand him suggesting that we should make a recommendation to a commission, which, in his opinion, ought to be composed of far better men than we are. One member of the commission is Mr. Garneau. Perhaps my hon. friend does not know Mr. Garneau. He is the mayor of Quebec. The next commissioner is Senator Sir George Drummond, in whom my hon. friend must have confidence. The next member of the commission is Colonel Denison, and I think my hon. friend must also have confidence in Colonel Denison.

Mr. FOSTER. He will keep order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. The fourth commissioner is Mr. Walker, of the Bank of Commerce.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. He will hold the purse strings.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I think he can be trusted. The next commissioner is Mr. Turgeon, and if Mr. Turgeon is inclined to be, as we are supposed to be, extravagant, he will be checked by the other members of the commission; so that I think my hon. friend's opinions are utterly uncalled for.

Mr. HENDERSON. While we may have the utmost confidence in these men, I must say that recently they have got into very bad company.

Mr. FOSTER. When we began about this national battlefield the idea seemed to be generally approved of, and we thought that this commission would be able to look over the whole matter, arrive at its plans, and submit to parliament a proposal as to what it intended to do, so that we would know just exactly what was meant by the National Battlefields park. We thought we would know how much ground we were going to have and how it was proposed to lay it out and beautify it, and that an estimate of the whole cost would be given. What I object to, and I think it is a valid objection, is that you buy a little piece here and a little piece there and a little in another place, and there is absolutely no general plan at all as to what we are going to have. No general information is given to us as to what the scheme will be when it is all thought out. I would like to have seen the commissioners propose their plan, and then let that plan be submitted for the information of the House. As I understand it, the whole of the Seminary property is to be bought by them. I cannot see why it is necessary to buy the whole block of Seminary land. What the commissioners seem to be aiming at is to get certain broad driveways that will be good for a park, but broad driveways will also be good for the city of Quebec and the locality. What you are really doing is constituting a system of broadened avenues for the city of Quebec, just as your Improvement Commission in Ottawa has splendid driveways here. Whether it be a necessary part of the National Battlefields plan to improve the driveways of the city of Quebec is a question, unless we knew that the park itself was adjacent to these driveways, and it does not appear that it is. The plan which the Prime Minister has given us to-day does not delimit the ground that we will own, but, as it looks from that plan, here is a block owned by us there, there is a portion that we do not own and there is another little piece that we do own, and so it is cut up in that way. It seems to be the purpose of the commission to have a broad driveway connecting the Plains of Abraham proper with other portions of the city. Is it necessary, in order to have that driveway, to buy the whole of that Seminary land, or cannot a right of way for the driveway be secured through it? I understand it is the purpose to divide that property up into lots and sell it. As a matter of real finance the Seminary could very well afford to say to the Battlefields Commission:

Give us a good driveway through that property, embellish and adorn it, it will make our property many times more valuable than it is; we are going to sell it for town lots anyway, and we will give you the right of way. Now, you propose to buy the whole of it, and it will cost a great deal of money. Why do we need the whole of it? Why cannot an arrangement be made to have a driveway through it, which would largely appreciate the property, without putting the Battlefields Commission to the cost of the whole of it? Those are the thoughts that occurred to me.

Mr. FOWLER. I was not in the House when this matter was first discussed. Does it apply only to the battlefields on the Plains of Abraham, or is it the intention to purchase every battlefield throughout the country and make parks?

Mr. BARR. Why don't the British buy the field of Waterloo?

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. At the outset I was in favour of having the commission take over the whole Plains of Abraham, even to a greater extent than is proposed in the present amendment to the Bill. From my viewpoint I do not think it would be becoming to see any private property remaining in the middle of the Plains of Abraham. In my opinion, it would be well to take the whole bank of the river along where the various stages of the battle of the Plains of Abraham were fought, so that there might be one uninterrupted stretch of land from the citadel clear away to the right hand side of the plains. The visitor to Quebec to-day will find only a little 10-acre field available for the great review of troops at the Tercentenary. If the plan were carried out as I have outlined, and if the Ross Rifle Company were given a site for their factory elsewhere, and if the government moved the building from the Plains of Abraham, then with the present amendment the thing would be pretty nearly complete. That jail on the Plains of Abraham is an eyesore; it is right on the spot where the French forces stood during the engagement. Wolfe's monument is better surrounded now than it was before, but it is within a hundred feet of back yards. To my mind, the best plan would be to make a clean sweep from the citadel off to the right and up to where the grand stand is now being erected for the pageant. That would necessitate the purchase of certain property, but it is not so large as it looks on the map. The Ross rifle factory bugaboo could be overcome by the minister selecting a site somewhere else and moving the whole factory there. I do not think it would be a very expensive job if it were gone about in a business way to get that whole land clean from the citadel away up to the right, and then, in case of a great review of troops, there would be plenty of room to manœuvre. Even from the point of view of defence it would be well to have that part of the plains free from buildings.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. In answer to the question of my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. Fowler), I may say that section 5 creates the commission and states its objects to be:

> The commission may purchase, acquire and hold the lands or immovable property in the city of Quebec, or in the vicinity thereof, where the great battles were fought, or which were occupied by the various commands of the respective armies upon the battlefields.

It does not go beyond the city of Quebec and the vicinity; it is connected simply with the events of 1759 and 1760. In reply to my hon. friend from Toronto I might say that it would have been a good idea had the commission submitted a report of what they intend to do, but the correspondence which I have had shows that the property is rising rapidly in price every day and the longer the purchase is delayed the greater the cost will be. With regard to the property of the Seminary, I may say that the Seminary own a pretty large piece of land there. They have cut it up into town lots. The commission have decided, and very properly in my judgment, to acquire this property. The object of the commission is to make a park which will include all the land where the battle took place, and the visitor to Quebec will be enabled to see the very spot where Wolfe landed and brought up his troops. The second battlefield of 1760 will also be converted into a park.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FIELDING moved that item 64 in Public Bills and Orders—second reading of Bill (No. 187) from the Senate, to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—Mr. Black—be now called.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I have no objection to this item being called, but I call attention to the fact that it has been on the Order Paper since June 17, and one would have supposed that, if the government desired to have the Bill passed, they would not have postponed its consideration until the very last day of the session. Why is it that the consideration of so important a Bill has been left so long?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). We have reached the stage of the session when, in the general cleaning up, we are taking up matters of general importance which are not on the Order Paper. That is the only reason.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. So far as the order is concerned, my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has taken up the last Bill in the list of public Bills and Orders, instead of beginning at the beginning.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not proposing to follow the order in which the Bills appear on the Order Paper. We have some regard for their order in importance.

Motion agreed and Order called.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. WM. S. LOGGIE. The Bill stands in the name of the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Black) but I understood that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Sinclair) would take charge of the Bill.

Mr. RICHARD BLAIN. I would direct the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) to the fact that this is a piece of temperance legislation, and would ask him whether it will embody a clause for the abolition of the bar in the House of Commons.

Mr. PUGSLEY. Has not that been abolished long ago ?

Mr. LANCASTER. It was in full blast yesterday.

Mr. S. W. W. PICKUP This Bill is for the purpose of amending the Canada Temperance Act. Twelve counties out of the eighteen in Nova Scotia have adopted the Canada Temperance Act, known as the Scott Act. Two counties, for reasons peculiar to those districts, have voted to have the Act repealed so that at present ten counties in the province are under the operation of the Act. The Act has proven very efficient where the sentiments of the people are in favour of its enforcement. The principal amendment sought by this Bill is to prohibit the carriage of liquor from a license county to a Scott Act county. This legislation only applies to districts where the people by their votes ask that no liquor be sold, and does not apply to any province or district that has not adopted the Act. It is only fair that the wishes of the people be met. There are three amendments covered by this Bill, and all are necessary to satisfactorily carry out the Act.

House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1,

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON. As this is an extension of the Canada Temperance Act, I would ask the hon. member who is in charge of the Bill whether or not, in order to continue this Act in operation in these counties, it will be necessary again to submit it to the electors? I understand that this Canada Temperance Act comes into operation only on approval of the people. Now, if we materially alter it and incorporate in it much larger powers, would the effect be that the people would have to vote upon it again, and express approval of the new conditions, in order to continue its operations ? We should be very careful that we do not destroy the Act in attempts to amend it.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a decision on that point. It does not need to be voted on again.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD. Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WATER CARRIAGE OF GOODS.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). Reference was made last night by the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) to item No. 63, Bill (No. 178) from the Senate, relating to the water carriage of goods. If there be no objection and any hon. member interested in the Bill will move the second reading, I should be glad to move that the order be called.

Mr. HENDERSON. The hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean) does not come very often ; I do not see why he should have special privileges and I would object.

Mr. FOWLER. I think this Bill relates to too important a matter to be taken up at this time when there is no proper opportunity for due consideration of the Bill. I find there are some very drastic changes proposed and I do not think we should be called upon to legislate in regard to this matter at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. I protest in exactly the same way. I do not know what the Bill is, it has never been before this House, it may be a most important Bill and a very salutary Bill but it is not right to ask us, two or three hours before the House prorogues with scarcely more than a quorum present, to undertake its consideration.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. It is a matter of very great regret that the government did not take this up before. It has been on the order paper since May 29, it would have occupied only five minutes to give the Bill its first reading and send it to a special committee where it could have been investigated and progress could have been made without delaying the House for more than a few minutes. Instead of that no action has been taken by the government respecting a subject of great importance not only to the shipping interests but more especially to the shippers and producers and similar other interests as well. The Bill has rested untouched on the order paper since May 29, and now it is proposed, at nearly 1 o'clock on Saturday, the last working day of the session we hope, to have that Bill considered. Such a proposal is really grotesque in its absurdity. Why was the Bill not sent long ago to a subcommittee of this House for the purpose of making an investigation similar to that which has been made in the Senate ?

Mr. FIELDING. This Bill, although an important one, possibly, was never a government Bill, it was brought in by a private member of the Senate and sent here in the ordinary course of business. In cleaning up the business of the session, attention was called to it and I mentioned it to the House. It is not a government Bill and it was not the duty of the government to send it to a committee. I brought it up at the request of the hon. member for South York (Mr. W. F. Maclean).

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Bill stands in my name but I am not the promoter. The promoter of the Bill, Senator Campbell, has had several discussions with me within the last few days. He expressed considerable anxiety as to its fate. He represents that very large interests particularly in Ontario desired that this Bill should be pressed to an issue at this session. He represents it as very important, personally I know very little about it. When the Bill was introduced in the Senate objection was taken to it by the shipping interests in Montreal and elsewhere and representatives of those interests appeared before the committee of the Senate. Senator Campbell represented to me that the representative of the shipping interest has consented to the Bill and directed my attention to the observations of Mr. Meredith who appeared before the committee of the Senate. The members have the report of Mr. Meredith's statement and I need not detain them.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman's statement that Senator Campbell had told him that the shipping interests had agreed to this Bill, is not sufficient reason for going on with it. It might be agreeable to the shipping interests and obnoxious to the people's interests.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The people are pressing for it.

Mr. LANCASTER. The fact that there was a controversy over it in the Senate indicates that the question is so vast, that the changes made by the Bill are so radical, that we should have at least a special committee of this House to take evidence with regard to this matter and report to the House. There is no ground for making an exception in the case of this Bill. The Minister of Railways ten days ago refused to deal with a level crossings Bill which this House passed unanimously, and when it was amended by the Senate and sent back here, the Minister of Railways refused to deal with it because it was too late in the session, and that was ten days ago. Although my Bill was dealing with a very grave matter involving the lives of men, women and children at railway crossings, the Minister of Railways refused to make an exception in its favour. If an exception could not apply to a Bill of that importance, then it ought not to apply to this Bill.

Mr. FIELDING. It is evident from the difference of opinion concerning this Bill that it cannot go through. I move therefor for leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion agreed to.

THE RESTAURANT.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER presented the first report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the proposed restaurant.

Mr. BERGERON. Did the committee visit the old restaurant ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No. I move that the said report be now adopted.

Motion agreed to.

RELIEF OF CATHERINE ANN CANNON.

Mr. GALLIHER moved :

That in accordance with the prayer of the petition of Catherine Ann Cannon this day presented and received by this House, the order of the House do issue to the proper officer to remit to the petitioner the sum of $200 paid under rule 88 S.S. 3 (C), on the Bill (No. 175), letters RR of the Senate, intituled an Act for the relief of Catherine Ann Cannon.

He said : This sum of $200 is practically a fine imposed by reason of the fact that the petition was presented a day or two late. It was sent to Ottawa in time to be presented, and was received by me from the permanent solicitors a day or two late. The grounds upon which the refund is asked are set out in the petition. This woman has practically no means, I think she has three or four children who depend on her for support. The extra fine is imposed for reasons over which she had no control. The inadvertence or omission on the part of some one here, gave rise to her being obliged to borrow the sum of $200 for the purpose of meeting the fine imposed.

Mr. LANCASTER. The merits were not gone into, I suppose, by the Senate.

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes, the case was heard and determined in her favour.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY — EARNINGS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. What is the amount of the gross earnings of the Intercolonial railway for June, 1908, and for the three months, April to June, inclusive ?

2. What are the working expenses for the two months of April and May, 1908, respectively ?

3. What were the earnings and working expenses respectively, for April, May and June, 1907 ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. Earnings, April, 1908, $740,576.43; earnings, May, 1908, $689,736.62 ; earnings, June, 1908, not yet received.

2. Working expenses, April, 1908, $740,-851.01; working expenses, May 1908, $781,-086.18; working expenses, June, 1908, not yet received.

3. Earnings, April. 1907, $817,952.34 ; earnings, May 1907, $799,095.95; earnings, June, 1907, $754,141.27.

Working expenses, April, 1907, $669,-380.90; working expenses, May 1907, $715,-888.88; working expenses, June, 1907, $751,-472.47.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—STATION AT NEWCASTLE.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

1. Who is the inspector of the work being done at the Intercolonial station at Newcastle?

2. By whom was he recommended, what is his remuneration, and how much money has been paid to him to date ?

3. Was a man named Fallon recommended to this position by the federal member for Northumberland county, New Brunswick ? If so, why was this recommendation not acted upon ?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. H. A. Vye, of Newcastle.

2. The department has no information. His remuneration has been arranged at the rate of $3 a day, but nothing has yet been paid him.

3. No.

INTERCOLONIAL CONFERENCE — EXPENSES OF CANADIAN MINISTERS.

Mr. BERGERON asked:

1. What was the amount of money voted by parliament to defray the expenses of Canadian ministers attending the Intercolonial conference at London in 1907 ?

2. How many ministers from Canada attended that conference officially ?

3. Was the whole amount so voted expended, and how much did each minister receive ?

4. Was any other official mission accomplished ? If so, who was the minister, and how much did he or they each receive for such services ?

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance):

1. $24,000.

2. Three.

3. No. The Prime Minister, $6,800; each of the other two, $4,000.

Mr. FOWLER.

4. Yes. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, after the conference, proceeded to other duties. He received on account of expenses in connection with the negotiation of the Franco-Canadian convention $3,-500, and on account of investigation respecting icebreakers, $1,730.06.

Mr. BERGERON. I intended to ask also for the expenses of the two ministers who went to Paris concerning the Trench Treaty.

Mr. FIELDING. The question only refers to those who attended the conference. If it had included the visit to Paris, I could have given that also.

LAND GRANTS TO RAILWAYS IN THE NORTHWEST.

Mr. CRAWFORD—by Mr. Turriff—asked :

1. The area of land reserved for selection for railway land grant purposes in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories?

2. The names of the companies participating in land grants?

3. The date that lands were granted by parliament to the several companies?

4. The area reserved for each company on July 1, 1896?

5. The area earned by each company ?

6. The area granted by parliament previous to July 1, 1896?

7. The area granted since July 1, 1896?

8. The area patented on July 1, 1896?

9. The area patented since July 1, 1896?

10. The area patented to each company?

11. The area unpatented?

12. The reasons why patents are not issued?

13. The amount paid in survey fees to date?

14. The amount paid in survey fees since July 1, 1896?

15. The amount paid in survey fees since July 1, 1896?

16. When can taxation be imposed on the lands granted to the several companies?

Hon. FRANK OLIVER (Minister of the Interior) :

1. No land reserved at present for selection for railway land grant purposes.

12. Calgary and Edmonton Ry Co.—407,402 acres held as security for repayment of money advanced the company on account of transportation contract dated June 21, 1890. 67,762·92 acres bought back by this government at the rate of $2 per acre, and the amount so derived from the purchase of these lands by the government applied as payment of the survey fees on account of this company's land grant. The balance 513·08 acres being selected by the company and directly upon such selection being made patent will issue forthwith.

Canadian Northern Ry. Co.—532,800 acres held as security for repayment of money advanced on account of transportation contracts dated February 5, 1896, and May 12, 1896. 236,863·61 acres held for approval by council of construction of the last section south of Pas Mission. Patents for the balance, 27,795·36 acres, except where unsurveyed, are in course.

Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., Main Line.—45,316 acres in course of being patented. 4,928·5 acres awaiting release from timber berths before patents may issue to the company. The balance 45,017·06 acres not yet surveyed.

Canadian Pacific Railway Pipestone Extension, Souris Br.—Balance of 79,188·83 acres not surveyed.

Canadian Pacific Railway Souris branch—Balance of 15,633·63 acres not surveyed.

Manitoba & Northwestern Railway Company—The balance, 1,816·08 acres patents held pending adjustment of figures with the railway company.

Manitoba Southwestern Colonization Railway Company—Patents in course for 443,311·51 acres but held awaiting receipt of survey fees. The balance 2,851·16 acres being selected by the company.

Manitoba & Southeastern Railway Company—800 acres held pending adjustment of squatters' claims. The balance 1,161·76 acres unsurveyed.

Qu'Appelle, Long Lake & Saskatchewan Railroad & Steamboat Company—Held as security for repayment of money advanced to the company on account of transportation contract dated 5th of August, 1889.

13. The amount paid in survey fees to date is $724,479.39.

14. Total survey fees paid in connection with railway land grants from commencement to 30th of June, 1896—$56,537.18.

15. Total survey fees paid in connection with railway land grants from the 1st of July, 1896, to 3rd of July, 1908—$667,942.21.

16. Upon the issue of the patent except in the case of the main line land subsidy of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the case of this subsidy an exemption for twenty years is provided for in the original charter.

EXPENSES OF TRANSCONTINENTAL COMMISSION.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What have been the totals for each year of the expenses of the Transcontinental Commission for salaries, rents, travel and contingencies, including everything not going into construction?

2. Are these expenses charged up to construction account against the Grand Trunk Pacific Eastern Division?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. The total expenditures for all salaries, rents, travel and contingencies for each year at headquarters, and on the lines are as follows :

1904-1905	$ 778,363 63
1905-1906	1,755,668 34
1906-1907	948,007 86
1907-1908	1,009,846 29
	$4,491,886 12

2 Yes. All expenditures of the Transcontinental Railway Commission are under clause 15 of the agreement, being the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, chargeable to 'Cost of Construction.'

QUEBEC BRIDGE—SALARIES TO OFFICIALS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What amounts have been paid yearly to the directors and officials of the Quebec Bridge Company?

2. What is now being paid, and the sum per year to each?

Hon. GEO. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) :

1. $500 to directors ; $2,400 to secretary ; $6,000 to chief engineer.

2. Since collapse of bridge the directors receive nothing. Secretary and chief engineer same salary as above, as their time does not expire until 1st of September next.

NET SALMON FISHING PRIVILEGES.

Mr. FOWLER asked :

By what right does the federal government grant or refuse to grant net salmon fishing privileges in the Restigouche river?

Hon. L. P. BRODEUR (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) :

1. By right of power to legislate in respect of sea coast and inland fisheries, under section 91, paragraph 12 of the British North America Act.

Whatever question may exist as to the proprietary interests is in abeyance by reason of tacit arrangement with the New Brunswick government by which the Dominion is administering licenses pending adjustment of relative rights and jurisdiction.

MR. CONGDON'S ACCOUNTS—SEED GRAIN—WOOLLEN INDUSTRY AND THE TARIFF.

Mr. FOSTER. Before government orders are called I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Oliver) to a question that was asked him yesterday with reference to two matters and also to ask the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he has the petition of the woollen industry which he was to bring down.

Rt. Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). I beg to lay on the table the correspondence with the woollen manufacturers with respect to the woollen duties.

Mr. OLIVER. In reply to the inquiry of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), I beg to say that a telegram was sent to the Yukon some time ago and the following answer has been received from Mr. Henderson, the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory :

Congdon's books and accounts as public administrator audited by controller's staff under direction of Commissioner Ross; handed over to Newlands, his successor, on Newlands' resignation; audited to satisfaction of Senkler who succeeded him; audited last summer by Beddoe, Department of the Interior; now being audited to date by Stockton, Auditor General's Department.

In regard to the inquiry as to seed grain distribution, I beg to say that the papers I had hoped to be able to place on the table in printed form are in the printer's hands and I expect to be able to place them on the table to-day before the House rises.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that there was a memorandum from the Manufacturers' Association setting forth the grounds upon which they make their request.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I received the following message from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association :

Toronto, July 16, 1906.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

The executive council of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association now in session, knowing that under existing tariff conditions a number of our largest Canadian woollen industries must suffer annihilation before another year, appeal to you for immediate relief. What two hundred woollen manufacturers have asked of you in the memorandum submitted is the least that will save them from ruin. They, together with the thousands of working people dependent upon them for their daily bread, and the farmers who have hitherto found profitable employment in wool growing, join us in the firm stand that this important question must be disposed of before the closing of parliament. The association awaits your answer.

(Sgd.) Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

I replied on the same day as follows :

Telegram.

Ottawa, July 16, 1908.

Canadian Manufacturers' Association,
Toronto, Ont.

Government regret that with present information they are unable to agree to the proposals respecting increased duties on wool goods. In a country with the climate of Canada the cost of woollen clothing becomes a question of very great importance. A proposal to increase the taxes on what might almost be called a necessary of life naturally arouses much opposition among the consumers and their representatives. The government have on more than one occasion given evidence of their appreciation of the importance of the woollen interests and their desire to give reasonable encouragement to it. They hope that to some extent the difficulties which the manufacturers are meeting are due not to tariff conditions but to a depression in trade which they believe is but temporary. This view is supported by the fact that in the neighbouring republic where a very high wool tariff is in operation there has been trade depression. The government, with due regard to the people of all sections of the country, feel that this is not the moment at which they should adopt a policy of increased taxation, especially on articles of a necessary character. The complaints that have been made by the woollen trade as to evasions of the Customs laws are being carefully looked into and if it be ascertained that they be well founded, the proper remedy will be applied. The questions of tariff revision as respects the woollen industries cannot possibly be dealt with in the few hours of this session that remain. We can assure the manufacturers that we are fully appeciative of the industry and that if we cannot at this stage meet their wishes it is because we are obliged to consider the wishes of all classes throughout the country.

(Sgd.) WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. FOSTER. I understood that there was a memorial accompanying the request. Would the right hon. gentleman be good enough to lay that on the table ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. Yes, on Monday morning ; perhaps this afternoon.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 189) to amend the Civil Service Act.—Mr. Fisher.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would like to have some explanation of these amendments.

Mr. FISHER. The only change of importance is the addition of a section bringing the Act into force on the 1st September. The other amendments are simply verbal alterations that, in the opinion of the Senate make the Act clearer, but do not change the meaning.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not be inclined to agree with the view of the Minister of Agriculture with respect to the Senate amendment to section 45. I observe that at the end of the section the Senate has added the following words :

Or if such action is required during the recess of parliament, by the Governor in Council, subject to ratification by the two Houses at the next ensuing session.

I do not appreciate the necessity of that amendment.

Mr. FISHER. This amendment has been urged by the chief officers of the two Houses and especially by the librarians of parliament. During the recess there is absolutely no authority in the Act to enable anything to be done.

Mr. FOWLER. Enable what to be done? I have not a copy of these amendments.

Mr. FISHER. I would be glad to go over the amendments seriatim. The first amendment is one to paragraph 2 and is in the following words :

The word 'now' when used in this Act shall mean the date of its coming into force.

That is necessary by reason of the fact that the Act will come into force on the 1st September. The next amendment is to clause 8. Clause 8 reads as follows :

As soon as practicable after the coming into force of the Act, the head of each department shall cause the organization of his department to be determined and defined by order in council.

The Senate have added the following words :

Due regard being had to the present status of each officer or clerk, as the case may be.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN What do they mean by that ?

Mr. FISHER. I understand that they mean simply to safeguard the present position of the clerks. I did not think it necessary but the Senate wished these words in.

Mr. FOWLER. If they have an effect at all they prevent the object that the clause seems to call for. By saying 'due regard being had to the present status of each officer or clerk as the case may be' the minister's action is restricted; how can he reorganize his department?

Mr. FISHER. I do not think the words have the effect my hon. friend fears. I thought the clause without them meant that and I did not consider these words altered the sense of the clause. The next amendment is in clause 38 which would now read:

Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act or any words to the like effect shall be deemed sufficient to authorize the payment of any such salary or remuneration.

I think that makes it clearer.

The next amendment is in clause 45 in the 25th line where they have inserted 'or under the Civil Service Act.' That to a certain extent extends the application of the clause not only to the sections herein indicated, but to any section under the Civil Service Act where the Governor in Council takes any action in regard to the employees of the House of Commons or the Senate. Then they add at the end of the clause the words:

Or if such action is required during the recess of parliament, by the Governor in Council, subject to ratification by the two Houses at the next ensuing session.

That was put in at the request of the chief officers of the Senate, the House of Commons and the library. The librarians pointed out that during recess when it would be absolutely impossible to get a joint resolution they would be absolutely tied and could do nothing, they could not work out the classification of their employees or the organization.

Mr. FOWLER. They would have the disciplinary rights of deputy ministers and could surely get along without this amendment.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I can see no necessity for the amendment. The matter of classification can be dealt with somewhat similarly and what pressing need can there be for any action between the two sessions of parliament? I presume it is because I do not understand the matter thoroughly, but certainly no explanation that has been given to the House seems to afford any justification for the intevention of the Governor in Council.

Mr. FOWLER. It seems to me that no circumstances could arise to require such legislation.

Mr. FISHER. The amendment says: 'If any such action is required during the recess.' That means only in case of emergency. If no action was required there would be no interference.

Mr. FOWLER. Can the minister suggest any possible situation requiring this? Even a mutiny could be dealt with by the officers.

Amendments read the first and second time, and agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

House proceeded to consideration of proposed amendment by the Senate to Bill (No. 181) to amend and consolidate the Acts respecting the public lands of the Dominion.

Mr. OLIVER. There is one amendment to section 15, adding a subsection under the heading 'cancellation of entry.' The new paragraph reads:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who buys, trades or sells or professes to buy, trade or sell land or any interest in or control of land open to homestead entry or for which homestead entry has been granted before patent therefor has been issued.

When this Bill was being put through the Commons it was supposed that this particular offence which is undoubtedly very prevalent was covered by the provisions of the Criminal Code, but on further examination it did not appear to be so covered and therefore the Senate inserted this provision.

Mr. LAKE. Will the minister make any special provision on the first September for the rush of people who are likely to besiege the land offices to make entries.

Mr. OLIVER. We will do the best we can, but of course there are some conditions that cannot possibly be met.

Mr. LAKE. I think proclamation should be issued and a general notice sent to the post offices as to what the conditions will be.

Mr. OLIVER. We will give the fullest information possible.

Mr. FOSTER. No applications are valid until the first of September?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Then suppose there are parties looking around now and there is a kind of an Oklahoma rush on the first of September, in what order will the applications be received?

Mr. OLIVER. First at the counter.

Mr. FOSTER. After the proclamation opens?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The big chap will have the advantage, won't he?

Motion agreed to, and amendments concurred in.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

PROHIBITION OF OPIUM.

Mr. LEMIEUX moved that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 205) to prohibit the importation, manufacture and sale of opium for other than medicinal purposes, be now read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. LEMIEUX. The effect of the amendment is to give to opium merchants a period of six months within which to dispose of the opium which they have imported. During those six months the opium will be in bond, and will have to be exported from the country.

Mr. FOSTER. The Bill allowed three months?

Mr. LEMIEUX. No, no delay at all.

Mr. BLAIN. I cannot quite understand why the merchants of opium require six months to dispose of their stock. Surely it will not take that length of time. It seems to me that if this is such an evil as to call for drastic legislation—legislation which I approve of, I may say—a great deal of injury might be done during those six months.

Mr. LEMIEUX. During the six months for which the delay is given, the merchants will not have the right to sell opium within the country for other than medicinal purposes. It will be held in bond, and they will have to give surety to that effect, under regulations to be established by the Minister of Customs. I may say that they asked for a delay of eight years, claiming that the quantity of opium which they have on hand warranted them in so doing. They say that the process of manufacturing or curing the opium is such that they cannot sell it for several years. We could not see our way to granting that request, but we have thought it right to give them a reasonable time within which to export their stock from the country.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would think that would be reasonable, otherwise the Act would amount to confiscation. I understand from the minister and would gather from the words of the amendment, that it does not authorize any sale within Canada prohibited by the Bill. The prohibition as to sale still continues as it was when the Bill passed this House, but a period of six months is allowed during which it is lawful for opium merchants to have the opium in their possession for sale, but not for sale in Canada?

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is correct.

Mr. BLAIN. I may say that the hon. minister's explanation is entirely satisfactory.

Motion agreed to, and amendment read the second time and agreed to.

BOUNTY TO SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. OLIVER moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 109) to authorize a bounty to volunteers who served the Crown in South Africa be now read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What will be the effect of the change from the expression. 'officer, non-commissioned officer or man' to the word 'volunteer?'

Mr. OLIVER. It is not anticipated that there will be any change. In the first draft of the Bill the word 'volunteers' was used. Then on suggestion it was changed to the expression 'officer, non-commissioned officer and man.' In the third draft it was changed to 'volunteer' in the second section, and should have been changed in the third section to make it conform to the second. The Senate noticed the difference and made the third clause conform to the second. The word 'volunteer' will include 'officer.' The Senate also changes the expression 'nursing sisters' in the second subsection to 'female nurses.' The expression 'nursing sisters' is the technical description of these nurses, but it does not seem necessary to refuse concurrence in that change, though the expression used by the Senate is not the proper one.

Mr. LAKE. The effect of the Bill as it left this House is not altered?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Amendments read the first time, and agreed to.

SUPPLY—DUTY ON MATERIALS FOR INTERNATIONAL TUNNELS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. WM. PATERSON (Minister of Customs). Mr. Speaker, as the items for the Customs Department were concurred in some time ago, I shall not have an opportunity of bringing a matter before the House which I would like to explain. A question arose and was agitated through the country, being taken up by the Manufacturers' Association and the press, as to whether the ruling of our department with reference to the admission of materials for the construction of the Detroit tunnel was more liberal than that of the United States department. The department thought that we had sufficient assurance in the instructions of the United States government to warrant us in what we were doing and that we were perfectly safe. However, the hon. member for West Kent (Mr. Clements) and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) took that view, and subsequently, I think, the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) thought that there might be a possible doubt. We did not so think, but in deference to their remarks, and with a view to putting the matter beyond question, I asked the commissioner to again inquire of the Treasury Department, although I did not like to do so as it seemed to imply that their other letter was not sufficiently plain. The following correspondence has been exchanged between the two departments :

Division of Customs.

Treasury Department, Office of the Secretary,
Washington, June 24, 1908.

Hon. John McDougald,
Canadian Commissioner of Customs,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 18th instant, relative to the free entry of materials for use in the construction of the tunnel between Canada and the United States at Detroit, Michigan.

The department's letter of March 13 last to the collector of customs at Detroit, a correct copy of which is set forth in your letter, is correctly interpreted by you as authorizing the free entry of all materials to be used in the tunnel whether under water or on the American shore, except materials used above ground on the open approach to the tunnel.

Respectfully,
(Sgd.) J. B. REYNOLDS,
Assistant Secretary.

No inclosure.

Department of Customs,
Ottawa, June 18, 1908.

The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury,
Washington, D.C.

Sir,—I have the honour to state that the customs tariff of Canada (1907) contains the following provision for free entry of materials for international bridge and tunnels, viz.:—

596. Materials to be used in Canada for the construction of bridges and tunnels crossing the boundary between the United States and Canada, when similar materials are admitted free under similar circumstances into the United States, under regulations prescribed by the Minister of Customs. Free.

Under this provision the contractors for the 'Detroit River Tunnel' between Detroit, Michigan, and Windsor, Ontario, are now making free entries of their materials for the whole covered portion of the tunnel on the Canadian side, not including the open approaches.

This department has received a copy of instructions from the Treasury Department on this subject as follows:—

Division of Customs.

Treasury Department,
Office of the Secretary, Washington.
41072 C.A.H.

March 13, 1908.
C.P.M.

The Collector of Customs,
Detroit, Michigan.

Sir,—The department is in receipt of your letter of the 6th instant, relative to the entry free of duty of tools and materials to be used in the construction of the tunnel between Canada and the United States under the Detroit river.

The matter of the free entry of materials used in the construction of a tunnel between Canada and the United States was considered by the department in connection with the construction of the tunnel between Port Huron, Michigan, and Sarnia, Ontario, and it was decided that all materials brought into the United States for convenience and taken back into the tunnel and used therein should not be regarded as dutiable importations, without regard to the part of the tunnel in which the same were used. Materials used above ground in the approaches to the tunnel on the American shore were held to be subject to the payment of duty. You will be governed accordingly.

Respectfully,
(Sgd.) BEEKMAN WINTHROP,
Assistant Secretary.

The Department of Customs understands by your letter to the collector at Detroit that it covers materials for the entire length of the tunnel on the American side whether under water or on the shore, the open approach to the end of the tunnel alone being excluded. However, a question has been raised and statements made in the House of Commons that under your ruling above quoted, possibly Canadian materials may be only admitted free of United States duty when to be used in that portion of the tunnel which is under the waters of the Detroit river, and not for that portion of the tunnel which is on the mainland beyond the river on the American side.

As the item in our tariff is based and made contingent upon reciprocal action on the part of your government, will you please state if the view this department has taken of your ruling as above mentioned is correct.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Commissioner of Customs.

Mr. FOSTER. The reply from the United States seems to be entirely satisfactory as establishing their understanding of the ruling. It is a pity that the same explicitness was not had months or maybe years ago, as in that way a great deal of unnecessary discussion would have been saved. This meaning of the regulations being established, can the department in any way use its influence with the contractors to see that Canadian manufacturers and Canadian labour get a really fair show in the purchase of supplies? Is it possible for the department to use any influence in that way, as the tunnel seems to be about equally divided between the two countries in point of distance?

Mr. PATERSON. If I may refer to a previous debate, the contractors pointed out in letters which were submitted to the House that $160,000 or $170,000 worth of material had been purchased in Canada. I also read letters from them in which they said they had asked Canadian cement manufacturers to tender, but these manufacturers, for some reason or other, appeared not to have been anxious, as they declined in some cases and in no case had they taken the trouble to personally interview the contractors. It cannot be expected that the interests of a merchant will be looked after if he will not take some trouble himself; and certainly, where there are to be such large purchases to be made, they seem to have been lacking in that respect. I have no doubt that under the provisions of the tariff we will get an amount of revenue on goods imported from the United States for use in the open approaches on the Canadian side, and I have no doubt either that our manufacturers are in a position, this being reciprocal, to secure a portion of the business of supplying materials for the tunnel on the American side; as they have an equal opportunity to compete with the Americans on the American side, as the provision is reciprocal. Therefore, I have no doubt, if our cement manufacturers are now in such a position that they have a surplus, they will be able to do business. Of course, we are not in a position to force anything to be done.

Mr. FOSTER. No, the contract is already made.

Mr. PATERSON. But I have no doubt, if our manufacturers, especially of cement, desire to secure a portion of this trade, they will be able to do so. The material for the open approaches on both sides is dutiable; our cement manufacturers would not, I think, stand a chance for anything beyond. Our producers being protected with a very large duty on cement, I think that all the cement used in the open approaches on our side will go to our own people. Another point that was raised was that American workmen were being employed and that Canadian workmen were not getting an opportunity. I have been told that employment has been given to all Canadians who make application, and that many thousands of dollars have been paid to Canadian workmen. I can imagine that to be the case. A work such as that is not one in which a great many men may desire to engage, because it is considered somewhat hazardous—at any rate, as a heavy work. I mention this because it was thought that there had been some discrimination against our workmen, and I am sure that has not been the case.

CIVIL SERVICE BILL AND EMPLOYEES OF HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question with respect to the Civil Service Bill. During the discussion I noticed that certain officers of the House of Commons were mentioned as having increases under the Bill, whereas I did not see any reference made to certain others. For example, there are the accountant and assistant accountant, the sergeant-at-arms and the deputy sergeant-at-arms. I have these four in my mind at the moment, all being very faithful and old officers. They are giving, I think, entire satisfaction to the members of this House by their courteous manner and their willingness to assist the members. May I ask the minister whether these gentlemen will have an increase in salary under the Bill, and any others that I may not have mentioned?

Mr. FISHER. I do not remember mentioning any individual officers at all in the debate on the Civil Service Bill. I could not, without examining the salaries of these gentlemen and seeing where they would fit into the new subdivisions, answer the hon. gentleman's question. That depends entirely upon the facts. I do not know the facts, and, therefore, I could not say in detail how the increases that will probably occur under this Bill will affect individuals.

SALE OF INDIAN LANDS—QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. A. C. BOYCE (West Algoma). I desire to refer to a statement read in this House yesterday by the right hon. Prime Minister, on page 13804 of the 'Hansard.' I was not in the House at the time the right hon. gentleman read the statement, and I regret that he is absent just now. As this is the last opportunity there will be of referring to the matter, I must refer to it now, trusting that the right hon. gentleman may be here before I have finished. The letter is as follows:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I have received from Mr. Sifton the folowing telegram:

Winnipeg, Manitoba, July 16, 1908.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa.

Please read following to House: Mr. Boyce's statement that improprieties exist in sale Indian lands unfounded, statement that application put in under name different from real applicant at my suggestion or request or with my knowledge absolutely untrue. I do not know that Mr. Philp has or ever had any interest, did not know Messrs. Wilson and Reesor had acquired these lands until a year after sale took place, sale made by officials in ordinary way and under ordinary rules given so far as I know, no privilege whatever to purchasers except what were open to any applicant. I unqualifiedly deny the existence of any improprieties or irregularity whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I consider that a most extraordinary statement to be made in this House by any hon. member, especially by the Prime Minister himself. In the first place, I appeal to you, Sir, that it is absolutely a breach of parliamentary procedure that an hon. member should read in the House a statement made by one member of the House which reflects upon the statement or veracity of another member. I refer to these words :

Mr. Boyce's statement that improprieties exist in sale of Indian lands unfounded.

That perhaps is not absolutely unparliamentary.

Statement that application put in under name different from real applicant at my suggestion or request or with my knowledge absolutely untrue.

Now, if the hon. gentleman had been in his place in this House and had used those words, it would I submit have been a breach of parliamentary etiquette. I fail to see why, because that hon. gentleman chose to disregard my notice that the matter was coming up in this House, and chose to stay away, and then from a distance of 1,500 miles send a telegram to the right hon. gentleman containing a statement which he could not make if he were in the House—I fail to see why that is not as much a breach of parliamentary etiquette. He says that my statement that an application was put in under a name different from that of the real applicant is absolutely untrue. Let me in justice to myself refer to what I did say. At page 13495 of the 'Hansard' I referred to the letter which was brought down, a copy of which I had obtained from the Indian Department—and I took great care to compare it with the original—that is the letter which contans the statement of which the hon. gentleman complains in his telegram, and all that I did, as you will recollect, was to read that letter with this accompanying comment :

I will now put in the link. Here is a letter that I have extracted from the files, and hon. members can conclude for themselves as to whether this may be the link or not.

Then again, in the closing paragraph, on page 13500, I said :

I ask the hon. gentleman to take those words to heart in conjunction with the very serious matter which I now commend to his attention and leave with him. There is not a fact that I have stated but which is referred to in the documents in his department. I am not responsible for any of them. Every one of these facts is set forth in the documents extracted from the Department of the Interior. How many more there may be that we have not seen I do not know, but I do know that there has been knitted together a case which the right hon. leader of the government cannot excuse and cannot justify. One by one these facts have been knitted together, and they disclose a transaction which is absolutely unjustifiable.

That is what I said, Mr. Speaker, and before I sit down I shall ask your ruling upon the statement as to whether, in the first place, any such statement as that referred to in this telegram read by the right hon. gentleman was made, and, secondly, if it were made, whether the hon. gentleman is justified in characterizing it, by telegram from a distance of 1,500 miles, as being absolutely untrue. I venture to assert that if the right hon. gentleman had taken pains to scrutinize this telegram he would have hesitated before he placed the hon. member for Brandon in the most invidious position that this telegram places him in, emphasizing as it does the absolute want of foundation, the inherent want of foundation for the very statements he himself makes, and tries to make this House believe. Refer to the first part of the telegram :

Mr. Boyce's statement that improprieties exist in sale Indian lands unfounded, statement that application put in under name different from real applicant at my suggestion or request or with my knowledge absolutely untrue.

These are emphatic statements of his own knowledge. Then in order to exculpate himself personally, the hon. gentleman goes a little further and says :

I do not know that Mr. Philp has or ever had any interest, did not know Messrs. Wilson and Reesor had acquired these lands until a year after sale took place.

This is what I call to your especial attention and the attention of the House :

—sale made by officials in ordinary way and under ordinary rules given—

I presume it means 'giving,' although I attach no significance to that.

—given as far as I know, no privilege whatever to purchasers except what were open to any applicant.

And then comes this second denial which is contradicted by the former part of the telegram :

I unqualifiedly deny the existence of any improprieties or irregularity whatever.

An emphatic denial of the existence of a state of things, which, in the former two sentences, he absolutely says were beyond his knowledge. Then, again, I suggest that the statement is absolutely irregular because the hon. member has no right to make a speech to this House through another hon. gentleman in the form of this statement of the hon. member for Brandon, and I submit with all deference and respect that the right hon. gentleman should have had more regard and respect for parliamentary procedure than to have read that statement. I say again, and the hon. gentleman knows it very well, that the telegram bears on its face an absolute contradiction as between the statement with which it concludes, and the statement with which it commences. The gentleman who signed that telegram assumes to state that he emphatically denies certain statements. In the body of the telegram it is stated that he has no knowledge of the facts, that as far as he knows the sale was made under the ordinary rules and that no privilege whatever was given to the purchasers except what was open to any applicant. Then comes the concluding statement that he unqualifiedly denies the existence of any improprieties or irregularity whatever. I submit first that if the right hon. Prime Minister had read this statement carefully before bringing it into the House he never would have read it to the House at all, and, secondly, that if he had considered the question as to the propriety of introducing that telegram he would never have introduced it and he would never have read it. I resent it very much indeed. I resent it as much as I would resent it if the hon. gentleman had been in his place. The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the hon. member for Brandon would not have been allowed to have made the statements contained in the telegram if he had been in his place in the House. I would just again remind the House that there was not a statement made in the speech referred to which was made on my responsibility. On the contrary the statements which I made were entirely upon the authority of documents which were produced and read, and the principal document which was read was carefully compared with the original before it was read. Again I would say to the right hon. gentleman that he will find, at pages 13495 and 13500, the statement made by me that I am not responsible for any one of these statements but that every one is contained in a written document obtained from the Department of the Interior. Further, the statement denied by the hon. member for Brandon is a statement based upon a document which I took care, to carefully compare with the original in order that there should be no mistake. I therefore take the position, and I ask your ruling upon it, Mr. Speaker, first that the right hon. gentleman had no right whatever to read that statement to this House, and, secondly, that as to portions of that statement they should be retracted, that the reading of it was improper for the reasons given and that it should be expunged from the records of this House. In order to make myself clear with regard to the statement made by the right hon. gentleman and to contrast it with what I did say I will just read the letter itself to which I have alluded and which will be found at page 13495 of 'Hansard.'

Brandon, Manitoba, April 20, 1900.

J. A. Smart, Esq., Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Re my application for timber land in Batchawana bay.

In my previous letter inclosing a letter from Mr. McAuley, I mentioned that the petition referred to in McAuley's letter meant a statement that the lands referred to were in most part unfit for settlement.

I find, however, by looking over my correspondence that he refers to a petition which he can get signed by all the settlers in the district asking the government that we be allowed to purchase the land. We can also furnish a statement sworn to by all the settlers in the district that the land in most part is unfit for settlement.

I wish you would give this matter your earnest attention as no time is to be lost in preparing for the season's operation as I will necessarily lose considerable time preparing to get away from my business here to attend to the erection of a sawmill, &c.

You will notice an application was put in by A. H. Gale dated July 25, 1899, covering all the lands in the district. This, however, will not interfere with my application as Mr. Gale is with me in the matter and we can work under either application. Mr. Sifton wished the application put in Mr. Gale's name at the time.

Please bear in mind that the license of the St. Maurice Lumber Company expires on the 30th of this month and will doubtless be called on to consider a renewal of same even though all pulpwood has been removed, and I trust you will consider its bearing on my application before doing so.

Yours truly,
W. F. WILSON.

That is the letter and that does not justify the statement made by the hon. member for Brandon through the Prime Minister from a distance of 1,500 miles. Any statement that was made in connection with that matter that the application was put in at his suggestion was made on the authority of that letter and I desire that this statement be withdrawn.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. I just want to say a word in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Boyce). I am sure that nobody will deny that if my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Sifton) had been present when the charges were made against him he would have been at liberty to affirm, deny or qualify the statements which were made by the hon. gentleman. Not being here the hon. gentleman sent this telegram to me and I read it to the House just as it was. I place myself in the judgment of the House and in your judgment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not know whether this matter is now properly the subject of a ruling on the part of the Speaker, but I would say, that, as a matter of fact, I think any exception to the reading of the telegram should have been taken at the time and that it is too late now to take any exception to it. As to the question if exception could be taken to it I do not express any opinion at the moment, but I quite agree and was about to rule, in the terms suggested by the Prime Minister, that if the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Sifton) had been present, as this is a matter within his personal knowledge and refers personally to himself, he would have had a perfect right to have arisen in his place and to have made an absolute and unqualified denial of the statements. This would raise a question that is always a difficult one to decide as to one member averring something and another denying the allegations of that member, the member denyng however having a personal knowledge of the facts. I would rule as between two members under these circumstances that no doubt the member who made his denial ought to have his denial protected as it was something within his personal knowledge, and the statement of the other member who had asserted something which he had gathered from correspondence and read would have to be withdrawn. I consequently cannot make any such ruling as that which is requested by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Boyce).

THIRTEENTH HUSSARS.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House goes into Committee of Supply, I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) to a matter that was brought to my attention some time ago and which I have been trying to get an opportunity of presenting to the minister in the House. It is in reference to the 13th Hussars of whom the minister has probably heard before, who saw service in 1866 and 1867 at the time of the Fenian Raid in the field, I think, largely in the matter of protecting some of the lines of railway, the Grand Trunk Railway being the chief one. What they have been asking for is to have the general service medal and it seems that up to the present time, for what reason I do not know, they have not been given that medal. I believe that a good deal depends upon the possession of the Canadian service medal as to the action which might be taken in Great Britain. I would like to press this strongly upon the attention of the minister so that if possible this general service medal should be given to these men.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. What is the name of the regiment ?

Mr. FOSTER. The 13th Hussars.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That will be an English regiment ?

Mr. FOSTER. I don't really know.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The only 13th we have is the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons.

Mr. FOWLER. That is the regiment of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a letter from one of the former members of that regiment, and he has written me several times. I press it upon the attention of the minister. Has he had the matter already before him.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I had before me the case of some English regiments one of which was a cavalry regiment but that is some time ago. If my hon. friend will be good enough to send me the papers I will take it up at once and after inquiring into it let him know what the ruling is.

Mr. FOSTER. I will prepare the papers and send them to the minister and ask him to look into the matter, and to send me a reply that I can forward to this gentleman.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall do so at once.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TREATY.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I wish to direct the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to the following despatch from Paris which appeared in the newspapers on the 16th inst:

A despatch from Paris says the following explanation is being made of the delay in the approval of the Franco-Canadian convention:

When the Canadian parliament passed the new tariff law in 1906 it omitted to mention in the schedule of the most favoured nations and used as a basis in the negotiations the name of Switzerland, which enjoys such treatment under the treaty with Great Britain of 1865. The slip was not discovered until the convention had passed the chamber, when Switzerland brought her claim to the notice of England. The French deputies, being too late to do anything in their own house, worked upon the senators for the departments of Centre Jura, where the silk and watch-making interests are strong, and thus the opposition began. It is argued that these trades were among those for which concession had been most boasted of and how that Switzerland was to share the benefits the value of the concessions fell to the ground. Thereupon the powerful agricultural protectionist party arose in turn to reproach the government, saying if they had been silent against the large favours given to Canadian agriculture it was because other French industries were said to be benfited in return, but if there was to be no just equivalent elsewhere they also objected to the concessions.

The government is as anxious as ever to conclude the treaty with Canada, but it will hesitate to commit itself to conditions framed under a misconception, for which France is not responsible.

The 'Times'' Paris correspondent believes it is possible to overcome the opposition of the protectionists and that the Franco-Canadian treaty will be ratified in October.

I do not understand some of the details set forth in this despatch, but it seems to imply some default on the part of this government in presenting the measure to parliament, or in the tariff of 1906. I would ask whether there is anything in the despatch, and especially whether there is anything in the suggestion that the delay in the ratification of the treaty is due to any default on the part of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING. I am not aware that the delay is in any respect due to any default on the part of Canada, nor am I aware that anybody claims such is the case. There is no doubt that the opposition which has been raised in the French legislative bodies to the treaty, is to some extent due to the special interests referred to which no doubt find that as other favoured nations have to receive the benefits of that treaty they do not get as much advantage from it as they would like to. But beyond that I do not quite see the meaning of the despatch. There is no doubt that the silk trade and possibly the watch trade would receive a greater concession if we could exclude other nations from the benefit of this treaty and give it to France alone. It is not in our power to do that and I have no doubt there is some foundation for the statement that the representations of these interests have had a good deal to do with the delay. I am not aware of anybody alleging that anything has been done on the part of Canada that has caused delay.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The minister has no doubt seen the despatch ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes I suppose it is the same despatch I have seen.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What I do not understand is that it refers to some omission on the part of Canada :

When the Canadian parliament passed the new tariff law in 1906 it omitted to mention in the schedule of the most favoured nations and used as a basis in the negotiations the name of Switzerland.

The language is not quite clear.

Mr. FIELDING. Our tariff Act does not profess to give a list of favoured nation countries. It has been more or less a matter of debate as respects some countries and we have not felt at liberty to give any list of them in the tariff Act. We have from time to time given the best list we could and sometimes the lists have not been absolutely in harmony. For some years there was some doubt about the position of Switzerland and I think it will be found that Switzerland did not in former years claim the favoured nation treatment. No case arose as to which she felt called upon to assert that position and it was difficult to determine for the time just exactly what was the correct list. When the treaty was being presented to this House we deemed it proper to ask from the imperial authorities—inasmuch as this obligation arose under old treaties they had made, and not under modern treaties in which Canada was consulted—we deemed it proper to ask from the imperial authorities a list of the favoured nation countries as they were determined on by the foreign office, and in that list Switzerland appeared, although in some of the previous lists I think Switzerland did not appear. The matter was not a subject of any special consideration and the tariff Act did not in itself purport to give any list of favoured nations.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Has there been any discussion in the French chambers which would throw any light upon the question ?

Mr. FIELDING. I think there was an impression that Switzerland would not be entitled to favoured nation treatment. We were at one time under the impression ourselves—the point not having been directly raised—that Switzerland was not included. No doubt the fact that Switzerland was one of the favoured nations has something to do with the antagonism which has been raised in the French senate, but I am not aware that anybody alleges that it was due to any default on the part of the Canadian government.

Mr. FOSTER. What seems to be underlying it is that during the negotiation of the treaty the French negotiators had the idea that Switzerland was not on the most favoured nation list, and so would not participate. When it passed the chamber of deputies in France the same impression prevailed. But, when afterwards it came out, (probably when the application was made by Switzerland to Great Britain) that feature was imported anew into the ratification and because of that the treaty has not been ratified in the French senate.

Mr. FIELDING. That is quite possible. Of course, we ourselves had some doubts in regard to Switzerland, but the occasion had not arisen for us to come to a determination on the question. But I think it is safe to assume that the able members of the diplomatic staff in Paris were not dependent on any information they might receive from us in respect to the treaties. A moment's thought will suggest to my hon. friend that the very able men who look after these matters in the foreign offices in the courts of Europe are well furnished with copies of all treaties and with able persons to understand and interpret them. Although some persons may have had the impression that Switzerland was not included, I cannot imagine that the diplomatic officers in Paris were in the dark on the subject. At any rate, they had access to every paper and document on the subject to which we had access.

UNITED STATES SHEEP QUARANTINE.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture in reference to a statement made in the House the other day that the quarantine regulations in reference to sheep going to the United States applies only to breeding sheep. There is a large trade in Ontario with sheep and lambs which are sent to Buffalo, and I would like to know whether the regulation applies to them.

Mr. FISHER. The information which we have received from the United States authorities distinctly states that the regulation applies to breeding sheep.

Mr. CHRISTIE. Only?

Mr. FISHER. It does not use the word only, but as it reads it does not seem to apply to any others. However, we are in communication with the United States authorities on the subject.

DEBATES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. J. B. KENNEDY (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a matter which should be of a good deal of interest to every hon member, as I know it is to the general public; that is, the amount of wind wasted here in long speeches. In the first session that I was in this House, I was struck by the fact that there was a great deal said that might better be left unsaid, as far as educating the general public or influencing the House was concerned, and I have been strengthened in that belief every session since, and more than ever this session. A short time ago, after the discussion on the Elections Act, I ran over 'Hansard' and calculated the number of columns which each member had spoken in the House, and gave the results to the House. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said that the government side had been responsible for far more of the contents of 'Hansard' than the opposition side, and claimed that if we took the session from the beginning we would find that to be the case. Since then I have taken the trouble to go through the 'Unrevised Hansard' and figure out as carefully as I could the amount of space which each man has occupied from the beginning of the session to last Wednesday night. If I had continued the calculation for the days since that date, the result would look very much worse for the gentlemen on the other side of the House. I may say that I have not included any of the little questions asked across the House, which would not occupy more than an inch or so of 'Hansard,' but have only taken what might be termed set speeches. Where a speech occupied a number of columns with a little piece over, I dropped the little piece. Any one who looks through 'Hansard' will find that I have been as fair as I could possibly be. From my examination I find that since the beginning of the session to Wednesday night last the government are responsible for 4,004 columns of 'Hansard' and the opposition for 4,636, a difference of 632 columns against the opposition; and considering that there are only half as many men on the opposition side as on the government side, we shall have to give them credit for a great deal more longwindedness, versatility and loquaciousness than we on this side possess. I would not wish to hurt any one's feelings, but I am sorry to say that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) is by far the worst sinner of all. He is responsible for 624 columns. His leader comes next with 434 The five who contribute the most largely are the hon. member for North Toronto, with 624 columns, the hon. leader of the opposition with 434 columns, the Minister of the Interior with 388 columns, the Prime Minister with 269 columns, and the Minister of Finance with 266 columns. When we consider that the twelve cabinet ministers in the House have a great deal to answer——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. KENNEDY. I did not say to answer for; I said a great many questions to answer. It is true they have a great deal to answer for, and so have we all. But considering that they have all the government business to introduce and explain, and questions both wise and unwise to answer, I think it is rather strange that the twelve cabinet ministers have not occupied as much space as eight of the gentlemen on the other side of the House. I do not know that it would be of interest to the House that I should read this whole list, though I would like to see it go on 'Hansard.' As I went along I took note of those who had made the longest speeches of this session, with the following result: Dr. Roche (Marquette), 63 columns; Colonel Worthington (Sherbrooke), 50; Sir Frederick Borden, (Kings, N.S.), 41; Mr. Alcorn (Prince Edward), 41; Dr. Schaffner, (Souris), 41; Mr. Oliver (Edmonton), 40; Mr. Aylesworth (North York), 39; Mr. Miller (South Grey) 37; Mr. Crawford (Portage la Prairie), 36; Mr. Guthrie (South Wellington), 34; Mr. Foster (North Toronto), 35 twice; Mr. Monk, (Jacques Cartier), 34; Mr. Lewis, (West Huron), 33; Mr. Boyce (West Algoma), 33; Mr. Armstrong (East Lambton), 29; Mr. McCool (Nipissing), 29; Hon. R.

L. Borden (Carleton, Ont.), 28; Mr. S. J. Jackson (Selkirk), 28; Mr. Macdonald (Pictou), 27; Hon. Mr. Lemieux (Gaspé), 27; Hon. Mr. Fisher (Brome), 26; Hon. Mr. Graham (Brockville), 26; Mr. Northrup (East Hastings), 26; Sir Wilfrid Laurier (East Quebec), 25; Hon. Mr. Fielding (Shelburne and Queens) 25; Mr. Bristol (Centre Toronto), 25; Mr. Pringle (Stormont), 25; Mr. Galliher (Kootenay), 24; Sam. Hughes (Victoria and Haliburton), 24; Hon. Mr. Brodeur (Rouville), 23.

I did not go any further down on the list. Now, I hope we will all take this into our serious consideration and see if we cannot adopt some means by which every hon. member can place his ideas before the House in fewer words, throwing out a great deal of what is useless. For there is no doubt that, as every member of the House knows, a great deal that is said in this House might well be left unsaid. It does not convince anybody here, and it does not interest anybody outside. It would be greatly to the advantage of hon. members who have to sit here and listen and to the great, long-suffering public outside if speeches here were shorter.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Kennedy), I think, has given the best justification of the opposition that could possibly be given. What is the occasion of the hon. gentleman's speech this afternoon? The misdeeds of the opposition. And what is the occasion of the long speeches of the opposition? The misdeeds of the government. Well, as the misdeeds of the government exceed the misdeeds of the opposition a thousandfold, the opposition might well have extended their speeches to a much greater average than the hon. gentleman has given without laying themselves open to criticism.

Mr. JOHN BARR. I presume that this is the last dying speech and confession of the patriarch from British Columbia who has just addressed us. I think it would have been much more fitting if he had delivered this spech in a caucus of his friends and had endeavoured to persuade them to bring in the Bills which they foreshadowed in the speech from the Throne without waiting until the dying hours of the session. It would be more fitting if he were to warn them of the effects of bringing in such an obnoxious Bill as the Election Act amendment which we found necessary to fight at every stage, even to the extent of stopping the voting of Supply. This was the only power we could oppose to the overwhelming majority of the government and prevent the outrage upon the country that they were attempting.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not intend to discuss that Bill again?

Mr. KENNEDY.

Mr. BARR. I am replying to my hon. friend (Mr. Kennedy). I think I have a right to give reasons why we acted on the defensive in fighting these questions. The hon. member knows that we were obliged to fight that Bill from ditch to ditch until the last ditch was crossed. We compelled them to do justice to all except the province of Ontario. Though unsuccessful in preventing discrimination against Ontario, yet we accomplished good work. When the hon. member feels like lecturing the House I think he will find plenty of subjects on his own side. We were justified in taking every hour that we have taken in exposing and opposing the misdeeds of this government.

Mr. FOWLER. At the end of a parliament we always are confronted by the statistician who comes forward with his tables of figures as the hon. member (Mr. Kennedy) has done. But that is the last of the statistician. He never appears in another parliament. I think that the hon. gentleman will share the fate of his predecessors.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Militia and Defence—Chargeable to income—Annual drill—further amount required including Quebec review, $200,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I had intended, in company with two or three other hon. members, to take up a little more at length than I shall be able to do certain matters in connection with the Department of Militia and Defence. But at this time of the session, with almost everybody away, when my friends who were to have taken part in this discussion have been obliged to leave, I must content myself with saying much less than I should have done. In fact, I think all I can do now is to ask some questions. In the first place, I do not know whether the minister has explained to the House the transaction in lands at Niagara. If I am not misinformed, a considerable tract of land has been bought at Niagara for the purposes of a permanent camp. If the minister has already explained that transaction I am not aware of that explanation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know that any reference has been made to this transaction. As every one knows, there is an old fort at Niagara which is one of the landmarks of Canadian history. Some years ago the question arose as to whether we should be able to continue to hold camp there, as we have been doing for years, because the camp ground was reported to be too small. The rifle range there is not sufficient for the modern rifle. Before constructing a rifle range it was thought desirable to look about and see whether we could not find a more suitable camp somewhere else. Several places were examined, one in Simcoe was favourably reported upon. But when we tried to acquire the land the price was put up, and it was thought undesirable to go on with the purchase. Later on, the military staff of my department suggested the desirability of acquiring more land at Niagara adjacent to the lands already owned by us. I thought this a good idea. There is a very strong feeling in Ontario against abandoning the old historic grounds. General Lake kindly offered to take the matter in hand and had some correspondence, I believe with the authorities of the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake. If I remember correctly, the result of the correspondence was that the mayor of the town was able to procure an option on some 200 acres of land—I have forgotten the exact area: had I known that this matter was coming up I would have brought the papers with me. The price at which the land was offered was very low. A recommendation was made to council and the offer was accepted, and to-day we are the owners of that land. I have no doubt that it was secured at most favourable rates. It was done through the authorities of the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, which town was naturally very much opposed to the withdrawal of the camp from the old ground and took every means possible to assist the department in procuring the necessary land at a favourable figure. I cannot tell my hon. friend what the price was, but I know it was a very fair price indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the minister must be in a position to tell us what the price is. How long ago was this land bought?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I suppose three months ago, perhaps more.

Mr. FOSTER. Has it been paid for?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Out of what vote?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The vote of $1,300,000 for ordnance, rifles, lands, etc., capital account.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister know what the price was?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not remember.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems extraordinary the minister would buy 200 acres of land and not remember approximately the price of the land.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I did not buy the land, it was bought by the officers of my department, or rather it was bought for us by the authorities of the town. I cannot carry those things in my mind, but it seems to me it was somewhere about $80 an acre, but I am speaking from memory.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the minister knew the names of the vendors I could give some idea of the value of the land.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My estimates have gone through, and I have not the papers here; it was largely peach orchards. I am absolutely certain it was a great bargain.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not taking any exception to the buying of lands for military purposes if it is necessary and if it is properly conducted, but it seems to me a transaction of that extent—buying 200 acres at the rate of $80—is a pretty large transaction without parliament knowing anything of it. The vote is for the purchase of ordnance, arms, lands for military purposes, stores, clothing, etc. I have the same objection to this as I have expressed to other votes, that under this resolution the minister could spend a million dollars for lands without parliament knowing anything of it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I shall get the information in ten minutes; I am anxious to give it.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the minister has made a contract for the manufacture of bayonets in the country, for some 52,000, and that the contract has been made with the Ross Rifle Company. Has that contract ever been laid before parliament?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It was before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the right of this parliament to have information with reference to such contracts. By what authority did the minister enter into a contract for a quarter of a million dollars without having brought it before parliament? All the information I have gained has been by means of questions in the House. But as it appears, without any discussion in parliament or any approval of the plan by parliament, the minister has entered into a contract with the Ross Rifle Company for the manufacture of 52,000 bayonets at $5.25 per bayonet complete. That amounts to over a quarter of a million dollars, and had it not been for some questions asked in the House parliament would have had no knowledge of what had been done. Does not the minister think that in entering into a contract for $250,000 he should have been specially authorized by parliament upon information detailed to the House? It is not a small transaction, it is a large transaction, and in this case has to do with the effectiveness of a force. If we look at current prices, I think I am entirely within the mark in saying that $5.25 is an extremely high price for bayonets. I find that the price of the bayonet and scabbard complete at the War Office for use with the rifle of the British force cost 9s. 8½d., that is just $2.32.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. At what time?

Mr. FOSTER. In 1897.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And at the present time I fail to find that the price of the bayonet is appreciably higher. I find the United States bayonet used by the United States troops and attached to their rifle costs even less than that.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. How does the hon. member arrive at the cost of the United States bayonet?

Mr. FOSTER. A statement by one of its military officers.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Manufactured by the United States itself?

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly, as this is manufactured at a factory for which we have provided every dollar of the working capital.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not at all.

Mr. FOSTER. And in advance of making——

Sir FREDRICK BORDEN. We do nothing of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. And in reference to this very contract, in which we advance 75 per cent of the total value of it before we get the bayonet. The very same article, if I am informed correctly, is in this contract as in the rifle contract, that we advance 75 per cent of the cost, which is three-quarters of $5.25.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We do not advance a dollar.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister need not say——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman need not misstate.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not misstating.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. He is absolutely misstating it, and he knows it. You know it perfectly well; you know you are stating what is not a fact. You are doing it deliberately.

Mr. FOSTER. I am stating what is absolutely the fact.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. You are not.

Mr. FOSTER. He has no right to speak to me in that way.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman must not think he can talk to people and insinuate and make improper and unfair statements, without getting his answer back.

Mr. FOSTER. Every time this year that any person has attempted to criticise this hon. gentleman he has been blackguarded by him for doing so, across the floor of the House. He does not stop criticism that way. Let him bring his contract and place it on the table of the House, and I think I will be able to show him out of the contract that he does exactly in this case what he did in the Ross rifle case, that he advances 75 per cent before the articles furnished to the department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We do not advance in the case of the Ross Rifle contract, and that is what I say, and the hon. gentleman knows it. We give 75 per cent after 75 per cent of the work is done.

Mr. FOSTER. What I said, and the minister cannot crawl out of it in that way, is that before a single rifle was furnished to this government they had advanced 75 per cent of the contract price of the rifle, and he knows that is absolutely true.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, what the hon. gentleman said was that we supplied the working capital for the company, which is not correct; and he said that every dollar of the money was paid before any work was done.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then how can the hon. gentleman say that we advanced the capital ?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say before it was done. I said before the rifles were delivered. That is what I said, and the 'Hansard' will show it, and if the minister thinks it is not so we can refer to the 'Hansard' report.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Then there is nothing in your statement.

Mr. FOSTER. There is something in the statement, as I think, though my hon. friend may think there is nothing.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Nothing at all.

Mr. FOSTER. So I think it will be found that this is the condition, that the government is to advance the money expended on all bayonets, scabbards, parts thereof and materials therefor, to be delivered in any year up to 75 per cent of the price. That is exactly the wording of the contract in the case of the Ross rifle. Now in reference to the Ross rifle, what took place ? This state of things, that although an order was given at a certain time, the advances were thousands of dollars and hundreds of thousands of dollars over and against these rifles, before a single one, or at least before the sale of rifles called for in any one contract, was delivered. I have the figures here, they have been so often placed before the House that it does not seem necessary for me to do it again, but if the minister makes it necessary, I shall read the record out of his own mouth.

I find that the first contract for the Ross rifles was given March 27, 1902, for delivery in the calendar year of 1903.

And the contract with the Ross Rifle Company only allows him to make an advance for the space of one year during which they are to be delivered. Here then is the date of the contract, March 27, 1902, for 12,000 rifles. Well, Sir, there was not a rifle delivered until August, 1905. Then 1,000; and in October 1905, 3,000; and in December, 2,000. And yet if you will take the companion statement given by himself you will find that on August 6, 1905, $506,000 had been paid out by this government to the Ross Rifle Company, and at that time he had not more than 1,000 rifles delivered.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have got them now.

Mr. FOSTER. You have got them now, and that is the way the minister thinks a contract is kept. Now I say that the same reading is in the articles of the contract for bayonets as was in the article of the Ross rifle contract, the very same terms; therefore, we may look for the very same non-carrying out. Now does the minister want me to read any more of these figures as to the immense sums of money that were paid, first, before a single rifle was delivered, and afterwards, before one-tenth of the number practically called for by that contract, had been delivered. Now it appears that in this matter the minister has given the extravagant price of $5.25 for bayonets, that he has added to that the same condition that was in the Ross rifle contract, namely, that he can advance up to 75 per cent of the material and labour involved, before a single rifle bayonet is delivered.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But after the work is done, and after the materials are there.

Mr. FOSTER. Not after the work is done, necessarily; after certain material is bought and after certain work is done, or before any work is done, if the material is there.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is only on material.

Mr. FOSTER And that may be advanced to hundreds of thousands of dollars before he has a single finished rifle. These are the facts : That the minister gave orders, under the Ross rifle contract, for delivery of a certain number of rifles at various times; that the contract was not lived up to; that the minister advanced, for instance, in this case $506,000 before he had more than 1,000 rifles; that this contract is completed upon exactly the same plan; it takes power to advance in exactly the same way. Therefore what will take place in what took place in the other case, that you actually give into these gentlemen's hands a working capital for the contract you give them, and for which you pay them. Now I was going on to say that the price of the United States bayonet is $1.43, that is what it costs. When the minister says that it is manufactured in government works, what are these down here at Quebec? What did you give to the Ross Rifle Company ? You gave them in perpetuity almost nineteen and a half acres of government land on the Plains of Abraham. That is what he gave them, for $1 a year. That is, he gave them their site. What next did he give them? He gave them outside of what they get in the city of Quebec—that is their own matter, an exemption from taxation—he gave them this contract on which he advances 75 per cent, as I have stated.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I say we do not.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the minister had a single rifle made and delivered, this government had paid out nearly $500,000; and before he had more than 1,000, they had paid in actual cash $506,000. The very same thing went on. This means that you are giving them your working capital. Suppose the minister's contract was that he paid them for their rifles when they delivered them; then, for every dollar's worth of material they bought they would have to furnish their own capital, for every hour of labour they would have to pay for it out of their own capital and they would get no money from the government until they had delivered the goods. But, in this case they get $506,000 out of the government before they deliver one single rifle. Is that not furnishing the working capital ? Take that out of the contract and they would have to furnish all the capital, find all the material and pay all the labour.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They did furnish it.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister furnished $506,000.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, paid it on account of work done.

Mr. FOSTER. That is shown by his own answer.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not so.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is shown as well by the accounts. The minister knows the position that was taken by the Auditor General. In the course of time the Auditor General had to sit down on the minister and refuse to pay. He refused to pay because there was a constant advance of government funds before there was delivery of the goods that were to be paid for, and he objected to it. The minister knows that and the minister knows that he had to go to council and get it to extend the time of the contract and so get payment in the end from the Auditor General. To sum up, first, a contract was made for $250,000 and this parliament does not know about it until to-day. In the second place the minister pays $5.25 for each bayonet when the bayonet supplied by the government of Great Britain is purchased for $2.92 and when the United States bayonet, made in the government works, it is said, costs $1.43.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I would need some better evidence than the hon. gentleman's statement as to that fact.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the minister say that the United States bayonet does not cost that ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not believe it.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister does not ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if the minister will ask his own officers he will find out that what I tell him is the fact.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman has been around my officers ?

Mr. FOSTER. Around your offices ? Are they your offices ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Officers, I said.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they your offices or are they your officers ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are more mine than they are your's.

Mr. FOSTER. At present. I know you think you own the whole thing but I do not think you do. I have a perfect right to go to your offices.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has been there just as he was in the Department of the Interior and the Department of Marine and Fisheries running around after the accountants to try to find out what is going on.

Mr. FOSTER. I absolutely deny such and both of these assertions and demand a retraction of them.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will not retract them.

Mr. FOSTER. They must be retracted.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They will not be retracted.

Mr. FOSTER. I have personal knowledge of the matter, I say that both statements are untrue and I demand a retraction.

Mr. FOSTER.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will not retract.

Mr. FOSTER. I appeal to the Speaker. I will have this matter settled.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is customary to accept an hon. member's statement.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Certainly. I was informed and believed until this minute that the hon. gentleman had been doing what I have stated. I am bound, as I did on a former occasion, to accept the hon. gentleman's statement that he did not.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. gentleman, having on a former occasion had to take back such assertions, ought to have learned something from his experience.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I may have something to say about the former occasion.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman wants to say something more let him say it now. Let him come right out with it.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Go on.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not done myself the honour of being in the minister's department. I do not know that I have been in it for four years, but if I wanted to go I would have a perfect right to go. The hon. gentleman has called them his offices. I do not think they are his.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. They are in occupation by me at the present time.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, unfortunately for this country they are.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In your opinion.

Mr. FOSTER. That is my opinion. Now I was going on to say when I was thus rudely interrupted by the minister, for which interruption he has had to make a retraction, that if he did not know he should have known and that if he will ask his own officers I think he will——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. My officers.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Oh, a few minutes ago they were not my officers.

Mr. FOSTER. They are your officers in occupation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman found fault with me for calling them my officers.

Mr. FOSTER. I will declare that they are his in occupation and humour him in that respect. However, if he will ask his officers—his by virtue of occupation for a short time only—he will find the records in his own department as to the price of the United States bayonet. I find here in my notes, that, according to a letter from F. C. Ainsworth, Military secretary, acting secretary of war, August 25, 1906, and over his signature, the cost of the magazine rifle is given in the report of the Ordnance Department of the United States as $14.90, cleaning rod 24 cents and bayonet $1.42, the whole cost being $16.57. I base my statement as to the cost of the United States rifle on that authority. The minister says it is not true.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I do not know what the hon. gentleman is reading from.

Mr. FOSTER. I am reading from my notes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I thought so.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER. A letter from Mr. Ainsworth ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, this is taken from a letter of Mr. Ainsworth.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To whom?

Mr. FOSTER. To the department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. To my department ?

Mr. FOSTER. By courtesy—your department.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Thank you.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an immense difference between that and a contract of this kind.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. In the first place the hon. gentleman finds fault with the fact that a contract has been entered into of $250,000 or thereabouts without the special authority of parliament. I may say at once in answer to the hon. gentleman that it has not been customary to lay contracts of this kind on the table or to ask the special permission of parliament for them. The hon. gentleman himself, in 1896, bought $1,000,000 worth of rifles and bayonets in England. He did not submit any contract, although I suppose they were bought on contract, to this House. He asked this House to vote $1,000,000 to enable him to buy rifles and bayonets.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I asked this House last year to vote $1,300,000 for the purpose of buying rifles and bayonets and various other things. In 1903 or 1904, I came to this House and stated the policy of the government with reference to the building up of the reserve of arms, ordnance, clothing, and all the various things required for the militia and I stated that that vote would be repeated probably for five years in succession. That vote has been repeated and out of that vote the materials, arms and other things have been bought exactly as stated to parliament at the time, and in each year, in the Auditor General's Report and in the militia report, a full account has been given of what has been done. In regard to this contract there was no secret. Information was asked in this House months ago and was given. The contract was entered into on May 4, and a statement was made in the House. I thought a copy of the contract had been laid on the table, but if not I am sorry as I intended it should be. The authority of parliament had been given quite as much in this case as in the case in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) purchased a million dollars worth of rifles and bayonets. The hon. gentleman states the price is altogether too high, and as authority he quotes a letter from somebody to the department stating that the price of the United States bayonet is $1.43. I doubt that. He says it is made in the ordnance factory in the United States, and if so, that represents the bare cost and not the cost as it would be if manufactured in a business establishment by a business concern. That is well known both in the United States and in England. I find that the hon. gentleman himself purchased bayonets in England in 1896 and a portion of the rifles and bayonets he bought were bought from the War Office direct and another portion through the War Office from the trade. The portion purchased from the trade in England in 1896 cost 15 shillings and 5 pence halfpenny, including all expenses, or $3.71. Applying the duty which is now imposed on bayonets to that price the cost would be $4.46. I find that at the time the hon. gentleman made his purchases he happened to go into the market at a very favourable moment, and that he got a reduction of about 12½ per cent below the regular prices. When a factory begins the manufacture of armament of any kind there is always added to the estimated cost an estimate to cover initial expenses at the outset of manufacturing. It so happens that at the time General Lake made these purchases for the hon. gentleman in England the time had passed during which that 12½ per cent was maintained, and he got a reduction upon his rifles and bayonets of about 12½ per cent. Therefore if you add that 12½ per cent to the $4.46 paid you will see that the price will be considerably higher than the $5.25 upon which this contract is based. That is called the initial expense which is reckoned for in all contracts of this kind. $5.25 being the contract price, $4.46 being the cost which the hon. gentleman paid for the bayonet; it would give 79 cents to cover the initial cost of expenditure to provide for manufacture. I think the hon. gentleman is misinformed as to the cost of the bayonet at the War Office to-day, because I have here the latest quotation of the price of bayonet and scabbard in England and the cost of 25,844 bayonets according to ordnance factories account—that is at the ordnance not the trade outside—is $2.02, and the cost of 688 scabbards, 3 shillings and 3 pence halfpenny or 80 cents, making $2.82; the departmental expenses, 15½, freight 14, making a total of $3.11½ cents, and applying duty to this you will get about $4. The ordnance factories, prices for bayonets and scabbards given above do not include initial expense. The average difference between ordnance factories price and the price to the trade paid by the British government is approximately 35 per cent. This does not include any charge for initial expenditure. If you add that on it will bring it to $5.02½ cents which leaves 22½ cents per bayonet and scabbard for the initial expense on a contract for 52,000, equal to $11,700, which I think is not an extravagant allowance for the initial expense in a matter of this kind. In the case of rifles it is different, but in the case of bayonets the government is absolutely the only customer the contractor has so that when this contract is finished that is the end of it and unless some provision is made to the contractor for initial expense he would be very likely to make a loss, a thing which I do not think anybody desires. But the department took the precaution to ask somebody else. They asked the only other people in Canada who could do work of this kind. They asked the Ottawa Car Company to tender on this contract and the Ottawa Car Company did tender and if I remember correctly their tender was $5.45 so that the contract was given to the lowest tenderer. I believe that from all points of view the contract was a fair one. As to the quantity ordered—52,000 rifles are under order from the Ross Rifle Company, and it was therefore necessary to have 52,000 bayonets and a contract was entered into for the delivery of that number within three years.

The hon. gentleman will see that it is not $260,000, or whatever the amount of the contract may be, in one year; but it is spread over three years. So that it is not such an alarming thing; and of course it is absolutely necessary that we should have the bayonets in order that the rifles may be distributed to the troops as early as possible. The hon. gentleman has taken exception to this contract on the ground that it is similar to the Ross rifle contract, in authorizing advances up to 75 per cent.

We had that matter very fully threshed out in this House when the Ross rifle was under discussion. I stated then, and I repeat now, that in a contract of this kind, encouraging a new industry in this country, it was absolutely necessary that reasonable encouragement should be given to the contractor. He had to put up an expensive building and put in expensive machinery, and it was only fair that reasonable advances should be made to him as the work progressed. In England payments are always made in advance. The war office itself, if we gave them an order, would require the whole or nearly the whole of it to be paid for in advance. It does not seem to me to be unreasonable that this company should be paid, not in advance—I do not know that the hon. gentleman wished to misstate the fact, and if I gave the impression that I thought he did, I apologize; but I understood him to say that we paid this money in advance and supplied the company with its working capital. That is not true. What is done is this. After materials have been bought, after work has been done, a reliable man, a chartered accountant approved of by the Auditor General, goes and takes stock and examines all the vouchers and all the bills for all the material, and the books showing the labour expended, and upon that data furnishes the department with a statement on which 75 per cent of the value of the rifles is paid. The hon. gentleman makes a great point of the fact that considerable money at one time was advanced before any rifles were received. That is quite true. There were difficulties in the matter of the construction of the rifle and the delay was quite as much due to the officers of the department as to the company itself. The company was anxious to deliver a satisfactory rifle. The inspector was anxious that a satisfactory rifle should be delivered, and the inspector representing the department on the one hand and the officers of the company on the other hand worked together with a view to making certain changes in the mechanism to bring about the desirable result of delivering to the department and the country a first-rate rifle. This caused a certain amount of delay. I think for nearly a year there were no deliveries, but the work was going on. Four or five hundred men were working. We had the evidence of the chartered accountant before the Public Accounts Committee that out of $1,100,000 expended, $900,000 or about that sum was upon labour employed in the factory. So, in view of the fact that this was a new industry employing 500 men, and that it was in accordance with the policy laid down by the War Office that we should be as independent as possible in matters of this kind, it seems to me that there should be no serious complaint made against the department for extending reasonable leniency. The hon. gentleman says that we violated the contract. The hon. gentleman ought to know better. We did not violate the contract. My late deputy was a lawyer of good standing, and he passed these different demands for advances as they came in, and it never occurred to him, nor to anybody else but the Auditor General, that these payments should be limited to a given year. The Auditor General took a different view. It was quite proper for him to do so if he chose; he did it conscientiously. At my suggestion the matter was submitted to the Department of Justice, who ruled that the action of my department was in accordance with the contract. Then it was that the Auditor General said : Then I must ask council to approve of the extension of time ; and that was done. It was perfectly proper. It ought to have been done before, and I do not see that the department is liable to any very great censure for that.

Mr. FOSTER. When was the contract entered into ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. On the 4th of May, 1908.

Mr. FOSTER. When are the first bayonets to be delivered ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will read the contract.

Memorandum of agreement made in duplicate this day of one thousand nine hundred and eight, between Sir Charles Ross, Baronet, of Balnagown, Scotland, hereinafter called the contractor of the first part, and His Majesty the King, represented by the Hon. Sir Frederick W. Borden, Minister of Militia and Defence, of the Dominion of Canada, hereinafter called the minister which expression as herein used includes also the successors in office of the said Minister of Militia and Defence; His Majesty so represented being hereinafter referred to as the government, of the second part.

Whereas, it is considered in the general interests of Canada that the bayonets and scabbards for the rifle manufactured at present by the contractor for the government therein called the Ross rifle required by the government for the purposes of militia and defence should be manufactured in Canada.

And whereas the contractor has proposed by himself, or his assigns to undertake the establishment and operation of a suitable factory in Canada for the manufacture of such bayonets and scabbards and to supply the government with the bayonets and scabbards so required, manufactured, at the said factory and delivered to the government.

This agreement therefore witnesseth, and it is agreed by and between the contractor and the government as follows:

1. The contractor is to establish and operate in Canada a factory for the manufacture of bayonets with the necessary plant.

2. The contractor undertakes to deliver to the government, within three years after the delivery to the contractor, by the minister, of an approved standard pattern bayonet and scabbard and specifications and drawings therefor, 52,000 bayonets and scabbards manufactured in Canada at the said factory, and corresponding and equal in every respect to the said standard pattern bayonet and scabbard and in accordance with the said specifications and drawings therefor; such bayonets and scabbards to be delivered by monthly even quantities as nearly as may be, deliveries to begin within one month of the completion by the contractor of the necessary machinery fixtures and gauges; such completion by the contractor to be carried out with all due diligence, and to be immediately notified in writing to the minister.

4. All the said bayonets and scabbards hereby contracted for are to be inspected before delivery, with reasonable promptness and diligence, by the inspector of small arms, or other inspector duly authorized by the government; and if, upon such inspection, the said bayonets and scabbards are found equal to the standard pattern and in accordance with the specifications and drawings as aforesaid, delivery shall be taken as complete at the factory; otherwise they shall not be accepted nor shall payment therefor be made. But in case they are not accepted by the inspector, his reasons for non-acceptance shall, on request, be given by him to the contractor.

6. The government shall pay for all bayonets and scabbards delivered under the contract at the rate of $5.25 for each bayonet with scabbard complete. Payment therefor shall be made upon delivery; provided, however, that after the establishment of the said factory in good running order and the installation of all necessary plant, the contractor, in any year, during the continuance of this contract, if and so long as he is not in default with respect to the delivery of bayonets and scabbards under this contract——

These words were not in the Ross rifle contract.

—shall be entitled, in advance of delivery, to payment of moneys actually expended upon all bayonets and scabbards or parts thereof, to be delivered in that year; such payment to be made upon the contractor's certificate of the amount so spent attested by the signature of the government chartered accountant, who shall first satisfy himself of the fact of such expenditure; such payments in no case to exceed 75 per cent of the price of such bayonets and scabbards, the contractor undertaking whenever such advances are made to insure and keep insured the said bayonets and scabbards, and parts thereof, against loss or damage by fire, for the benefit of the government to the extent of such advances, and the contractor agreeing that to the extent of such advances the government shall have a lien upon the said bayonets and scabbards and parts thereof.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any provision for importation of parts ?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, these are to be all made in Canada. Of course, the steel must be imported.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the factory yet been started? If so, what progress has been made?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Some progress is being made, and I think the work is to be carried out in connection with the rifle factory, some addition being made.

Mr. FOSTER. When does the minister expect the first delivery?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I understand they are actually at work, so that it is hoped early delivery will be made.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any advance been made?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I cannot speak with certainty—so far as I know, none, and if there has been any I think it would have been brought to my notice.

Mr. FOSTER. The manufacture of 52,000 practically exhausts the manufacture of bayonets.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That number covers the number of rifles under order. About 44,000 rifles have been delivered out of 52,000. But, in future, when additional orders are given for rifles, additional orders will be given for bayonets of course. But it will be open to the government to terminate this contract and make a new one, or readjust the terms when this contract for 52,000 terminates. It might be also that the next lot of rifles would be of a somewhat different pattern, and so the bayonet pattern would have to be changed. The 52,000 rifles are of the same pattern. These are the considerations upon which the number was fixed at 52,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the pattern been adopted?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes. Twenty bayonets were manufactured more than a year ago and submitted to the military members of my department and sent to the Petewawa camp to be tested there during the exercises of last year. They were thoroughly tested, I believe, and found to be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. FOSTER. And have the drawings and specifications been prepared?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they in the hands of the contractors yet?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think so.

Mr. FOSTER. The minister will remember the delay that occurred with reference to the Ross rifle——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. We have learned by experience.

Mr. FOSTER—And a very costly teaching it happened to be in that case.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Not so.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the minister to say that in this case the pattern has been adopted and the specifications made and placed in the hands of the contractors?

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see any force at all in the minister's calculation as to the matter of duty——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. Why would not the hon. gentleman give the same privilege to a manufacturer who is making material for the government that he would to a manufacturer who is making material for the public? Why should not the manufacturer of bayonets, for instance, have the benefit of this provision as to duty as well as the woollen manufacturer, the cotton manufacturer or the sewing machine manufacturer?

Mr. FOSTER. In the first place, the minister will see there is a great difference. The government treats no woollen manufacturer as it treats this manufacturer of rifles and bayonets. It does not give them a free site in perpetuity——

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. But towns do.

Mr. FOSTER—and it does not give them an advance on the price of goods, which advance, in this case, amounted to a very large sum before a single rifle was delivered. Let us reason that out for a moment. The general manufacturer has to select his material and buy it, to select his labour and pay it. He has to go through the whole process from the raw material up to the finished article. He then has to have that pass inspection, he ships it and the delivery is made. Then he gets his payment and not before. By this bayonet contract the man who manufactures buys the material and hires his men, but he pays for that material and for that labour out of the advance of 75 per cent and that is actually, to that extent, working capital which is provided for him by the government. He buys his material for a certain consignment of rifles or of bayonets and he puts his labour on it. He buys his material for two or three months, whatever are the terms, he puts his labour on that and he works it up and all the time his labour is working on it and bringing it towards the perfected instrument whatever it is, the bayonet or the rifle, he is receiving 75 per cent of the contract price which is, I think we will all admit, very close to the actual cost of the finished article, leaving the other 25 per cent for profit to the manufacturer. Therefore it is plain enough that whatever you may call it the man is really getting by his advance the working capital that is necessary for him to buy his material and employ his labour. You can always buy from the war office. The war office would be very willing to accommodate themselves to and work in co-operation with the government of Canada or any other colony. When we bought war material it was made what we call a rush order as sometimes has to be done. We wanted that $1,000,000 worth or more as quickly as possible. The war office provided us with one-half of those rifles and the small arms factory at Birmingham supplied the remaining half. Arrangements could have been made just as well, to-day as then with the British government by which the rifles and bayonets as well could have been provided, in whole or in part, by the ordnance department and perhaps in part by the different factories of small arms in Birmingham and other places. It is true that the outside manufacturer charges more than the imperial government does. It is also true that when the imperial government requires the installation of additional machinery for making ordnances for itself it allows, for a certain period of time, a little larger price. I think the allowance was about 10 shillings in the case of the small arms company at Birmingham.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. No, it is about 20 shillings.

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is exactly 10 shillings and that 10 shillings was given because of the expense for added machinery. But at a certain time that cut was made at least it was cut down when we bought, so that when we come to the average price of the rifles which we paid in 1896 and 1897, whereas we paid £3 8s. 5d. to the war office, we paid £4 13s. 2½ to the small arms factory at Birmingham and the average of the two amounted to about $20.77. There was added to that 5½ per cent for inspection and care of the department, which is I imagine always put in.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The war office rifles cost £2 17s. 3d., or with the pull through, oil bottle, &c., £2 18s. 6d., and the trade rifles cost £4, just as I said.

Mr. FOSTER. And what I said is exactly true, that with the whole thing complete it was £3 8s. 5d. for the war office and £14 18s. 2½d. for the private companies.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is not my statement. It was £3 18s. 9d. for the war office and £4 7s. 5d. for the others.

Mr. FOSTER. It is still less then as I have added 5½ per cent to make the total.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. That is added here too.

Mr. FOSTER. The difference between us is not great. The average then according to the minister's paper would be less than my average, $20.77½ for the 40,000. There is no doubt the minister could have made very much the same kind of an arrangement with the British war office and with the manufacturers of arms, and I do not think you will find there has been a very large appreciation in the price. What does the minister's Ross rifle cost him ? It costs him without the bayonet, about $28 to $29 per rifle.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. $26.90.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he has to take in everything in connection with the cost. There is the amount he has paid for changes and other improvements, that is he has undertaken to experiment upon a rifle which it has taken him from 1902 to 1908 to get into what he thinks just now is a pretty complete condition and he has had to pay for that experimentation.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. It is not fair to charge that to the rifle.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. There may be 100,000 more rifles.

Mr. FOSTER. There may be but that is what these rifles have cost up to the present time, and that need not have been added to the cost if the minister had bought in Great Britain. He has had to pay $30,967 for changes and improvements, $76,580 for inspection, rentals, &c., and $26,237 for gauges so that the total payment for the 40,000 rifles, according to his own answer, is $1,138,784 which brings the cost up to $28.47. Then he has no bayonet. If he adds the price of the bayonet $5.25 and there will be inspection and other charges for this, he will have $33.72 which his rifle and bayonet will cost him, whereas from the war office, the whole thing complete cost us $20.77½ each for 40,000 rifles. The difference between $20.77½ and $33.72 represents just about the difference in the price that we have to pay. The same arrangement could, I think, have been made and the same relative saving.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. By buying in England?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. Then why not buy woollens and cottons there?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think you can ever go on the same system and rule with reference to the manufacture of arms by a government as you can in respect of the general trade and manufactures of the country ; you may force that argument in, but I do not think it is altogether a fair way of putting it.

With reference to the bayonets, the same thing takes place. The minister could go to the British War Office and buy his bayonets for 9s. 8½d., adding some cost which would bring it up a little, or he could buy them from the small arms factories for about 13s. 2¾d. There may be some little cost added to that. Suppose he got the orders about equally placed for that 52,000, it would make an average in the vicinity of $3 per bayonet. Now he is paying $5.25 per bayonet. It seems to me it would have been a far better policy in the manufacture of both bayonets and rifles to have kept ourselves in exact unison with Great Britain. They have certainly had the greater experience in the manufacture of arms; they have the knowledge and the expert skill ; they are as interested in getting the very best arm for the British service, more interested than probably any other country in the world—certainly they are as much interested as we are. We would have had the benefit of uniformity in arms and of the experience and skill and the cost of experimenting by the British government itself. The main argument that has been advanced in favour of the present system is that you wanted to be independent. But the fact is you are not independent now, in the manufacture of the Ross rifle you bring into this country from the United States manufactured parts. In the manufacture of the Ross rifle you bring in from the United States certain manufactured parts. I think we would have been just as independent if we had kept up the connection with the British War Office. Great Britain has command of the sea, and will keep it as long as she is a strong and permanent empire. I do not think there is much doubt as to our being always in a position to get our supplies of arms in that way from Great Britain. We would then keep side by side with the British government in all its improvements, and we would have a uniform arm. Instead of that, the minister went to work and undertook to manufacture a rifle, and it took him years to know what kind of a rifle he wanted. It may have been that the Ross rifle, as Ross brought it here, was a better rifle than it is to-day after it has gone through these experimentations.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. It is rather late in the session to go over that question.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I think the hon. gentleman will see that it is hardly fair to repeat this whole debate over again. I have discussed the question here for an hour or more. It is hardly fair to me; it is hardly fair to the House at this hour, within a few hours of prorogation, to precipitate the debate anew. All that he has said has been said two or three times already during this session. Every one of these statements he is making has been answered. I appeal to the hon. gentleman as to whether this is the sort of thing we would expect from an old parliamentarian on the eve of the prorogation of parliament.

Mr. FOSTER. I am making my statement with reference primarily to the bayonet contract, and I am arguing from the Ross rifle contract to the bayonet contract.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES. There is just one point. Reference was made to the primary rifle being better than the present rifle. I may tell him that the rifle that is now in the hands of the soldiers, and which has been condemned, has come through the severest test any rifle has ever passed through, and has proven itself equal to any rifle in the world. It is a question of test.

Mr. FOSTER. After all, you are dependent upon the rifle factory here, which is not manufacturing bayonets, and you are paying $5.25, when I am certain you could have got those bayonets made by the War Office and by the other companies in Great Britain at a figure somewhere in the neighbourhood of $3 to $3.50 each. As to independence in the matter, why, if war came to-morrow, or any time within two years, or even three years, if it came of a sudden, the factory here could not supply you, it is not able to do it. You would have then to go to the British government and get your supplies in the old country.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. For the third or fourth time I must repeat, as briefly as possible, what I have said before as a justification for undertaking to encourage the manufacture of arms in this country. Let me preface that by asking the hon. gentleman: Why did the government to which he belonged encourage the manufacture of ammunition? It could have been procured more cheaply in England. Why did he do that? When I came into the office the factory established by the hon. gentleman was manufacturing some 600,000 or 700,000 rounds of ammunition a year. I am happy to say that quantity has been increased from 600,000 to about 10,000,000 or 12,000,000 rounds. The hon. gentleman says we can always get what rifles we want in England. Well, we could not. In the year 1900 I tried to get 10,000 and we could not get 2,000. We did not know what was going to happen in 1900. We had sent 7,000 troops to South Africa armed with 7,000 of our own rifles and had reduced our stock. We wanted more; we tried to get 10,000, and we could not get 2,000 the very moment we wanted them. The hon. gentleman's argument would apply to any manufacture in Canada. I am surprised that an old national policy advocate should stand up here at this day and recommend that we should go on in this manner, being absolutely dependent upon the supply to come from the mother country. The same argument that applies to any manufacture in this country applies with greater force in this case, because this is a question of defence; it is a vital question, both to this country and to the empire at large. I read the other night—the hon. gentleman was here and heard me—from the blue-books laid before the imperial authorities a year ago, and what did it say?

No review of the strategical conditions of the British empire, even when such a review is limited to the purely military aspects of the question, can be undertaken without admitting as a first and fundamental principle that the maintenance of the empire rests primarily upon supremacy at sea.

Suppose that supremacy was interrupted, as it might be, even temporarily, and communication were cut off between this country and the mother country. It might happen, it would be very likely to happen, it is possible, it is probable, if a union of any two great powers took place against Great Britain. I do not believe it would be permanent, but it might continue long enough to place us in the greatest peril, and absolutely imperil the connection between this country and the mother country. What did this blue-book say further ?

It is most desirable that the area of supply of the warlike store under reference should be as wide as possible, and therefore the colonial governments should be urged to arrange for local manufacture and provisions, rather than to rely on the resources of the United Kingdom.

There is the answer to the hon. gentleman. If we are to carry out our policy, do our part in defence of this empire, we must be prepared to manufacture, not only the rifles, but the ordnance and ammunition of all kinds, in our own country. That is the best way, no matter what it may cost. The cost must be kept within a reasonable amount. But it cannot be done yet as cheaply as it can in England. The department will carry out that policy so far as the manufacture of ammunition is concerned. We are already manufacturing ammunition in this country as cheaply, after twenty years of experience, as it can be done in England. The time will come when we may be able to manufacture rifles and ordnance as cheaply, but it will be many years. We must pay higher prices in the meantime ; labour is dearer. The hon. gentleman says : Oh, but it is not manufactured in Canada after all, you have to get the material outside. That argument would be just as sound and just as strong against almost any factory in Canada. Why, even agricultural implements are manufactured to a considerable extent from materials imported, and have to be. Carriages manufactured in this country are manufactured from imported material. We must creep before we walk. On the policy which the hon. gentleman lays down we would be content to remain in the condition we were in under his administration, and never be able to manufacture for ourselves. I do not believe that is a policy which the people of this country will endorse. I am quite content to leave this contract and to leave the policy in the judgment of the people to say whether it has been wise or whether it has been unwise.

With reference to the Niagara property about which the hon. gentleman asked, I have a memorandum which says : the total amount of money involved in the purchase was $31,000 or $120 an acre. The payment was made through the Department of Justice after negotiation by General Lake with the mayor of Niagara-on-the-Lake. The valuations obtained from an independent valuator were the same as the purchase price. The memorandum says that the registry is closed and full particulars cannot be obtained.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we will have the report on Monday.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. I will bring down all the papers.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this our last item of Supply ?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Speaker of the House, if there have been any additions made to salaries of officers of the House within a late period ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes. The salary of Mr. McCord, law clerk of the House of Commons, has been increased from $3,500 to $4,000. This increase has been under consideration for some time. In fact, the former Minister of Justice, about the time he was leaving office recommended that as Mr. McCord was doing what was called parliamentary counsel work his salary should be increased by $500. We had the matter up for consideration last year and again this year and we thought the increase was warranted. I may say that all these increases have been recommended by the clerk of the House.

Mr. SPROULE. What does Mr. Speaker mean by parliamentary counsel ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose it is in connection with advice on Bills. I do not know what the extra duties are but it has been maintained by Mr. McCord for some years that he was doing this work and was entitled to be paid for it, and the former Minister of Justice recommended it. Then, Mr. Laplante, the clerk assistant of the House, has been increased from $2,800 to $3,500. The assistant clerk has been for one or two years pointing out that as compared with the former assistant clerks and as compared with those occupying similar positions in other legislative assemblies his remuneration was not at all adequate.

Mr. FOSTER. When was Mr. Laplante appointed ?

Mr. SPEAKER. 22nd March, 1897.

Mr. FOSTER. At what salary.

Mr. SPEAKER. It was formerly $2,800 but it was reduced to $2,000 when he took office.

Mr. FOSTER. When did it go to $2,800?

Mr. SPEAKER. In 1903 or 1904. Having regard to the very onerous work Mr. Laplante has to do at all hours during the session, we thought this was only a proper recognition of his services. The salaries of the 'Hansard' staff have been dealt with by a resolution, and they have been increased to $2,500. Mr. Boyce, the assistant to the chief reporter, has been increased from $1,200 to $1,600. The salary of the translators of debates has been fixed at $2,100 as compared with $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of them are there ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot say exactly but I will get the information.

Mr. FOSTER. What comes next?

Mr. SPEAKER. The two official stenographers of the committee of the House are getting $1,500 each and they made representations to us that when they accepted a salary of $1,500 they had no conception that the session would be anything like eight months in length. They claimed an advance in salary and a special allowance for this year. We decided on the whole to recommend that $100 be allowed as compensation for the present session and that they be given a permanent advance of $100 making their salaries $1,600. Mr. Howe, a second-class clerk, clerk of the Public Accounts Committee, has been promoted to a first-class clerkship. I need not point out how much work is being done, session after session, in the Public Accounts Committee. He is given a first-class clerkship at a salary of $1,600 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. What is he getting now ?

Mr. SPEAKER. $1,400 and he gets an advance of $200.

Mr. FOWLER. What did the translators formerly get?

Mr. SPEAKER. $2,000. They are getting an advance of $100. Then, Messrs. Clapin, Tessier, Paradis and Briand, of the translators' branch of the House, are promoted from second-class clerkships at the following salaries: Clapin and Tessier, $1,700; Paradis and Briand, $1,500, the two former having been longer in the service and having had more experience than the two latter.

Mr. FOSTER. What were they getting before?

Mr. SPEAKER. Clapin and Tessier were getting $1,500.

Mr. FOSTER. And Paradis and Briand ?

Mr. SPEAKER. $1,350.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Speaker tell us what their duties are?

Mr. SPEAKER. They are permanent translators. I think Briand does some proof-reading work also.

Mr. FOSTER. Are they sessional clerks?

Mr. SPEAKER. They are permanent clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Speaker be kind enough to tell us what they do?

Mr. SPEAKER. They translate blue-books and all that class of work. Some of it is very technical and requires careful work. They translate all the sessional papers practically.

Mr. FOSTER. How long are they at work?

Mr. SPEAKER. All the year around with the exception of a reasonable vacation. Then there is Mr. Tremblay and Mr. Quéry. Mr. Quéry has been here since 1874, and he is increased from $1,700 to $1,900. Mr. Tremblay came in 1882 and he is increased from $1,700 to $1,900.

Mr. FOSTER. What do Mr. Tremblay and Mr. Quéry do?

Mr. SPEAKER. They are also permanent translators.

Mr. FOSTER. Doing the same work as those above?

Mr. SPEAKER. Practically the same work. Then there is Mr. Naubert, who is increased from $1,000 to $1,100. He is an assistant in the stationery office. Mr. Chapleau, the chief clerk of the French Votes and Proceedings, has found that his work is becoming very onerous. He is a very old and efficient officer of the House and he has found it absolutely necessary to have assistance. In fact he has been utilizing the services of an assistant to some extent to keep up with his work and he made an application for a permanent assistant in his office as translator and assistant clerk. The board decided, on the recommendation of the clerk and myself, to take power to appoint an additional man who has not yet been selected. They also decided to recommend that he be appointed a second-class clerk to start at a salary of $1,200. It will require an experienced, careful and competent man and it will hardly be possible to get any one who is fitted to do that work at a less salary than that. Lionel Dansereau is increased from a second to a first-class clerkship and the salary is fixed at the minimum of that class, $1,500.

Mr. FOSTER. What is he getting now?

Mr. SPEAKER. $1,400.

Mr. FOSTER. What does he do?

Mr. SPEAKER. French journal clerk. Then Mr. Deacon, second-class clerk who is curator of the reading room, is promoted from a junior second class to a second. I have had a conversation with the accountant, who has some supervision over his work in connection with the newspapers, and he recommends him as a very competent careful officer who is very closely occupied and who thinks that this increase is justifiable.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary was he formerly getting?

Mr. SPEAKER. He was getting $1,100 and he is increased to $1,200. Then there was, from the Joint Committee on Printing, a recommendation to the board a copy of which I have here and which I will read.

12. That the following schedules of salaries and grades as recommended by the Joint Committee on Printing be adopted by the board as a suitable scale for the officers of that branch and that the other recommendations of the joint committee be adopted as far as practicable in that connection having regard to the provisions of the proposed Civil Service Act.

The recommendation of the joint committee is as follows:

The committee recommend that, inasmuch as no permanent authorized scale of salaries, or rule as to promotions, exist in the case of employees of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament (serving in the distribution office of the Senate and House of Commons), and it is expedient that a permanent schedule in that regard be established similar in principle to that in force in the civil service and the House of Commons, the following schedule be adopted as a proper scale as to salaries and rule as to promotions in that branch of the service:

Designation of Official.	Present Grade.	Present Salary.	Yearly Increase.	Maximum Salary.
			$ cts.	$ cts.
1. Supt. of Distribution	Chief Clerk	$1,900. First appointment, 1897.	50 00	2,500 00
2. Assistant Supt. of Distribution	Second Class Clerk	$1,200. First appointment, 1896.	50 00	1,500 00
3. Second Assistant Supt. of Distribution	"	$1,200	50 00	1,500 00
4. Clerk of Distribution	Junior Second Class Clerk.	$800. First appointment, 1900.	50 00	1,100 00

The above increases of $50 each to begin from April 1, 1908.

13. That the salaries of Messrs. George Smith, bank messenger, and of Mr. George Holder, senior night watchman, be increased to $800 each.

Mr. FOSTER. What are they getting now ?

Mr. SPEAKER. $700 each. This puts them at the maximum of that class—(reading) :

That the salaries of Messrs. Charles R. Stewart, Thomas Ebbs, Louis P. Moreau and A. Boutet be increased to $700 each; that Mr. St. Louis, barber, have the same rate of pay as if he were a sessional messenger, and that the pay of sessional bookkeepers, H. C. Vaughan and G. Turner in the messenger staff be increased 50 cents per diem from the beginning of the present session. That Sessional Doorkeeper Williams have an increase of 25 cents per diem.

14. That as soon as possible a suitable room be set apart for the receipt, care, issue and distribution to the members of the House of Commons of the blue-books and other public documents formerly stored and distributed from the post office of the House, and that a permanent clerk to be a junior second class clerk at the minimum salary of that grade be appointed to assist Mr. Hollingsworth, of the post office, at present in charge of the work.

Mr. FOSTER. Will that be a new appointment ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That will be a new appointment. We are promoting one of the messengers to that position. The question of the distribution of blue-books to the members has been a source of annoyance to my knowledge for the last four years. It has never been satisfactory. It formerly encumbered the post office. This year a change was made, and the distribution was made from a small room off one of the corridors. As the blue-books are very large in number, we contemplate using one of the rooms in the new extension for this purpose, and assigning to some one the constant supervision of the matter, which I think will work out satisfactorily. This is the recommendation of the clerk and I think also of Mr. Mills, the postmaster. (Reading) :

15. That the appointment of Mr. Speaker of W. A. Lalonde, promoted from a permanent messengership, as a junior second class clerk be confirmed, it being understood that he is to be assigned to the above duty.

All these increases, except those of the Debates staff, are to take effect from the beginning of the present fiscal year. The increases of the Debates staff take effect from the beginning of the session.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Speaker tell us out of what moneys he is paying for these increases ?

Mr. SPEAKER. They will have to be voted.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the Speaker making these appointments and these increases, commencing with the beginning of this fiscal year, and waiting till next session for a vote to authorize them ?

Mr. SPEAKER. That is the intention.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the usual way ? It seems to me that we have been usually getting the vote first and making the appointments afterwards. May be under the new deputy we are going to adopt a different system.

Mr. SPEAKER. We think there will be enough money for the purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. But the money was not appropriated for this.

Mr. SPEAKER. It was appropriated for the general salaries of the House. In the meantime we put this on the minutes of the Board of Internal Economy as our recommendation to the government. Of course, the matter will have to be dealt with in the ordinary way.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you included in these increases all the officials in connection with the House ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I would not like to say that we have included all. We have included quite a number, but not all. Some of these cases have been standing for a year or two, and others have come up this session. In other cases, the officials have not applied for an increase this year.

Mr. FOWLER. That makes a difficulty, where some have been selected for an advance and others have not, and I do not think that a man should suffer for his modesty. If a man is too modest to request an increase of salary, that ought to be counted to him as an advantage. I would give the modest man a larger amount than the fellow who is always pressing for an advance.

Mr. SPEAKER. The clerk has gone over these matters very carefully, and has recommended them.

Some resolutions reported.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Grant towards the erection of a monument at Brantford, to commemorate invention of telephone, one-fourth of cost not exceeding $7,500.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I wish to move an amendment to that item. The total appropriation for this purpose, of course, was $10,000, one-quarter of this vote having been concurred in with the others. It has been brought to my notice that the vote in its present form will hardly cover the purposes of the promoters of this movement. It makes provision only with regard to a 'monument.' The committee having the matter in charge may wish to purchase the old Bell homestead which may be made a part of the memorial. I propose to amend the resolution to make it read :

Grant towards a memorial at or near Brantford to commemorate the invention of the telephone.

That will allow the committee to use the money, if they wish to do so, partly for a monument and partly for a memorial in some other form. Both will be covered by the word 'memorial.'

Motion agreed to and item amended, and, as amended, concurred in.

Public Works, chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—South lake, Lakevale—opening channel from lake to St. George's bay, inclusive of protection work, $5,625.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). That estimate was made some time ago and progress has been made, so that so large an amount is not required. I propose to reduce the item to $700, and move that it be amended accordingly.

Amendment agreed to. Item as amended concurred in.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the Minister of Public Works making any special provision for more rapid progress on the work in connection with the Geological Survey building? I understand that some of the minor contractors for heating, lighting, &c., are rather slow at their work and that the general work of the building is being interfered with.

Mr. PUGSLEY. That is not the case. The contractor for the building, Mr. Goodwin, is pushing it very rapidly, but the contract for the heating, lighting, fittings, &c., has not yet been let. I stated in the House that I would ask for tenders for the heating, lighting and fittings, but since then representations have been made urging me to push the work forward and I have a proposal from the contractor with reference to the heating, lighting and fittings. The matter is now under consideration. Everything will be done to push forward the building and the progress so far has been as rapid as it possibly could.

Mr. BARR. How long before the building will be completed ?

Mr. PUGSLEY. If arrangements can be made so that the subsidiary work of heating, lighting, fittings, &c., can go on concurrently with the main work of the building, I am informed it may be possible to provide for a large number of the specimens in the present museum even during the coming winter. I expect the whole building will be completed next year.

Mr. STEWART. Apart from the necessity of protecting the specimens at the geological museum, any one who enters the present museum must see that if a fire should break out there is great danger of loss of life. A considerable portion of the present museum is made up of buildings attached to the stone building. This shows the necessity of pushing the completion of the geological museum as rapidly as possible.

Mines Branch—investigation of ore deposits and economic minerals; of fuel values of coals and peat of Canada; examination and delimitation of peat bogs, $35,250.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the Minister of Mines (Mr. Templeman) what provision, if any, he has made for Dr. Bell, who, after the death of Dr. Dawson, took on the work for a number of years which Dr. Dawson had done, on the salary that he was getting at the time that Dr. Dawson died. I think that Dr. Bell received no addition at all for the extra work he did from the time of Dr. Dawson's death until the appointment of Mr. Low. It seems to me that Dr. Bell's service, the length of time in which he has been employed by the department, his world-wide reputation, and the very fact that most of the work which has been done since in the way of publication and, I am not sure, but most of the work of exploration, has been based upon the work of Dr. Bell previous to that. Anyway, it seems to me that a man who was neither appointed as director nor definitely told that he would be appointed as director, but who, for a number of years, did the work, and it is somewhat onerous work, ought to have had some recognition. I am not sure whether anything has been done in the way of an increase of salary or by an appropriation for the difference in the salaries, or provision in any other respect. I would like to ask the minister if he would inform the House in reference to that ?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. He was acting Director of the Geological Survey for some years.

Mr. FOSTER. How many?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. Probably four or five years. At the time of the death of Dr. Dawson his salary as geologist was $2,400. Dr. Bell was never made director of the survey for reasons that I am not aware of. I would suppose that the minister of that day did not think Dr. Bell possessed the strength and abilities which would fit him to be the permanent director of the survey. At all events, he was not appointed. He was acting director and he received, during that time, the salary of his position as geologist of the survey, $2,400. While he was acting director he declined, I understand, to accept the annual increase of salary appertaining to the position of geologist, claiming, I am advised, that during that time he should receive the salary of director. The minister did not see fit to accede to that claim. Mr. Low was appointed director, probably three years ago, Dr. Bell being at that time advanced to the position of chief geologist, a name created especially for the purpose of giving him a distinctive position in the survey.

Mr. FOSTER. Did that carry an increase of salary?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. That carried an increase of salary up to $3,000. Dr. Bell has received $3,000 practically for three years, and on the 1st of June last he accepted superannuation, being given six months' leave of absence. He receives a superannuation allowance of a little over $2,000 a year. I am aware of the fact that Dr. Bell does claim the difference between the $2,400 per annum that he received as acting director and the present salary of director.

Mr. FOSTER. Which is?

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. $3,000. Mr. Low, who occupies the position of director, is also the head of the department, and his salary has been going up since by annual increases of, I think, $100. Dr. Bell, in my opinion, has been very fairly dealt with. He is receiving a superannuation allowance of over $2,000. He was not, in the opinion of the ministers who have administered the department for the last ten years, just the person that they would care to put into the position of director for reasons I do not need to go into. He is an old official of the department; I believe he has been over fifty years in the service. I do not believe it is accurate for the hon. gentleman to say that the whole or any portion of the work in the way of the publication of reports or surveys since Dr. Bell has retired from the service is due to the work of Dr. Bell further than that, of course, the surveys made by the Geological Survey during his administration annually have been published as the reports of the department. The principal part of the work done by the Mines Department during the last few years has been conceived and carried out by Dr. Low, the Director of the Geological Survey, and by Dr. Haanel, Director of the Mines branch. I understand that Dr. Bell does make some claim for compensation for the five years during which he has been acting director. That matter was presented to me a few weeks ago, and it has not been disposed of.

Mr. FOSTER. I was taking the statement that the minister has made last. A geologist is a technical officer, and Dr. Bell has gvien some fifty years' service to Canada. When that fifty years was pretty well up to its limit, he was getting only $2,400 a year. Dr. Bell is a geologist of note, and it does seem to me that there is every ground for treating him as an old scientific man, and one who has been so long in the service, a little better than to keep him down to $2,400 when he was doing the work of director as well as it would have been done if he had been appointed director. The fact that he did not receive any annual increment for five or six years is also a consideration that weighs. Then you made him chief geologist at the very modest salary of $3,000. Within the last two weeks you have made salaries of $4,000 and $5,000 for gentlemen who have not spent fifty years in the service of the country, and are not scientific men or technical in any sense. It does seem to me that the minister has a very good reason for giving to Dr. Bell the difference between his salary and what would have been the salary of the director if there had been one during the period referred to. The minister says Dr. Bell gets a superannuation of $2,000; but why does he get it? Because he has given fifty years of service, not because of the very large salary on which he was retired. If a man has given fifty years of service, it is hardly right to cast into his teeth the fact that he gets $2,000 now, when he has earned that superannuation on a very modest salary. I cannot help saying that other cases, and many of them, men without his abilities have been treated much more liberally. I think the minister would be doing a wise thing if he would make the proper readjustment in this case.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I would not be inclined to take the view which seems to have impressed itself on the Minister of Mines with regard to Dr. Bell. If Dr. Bell was not competent to discharge the duties of director, those duties should not have been imposed upon him for a period of five years. I do not understand from the statement of the minister that there is any difference between the duties of a director and the duties of an acting director. For five years those duties were imposed on Dr. Bell, and during that time he did not receive the salary which ordinarily pertains to that office. The Minister of the Interior was unfair either to the country or to Dr. Bell. If Dr. Bell was not competent to fill that position he should not have been invested with the duties of that office for five years, or for five months. On the other hand, if Dr. Bell was competent to discharge the duties of the office for five years, I see no reason why he should have been asked to do that without the salary he would have received if he had been formally appointed director. I was not impressed with the argument of the minister.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I made no argument. I simply stated facts.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. The hon. gentleman stated that Dr. Bell had been very fairly treated, giving as a reason that his salary had been increased for the last three years of his service. Suppose his salary had been increased for ten years to $3,000, that argument would fall to the ground, and Dr. Bell would have been in a much better position. I have the impression, from a debate which took place in the committee of supply two or three years ago, that on a previous occasion a gentleman had been allowed the salary of director during the period in which he fulfilled as acting director the duties of the office. That is a precedent which it seems to me should not be departed from without very good reason. I do trust that the minister will take this matter into consideration, and give to Dr. Bell, who is a scientist of great repute, the treatment which I think the country can well afford to him after fifty years of faithful service.

Mr. ROBERT STEWART. I hold in my hand a computation of the amount of difference between the salary which Dr. Bell drew as acting director and the salary that would have been paid to a director for the five years from the 1st of March, 1901, when he was appointed acting director. The difference amounts to $4,591. I agree with what has been said as to the advisability of doing something for Dr. Bell, who has been in the service for so long a time. It appears to me that the minister has a precedent for remunerating Dr. Bell for the services rendered by him, in the case of Dr. Dawson, who was paid an extra $1,000 as acting director for one year in 1896, when Dr. Selwyn was absent in Europe. I hope the minister will see his way to consider favourably the suggestion to remunerate Dr. Bell for the time he acted as director.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. With regard to Dr. Dawson, he was one of the most eminent scientists Canada ever produced and one of the most successful directors of our geological survey. I do not understand that it is customary, where an official acts for another in a superior position, as, for instance, where a chief clerk acts for a deputy minister, to pay him the salary of the superior officer.

My knowledge of the salaries of acting deputy ministers is very limited, and I speak subject to correction. I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for North Toronto in regard to the inadequacy of the salaries not only of the acting director of that day and of the acting director of this day, but of the officers of the Geological Survey generally. We have men in the survey who have been twenty or twenty-five years in the service and who are receiving now less than $2,000. I do not think that is creditable. I hope that, under the reorganization of the department, the technical men will get a certain standing and advance more rapidly than in the past and the whole department be put on a better footing in this respect. With regard to Dr.

Bell, I have very little to say. While he was acting director he received his old salary. He refused to accept the annual increment of $50 or $100 whichever it was, because as he then claimed, and has since claimed, he should receive the salary applicable to the position. No doubt he is fairly entitled to the annual increment. Whether he should or should not receive the salary belonging to the office at the time I am not prepared to say. We have had an acting director, Mr. Brook, for the last year who is receiving only $2,300.

Mr. FOSTER. He has not been fifty years in the service.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. No, but he has been ten or fifteen years in the service. But that does not effect the principle. He has been receiving for the last year, not the salary of the director, but the salary he was receiving before as geologist of the department, $2,300. I put a sum in the estimate to bring his salary up to $2,800 because he is a capable acting director. I am sorry to say that Mr. Low is not in a position to return to the department. He is director and deputy head and is receiving the salary of the position. But he is now away on sick leave. He is not entitled to superannuation; he is a very superior man and most efficient director, and we hope he will return to his duties soon. But Mr. Brock is not receiving $3,000 but is being treated the same as Dr. Bell. As long as Mr. Low is away Mr. Brock will receive simply the salary paid him as geologist of the department, which this year, will be $2,800. In making the change from Dr. Bell to another, who is permanent director, I believe that the interest of the public service has been promoted.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I do not wish to be understood as suggesting that when a chief clerk, in the case of the temporary absence or license of the deputy head, performs the duty of that office for a short time, he necessarily should be paid the salary of the office for that period. But the case to which I have alluded was not a case of that kind. The office had become vacant and for a period of five years an official of the department was charged with the duties of the office. It seems to me that a case of that kind stands upon an entirely different plane and that some consideration at least should be given to the fact that for so long a time and under such circumstances he did perform the duties of the office to the best of his ability, and the country received the benefit of his services in that capacity.

Dominion of Canada assay office—maintenance of assay office, Vancouver, British Columbia, $13,500.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have some information from the minister as to what is being done in the assay office in Vancouver —as to the results, say, for the past year.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. I regret to say that I have not read the report of last year. But I was advised by the Director of Mines branch, Dr. Haanel, that the receipts of gold at Vancouver assay office during the last two months had been far in excess of any previous term of similar length. The receipts for the six months were about $4,000,000. Extra help was required for the handling of the gold. I am glad to say that the utility of the assay office has been demonstrated more clearly than ever.

Geological Survey branch—explorations and surveys; printing and publishing reports, maps, &c.; wages of assistant explorers, draughtsmen, clerks and others; purchase of specimens, books, instruments, stationery, mapping materials, maintenance of offices and museum, laboratory apparatus, chemicals, miscellaneous expenses, &c., $45,000.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to say just a word as to what appears to me to be the questionable plan of having the officers of the Geological Survey branch, sometimes in the department and sometimes out of it. From information we have had, it seems that these officers, when out of the department, take part in what might be called private explorations, that is, exploration work for private parties or corporations, being used in such a way that it is quite possible the private parties or corporations may avail themselves of the special knowledge the officer has gained while under pay of the Dominion and be greatly profited thereby—I do not mean by his general knowledge as geologist or expert of any kind, but by his knowledge of the richness of localities. Does the minister think it good policy to have these officers for a time in the department, then working for private corporations, then back again doing exploration work for the Dominion? I understand that one of the officers of the department is going across the water, we paying his salary and expenses, though the work he will do is absolutely in the interest of a speculative company. I think that refers to a company in New Brunswick, in which Mr. Lodge of whom we have heard in the House, is interested. I think this is making a very different use of the officers of the department from what one would think correct. I understand that quite a number of officers in the hon. gentleman's department are like the revolving lights, at one time flashing in the department, then obscured to the department and flashing somewhere else, then returning to light up the department again.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. The point raised by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is a very important one. There is a good deal to be said on both sides of that question. The hon. member speaks as though many of the officials were appearing in and disappearing from the survey to do work for private parties. I think there are very few instances of that kind on record altogether. This year there have been only two so far as my recollection serves. With reference to sending Dr. Ells to Glasgow to watch the process of the extraction of oil from the shales of New Brunswick, that is wholly in the interest of the public. It is not in the interest of the company or the individual, it is entirely in the interest of the Geological Survey. He has knowledge of the existence of shales and their extent and knows something of the probability of oil extraction therefrom, but he will acquire information as to the extraction by watching the operation, will make a report to the Geological Survey and that report will be published in the interest of the people of the country. It is not in the interest of the New Brunswick company, except in a general way, through the information that will be made public. I think in that respect it was perfectly proper and fair to pay his expenses which I was informed would not be more than $500.

Mr. FOSTER. This shale is being cruushed in the old country, and the object is to find out how much oil it will produce and if it is economical and commercially valuable in that way. You send Dr. Ells, as a member of the Geological Survey, to watch the operation and make up his mind as to what value there is in those shales. Does that seem to be the object of the formation of the Geological Survey? Would their duty not be more to locate generally the existence and extent of these shales? This would seem to be rather a malversation.

Mr. TEMPLEMAN. There are two branches of the Department of Mines, the Geological Survey, which is technical and scientific, and the Mines branch, which is practical and economic. Dr. Ells is an economic geologist, but he was sent to Scotland by Dr. Haanel, of the Mines Branch, to obtain information of importance in respect to these shales. This is absolutely along the lines of our action in regard to the peat deposits of Ontario. We sent a member of the Mines Branch to Europe last year and he has published a very valuable and useful report on the peat deposits and the manufacture of peat into fuel in Europe. At the time of the discovery of the nickel deposits at Sudbury the department pursued the same policy, and the report of the official then sent there was of great value in the inauguration of the mining industry at Sudbury. It must be remembered that one of the great difficulties we have in connection with the work of the Geological Survey is the scarcity in Canada of men qualified for the work of the department.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was my privilege some few years ago to be brought in contact with one of the most distinguished geologists in the United States, Professor Shaler, who has enjoyed an international reputation. One of the strongest criticisms made at that time in respect to the Geological Survey of Canada was that they did not pay enough attention to the economic side of geological research. It has been well known by geologists and others that we have in Canada large shale deposits. They are to be found in Nova Scotia in the vicinity of Stellarton and in Westmoreland, New Brunswick, while there are mountains of shale in the country of Albert, New Brunswick. They are found in Ontario and are known to exist in Alberta. There are similar deposits of shale in Scotland, and for many years a profitable industry has been carried on there in distilling the oils from these shales.

The profit does not arise so much from the oil product, but from the by-products, and so great is the industry that those who are engaged in it in Scotland have been bringing from New Zealand, for a number of years, the shales to be found in large deposits there. A question arose as to whether the shale deposits in Canada could be profitably developed and exploited. They have been known to exist, but have been dormant for many years and have no practical value for Canada. There has been no process discovered whereby they could be utilized and made contributory to the commercial interests of Canada. Now, as has been stated by the Minister of Mines, there is to be an experiment by these Scotch manufacturers, or those who are engaged in the industry in Scotland; an experiment is to be carried on in Scotland by exploiting or using the shales from the deposits in the province of New Brunswick, and if it is found that these shales can be thus utilized and made profitable, certainly it will be of immense benefit to Canada. If they can be utilized, then those in Nova Scotia can be utilized and made profitable, and so with respect to Ontario and the west. Mr. Speaker, I would certainly congratulate the Minister of Mines upon the advance step he is taking in this direction. I understand that this experiment is to be carried on in the presence of two very distinguished scientific men, one from the United States and another from Great Britain. It will be of great advantage to Canada, I am sure, if it is found from the report of Dr. Ells that those shales have a commercial value and can be mined and utilized from that standpoint. At present they are practically valueless. Many years ago, previous to the discovery of the petroleum oil wells in Pennsylvania, the shale deposits in Albert county were manufactured into what was know as paraffin oil at that day, and there was quite an industry. They used to produce comparatively large quantities, which sold at that time at $1 a gallon These shales, which are practically oil in a congealed state, are distilled into oil and then refined, and it made a superior kerosene, much superior, as I am told by experts, to the water white kerosene oil of to-day, the best kerosene oils that are produced from the crude petroleum of Pennsylvania. Of course, when petroleum was discovered in Pennsylvania in such large quantities, when gusher wells were discovered, it simply drove this shale industry out of existence in the province of New Brunswick. At that time they were mining what was known as albertite coal, nothing more or less than a congealed oil, and many millions of dollars were brought into the province of New Brunswick from the sale of this albertite. Contemporaneous with that industry, and near to it, was this industry of mining and quarrying the shale and distilling it into petroleum and then refining it. But that industry was, as I say, abandoned by reason of the cheaper process discovered of drawing petroleum in its crude state from the earth and then refining it. The cost of the process was much less, and the production, of course, could be put on the market at a much less price. Now it is found, and I hope it may be so, that the oil shale of New Brunswick and of other provinces of Canada can be utilized in this way, if the petroleum can be distilled successfully in the same way that the Scotch shales are, it will be of immense economic value to Canada, and I am sure that if it were to cost five times $500 to get this information through the medium of Dr. Ells' report, it would be money well expended on behalf of the mining industries of Canada. I commend the Minister of Mines on the step he has taken, and I am sure if he will only keep his gaze steadily turned towards the economic side of our geological researches, he will confer a great boon upon the commercial and material interests as well as other interests of Canada.

House of Commons—sessional clerks—additional, $15,600.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to emphasize what I said this afternoon, that I do not see anything in the past practice of this parliament which authorizes increases in special salaries out of a general vote or what may be left over from a general vote. No department, because it has a general vote which it has not used up, can out of that vote go behind parliament and raise the salaries of a dozen or twenty clerks. The universal practice has been that before you can raise the salary of a clerk whose salary has been voted by this parliament, you must come to parliament and get the money for doing that; and I do not see how it is possible, in the case of the House of Commons any more than in the case of a department, to raise the salaries of a number of clerks without parliamentary authority, and to raise them from a period which antedates the time of the action. I am not saying this because I want to bar the increases to the officers of the House, but I am expressing a principle which I think is absolutely clear and definite, and I would be very sorry to see the House of Commons itself break one of the fundamental rules of parliament.

Mr. FIELDING. There seems to be some question as to the proper procedure in the matter. I am not sure that this is without precedent, though I am not sure that it is a wise practice to pay such increases out of general votes. I have not had the point brought before me before, and I will look into it. There is no desire to depart from sound rules in the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think there is, and I mention it in the same spirit in which the Finance Minister refers to it. I would be very sorry if there were.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board—To provide for the appointment of J. G. Artz as second-class clerk at a salary of $1,350 per annum, $900.

Mr. FOSTER. Might I be allowed to call the attention of the Finance Minister to this ?

Mr. FIELDING. Mr. Artz is a gentleman whose services we could not obtain without this vote. He is a chartered accountant, a gentleman of considerable experience, the sort of man likely to be useful in the department, and we have had to take this special vote to give him an adequate salary. He has passed the civil service examination.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this gentleman to be the actuary?

Mr. FIELDING. No, I contemplate making Mr. Grant the actuary. As a chartered accountant and a man of considerable experience, Mr. Artz could not be expected to enter the service at the ordinary salary, and we have had to fix his salary at this rate, which is a very moderate rate, to secure his services.

Resolutions concurred in.

PAYMENT OF COUNSEL, HODGINS COMMITTEE.

Mr. E. M. MACDONALD moved :

That as it appears by their printed proceedings of Tuesday, June 23, 1908, that the special committee appointed to investigate the charges made by Major A. E. Hodgins, unanimously passed a resolution to the effect that proper and reasonable fees should be paid to the counsel employed before the committee, the clerk of this House and the law clerk are hereby authorized to tax the fees and expenses of such counsel, and to pay the amounts when so taxed, out of any moneys voted by parliament for expenses of committees.

He said: This resolution was prepared by Mr. Todd, the secretary of the committee, who advises me that this is the proper method of carrying out the terms of the report of the committee.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. FIELDING moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. FIELDING. According to the usual practice, the officers of the House having collected these various items, and the House having concurred in them, I now beg to move:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1909, the sum of $57,976,870.41 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to, resolution reported, read the first and second time, and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 220) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st of March, 1909.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is the Bill in precisely the ordinary form?

Mr. FIELDING. The Bill has been prepared by the clerks in the usual form.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. I see a marginal note with regard to some special time.

Mr. FIELDING. That is the usual clause with regard to the Northwest whereby they are allowed more time for closing up their accounts. Such clauses are in all the Supply Bills.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate sending certain amendments to Bill (No. 115) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, to which they ask the concurrence of this House.

Amendments read the first time.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. What are the amendments?

Mr. AYLESWORTH. The only amendment made to this Bill appears to be in the provision as to the date when the county judges in Manitoba shall be called together to appoint committees of their number. The provision in the Bill as it left this House was that the several judges of the county court should constitute a board, and that that board should during the month of July in each year meet in the city of Winnipeg on a day to be named. The amendment consists in substituting for the words 'during the month of July' the words 'between the 1st of July and the 15th day of August'; that is extending for two weeks the period during which the judges may meet. It does not occur to me that there is anything in the amendment to which objection should be taken, and I beg to move concurrence.

Amendments read the second time and agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING. I thought we might have completed our business and arranged to meet on Monday at 11.45 with a view to have prorogation at noon. As there are several Bills to come from the Senate, we had better meet at the usual hour. I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Is it arranged that prorogation shall take place at noon on Monday?

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, July 20, 1908.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication from the secretary of His Excellency the Governor General:

Ottawa, July 18, 1908.

Sir,—The right honourable the Chief Justice of Canada, acting as the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber on Monday at twelve o'clock for the purpose of proroguing the present session of parliament.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
J. HANBURY-WILLIAMS,
Colonel,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Hon.
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PEACE—MEETING IN OTTAWA, 1909.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following from the Senate :

The Senate,
Speaker's Chambers.

Hon. Gentlemen,—I am in receipt of a letter from the chairman of the German group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union for Peace, Mr. Richard Eickhoff, a member of the Reichstag, who desires to know how many members of the Canadian parliament will attend the Inter-Parliamentary Congress which will sit this year from the 10th to the 13th of September in Berlin, so that they may be provided with cards entitling them to free transportation on the German railways to and fro.

The Reichstag and the city of Berlin are preparing official receptions for the delegates to that congress.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER (Prime Minister). By your leave, Mr. Speaker, and with the consent of the House, I have the honour to present a motion which, I hope, will meet with the ready assent of this House. This motion which will be seconded by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. R. L. Borden), is as follows .

That the Inter-Parliamentary Union of Peace, which is striving to establish better relations between nations by furthering the principle of arbitration in the settlement of all international disputes, be invited to hold its annual meeting in the capital of the Dominion in August, 1909.

The association here referred to was established about twenty years ago. It is composed of members of the legislative bodies of civilized nations great and small. It has met now yearly for several years past. It is not too much to say that the creation of the Hague tribunal is largely the result of their efforts. Whilst it is true that the creation of that tribunal has not, perhaps, accomplished all that was in the mind of the association, and while it may be said also that it is not vested with such plenary powers as we might wish, it must be acknowledged that its formation has been an immense step in the direction of the highest civilization, and, no doubt, its very creation has tended largely to diminish causes of wars among nations. This interparliamentary union is meeting this year in the city of Berlin. The German government gives it special privileges. The members of the British group of the association have expressed the thought or desire that it would be gratifying to the association that its next meeting should be held in the city of Ottawa. That is the wish, and for my part—and in this I have the support of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition—we readily agree ; we can well believe that if this association does meet in Ottawa next year, not only would it be an excellent move on the part of Canada in promoting a noble cause, but it would afford the people of the world generally a better conception than they have of our country. Therefore, I have much pleasure in presenting this resolution.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Carleton). I have much pleasure in seconding the motion made by the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This union is a step, even though but a slight step toward the realization of the 'parliament of man.' These things cannot but be for good, and, though we may not realize in the immediate future the cessation of war, nevertheless we cannot doubt that the efforts of this union, composed of leading men from all the civilized nations of the world will undoubtedly strongly make for the promotion of peace and harmony among the great nations of the earth. I entirely agree that it is fitting that we should ask this interparliamentary union to hold its next meeting in the city of Ottawa in 1909. I trust that the invitation may be accepted and that we may have the honour and pleasure of the meeting here of this union, in the city of Ottawa, the capital of this Dominion.

Motion agree to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—HON. MR. FOSTER.

Hon. GEO. E. FOSTER (North Toronto). Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to be permitted to refer to two statements made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on Saturday, merely by way of correction of my own position as taken on two points. One is as to the item of interest. I do not remember exactly the date of the meeting in Hamilton at which I spoke, but I remember that on Friday December 6, in answer to a question of mine the Minister of Finance made certain statements. I asked :

3. What overdrafts, if any, have been current since July 1, 1906, at what banks and at what rates?

To which the Minister of Finance replied :

According to the last account received our overdraft in London is £301,619-5-1. The arrangement respecting such overdrafts is that they bear the current Bank of England rate, whatever it may be.

On that information, and as the bank rate was 7 per cent, I did make the statement in Hamilton that the minister was paying 7 per cent. With reference to the 2⅞ per cent according to my recollection, what I said with reference to that was that that was the lowest rate of interest that Canada had ever had on a loan placed upon the market. Of course, I did not state that I had made a loan at that rate. The Minister of Finance said also :

In a speech at Hamilton, shortly after the opening of the session, I find him reported as follows in the 'Mail':

'They, the government, have marched up to a point where a debt of $100,000,000 must be paid in two years and Mr. Fielding has made no provisions to meet it.'

My first point in reply is that my hon. friend magnified the debt which is maturing to an enormous degree. He does not seem to think it necessary to speak on these grave matters with that sense of responsibility which should attach to him as a former Minister of Finance. A very much less sum will have to be met.

If the Finance Minister will turn to his own report, page 81 of the Public Accounts, he will find the amounts of debt maturing between the date of the publication of this report and the end of 1910. Altogether those amount to $97,056,594. The sinking funds applicable to those amount to $37,507,375. The total amount falling due up to the end of 1910 will be found to be $104,356,594. Subtracting the sinking fund applicable to this, of $37,507,375, we have left $67,449,117 which will be the net amount to be met. There may be some sinking fund applicable to the loan which falls due April 1, 1908. I am not certain as to that, I have not it marked as having any sinking fund applicable to it but it is possible there may be. The minister has at the present time in current loans some seventeen or eighteen millions. That would make eighty-five millions which is pretty close up to the one hundred millions, and before the end of 1910 there will be large loans necessary for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Under those circumstances I think it well to put the facts before the House so that I might not lie under the imputation, as the minister's words would leave me, of not taking care with reference to those maturing debts and stating the figures as accurately as possible.

One word with reference to the statement by the Minister of Militia and Defence (Sir Frederick Borden) which he afterwards retracted and to which I would not now allude were it not for the fact that I would not like the least chance of any suspicion to remain that I had been doing what the minister stated I had been doing, although he afterwards retracted it, not as between the minister and myself, his retraction is quite sufficient in that respect, but as to the officials who might be affected. We have heard threats of what would be done to officials who happened to be Conservatives. With reference to the accountant of the Marine and Fisheries Department, I might state that I never had any conversation with the accountant of the Marine and Fisheries Department, either private or public, in the office or anywhere else, with reference to any single transaction in connection with the Marine and Fisheries Department since I have been a member of the parliament of 1904. If any person has that suspicion it is wrongly placed and I hope it will not in any way influence whatever course may be taken with reference to that accountant. The same is absolutely so with reference to the accountant of the Department of the Interior. I do not know at present the name of that accountant; I do not know whether I know him personally or not; but I have had no conversation or communication with him of any kind whatever, in the same years as those I alluded to in reference to the Marine and Fisheries Department. This statement I would not have made except to relieve those two accountants from any suspicion, if anybody entertains such a suspicion.

Hon. Sir FREDERICK BORDEN (Minister of Militia and Defence). With regard to the statement as to threats, I do not quite understand what the hon. member means. As far as I am concerned, I am not aware of having made any threats against any person in my department.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say you had, I said threats had been made.

Sir FREDERICK BORDEN. The hon. gentleman was addressing himself to a statement made by me, and I understand now he did not intend to apply that statement to me in any way, that any threat had been made by me to any officer connected with my department.

Mr. FOSTER. No, I had not the least intention. These threats had been made in the House and in committees and so on, and I have never heard that the Minister of Militia and Defence ever made such a threat. I had no intention of saying that.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance.) With regard to the payment of 7 per cent interest, the point I endeavoured to make in the few words I said on that subject was that if my hon. friend thought proper to refer to that rate of interest it would have been only fair to have said that that high rate of interest was payable by virtue of an arrangement which he himself had made. That was the point I wished to emphasize. He did not say so. With regard to the question and answer to which he has referred, it is true that he put a question in the House as to our temporary loans, and that I stated a certain balance overdrawn in London was subject to the Bank of England rate, whatever it might be, and the Bank of England rate at that time was 7 per cent. If therefore my hon. friend had stated the case in Hamilton with that fair explanation of the circumstances under which it arose, I could not have complained, but he repeated the statement in his remarks on the occasion to which I was replying and said that we were paying 7 per cent. In the meantime an important incident had occurred that my hon. friend appears not to have noticed; that is that at a later stage of the inquiry in this House I stated that while the arrangement gave the bank the right to 7 per cent, that being the current Bank of England rate, I had been able to arrange with the bank a rate of only 6 per cent. I stated that in the House and therefore the government never paid 7 per cent, and when the hon. gentleman repeated his statement the other night and again said we were paying 7 per cent he had overlooked the correction I had made. As respects his Hamilton statement I would find no fault when he spoke of the excessive rate of interest, as at that time the arrangement of 6 per cent had not been made, but he should have explained the circumstances under which the 7 per cent arrangement was made. He sought to make a point against the government in respect to that, when in reality it was an arrangement made in the day of my hon. friend and a fair arrangement.

As to the other point, had I been aware that my hon. friend desired to call attention to it, I would have had the notes at hand from which I spoke the other day. I know my hon. friend stated at Hamilton that within two years $100,000,000 would have to be provided for. He now endeavours to explain by amending it and giving the figures for a period of three years. I do not think that any answer to my statement. I did not dwell upon it, I mentioned it in passing and simply said that a very much less sum than my hon. friend mentioned would provide for all our obligations in two years, but he now gives a statement for three years as if that was meeting the case. I did not make any statement for three years, I stated the amounts for two years. I made a passing reference, which was absolutely true, that a very much less sum would have provided for our maturing obligations. I think that now he is carrying into his statement of obligations some things that are not obligations at all. Take the loan of £5,000,000 which will mature either in 1909 or 1934, just as we please. The loan is not due until 1934. We have the option of paying it off if we like in 1909, but it is not due until 1934. There is another loan of the same character due in 1910 and I am inclined to think that my hon. friend has carried both of these into the obligations that we must meet in 1909 and 1910.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDING. They are not due until 1934 or 1935, but if we see fit to pay them in the meantime, if the money market is favourable and if we wish to pay them, that is all right, but they are not obligations which this government is bound to pay until 1934 or 1935. Then, having regard to this, my hon. friend's statement as respects these two years was an erroneous one. As to the rate of interest my hon. friend will find that while I said it was seven per cent I explained at a later stage that the rate we actually paid was only six per cent.

Mr. FOSTER. I have the arrangement which was made with the Bank of Montreal by my own report. The minister states that I should have been fair enough to have said that the seven per cent, if paid at all, was paid according to my own arrangement.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. The arrangement made with the bank was an arrangement by which, if they did such and such, they were to be paid such and such.

Mr. FIELDING. That does not cover the whole transaction.

Mr. FOSTER. It did not bind us to make our loans or get our advances through the Bank of Montreal, but if we did get them through the Bank of Montreal it stated the terms, and I think it is just as well to read them.

Mr. FIELDING. That does not deal with temporary loans.

Mr. FOSTER. (reading):

On the issue of new loans a commission of one quarter of one per cent will be paid to the bank—(all brokerages, stamps and advertising to be paid for by the government of Canada.)

For the management of loans, including payment of interest and dividends, transfer and inscription of stock, investments for and management of the sinking fund, (except brokerages and stamp duties) £150 per million pounds per annum will be paid.

For discounting treasury bills, outside Bank of Montreal, a rate not to exceed one-eighth of one per cent will be paid.

For the sale of stock one-eighth of one per cent.

Should the government at any time require special exertions to market the stock an additional rate of one sixteenth of one per cent will be paid.

In case of redemption, no charge therefor will be allowed to the bank provided it has the issuing of a loan to retire the bonds redeemed, but if no loan is issued by it, one-eighth of one per cent is to be paid the bank for redemption.

Should the government require the Bank of Montreal to associate another bank with it in the issue of a loan, the rate to be paid to the Bank of Montreal for the issue will be one-half of one per cent.

The government is to pay the cost of stock inscription books, which are to be the property of the government.

The above arrangements are to continue in force for a fixed period of ten years from the 1st of January, 1893, then or thereafter to be terminated on twelve months previous notice in writing from either side.

That arrangement was entered into on December 6, 1892. I do not find anything in reference to the matter of advances.

Mr. FIELDING. My hon. friend is reading from an agreement with respect to the floating of loans. The question of overdrafts is not covered by that. There is no written contract on the subject, but I am informed in the department that in the case of overdrafts or advances that are not supposed to be for a long time, not represented by permanent loans or by treasury bills, the understanding is that the current bank rate should obtain. It is a fair arrangement and I find no fault with it.

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. It would not be included in the permanent arrangement.

Mr. FIELDING. No.

TIMBER AND PULPWOOD LANDS IN KEEWATIN.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN. Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, in the absence of the Prime Minister, whether the policy that has been announced to the House as to the disposal of timber and pulpwood lands, is to be observed. The reason of my inquiry is that information has come to me of an application which is said to be now under consideration by the government, for a very large grant or concession of timber and pulpwood lands in Keewatin, amounting to some millions of acres. As I understand the policy of the government as set forth in the regulations, and as announced in this House, these lands are not to be disposed of by private concession but by sale at public auction after due advertisement. This information came to me in such a circumstantial manner that I thought it desirable, and even necessary, to bring it to the attention of the government in order that we might have some statement from them as to whether there is any foundation for the rumour.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance). I am not sufficiently acquainted with the matter to justify me in making a statement on behalf of the government. I will call the attention of the Prime Minister and of the Minister of the Interior to my hon. friend's remarks. I have not sufficient knowledge of the subject to justify me in making a statement. Any announcement that was made by the Prime Minister or by the Minister of the Interior as to the policy of the government in that matter, I take it for granted, will be carried out.

PROROGATION.

An Act respecting the Quebec Bridge and Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act.

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1909.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :

In His Majesty's name, His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Honour the Deputy of the Governor General, as follows :

May it please Your Honour:

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Honour the following Bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1909. to which Bill I humbly request Your Honour's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Honour's command, did thereupon say :

In His Majesty's name, His Honour the Deputy of the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to this Bill.

After which His Honour the Deputy of the Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the tenth parliament of the Dominion with the following speech :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I am glad to be able to relieve you from further attendance on this long protracted session, and I thank you for the assiduity and care you have given to the unusually large number of important subjects that have been submitted for your consideration. It is, however, satisfactory to note the many excellent measures that have been passed, and which it is hoped will prove beneficial to the people of Canada.

Among other Acts, attention may be called to the Manitoba Grain Act and the Grain Inspection Act which, while protecting the high standards of western grown grain from inferior mixtures, secures to the farmer the increased value attaching to those standards.

In response to an advanced public opinion, appointments and promotions to the civil service will be made henceforth only after a competitive examination in which those who excel will receive the reward of merit; and, while the operations of the Act are limited to the service at the seat of government its provisions may later on be extended to the service throughout the Dominion.

The Act revising and consolidating the laws and regulations affecting the disposition of the public lands will it is believed meet with the hearty approval of the western provinces more immediately interested. One of the principal features of the Act is the permission to take up a second homestead within a limited area, and also the right of a homesteader to acquire by purchase the adjoining quarter section. It is intended that the proceeds of these sales shall in the first place be set apart as a fund for the construction of a railway to Hudson bay.

The amendments to the Bank Act allowing, under certain restrictions, an expansion in the circulation of notes of the banks during the period of the year while the crops are being moved, will, it is considered, facilitate the quick transport of the products of the farm to the markets of the world.

Important amendments have been made to the Act respecting elections which it is confidently believed will more effectively protect the rights of the voters and guard against the exercise of undue influence in electoral contests.

The proposal to make a free grant of land as a bounty to the volunteers who rendered valuable service to the empire in the South African war will meet with hearty approval.

The reduction of the duty on dropped letters in cities and certain towns, and the enlargement of the area within which the postage on certain classes of newspapers may be carried free, will I feel be much appreciated.

The amendments made to the Inland Revenue Act, whereby the discrimination against Canadian grown tobacco created by distinctive labels used in cigars and tobacco will no longer exist; it is confidently believed that those amendments to the Act will have the effect of improving and encouraging home grown tobacco and prove of great benefit to that portion of our agricultural population engaged in that industry.

The increasing demands for improved transportation facilities in a country so widely extended and so sparsely settled as this Dominion, warrants public aid in the construction of railways, and the experience of the past amply justifies the liberal subsidies in the Act that has been assented to.

The placing of the telegraph and telephone systems under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commissioners will meet with the hearty approval of all classes in the Dominion. The rapidly increasing number of applications to the Board of Railway Commissioners involves the necessity for the appointment of additional members on the board.

The extension of the time for the payment of a bounty on lead ores, and the enlargement of the conditions under which the bounty may be earned will, it is believed, stimulate the growth of an important industry in the province of British Columbia.

The physical and mental degradation following from the too free use of opium have long been recognized, and efforts have been made in all countries boasting of advanced civilization to stamp out its use, except when prescribed for medicinal purposes. The increasing consumption of this deleterious drug in Canada has prompted the adoption of the Act to restrain its use except when authorized by medical men.

The issue of government annuities for old age will, it is confidently believed, encourage habits of thrift and economy, securing to the holder some provision for declining years.

The subject of immigration from Japan has received much attention during the year, and it was deemed desirable to send one of my ministers to Japan to discuss with His Majesty's ambassador at Tokio, and with the Japanese authorities, the advisability, in view of the local conditions in this country, and other reasons, for restricting such immigration. I am glad to know that a satisfactory arrangement has been effected, and I feel assured that the terms of the agreement will continue to be faithfully carried out.

An arrangement with regard to immigration from India having also become desirable, a representative of the government was sent to England to discuss the question with the authorities of the United Kingdom, and in this case also with results that promise to be entirely satisfactory.

In both these cases it has been the desire of my government that while caring properly for the interests of the Dominion, the welfare of the empire at large should also be regarded.

The Gold and Silver Marking Act will stimulate the manufacture of a superior quality of those articles composed of the precious metals, and at the same time will protect the public from fraudulent representations.

The Act respecting juvenile delinquents will enable those societies that have for their object the reformation of children living under the influence of criminal tendencies, to more efficiently accomplish their purpose, and thus save the innocent little ones from the evil influences of vicious environment.

The Act restraining the use of tobacco by young persons will, it is hoped, check a growing habit that is seriously affecting the health of many Canadian boys.

When parliament opened in November last a serious financial depression prevailed throughout the adjoining republic the effect of which was far reaching, involving in a limited degree all those countries having business relations with the United States. The crisis in the money market that followed, coupled with the diminished value of the crops in the prairie provinces, seriously affected the yearly increasing prosperity which Canada had enjoyed during the preceding eight years. The present hopeful outlook for an unusually large crop of the cereals and other products of the soil, will, it is believed, mark the beginning of another long series of years of plenty and prosperity.

It is very gratifying to observe the patriotic enthusiasm that has been aroused not only in all parts of the Dominion but throughout the empire, at the approaching celebration of the founding of the city of Quebec three hundred years ago by the heroic French navigator, Samuel de Champlain. To add to the glory of the occasion His Gracious Majesty the King has deputed His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to represent him at the interesting pageants that will be presented in commemoration of the event. The presence also of representatives from France and the United States at the ceremonial will be hailed with intense pleasure by the people of Canada, and will be accepted as an evidence of friendship on the part of the citizens of those two great republics.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

Let us earnestly hope that when we meet again the present bright prospects for a bountiful harvest in all parts of the Dominion will have been realized, prompting an additional reason for expressing our heartfelt thanks to a kind Providence for the many blessings we enjoy in this favoured land.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is the will and pleasure of His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, that this parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the twenty-ninth day of August next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the twenty-ninth day of August next.
